Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought I had a statement of it before me. I know that it covers all cases that are below $100; it covers appeals from the Municipal Court; it reviews the decisions in fixing the municipal valuation rolls throughout the city and district. Their jurisdiction goes beyond the city of Montreal. They have to deal with very important questions with regard to the municipal franchise; cases come before them in connection with the electoral roll, and the differences between citizens and the municipalities as to the valuation of property. The judges of that Court need to possess as high legal attainments in the civil law as judges of the Superior Court, because in those civil matters there is no appeal. The present judges are, in fact, giving considerable satisfaction to the people, and in the press on both sides of politics I have seen protests against the fact that these judges of the Circuit Court have been unfairly dealt with by the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Those four judges hear more cases than the 24 other judges all put together.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend has with great precision described the jurisdiction of the County Court judges of the province of Ontario, and the District Court judges of the other parts of the Dominion. I would therefore like to ask him, though not opposing the Bill, if the Government is prepared to pay similar salaries to the other judges throughout Canada who exercise almost precisely the same jurisdiction as the judges provided for in this Bill?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: There is the fact that there are only four judges, and their time is entirely occupied; and as was stated a moment ago, they have to render more judgments than the judges of the Superior Court, whereas there are many County Court judges who are not as a rule very much occupied.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Those in the cities are—for instance, in the city of Toronto and other centres.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I am not saying that there may not be other cases in which the salaries should be raised: I am merely saying that, so far as these judges are concerned, they are certainly deserving of consideration.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not dissenting from that.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: In the city of Vancouver, for instance, there are only three County Court judges. They get $5,000 a year. Those men work far harder and have far more work to do than the Supreme Court judges who get a larger salary.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the population?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: About 150,000 or 175,000.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is 800,000 in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: A man can only work all the day and part of the night.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Do not those judges receive other fees as probate judges?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They do in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I understand that they do in Ontario, but in British Columbia they do not. In addition to the jurisdiction mentioned by the leader of the House, they do a very great deal of criminal work; in fact, they try practically all the speedy trials and this jurisdiction is very similar to that which the honourable gentleman has described as being that of the judges in Montreal. I do not wish to oppose the Bill; I would like to see all the judges get what they are entitled to; but I do not see any particular reason why the judges of the city of Montreal should be singled out for this favourable treatment, while other men who are just as deserving are overlooked.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: As a matter of fact, it does not make any difference whether a man is working all the day or not: he is not permitted to engage in any other occupation if he is a judge of the County Court, and he has to live upon his salary. The county judges of New-Brunswick have, as the honourable leader of the Government has pointed out, exactly the same duties that the Superior Court judges in Montreal have to perform.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Are they satisfied with their salaries?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Do you know anybody who is?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Have you ever seen a person who was satisfied with his salary? When they see other persons doing the same class of work getting a better salary, they certainly will be dissatisfied with theirs. As I say, those judges are not allowed to engage in any other occupation, and the expense of living is practically as great in one part of the country as it is in another. I do not see why the judges of Montreal should be singled out for this special good treatment, while the judges in other provinces are left as they are. If you permitted these judges to engage in civil occupations, that would be another matter; but to say that a man shall have $7,500 in the city of Montreal for performing duties similar to those for which a judge in the province of New Brunswick receives only $5,000 is to my mind unfair discrimination. In the city of St. John the County Court judge is very busy. He is constantly at work. In the country district the judge is not so busy, but, as I say, he has to live upon his salary and is not permitted to engage in other occupations. Therefore the salaries ought to be on a parity, I think.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Honourable gentlemen, I have no experience in the other provinces and therefore cannot very accurately compare the duties, work and responsibility imposed on judges in other provinces with those exercised in Montreal by the judges of the Circuit Court. I take from what my honourable friend says that the duties they perform are equivalent in every respect. If that is the case, I think the salaries of those other judges ought to be increased in the same way. But the case before us is a meritorious case, and I think we ought to deal with it. The action taken may serve as a precedent for other judges elsewhere in Canada being treated as they should be.

To my mind, the best guarantee that we have for the proper administration of justice is the payment to our judges of the salary to which they are fairly entitled. In the Circuit Court in Montreal the work that our judges have to do is enormous and their responsibility is great. There is no appeal from their decision. I happen to know of three cases before the Circuit Court at present, involving large amounts. One involves over $2,500,000, and the two others several hundred thousand dollars each. They are very important cases, and there is no appeal from the decision.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would the judges give a better decision if they were receiving $2,500 more than they are receiving now? Does the value of their decision depend upon the amount of stipend they get?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I do not know that that question requires much of an answer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, the honourable gentleman was talking as though it did.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I did not say that the giving of more salary would give more life to the judges, or more conscience,—

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Or more courage.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: But I implied that they should be fairly compensated; that is all. I am trying to show to this honourable House what are the duties and responsibilities imposed upon our judges. I understood that judges in other provinces had other sources of revenue—in certain other provinces at any rate.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Not in mine.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I understood that they were allowed to be surrogate judges at the same time. That of course would increase their indemnity to a certain extent. I do not contest the merits of the other judges, but I do earnestly plead for fair remuneration for men who have to work all the time and are debarred from earning any other emolument or increasing their income in any other way, and who have enormous responsibilities in making decisions from which there is no appeal.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: About how many cases a year are there?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Oh, thousands. I have not the figures at present.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I would suggest to the honourable leader of the Government that consideration should be given to the possibility of making the increase of salaries apply also to County Court judges in cities of a certain population, so that the judges in the different cities may all be placed upon the same basis.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I cannot quite understand why you make fish of one and flesh of the other. The judges have to give all their time; they cannot engage in other work, even if they are twiddling their thumbs. They have to live just the same.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would draw my honourable friend's attention to the distinction that has always been made in the salaries. I do not know whether it covered the whole country or not, but I surmise that it did. There has been a difference in the salaries given to the judges in cities and those given to the judges in rural parts. Of course, in Ontario there are no judges in rural districts, they being all concentrated at the capital.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not referring to the County Court judges; I am speaking of the judges of the Superior Court. In the province of Quebec there has always been a difference between the emolument paid to the judge residing in a rural district and that paid to a judge in a city. There was a difference of $1,000 for twenty-five years, while I was practising. The rural judges received $4,000 and the city judges $5,000; and I know that the $4,000 paid to the judge living in a small town was nearly 50 per cent better than the remuneration of $1,000 more paid to the judge living in a city, owing to the higher cost of living in the city.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is all changed now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have known of judges of the Superior Court who lived in rural parts, and who could easily save regularly a good fourth of their salaries, whereas the judges in the city of Montreal, who were around me, always felt the pinch at $5,000.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The salary of the County Court judge in New Brunswick, I think, is just the same whether he lives in the city or in a rural district. I know that within the past year or two the salaries of the County Court judges have been increased. The salary of the County Court judge residing in St. John was $4,500 prior to that increase. The increase in salary of County Court judges was to $5,000, and I imagine it applied to all County Court judges of the province. So, while the County Court judges living outside of the city of St. John got an increase of $1,000 in their salaries, the County Court judge residing in St. John had an increase of only $500.

While I have not much to do with the court, I know that the County Court judge in St. John is much busier than any of the Supreme Court judges. He is working hard all the time—quite as hard, I have no doubt, as any judge in the city of Montreal. Why there should be any special advance in the salaries of judges living in the city of Montreal, where they cannot do more than work all the time, I cannot see. It may be that this is intended as the fisrt step towards increasing the salaries of the judges all over the country. If that is true, I have no objection to make, but I think it might just as well be done all at once as done piecemeal. The present proposal will create dissatisfaction, I have no doubt, and will result in attempts to obtain an increase of salaries all over the Dominion. I do not imagine that the salaries dealt with in the present Bill are at all too large; I am not making any statement of that kind; but if the present salaries are too small for the judges in Montreal, I think they are likewise too small for the judges occupying similar positions in other parts of the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the representations that have been made from different parts of this Chamber.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should like to suggest to my honourable friend that this Bill stand until Monday next, on account of a proposed amendment which my honourable friend from Welland (Hon. Mr. Robertson) suggested should be made to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. If that proposed amendment should be carried, it will be necessary to amend this Bill accordingly, it seems to me, and it would be better to have the two subjects dealt with together. Furthermore, my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) has always taken a very deep interest in this matter, more particularly in the subject referred to in an amendment which I observe in section 3 of the Bill, and I should like very much that he would be present when this is being discussed. Therefore I would suggest Monday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Let us say Monday.

It was ordered accordingly.

REPORT OF LAKE FREIGHT COMMISSION

DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from June 12 consideration of the motion of Hon. Mr. Willoughby:

That he will call the attention of the Senate and of the Government to the report of the Commission which investigated the combine of shipping on the Great Lakes, and will inquire what steps are to be taken by the Government.

Hon. W. H. BENNETT: Honourable gentlemen, any question which has to do with the condition of the Western Territory of Canada merits and ought to receive a great deal of consideration in this House, and I rise because I believe that a time has arrived when, according to statements not only in the press of the West, but also by gentlemen who have the honour of being members of the House of Commons, or members of this honourable Assembly, the condition of the Western farmers is, in plain English, deplorable. There is no question about it. Any man who studies the mercantile life of Canada knows that a succession of causes has resulted in the Western farmers being at present in a very difficult position. To my mind it is the bounden duty of Parliament to do all that is possible to benefit and advance their best interests.

Last year I attended day after day the hearings of a special committee of the House of Commons to take evidence relative to the grain trade of the Northwest, and I was particularity fortunate in being present on one or two days when the Committee was addressed by Mr. Wood, of the province of Alberta, who is, I understand, at the head of the farmers' movement in that province. Sitting there and listening to the statements made by that gentleman, one could hardly believe that in this Dominion there existed among white men, with red blood in their veins, and who should sympathize with one another, such a condition of affairs as was described. It was stated that there existed a monopoly of grain dealers organized in companies, not for the purpose of assisting the farmer of the West, but with the sole object of extracting from his pocket the last cent that they could take out. I will not endeavour to repeat what Mr. Wood said, but the purport of it was this. Some 50 companies are organized and are working under charters in the West for the purpose of purchasing grain for distribution in Canada and the United States and throughout the world. These are not confined to companies who are trading in grain, but include vast milling corporations that have their places of business in Canada. Mr. Wood, in depicting the condition of affairs stated that there were hundreds, or perhaps thousands, of elevators scattered over all that vast Western Territory, which were owned by those men and controlled from one place alone—that was, Winnipeg. The farmer two years ago was in sore distress by reason of the lowered prices, due undoubtedly to the fact that the war had ceased, and by reason of the extraordinary cost to him in recent years of everything he has had to buy; and yet that great octopus at Winnipeg, the combine of 45 or 50 companies, was striving, not to assist the farmer, but to damage his interests in every particular and to enrich itself.

What was the procedure? The farmer, who received daily his western paper, and who in many cases had telephone communication, learned from day to day the price of wheat. He knew what his expense had been in wages, the cost of his machinery, and the cost to him of everything that entered into the production, and with longing eyes he looked for the day when he might be able to sell his wheat at a fair profit. But, sitting in their offices at Winnipeg were the representatives of the Grain Exchange, dictating from day to day what should be the price of wheat on the following day, not in Winnipeg only, but all over the prairie provinces. The farmer, filled with hope because he saw that the price was, say, one dollar a bushel, drove his wheat a distance of perhaps 30 or 40 miles. The statement had been issued the day before that wheat was being sold at a dollar a bushel, but on his arrival at the station he was amazed to find that an order had come from the octopus at Winnipeg which fixed the price at from 5 to 10 cents a bushel less. Nay, the situation was worse than that. On arrival at the station, after having driven 30 or 40 miles with his wagon-load of grain, the farmer was awaited—by whom? By the bank manager, who had advanced money to keep him going over the winter; by the merchant, to whom he had promised to pay last year's bill; by the machine man, who expected to be paid. The farmer was told that the elevators were not buying grain to-day; in other words, they had stopped the flow of grain for that day. What was he to do with his grain? Was he to retrace his course over the prairies for 40 miles or so? As a favour they were willing to take his grain at probably 10 or 15 cents a bushel less than the price of the day before.

It was bad enough for the farmer of the West to have to deal with that octopus, but it remained for the year of grace 1922 to see another crowd of plunderers, harpies, trying to feed on his vitals. I refer to the transportation companies on the Lakes. Let us look back a few years at this transportation question. On the Lakes, up to the year 1922, there had been a fair rate for the carriage of grain. True, the companies had combined. True, the coalescing of small companies had resulted in the 1921 rate being much higher than the rate had been some years before. But it remained for the year 1922 to witness the most startling sight that ever was seen in Canada. The act was criminal, and it has been so referred to by the Royal Commission that has just made its report. What happened? I will not make any statements here to-day that are not borne out by the facts. All my statements are corroborated by written documents that have been before the public or before this Commission. When the year 1922 opened, this Government had just been seated safely in their seats. Before this time, evidently, the vessel men had no friends at court upon whom they could rely to work their own sweet will. Whether it was that certain shipping companies were influential supporters of this Government I know not; but some reason impelled the vessel companies to come together and to say: "Now is the time to charge what we like, because the Government will not interfere." Let me read this statement. In the month of December, according to a document from which I read the other day, published in the United States—and it has been proved beyond any doubt—contracts had been entered into for the commencement of the year 1922, for the first vessels, at three cents a bushel. That was to be the rate. The vessel men, both of Canada and of the United States, knew that; and the case I cited proved that contracts had been entered into for the carriage of a large quantity of grain.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: That is December, 1921.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: December, 1921, for the opening of navigation in 1922. Now, what happened? At once there was dismay and consternation amongst the vessel men of Canada, and a hurry-up call was sent out to them to assemble and see what they could do in the work of pillaging the farmer of the West.

The Lake Rates Commission held its sittings, and I will read some of the evidence given before the Commission. It is unfortunate that the evidence has not all been printed, but the Winnipeg Free Press, with commendable business foresight, has printed a full report of the evidence taken from day to day, and from that evidence, which I have clipped, the following appears as to this memorable meeting held in Toronto on the 4th day of May, 1922. Mark you, prior to this meeting, as I proved by the other documents, arrangements had been made to move the grain at three cents. But the order was sent out that they were to assemble in Toronto; and there were present the representatives of the different companies. To-day in Canada the shipping on the Lakes is practically controlled by half-a-dozen companies, and I cannot do better than read the sworn evidence of Mr. T. R. Enderby, of the Canada Steamship Company, who said there were present at that meeting the following men:

T. R. Enderby, of the Canada Steamship Company; A. E. Matthews, of the Matthews Steamship Company; James Playfair, of the Great Lakes Transportation Company; R. B. Clarke, of the Matthews Steamship Company; A. E. Spendlove, of the Tomlinson Shipping Company; W. J. McCormick, of the Algoma Steamship Company; E. M. Todd, of the C.P.R., and Lee Woolvin of the Standard Shipping Company.

The cards were all laid on the table. They all knew that the rate had been fixed and entered into by some companies at three cents; but they apparently had refrained from entering into any contracts, and the result was that at that meeting they pledged themselves, one and all, and issued a schedule of rates to be charged for every bushel of freight carried from the head of the Lakes by these different companies. Not only were those companies to control, as they would, the bulk of the Canadian grain: they had something else in view that was a hope and inspiration to them. 1922 was a year of reviving trade in the United States, and they had their friends in office in Ottawa, who they knew would not repeal the coasting laws.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there was no law allowing the Government to repeal the coasting laws.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I might tell my honourable friend that last fall, whether there was law or not, his Government passed an Order in Council repealing them. However, the vessel men had no fear of this Government passing laws which would affect them—and I think I will prove that successfully before I sit down. As I say, the vessel men had no fear: they knew how they had acted before, and they had hopes for the future.

What happened? The rate was at once advanced by these companies to seven and eight cents a bushel. At that time there was a fair movement in ore and in coal, and for that reason a great part of the American fleet was attracted to that particular line of carrying. These gentlemen met and agreed that a certain rate should be fixed, and that on that rate they would proceed. What next follows? A man who may have a million or two million bushels of wheat in the Northwest for shipment to Great Britain or Europe, or for sale to mills in Ontario, goes to the owners of the boats, and they say: "We cannot deal with you; you must see our agents." At once this man goes to see the agents. Now, who is the agent of one company who was present at this meeting? It was Mr. Lee Wolvin, a brother of Mr. Roy M. Wolvin, who was very largely concerned in the Canada Steamship Companies. When the shipper would go to this gentleman at Winnipeg, and say, "Mr. Wolvin, I understand you are the agent of the Canada Steamship Companies," Mr. Wolvin would at once say, "That is right, I am." "Then, what is the rate you are prepared to give me in view of the fact that the price was three cents?" Then he was met with the mailed fist, of seven or eight cents a bushel, and when he said, "I am prepared to close with that on a million or two million bushels of wheat," Mr. Wolvin would come back with the rejoinder, "Now, let me insure your wheat." And then he would say, "I am going to insure it myself," Mr. Wolvin would say, "You cannot have space on any of our vessels unless I am going to put on the insurance for you." And if he were to say, "I have contracted for it at a certain price, and the price you charge is double," Wolvin would say: "Take it or leave it. you cannot have any space in our boats unless you give us also the right to insure the grain." So the man would have to pay the vessel rates, as he would have contracted for the sale of the grain, and probably for ocean space in Montreal or New York; and he would have to pay not only the outrageous double charge for carriage, but would also have to pay commission on the insurance. Now let me quote from the evidence and show what that amounted to.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is my honourable friend quoting from?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: From the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Taken in the investigation?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: In the investigation, yes. It turned out that in 1922 there had been $1,280,000 paid out as the total for premiums on insurance; and the share that would go to the vessel agents out of that insurance was not less than $448,229. Not only was the grain-shipper made to pay the double charge on what he had to ship, but in addition he had to pay this additional premium, which amounted to no less than $448,229, because unless he paid that he could not get space. It may be said: "That is all right; why don't you go to some other vessel company and obtain space from them?" The reason was this, according to the evidence—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What page?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: There is no regular paging, because the evidence has not yet been published. The report I am reading from is the one published by the Manitoba Free Press, which was the stenographic report. He would be told to go to another company. But he would say: "What is the good of going to another company? Your company has 74 per cent of the space. The Standard Shipping Company has nearly three-quarters of the space in Canadian vessels." And the evidence shows that the Richardsons of Kingston, who were large owners in another fleet, had a 50 per cent interest pre-empted for the carriage of their own grain, because, as everybody knows, they do perhaps the largest business in grain in Canada. Here he was, driven from pillar to post, and held up by these brokers acting under the authority of the Company, and compelled to pay to them double the rate for the insurance at which he could get it from any person else.

How was this reflected on Canada? Remember, Canada has a vast interest to-day in the Canadian National Railways; they have from the Georgian Bay three different lines of railways all going through to Montreal—from Collingwood, from Midland, and from Depot Harbour. The Canadian National Railways also have huge elevators at Midland and Parry Sound, and perhaps an old one at Collingwood. They had the advantage of being able to make three trips to the Canadian National ports, as against two to Buffalo; but in spite of that advantage in transit to the Georgian Bay ports and to the Canadian National Railways, these men were actually fixing the rates so that they were higher to the Georgian Bay ports than they were to Buffalo. That cannot be gainsaid. Mr. Smith, a broker, says:

> Sometimes the rate to the Bay ports was four cents a bushel, and at the same time only two cents and two and a-half cents to Buffalo.

One would imagine that these vessel men might have a little Canadianism in them—a little bit of sentiment; but there was none. Why should there be any sentiment on the part of the Parliament of Canada when it contemplates making legislation which, while it may perhaps affect the pockets of these people, will enhance the interests of the Canadian West and the people generally?

So there was discrimination, in that they were charging four cents a bushel for a shorter haul. Let us go a little further and see what occurred. Before I leave this page, however, may I refer to a gem that catches my eye, and illustrates the manner in which this Company is treating this Government, looking upon it as putty to be moulded in its hands. Mr. Markey, one of the gentlemen who appeared for the Canada Steamship Company, made this remark:

> If the Canadian coastwise laws were suspended in the spring and the fall when your vessels were not busy, it would be greatly to the advantage of your traffic?
>
> Mr. Sullivan: I think it would.

So here was the representative of the Canada Steamship Company suggesting that the best thing to do would be to abrogate the coasting laws.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It was Mr. Aimé Geoffrion, K.C., who represented the Canada Steamships.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The report says that Mr. Markey was associated with him. Mr. Markey is known to all the old-timers in the House as a very good Liberal, and he is one of the members of the firm who are interested in this chartering business. There seem to be wheels within wheels to such an extent that some things are unknown even to my honourable friend, who is a director of that Company. These companies seem to be always afraid that some law will be passed putting them under the Railway Board or some other Commission. Here is what Mr. Bawlf, a large Winnipeg dealer, says:

> I was unable in the fall to ship oats to Canadian ports, especially Montreal. Some oat business could be done through Canada, if they could get space through the Canadian owners or brokers.

That is a matter of business if this or any other company did not wish to carry oats. But here comes the evidence and proof that there was this conspiracy between the representatives of the steamship companies to participate in the insurance. Mr. Bawlf says:

> I objected as a shipper that we should be put to any expense at all in connection with grain loaded at Fort William for which we got a Government certificate.
>
> Mr. Pitblado: You were paying 25 per cent of the insurance tariff rates?
>
> Mr. Bawlf: Yes, until the boys got together and made it 35.

Who were the boys? The chartering companies. Who were the chartering companies? Two directors of the Canada Steamship Company. Who were the men to share in this $250,000 drawn out of the pockets of the people? The chartering companies; otherwise

Mr. Norcross and Mr. Wolvin, who are interested in the Company, would have been called on to the carpet.

Now, let us proceed a little further:

On September 10 they asked for 35 per cent. One charter dated September 7, covering freight to Buffalo, had this statement on it by the vessel's agent: "It is understood you insure the grain and pay me a commission of 25 per cent." Later on the vessel agent changed the 25 to 35 per cent.

That was done, although the contract had been that he was only to have 25 per cent of the insurance. It is remarkable that when this meeting of the 4th of May took place in Toronto, when they were conspiring against the welfare of the people, the Presidents and leading officials of the companies were all present; but when the inquiry took place they were all taking their winter holidays, and so the Commission were unable to get the evidence from high quarters as to what had gone on at this meeting.

I will give an example of the commissions that were taken out of the pockets of the people. An instance was given of a 350,000-bushel boat loaded with wheat at $1.20 a bushel. It would be worth $360,000. The insurance at $2 per $100 value would be $7,200, and the commission, 35 per cent, would be $2,520. That was late in the season. So it runs all through the evidence, and it shows how this immense sum was arrived at.

I do not allege that the Canada Steamships Company was the only sinner. God knows that others were only sorry that they were not as big sinners and that they were not as big a corporation.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: And the Government too were charging the same rate.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: We will come to the Government after a while. I think my honourable friend would have just grounds for complaint, as a member of the Canada Steamships Company, that a rival company has this Government so under its fingers that it can lease vessels at prices which the Government is ashamed to mention in this House or anywhere else, and without the Canada Steamships Company being given even a chance at them. The rival company that has leased those vessels charges the farmers the highest prices asked in the combine.

Now let us understand the situation. First, there is a company called the Standard Company, which represented the Canada Steamships; then there is a concern called the Western Company, representing the so-called Matthews; then for a while there was the Tomlinson Company, which represented the Great Lakes Company; and there is something here somewhere in the evidence—I may be able to put my finger on it later—to the effect that the Canada Steamships Company or its representatives were not the only people who were getting those rates on insurance that mounted up to so many thousands of dollars, but that there were other companies concerned in the same way, and that you could not get space in any of the other companies' boats unless you permitted them to place the insurance, which, as I have already shown, was double the insurance rate that could be got by going on the market.

We go now to the evidence of Mr. Wolvin himself. At that time it was found that the Standard Shipping Company handled 74 per cent of the business. It of course was in this combine. Now, remember this was in the year of grace 1922, when my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), as a director of the Canada Steamships Company, and as one of the leading lights in that great family paper, the Montreal Herald, was possessed of great influence with this Government. There had been no interference with the combination of vessel men in 1922. The Government had a dozen vessels on the lakes and could either have gone into the combine or broken it up at once; but those vessels were tied up. I think four or five of them were tied up in the town of Midland. There were those vessels, splendidly fitted for the carrying of grain—five of them first-class freighters. Do not be misled by that story about those boats not being fitted for the carrying of grain, because five of them are first-class grain-carrying vessels of Canadian or American style. Many Government vessels were tied up at the dock and not put into competition with those companies—and here were the representatives of the companies sitting in Toronto and fixing the rates. They were able to exact 7 or 8 cents a bushel, getting returns that they had never dreamed of before, and there was Mr. Lee Wolvin, the representative of the Canada Steamships Company, dictating what should be the law regarding every person in Canada who endeavored to ship a bushel of grain on the Lakes. Now listen to this telegram, and remember that he felt assured that the Government would not punish them, experience having taught him that there would be no interference from the Government. Mr. Wolvin wired as follows to his agents in Winnipeg. Let me first explain that the parties referred to, Nye Jenks, are one of the largest grain-dealing companies in the United States, having their headquarters in Chicago. Mr. Wolvin wired his man in the office of the Standard in Winnipeg:

Nye Jenks working for another cargo Chicago-Buffalo, trying to write their own insurance. I am getting very tired of trying to uphold the situation of the vessel-broker. We are in a wonderful position to break every vessel-agent on the Lakes, and I want you to notify our Winnipeg agents that if one of them produces a boat to load at Chicago that I am absolutely through and will do business for nothing until everyone of them are out of the game, which you know I can do and will do. Solicit them all. Show them this telegram and tell them I mean every word I say.

So Mr. Wolvin says: "The Government is easy for us. Now let us go and threaten everybody who dares to carry at rates lower than ours."

I know this is all news to my honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), but it is all in the evidence given before the Commission.

Now let us proceed a little further to show how great was the control. In Wolvin's evidence he says, as to the Great Lakes line, that it was more than half used by the James Richardson Company; that they had, by virtual control of the shipping of the Great Lakes Company, all the space available—that is, to the extent of one-half.

The worst feature of all this is, to my mind, the condition in which Canada finds herself with regard to the National Railways and the fact that notwithstanding these lines of railways and the elevators and enormous plants, these men were conspiring to drive the grain to Buffalo. Here is Mr. Wolvin's evidence:

Asked if the situation seemed to be that during the fall of 1921 rates to Buffalo were at all times considerably under the rates to the Bay ports, Mr. Wolvin said he thought they were and that Canada Steamships vessels and other Canadian vessels were hauling to Buffalo at these rates.

While they were getting all these benefits, they did not have to pay anything, as Mr. Wolvin states in his evidence. They did not need to have anybody on the road to bring business to their door, because it was all being provided out of the pockets of the farmers of the West in these enhanced charges.

I have said that not only did thousands of dollars go into the pockets of the brokers for the Canada Steamships Company, but they were all engaged in the same business. The Report contains the evidence of a man named Smith, who was a vessel-broker and had secured the business of the Matthews firm, which is also a large trading firm. He received this telegram:

Don't accept any grain at less than agreed rate, and give no insurance concessions.

So the Matthews Company were also holding down all the space in their vessels; first, in the rate to the 4th of May, and, in the next place, in the insistence on having 35 per cent on the insurance.

They were pretty strong in their position. All summer Government boats had been tied up and would not compete. The Government had power by Order in Council to abrogate the coasting laws and let the Americans come in. The Government would not do that. So, later on in this day's evidence, we find the statement of the witness who was making efforts on behalf of people who had grain to ship. He says:

Owners were getting crazy about the value of their boats, and were talking about 10 cents a bushel.

And I am surprised that they did not charge 10 cents a bushel. The Government would not have interfered; there was no danger of that. As a matter of fact, the rate ran up to 8 or 9 cents.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Did the Government have the power at any time during the season to abrogate the coasting laws?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: All I can say in answer to that question is that last fall the Government did so. I am glad my honourable friend has reminded me of that. The Government came out last fall and said: "Now we are going to abrogate the coasting laws," and how did they go after the vessel men? I will tell you what they did do, honourable gentlemen: they waited and waited; the rate was rising higher, higher, and higher; the insurance participation was going on; and in all solemnity the gentlemen composing the Government of Canada pass an Order in Council abrogating the coasting laws for the last trip of the vessels. I suppose it was the suggestion of the vessel men that the abrogation should apply to the last trip, because they would say, "We do not care a tinker's d--- for the last trip, as there will be no American vessels coming for the last trip"—I will tell you why. Everybody who knows anything about the matter is aware that if a vessel were to go into a Georgian Bay port away on in the month of December she would be frozen in there for the winter, and she would not be able to get out in the spring until two weeks later than she could get out of the port of Buffalo. On the western side of Buffalo is a large bay, at Erie, and all that a vessel would have to do if she could not unload at Buffalo late in the fall would be to move down and anchor at Erie, where there are hundreds of other vessels at anchor; and early in the spring she could move up to Buffalo, and discharge her cargo there, and then go for a cargo of coal.

This government would not dare to abrogate the coasting laws in September, when the farmers wanted that done—why? Because that would not have agreed with the wishes of the vessel-owners. The Government would not take action if the grain was coming forward. No abrogation then. But they thought the public would be simple-minded enough to be deluded by the action of the Government in abrogating the coasting laws for the last trip. I wonder if any grain at all came in on the last trip. I am told that one or two vessels came into Port McNicoll, which were, I think, the only vessels that took advantage of the situation; and I assume that they came in there because they probably had grain for distribution to Canadian mills.

Here is Mr. Wolvin's evidence again. The Canada Steamships Company have a large vessel called the Morden, which was at Port Arthur. He is asked the question. "Did you not refuse 3 cents to the Bay?" He admits that they did; but they took grain down to Buffalo a month later at 2½ cents. So there are ample grounds in this Repart for the finding of the Commissioners that there was unjust discrimination by those vessel-men against Canada.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Somebody should be prosecuted.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: If the honourable gentleman thinks this Government will prosecute any of the people concerned in what is described in this Report as being on the verge of criminality, he is badly mistaken. The Government will not interfere. All they will do is to pass an Order in Council for abrogation, and the vessel-owners are not at all afraid of that, because it will be only for the last boat of the season.

Now let me give you another case mentioned in the evidence to prove the existence of the conspiracy. A gentleman named Blecher, who had a quantity of grain to handle, stated that he wired to Mr. McCormick, of the Algoma Central, and offered him the current rate at Buffalo and the fixed rate at the Bay. And remember that that was the high price that the meeting had fixed. The reply was:

> Thanks for offer. Standard makes our grain charters.

Again Mr. Belcher wired Mr. McCormick another bid of 8 cents for any of the company's four vessels loading for November 1st to 7th, and the reply was:

> Have already refused eight cent business to Bay or Goderich for November. Do not intend chartering ahead until I see what conditions are.

Remember that was the Standard Company who were doing business for the Algoma Company. This was the time when Mr. Lee Wolvin said, "Let us make it ten cents." And I do not know why they did not make it ten cents, because they could have done it quite easily, as the Government was not going to turn out their vessels and the abrogation would be effective only for the one trip.

Here is the evidence of another witness, which I will quote to show the effect on his insurance:

> Had we written our own insurance at the rate we could have secured last year, our marine insurance would have amounted to $51,000, and the outturn insurance to $34,000, or a total of $85,000. Allowing brokers 35 per cent on their tariff, the cost to us would have been $126,000, or a saving to us of $11,000 in the year. Leaving aside the question of commission altogether, if we had been permitted to write insurance at the rates we could have got last year, our marine insurance would have cost $51,000 instead of $103,000. I computed also that if we paid 35 per cent on the tariff that we could have secured, and which seems to be a more reasonable charge, the saving would have been $29,000.

I am not going to agrue the question as to whose pockets the money comes out of, but I will quote Mr. James Stewart, the President of the Maple Leaf Milling Company. He says:

> The majority of the shippers either stated or left the impression that all additional costs paid by them in moving the crop worked back to and came out of the price to the producer.

This was stated very definitely by Mr. Stewart, who, in speaking of lake rates, said:

> It is of no great consequence to the grain dealer if you put the freight rate up to any figure you like, because the price is reflected back to the producer. The producer is really the loser, not the dealer.

I do not intend to deal much more with the evidence. It is plain that the Commissioners were quite justified in their finding that a combine existed.

Referring to the Commission's Report, at page 15, it will be found that on November 18th a 10-cent rate appeared. Please bear this in mind, that at the opening of the season of 1922, when there was the greatest risk of ice and detention, the rate, as proved in the first document that I quoted, was only 3 cents a bushel, and, correspondingly, it should not have been more late in the fall; yet the rates were up as high as ten cents a bushel then. The power possessed by the shipping companies, and particularly the blatant way in which they exercised it, is shown throughout the report. Here is a case mentioned on page 17. The Commissioners point out that on a vessel called the Midland King, on November 7, 1922, to Goderich, there was included one lot of wheat at 4½ cents a bushel, another lot of wheat at 8 cents. In other words, after agreeing to carry grain for one man at 4½ cents a bushel, they found, I presume, that the vessel was not filled, and then someone came along who was eager to ship some wheat, and, knowing of the urgency, they simply slipped up the rate to 8 cents a bushel for him.

I have said that I did not think that the shipping companies were afraid of the government; and yet there were times when they thought they had gone so far that the West might make a successful protest. The West had in the Cabinet a Minister, Mr. Stewart, representing a riding in Quebec, a very convenient and safe place for him. The shipping companies thought that through him the West might really have some influence on this Government. So. Mr. Wolvin becomes a little alarmed, and on September 27, 1922—that is, when the 10 cent rate was in effect—Mr. Wolvin wired as follows:

> Better get those instructions to Winnipeg in writing about booking no more cargoes until this coasting law question settled. Our agreement was no new business. Make your instructions to them absolutely definite.

Now, the game was this. If the coastal laws were to be abrogated in September, then they would have to drop the rate from 8 and 10 cents a bushel; but if the intention was, as the vessel-men undoubtedly requested, that the abrogation should apply only for the last trip, then they could go on and make a rate of 10 cents. But these were rather troublesome times, for on the 15th of December, Mr. Hall, who was the clerk of Mr. Wolvin, wired him as follows:

> We are not chartering any more Canadian boats for September loading. Think it best to clean up what we have, and if we have open space we can get pretty nearly whatever we ask for it. We are doing some October, but thought perhaps we had better hold off on this also except with Sid Smith he is figuring half million lastaff abstract which we should supply him and then raise rate.

At some place in the evidence—I cannot put my hand on it at the moment—it is shown that Mr. Smith was a gentleman who was making a good deal of noise about matters. I think at this time he had an interest in the Winnipeg Tribune, and the shippers were getting a little afraid that the Government might come down on them. I do not quote further because honourable gentlemen have this Report in their boxes. If you turn to page 41 of the Report, you will find that it is established that in the summer of 1922 the insurance rate through the vessel-broker was 32 cents per cwt, when a rate of 15 cents per cwt. could be procured elsewhere.

So much for the year 1922. One would have thought that having made the profits they had, and having got double the prices they had got in years before, when they had paid huge dividends—because some of these companies have paid huge dividends—the Great Lakes Company paid 100 per cent—they would have been satisfied. I have seen cheques in the hands of the stockholders. The Canada Steamship Companies would no doubt have paid very huge dividends if they had not invested in so many ships on the ocean at fabulous prices—all of which has been pointed out in the public press in Montreal. It was not that the companies were losing money on the Lakes; they were making money hand over fist. As to the other companies—the Great Lakes Company and the Matthews Company—honourable gentlemen will find references in the Report, showing that they made flotations of stock and were making enormous profits.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: When the Government ships were used, to whom was the insurance paid?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I do not know who insured the cargoes on the Government ships.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They had to insure the grain that went on the Government ships.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I assume that the owner of the grain would pay for the insurance.

This matter comes home to the people of Canada, having regard to the enormous deficits which we have to meet on our railways, in a most appalling way, because, unfortunately, owing to a custom which they have in the United States, the Canadian transit trade is badly handicapped. At Buffalo there is a system of exchanging grain, or mixing grain, as it is called. Whether that is all done at Buffalo, or whether part of it is done at Fort William, I do not know. I do know, however, that the Government are appointing a Commission to look into these questions. At all events, there is no doubt that one-third of the grain outgoing through Buffalo is mixed grain. There are American shippers and Canadian shippers who prefer to have their grain go through Buffalo instead of through Canadian ports and over the Government railways of Canada—Why? Because they have this advantage of mixing the grain at Buffalo. One may fairly well ask why this is not done at the Georgian Bay ports. The reason, as it has been explained to me, is this. At the Georgian Bay ports there are a limited number of elevators, and as a consequence the grain is in rapid transit. I was a member of a Committee of this House that went into this question, and if I had the report of that Committee here I might quote from it a statement made by the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson). My honourable friend took a great interest in this matter, and stated before the Committee that he had met grain-brokers in England who impressed upon him the desirability of having our grain go through Canadian channels altogether, because there would then be no opportunity of mixing it, and because our Canadian grain would get a very much higher grade in the English market than the American grain. That is something to be sought after. If we can divert all this grain to Canadian channels, we are not only going to get a higher grade for our grain in England and on the continent, but we are going to have the satisfaction of seeing the elevators on the Georgian Bay doing business.

What happened next? The year 1923 loomed up. Last fall there came a protest from the West. Unfortunately they had not had a good year out there. The people were in debt, and they had passed through a hard winter. So when this spring opened up, one might have thought that, having feasted on the very vitals of the unfortunate western farmer last fall, these companies would at least give him a breathing spell this spring. Do you think these harpies did that? Not for a moment. Early in the year they started by sending out a note of warning to the farmers that, although they had lived on him last year, they were prepared to live on him again. I do not know whether the town of Sarnia is a point where a great deal of grain-shipping is done; but was it not strange that this telegram should emanate from that town on May 9, before the grain began to move:

Sarnia, May 9.—That the season of 1923 would be one of the busiest in the history of Canadian shipping was the prediction of a well known navigation official here to-day. He pointed out that apart from the general improvement in business conditions it was known that no less than sixty-five million tons of ore would be required at Cleveland and other lower lake ports from the northern ore mines this season; and that traffic would engage, the bulk of the American fleet and there would be little competition with Canadian lines in the grain trade in view of the fact that the ore trade was more profitable.

Here was a note of warning to the farmer of the West: "Beware; we are after you." And it comes via Sarnia. It is a rather strange coincidence that the solicitor of one of these companies lives at Sarnia. Whether this emanated from him or not I do not know; but here was an intimation that the farmer was to be got after again. And he was got after.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT.

Under date of May 17, this appeared from Port Arthur:

Port Arthur, May 17.—In marine circles here it is stated to-day that a price war exists between the grain shipping companies and the companies owning steamships the latter demanding seven and a half cents per bushel to carry the grain eastward. As a result shipments of grain from local elevators have slackened off during the last few days and there is danger of their becoming plugged unless the situation improves. Yesterday three cargoes only left the harbor and to-day but one. It is reported that big American steamers refuse to carry the grain for less and that they are now being diverted to Duluth and Superior to carry ore eastward. The price demand is extraordinarily high in face of the fact that at the beginning of the season shippers paid five cents per bushel which was in itself higher than usual.

So, in 1923, although at the first of the season the rate was five cents, these people got together and made a rate of 7½ cents.

Not only is this militating against the carriage of grain by the Canadian National Railways, but against the carriage of it by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has a very high-class railway from Port McNicoll to Montreal. Just in passing, I want to pay a little tribute to Sir Henry Thornton. At last someone is trying to do some business on the Grand Trunk, and God knows it is time. My only regret is that Sir Henry Thornton has attached to him some of the old barnacles of the Grand Trunk, sustained no doubt by the strong recommendations of gentlemen in this Government, because if there ever was a Government under obligation to anybody, this Government was under obligation to these old officials of the Grand Trunk who came to their rescue in the last general elections, when private desks were rifled—I will not say rifled, because they had keys—but opened, and private papers made public in order to do the work of the present Government. It is unfortunate that some of those men are still with the railway. There are men to-day under Sir Henry Thornton who were friendly with a certain concern of which I can tell the leader of the House, which owed the old Grand Trunk $100,000 for freight, of which not one cent was ever paid. That is the way the Grand Trunk was carried on for years; but Sir Henry Thornton evidently is going to act in a different way from some of the other Grand Trunk officials. I was pleased to learn that last week with a large locomotive they had hauled from Midland a train of 56 cars. The Canadian Pacific Railway does even better than that. Yet here are the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways, with a shorter water route, and fully able to carry the Canadian grain to Montreal, prevented from doing so by the combination of vessel-owners and with the connivance—I do not think that word is strong enough—of the Government.

Another scheme which has developed in the minds of these vessel-owners within the last few years is that it would be a good plan to fill Buffalo with grain from the Northwest and from western points and cause a congestion there; and then transship it into small vessels carrying from 75,000 to 100,000 bushels. That is something that is going to militate against the Georgian Bay ports. What happens? These small boats ply down the canal and between Buffalo and Montreal. They have a perfect right to do it, but I simply throw out this warning to the Government, because they will have to fight to get the trade away from Buffalo. With Buffalo congested the grain has to be moved in some way, and it cannot be done by way of New York because there are not enough vessels there to take it away. So last year they commenced taking it down in these smaller vessels; and I read in the Montreal Gazette the statement that the Great Lakes Company have added eight new boats to their fleet for that purpose, the Eastern Steamship Line 10, and other companies two or three others.

There is no possibility of stopping the gentlemen engaged in that trade. For instance, because of the danger to which vessels are exposed on Lake Huron and Lake Superior, they have to be steamed up to high pressure all the time; consequently they consume a great quantity of coal. But the smaller boats passing down through the canals are always running under check, and do not consume much coal. In the next place, these boats are of a very cheap class, having been bought in England and France since the war at ridiculously low prices. In addition to that, the labour of the men on the canal boats is much cheaper than the labour on the Lake boats. The man employed on the Upper Lakes is a high-priced man as compared with the other. He does not get his bonus at the end of the season unless he completes the season, and the fall is a dangerous time. For these reasons, the transit of grain from Buffalo to Montreal by smaller boats will work very strongly against the interests of the Canadian National Railway ports on the Great Lakes.

Let me deal now with another phase of this matter—because the Government always wants information, and Sir Henry Thornton wants information. He says that all he wants is the betterment of the Canadian National Railways. It is not going to help the Canadian National Railways to take away the trade of three different lines on the Georgian bay, and when these men showed manifestations of over-reaching the public this spring, the Canadian Government had on the Upper Lakes upwards of a dozen vessels, which could at once have been placed in the trade. I have heard the statement made in the other House that these vessels are unfit for the trade. At all events, the Government owns to-day five vessels—the Arthur Orr, the George Orr, the Kearsage, the McKee, and the Drummond—all first-class freighters, and to them could have been added what are known as the war vessels. The Government pleads that these vessels are under the control of the National Railways, and that they themselves have nothing to do with them. Surely, if the National Railway Management would not undertake to run the boats, it was the business of the Government to do so and to see that something was done this spring, because there is a perpetual cry from some of the members of the other House to put these boats on the market and sell them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And from the leader of the Progressives also.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: It is because the leader of the Progressives is ignorant of the situation—and I say that without intending to be disrespectful to him. I do not think that amiable gentleman understands the situation at all, because to-day vessels are a glut on the market. Let me give an instance. Here is an item dated New York, April 18th:

> The offer for vessels was contained in a letter made public to-day, from Thomas H. Healey, business manager of the Union, to Albert D. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, asking that he take the matter directly to President Harding.

That was an offer of $300,000 cash for three 12,000-ton craft, which it was proposed to acquire as the nucleus of a labour-owned and labour-operated fleet. A 12,000-ton vessel, as my honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) knows, would carry nearly 500,000 bushels. What is the good of trying to sell vessels to-day when there is a glut on the market? Why not put them into operation yourself and endeavour to do something with them?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: And help the farmers.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The honourable leader of the House (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), in answer to a question to-day told me that two vessels, named the Drummond and the McKee, had been leased to the Great Lakes Company; but the most important part of the whole matter is not mentioned, namely, the price at which they have been leased.

It was bad enough to take those two fine vessels off the route and prevent them from competing with the combine. Perhaps some day we shall have a Royal Commission, or an inquiry by this House, and then we may learn how this Government is dealing with the property of the people of Canada in shipping.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: By the National Railway Board?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Our honourable friends cannot hide themselves behind the National Railway Board. If the National Railway Board, which is appointed by this Government, is not acting in the interest of the country, then ask the National Railway Board to resign. Ask Mr. Fairweather, in Toronto, to resign. You know his address—Yonge Street, Toronto.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought we were giving them a free hand.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: "No Governmental interference."

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Did I say Fairweather? I should have said Gough. They are both in the same business, and people would have been no more surprised if Mr. Fairweather had been appointed than they were at the appointment of Mr. Gough.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Fairweather would have been a better name for shipping.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Yes. Perhaps it is not yet too late to make a change.

One of these vessels, at a favourable rating, would carry from Port Colborne 75,000 bushels. On the Upper Lakes it would carry considerably more. Assuming that a vessel carried 75,000 bushels at 8 cents a bushel she would get $6,000. I am making a low estimate, for the rate on that route has been 10 and 11 cents. She would easily make four trips a month to Montreal: that would net her $24,000. I am told that at a fair estimate it would cost $7,000 per month to operate her. Therefore there would be a profit on the vessel of $17,000 a month. In a seven month season the vessel would make a profit of about $120,000. If five vessels were operated, they would make $600,000. Now, will the Minister promise that at the next sitting of the House he will tell us at what figure those boats have been leased? Why do you not let the vessels do one or other of two things:—either let them go in and break up the combine, so as to give the farmer a chance, or else run them yourselves and make a profit of $600,000 a season out of them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At what rate per bushel?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: At 8 cents per bushel from Port Colborne down.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do you expect that that figure will be repeated?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Well, if the combine that you have helped to bring about by putting your vessels in with the others works out as well as it did last fall, you will get the figure up to 11 cents. That is where they had it then.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may be wiser this year.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What was the average last year?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I have not the figure showing the average but I know that the rate went as high as 11 cents.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But what was the average?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I do not know what was the average. That was about the highest. What was the average?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: 4·05 cents.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: From Port Colborne to Montreal?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I have not that separate.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I know that from Port Colborne to Montreal it has been very high, and if the Government will promise to abrogate the coasting laws only for the last trip, the rate will be up to 11 cents this fall. No American vessels come in, to get frozen up.

My purpose in speaking on this question to-day is to try to have something done for that part of the country from which I come. Port McNicoll, Midland, Parry Sound and Collingwood all depend upon the Lake trade. Are you going to stand idly by and let a combine of vessel-men make the rate to Buffalo so low and to Georgian Bay so high that the trade will be attracted to the United States? When you have a fleet of good vessels, will you not put them into the trade to carry grain, or are you going to rent them to the shipping companies and let them make exorbitant profits, while the farmer pays for it all? The matter has become too serious for this country to treat it lightly, or to be regarded as a question of preferment for political friends. We very well remember that a few years ago there was an uprising in Winnipeg fraught with a great deal of labour trouble for this Dominion, and I know from conversing with men who come from the West that if anything of that kind comes up again in Winnipeg it might be considerably augmented by the farmers of the plains, who know the treatment that has been accorded to them by the Government and by the shipping combines. The best that a Government can do for the people is to endeavour to make them contented and happy by promoting their material prosperity. It is high time for the Government to cancel the leases of those vessels on the lakes. Can the Minister tell me whether more than two have been leased?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Was the question which my honourable friend placed on the Order Paper a general one, or did it refer only to the two vessels?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: It referred only to the two. My honourable friend is not remiss in that respect.

The trouble is that this Government do not seem to interest themselves in what is going on. I observe from the House of Commons Hansard of yesterday that this question was asked by Mr. Stewart, of Leeds:

> Upon what terms were the freighters T. J. Drummond and J. A. McKee leased to the Great Lakes Transportation Company for the season of 1923, as to the price to be paid for the use thereof and conditions (if any) as to price to be charged for carrying grain.

And Mr. Graham's answer was:

> It is a very general practice to lease a ship at so much per day. I do not know what the rental is. We have a number of ships of our own on the Great Lakes fully equal to any demand that will be made upon us.

What is the good of the Minister saying that these ships will be fully equal to the demand? Why, you could have twice as many vessels on the Lakes to-day if you would go in there and charge a decent rate, because you would get the grain of the country. Take the case that I put the other day, that of the vessel Morden. Carrying 500,000 bushels at a 10-cent rate, she produced $50,000 on a trip of one week. And, according to the evidence given here of the value of a ship called the Matthewson, which is a vessel of about the same class, she had cost practically in wartime only $900,000. Here is this vessel of the Canada Steamships Company making on a single trip $50,000. I of course do not calculate her expense, which would not be very great. About $1,000 a day would easily meet it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: And for twelve months, too.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: No, I do not consider that that would continue for twelve months. However, if you had an investment of $800,000 or $900,000, and could earn on it in a week $50,000, you would be doing pretty good business. That is a pretty fair return of one week for a vessel of that price.

The advice of the Minister (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) prevails in Council, and I am going to urge upon him at once, in the most wholehearted way, to go to his colleagues and say that any legislation along the line of abrogation of the coasting laws will put this Government in a very unenviable position. The reason is this. The matter would be left to the discretion of the Government, and you would be pressed by party friends and by vessel-owners whether they are party friends or not to make ridiculous rulings, such as you made last year, namely, that for abrogating the coasting laws for only the last trip. You ought to have legislation along the lines of that which has been passed in the United States—legislation so drastic that it will control the vessels for the whole season at fair and reasonable rates. The evidence before the Commission is so overwhelming that the profits have been enormous that it is the duty of the Government to see that the farmer in the West is given a chance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do I understand that the honourable gentleman is against the abrogation of the coasting laws?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I am against the abrogation of the coasting laws if any Order in Council is made by the Government, having regard to the past, because I think it will be utterly powerless.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am referring to the principle of abrogation.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Generally?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: In principle I am opposed to it, and for this reason. My honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), or anyone else who understands, will tell you that a vessel of American register is in an advantageous position as compared with a vessel of Canadian register. That being the case, Canadian-owned vessels, if there were a total abrogation of the coasting laws, might register in the United States, and, if they did, all the superior men on the boats, like the captains and engineers, who have to have certificates of fitness, would be obliged to follow their vessels and become American citizens. For that reason I do not think the abrogation is desirable. But this Government can, as I am advised, pass an Act along the lines of legislation passed in the United States. They can give to an impartial body of men the right to adjudicate as to what the rates shall be. With that as a club over the heads of the vessel-owners of this country, I think fair rates would prevail. With fair rates prevailing, the Canadian railways would be in a commanding position for the handling of the grain, and the national deficit would be considerably reduced. Therefore I hope that the Minister will prevail upon Council to introduce legislation for the appointment of the Railway Commissioners or some other body of men to see that justice prevails as between the vessel men and the grain shippers of the West. That is what I ask, not only for the good of that part of the country from which I come, but for the good of the West in particular.

Hon. A. B. GILLIS: As a Western man I wish to say a few words on this question. I will not attempt to go over the ground that has been so ably covered by the honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat (Hon. Mr. Bennett) and by the honourable gentleman from Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby), who so clearly dealt with the Commission's Report a night or two ago. Indeed, I am not in a position to do so, for I have not yet had an opportunity of reading the Report. The findings of the Commission will undoubtedly lead to legislation to afford to the West some relief from the excessive lake freights under which we have been labouring. In that respect the Commission may be said to have accomplished an important service for the people of the West.

A year or two ago a commission was appointed to inquire into a matter of even more importance to the people of Western Canada, namely, the grain trade. You will remember that that commission made inquiries and began to unearth some interesting facts, at which the elevator men became very much alarmed and had an injunction issued to prevent the commission from proceeding further. Had that commission been allowed to proceed, discoveries would undoubtedly have been made which would have forced the Government of the day to enact legislation which would have considerably relieved the difficulties under which the people of Western Canada have been labouring. However, the commission was nipped in the bud, for reasons which were, I think, purely political, as well as on behalf of the grain dealers. In consequence of that commission being prevented from functioning, the prairie provinces have had to suffer great losses by reason of the doings of the Grain Exchange.

A great deal has been said, not in this Chamber, but elsewhere, about the deplorable conditions in Western Canada, particularly in the prairie provinces. I have lived in that country for more than forty years and have carefully watched its ups and downs, and I wish to say that, while still contending with many difficulties, we have in that country a people who never say die, but are always ready to do their utmost. The average farmer in any one of the Western provinces, who has devoted his time to farming and is not imbued with the spirit of speculation or with an ambition to greatly enlarge his holdings, is to-day, notwithstanding many drawbacks, as prosperous as the average farmer in any other part of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: More so.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: That is the situation as far as the West is concerned. The tales of woe that we sometimes hear are to some extent due to the fact that a number of years ago the Government of the day made what was to my mind a very serious blunder in regard to the western provinces particularly the province of Saskatchewan. We have in the southwestern part of Saskatchewan the finest ranching country in the world, comprising large areas of land not fit for cultivation to any great extent. The ranching industry was practically killed by the opening up of that area for agricultural purposes. That was unfortunate, because the cattle industry is just as profitable as the grain industry—in fact, more so. Many of the complaints that are heard originate from the fact that in some sections of that district people have not had a crop more than once in three or five years. You will readily understand that it is impossible to prosper under conditions of that nature.

While it may not be quite relevant to the matter under consideration, the old question that has been a live issue in the western provinces from the very earliest days is still a live issue, namely, the question of freight rates. In the early ways, at any political meeting, whether in federal or provincial elections, if a speaker was at a loss for something to say it was always popular for him to bring up the question of the C.P.R. freights or the C.P.R. monopoly. One was always sure of an attentive audience upon that question. In the early days, as a result of agitation, we obtained concessions in the matter of freight rates. But what is our position to-day? We desired of course the removal of the C.P.R. monopoly; we wanted competition. Consequently we got competition and got too much of it. The present situation, so far as that western country is concerned, is that we are paying practically the same freight rates as we paid away back in the early eighties. We have three transcontinental railways, but there is not sufficient freight for two of them. Consequently we have to pay high freight rates and we have also to pay a portion of the charge to the general revenue of the Dominion in order to meet the cost of the operation of those roads. I do not see that there is at present very much prospect of redress. If the roads are to be made to pay, as everybody wishes them to do, there is only one way to accomplish it, and that is to keep up the freight rates or to increase them. That being the case, there is comparatively little hope for improved conditions in that respect in the western provinces. Last year, when the Crow's nest agreement was revived after having been abrogated during the war, I think a mistake was made. Instead of having a reduction in freight rates on two commodities only, namely, flour and wheat, there should have been a general readjustment on all commodities from east and west, which would have stimulated interprovincial trade, which is so desirable. If we are to build up a Canadian nation, one province must trade with another, and the only hope I see for any change in that respect is in improved freight rates by a general reduction, and an assessment on the Dominion from one end to the other to make up the deficits that occur from year to year.

With regard to dissatisfied settlers, there has been considerable discussion in another place on the question of immigration The Government, I understand, proposes to make a considerable grant to what is known as the Western Colonization Company, for the purpose of bringing settlers into the country. There is no use of bringing settlers into the western provinces unless we can devise some scheme different to what has existed heretofore. If we want to bring in settlers and make them satisfied, we must adopt some method along the line of the Soldiers' Settlement scheme, which has worked out remarkably well. It would be very much better for the country to have one hundred satisfied settlers than to bring in one thousand men and turn them loose and leave them to rustle for themselves. It will take them a long while to become established. They are strange to the conditions existing in the country, and for that reason many of them become dissatisfied before they have a reasonable chance to establish themselves. Some scheme along the line carried on by the Soldiers' Settlement Board would, I think, work out successfully.

Owing to the dissatisfaction which exists in the West, we sometimes hear talk about secession. It is said that certain people there want to secede from the rest of the Dominion. That, of course, is all nonsense. You will find a few faddists in every community. There is no more loyal citizens to be found in Canada than the average citizen west of the Great Lakes. The citizens of the West are anxious to see the Dominion built up and become a great nation; at the same time they are going to fight for their rights to the last ditch, and it is such conditions as those which existed before the investigation of this Commission that have caused trouble and dissatisfaction. We want fair treatment; we want to see the Dominion prosper; and we must try to get together to bring about that end.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have listened with considerable interest to all that has been said on the inquiry which is before us. I suggested at a certain period of the debate that it would perhaps be well to await the legislation which the Government has promised to bring before Parliament at this Session as a result of the inquiry which was set up in the matter of the Great Lakes freight rates. I desire simply to inform my honourable friend from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) that the coasting laws were not suspended without some diffidence, because of the limited authority of the Govenor in Council in the matter. That Order in Council was not passed for the purpose of checking high prices and regulating freight rates. The matter could not well be dealt with in that way. The suspension of the coasting laws in the last days of the season with the object of giving relief to the Western farmer who was rushing his grain to the head of the Lakes in order to get it to the foot of the Lakes, and it was hoped that the suspension would allow of a considerable storage being secured for the Georgian Bay.

My honourable friend has been so long in the political game that he cannot modify his style: he either defends or attacks violently, and he always sees the Government as a miscreant that must be felled. I enjoy his style. When I was young, I myself took part in public debates on the rostrums, and I can understand the value of a good blow. But facts speak for themselves. My honourable friend admits that the condition which developed last autumn was exceptional, and was not absolutely the making of those shipping companies. They took advantage of a formidable movement of grain and a shortage of shipping to obtain all the profit they could get. The Government, like every citizen in Canada, was taken by surprise; but hastened to do what has been commended in this Chamber and throughout the country—they appointed a Royal Commission to determine the facts, and they have acted upon its findings.

I was in hopes that I could lay before this Chamber a Bill which was to be introduced this afternoon in the other House. I have it in my hand. If I had been able to read it before my honourable friend made his speech, I think I would have cut off about three-quarters of his remarks, and would have destroyed the point of the accusations or imputations which he made. Perhaps before the sitting ends this evening I shall be able to lay before my honourable friend the attempt of the Government to cope with the serious evil which we all realize has existed on the Great Lakes.

I suppose my honourable friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) will be as anxious to read the Bill as my honourable friend from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett). I simply mention this in order that my honourable friend may realize that the Government is composed of men of good will, who are attempting to do their best, according to their lights, even though they may err. Sometimes we are wiser after the event. My honourable friend will share the responsibility with other members of the House of Commons who, year after year, blocked the efforts of a member of the House, Mr. Armstrong, who was trying to bring the matter of the freight rates on the Great Lakes under the control of the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Let me say to my honourable friend that the abuse then was not nearly as bad as it is now, and that Mr. Armstrong's efforts were directed more to package freight.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend says the abuse was formerly not nearly so great. It appeared in an abnormally monstrous way last autumn, and the Government immediately set in motion machinery to inquire and seek a remedy. I do not know whether the remedy which is contained in the Bill will be satisfactory to the country or not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You are referring to the Grain Board, are you?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am referring to a Bill that is about to be introduced.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I see by the paper that it has been introduced this afternoon. May I read? It states here that two Bills have been introduced—one by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the other by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have only the one Bill; I have not the one from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That deals only with the coasting laws.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes. I have the Bill that deals with the control of freight rates on the Lakes. It is "an Act with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation." As honourable gentlemen have evinced considerable interest in the Bill, I may be justified in reading it:

1. Any shipping company or any shipowner or person who carries or who offers, advertises or proposes to carry grain for hire between Fort William, or Port Arthur and any other port or place in Canada or the United States of America, by lake or river navigation, shall, within thirty days after the passing of this Act, or before entering into any contract for such carriage, file with the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada a tariff of the rates which such company, owner or person charges or intends or proposes to charge for the carriage of grain as aforesaid, and thereafter from time to time if and when any such company, owner or person, changes, varies or proposes to change or vary the tariff or any item or charge thereof so filed, he shall, previously to the making of any such change or variation in the actual charges in respect of any shipment, file with the Board a copy of the tariff so changed, varied, or amended; and any such company, owner or person who fails or neglects so to file any such tariff within thirty days after the passing of this Act, or before entering into any such contract, or to file with the Board notice in writing of any variation or change in any tariff so filed or subsequently filed by him, or who charges, contracts or stipulates or receives for the carriage of grain between Fort William or Port Arthur and any other port or place in Canada or the United States of America by lake or river navigation, any toll, charge or rate in excess of that shown by a tariff which has been so filed by him with the Board, or in excess of the tariff last notified by him to the Board as aforesaid, shall be guilty of an offence and liable therefor to a penalty not exceeding two thousand dollars and not less than five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, enforceable and recoverable upon indictment, or upon summary conviction before any stipendiary or police magistrate having the jurisdiction of two justices of the Peace, and moreover shall be disentitled to recover or to assert any remedy for the recovery of any freight for which he shall have stipulated at a rate in excess of that which shall have been notified to the Board in the manner aforesaid.

2. It shall be the duty of the Board to receive and tabulate all such tariffs and rates as may be filed with the Board as aforesaid, and moreover, to ascertain by all available means, the rates of freight which prevail or are exacted or required for the carriage of grain from Fort William or Port Arthur to any of the ports or places aforesaid, and to consider and report to the Minister of Trade and Commerce from time to time any facts which may come to the knowledge of the Board and which tend to show that there is a deficiency of cargo space, excessive freight charges, or discrimination in rates with respect to the carriage of grain as aforesaid, and all shipowners and other persons engaged in the grain carrying trade in Canada shall, upon reasonable request, immediately furnish to the Board such information as they may possess relating to any of the matters aforesaid, and shall for any wilful refusal or neglect to furnish the same be guilty of an offence against this Act and be liable to a penalty recoverable upon summary conviction not exceeding one thousand dollars and not less than two hundred dollars for each such offence.

3. Where in the opinion of the Board the toll, charge or rate which any company, owner or person charges or intends or proposes to charge for the carriage of grain as aforesaid is unreasonable or excessive, or amounts to an unjust discrimination against any person, company or class of persons as compared with the tolls or rates for similar traffic between Canadian and United States ports, or between one port and another in either of said countries, the Board may prescribe such maximum rates as it may consider reasonable; such maximum rates so prescribed may vary or be limited in their application according to the time or season of shipping, and the Board shall indicate in its order fixing such maximum rates whether the same are to prevail until further order or the period or periods during which they are respectively to prevail; the Board may also provide for the variation of such rates conditionally, having regard to conditions to be specified in its order, and the Board shall in like manner from time to time as it may consider necessary or advisable reconsider and vary or modify any order made by the Board in the premises. Any company, owner or person who charges, contracts or stipulates or receives any toll, charge or rate in excess of the maximum rates so fixed by the Board shall be guilty of an offence and liable therefor to a penalty not exceeding two thousand dollars and not less than five hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, enforceable and recoverable upon indictment or upon summary conviction before any stipendiary or police magistrate having the jurisdiction of two justices of the peace, and moreover shall be disentitled to recover or to assert any remedy for the recovery of any freight for which he shall have stipulated or charged at a rate in excess of the maximum rates so fixed as aforesaid.

4. Every one who is a vessel broker or person engaged or acting as agent or otherwise in the chartering of any vessel or in contracting for the hire or letting of cargo space for the carriage of grain from Fort William or Port Arthur to any port or place in Canada or in the United States of America by lake or river navigation shall post up, or cause to be posted up, at or before the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of each day during which the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and the office of The Board of Grain Commissioners, Fort William, are open for business, and shall keep posted during the day for general inspection in a conspicuous place in the said Exchange and in the office of the Board of Grain Commissioners at Fort William, a statement in print or writing showing in detail the cargo space, time for shipment and destination for carriage of all grain for the carriage of which from Fort William or Port Arthur to any other port or place in Canada or in the United States of America by lake or river navigation he has contracted or entered into any charter on the day last preceding, or, if the day last preceding be Sunday or a holiday, during the two days last preceding.

5. It shall be unlawful for any person who is a vessel broker or person engaged or acting as agent or otherwise in the chartering of any vessel or in contracting for the hire or letting of cargo space for the carriage of grain from Fort William or Port Arthur to any port or place in Canada or in the United States of America by lake or river navigation to solicit any risk, or to issue or deliver any receipt or policy of insurance, or to collect or receive any premium in whole or in part, or to inspect any risk, or to adjust any loss, upon, for or in connection with any consignment of grain so to be carried.

6. Every one who contravenes any provision of sections four and five of this Act or who fails or neglects to comply with any of the provisions thereof to which he is subject, shall be guilty of an offence and liable therefor to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars and not less than one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months; or, if a corporation, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding three thousand dollars, and not less than five hundred dollars; and any such offence may be prosecuted and the penalty therefor enforced or recovered either upon indictment or upon summary conviction before any police, stipendiary or other magistrate having the jurisdiction of two justices of the peace.

7. This Act is intended to regulate the shipping rates of grain transported for interprovincial, foreign or export trade, and accordingly shall not apply to grain carried locally to be ground or consumed in the province in which the shipment originates, but the burden of proof that any shipment of grain is within this exception shall rest upon the carrier.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Perhaps this may not be the proper time to discuss the matter, but I would like to make one observation. May I point out to the honourable leader of the Government that it is in my opinion very important that the Government should consider also, in this legislation, a requirement such as is already in effect with reference to railway rates, namely, that there shall not be a higher rate charged for a shorter haul than is charged for the longer haul. It has been very forcibly brought out this afternoon that the charge for hauling grain from Fort William to Midland was double what was charged for hauling the same quantity of grain from Fort William to Buffalo, to the disadvantage, besides, of our railway lines in Canada. The railway regulations specifically and clearly provide that a railway company shall not charge a higher rate for the shorter haul than for the longer one, and I think a similar provision might well be included in this proposed legislation. I mention this for the consideration of the honourable leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As I have said, I have not before me the Bill introduced by the Hon. Mr. Lapointe, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but I see that he has given notice of a resolution to amend the Canada Shipping Act to allow the Governor in Council to admit vessels of any foreign country to the coasting trade of the Dominion. These two resolutions grow out of the Report of the Royal Commission.

The discussion was concluded.

PRIVATE BILLS

THIRD READINGS

Bill 105, an Act respecting the Canadian Order of the Woodmen of the World.—Hon. Mr. Foster.

Bill K5, an Act respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

At six o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 o'clock.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 43, an Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, if any other member of the Chamber desires to continue the debate on this Bill I will postpone my remarks; but if nobody desires to speak, I will say a few words in closing the debate.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is ostensibly intended to put British Columbia on the high plane of Ontario with respect to the regulation of the liquor traffic. I mention Ontario particularly, because that is the place where we happen to be, and where, through the reading of the local press, we are most conversant with what happens under regulations such as a Bill of this kind would bring about in British Columbia, if it does all that is promised by its promoters.

While this Bill originates in the House of Commons, to use a familiar phrase, it is quite apparent from an examination of the records that its real origin is far distant from that august Chamber, and that it has been made in Victoria—and so carelessly made as to challenge criticism by any observant reader of it—made in Victoria in contravention of the provisions of the Constitution, which guarantee to the citizens of British Columbia, as well as to the citizens of other parts of Canada, certain rights, among others, the right of interprovincial and international trade, both of which rights are assailed by this request from the Government of British Columbia, so casually accepted by this Government.

While we are in effect declaring this Act to be for the general advantage of Canada, it behooves us to go a little carefully into it, and to ask why so exceptional a favour should be given to this measure. We are told, as something we should accept as an unanswerable reason, that the people of British Columbia want it, that the Legislature of British Columbia wants it. When we hear that, we are reminded of other requests that the Legislature of British Columbia, speaking for the people of British Columbia, has been urging upon this Government. For instance, for many years we have been asking for the control of the fisheries of British Columbia, which are of even more importance than the liquor traffic in that Province, and which, in our opinion, have suffered very seriously from administration at a place so far distant as Ottawa. We have not been surprised that our request has not been granted, because the answer has been logical—that the control of the fisheries has been confided by the Constitution to the Federal Government, and being so confided to that Government should remain there. We have asked for the control of our lands in the railway belt, which were presented by British Columbia as part of the bargain for the C.P.R. We are told that the control must remain where it is, that being part of the bargain. To take a simpler and smaller matter, we have asked almost unanimously through the legislature, over and over again, and through our members of Parliament, for the privilege of a customs officer at the port of New York so that we may take the advantage which nature intended us to have from the construction of the Panama Canal. Again we are told that this interferes with some commercial arrangements in eastern Canada, and that we must forego our ambition. But when it comes to the liquor traffic, which also is confided to the Federal Government, we find this to be in a class absolutely by itself, and that the request of the legislature is to be regarded as something sacred and something which this Parliament must of necessity observe.

Under these circumstances, it is very fitting that we should ask what is the moving spirit in this request. I notice in a remarkable letter read in this House, when this matter was last before us, these significant words:

> You in the Federal field are faced with this question —you depend for your continuance in office to a very considerable extent upon the success of the Party in the Provincial field and the continuance in office of Provincial Liberal Governments. You need a Liberal British Columbia, and you need it very badly.

In all that remarkable letter, it seems to me that there is more truth in the passage which I have just quoted than in any other part of the letter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend is not doing justice to the writer when he does not read the succeeding paragraph, because he says that the Liberal Government of British Columbia will only be maintained if there is good government in that Province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, he did not mean that.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If the honourable gentleman will excuse me, I will give an even more significant reason out of the same letter. It reads as follows:

> Very substantial contributions will be offered to the campaign funds of all parties.

I take the liberty of thinking, if it might seem improper for me to suggest, that that factor perhaps had more influence with the writer of the letter than the good government of the Province of British Columbia.

Of course, this prosperity of the Liberal party in British Columbia does not strongly appeal to me. In fact, as a citizen of British Columbia, I would not be sorry—indeed, I would be very delighted—if we could return to the happy condition of unexampled prosperity which we enjoyed in that province during the 15 years of Conservative administration before the unfortunate change in the hysterical period of 1916. So far as the success of the Liberal party is concerned, that, as I say, does not appeal to me.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there was a fly in the ointment—the railway bonus.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I do not want to digress, but I am quite willing to discuss any issues brought up. There was no fly in the ointment under the Conservative Government —under the McBride Government, the best Government British Columbia ever had. The McBride Government gave to Canada the most valuable portion of the Canadian National Railway system—the portion that more than anything else is apt to make that railway system a success. I refer, of course, not to the Grand Trunk Pacific monstrosity, but to the Canadian Northern Railway, the best railway ever built in Canada—built on the credit of the province of British Columbia, and as to which British Columbia would probably not have lost one cent of money or been out in any way. In fact, we are not losing a cent of money directly now, but we are at this disadvantage: that, after having built the railway to bring to us the grain trade of the prairies, which is our right on the coast, under an arrangement by which we would control the traffic rates on that railway, the Dominion Government seized it and put into effect a system of rates which have seriously handicapped our ambition to use that road as a grain traffic route through British Columbia. As to the other railway, if honourable gentlemen would like to hear about it, we could just as sharply contrast the programme and performance of the Conservative Government in British Columbia with the calamity which their successors have brought upon the Province in connection with the Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

As I was saying, the success of the Liberal party not appealing to me, it seems only fair that at the outset I should review the standing of the parties who have come before Parliament asking for this legislation. I do not mean their standing in a political sense, but their standing with reference to this question and in relation to this Parliament in which the question is now being discussed. We are entitled to ask whether they come to Parliament with clean hands, because it is a very special request that they are making of us, and in my mind the character of the applicants has a very material bearing on the case. First of all, are their hands clean with respect to the electorate of their own province? Because, after all, the electorate of the Province are the people most to be considered. These applicants who come to Parliament professing to speak for the electorate of the Province—are their hands clean, and is their record clean with respect to the electorate in connection with this measure?

I have only to state a few outstanding facts to enable the House to answer that question for itself. British Columbia, as honourable gentlemen no doubt know, has never been a prohibition Province. On no occasion when prohibition has been voted upon in that Province has it received a majority of the vote of the electorate. It came nearest to receiving a majority in the reference of 1916. When that reference was made to the people, it was proclaimed from every platform that a vote in favour of prohibition would not mean any interference with the inherent right of every citizen of British Columbia to import for his own use from any place outside of British Columbia, but that the effect of the vote would be solely to check the sale of liquor by retail in the Province. So clearly was that understood that the Government put it into their statute. This statute was referred to the people by the referendum of 1916, and after the referendum and the general election, with a new Government in power, there was a new Act put through the Legislature.

And the new Act of 1917 repeated the words of the Act of 1916 which had gone before the electorate, for this is what it said:

Section 57. While this Act is intended to prohibit and shall prohibit transactions in liquor which take place wholly within the province of British Columbia, except as specially provided by this Act, and to restrict the consumption of liquor within the limits of the province of British Columbia, it shall not affect and is not intended to affect bona fida transactions in liquor between a person in the province of British Columbia and a person in another province or in a foreign country, and the provisions of this Act shall be construed accordingly Nothing in this Act shall be construed to interfere (a) with the right of any person to import from without the province liquor for bona fide use in his dwelling-house.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND That is what Act?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: That is the Act of 1916, repeated in the Act of 1917.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: What clause?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: It is section 57 of the Act of 1916.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is what is called the Prohibition Act?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, the Prohibition Act?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Act under which the traffic is now carried on?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No.

That was the contract between the present Government of British Columbia and the electorate of that province. In 1920, there being dissatisfaction with the operation of the Prohibition Act, which failed to prevent the consumption of liquor in British Columbia and made hypocrites of the whole population by sending them to medical officers for prescriptions, on which they drank almost as freely as they are drinking now under Government control, the situation became an intolerable public scandal, and public sentiment demanded some change. An organization known as the Moderation League fathered a new reference to the people of British Columbia based upon this question:

Which do you prefer?
(1) The present Prohibition Act?

Or

(2) An Act to provide for Governmental control and sale in sealed packages of spirituous and malt liquors?

That is the Act referred to in the references from British Columbia as having been carried by the substantial majority of 35,000. It was so carried.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Which Act?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The Act of 1920.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The referendum.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The referendum of 1920, upon which the present Act for the control of the liquor traffic is based.

Again, in that contest it was plainly stated on platform after platform that this reference was not to be construed as interfering with the right of private importation—that it had nothing to do with private importation. Any honourable gentlemen who will take the trouble to look at the newspapers of that day will see in the advertisements of the respective parties that stress was laid upon that—that the prohibition party, for instance, in their literature made it plain that this scheme of Government control put farther off than ever the desire of the prohibition party to stop the private importation of liquor. The Government party were just as emphatic on their side in stating that no interference with private importation was intended. To make it perfectly plain that such was the understanding of the Legislature and of the Government, when the Legislature met in 1921 there was enacted what is known as the Liquor Control Act, which specifically exempts from the operations of the Act liquor in warehouse, and also liquor that had become lawfully possessed, that is, through private importation under the law at that time. The section with reference to warehouses reads as follows:

49. (1) Nothing in this Act shall prevent any person from having or keeping liquor for export in his liquor warehouse or place of business, or engaging in or carrying on the business of importing liquor from a place outside the province or exporting liquor to a place outside the province.

That is the law of British Columbia to-day, and it is in defiance of that law that the Government of British Columbia, the applicants for this measure, are before Parliament to-day.

I think I have shown that, so far as their undertaking with the electorate of British Columbia is concerned, they do not come here with clean hands; that, having got the first concession from a too confiding electorate, they have gone behind the backs of those people and come in by a side window to have the Parliament of Canada place in their hands a power which they have no right under the constitution to exercise. I think I have made it plain that so far as the electorate are concerned, the provincial Government's hands are not clean.

They undertook, in the next place, in their pledges to the electorate, to supply them with good liquor, to put down the bootlegging which had flourished under the Prohibition Act, and to give them liquor of the highest quality and most wholesome grades. Are their hands clean with respect to that pledge? We had a legislative investigation a few months ago into the charge that liquors so inferior that they had hitherto been unheard of in British Columbia, where the people have always been rather high-class in their drinks—liquors of vile quality were being offered from the Government Liquor store. Before that committee of inquiry it was proved that about sixty-nine varieties of Scotch whisky alone were being purchased by the Government; that is, through its Liquor Control Board, of course. The Liquor Control Board, I may say in passing, is a purely political board. There is a professional politician, a man who has been a political candidate over and over again, at the head of it. A professional politician from the Yukon —and when I say "from the Yukon" that tells the story—is one of his colleagues; and the only check upon them is the third member, who is not an active politician or active business man, but was a school inspector. That is the British Columbia Liquor Control Board. They bought 69 varieties of Scotch whiskies alone, fully three-quarters of those varieties being brands never before heard of in the Province of British Columbia, and introduced now solely because this political Liquor Board were buying from every peddler who could bring influence enough to bear upon them to secure a sale. It came out before this committee of inquiry that one of their purchases on a large scale—I forget the exact quantity, but it was a material quantity—was so very bad that, after putting the bottles upon the shelves of the various liquor stores throughout the Province, they were compelled by the outcry of the first few victims of this brand to withdraw it from circulation; and when they withdrew it from circulation they applied to it the attention of what they call the blending department, and the blending department applied prune wine and electricity and other devices known to the trade. Anyone who is at all acquainted with the liquor trade knows, when he hears of prune wine, that an adulterant is being used for the purpose of giving the smoothness and the oily appearance incident to age. He knows that prune wine is used for that disguising purpose and for nothing else. The evidence was that, thanks to the prune wine and the electricity, all this stuff, that was so vile that it could not be sold by itself, was put forward as a special blend of the Province of British Columbia, and was sold to unsuspecting customers at the full value of good whisky.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under a new label, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Under a new label—a special blend of the Province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Did it become popular?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The unfortunates did not know the difference.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: That is all right, then.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The stuff did not kill instantly. It was not like the chicken whiskey of which some honourable gentlemen may have heard.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What about the squirrel brand?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Chicken whisky and squirrel brand are very much akin.

Without wishing to detain the House too long, I will give you another sample of the way the Government kept their promise to the people of British Columbia to supply them with good liquor at a cheap price. At a certain stage there was established at False Creek, in Vancouver—note the happy choice of location—that is some artificially made land in the harbour—a place where they make California Old Port, that is, something that is put out labelled "California Old Port," with an imitation of the label of the famous "Convido Old Port," the label looking exactly like it, with the same general design and the same size of letters, but instead of "Convido," the word, "Bonvino." And this old port, made while you wait on False Creek in Vancouver, was put up without requisition on the shelves of the Government liquor stores in the Province. That fact too came out in the investigation. So satisfied were those people that their goods were exactly what the Government liquor stores desired that they did not wait for any requisition, but sent their stuff broadcast to all the principal stores before any requisition was received; and the lightning speed with which they made this was shown in a couple of letters on the file. One order was received for three or four cases of this port, and the answer came that unfortunately they had none in stock, but they would make some and supply the order in a couple of days, and this vendor got his "California Old Port" from False Creek in two days.

Now, I ask any honourable gentleman to say whether, on this recital, the Government of British Columbia have kept faith with the electors of that Province in the matter of giving them good liquor at a cheap price. Would any honourable gentleman in this House, being aware of the fact, say that we should take away from the people of British Columbia the right that they possess to go into the markets of the world and buy real California Old Port if they want it, or buy whisky of approved and recognized brands if they want that, without being subject to having "Bonvino" and prune juice served out to them by the Liquor Board of the Province of British Columbia?

I have dealt with the quality of the liquor. I want to say something next as to the price.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What about the kick? You have not said anything about that.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: This may be a joke to the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie, but it is no joke to the people of British Columbia. As I stated at the outset, the plea of that letter, that it is to the advantage of the Liberal party in the Province and in the Dominion, does not appeal to me. I want to be shown some other advantage before I accept this as a Bill which should receive my support in this House.

I spoke about the quality. I will tell you now about the price. The people of British Columbia pay the highest price in the world for the liquor sold to them. A good bottle of Scotch costs in the neighbourhood of $5 for the reputed quart. That would be about $7.50 for a real quart of good Scotch. Of course there are very heavy taxes on this, of recent years. There is a heavy customs tax, and there is a heavy excise tax on rye, and the Government is expected to make a substantial profit through dealing in the whiskey. Those factors force the price up high enough without artificial stimulants being applied, as they are applied by the Province of British Columbia through the Liquor Board. These artificial stimulants are in the form of easy money paid out as commissions to those who peddle the unknown brands to the Liquor Board.

An instance of that came before the Public Accounts Committee in the inquiry to which I have already referred. Making a pretense of laying all their cards on the table, they brought before the Public Accounts Committee all the official reports and documents, and they produced a collection of cheques and drafts, which, as any honourable gentleman knows, would be very innocuous under ordinary circumstances. However, these cheques and drafts, while numerous and very uninviting, did attract the attention of an enterprising member of the Committee, who looked into them to see if perchance he might get some inspiration from them. On one of the drafts he found an endorsement in big red letters. Those of you who are familiar with drafts know that when a special endorsement is to be made with respect to a draft, it is usual to put it on a slip and pin it to the draft; but in this case that precaution was neglected, and there was written across the face of the draft: "Do not pay without reference to our accompanying letter of instruction." The member of the committee seeing this, asked for the letter, just as we asked for that so fateful letter that came down here the other day, and he was told, just as we were: "Why, these letters are private. The bank of course returns the cheques and drafts, but it does not return the letters." Well, he asked that an order of the Committee be issued for the letter. The Government supporters immediately said: "But we have no authority over the banks, you know. They are under Federal jurisdiction, and an order from this little Provincial committee would not go with them." The Committee member, being still resourceful, said: "But this is the bank with which the Government does most of its business, and perhaps if we sent a polite request, they will comply with it, although not obliged to do so." That suggestion prevailed. Next day the officer of the bank was present with the letter, and this is what the letter said:

On receipt of.....

being the price to be paid by the Government—

—remit.....to us and pay..... pounds. shillings and pence—

—which being translated into dollars, amounted to about $6,500—

—to Bert Read, a copy of whose signature will be sent to you.

To make the story as short as possible, difficulties developed in the bank. Bert Read, I may say at once, was a fictitious person; no such person existed. A difficulty developed in the bank because they were loath to pay $6,500 to someone who simply wrote like the supposed Bert Read, and they asked for some further proof of identity. It became apparent that there would be great difficulty in getting that money; so a message was sent to New Zealand, from which direction this Scotch whisky had been brought to British Columbia—a rather roundabout route, you will see—and the answer came from New Zealand to ignore the reference to Bert Read and to pay instead to another person named; who, it turned out, was the invalid business partner of a son of a member of the Legislature, and this son of the member of the Legislature was getting $6,500 of easy money on this one purchase. It is because commissions of that kind are multiplying and are all-prevailing in connection with the liquor transactions of that Board, that we have to pay the exorbitant price we do pay in British Columbia for whisky. I ask again, on this recital, do the Government of British Columbia come to this House with clean hands in their application to be given further control of the liquor business in British Columbia, and to get such a cinch upon it that nobody can possibly buy a bottle without paying his share of the commission to the Bert Reads who are fastened upon the Government.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Was the man who sold the liquor in the liquor business?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No, he was not in the liquor business. This was, so far as I know, his first transaction, and possibly his last in the liquor business.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Was he in partnership with the member in the business?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No. The man under whose name the commission was paid was the invalid partner of a son of a member of the legislature. I should have added, to make quite plain the connection of this son with the incident, that another letter disclosed was from this son of a member of the legislature to the purchasing agent for the Board, which read like this: "Dear Mr. So-and-so: with respect to the order you were to receive from me, the brand is so-and-so, the quantity is so-and-so, and the price is so-and-so, and the order is to be addressed to this address in New-Zealand." So it was brought exactly home that the whole transaction was of this political nature, and that the invalid partner's name was simply used as a blind when the subterfuge of the fictitious Bert Read had failed.

Do the applicants come with clean hands in respect to their relations with this Government? That is getting nearer home to the business now before us. Have they kept faith with this Government in their previous transactions here? When the Prohibition Act came in in 1916 and 1917, the Government at Ottawa was not in political sympathy with the new Government of the Province of British Columbia, but, realizing the difficulties of the situation in British Columbia, where we were to have prohibition on one hand and freedom to import liquor from Quebec and Ontario on the other, and to export liquor from the Province, and realizing that this meant the passage of a considerable quantity of liquor through the Province of British Columbia, and that there should be some decent check upon that liquor during its passage through the province, the Government of the day—that is, the Conservative Government, or the Unionist Government, I forget which —voluntarily notified the Province of British Columbia that, so far as export warehouses were concerned, so far as the importing and exporting trade was concerned—the trade that had to be licensed by the Dominion Government in order to hold liquor for any purpose without paying all the customs and excise charges on receipt of it—they would decline to issue licenses except upon receiving the express consent of the Government of the Province of British Columbia. Honourable gentlemen will appreciate that that was a very friendly and a very decent and proper offer to be made by a Government at Ottawa to a Provincial Government with which it had no political sympathy. One would naturally think that the recipients of this advantage would say: "We must be very careful in our dealings with Ottawa; they are being very square with us, and we must show them that we do not abuse the confidence they are placing in our administration of this new law." Is that what the province of British Columbia did? I am almost ashamed when I say so often, "Is that what the province of British Columbia did," because I am proud of the Province of British Columbia, and graft is not natural to that Province. We are having our first experience of this nature out there—our very first experience of a Government of the kind we have now. I feel that it is due to myself and the other citizens of the Province to say that when I refer to things which bring the blush of shame to the brow of British Columbians here, I am not reciting them as something natural to that Province. They are unnatural and strange to us.

It very soon began to be noised abroad in the Province that any applicant for a license from Ottawa whose license was referred to the Government at Victoria could not get the endorsement of the Provincial Government unless he paid a very substantial sum of money, to put it plainly, in the way of blackmail. These rumours became so prevalent that one day in the Legislature the leader of the Conservative Opposition drew attention to them, and moved that a committee of inquiry be named by the Legislature to examine into these reports, particularly the reports that large sums of money were changing hands in consideration of the endorsement of Federal licenses for export warehouses. The motion was refused by the Government on the ground that there was no evidence in support of it, that it was simply a fishing expedition, and that the member making it must give names and particulars before a motion of that kind would be entertained; and every member supporting the Government voted with the Ministers to suppress the demand for the inquiry, on the ground, mind you, that there was no indication that there was any real truth in it.

But what happened? The incident was referred to by one of my colleagues from British Columbia the other night. The next day a newspaper in the city of Vancouver published a photograph of a cheque for $3,000, given for securing the provincial endorsement of an application to the Federal Government for a warehouse license; and this $3,000 was given to a firm of whom the senior member was a member of the Legislature and had voted the day before with his colleagues to say that he could not entertain this demand for an inquiry because there was nothing to show that there was any truth whatever in the allegation.

I am not reciting fables here: all these stories, lurid as they are, are part of the official record of the Legislature of British Columbia. I ask again, do these applicants come with clean hands with respect to their relations with this Government? Or do their actions in extorting blackmail or permitting the extortion of blackmail in connection with the endorsement of applications for Federal licenses assist in putting them out of court now, and justify us in saying to them: "We have trusted you once; you have abused our confidence; we cannot again extend to you the confidence which we were glad to extend to a Provincial Government at the outset."

Another incident of their relations with the Federal Government, though not disgraceful, shows the ungenerous attitude of the Government of the Province, and the narrowness of the treatment that may be expected from them whenever they have full power and when they get through legislation of this Parliament the handsome concessions and privileges over which you would think they would be loath to quarrel with their generous patrons at Ottawa, who, at this time, were not the Conservative Government or the Union Government, but the Liberal Government. There came a time when the excise and customs duties on liquor were doubled. The Government Liquor Board in British Columbia alone, of all the dealers in liquor there, left in warehouse over the Budget stage a very large quantity of liquor which they had in their possession. They alone were nipped by the increase in the duties. I am not sure of the amount; I do not know that I ever heard it; but I should think it would be in the neighbourhood of $250,000 or $300,000 that they had to pay in excess for their stupidity in not taking out their liquor. Instead of making the manly avowal that their inexperience had caused this, they took the ground for the first time that they were not obliged to pay customs duty on this at all, but that because the liquor was bought in the name of the Crown it was free of customs duty. I brought this matter up last year, and since then I think it has been finally settled. At all events, they have had this Government through two courts in the endeavour to prove that they were entitled to dodge the tax on the liquor on which they are making $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 profit a year. This incident, as I say, is not of the disgraceful nature of those I mentioned before; but nevertheless it shows the indisposition of the Government of British Columbia to play the game even with a friendly Government. And, in connection with this tax, the same Attorney General whose letter disfigures the pages of Hansard of this House, made the public statement when he was twitted with his lack of capacity in being stuck for the extra duty, that evidently the trade of Canada had been tipped off by the Ottawa Government, and that his Government had not been. From forty years' acquaintance with affairs at Ottawa, I feel free to say that there never has been in connection with any Government any warrant for any suggestion that in advance of a Budget anyone had been tipped off to get his goods out of warehouse or to leave them in. Yet this Attorney General of British Columbia had so little sense of decency in public affairs as to make that odious implication against a friendly Government. I ask: does he come with clean hands in respect of his relations with this Government? Are his hands clean with respect to this Parliament? We have a letter on Hansard, read last night, saying that his words meant nothing when he said that large sums of money would be used to debauch Parliament. "Far be it from me," he says, "to mean anything by that." He meant nothing at all. But in advance of the accidental discovery of that letter in this Chamber, the writer had broadcasted through Canada, through personal delivery of it and through causing the anonymous publication of such parts of the contents as were supposed to be damaging to the Conservative members of the Senate—there is no question about that. We are all perfectly familiar with the publication here six weeks ago which amazed us because of its extraordinary character, and as to which no origin was indicated in the paper publishing it, but which we found in time to be identical with the so-called confidential letter from the Attorney General of British Columbia to the Solicitor General of Canada. Does he come clean with respect to this Parliament? I think there can be only one answer to that.

While I am on the subject of that letter, I would like to point out that if the letter was not an official letter, if it was purely personal and confidential, as he says in his latest communication to the Speaker of this House, then there is no application at all before Parliament for this legislation. We have taken a printed slip received through the mail, and through the action of the initiating Chamber have put it on its way to becoming an Act of Parliament; and yet we accept from the man who we supposed sent us this slip officially the statement that his letter was not official at all, and that there was no official letter. Before we give a Government of that kind any concessions at all, it seems to me that we should have an application for them.

We all remember that the two Houses were deadlocked last year over the Bill then before us. It was absolutely essential to the peace, order, and good Government of British Columbia last June that we should pass that Bill exactly as presented to us and exactly as presented again in another place this year. On the last day of the Session the Committee of Management was deadlocked for three or four hours on that subject. The matter was so important that neither side would yield an inch. Incidentally there were two subjects before that Committee of Management, and we all know what has happened to one of them in the meantime. We find this year that the matter so essential to the Government of British Columbia last June is not what they want now at all, because that is not what we are being asked for in this Chamber to-night. It is true a Bill was introduced in another place to the same effect, but in its passage there it was materially altered, and we have now a Bill of an utterly divergent nature. The purpose is not to stop any possibility of bootlegging in British Columbia—a possibility which is so graphically described by those who tell about scores of cases of liquor being put on shipboard, and how, before the ship gets beyond the three-mile limit, it is slid over the side on to the friendly floats of the bootleggers. We have no application to stop that now. No doubt many honourable gentlemen who have not studied the Bill, but have simply heard it talked about, think that that is the object, but the application before us is simply to substitute one collection of possible bootleggers for another collection of possible bootleggers. We are now asked to give unlimited facilities, not to the export warehouses, but to distilleries and breweries. I appeal to any prohibitionist; what does it matter to a prohibitionist, if bootlegging is being done, whether it is done by an export warehouse, which in the case of a responsible warehouse means a wholesale dealer in liquors, or whether it is done by an incorporated distillery or brewery? I cannot see that we should be improving the situation, even if it required improvement, by substituting for the mushroom warehouse of the past the mushroom distillery of the future. and in saying that I speak advisedly. We have had only one distillery in British Columbia up to the present. That distillery made only rye whisky, in common with all other distilleries in Canada. Since this House has been asked to pass the present Bill there has been published in the British Columbia Official Gazette the notice of incorporation of a second distillery in that province, called, I think, the Consolidated Distilleries, with a capital of $5,000,000. Seemingly it has been attracted to the Province of British Columbia by the advertisement given before this Parliament of the special concessions that we are offering to distilleries and breweries in that Province.

Are the Government of British Columbia clean with respect to this present application, in coming to us now and asking us to substitute distilleries for export warehouses, and pretending that it is the same thing as that for which they applied last year, and which the Senate prevented them from having? I will give you an instance to illustrate what I mean in stating that the facilities for bootlegging would be the same under this Bill as they are at present. We all read in the press the other day of a large seizure of liquor off the coast of Victoria, at Discovery Island. Three or four American sloops were found taking on a cargo from some Canadian sloops, and the liquor was seized jointly by the Federal and Provincial police. Was that bootleggers' liquor? No. The report says that all this liquor bore the brands of reputable distilleries and breweries, duly licensed in British Columbia. And at the very time when we are reading of the bootlegging that has been carried on, not with bootleg liquor, but with liquor from licensed breweries and distilleries, we are asked in the name of prohibition and temperance to pass a Bill giving very valuable concessions to those very breweries and distilleries.

The Government at Victoria and the Attorney General of British Columbia are perfectly familiar with these facts. Is the Attorney General of British Columbia straightforward in coming to this House and asking for this legislation, as he persists in doing to this day, when he knows what happened under the eyes of his own officers only a few days ago? Is he straightforward in coming to this House with his present application when the resolution of his Legislature is expressly to the contrary. This is the resolution of the Legislature:

That the Federal Parliament be requested at its next sitting to enact legislation providing for the prohibition of the importation of intoxicating liquor into British Columbia for use therein, except by the Provincial Government.

That is not the application now before the House, and, realizing that fact, we are entitled to ask whose application is before the House? Not the application of the Legislature of British Columbia, but an application made off his own bat by the gentleman who wrote that scurrilous letter, which, being challenged, he immediately withdrew as meaning nothing. Now, has his application been as loosely framed as was his letter? and, being warned by our experience with the letter, should we take seriously his application?

I venture to say that there is hardly an elector of British Columbia who knows what that gentleman is asking at Ottawa. I read in a leading organ of the Government a couple of weeks ago, under flaming headlines, a report of the successful passage of this Bill through the House of Commons. It was in a paper published at Victoria and friendly to the Government, and pleased that success had crowned the efforts of the Attorney General to get something from Ottawa. At the end of the report, which was perfectly correct, in referring to the Bill without explaining precisely what it was, the editor undertook to add a little comment of his own to make perfectly plain to the people of British Columbia what it was that the good Parliament of Canada was passing for them, and this was what he voluntarily added at the end of the article:

An exception is made in the case of manufacturers and exporters.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR.

Honourable gentlemen will find that in the Victoria Times, at the foot of the article announcing the safe passage of this measure through the House of Commons, and hailing it with acclaim as something giving freedom to manufacturers and exporters. When the Bill comes here it expressly excludes exporters whose habitat is British Columbia. There is this element of truth in the footnote added by the editor of the Times, that it does give freedom to exporters provided they are situated in Ontario or Quebec. The Bill as now before us puts no bar whatever against the very same bootlegging, if originating in Ontario or Quebec, that the Attorney General of British Columbia says has been carried on from British Columbia warehouses by liquor being placed on board ships ostensibly for export and being slipped off before the ships pass the three-mile limit.

I would like to call attention to another point that I am sure the people of British Columbia do not understand. We read a great deal in the press now about the situation at the port of New York, under the new American liquor law forbidding vessels to bring liquor, sealed or unsealed, into the port of New York. That is precisely the condition to be created in respect to the ports of British Columbia by the Bill now before this House. Any honourable gentleman who reads the Bill will see that under its provisions no ship coming into British Columbia can bring in there a pint of liquor—that by this subterfuge the Government of British Columbia will have taken control not only of interprovincial traffic, but of international traffic as well; will have made the port of Victoria just as dry as the port of New York and the port of Seattle are made under American Acts. I have said that I thought no one in British Columbia really understood what is being offered to Parliament in the name of the people of British Columbia. So far as ships are concerned, I am confirmed in that opinion by a newspaper article which I have before me. I will read only a short extract. The heading tells the tale. It reads: "Sailors get cut-rate booze—Provincial Liquor Department gives special prices to attract trade of ocean vessels;" and the article goes on to say that, taking advantage of the situation created at Seattle and San Francisco and other competing ports on the Pacific, the Government of British Columbia have resolved to make British Columbia ports as attractive as they can to foreign-bound vessels by putting on a special drive on all classes of liquor. I think that I can interest the House more by quoting some of the prices offered than by giving a long recital. The article ends up with this statement:

> Other liquors will be sold at similarly cut prices. Gordon's Gin can be got at 61 cents a bottle and Gilby's at 62 cents.
>
> Thirty-five per cent over-proof Jamaica Rum will be sold at $3.20 a gallon.
>
> Quart bottles of champagne, Moet and Chandon, will be only $1.76.

That is a special drive by the Government of British Columbia to attract ships foreign-bound from British Columbia ports. Now let us follow that out.

Hon. Mr. HARMER: Is that the advertisement of the British Columbia Government, or is it just an irresponsible reporter's idea?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: That is the statement of a member of the Senate of Canada. I take the responsibility for the statement. Scotch whisky is quoted there on the same scale.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE: What are the freight rates from British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: In answer to my honourable friend I will say that the freight rates via the Panama Canal are very low. The shipment would take some time, but the rates are low.

Let me put practically to this House what we are asked to do in being asked to pass this extraordinary Bill, interfering with ocean traffic, interfering with transcontinental traffic, interfering with the personal liberty of every citizen of British Columbia, and interfering with the large and legitimate overseas trade of some wholesale warehouses that have been established there for fifty or sixty years. We are asked to pass a Bill that would interfere in all those ways, for the purpose of stopping bootlegging; yet at the same time the Government is offering to put on board all foreign-bound vessels Scotch whisky at about $20 a case. It sells on shore now at $60 a case. We are told that liquor put on those foreign-bound ships hardly reaches the three-mile limit before it is slipped over the side and either despatched into the United States or distributed over British Columbia; yet the Government of British Columbia are offering an inducement of $40 a case and making a special drive in order to bring about that condition.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At what price does that article say the Moet and Chandon champagne would be sold?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: At $1.76.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Are you sending for some?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How many cases would you take?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: It goes without saying that that price does not include the Dominion customs or excise when the liquor goes on foreign-bound ships. That is the explanation. Still the contradiction between the hifalutin letters of the Government of British Columbia and its actions is so great that it ought to impress this House that there is something more to this case than appears on the surface.

You will naturally ask, "What is there to this case?" I do not know what there is, but I am more than 21 years old, and I have had a little experience in watching affairs and observing what usually happens when opportunity is offered. I see the vision of one or two distilleries given the monopoly of supplying to the Government of British Columbia ten to twelve million dollars' worth of whisky a year, at their own prices. I realize what possibilities there are in a situation of that kind, and what a firm hand any Government, provided it is that kind of Government, can have upon a Province such as British Columbia if it has uninterrupted access to the possibilities presented by that picture. I am reminded of the suggestion that very substantial contributions will be offered to the campaign funds of all parties, and I am wondering whether this is a threat or an invitation.

That suggestion was made in that letter from the Attorney General of British Columbia to the Solicitor General of Canada, and the statement is now added: "This is a private communication". Keep it mum. I wonder whether there is any possibility that a man of the type who would write a letter of that kind would be influenced in his desire to get power so great as this by the possibilities arising out of it?

For all these reasons, and for others with which I will not detain the House, I am opposed to this Bill. I had almost said I was opposed to the principle of the Bill. I think that would have been a fatal error, because there is no principle to the Bill. As I see it, it is absolutely unprincipled and without any basis in reason or in argument; without any appeal to any friend of temperance, to any friend of prohibition, and least of all to any friend of good straight government. I know it is not wanted by the people of British Columbia. The prohibitionists of British Columbia, through their official organ, have highly commended the Senate for its action of last year in refusing to give the Government of British Columbia the absolute control over the liquor traffic which that Government asked from us. The Conservative party in the legislature, who last year agreed to the Government application, have seen the light in the meantime and have followed the Senate. The Conservative party this year were a unit in opposing the Government's application, their reason being very largely the incidents in the Public Accounts Committee which I have cited, showing the use the Government makes of its opportunities. Who is there left in British Columbia to want it? The prohibitionists do not want it; the Conservatives do not want it; it is a certainty that the liquor trade—that is, the people who hope to return to a condition under which they can again sell liquor—do not want it. Who is there left to want it except the one political party whose spokesman put before us this high ideal that it is to his political advantage in the Province and the political advantage of his party in the Dominion to pass this, and that there are in sight substantial contributions to the campaign funds of both parties?

I would say that if Parliament is sincerely desirous of giving to the people of British Columbia what they want, Parliament will treat that Province as it is entitled to be treated under the Canada Temperance Act, and will say to them: "We invite you to take the opportunity of a plebiscite on this subject." So far as I am concerned, if a plebiscite be put before the electors of British Columbia, and they make any request by a majority under that plebiscite, I will support it; but without authority of that kind from the people of British Columbia I will not be a party to fastening upon them the features proposed by this Bill.

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I had not intended to speak on this Bill at this stage; but, after the fine picture which the honourable gentleman has given us of his Government in British Columbia, I feel that I should take this opportunity of saying a few words.

The honourable gentleman has chose to impeach in very strong terms the provincial Government and the Attorney General of British Columbia. I am not in a position to refute his accusations, nor do I believe I am called upon to do so. If the British Columbia Government is what the honourable gentleman claims it to be, I hope that there will soon be a change of Government in that province. However, I have to bear in mind the fact, without imputing any badness to the honourable gentleman, that he is a strong supporter of another political faith, and in consequence, I believe, may be influenced.

As I understand our duty, it is to try not so much to accede to the desires of political parties in any province, but to accede to the desires expressed by the people of the provinces; and I must call attention to the fact that we are asked to pass this Bill not only by the Government of British Columbia, but that it is supported by some five or six other provincial governments.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: By all of them.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Will the honourable gentleman permit me a question? Do those Governments know what the measure is? Is it the first measure or the second measure?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable gentleman knows that all provincial Governments receive the Bills as they are printed for the Federal House; and how is it that the Prime Minister of Quebec or of Ontario or of Manitoba—

Hon. Mr. POPE: Manitoba has just had a vote on that question.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE:—or of Saskatchewan or of Alberta have taken the trouble to write letters or send telegrams without knowing what they were talking about? Even if they had not the Bill, they were perfectly informed by the press. The matter has been discussed over and over again by the press of the country.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If the honourable gentleman will permit me to say so, I think he will find that every provincial Government spoke only at the solicitation of the Attorney General of British Columbia, and how much reliance we can place in him we know now.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable gentleman is quite mistaken. We had a Bill of the same nature.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: And the Bill was strongly desired—

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: This is a different Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is practically the same.

Hon. Mr. POPE: It is all settled: Quebec wants it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: My duty, as I understand it, is to try to find out what is the desire of the population of the province. As far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, I will refer very briefly to the statute to which the honourable gentleman has referred. The honourable gentleman called attention to the statute of 1916, which was the Prohibition Act, and referred this House to section 57, saying that the Act was to affect certain transactions in liquor. He said that it was not intended to prevent importation. I will not read the clause which was read by the honourable gentleman, but will refer to clause 10, which the honourable gentleman has not read, and which is the main clause of the Act. It says:

Except as provided by this Act, no person shall, within the province, by himself, his clerk, servant, or agent, expose or keep for sale, or directly or indirectly, or upon any pretence, or upon any devise, sell, or barter, or offer to sell or barter, or in consideration of the purchase or transfer of any property or thing, or for any other consideration, or at the time of the transfer of any property or thing, give to any other person any liquor.

Under that Act there was an absolute prohibition to sell liquor, except under the provisions of the Act. That is the first expression that we have from the province, as represented by the Government.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: I do not wish to interrupt the honourable gentleman, but I think he is unintentionally misleading the House. He refers to a section of the Act which prohibits any person from having liquor for sale. The section referred to by my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) is a different clause, which reserved to the people the right of importing liquor for their own use.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Quite so. I said I did not think it was necessary to repeat clause 57, which is to the effect that the Act is not intended to prevent persons importing liquor for their own use. I merely call attention to the fact that this was a prohibition measure. This was the first expression of opinion on the part of the Province as represented by the Government; and so far as that Government was concerned, it was a Conservative Government—a Government in which the honourable gentleman had confidence.

What was the next step? It was the referendum which took place in 1920. The people were asked: "Which do you prefer—1. the present Prohibition Act, or 2 an Act to provide for the Government control and sale in sealed packages of spirituous and malt liquors"? And the honourable gentleman said that a very large majority, some 35,000 odd, voted, not for the first, but for the second alternative. Not being content with prohibition as it was, they expressed a very strong desire to go much further, and be more strict by exacting that liquor be sold only in packages. We know what that means.

What was the next step? The next step was the passing of the Liquor Control Bill, which, in 1921, gave effect to the will of the people. Section 26 says:

Except as provided by this Act, no person shall within the province, by himself, his clerk, servant, agent, expose or keep for sale, or directly or indirectly or upon any pretence, or upon any device, sell or offer to sell, or in consideration of the purchase or transfer of any property, or for any other consideration, or at the time of the transfer of any property, give to any other person any liquor.

27. No vendor, and no person acting as the clerk or servant of, or in any capacity for any vendor, shall sell liquor in any other place, or at any other time or otherwise than as authorized by this Act and the regulations.

Without going into details—for I want to take as little time as possible—let me point out that under this Act, giving effect to the will of the people, the Government took control of the sale of liquor in packages and allowed the sale of liquor only to persons who had permits. So it was decided to give effect to the will of the people that the Government not only should have the exclusive control of the sale of liquor, but would exercise it very strictly, and sell liquor only in packages, and only through their own representatives. Surely that was intended to prevent the sale of liquor through importation by bootleggers, or by persons who were acting in violation of the law.

Now the Government of the province are stating that they want to put down abuses; and the honourable gentleman seems to admit it, because he says there are very grave abuses on the part of the breweries, but he seems to submit to the infraction of the law on the part of the wholesale importer.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I am sure the honourable gentleman does not want to misrepresent me. That was not the effect of my argument at all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I am perfectly willing to accept the explanation of the honourable gentleman; but I understood him to say: What is the use? What we are having from the wholesale importers we are having from the brewers. It is better to get rid of one even if the other remains. I have noticed also that the honourable gentleman is afraid that instead of one brewery there will be two.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Distilleries.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But we have this expressed will of the people that the sale should be controlled most strictly, and we are told now not only by British Columbia, but by all the Provinces, so to speak, that they desire to be given the means of giving full effect to the legislation which the people desire to have. I have taken that position, not only this year, but from the time of the Doherty Bill, which I helped to pass—and I think the honourable leader on the other side will not deny that I helped him very much in passing that Bill.

What was the object of the Bill? It was recognized that under the Constitution legislative powers are divided, some being vested in the provinces and others resting with the Dominion Parliament; that the Provinces are not vested with the necessary power in regard to temperance legislation or the sale of liquor; that we should supplement their powers so that they may deal with such matters in a way that will give effect to the wishes of their people That is the position which I took seven or eight years ago, and it is the position I have maintained to this day and will maintain. I claim it is our bounden duty to enact whatever supplementary legislation is necessary in order that a Province may give its people what they desire. I think that is the only question before us. We have been asked by most of the provinces, if not all, to supply the power which they do not possess. For my part I will certainly support the Bill.

The honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Taylor) has referred to what has taken place in New York. He is afraid that the ports of British Columbia may become entirely dry, like New York. But I think the honourable gentleman knows as well as I do that it is claimed by all nations that it is a violation of international law to prevent vessels entering the port of New York, carrying liquor not for sale but for use on the vessel itself. The liquor remains on board the vessel. A vessel would not be prevented by the passing of this Bill from entering a port with whatever liquor it was desired to have for use on the vessel itself.

Hon. A. E. PLANTA: Honourable gentlemen, the case of the people of British Columbia has been so very ably presented by my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) that I almost hesitate to say anything, lest it might detract from the splendid presentation which he has made. But there are some features of the case which I wish briefly to touch upon, and I promise, honourable gentlemen, that I will not take long.

It has been said by the honourable the Attorney General of British Columbia in his famous letter, and by the press of the country inspired by that honourable gentleman, and it has been said in this Chamber to-night by the honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat, that the opposition to the application of the Attorney General of British Columbia for the enactment of this Bill number 43 is political. I take strong exception to that statement. It is perhaps unfortunate that most of the honourable gentlemen in this Chamber from British Columbia happen to be in the Opposition, but I take it that all honourable gentlemen in this House deal with principles and do not allow their actions to be governed by political expediency. I am sure it was so when the vote was taken last year, and I am sure it will be so again this Session.

It has been said, because honourable members of this side of the House voted against the Bill last year, that they were in league with the bootleggers and rum-runners. I voted against the measure introduced last year, and I intend to vote against the present Bill, and I am neither in league with bootleggers nor rum-runners. I have no interest, directly or indirectly, in the liquor traffic. I have never yet obtained a permit to purchase liquor from the British Columbia vendors—not because I had a large supply on hand when the Act came into force, but because I am almost a total abstainer; and, as far as I am personally concerned, it would never worry me if there were never another drop of liquor distilled. I do not think it is right that that accusation should go out. It has even been used in the Province of Ontario in the present election campaign. The Conservative members of the Senate have been pointed out as being opposed to the measure which is now before Parliament, and to the Bill of last year, and it is rather expected that the Senate may treat Bill 43 now before us in the same manner as the Bill of last year was treated. I would like to remind honourable gentlemen present, and the newspapers which make those statements, that it was a Conservative Government in Ontario, if I know anything about the matter, which first introduced prohibition legislation into this Province, and as a result it went down to defeat. It was also a Conservative Government in British Columbia which took the first step to give the people of British Columbia an opportunity to have prohibition in that Province, and it also went down to defeat, because, for some reason or other—I do not know why—the prohibitionists were so ungrateful that they voted for the other side. So it cannot be said by any stretch of the imagination that the Conservatives are in league with the liquor interests and are opposed to any prohibition legislation.

But it is not a question of prohibition that we have to deal with nor yet is it a question of the greater control of the liquor traffic. It is a principle that we have to consider—the principle of retaining for the people of British Columbia that right which the people of every other Province enjoy. I was glad to hear the honourable member who has just spoken refer to legislation which he had assisted the honourable leader on this side of the House to pass, in order to give expression to the will of the people. I believe that the people should have what they desire. Now, it has been pointed out very ably by the honourable member for New Westminster, and by other speakers on this question on a former occasion, that the people of British Columbia had expressed no desire for this proposed legislation; on the other hand, they have expressed the desire to retain the right of private importation. If I could satisfy honourable gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber to-night that such is the case, this Bill would in my opinion get short shrift from both sides, regardless of the political party to which members may belong.

When the honourable leader of this House (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) was presenting this matter the other day in this Chamber, I made the statement that the people had voted for Government control on the express understanding that they were to retain the right of private importation. The honourable gentleman challenged that statement; nay, he did more—he defied me to produce a newspaper in which any such statement was published. We people of British Columbia know very well, and it has already been stated very definitely and positively, that that was the express understanding. It was so stated from the platform and in the press, and I know that if I had at my disposal or could refer to the files of the newspapers of the Province of British Columbia, I would be able to produce not merely one but many newspapers in which editorial comment such as I have stated was made upon that subject. I have not been able to do so, but I have found a statement which was made by the Premier of British Columbia at the time this question was being discussed, just prior to the vote. He is quoted in the Sun, of Vancouver, which was, and so far as I know is still, the official organ of the Liberal party in that province. On October 17, in the year 1920, the Premier, in speaking on the subject, said in part:

> The object of the Government is to obtain a mandate from the people for its guidance in future. Whatever the public ask we will try to give. The Act as it now stands was never intended to prevent a man from obtaining liquor for use in his own home.

I would ask honourable gentlemen, what does that mean if it does not mean just what I have said?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not admit that.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: The honourable leader shakes his head; but where else was a man to obtain liquor?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: From the Government Commission.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: That would have been a rather superfluous statement for the Premier to make, would it not? There was no Control Act at that time. I would like to remind my honourable friend that the Act to which the Premier was referring was the Prohibition Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend will allow me, I will tell him how I understand it, taking the situation as I see it in my own Province. We in Quebec have always contended that we were against the saloons and the bar; that bars and saloons should be closed; but that no man should be denied the right to have in his own house what he pleases.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes, but he had to get it through the Commission.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: I am sure that that is what the Premier meant, and I am sure that he meant nothing else. But perhaps this will satisfy my honourable friends, for I am sure they are ready to be convinced. In the same newspaper, of the 19th of October, and perhaps on other dates—I did not look any farther—there appeared an advertisement for the Prohibitionist Party, a full sheet in length and almost a full page in width, in very bold type, cautioning the electors how to vote and what effect their vote would have on the handling of liquor. This is what they say in bold type:

> Don't forget that every vote for Government sale means a definite mandate to the authorities—

A definite mandate to the authorities—for what?

Remember, amongst other things, it deprives the Province of the right to stop the importation of liquor, the cause of most of the trouble in enforcing prohibition.

Then there is a note:

Under Dominion law a province which has adopted prohibition may, by a majority vote, when such a vote is sought by the Legislature, shut off importation. A Province which is not under prohibition cannot do so.

That is what appeared in the public press as from the Prohibition Party—pointing out to the people that the legislation would not in any way interfere with the right of private importation. There is no doubt whatever in the mind of anyone who was in British Columbia at the time that the right of private importation was not to be interfered with by the passage of the Government Control measure. The people were sick of prohibition. They wanted Government control. They wanted better control than prevailed under prohibition in the sale of liquor, and they put that control into the hands of the Government, expecting that the Government would control the sale of liquor. We from British Columbia know, and it has been very well pointed out to-night, that the Government do not control the sale of liquor. The Government make no attempt to control the sale of liquor. They will sell liquor to any man who has the money to pay for it, and in any quantity for which he has the money to pay, without any question as to what he is doing with it. They know very well that many of those men who are purchasing wholesale quantities are not purchasing it for their own private consumption. There has been plenty of evidence in the Province of British Columbia of men having been caught in the act of bootlegging and not prosecuted. It so happened—it may have been a coincidence, but it is a fact nevertheless, that they were friends of the Government. There has been, not merely one, but a number of such cases.

The object of this Bill is said to be to enable the Government to prevent bootlegging. I contend that that is not the chief object of this Bill at all, and I think I can substantiate my statement that the Government are not so anxious to stop bootlegging as they are to have a monopoly of the liquor business. I would like to quote the Premier again. He was reported in the same newspaper, the Sun, of November 4, 1920, two weeks after the vote had been taken:

Speaking at Golden, B. C.—

The night before, I presume—

The Premier had said: "It will be necessary for the province to obtain from the Dominion the power to forbid importations except upon Government account, for we will have to establish an extensive and an expensive plant in connection with the liquor business, and will therefore want all the revenue to be derived from a monopoly of the sale."

We know that the profits of the business of the Government have already been huge. They do not need this extra business of which the private importers are depriving them. They do not need it in order to pay for this expensive and extensive plant. They have already an abundance of money. They charge most excessive prices and are making tremendous profits. So it is a false pretext to say to this Parliament that they find they are unable to put down bootlegging and rum-running unless they are given a monopoly of the importation. The real reason is that they want to monopolize the business in order to get so much more profit; and incidentally their friends will get a commission on the sale of liquor, because most of the liquor is purchased through friends. That is a well-known fact. There are many people in British Columbia who have obtained an agency for some distillery just for the purpose of selling a thousand or so cases of liquor to the Government at an excess price, so that they may get a rake-off, but I have never heard of any Conservatives having been given an order for any liquor. In fact, I think that in the same investigation that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Taylor) referred to, it was shown that the Government Control Board could have purchased liquor through a Conservative agent for a less price than that at which they purchased the same brand of liquor from a friend, so that is the real reason why this Bill is asked for.

But the point I wish to emphasize is this: that in every other province of the Dominion the people are given the right to say whether or not they want prohibition. I claim that this Bill is a prohibitory measure, and that it should not be passed until the people have been given an opportunity to express their views on the question. If the Government are sincere, why do they not go to the people? They have been challenged to do so, but they have not accepted the challenge. They have been challenged to bring on an election in the city of Vancouver, where there has been a vacancy ever since the last Federal election, and they have been challenged to make their administration of the liquor business the issue. But they have not accepted the challenge, because they know just what they would receive. The Government are on the eve of an election, and they are in a quandary. They know that when the people get an opportunity of voting they are going to vote them out of office. They are trying to retrieve themselves, and in this way. In the last election their return was bought and paid for by the liquor interests—I say that advisedly—on an understanding that at the first Session of the Legislature, when the Liquor Control Bill was brought down there would be a clause in it allowing the sale of beer, in some way or other, similar to that in vogue in Quebec. The Premier, I believe, would not stand for that, and disregarded the promise which had been made by the then Attorney General. They betrayed the liquor interests, and they know they have not much to expect at their hands in the next election, and they are trying to square themselves with the prohibitionists, and to obtain the whole prohibition vote. That is why they are coming here and asking for this measure—for that and for the purpose of building up a still greater campaign fund.

To show that these are not my own views only, and that the question of the right of public importation is a live one in British Columbia, I am going to read a telegram which I received a day or two ago. This is not marked private and confidential, so perhaps it was intended that I should make use of it. It is from Charles Wilson, K.C., former Attorney General in the Provincial Government. It is addressed to myself, and is as follows:

Opinion here strongly in favour of retaining right to import. It should only be destroyed after plebiscite

That is the stand which I take. That right to import should not be taken from the people except by the will of the people. Why does this Parliament suggest, as it has suggested in the Bill which is before us, taking away from the people of British Columbia the right that the people of every other Province enjoy?

When this question was voted upon in my constituency, it was carried by a majority of two to one. I may say that the total majority of 35,000 represented 33 per cent of the vote cast. In my own constituency the vote was two to one for this Government control measure, on the distinct understanding that the people would have the right of importation.

I do not want to delay the House any longer, but I would like to close my remarks by quoting from a newspaper published in Nanaimo, B.C., of recent date, to show that the statements which I have made are a fair expression of the views of the people who voted for Government control, as expressed by the editor of this paper. This, I may say, is not a Conservative newspaper, but an independent paper, and well known to be so. It is the Daily Herald, of Nanaimo. On the 30th of May, the day on which, I believe, this notorious letter of the Attorney General's was read in this Chamber, this article appeared:

It depends upon the action of the Senate whether or not the people of British Columbia are to retain their present right to import liquors from outside countries. The House of Commons, at the instance of Attorney General Manson, and the Oliver Government, has already passed an act prohibiting private importation. The Senate last session threw out a similar measure, and it only remains now to be seen what it will do on this occasion.

The action of the Oliver Government is consistent only on the assumption that a monopoly in importation would enable it to make still greater profits on its liquor business. When common-sense amendments to the Liquor Act have been asked for in the Legislature, it has taken the position that it could not grant them because of the wording of the plebiscite which was submitted to the electors. There was nothing in the wording of the questions submitted to the people which gave the Government a monopoly in importation. Yet without any reference to the people from whom it received its authority to carry on its liquor business, it is now appealing to Ottawa for power to prohibit private importation.

Attorney-General Manson and his Government claim that it is impossible to stop bootlegging and properly enforce the provisions of the Liquor Act unless it is given this monopoly in importation. It is for the electors of British Columbia to decide whether this is the real motive behind the Government's application to Ottawa, or whether the true reason is not the sordid one of increasing the profits from the administration of the liquor business. After all, it is deeds, not words, that count. From the very beginning, the Government has run its liquor business with the one idea of making as much money as possible out of it. It has charged an extortionate price for all its goods, and some of the whiskies it has offered for sale have not been fit for consumption. The wholesale liquor houses, after paying extortionate license fees, and without the credit of the Government behind their operations, have always been able to undersell the government stores. There, in a nut shell, is the reason for the Government being unable to stop bootlegging.

And, in any event, the people themselves gave the Government the authority to carry on a liquor business. Since the last plebiscite there have been agitations for amendments to the Act calling for the sale of beer by the glass under Government regulation. The Government has always pleaded that under the terms of the plebiscite it could not accept these amendments, and the Legislature has voted them down. Why, then, override the rights of the people in this application to Ottawa for a monopoly in importation? Since the Government has exercised its right to impose a Provincial tax on imported liquors, why go to Ottawa at all? And surely under all the circumstances and the history of this question, and in view of the democratic claims advanced in the name of Liberalism, the Government would have done much better to refer this issue to the people before taking any action whatsoever.

That, I am sure, expresses the sentiment of a very large majority of the people of British Columbia. The fact of the matter is that the present Government have not been controlling the liquor business to the satisfaction of the people. They have made it easy for bootlegging; they have made it as easy as possible to obtain liquor in all corners of the Province. They even meet the tourists down in the corner of the province where they come in from the United States, and have established vendors there so that the tourists can get liquor without travelling very far. They are making a bid for the business wherever it can be got, and I say that the people of British Columbia do not want the Government to have any more control than they have at present. I am convinced that when the people are given an opportunity they will put in power a Government that will control the liquor business. Attorney General Manson may be very sincere. I know nothing about Mr. Manson, and would not say anything against him; but the letter read in this Chamber the other night certainly lays him open to very severe condemnation. He is a young man, inexperienced, and not big enough for the job—and that is where the whole trouble lies. I sincerely hope the members of this honourable House will not give to the present Administration in British Columbia further powers which the people of the Province have not asked for.

Hon. L. O. DAVID: Honourable gentlemen, if this legislation were asked for only by the Government of British Columbia, for the reasons given by the honourable members who have just spoken, and which are, I think, well founded, I would vote against the Bill; but as this legislation is requested by the other Provincial Governments, whose hands are clean, and who desire a proper control of the sale of strong liquors, I will vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I take it for granted that I must close this debate.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Before my honourable friend proceeds to do that, will he allow me a few words? If it is intended to close this discussion to-night on the second reading, I should like to say a few words before we go that far, and I will try and not make my remarks too lengthy.

The legislation which is before us, it appears to me, ought to be decided upon its merits. We have a Bill which comes to us from the other House. It is a Bill which, when presented to that House, was of much the same nature as a Bill presented and discussed last year, and which met with the reception which we all bear in mind at the present time. The Bill as presented in the House of Commons this year was not much, if any, different from the Bill presented last year. But it passed through the other House and came to us in a form which is quite different in some respects from the form in which it was introduced into the other House. In some respects I believe this Bill to be good; in other respects I believe it to be deficient and capable of very much modification to better and strengthen it in order to achieve the purpose aimed at, namely, to prevent bootlegging in the Province of British Columbia. My position is somewhat difficult, as I explained to honourable gentlemen last year. On principle, I would much rather that the business of controlling the sale of intoxicating liquors was not in the hands of a party Government; and last year I voted against the measure largely because of my conviction with reference to that.

There is no necessity for my going over the arguments that I used last year. In many respects I believe that making the Government the liquor seller of a Province has in it elements which are vicious, and which, in the end, will not attain what I think is the evident purpose of the people of this country —to achieve a condition with as little abuse of intoxicating liquors as it is possible to obtain. I do not suppose the most optimistic believe that we will ever see the day when the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage will be absolutely refined out of this country or out of the other countries of the world. But the progress which has been made in the past towards better habits in that respect—greater moderation, greater temperance, and the achievement of all that has followed along that line—gives us hope that in this, as in every other great social movement of the time, we are progressing in a way which leads to a social state of far greater comfort and efficiency than we have enjoyed in the past.

There is a difficulty for one who is not an inhabitant of the Province of British Columbia—a Province which is all too distant from us in some respects—to size up just the situation, or to determine what may be the average opinion of the mass of the people with reference to this debatable and very complex question. I have tried as far as I possibly can to size up the situation, and my course with regard to the measure is, I think, fairly clear before me. The proposed legislation has had the advantage of last year's debate in both Houses. It passed the House of Commons unanimously. There have been criticisms in the other House with reference to the Government of British Columbia; criticisms perhaps on the system in vogue there; but, after all, when the measure was amended and put into its present shape it passed the House without any disagreeing vote. It comes to us from the House of Commons in a second year and with the assent of the House as a whole. I give full credit to honourable gentlemen in this House who represent the Province of British Columbia. I do not in the least impugn their motives, their principles, or the lines that they take. But I must, I think, come to this common-sense conclusion, that the members representing British Columbia in the House of Commons, members who were elected by their constituencies and have to go back to their constituencies, ought to have, and I will give them the credit of having, knowledge and conviction at least equal to those of their honourable colleagues in this House; and the members of the House of Commons from British Columbia have not found it necessary or advisable to vote against this Bill, but have given it their support. It comes to us in its second year in a much improved condition. If it had not been very much improved I should have voted against it. It is a very different Bill from that which we discussed and upon which we acted last year.

With reference to the letter that has been written and the position which the Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia occupies, I do not want to be too strong in criticism, but must exercise my own judgment. I find no excuse for the letter. I find no excuse for its spirit or its expressions, and I cannot see how an Attorney General of a Province could have taken the positions which were taken by the present Attorney General and claim that his course had been consistent and straightforward in this whole matter. But I do not think we are here to legislate because an Attorney General does this or does that, or because of his mistakes one way or another. The Bill is before us as a matter of legislation, and it seems to me that it is my duty as a member of this House to consider the Bill for one purpose alone: what is the object which it professes to attain? Does the Bill as it is couched at present attain that object? If it does in part, then there is something to support, and as it passes through the House we can try to make it perfect if that can be done, or as nearly perfect as possible, in order that the object which it professedly has in view may be attained. That is the position that I take with reference to that matter.

My difficulty is just this. I have never seen a more general expression of opinion in the press and amongst the public of any Province regarding—what shall I say?—the failure of this system as it is being administered in British Columbia to carry out the purposes for which the Act apparently was enacted. During the last two years you could not take up any daily or weekly newspaper of that Province without finding an expression of opinion as to the laxity with which the Act has been enforced or attempted to be enforced; and I do not make any discount at all on the statements that have been made by honourable gentlemen here to-day as to what has come out in the investigations. I think that the situation in British Columbia is an absolutely bad situation, and I think that if we can do anything in this Senate to make it better it is our duty to do it. And I take this attitude as well: British Columbia regulates its own affairs; British Columbia is under its Government at the present time; the men and women in British Columbia, who are the electors of that Province, have this matter before their own eyes from day to day, from week to week. It is surely not for us to interfere in the strifes between parties or with the administration by the party at present in power, with reference to their local affairs and try to straighten them out. It is the duty of the constituencies in British Columbia to deal with the Provincial Government, and when the proper time comes to hold them to strict account for their laxity and their failure in performance. We should have a very sorry time of it in this Legislature if we undertook to correct provincial administrations in all the Provinces of this Dominion, and I do not think that we would ever succeed in doing that. It is for the provinces themselves to do it, and if statements that have been made here and have appeared in the press of British Columbia are true statements, as I have no reason to doubt, I mistake the people of British Columbia if at the very first opportunity that offers they do not administer the medicine which is necessary for laxity in performance and for failure in this respect.

I can see the almost unlimited possibilities that a Government possesses which has absolute control of the liquor traffic in a Province like British Columbia. They must be mighty virtuous not to commit mistakes and errors into which can be woven a good deal of partizan and political interest from time to time. Yet there is another question which I think we must examine. We must choose between just these two things. I hate like the very mischief to put this control into the hands of a party government, which almost invariably will use it for party interests in one way or another. I hate that, but at the same time I hate bootlegging worse than I hate the control which a Government may have when there is given to it all the power for which it has asked, and there is thrown upon it the responsibility of doing its duty by the Province in the administration of the Act. What do the friends of prohibition and even of moderation in British Columbia say? They go to the Government and say: "Look at this, look at that, and look at the other. Why don't you stop this infernal business of bootlegging, which you yourselves, every organ of public opinion, and every association which has spoken of late has made so prominent with relation to lax administration in British Columbia? Why do you not stop it? Why do you not perfect your administration?" The only answer given is: "The Senate of the Dominion of Canada will not give us the power that we ask. We have asked for this power from the Dominion Parliament. The Commons have approved of giving it to us, but when we go to the Senate it says, 'No, we will not give it to you,' " They rely on that excuse. If the Senate in its wisdom sees fit to give this control, and with it impose upon that Government the absolute responsibility and the duty of seeing to it that an honest and efficient administration is given, you take away their last excuse and you leave them bare and naked before the people of British Columbia, who, if I do not mistake that people, will judge them according to their merits and their demerits.

There is another aspect. This bootlegging business is bad not only for British Columbia itself; it is not only vicious in all the influences that surround it or proceed from it; it is breaking down—

Hon. Mr. PROWSE: Will my honourable friend allow me to ask him one question? Why refer only to British Columbia at this stage? Does not this affect every Province? Why does the honourable gentleman want to mention only British Columbia?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: My honourable friend can quite see that it affects every Province. He has just as good eyesight as I have and can read the Bill as well as I, and he has just as good a mind; but I am directing the argument to the point from which arguments have chiefly come, and I am taking that one Province as the particular example of my argument at the present time. I say this bootlegging business is bad for the Province, but if it suits my honourable friend better, I will say it is bad for any Province—just as bad for Nova Scotia as it is for British Columbia, and just as bad for New Brunswick or for Quebec as for British Columbia. Bootlegging is a bad and vicious thing, and there is hardly anything that you can cite which tends to break down and lower public respect towards law and order more than a bootlegging or rum-running business conducted on the basis of the old slave trade, because there is absolutely no principle or scrupulousness in it. It is for money that the bootlegging is done, just as it was for money that the slave-running trade was carried on. It is for money also that the immigrant-running business in the United States is even now being carried on upon a large scale. I have no tenderness of heart and no scruples at all in proceeding against bootleggers of whatever type they may be.

Bootlegging is equally bad in its effects in destroying the good neighbourhood and comity which ought to exist among the provinces of this Dominion, which in one way or another are all interested in the elimination of that kind of traffic. It is in the common interest of good-will in Canada that no one province should be allowed to disturb what is the settled policy regarding the control of liquor traffic in a neighbouring province by allowing itself to become a centre for bootlegging into that neighbouring province.

There is another aspect which to my mind is just as important, namely, our attitude towards the neighbouring country to the south. There is a comity between nations just as there is between provinces in our own Dominion of Canada, and that comity consists in an absolute and constant respect by each country for the laws of the other. It is not to the credit of Canada that to-day, from the Province of Quebec, from the Province of Ontario, and from the Province of British Columbia there is a steady, uniform, organized attempt to break down the laws and destroy the administration of the laws of the neighbouring country. You cannot let a body of men in Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, or any other Province, combine for the sake of gain to carry on operations in disrespect and violation of the laws of the United States in this matter without bringing back upon you the reflex of that situation. It destroys respect for your own laws and it eats into the very vitals of that which is most precious in a country, respect for law and order. Respect for law should not cease because you cross a line of latitude or an international boundary. It is the foundation of the strength of the United States; it is the foundation of the strength of Canada; and if you allow open disrespect for and violation of the laws of your neighbour, it comes back upon yourself and destroys your own respect for law and good order. That consideration is also involved in this measure. I have already given notice of, and I intend to impress upon the attention of honourable gentlemen, some emendations to this Bill which will make it more difficult for unscrupulous men to violate the laws of a prohibition sister province or a prohibition neighbouring state, and I am sure that if we can come to an agreement upon these provisions they will add very much to our own self-respect and to our good name.

These are some reasons which bring me straight up against the question: is it possible to stop bootlegging unless you stop the general importation of liquor into the Province? There is my dilemma. If you make it possible for one body to import you must make it possible for all. You cannot simply say, "We will allow John Jones, who is a most respectable family man, to import what liquor he wants for his own use, without let or hindrance, yet we will not allow Timothy Smith, who may not be so good a type of citizen, to import liquor". There must be a general law, and if the general law is that any person in any province may import liquor for himself, then to my mind it is impossible for the administration to stop the illicit traffic in liquor or bootlegging, for it will be carried on by means of the accumulations of private importation. It will be found that the general law is not well administered and is broken. There is my dilemma. I am prepared to say this, that I believe that the stopping of bootlegging and the restoration of respect for law and order are in my opinion of more moment than any objection there may be to allowing a Provincial Government to have control in order that it may stop bootlegging, and then leaving the issue with the province itself. If the Provincial Government, with those powers, does not carry out the law and does not do that which they profess they wish to do, and only need this measure in order to enable them to do, the people of the Province will, I think, quickly deal with a Government so lax and lacking in its administration.

I make these remarks to clear my own position. It is a matter of some difficulty, and I have thought very seriously and closely upon it, and, if the House accepts the second reading, I go to the consideration of this Bill with the idea of making it as perfect as possible. My honourable friend here (Hon. Mr. Taylor) pointed out what I think is a very great possibility—that if the Act is left exactly as it came from the Commons, you may easily substitute a worse combination for bootlegging than you have at the present time but it is possible to make that legislation so tight and so strong that neither the one nor the other will be able to do bootlegging, and that is what I think the Senate might very well give its attention to.

These are the reasons which impel me to vote for the second reading of the Bill, with the idea that it is susceptible to very considerable amendment. One or two clauses in it are, I think, absolutely vicious; but when we come to them we can take them up and use our best judgment with reference to them.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I do not just remember the Bill that was presented to us last year, but I notice that the honourable Senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) states that this Bill is just the same as that of last year, while the right honourable gentleman who has just spoken (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) states that it is quite different. I wanted to ask the right honourable gentleman if he would point out the difference between this Bill and the Bill of last year.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I will not take up time in pointing out all the difference. The chief difference to me is this. The Bill as it came down last year and the Bill as introduced in the House of Commons this year, was an absolutely vicious one, and inconsistent with the statements of the Attorney General in that he provided if that legislation passed, that there might be exporting houses in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And he asked that these exporting houses, which he has denounced over and over again as being the prime difficulty in carrying out this Temperance Act, should be rendered possible through the permission of the Attorney General of British Columbia. The absolute prohibition of importation was not to apply to exporting houses which received the assent of the Government of British Columbia, and got an Order in Council for their establishment. But before they got that they had to go to the Government; and that put a power into the hands of that Government that I say is a vicious power. The Bill did not actually create an exporting house, but it created the possibility of hundreds of exporting houses, each one of which was to get its authority to become an exporting house from the local Government. I say a Bill of that kind is vicious, and I could not vote for a clause of that kind. In the Bill that comes to us now, that is entirely expunged, with the exception of the brewery and the distillery. I have very strong opinions with reference to the breweries and distilleries, which I will be able to give to the House when we come to that point.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On this very question, the Hon. Mr. Stevens, who is a representative of British Columbia of no mean standing, said, when discussing the measure, and interrupting the Minister of Justice:

Will the minister permit me to interrupt him. To make complete the objections he is reciting, we object and we claim that the Attorney General in conjunction with the proper officer of this government has that power now just as completely as this bill gives it to him. Secondly the claim that by this bill this parliament is foregoing its rights, transferring its rights into the hands of the Attorney General, without definitely stating that the importation will cease.

That is to say, as the Bill was introduced in the Commons, the exclusion of warehouses or export houses would only be obtained if an Order in Council was passed by the Provincial Government asking for it. The Minister of Justice answered:

I was going to say to the hon. member that we do not intend to transfer that right to the Attorney General. The hon. member concluded his remarks yesterday by saying: "Well, I will not oppose the legislation" I understood that he was disposed to vote in its favour; but even with that declaration of his I want to try and satisfy all my hon. friends opposite and the people of British Columbia in this matter. I come here in all sincerity and I want to make the legislation I offer workable. There was a plebiscite in the province of British Columbia.

In discussing the situation, he goes on to say that he will move to strike out the clause which leaves it in the hands of the British Columbia Government, or any other Provincial Government, to request the Federal Government to prohibit customs warehouses or export warehouses, and will exclude them from the privileges under this Act. Now, what remains in the Act? It is very simple. It says:

Subject to the provisions of subsection two of this section, and notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other Act to the contrary, no person shall import, send, take or transport into any Province in which the prohibitions of this subsection are in force any intoxicating liquor.

That is a general prohibition. Now, here is the exception:

The provisions of subsection one of this section shall not apply to:

a. Intoxicating liquor which has been purchased by or on behalf of, and which is consigned to His Majesty or the Executive Government of the Province into which it is being imported, sent, taken, or transported; or any board, commission, officer or other governmental agency.

There is a general prohibition, except that it shall not apply to the Government or its agents. Nor shall it apply to:

The carriage or transportation of intoxicating liquor into and through a province.

That is for the public carrier. Nobody objects to that. And:

c. The importation of intoxicating liquor into a province by any person duly licensed by the Government of Canada to carry on the business or trade of a distiller or brewer where the intoxicating liquor so imported is imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending with or flavouring the products of the business or trade of a distiller or brewer carried on by him in the province, and while kept by him in the province is kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses, and is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade as a distiller or brewer.

It is simple. If this Act were to pass as it is, first, no one except the Government would be entitled to import liquor into the province of Quebec, or into British Columbia under its present system; and, secondly, the public carrier who passes it through in bond, and the distiller and brewer who use it for blending and flavouring purposes. The distiller, of course, has a license from the Federal Government, as also has the brewer. I do not remember having seen this exception in favour of the distiller and brewer in the Bill of last year, and I have no satisfactory explanation as to why this provision is contained in this Bill; but I have a statement from the Attorney General of British Columbia that he does not see why the brewer should be included, and asks that he should be taken out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What about the distiller?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am ready to go into the question of allowing the distiller the right to import for blending or flavouring, and to find out whether that is justified.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I would ask my honourable friend to fortify himself on that point with some technical information. What has a brewer to do with blending and mixing? Not a thing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Let us take it for granted, unless there is a champion of the brewer here, that we are agreed on that point.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The distiller is supposed to make whisky out of certain ingredients which are allowed him. He does it under Dominion license, under Dominion supervision. There are all the necessary provisions for refining it down from the raw state where it cuts a man's throat as soon as he puts it into his mouth, to what you call the oily, effluent state when it becomes mellowed. But that is done by natural processes, and, although there is a clause somewhere in the Inland Revenue Act which provides for possible compounding, I do not think in the history of this Dominion there has been a single license issued by the Inland Revenue Department for the compounding business. At least, I am told there is none now. If a distiller wants to compound, let him fight it out with the Dominion authorities, and let it be done under their supervision. But if you put that clause in, I do not see why you should not have just as many great mixing establishments as you have distillers and brewers. That is a point that I should like to see made very clear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I feel the same way; and we have an urgent request from the Attorney General of British Columbia that the word "brewer" should disappear. He may believe that the distiller has some rights under the Federal law, and that he cannot insist upon him being removed from the Bill. We, in our judgment and wisdom, may remove him if we wish. If we strike out the third clause we leave two agencies that can receive liquor in provinces having Government control—the Government itself, or its agents, and the Government carrier. I confess that when the Bill came to this Chamber last year, I never suspected for a moment that I was falling into the mire of provincial politics and wrangles. I discovered that there was some kind of appearance of party prejudice in the latter days of last Session, and when the Bill came back I did not know whether it would be received with the same suspicion or whether it would appear in the same form. I am happy to find that it is in another form, and that the principal objection from the members of the House of Commons representing British Columbia has been eliminated by an amendment presented by the Minister of Justice.

Like the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) and the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), I am unable to follow my honourable friends into the questions which they have raised as to the application of this law in the Province of British Columbia. I know nothing about it. I have never met and do not know the Attorney General. I understand that he is a new member of the Government and quite a young man. I may say that since the adjournment of last week I have gone through the correspondence that he has had with the Federal Government, and from it I would gather that he is desirous of stopping bootlegging and making this Liquor Control Act as workable and satisfactory as possible to the people of the Province of British Columbia. Whether he will succeed I do not know. There is one man in that Administration that I do know, the Hon. John Oliver. I have never heard one word that has affected my estimate of the reputation of that honourable gentleman; on the contrary, I have heard nothing but the highest encomiums of the Prime Minister of British Columbia. I have met him, and he has struck me as being a splendid specimen of humanity, physically, mentally, and morally. I think he has been called "Honest John Oliver."

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That always makes me suspicious.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He springs from the soil. He has led a hard life, having been a pioneer in British Columbia. I have heard him tell his story at a Canadian Club luncheon and he struck me as being a man I could trust. I have from him this telegram of the 1st of June:

> Re Canada Temperance Act. Have read our Attorney General's wires to Speaker and yourself. Most unfortunate that letter was thought to reflect on Parliament because am satisfied was not so intended.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That does not sound very honest.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

> Trust incident now closed and that legislation will have Senate's early approval. This Province urgently needs this amendment to end present intolerable traffic.

What is the object of this Bill? It is to do away with the private importation of liquor in provinces having Government control of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and also with exporting houses, whether bonded or not. I draw attention to the words "bonded or not," because there are exporting houses that are bonded and exporting houses that are not.

The objections to the Bill are, first, that the people of British Columbia have expressed themselves on the principle of private importation; and, second, that warehouses should be done away with without this legislation. Taking up the second point, I will admit that bonded or customs worehouses can probably be eliminated by the joint action of the Provincial and the Federal authorities without this Bill. I say "probably," because it is a debatable question whether the Federal Government, under the general law as we have it to-day, has the right to refuse a license for a customs warehouse. We all agree that anyone can import into the country alcoholic liquor and that he can pay the duty at the port of entry or can warehouse that liquor. It is doubtful whether the Government could refuse a license—and I have heard the doubt expressed by legal gentlemen—if the proper premises were offered by the person importing it, and if he is ready to comply with the regulations of the Department. Be that as it may, it would take some time to withdraw a license that has been granted by the Department of Customs, because the tradition and the habit in the Department, when a license is first granted, is to say that it need not be renewed: it is a license sine die. It can be withdrawn under certain conditions, but when it is withdrawn usually a couple of years are allowed to permit the holder of the license to dispose of the goods that he has warehoused.

Hon. Mr. POPE: That statement is not correct, so far as the Province of Quebec is concerned. The honourable gentleman is misled.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On what point?

Hon. Mr. POPE: On the point that you cannot withdraw in fifteen minutes the license granted, without giving any time for the disposal of the goods—that the Government of Canada, having granted the privilege of a bonding warehouse, cannot withdraw it any time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On this point I have the statement from the Minister of Customs or his Deputy, in answer to Mr. Manson, the Attorney General of British Columbia, that generally two years, or four if necessary, are allowed when a license is withdrawn, in order to give the licenseholder a chance to dispose of the goods that are in the warehouse.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is a matter of discretion.

Hon. Mr. POPE: The instances I refer to in the province of Quebec are very recent. The licenses were withdrawn without any opportunity whatever being given; and I know what I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All I can say is that I have seen the official correspondence from the Department which makes that statement, and I suppose that the Department knows best what is the rule and practice governing the matter.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But the Department says, "Generally speaking."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There might be some instances of gross violation, in which you would not allow an hour.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a matter of discretion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But, honourable gentlemen, this affects only customs warehouses, and not export warehouses, which have no bonding privileges. These will continue to exist and develop if we do not pass this Bill. I have thought that the two Governments, the Provincial and the Federal, could possibly eradicate from a province the customs warehouses under the law as we have it, although there is that question of the right of the Dominion to refuse a warehouse license. Under the present law the export house that asks for a bond cannot be reached, and it would continue to exist. Some honourable gentlemen in this Chamber may favour the suppression of the bonded warehouse without being desirous of taking the further step of prohibiting private importations, but I warn them that these export houses, which are trading concerns, suspected of selling in and out of the Province and of furnishing the bootleggers with liquor, will overnight become private importers; and immediately the export house without the bonding privilege will be on a par with the private citizen who imports for his own use. The only difference between the export house and the private importer is that the export house must declare itself as a trader, as it is importing for export in large quantities. By making a declaration to this effect it comes within the regulations and the taxation power of the Province. That is the only difference between the export concern and the private importer. The very day that the exporter is wiped out as a trader he will become a private importer for his own use, with the opportunity of seeking profit by selling by night.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The Government would have a very good opportunity of ascertaining whether he is a bona fide private individual importing for his own use, or whether he is a person importing for bootlegging purposes. That might be determined by the quantity that he would import. Then the Government could make him close up just the same.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I realize that the Government officers could keep an eye on private importations, but the private importers will find means to protect themselves. Instead of A importing 20 cases of Scotch, he will have perhaps ten confederates who will each import two cases, and the quantity imported will seem to be quite reasonable and moderate. If ten confederates can co-operate in that way, twenty or fifty may do so. As the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has said, if the door is open to any person in a province to import, how can government control be assured?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not think there would be much trouble arising in that way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I believe that if we are bent upon curing the evil of bootlegging we should pass this Bill in toto. All the provincial governments are agreeable to it. I quoted the Assistant Attorney General of the province of Quebec, who answered my inquiry as to the stand of that Province. The Prime Minister was away, but when he returned he sent me a very strong telegram declaring that the province of Quebec was solidly behind this measure.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: It would give him a monopoly too.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, it would give him control, and where the people have voted for Government control, have they not voted an effective control?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, but they thought they would still retain the right of private importation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I said that the Attorney General of Alberta had expressed his opinion in favour of the Bill. I had not the despatch. I have it now:

> Kindly transmit full statement to members of Senate in such way as you consider advisable. Quote on behalf Government of this province desire to express entire approval Bill 43 to amend Canada Temperance Act as submitted by Attorney General of province of British Columbia. Enactment of this Bill will greatly facilitate administration and enforcement provincial liquor legislation, and sincerely hope it will receive favourable consideration. Respectfully submitted.
>
> (Signed) J. E. Brownlee.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does that refer to this Bill or the Bill that was introduced in the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Bill that is before us, because the despatch is dated the 5th of June.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: But it says, "As submitted by the Attorney General."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: You said that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading): "As submitted by Attorney General of Province of British Columbia."

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: But he does not know what is submitted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He knows what Bill is before us.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: But he does not know what has been done with it in the Commons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why quibble? If the Attorney General of Alberta was ready to accept the Bill as submitted by the Attorney General of British Columbia, or supposed to be submitted by him, and as introduced in the Commons, would he not more readily accept a Bill which seems to commend itself to the judgment of this House as being much superior to the one that was introduced.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: And this has been passed unanimously by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I wish to take exception to that statement. While there was no vote in the House of Commons, the Bill was not passed unanimously there, and it is not fair to say that it was.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There was no vote called for, but Hon. Mr. Stevens stated that what he disliked in the Bill particularly was that the suppression of the export houses was left to the good-will of the Attorney General, to whom the Federal power was transferred; and the Minister of Justice said: "Although you stated that you would not oppose the Bill, I will go as far as I can to satisfy British Columbia and my honourable friends, and I will strike out that clause regarding the custom houses." Then there was not one word of objection from the lips of the Hon. Mr. Stevens.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What about New Brunswick? Was there any word from New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Let us hear it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will find it in the report of the discussion which took place ten days ago.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Will the honourable gentleman say whether it was struck out at the instance of the Minister of Justice of Canada or of the Attorney General of British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I might reply to my honourable friend by asking what difference it makes to the Bill; but I will answer my honourable friend. I have the statement of the Attorney General of British Columbia that from the outset he has been in favour of striking out that clause; but in corresponding with the Attorney General of the province of Quebec he came to the conclusion that the Attorney General of Quebec wanted to have power left with the provinces to declare when and how export houses should be eliminated. That is absolutely in accord with the Bill as it is. I may say that I have read the correspondence with the Minister of Customs covering more than twelve months, and I have come to the conclusion that he was ardently in favour of the closing up of importing houses. But I will come to that point in a moment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can we not deal with all those subjects in committee?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to ask what the Attorney General of New Brunswick said.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I should have to look it up. I read it some days ago. However, I am anxious to close this debate, and I may be able to do so if I am given five minutes more.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why not give the Bill the second reading?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I hope the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) is not concealing something of importance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We can deal with all these subjects in committee. Why continue until midnight to discuss this question?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It is a dry subject.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I want to say in closing that I have examined into the cases which the honourable gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Barnard) cited to show that the Attorney General had agreed to the opening of new importing houses in the past twelve months, although he pretended to be in favour of closing them up.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Nothing turns on that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have verified the fact that there have been three renewals, simply transfers, and if he did not consent to the transfer the old warehouses would have remained. One of the five instances mentioned was that of a car that went to Cranbrook and was there paying demurrage. He allowed a warehouse for the purpose of disposing of that car, and when it was disposed of the license lapsed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The House is not interested in that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And he agreed to a fifth one, which had been agreed to by Mr. Farris, his predecessor. When he came into office and was asked to confirm the approval, he found that the parties had opened their warehouses—I do not know whether it was in Vancouver or Victoria— and had gone to considerable expense; he therefore said he would not withhold his consent. It was given just as he came into office. However, his policy has invariably been to refuse any demand for warehouses, and I have verified the statement that he made in his letter by examining into the file of the Department. I mention this only because there is no one here from British Columbia to raise his voice in favour of that Government, and I suppose on all such questions as this there are two sides. I make this declaration simply to free the Attorney General from the accusation of insincerity. He seems to have been very desirous in his correspondence with the Minister of Customs to stop the bootlegging that came from the warehouses and the export houses.

I hope that, after this explanation we may go into Committee and try to improve this legislation without regard to any local considerations, but solely for the best interest of Canada.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Honourable gentlemen, the question is on the second reading of Bill 43.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is subject, of course, to amendment in committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BANKRUPTCY BILL

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

On the Order:

House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill 139, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest that honourable gentlemen agree to give this Bill fifteen minutes' consideration in Committee, because the honourable member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) must leave to-morrow morning.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should be only too glad to assist in every possible way the consideration of this Bill, but it is idle to talk of considering a Bill in fifteen minutes and at half-past eleven at night. I was going to suggest to my honourable friend that he place upon Hansard the suggested amendments and we can give them full consideration between now and the time when the honourable gentleman has an opportunity of presenting them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is what I was going to suggest. I will hand in the amendments, so that they may appear in Hansard.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will read them with great interest, I assure you.

[The proposed amendments are as follow.]

1. That paragraph (t) of section 2 of the said Act be amended by substituting for the word "respectively" the word "generally", and by adding after the word "business" the words "as they generally become due".

2. That section 9 of the Bill be amended by adding the following as subsection (2) to section 8A on page 3:

(2) Any person appointed as custodian pursuant to the provisions of this Act shall during the term of his office as such custodian be deemed to be an officer of the court and shall when so appointed forthwith give such security for the proper performance of his duties as shall be prescribed by general rules.

3. That subsection 8A of the Bill, page 3, be amended by inserting after the words 'perishable goods" the following words "And under the direction of the court may carry on the business of the debtor for all conservatory purposes."

4. That the following be added at the end of subsection 8B of section 10 of the Bill, page 3; "But in no case extending the delay for the realization of the security beyond the term stipulated in the instrument under which the security was created or after six months of interest on the debt have accrued and remain unpaid. If the debt is overdue or to mature within a delay of six months from the date of the assignment or receiving order, the judge may grant a delay not exceeding six months from such date."

5. That subsection 3 of section 11 of the Bill be amended by substituting for the words "in the custody" the words "under the authority".

6. That subsection 5 of section 11 of the Bill be struck out and the following substituted:

"(5) Upon the appointment of the trustee by the creditors the Official Receiver shall complete the authorized assignment by certifying thereon the name of such trustee, and such assignment shall thereupon subject to the rights of secured creditors, vest, as of the date of the acceptance and filing of the said assignment, in the trustee all the property of the debtor."

7. That section 15 of the Bill be amended by striking out subsection 3 thereof and substituting the following as subsection 3:

"(3) Subsection three of section thirteen, as enacted by chapter eight of the Statutes of 1922, is amended by striking out the word "two-thirds" in the thirty-third line and substituting the words "three-fourths", and by striking out the words, "the holders of two-thirds in interest of each class of the shares of such corporation debtor", in the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth lines, and substituting, "a majority representing three-forths in value of the holders of each class of shares of such corporation debtor present in person or by proxy at such meeting."

8. That subsection 5 of section 15 of the Bill be further amended by adding after the word "estate" in the forty-seventh line, page 5, the following: "Provided that if a composition, extension or scheme is proposed by the debtor before the expiration of any existing extension, composition or scheme, such last mentioned extension, composition or scheme shall not be deemed to have been made on a previous occasion within the meaning of paragraph (j) of section fifty-nine.

9. That subsection (c) of section 20 of this Bill be amended by substituting for the first part of the said subsection, commencing with the words "The sale of" and ending with the words "have the same effect" the following word:

"(c) The sale of such immovable property, unless a written consent to the contrary is obtained from each hypothecary or privileged creditor whose claim has been duly registered, or unless the sale is made subject to hypothec or privilege of any such creditor not so consenting, shall be made at public auction at the place prescribed and after advertisement as required for the sale of immovable property by the sheriff in the district or place where such immovable property is situate, provided that in case of a sale of property situate in more than one district or place the court may direct a sale of all such property as an entirety at one place, to be specified in the order, and after such notice as the court may direct, and any sale at public auction under the provisions of this paragraph shall have the same effect."

10. Subsection 1 of section 26 of the Bill is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Official Receiver or his nominee shall preside at the first meeting of creditors and shall decide any questions arising in connection with the appointment of the trustee by creditors, and any creditor may appeal from his decision to the court.

11. Section 31 of the Bill is amended by striking out the words, "debtor has his locality for the purposes of this Act", in line forty-eight, page 10, and line 1, page 11, and substituting therefor the words, "demised permises are situated".

12. Subsection 1 of section 32 of the Bill is amended by striking out the word "debts" in line thirty-six, page 11.

13. Subsection 65A of section 35 of the Bill, page 12, is amended to read as follows:

"65A. There shall be one Official Receiver in each Bankruptcy District or Division who shall be deemed to be an officer of the Court and who as such Official Receiver shall have and perform only such duties and responsibilities as are prescribed by this Act and Rules, and shall be appointed by the Governor in Council.

14. Subsection 1 of section 51 of the Act, 9-10 George V, Chapter thirty-six, as amended by section thirty-nine of the Act 11-12, George V, Chapter seventeen, is amended by adding thereto the following:

"Fourthly, claims resulting from injuries to employees of the insolvent debtor to which the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act do not apply, but only upon moneys paid or payable to the insolvent estate by persons or companies guaranteeing the insolvent debtor against damages resulting from such injuries."

14. Amend the Bill by inserting the following additional section after section twenty-one thereof:

"21A. Section twenty-seven of the said Act is amended by inserting the words "an Interim Receiver or Custodian or" after the word "if" in the first line of the said section and by inserting the words "borrow money and give security on any property of the estate by a mortgage, pledge, or otherwise, including security under the provisions of the Bank Act", after the word "obligations" in the second line of the said section, and by inserting the words, "including obligations for money so borrowed" after the word "made" in the fourth line of the said section.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p. m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 15, 1923.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

RETURNED SOLDIERS INSURANCE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 203, an Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers Insurance Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SOLDIERS CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 204, an Act to amend the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

PENSION BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 205, an Act to amend the Pension Act. —Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

DIFFERENTIAL RATES AGAINST HALIFAX

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

1. Is it the intention of the Government during the current session of Parliament to take any steps that may be necessary to abolish the differential freight rate of one cent per hundred pounds, which is now effective against the Port of Halifax in favour of Portland, U.S.A., and St. John, N.B.?

2. If legislation in the matter is unnecessary will the Government otherwise cause the differential to be abolished?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The matter of abolishing the differential freight rate of one per cent per hundred pounds does not require any legislation. The question is under consideration by the Canadian National Railway Board, and it is expected that a decision will be announced shortly.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I may be allowed to say to my honourable friend that this is a matter of some importance. I understand that the Board of Railway Commissioners in 1911 decided that legislation was necessary, and on that ground refused to deal with the matter. I made inquiry of the Railway Board and they very kindly sent me a copy of the decision of the Board, the ground being taken that this differential is fixed by the statute of 1899, which confirmed the agreement for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, and that that, being a special statutory revision, overrides any powers vested in the Railway Board under the Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am glad the honourable gentleman has risen to make that statement. I will ask that this question remain on the Order Paper until Tuesday, and I will transmit the remarks of my honourable friend to the Department, and we will have a further answer.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE

MOTION

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Monday next at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill Y5, an Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Conkey.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Z5, an Act for the relief of Margaret Marie Pope.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill A6, an Act for the relief of Loretta May Girard.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill B6, an Act for the relief of Birdena Frances Wallace LeMay.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

THIRD READING

Bill X5, an Act for the relief of John Samuel McDonnell.—Hon. Mr. Barnard.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION

REPORT CONCURRED IN

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved concurrence in the Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses appointed to consider the following matters:

1. The forms of Bills and the best means of affording information and assistance in the consideration thereof at all stages of legislation in both Houses of Parliament;

2. The better distribution of the work of legislation between the two Houses;

3. The practical operation of the provisions of The Senate and House of Commons Act, R.S.C., 1906, Chapter ten, respecting the attendance of Senators and Members of the House of Commons, and the expediency of making any alterations in those provisions.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I think the House will be favourably disposed towards all of this Report, particularly the first and second parts. I think we have at last succeeded in getting in very clear, definite and concrete language just what ought to be done with regard to the printing and reprinting of Bills coming before this House, and I have no doubt that, if the recommendation of the Committee is fully and carefully carried out by the law officers, as well as by the gentlemen in the Departments who draft Bills, we shall find our work in this House greatly facilitated and improved, and it will take us less time to transact business.

The Committee, comprised of members from both Houses, was unanimous with regard to every recommendation in the Report. A similar Report is of course being laid before the other Chamber, and it is hoped that it will receive there the approval which it deserves.

The first part of the Report deals with the sessional indemnity, attendance, etc. I think we are all agreed that the law was very vague and difficult to interpret, and I express the Committee's hope that what is recommended will be found much more lucid, much more to the point, and in accordance with the legitimate desires of members of both Chambers.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

MOTION—DISCUSSION CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from May 2 consideration of the motion of Hon. Mr. Barnard:

That at least two of the vessels now owned by the Government be placed on service between British Columbia in the west and Quebec ports during summer months and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick ports in the winter months, for the purpose of assisting in the development of our Natural Resources, and to increase the interprovincial trade between Eastern Canada and Western Canada, and that such service shall be increased as business demands.

Hon. J. D. REID: Honourable gentlemen, after this matter was discussed by the honourable gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Barnard), I moved the adjournment of the debate for the reason that I have always taken great interest in the question which he raised, and I desired to say a few words upon it. It is my intention to suggest that a couple of Government steamers be placed on the service mentioned; but before doing so I must refer for a few moments to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine.

An annual statement was issued by the directors regarding the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. Copies have been circulated among the members, and an article has appeared in the press with reference to the operation of that service. I notice also by the newspaper reports that the criticism has been made in another place that the statement shows a loss of $9,649,478.72 for last year, and it has been urged that if the Government would dispose of the Merchant Marine there would be an annual saving to the people of this amount. The press also has been criticizing the operation of that service. In my judgment, however, the result of disposing of the Merchant Marine would not be what is predicted. The annual report shows that last year the gross revenue received was $9,705,786 and the operating expenses were $12,089,976, leaving an operating loss of $2,384,189; but the Board of Directors have added to that loss the following items:

Interest accrued on notes to Government	$4,078,277
Reserve for depreciation	2,932,000
Reserve for outstanding liabilities	40,000
Reserve for doubtful debts and claims	96,000
Interest on Government advances	118,000
The total is	$7,265,289

The point I wish to make is this, that if the Government did sell the Merchant Marine they could not get for it the amount that it has cost the country. The vessels cost in the neighbourhood of $70,000,000—in other words, an amount between $160 and $200 per ton. If they were sold to-day they would not in my judgment net even 25 per cent of that amount, because the maximum cost of constructing vessels prior to the war was $50 per ton, and the price to-day would not be over that figure, and these vessels, having been used, would not bring the amount which newly-constructed vessels would cost. Therefore, instead of $70,000,000, the Government would probably not net more than $700,000 or $8,000,000 if they disposed of the fleet, and the interest on the difference between what they would get and what the vessels cost the country would have to continue to be paid in perpetuity or until the amount had been paid off. So from the $9,000,000 loss, in which the interest is now included, that should be deducted in any calculations made for the purpose of showing what would be saved annually by the disposal of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. I mention this because I intend suggesting that some vessels of the Merchant Marine be put on the service between British Columbia and Eastern Canada and if vessels are put on that line it would not be fair to include the annual interest on the $200 per ton which vessels built during the war and for war service cost.

I am interested in this matter for various reasons. First, it is my opinion that in the interest of Canada as a whole the natural products and manufactures of Canada, whether produced in the East or in the West, should be kept within our own boundaries if at all possible.

British Columbia, the farthest west of the Provinces, produces to-day natural and manufactured products that we can use in Eastern Canada, but they are products on which it would not be justifiable to pay the high railway freight rates. I might mention lumber and timber, mineral products, and other goods produced in British Columbia. We in Eastern Canada require the large timber that is produced only in British Columbia, but we cannot use it in Eastern Canada because of the very high freight rates that it is necessary to pay if it is brought by rail. Consequently in Eastern Canada we have to import long, and heavy timber and lumber from Georgia and other parts of the United States. I claim that it would be in the interest of Canada to leave the Eastern Canada market for British Columbia for products such as I have mentioned. It is in the interest of Canada to keep money in this country instead of sending it abroad. Furthermore, we could keep more men employed in producing those goods in British Columbia, rather than give the employment to people producing goods to the south.

Again, it would be to the advantage of Eastern Canada to establish the steamship line proposed, because in British Columbia large quantities of products are used which are produced in Eastern Canada. I refer to manufactured products that cannot be shipped by rail to British Columbia because of the high freight rates. Let me give just one example. In the city of Sydney, Nova Scotia, one of our great manufacturing industries produces steel rails. Wire rods are also manufactured. Large quantities of nails are produced, I understand, in St. John. Large quantities of hardware are available in Montreal. The other products which might be shipped from Eastern Canada are too numerous to mention. I mention some of them just to show that those goods which we do not now send to British Columbia ought to be sent there if there is any possible means of doing so, so that British Columbia might not be compelled to purchase similar goods from across the line.

However, the goods which I have mentioned cannot be shipped from British Columbia to Eastern Canada, or from Eastern Canada to British Columbia, unless a cheaper transportation rate is available. The only way to make it available is to do as the United States has done. Since the Panama Canal has been constructed there have been established in the United States several lines of steamships. True, they are operated there by private companies, but they are steamers of the same size as our Canadian Government Merchant Marine vessels, and they are operating between San Francisco and New York, Boston and other United States ports. Those vessels are doing it, and making money. Therefore, if they are sending goods that are produced in the eastern United States to the western United States where they are not produced, and vice versa, why should not we do something of the same kind in the interest of our country? If we can do this, and can produce more goods in Sydney, Montreal, St. John and our other eastern cities, more labour will be required, and our natural resources will be developed.

In addition, there is no reason whatever why vessels leaving Vancouver or Victoria should not call at the West Indies ports, as the United States vessels do, and there is no reason why they should not call at New York on their way around. In doing that they could take the products of British Columbia to the West Indies or to New York, or they could take the products of eastern Canada to those ports.

There has been an agitation in British Columbia for a long time to have a customs officer appointed at New York. British Columbia people are said to purchase large quantities of goods at New York. They want these goods to be taken from New York to British Columbia ports. That would mean that a foreign vessel calling at New York would pick up this traffic and take it to British Columbia ports. In the past objections have been raised by the Government to this being done. One of the reasons is this: that if the goods are placed in a foreign vessel there is no way in which the Government can exercise control over them until they are again landed at a Canadian port. Under the bonding privilege a car of goods shipped in Canada may pass through the United States, and a Government seal is placed on the car. When the car comes back into Canada the Customs officer removes the seal, so that the goods have been under the control of the Canadian Customs all the time. I would like to make a suggestion as to how assistance might be given to the people in British Columbia who purchase in New York or other American ports goods that they cannot get elsewhere. They are willing to pay the duty. We have steamers on the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the St. Lawrence, that are being operated by the Government. The captains of those vessels have been made Customs officers and Preventive officers. On this proposed route of Government-owned steamers, in my opinion there could be no objection whatever to the captains being sworn in as Customs officers. When a vessel arrived at New York to take on goods going to British Columbia the captain would take them in charge and deliver them to the Canadian ports and see that the duties were paid. This would be a great advantage to British Columbia, and would remove a grievance about which the people of that Province have been complaining for some time.

Complaints have been made about the operation of the vessels that we now have running to the West Indies. I claim that it is not fair to say that private corporations can operate vessels on that route without loss, and that the Government cannot do so. Let me say why. Our vessels have taken large quantities of our products to the West Indies, and even if they made no profit whatever, but simply paid expenses, they have advertised our products, and have been a good investment for Canada. These vessels trade with the West Indies in consequence of a treaty passed by both Houses of Parliament under which Canada agreed to put steamships on this route; and four, I think, of these vessels were constructed for that purpose. They have been operating without any subsidy whatever. It has been stated that they are operating at a loss, and that that is one of the reasons why they should be sold, because Governments cannot operate them as successfully as private individuals. For a great many years we have had a private corporation operating steamships to the West Indies from Halifax and St. John. I think it is the Royal Mail Packet Line now; it was formerly for many years called the Pickford and Black line. It is stated that these vessels can make money. Of course they can; and so could our Government Merchant Marine if it were put on the same basis, because every year we vote $350,000 of a subsidy to the Royal Mail Packet for the operation of this service. If we would give our steamships operating to the West Indies $350,000 as a subsidy, we too could show a profit on that service. But of course that cannot be done.

In the Estimates you will find many services to which we are paying subsidies. We are paying a subsidy to a steamship line to South Africa, and we are paying subsidies on the Pacific. These private companies are making money, but the Government vessels are operating without any subsidy, and not only that, but they were built for war purposes at the cost of $200 a ton, whereas they could have been built before the war or now for $50 a ton. Yet, they are expected to make a profit on operations, and to pay interest on $200 a ton, or four times as much as the vessels with which they are competing.

There is another way in which these vessels could be of assistance to British Columbia and the West, and perhaps to the eastern Provinces as well. British Columbia purchases a considerable quantity of goods in England and in foreign markets that must come across the Atlantic. These goods must now be shipped to Montreal in the summer, and to St. John or Halifax in the winter, and from there must be carried by rail to the Pacific coast. If the proposed route were in operation, the goods could be shipped to Halifax, St. John, or Montreal, and it could be specified in the bill of lading that they were to be handed over to such and such a steamer going to British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At New York?

Hon. Mr. REID: Or at Halifax or St. John in the winter, or Montreal in the summer. For instance, if you had a vessel leaving Montreal in the summer or Halifax or St. John in the winter on the first of every month for British Columbia ports, there is no reason that I can see why goods for British Columbia should not be shipped across the Atlantic to be handed over to such and such a steamer sailing on the first of the month. In this way these goods would get a through rate from Montreal, Halifax or St. John of 50 cents per hundred pounds. I mention 50 cents because that is the highest rate that I have heard of either before or since the war. I understand that the rate from New York to San Francisco is 40 cents. It may be asked, "What difference would that make?" 50 cents a hundred means $10 a ton, and I am satisfied that if we had a regular line running that would take steel rails we would get the benefit of the market of British Columbia for steel rails. I am satisfied that the same thing is true of nails and other goods such as I have mentioned. Let us compare that rate with the rates prevailing now and see where we stand. Take hardware, for instance. If you take it by rail in carloads the rate runs from $1 per hundred pounds to $1.54. On other articles the rate runs to $2.43. If you do not have a full carload, there is a difference. In less than carload lots the rate is $2.76, or $55 a ton as against a rate of $10 a ton by water. On some articles the rate is as high as $3.60 a hundred. Anyone can see at a glance that it is absolutely out of the question for manufacturers of eastern Canada to compete in the markets of British Columbia if they have to ship in less than carloads; and even in carloads it is almost impossible. Therefore I say it is up to the members of both Houses of Parliament to take up this matter and see that our own trade is kept within our own country.

Now, who will object to this? Of course the railways will object. There is no doubt about that. But I cannot see that it will interfere very seriously with them, because if they are not getting the trade now, how will it hurt them if it is shipped by water? Even were this to hurt them a little, surely it is to the advantage of Canada to increase her market within her own boundaries, and to keep her money within the country.

There is another point. If we do not take advantage of our own vessels and give the two extremes of this country the benefit of the cheapest transportation possible, then some private concern will take hold. As a matter of fact, that is what is being advocated now, and, as far as I am concerned, I would hold up both hands for a private corporation placing vessels on this route if the Government will not do it. There are sure to be applications from private corporations to undertake this, because I cannot believe that the agitation in British Columbia to get the benefit of the markets of eastern Canada, and the agitation in eastern Canada to get the benefit of the markets of British Columbia will not avail in time and result in the placing of a line of steamships on this route to give the people that to which they claim they are entitled. If a private corporation does apply, I venture to prophesy that their very first act will be to come to the Government and ask for a subsidy similar to the one being given to the line between the Maritime provinces and the West Indies, and there is no doubt that such a proposal would go through. The members of the House of Commons from the East and from the West would insist on their rights, and the Government would have to accede to the request or go out of power.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Could we not give two of our non-paying ships instead of bonuses?

Hon. Mr. REID: I will come to that in a moment.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: What class of goods would that ship carry either way?

Hon. Mr. REID: In British Columbia they produce many things—lumber, long timber, canned goods, mineral products, and so on. Then, the other way, from East to West, they would carry hardware and steel rails and manufactured products such as agricultural implements. Agricultural implements are bulky and freights are high, and they could be carried on a vessel at much cheaper rates. I could give you a long list of manufactured products which I believe could be kept in our own country.

Then I would suggest that, in placing these vessels, we do as the United States have done. Their vessels are so constructed that they can be used not only for carrying freight but also for carrying a certain number of passengers. The passenger fares almost pay for the trip. The vessels that are running between California or other ports on the Pacific coast and ports on the Atlantic coast carry, I understand, about 50 passengers, and there are always a good number on board.

In the treaty made between the West Indies and Canada it was specially mentioned that the vessels must be so constructed as to carry not only freight, but also passengers. We have two steamers that I know of, the Canadian Farmer and another, that were constructed to carry 30 or 40 passengers. Why should we not put on a couple of those vessels that are not paying? In my judgment they would be just the kind of vessels suitable for the traffic that I have mentioned. We are paying for a couple of other vessels $350,000 in subsidies to do similar work. Give them a subsidy—any amount that is reasonable—and put them on this route, and in my judgment they will pay.

I have a rough estimate of what it would cost to put these vessels in operation. I inquired from the Department what a 3,500-ton vessel would cost to operate, and the statement has been given to me that the cost of operating one steamer, the T. J. Drummond, was $8,325 per month. That is roughly $100,000 a year. I understand that the steamers I have mentioned, in the service to the West Indies, cost a great deal more —probably three times as much, or $300,000 a year for operation. That includes wages, victualling the passengers and crew, repairs, insurance, and everything else. Now, I claim that if those vessels were to get a fairly full load each and every time, they would not merely pay, but would make money. At all events, whether they do or not, it is of great advantage to our country, both east and west, to increase our production by providing a western market for the manufactured goods of the east and by providing a market in the east for western products. I claim that if it is to our advantage to subsidize vessels to carry our products to the West Indies, it is likewise to our advantage to subsidize a service which would give extra markets within our own country. When I speak of subsidizing this service I mean that we might meet any little loss that would occur in the operation.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Will the honourable gentleman excuse me? Do I understand that he favours subsidizing vessels for carrying trade from East to West by the Panama Canal?

Hon. Mr. REID: I say that to-day the Government of the Dominion is subsidizing vessels that are going, say, from Canada to South Africa—

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: That is different.

Hon. Mr. REID: —and from Canada to the West Indies, in order to send our products to those markets. I say that if Canada is willing to pay such subsidies, we should also be willing, even at a little expense, to furnish additional markets for British Columbia in Eastern Canada and for Eastern Canada in British Columbia and the West; and, in speaking of the Government subsidizing this trade, I meant that if we put vessels on the service and give a rate between Pacific and Atlantic ports of 50 cents per hundred pounds, and if in the end there should be a loss on the operation of the vessels amounting to say $50,000 or $100,000, that should be regarded as practically a subsidy for the purpose of promoting trade between the two ends of Canada, and developing our growing country.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I see what is apparently a difficulty that might be raised by the farmers in Alberta or persons interested in the coal business. We are trying to find some means whereby coal may be transported from Alberta to Ontario. If the trade between British Columbia and Eastern Canada were subsidized as proposed, would not the suggestion be made, "If you are going to subsidize vessels, why not grant a subsidy for the carrying of coal or wheat?"

Hon. Mr. REID: I cannot see why the farmers would object. It might be of great advantage to the farmers of Alberta, for instance, to have goods shipped around to the Pacific coast, so as to avoid the long rail haul. Furthermore, I believe that it would be to the advantage of the farmers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba for the Government to keep a certain number of the Merchant Marine vessels, and put them on a service between Port Arthur and Montreal, or between Port Arthur and the Georgian Bay ports, instead of selling them, even if no money were made out of the service. That would be of benefit to the farmers of the West and would be the best means of preventing combines—a far more effective means than any legislation you can pass in this Parliament. If the vessels were owned by the Government, members on both sides of the House would see that they did not charge exorbitant rates.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I do not wish to interrupt the honourable gentlemen, but I am much interested in what he says and would like to ask him, would there not be a difficulty in subsidizing vessels for one sort of trade without subsidizing other sorts?

Hon. Mr. REID: I was going to add this. Suppose that the vessels were put on, as I have said, between Port Arthur and Georgian Bay ports or Montreal and they lost money. That would be equivalent to granting a subsidy. I claim that it would be to the interest of our provinces, and particularly the farmers of the West, to do that. I am quite willing, as far as I am concerned, to stand by any Government that will keep the vessels in that service for the advantage of our great Northwest. If that is done, will it not be of great help to the farmers of the West? Are you not helping the population of British Columbia if you give them an opportunity to sell their goods in Eastern Canada, the West Indies or New York. Many of the products to which I have referred are produced by the farmers. Why should not some of the vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, instead of being given away, be placed in that trade? If there should happen to be a loss, would not that be better than the granting of a big subsidy to other parties, to make a lot of money out of it? That is the point I wish to make.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Why could not the same thing be done regarding the trade with the West Indies and South Africa?

Hon. Mr. REID: I agree with my hon. friend. Why should it not be done? Of course, there is this difficulty, I may say in answer to the honourable member. We are now running a service to South Africa. In the Estimates that we have before us there are some subsidies, such as that of the Canada and Newfoundland steamship service—$35,000 a year. We are running vessels there without any subsidy, and of course they lose money, while we give the others $35,000. To the Canada-West Indies and the Canada-South Africa services we pay $320,000 a year, and it is complained that the vessels running there are losing money.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Has the mail service anything to do with that?

Hon. Mr. REID: They carry the mails. I do not know whether the Post Office Department pays them extra for that or not, but surely the honourable member will understand that Government steamers may carry the mails just as well as private vessels. If they receive the $320,000 a year, I do not see why they too could not carry the mails. However, I do not think that has anything to do with the loss.

We have the Canada-South Africa steamship service subsidy of $136,000 a year. The cry goes out that there has been a loss of nine millions. How could a vessel running to South Africa without any subsidy whatever compete with those of the private corporations? The private corporation running a service from Montreal is making money, but it receives a subsidy of $146,000, enough to operate the vessel for a whole year. I claim that some of the vessels of the Government Merchant Marine, instead of being disposed of, should be used in these services. That is the point that I wish to make.

The objection has been raised that the United States Government have lost money on the operation of their Marine. Of course they have no railways to work in connection with it. We have our great National Railway system, and, while there must be private steamship companies, still I believe it is in the interest even of the railways and of Canada as a whole that we should not be in the position of being without a Government-owned steamer. You cannot operate 22,000 miles of railway without having some steamers. The Canadian Pacific Railway is not without vessels, and all other large railway systems, whether owned by the Government or by private corporations, in any country in the world, have large steamships connected with them.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Will the honourable gentleman pardon me again? I would like to get some information on a point with which I think he is familiar. Whenever the suggestion is made that the Government-owned ships should carry cattle or even wheat on the Great Lakes, we are told that they are not fitted for the purpose. I wanted to ask somebody why they were built if they cannot carry cattle across the ocean, or carry wheat successfully from Port Arthur to the eastern ports. Perhaps the honourable gentleman can give me a little information as to why they were built.

Hon. Mr. REID: The only answer I can give to the honourable gentleman is this. When these Government vessels were constructed for operation on the Atlantic—they were constructed, of course, during the war—

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Largely after the war was finished.

Hon. Mr. REID: No; only five or six were constructed after the war. All the rest were constructed during the war.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: After 1918.

Hon. Mr. REID: But, as I understand, the 3,500-ton vessels, and smaller vessels as well, were constructed in up-to-date style and fit for any service on the Atlantic or the Pacific. I have seen the statement to which the honourable gentleman referred. It has been made throughout the country—

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: It was made in another place.

Hon. Mr. REID: And made in another place. I will tell you my opinion as to why it is made. I have no doubt that the Canadian Government vessels, or nearly all of them, are just as good as any of the vessels that operate on the Atlantic or the Pacific, but it is not considered to be in the interest of the two great railway systems of Canada to let the information go out to the public that they are fit for any service. The Management of our Canadian National Railways will never admit that these vessels can be used for any service that would take away freight or lower the rates between the East and the West.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: But the railways cannot carry across the ocean. That would not apply to the ocean.

Hon. Mr. REID: So far as the ocean is concerned, the vessels are just as fit for ocean service as the steamers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with this exception, that some Canadian Pacific steamers, as well as vessels of other lines, have been specially fitted up for cattle transport. I see by the press that some vessels are being constructed at present. There is no reason why the Canadian Government vessels could not be constructed in the same way. As I understand the situation, the railways do not want to admit that our steamships are of the kind that would be required. As the honourable gentleman knows, we have an arrangement with two other large steamship lines that are at present operating in connection with our Canadian National Railway system. Contracts have been made with those two lines, operating in connection with the Canadian National system a passenger and freight service. These steamship lines, as well as our railways, would not want to admit that our own ships are fit for anything. The people managing the railway and steamship services should be made to understand that our vessels are going to be operated in the interest of our country as a whole.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I presume the honourable gentleman is aware of the statement made in the other House, that, although the Old Country is trying to buy our cattle, there is no steamship space available. Yet five or six of our ships have been tied up at the wharf doing nothing.

Hon. Mr. REID: Our own ships were not built specially for the cattle service. For that purpose it is necessary to build stalls, etc., and to have the steamers fitted up specially. The honourable gentleman has of course read in the press that the Government have been urged to put some of their own steamships into the service, and they are now fitting them up. It is said that it will take a month or two to fit the vessels for the carrying of cattle.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: And they can be made suitable for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. REID: And they can be made suitable for that purpose. There is no doubt at all in my mind about that. If they are built for freight, you have to convert them. You might say the same thing of one of the large 7,000 or 8,000-ton vessels. They will tell you she is not fit for passenger service—why? Because she has not got cabins constructed. But if you put her in drydock and build cabins on her, she is just as fit for passenger service as any other vessel.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I understand that those ships are too small to put in the cattle trade—that they will carry only 200 head of cattle, and will not stand the storms as well as larger ships.

Hon. Mr. REID: Of course, that answer can be made; and in one way it is true. But I would differ with that statement, in this way. If I did not want to be favourable to this proposition I would make that statement, and I would have in mind these vessels of 2,500 tons which were built for the Great Lakes. But no one can make me believe that the vessels which run from 2,500 to 12,000 tons, and which are built as strong as any vessels in the world are not suitable.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The 12,000-ton vessel is suitable all right.

Hon. Mr. REID: Does the honourable gentleman say that a 7,000 or an 8,000-ton vessel is not large enough?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The discussion that I have seen in the press has been with regard to 3,000-ton vessels.

Hon. Mr. REID: If I wanted to contend that these vessels were not suitable for that trade, I would have in mind the 27 smaller vessels; but if I wanted to use the ships, I would say that we have a certain number of vessels that could be made suitable by the building of stalls in them. Those vessels run from 6,000 up to 12,000 tons; and no one can make me believe that they would not be as good as any other vessel if they were converted.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: How many of those have we?

Hon. Mr. REID: I have a list of them and will give them. They are: Canadian Voyageur, about 5,000 tons; Canadian Pioneer, 8,480 tons; Canadian Miller, 8,390 tons; Canadian Spinner, 8,393 tons; Canadian Aviator, 5,166 tons; Canadian Seigneur, 8,391 tons; Canadian Importer, 8,381 tons; Canadian Exporter, 8,380, tons; Canadian Trapper, 8,367 tons; Canadian Hunter, 8,350 tons; Canadian Runner, 8,407 tons; Canadian Winner, 8,840 tons; Canadian Mariner, 8,470 tons; Canadian Highlander, 8,440 tons; and others. No man can make me believe that vessels constructed by a man who was supposed to be one of our best ship engineers, and the plans of which were submitted to other engineers before the ships were constructed, to see that they were of the best up-to-date type, are not fit for this trade. Of course, they were built during the war to carry freight; but if you construct cattle stalls in them they are just as good as any other vessels crossing the Atlantic in that trade. They are large vessels of the type that all the other marine companies are building for carrying freight, and out of which they are making money. I do not say they are suitable for passengers; they might have to be larger for that. But these 8,000-ton vessels are larger than many ships now operating on the Atlantic and the Pacific. If we inquire from those who are operating, they will probably say these vessels are not fit to go between the Atlantic and the Pacific; but if you put cabins on them they are just as good as any vessels that were constructed before the war or since.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: In that connection may I just mention to the House that a vessel, one of a line of three, that I travelled on from San Francisco to Baltimore last winter was under 3,500 tons, and had excellent accommodation for about 120 passengers, and the passenger list was full all the time.

Hon. Mr. REID: I have taken much longer than I intended, honourable gentlemen. I only wished to make a few remarks. I feel very deeply interested in this matter, as I do also in the Canadian National Railway system. I believe that both that railway system and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine have a great future. But so long as we cry down the operation of these boats, there is not much future for them; and so long as we in this House or the members in the other House, or the public press, try to educate the public to believe that the operation of these vessels is costing us $9,000,000 per annum, and that if the operation is continued it will continue to cost us $9,000,000 per annum—which is not in accordance with the facts—public opinion will be against their operation and it will be impossible to continue it. So long as the public are led to believe that private corporations can carry this traffic and can make it pay, without being told that the private corporations are getting large subsidies from the Government, while our ships are not, it is almost impossible to make them understand that it is in their interests to operate these vessels for themselves.

I claim that these ships are just as good as any ever built, and that instead of giving them away—for that is practically what it means—and in perpetuity paying the interest on $60,000,000 or $65,000,000, we should operate them and take advantage of our own markets, keep our money within our own country, develop our own natural resources, employ more men, and give the public the benefit of cheap transportation. I claim that this would be of advantage to not only British Columbia on the West, and Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island on the East, but that we in Ontario and the central provinces would reap the benefits much greater than I can attempt to describe.

Hon. F. L. SCHAFFNER: I had no intention of saying anything with regard to this matter. It has been very interesting to me, and I think the address to which we have just listened should be very useful. I think I am stating the fact when I say that the Government—not only the present Government but the late Government—is responsible for these ships being tied up at the wharves in Halifax, St. John, and other places, as they have been. I suppose the leader of the Government in this House will make some remarks. I am not making any criticism at all, but am trying to find out why we are paying a deficit of $9,000,000 a year on this investment of $60,000,000 to $70,00,000, when at the same time these ships are not in service. The ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Reid) has said here to-day that many of these vessels are above 6,000 tons capacity, and could quite easily be refitted to carry wheat or cattle—and I think he even went so far as to say they could be made suitable for passenger traffic. I say let us get together and find out why this is not being done.

Hon. Mr. REID: In the first place, I do not believe any honourable gentleman in either House will criticize the expenditure of $70,000,000 for these vessels, with the possible exception of the expenditure on four or five vessels, the contracts for which were given after the war. In other words, about $60,000,000 of this expenditure was for construction during the war. It was absolutely necessary, and it was unanimously agreed in both Houses that the money should be spent in carrying on the war.

Let me also explain another point in connection with that. The question has been asked why, instead of building 4,000 or 5,000-ton vessels, we did not build a number of vessels of 10,000 or 12,000 tons. One of the reasons is this. We were sending these vessels across to France with food products and war supplies, and if a 12,000-ton vessel was torpedoed, down went probably 700,000 or 800,000 bushels of wheat, whereas if three or four smaller vessels were sent off, probably three out of four would get to the other side. That was the policy that was agreed upon by every person on both sides of politics.

The honourable gentleman from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Schaffner) blames both Governments for the ships being tied up at the wharves. If anyone is to blame, of course the Government is responsible. The late Government handled these vessels as well as they could. When we started constructing them, nobody expected that they were going to be operated in the future to pay a dividend on a cost that was four times greater than it had been prior to the war. After the war the traffic that had existed prior to the war ceased. Prior to the war there was a great traffic between this country and European countries—we had traffic with Germany, Austria-Hungary and France—and that we have not yet got back. But time will bring it back. Immediately after the war there was a dearth of freight, and United States vessels and vessels owned by the Australian Government, as well as our own, were tied up. But the European countries are becoming more settled, and trade is growing. If we want that trade, instead of sending trade commissioners to all these countries to get the trade for private corporations, let us send these vessels to gather it together.

I am not blaming this Government for keeping the vessels in harbour. A number of these vessels, probably 25 or 27 of them, are too small for ocean traffic; but I believe that if they were tied up at Port Arthur and used in the spring and fall for bringing down the farmers' grain, it would be a good deal better than giving them away. There are another 40 vessels of the type I have mentioned that are good for ocean traffic; but so long as this agitation against them is kept up, just so long will there be a lack of development of trade and a lack of assistance to the industries of Canada.

Hon. J. A. McDONALD: Being a shipper from the East, I have been very much interested in the remarks of the honourable gentleman. We used to ship hundreds of pianos to British Columbia, but a freight rate of $25 to $35 per piano practically killed the industry. Do I understand the honourable gentleman to say that shipments can be made by water at about 50 cents per hundred? Is not the accommodation on vessels sold by measurement? In any case, does the honourable gentleman propose that one of the Government steamers should be stationed at Vancouver, and one at Halifax or St. John, and that the date of sailing should be advertised so that shippers could prepare their shipments? How soon could such a plan be put into operation?

Hon. Mr. REID: I would start in this way. I would say that on the first day of each month a vessel should leave Montreal, and I would advertise that fact. Freight—it might be pianos or anything else you wish—would be collected and sent to the warehouse and loaded on the vessel ready to sail on the first of the month. The vessel would then go to New York, and the captain, who would be a Customs officer, would pick up any freight there for British Columbia, and then the vessel would go on her way to the Pacific Coast.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD: Would Halifax be a port of call?

Hon. Mr. REID: Halifax, St. John, and the West Indies. On the same day of the month another vessel would leave Vancouver coming back. And as trade developed I would put on more vessels.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD: What steps could be taken to accomplish this, and how long would it take?

Hon. Mr. REID: If you are going to take these two vessels that are in the West Indies trade, it would take just the length of time required for one of them to get to Halifax or St. John and the other one to Vancouver, and that should not be very long. On the other hand, if they are going to keep those steamers there, they would have to fit up a couple of steamers for tourists, and it might be a month or two before they could get started. That is all there is to it. If they were only going to carry freight, they are all right at the present time.

Hon. WM. ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, before we take leave of this subject I would like to say a word or two upon it. I have listened with very great interest to the remarks of the ex-Minister of Railways. Of course, a large amount of tonnage was built, as has been stated, during the war. Perhaps there was too much built as an experiment. There might have been a lesser number of vessels. But it must be remembered that for years there had been a great agitation for the subsidizing of shipbuilding and for the Government to give encouragement to the yards to build vessels for the various trades in which Canadian ships might be engaged. Without a special knowledge of the construction of these various vessels, one would be very much astray in deciding what would be the proper route upon which vessels should be put. I agree with the ex-Minister of Railways, but, as the vessels have been built at so costly a price, it would be folly to sell them for little or nothing at the present time, when the markets are most depressed, and there is a large amount of tonnage on sale. I do not know what the small vessels built upon the lakes were like. I do not know what their horse-power is; I do not know what are their construction and scantling—whether they are up to the requirements of Lloyds, or whether they are strong enough for the Atlantic.

Hon. Mr. REID: I can assure the honourable gentleman that they were classed A-1 by Lloyds.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: For the transport of cattle by a vessel it is not necessary that the vessel be of huge size. A vessel that has tween-decks can carry cattle in the tween-decks and upon the upper deck, at small expense. The vessel would be available for that purpose, but it would also carry grain in the lower holds. Many articles which would be available or offering could be carried on the return voyage.

Now, with regard to the utilization of small vessels in all our maritime ports and on the Atlanttic, there are Norwegian ships of about equal size, that are employed in all the ports, the trade routes, where small vessels are necessary because of the absence of depth of water or for other reasons, and they earn a great deal of money, because on account of their small size they can enter ports where large vessels could not enter. I do not see why those vessels which were built upon the Lakes and elsewhere for the purposes of organized trade should not be utilized in seeking business in competition with the Norwegian, for we have the whole capital of the Government behind us, and even if they did not make money, still it would obviate entirely the great loss which must ensue if those vessels are now sacrificed.

So much for the small vessels. Now, with regard to the vessels which were constructed at Halifax, I happen to have observed them. They are as well built as any of the vessels built in any of the yards. I believe that they are constructed with tween-decks, so that they would be available for any purpose where there would be a sufficiency of cargo, in competition with the subsidized boats which run from Halifax and St. John to the West Indies. Those boats are 30 years of age. They have passenger accommodation, it is true. I do not know what their engines are. Probably they are the old type of engine. We pay $340,000 for those. The three steamers that were built at Halifax can maintain a speed of 12 knots an hour, which is the speed of those vessels. I believe that passenger accommodation could be constructed in the tween-decks and on the upper decks of any of those vessels; and I think that some of the vessels constructed in the St. Lawrence are of the same model and built in the same way, and that passenger accommodation could be afforded for a very small amount, and those vessels could be run upon paying routes. The routes to Barbados, Demerara and the islands of the Windward West Indies are paying now. They carry large quantities of Canadian flour and other products. There is no reason why boats of Canadian construction, which are as good as the other boats, or better, should not be put upon those routes and a saving made of the whole amount of the subsidy paid at present for British and other steamers.

I have spoken now of the small boats, and also of those boats which would be capable of running to the West Indies. In the competition on the Atlantic for the passenger service very large steamers would of course now be required. They must be very expensively fitted up. All vessels of that kind, competing for passengers, must have lavish and costly accommodations. I do not think we could well attain to that business, but certainly for the business of carrying cattle or wheat and grain of various kinds, our ships are well constructed. The preparation of an ordinary steamer for the carrying of grain requires only the fitting up of the shifting boards.

With regard to the utilization of some of those Canadian Government boats for the carrying of bulky articles, I would point out that you are going to have a coal famine in Canada this year, and you will require all the tonnage possible to bring coal to Montreal, Quebec and Eastern Canada. How do you propose that the coal shall be carried?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND Why does the honourable gentleman foresee a coal famine for next winter?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Because the miners of Sydney are on strike to-day. Suppose they are on strike for a couple of months, how are you going to get your supplies into Quebec?

Hon. Mr. REID: And notice has been given of an intended strike on the other side.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Why should not those boats be employed in that business which is our own business? The coal companies are now paying charter moneys to Norwegian and British vessels and vessels from wherever they can get them. Why not utilize our own steamers, employ our own captains, our own mates, our own cooks, and our own crews? Why not use our own coal and our own contributory industries and build up our own country by having the bulky products transported by our own ships, which can carry them better than any other ships, because our seamen are superior to any others in the world.

Hon. Mr. REID: Does the honourable gentleman agree with me that those 8,000-ton vessels that I mentioned, operating on the Atlantic, should pay just as well as other vessels?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Certainly, if they are put on the proper routes. But on what routes were they put? The best paying routes were given to subsidized steamers, and our steamers were sent to the Bahamas and other places where there was very little traffic indeed.

All the paying routes were reserved for the strangers, and the poor Canadian had to go and seek business in places where it was not to be found.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Could the honourable gentleman give any information as to why our ships were put on unprofitable routes?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Because the others already occupied the best ground..

Hon. JOHN McCORMICK: Honourable gentlemen, I think this is a very valuable discussion, and if the recommendations that have been presented here are carried out, there will be no reason at all to lament the utilizing of a number of the Canadian Government Merchant vessels.

There should be no disposition on the part of any informed man to criticize the action taken by the Government, whether the present Government or any other, in the building of those ships. We all remember that in 1917, when submarines were sinking more ships than the world was building, great apprehension was felt everywhere, especially in the Allied countries. In the United States more ships were built in one year than had ever been built before by any country in the world. Hundreds and hundreds of the ships that they built are not employed, and some of them, I understand, have been sold at very low prices.

The position of the United States is different from ours in this respect, that the United States do not own any railways, whereas the nine million people or less in Canada have 22,000 miles of railway lines. Only a few years ago I read in a report from the Railway Commission, the Merchant Marine, or some other branch of the Government, that the deficit on the operation of the railways would have been much larger were it not for the fact that Government steamers were operating on the Pacific and the Atlantic and down to the West Indies, bringing traffic to the railways. Moreover, the products of Canada have been placed on overseas markets which they would not and could not have reached if we did not have those ships for the transportation of Canadian products.

Some complaint has been made about the size of those vessels. I think there is no reason to find any fault in that regard. They are ships of 8,000 tons, 5,000 tons, and 3,500 tons. More than 60 per cent of the entire overseas transportation of the world, about two years ago, was done in ships under 4,000 tons.

I think it is good policy for the Government, or the authorities in charge of the ships, to take into consideration the need in this new country of ours for the expansion of our trade, the difficulty in having goods transported even from one part of the country to the other, and the desirability of opening up trade relations between the Pacific and the Atlantic. Last fall a start was made. Two large cargoes of timber were taken from British Columbia into the St. Lawrence. Part of one of those cargoes was used by the Government in the terminals there. Within the past month canned goods from British Columbia have been offered for sale in Eastern Canada. They have been delivered at Montreal at the rate of 60 cents per hundred pounds, as compared with the rate of $1.05 by rail.

Some people raise the objection, and perhaps it is a natural one, that to establish a steamship service of the kind suggested would be injurious to the railways. It is not so. If there is trade to be done, and if the railway companies cannot possibly do it, and you can have ships transport goods at rates lower than those charged on the railways, is it not worth while doing so?

On the east coast of Canada there are great possibilities. We have there the iron and steel industry. We are sending goods down to Australia and New Zealand. Why should we not have a regular line of boats engaged in carrying goods from Eastern Canada—from Montreal, if you like, in the summertime, and from St. John and Halifax in the winter—through the Panama Canal and up the Pacific coast, the sailings being properly announced. Not only could a steamship service be carried on between the eastern and western parts of Canada, but, as has been suggested, the service could be extended down to the West Indies and to South America. Those are the only parts of the world in which we may expect any large expansion of business in the near future.

Why are the ships idle? Why has every country more ships now than it can use? Because of the excess building that was done, with the best intentions, during the war. The European countries, with which a large trade was being done from this continent have been devasted by war, and are overburdened with taxation. They have not much money and they cannot get credit. These are some of the reasons why business is not normal, and it will be years before we can expect a return of normal conditions in a European country. I think that point is worth considering in connection with the proposal to open up a traffic between the East of Canada and the West, through the Panama Canal. I think it is reasonable to expect great possibilities, not only from the trade between the East and West of Canada, but also the trade with the West Indies and South America.

I have much pleasure in supporting any proposal to initiate this service, and I am hopeful that if it is begun it will receive the commendation of the people of this country and have very valuable results.

Hon. O. TURGEON: Honourable gentlemen, with your indulgence I desire to express my hearty approval of the proposal which has been made by the honourable member from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) with regard to the utilizing of the Canadian Government vessels to the greatest possible extent. We can hardly undertake to establish a trade sufficient for all the vessels that we now have on hand, but they are now lying idle, and the use of them would add to the expense only the cost of the fuel they would consume. Therefore, if trade channels can be opened up for some of those vessels, it becomes the duty of the Government of Canada to see to it that such vessels are used, and the deficit would not be any greater at the end of the year. It is certainly to be regretted that Canada has to-day so many of those vessels on hand. I advocated in the lower House the desirability of constructing vessels for war service. I regretted that the Government did not stop further construction when the war was over. However, even though construction had ceased at once, we would have had a surplus of ships.

We have these vessels and there is no reason why a trade route cannot be established between the Atlantic ports and the Pacific ports without interfering with the returns of the Canadian railways. The more channels of trade we have the more exports we will have. Trade creates trade. Therefore, by the increase of trade through the service of these vessels, we increase local employment in the different parts of the country and create further trade. There is no fear in my mind that we will lose in the operation of a trade route between the Pacific and the Atlantic coast through the Panama canal. This route would be of advantage not only to British Columbia but to the manufacturers in Eastern and Central Canada. Meanwhile, many of our exports from the Eastern Provinces would be enabled to reach the Pacific coast.

My honourable friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) has mentioned the coal trade. These vessels could carry Welsh coal, which is equal to the coal we get from the United States. As he says, we have to be on our guard against a coal shortage next winter, and it would certainly be provident for the Government and the people of Canada to import as much Welsh coal as possible during the summer. Moreover, we know that the supply of coal from the United States is decreasing; and the people of that country see their coal reserves being depleted. Therefore, I would suggest that the Government should get in touch with the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways, and that they should see what arteries of trade can be opened up. Certainly these 8,000-ton vessels, of which my honourable friend has given a list, could carry grain across the ocean as cheaply as other vessels. While they could not carry as big a tonnage, they could transport it more cheaply than these other vessels of more costly construction and operation. I hope the leader of the Government in this House will see that there is a conference between the Government and Sir Henry Thornton and his associates on the Board of the Canadian National Railways to see what can be done. I believe we could utilize a good many of these vessels to advantage. Even if we do not derive a profit from them, it would require very little traffic to pay the cost of operation and prevent a further loss to the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I believe I may be able to bring some interesting information to this Chamber, if I am given a few days to obtain it from the Department of Railways and Canals. Therefore I move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 18, 1923.

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NATURALIZATION BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 85, an Act to amend the Naturalization Act, 1914 and 1920.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

PUBLIC SERVICE RETIREMENT BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 191, an Act to amend the Public Service Retirement Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 206, an Act to amend the Biological Board Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

MILITIA PENSION BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 219, an Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

DRYDOCK SUBSIDIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 220, an Act to amend the Drydock Subsidies Act, 1910.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

LITTLE BRAS D'OR GOVERMENT TELEGRAPH OPERATOR

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK inquired of the Government:

1. (a) Was Mrs. Richard, government telegraph operator at Little Bras d'Or, Cape Breton County, dismissed from office about two months ago? (b) For what cause?
2. Has a successor been appointed?
3. On whose recommendation was Mrs. Richard's successor appointed?
4. Where is the new office located?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. (a) Yes, April 11th, 1923. (b) In the interests of better service to the community.

2. No.

3 and 4. Answered by answer to question No. 2.

C.E.F. CANTEEN FUND

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH inquired of the Government:

1. At what amount was the canteen fund of the C.E.F. transferred from England to Canada?
2. At what amount does the fund now stand?
3. Has any portion of this fund, since transmission from England to Canada, been paid to any person or persons and if so (a) to what persons, (b) in what amounts, (c) for what purposes, (d) and by what authority?
4. Has the Government satisfied itself that moneys so paid out have been disbursed by the payees in accordance with the terms and conditions of the payments?
5. What steps has the Government taken to satisfy itself that the payees have disbursed the moneys in question in accordance with the conditions surrounding the payments?
6. What is the intention or the policy of the Government with respect to the disbursement of this fund?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. $1,941,807.53.

2. $1,743,482.63.

3. $50,000 was paid to the Great War Veterans' Association, John Barnett, N. F. Parkinson, R. B. Maxwell and C. G. MacNeil being appointed trustees thereof. The grant was for the purpose of defraying expenditures on such activities relating to the welfare of returned soldiers as the Board of Trustees approved, and was authorized by P.C. 2378 of 5th July, 1921.

$12,500 was paid to J. W. Margeson, John Barnett, N. F. Parkinson, Sir Hugh J. Macdonald and F. G. Taylor, trustees for distribution by the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada. The grant was authorized by Order in Council of 24th September, 1921, P.C. 3647 for expenditure on relief work among unemployed returned soldiers and their dependents.

$20,000 was paid to J. W. Margeson, John Barnett, N. F. Parkinson, G. R. McNichol and J. F. Marsh, trustees, for distribution by the Grand Army of United Veterans. The grant was authorized by Order in Council of 21st September, 1921, P.C. 3519, for expenditure on relief work among unemployed returned soldiers and their dependents.

$120,000 was authorized to be paid from the interest accruing on canteen funds to J. W. Margeson, T. O. Cox and W. C. Arnold, trustees, for distribution among organizations of ex-service men. The trust fund was authorized under Order in Council of 12th October, 1921, P.C. 3887, for expenditure by these organizations on certain specified activities relating to the welfare of ex-service men and their dependents, including unemployment, and $115,824.90 was disbursed.

4. The Orders in Council authorized the trustees nominated therein to supervise the expenditure of the grants and to require the production of vouchers and other evidence, as they considered necessary.

5. Answered by No. 4.

6. The question of canteen funds was referred to the royal commission investigating soldiers' pensions, insurance, and re-establishment, whose report on this matter has not yet been received.

RALSTON ROYAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired:

1. What is the amount per diem (a) for services, (b) for allowances, which each member of the Ralston Royal Commission on Soldiers Re-establishment and Pensions is to receive?
2. What are the respective amounts so far paid to each?

3. For how many days do such respective payments pay each commissioner and to what date respectively do they pay each commissioner?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. (a) $50 per day. (b) No amount fixed; travelling expenses are paid.

2. To the Chairman, Lieut-Col. J. L. Ralston, C.M.G., D.S.O.—for services to April 30, 1923, 206 days, $10,300.00; for travelling expenses, July 29th, 1922, to May 26th, 1923, $2,984.95. Total, $13,284.95.

The Commissioner Walter McKeown, C.B.E., M.D. For services to May 31st, 1923, 210 days, $10,500.00; for travelling expenses, July, 1922 to May 26th, 1923, $1,813.34. Total, $12,313.34.

To Commissioner A. E. Dubuc, D.S.O. For services to May 3rd, 1923, 224 days, $11,200.00; for travelling expenses, July 11th, 1922, to May 26th, 1923, $1,923.97. Total, $13,123.97.

3. Answered by No. 2.

DOCTOR'S BROOK POST OFFICE

MOTION

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR moved:

That an Order of the Senate do issue for copies of all correspondence relating to the dismissal on or about the third day of March, 1923, of Angus J. McQuarrie from the position of postmaster at Doctor's Brook, Antigonish County, Nova Scotia, and the appointment of Mrs. Catherine McDonald to this position.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILL

FIRST READING

C6, an Act for the relief of Jessie Ann Epstein.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

JUDGES BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 201, an Act to amend the Judges Act.

Hon. Mr. Taylor in the Chair.

On section 1—salaries of judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend be good enough to say what the object of the repeal is? I do not recall whether, in moving the second reading of the Bill, explanation was made of this section. As I understand it, it does not increase the salaries of the Ontario judges.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. It simply creates two Appellate Courts, but does not increase the number of judges, or the salaries.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is it consequential upon some Provincial legislation changing the constitution of the courts?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, altering the constitution.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does my honourable friend recall what chief justices are left? There was formerly the Queen's Bench Division and there was an Appellate Division. At one time there was a Chancery Division—I do not know what has become of that. Apparently, according to this Bill, there are only two chief justices left.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Only two chief justices left.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There will be a Chief Justice of the Appellate Division, I suppose?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2, new section 17—salaries of judges of Circuit Court, Montreal:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Are these what are known as Superior Court judges?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In the province of Quebec there is, I understand, the Court of King's Bench, the Superior Court—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: And the Circuit Court.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Circuit Court for the District of Montreal.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For the District of Montreal? The salaries provided for will exceed, if I remember aright, the salaries paid to the Superior Court judges.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; they are $1,000 below. We are paying $9,000 to Superior Court judges.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What are you paying to the King's Bench judges?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Nine thousand dollars, with $1,000 more to the Chief Justice.

Hno. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do the Superior Court judges receive the same salary?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Nine thousand, plus one thousand to the Chief Justice.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then the Superior Court judges and the judges of the Court of King's Bench are on a parity?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: What is the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court as distinguished from the Court of King's Bench?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or from the Superior Court?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The King's Bench, of course, has the criminal side and the civil side. They are purely and simply appelate courts. My honourable friend may have intended to ask what is the difference between the Superior Court jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Throughout the whole province, up to some 25 years ago, the Superior Court judges took in the work of the Circuit Court, but in the city of Montreal the work became of such magnitude that a special court was constituted. The impression is abroad that the Circuit Court judges have a jurisdiction similar to that of the County Court judges, but that is not so; neither have they similar jurisdiction territorially. some fifteen or twenty counties with a million are under their jurisdiction.

When this Bill was up for second reading I did not have under my hand the memorandum, which I will now give, to indicate the difference in jurisdiction and standing of the Circuit Court judges in distinction from the County Court judges:

By the statute of 1914 the title of Honourable is attached to the Chief Justice of Canada, the judges of the Supreme Court, of the Exchequer Court and the following Courts in different provinces: Supreme Court of Ontario, of Quebec, Court of King's Bench, Superior Court and Circuit Court of the District of Montreal and for the other provinces: Court of Appeal, Supreme Court and Court of King's Bench.

On an average 20,000 cases are inscribed in the Circuit Court of Montreal per year. Its ordinary jurisdiction covers actions for the recovery of school taxes and levies for church, presbytery, and cemetery construction. Its extraordinary jurisdiction is by way of certiorari upon the decisions of all inferior tribunals. Commissioners, Justices of the Peace, Recorders, and appeals touching all school and municipal matters, valuation tolls, individual valuations, municipal proces-verbaux concerning water courses, bridges, roads, resolutions and by-laws of these corporations, electoral lists, contestations of municipal and school boards, elections, etc.

There is no appeal; judgments are final, except in cases where the individual taxation exceeds $500.

They have had cases which have been tested through the Courts, and have gone to the Privy Council. Last year there were two important judgments that went to the Appeal Court, which reversed the judgments of the lower court, but those judgments were re-established by the Privy Council over the head of the Appeal Court. Of course, they have all the varieties of similar cases to those that are tried in the Superior Court.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is it a court confined to the island of Montreal, or is there a similar court to-day in any other part of the province?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It has jurisdiction over that district. The Circuit Court work is done on special days by the Superior Court judges; and it is because the Minister of Justice at the time came from Quebec and had in mind that Circuit Court work being done by the Superior Court judges that he thought that in his revision of the salaries he was including the Circuit Court judges of Montreal, but he was not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Those are the only Circuit Court judges in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to understand why the second part of section 1 is inserted, with reference to exemption from taxation. Is that to cover any particular case? It provides:

Any judge who enjoys immunity from taxes or deductions by reason of the provisions of section 11 of chapter 56 of the Statutes of 1920, etc.

I would like to know what judges are exempt under chapter 56, and what judges will be added to that list by this clause. In other words, there must be some judges who, as the law stands are paying taxes, and others who are not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, there are.

Hon. Mr. REID: And this is put in, I suppose, to relieve some other judges. I would like to know what judges it relieves.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are now considering anew the judges' salaries. Those salaries will not allow the judge to enjoy immunity from taxation unless within three months, he elects, as he might effectively do, to forego such immunity or deduction. The judges in 1920, I believe, were given an increase, but they could only take that increase if they relinquished their immunity from taxation. They had their option either to refuse the increase and be free from income tax, or accept the increase and pay the income tax. The principle remains the same.

Hon. Mr. REID: But though the salaries are the same, they are being raised for some other judges, who are now being exempted from taxation, while that others will pay taxes. That is why I wanted to know what other judges were being appointed, and what salaries were being increased. Are they to be free of taxation, while others will have to pay?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This Bill is simply intended to conform to the prescriptions of the Ontario Act; there is no change in salaries, but there is a change in jurisdiction; and the proviso is to make clear that the situation remains the same as it is under the provisions of the legislation of 1920.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I understood the honourable leader of the Government to say, on the second reading of this Bill, that the jurisdiction of those judges in matters of contract debt was limited to $100. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, that is one of their functions.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: In certain cases.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: In actions of contract or debt?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: If that is the case, this is evidently a court of very limited jurisdiction indeed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In those matters it is limited to that figure but in very many other directions it is much more extended.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Possibly, but that applies equally to the courts of minor jurisdiction throughout the whole Dominion. Now, as a matter of contrast, in the province with which I am most familiar, that of British Columbia, our county judges, whose salaries are only $5,000 a year, have a jurisdiction in contract cases of $1,000, and in equity of $2,500, and equally so in probate matters. In addition, they do much of the speedy trial work, thus saving the country a great deal of money, and taking care of cases which are not tried by juries, and they relieve the Superior Court of considerable work. They have also charge of all assessment appeals, municipal as well as provincial, where they have the unlimited jurisdiction of which the honourable gentleman speaks as existing in connection with the court in Montreal to which he referred. Further, in mechanics' lien cases the British Columbia judges have unlimited jurisdiction. I know personally of such a case against a railway in which a million dollars was involved, and it was tried by a county judge. In talking to-day with a barrister from British Columbia about this matter he told me of a mechanics' lien case in connection with the construction of a large building in the city of Vancouver, the trial of which occupied 21 days.

Now, why should these particular judges be singled out in this Bill above all other judges throughout the Dominion for this specially favoured treatment? They do not work any harder; they have not any more work to do; they have no greater jurisdiction; and I would really like the honourable gentleman to give us some reasonable explanation as to why those particular men should be singled out. If the honourable gentleman wants to raise the salaries of the judiciary throughout the whole Dominion, I will hold up both hands for that, for I think they have always been underpaid; but if we are going to pay the courts of minor jurisdiction in other provinces only about $5,000 a year, why should we single out three or four judges in Montreal and give them salaries practically equal to those of Superior Court judges?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There may be special cases throughout the Dominion which would approximate to the situation which I have explained as existing in the city of Montreal; but I have been told that the special Montreal case which is now before us could not apply to the 60 or 75 County Court judges in the province of Ontario for instance whose jurisdiction is different—

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: But larger and more extended.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —I do not know about that—and who only sit on term days for the administration of business while in the city of Montreal the judges work with full lists every day, except for the two months of July and August; and I think in summary trials of cases between lessors and lessees they have to sit even during those two months. But during the other ten months they are constantly in attendance and presiding over the work of the Court. As has been stated, there may be some special cases that resemble the situation at Montreal. They could be dealt with, and I shall be very happy to draw the attention of the Department of Justice to them if they are pointed out.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: If the honourable gentleman wants a concrete reference, I would refer him to the case of three judges I know of, in the city of Vancouver, who likewise sit all day and every day for ten months in the year, and whose calendar is filled all the time.

It was stated the other day that in the Province of Ontario Country Court judges in the cities received certain additional fees—surrogate fees. I believe they do, but that additional remuneration is given to them by grace of the Province and not of the Federal Government. But these are officials of the Dominion Government, and it is the duty of the Dominion Government, irrespective of anything the Province does, to pay them a proper living wage and pay them all on on a fair, equal basis. The judges in cities, I admit, have to work very harder than the judges in country districts, and have a more expensive scale of living, and they require a larger salary. I am perfectly satisfied that a scale should be made for city judges and another for country judges. My honourable friend suggests that the attention of the Government might be called to certain other cases. I am sceptical of the statement that if this Bill passes and the judges for whom it provides are taken care of, others will receive sympathetic treatment. I think, as happened before, that there will have to be a long, continuous agitation, and that in ten or fifteen years from now the result will be that they will receive no relief at all. Therefore I say that if you are going to to amend the salaries of the judges by this Bill, now is the proper time to do it, and it should be done on a principle which will apply to the judges of the whole country and not only to those of a particular city.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend believes there is good ground for extending this treatment to other judges, does he not realize that this is creating a precedent upon which he may rely for similar treatment being given in similar cases?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I am afraid not, because those judges, if they made application, would at once be met with the reply: "Oh, these are judges of a different court. This is a circuit court: you are county judges". I am quite sure they would not make any headway. I would ask that my honourable friend, rather than force this Bill through the House to-night, would consider whether or not he cannot devise some kind of amendment which will apply to cities of a certain population throughout the country. It is unfair and unreasonable that the judges of any one city—I do not care whether it is Montreal, Toronto, Halifax, St. John, or Vancouver—should be put on a different plane from the judges of any other city who are undoubtedly in practically the same category.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not admit the conclusion of my honourable friend that they are on an equal footing. Here is a court specially constituted of four judges, with the chief justice, administering justice for a population of one million, covering some fifteen counties. How can they be called county court judges?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: And they are not allowed to settle a case involving over $100.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Certainly they are. I have just cited a case.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: In British Columbia such cases go before the Police Magistrate. There is a small debts court in Ontario, the Division Court, presided over by a man getting probably $2,000 or $1,500 a year. Yet my honourable friend proposes that these judges be given a salary of $7,000. It is unreasonable.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I am pointing out to my honourable friend that in one series of cases alone relating to special assessments of valuations, the amount involved may run up into thousands of dollars —into millions. There have been such cases.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: An assessment may, but the taxes, which are the matter in adjudication, will not. Moreover, I pointed out to my honourable friend a moment ago a case in which over $1,000,000 was disposed of in a county court.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, that is possible.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Then where does the difference come in? As I say, I am for giving the judges decent salaries; but I do not believe in singling out judges of one particular city as against all the rest, and I am absolutely satisfied that once this Bill passes, the County Court judges residing in cities throughout this country, who are entitled to consideration, will not receive it at the hands of this Government, or perhaps the next one, however it may be constituted.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I earnestly hope my honourable friend will not offer too strenuous an opposition to this Bill. In Montreal it has been known for the last ten years that the Circuit Court judges have been treated most unjustly. There is no doubt as to that. They have a very heavy responsibility, and there is no appeal from their decision. Cases are turned over to them involving thousands.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Twenty thousand.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: There is no recourse from their decision. I know that at present the judges of the Circuit Court have before them cases involving exceedingly large amounts. To my knowledge there is one case of over 2½ millions, and another of $750,-

000. I do not deny what my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Barnard) says. Probably he is right. I believe that in this country we do not pay our judges as we should. There is no country that can boast of a better judicature than England; there is no country where the decisions of the judges are more universally and thoroughly respected; there is no country where the law is better obeyed; and there is no country where the judges are better paid.

I would like my honourable friend not to oppose this Bill. I think he is right in saying that the judges in his own Province are not sufficiently paid, and when the time comes I for one will endeavour to obtain for that Province what it is now intended to give Montreal. I think it is a hardship to impose upon a man the obligation to live as a judge in thorough independence and bring up a family on a salary of $5,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Hear, hear: so do I. That is just the point.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I stated that the press in the city of Montreal had for a number of years been unanimous in clamouring for an adjustment of those salaries. As I was coming up from Montreal to-day, I read this item in the Montreal Gazette of this morning:

An Act of Justice

Sir Lomer Gouin's measure providing among other things for an increase of salary of judges of the Circuit Court of Montreal was passed by the Commons with a unanimity which testified to the equity of the proposal, and is now before a committee of the Senate. This practical recognition of the importance and onerous nature of the work of the Circuit Court judges has, indeed, been too long deferred, but better late than never, and the Minister of Justice merits commendation for at last removing an injustice. In the short discussion of the Bill in the Senate last week regret was expressed that some members of the judiciary in other provinces are not brought within the scope of the legislation, but however strong the claims of these gentlemen may be the case of the Circuit Court judges should not be prejudiced by any failure to recognize other deserts. As the Minister of Justice stated, the Circuit Court is a division of the Superior Court of the district of Montreal, and is composed of a Chief Justice and three puisne judges, who have jurisdiction over certainly not less than twenty-two or twenty-three counties in the province of Quebec, and they have more cases than all the other judges of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec. There is no appeal from the judgment of this court, which means that it is a Superior Court. They have exclusive jurisdiction in matters of municipalities, municipal election petitions, schools matters —in fact, there is little limit to their jurisdiction. The ncrease in salaries now to be made is moderate enough, $2,000 in the case of the Chief Justice and $1,500 to the other three judges, and certainly not more than commensurate with the character and importance of the Court.

That gives you some idea of the unanimity of sentiment.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Growing out of this discussion honourable gentlemen, I would offer a suggestion which may be useful, and by which the County Court judges residing and exercising jurisdiction in the other large cities should profit. They should apply to their respective Legislatures to be created a Circuit Court so that they would be placed upon a parity with the Judges of Montreal. Take, for instance, the city of Toronto, where there are four or five County Court judges discharging all the duties incident to their office—duties quite as important and responsible as those being discharged by the Circuit Court judges of Montreal. They have jurisdiction in civil matters up to $1,000, and administer criminal law to a much greater extent than the Superior Court judges. They perform those duties for approximately a million people. The population of the city of Toronto and the greater County of York together would, I fancy, approximate a million. It seems to me that those County Court judges should profit by what is being done here to-night. They should apply to their respective Legislatures to be created a Circuit Court for their respective districts. Those administering justice in the city of Toronto should become a Circuit Court for the city of Toronto. A similar arrangement should apply in my honourable friend's (Hon. Mr. Barnard's) province, in the city of Vancouver. Then, I have no doubt, what is embodied in the Bill before us to-night will be accepted as a precedent, and Parliament will be invoked at no distant date to make similar provision for judges discharging equally onerous duties in other large centres.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I was told the other day—but I had no means of verifying the information by looking up Ontario statutes—that in the Province of Ontario now, the plaintiff and the defendant may be agreed to a case being tried in the County Court, no matter what is the amount involved, just as if it were a Superior Court. The plaintiff issues his writ. He may claim, for instance, $10,000. The defendant, of course, may raise the defence that it is a Superior Court case and have it transferred to the Superior Court; but, I am told, it is now a very common practice, particularly throughout the counties of Ontario, to have what are ordinarily Supreme Court cases tried in the County Court. In that way the duties and responsibilities of the County Court judge are very much enlarged. He has no choice in the matter; it is the parties to the action who determine whether or not it will be tried before him. So you have there a class of men who, it strikes me, have merits quite as strong as the Circuit Court judges in Montreal, or stronger.

Hon. Mr. REID: Honourable gentlemen, this is a question which is, I suppose, almost entirely for lawyers to deal with; but as a layman I would like to say a few words. I understand that the arrangement of the different courts are matters for the respective Provincial Governments to deal with, and that this Parliament has no jurisdiction with regard to them. All this Federal Parliament has to do is appoint the judges and pay them their salaries. Therefore a discussion of questions other that those of appointments and salaries is only a waste of time. If a Provincial Government will not make a change, we cannot insist on it.

But I rise to refer to another feature of this situation. Throughout the Dominion of Canada where courts have been established, whether High Courts, County Courts, or such as are named in this Bill, there should be appointed to them the very ablest men that can be secured; but up to the present time, according to my knowledge and experience, we have not been able to obtain the men that we should, because we did not pay sufficient salaries. In other words, if any position such as those mentioned in this Bill were to become vacant at any time, I do not believe you could get the men whom the people of Canada would like to see appointed, because the salaries are not sufficiently high. I say that without any desire to belittle the judges we now have. In the decision which a judge must give the life of a citizen of this country may be at stake. Sometimes the cases tried involve millions of dollars. Yet the best men in Canada are not available for appointment to the bench, because the salaries of judges are probably one-third or one-quarter of what some lawyers are earning to-day. therefore, so far as I am concerned, I do not want the impression to go out from this House that I oppose the increases provided for in this Bill. I would give the judges a salary sufficient to warrant the very best lawyers we have, with the highest reputation and standing in the community, in giving up their practice and accepting appointments to the Bench. When a case is tried by a judge, the people should be able to say: "The accused had a fair trial by a judge in whom we all had confidence, and the verdict that he has given is one which, we all feel, is in accordance with his best judgment." I do not wish to belittle any of the judges that we have, but I do claim that there are men who have had greater experience in certain respects and are therefore better fitted for the Bench than the men we now have to choose from, because of the inadequate salaries.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I do not know whether the judges referred to in the Bill now under consideration are going to be paid too much or not. I do not believe they are. I rise only to question the soundness of the argument advanced by my honourable friend from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid), who suggests that the salaries of the judges should be fixed in accordance with the earning power of some few of the higher or more able lawyers in Canada. We have before us the case of the Government paying in the past year or two to one particular lawyer $400 a day, month in and month out. Are we going to take that as a standard in fixing the pay of our County Court and Superior Court judges all over the country? To accept the argument of my honourable friend and base the salaries of judges on the sums paid by the Government to certain individual lawyers would be a great mistake.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think my honourable friend need lose no sleep over that fear.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I know, but I desire to take this occasion to say that in my opinion the Government was very much to blame for paying any lawyer in this country $400 a day, month in and month out. You see the result? That has now been taken as a ground for increasing the salaries of judges throughout the whole Dominion of Canada. I think we have as good judges as are to be found anywhere in the world, and they are fairly well paid. At least, I notice that whenever there is a vacancy on the Bench you have no dearth of applications for the position from able and good men. While I am not going to say anything against the increase to the judges in Montreal, who doubtless have hard work to do, and a great deal of work, I would object very seriously to any proposal to pay judges according to the earning power of certain lawyers, who have the good fortune to have an easy Government to deal with.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—judges may act as arbitrators or assessors under Railway Acts or Public Acts:

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to have an explanation of that section. Section 4 of the Judges Act of 1921 reads as follows:

The Judges Act, Chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following section:

35. Unless nominated by the Governor in Council no judge mentioned in this Act may act as commissioner or arbitrator on any commission or inquiry: provided that this enactment shall not interfere with the judges who are at present acting as commissioners or arbitrators completing the work on which they are engaged.

I understand that the Act prohibited judges from accepting commissions in the past; but I think it was amended so that they could be appointed by the local Government, but without remuneration. If I understand the provision before us, it simply means in future judges can act on arbitrations and can be paid for doing so. The Bill says:

Neither shall it extend nor be deemed to have extended to judges acting as arbitrators or assessors of compensation or damages under the Railway Act, 1919.

That means that they could act with reference to railway matters. Then the Bill goes on to say:

Or any public Act, whether of general or local application of the Dominion or any Province, whereby a judge is required or authorized, without authority from the Executive, to assess or ascertain compensation or damages.

I would like an explanation of that from the leader of the Government. If it really means that judges can be called upon to act on arbitrations and commissions, and can receive fees for their work, would not that have the effect of taking them away from their judicial duties and delaying matters of litigation that might be before them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no special memorandum from the Department of Justice on this clause 3; but I find very little in it to criticize. My honourable friend has read clause 4 of chapter 36 of 1921. I cannot see how that provision would preclude a judge from acting under the Railway Act or any public Act of the Dominion or of any Province who is required to assess or ascertain damages.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can he get any compensation for it? I doubt very much that he can. Under the Act of 1920 we prohibited a judge from accepting remuneration; then, under the Act of 1921, we went further and prevented him from acting in the capacity of a commissioner or arbitrator. This is a further exception to his acting in that capacity, but it seems to me that it does not in any way change the situation, except that before he was entitled to compensation, and now he is prevented from accepting it.

Hon. Mr. REID: I am not in a position to argue that question with my leader. I understand that the Judges Act did prohibit judges from accepting fees. Then the Act of 1921 prevented them from acting as commissioners unless an Order in Council was passed authorizing them to do so. The statute of 1921 amended the Act of 1920, and now we come along with this Bill. I would like to ask the leader of the Government and the other lawyers in this House whether this Bill does not amend or change the statutes of 1920 and 1921 as it states. The Bill says that the judges may act as arbitrators or assessors under the Railway Act or under a public Act. In my judgment this would kill the effect of the Act of 1920, in which we said they were not to get any remuneration. The interpretation of this provision as passed is left to the judges, and there is no doubt of how they will interpret it. If it can be interpreted in such a way as to entitle them to receive fees, it will be interpreted in that way, and conditions will be as they were before in the Province of Ontario, when two-thirds of our judges were out acting on commissions, and court work was delayed and the administration of justice interfered with. If it is necessary for judges to act on arbitrations, I should say that we should have a judge or a couple of judges, like the Exchequer Court judges, selected for that special purpose. When the Exchequer Court judges were appointed it was not thought that they would have any work to do; but in my opinion no Court has done better work than has been done by that Court. I am opposed to any provision that is going to permit judges to go out, of their own free will, and work on commissions to the detriment of the administration of justice.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Are they to get additional fees?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not think so. We are amending section 35 of the Act, as enacted by section 4 of chapter 36 of the statutes of 1921. So I take it that this clause of the Act will now read as follows:

Unless nominated by the Governor in Council, no judge mentioned in this Act shall act as commissioner or arbitrator on any commission or inquiry: provided that this enactment shall not interfere with judges who are at present acting as commissioners or arbitrators completing the work on which they are engaged.

Then comes the section in the Bill:

Neither shall it extend nor be deemed to have extended to judges acting as arbitrators or assessors of compensation or damages under the Railway Act, 1919, or any public Act, whether of general or local application, of the Dominion or of any Province, whereby a judge is required or authorized, without authority from the Executive, to assess or ascertain compensation or damages.

When we passed the Act of 1921, we had in view the prevention of the appointment of judges on Royal Commissions, to make investigations or inquiries. It seems to be held by the Department of Justice that in making that general prohibition we raised a doubt as to the right of judges to sit in cases arising out of the Railway Act or other public Acts, Provincial or Federal. Reading these two clauses together, it seems to me that they simply have the effect of allowing the judges to continue to discharge their duties under those various public Acts.

Hon. Mr. REID: Under the Act of 1921 it was intended that no judge should act as an arbitrator unless an Order in Council was passed authorizing him to do so. The second part of section 35 said:

Provided that this enactment shall not interfere with judges who are at present acting as commissioners or arbitrators completing the work on which they are engaged.

That was to cover cases in which judges had been appointed. Now we say that the Judges Act passed in 1920 shall not extend nor be deemed to have extended to judges acting as arbitrators or assessors of compensation or damages under the Railway Act or any public Act. Might that not be interpreted, as meaning that a judge could be appointed on a board of arbitration, and could charge whatever fee might be arranged between the parties? If that is the intention, it should not be left in doubt.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: If we turn to the statutes of 1920 we find that the prohibition of the payment to judges is absolute:

No judge shall receive any remuneration in addition to his judicial salary for acting as administrator or Deputy of the Governor General, or for any duty or service, whether judicial or executive, which he may hereafter be required to perform for or on behalf of the Government of Canada or the Government of any province thereof.

The prohibitions are general; then there are exceptions providing for the payment of travelling expenses in certain cases. The provision in the present Bill does not amend this section of the Statute of 1920; it merely permits the judges to act in the additional cases mentioned. The prohibition against their being paid remains absolute.

Hon. Mr. REID: Will the honourable gentleman please explain section 35.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Section 35 does not come in.

Hon. Mr. REID: It does not prohibit them from acting. It says they may act if the Governor in Council appoints them. Here is a Bill amending the Judges Act as a whole, in which we say that the restrictions made in 1920 shall not apply in cases of railway arbitration or of any public Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not in 1920.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable gentleman must be satisfied that the provision which I have read from the Statute of 1921 was not interfered with. Let me read the last part of section 35 of the existing section:

Provided that this enactment shall not interfere with judges who are at present acting as commissioners or arbitrators completing the work on which they are engaged.

Then I read from the Bill:

Neither shall it extend nor be deemed to have extended to judges acting as arbitrators or assessors of compensation or damages under The Railway Act, 1919, or any public Act, whether of general or local application, of the Dominion or of any Province, whereby a judge is required or authorized, without authority from the Executive, to assess or ascertain compensation or damages.

If the proviso of the Act of 1921 did not contemplate additional payment, the part of this Bill which I have read will not entail any additional payment.

Hon. Mr. REID: I take issue with the honourable gentleman. The proviso in section 35 which the honourable gentleman has just read meant that many judges who were then acting and had agreed upon the remuneration were to be allowed to continue their arbitration and to receive remuneration.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No.

Hon. Mr. REID: No doubt that is what it was for. There were arbitrators performing their duties then, and this allowed them to finish their work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; my honourable friend is totally in error. To what is the proviso attached? Let my honourable friend read it again. It is attached to this phrase:

Unless nominated by the Governor in Council, no judge mentioned in this Act shall act as Commissioner or Arbitrator or on any Commission of Inquiry, etc.

But, if they have been nominated by the Governor in Council, they can proceed with their work. Now what are we doing? Simply declaring that under certain Acts, the Railway Act and others, they will not need to be nominated by, or to have the acquiescence of, the Govenor in Council, in order to proceed with their work.

Hon. Mr. REID: What would satisfy me would be for the honourable leader of the Government to say that the law in the future will be exactly the same as it has been—that if any judge acts on any Commission outside of his judicial work he will not receive any remuneration other than actual travelling expenses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is my understanding, and if the Department of Justice differ from me I will inform this Chamber when we come to the third reading.

Sections 3, 4 and 5 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

BANKRUPTCY BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beique, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 139, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Before we proceed with the clauses which were allowed to stand, I suggest that we adopt the consequential amendment as the result of clause 3 of the Bill, which was adopted the other evening. That would make j in the Act read in this way:

If he ceases to meet his liabilities as they generally become due.

This necessitates an amendment of the words "insolvent person" in subsection 3 of section 2 of the Act, and inserting the word "generally;" so I move:

1. That paragraph (t) of section 2 of the said Act be amended by substituting for the word "respectively" the word "generally", and by adding after the word "business" the words "as they generally become due."

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move:

2. That section 9 of the Bill be amended by adding the following as subsection (2) to section 8A on page 3:

(2) Any person appointed as custodian pursuant to the provisions of this Act shall during the term of his office as such custodian be deemed to be an officer of the court and shall when so appointed forthwith give such security for the proper performance of his duties as shall be prescribed by general rules.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What clause in the Bill now before us makes provision for the passing of rules?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: There is a general clause, No. 66, which is very wide, providing that the Governor in Council may make, alter, or revoke rules, and may delegate to the judges of the several courts power to make rules for carrying into effect the objects of the Act. It thus permits not only the making of rules, but delegates the power to the judges to do so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In what way would my honourable friend consider that the judges would have authority? In what way could we have any uniformity?—because there is no relation between judges of the different provinces or the different districts; so that I fail to see how delegating power to the judges would result in satisfactory rules being established.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The judges would have no authority except as given them by the Governor in Council, so that it would be in this case as in that of the procedure under the Act, where rules were passed by the Governor in Council to determine how security was to be given.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I can understand that; but I cannot understand how the judges could very well do it unless a bench of judges were constituted for the particular purpose of passing rules for the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No; the Governor in Council can determine, for instance, that the security shall be given by bonds; and they can determine also that the judge shall see that it is given by bonds.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I quite understand that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Or the Governor in Council may decide that the security be given in some other way, such as by a guarantee or trust company.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I can readily understand that.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: May I be allowed to move another amendment to section 8A, as follows:

3. That subsection 8A of the Bill, page 3, be amended by inserting after the words "perishable goods" the following words "and under the direction of the court may carry on the business of the debtor for all conservatory purposes."

I think it is very important that this should be allowed in order that the estate may be sold as a going concern.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is entirely discretionary with the judge?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Should that be extended for a longer period than the first meeting of creditors? It seems to me there should be a limitation; yet of course the court has full authority to fix the period during which the business may be carried on. But after the first meeting of creditors the custodian's duties cease, practically.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Then the creditors decide what shall be done.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Section 10 was allowed to stand. I said I was troubled about the last words of clause 8B. This clause deals with the claims of secured creditors, and allows a judge to interfere and extend the delay. After considering the matter, I have come to the conclusion to suggest this:

That section 10 of the Bill be amended by adding to subsection 8B the following words:

Provided, however, that in so ordering, the court shall not have power to postpone the right of any secured creditor or person holding security on the property of the debtor as aforesaid to realize or otherwise deal with the security as aforesaid, except as hereinafter provided, namely:

(a) In the case of a security for a debt due at the date of the receiving order or authorized assignment, or which becomes due not later than 6 months thereafter, such right shall not be postponed for more than 6 months from such date.

(b) In the case of a security for a debt which does not become due until more than 6 months from the date of the receiving order or authorized assignment, such right shall not be postponed for more than 6 months from such date.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What date is that?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The six months from the date of the receiving order.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then that would not extend it at all, because you are dealing with a case that does not mature till the six months after the receiving order. You had better say, "such later date."

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think the clause is very clear. It goes on:

Unless all instalments of interest which are more than 6 months in arrears are paid and all other defaults of more than 6 months standing are cured, and then only so long as no instalment of interest remains in arrears or defaults remain uncured for more than 6 months, but, in any event, not beyond the date at which the debt secured by such security becomes payable under the instrument or law creating the security.

I think that in cases of debt secured like those we are dealing with, the judge should have the right to interfere, provided he is within the delay of the maturity of the debt, and that he should not be allowed to extend it beyond six months from the assignment, but must always keep within the maturity of the debt.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Do you think that that is wholly wise? I think that the amendment as the honourable gentleman has introduced it is very desirable, inasmuch as it protects the rights of the secured creditors, not leaving them wholly within the discretion of the Judge. but it seems to me, although the debt is due to the secured creditor, it might be improper to prevent the Judge from having any discretion to give a little time towards liquidation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: My suggestion is this, that the Judge be given power to extend the delay for six months.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Not if the debt is due, as I understood the proposed amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Not if the debt is due.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not beyond maturity.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I do not think that if a debt is due the Judge should have any discretion.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes; it might be a mortgage; it might be another security. Then you would very likely compel the secured creditor, immediately on maturity of his debt, to start to realize. The assignee or the trustee in bankruptcy in this case is not protected at this moment. He may not be placed in possession of the assets.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Pardon me. It is provided in the first clause:

(a) In the case of a security for a debt due at the date of the receiving order or authorized assignment, or which becomes due not later than six months thereafter, such right shall not be postponed for more than six months from such date.

So the change is under this first paragraph.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: That part is all right. It was not quite distinct.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But you practically contradict that in the latter part, do you not?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No. Two cases are provided for.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the latter case?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The latter case is beyond the six months, or if the debt is not due.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Did I not understand my honourable friend to say that in any event it is not to be extended beyond the maturity of the debt?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, but the two paragraphs a and b have to be read together. The power is given in paragraph a to extend it for six months.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But let us assume a case in which during the currency of the winding-up of the estate the debt falls due. What would be the limitation or the jurisdiction of the Court to extend, if during the winding up of the estate the debt should mature?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Under the first paragraph, a, the judge is, in express terms, given the power to extend the delay for six months after the maturity. The latter part deals with a debt maturing beyond the six months, in cases that are not covered by a, However, if the honourable gentleman thinks it is better to alter the paragraph, we might make it clearer by the addition of a few words. It reads:

but, in any event, not beyond the date at which the debt secured by such security becomes payable under the instrument or law creating the security—except under paragraph a hereof.

To make it perfectly clear we might add:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Will you read the clause as proposed to be amended, Mr. Chairman?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN (reading):

Provided, however, that in so ordering the Court shall not have power to postpone the right of any such secured creditor or person holding security on the property of the debtor as aforesaid to realize on otherwise deal with his security as aforesaid, except as hereinafter provided, namely:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Of what is that an amendment?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: That is an addition to 8B.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is an amendment of section 10 of the Bill, new section 8B.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Beique was agreed to.

On section 11, subsection 3—filing of such authorized assignment:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I do not know whether we amended subsection 3 of section 11.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: For the words "in the custody" in line sixteen we substituted "under the authority."

On section 11, subsection 4—appointment of custodian:

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Then we come to subsection 4. It stood.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think subsection 4 should remain as it is. I saw the Department of Justice, and that is their opinion.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: With the words "most interested?"

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then, it seems to me, we should amend the section dealing with the appointment of the custodian.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The appointment of the custodian in the other case is not the same thing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it is the same thing. It deals with the initial step taken by the Official Assignee respecting the appointment of the custodian. Now, until we reach subsection 4 of section 11, there is no indication as to what the qualification of the custodian shall be. The amendment moved by my honourable friend a few moments ago, of course, leaves it with the Court. The question is, how shall it be determined at the moment of the making of the assignment who is the most interested creditor? Immediately the assignment is made the duty falls upon the Official Receiver of appointing the custodian. That will be postponed if the Official Receiver has to make inquiry to ascertain who is the "most interested" creditor, and if that is to be the qualification of the custodian it is quite obvious the appointment cannot be made at the moment of the assignment. It seems to me that it is going to be a difficult matter to determine who is the creditor "most interested," or who is a substantial creditor, until a meeting of the creditors is called. Yet, I am bound to say, it is not unreasonable that the custodian should possibly be one of the most interested creditors. On the other hand, there is this to be said, that the appointment of an interested creditor, particularly a substantial creditor, might be very unsatisfactory to the other creditors. It might give him an advantage which would be looked upon with very grave suspicion by the other creditors. I must say that I am myself in doubt whether the custodian should be selected from this particular class of creditor.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Are the words "most interested" clear enough? The poorest creditor, the one who is hardest hit by the assignment, might be the most interested, although not having the biggest financial stake. I think that in any event the words "most interested" are not a happy terminology.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: One could understand "the largest creditor."

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I could understand that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It struck me when we considered the Bill before that this clause should be made to harmonize with the other, and I took the question up with the Department of Justice. I had only a few minutes and I tried to make an amendment, but I did not see my way clear. It was difficult to draw, and I asked the Law Clerk to consider it and send me an amendment. I understand that he came to the conclusion that the clause had better remain as it is. We might reserve the question for the third reading.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I make this suggestion? We might say:

Select from among the largest creditors, if ascertainable at the time.

That condition should be attached, because it is necessary for the custodian to go into possession at once, and if the Official Assignee knows nothing about the creditors, how is he to appoint a custodian? My honourable friend will see that under the clause as now drawn it is not obligatory upon either the Official Assignee or the Court to appoint one of the most interested creditors except "as far as possible."

Hon Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable gentleman suggests what?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That he should select one of the most interested creditors if ascertainable at the time of the assignment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Let us adopt that. Then the Department of Justice will have an opportunity of suggesting another clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All right.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Add at the end of subsection 4 the words "if ascertainable"?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, if ascertainable at the time of the assignment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We need not say at what time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or at the date of the assignment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE. I think the words "if ascertainable" are enough. The implication is that it is at that time.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: And we retain the words "most interested"?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Would not the amendment proposed by the honourable gentleman from Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) make it a little doubtful about the custodian being an interested creditor?? The clause provides now that he must be appointed from among the most interested creditors.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, "as far as possible"; but there would be nobody to take charge of the estate if the "most interested creditors" were not ascertainable.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I do not see how it could be otherwise than that the creditors would be ascertainable, because the bankrupt would naturally give a list of his debts and the persons to whom he was indebted, would he not?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but there would be no evidence other than the statement of the assignor or bankrupt himself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The words, "as far as possible," are there in order to give discretion to the Official Assignee to select a creditor who is at hand. The largest creditor might be 100 or 500 miles away.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but with this proposed clause they will be able to select a man.

The amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to.

On section 11, subsection 5—procedure at first meeting of creditors:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think that subsection 5 was allowed to stand, but I noticed that the wording was not very appropriate, and on considering the subsection I suggest this:

6. That subsection 5 of section 11 of the Bill be struck out and the following substituted:

"(5) Upon the appointment of the trustee by the creditors the Official Receiver shall complete the authorized assignment by certifying thereon the name of such trustee, and such assignment shall thereupon subject to the rights of secured creditors, vest, as of the date of the acceptance and filing of the said assignment, in the trustee all the property of the debtor."

This was approved by the Department of Justice.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the difference between this proposed amendment and subsection 5 in the Bill? I did not observe any substantial difference.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Part of the sub-subsection in the Bill is not germane at all. If the honourable gentleman will read the present subsection, he will remember that he pointed out the other day that it was not in its proper place.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, I recall that.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Béique was agreed to.

On section 15, new section 13, subsection 3—proceedings by Trustee:

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: That whole section changes the scheme that was in vogue under the old Act, and I do not think it is an improvement. The proposed section now contemplates a meeting and an attempt to make a compromise between the creditors and the insolvent after he has made an assignment. The Act, before this amendment, allowed an attempt at compromise before the assignment, and I know of cases in which it worked out admirably. I think this is a retrogade step.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I beg to differ with the honourable gentleman. To my mind it is a very great improvement in the Act. I know of a number of compositions that were pressed upon the creditors before they knew anything about the estate. Under the amendment it will be incumbent upon the insolvent within seven days of the filing of his assignment, or putting himself under the Bankruptcy Act, to furnish a statement of his affairs to the receiver or the custodian, with the names and addresses of his creditors, and the amount of the claim of each creditor; and he will not be permitted to demand a composition before the first meeting of the creditors. The first meeting is called immediately; and in the meantime it is incumbent upon the debtor to offer himself for examination by the Official Receiver. The scope of the examination shall be determined by Order in Council. At the first meeting of creditors, which will take place within 10 or 12 days, the creditors will have the means of being informed as to the condition of the estate. I think in many cases that will prevent composition being obtained for amounts which are inferior to the amount the debtor could pay.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Under the old Act it had to be confirmed by the Court in any event.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, but when the creditors assigned and gave their consent, the Court was not supposed to interfere; and I know that in practice the Court did not interfere.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The Court would not interfere if there was full disclosure to the Court and no misrepresentation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The Act did not provide for the examination of the debtor at all. The advantage of this is that the examination is compulsory.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I think that part is good. I recognize that this is a departure in principle from the others. The clause giving the right to examine the insolvent before the meeting of the creditors may be a good one; but the same right could have been obtained by providing for examination by some officer of the Court before the assignment. It could have been worked out under the old Act.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: In subsection 3 of section 13 it speaks of "two-thirds" and "three-quarters." Does that mean a representation of two-thirds of the claim against the debtor or two-thirds of the actual creditors in person?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Two-thirds in value of the claim.

I gave notice the other day of the following amendment:

7. That section 15 of the Bill be amended by striking out subsection 3 thereof and substituting the following as subsection 3:

"(3) Subsection three of section thirteen, as enacted by chapter eight of the Statutes of 1922, is amended by striking out the word "two-thirds" in the thirty-third line and substituting the words "three-fourths", and by striking out the worlds, "the holders of two-thirds in interest of each class of the shares of such corporation debtor", in the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth lines, and substituting, "a majority representing three-fourths in value of the holders of each class of shares of such corporation debtor present in person or by proxy at such meeting."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the present Act?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: This is dealing with the scheme of arrangement. The present Bill requires three-quarters of all the claims. That would be maintained as regards the creditors; but as regards the shareholders it would be reduced to three-quarters of those present or represented at the meeting. This clause has been suggested by lawyers representing companies that come under the Act, and it was submitted to the Department of Justice and approved by them.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It was two-thirds, and now you are making it three-quarters.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is increased to three-quarters.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I have at least a couple of wires objecting to the proportion being too large.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What does the two-thirds apply to?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The two-thirds applies to the creditors—to the value.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The first meeting of creditors?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It applies to both the creditors and the shareholders.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is in the composition.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: In the composition—in the scheme of arrangement.

I am under the impression that I have been asked to substitute a somewhat different wording. I cannot lay my hand on it at the moment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think perhaps the better way is to print the amendments, and then we can see their application.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The amendment that I prepared last week was approved of, but after careful consideration the lawyers prepared it in a different form, and handed it to me this afternoon just as I was leaving Montreal. It was prepared by several counsel in consultation. I have reason to believe that it may be an improvement on the other. Shall I read it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I suppose it is substantially the same.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Beique was agreed to.

On subsection 5 of new section 13—court may refuse to approve the proposal, etc.:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Now I move:

That subsection 5 of section 15 of the Bill be amended by adding after the word "estate" in the forty-seventh line, on page 5, the following

"Provided that if a composition, extension or arrangement is proposed by the debtor before the expiration of any previous extension or of any renewal or extension thereof, no such previous extension or renewal or extension thereof, shall be deemed to have been made on a previous occasion within the meaning of paragraph (j) of section 59."

This amendment is suggested by the requirements of the Riordon Company. Here is what I am told has taken place: In view of composition there was an extension of time demanded for six or twelve months; at the expiration of the six or twelve months, as they were not prepared to offer composition, another extension was asked and was granted. If this provision is not accepted, they would be debarred under the Act, and it is suggested that this proviso be added to the clause. Paragraph j of section 59 prevents the judge confirming an extension if 50 per cent of the debts are not paid. I have considered the amendment fully, and think it is in the proper direction.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Does that mean, in a few words, that you can give a further extension notwithstanding the fact that 50 per cent of the debts are not paid?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And I suppose it has to be approved by the proportion of the creditors already mentioned. This Bill should be entirely reprinted.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move the following amendment, of which I gave notice:

9. That subsection (c) of section 20 of this Bill be amended by substituting for the first part of the said subsection, commencing with the words "The sale of" and ending with the words "have the same effect" the following word:

"(c) The sale of such immovable property, unless a written consent to the contrary is obtained from each hypothecary or privileged creditor whose claim has been duly registered—

These words are added:

—or unless the sale is made subject to hypothec or privilege of any such creditor not so consenting—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is only applicable to the province of Quebec, is it not?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes. Then I proceed with the clause:

—shall be made at public auction at the place prescribed and after advertisement as required for the sale of immovable property by the sheriff in the district or place where such immovable property is situate.

Then I have added:

—provided that in case of a sale of property situate in more than one district or place the court may direct a sale of all such property as an entirety at one place, to be specified in the order, and after such notice as the court may direct, and any sale at public auction under the provisions of this paragraph shall have the same effect."

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I beg to move that the Bill be amended by inserting the following added section after section 21—it is a consequential amendment:

"21A. Section twenty-seven of the said Act is amended by inserting the words "an Interim Receiver or Custodian or" after the word "if" in the first line of the said section and by inserting the words "borrow money and give security on any property of the estate by a mortgage, pledge, or otherwise, including security under the provisions of the Bank Act", after the word "obligations" in the second line of the said section, and by inserting the words, "including obligations for money so borrowed" after the word "made" in the fourth line of the said section.

If the trustee wishes to continue the business of the insolvent he may for this purpose borrow money and give security on any property of the estate by mortgage, pledge, or otherwise, including security under the provisions of the Bank Act, and make necessary or advisable advances, which obligations and advances so incurred and made, including obligations for money so borrowed, shall be discharged or repaid to the interim receiver, custodian or trustee out of the assets of the debtor in priority to the claims of the creditor.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The trustee may do this; does that extend to the custodian?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes; interim receiver, or custodian, or trustee.

Hon. Sr JAMES LOUGHEED: Does he do it on his own responsibility?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No, on the order of the Court.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move to amend section 31 of the Bill as follows:

11. Section 31 of the Bill is amended by striking out the words, "debtor has his locality for the purposes of this Act", in line forty-eight, page 10, and line 1, page 11, and substituting therefor the words, "demised permises are situated".

That is approved by the Department of Justice.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This would be applicable to every province throughout the Dominion, I suppose?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would like my honourable friend to state the reason for this change of policy, because a great number of protests have been forwarded to members of the Senate against any departure from the old Act, as to the claim of landlord for rent against the estate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The reason which was assigned by the Minister of Justice was that he did not think the Act was constitutional, and that a case was now pending in the Courts in which a judge had expressed his intention to declare the Act unconstitutional, and I must say that I believe, from my examination of the Act, that the point was well taken.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does it increase the lien of the landlord

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No; it leaves the law as it is in all the provinces. I have had a number of protests—in fact, from the Board of Trade of Montreal and from other institutions—against the change, but I think they should be directed to apply to the Legislature of Quebec. It is there that they should seek their remedies, and there should be an understanding between the provinces to make the law uniform.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the only condition that would warrant a departure from the law now on the statute book is the constitutional objection advanced by the Minister of Justice, namely, that we have no authority to legislate as against property and civil rights in a province, concerning rent. So that the matter may be perfectly clear, may I ask my honourable friend if the Department of Justice has expressly stated that that is the reason for the departure from the policy in the present Act?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, the Minister of Justice has so stated, as appears from the Commons Hansard.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I would move also:

12. Subsection 1 of section 32 of the Bill is amended by striking out the word "debts" in line thirty-six, page 11.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The next is the motion of which I have given notice:

13. Subsection 65A of section 35 of the Bill, page 12 is amended to read as follows:

65A. There shall be one Official Receiver in each Bankruptcy District or Division who shall be deemed to be an officer of the Court and who as such Official Receiver shall have and perform only such duties and responsibilities as are prescribed by this Act and Rules, and shall be appointed by the Governor in Council.

It will be remembered that exception was taken to the wording of the clause. This was submitted to the Department of Justice, and approved of.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the distinction between the Official Receiver and the prothonotary? I thought the policy of the Bill was that the prothonotary of each District Court should be the Official Receiver.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The Minister of Justice, in presenting the Bill, stated that it was the intention to apoint the prothonotaries as Official Receivers.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But you confine his duties exclusively to those under the Bankruptcy Act, whereas if he is to be a prothonotary of the court he must perform the duties of prothonotary.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Exactly. The wording of the clause confined him to that, and it was amended to cure that defect, so that he will not be prevented from performing the other duties, but as Official Receiver he shall perform only such duties.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As such Official Receiver.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It strikes me it would exclude him from the performance of other duties.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The other amendment of which I have given notice was suggested by one of the judges of the Superior Court in Montreal. I approve entirely of it, but I doubt if we have power to pass it, and I would prefer that it should be moved by somebody else.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Whom would you suggest to move it? I would suggest my houourable friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson). It would not sacrifice his reputation as a constitutional lawyer.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think the lawyers have that pretty well fixed now.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Section 51 of the Act says:

51. (1) Subject to the provisions of the next succeeding section as to rent, in the distribution of the property of the bankrupt or authorized assignor, there shall be paid, in the following order of priority,—

Firstly, The fees and expenses of the trustee;

Secondly, The costs of the execution creditor (including sheriff's fees and disbursements) coming within the provisions of section eleven, subsections one and ten;

Thirdly, All wages, salaries, commission or compensation of any clerk, servant, travelling salesman, labourer or workman in respect of services rendered to the bankrupt or assignor during three months before the date of the receiving order or assignment.—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What about the rent?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is all right. I do not take any issue there. Then this section 51 was amended by section 39 of Chapter 17 of the Statutes of 1921, 11-12 George V:

Subsection one of section fifty-one is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"and all indebtedness of the bankrupt or authorized assignor under any Workmen's Compensation Act."

It has to be paid by privilege. I think that is going too far. The amendment which is suggested is this:

"Fourthly, claims resulting from injuries to employees of the insolvent debtor to which the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act do not apply, but only upon moneys paid or payable to the insolvent estate by persons or companies guaranteeing the insolvent debtor against damages resulting from such injuries."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think we had better not enlarge the category of payments. Otherwise the creditors will conclude there will be nothing for them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is the practice for employers or contractors to take insurance policies to cover accidents to their employees. The insurance is taken out for the employee, and it is but fair that the employee should get the benefit of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He will get it from the insurance company, will he not?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No; he has no claim against the insurance company. The insurance is always taken out by the employer; so the employee cannot get the insurance. The employer is entitled to the amount of the insurance. It is intended to be paid to cover the loss that he may suffer by the claim which will be made by the employee. It is only fair that the employee should have a privilege merely to the extent of the insurance which has been taken out for him.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think that is right.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: My only trouble is this: I am afraid that this Parliament has no jurisdiction to deal with that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not think that the insurance would become part of the estate at all. I think the employee would be entitled to recover that because it is specifically allocated for him, and it is not part of the bankrupt's estate.

Hon. BEIQUE It is part of the bankrupt's estate.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not unless the accident should happen and the insurance is so allocated that he is entitled to it under a distinct contract.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: According to the way the policies are taken out, it would fall into the estate.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Béique) allow me to call his attention to a case that I think would not be met by this amendment? It was a judge of the Superior Court of Montreal who called my attention to it. A man was severely injured in the performance of his duties. He sued the company. Before he could obtain judgment the company failed—went into bankruptcy. After the bankruptcy the employee obtained judgment. He could not be paid from the bankrupt's estate: it did not have any funds. On the other hand, the insurance company refused to pay the estate, because its obligation was limited to a refund. The only obligation under the policy was that the insurance company should refund to the employer any amount paid for accident.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And they said, "You have not paid anything"?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: In the present instance the employing company had not paid; therefore the insurance company sat back and said to the poor injured chap: You have a judgment for several thousand dollars: we will settle with you for $200 or $300."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the insurance law should be amended. That is the only way to reach such cases.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I have submitted my amendment to the judge referred to by the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Béique), and he has approved of it. We cannot go further. We cannot reach that case which has been cited.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I understand how difficult it is to reach it. If my honourable friend will allow me to say so, I think that the fact of making a privileged claim on the estate would not solve the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No it would not. But the judge was—

, Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Satisfied with it?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: He was agreed that it would not be possible for us to reach such a case. He approved of this amendment.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The only way would be to make a different contract with the company.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Béique was agreed to.

On section 2—definitions:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I have only one more amendment, and it is a proposed amendment to section 2 of the Bill:

That section 2 of the Bill be amended by inserting therein the following additional subsection as subsection (6):

Ho. Mr. BEAUBIEN.

(6) The final sentence added to paragraph (o) of Section 2 of the Bankruptcy Act by Section (2) of Chapter 8 of the Statutes of 1922 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"Moreover an order of the court, granting leave to extend or apply to any such corporation the Winding-up Act shall not be invalid or subject to any objection by reason only that the corporation had previously made an assignment under the provisions of this Act, or that proceedings in bankruptcy under this Act were at the time pending against the corporation, and in any such case the provisions of the Winding-up Act shall apply and prevail, and the bankruptcy proceedings shall abate subject to such disposition of the costs thereof to be made in the winding-up proceedings as the justice of the case may require."

That amendment was suggested by the lawyers representing the Riordon Company. This would be the effect of it. The companies in liquidation fell under the Bankruptcy law, but the courts had power to place them under the Winding-up Act. This is to reverse the operation to leaving them under the Winding-up Act, but allowing the judge, or the creditors with the leave of the judge, to put them under the Bankruptcy law. I have not had time to study the full effect of this amendment, I must say, and I so stated to the person who asked me to present it. However, according to my recollection, without an examination of the Winding-up Act, it is not as severe as the Bankruptcy Act; it gives much more leeway. I have some doubt whether this amendment should be accepted or not, but I have no objection to moving its adoption on the understanding that the Department of Justice will examine it and decide whether or not the change ought to be made I think that with a Bill of this kind we should be guided largely by the Department of Justice. It is for that Department to decide what is the best policy, and they should give more attention to a Bill than we are able to give it individually. It is merely by way of suggestion that I move the amendment. The purpose of it, as I have stated, is to allow of a company being liquidated under the Winding-up Act instead of the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: With the consent and authorization of the Court.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. Application has to be made to the Court.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Béique was agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 19, 1923.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

JUDGES BILL

THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 201, an Act to amend the Judges Act.

He said: I may say that the Minister of Justice was asked a question similar to the one asked by my honourable friend from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid). He answered just as I did, that there was no change in the prohibition against judges receiving pay.

Hon. Mr. REID: Then, in passing this Bill, it is the intention of Parliament that the interpretation of this legislation shall not be changed in so far as compensation to judges is concerned?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When Sir Henry Drayton put the question, the Minister of Justice said: "They are not allowed to receive any fees under the amendment."

Hon. Mr. REID: I do not know whether the question was put as fully as I put it in this House; but, so long as the honourable leader of the Government understands my question and answers it as he does, I am satisfied.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Inasmuch as an amendment has been proposed to the Industrial Disputes Act which would involve an amendment to the Judges Act, I would suggest to my honourable friend that this Bill stand until we dispose of the amendment to the Industrial Disputes Act. As my honourable friend will recall, the honourable gentleman from Welland (Hon. Mr. Robertson) moved that the judges should be permitted to act as chairmen of conciliation boards, and that they should be entitled to received compensation notwithstanding the provision against it in the Judges Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I was wondering whether the exception in favour of judges sitting on boards under the Industrial Disputes Act could not be included in that Act, or whether it would be necessary to amend the Judges Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If that were done, we would have the anomaly of the Industrial Disputes Act making provision for judges to act as chairmen and to receive compensation, while upon turning to the Judges Act we would find a prohibition against it. One should be reconciled with the other. I think it is better that this Bill should stand until we dispose of the Industrial Disputes Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I ask that this order be suspended to be taken up concurrently with the Industrial Disputes Act.

The order for the third reading was accordingly postponed.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 84, an Act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Taylor in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, we have considered this Bill more than once, and had reached, as I thought, a conclusion. As the Committee was about to report the Bill the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) moved an amendment, which was adopted, having the effect of transferring the choice of the arbitrator or umpire in any investigation applied for to the chief justices of the courts of the various Provinces.

I must commend the honourable the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) for the very clear statement he made lately in opposition to this procedure, when he moved to recommit the Bill to the Committee of the Whole. As the Department of Labour, which has promoted this legislation, is opposed to the proposed change, I move that the amendment which was adopted be reconsidered and that it be struck out. For honourable members who were present when the honourable the ex-Minister of Labour made his statement, I should think it is unnecessary for me to add anything to the clear and convincing statement he made. I believe that the determining point in his argument was that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act would contain an exception authorizing judges to act and the Labour Department to utilize their services. I suppose that is what determined my honourable friend who leads the other side to agree to the reconsideration of this clause.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Do I understand that the honourable gentleman proposes to strike out the amendment of the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton)?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: Honourable gentlemen, I think that the amendment which it is now suggested to strike out is a very necessary one and ought to remain. My honourable friend the ex-Minister of Labour made a very able effort the other day to convince this House that the Minister of Labour was better qualified to appoint the third arbitrator than the judges; but I think that anyone who examines and studies the question will see that that contention is absolutely ridiculous. The judges holding court in every shire town in a Province are men who have previously had a large experience as lawyers, and who know practically every prominent man in their county —his temperament, his ability, and his character, and no man is one-tenth as well qualified to appoint the third arbitrator as a judge. We are all human, and the Minister of Labour or any other Minister cannot avoid favouring his party, and may go further in favouring the labour organization, looking for their votes at the next election. I say that is very bad legislation. The judges can make these appointments with practically no loss of time. They have at their fingers' ends a knowledge of the best men in their county, whether they be judges or whether they be laymen, to fill these positions. Furthermore, the Chief Justice knows what judges can be spared, if any, and if he has to appoint a judge he knows whom to appoint. I think we are making a very grave mistake if we take this matter out of the hands of the judges.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, perhaps in view of the fact that a substantial number of honourable members who are here to-day were not present in the House when this matter was last under discussion, I may be permitted, at the risk of repeating a few things that were said on the former occasion, to attempt a brief but connected statement of the reasons why this matter has been recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House, and the reason why the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), who moved the amendement on May 31st, felt on further consideration that perhaps we had acted too hastily.

The object of the amendment that was made to section 8 was to avoid a repetition of what was said to be a practice on the part of the Department of Labour, namely, to appoint as chairmen of boards gentlemen who were not qualified by experience or knowledge of industrial disputes to act in such a capacity. It was said that certain appointments had been made with a view to political expediency rather than usefulness in the case. I took occasion to point out that, while that might be a fact, the Department of Labour could not be wholly blamed for it, because this House in 1920 removed from the Department of Labour the power of using judges in the capacity of chairmen of boards of conciliation, as had prior to that time been the general practice. If honourable gentlemen will refer to the Debates of this House in 1920 on the amendments to the Judges Act, Chapter 56, they will find evidence of what I have stated. It was pointed out at that time that the people of Canada, whether employers or workmen, had in a general way a very sincere and wholesome respect for the decisions of our judiciary, and that when judges, whether of the Superior Court of the County Court, acted as chairmen of boards, the recommendations of the boards had in very few cases been refused by the parties to the dispute. Since 1920, by reason of the amendment to the Judges Act removing from the Labour Department the privilege of utilizing the services of judges in the capacity of chairmen of boards of conciliation, the Department has been obliged to seek in a new field for persons competent and available to act as chairmen of boards. Because of this handicap it became extremely difficult to find such persons, as I can testify, having had personal experience in the year 1921, as well as in the latter part of 1920.

I am thoroughly in accord with the view that the action taken by this House the other day ought to be rescinded. I am further of the opinion that the House should go one step further and consider an amendment that I am prepared to move, to the effect that, notwithstanding anything in any other Act to the contrary, the judges shall be available for appointment as chairmen of boards, and may be compensated the same as others who act in that capacity under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Who would appoint them?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Minister should appoint them.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Oh!

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: In explanation of why I think the Minister should appoint them, I would say this to my honourable friend. The amendment adopted by this House the other day provides that the Chief Justice in any Province shall appoint the third arbitrator if the two others fail to agree. I desire respectfully to point out to honourable gentlemen that there are very few disputes that are provincial in character. The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act applies to public utilities, such as railways, coal mines, etc. Our railways are all interprovincial, and there has not been to my knowledge an industrial dispute referred to a board of conciliation during a number of years past that has not been interprovincial in character. Disputes arising in the coal-mining industry, for example, are also in most instances interprovincial. In the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta both the coal operators and the employees are organized interprovincially. Under the amendment it is provided that where the dispute is interprovincial the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada shall name the third arbitrator. I respectfully suggest to honourable gentlemen that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada has comparatively little knowledge of the details of industrial disputes, and does not know what persons in the various parts of Canada are best qualified to act in the capacity of conciliators. If the duty of appointing the third arbitrator were imposed upon the Chief Justice of Canada, what would happen? I venture the assertion that in every case he would ask for the recommendation of the Department of Labour, and the Minister of Labour or the Governor in Council would recommend, and the Chief Justice would appoint. What would be the result? That whatever this amendment seeks to avoid would not be avoided, and, moreover, the Department and the Government would have evaded all responsibility for the action of the Chief Justice in that connection. The outcome would be that the object sought to be attained would not be attained, while the Government and the Department would both repudiate any responsibility for failure in the operation of the Act.

I respectfully suggest that the amendment offered by my honourable friend the leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), proposing to rescind our action of the other day, ought to be adopted, and that we should then further amend the Bill by the amendment of which I have given notice, so that the Department may have at its disposal the services of judges as chairmen of boards. I will say this, that if the Department does not revert to the practice that it followed from 1907 to 1920, namely, that of using judges in most cases where available as chairmen of boards, then the objection that my honourable friend from Hamilton raised the other day might well be worthy of consideration by Parliament. The Minister of Labour should at least have the opportunity of using the judges in that capacity, and should not be blamed when it is beyond his power to do so.

I pointed out to the House the other day that in only one case since 1920 has a judge acted as chairman of a board. That particular case involved a most important and country-wide controversy, concerning a reduction of wages affecting about 200,000 men in all the railways in Canada in 1921. Owing to urgent personal requests, a prominent judge of the Superior Court, who had served with conspicuous acceptability and success in a number of cases prior to that time, agreed to act in the interest of maintaining industrial peace. That gentleman devoted about two weeks of his time to a very difficult and arduous case, and succeeded in bringing about an agreement between the parties and in averting an industrial dispute and an interruption of transportation in Canada. He received not a single cent of compensation for his efforts. I have always felt that that was unfair to him—that he was entitled to the same compensation as any other gentleman who might have served in that capacity.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Was the judge not still receiving his usual salary when he did that work?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I assume that he was, but at the same time he did this work in addition to all the work that fell within the scope of his regular duties.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then he was not overworked.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I add this, that it is in my opinion unfair to the Department of Labour, I care not who the Minister may be, to blame that Department or the Government for appointing gentlemen other than judges as chairmen of boards, so long as we prevent them by the amendment to the Judges Act from doing so. I further submit, honourable gentlemen, that the object and aim of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act is to prevent industrial disputes culminating in industrial strife in Canada; that it has taken a substantial number of years to create in the minds of approximately a million workmen in Canada a semblance of confidence in the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act; and that nothing could be done that would destroy that confidence, which it has taken years to build up, so quickly or so thoroughly as to persist in the amendment that we passed the other day.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Is there anything in this Act to prevent sympathetic strikes?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: There is nothing in the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act that prevents a strike or a lockout after the matter in dispute has been referred to and investigated by a board.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I mean only a sympathetic strike. I know that the purpose of the Act is to prevent strikes, but is there anything to prevent or guard against persons going on strike in sympathy with other strikers?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: There is to this extent. Every organization of workmen or of employers who accept the decision of a board of conciliation are under a moral obligation at least—I hold, a legal obligation—to respect the agreement made; and because of the fact that they are working under an agreement they are not at liberty to go on a sympathetic strike.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman knows that the labour people have set their faces against accepting any other proposition than that the award is only an expression of opinion.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: The honourable gentleman's (Hon. Mr. Robertson's) chief argument against this amendment is that he fears that in the case of interprovincial strikes the Supreme Court Judge, instead of referring the matter to Provincial judges, in case he does not know whom to appoint, will refer it to the Minister of Labour or to the Cabinet. I claim that if this matter is put into the hands of the judges they will handle it; they will not in any case go to the Minister of Labour or anybody else for a recommendation as to whom they should appoint. It is put into their hands, and they will feel that it is a duty to carry it through, and they know they are the only people who can carry it through in a judicial way, free from party politics and party bias. There is not the slightest chance, if this matter is put in the hands of the judges, even if the matter be interprovincial, for anyone to want to go the Minister of Justice and ask for a man to be appointed.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am quite content to leave it to the judgment of honourable members of this House whether a Minister of the Crown occupying a position as Minister of Labour, responsible to the people of Canada for his actions, is better qualified, having a complete knowledge and understanding of the dispute in question as it arises, to appoint an impartial arbitrator, or whether the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, who is far removed from any personal knowledge of these things, should have that duty placed upon him. I submit that it will undoubtedly entail delay in the selection of a chairman, which this House a few days ago seemed anxious to avoid, and it will remove from the Department and from the Government any semblance of responsibility for the result of the investigation—the acceptance or otherwise of the findings of the Board. It will bring the Industrial Disputes Act into contempt, just as the Ontario Temperance Act is held in contempt to-day by thousands of people in that province who are best acquainted with it, because of the manner in which it is administered and enforced. We do not want to get the Industrial Disputes Act into a mess of that sort, and to have over a million workmen of Canada hold it in contempt, disregard its provisions, and fail to respect it and its findings, as has been the case in the past.

From 1907 to 1917, for 10 years, at every session of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, resolutions were passed demanding the repeal of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. In 1918 and since that time the attitude of organized labour in Canada towards that Act has changed. They have recognized that it has served a useful purpose, that it has been a benefit to workmen, notwithstanding that they have suffered loss from delay; and we have now come to the point where labour has respect for the law. Honourable gentlemen, let us not destroy what it has taken years to build up, and let us not experiment with an arrangement that cannot but work unsatisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Why has it taken so long to get acquainted with this law, and why has it taken so long to make the change?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I thought I explained than on May 31st, when this Bill was first under consideration. The reason that labour opposed this Act so strenuously in 1907 was because they knew that its operation would result in long-drawn-out delays and expense to labour. I think I recited clearly an individual case, the first that ever came before a Board after the Act was passed, where employees were required to make an application for a Board, the employer having refused to make an agreement with them, though knowing of the existence of the law. Four months went by, and a committee of employees representing the men all over Canada in that organization, at very substantial expense, paid the shot in order to keep those men engaged in that hearing and the presentation of their case before the Board; and, although the negotiations were broken off in June, the decision or recommendation of the Board was not filed until November. That delay cost those men several hundred thousand dollars. That was the principal objection for years and years, and labour never was converted to the idea that the Act was beneficial to it; but as time went by, and occasion after occasion arose where the Act had worked out fairly and equitably, and had undoubtedly prevented open strife and loss to both employers and workmen, they finally came to believe that there was perhaps no use in opposing it further and demanding its repeal; so the labour unions of this country, in their annual convention said: "We accept the principle of the law as fair and equitable, and, though we would like some amendments to it, we shall no longer work for its repeal." I say that that represents a confidence that we ought not now to destroy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Perhaps one reason why labour has changed its attitude is that in recent years it has been the custom to select a representative of labour as Labour Minister, and therefore workmen feel that they have had an advantage in that regard, the appointment of the umpire being in the hands of the Labour Minister, who is sympathetic to labour.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: A member of the union.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Therefore they had the advantage of having on the Board two men who would be sympathetic with them I have no doubt that that has had something to do with the changed attitude of labour with regard to this Act.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Do you consider that right?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I will come to that; my honourable friend must be patient. Now, in the Labour Ministry making a proper not see why they would not consent to the appointment of the Chief Justice for the province, or the Chief Justice of Canada—men who are removed from the ordinary strife of party, and therefore in a position to consider these things equitably, and to make appointments that should be—I do not say that would be—satisfactory to any person who wanted to do the right thing and to have a right decision. The difficulty with the employers is that they have not that confidence in the Labour ministry making a proper appointment since the attitude of the Labour Ministry has perhaps leaned towards labour. I think that is the point where employers feel that the cards are stacked against them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I hope the House will pardon me for rising so frequently; but, as I had some experience in administering the Department of Labour for about four years, the remarks of the honourable gentleman from Sussex (Hon Mr. Fowler) must naturally be taken to apply to my administration. I desire to say that, so far as I know, there was never an exception taken by an employer in this country to a chairman appointed by the Department during the time that I happened to be Min. er of it. I further say that it was the rule of the Department never to appoint any man as chairman of a Board, who was recommended by either party to the dispute. That was a fixed law or rule in the Department itself.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would not think very much of that rule.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If my honourable friend came as an employer to the Department, and said, "I would like to have So-and-so appointed as Chairman of this Board," or if the representatives of the employees came making a similar suggestion, the Department never appointed the gentleman so suggested.

If there had been abuse on the part of the Department, if there had been complaints from employers or workmen that had not been heeded, I could understand the need for this amendment. I can say that there have been protests on the part of labour against men who have been appointed by the Department as chairmen, but I never had any from employers; and until there is some evidence of the necessity for changing this law, or some proof that it has not worked fairly towards the employer, I submit that there should be no change.

If the employers in Canada will come before this House or before the House of Commons and show cause, and submit evidence in support of a contention that the Department of Labour has not fairly administered this law, or is not doing so now, and has been biased in its decisions and appointments, then it will be the duty of Parliament to investigate, and make the change if it is found that one is wanted. But in my opinion honourable gentlemen are not warranted in making the change on the suggestion of one member of this House, without evidence in support of it, and, who now comes and says, "I believe we made a mistake, and should rescind the action we took." I submit that we should not make laws or amend them on such slight evidence.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman has been a long time Minister of Labour, and I suppose all Ministers of Labour are members of labour unions. I take it that the workmen owe allegiance to their union before anything else; they will obey the laws of the union rather than the instructions of their masters, or the demands of the general public. It seems to me that the Minister of Labour ought to be delighted in not having to assume the responsibility of appointing chairmen of Boards, because he is one of the workingmen, perhaps an active member of the union, perhaps a labour leader. The Minister of Labour, owes his position in the world to his popularity among his co-workers. Is he a free agent? It seems to me he cannot possibly be. But here is a judge who is not an employer of labour, and not a workingman; he is independent of both. Should not he be the best man to make the choice of chairman?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The assertion has been made, I think by my honourable friend here, that owing to the play of interprovincial interests, whilst the section of the Bill would call for a provincial judge to make the appointment of chairman, in practice the appointment would be made in most cases by the Chief Justice of Canada. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It is.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That weighs with me a good deal. I would be far more favourable to the proposition which seems to be in favour here at present if the provincial judges, who are close to the localities in which troubles arise, were the ones to make the appointment. I see some difficulty in the Chief Justice, who resides at Ottawa, making appointments of chairmen in relation to disputes of which he practically knows nothing, and in which he has had no great previous interest. I think it would be difficult, and cause delay, to get the most suitable man.

There is one other point that weighs with me. It is this. You have an Act which is given to a Department to carry out, and I think it is a good principle to hold the Department responsible for the administration of the Act, and not to hamper overmuch its choice of agencies through which the Act is administered. For that reason, and mainly on the point of responsibility, I would be disposed to hold the Department more tightly to that responsibility and not hamper it too much; and if the responsibility were not carried out according to the wish or will of Parliament the remedy would be found by Parliament itself. I think the Department would be hampered very greatly if it were the Chief Justice of the Dominion who in nine cases out of ten had to make the selection. For that reason I am going to support my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My right honourable friend should read the paragraph. It is not as he states: it is the Chief Justice in the province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But if the matter is interprovincial it would come to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: It seems to me that the quarrel must be localized somewhere. It may have interprovincial results. For instance, if there is a strike of the right-of-way men or the shop men in Montreal, it may quite possibly have an echo in the adjoining province; but if the quarrel is in the province of Quebec there is no reason why the Chief Justice of Quebec should not be chosen. May I put this question: If the appointment has to be made by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, are we more dangerously placed than if it were in the hands of the Minister of Labour at Ottawa? Both of those men are located at Ottawa, with jurisdiction over the whole country; but the difference is that in one case the man is totally impartial, while the other case he cannot be so, because he is playing a political role. If he gives his decision in favour of the employer he weakens his party, and in weakening his party he weakens himself, and impairs his own standing in the Cabinet.

My honourable friend (Hon. G. D. Robertson) was perhaps fair in exercising power as Minister of Labour; but may I remind him of the case of the Toronto Railway, in which I happened to be one of the supplicants who came to him and asked him to deny a Board of Arbitration which was asked for, in complete violation of a written agreement to work for certain wages for a year, signed in good faith by the men. Three months afterwards the men struck, and asked for a Board of Conciliation. The public utility was represented before the Minister, and asked him to disregard that request, and showed him the document upon which the ink was barely dry, stating that the men would work for certain wages for 12 months. It is true, the men said they were not asking for an increase in wages: they wanted a bonus. Well, that distinction gained for the men the decision of the Minister, and they got their Board of Conciliation. I do not want to criticize the Minister very much. I think that in his position, nominated as he was by the influence, always increasing, of the labour unions in this country, he was not a free agent. I mean he was not a free agent to the extent of standing before all those men with the responsibility of the Cabinet behind him. He did not feel quite at liberty, and of course the balance swung, quietly and nicely, but surely, towards the men.

Now, what does the member from Hamilton suggest? A most reasonable way out of the difficulty. Rightly or wrongly, if one party does not feel quite secure, is there a better means of assuring them than by saying to them, "Henceforth your judge will not be selected from amongst those who, though they may be honest in intention, lean towards the labour unions; your judge will be selected by a perfectly impartial man whose situation is your guarantee; that is, the Chief Justice of every province". What objection can there be to that? It is a contentious matter that we have to deal with; it is more than a passing case, and very much more important, in which millions are involved; it is practically the peace of the community that is at stake, and we go to the man who sits serenely away from all the troubles and temptations of politics and we say to him, "Select the third arbitrator", the man who as everybody knows, is the only judge. What objection can there be to that? For my own part I see none. I think the amendment is a very good one, and very much needed. I think that amendment will restore confidence in the application of a law that could render a great deal more service if such confidence existed, and I see no reason to change my mind on it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I crave the indulgence of the House to reply to what my honourable friend has said, because it reflects on me personally. I congratulate the honourable member from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) upon being exact and specific in mentioning a case which brings up something concrete that we can present to you. The employees of the Toronto Street Railway did apply for a Board of Conciliation, and it was established. The Board sat; a finding was made; both parties accepted it; and it became the law as between the employers and the employees. Not more than four months afterwards I do not recollect the exact dates—the employees desired to re-open their case, and what did the Department of Labour say? It said: "It has been an unwritten law in this Department not to grant a second Board on the same dispute within the period of one year, and you cannot have a Board." That was the Department's decision, notwithstanding what my honourable friend states.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will my honourable friend allow me just a question? I do not want to be misquoted. There were two Boards.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am coming to that.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I want my honourable friend to deal with the first Board. I want him to say whether I am right in what I stated—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: You are partially right.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Wait a minute—that there was an agreement accepted and signed by the men, to work for specific wages for a year, and that three months afterwards they disregarded that agreement, went to my honourable friend to obtain a Board of Conciliation, the purpose of it being to increase their wages, and that before him a deputation came from the public utility resisting the application of the men on the ground that there was an agreeement made in good faith, and that my honourable friend granted the Board of Conciliation. That is what I want him to say—am I right or not right?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My honourable friend is right so far as he goes, but he does not tell the whole story. The Board sat, made its recommendation, and that was accepted and became the agreement between the parties.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I beg pardon again. Is it not a fact that the Board of Conciliation said the men were wrong; that they went on strike notwithstanding that verdict; and that the city of Toronto said to the Street Railway Company: "You have to agree with your employees or we will take over your Railway;" and that the Toronto Street Railway Company were constrained to pay and did pay the men. Are not these the facts?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: You are referring to the second case.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am talking of the first case.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No. Three months after the acceptance of that Board's decision by both parties the employees asked for another Board, which the Department denied them. Then they pointed out that their request was not for the reopening of the agreement, but something entirely aside from it, and, as my honourable friend has stated, a deputation came before the Department of Labour and laid the facts before them. But the Department of Labour takes its law from the Department of Justice, and the case was such that in the opinion of those qualified to judge, the men were legally entitled to the establishment of a board.

Hon. Mr. REID: I have listened to the discussion with regard to this matter with considerable interest. The impression I had formed was that it was impossible at the present time to appoint a judge as a commissioner. I would like some explanation as to why a judge cannot be appointed, because I see no reason in the Act of 1920 why he should not be appointed. I admit that he cannot be paid.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: He will not act, then. That has been the experience of the Department.

Hon. Mr. REID: Take the Judges Act of 1920, which says:

Every judge who may be nominated for the purpose by the Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall execute without additional remuneration any commission or inquiry for which he may be apponted as commissioner under any authority in that behalf exercisable by the Governor in Council or the Lieutenant Governor in Council, including the discharge of the duty of arbitrator in any case in which he may be named to act by the competent authority. Provided, however, that any such judge while acting as commissioner or arbitrator at the nomination of the Governor in Council shall be entitled to his moving or transportation expenses and living allowance at the rate and upon the conditions provided by section 18 of this Act, and such judge when employed under the authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council may be paid by the Lieutenant Governor in Council his moving or transportation expenses and a living allowance not exceeding the amount he would be entitled to under the said section 18.

This was amended in 1921, as follows:

The Judges Act, Chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following section:

"35. Unless nominated by the Governor in Council no judge mentioned in this Act shall act as commissioner or arbitrator on any commission or inquiry.

But when we increased the salaries we put in a clause giving the Governor in Council power to say to any one of the judges, "I want you to act; you must act on any commission of inquiry, but you must do it without any remuneration other than your travelling expenses." I have in mind a case since that time in which a High Court judge was appointed and acted. He was only entitled to and only received his travelling expenses. Why cannot this Government or any other Government appoint a judge as an arbitrator without any further trouble?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: In reply to the honourable gentleman from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) I might point out that the Governor in Council does not appoint the chairmen of boards, and therefore they do not come within the section of the Judges Act referred to. Furthermore, the results of the services of judges who were not paid would, I fear, not be satisfactory, because they would be prone to hasten investigations in many cases and not go into them as carefully.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Surely you would not bring a charge of that kind against the judges of this country?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If a judge had a number of cases in his court waiting to be attended to, and was asked to preside over a tribunal of this sort, is it not natural that he would hasten to attend to his proper duties?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does my honourable friend think that the question of compensation enters into the judge's judgment? I resent any such attack as that.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am not passing judgment on the judges; but I regard all men as being very much alike so far as human nature is concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the Bill remains as it is, with the amendment of the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), I think we should make it quite clear that no judge henceforth will be appointed to act as umpire, because it is only with the consent of the Governor General that a judge can act under the Acts of 1920 and 1921. Except under the amendment which will be proposed by the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) if my amendment carries, we are not relieving the judges from that disability. They cannot be appointed on any commission or arbitration except by order of the Governor in Council. Under this Act it is the Chief Justice who selects the arbitrator, and he will be precluded from selecting a judge. If that is the will of the majority of this House, well and good.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would he be precluded from naming a judge if the Government allowed him to do so?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The matter would again have to be dealt with by the Governor in Council in order to sanction the appointment if a judge were selected by the Chief Justice.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does not my honourable friend feel that the Government would readily accept the suggestion of the Chief Justice to allow one of the judges so selected to act.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: There are lots of retired judges anyway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: You are faced with the difficulty that although the judge is supposed to accept a direct mandate, there are many ways in which he can excuse himself.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: If a judge were selected by the Minister of Labour and did not wish to act, would he not be able to urge all those reasons in the same way as if he were selected by the Chief Justice?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that the amendment suggested by the ex-Minister of Labour declares that the judge will be entitled to compensation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend contend that, if we provide that the arbitrator shall be appointed by the Chief Justice of a Province, or possibly by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, such a provision will not supersede the provision he has referred to with regard to the appointment by the Lieutenant Governor in Council? Of course it does. Surely it must.

Hon. Mr. REID: As I understand the law at the present time, any judge must act.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No.

Hon. Mr. REID: It says that he shall act as an arbitrator. That is the wording of the Act of 1920; therefore he must act, and without remuneration.

We have had commission after commission appointed in the past, and judges will be appointed arbitrators in the future; and if we appoint judges as arbitrators on any question not affecting labour, they will not get any remuneration. I think that if we are going to pay any of them we ought to pay them all. I think the Government should appoint a judge every time; and according to the Act he must act.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Dandurand was negatived: yeas, 25; nays, 35.

Hon. G. V. WHITE: Before the Bill is reported, I have an amendment which I wish to move. It is an additional clause, to follow the clause submitted by the honourable member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), and reads as follows:

57b. It shall be unlawful for employers to declare a lockout, or for employees to go on strike, concerning any further matter or cause other than those affecting conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours, until such matter or cause has been finally dealt with by a Board and copy of its report delivered through the Registrar to both parties affected.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the honourable gentleman explain what is the difference between his amendment and the amendment proposed by the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry?

Hon. G. V. WHITE: This is to be in addition to the amendment of the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry. The purpose of it is to prevent a sympathetic strike, particularly such strikes as very frequently occur throughout Canada. In fact, employers are annually met with threats of employees to lay down their tools for some minor cause notwithstanding the existence of a contract. It seems to me the strongest ground that can be urged, and it may have a sympathetic hearing in this chamber, would be the case of international unions. For example, if President Lewis of the Miners' Union has a strike on his hands anywhere, he may call upon the men of a Canadian company to cause a sympathetic strike to be declared; this notwithstanding that the men in Canada are under contract and have no grievance. The Government, in the face of a proposal to enact this amendment, would find itself in an awkward dilemma, as the amendment would be in accordance with the popular view, which is against sympathetic strikes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That would not prevent men stopping work if they wanted to. You can tell them it is unlawful until your are black in the face—they do not care for that. How can you punish one thousand or five hundred men?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I wonder whether the honourable gentleman from Pembroke (Hon. G. V. White) has looked at the results of the adoption of an amendment of that kind from all sides. In the first place, I can assure him that the case he has quoted could not occur, because it is the declared policy and practice of the United Mine Workers not to violate an agreement made; and there never has been in the whole history of that organization an instance in which they have authorized a sympathetic strike.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In the case of a contract between an employer and employees lasting say for a year, would the Department grant a Board during that year?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: Is it not a fact that the soft coal miners in the United States went out last year on the first of April, and that the miners of Alberta, although tied up by a contract, went out at the same time and were out for some five months, and, I may say, to my own great loss, and very great loss not only to the mine owners of Alberta, but to the users of coal.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: And loss to the miners themselves. I think my honourable friend is correct that a strike occurred in Alberta, but, as I understand it, it was because of the expiration of their own agreement, a new one not having been negotiated. I do know that Mr. Lewis, who was specifically referred to, has never approved of a sympathetic strike or authorized one within his own organization.

But that is not the main point to which I want to draw my honourable friends' attention. Honourable gentlemen know that, for several years past in this country, there has been consistent, persistent effort made by certain so-called labour men to bring about concerted action by all classes of labour, regardless of what organization they might belong to. If this Parliament places on the Statute Book a law to prevent sympathetic strikes, what is going to happen? It will be for those gentlemen the finest means of propaganda that could possibly be conceived, and they would say: "Now, boys, there is only one thing that you can do and keep yourselves out of jail, and that is for all to get into the One Big Union. We can all have our strike at the same time, and it will not be a sympathetic strike, because it will be our own dispute". An amendment of that sort, as I am sure the honourable member will on reflection realize, would be quite undesirable.

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK: Honourable gentlemen, with regard to this matter of the U. M. W. and sympathetic strikes, as the honourable the ex-Minister of Labour will recall, a strike was threatened at Sydney early this spring, and when some of the radical leaders down there were counselling a sympathetic strike on the part of the miners, President Lewis did instruct those men that they could not go on strike because of the fact that U. M. W. representatives had signed an agreement. In that regard the U. M. W. organization in the Province of Nova Scotia acted in good faith with the employers.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. White was negatived.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Honourable gentlemen, some days ago I asked my honourable friend the leader of the Government if he understood that, upon the application for a Board, the employer could make a change without awaiting the Board's report. I understood him to say that it would be proper to ask him that question when the Bill came up again. I desire to take this opportunity of repeating the question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The question which my honourable friend put is in relation to the clause moved by the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique).

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not remember whether the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry gave an answer to that question or not.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Yes; he gave an answer, but for some reason it was not recorded in Hansard. I would like to have the answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may take the third reading to-morrow. I will examine into the Bill as it now stands.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Thank you.

The Bill was reported as amended.

RETURNED SOLDIERS INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 203, an Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the Royal Commission respecting soldiers' insurance. It is composed of two clauses. Clause 1 applies to a few cases in which, the application for insurance had been filed with the Department, had been approved and the premium paid, but the soldier died before the policy was delivered to him. It was held by the Finance Department that in such cases no contract existed and the insurance money was not paid to the soldier's dependents. There are only seven cases that would be affected by this clause. Where the applicant died prior to the delivery of the policy, the insurance will be payable if the application had been approved and the premium paid.

As to the second clause, the intention, when the Soldiers' Insurance Act was passed by Parliament, was that every returned soldier who made an application for insurance could insure without passing any examination. I think that in 1921, and especially in the month of January, 1922, some restrictions were made and enforced by the Pension Board, which has the administration of this Act together with the Minister of Finance, to the effect that, in the case of an application not being approved, the insurance would not be payable, and also that certain applications on the part of men who were seriously ill of an illness that was not due to war service, and who moreover had no dependents, should not be entertained by the Board or approved by the Minister of Finance. In the Session of 1922 we amended the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act to provide a certain schedule which set out the conditions under which an application for insurance can be refused. That amendment was adopted last year. The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act was passed originally in 1920 and it was made valid for the period of two years. So on the 1st of September, 1922, it was coming to an end. But last year we extended the provisions of the Act for one year, making it applicable to the 1st of September, 1923, with certain restrictions proposed in a schedule that was annexed to the Act. But now it is contended that all the men, no matter what physical condition they may have been in, who filed their applications before the 1st of July, 1922 —that is, the time the Act was amended— should be insurable, and in case of death their dependents would receive the insurance money.

The Department has prepared some figures which may be of interest to this Chamber. The total number of policies issued as of March 31st, 1923, is 19,516, with a value of $46,864,500. The total number of death claims as of March 31st, 1923, is 514. The value of these claims is $1,622,500. The total number of claims settled under section 10 is 109.

Clause 2 will have the effect of doing away with certain regulations of the Pension Board, who administer the Insurance Act, which took into consideration the physical condition of the applicant, contrary to the intention of the Act, which did away with all medical examination.

Hon. J. A. CALDER: Honourable gentlemen, I find on the Order Paper three Bills— No. 203, an Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act; No. 204, an Act to amend the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act; and No. 205, an Act to amend the Pension Act. When in another place it was my duty and responsibility to give a good deal of attention to matters relating to returned soldiers, and if there was one thing that was impressed upon me more than anything else, it was that legislation of this character must be scrutinized very carefully, in order that the effect of it might be clearly understood. Now, these Bills have reached us but very recently, and I doubt very much if any members of the House understand the nature of the proposed amendments or what would be their effect. I therefore suggest that, as regards these three Bills, the second readings be not now proceeded with, mainly for the reason that I think this House should be in possession of certain information before we commit ourselves to the principles of these measures. In saying that, I want it to b clearly understood that, so far as I am concerned, I am not opposed to the legislation, but I do wish to understand its meaning and effect. It is very desirable that every member of this Chamber should clearly understand what we are doing. I think there is certain information of which the House should be in possession. It was only last night that I began to give attention to the subject at all. I have spent two or three hours in looking into the question since, and there is certain information that I would like to have before I commit myself to the second reading of any one of these three Bills.

The information that I desire to get—and I am sure other honourable members would like to have other information—is along this line: first, what is the annual payment of military pensions?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is covering more than the present Bill. He is taking the three Bills together?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I am covering the three Bills. These are only suggestions which I have to offer at the present time, regarding information which I think this House should be possessed of before committing itself to the principles of these Bills:

(1) What is the annual payment on account of military pensions?

(2) What is the estimated amount of increase in pension payments under the proposed pension legislation now before Parliament? That is, what would be the effect of this legislation in so far as increasing pension payments is concerned, and what would be the annual charge upon the revenues of this country?

(3) On what basis is this estimate computed?

A second inquiry I would like to make is:

(1) What is the maximum number of years over which payments to dependents under the Pension Act will extend?

(2) What is the yearly ratio of increase?

Again:

(1) What is the estimated amount of arrears which will be payable under the provisions embodied in section 3 of Bill 205, to amend the Pension Act?

(2) What is the estimated yearly increase in payments under this section?

(3) What is the estimated amount of increase in pension payments under the provisions of each of the other sections of the Bill?

There are in this Bill a number of sections of which I really do not know the effect. I do not know what is involved in the way of expenditure. As I say, it is quite possible that other members of the House may desire further information. I think we should have the fullest opportunity of considering all the necessary information before committing ourselves to the principles of these Bills. I have no desire to delay the legislation in any way, but I think the House is entitled to the fullest information along these lines before we reach any decision.

Hon. F. F. PARDEE: Honourable gentlemen, I have perused the report of the Royal Commission to some extent, and have taken considerable interest in it and in the Bills which are founded upon it, because of the fact that in the House of Commons I had as a member of the Committee a great deal to do with the legislation brought in along these lines. I desire to say now that I have not the slightest intention or wish in any way to stand in the road of legislation such as of Bills 203 and 205, if in my opinion, humble though it be, they are along right lines. But, in view of the present financial situation I should like to learn from the Government something further regarding the proposed expenditure, particularly as to what would be the cost to the country of the Federal Appeal Board and of the District Boards of Review; what will be the salaries of the members, what will be the clerical expenses, what will be the travelling expenses, and generally what would be the approximate cost to the country?

On first blush, although I am not prepared to commit myself to this, it does appear to me to be a rather complicated procedure. What with the Pension Board, the District Boards, and the Boards of Review, it appears to me that we are going into something from which it may be hard to work ourselves out.

I would like also to know what is the estimated liability involved in the amendment contained in Bill 203, an Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act. I think that that is something which both Houses of Parliament should examine very carefully. The matter was considered by a Committee of the House of Commons in years gone by. We examined into it very carefully; and were not at the time able to come to any decided opinion regarding it, if my recollection is right. I do think that when legislation such as these three Bills is presented, it is important that it be thoroughly investigated in order that we may ascertain just what it means to the country financially. Until it is investigated thoroughly I do not feel inclined to give a vote either for or against it, and I do not intend voting on these Bills until they are thoroughly examined and I know just what is the liability to which we are committing ourselves and in which we are involving the country. I have not consulted with anyone regarding the matter at all, but am giving simply my own opinion. I think that there ought to be a Committee of this House, composed of whatever number may be agreed upon by the two leaders; that this Bill should be examined at once, as the Session is nearing an end; and that the Committee should make a report, and we should have opportunity to obtain full information in connection with the matter.

Right Hon, Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The three Bills?

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: I am discussing all three Bills.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR: Honourable gentlemen, I would not like to have these three Bills passed into Committee without something more being said upon the subject than has been laid before us so far. One would gather, from reading the remarks that we have just heard, that the Senate fears that these Bills are casting a large responsibility upon the people of Canada, and that, if such responsibility be as large as some of us seem to suspect, we should hesitate as a people to assume it, but should virtually leave the burden upon the cripples, the ill, and the dependents, whom these three Bills are intended to assist. I think there is no doubt about that classification of these Bills—that they recite nothing new whatever, but that they are aimed solely to give effect to what has always been the intention of the Parliament of Canada—to do the best we can do for the disabled soldiers and their dependents.

My knowledge of these Bills—and I have followed the proceedings in another place and in the Committee where the legislation originated—is that they are designed to cure misconceptions on the part of the Boards appointed to administer the original Bills. The gentlemen on those Boards have taken to themselves the role of guardians of the public treasury instead of that which I think they were intended to take—that of guardians of the interests of the disabled soldiers. If the suggestion be that the carrying out of the intention of Parliament to deal liberally with these disabled soldiers and their helpless dependents, is going to cost this country too much, I desire to dissent from that in the strongest possible way; because, as I see it, the larger the burden involved in these measures of too tardy justice, the more incumbent it becomes upon us to shoulder the burden as a people, and not to continue to allow it to be borne by the disabled classes to whom I have referred.

For my part, I do not care to go further into the matter than to take this opportunity of suggesting that while it is eminently desirable that we, as business men in the Senate, should know the cost, there should not go abroad an impression that the Senate is averse to shouldering that burden, but that if the cost be heavy it should be placed on the shoulders of the whole people of Canada, who are the better able to take this burden.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have been asked for some information before the second reading of this Bill is taken. Is the idea of the honourable gentleman from Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Calder) that we should not proceed to the second reading of this Bill until that information is given? On the other hand, my honourable friend from Lambton (Hon. Mr. Pardee), suggested that we take the second reading and then send these Bills to a Special Committee. There is apparently contradiction here.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I did not understand that the second reading should be proceeded with now. I did not understand the honourable gentleman from Lambton to propose the second reading now.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then I suggest that someone should move the adjournment of the debate on the second reading of this Bill, and I will go on giving explanations on the second Bill and the third Bill, and the discussion of the principles of those Bills will be likewise adjourned until I get such information as may be sought.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Referring to the particular measure now before us, Bill 203, the principle of the Bill consists largely, if not altogether, of an arbitrary interpretation being placed upon the original legislation touching this question of insurance. I think my honourable friend should furnish the House with information as to what opinions have been given or accepted by the Government touching the interpretation placed upon the original Act, thus necessitating an interpretation being placed upon it by an Act of Parliament, which of course does not permit of any departure whatsoever.

Then, it seems to me that, impliedly, we must come to the conclusion that this Bill is the outcome of a contrary interpretation having been placed upon the legislation already on the Statute Book. What interpretation is it? By whom was it given? To what extent has it been followed? ? And is it proposed now, entirely irrespective of the original insurance legislation to adopt a radically different interpretation from that which Parliament contemplated applying to it at the time of its enactment? These are all very important questions, and it seems to me that if the Senate as a revising body is intelligently to consider questions of this kind we should have this information before us, so that we may know where the origin of the Bill lies, and why it is necessary to pass this particular legislation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the honourable gentleman move the adjournment of the debate on the second reading?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Where will we be when we have done that? Where do we stand with respect to the appointment of the Committee, and in reference to the information we ask for?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Take the first Bill, relating to insurance. I am asked at the present time to approve of the second reading of this Bill, involving the principle of the Bill; yet I know absolutely nothing about it. There is a great deal of information that I want, and that I cannot get unless the Government brings it down. Are you going to ask me to-day to approve the second reading of this Bill? I cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I am asking, simply as a matter of procedure, where we will be.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Where we will be is this. This House is entitled to certain information before the second reading of any of these Bills, and that should be brought down before we are asked to pass the second reading. This matter has been thoroughly threshed out before a Royal Commission and in the other House, and the honourable leader should be able to bring down that information. Then we can agree to the second reading of these three Bills, and they can be sent to a special committee; but I do not feel disposed to vote for the second reading of any of these Bills without the special information I want.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: If information is brought down, such as is asked for by the honourable member for Moosejaw (Hon. Mr. Calder), then there will arise questions that will further postpone the discussion. The proposal made by the honourable gentleman from Lambton (Hon. Mr. Pardee) strikes me as more reasonable, because that Committee can assemble the information asked for, and in addition can send for people and have them before the Committee to give verbal information, and thus there will be no loss of time. I would favour the proposal to have a Committee at once, and leave them to assemble the information asked for by the honourable gentleman from Moosejaw, in addition to which they could have other information and other persons and documents brought before them.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It strikes me that it is the most efficient way, and in the end the most speedy way of getting at what we desire. I am quite certain that every member, as he comes to look into these Bills, will require certain information, and we cannot get that information in any better way than to confer with a good Committee around a table, go through the Bills, find out what information we want with regard to each one of them; and we can bring officials of the Government and reports of the Government before us. This would be the most efficient and speedy way of dealing with the matter.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: There is no objection to that, providing that the House, in adopting the second reading of these Bills, does not approve of the principles involved.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Certainly we must have the information first.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Undoubtedly that would be a desirable course as long as it is clearly understood that we are not approving of these Bills without having that information before us.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It can be well understood that the Bill is sent to the Committee without committing ourselves to the second reading.

Hon. F. B. BLACK: It is advisable to refer all these Bills to a select committee in order to get correct information. I am naturally in sympathy with anything that may be done to help the returned man who is incapacitated to earn his living and to place him in the same condition as he was before he went to war, and also to help his dependents. These Bills have not been in our hands long enough for us to give them proper study and digest them even if we had set ourselves to do so. I spent all the morning with these Bills and the report of the Commission, and we had the advantage of the presence of one of the returned men who is very much interested in the Great War Venerans' Association, but with the little time we had for study I must say I was very much at sea. So far as Bill 203 is concerned, while its passage will undoubtedly entail some increased expenditure on the part of the country for the returned men, yet I do not see in the Bill anything that is objectionable, while I see a great deal that is advantageous and just to those who are now suffering and incapable on account of the late war.

But when we come to Bill 204 and Bill 205, there are so many new conditions introduced into the situation that it will take a great deal of study to know whether they are of advantage to returned men and to the country as well. With the little information I have before me I cannot possibly see why it is necessary to appoint two additional Boards and an additional Supervisor at a cost of a great many thousands a year, to be paid not to people who need the money, but to those who are going to administer the Act. Until I get further information, I would say that the money we propose to spend in those various tribunals should in some way get to those who need it. I am all for giving the men who suffer, and who cannot earn all that they should, everything they should get. In these days of financial stringency and stress I am not in favour of multiplying Boards and tribunals which will only eat up the money of our country without doing any good to the returned men.

With these views, which I hold very strongly, I would like to see these Bills referred to a Committee who will consider them with every sympathy towards the incapacitated returned men.

Hon. GEO. H. BRADBURY: It does seem unfortunate that a Bill so important as this, to help men who have rendered such splendid service to the country, should be brought down at this late date in the Session. Everybody realizes that there is a rumour going around the street to-day that Parliament is to prorogue a week from Thursday. It seems to me it is going to be very difficult for this House to secure proper information to enable it to deal with this important matter in an intelligent manner. It is unfortunate that the Government has not been able to send the Bill down to this House much earlier. I am sure that in this House and in the other House there is a desire to do justice to those men who are seeking relief from disability; but unfortunately very important Bills entailing immense expenditures come down at a time when it is almost impossible that we should appoint a special committee and be able to deal properly with them so late in the Session.

Hon. A. H. MACDONELL: I think everybody in this Chamber is anxious to do everything possible for the returned soldier; but in reading Bill 205 it seemed to me that there was but one end in view, and that was the wiping out of the entire personnel and machinery in connection with the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government if that is the end in view in that Bill 205. I think, with other members of the House, that the best thing to do with this whole question is to put it before a select Committee to study and digest the whole matter from start to finish before any definite action is taken with regard to Bills 204 and 205 in particular.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We could perhaps adjourn the second reading until to-morrow. I feel that the Committee should be selected. My honourable friend who sits opposite (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) has just informed me that he is of a like feeling. The Veterans' Association has sent me a letter asking if there were any questions that could better be elucidated by them appearing, and suggesting that we give them a chance to be heard. Between now and to-morrow we will examine into the personnel of that committee. I will move the second reading of these Bills, and give very concise explanation of them. I am not very familiar with the working of these Departments, and I asked some houourable gentlemen who are familiar to add their own knowledge to the very limited acquaintance I have, and they very agreeably accepted the task. We may, I think, proceed more rapidly to a solution if we go to Committee and begin by finding out who are the half dozen men who can give us first-hand information, so that we shall not have to proceed as they did in another place where the investigation seems to have been drawn out from week to week. As it is possible that the Session may not outlast the week to come, it seems to me that we could at our first meeting try to select the proper men from the Department and from the Returned Soldiers' Associations and get from them the best information available to enable us to come to an early conclusion.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How many members do you propose to have on the Committee?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I intended suggesting 14 or 15. Before the debate is concluded it might perhaps be as well to have the opinion of the House.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think it should consist of 15.

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 204, an Act to amend the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in moving the second reading of this Bill, I will give a short explanation. It will be noticed that this Bill is interlocked with Bill 205, an Act to amend the Pension Act, because it passed on to the boards established under that Bill the appeals and the decisions made under this Bill.

Under the Pension Bill which is now on the Order Paper it will be seen that a certain number of appeal boards will be constituted in different units throughout the country. The Pension Act, however, only deals with pensions. It is desired also to provide appeals for those ex-members of the force who are seeking treatment with pay and allowances. As hon. members are aware a number of men apply for treatment and are denied treatment with pay and allowance by the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Board. As the right has been granted to appeal from a decision of the Pension board it is also proposed that the right shall be granted, in cases where treatment is denied to appeal from the decision of headquarters to the boards that will be constituted under the Pension Act.

The second portion of the Bill provides for the appointment of a soldier adviser in every unit of the department, thus following the example which has been set in England. In every one of the thirty units in that country there is a soldier adviser who is paid by the government to give advice to the men who desire to appeal, that is to examine their claim, and to advise them as to the propriety of appealing or not appealing, and to present their case before the board. In other words to represent them. This has been asked by the men generally throughout Canada and it has been recommended by the royal commission.

That third part of the Bill is a provision to give power to these investigators of the department to receive evidence on oath. This provision exists for the Pension board. In the Pension Act there is a clause, I do not remember which one, which provides that the investigators or the examiners of the Pension board can receive evidence on oath. We have numberless investigations to make in connection with treatment and with pensions. The Officials of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment have no power to swear a person who gives evidence in these cases, and this provision is designed to prevent fraud as much as possible.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I move that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

PENSION BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 205, an Act to amend the Pension Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the first report of the Royal Commission deals entirely with the complaints presented by the Great War Veterans regarding the action of the Pension Board in respect of certain clauses in the Pension Act due to the interpretation placed by the Board on these sections. Two sections especially complained of are section 11 and section 25, subsection 3. Section 11 is the most important section in the Pension Act. It specifies the persons who may be awarded pension. Section 25, subsection 3, deals with the subject of disabilities antedating enlistment. Section 11 as incorporated in the Act of 1919 created an insurance principle, and permitted the granting of pension in respect of disability or death attributable to, incurred, or aggravated during military service. It provided, however, that in cases of disability or death after the declaration of peace no pension should be paid unless such disability was incurred or aggravated, or such death occurred, as a direct result of military service. This was interpreted by the Pension Board to mean that any disability becoming apparent or any death occuring after the declaration of peace unless the disability or death could be shown to be the direct result of military service, would not be pensionable.

It was considered that the declaration of peace took effect on the 10th January, 1920. During the Session of 1920 an amendment was therefore made to the Pension Act, under which the "due to service principle" was definitely incorporated. This was further strengthened by an amendment made in 1921, under which the words "as such" were added to the words, "was attributable to military service."

The Royal Commission, in surveying the records of the Parliamentary Committees and of the representations made to Parliament in connection with these amendments, reached the conclusion that the amendments referred to and the provision in the 1919 Act regarding the declaration of peace, were not intended to apply to members or ex-members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, but only to the Permanent Force or those enlisted for service after the declaration of peace. The correct date for the declaration of peace was 31st of August 1921; so that if the interpretation acted upon by the Pension Board after submitting the amendments in 1920 had been correct, the limitation based on the wording of the original Act was anticipated by one year.

The Royal Commission found that the insurance principle was intended to apply for all time to members and ex-members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force; and the amendments made by Bill 205 in this regard are for the purpose of making the Act clear in accordance with this finding.

The second portion of the Act to which attention was drawn by the G.W.V.A. is section 25, subsection 3. This subsection provides that where a man has seen service in an actual theatre of war, any pre-enlistment disability, unless it was wilfully concealed, obvious, not of a nature to cause rejection from service, or a congenital defect, would not cause a reduction in his pensionability. It was maintained by the Pension Board that pensionability must be accorded under section 11 before this provision could become effective; in other words, that a man entering a theatre of actual war with a disability of a certain percentage, and being found on discharge to have the same disability in no way aggravated, would not be pensionable; and that if he became pensionable because of an aggravation, the entire pension should be discontinued after the aggravation had ceased.

The Royal Commission recommended that the relation between section 25, subsection 3, and section 11 should be referred to Parliament for such action as might be deemed advisable. The Commission also recommended that when pension for aggravation had been awarded it should not be entirely discontinued until the disabling condition had ceased.

In order to make perfectly clear the relationship between section 25, subsection 3, and section 11, the former has been transferred and made a subsection of the latter. It has not been considered necessary to add a provision to the effect that no pension shall be payable in respect of a disability which existed prior to enlistment and which has not been aggravated during service, owing to the fact that it would be very difficult to find any such disability which did not fall under one of the exceptions covered by the words, "wilfully concealed, obvious, a congenital defect," etc.

Bill 205 is practically in two parts. It deals with clause 11 of the Act of 1919, which was amended by the Act of 1920. It re-establishes the right of the soldier to be compensated not only for casualties which were attributable to his military service, but to casualties that occurred during his service. What this would represent in the way of an increase in the number of pensions I cannot say. That is a question which could well be answered by the Department, which must have fairly clear data on this point.

The second part of the Bill proceeds to satisfy the returned soldiers whose pensions have not come up to their own estimate. They clamoured for a Board of Appeal from the decisions of the three Commissioners. Various systems of appeal and review were suggested to the Royal Commission. They have chosen the alternative of appointing nine district boards one for each military district. I think the Maritime Provinces form only one district; Ontario and Quebec have each more than one.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: What does the Appeal Board consist of?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think there are three members in each of these districts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do they work without salary or are they paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They will have to be compensated. They are paid so much per diem, and I believe they are not obliged to give all of their time to this work.

It will be seen that there is a class of soldiers to whom the principle contained in the Act of 1920 was applied and who claimed to come under the general insurance principle of 1919, who will have to go before the present Board as constituted to obtain a revision of the decision which was rendered upon a different text. In these cases it is not an appeal, but simply a revision.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Supposing the applicant was passed by a previous Board, does he have to be passed again by the next Board or would it only deal with cases where pensions were refused?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Any man who complains of having been refused absolutely, or having been given less than he wanted, will go before the Commissioners; or, if he has been refused absolutely, he may go direct to the District Board. The District Board renders no judgment, it simply makes a recommendation to the Pension Board. If the recommendation is in favour of granting more to the complainant, and is agreed to by the Pension Board, that ends the matter; if it is not agreed to, there is an appeal lodged with a Federal Appeal Court which will sit in Ottawa. The soldiers may go to the Pension Board and from the Pension Board to their respective districts; from there they may return to the Board; and from the Board they go to the final Court of Appeal which is to be established here.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: By that time they would be dead, I should think.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is the recommendation made by the Royal Commission. As I said, other forms of redress were suggested. I do not know that they were discussed very thoroughly in the other Chamber; but we may take cognizance of them when we go into Committee.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would like to ask the leader of the Government whether Bill 205 is intented to deal only with the pensions of soldiers who were wounded in the Great War, or whether it will apply to pensions of men who were in the Fenian Raid or the Northwest Rebellion? I cannot quite get the meaning of subsection 2 of section 6. What is it there for at all?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This covers all of Canada's wars, I suppose, does it not?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I do not know quite how or why that comes in. If it merely effects a transfer in the paying of pensions, leaving the pensions as they are, it seems to me a useless sort of thing. There have not been any difficulties in reference to the officers of the Department paying the pensions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I cannot furnish my honourable friend with any further information than he has before him in the Bill. We can get all the necessary information when we go into Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would move the adjournment of the consideration of the Bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

JUDGES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 201, an Act to amend the Judges Act.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I require of the leader of the Government whether it is his intention to amend the Judges Act so that under the amended Industrial Disputes Act the Chief Justice could appoint a judge as chairman of a board of conciliation?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I took it for granted that the opinion of this Chamber as largely expressed was that we should not modify the principle we laid down, that the judges should not receive any extra remuneration. It has been pointed out that by Order in Council the judges may be authorized to sit. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Robertson) may know whether that solves the difficulty or not. I would have to consult my colleagues on that point.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I thought the expression of the House, when we were discussing the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act and Bill 84, was given rather on the point whether the Minister of Labour or the Chief Justices of the various Provinces—or the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, as the case might be—should name the third arbitrator. I did not understand it to be the sentiment of the House that judges should not be used as chairmen of boards and compensated.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to say just one word about this compensation to the judges. I think this Chamber has expressed itself as quite favourable to compensate the judges as liberally as the other House can be led to treat them. There has never been any cavil in this House about the salaries, and I think that the mind of the Senate was that the judges should be well paid. But we have all had, too, the theory that a man cannot be in two places at one and the same time, and if a man is acting as arbitrator and receiving his salary as a judge, there is no reason why he should be paid anything more. Because it is a fallacy to suppose that a judge leaves his work, goes out on an arbitration and then comes back and has to do double work. That does not happen. If he is appointed an arbitrator and leaves the court, the other judges do the work. I have no sympathy at all with the suggestion that an allowance should be made to the man who acts as an arbitrator. However, I do not want that mixed up with the question of the judge's salary, because I am quite willing to treat that liberally when we come to it. What I object to is double pay for single work.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, there seems to be a mistaken idea on the part of certain laymen in this honourable Chamber that the judgment delivered by a judge and the care with which he tries a case depends upon the amount of remnuneration he gets. I have not so low an opinion of the judiciary of this country as to think that. It is an entirely mistaken idea. If a judge were working for nothing, and finding himself, he would still give to any case coming before him that care and patient investigation that it deserved, and would decide it according to the very justice of the cause. That is my view of the judges of this country, and on the part of the judiciary, for whom I entertain the very highest respect, I resent any such imputation as some honourable members of this House, perhaps unwittingly, perhaps without considering the force of their words, cast upon the judiciary of Canada.

But while we are on the subject of this Bill I would like to ask the honourable gentleman who leads the House whether he has considered the case of judges who exercise dominion in a court of far higher jurisdiction than the court which has received the beneficence of the Government to the tune of at least one-third more salary than they had been paid; to wit, the various County Court judges of the Province of New Brunswick and all the other Provinces as well. The jurisdiction as related by the honourable the leader of the Government is only that of a stipendiary or police magistrate in my Province, who is not of necessity a trained lawyer at all. He has equal jurisdiction with the gentlemen to whom the honourable leader has referred.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I believe my honourable friend is in error.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am not in error. With respect to some matters, such as matters of contract, they have exactly the same juris diction. The County Court judges in New Brunswick have jurisdiction in matters of contract up to $1,400, and in matters of torts up to $200, and, besides, they sit in all such cases as have been enumerated by my honourable friend the leader of the Government. They sit in cases with regard to municipal matters, taxation, assessment, etc., the same as his judges do. So why those gentlemen in Montreal should be singled out I do not understand. As I have already pointed out, our County Court judges must devote their whole time to their judicial duties. They are not permitted to do anything else. They cannot practise their profession, or engage in mercantile pursuits, or add to their income in any other way. They have to live upon the same income. They probably have to eat as much and to wear as much clothing as the judges in the Province of Quebec. I do not like this insidious distinction. It does not make for good government to have judges in one Province getting much more money than judges in any other Province, and it is not right.

My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) speaks about the ability of those men. Now, we have some County Court Judges—I have in mind at least two that I could name in my Province—I am not going to name them, because that would not be right—who would grace the Supreme Court Bench quite as well as any of the occupants of that Bench. They have just as much legal ability, just as fine legal minds, just as good judicial sense, as the men who are in the Supreme Court, yet they are receiving only $5,000 a year, whereas in Quebec or in Montreal—I suppose it applies to Quebec too—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Only to Montreal. I am a great admirer of Montreal as the metropolitan city of Canada and always look upon it with pride. It is big in every way. It is big in its desires as well as big in its prosperity, and naturally a citizen of Montreal may feel that he is better than a citizen of any other city of Canada. Coming from the great metropolitan city of Canada, he feels that he is more important; he feels that he should be considered from a different standpoint than men of other cities. But, after all, we must provide for the remuneration of judges on a fair and equitable basis. I do not say that judges of the County Court are not well paid. I think they are fairly well paid, considering the pension system. I suppose that applies to your so-called Circuit Court judges as well. The pension is a considerable item in a judge's remuneration. It would take a long time for him to put away money enough to buy an annuity that would equal the payment to him for life of his full salary at the time of his retirement. All this has to be taken into consideration when you are looking for an increase of judges' salaries, and from that standpoint, considering the earning power of the great mass of the people of this country, I think our judges are pretty well looked after. But you must not be unfair to judges in one section and be more than fair to judges in another section, and it is such inequality of treatment that I resent in this legislation.

It is said that the judges in Montreal are hard worked. I will guarantee that they do not work more than eight hours a day. A great many people in this country work eight hours a day, and some work a good deal more. A man can do only a certain amount of work within eight hours. A judge who is not occupied all his time has to remain on tap all the time, and he might as well be working—much better. Work is the salvation of the world. Work is the greatest thing in the world; there is no question about it. The people who work are the salt of the earth, whether they work with their hands or with their brain: it makes no difference.

So I trust that the honourable Minister, who I know has a very equitable mind in most things, will convey to his colleagues the feeling of the majority of this Chamber that there has been an element of unfairness about the selection of the three judges in Montreal for this extra endowment, while judges in other Provinces occupying even higher positions in the judicial scheme than those particular judges, are left out of consideration.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the remarks of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I add a word to what has been said with regard to judges. I would go further than both my honourable friends from New Brunswick in regard to judges working outside of their natural habitat. I object to judges sitting on commissions whether with or without pay. I do not think they have any business to sit on commissions. They are appointed for the purpose of presiding over courts and dispensing justice in their community. That is their proper function, and every time they go outside their sphere they are causing a serious detriment to the administration of justice. I have not yet heard of any commission presided over by a judge against which strong, sometimes very strong, accusations have not been made. They have been and are being made against every commission. They are very likely unjust, unfair and groundless; they may be wholly untrue; but some of the mud sticks, and who is it that suffers? It is the judiciary every time. For my part I think we ought to prevent that if possible. If there is anything upon which the stability and future of this and every other country depends, it is a due and proper respect for the judiciary. If that is destroyed or lost, nearly everything else is lost. I have frequently expressed my opposition to judges acting on commissions, and I may be allowed to repeat what I have so often said. Within the past ten years we have seen judges, some holding the highest positions in a Province, come down to Ottawa and lobby in order to obtain appointment as referee, umpire, or arbitrator. What could be more injurious to the judiciary than that judges should be allowed to come here, and, like ordinary office seekers, lobby or beg for appointment on a commission. I am not inventing anything. This fact is known—known in one case at least. Surely we have to stop that. Why not confine the judges to their natural function, that of administering justice, and keep them out of political party quarrels, for commissions are generally the result or the object of a political quarrel. I cannot speak too strongly, because I feel very strongly on this subject. It seems to me that we are making a very grave and serious mistake every time we allow a judge to go out of and do something that is not strictly within his judicial function.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That being my honourable friend's view, does he not agree that it is a mistake to make the Chief Justice of a Province, or the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, the storm centre around which all the criticisms and attacks, both of employers and employees in Canada, are made?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is an altogether different thing.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: There is no difference at all.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Perhaps my honourable friend will allow me to point out the difference. The judge does not take part in the quarrel.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: He is responsible for the result.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He is not responsible for anything; he is simply told that he must choose the third person to act on the board. He makes the nomination. That is all he is responsible for.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: He is held responsible for his choice by those affected. He cannot avoid it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Of course he will be held responsible by the whole community for the choice he makes. If the Chief Justice of Quebec, the Chief Justice of Ontario, or the Chief Justice of Canada, should appoint somebody who is unworthy to act in a position of that kind, of course the judge would be criticized, and very deservedly.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Everybody talks about the judges. Why not say a word for the poor litigant? When judges go on those wandering commissions they are not attending to their business. There are cases that I know of which have been standing in the courts of Montreal for five or six years. It is a real denial of justice not to obtain judgment. One party or the other must be in the right; they cannot both be wrong. Someone is going to get judgment in his favour. A judge who is employed on other matters is neglecting the poor litigant, and I think the litigants, every one of them, would vote in favour of confining the judges to the work of rendering judgment and not permitting them to delay the administration of justice. The delay of judgment is simply a denial of justice.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS

Bill Y5, an Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Conkey.—Hon. Mr. Blain.

Bill Z5, an Act for the relief of Margaret Marie Pope.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill A6, an Act for the relief of Loretta May Girard.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill B6, an Act for the relief of Birdena Frances Wallace LeMay.—Hon. W. B. Ross.

CANADA TEMPERANCE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand the Senate went into Committee on Bill 43, an Act to amend The Canada Temperance Act.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

At six o'clock the Committee took recess.

The Committee resumed at 8 o'clock.

On section 1—importation of intoxicating liquor prohibited:

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR: Before this section is carried I want to refer to the statement made when this Bill was last before the Senate, that this measure had come to us unanimously from the other House. Of course, if for two years in succession a measure had come to us unanimously from the House of Commons, that would be a fact to which we would be bound to give very serious consideration. But that statement is very far from being in accordancce with the record, and, in justice to the Senate, I think it should not be allowed to pass unchallenged. In another place, where this Bill was introduced, it was very vigorously combatted by no less a person than the leader of the Opposition, who gave what seemed to me very strong reasons why the Bill should not be passed—not because it was for or against temperance or prohibition, but on the constitutional ground that it was a mischievous and dangerous interference with the prerogatives of the Central Government which were being handed over to the Provincial Government without any proper expression of the will of the people of the Province affected. It seems to me that, when any reference is made in this House to the action of another Chamber, a fact of the kind I have indicated in connection with the leader of the Opposition there, who is certainly a high constitutional authority, should not be put in the background.

Again, there were the utterances of the members from the Province chiefly affected. The only members from that Province who had anything to say in favour of the Bill—and they were very brief indeed—were members who support the Government on every occasion. While of course they are entitled to their opinions as well as anybody else, I think the fact that if they were heard from at all they were bound to be heard from in support of the Government or else to violate all their traditions, would be some excuse to us for not paying too close attention to their opinions on this Bill. As I see it, they gave to this Bill the mechanical support that might be expected from them. On the other hand, the gentlemen not bound by tradition and habit to support the Government were very outspoken in criticism of this measure and in expressing the hope that it would not be passed as it was before the House. As for allowing it to go unanimously, they actually took the sense of the House of Commons on an amendment asking that this Bill be not put into effect until the will of the electors of British Columbia had first been ascertained by means of a referendum.

That is the position in which this measure comes to the Senate—not with the unanimous consent of the House of Commons, but with the advice of the representatives of British Columbia in the House of Commons that before it goes into effect there should be a plebiscite taken upon it.

At the close of the discussion on the second reading the other evening emphasis was laid upon the fact that every Attorney General in Canada, at least every Attorney General that had been heard from—had sent a message here supporting this measure. I ventured to suggest the other evening, and I repeat the suggestion now—it is not a frivolous suggestion, but a serious one which I think comes within the personal knowledge of every member here—that when the Attorneys General sent the messages they had no real knowledge of the measure as to which they addressed this Parliament. One of them made that plain by stating that his support was of the measure recommended by Attorney General Manson of British Columbia—I forget the exact language, but that was the effect of it—whereas the measure now before the Senate is not at all the measure laid before Parliament by the Attorney General of British Columbia. I think it was the leader of the House who, when I said something of this kind, asked, "Why quibble?" I submit in all seriousness that that is no quibble.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not remember that I used the expression; nor did I use it at that stage. I remember saying that if the Attorney General of Alberta favoured the legislation as introduced in the House of Commons, a fortiori he would support this measure, which seems to be an improvement upon the measure as introduced in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: This may or may not be an improvement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think my honourable friend will admit that it is.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: That is susceptible of argument. I have not yet been brought to that stage of submission that I admit it.

As to the references to the several Attorneys General, they can very well afford to be generous with something that does not belong to them—that costs them nothing. As I showed the other evening, this measure prevents British Columbia from taking advantage of the peculiar conditions of navigation on the Pacific wihch now prevent any ship from across the ocean, or from anywhere for that matter, going into an American port with liquor on board. These ships are already coming into Victoria, discharging their cargo and proceeding to Seattle dry, and on the return taking on the liquor again at Victoria; and they are doing that, as I learn from the press, by express consent of the Attorney General of British Columbia. For my part I do not see where his express consent is necessary, but that is the statement.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Can my honourable friend tell us where they get this liquor that they bring back to Victoria?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: They get it from across the Pacific—in Japan, China, and Australia.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Not in Seattle?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No. I will read to the honourable gentleman the particular message that I have in mind, although there are others to the same effect. This is very short:

Lands Liquor at Victoria on Way to U.S.

Victoria, June 12.—The steamer Africa Maru of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha landed her liquor supplies at Victoria yesterday morning before proceeding to Seattle. The liquor will be picked up again by the vessel when she is going to sea on her return voyage.

The Africa was the first ocean vessel to make port en route to the United States subject to the new United States liquor restrictions, which went into effect Sunday.

The discharging of the liquor at this port was done following negotations with the customs. The sanction was also necessary of the attorney-general of the province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Just as it is stated that transatlantic shipping may stop at Halifax on the way to New York.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, precisely. That was the point I was coming to—that the condition promised us at Halifax is now actually in effect in British Columbia; and while such is the case there comes the Attorney General of the province of Nova Scotia—I think his was one of the messages read to us the other night—whose province takes full advantage of the conditions prevailing on the Atlantic, which affect the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, and under which foreign ships can make Halifax a port of call and leave their liquor there before proceeding to the United States ports. He is enjoying that advantage, and while enjoying it he sends a confident message to Ottawa saying in effect: "I am entirely in favour of this Bill, which will prevent the province of British Columbia enjoying the privilege"—if it is a privilege—"now being enjoyed at my home port of Halifax." So I say that this attorney can very well afford to be generous in a matter which costs him nothing, but which is very serious to the people of British Columbia.

The same with the Attorney General of New Brunswick. Ships are coming into his port of St. John, or are privileged to come in, discharge their liquor there, and take it on again as they go out. He sends a message here to say: "I am well content that you should forbid to Victoria and Vancouver the rights that we have at the ports of St. John and Halifax." As to him, again I say that he can well afford to be generous in giving away our privileges.

So far as Quebec is concerned, I do not know that there is a message from the Attorney General of Quebec, but the same condition would apply there.

Now, I say that I am entitled to believe that those honourable gentlemen who sent us those messages do not know the effect of this Bill. They may know the purport of it. I feel sure they do not know the effect which its peculiar draftsmanship has given to it. We have many expressions from the press—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Before my honourable friend leaves that point I would like him to make it clear. I would like to understand the attitude of my honourable friend. Is he against this Bill because, among other reasons, he is against the closing up of the export warehouses? From the trend of his argument, he seems to be.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I would rather not be judged by surface seemings; I would rather be judged by my own statements.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I put it in another way? Does my honourable friend object to the steamer leaving the liquor in Vancouver or Victoria while it goes to Seattle, and on the way back picking it up?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No. What I am trying to impress on this House is that so long as we permit that privilege to be enjoyed at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, and Montreal, we should not, by legislation of this kind, deny it to Victoria and Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You want the same privilege?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, we want the same privilege that exists in Eastern Canada, and no more. We do not want, under a misapprehension, to be denied the privileges that are given in Eastern Canada.

There has been some support from the press for this legislation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I ask my honourable friend if the objection on the part of the Attorney General of British Columbia is that the present practice leads to bootlegging? Does he object to the steamer doing what my honourable friend has just described?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: My own opinion is that the Attorney General does not object to it at all, but that without understanding what he is doing he has sent us a Bill to pass which prohibits something that he is perfectly willing to allow. That is my honest impression.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does he not claim that that is likely to interfere with the business which he carries on in the Province?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Oh, no; because they do not bring it in for sale. But he is asking us to pass a Bill the effect of which would be to prevent the steamer from bringing any liquor at all into British Columbia, even under seal and in bond. The effect of this Bill would be to make those ships come in dry.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Then he does object?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No. If the honourable gentlemen will permit me. I say that this Parliament is doing a foolish thing in connection with this legislation, in adopting verbatim et literatim a measure sent to us by the Attorney General of British Columbia, without this Parliament having taken any trouble to ascertain what it really means. We are jumping to the conclusion that because the Attorney General sends it here it must be a good thing for British Columbia. I say that the Attorney General has sent us something which he himself does not want and which would be mischievous in its incidence if we were to pass it as it is now before this House.

As to some of the press reports of this legislation and some of the abuse, mild or virulent, of the Senate, I intend to read a few lines from a most respectable authority, an authority for which generally I have very great respect, I mean the Montreal Witness. Those of us who know the Montreal Witness, whether we agree or not with what it advocates, will, I think, give the publishers the credit of being sincere, and publishing what they honestly believe.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But it is strongly prohibitionist.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Strongly prohibitionist. This is what the Witness honestly believes as to this Senate:

> One thing for which the Senate might be looked to is a fatherly interest in the morals of the country. The very name Senate implies maturity. It is the common notion that even a man whose youth was full of foolish noise will wear his later manhood in fatherly style. We have our doubts. The heats of youth may abate, but that does not change the heart. What Canada has come to look for in her Senate is a defiance of the people's attempt to protect themselves by moral law. The members of the Commons may be no better than the Senators; but they have the people to face. The people's house passed a law empowering provinces to prohibit export of liquor. The Senate stood up for the brewers and distillers and slew it.

We have before us to-night a Bill with absolute reservation on behalf of whom? Everybody else in the Province is cut out, and there is absolute reservation for the brewers and distillers; yet this respectable and respected organ of public opinion in Quebec is so far from being informed as to the purport of this Bill that it slams the Senate for hesitating to do the very thing which this paper reprobates. That is a fair sample of the lack of information on the subject.

I have another paragraph, from the Toronto Globe, in my hand. I will not bother to read it, but in effect, it lays the bootlegging at the door of the Government liquor establishments of British Columbia and refers to their profit of 2½ millions in a year, as quoted, as evidence of the extent to which bootlegging from those stores must be going on. By some distorted process of reasoning the Globe apparently thinks that is another cause why the Senate should pass this Bill.

I said that the Attorneys General did not know what we were being asked to pass. I believe they do not. The Legislature of British Columbia asks us to pass legislation forbidding the importation of liquor for use within the Province—"for use therein" is the expression in their petition. They have asked us for nothing else. The Attorney General transmitted that request. He asked for nothing else. I have here a letter from the Prime Minister of British Columbia, addressed to the late Government—the first request for this legislation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What is the date?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: This is dated Victoria, January 3rd, 1921. He says:

> On behalf of the Government of the Province, as representing its electors, I therefore request that amending legislation be enacted at the coming Session of the Dominion Parliament prohibiting the importation of liquor into the Province for use therein, except by a Provincial Government; this legislation to supplement that to be enacted by our legislature for Government sale, to be contingent upon and to exist only during its continuance.

So there we have the Legislature, the Attorney General, and the Prime Minister of British Columbia all asking for something entirely different from what we propose to give them.

The honourable gentleman asked as to the bootlegging—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend will admit that the request which is contained in that letter is being carried out in this Bill. It contains other provisions, but the request that importation of liquor for use in the province be prohibited, except importation by the Government Agency, is covered in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: That is a very ingenious explanation, if I may say so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there is virtue in it to that extent.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If there is virtue to that extent, the extent is very limited.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We shall see.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The extent is very limited, because the use of those words in the request was a distinct limitation of that request—a limitation in deference to the express instruction of the electorate and the express enactments of the Legislature; for we have on the Statute Book of British Columbia, yet not challenged, Acts distinctly contemplating the introduction of liquor for everything but sale within the Province. So the amended request that we have before us is entirely without authority from either the Legislature or the people of the Province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But that enactmentment exists so long as we do not intervene with this Bill. The enactment by the Legislature authorizes importation under certain conditions, because we have not lent our power to prohibit it. That is what we are now doing.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is to say, if we pass the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If we had given authority of this kind, the Legislature would not have dealt with the subject at all. But it is because they did not contemplate Federal interference, or a Federal concession of this nature, that they went to the trouble of making their express enactment, describing how liquor might be brought privately into the Province, and what was to happen to it after it was brought in.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And blocking it to that extent.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Before passing on I will refer to another communication from the Attorney General, to show in another respect that he does not understand what he is asking for. This is his letter of the 26th of January, the letter which unfortunately revealed the presence of that previous famous communication of the 16th. In his letter addressed to the late Solicitor General he says:

Dear Mr. McKenzie:

Re Canada Temperance Act,

With further reference to the above matter and my letter to you of the 16th, I should perhaps add, in case the question is raised, that in the event of the legislation being passed which is desired, the Government of this Province will not deal harshly with existing export liquor concerns. We shall give them time to dispose of their stocks and shall endeavour to be reasonable with them in all respects as the circumstances of the situation will permit.

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) A. R. Manson.

What does that say? The Attorney General of British Columbia, or the Government of British Columbia, has nothing whatever to do officially with the disposition of stocks from export or other warehouses in that Province. That is not under the Attorney General's jurisdiction now, and it will not be under his jurisdiction if this Bill passes. This Bill relates to importations solely. Yet he says that he will be very good to these export warehouses, which have been the cause of all the sin and the crime of which he complains, and which should be put out of business at once. He is going to be very good to them—not to deal harshly with them, but to give them time to dispose of their stocks, and "endeavour to be reasonable with them." How is he going to be reasonable with them? As I say, he cannot prevent their disposing of their stocks. Does that mean that he is going to give them an indefinite time to load up with more whisky from outside the Province, with which to do further bootlegging, before he puts a stop to what he says is a nuisance? If it does not mean that, if they have got the liquor illegally for bootlegging purposes, as he claims all these export warehouses have, does that mean that he is going to shut his eyes and wink at bootlegging for a further period of six or nine months, as the case may be? Or does it mean anything at all?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In relation to this Bill it means nothing at all, because we have wiped out the export house.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No, we have not wiped out the export house.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No; we simply say we will not allow them to import any more liquor after this Bill comes into effect. But the Attorney General has the say as to when this Bill shall come into effect. Does his promise to deal kindly with the export houses mean that he will allow an extra time to elapse before he calls this legislation into effect, to give them time to stock up again and further debauch the people of Alberta and British Columbia and the United States?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He must be absolutely insincere, then.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: He is; there is no doubt about that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How did you strike it so well?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If my honourable friend is right in his argument.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I will subscribe to the judgment of the honourable gentleman.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not say it is my judgment; I say if you are right in your argument, that is the logical conclusion. I am not quite sure that you are right.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I am reading from his letter, and I am waiting for any other interpretation to be put upon it. I was going to say, because I did not like to impugn the sincerity of the honourable gentleman in his absence, that this letter shows again how little that honourable gentleman understands what legislation he is putting before this House.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is more charitable.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think I can easily explain the letter of the 26th, though I am not sure that I can do it to the satisfaction of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The honourable leader has a task before him.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is more than the Attorney General could do.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: As to bootlegging—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why would the Attorney General of British Columbia be desirous of continuing bootlegging, or furnishing the means for further carrying on bootlegging? Why should he? Why do you think he is insincere?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If the honourable gentleman will permit me, I would say that the suggestion that he was insincere was offered to me by the honourable gentleman himself.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, but you very readily accepted it.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If I harboured the thought I harboured it on the high authority of the honourable gentleman himself.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What interest can the Attorney General of British Columbia have in permitting more bootlegging?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: That is a conundrum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All his efforts are to get rid of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but my honourable friend is not serious, or so credulous as to think that bootlegging is confined to export warehouses, is he?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not quite see that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are very many more in the trade.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I can illustrate that. I did so the other night, but it will not do any harm to repeat it, because we are on the very point of dealing with the main section of the enactment. The Attorney General recently has been much more active than before in exercising the powers he possesses. You know that in the opinion of the Department of Justice in Ottawa the Government of British Columbia already possesses all the power necessary to deal effectively with bootlegging, and all the real authority, in the way of preventing the abuse of the liquor law, that would be afforded by this Act. I will not bother reading it, but I have under my hand the opinion of the late Minister of Justice, and the opinion of the present Deputy Minister of Justice, to the effect that I state—that there is in the Canada Temperance Act at present all the authority necessary for effectively dealing with the business of which the Attorney General of British Columbia complains.

But under this legislation what happens? The Attorney General's own Bill says that no export warehouse in British Columbia may bring any more liquor into the province, which means that no wholesale dealer in liquor may continue his business in that province. This Bill says that, and it says at the same time that there shall be no let or hindrance whatever to wholesale dealers or to distillers or brewers in any other place—in Ontario or in Quebec for instance—passing their liquor through the province of British Columbia and landing it upon the very same ships from which this Attorney General says the bootlegging is now being carried on.

Now, that is in this Bill which we are to be asked in a moment or two to put into enactment, if we accept the first section—that we deny to the legitimate trade of the province of British Columbia the right which, by the express terms of this Bill, we confer on every distiller and every brewer in Ontario and Quebec, and in every place, in Scotland or anywhere else, outside of the province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But no different right from what will be enjoyed by the British Columbia distiller.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No, not by the British Columbia distiller, but by the British Columbia dealer—the wholesaler, the exporter, which is a very respectable business in British Columbia, as in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. For instance, we are denying that right to a firm which I have in mind, who are proprietors of the very dock at Victoria from which the steamers leave, who have their warehouse on the dock; we are denying to them the right to take a case of whisky from their warehouse and load it on the ship, load it at their own dock, the dock at which they have been loading merchandise for export for 50 years. Yet those parties may see a whole carload of liquor from Ontario or Quebec brought across their dock and put upon that same ship. That is one of the inconsistencies of this Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the clause in the Act that prevents the Victoria man from doing the same with liquor?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The clause that prevents him from replenishing his stock, because he cannot bring any more into the province. But in order to be good to distillers the Attorney General makes a special exemption in their favour, which was not in the Act of last year.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is that?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: This paragraph about the distillers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is the exception?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The exception is that the Act does not apply to distillers or brewers.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The word "brewer" does not come from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No, but that is in this Bill. The effect of that is that it enables distillers to import immature Scotch whiskey, because we make only rye whiskey in British Columbia at present. The express intention of the amendment, and the effect of it, is to permit those distillers to import immature Scotch whiskey and by a process of blending and diluting to give it the age which, under the Excise regulations, will enable them, not only to sell it at once in British Columbia, but to export it from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How can you sell in British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: They can sell to the Government of British Columbia, and export it from British Columbia. Now, the cruel feature of this Bill is that while we put out of business respectable old-established export houses, we are offering special inducements to distilleries not now in British Columbia to come into the province, and already one of them has come, with headquarters at Winnipeg. We all know that there are no distilleries at Winnipeg, and yet in a recent issue of the British Columbia Gazette there appears a notice of incorporation to do business in British Columbia of a distillery company with a capital of $5,000,000, with headquarters in Winnipeg, for the purpose of operation in British Columbia, and of course the operation is to be under the provisions of the Act now before this House.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Mr. Manson will look after that chap, will he not?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: This chap will look after Mr. Manson.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does the honourable gentleman object to that part of the Bill—to that privilege being given to the distiller?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No, not to the distiller.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because if the honourable gentleman objects, we can discuss it and take up that point.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I do not take the dog-in-the-manger attitude that because some person in whom I am interested is deprived of a privilege, therefore I want to deprive everybody of the privilege; but I do ask for fair play, and I do not think it is fair play, in the name of temperance or of prohibition, to suppress a bona fide exporter while offering inducements to mushroom distillers. There is nothing to prevent a whole crop of distilleries being established. I believe this one I have mentioned is bona fide; they intend to do business on a large scale. The one established in British Columbia already is bona fide, and it has a large capital invested there. But under this Bill a large crop of mushroom distilleries may be expected to spring up in that province, to use British Columbia as a base for the trans-Pacific export trade. We are asked to sanction that by this Bill. We are asked to sanction it in the name of stopping bootlegging of liquor put on shipboard for export.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend think that with this Bill the exportation from British Columbia will be stopped, or that the Bill is intended to do that?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Oh, no: exportation will go on greater than ever.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We are dealing with importation, not exportation.

Hon. Mr. TALOR: Surely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How are the dealers in British Columbia affected?

Hon Mr. TAYLOR: You are giving special exemption in this Bill to brewers and distillers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Distillers only, I understand.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: "Brewers and distillers," you have in the Bill. It is quite true that someone unauthorized put in the words "and brewers" at Ottawa. Do not obscure this point: the only contribution that Ottawa made to this legislation, the only two words that Ottawa put into this Bill, were those words, "and brewers." I do not know why it was done, because it was of no use to brewers —no legitimate use to them; but that is in the Bill

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I intend to strike out those two words, "And brewers."

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, because Mr. Manson did not ask for them to be in; he only asked for "distillers." But he asked for a special concession to enable distillers to import for the purpose of re-export.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is that in this Bill?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, that is in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But will it not cover all the distillers in Canada, even those that are in the dry provinces like Ontario? Ontario has distilleries. Will those distilleries not enjoy the same privilege as that in British Columbia for the purpose of blending and flavouring?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I am glad the honourable gentleman recognizes that. That is what I have been trying to make the House realize —that we propose by this Bill arbitrarily to confer on dealers, on distillers, on manufacturers, in Ontario and Quebec and Scotland, something that we are denying to our own dealers in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why not? The distiller of British Columbia will have the same privilege.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The distiller who is not yet there, who is coming in next week or next month or the month following for that very purpose, will have a special concession in British Columbia, while the export house, warehouse, established exporter, in British Columbia—I do not mean those Manson mushrooms, I mean the established export houses—are being cut out while we are inviting mushroom distillers to come in.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does the honourable gentleman favour the maintenance of export houses? By his argument he seems to.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Not the mushroom export houses. Not the export houses at Grand Forks, at Cranbrook, at Fernie, at places all along the American boundary.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Will the honourable gentleman explain what is a mushroom distillery?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes. I would like to explain fully what a mushroom distillery is. It is a distillery which, by virtue of this legislation and the friendly co-operation of the Government of British Columbia, will spring up in a night; that has simply to acquire four walls of a warehouse and import its stuff under the special concessions of this Bill for flavouring and blending with water, which may be the sole local contribution to the product of that mushroom distillery. That is what I mean by mushroom distillery, and that is what this Bill permits.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Is not that committing fraud?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Somebody asks me if I am in favour of warehouses. I am, but I am not in favour of the Manson brand of warehouses that we have in British Columbia. I am in favour of allowing the continuance of the legitimate export from British Columbia. In saying that I would like to add that I have not the personal acquaintance, or any business or other connection with a solitary exporter in liquors in the province of British Columbia. There do not happen to be any where I live. I am not speaking for any acquaintance at all, but I have in mind the conditions at Victoria particularly.

I have spoken about the nature of the warehouses that are being permitted in British Columbia. We have had letters from the Attorney General of the province telling of the yeoman efforts he has made to suppress them; that he only tolerates them because he finds himself bound by the law to regulate rather than prohibit. We in British Columbia know that to be the merest twaddle.

I have in my hand a document illustrating one of the recent transactions there. There was a warehouse at Grand Forks that went out of business from the exhaustion of its stock. No doubt the local disfavour that there must be for an institution so ridiculously placed as that helped to close it. Did the Attorney General let that license lapse? No. He was under no compulsion to deal with that, to extend it, to renew it. He could have said, "Thank God, here is one export nuisance disposed of in the course of nature, and I have not had to exercise any arbitrary influence." But we find, as set out in this document I have under my hand, an application for the transfer of the license to another place on the boundary which up to that time had not been cursed with any export warehouse. That was the town of Keremeos, right alongside the American border with no excuse for the existence of an export warehouse except for bootlegging across into the United States, 200 miles in from the coast; no other outlet at all, and hemmed in by the mountains on all sides, with a gateway down into the State of Washington, to which it is illegal to export at all. But yet, under date about the end of October last, many months after the Senate had refused the legislation last year, the Liquor Board of the province of British Columbia, with the approval and consent of the Attorney General, its master, allowed a transfer of the license from Grand Forks, where the people had gone out of business, to Keremeos, so that they would start up there a curse that had been excluded from Grand Forks. I have the document here, which recites that those people had sold out all their liquor and had no liquor presently in stock. The transaction was not made to give them an opportunity of disposing of their stocks; it was to give them a fresh start in the little town of Keremeos. Yet this gentleman comes to us and says that only our action stands between him and the clean administration of the law which he would like to give.

I say it seems to me little short of a crime for this House to cooperate in the erection of a smoke-screen such as this which is all that is being done by this demand for legislation —the erecting of a smoke-screen between those who are responsible for the villainies that have been perpetrated without the interference of the Government of British Columbia and their consequences upon the electors of that Province. We are asked to be a party to an abuse of that kind. I think that is all I have to say at present.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will my honourable friend permit me to ask what interest the Attorney General of British Columbia can have in multiplying or giving facilities for the creation of those mushroom distilleries of which my honourable friend speaks? What possible interest can he have in doing it?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The possible interest was brought out in the Legislature of the Province. One hates to keep repeating it, because the story is so sordid, but being asked the question, I feel that I should answer it. If this legislation passes and the concerns that are moving the Attorney General to get it see that at last the control of the Province of British Columbia is secured, the expectation is that an immense corruption fund will be put up at once to bring forward a Provincial election this year, to make sure that for five years to come the present people will be in control of the Province of British Columbia.

The honourable gentleman asked what possible interest there could be. That was the rumour in that Province, and before I came to Ottawa I was fully conversant with the rumour. I have nothing in writing or in print which I could bring forward to prove it. The first confirmation I got of it was when I read in the British Columbia Gazette recently of the establishment of a new distillery institution in that Province, and the announcement that Scotch whisky as well as rye was to be made there.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is a pretty serious charge.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: It is a pretty serious charge—a charge made in the Legislature of British Columbia and refused investigation in that Legislature by a strictly party vote; by the vote, amongst others, of a man who was shown by the public press of the next day to have participated in the very scandal alleged in the motion for investigation. One of the men who voted down the motion for the investigation of a charge that money was being extorted was shown by the public press the next day to be the head of a firm who had received $3,000 for that very purpose. And what was his defence? He did not deny it. He stood up in the Legislature and said: "It is true: my firm got that; I was so busy with the affairs of the Legislature that I did not realize until two months afterwards that my half of that $3,000 had been deposited to my credit in the bank." That was the session in which they raised their indemnity, and this gentleman was so affluent that he did not know that this $1,500 of easy money was to his credit in the bank. And he said: "I tried to give it back—my share of it, not the whole $3,000—and the man would not take it"—the man who had been forced to pay blackmail—"so I gave it to the Great War Veterans' Association."

Did that man lose caste in the Legislature? You would think that he would, wouldn't you?

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Not out there.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: So far from losing caste, there was repeated the story of the Jackdaw of Rheims that stole the cardinal's ring, and was cursed with bell, book and candle for the theft, when the cardinal thought that some of his priestly guests must have relieved him of the ring. It was found out at last that it was the poor jackdaw; and when the jackdaw made restitution, they canonized him.

If you ask for the impulse of the strange dealings in liquor in British Columbia, I am forced to go back to the story that was brought out, through the inquiry in the Legislature, and to say it is purely a metallic influence that is behind this legislation.

I am reminded by my colleague (Hon. Mr. Barnard) that, odious as the charge is which is involved in what I have said, it is no more odious than the charge so flippantly made by Mr. Manson against this Parliament; the difference from his charge being that he had no evidence whatever for it, and ignominiously withdrew it when he was challenged to make good or withdraw, whereas the charge to which I refer was brought to his face in the Legislature of British Columbia and an investigation refused, and as to which there has never been any denial or explanation of the circumstances connected with the use of this blackmail money for securing these endorsements.

Before I sit down I would like to ask the leader of the House a question. There is an expression in the Bill of the meaning of which I am not quite certain. In paragraph b of subsection 2, if I may refer to it now, it says:

> The carriage or transportation of intoxicating liquor into and through a Province.

I would like to ask what the honourable gentleman understands by "into and through" —whether it means into and also through, or whether it means through.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is quite a compliment to ask me to explain a phrase in English.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is what you are here for.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In order to transport through, one must get into.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will quietly read the whole clause to see whether it covers two operations.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why say "into and"? Why not say "through"?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Sometimes legal verbiage does not add to the value of the phrase, but it may be found in our statutes for years past.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can you go into and stop, and then go through at your leisure, or have you to go into and through in one movement?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would surmise that the public carrier—one of our railways carrying into for the purpose of transferring to a ship in Vancouver—would have the right to retain that liquor on the Vancouver wharf temporarily.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That would be covered by the word "through".

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It would be still for a moment, and that would be "through."

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The honourable gentleman, then, thinks that means one operation— that it does not mean that the common carrier may bring it "into" the Province and also may bring it "through" the Province?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no, I do not believe so. It refers to the right of the common carrier to bring it to the persons entitled to it, for instance, the Government agency; or if we allowed the distillers.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: They are covered by other exceptions, and so would not come under it.

Then there is another point. What is the principle underlying the suggestion that this first section shall be brought into effect "subject to the provisions of subsection 2 of this section"?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is because the Governor General will only move upon the expression of the will of the province as embodied in an Order in Council of that Province.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: When we were passing the export legislation of last year, so far as I remember, we fixed a definite date when it was to come into effect. Why do we make an exception of this and leave it doubtful whether it will ever come into effect?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is thinking only of his province. This is a general Act which may cover any or all of the provinces. Quebec and British Columbia to-day may need this enactment, and will so express themselves. Manitoba or another Province may to-morrow desire to come in and obtain the advantages of this Act. They will do so by expressing their wish by Order in Council.

Hon. G. H. BARNARD: Apart from the very cogent arguments which have been advanced by the honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) to-night, there is another matter which I feel confident this House will not ignore. In any plebiscite placed before them, the people of the province as a whole never contemplated for one moment that in voting for Government control they were voting to do away with the right of private importation. So far as this controversy has gone last Session and this, the fight has centred around the question of export houses. I think that we on this side of the House have shown, to the satisfaction of reasonable men, that there has been no attempt, serious or otherwise, on the part of the Government of British Columbia or the Attorney General of British Columbia or any authority charged with the enforcement of the laws in that Province to do away with the export houses. My honourable friend the leader of the House the other day stated that export houses could exist without the sanction of the Federal Government. That is true, but only to this extent: that the export warehouses that can so exist only exist by reason of the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia and the Liquor Control Act of that Province. That Act Provides that liquor warehouses may be licensed and, in passing, I may say that even after the Attorney General of British Columbia was agitating here last session for the abolition of these warehouses, he was continuing his own legislation. He did not repeal it: on the contrary, he increased the annual license fee from $3,000 to $10,000. He could have repealed the provision in the Provincial Act providing for the export houses, and under the other sections of his Act there is a provision requiring anybody owning any liquor which has been imported into the Province of British Columbia to have it sold by the Provincial authorities, otherwise it is liable to seizure.

I say under these conditions it is practically impossible for an export house to carry on business. In the first place, as a matter of dollars and cents, it has to pay an import duty of something like $17 a gallon. So far, then, as bootlegging in the Province of British Columbia is concerned, an export warehouse which is not a bonded warehouse of the Dominion Government, wherever it may be situated, is practically out of business. Once the duty is paid the bootlegger cannot possibly compete with the Government vendor who sells legally.

The only thing that is left is this question of exporting into sister Provinces. I do not want to labour this question. We have tried to accentuate it so that honourable gentlemen opposite would take it in—not that I do not think they are capable of doing so, but possibly that they do not want to. It is an absolute financial possibility for an export warehouse that is not a bonded warehouse to bootleg on an extensive scale into our Provinces to the East, because of the duty and the high freight rates. I am free to admit that they can do a certain amount of bootlegging to the United States. But what has happened as a matter of experience? Under the Attorney General's regime there have been maintained a series of at least five or six warehouses at Fernie, on the boundary of Alberta, Cranbrook farther west, Greenwood, and so on, all along the American boundary, and all from 200 to 300 miles inland from the coast. These people could not ship from the coast overseas to any legitimate trade, for the simple reason that the freight rates, apart from anything else, would not permit them; for it is a known fact that you can ship freight from Montreal to Vancouver more cheaply than you can ship it from Fernie to Vancouver. So it is nonsensical to talk about shipping overseas from an interior point in the Province of British Columbia, importing your goods from Scotland and from Montreal to that interior point, breaking bulk, getting your orders, and then shipping on down to the coast. You would pay about three freight rates. There is only one thing that those houses along the boundary line could have remained there for, and that was to export either into the United States or into the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Are they bonded warehouses?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: They are bonded warehouses maintained under Dominion regulations, with the consent of the Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. REID: At his request.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: We have been told by the Department that those licenses would have been cancelled by the Federal Government had the Provincial consent at any time been withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. REID: The Provincial Government requested them in the first place.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: A regulation was brought in by the Dominion Government.

Now, the honourable gentlemen who leads the House brought here an opinion from the Justice Department to the effect that they could not refuse to grant licenses for those bonded warehouses.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Who could not refuse?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: The Federal Government. I have before me the regulation of the Department of Customs. It is very short: I will read it:

Ottawa, November 24, 1916.

To Collector of Customs,
Port of.. .. ..

Warehousing of Intoxicating Beverages to be Discontinued December 31, 1916, in Provinces and Districts where Provincial Prohibitory Laws are in force.

By order of the Minister of Customs, permission for the entry of intoxicating beverages in Customs bonded Warehouses of Class 2 and 3 is withdrawn and ceases to be in force from December 31, 1916, in all Provinces and Districts of Canada where the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited under Provincial Law unless the importer obtains and delivers to you the written consent of the proper Provincial Authority that such liquors may be kept in the Customs Bonded Warehouse described in such written consent.

You are instructed to give notice accordingly to proprietors of bonded warehouses and importers concerned at your port and outports.

Commissioner of Customs.

That has been in force and has been honoured throughout the whole country ever since 1916. The other day, after we had made the contention that the Attorney General of British Columbia maintained these warehouses, though he could have cancelled them at any time, the honourable gentleman went to the Department of Justice, and that Department furnished him with an opinion to the effect that this was ultra vires—that they never had any power to pass a regulation. That may or may not be right. I do not profess for one moment to set myself up as a legal authority in opposition to the Justice Department. But what I do say is this, that if the honourable the Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia had in honesty and sincerity desired to do away with those warehouses he would have refused his consent and tested the matter in the courts. He has in his Province a law—it is an iniquitous law, to my way of thinking—providing that there shall be no cost of any litigation given either for or against the Crown. He can carry his citizens into any court in the Province without any cost to himself, because of course he has his legal officers ready to carry on his litigation. Not only has he never tested the question, but he has never made any suggestion of testing it; he has never suggested to this Government that he could not refuse. On the other hand, he has given his consent consistently, and, in addition to the case which my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) cited a few moments ago, after the questions in connection with these matters were put on the Order Paper this year—and too late for me to get an answer to the particular question on this point—that is to say, on or about the 20th day of March last, he issued another consent to the transfer of a license to the city of Greenwood, a little town of 300 or 400 people, on the Kettle Valley railway, just north of the city of Spokane, where the railway runs across the border half-a-dozen times, I suppose, in 10 miles.

In the face of these facts, can there be attributed to the Attorney General any real desire to do away with export warehouses? As I say, the point is this. I am not defending those interior warehouses. I think they are there only for the one purpose, and I think he can abolish them, and he ought to abolish them. But I do not think that in order to do so he has any right to come here and tie to that grievance the whole question of private importation, which is a different question altogether. That is what the honourable gentleman is doing. He knows, as any citizen of British Columbia knows who was in the Province at the time those plebiscites and votes were taken, that it never for one moment entered into the minds of the people of the Province that the right of importation was to be restricted at all. I am perfectly satisfied to leave that absolutely to the judgment of anybody in the Province of British Columbia, with the exception of the Attorney General or any person behind him who happens to be asking for this legislation.

If I am right in that contention, I would suggest that there is only one way in which this controversy can be settled to the satisfaction of everybody, and that is to take a vote of the people. A Province that has voted for prohibition under the Doherty Act does not automatically go bone dry. In order to prevent the right of importation into the Province, a plebiscite is taken in the Province, under the auspices of the Federal Government, and if the vote is yea the Province goes bone dry; if the vote is nay the right of private importation is maintained. Where the people of a Province have by a very large majority said, "We are not a prohibition Province, we believe in the right of the individual to buy liquor and use it if he chooses to do so," surely it is only logical to say, "You shall have the right of private importation," if the same right is given to a Province which has voted in favour of prohibition.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, as we are now dealing with the whole section, I beg to move the following amendment:

To strike out subsection five and insert in lieu thereof:

5a. Upon receipt by the Secretary of State of Canada of a duly certified copy of an order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of any province in which there is at any time in force a law vesting in His Majesty or the executive government of the province authority for the control and sale of intoxicating liquor in the province or in any board, commission, officer, or other governmental agency, the right of selling intoxicating liquor in the province requesting that the votes of the electors may be taken for or against the following prohibition, that is to say:

"That the importation and the bringing of intoxicating liquors into such province may be forbidden."

The Governor in Council shall proceed to take a vote on such question in the manner provided in section 152, and the provisions of sections 152 and 152A and 153 shall as far as applicable mutatis mutandis apply to the taking of such vote.

5b. If the prohibition is declared to be in force, the Governor in Council may by proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette" declare the prohibitions of subsection 1 of this section in that province, and the same shall thereupon be and continue in force therein,

Hon. M. BELCOURT: May I point out to my honourable friend that in my opinion it is a mistake to say that the Province shall do this or do that. I do not think that we have any power of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He does not say that.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I do not think I have said that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, that the Province "shall." The word "may" should be used.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Before my honourable friend takes his seat, may I be permitted to ask him a question? He is more familiar with the Bill than I am. I would like to know the difference between the Bill as introduced last year and this one. There seems to be a wide difference between them.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: The Bill as introduced this year is in terms identical with the Bill as introduced last year. So it is only fair to assume that the measure introduced both this year and last year were in the terms requested by the Attorney General of British Columbia. Owing to the opposition that developed in the House of Commons, the Minister of Justice offered certain amendments which, while hitting at the export warehouses, continued the right of private importation. As a matter of fact, the contention of those who were opposed to this legislation is, and always has been, that the export warehouses are not within the control of the Provincial Government of British Columbia; therefore that this legislation is absolutely unnecessary, so far as that phase of the situation is concerned. Our position to-day is that if the people of British Columbia declare by popular vote that they want this, we shall have nothing more to say; but we do not see why we should be deprived of the right to have the people speak on this question, just as they do in a Province which has gone dry, as we have not.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I ask my honourable friend, before he sits down, if he has thought of imposing the cost of this plebiscite upon the Provincial Government? I understand that the Canada Temperance Act provides that the cost of a plebiscite shall be borne by this Government. Now, I know of no more lucrative business than the liquor business carried on by the Provinces that have engaged in it, and if the Province of British Columbia clears up three or four or more million dollars a year out of this advantageous business, I see no reason why the cost of the plebiscite should not be borne by it. Those costs should not be borne by this long-suffering Federal Government upon whom are imposed from time to time all the onerous burdens of the indebtedness of the Dominion. The only regret I have is that the Dominion Government has not assumed control and entered upon the carrying on of this business from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It seems to me that no better solution could be found for meeting our public indebtedness than that of taking control of the liquor business from coast to coast. That is what should have been done at the start. I would therefore suggest to my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Barnard) that if he wants to make this an interesting subject in the province of British Columbia he should charge the province with the cost of this plebiscite.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I would say to my honourable leader, in regard to that, that so far as we in the province of British Columbia are concerned I think the question does not interest us.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a trivial matter. However, provision should be made for the cost, one way or the other; otherwise we have to pay the cost.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Under the amendment the cost would be on the Federal Government. My reason for drawing the amendment in this way was that I wished not to differentiate as to cost between a province which has gone bone dry and a province which has gone in for Government control. I see myself no particular reason why, if this Government is going to interfere with these matters of provincial concern, they should make flesh of one province and fish of another. However, if it makes the slightest difference to the principle involved, I for my part am quite content to accept an amendment placing the cost upon the Province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED The Province will be less likely to submit a plebiscite it it has to pay the cost of it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman a question about the proposed amendment. I do not quite understand it. The Province of Manitoba is to take a referendum some time this month; I think it is on the 23rd: "Are you in favour of Government control of liquor?" Let us assume that the answer is in the affirmative. Do I understand that we would then have to take another referendum as to the right to import intoxicating liquor?

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Unless we amend the Act in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: We would have to take a referendum over again? This is a matter of importance to the Province of Manitoba. If the referendum should be answered in the affirmative, the whole liquor policy of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would be changed. I would have much preferred that this vote should not be taken, at all events until we knew the result of the referendum. Every member from the Province of Manitoba who dealt with the question was inclined to agree with the attorney General of that Province and vote in favour of the Bill as it stands at present.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But the Province of Manitoba may not wish to dispense with the right of private importation.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I has been dispensed with already.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it has not.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: At the present time we cannot import liquor into that Province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under your present law; but if the Provincial Government assumes control of the traffic then the right of importation obtains.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Will that necessarily follow?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes just the same as in British Columbia and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Suppose the local Government say, "We do not want private importation," then it will be necessary to have another referendum?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Why should they not ask the question as to private importation in the referendum they are taking? I assume that the people of Manitoba who are conducting this referendum know exactly what is the situation and what is the law in the different Provinces to-day. If they had any doubts all they would have to do is put the question to their electors. They could do it now.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: But the honourable gentleman's amendment was not in at the time that the question was proposed.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: My amendment will not affect them.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: To my mind the whole situation is this. There should be two proposals to choose from—Government control or prohibition. If Government control is not made a success then you will have prohibition. If you cannot make either prohibition or Government control a success, then you have nothing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Except anarchy and chaos.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: So far as I am concerned, I intend to vote for my Province receiving the right to prohibit the right to private importation of liquor. Feeling as I do on this question, how can I consistently say to the Province of British Columbia, "I am going to refuse you something which I would give to my own Province."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Barnard) proceeds upon the assumption that British Columbia has not expressed its will on this question. I think I can demonstrate to the satisfaction of any one of my hearers who is not violently prejudiced in this matter that British Columbia has expressed itself in no uncertain terms. The people of British Columbia were asked: "Are you in favour of the present Prohibition Act, or are you in favour of Government control?" By 35,000 majority the answer was: "We are in favour of Government control."

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: Direct importation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What did that mean to the mass of the people of British Columbia? It meant that the Government would have the exclusive sale of liquor. Now, my honourable friend says—and the point was made by the leader of the opposition in the other House that the people knew that constitutionally they were retaining the right to cable to Glasgow or Bordeaux or Paris to get their wine or Scotch whiskey. This is a happy illustration of what a lawyer can do; but I affirm here that 99 per cent of the people of British Columbia never had in their mind that they were sacrificing anything when they said "Government control." Ninety-nine per cent of the people of British Columbia had never in their lifetime ever thought of buying liquor abroad. Ninety-nine per cent of the people of British Columbia to-day do not think of buying abroad—why?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Will my honourable friend pardon me, for a moment? I do not know that he has ever lived in a prohibition province; I do not think he has; but the people of British Columbia did, and we had a prohibition Act there, and at the same time we had the right of private importation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Expressed in that Act?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: In that Prohibition Act, and the people of British Columbia were very much alive, I can assure honourable gentlemen, to their right to import, and they did import very extensively prior to the coming into force of the present Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, we will discuss now where those people are importing from. I say 99 per cent of the people of British Columbia never imported a pint or a bottle of whiskey or of wine into the province from outside.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then why did they ask for the repeal of the law, if 99 per cent have not done so?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We will discuss that point in a moment, but I want to establish first that the masses of the people of British Columbia never had in their mind the thought that they were renouncing a right, because most of them did not know of that right; and 99 per cent of the people did not utilize it, because they could not afford to, for it takes a man of some means to import from Glasgow or from France. I know what takes place in a city that is fairly prosperous, the city of Montreal, and I venture to affirm that no man in his senses will dare to say that when the plebiscite was taken, and the question was put to the people of British Columbia, the people thought they were retaining the right of importing. They were sacrificing the right of buying from the corner grocery in order to buy from the Government agency.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I think the honourable gentleman is putting the boot on the wrong foot. They may not have thought they were retaining any right, but they certainly did not think they were giving up a right that they already had.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I say that the people of British Columbia did not care a fig for that question of their right of importation, and never thought about it; they had never utilized it. They could not utilize it, because they could not think of cabling to Glasgow for a few bottles of whisky, or to Bordeaux for a dozen bottles of wine. What man in his senses will say that that was not the state of things when the plebiscite was taken? I know that some have thought they were retaining that right, and they valued it; but who were they? A small privileged class of prosperous people, the small aristocratic set in British Columbia.

Well, shall we force the people of British Columbia to go back to the poll for that small aristocratic set which says, "I want to have the right to buy my own brand of liquor?"

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Why not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) said that there were 79 brands of Scotch whisky in the liquor houses of the Government. Surely that offers a liberal choice, and surely among those brands there must have been some good ones; and I am officially authorized by the Attorney General to say that he is ready to take the order of any of the honourable members of this House for whatever they please, but in order to be on the same plane as the common people of British Columbia, they should stand the same conditions as to price.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He is looking for trade.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, he is looking for what the people voted for—control. The Attorney General is not assuming powers. The people said, "Control." Can there be control if anyone can buy outside? Everybody else seems to admit that there was an extraordinary condition of things in British Columbia—that every private importer or export house was doing the business of bootlegging. It is admitted on all hands that there was bootlegging in British Columbia. Will anyone stand up here and say there is none? Will any member from British Columbia say there is none?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Will the honourable gentleman say there is none in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I do not say there is none in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Or in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I do not say there is none in Ontario. But as to Quebec I have theauthority of the Attorney General, Hon. Mr. Taschereau, who has wired me that he is strongly in favour of this measure.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Will the honourable gentleman say that if this legislation goes through there will be no bootlegging in British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I do not say that; but my honourable friend says, "Look at those export houses along the border," and he denounces them. I say, let him join with me and wipe them out.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: There is no necessity to do it in this way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then apparently there is no hurry in the mind of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The Attorney General can wipe them out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Attorney General cannot wipe them out.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Why?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because, as I have already stated, the opinion of the Customs Department and the Department of Justice is that once a license is issued it is granted for an unlimited space of time. Of course, it can be withdrawn, but I have a statement from the Customs Department that they would allow as much as two years and more for a man who has a customs warehouse to dispose of the goods that are in it.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: That is not in accordance with the reply which was given to the House by the Customs Department in answer to a question. They said it could be cancelled at any time for cause, or withdrawn by provincial consent. They may have told something else to my honourable friend, of course. I am quite free to admit that in his official position he can possibly get answers from the Customs Department that a humble member of Parliament could not get; but we can only put questions on the Order Paper and take what they tell us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Now we are facing the situation in British Columbia—a general complaint that there is illegal business in liquor trading going on, and here we present a Bill by which we authorize British Columbia, and Quebec as well, to control the importation, or limit it to the Government and to the public carrier who comes into or through the province; and we permit the distiller to import for blending and flavouring—I do not say also the brewer, because I intend to move against the brewer.

Now, if it is demonstrated to me that the distillers throughout the country do not need this special advantage, let us wipe out the distiller; but if, on the other hand, the distiller needs to import for his legitimate trade, let us allow him that privilege. But that is all that is done by this Act, and the only argument that my honourable friend can put up against passing this Bill that will be that he is in favour of the export house. My honourable friend from New Westminster has admitted that he is in favour of the legitimate and honest export houses. Now he can make the distinction or where he will draw the line I do not know.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Would the honourable gentleman like me to tell him?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The Attorney General of British Columbia has at present authority in the Act to send his officers into every export house and make the most minute inquiries possible into the receipt of all liquor there, and into the dispatch of all liquor, and to obtain absolute knowledge as to every transaction within that export house. There could be nothing more complete than the power that the Act and the regulations combined give him. As to the expense of doing that, the tax now levied on the export house is $10,000 a year for each warehouse; so that out of that sum the Attorney General has money to make the inspection as thorough and complete as possible, and if he does his duty it is absolutely impossible for an export house so regulated to be engaged in bootlegging.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, the Attorney General states that he is doing his level best. He has increased the license fee from $3,000 to $10,000, which seems to indicate that he is working in that direction; he has quite a number of officers watching, for he says there is undoubtedly a danger in the existence of all those institutions, and he would prefer that they should disappear. It is for us to say whether we will give a province that has Government control that right to wipe out the export house. Everyone will take his responsibility. It is for the Senate to say whether we are in favour of wiping out the export house when a province asks for it.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: But the Province has not asked us; the Provincial Legislature put a limitation on its request to this House, and this House is being asked to go against the request of the Legislature of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is very hard to satisfy my honourable friend. Last year we brought in a Bill containing that clause that came as far as this House, and he protested vehemently against the whole Bill. Now we bring in an improved Bill by which we absolutely wipe out the export house. In the Bill that was introduced last year and in the Bill that was this year presented to the Commons, we proposed to give the Attorney General power to do away with the export house by his requesting the Federal Government to do so through an Order in Council; but the Hon. Mr. Stevens said in the other House: "Why do you delegate your power to the Attorney General, Mr. Manson, or to the Attorney General of any Province? You dispose of the Federal power, and you tell him that when he pleases he can instruct us to utilize it." The Minister of Justice said: "If this is your principal grievance, I will not delegate that power to the Attorney General; I will exercise it, and I will wipe out the export house." So the Bill comes here with the export house wiped out.

But that is not all. There remains that one per cent of the population that claims to have the desire to buy outside. Now, I say to that one per cent: "We will not legislate for you, or we should not; what is good for 99 per cent of the population should be good for the people who are at the head of that province."

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman whether he would not think that the right and privilege of the individual to import might have a very salutary effect on the prices that the Government might charge in a province?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest that that one per cent should stand up manfully, and, if they enjoyed their glass of whisky or wine, put up the price. No one can afford it better than they; they have the money; they are prosperous; they are the "classes" of British Columbia. Why do they not come down to the level of the masses, and do their little part in order to enrich their treasury by that much? My honourable friend can buy or order the liquor of his choice from the Government and pay the price, and he will not be paying more than he would by sending to Glasgow or Paris, because he has admitted that the provincial Government has seen fit to put a tax upon importations that brings them up to the price he would pay at the Government liquor store.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But they are blending it now, you see; they are mixing it; they are spoiling it, taking the pure liquor and mixing it with all sorts of ingredients—home brew and everything else—and that aristocratic one per cent have to drink hog-wash at the Government price.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no, they can give their order, and have their liquor in sealed packages. Now, I leave it to a jury of men of experience, who know what goes on throughout Canada and around them in their own province, and who know how small is that part of the population that buys through importation—I leave it to them to say whether I am exaggerating when I affirm that the proposed plebiscite would be as to whether only one per cent should relinquish their constitutional right.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: May I point out that it is not only one per cent who would relinquish that right. Although the 99 per cent do not perhaps exercise it, they have that right, and that is what we wish to preserve to them. Every other province in the Dominion of Canada has that right; before any prohibitory measure is put in force over the people of any Province, there must be a plebiscite submitted, and that is all we ask for the people of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But you have had your plebiscite.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: The honourable leader speaks of the conditions in British Columbia, but I do not know that he should put his views so strongly against those of members who live there. We surely must know conditions there better than he does.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend forgets that I am backed by two-thirds of the Legislature of his Province; and he must not forget, either, that there was a plebiscite which united on this question not only the Liberals, but labour men, if there are any, and 35 Conservatives, and that is a respectable minority. But let us not forget a little incident of the last Provincial election in British Columbia: it is quite interesting.

Hon. Mr. PLANTA: The last Provincial election was bought and paid for by the liquor interests.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will revert to that in a moment, because there is something that has amused me very much: it has been the indignation of honourable gentlemen from British Columbia at the suggestion that money would be offered to party funds for resistance to this legislation. Not one of them got up without insinuating that the Legislature of British Columbia was being corrupted, and that corruption funds were being gathered for the next election.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: The honourable gentleman never heard me make any such suggestion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have it from the lips of the honourable gentleman from New Westminister who spoke half an hour ago of what would happen in answer to my honourable friend, the senior member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt). My honourable friend said, in a very solemn tone, that it was rumored in British Columbia that a considerable corruption fund was being organized for the corruption of the electorate at the next provincial election.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, and in addition to that we had this private letter from the Attorney General of British Columbia to the Solicitor General of Canada, which he asked the Solicitor General of Canada to keep mum, and not to make public, warning the Solicitor General of Canada that there were involved in this Legislation large contributions to the election funds of both parties.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the letter which I cited, of the 16th of January?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; he said, "There will be a considerable fund which will be organized to resist my legislation."

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, if my honourable friend will read that letter;and this will explain the state of mind of that gentleman, which seems to be general in British Columbia, if I may judge by the speeches I have heard. That state of mind of the Attorney General, as disclosed by the letter of the 16th January, explains the letter of the 24th or 26th that my honourable friend has read.He feels so certain that considerable efforts will be made by the Pooh-Bahs of the bootlegging business to stop this legislation which he desires that on the 26th he says that he should perhaps give them time to dispose of their stocks.

At the last Provincial election, the people of British Columbia voted with unanimity in favour of Government control. The Liberals ranged themselves in favour of complete control, and the other elements, with the exception of the members in opposition, did likewise. It is conceded that in popular houses the function of an Opposition is to oppose, but what did they say to the people at the preceding election? They said this in their pamphlet to the electors:

This new Government—the Conservative Government to be, if the Opposition won, of course—

—will also use every effort with the Dominion Government, within whose jurisdiction the matter lies, to see that Legislation is passed at Ottawa which will stop the importation of liquor into this Province by private parties so that all liquor purchased and sold in British Columbia will be absolutely under Government control.

If this was in the pamphlet of the Conservative party at the last provincial election, I say we must treat with some reserve the vote of the official Opposition in the Legislature, particularly when the members forming the majority have asked this Parliament to enact this legislation.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Where did that information come from?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It comes in that famous letter of the Attorney General of British Columbia, who cites from page 14 of the Conservative pamphlet this expression of opinion. This has not been challenged, and I take it for granted that when the Attorney General cites from a public document he is pretty sure of his facts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We want something more than that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Conservative campaign literature is not very reliable.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One honourable gentleman from British Columbia says that not only the Conservatives but the Prohibitionists were against this Legislation. I do not admit that statement, and I think I shall be able to show that it is incorrect. I said to my honourable friends that the Rev.

Mr. Cooke and the Rev. Mr. Peck were in favour of the legislation. The Hon. Mr. Stevens quoted in another place a letter that apparently came from Prohibition headquarters, without giving the signature or the date, and the Attorney General wrote to the Rev. W. W. Peck, Secretary and Organizer of the B.C. Prohibition Party, in Vancouver, on the 10th of May, 1923, citing that part of Mr. Stevens' speech, and asking if the statement made emanated from the Prohibition organization in British Columbia.

In closing he said:

I have already discussed the matter with the Rev. Mr. Cooke, the Presidents of your Association, and the has assured me that he had no knowledge of the letter until I drew it to his attention—that it was not written by anyone authorized to so write by the Prohibition Association of the Province or its Executive, and Mr. Cooke gave me to understand that insofar as his personal attitude was concerned he was entirely in sympathy with the legislation I was seeking at Ottawa to prohibit private importation of liquor into this Province and in particular the importation by export concerns, it being understood, of course, that Mr. Cooke did not approve of the Government Control system, but was a firm believer in complete prohibition. If you would care to express your personal views with regard to the legislation I would appreciate it very much.

I have a copy of the letter from the Rev. Mr. Peck of the 11th of May, to the Hon. A. M. Manson, K.C., Attorney General, Victoria, B.C., which is as follows:

Dear Mr. Manson:

I have your favour dated May 10th, 1923, in which you write regarding a statement reported in the House of Commons Debates as having been made by the Hon. H. H. Stevens on the 2nd day of May, 1923. This statement begins: "I have in my hand a letter from the B.C. Prohibition Association dated February 1st of this year and I want to read it for the purpose of showing the attitude of mind of a large section of the public in regard to this legislation and in justification of my position to-day."

I have attended, I believe, all the meetings of the B.C. Prohibition Association and of its Executive held during the last eight months and have no knowledge of our Association or of its Executive having taken any official stand on this point, or having authorized anyone to make any representation to any party on their behalf. The statement made by Mr. Stevens must have been the private view of someone interested in this matter.

Regarding my personal view I am of the opinion that the free importation of liquor as now permitted has attracted to British Columbia a class of individuals who have evinced little or no regard for good social or moral conditions; whose interest is purely monetary. Their desire seems to have been to use the present freedom of importation to enable them to send virtually unlimited quantities of liquor into Prohibition Provinces and into Prohibition United States. Our information is that when they could succeed in doing so that they did not hesitate to become the source of supply for bootleggers in British Columbia. I am satisfied that stopping of their supply would result in a better feeling between British Columbia and sister Provinces, an improved feeling between British Columbia and the Western States, and a decided improvement in social and moral conditions in our Provinces.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

You, of course, understand that personally I am opposed to the Government Control system in the handling of liquor and I am a believer in a complete prohibition that would make all importation impossible except for scientific, manufacturing, medicinal and sacramental purposes. You have my entire sympathy in your efforts to improve conditions in our Province.

With very kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

W. W. Peck.

Honourable gentlemen will see that this is not the same tune that we hear in this Chamber. Here are two reverend gentlemen—the Rev. Mr. Cooke, President of the Association, and the Rev. Mr. Peck, Secretary of the Association—who assure Mr. Manson that they are with him in his efforts to wipe out bootlegging. They make but one reservation—that they favour complete prohibition.

I close now, honourable gentlemen. I think that this matter, after very many speeches, perhaps represents much ado about nothing. We simply state in this Bill that when a Province has declared in favour of Government control we will allow that Province to give effect to the will of the people; and, furthermore, that, if they feel that the export houses are an eyesore and a danger to the public morals of the community, we will wipe them out. With this in view, I say it would be cruel to ask British Columbia or any other province, that to-day needs to implement its legislation by what we are offering, to go to an expense of from $75,000 to $100,000 for a plebiscite; more especially when a plebiscite may be taken in six months or a year or a year and a half, because that is all that remains of the life of the legislature. It seems to me that it would be good policy and good sport on the part of the opponents of that Government to say: "You want that in order to show a clean bill of health. We will give you all you ask, but will judge you at the poll." I think that would be the fair stand to take, instead of assuming a share of the responsibility for the chaos which has prevailed in that Province for the last year or two.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, it is with some reluctance that I crave the indulgence of the House at this time of night, particularly after so lengthy a discussion of this subject, while I make a few observations upon the question. Notwithstanding the heat which has been added to the heat of the day by the observations of my honourable friend, in which he has flagellated himself up to a state of ferment for the purpose of thoroughly enthusing himself upon this subject, I would venture to say that this is not the inflammatory matter that my honourable friend would seek to make of it. This is a very simple question. During the great war public sentiment was roused to the necessity of more or less moral reform, and we placed upon the Statute Book many measures which in cooler moments of statesmanship we would not have placed there; and I venture to say that if we were called upon to-day to consider similar measures there would be not only the greatest reluctance but a refusal to place them upon the Statute Book.

Among the measures dealt with at that time was an enlargement of the Canada Temperance Act. The movement started in Russia and finally reached the boundaries of Canada; and we concluded that what was good enough for Russia would be good enough for Canada. We consequently restricted the traffic in liquor to a very large extent. We constituted, so to speak, two systems, by which there could be prohibition or Government control of liquor in any Province, and which we would supplement, if necessary, by direct legislation. We classified the Provinces as prohibitory Provinces and wet Provinces, or dry Provinces and wet Provinces, as you choose to use the terms.

In pursuance of the legislation that we placed upon the Statute Book the Province of Quebec and the Province of British Columbia entered upon the control of the liquor traffic within their own boundaries. But there was preserved under the legislation which was then deliberately placed upon the Statute Book by the Dominion Government, with the concurrence of the Provinces themselves, the right of the private individual to import alcoholic liquor into those Provinces. If I am not right in that, I should like some honourable gentleman to correct me. That was a constitutional right given to the citizen at that time, and it was a statutory right. It had always been a constitutional right of the citizen under the Federal power of trade and commerce to import into the Province in which he lived, or any other Province, any article of commerce that he chose; and the Province of Quebec and the Province of British Columbia entered upon the control of the liquor trade within their boundaries subject to that right. I recollect with very much interest the emphasis placed by my right honourable friend the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E Foster) last session upon the value of the right of any individual living in any of the Provinces to import a superior brand of liquor from Scotland or any other country into the Province in which he lived, in pursuance of the power which the statute gave him.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Is my honourable friend referring to me?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. If my honourable friend will look at Hansard of last Session, he will observe that he placed a very great value upon the right which was given to the individual by the statute. I do not charge my honourable friend with very large importations from Scotland; but I am sure that, as a statesman of very great distinction and very long standing in the Dominion of Canada, he will appreciate the constitutional right which is given to the individual citizen, whether or not he be a large consumer of the commodity involved in this subject. I think if my honourable friend will review his observations of last Session, he will find that he placed considerable stress upon the value of such a right. It was done academically, I will admit.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think if my honourable friend will review the discussion of last year, he will not place the assertions with reference to myself in quite so exaggerated a form as he has done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am quite prepared to reduce the exaggeration, so to speak, and to place it on literal basis.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend would put water in his wine.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We approach this subject with each individual citizen in the province of Quebec, whose population numbers three millions, and each citizen of the Province of British Columbia, whose population numbers over half a million, possessed of this right, not only constitutionally but under statue.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Or the right to give it up.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or the right to give it up. My honourable friend in introducing this Bill deals with this right as a very trifling matter. I say it is one of the most important rights exercisable by the citizen; and why should it be treated as unimportant?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One per cent of the population—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not one per cent—one hundred per cent. This right extends to every man, woman and child in the Province of British Columbia and Quebec. I ask by what mandate the Province of British Columbia or the Province of Quebec has the right to say: "We demand that you wipe out the right of three and a half million citizens, and allow us to exercise it to the detriment of those three and a half million subjects"? The leader of the Government said that when this question was submitted to the electorate it involved the abandonment of that right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, I charge my honourable friend with exaggerating.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, we will put that on a literal basis.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I said it was a matter of total indifference to 99 per cent of the people, and that they could not consider it inasmuch as they had not the money to import.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is a very grave reflection upon the people of British Columbia. Does my honourable friend say that 99 per cent of the people of British Columbia are unable to import their liquor.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I say they are unable to buy it in such quantities as would justify their buying aboard.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend is entirely mistaken. He must know that the great Province of British Columbia has access to the four continents. It has one of the great ports of the world. Ships come in there from the seven seas, laden with the best of liquor, and all that a citizen of British Columbia has—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is his wholesaler or his retailer.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —to indicate to the foreign exporter, is that he wants a certain number of cases, and they come. He is asked now to abandon his right. My honourable friend has made the contention, not only to-night but on other occasions, that at a former plebiscite there was an implied abandonment of this particular right by the citizens of British Columbia. I say that is not the case. My honourable friend as a lawyer must know that no plebiscite can be submitted to the electorate without having in contemplation the statute as it appears upon the Statute Book. It must be assumed that when that vote was taken every voter in the Province of British Columbia knew that, notwithstanding what might be the result on that occasion, the right of private importation continued, and that until this Parliament repealed the law as it then stood on the Statute Book it was impossible to abolish that right of private importation.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Could that be consistent with Government control?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it could be.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, it could not be.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of course it could be.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let me point out to my honourable friend when it is consistent with Government control. My honourable friend may not be aware that the Province of Quebec has been very successfully carrying on Government control for some years, and has been clearing up no less a sum than approximately $5,000,000 a year. The Province of British Columbia, since it entered upon this enterprise, has been clearing up three of four million dollars a year. Yet my honourable friend the senior member for Ottawa (Hon Mr. Belcourt) says this is inconsistent with Government control. I cannot conceive of any more successful business than those two Provinces have entered upon.

Hon Mr. BELCOURT: That is not my point. My point is whether it was inconsistent with Government control, after the question was put to the electorate of British Columbia.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; I am prepared to maintain that likewise. I say in all seriousness that the best protection for provincial control is the retention of this right of the private citizen to import his own liquor.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is right.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If you wipe that out you hand over the exclusive right to the Province and entirely destroy the incentive of the Province to administer the liquor law in the interest of the people. In wiping out that right you say to the Province: "You may supply the people of this Province with the most deleterious liquors, the most poisonous mixtures, you choose." There is no way of remedying the abuse. The right of private importation is the only safeguard. I say in all seriousness ,and I think that honourable gentlemen will on consideration agree with me, that it is the only guarantee we have that the Province will administer its liquor laws wisely and well, and in behalf of the people.

If honourable gentlemen will recall the observations made by my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) a few nights ago, they cannot fail to recognize immediately the necessity of this right being retained as a guarantee that the citizens of British Columbia shall get a fair brand of liquor; otherwise they have to consume the deleterious mixtures which are prepared by the local Government, and which deal out destruction and death.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are 79 brands of whisky.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But here is a right by which the citizen may import from any of the markets of the world the very best liquors that can be had, and at a price which must necessarily regulate the market in British Columbia and the Province of Quebec. I say honourable gentlemen, that this is no mean right, that this is the one of the constitutional rights, applying to three and one-half millions of people, and it should not be lightly treated. The suggestion of my honourable friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Barnard) that the question should be submitted by a plebiscite to the people is the only logical way of determining it. If the people of British Columbia are willing to abandon this right under a plebiscite, then we will accept their decision without any resistance; but if a plebiscite is submitted and they refuse to abandon it, the Government of British Columbia must simply proceed to regulate the traffic as is being done at present, and must be satisfied with the making of a paltry three or four millions of dollars, the amount which they are realizing to-day.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How long is it since the last plebiscite was taken?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In 1920.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It would be costly to this Government to have plebiscites every two or three years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: When the plebiscite was taken in 1920, no claim was made that the right of private importation should be abandoned. That claim appeared only before this last Session.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is mistaken. A document has been read from the Premier of British Columbia, addressed to the honourable gentlemen's Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, well, we did not give any serious attention to that. The Premier of British Columbia did that in a Pickwickian sense, I may say to my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The communication was couched in a very respectful terms.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But British Columbia merrily entered upon the regulation of the liquor traffic, with most satisfactory results. They have been extremely successful. Can it be owing to dissatisfaction at not having made sufficient money out of the traffic that they ask for this additional concession?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. It is to stop bootlegging.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will deal with that, again. Let me tell my honourable friend that this will never stop bootlegging.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In a certain measure it will.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does my honourable friend take that letter for gospel? My honourable friend must not forget the retraction which the Attorney General of British Columbia made to this Chamber in a humble and contrite spirit, which the Scripture says should not be despised.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Seemingly the honourable gentleman cannot forgive or forget.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let me deal with that question of bootlegging. My honourable friend must be very credulous as to the resourcefulness of human nature if he thinks for one moment that the abolition of warehouses will prevent bootlegging. I say to-night in all seriousness that the bootlegging from export warehouses is in a sense a satisfactory guarantee of the quality of the liquor which will be trafficked. You do not wipe out bootlegging entirely. I may tell my honourable friend that there is as much bootlegging in Quebec as in British Columbia, and there is probably more bootlegging in the Province of Ontario than in either. There is not a Province in the Dominion of Canada in which bootlegging is not one of the dominant sources of trade to-day. If importation is suppressed, then liquor will be manufactured locally and bootlegging will be carried on with the most deleterious mixtures that can be compounded. I know whereof I speak. I know that in my own Province the serious bootlegging is not confined to the liquor which is brought in from British Columbia, but is connected with the traffic in liquors which are made locally and which are the most poisonous mixtures that could be administered to a human being. Therefore I say that, so far as bootlegging is concerned, this is one of the safest guarantees that we have as to the quality of the liquor.

Let me deal further with this question. We have placed upon our Statute Book a law which has had the result—and I say it is a shame to the Parliament of Canada—that a reservoir of liquor is established upon the Atlantic and another reservoir of liquor upon the Pacific, from which the intervening country can be supplied, and will be supplied for all time to come. Do honourable gentlemen fancy that with those enormous reservoirs on both oceans, at both ends of Canada, to supply the intervening parts of the country if necessary, we can stamp out the liquor traffic? Not at all. Yet we talk of regulating those enormous reservoirs that are making millions of money, and we talk of suppressing and wiping out bootlegging. Why, honourable gentleman, it is absurd. Those Provinces exercising Government control of the liquor traffic have practically abandoned provincial government. They have gone into the liquor business, the most lucrative business in which they can engage. Their revenues from that traffic far transcend the revenues of any other branch of the Provincial service, and to-day they are concentrating much of their attention upon the carrying on of this traffic, to the detriment of the whole Dominion. I say, honourable gentlemen, that if we are sincere in this matter the present legislation should be wiped from off the Statute Book. We should start anew and should see that all the provinces are placed upon a parity. The Parliament of Canada should not be a party to the trafficking in liquor and the amassing of millions of dollars, as it is to-day, when humanity is suffering from the demoralization that is caused not only in those provinces, but in the intervening provinces of Canada.

Honourable gentlemen talk about suppressing the evils of the bootlegging traffic by simply abolishing the individual's right to import liquor into British Columbia or Quebec. It shakes one's confidence in the intelligence of human nature to think that people are so credulous as to believe that reformation can be brought about by twaddle of that kind.

There is a statute giving to the people of the Province of Quebec and the Province of British Columbia the right to import liquor. There has been no pronouncement upon it by the people of either province. It is a right which is valuable entirely apart from the particular subject to which it refers. It is something more than the right to import liquor. It is a constitutional right, guaranteed to the subject by statute, and before the subject abandons his right there should be a pronouncement by the people of the province, whether it is Quebec, British Columbia or any other province, that they deliberately abandon that right which has been guaranteed to them by the constitution and by statute. Until that pronouncement is made the right should be preserved to them in its entirety.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is not that valuable right abolished when, as the result of a prohibition plebiscite only 51 per cent of the population vote aye? Are not 49 per cent obliged to submit and to surrender that valuable right, because of the vote of one per cent of the population?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What we are asking is that a plebiscite be taken. If 51 per cent of the people of British Columbia vote for the abolition of that right, then we shall bow to the wishes of that province and willingly give them the legislation which they seek; but we will not submit because some Attorney General of a province, confident in all the powers and importance of his office—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And with a majority behind him.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —says to the Dominion Government: "My ambition is to control absolutely the liquor traffic in this great province." He demands from the Dominion Government that they barter and destroy the right of the people of his Province and give it into his hands, that he may tyrannically and exclusively exercise that control. If I know the Province of British Columbia, or if I know any of the provinces of this Dominion of Canada, they resent the exercise of any arbitrary or exclusive power by any provincial official, no matter how important or unimportant he may be.

Honourable gentlemen, it is not reasonable that the Province of British Columbia, which has been coining money out of the liquor business and clearing up three or four million dollars a year, distributing it lavishly amongst the municipalities and other bodies in the Province has money enough to hold a Columbia: "You have the right to import liquor into this Province: we desire to exercise the exclusive right of importation." The people should be asked to vote on the question whether the Province should exercise that exclusive right or whether the right of private importation should be retained. The Province has money enough to hold a plebiscite. The right of the people of British Columbia should be conserved until by their voice, on a plebiscite, they signify their abandonment of that right which they have enjoyed in the past, and which is conserved to them by the Statute known as the Canada Temperance Act.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I want to point out to my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) that I think his argument with regard to one per cent only being effective is quite incorrect. It is true that in both Quebec and British Columbia the agitation for the referendum which resulted in Government control was started because the poor man in those provinces objected to the rich man exercising the right of importation while the poor man, who had the right, could not exercise it. He therefore said: "Give us government control, so that I may have a right which I can exercise—the right to get a bottle of liquor from a Government vendor, when I cannot import it." The vote for Government control in the Provinces of Quebec and British Columbia was in my opinion simply an announcement by the people in those Provinces that they desired to maintain that right for themselves.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to ask a question. If we take a vote on this proposed amendment, does that preclude us from amending other parts of the section?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I understand that my honourable friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Barnard) wanted to make sure that his amendment would be considered before we adopted the first clause. I thought he might have waited until we reached subsection 5 of the Bill. However, the adoption of the amendment would not preclude us from considering other amendments. At any rate, that is my view.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend's aim is to add the obligation of a plebiscite or a referendum?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Yes. The effect of the amendment is that the prohibitions provided in the rest of the section shall not come into effect until a plebiscite has been taken.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: But that should apply to all the provinces as well as British Columbia, because there is a question far beyond anything that has been dealt with in this House. It affects all the liquor enactments in the country. On the part of Nova Scotia I object to that very strongly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of my honourable friend to this fact, that he is throwing upon the Governor in Council, which is the Dominion Government, the obligation to hold a plebiscite. My conviction is that he is forcing the Federal Government to take a hand in this matter, and to employ its own machinery and the money of the people of Canada in general, in order to allow a province to express its wish. I suggest to my honourable friend that he amend his amendment in order to allow the alternative of a referendum or plebiscite by the provincial authorities themselves. I think we might as well reject the Bill as to vote for the honourable gentleman's amendment, which would defeat the object that the Province may have in view by throwing upon the Federal Government the responsibility of testing the wish of every province in such matters.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Does my honourable friend desire that the amendment of the honourable member from Victoria should be amended in that regard?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I am not amending; I am voting against the amendment, because I believe that British Columbia has already expressed its will. But it seems to me that if my honourable friend wants a plebiscite to be held in his province he should not ask that the Federal Government be the only authority to have a plebiscite. His amendment limits it to the Federal Government.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am quite prepared to move an amendment to that effect, and I would move that the amendment before the House be further amended by providing that.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Perhaps the amendment might simply be amended by saying "the Lieutenant Governor in Council" instead of "the Governor in Council."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In general terms I think it should be stated that this Act should come into force by a proclamation after the submission of a plebiscite by the Provincial Government.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think you have only to substitute for "the Governor General in Council" the words "the Lieutenant Governor of the province."

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Of British Columbia.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, because this will apply to any province.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I am prepared to substitute "Lieutenant Governor" for "Governor."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The honourable member from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) has been good enough to suggest that the word "Lieutenant" come in before the word "Governor," and that will solve the whole problem.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: But Manitoba is taking a vote on Friday and wants to avail itself of this legislation. Why tie up Manitoba?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The legislation cannot come into effect before Friday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Manitoba would require a second plebiscite.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: This amendment should be confined to British Columbia.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But my honourable friend has been battling for the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am making it general.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I know this House is restive, and it is a warm summer night, and we have had a long discussion, but I do not feel satisfied with the position that the question is in at the present moment. I think we are putting on a motion the exact effects of which we do not yet understand, and I am going to ask the House to let this matter lie over until to-morrow. I think we cannot give it too much consideration. I do not know just what the effect of this amendment is, and I find it impossible to make it clear to my mind what it does mean, how far it goes, and what will be its results. Prima facie I am not in favour of tacking on to this legislation such a provision, at least as it appears to be from what I have gathered from it. I would be far better pleased if we could leave it over until to-morrow, and decide it then. Why not? If it is a good thing, it cannot run any risk if we pass another night over it. If it is a thing which has some disadvantages in it, we will not make a mistake if we give it more consideration, and take no steps which we will afterwards have to retrace. My own view is very strongly that this matter should be left over till another day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, we may be pressed a little for time if there is to be prorogation before the end of next week, but I am disposed to abide by the suggestion of my honourable friend. However, I am in the hands of the House.

The Hon. The CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been altered to read:

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall proceed to take a vote on such question in the manner provided in any such province.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Surely that is not the form of the motion—that the Lieutenant-Governor should proceed to take—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is not the Lieutenant-Governor in Council who shall proceed to take the vote. That is not the proper wording.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is exactly the wording that exists in the law as far as the Federal authority is concerned; why not provincial?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It does not say "shall." It says "may."

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I think "may" would be better.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: It reads now:

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may proceed to take a vote on such question in the manner provided in section 152.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Barnard was agreed to: contents, 31; non-contents, 18.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to move to strike out all the words of subsection 3 after the word "accused" in the fifth line, and substitute the following, so that subsection 3 will read:

(3) The burden of proving the right to import intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be imported, or to send, take or transport intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be sent, taken or transported into any province shall be on the person accused.

The following words are added:

—and where the person accused is a person duly licensed by the Government of Canada to carry on the business or trade of a distiller the burden shall also be on him of proving that all intoxicating liquor imported by him is imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending with or flavouring the products of trade of a distiller carried on by him in the Province, and that all intoxicating liquor imported and kept by him in the Province is kept in a liquor warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses, and that all intoxicating liquors imported by him, or liquor imported by him, is used solely for blending or flavouring the products of his said business or trade.

This will have the effect of purging subsection 3 of the condition under which export houses could receive and keep intoxicating liquor in a province, since we have removed the export houses.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does the honourable gentleman's amendment affect the private importation?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will read the clause as it is.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do you strike out the distillers?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I should have struck out first the words "or brewer," so I move to strike out those words in the fourth line of subsection c.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Those words come in three distinct times.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My motion is to strike out those words wherever they appear in that subsection.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Do I understand that this section applies now only to dry provinces?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; it extends only to the provinces that have Government control.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It has only to do with the blending of liquors, and brewers do not blend liquors.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Does my honourable friend propose to go any further with that section? I raised a question in the general discussion of the Bill as to just what that meant. If you are going to allow a distillery, there may be one or ten or fifty. You may have regular distilleries, and you may have mushroom distilleries, as they have been called here; but what is to happen if you allow a man or a company which establishes a distillery, and commences business, to import intoxicating liquors of all kinds and blend and mix them? If blending or mixing is carried on by the distillers at present, and is a necessary and normal adjunct of their business, something might be said for it, but to my mind this makes it possible for a distillery, once it is established in British Columbia, to mix drinks and blend them, flavour them, and stimulate the process in any way it chooses. It is entirely apart from the general idea of a distillery, which is that out of your raw product you gradually get what is a potable product, and the best product, as it is said, by a system of maturing; and all our warehouse arrangements have been based upon that system of age and supervision for the maturing. But it looks as though it would be possible under this section to put up one, two, three or a dozen or twenty or thirty or forty distilleries in the province of British Columbia and allow them to import and blend and mix. I ask my honourable friend to look into that question very thoroughly, because it seems to me it is a loophole of tremendous size.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I confess I know nothing of the business of a distiller. I have asked what was the occasion for the blending and flavouring process, because it would be simply for those two ends that they would have the right to import. I have obtained this statement—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would suggest that we adjourn this until to-morrow, because this question of blending is bound to occupy some considerable time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not intend to press the point to-night, but this explanation of blending and maturing has been put in to my hands, and between this time and to-morrow afternoon I will find what breweries in Canada are using this blending process:

Blending—By this term is meant the mixing of two or more different whiskies. These may be all pot-still products, but more generally are mixtures of patent and pot-still spirits. In the first case, the object of blending is to preserve uniformity of character; in the second, to obtain a milder, more uniform and also cheaper product than is furnished by pot-still spirit alone. The pronounced flavour of "self-whiskies"—the unblended products of individual distilleries—suits the taste of comparatively few consumers, whereas the blend appeals to a very much larger number. As practised in Scotland, the blending of pot-still and patent-still whisky is for the purpose of producing two distinct classes of spirits:—(1) mildly flavoured whisky of particular characters and good quality; and (2) a cheap but palatable whisky. As regards the latter, patent-still spirit costs less to manufacture than pot-still spirit, and if mixed with immature pot-still whisky —which is naturally cheaper than the fully matured article—the unpleasant taste is toned down, so that the mixture becomes more palatable. The proportion of pot-still whisky in these cheap blends depends chiefly upon the price: the cheapest may contain as little as 10 per cent, or less.

Maturing.—The flavour of newly-distilled whisky is crude and unpleasant. This is particularly the case with pot-still whisky, which contains more of the secondary constituents than the patent-still product. By storage in wooden casks certain changes are brought about in the character and amount of the secondary constituents, with the result that the flavour is improved. This process is "maturing"; it is effected more readily in the patent-still whisky than in that from pot-stills, which is often stored for many years in the wood. Casks which have previously held sherry are frequently used for the purpose, and new casks sometimes receive a preliminary treatment with a sweet wine before being employed for the maturing of whisky. Much the greater quantity of the spirit, however, is matured in plain wood.

My right honourable friend asks: is it necessary that the distiller should have the privilege of importing intoxicating liquor for blending and flavouring purposes? The answer to my inquiry is not absolutely satisfactory.

I have been answered yes. But I would like to have a further confirmation of that statement. If the distiller in the general course of his business does not need this privilege, we could perhaps dispense with the whole clause, which concerns only brewers and distillers; if the distiller does need this privilege, I will submit the amendment which I proposed, to strike out the word "brewer," and the further clause will have to be amended so as to harmonize.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I also made some inquiry from persons whom I considered good authority, and the suggestion that came to me was that this was a first-class method of making the whole thing a farce and a joke.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to ask the leader of the Government to consider another amendment. Subsection 2, paragraph a, reads as follows:

Intoxicating liquor which has been purchased by or on behalf of, and which is consigned to His Majesty or the Executive Government of the Province into which it is being imported, sent, taken or transported; or any board, commission, officer or other Governmental agency which, by the laws of the Province, is vested with the right of selling intoxicating liquors—

I want to ask the leader of the Government to consider the advisability of striking out the words "officer or other Governmental agency," so that it will read:

And board or commission which, by the laws of the Province, is vested with the right of selling intoxicating liquors.

In the province of Ontario it is the Government alone which sells intoxicating liquors. I do not like the words "Governmental agency," because under them private parties could be appointed as agents. I would like to see the law carried out in British Columbia as it is in the province of Quebec, so that that the liquor would be sold by the Government's own officers and not by some firm as a Government agency.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will examine into the suggestion.

Progress was reported.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Consideration of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole to Bill 139, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act.—Hon. Mr. Béique.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would move that the House go into Committee of the Whole in order to consider an amendment.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I would move to substitute the following for the proposed amendment to sub-clause 4 of clause 26:

Page 9, line 22.—After subclause (2) of clause 26 insert as subclause (3):

"(3) Subsection five of the said section is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

(5) (i) The Official Receiver or his nominee shall (be the chairman) at the first meeting of creditors. He shall decide any questions arising in connection with the appointment of the trustee by creditors, and from (any such) decision any creditor may appeal to the court;

(ii) At all (other) meetings the chairman shall be such person as the meeting by resolution appoints;

(iii) The chairman (of any meeting) may with the consent of the meeting adjourn the meeting from time to time and place to place."

Re-number subclauses (3) and (4) of clause 26 as (4) and (5).

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Beique was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I wish to say that last night, during the consideration of one amendment, I said that it had been given to me at the last moment. I find that the amendment has not the effect that I indicated yesterday. It merely has the effect of removing two or three words which have no meaning, and does not change at all the working of the law as regards the Winding-up Act or the Bankruptcy Act as it stands at present.

The Bill was reported, as amended.

CONCURRENCE IN AMENDMENTS

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved concurrence in the amendments to the Bill made in Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Honourable gentlemen, I thought the amendments were to be printed so that we would have some idea of what they are.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They have been printed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They are all right. We discussed them last night.

Hon. Mr. DANIELS: I have not had an opportunity of finding out what they are.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique) explained them most fully.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I certainly understood the leader of the Government to say that they would be printed and would be placed before us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are printed in the Minutes.

The said amendments were concurred in.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: There is not a man in the Senate who knows what he is voting for.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 20, 1923.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

LITTLE BRAS D'OR GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH OPERATOR

UNSATISFACTORY REPLY TO INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK: Honourable gentlemen, with regard to my inquiry concerning the dismissal of a telegraph operator at Little Bras d'Or, I desire to call attention to the unsatisfactory nature of the reply. I asked:

1. (a) Was Mrs. Richard, government telegraph operator at Little Bras d'Or, Cape Breton County, dismissed from office about two months ago? (b) For what cause?

The answer to that question is:

Yes, April 11th, 1923. In the interests of better service to the community.

I have some knowledge of that locality; it is in the neighbourhood of the place in which I live. I know that office and the woman who was in charge of it. It is a place that was a fishing community 15 or 20 years ago, but it has changed and is now an industrial community. I find that there was no complaint whatever with regard to the way the office was conducted, and when I am told in this answer that the operator was dismissed in the interests of the service, I say there was no ground whatever for that statement. When Mrs. Richard was ordered to give up the implements of the office, the position was offered to another person, but he did not accept it. The position was then peddled around to a second man, and he refused to take it.

Little Bras d'Or is a growing community. Not only is it engaged in fishing and farming, but it is also an industrial community of some size with a coal mine of 500 tons production a day. Yet that office, located in what might be called the business centre of the community, has been abolished and no one has been appointed to the vacant position. The public for the last two months have been deprived of any service whatever. That is a most shameful condition of affairs. It is something that ought to be remedied. Back in 1896, in the days of the Laurier Government, when complaints were made against public officials, inquiries were instituted as to how they had conducted themselves, and if on inquiry a man was found to have transgressed in any way as a partisan he was dismissed, as he deserved to be. When the Borden Government came into power a like procedure was followed. But in these days, when we have adopted the Civil Service idea, and when it might be expected that some attempt would be made to place positions on a proper basis, a position is abolished without any complaint whatever worthy of the name, but on the suggestion of some political heeler in the district, and the people of that growing industrial community have been without any service whatever in that respect for the last two months. This is something which I think should engage the attention of members of this Parliament, and should be remedied. There is no justification for the reason given in the answer for the dismissal. It is altogether against the interest of the community. I do not say that the operator was dismissed on a suggestion coming from upper quarters, but the Government ought to be careful in listening to suggestions of irresponsible persons, which have no doubt been made. There is no reason whatever for the dismissal of this woman, who has given very satisfactory service. I am altogether dissatisfied, and the people in that community will be dissatisfied, with the inadequate reason given for her dismissal, and they have a grievance because up to this time no appointment whatever has been made and the public down there are suffering from the closing up of that office.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I am not surprised at the statement made by my honourable friend that he is dissatisfied with the answer he has received. I read it for the first time when I communicated it to the Senate, and personnally I was not satisfied with it. I intend to acquaint my colleague of the Post Office with the remarks of my honourable friend, and to tell him that in my opinion the Senate is entitled to an answer more satisfactory in the spirit and the letter.

C.G.M.M. CANADIAN FARMER

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR called attention to omissions from answers to questions respecting insurance claimed for C.G.M.M. Canadian Farmer and inquired:

1. Who on behalf of the C.G.M.M. made the specifications for the repairs by the Prince Rupert Dry Dock Company for which repairs a bill of $8,500 was rendered by the company.

2. On what date or dates and at what place or places were these repairs inspected by Mr. T. Louden, Mr. C. McCoskrie and Mr. W. A. Wallace.

3. (a) Why was not the $8,500 claimed from the insurance underwriters included in the estimated amount receivable shown in the assets as at 31st December, 1922. (b) Has this amount or any part of it been paid yet by the underwriters; and if yes, how much. (c) Has there been resistance by the underwriters against this claim or any part of it, and if so on what grounds.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. Mr. T. Louden, Assistant Superintending Engineer, Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited.

2. Date Place Inspected by

Sept. 14, 1922, Vancouver, Mr. T. Louden,

Aug. 27, 1922, Prince Rupert, Mr. E. McCoskrie.

Sept. 14, 1922, Vancouver, Mr. W. A. Wallace.

After work commenced at Prinec Rupert, Chief Engineer Abraham was appointed to represent Mr. T. Louden, and Steamboat Inspector B. Mantrop to represent Classification Surveyor to supervise repair work. Final inspection made as above.

3. (a) $215.95 representing survey fees, etc., was paid by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine in 1922 and is not part of the $8,500 which is straight repair bill. This latter amount was not paid by the Management until April, 1923. Both these amounts are included in the claim against Underwriters. This claim is now in the hands of the Average Adjusters. (b) No portion has yet been paid by Underwriters. (c) There has been no resistance by Underwriters.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I call the attention of the honourable gentleman to the fact that the important part of the question is not answered yet. I asked why was not this $8,500 claimed from the underwriters shown in the insurance recoverable at the 31st of December?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will let the question stand, and will ask for an answer to the query of my honourable friend if it is not answered.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

DIFFERENTIAL RATES AGAINST HALIFAX

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

1. Is it the intention of the Government during the current session of Parliament to take any steps that may be necessary to abolish the differential freight rate of one cent per hundred pounds, which is now effective against the Port of Halifax in favour of Portland, U.S.A., and St. John, N.B?

2. If legislation in the matter is unnecessary will the Government otherwise cause the differential to be abolished?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This question has already been answered, but my honourable friend from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Tanner) stated that in the light of the stand taken by the Department of Railways and Canals in 1911, if I am not mistaken, the answer seemed to be incorrect. The supplementary answer I have received is as follows: When the statutory agreement, to which Hon. Senator Tanner refers, was reached between the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial Railways, they were separate and competing organizations. Now both lines are included in the National System, and the rate in question is therefore regarded as purely a matter of domestic arrangement.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Since the matter was up the other day, Mr. Dalrymple, who is, I think, Traffic Manager, or who holds some high position on the railway staff, visited the Maritime Provinces; and I want to read to my honourable friend a newspaper report of what he said on this subject, because there appears to be confusion between the Department and the Board of Railway Directors. As a similar report appeared in both Halifax newspapers, I presume it is correct:

On the question of the Halifax differential of one cent over St. John, he stated that he was in favour of the abolition of this. He was not in a position, however, to make an official announcement with regard to this. It would be necessary to confer with Ottawa as to the machinery necessary to change the agreement which was on the statutes of the Dominion. He did not expect, however, that there would be any difficulty working the problem out and he felt sure that the Halifax rates for next winter would be on a par with St. John.

It is not very clear whether or not Mr. Dalrymple thinks legislation is necessary; evidently he is under the impression that the Board of Directors alone cannot settle the matter. If it is not tied up by legislation, there should be nothing to prevent the Board of Directors from dealing with the matter, as I presume they could go to the Board of Railway Commissioners and recommend a change. All I am anxious about is this: If legislation is necessary, the time is very short for introducing it; but if I can obtain a positive assurance that legislation is not necessary and that the matter can be otherwise dealt with, that will be quite satisfactory to me.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That question was covered by the answer which I gave the other day, in which it was assumed that the Canadian National Railway Board had full authority to go into the matter and was looking into it.

C.N.R. GENERAL OFFICERS

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

What are the names of the persons who are known as the General Officers of the Canadian National Railways; the respective position at present held by each one of these general officers; and the yearly salary payable to each one?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not considered to be in the interest of the Canadian National Railways nor in the interest of the public to make public such information.

DIVORCE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill D6, an Act for the relief of Herbet Hugh Keller.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

EXTRA PAYMENTS TO JUDGES

FURTHER INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. GEORGE GORDON: Honourable gentlemen, with the leave of the House I would like to refer to a question which I asked the leader of the Government a few days ago. My only excuse for bringing the matter up now is its vital importance, and because in Hansard of Monday I find an opinion expressed by a member of this House whom I have always looked upon as being probably one of the best-posted lawyers in the Dominion. The opinion which he gave was not contradicted by any member, more particularly by any lawyer. The question I asked the leader of the Government was in respect to the sum of $20,000 which it was alleged had been paid to two judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario since the passing of the Act in 1920 prohibiting judges from receiving remuneration for performing any duties outside of their regular duties. The member to whose opinion I refer is the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique). I cannot do better than quote what he said, at page 973 of Hansard:

If we turn to the statutes of 1920, we find that the prohibition of the payment to judges is absolute.

And he quotes the statute as follows:

No judge shall receive any remuneration in addition to his judicial salary for acting as administrator or Deputy of the Governor General, or for any duty or service, whether judicial or executive, which he may hereafter be required to perform for or on behalf of the Government of Canada or the Government of any province thereof.

He goes on to say:

The prohibitions are general; then there are exceptions providing for the payment of travelling expenses in certain cases. The provision in the present Bill does not amend this section of the Statute of 1920; it merely permits the judges to act in the additional cases mentioned. The prohibition against their being paid remains absolute.

In my opinion, honourable gentlemen, there is no reason why laws should not be obeyed by judges as well as by other persons; and, if the opinion of my honourable friend is correct, the law has been violated by two judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario having accepted the sum of $20,000 from the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: How are we officially seized of that information, because, unless it has been brought down from the Department of Justice or by a Minister of the Crown without my noticing it, it has not reached me, and I am at a loss to know upon what official data my honourable friend is making his statement.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Early in February I put a question on the Order Paper asking if the Government was aware that two judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario had been paid $10,000 each by the Province of Ontario since the passing of this Act. The reply was no. I have no doubt that the Government has not been officially notified to that effect; but it is current gossip and has been reported in the newspapers that this sum of money was actually paid to these two judges. The point I am coming to is this. If this is the case, particularly in view of the opinion of my honourable friend the member for De Salaberry, will the leader of the Government get an opinion from the Justice Department as to the legality of these judges accepting this money.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the statute of 1920 or 1921 there is a clause relieving from some of the prohibitions judges who were then acting in certain cases. I do not know whether that provision would cover this case.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: The honourable gentleman is probably referring to section 35 of the Act passed in 1921. I believe there was a clause there which read to this effect:

Provided that this enactment shall not interfere with judges who are at present acting as commissioners or arbitrators completing the work on which they are engaged.

My opinion, and the opinion of nearly every person to whom I have spoken, is that that clause allowed the judges to act on commissions and to perform other duties outside of their regular duties; but that the clause in the Act of 1920 prohibited them from accepting any remuneration therefor. In this particular case these two judges were called upon as commissioners to decide as to the legality or illegality of certain actions of a very prominent man in the Province of Ontario; and if, after having acted on a commission of that nature, they deliberately accepted $20,000 from the Province, in contravention of this Act, I say it is something which should be brought to the attention of the Department of Justice. If it is found that there is some loophole through which they could crawl in order to accept this money in a legal way, we will have to be satisfied; but, according to the opinion of one of the members of this Chamber for whose opinion I have great respect, this was contrary to the law, and, I believe, is something which it would be well for the Department of Justice to look into, and I ask the leader of the Government to take steps to have that done. It was a great many years ago that a famous man named Samuel Johnson was credited with having said that true liberty could only exist when the laws were equally administered to the king and the beggar. Here is a case in which we want to find out whether the law is going to be administered equally to judges and to laymen. Would it be in order for the Department of Justice to ask the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario or the judges themselves whether this money has been paid over?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend would put that question on the Order Paper, so as to bring the matter up regularly, he might obtain from the Department of Justice some elucidation of it.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I submit that there is no way in which I can ask the question more plainly. The question is this. Two judges of the Supreme Court of the Province of Ontario have accepted $20,000 from that province in payment of services rendered for acting on a Commission.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend surely could not make that statement without referring to an official document. If $20,000 has been paid in fees to judges, some trace of it will be found in the blue-books of the Ontario Government or legislature, and perhaps my honourable friend, with an official document in his hand, could make an affirmation and proceed to put a question.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: My opinion is that the blue-books of the province of Ontario are never ready within a year and a half or so of the time when they should be. They are not ready now anyway. I would like the honourable leader to get an opinion from the Department of Justice as to the legality of that payment. I have no objection to naming the judges.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will send the remarks of my honourable friend to the Deputy Minister of Justice, for him to give me whatever answer he can under his powers.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 84, an Act to amend The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it is with some diffidence that I move the third reading of this Bill. I am here representing in most instances the Departments, and I suppose in a parliamentary sense the Government itself. Perhaps the Government will not recognize its child when the Bill reaches the House of Commons, but I have no objection to be the instrument that will carry it over, and I move the third reading.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They have a better child than they had before.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADA TEMPERANCE BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 43, an Act to amend The Canada Temperance Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I moved an amendment last evening to erase two words "or brewer" from clause c, so that in any Province which has the system of Government control a brewer should not be entitled to import. That was agreed to. The question was asked why I should not strike out the word "distiller." I answered that I had been informed that the distillers throughout the country needed the right to import alcoholic liquor for blending and flavouring purposes. I was not absolutely satisfied, because I had not sufficient information. We postponed that point, and I have asked the Assistant Commissioner of Inland Revenue or Excise, which now forms part of the Department of Customs and Excise, and his answer is as follows:

In accordance with your request for information respecting the importation of liquor by licensed distillers, I have the honour to state that in the ordinary course of business it has been the practice of distillers for many years to import liquor of foreign manufacture for blending purposes. The object of such importation is to impart a distinctive flavour to the various brands of whisky produced by distillers.

Article "B" of the "Departmental Instructions and Orders in Council respecting Distilleries and Products Thereof," which will be found on page 4 of Circular G-269 (copy enclosed), recognizes this practice, and defines the conditions governing importation and receipt of such liquor at a distillery.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Geo. W. Taylor,
Asst. Commissioner.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We need the regulations, in order to see how far the matter is controlled. The information is not complete without them. I have known of cases in which spirit used for manufacturing purposes was kept in the premises of the manufacturer under lock and key, and under the control of the Customs officer, and could not be used except in the presence of that officer, so that the use and the quantity of the spirit was absolutely checked. I have no doubt there is a regulation covering the point.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have in hand the departmental instructions and the Orders in Council upon which is based the letter which I have read from the Assistant Commissioner. I have also received from Hiram Walker & Sons, Limited, a letter dated 28th June, signed by Mr. King, who is the Manager, I think, of the distillery:

With reference to your request for information on the subject of blending, we have the pleasure of informing you that "blending" is a normal and proper function of a distiller. Although the process may not be necessary to all the distillers, it is necessary to some of them. Some of the materials required for blending may have to be imported from abroad. Of a blend consisting of two or more kinds of spirit the distiller may make one and import the others.

The material required to be imported may be only for flavouring purposes (such as sherry or prune wine, etc.). Such blending and flavouring, with the consequent necessity for importation, is an ordinary function of the manufacturer of some kinds of whisky or other articles requiring to be made of two or more ingredients, all of which he may not manufacture himself.

Yours very truly,
Hiram Walker & Sons, Limited.
By C. King.

I have received this morning from the Consolidated Distillers the following telegram:

We are actually importing liquor for blending in our Quebec and Ontario distilleries with approval of provincial authorities. We require same rights for our distillery. Respectfully submit this is absolutely vital to our business, and cannot manufacture without these facilities.

Consolidated Distilleries, Ltd.

So that if there is no further amendment to that part of the clause, I will move to amend the following paragraph—

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I might say, with reference to the inquiry that I made as to the practice, and as to what seemed to be the possibility, provided a distillery could be established at any place and carry on the art or practice or business of simply mixing intoxicating liquors—in which case there would be no limit to the number of distilleries that might be used—I desired to know whether or not this had been the normal condition of manufacture by distilleries. I have no idea or purpose of restricting the distiller beyond what he has been accustomed to in the making of his ware, so long as we allow his business to exist and give him the right to export. But from the information that my honourable friend gives me it seems that, even in normal times, and before prohibition enactments were made such as we have now, that was the process of manufacturing engaged in to a certain extent. I have no desire in this case to limit that. What I want to know is whether the insertion of this clause will put it in the hands of any other authorities to supervise and keep track of the work of the distiller who is under the Dominion authorities. I do not want it to transfer or widen the function of the distiller as far as restriction or supervision by the Dominion authorities is concerned; but if it can or will be kept as it is now, under the regulations of the Dominion Government, and enforced by the Department which supervises this work, so that no extension of the privilege of mixing is possible, then I have no objections at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is one of the questions I put to the Assistant Commissioner, drawing his attention to the Bill, and asking him to read it closely and tell me if it was in conformity with the regulations, and his answer is the one I read. Subsection c will then read as follows:

(c) The importation of intoxicating liquor into a province by any person duly licensed by the Government of Canada to carry on the business or trade of a distiller where the intoxicating liquor so imported is imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending with or flavouring the products of the business or trade of a distiller carried on by him in the province, and while kept by him in the province is kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses, and is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade as a distiller.

I move the adoption of that subsection.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Will my honourable friend have any objection to the addition of some words which I think would not restrict in any legitimate way the importation? My suggestion is to add, after the words, "carried on by him in the province," these words:

Under the supervision and direction of the Dominion Government.

This is in order to make it sure that no person in the province of British Columbia, by virtue of this legislation, will have any chance of interfering or any means of widening the scope of the business as regularly and normally carried on.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What do you mean by widening the scope?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: This—that if the distiller carries on his business of making intoxicating liquors from grain of any kind, and if in the process he finds it necessary, and it has been permitted, to use certain flavours for blending or flavouring it, he may be allowed to do that, but that that must be done—to make it plain—not under any supervision or stimulus by Mr. Manson or any other member of the local Government, but under the supervision and care of the officers of the Department itself. That is all. I think that is fairly reasonable.

Hon. Mr. TODD: I understand that every distiller is under the care and inspection of the officers of the Excise Department. In that case, I think this amendment would be entirely unnecessary.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Then it would not do any harm to put it in, because whether it is possible to carry it out or not I certainly know that there is an idea that it can be used to enlarge the distribution of intoxicating liquor.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I would suggest that it would be sufficient to add at the end of clause c the words:

Under the supervision of an officer of the Government.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Or the Department of Customs, whichever it is. Whatever is the legal form, I wish to put it that way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: As the honourable gentleman has taken the initiative, he might make the motion.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, I make that motion, that those words be added at the end of the clause:

Under the supervision of an officer of the Customs Department.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Sometimes words can be added that are harmless, but add nothing to be strength of a clause. If we find in the clause itself all the essentials, my right honourable friend may not insist on his amendment. Let us see what are the essentials in that clause. We must remember that this is a Federal Act, which says that under certain conditions the Federal Government may prohibit the importation of the liquor in a Province except by certain parties. In this instance there are three: the Government, the public carrier and the distiller. That is what this clause says. When it comes to deal with the distiller, it says:

(c) The importation of intoxicating liquor into a Province by any person duly licensed by the Government of Canada—

Not by anybody else.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I know he must be licensed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

—to carry on the business or trade of a distiller where the intoxicating liquor so imported is imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending with or flavouring the products of the business or the trade of a distiller carried on by him in the Province, and while kept by him in the Province is kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses—

And that is the Federal law.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That does not add anything to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

—and is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade as a distiller.

I would point out to my honourable friend, in order that there may be no confusion in his mind as to the authority, that we are enacting an amendment to a Federal law, and we are declaring under what conditions a distiller licensed by us will be able to receive and retain liquor on his premises—for blending and flavouring. It must be "kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law"—that is, the Federal law. I think that the danger which my honourable friend fears, that Provincial authorities may assume some power under this Act, is a vain one indeed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I must say that I quite concur in what my honourable friend has said. If I had any doubt upon the subject I would support the amendment most warmly, but in my judgment it would be bad draftsmanship to import into the middle of this clause words such as my right honourable friend would employ, because it would throw a doubt upon this particular branch of the trade being under the supervision or inspection of the Dominion Government. The whole operation of this clause is absolutely and undoubtedly under the exclusive supervision or inspection of the Dominion Government, and if you employ the suggested words in the middle of the clause, what about the subsequent words? You throw a doubt upon that particular operation being under Dominion Government inspection or supervision.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The suggestion was to add the words at the end of the clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The whole clause, as I understand, is practically taken from the Federal statute. This entire operation of blending is under the exclusive jurisdiction, supervision, and inspection of the Federal officers. The Province has nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would not the proposed amendment only confirm that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why repeat? It is tautology, and it is certainly bad draftsmanship if it casts any doubt. The employment of the words suggested can only imply that there may be some doubt upon the subject when there is absolutely none.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think that the adoption of the amendment would import into the Bill the doubt which my right honourable friend has in his mind.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I am inclined to think that the addition would be wise, for this reason. The clause, it is true, contains these words:

> And while kept by him in the Province is kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses, and is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade as a distiller.

We have asked whether there are any regulations covering this point or not, and we have not been able to find any. The honourable gentleman has a copy of the regulations: I have glanced over them and have failed to find any regulation covering the point. So I fail to see any objection to adding after the words, "and is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade as a distiller" the words, "under the supervision of an officer of the Customs Department"—or "of the Department of Inland Revenue." I am not sure which it would be.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is all one now.

Hon Mr. BEIQUE: The public has no guarantee unless the use of the liquor is supervised by an officer, and that is what we want to make sure of, whether there is a regulation covering it or not. If there is such a regulation, the addition of the words will not do any harm. If there is no regulation, then this will make it obligatory upon the Government to see that such a regulation is made.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no objection to adding to paragraph c "under the supervision of the Department of Customs and Excise."

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is all right.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Put that at the end of the clause, and it will apply to everything.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am putting it there.

The proposed amendment was agreed to

On subsection 3 of new section 163—Burden of proof:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We now come to subsection 3, which in the Bill as it comes to us from the Commons reads as follows. Honourable gentlemen will notice that it retains the phraseology consequent upon allowing export houses to exist. The export houses having been eliminated, this clause also should have been modified in the Commons, but by oversight it has been sent here without modification:

> (3) The burden of proving the right to import intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be imported, or to send, take or transport intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be sent, taken or transported into any province shall be on the person accused;

The words that follow will have to be struck out and replaced by others. The words that follow are:

> —and where the person accused is a person engaged in or carrying on the business of exporting intoxicating liquor from the province, the burden shall also be on him of proving that all intoxicating liquor imported by him is imported solely for the purpose of his export business and that all intoxicating liquor imported and kept by him in the province is kept in a liquor warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such warehouses and that all intoxicating liquor sold or disposed of by him is actually exported from that province.

That manifestly covers export houses, which no longer exist. The clause should now read:

(3) The burden of proving the right to import intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be imported, or to send, take or transport intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be sent, taken or transported into any province shall be on the person accused;

That is, the carrier, the distiller, or the Government agency.

—and where the person accused is a person duly licensed by the Government of Canada to carry on the business or trade of a distiller the burden shall also be on him of proving that all intoxicating liquor imported by him is imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending with or flavouring the products of the business or trade of a distiller carried on by him in a Province, and that all intoxicating liquor imported and kept by him in a Province is kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses, and that all intoxicating liquor imported by him is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I had given notice of amendments to that section of the very same purport as the amendment which has just been read by my honourable friend, but the verbiage of his amendment is much better than the verbiage in the proposal I made. I am not a lawyer, and I have to rely upon my legal colleagues for the niceties of phrase and the accuracy of phrase which are so necessary in drafting.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does that interfere with the right of private individuals to import?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, it will, when authorized by Order in Council, preceded by a referendum as ordered by Parliament.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We do not want to put the burden of proof on the individual when he now has a perfect right to import.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no. That does not affect the present situation.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Do I understand from my honourable friend that the effect of the proposed amendment would be to hold the distiller or brewer responsible?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not the brewer. We have eliminated him. The brewer will be incapacitated from receiving.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Subsection 3 refers to the preceding paragraph c?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but we have amended c.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: There is now no question about the distiller?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Subsection 3 has nothing to do with paragraph c.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I desire simply to draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that often distillers have to be represented. The assumption of the law I suppose, is that they are behind their agents. Sometimes there are many representatves. This paragraph c was very severe in the penalty inflicted, and much more severe, I understand, in the manner in which distillers would be deprived of their licenses. There ought to be something in the law to make it apply to the distillers who are directly responsible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Paragraph c states that a distiller may import only for two purposes, flavouring and blending.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is all right.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it seems to me that this amendment is scarcely germane to subsection 3. This deals with the exportation of liquor.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, the importation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, the exportation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No. The exportation is wiped out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It deals with the export of intoxicating liquors from the Province. Now, what about the right of the distiller to export? The amendment simply deals with the importation of the blending product, and strikes out apparently all the provisions of the section as to export.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because the section as it read when it reached this House covered the export houses, and we have now eliminated them and are framing this clause in order to make it cover the distiller.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But he still has the right to export, of course.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, he has the right to export.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is not interfered with.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I then, if I understand my honourable friend rightly, suggest that a few words be struck out of the section? It has been narrowed down to deal with importations for blending or flavouring. Then, why the words, "or to cause intoxicating liquor to be sent, taken or transported into any Province?" I think that is a remnant of the clause as first submitted. Now that the clause is narrowed down to importation for blending or flavouring purposes, I would suggest the striking out of those words in the third line: "or to cause intoxicating liquor to be sent."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think subsection 3 should be entirely recast, because the right to export liquor through the Province of British Columbia to any foreign port continues.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It therefore seems to me that the language would consideraly embarrass that right, which is not to be interfered with:

> The burden of proving the right to import intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be imported, or to send, take or transport intoxicating liquor, or to cause intoxicating liquor to be sent, taken or transported into any Province. . . . .

Now, to transport the liquor for export purposes through the Province of British Columbia must necessarily involve its being sent into that Province. This clause seems to deal with two or three subjects, and there seems to be unnecessary confusion in it. It should deal exclusively with the blending of the product.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In order that we may have a clear conception of what is covered by subsection 3, we must bear in mind that when this is put into operation there will be in the Province but three agencies having the right to import—the Government or its Commission, the public carrier, and the distiller. Those are all. So we must imagine what may be the various activities of the public carrier, as well as those of the distiller; and naturally the Provincial Government or its agencies will have to conform to the requirements of this Act. When reading clause 3 we must have in mind all the operations that may be carried on by these three parties.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But you are striking out all the language applicable to the carrier, the person engaged in the exportation of liquor. Of course, I have not the amendment before me.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Now that doubts have arisen, and questions are put, perhaps we may read the Bill a third time, never losing sight of the fact that there are three agencies that can import liquor under this Act.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Under subsection 1 of section 163, the transportation of liquor is prohibited except for the Provincial Government selling liquor and the transportation and carriage into and through the Province by means only of a common carrier by water, and so forth. I think it will be necessary to add a clause to provide for the transportation in the Province of the liquor of the distiller, because the distiller seems to be debarred.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, we have him in subsection 3.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The distiller is provided for; it is the carrier, I think, who is embarrassed by this amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: He is protected so far as importation is concerned, but not exportation; so paragraph c will have to be amended so that he may not only carry into the Province, for blending, but may also carry for exportation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But we are not touching that at all; we are not prescribing anything concerning exportation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We are dealing with the subject, and must leave it in a decent way. You are not prohibiting the exportation by distillers; you do not want to interfere with the business of the distillers; but I am afraid that under subsection 1 of section 163, and subsection 2, a, b and c, as framed, you are not covering the transportation by the distiller for export. He should be covered, otherwise he will not be able to carry on his business.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is otherwise.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It cannot be otherwise, because you are dealing here with the whole situation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, we are dealing with importation only.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You have already made provision for exportation in subsection 3, and you have stricken out the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That was because we were permitting export houses; but the distillery is under another law.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: You are prohibiting the carrying.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, not for export.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: The honourable gentleman is right.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Certainly. As far as the amendment to section 3 is concerned, I think it covers exactly what is required.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am very sorry to trouble my honourable friend, but I feel very much like my leader, that this is a clause that should receive a good deal of attention. It is very involved. The first part of it contains a prohibition; then there are exceptions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Three exceptions.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: The prohibition covers the transportation—not only the importation, but the sending—therefore, the sending out. The prohibition against sending out is complete: it is a blanket prohibition. Now, you are going to make an exception. Let us see whether the exception is sufficient. You say it is sufficient because you make an exception of importation for blending; but what about the curtailment of transportation? You have a total prohibition against transportation except for importation for blending. That is not sufficient.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What does my honourable friend suggest?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Like my leader, I feel that you may tie up transportation through dry Provinces, where it is quite legal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is provided for. The public carrier can carry through a Province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under the Canada Temperance Act, entirely irrespective of this?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, and in subsection b exception is made against the general prohibition. It says:

> The carriage or transportation of intoxicating liquor into and through a Province by means only of a common carrier by water or by railway, if, during the time the intoxicating liquor is being so carried or transported, the package or vessel containing the intoxicating liquor is not opened or broken or any of the intoxicating liquor drunk or used therefrom.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That gives your exporter full privilege.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That only deals with importation into the Province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend must not forget that he must limit his interest under this Bill to whatever alcoholic liquor is imported for blending or flavouring. It must reach the warehouse. Then what does it do? It does not leave the warehouse in the same form; it is used in blending and flavouring; and then the powers of the distillers remain complete to export their goods in such a way that none is dropped in the Province.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is not under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. They can only sell to the Government agency and the distillery in the Province, and to their foreign clientele.

Subsection 3 was agreed to.

Subsection 4 was agreed to.

On subsection 5—Governor in Council may issue proclamation (reconsidered):

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: With reference to the matter which we discussed and passed upon last night, I said that I was not clear in my own mind as to what would be the result of the amendment. After having given it some attention in the meantime, I am not any more clear upon it. My doubt is entirely on the legal grounds, and I am not an authority on law.

This is the way it strikes me. Last night we passed an amendment; it may be all right; but it seems to me that there is a confusion about it. That amendment really makes provision for a plebiscite to be taken on the question of importation, and the bringing into a Province of intoxicating liquors, and it lays upon the Lieutenant Governor in Council the obligation to proceed to a vote:

> The Lieutenant Governor in Council may proceed to take a vote upon such question in the manner provided in section 152, and the provisions of sections 152 and 152A and 153 shall as far as applicable mutatis mutandis apply to the taking of such vote.

Under the Canada Temperance Act and its amendments we can, upon certain conditions being fulfilled by a Province which has prohibition, proceed to act under that statute and carry out the provisions of the same. Under this amendment we provide that it is the Lieutenant Governor who must proceed to take a vote on such question in the manner provided, as I have read. Is it possible for the Lieutenant Governor, and has he authority, to proceed in the same way as we would proceed under the Dominion statute? The Dominion statute lays it down that it is not the Lieutenant Governor in Council who shall take the vote or make the preparations for it. It is the Governor in Council who is to do that. When your Legislature passes its resolution, in one case, or when the Government of a Province passes its Order in Council in another, they have nothing more to do with the matter. It then becomes the duty of the Government here to make the proclamation, appoint the returning officers, name the day and the hour of the poll, and appoint the representatives who shall be there, the summing up of the votes and returns. In every case this is to be done by the Dominion officers under the Dominion Government and by virtue of the proclamation of the Governor in Council. Now you say this is not the mode in which we are to proceed. If we were to proceed by that method, everything would be clear. You say now: "Mr. Lieutenant Governor, you go on and take the plebiscite; you appoint the returning officers, the day and the hour, when it is to be summed up, and you arrange that the returns shall be sent in, not as the law says, to the Dominion Government officers, but to whom?" I do not know. It is all left with the Lieutenant Governor. Has the Lieutenant Governor any power to do that? Will it not be inoperative? It seems to me that it must be. In the first place, neither the Lieutenant Governor nor the Legislature has any funds with which to work. Under the provisions of the Dominion Act there is always a vote which can be used for defraying the expenses of taking the vote. You say to the Lieutenant Governor, "You go on and take it"; but he has no vote, and he has no legislative authority from the Legislature to proceed in the matter at all. Can we, by simply substituting the Lieutenant Governor for the Governor in Council, transfer to him all the powers and prerogatives available under the Dominion Act? I am not a lawyer, but it seems to me that there is a difficulty to be met; and how that can be done, I leave with the lawyers in the House.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend read us the provisions referred to.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Section 152 of Chapter 8 of the Statutes of Canada of 1919, second Session, starts out with this: that when the Legislative Assembly of any Province, or the Council of the Yukon Territory, have passed legislation, a certified copy of which is sent to the Secretary of State, then the Secretary of State of the Dominion Government, not the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, issues a proclamation setting forth all the information I have mentioned—the date of the poll when such votes are to be taken, the name of the person appointed as returning officer, the appointment of deputies, the appointment of representatives, the date and place of the summing up, when the prohibition shall go into effect, and any further particulars with respect to the taking and summing up of the votes of the electors that the Governor in Council sees fit to require.

Then section 152A says that the said proclamation may be issued by the Dominion Government within three months. It is provided in this amendment, as I understand it, that after certain things have been done—if it is possible for the Lieutenant Governor to do them—the proclamation shall issue. These are the principal provisions which my honourable friend will find there.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: What is 153?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The proceedings thereafter are to be the same as those prescribed for bringing Part II of the Canada Temperance Act into force; and 154 is the prohibition itself, when, if a vote has been in the majority, the prohibition itself takes place, and then the penalty is stated.

The question with me is: is it possible for the Lieutenant-Governor to act under that amendment, or will it simply have the effect of postponing the whole thing sine die? Then we come to another difficulty, and that is why I offered the suggestion that we might go at this matter a little carefully and give it a little more consideration. Manitoba will vote on the 22nd of this month on the question whether the Government shall take over the control or not. Manitoba has the authority to take that plebiscite; it has done it by its own enactment; it is not done under this Act that I have been talking about. Manitoba holds the poll; it pays all the expenses. Now, suppose that Manitoba says, "We vote for Government control." If this clause remains the law, the Province of Manitoba, having just gone through a contest for the purpose of getting Government control, and the people having affirmatively stated that they want Government control, does not get anywhere under this clause, and it has to go through exactly the same operation: the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba has to take another plebiscite under authority of the Dominion Act, and pay the bill again. Now, I say that does not seem to be reasonable legislation. Other provinces may do the same; and just after having had a plebiscite, which gives the sole authority, they have to go through the same thing again under this clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We can accept of those plebiscite results.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What does it all mean? I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia cannot get the verdict of the people under the legislation we have given here. He must go to his own Legislature, but the Legislature is not in session, so he has to do one of two things—call an extra session of the Legislature and get the necessary authority and the necessary money vote in order to ascertain the will of the people upon this, or else wait until next January or February, whenever the Legislature meets. Everything is hung up in the meantime. Was that a reason for the passage of this clause?

Is it reasonable that we should put a condition like that upon the people? If we had taken it man-fashion and said, "Yes, that is the Act; under that Act we have the money and the power, and we will go to work and call for this plebiscite right away, and there will be no delay in the matter," then in the course of two or three months everything would be ready. But I do not think that can be done, and I think this clause absolutely hangs the thing up to the middle of the sky until the Legislature gets together again. Well, I think we are taking some responsibility when we do that, and that is one reason why I felt last night that we might possibly have given a little more time to its consideration, and thus have avoided some of these difficulties.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: To what extent will the Province of Manitoba be bound by the plebiscite now about to be taken? Does that plebiscite simply ask the people whether they want to continue as a dry territory, or whether they want to adopt the same system as exists in Quebec and British Columbia, to import into Manitoba?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I suppose each province will have the choice of its own system, but the question is, shall we have Government control or not?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: That is, in Manitoba?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: There is an Act drafted and printed, and the proposition is, "Are you in favour of this Act?"

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does that Act provide against the importation by private individuals?

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I think not. I am not sure about it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: They cannot do it, because they have no power.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Then there is another plebiscite besides the one next Friday. The other vote takes place a very short time afterwards, on the question whether they are in favour of a wine and beer licence.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: If the result of the plebiscite is that Manitoba can choose either to remain dry territory or adopt the sale of liquor by Government Commission, in case it decides on the latter course, but does not state whether or not it wants to stop importation by individuals, will not the Manitoba people be in exactly the same position as those of British Columbia? All the representatives from British Columbia have told us that the people have not given up, and never intended to give up, the right to import for themselves. Then why should my right honourable friend think that the Act about to be passed would create an extreme situation in Manitoba? It will not; it should not; and the plebiscite about to be taken will settle nothing about private importation, because it is intended that it should not settle that question. That is the way I understand it. If the people of Manitoba are willing to give up their right to trade in liquor, so to speak, but not to import, it seems only just and equitable that they be allowed another chance to give up the other right, that is, the right to import, exactly like the people of British Columbia. Let them say, in another plebiscite, "We are quite willing to tie our hands up altogether; having first given up the right to sell liquor, we are further willing to give up the right to import for ourselves." But until they do say that, why should we deprive them of that right?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It seems to me that what this House should be most concerned about is to pass legislation that will mean something, and effect the purposes we have in our minds. If my right honourable friend is right in saying that under section 5, which we adopted last night, a plebiscite could not be carried out, surely we do not want to pass such legislation, independent of what the other consequences may be. We do not want to pass legislation that will be nugatory—which would not have the effect that we intended.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do you agree with that view, that it cannot be taken?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, and that is why I wanted my right honourable friend to tell us which of those provisions cannot be carried out by the Lieutenant Governor.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is what I want to know. I am discussing the matter simply as a layman, and as a layman I do not see how it can be done. If it can, and my honourable friend as a lawyer has the matter within him, let him come out with it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I did not rise to build a fence in order to knock it down.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But I have built up something for you to knock down. Go at it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My right honourable friend has not given me one reason why that cannot be carried out.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I appreciate the argument of the right honourable gentleman to be to this effect—first, that he is not satisfied that the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall be able to carry out the provisions of sections 152, 152A and 153 of the Temperance Act. As far as that is concerned, I think his point is not well taken, because in virtue of the words "mutatis mutandis" in the amendment voted upon last night, the Lieutenant Governor will be able to carry out the provision. I think, however, that the argument of the right honourable gentleman is worth consideration on the point that the Lieutenant Governor will not have the proper power to act, except by authority of his own legislature, and therefore that it is hanging up the provisions of this Bill until there is a session of the Legislature in the different provinces.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That was my whole point.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is a very strong point, and was very well taken. Now, I hesitate at this stage to adress the House on the merits of the argument, because I am afraid it is of no use, and that it should come on a motion to reconsider the vote which has been taken.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The matter has been decided and the clause passed, and there is no motion to reconsider.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Unless there is a motion to reconsider I am afraid it is useless, but I reserve to myself the right on a future occasion to occupy a few moments of the House to give my opinion of section 5 as passed last night, whether the occasion is a vote to reconsider, or whether it is at a future stage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I think the lions seen in the path of this legislation by the right honourable member from Ottawa are not nearly so live as he depicts them. In the first place, we have just heard the opinion, which we must all respect, that under the amendment just passed the Lieutenant Governor can effectively exercise the powers laid down in the Canada Temperance Act. If he could not, we might meet the case by simply striking out the last 3 lines of this clause:

> The Lieutenant Governor may proceed to take a vote on such question in the manner, etc.

If we let that go we settle the business. But, apart from that, the fear as to the delay involved is purely imaginary. The regular time for the meeting of the Legislature of British Columbia is November, and it would be no hardship to advance that regular meeting time for a few weeks if necessary or advisable. But we have before us the statement of the Attorney General of British Columbia that he is not in a hurry to bring these reforms into effect; that if we give him authority to deal with the matter at all he proposes to deal gently and kindly with the export houses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But we have done away with them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: This is not in order.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I think I am perfectly in order. I am addressing myself to the remarks of the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa. and stating, in reply to his remark as to the delay, that we are already told by the Attorney General of British Columbia, in his application for this legislation, that there is no particular hurry about it, because he intends to give the export houses decent time in which to operate after the passage of this legislation. We are now at the end of June, and the legislature is fully due to meet in November, but it could be called in October without any hardship, and that leaves only 3 months within which the Attorney General could make good his promise to give time. Now, we have waited in British Columbia from the fall of 1920, when the last reference was taken on this subject, until 1923, and having waited for 3 years under the present conditions there will be no intolerable hardship in that Province to wait for two or three months more, and there is no doubt that if more authority is required the Legislature can pass it in a couple of days when in the ordinary course it meets.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: But what about the other provinces? This is Dominion legislation. The honourable gentleman dwells entirely on British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: For a quarter of an hour we have been discussing the clause that was passed last night, and as there is no motion for reconsideration, I raise the point of order.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government what is really the meaning of this clause 6. Suppose they hold a plebiscite or reference in British Columbia, and declare that they want the importation stopped, the Lieutenant Governor and his Council can change the whole thing by making a request here, and, as I take it, change the result of the reference.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I take it to mean that when the Lieutenant Governor in Council, having the proper authority either by a direct consultation of the people or by the Legislature, according to the law as it will be passed by this Parliament, will request the Federal Government to use its power to implement the wish of that Province. The Federal Government will do so, under this law. Later on, if the Province decides to alter its system, and desires the Federal Government to retrace its steps and raise the prohibition, it will apply in the same manner to the Federal Government.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: But you do not catch exactly what I mean. As I understand this Act, it is drawn so that the British Columbia Government can stop the importation of liquor without a plebiscite, and any other Province can do the same; and, as I read it, in the event of one local Government desiring to stop the importation, they can make a request, and the law would be that that importation would be stopped. Then the next session or another election comes on—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Or no election at all.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Or no election at all, and the Leiutenant Governor can pass an Order in Council, and request that those restrictions be removed. I do not see what these gentlemen from British Columbia are raising the row about. They have only to change their Government every five minutes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They do not have to change their Government at all: they have just to come to this Government and get the order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend says the Government may change its policy over night.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It does not require an Act of the Legislature at all. The Lieutenant Governor in Council may ask that that be done, and this Government is bound by it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: So, if we take a plebiscite in Manitoba on this question, if clause 6 goes through it is useless, in my opinion. One of the geat difficulties that I see is that this clause lays down a definite way in which the plebiscite is to be taken. It states the exact words of the reference which must be made to the people. In the Province of Manitoba the Act which is to be submitted to the people is a very strong one. It prohibits the use or sale by any person; and, if I am not mistaken, it also prohibits importation of liquor in any way. Although the result of the referendum might be in favour of Government control, yet you could not stop importation, simply because the wording contained in that clause had been inserted in the referendum. It is going to be a serious matter, as I see it. The people of that Province may stick to prohibition, and the next week a law may be passed providing for wine and beer licenses. The question of granting such licenses is now before the people, and if importation is restricted I do not see how the people are going to get their wine and beer.

Subsection 6 was agreed to.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Shall the preamble be adopted?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is there to be a motion for reconsideration?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes; I have a motion to which I would like to ask the attention of honourable members. I gave notice of it some time ago, and mentioned it in some remarks that I have made, and I think honourable gentlemen are quite well aware of the purpose and do not need any long sustained arguments as to the necessity for it or otherwise. I move that immediately after section 163, the following be added as 163A:

"163A. (1) It shall be unlawful to export any intoxicating liquor to any foreign country until a Consul or other proper consular officer of such foreign country has issued a certificate to the Customs Officer at the port from which it is proposed to export such intoxicating liquor certifying that such intoxicating liquor may under the laws in force in such foreign country be lawfully imported thereinto.

"(2) Every person who violates the provisions of this section shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty for the first offence of not less than five hundred dollars and not more than five thousand dollars, and in default of payment to imprisonment for any term not less than three months and not more than twelve months, and for each subsequent offence to a penalty not less than two thousand dollars and not more than ten thousand dollars, and to imprisonment for not less than one year and not more than three years."

The purpose I had in view in bringing this to the attention of the Government was in the first place to erect a strong barrier against possible illegal exports to either a Province contiguous to the Province that is affected here, or the United States, a neighbouring country which has enacted a prohibitory law of great force, in the shape of an amendment to the Constitution. There does not seem to me to be any hardship at all imposed upon the honest exporter in obliging him to obtain a consular certificate in order to make his outward entry. As far as the United States are concerned, consular certificates are demanded for the exportation of all kinds of merchandise to that country and consequently the obligation to get a consular certificate would not be any exception to the general rule; but the consular certificate in that case would declare that the United States of America was a country into which the importation of intoxicating liquor was forbidden by law and by the Eighteenth Amendment. There would be no difficulty or trouble in the way of interference with business, in requiring the consular certificate.

In the second place, a consideration much more important was that we should not place any obstacle or hindrance in the way of a neighbouring Government, whether of a Province of our own or a country like the United States, in enforcing its laws. Where there is danger that any part of this country may become a harbouring place for law-breakers, it is in the interest of our self-preservation, as well as of comity with our neighour, not to allow any Canadian citizen, or any person from another country who for the time being may be harbouring himself in Canada, to use any part of this country as a base of operations for violating the law of a neigbouring province or country.

I think that is a fair position to take, and I take it on this other ground, which I believe is absolutely proper, that law and order must be respected. Law and order can be defined only in the terms which the democracy of a country expresses in its legislation. We may not personally be in favour of the kind of law which is legislated into the Statute Book, but if the majority of the people come to the conclusion that such a law is necessary and advisable, and if they enact it by constitutional methods, then it should be respected so long as it remains in force. Good order, which means not the breakage of that law, but the observance of it, becomes the duty of all. If respect for law and order ought to be cultivated in every part of our country, it is something which should be cultivated also in the interest of a neighbouring province or country. There is a community of interest in this respect. I hold it is absolutely impossible for a man to connive at the violation of the law of a neighbouring province or country, or actively to arrange for and carry out propaganda and methods for breaking that law, and at the same time retain respect for law and order in his own country. The violation of the law of any other country breaks respect for law and order in one's own country. It is therefore in the interest of law and order and the respect for both in our own country, and for the sake of comity and help towards the neighbour, whether it be a province or a country, to make a provision of this kind. I know that it would be welcomed by the neighbouring Province, because we have had testimony of that, and it follows as a matter of course that it would be. I know also that it would be welcomed by a neighbouring country which, after a long campaign consisting of a series of efforts extending over fifty years, has marched gradually up to the placing of an amendment in its Federal Constitution. That is a most arduous and lengthy proceeding, requiring in the first place the vote of three-quarters of the individual States in favour of such a measure, and then a two-thirds vote of the Senate, in order that the amendment may become part of the Constitution. Whatever we may think of the wisdom of the United States in pursuing the course which the 110 millions of people there have pursued in coming to that conclusion, we must recognize that it is to-day the law of the land, with the Government behind it and with the opinion of the great majority of the people, as shown by their plebiscites and statutes in favour of its enforcement.

Therefore I think it would be honest, fair and just on our part to make it difficult for anyone on this side of the line, or in any particular province, to violate the law on the Staute Book and in force in a neighbouring Province or a neighbouring country.

Some honourable gentlemen may think that the penalties imposed are too high. I am not sticking on the height of the penalties, but they are intended to deter bootlegging, a law-breaking business in which immense amounts of money are involved. I do not suppose any of us, unless we have studied the matter, realize what immense sums of money can be made by bootlegging operations. The amounts involved are almost incredible. Consequently a small penalty like a fine of a few hundred dollars is not adequate. A very large fine may not be an adequate penalty, but if you combine a term of imprisonment and a reasonable fine, then you impose a penalty which may be adequate for the infractions of the law, or for the gains which may be derived in that way.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I am in sympathy with the purpose of the motion, but I am afraid that the object cannot be achieved. It would be impossible for the exporter to follow his goods. If the amendment were passed, what would prevent goods intended for the United States, for instance, from being imported into one of the West Indies, or any other country, and shipped from there to the United States? I fail to see how the object can be attained. Under this proposed amendment the distiller would be obliged to follow his goods to the point of delivery or consumption. He cannot do so. Means would easily be found whereby the object of the proposed amendment would be entirely defeated.

Then, the proposed amendment would give an advantage to countries which would not care to have action taken in the matter through their Consuls, who might remain silent. Take France for instance. France is not a prohibition country. There is no reason why distillers should not be at liberty to transport liquor to France, but unless the Consul acted, it would be impossible for the distiller to sell any liquor for export to that country. The distillers would be obliged under this proposed amendment to arrange with the Consul of some country or other to obtain from him a proper certificate, and then the goods, although delivered by the distiller with the intention of having them shipped to that country, could be delivered to the United States or any other prohibition country, and the distiller would be unable to follow them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, the main object which my right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has in view is, I suppose, to try to protect the fair name of Canada from being dishonoured by the illegal shipment of wet goods into the United States in spite of the Eighteenth Amendment; and for that purpose, knowing that no person acting in the name of the United States will agree to put his name or visé on any certificate to permit of shipment to the United States, the right honourable gentleman would require our distillers to obtain a visé from the Consul of every country to which they want to ship goods. In that way he would close up any illegal avenue by which the United States might be reached.

There are two objections to that proposition. First, it would be a self-imposed impediment to the trade of Canada, as it would prevent liquor from being shipped from Canada to any other country without the consent of the foreign consul. I am of course speaking only of legitimate trade. Some other provision has been placed in the Statute Book which attains the purpose my right honourable friend has in view without calling for the visé of foreign Consuls, and leaves us free to promote our trade abroad.

The second objection would be that among the 75 countries to which our goods are exported—of which I have a list in my hand—more than half have no Consul or representative in Canada. Thus it would be impossible to operate the clause which my right honourable friend proposes, as there would be no Consul at our port to perform the act called for by this amendment.

I am passing over to my right honourable friend the list of countries to which Canadian goods have actually been sent.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question before he passes that point? I understood from the right honourable gentleman (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) that all goods shipped from this country to the United States must have on them the consular certificate.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, not at the present time. They would under the amendment of my right honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I think the right honourable gentleman said that at the present time goods for export to the United States must bear consular certificate.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That is right.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is quite right.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Well, if all goods now exported from this country to the United States require a consular certificate,—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Goods over $100 in value.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: —in what respect is the amendment proposed stronger than the law as it now exists? And in what respect does it differ in its application from the present law?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is no doubt that it has been the practice of the United States to demand a certificate, and it is not only the practice of the United States, but, so far as I remember, there is not a South American country to which we can export goods worth more than $100 without a consular certificate; and they would not get into the port of that country unless they had that certificate. The revenue therefrom in the case of the United States provides the cost of carrying on the whole diplomatic service of the United States and a comfortable surplus to go into the Consolidated Fund You cannot send a package worth more than $100 from Ottawa to any part of the United States unless you go to Consul Foster, or one of the agents in the district over which he has control, and get a certificate and pay the amount charged, namely, $2.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then, why do you want this amendment?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: This is a special business. It is different from the mere passage of goods to which there is no objection at all once the duty is paid. The argument of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) that it would be an inexcusable burden placed upon the exporters of intoxicating liquor falls to the ground, I think, because most of the countries of the world demand a consular certificate now.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You have not yet shown why it is necessary to have an Act requiring a consular certificate when the Act of the United States already requires it.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The regulations of the United States makes a consular certificate necessary. A fee is imposed for the purpose of sustaining a service. That is about what it means. This is meant as a bar and hindrance to illicit exports.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But you have to have that certificate now.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: You do not have to get it through the Customs; it is simply a regulation that you have to have this certificate in order to get into the United States. The certificate does not say anything as to the legality or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: If that law exists now, why repeat it?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The law, if you call it a law, is not our law, but is a regulation of the United States of America. The consular certificate does not go to the point as to whether this is a contraband article or anything of that kind; it is simply a means of collecting a fee which is for the purpose of maintaining a service. The value of this proposed certificate is that the exportation, if illegal, could not take place.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suppose my honourable friend is aware of the amendment of last year to the Customs Act which contains the following:

> Section 101 of the said Customs Act is amended by adding the following proviso at the end thereof: Provided, however, that upon the entry outwards of wine and spirituous liquors to be exported from a Customs warehouse either by sea or by land or inland navigation, as the case may be, the person entering the same for such purpose shall give security by bond of an incorporated guarantee company authorized to do business in Canada, and whose bonds are acceptable to the Dominion Government, such bond to be in form approved by the Minister, in double the duties of importation on such goods, that the same shall, when the entry aforesaid is for exportation by sea, be actually exported to the place provided for in said entry, and when the entry aforesaid is for exportation by land or inland navigation, shall be landed and delivered at the place for which they are entered outwards, unless in either case the said goods were after leaving Canada, lost and destroyed, and that such proof or certificate that such goods have been so exported, landed or delivered, or lost and destroyed, as the case may be, as shall be required by any regulation of the Minister, shall be produced to the collector or other proper officer within a period to be appointed in such bond. This proviso, however, shall not apply to wines and spirituous liquors in a Canadian port, without entry thereat for warehouse and for no other purpose than their transportation in transit on a through bill of lading from a port outside of Canada to another port of destination outside of Canada via a Canadian port or ports.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I fail to appreciate the reason which seems to appeal to my right honourable friend in suggesting that this amendment be made. It seems to me to be extremely illogical in view of the fact that in the one breath we make provision for legalizing the manufacture and the export of liquor, and in the next breath my honourable friend proposes to handicap that trade in every conceivable way. The law is already on the Statute Book by which the manufacture of spirits is one of the great industries of Canada; and, notwithstanding the great progress which has been made in the passage of temperance and prohibition legislation, we have still retained under the law upon our Statute Book the right of manufacture and export. This industry represents one of the most important industrial activities in the commercial life of Canada. Why we should proceed at once, having spent years in attempting to build up a large industry for export purposes, to handicap and shackle a manufacture in the interest of foreign countries who are not at all concerned as to this particular subject, I fail to understand. We can readily understand that if every export were to be handicapped by a consular certificate of this kind, the export business of Canada would be entirely destroyed. Let us be logical. If we establish a manufacturing industry, let us see that we do not handicap it more than necessary.

A good deal of attention has been paid to the consular certificate required by foreign countries. This is a certificate or obligation imposed by the foreign country, and is not analogous to this case at all, because it is now proposed to impose upon the Canadian exporter an obligation which the foreign country has imposed upon imports going into that country. Many of those countries have imposed this obligation for a particular purpose —for the purpose of fettering all foreign exports within their own boundaries as far as possible, and thus promoting their own home trade. That is the reason to a very large extent that the United States has imposed this requirement upon all exports from Canada and upon exports from other countries going into United States ports; and that imposition has been successful to such an extent that it has largely built up the trade of the United States. In the first place, the fees collected go largely, if not altogether, to support their consular service; and, in the second place, all the difficulties possible are thrown in the way of foreign goods going into that country. That same principle is observed by other countries. But to say that we, on the other hand, should impose this obligation on our own manufacturers and our own trade seems to me to be the most inconceivable policy to pursue for the purpose of building up Canadian trade.

Why should we exercise this deep solicitude for foreign countries? Are the United States lying awake at night, solicitous of protecting the trade of Canada? Are the South American republics or any of the European countries exercised by nerve-racking solicitude for the protection of Canadian interests? Why should we sit down and protect every foreign country against a Canadian manufacture. I cannot understand that process of reasoning at all; it seems to be extremely illogical. If we are establishing a manufacture in Canada, if we are building up a trade in Canada, whether export or otherwise, let us leave nothing undone to promote the progress and development of that trade.

In my judgment we would receive no thanks from any foreign country by reason of this; and furthermore, as my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) pointed out, there are other countries competing for this trade. Every country in the world is manufacturing and shipping spirits and coming into competition with the Canadian producer and exporter. Are we going to build up a great commercial people within the boundaries of our own country if we seek to destroy our own trade and to promote the interests of foreign manufactures? Instead of exporting to all the countries of the world, we shall find those countries exporting liquor to Canada by reason of our having shackled and destroyed our own industry.

I do not think it is necessary for me to labour this subject, because it is obvious that, if we once legalize an industry, all our national energies should then be bent towards making it successful in the markets of the world.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I think all the argument about the introduction of intoxicating liquor into the United States is beside the question, because it will be prohibited in the United States, and no American consul could give a certificate that such an article should enter the United States. Almost all shippers of goods to Spanish American countries seek for their own protection the vise of the consul of that country in order to facilitate the entry of their goods, because, if the consul's certificate does not accompany them, the goods will likely be confiscated. That was the case in Porto Rico and Cuba before those countries were dominated by the Americans. Therefore any country of any magnitude to which these goods would be shipped would probably have an officer who could give a certificate of that kind; and, if merchants sought that certificate voluntarily, what objection could there be to their obtaining it when it would facilitate the admission of the goods to the place to which they were properly sent?

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I do not propose to let the matter drop without saying another word. My point of view, and the point of view of my honourable friend to my right (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), may be, for fundamental reasons, somewhat different. We must have differences of opinion, and according to our mentality and our views we will look differently upon different industries. My sole object was this: that in the first place we should put a bar, which is not a burdensome one in so far as the trouble is concerned, of getting a consular certificate against the bootlegging industry of this country extending into the United States. It is known through our country and in other countries that this business is largely carried on, is tremendously remunerative, has no heart or soul, carries a revolver, has a dagger in its hip pocket, and is ready to commit murder at any moment in order to carry out its purpose. I do not believe any good will come to this country or to any country by encouraging in it an industry which sets itself to work and becomes the accomplice of the smuggling and bootlegging trade into the United States or the other Provinces of the Dominion of Canada. The argument that you will make money out of it may be let go for what it is worth. So men made money out of slave-running; so men make money out of narcotics and various other implements of vice, which destroy the morale as well as the bodies of the citizens of a country. I say that a man who is engaged in an industry in this country, and who properly respects law and order, will not ally himself with the bootlegger in order that forbidden goods may be taken into the United States of America. I say that without heat or without any other idea than to state what I believe to be the truth. Anyone who will take up the history of the enforcement of the Volstead Act in the United States and of our Temperance Act in this country, knows that the facilities for the breakage and the non-enforcement of the law are aided and helped through these reservoirs on either side, of which my honourable friend spoke last night. The time is coming when these reservoirs will be broken up. To-day, the opinion of this country, whether it is the opinion of the Senate or not, is in the vast majority against the traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes—against an industry which makes that its sole business and carries it on. And if the process is a gradual one, to my mind it is none the less a sure one. We are working up to the will of the people in localities, in provinces, and in the Dominion—a popular will for the restriction to the utmost limit possible of the use of intoxicating liquors as beverages. Breweries and distilleries will be the last that will go. They have not gone yet, and they have a status of perfect legality in our country assured to them by the law. So long as they have that I do not want to interfere with them, neither does any other honourable gentlemen. But when the plea is made that for fear we lose trade, which is illegitimate in the purpose which is effected by it, in violation of the laws of the Provinces and of the Dominion, and the laws of the United States of America, or any other prohibition country, I say that that is a feature of it which does not command my adhesion and my respect.

That is the reason why I say that if it is possible for us to assist a neighbouring province whose people want to get rid of the traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, if it is a fair thing to do to assist a population akin in ideal and purpose with ours on the southern part of an imaginary line, whose people by an immense majority and after fifty years of struggle have voted an amendment to the Constitution and a law to carry it out—I say that if we feel that it is in the interest of law and order for the world as a whole, and ourselves as a part of the world, we ought to be willing to go so far as to say to the man who wishes to ally himself with the bootlegger and the smuggler himself the illegitimate trader, that if he wants to do that we will not aid him in carrying that out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend be good enough to explain to the Chamber how an exporter or a distiller would export liquor into the United States or into any prohibition province of Canada? He could not do it; it is against the law to do it. Why, therefore, should he be called upon to get a consular certificate? He has no right to ship except surreptitiously, and if he did so, even if we imposed on him the duty of getting consular certificates, he would not obey.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But does it not strike my honourable friend that you thus add to the difficulties of breaking the law?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, because he is not going to ship.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But he does ship.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will not know it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: We have a law against that now.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I have here now and shall read an extract from a letter that I have received from Mr. Hales, of the Ontario Commission:

This letter gives me the opportunity of calling your attention to the very grave injustice which the law of the Dominion does to the people of Ontario. The business of distributing liquor in Ontario from some distilleries and breweries goes on apace. Very large quantities of liquor are regularly shipped out from Belleville by boat under the sanction of the Dominion law, and provincial officers are prevented from interfering at the point of shipment. It is pretended that the liquor is to go to Mexico, to Cuba, or to some other place, but it is well known that it is to be either smuggled into the United States or illegally distributed back into Ontario.

Our officers have recently seized a good deal of the liquor shipped in this way, but the bulk of it escapes, and I can see no sign that the Dominion authorities intend to interfere. The situation may well be described as intolerable.

I may mention, also, that we have applied for the cancellation of licenses issued to three brewers, each of whom has been convicted more than three times. One would think that when a brewer proves himself an outlaw of that kind the Department which issued the license would immediately cancel it. Apparently this will not be done, and the brewers and distillers, so far as Ottawa is concerned, will be permitted to carry on their unlawful business without any interference.

It is difficult for us at this end to understand why the Dominion authorities will not give us any relief.

That bears particularly on the second amendment which I propose to bring to the attention of members of the Senate. But what is true with reference to our provincial laws and their enforcement, as detailed there, is equally true with reference to the infringements of the laws of the United States.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but your amendment would not meet that condition at all.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Would it not make it more difficult?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it would not meet it at all.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Before a man could put his liquor on board a vessel he would have to have a consular certificate.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He has to have that now.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: He does not have to have a consular certificate of the kind I am speaking of. My honourable friend says that he must put up a bond. That is so, but that bond has nothing to do with illegal shipments; it is simply to make sure that the Government will get its duties, and that unless the shipment has been cleared, as stated in the outgoing entry, the bond is there to make good to the Department for the duties to which the liquor would be liable.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Does your amendment apply to bootleggers, or to everyone?

Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It applies to everybody, and it does not hit anybody who does not propose to go into an illegal operation. That was my contention at the first—that the amount of trouble and expense to an honest and legal exporter is nothing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What does my honourable friend say to the affirmation that quite a number of countries, the list of which I sent over to him, have no consular agents in Canada?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think the most of them have consular agents.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Do you know that?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think one may use his general knowledge of what is taking place in business, and I have had some knowledge of that. Although there may be 75 different places, I venture to say that the bulk of the exportations go to very few of those 75, and consuls and consular agents are as thick as butterflies in Canada and every other country. I do not think any very great difficulty would be encountered by the condition in which we would be placed in respect of consular certificates.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would suggest to the right honourable gentleman that he strike out that part of his amendment relating to consuls. It seems to be an absolutely unnecessary and impracticable proposition; but he ought to retain that part that refers to those men that have been fined three times or more for a violation of the regulations.

The amendment of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster was negatived.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I have a second amendment which I will read Seeing the success which attended my first one, I embark on this with great hope:

163B. (1) Any person holding a license to carry on the business or trade of a distiller or brewer issued under the provisions of any Act of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada who is convicted more than twice within any period of five years of any violation of any law whether of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada or of the legislature of any Province relating to the prohibition or control of the use, manufacture, sale, transportation, importation or exporting of intoxicating liquors shall forfeit his license and shall thereafter be ineligible to hold such a license.

(2) It shall be unlawful to export any intoxicating liquor in any vessel in which intoxicating liquor has previously been exported after the obtaining of a certificate under the provisions of this section unless evidence is produced to the Customs Officer at the port at which it is proposed to export such intoxicating liquor which satisfies such officer that the intoxicating liquor last so previously exported on such vessel was duly delivered at the port of destination specified in the entry outwards made by such vessel or that there was some lawful and satisfactory reason why such intoxicating liquor was not so delivered.

The Minister of Customs and Excise shall have power to make regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of this subsection and the granting of such appeal, if any, as he may deem proper from the decisions of Customs Officers hereunder.

The first object of that is to punish the persistent violator and breaker of the law by the forfeiture of his right to carry on his business under a licence. The second object is to give a method to the Customs by which they may assure themselves, before the bonds are given up, after the exportation has taken place, that the exportation has not simply been given as a blind, but that it has been a bona fide exportation and has gone to the country mentioned on its outward entry.

The amendment of Right Hon. Sir George Foster was negatived.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, before we go out of Committee I would draw the attention of my honourable friend who proposed the amendment which was carried last night (Hon. Mr. Barnard) to the form of that amendment, and suggest that he could very well afford between this evening and to-morrow to examine into the question of modifying it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have just suggested to my honourable friend, the mover of the amendment, that he should have the Law Clerk of the Senate bring it into proper line with the text of the Bill, and then on the third reading the amended form can be adopted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We could perhaps remain in Committee until this evening or to-morrow, because I would draw attention to the fact that a referendum can be taken on the initiative of a Provincial Legislation and Government. As a matter of fact, no province has consulted the Federal authorities on this question, so that I do not see why we should leave in this amendment the Federal machinery, because, in the last analysis, we are giving the Province the right to consult its own people. There are two ways by which the people can be consulted—under the Provincial law, and under the Federal law. Since the mover of the amendment has accepted the suggestion that it should be the Lieutenant Governor in Council and not the Governor in Council who should act, it seems to me that my honourable friend could well afford to embody in this Act the Provincial machinery. It can be done in a very simple way in order to carry out his own ideas, and not encumber the whole matter with machinery which is foreign to Provincial methods.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I understand that the suggestion is that that part of the Bill be worded in such a way that the Federal machinery will be used only in the absence of sufficient machinery under the procedure of the Provincial Legislature.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I do not admit that there is any possibility of there being insufficient Provincial legislation, since a referendum has been taken in the very Province of British Columbia. In the Province of Quebec we went to the people under Provincial legislation, and I am sure that every Province has that machinery.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I am quite content to accept the suggestion of the honourable leader of the House, that the matter be referred to the Law Clerk to draft a clause to carry out the principle of the amendment. I may add that when the amendment was drawn the idea was to follow the Doherty Act as closely as possible, and that was done, which accounts for the form of it. It was only when the suggestion was made by the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) that a referendum should be taken by the Province, that the words "Lieutenant Governor in Council" were inserted instead of the words "Governor in Council." That is what has made the apparent confusion, and that is how it arose.

Progress was reported.

At six o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 o'clock.

NATURALIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 85, an Act to amend the Naturalization Acts, 1914 and 1920.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the main purpose of this legislation is to adopt the recent British legislation defining a natural-born British subject. The Naturalization Act, 1914, resulted from negotiations, correspondence, conferences and deliberations between the Governments of the United Kingdom and of the Dominions extending over fifteen years. It was in fact a pact between the United Kingdom and the Dominions for the purpose of introducing world-wide British nationality. Under the former legislation naturalization in the United Kingdom, as well as in the various Dominions and Colonies, conferred the status of a British subject only within the territorial limits of the naturalizing authority. The Act of 1914 widened the status, making British nationality world wide when conferred under similar concurrent legislation. It is for the purpose of enacting in Canada legislation on the subject of naturalization which was passed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom in the Session of 1922 that this Act is primarily introduced.

At common law British nationality was conferred by birth within His Majesty's Allegiance. Primarily birth within His Majesty's Allegiance was upon British soil or a British ship. This principle is quite opposite to that which prevails in all countries following the civil law. There nationality is solely under the jus sanguinis, the right of the blood. The common law of England was under jus soli, the right of the soil. The common law was amended in the year 1708, grafting the jus sanguinis upon the common law principle of the jus soli and providing that the children of natural-born subjects born out of the allegiance of His Majesty were deemed to be natural-born subjects. This, in effect, provided that the first generation following natural-born subjects were themselves considered natural-born subjects.

A further extension was made in the year 1731, 4 Geo. 11, Ch. 21, and British nationality was extended to the second generation, so that the grandchildren of natural-born British subjects, even if the father were born out of the allegiance of His Majesty, were deemed to be natural-born British subjects.

The legislation stood in this condition until the year 1914 when the Imperial Naturalization Act was passed. After due consideration it was decided that the second generation born out of His Majesty's Dominions should not be deemed to be British subjects, but it was also provided that the first generation of naturalized British subjects should also be considered to be natural-born British subjects. In this way the rights of naturalized and natural-born British subjects were more closely assimilated than under prior legislation.

Since the enactment of the Act 1914 there has been a world-wide agitation on behalf of people residing out of British territory that this legislation should be changed so that British nationality might pass by descent from generation to generation. This is provided for by this Bill. It is surrounded by precautions as it is only where the birth is registered at a British consulate that British nationality is conferred. Moreover, when the person so registered at a British consulate attains the age of twenty-one years, it is necessary for further action to be taken to decide whether British nationality should be retained or not.

The other question involved in this Bill is the repeal of Section 7 of the Act of 1920 This provides for the cancellation of certificates granted to former enemies and the prohibition of naturalization of former enemies for ten years after the expiration of the war, with certain exceptions: (a) those who served with the allies during the war; (b) those of a race opposed to the former enemy governments; (c) those of British origin; and (d) those who came to Canada prior to 6th of July 1909.

The question of the naturalization of the former alien enemies was before the Imperial War Conference of the year 1918. On the 22nd of July the following resolution came up for consideration at the Conference:

> This conference is of opinion that legislation should be passed throughout the Empire restricting for a period after the war, so far as in the circumstances of each country may be possible, the naturalization of citizens of present enemy countries, and also preventing them from becoming entitled to any form of political rights, or acquiring land or mining privileges.

This resolution was opposed by Sir Robert Borden, representing the Dominion of Canada. The discussion indicated that it was not intended that all parties to the Conference should be bound by the resolution if passed. In the result a resolution of quite different character than that proposed was passed, namely,

> That a special Conference, representative of all parts of the Empire, should be held at the earliest practicable date to examine and report upon any question connected with nationality or naturalization which any Government represented at the special Conference may desire to raise, and upon any suggestions which may be made for the amendment of the existing law.

It is quite apparent from the discussion which took place that the legislation of the United Kingdom on the subject of the restriction of naturalization of former alien enemies was not necessarily to be followed by all the Dominions, but that each part of the Empire was to consider the subject from its own point of view and deal with it as might be considered most advisable in its own interest.

I do not know, honourable gentlemen, whether I have covered so far the various clauses of the Bill If not, I undertake to give to the best of my ability the information that may be desired on each clause of the Bill when we go into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PUBLIC SERVICE RETIREMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 191, an Act to amend the Public Service Retirement Act.

He said: This is a bill to extend for one year from July 1st, 1923, to July 1st, 1924, the temporary Superannuation Act commonly known as the Calder Act. The original measure was first enacted in 1920 and has been continued from year to year.

I have a memorandum concerning retirements under the Calder Act, and perhaps honourable members of this House may desire to have a statement on this subject.

There were 731 officials retired with annuities. Of these officials 46 have since died; leaving 685 on May 29th, 1923, drawing annually $380,046.95.

There were 271 retired with gratuities, and consequently they are not an annual charge.

The total retirements were 1,002. The amount of gratuities paid would be considerably over $200,000. The exact figures could be obtained only by specific information from the various departments.

The memorandum gives these particulars concerning retirements under the Calder Act:

	Number of Annuities Granted	Total of Annual Allowances
Public Accounts, Page 98, 1920-21..	64	$ 45,689 28
Public Accounts, Page 111, 1921-22	423	215,340 00
1922-23..	244	119,017 67
	731
Less, dead..	46
	685	$380,046 95

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMeans in the Chair.

Section 1, the preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 206, an Act to amend the Biological Board Act.

Hon. Mr. TURGEON: May I be permitted to ask that this Bill be postponed until to-morrow or Friday?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps I should explain the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have no objection to my honourable friend explaining the Bill, but I was asked by the honourable member from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) to request the Government to permit it to stand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no objection. I will explain the Bill; then we may postpone it until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It is not as innocent as it looks, as you will find before you are through.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I find that it is perhaps a more complete Bill than I thought.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I confess that, after glancing through the half-column of the House of Commons Hansard, before I saw the statement of the Department, I thought the only change brought about by the Bill was that three additional members would be appointed by the Government. The Minister said:

> One will be an officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the two others will be representatives of the fisheries industry, probably one in the East and one in the West. The object is to have these men work with the scientists and impress upon them what are the most immediate needs of the industry. I may say that the work of these gentlemen is rather of a voluntary nature. They do not receive any salary. They are all scientists and the only thing we pay is their expenses.

The universities' representatives are generally recommended or suggested by the universities.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How many members are there on the Board now?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This seems to be a somewhat restricted Bill not subject to the criticisms which were directed to the one that came before this House some three or four years ago.

I will now read the statement which I have:

The only change is that the Minister shall appoint five members of the Board instead of two. The Biological Board at present consists of the following members: Professor A. P. Knight, Department of Marine and Fisheries, Chairman; Professor E. E. Prince, Commissioner of Fisheries, Secretary; Professor L. W. Bailey, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, N.B.; Professor A. H. R. Buller, University of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Man.; Very Rev. Canon V. A. Huard, Laval University, Quebec, P.Q.; Professor J. Playfair McMurrich, University of Toronto, Toronto, Ont.; Dr. A. H. Mackay, Dalhousie University, Halifax, N.S.; Professor W. T. MacClement, Queen's University, Kingston, Ont.; Professor R. F. Rutan, McGill University, Montreal, P.Q.

The Chairman, Doctor Knight, has been regarded as one of the Departmental representatives for a number of years. He is a retired Professor from Queen's University, and he has been a member of the Board since its inception.

The object of the amendment is to enable the Board to be brought into such close contact with the Department and with the Fisheries industries that it will take the place of a scientific division of the Department, and thus avoid the duplication that would be involved in building up such a division. It is proposed that the three additional members shall consist of a departmental officer, and two persons to represent the fisheries industries on the Board.

The scientific staff of the Board now consists of one permanent paid worker on the Atlantic coast, Dr. A. G. Huntsman, and one paid worker on the Pacific coast, who gives but one-third of his time to the work, Dr. C. McLean Fraser, as well as between twenty and thirty volunteer workers who spend about three months at the stations each summer. While there are obvious advantages in the Board keeping in close contact with our Universities, and thus encourage such to have workers specialize along lines that will fit them for Fisheries investigations, the plan of depending on volunteer workers has its limitations. Additional competent permanent investigators must be put to work on both coasts, who will be assigned to the solution of problems that now stand in the way of rapid development of our Fisheries industries.

Amongst the lines of work it is proposed to take up, without unavaoidable delay, are:—

1. A study of all articles used in the preservation and canning of fish to ascertain just what their effects on fish are.

2. The determination of the best methods of curing fish and the extent and rapidity of the penetration of the different kinds of salt at different temperatures and the effects of foreign ingredients, they may contain, on the fish.

3. A determination of the conditions necessary to the proper drying of fish.

4. A determination of the methods and conditions necessary for the proper smoking of fish.

5. A determination of the conditions and best methods of freezing fish.

6. A determination of the best methods of canning the different kinds of fish.

7. A study of the best means of reducing fish offal into commercial products and thus overcome the huge waste of raw material that now obtains.

8. A study of the best methods of preparing fish for the table.

There are two well-equipped Biological Stations in Canada—one at St. Andrews, N.B., and one at Departure Bay, near Nanaimo, B.C. To accomplish the work intended, it will likely be found necessary to establish a sub-station on each coast, at such place as will be determined to be most suitable.

It is further proposed that educational work amongst the fishermen and fish curers and manufacturers will be carried on from these stations, and it is anticipated that they will soon come to be recognized, by those engaging in the different branches of the industry, as the places to which they will refer all difficulties that may be encountered in the handling, curing, canning, etc., of fish, and thus make these stations do for the fisheries all that a well-equipped experimental farm can do for the farmers.

To enable the above to be accomplished, it will be necessary to procure an additional appropriation, and such will be asked for in the Supplementary estimates for the present year.

These are the explanations offered by the Department in support of the Bill which is now before us.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Can the honourable gentleman say what the increase in the expense will be in connection with these new appointments?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. I see that the Supplementary Estimate is to be asked for. Even if the amount has not yet been granted, we should be able to ascertain what the Department has.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: On referring to the statute of 1912, I find the following in section 10:

A detailed statement of the expenses of the Board up to the close of the preceding Fiscal year shall be prepared annually by the Secretary-Treasurer, and such statement shall be submited to and be examined by the Auditor General.

It might be well to have a copy of the last statement when we take up the Bill in Committee.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I wish to make an observation on that point. No doubt the Minister read out a list of very eminent scientific men; but on a question like the fisheries they should have a man on the Board who knew something about fishing. That I think, would be a great deal better, because I think the book knowledge of fishing would be very lacking in comparison with the knowledge of a practical fisherman who would know about taking the fish and curing them. I think the Board is too scientific: it is like the Academy at Legardo. There is a great deal of capital invested in the fishing industry, and the people engaged in it possess far more knowledge than these scientific gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I would like to ask the Minister whether there has been any complaint of want of efficiency of the Board as at present constituted. He spoke of inquiry being made into the smoking of fish and matters of that kind, which are already under consideration by the present Board. The Board at the present time is under the direction of the Minister, in so far as conducting investigations into any subject which the Minister may bring before it is concerned, so that increasing the personnel of the Board had not effect whatever in respect of carrying out the wishes of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, because, as already stated, they already do that. If there has been no wish on the part of the present Board that its personnel should be increased, or no complaint by the Department of Marine and Fisheries that the present Board is too small to carry on its duties, I see no reason for increasing the Board, and so far the Minister has stated neither the one reason nor the other. If the Government wishes to secure the passage of this Bill it should give some reason for increasing the Board. As to remuneration, I believe none of the members of the Board are paid, the appointees of the Government being already officials, and receiving salaries for their every-day duties, while the work of the university men is entirely gratuitious, only their travelling and hotel expenses being paid when they are absent on duty.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What have they done now?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: They are doing the very thing which the Minister has been saying they ought to do—inquiring into the best means of preserving, propagating and marketing everything in connection with the development of the fish industries.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I have on one or two occasions voiced the disappointment and regret of people living in the interior cities of Canada at the difficulty of procuring fresh sea fish. In the city of Ottawa, which is not so far from the Atlantic coast, we cannot get really fresh fish.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: And the people cannot cook them when they get them.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Perhaps not, but as this Board has the marketing of fish to consider among its other duties, I think they should devise some means for providing fresh sea fish to the Canadian people. They might make recommendations to the railways and to the Merchant Marine of Canada as to the possibility of meeting this need. It would be in the interest of everybody that that should be done, and I think a campaign urging the eating of fresh fish in Canada would be desirable. The people in this vicinity could certainly eat a much larger quantity of fish than they do, and I think the Minister of Marine, who has control of this Board, ought to direct particular attention to that subject.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: You would hardly think that that had to do with the biology of fish.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend himself spoke about the marketing of fish.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Is my honourable friend from Ottawa aware that fish to-day is one of the greatest luxuries in the market?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am; that is why I want to get more.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: But why should you ask people to indulge in a luxury? A Chicago fish-dealer told me the other day that they cannot land fresh halibut in Chicago at less than 35 cents a pound, but he can go out and buy roasting pork at 18 cents a pound. He said the reason for the difference was the enormous express rates. What is the use of trying to educate people up to buying fish at 35 cents when they can get pork at 18 cents?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: This Bill looks very innocent, but it seems to me that it is an old friend in a new dress. Three or four years ago we had a Bill such as this, and it fell to my lot to lead the attack on it. We had a special committee appointed, and notwithstanding the duress of the Minister at that time, the Committee sat and heard witnesses, and reported that in their opinion the Bill was not justified in the public interest. The Minister at that time put still more pressure on the leader of this House, who happened to be my leader at the time, and the leader of the House moved that the Bill be referred back to the Committee. He got a snap verdict, and forced the Bill back. I told him he had put it in cold storage, and it was likely a good place to keep it, as it would be preserved there till the end of the Session, and we did not meet, according to the direction of the House. I think His Honour the Speaker was Chairman of that Committee. Subsequently, when the Committee was not meeting, the honourable leader gave notice that unless the Committee reported by a certain day he would move the Bill into Committee of the Whole. Under this duress the Committee met again, but not having any other witnesses that they could subpoena, as a natural consequence they reported back to the House that in the absence of any further testimony they could not see any reason to change their opinion; in other words, they could not very well swallow themselves. So my honourable friend moved the House into Committee of the Whole on the Bill. It fell to my lot to move that the House should not go into Committee that day, but six months later, and the feeling of the House was that six months was the proper time.

I am not going to discuss the merits of this Bill. The honourable member for Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) was one of the members of that Committee, and I think it will be necessary to see if anything has developed in the meantime to justify the increase of the Board. The previous Bill asked for only one member to go on with those scientific men, but I see that this Bill calls for five.

As a result of the squabble that ensued at that time we lost the chief man of that Biological Board. He was paid a salary, but he resigned in consequence of the friction; I refer to Prof. McCallum, probably the ablest man of the whole, who now fills the chair of Bio-Chemistry in McGill. That will be found to be the result this time.

In view of the honourable leader allowing the Bill to go over till to-morrow, we will let it stand as it is.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The honourable member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) spoke about the members of this Committee being members of the Fisheries Department. I would like to remind him and the House that the Chairman of this Committee is Prof. Prince, of the Department of Fisheries, the ablest man in Canada so far as the fish of Canada are concerned, a man who was brought here from Scotland many years ago and has proven to the world, wherever he is known, to be the very best; but he has been wonderfully handicapped in his Department.

To me, the explanation read by my honourable friend, the leader of the Government, is simply camouflage. I can trace the handiwork of the man who penned that memorandum. The understanding and idea is to make room for himself on this Board, and crowd out this other man, who is worthy and eminent man in fisheries. I would like to urge that the Minister of Fisheries, who has certainly up to the present time resisted this man's importunities, and has been able to hold him at arm's length, should continue to do so. I have had a great deal of experience with the Fisheries Department. For many years I had the honour of representing the county of Selkirk, and we produced in lake Winnipeg alone over 10,000,000 pounds of the finest whitefish in the world. I have found that ever since the Fisheries Department came under the control of the man who practically controls it, who is not the present Deputy, but I believe he calls himself Commissioner of Fisheries, he has been a menace to the best interests of the fisheries of Canada. There is trouble in every case connected with our fisheries, largely on account of mismanagement in the Department. The Government should start with the Department itself, providing it with a proper and efficient head, and then we would have very little trouble.

Regarding the complaints as to supplies of fresh fish, I think the price the people of Canada have to pay for our fish is a crime. That is a question altogether outside of this one, and must be discussed in committee; but I wish to point out that, as the head of this Board is the ablest man on fisheries in Canada, there is no excuse for the Department asking for power to place another man from that Department on the Board

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think the information asked for by the honourable member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) is to be found in the Auditor General's report, volume 2, which shows that the Marine Biological Stations and Investigations in the year 1921-22 cost $46,743 for the one year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not remember who were members of that committee outside of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Murphy), the honourable member from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross), and His Honour the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The late Senator from Halifax, Senator Power.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The members who rise now speak of the matter as if everyone was familiar with the question. I would very much like if someone who remembers would tell exactly what was the Bill that came before us, and give the reasons why the Senate would not accept it, and also in what particulars this Bill is different from or similar to the one which the Senate rejected.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It is practically the same Bill, except that it provides for more men to be appointed on the Board—five instead of two. The other Bill had just one clause, the same as this one.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Turgeon, the debate was adjourned.

MILITIA PENSION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 219, an Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, by chapter sixty-one of the statutes of 1919 the period of service required before both officers and other ranks of the Permanent Active Militia will become eligible to receive a pension was reduced from twenty to ten years.

Under section four of subsection one of the Militia Pension Act an officer to become entitled to a pension must be compulsorily retired. He cannot receive a pension if he retires voluntarily unless he has had twenty-five years' service, in which case, if he so retires, his pension is reduced by 20 per cent, or, if he has had thirty-five years' service, he can voluntarily retire and receive the same pension as if he had been compulsorily retired. On the other hand, non-commissioned officers and men of the Permanent Active Militia, under the Act as it at present stands, have a statutory right to a pension after completing ten years' service, and can claim their discharge with a pension after the completion of such period of service. The result is that, during the past months, a considerable number of non-commisioned officers and men have claimed their discharge after completing ten years' service, and, under the Act, there is no alternative but to grant them a pension.

In the majority of instances, they are young men in the prime of life who, for a number of years in the future, would still be able to perform useful service in the Force, and, further, after completing their ten years' service in the Force they have become exceedingly valuable and useful members thereof, and it is just when they have become useful and valuable that they claim their discharge.

Under the circumstances, therefore, it is considered desirable to take some action whereby such non-commissioned officers and men should not be able to claim their discharge with a pension just when they have become useful and valuable members of the Force, and to take the expenditure which would be occasioned by the granting of pensions under such circumstances.

To that end it is proposed to restore section eleven of the Militia Pension Act to the form which it had previous to its amendment by chapter sixty-one of the Statutes of 1919, so that a non-commissioned officer or man cannot claim his discharge with pension until he has completed twenty years' service.

With regard to officers, a somewhat different situation arises. As pointed out above, if an officer voluntarily retired before he has completed twenty-five years' service he cannot receive a pension, and it would be only on a compulsory retirement after ten years' service that he would be so entitled. The number of such compulsory retirements since the re-organization of the Permanent Active Militia has been very small, and it would be only on the ground of medical unfitness, or a reduction in establishment that such retirements would be effected.

Under these circumstances, however, it is proposed to restore subsection one of section four to the form which it had previous to the amendment by chapter sixty-one of the statutes of 1919, which made the period of service required before a pension could be granted one of twenty years, with the following exception, namely, that officers who, on account of their service during the late war, were taken into the Permanent Active Militia when the ten year period of service required for pension was in force should still be eligible to be retired after completing ten years' service. The reason for this is two-fold:

Certain officers of the Non-Permanent Active Militia who had distinguished themselves in the war, were appointed to the Permanent Active Militia, but their ages were such that they could not possibly serve in the Permanent Active Militia for a period of twenty years, as, by the time they would reach the age of retirement under the regulations, they would not have completed twenty years, but would have completed ten years' service. The interests of these officers must be safe guarded, and having accepted appointments in the Permanent Active Militia, with the expectation that they would be eligible to receive a pension after completing ten years, it would be unfair to practically debar them from receiving such a pension when they reach the age for retirement.

The other reason for this is, that under the Militia Pension Act the widow of an officer of the Permanent Active Militia who dies whilst serving therein is entitled to receive one-half of the pension to which her husband would have been entitled had he been compulsorily retired immediately prior to his death, and if such officer is in receipt of a pension at the time of his death his widow is entitled to receive one-half of such pension.

If, therefore, in the case of the officers mentioned above, the period of service required to establish eligibility to pension is increased from ten to twenty years, the wives of such officers will have absolutely no protection in the way of expectation of a pension in the event of the death of their husbands, and by the protection which it is considered should be offered to the wives of such officers it makes it specially desirable that, so far as they are concerned, the minimum period of service required before eligibility to pension is established should remain at ten years. By keeping this period the same, it will not mean that as soon as these officers have com pleted ten years' service they will be compulsorily retired, except where they happen to be retired on account of reaching the age limit, but that for those officers who are serving with wives having the expectation of obtaining some protection if their husbands having completed ten years' service should die.

All the other officers who are serving in the Permanent Active Militia, with the exception of some graduates of the Royal Military College who have been appointed to the Permanent Active Militia and who were too young to see Active Service in the late war, were appointed to the Force under the Act as it originally stood when twenty years was the minimum period required, and it is considered that, in so far as these officers are concerned, no injustice will be done in restoring the Act to its original form.

To that end, it is proposed to amend subsection one of section four of the Militia Pension Act, as amended by chapter sixty-one of the Statutes of 1919, by substituting for the word "ten" in the said subsection the word "twenty," and by adding thereto a proviso designed to protect the interests of those officers of the C.E.F. who were brought into the Permanent Force under the Militia Pension Act when ten years was the minimum period of service required, and whose interests under the Act as so amended must be protected.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill, I think, merits some attention at the hands of the House, particularly because during years past, to my knowledge, other branches of the Public Service have at times questioned the propriety of the discriminations that seem to exist as between the Militia Department and other Departments. I assume that the Government contemplates bringing down and submitting some sort of pension law covering the Public Service, inasmuch as they have just to-day extended the Calder Act for a period of one year, while they are, I have no doubt, investigating the whole question.

The amendment included in Bill 219, to amend the Militia Pension Act, it seems to me, takes away from officers and men who served during the Great War the benefits that the Government and Parliament of 1921 gave them, for a specific reason. Under the Revised Statutes of 1906, Chapter 42, provision was made whereby an officer might be compulsorily retired on a pension after he had served 20 years. It was represented that in the case of officers who had given up their usual vocation, sacrificed their business, and gone into military work during the Great War, because they had perhaps been trained and had taken an interest in military life to some extent and were still in the Militia Service, some consideration should be given to them by way of shortening the period within which they might be retired on pension. So in 1921 the Parliament of Canada revised the Militia Pension Act, cutting down that period from 20 to 10 years. Bill 219, now before us, proposes to restore the original provision, namely 20 years' service instead of 10. That is the pith of section 1 of this Bill.

Sections 2 and 3 of this Bill, as I interpret them, refer to the men and not the officers. Likewise in 1921 Parliament extended the same consideration to the men as was extended to the officers, namely, the reduction of the period from 20 to 10 years. But under the Act of 1906 the men in the Permanent Militia Force were, if incapaciated for any reason, either physically or mentally, permitted to retire on pension after a service of 15 years; and if they became sound in body or mind, as the case might be, according to their infirmity, they were again liable for service up to the extent of the full 20-year period. In the legislation of 1921 that feature was wiped out and the ten-year period applied to all. Now sections 2 and 3 of this Bill seem to re-enact the provisions of the statute of 1906 and restore the 20-year maximum, with the 15-year requirement in the case of disability.

I am not taking serious objection to what the Government have proposed; I am not objecting to the extent of moving any amendment or opposing the passing of the Bill; but I do respectfully call the attention of the honourable leader of the Government in this House to this fact, that the law, on the recommendation of the Government and with the approval of Parliament, was intended to take care of those men who served as officers or privates during the Great War. I respectfully suggest that until a reasonable period has been allowed for those men now in the Militia to take advantage of the amendments of 1921, so that there may not be many more applying, it may be wise not to amend the law.

The Bill now before us would have the effect of reversing, in large part at least, what was done in 1921, and of taking away from the officers and men now in the permanent Militia force the privilege of retiring on pension under the regulations as they now exist. It would seem to me that if the Government have in view the preparation of pension legislation covering the employees in the Public Service generally, to be adopted at a future Session of Parliament, perhaps the next Session, they would be very well advised not to amend the Militia Pension Act, at least this year, but to leave it for another year or two, until men now in the permanent Militia force, who stayed with it in expectation of reaping the benefits of the Act of 1921, have accomplished that desire. It is in my opinion somewhat unfair to them that, after they have continued to serve the country in the capacity of officer or private in the Militia for three or four years after the end of the war, in anticipation of enjoying the benefits of the law as laid down in the Militia Pension Act, they are to be deprived of what they believe is their due.

I hope that the Minister in this House who has presented this Bill will, before it is considered in Committee, give some thought to the points that I have raised.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does the honourable gentleman object to our going into Committee on this Bill, or to our giving it the second reading?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Not if my honourable friend feels that the points that I have raised do not merit any consideration on his part.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman's suggestion is that we should postpone consideration of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My thought was that further action on this Bill might be suspended until to-morrow, and meanwhile the honourable gentleman would be good enough to draw to the attention of the Minister of Militia the questions that I have raised, pointing out that the effect of the amendments of 1921 will be wholly lost, probably to the disappointment of many men now in the Militia service who believe they have certain rights under the existing legislation. We ought not to pass this measure hastily before the Minister has been apprised of these points and we have ascertained his opinion with regard to them.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I with to mention just one aspect of the case. The proposed law should not be made applicable to those members of the Force who enlisted with the understanding that they would be pensionable within ten years. I quite agree with the honourable gentleman from Welland (Hon. Mr. Robertson) as to that.

Of course, the real reason why men are getting out of the Permanent Force is that Parliament has so reduced the Force that there is no longer a future in it. These men joined the Permanent Force of Canada in good faith, believing that it offered them a career. Parliament, or the Government, has reduced the Force and men who, as the memorandum read by the honourable leader of the Government says, are now becoming useful, find that there are no prospects for them in the Service, and they are retiring and taking their pensions. It seems to me the Government should stand by the consequences of its own policy and should pay the pensions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will anyone move the adjournment of the debate until to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I do not object to the Bill being given the second reading now, but I suggest that we do not go into Committee to-night.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DRY DOCK SUBSIDIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 220, an Act to amend the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, 1910.

He said: This Bill, honourable gentlemen, deals with advances to be allowed to dry dock companies during construction, on progress estimates. Previous to the year 1917, the subsidy was not paid upon dry docks until completion. The 1917 amendment to the Act provided, in the case of First Class Docks, whether floating or graving docks, that a progress subsidy might be paid during construction and provision was made that when it had been established to the satisfaction of the Minister that not less than $1,000,000 had been spent on the work and materials for such Dock, a subsidy at the rate of 4½ per cent might be paid on 75 per cent of the cost of the work done and materials provided at the time of such payment. The 1919 amendment to the Act made similar provision in the case of Second Class Dry Docks and Floating Docks when not less than $500,000 had been expended. This left a percentage of 25 per cent of the cost of the work done and materials provided, as a drawback or guarantee, increasing as the work proceeded, of the ultimate completion of the work.

The present amendment provides that when either a Graving or Floating Dock of the First or Second Class is three-quarters, or 75 per cent, completed, subsidy at the rate of 4½ per cent may be paid on 90 per cent of the cost of work done and materials provided, thus decreasing the 25 per cent drawback to 10 per cent, which is ample for a work which is three-quarters done. In ordinary contracts, 10 per cent is all that is requested as security in the first place, and in the case of larger works running into millions of dollars, 5 per cent is all it has been the practice to ask. Then, as the work proceeded under these contracts, it has been the practice to return portions of the security and drawback.

The two dry docks now under construction, under subsidy agreement, which will be affected by this amendment, are the First Class Graving Dock at St. John, N.B., and the Second Class Floating Dock at Vancouver, B.C. The latter has only recently got under way and no application has so far been made for progress subsidy. In the case of the St. John Dry Dock three progress subsidies have been granted and the Dock itself, from reports from Public Works engineers in charge, is more than three-quarters completed. The engineers state that a sum of $750,000 will cover the completion of the dock, which, I may add, it is expected to have completed and open for business in the month of October next.

To take an illustration of the working of the Act, let us assume the cost of the dock to be $1,000.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: One million.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; I am speaking of a unit of $1,000 as an illustration. When the dock is three-quarters completed, or $750 has been spent, the largest progress subsidy the contractors could get would be 4½ per cent on three-quarters of $750. That leaves $187.50 worth of work, on which no subsidy is allowed, as the Department's guarantee. It is considered that after the three-quarters completion stage has been reached, 25 per cent is too large a drawback to retain, and it is proposed to pay a subsidy on 90 per cent of the work done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is, for the remaining 25 per cent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To illustrate: When $900 worth of work has been done under the amendment now proposed, a subsidy may be paid on $810, which still leaves $90 value of work done as a guarantee for the performance of the remaining $100 worth of work to complete the dock. On its completion the rest of the subsidy would be payable.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The construction of this dock forms the subject of a contract between the people who are building it and the Government. Is that not right?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That contract was entered into by both parties and there has been already one amelioration of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In pursuance of the Act at present on the Statute Book.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Now it is proposed to soften the contract still more. What does the Government receive for that and why is it done? When tenders for the construction of this dock were called everybody who tendered understood the terms and conditions upon which it was to be built and nobody could have anticipated that successive Governments would soften it. In view of the strigency of the times it does seem to me that the contractors should stand by the contract that was made originally. The building of this dock is a greater expense to the country by reason of this amelioration.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But I am sure of it, because you begin that much earlier to pay the subsidy, and that certainly is a loss to the country and a gain to the people who are building the dock. If the modification were not a gain, why would they be after it? I will guarantee that it if it were a loss to them they would not apply for it; they would be up here howling their heads off because the Government was putting more onerous duties and obligations upon them than what they had contracted for. These people undertook the contract with their eyes open. They entered into it in competition with other people, who, I have no doubt, were prepared to carry out the original terms. I see no reason in the world why this Bill should be passed, and I protest against it. We are taxed to death in this country, and this Government is voting and spending money—I was going to say if it would not be lese majeste to say it—like drunken sailors. Here is a case in which contractors, who perhaps have been fairly generously dealt with, are going to be dealt with still more generously at the expense of the country at large.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the honourable gentleman put his question I was not clear as to there being a contract between the Government and the Company. There are very often three parties to the agreement: first, a port, like that of St. John or Montreal, which decides to build a drydock, or a floating or a graving dock, asks a company to bid for the building of the dock. The Government helps according to the general terms of a general Act which is to be found in the Statutes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That does not alter it being a contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Contractors generally accept as part payment the annuities to which they are entitled under the Act. It is my recollection that they extend over about thirty years.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They sell bonds, and those bonds are issued on the strength of the subsidy.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Sometimes it is done in that way, but I recollect that within 25 years, in order to tempt the people to build drydocks and equip our country with them the statute has been altered three or four times by increasing the amount of the annuity.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The rate of interest, yes, but before the contract was entered into, to induce men to enter into it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The amount that is to be paid is not varied; it is simply the amount to which the contractor will be entitled under progress estimates.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course, the amount is not varied, but the payments are hastened, which is a cost to the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not prepared to say that it increases the cost to the country.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course it does; a man does not require to be a mathematician to figure that out. Any schoolboy could do it in his head.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not ready to admit that it materially increases the cost to the country.

My knowledge is somewhat lacking in regard to this Bill. All I have offered is the explanation handed to me by the Public Works Department. Without binding ourselves to the principle of the Bill, we may go into Committee, when I shall have a great deal more information, and we shall have with us the Deputy Minister. Then, if we are not satisfied with the explanations, the Committee may rise.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have no objection to going into Committee, provided that by so doing we do not accept the principle of the Bill. I object to this, because it is a change in a contract entered into some three or four years ago; and I say without fear of successful contradiction that this change will impose an additional burden upon the taxpayers of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: My recollection of the facts of the case quite coincide with that of the Minister. The drydock in St. John, at all events, and I presume it is the same with regard to the drydock in Vancouver, was built entirely under the Drydock Subsidy Act. A Company gets together and undertakes to build a drydock under that Act, and it gets the amounts and the percentages laid down in the Subsidy Act, and no more. As I understand it, the Government does not enter into a contract with the Company to build the drydock. The Drydock Company applies for a certain subsidy after doing certain things. As the honourable gentleman from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler), will know, the first firm that undertook to build the St. John drydock got into difficulties and failed during the war. I do not remember its name just now.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It was an English firm.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Yes. And the work was in abeyance for quite a while. Then the present Company took it over and are finishing it.

I can see nothing in this Bill but an attempt towards the latter part of the work to make it easier for the Company that is building the dry dock; that is all. I think the statement is correct that the Courtenay Bay dry dock is expected to be completed this fall. It is very far advanced, and is a first-class dock, as stipulated in the Dry Dock Subsidies Act. The people building it have got nothing more than the Subsidies Act will allow them, and are entitled to the full benefits of the Act. This arrangement, I presume, will make it a little easier for them, but it does not give them any more money.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that this bears simply on the amount of drawback that will be retained by the Government to insure the faithful execution and completion of the contract. It is believed that we are retaining a much larger amount than is needed to insure the faithful fulfilment of the contract. That is all there is in the Bill, and I believe that is all that will be found to be in it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There was a contract entered into for the building of this dock, although a subsidy was granted. To say there is no contract is an absurdity, because of necessity there has to be a contract. Even if it is only a letting-go of a portion of the drawback, to that extent it is giving to the Company money to which they are not entitled under the contract. The money is not buried in vaults, but is used for the purposes of the Government; therefore it is depriving itself of the use of money, and to that extent is mulcting the people of Canada. To explain is a work of supererogation. I feel ashamed to have to make the explanation. I cannot understand the leader of the Government requiring an explanation.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Honourable gentlemen, I agree with the honourable member for Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler); and while the Bill involves a certain extra cost to the country, I do not regard that feature as being as bad as the position in which it places the other tenderers. They tendered under certain conditions of subsidy, and that is all that they expected would be paid. This looks to me like letting your friends down easily, because if you are making advances earlier to allow them to proceed with the work, it puts them in a position in which they do not have to raise money to such a large extent as they otherwise would. I regard this as more serious than the amount which it will cost the country. I think it is altogether unfair to the other tenderers for the dry docks.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: When the Bill comes before Committee, perhaps the Minister will give us the excuse for indulging these gentlemen with these favours. They started out with a contract under very favourable circumstances. Being rather short of cash, and requiring either half a million or $1,000,000, the Government guaranteed their bonds which were then put on the market and sold.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: There is one further point that has not been touched wherein it occurs to me that there might be some danger in making the drawback as small as ten per cent. It is true that in the building of dry docks the contracts are let to the firms who submit the best tenders If this Act is changed, those who tendered unsuccessfully will feel that they have a grievance.

But the point I wish to mention is this: If the contract proves to be an unremunerative one, and the loss of ten per cent drawback which the Government now proposes to hold amounts to less than the prospective loss if the contractor completes his contract, the Government may find themselves with 90 per cent of the dry dock paid for and the director abandoning his contract entirely. It seems to me that the 25 per cent drawback is a much greater protection to the Government and to the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The argument of my honourable friend is self evident. But there often comes a point when it is apparent that the work is so far advanced that the total amount of the drawback would finish the work three times over, and when the owner of the work realizes that he has in his hands three times the amount he would need, if the contractor fell down, to continue and complete the work. At this stage the owner of the work is sometimes asked by the contractor, either directly or through the architect, to ease up a little, and there is no one in this Chamber who has had that experience who will not say: "Well, there remains work to the extent of $500, but I have got $5,000 worth, and I will ease up and help the contractor."

The honourable gentleman from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) thinks—and he is not the only one who has advanced the argument—that this is somewhat unjust to the other tenderers. But all the tenderers were on an equal footing and knew what the conditions were when they tendered.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: They did not know of this condition.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But this condition generally prevails in large contracts and small ones.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it is a condition of the statute.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is a condition of the statute, so they are on an equal footing. It is for us to say whether there are not sometimes circumstances towards the completion of a contract which would justify the Department in abandoning part of the drawback or reducing it. It is simply a question of business which we can thresh out in Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DIVORCE BILL

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS

Bill C6, an Act for the Relief of Jessie Anne Epstein.—Hon. Mr. Bradbury.

EXPLOSIVES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. FOSTER moved the adoption of the Report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred Bill D, an Act to amend the Explosives Act.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I would point out to the honourable gentleman that if the motion is carried in its present form, it will absolutely wipe the Bill off the Order Paper. Would it not be better to order that the report lie on the Table?

Hon. Mr. FOSTER: I understood that it was the wish of the Committee that it should be wiped off. The Committee reported against the Bill, and defeated the amendment suggested by the honourable senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique).

The motion was agreed to, and the report was adopted.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from June 19 the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand for the second reading of Bill 203, an Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I presume my honourable friend intends to move for a Committee at this point.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I stated yesterday that I would move the second reading of Bills 203, 204, 205, and ask that they be referred to a Special Committee. I will move now the second reading of this Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the proper course to pursue would be to appoint a Committee and to allow the second reading of the Bill to stand until the Committee has reported.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought we had agreed that we would take the second reading without binding this Chamber to the principle contained in the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Personally I have no particular conviction upon the subject, but it was pointed out by some honourable gentlemen that they were not prepared to concur in the second readings until certain information was brought down by the Government. My recollection is that the appointment of a committee of inquiry was suggested, and when this committee would furnish the information necessary to be brought before the Senate, we would proceed with the second readings. I think that would be the better method.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course this is a very exceptional way of going about it. My understanding of the consent given by the honourable gentleman from Moosejaw (Hon. Mr. Calder) was that provided we were not bound to the principles contained in these Bills we could take the second readings and then send them to Committee. I think that is perhaps the more regular form.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I did not understand it in that way. It seemed to me there were two or three honourable gentlemen who asked for information, and it was suggested that that information would be forthcoming before the Committee, and that upon the report of the Committee the second readings could be had. That prevents the anomaly of our proceeding with these most important measures without having any particulars as to what cost is involved.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My opinion is that we will have a better view of the whole situation when we obtain that information from the Committee, because it is largely a question of impression which we may gather from more than one source. I am under the impression that in the Department itself there is a large variety of opinions as to what these Bills would represent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Take the second reading on the understanding that we are not committing ourselves to the principle.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I cannot understand the advantage of taking the second reading until we get the information.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I must say I do not, but my honourable friend desired to have it done.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not understand his desire. If it was anybody else but the leader of the Government I would have thought there was a motive behind it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no strong opinion about it, except that generally a Bill goes to Committee after the second reading.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But we do not gain anything by it, as I understand. This is a very important Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And we do not lose anything, either.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, maybe not, but it foreshadows a very large expenditure, and I supmit that it is a matter that should be considered with great deliberation. The Senate must not be stampeded on this question, but have time to consider it, even if we have to stay here a few days extra, because it is too important to be hurried. While I have the greatest sympathy with the returned soldier and his requirements, and the obligation of the country towards him, yet we have to think of other things as well, and there are other people in this country besides returned soldiers who have some rights, and towards whom we have some obligations. I think that nothing will be gained by taking the second reading now. Let us wait till we get the report of the Committee, and have some knowledge of what we are going into. Do not let us go into it blindly; too much expenditure has been blindly gone into in this country, and I for one protest in the interest of the taxpayers of Canada, a greatly overburdened class of people, against any sudden move, or blind move, in this matter. Nothing will be lost to those who are in favour of the Bill by allowing it to remain.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My only preference for the ordinary course lies in this idea, that by sending the Bill to Committee after having taken the second reading, we shall be free not only to obtain information, but to modify the Bill according to our notions of equity and justice. Without taking the second reading, we would be appointing a special Committee simply to investigate the general merits of the principles that underlie these three Bills, and after having the Committee's report we might after passing the second reading, and going into the Committee of the Whole, have to begin all over again.

My idea was that, instead of going into Committee of the Whole after the second reading, we refer the Bill to a specially named Committee that will hear the various parties interested, seek information, and do the best for the country. When I say the best for the country, it is without losing sight of our obligations, moral and contractual, or of the financial conditions of the country. But what harm is there in pursuing the natural course which a Bill takes through Parliament, namely, taking the second reading after a clear statement that we are not binding ourselves to any of the principles, if we find them to be principles, in the Bill; leaving ourselves free to decide in Committee, as to what is the best course, have the report of the Committee made to the House, and deal with this report when it is made. That is all that I have in my mind.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I might remind the honourable member from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) that there will be this advantage when we go into Committee of the Whole, that there will be no embargo, and the honourable gentleman can speak as often as he likes, whereas no member of the Senate can speak more than once on the subject before the House while His Honour the Speaker is in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That may be a disadvantage.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think that the honourable leader of the Government is right in insisting that the Bill—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If he insists, that is another matter; I do not think he will help his case very much.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: If the honourable gentleman will allow me, I will try to give reasons for the position I take. At first sight I was inclined to think that possibly we might defer the second reading, but I will call the honourable gentleman's attention to something which he may appreciate. It is this. Suppose that the Bill is referred to a Committee before it receives its second reading, and that the Committee suggests or reports a Bill in different form, we will not be able, because of our rules, as I understand them, to move the second reading of the Bill except as introduced in the House. We would not be able to move the second reading of the Bill in a different form. We would have to do the same thing as is now proposed to be done.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What difference does that make?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: This, that what we are asked to do now we will have to do tomorrow or in a week when the report is made; and therefore I think it is better to proceed as usual—to have the second reading, with the understanding that we are not accepting the principle of the Bill at all, so that we are free to deal entirely with the measure; and, if the Bill is referred to a Committee, as is intended to be done, the Committee is to be at liberty to suggest that the form of the Bill be changed so that the House may be able then to deal with the report of the Committee, which otherwise it would not be able to deal with.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Before I heard the argument of the honourable gentleman who has just spoken I was inclined to agree with the honourable leader of the Government. He has failed to bring forth anything that is convincing to me as to why I should agree. However, in deference to the honourable leader, and on the consideration that this does not affect the principle of the Bill, and that we shall still be able to discuss it as though the second reading had not been taken, I will bow to the request, but not to the insistence.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, after conferring with my honourable friend opposite I have the honour to move that this Bill be referred to a Special Committee composed of the following: Honourable Messieurs Béique, Belcourt, Black, Blain, Calder, Dandurand, Green, Macdonell, Griesbach, Lougheed (Sir James), McHugh, Pardee, Ross (Moosejaw), Sharpe and Watson, to examine into this Bill and report.

The motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 204, an Act to amend The Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time, and referred to Special Committee.

PENSION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 205, an Act to amend The Pension Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time, and referred to Special Committee.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Can the leader of the Government give an idea how soon this Committee will meet, as the time is getting short, and if the Committee should become involved in an interminable discussion we might find ourselves confronted by the end of the Session. I take it that the Committee will determine its own procedure when it does meet.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is up to the Committee to determine that.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I would ask if the Committee will sit while the House is sitting, or while the House is in recess.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We could perhaps arrange for morning or evening sittings.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It will be for the Committee to determine that.

DIVORCE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill E6, an Act for the relief of Nellie May DeBlaquire—Hon. Mr. McCoig.

LOCKPORT N. S. WHARF

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

1. Did any Department of the Government, or the Canadian National Railways, purchase or otherwise acquire a wharf property at Lockport, N.S., during 1922, or 1923?
2. From what person and through what person was the property purchased, or acquired?
3. What is the price paid or agreed to be paid for the property?
4. Has the price of the property been paid and if so to whom?

1. Yes, by the Department of Public Works.
2. From F. W. Sutherland.
3. $4,200.
4. (a) Yes; (b) F. W. Sutherland.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 21, 1923.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BANK BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 83, an Act respecting Banks and Banking.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I would ask that the rule which requires two days to intervene between the first and second readings of a Bill be suspended, in order that we may take the second reading of this Bill now; and so that, if there is no prolonged discussion on the second reading, we may go into Committee on it this evening. I will only ask that we go into Committee on the Bill this evening if we have before us a memorandum which is being printed explaining the changes made to the Bill. From this memorandum we shall be able to see what the changes are. We may proceed as far as possible with the unopposed or unimportant sections of the Bill, and leave for further consideration the more important clauses, and others that may be asked to stand.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That may be all right; but, speaking for myself, I may say that the Bank Act is too important to be rushed through this House without plenty of time being given for its consideration. The fact that it took three or four months to get the Bill through the other House ought to be sufficient argument in favour of giving plenty of time for its consideration in this House. We do not want to give the impression that we are prepared to pass it without proper discussion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. But my honourable friend will admit that neither he nor any other member of this House intends to contest the principle of the Bill on the second reading. As a matter of fact, the second reading in the other House took very little time, the desire being to have the Bill considered in Committee. I take it for granted that we will consider this Bill in Committee of the Whole. I am simply asking for the second reading.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If it is going to be considered in Committee of the Whole instead of by the Banking and Commerce Committee, as it was in the other House, that is all the more reason why we should have more time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If there is no objection we may take the second reading, and then decide whether we will put it into Committee at this evening's sitting. We may have no other work before us; and I take it for granted that if we can we should give the evening to running through and passing the unopposed clauses.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh, yes, the unopposed clauses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I propose that the necessary rules be suspended.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Are we going to have copies of the statement distributed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would not think of going into Committee without having the memorandum before us.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We ought to have a day or two at least to consider it.

The motion for suspension of the rules was agreed to.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of the Bill.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, all are aware that the purpose of Bill 83, an Act respecting Banks and Banking, is to extend the Charters, which are given for a period of ten years. As the tenth year will end on the 1st of July next, it is imperative that we should proceed with this Bill as rapidly as possible. We have plenty of time from now till the 1st of July to do it justice. A certain number of clauses have been modified. The Senate may, if it deems proper discuss the clauses that have not been affected by the work of the House of Commons, but it will, I suppose, give more attention to the changes that have been made.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that the Progressive Party is absent today. I do not know how we are to proceed with this measure.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: He will read the Debates.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Stand it over.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We will make sure that the Progressive Party is here, at all events, for the third reading, if not for the Committee stage. The most important changes made by the House of Commons in the existing Bank Act may be briefly summarized as follows:

Under Section 54 there has been provision for an Annual Statement of the affairs of the Bank to be made to the shareholders. Certain changes have been introduced into this section in order that the statement of the management may be in such form as will give an assurance and undertaking, both to the shareholders and to the public, that the items in the assets side can be depended upon to realize the sums which the figures indicate. In addition, provision is made that if the Bank has a subsidiary company such as a real estate holding company, particulars of the Bank's interest in that holding company must also accompany the Annual Statement.

The provisions with regard to a shareholders' audit have been remodelled, and the duties of auditors have been enlarged. The shareholders are to annually select two properly qualified persons, independent of each other in a business way, to make an outside audit of the bank's affairs. One of these auditors can, under the amendments ,be continuously in office, but the other one must be changed at the end of two years. Such other one, after being out of office for two years, would be eligible for reappointment. The purpose of these amendments is to prevent the audit becoming stereotyped. One new provision affecting the auditors is of very great importance, namely, it shall be the duty of the auditors to make reports to the directors, individually, in writing of any transactions or conditions affecting the well-being of the bank which are not satisfactory to them. In addition, the auditors shall specifically report to the General Manager, and to the directors, from time to time, any loans exceeding one per cent of the paid-up capital of the bank, which in their judgment, are inadequately secured.

These provisions are intended to meet a complaint, quite common nowadays, that directors do not direct. By bringing home to the directors individually any defects in the bank's affairs, it is hoped that a sense of greater responsibility on the part of Boards of Directors will be secured.

There is a further provision with regard to the shareholders' auditors under which they are prevented from accepting any retainer or undertaking any employment on behalf of or at the instance of the bank other than that of auditor of the bank. If the management of the bank could place in the way of the bank's auditors remunerative outside business, it was believed that if the time ever came when it would be the duty of the auditors to criticize the management, they would not be free to do so because of the benefits they indirectly receive. In other words, the provision is intended to prevent the auditor of the bank having to choose between his own interests and his duty.

There are other amendments dealing with the business and powers of the bank (section 76) to the effect that the bank can only lend to its own officers without the consent of the directors, a limited sum, $1,000, and with the consent of the directors, a sum not exceeding $10,000. There have been abuses in the past and these provisions are intended to prevent a continuance of such abuses.

Provision is also made that a director of a bank cannot borrow from the bank of which he is a director, a sum in excess of 10 per cent of the paid-up capital of the bank unless two-thirds of the directors present at a regular or special meeting of the Board approve of such advance.

There is an important amendment to subsection 7 of section 88, the section dealing with loans to wholesale dealers, manufacturers, farmers, and ranchers upon a pledge of goods and commodities. An amendment was introduced into the House of Commons, to the existing provision in this behalf, to the effect that any claim by an unpaid vendor would have priority over security taken under this section. It may be questioned whether such an amendment does not rob the whole section of its value. On the other hand, a substantial amendment has been made to the bill (section 88A) providing that any person intending to give to a bank security under the authority of section 88 must first give notice of such intention before any loan is made by the bank to such person, and that the notice of intention to give security must be registered in a public office where the public can see if the individual who is seeking credit has given a lien upon his goods to any bank. This new section removes the charge that could formerly be made that under section 88 the bank acquired a secret lien.

The legislation with regard to monthly returns to be made by each bank to the Minister (section 112) has been changed in some particulars and generally revised with a view to securing an accurate and complete statement of the banks' affairs for the benefit of the public.

Certain abuses have developed in Winnipeg and elsewhere where persons, generally foreigners, receive money on deposit or receive money for transmission to a foreign country, and ultimately fail. Such a failure occurred in Winnipeg within the last few months involving losses to the public of $800,000, and upwards. The new Bill (section 156, subsection 3) provides that persons who receive money on deposit must do so under conditions to be prescribed by the Minister of Finance, provided the activities of such person are brought to the attention of the Minister.

These are, honourable gentlemen, in the main, the chief changes in the Bill. There are numerous other amendments of lesser importance, which will, no doubt, engage the attention of the Senate.

I have some special information to impart to the Senate, if required, on certain clauses, when we come to them in Committee. I will reserve my remarks for the Committee stage.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I beg to move that this Bill be put at the foot of to-day's Orders of the Day, for the Committee stage. We may take it up or we may not, but I suggest that we retain the right to deal with it during this sitting.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Honourable gentlemen, it is moved by Hon. Mr. Dandurand that this Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House during the present sitting of the House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I did not understand my honourable friend to move that. It would then go to the Committee of the Whole. I understand his proposal was that the Bill should remain on the Order Paper, at the foot of the list, and that a motion might later be made, determining whether it should go to the Committee of the Whole or to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. My honourable friend was engaged in a conversation when I made my statement. I had not in mind that the Bill should go to any Standing Committee of the House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought we should deal with it in Committee of the Whole. However, I am ready to comply with the opinion of the Senate on this point.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Personally I favour the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then, that is my motion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I thought the honourable gentleman was in doubt about the matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PREPARATION OF BILLS

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT moved:

That the Rules of the Senate be amended by the insertion of the following as Rule 60A:

60A. (1) In the preparation of Bills amending existing enactments the amendments shall not ordinarily be made by clauses which add or leave out words or substitute words for others, but by clauses which re-enact the section, subsection or other minor division, as it is amended.

(2) As the text of the Bill, on the left hand page, new matter shall be indicated by such typographical means as may best suit the varying circumstances of each case, such as brackets, italics, underlining, asterisks, etc. Opposite each clause, on the right hand page, the enactment amended thereby, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed with the proposed changes to be made therein similarly indicated.

(3) When a clause repeals an existing section, subsection or other minor division of a section, that section, subsection or division, or so much thereof as is essential, shall be printed opposite the clause.

(4) A memorandum by the draftsman explaining briefly the reason for each clause, shall be appended to the Bill, or distributed therewith. Whenever practicable the memorandum shall be printed on the right hand page of the Bill, in paragraphs opposite the clauses referred to and numbered correspondingly.

(5) The above rules shall also as far as practicable apply to the reprinting of Bills.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I understand that this is in accordance with the joint report of both Houses. Is it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is to become one of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is part of the report of the Joint Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

Hon Mr. BEIQUE: Has the report been adopted by the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, and notice has been given of the introduction of a Bill to carry it out.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: May I remark to the honourable gentleman who has introduced this motion that subsection 2 contains the words, "In the text of the Bill, on the left-hand page, new matter shall be indicated" etc. Generally it should be, I think, on the right-hand page.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is for the House to say which is preferable. I think it is all right as it is.

The motion was agreed to.

HOPPE COAL MINING LEASES

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. POPE: I desire to call the attention of the honourable leader of the Government to reports regarding a Bill that was passed in this House and in the Commons and is now law with reference to the Hoppe coal mines. Very disquieting rumours are being renewed in this city and in the city of Montreal, with reference to the effect that that legislation would have. I would like the honourable leader of the Government to give us some information with regard to the matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may inform my honourable friend that this matter has engaged the attention of the Government within the last 48 hours. I am unable to give further information. However, the Government is alive to the situation.

EXTRA PAYMENTS TO JUDGES

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. GEORGE GORDON: Honourable gentlemen ,yesterday when I called the attention of the honourable leader to the fact that the sum of $20,000 had been paid to two Judges of the High Court of Ontario, he asked me to produce some evidence to show that such was the case, and I replied to the effect that I did not think I could obtain it at this time. But last night I was fortunate in securing a copy of the Votes and Proceedings of the Ontario Legislature and I found in No. 50, at page 478, that this question was asked by a member of the Legislature:

1. What payments are included in the $118,000 given by the Attorney General as the cost of the Timber Commission? 2. To whom were these several payments made, and for what purposes? 3. What were the several dates of such payments? 4. Are any further amounts claimed by any person in connection with this Enquiry? 5. If so, what are such amounts, and by whom, and for what services are such claims made?

In reply to those questions, the Attorney-General said:

1, 2 and 3. If this amount was given by the Attorney-General, it was given by him from his recollection in answer to a question put to him during his address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. There should be added to this amount an accountable warrant for $50,000 issued to Mr. R. T. Harding in 1920, making a total of $168,952.69. This amount is made made up as follows:

Items on pages E 83 to 87 of the Public Accounts, 1920-21..	$113,781 05
Items on page E 72 of the Public Accounts 1921-1922..	33,556 07
Paid since 1st November, 1922:
The Hon. Mr. Justice Riddell.. ..	$10,000
The Hon. Mr. Justice Latchford..	10,000

I need not read the rest of the reply.

I submit, in view of this evidence, that the Department of Justice should be made aware of this and asked as to the legality of the proceeding, because, as I understand the 1920 amendment of the Judges Act, which was cited here yesterday, these judges in accepting the $20,000 were doing something which was absolutely illegal, or else the enactment which was placed upon the Statute Book goes for nothing. Language could not be plainer than what is contained in that particular amendment. It appears to me that the offence committed by these judges is all the more serious because one of the duties which they had to perform in the particular commission on which they were engaged, was to see whether or not a certain prominent individual in the Province of Ontario was acting in accordance with the law. They gave it as their opinion at the time that this particular gentleman was making a law unto himself.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The same as they did.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Yet it seems to me that they should have been the first to give an example not only to that gentleman but to the whole province of Ontario that they were going to be, like Caesar's wife, above suspicion; and that, even if there was some little loophole by which they could slip this $20,000 into their pockets, they would have avoided doing so. I feel quite justified in making these remarks, owing to the manner in which these Commissioners descended from the Bench and went about the country and threw mud in the most unjustifiable way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if the honourable gentleman is in order. There is no question on the Order Paper. What I suggested to my honourable friend was that he should find some official document upon which to base a question. He has found an official document, and my idea of the rules of this House is that upon that document, citing it, he should ask the Department of Justice what justification those judges had for accepting that sum. Then, if the Department of Justice is of opinion that an offence has been committed by those judges, we might discuss it. I am not seized of the facts nor of the opinion of the Department, and that is why I would ask my honourable friend to put himself in order by bringing this matter regularly before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Then I beg to move the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman will give notice?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Yes, I will give notice that later I will inquire.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: You may draft your notice.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY OFFICIALS

UNSATISFACTORY REPLY TO INQUIRY

Hon. C. E. TANNER: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a matter which appeals to me as being of urgent public importance. I told the leader of the House last night that I wanted to make a few remarks on the subject. The matter arises out of answers which were brought down to questions on the Order Paper yesterday. The question I asked was this:

What are the names of the persons who are known as the General Officers of the Canadian National Railways; the respective position at present held by each one of these general officers; and the yearly salary payable to each one.

The answer of the Government to that inquiry was:

It is not consdered to be in the interest of the Canadian National Railways, nor in the interest of the public, to make public such information.

Now, I want to say at once that I am not moved at all by any idle curiosity in regard to the gentlemen who occupy the positions of general officers on the Canadian National Railways, or the respective positions which they hold, or the salaries they are paid; nor would I for one moment protest against any of those gentlemen being paid what any reasonable man might describe as adequate compensation for the services they give to the country. The reason I put that question on the Order Paper was that I had learned that there is a great deal of discussion in various parts of the country in regard to those general officers, and what I believe to be exaggeration in regard to salaries which some of them, at least, are being paid. I was really moved to ask the question in the interest of those gentlemen themselves, in order that the facts might be known and the exaggerations dispelled which probably existed. I think it is in their interest that the owners of those railways should know the facts. For the life of me I am unable to see how any of those gentlemen can be prejudiced in the slightest degree, or how the public interest can be prejudiced, by a statement showing how much each one of them is being paid by the country.

I am aware that there is more or less discussion in regard to keeping politics out of the railways, and I am thoroughly in sympathy with that policy. I would not desire, and I am sure no honourable member of this House would desire, to return to the old days when the Government-owned railways were practically run by the politicians instead of by the Management. As honourable gentlemen are well aware, such matters as the making of contracts on behalf of the railways, the purchasing of supplies, and the appointment of employees and officials, were all conducted with deference to the views of politicians in the various provinces. I know that to have been the case in the eastern provinces. I would hold up both hands gainst the re-introduction of any system like that. At the same time I think there is a great deal of folly about this parrot-like statement that we must keep politics out of the railways. I prefer to take the ground taken this Session by men like the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways. The latter gentleman says the people own these railways, and there must necessarily be certain references to the politics of the railways; and the Minister of Finance has stated that anyone who thinks that politics can be kept out of the railways is making a great mistake; but by politics he means—and he made his statement that way—that politics are the business of the people, and the railways are the business of the people; and, according to Mr. Fielding it is unthinkable that the people, who are the owners of those railways, whose business is being managed in connection with those railways, would, as he says, turn over the entire business to an irresponsible body, and have nothing whatever to say in regard to that business.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Do I understand the honourable gentleman to move the adjournment?

Hon. Mr. TANNER.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I intend, if necessary, to move the adjournment of the House. I say that I am sure that the Finance Minister or the Minister of Railways did not have any idea in their minds, when so speaking, that there should be a return to the old days when, if a man wanted to sell railway ties or any other kind of supplies to the railway, he would enlist the sympathy and support of a politician, or if a man wanted to be made a brakesman or to be put in a roundhouse or otherwise in the railway employ he would have to go to the railway with a letter from a politician. Those days have gone by, and I would not have those conditions again introduced. I am sure that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways have no idea either, that those conditions should be brought back; but they recognize the fundamental fact which I have stated, that the people are the owners of those railways, and that they have surely some rights in regard to the management and to information relating to the management of the roads.

But when I ask for the names of the general officers and their salaries and the respective positions which they hold, I am told that it is not in the public interest nor in the interest of the railways that those facts should be disclosed. Let me point out, to begin with, that I have in my possession the names of those officers. There is no secret about that: the names are printed in the annual statement of the Canadian National Railways.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Might I ask the honourable gentleman through what channel the people could have something to say? He says he is very much opposed to politics being introduced.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I am going through the channel now.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Parliament.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Exactly; the correct channel. I expect to get somewhere, too, in regard to the matter. I find there are somewhere about 40 of those men who are known as general officers, headed by Sir Henry Thornton. There appear to be two of them in the city of London. I do not know whether this gentleman named Aronovici, of Paris, is one of the general officers; perhaps it might be difficult to say how much his salary is; perhaps he gets his remuneration by commissions on the purchase of real estate. However, there are 40 of those gentlemen, and I want to know, and I think this House should want to know, why it is not entitled to be told what position each one holds—because I understand there have been some changes—and further, what salary each one is paid. Those 40 gentlemen conduct the business of the railways. I would like to differentiate between asking questions in regard to the business of the railway, and asking a reasonable question in regard to those beneficiaries of the railway. I think that is a sound position to take. I can understand that it might be inadvisable for me to make an inquiry in regard to pending business of the railway, or business relating to the operation of the railway, or as to what is to be done in regard to purchasing supplies, the appointment of men, or the regulation of anything of internal concern in the management of the railways business; but that is entirely different from asking a question as to who are the officers, what positions they hold, and how much salary each one is paid.

As I see it, the fundamental principle beneath the argument that there should be no politics in the railways, if there is a principle, is that nothing should be done by politicians or public men which would embarrass the business of the railway, or prevent the managers from carrying on their operations in a businesslike way. I am prepared to concede that point; but I want to know, and I hope my honourable friend the leader of the Government will be able to tell me, how the business operations of the railway can be embarrassed in the slightest measure or prejudiced in the slightest degree by telling me how much Sir Henry Thornton gets, or how much any other member of the general staff gets, as salary, and what position he holds. I think there is a clear and distinct cleavage at that stage and it is because this subject is so befogged by the reiteration of the statement that there must be no politics in the railway that I decided to bring the matter before the Senate.

We all know how much money is paid to the station agents along the line, to the drivers, the conductors, the brakesmen; we know how much the ordinary officer along the railway gets. Where is the principle or policy that would suggest that the Government should say to any member of this House or the other House: "You are entitled to that much information in regard to the railways, but when you come to ask how much any one of those forty gentlemen who are called general officers gets, then the lid must be put on." Why should it be put on? What public interest is served by that? What public interest would be prejudiced or imperilled by telling me how much any one or every one of those forty gentlemen is paid by the country? I am sure, although I have never had the pleasure or privilege of attending a meeting of the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that if I were a shareholder and attended the annual meeting of shareholders of that railway and asked how much the general counsel or the legal manager or the passenger manager was being paid, I would not be told that it was not in the public interest that that information should be given. I take it that any shareholder would be told at once.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg to differ from my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Well, perhaps I am wrong; I have never had the privilege of attending a meeting of that railway company.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Do you mean to tell me that that railway company would tell the public?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I do not say the public; I say that if I were a shareholder and went to a meeting I would be told. My honourable friend forgets that it has been laid down time and again in this Parliament that the shareholders of the Canadian National Railways are the people of Canada. It may be, that there are 8,000,000 shareholders, but that does not alter the principle. There might be only a hundred shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but if there were a million it would not alter the principle, and the mere fact that there is a limited number, say a dozen, would not exclude the people of Canada from having an answer to that question.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why shouldn't they tell?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Yes, why should not the Management of any corporation, on being asked the question, give the information? Notwithstanding what has been said, I am sure that if I were a shareholder of the Canadian Pacific Railway I could get that information.

But although the officers refuse to give me the names, let me point out that I have the names. Sir Henry Worth Thornton heads the list as Chairman and President. Now, we are told how much Sir Henry Thornton gets; but why should we be given that information if we are to be denied any in regard to other members of the general officers? The next man is Major Graham A. Bell, who occupies the position on this list as Vice-president. We know what he gets; there is no attempt to hide from Parliament or the country the salary that is paid to Major Bell. The next we find is the General Solicitor. Now, I want to know, and I think it is a reasonable request, why the shareholders, the people of this country, should be told what Sir Henry Thornton, the President, gets, and what the Vice-president gets; but when we come to the General Counsel, to the Vice-president in charge of Operation, or to the Vice-president in charge of Traffic, or the Vice-president in charge of Construction, what policy comes in or what principle intervenes so that they say to me: "You can have the information regarding the President and the Vice-president, but you shall not have the information in regard to the other officers"?

Honourable gentlemen, I think I have clearly stated the situation, and we seem to have arrived at the stage now, if I understand it correctly, when people are not to be given any information in regard to those railways. We have hotels being bought in Paris; we have other properties being bought in other parts of the country; we have railways being extended in the United States, and possibly hotels being bought on the line of that railway in the United States to which reference was made at an earlier stage of the Session; there may be great public offices contracted for in other parts of the country; and information is not given in respect to these matters. The people's representatives—and in that expression I include this honourable body—are denied information in regard to the management of the business which is their own in common with all others of this country.

For these reason I want to protest as vigorously as I can against this closing-up of information. I repeat that I do not want to interfere with the business operations of the railway; but I want to be shown how I am interfering with the business or management of the railway by asking what are the salaries and the positions of the men to whom I have referred. In conclusion, I want to say again that it is in the interest of those men themselves, so that disquieting rumours which are current through the country in regard to their supposedly exaggerated salaries should be set at rest, that the public should be given the facts.

In order to put myself in order in this matter, I will move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, when this country enlarged its holdings in railway ownership and management to the extent of 22,000 miles, everyone realized that a peculiar situation would develop which would have to be treated with some delicacy; and there would be hardly any known rules which could easily be applied to the administration of such a large system by the State. We have come at this moment to one of the delicate situations that will have to be dealt with by the Parliament of Canada. In the administration of that immense system we should try to be governed by the general principles and the best traditions which prevail in the administration of such railway corporations. In solving a problem, we generally proceed from the known to the unknown.

What is the system of administration of a big railway in the hands of private shareholders? The shareholders meet once a year; they elect their board of directors, who in turn elect an executive. The shareholders can every year at the annual meeting put a certain number of questions. I am confident that such questions as those put by my honourable friend, except those as to the names of the officers, which are generally known because they are printed in the official publications of the company, would not be entertained. Answers would be bluntly refused, or the questioner would be told that he could get that information by applying to the Management.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: That is what I am doing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One moment. If my honourable friend will allow me to complete my demonstration, I think he will not then so readily jump to that conclusion. Why would the chairman ask the shareholder to apply to the Management? Because in many cases it is not good policy to impart information to competitors. I know from my own experience that shareholders have often been denied an answer on the spot, but have been turned over to the Management because it was in the interest of the company to maintain a certain amount of secrecy as to the general management of the line.

How does our present ownership of the railway compare with that tradition which obtains in these large corporations? The railway is the property of the people. The people are the shareholders, but they cannot have an annual meeting at which they would obtain direct information. They can only obtain it through their representatives in Parliament. I take it for granted that we in this House stand on an equal footing with the elected representatives on that score, and that Parliament represents the body of shareholders of the National Railway. Now, we are the shareholders attending the annual meeting, and my honourable friend is putting an official question, and he is answered: "Kindly address yourself privately to the Management." That is why he is denied that open, public information which he has asked for from his seat in this House.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How could the interests of the railway be possibly affected by answering a question as to the amount of salary that each individual officer receives? That is not a question of policy: that is not asking anything about the policy of the road. Why should there be any trouble about that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Suppose we reduce the railways of Canada to two large systems. Suppose the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway ply the Management with questions at the annual meeting, and obtain information concerning one or two or ten or fifty of the officers. What will be the effect on the neighbouring system? Certain officials will find that for various reasons they are receiving less than the amount mentioned as being received by other officials who occupy similar positions—I am simply speaking now of salaries—and right away you have dissatisfaction throughout the whole system. There may be other reasons; I simply give a reason that comes to my mind at this moment, and it may not be the best reason.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would you like to guarantee that every officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway does not know what every officer of the Canadian National gets for salary? And would you guarantee that the reverse does not hold true—that every officer in the Canadian National does not know what every official of the Canadian Pacific Railway in like standing is getting?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I have asked the leader of the House to allow me to answer this question, because I happen to know something about it. In the case of the C.P.R. there is a sum appropriated to be divided among a certain number of superior officials, and no one knows how much those officials are actually drawing. I defy anyone in this House to say what Lord Shaughnessy drew as salary, or what the present President is drawing. I might remind honourable gentlemen that a man who has been a member of the other House, and who was a shareholder of the Canadian Pacific Railway—I refer to Sir Donald McMaster—who for many years rose at the annual meetings of the Canadian Pacific Railway and inquired what was the salary of this one and that, and could not obtain an answer.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Do they pay by cash or by cheque?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I venture to say that if it had been known by the representatives in Parliament that the heads of the Government-owned railway could apportion a certain sum of the money of the country to themselves to be divided secretly, there would have been very much stronger opposition to the acquisition of the road, particularly of a road that is going behind at the rate of $100,000,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have realized within the last twenty-four months that machinery would have to be devised to enable the shareholders of the National Railway to obtain some information as to the administration of this immense asset. I call it an asset, knowing fairly well that it could be called otherwise; but I hope the day will come when it will show a surplus.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It never will if this kind of work goes on.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It has struck me that we might well consider the formation of a joint committee that would represent all parties to obtain direct information from the railway Management. At this moment I would not suggest that that committee, which could call for persons and papers, should report to Parliament except under very exceptional circumstances. I recall the fact that in the British Parliament and in the French Parliament there are Committees that sit with closed doors. I know that in the French Parliament there is a Committee on Foreign Affairs which is composed of representatives of all the groups in Parliament, and which calls before it the Minister of Foreign Affairs and obtains from him all the information that he possesses upon the relations of their country with the rest of the world. The members of the British House of Commons who visited the French capital during the war and studied the operations of the French Parliament returned to London feeling that the French Parliament had a much larger authority over the various departments of Government than had the British Parliament. They particularly mentioned the fact that this Committee on Foreign Affairs knew all that was going on, while under the British system only the inner Cabinet knew what was going on. I throw out the suggestion, which may have been expressed by some in the other House, that it will not be possible to allow the administration of our big railway system to remain in the hands of a Board without reference to those who have the responsibility and the obligation of taxing the people having a look into its administration.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I say so.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I do not want to single out any one of these gentlemen; but to give an illustration I may say that only the other day, since I asked this question, a reputable citizen of Ottawa asked me if I knew that the Vice-President and General Counsel, who comes next to Sir Henry Thornton and Major Bell, was receiving a salary of $25,000 a year, which is twice as much plus $5,000 as the Deputy Minister of Justice gets.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the Government will welcome the close of this Session after the exhibition that has been made here to-day of a want of accord in the Cabinet. A week or two ago there was an exhibition elsewhere on the slippery question of oleomargarine. To-day the Minister has laid down the principle that nobody shall know anything about the salaries paid to the officers of this road.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have laid down no such principle. I simply carried into this Chamber the answer of the Railway Department.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The Railway Department or the Canadian National Railway Board?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not the answer which I read to my honourable friend the other day, but I would judge from the form of the answer that it came from the Railway Department.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I do not think it could have come from the Minister of Railways and Canals, because that gentleman has just taken the opposite ground. If the honourable gentleman will look in the House of Commons Hansard of April 17 he will see what the Minister of Railways said.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would the honourable gentleman read it.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Yes. It was in connection with the touching reference to the distribution of gratuities by themselves to themselves—of vast amounts of money—by the officers of the Grand Trunk Railway, when they themselves believed that the Government would not reappoint them, but would pay some heed to the opinion of the Conservatives with regard to the appointment of these gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg my honourable friend's pardon. The Government did not reappoint them.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The Government does not appoint any of the officials at all?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The Government appointed Sir Henry Thornton—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It appointed Sir Henry Thornton, that is all.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: —and then the clamps were put on, and we are not to be informed as to those whom he appoints. At least that is the opinion; and, judging by some of the appointments, there must have been some power exercised, or else, in view of the past record of some of the men connected with the Grand Trunk Railway, he never would have reappointed them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But has not my honourable friend heard Sir Henry Thornton repeat half-a-dozen times in the last few months that he had been given an absolutely free hand and had not been hampered in any way?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Oh, I have heard Sir Henry Thornton say a good many things. I have heard him say, "The public be d——" —in plain English, he was going to do what he liked in this country.

What did the Minister of Railways announce in the House of Commons? My honourable friend should take him to task. He said: "Mr. Robb's salary is $16,500 a year, Mr. Dalrymple's $16,500, Mr. Rosevear's $12,000, Mr. Logan's $12,000, Mr. Galloway's $9,000, Mr. Hansard's $7,200, Mr. Bell's $5,000 (that would not be Mr. Graham Bell), and Mr. Martin's $5,000." If the House of Commons has a right to this information, why should not we have it? The gratuity is equal to one year's salary in each of those cases.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That was the salary paid by the Grand Trunk.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: That was the salary paid by the Grand Trunk, and it is only fair to assume that those gentlemen are getting at least the same salary as they did under the Grand Trunk. In fact, there is strong reason to believe that they are getting salaries very much increased, on account of their financial difficulties; for Sir Henry Thornton said, in the statement that he made to the public in reference to this matter, that the recipients of those beautiful gratuities were so hard up that they could not return them and would have to ask for time for the return of the money. A fine advertisement—that the leading officials of the Grand Trunk were so hard up that they could not return the gratuities they had received, and would want time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps their salaries had been reduced.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: It would be fatal to the creditors if that were so.

Those are the salaries that were paid, and it is therefore pretty certain that the same salaries are continued, if not increased.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The honourable gentleman might have added that he did not care, for that seems to be the attitude of the Government in general and of Sir Henry Thornton.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is not the trend of my remarks.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The public will now know what those officials have been paid. Furthermore, my honourable friend may read in a newspaper published in the city of Montreal, and also in the Toronto Star of a few weeks ago, that leading officials of the Grand Trunk, who are named, have been guilty of all kinds of graft and wrongdoing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is not my honourable friend enlarging the question somewhat at this late hour of the Session?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I enlarge upon the dereliction of the Government in not looking into this matter of the large salaries received by these men. Many other things are stated in the newspapers, and the officials are named.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend approved of the Government's declaration that it would refrain from interfering in the administration of these railways.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: If this Government is going to take that ground, no matter what the Board does, no matter what allegations are made in open daylight of wrongdoing and of all kinds of impropriety by the directors and employees—if the Government is not going to interfere, the public had better know it.

Let me give the honourable gentleman a sample charge against one of these highest priced officials, with the exception of Sir Henry Thornton:

> Is it true that the "family spirit" so gaily mentioned in the Montreal newspapers as prevailing in the C.N.R. exceeds the "public spirit" to such an extent that very large contracts for unnecessary material have been given to a supply company in which sons of a C.N.R. official are interested?

Has not the honourable gentleman seen that charge made in the Montreal and Toronto newspapers?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Then it is high time that it should be brought to the notice of himself and his colleagues. A Montreal paper mentions the name of a high official of the Canadian National, and the question is asked:

> Is it true that car 73 for the use of the president C.N.R., which cost $96,000 to build, will now cost the taxpayer of this country a further $90,000 for overhauling, changing or renewing, and that the car, even then, will be unserviceable?

There is a whole page of such charges made in the daily press. Yet the Government says: "What can we poor men do? These officials have been appointed and are in office. We can do nothing until Sir Henry Thornton's term runs out." That is the ground the Government is taking to-day.

I have stated for the benefit of the honourable gentleman, and he now knows, what those officials were paid, according to the statement of the Minister of Railways, and what they are probably being paid at present.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is somewhat derelict in his duty in not placing an inquiry on the Order Paper whenever he wants information as to some extravagant act on the part of the administration.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: What is the use?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I would be answered by the honourable gentleman that to give the information would be a public disclosure of business that such information, to use his own words, should not be imparted, and it would not be good policy to let the public know. These are his own words.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the honourable gentleman, by his query, would impart the information to the Government.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Much good that would do. It seems that the Government has appointed this man Sir Henry Thornton—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, "man" is as good a qualification as "gentleman." I would take it as such. He certainly is a man.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: A big fellow.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I hope so. He came here with a great flourish of trumpets. No man could have been heralded with finer expressions of his ability and all that sort of thing than accompanied the advent of Sir Henry Thornton.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And of his record.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But I am afraid his head has been slightly turned by the adulations which he has received, and that his stomach might have been disordered by the banquets which he has been forced to eat, by the speeches that have been made in his honour, and by the testimony which the various members of the Government have borne to his transcendent ability. Why, this man bestrides this Canada of ours like a colossus, with one foot in Halifax and the other in Prince Rupert, and his head in the clouds. He has made the public statement that he didn't care a fig—he did not use such pleasant language as that—about the politicians of Canada: he was going to do just as he liked. Now, if by the term "the politicians of Canada," he means the representatives in Parliament, whether in the House of Commons or in the Senate, then I would point out that, according to the statement of my honourable friend, the politicans of Canada represent the shareholders of the Canadian National Railway, and here we have the prime example of a man who feels his oats to such an extent that he can snap his fingers at the shareholders of the corporation of which he is the nominal head. Is that a very good state of affairs? Every man who takes an interest in the welfare of this country is anxious that the Canadian National Railways shall be a success—is anxious that the enormous deficit that year by year has to be paid by the tax-ridden citizens of Canada should be lessened; yet, so little does Sir Henry Thornton care about what their opinion is that he told us in plain language that he did not care a fig for the politicians—that is, for the representatives of the people.

He seems to have gone a very long way into extravagance. He reports that there are some 75 private cars in connection with the Railway System—67 for the system itself and 8 at the disposal of members of the Government. I do not intend to enlarge upon that, because I have on the Order Paper a motion which will call for some reference to it. In reply to an inquiry which I made, an answer has been given which it took three months to extract. It was only by constant pounding on my part, as the honourable leader of the Government will remember, that at length I got a partial answer with regard to these expenditures. That delay only carries out the idea that the public have no business to know what is being done with regard to the Canadian National Railways; that that is to be solely within the knowledge of Sir Henry Thornton, K.C.B. It does not seem quite right in a democratic country. I thought this was a country governed by the representatives of the people, but so far as this great national asset of the railways is concerned, we are governed by one man, a gentleman who was born an American sovereign, but manufactured later on into a British knight. Whether that movement be up or down I do not know, but it seems to have affected him so much that he thinks he owns this whole country from Halifax to Vancouver—from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Only the Government.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: My honourable friend from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) read the statement from a newspaper that one car had cost $96,000. The statement which Sir Henry Thornton is supposed to have given in answer to my query was that private cars cost $20,000, and cost $650 to equip. I knew at once, of course, that that was not true, because $650 could not possibly equip some of the private cars which I have seen. I fancy the other statement is nearer to the point.

This man, you know, came out here, as I say, with a great flourish of trumpets, and he was banquetted all over the country. He went on a royal progress through Canada. There were nine private cars. At the same time that he was making his progress to the eastward, this Board of Directors were on a pilgrimage to the West. Oh, they are a beautiful lot, this Board of Directors. They know a lot about railways and railway management—very broad-minded men. We have a sample of two of them, not in this House, but in the other Chamber. They are as broad as the edge of a knife-blade. The two parties were back to back, one facing to the East and the other facing to the West with eight private cars, at the expense of the public of Canada. And what would this new Board of Directors, after they had traversed the prairies and the mountains, know about the railways? Just as much as when they started. But all this was at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada. I think the sooner that contract with Mr.—oh, I beg his pardon—Sir Henry Worth Thornton—the sooner that contract ends and he is packed back to Pennsylvania, where he came from, the better it will be for the National Railways of Canada.

The motion for the adjournment of the House was withdrawn.

CANADA TEMPERANCE BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE POSTPONED

On the Order:

House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill 43, an Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have been asked to move that the consideration of this Order be adjourned until to-morrow. So I ask that the Order be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I thought it was to stand until Monday. The information desired would not be available by Friday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At all events, we will put it down on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it will be Monday before the Bill gets its third reading.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes. But in moving that this Order be discharged I would like to refer to a question raised a couple of weeks ago by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), as to the possibility of this legislation having some effect on the Ontario Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: On pending litigation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is claimed that Ontario was not absolutely under Part IV, because it had a Board for purchasing and delivering liquor under certain conditions. A test case was before the court and in it this contention was made. It was, I understand, rejected by the court, but there is an appeal. I told the honourable gentleman from Hamilton that I would look into the question. It has been suggested that an amendment could be added to the Bill in order to remove any doubt. I read a telegram from the Attorney General of Ontario commending the legislation and taking no exception to it. Perhaps that should suffice; but if any honourable member from Ontario feels rather uneasy about the matter, I would be ready, after having submitted it to the Department of Justice, to consider the addition of a clause to this effect:

This Part shall not apply to any Province wherein a vote of the electors has been in favour of the prohibitions contained in Part IV hereof.

That is the prohibition clause that governs Provinces that have voted absolute prohibition.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does that refer to the amendment that has been moved?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, that has nothing to do with it. The honourable gentleman from Hamilton raised the question some days ago, and I promised to look into it. Since then I have had the opinion of the Attorney General of Ontario, who takes no exception. However, if any of the honourable gentlemen from Ontario feel uneasy about this legislation, I would have no objection to consider such a proposed amendment as I have mentioned.

I move that this Order be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would it not be better to provide instead that this legislation shall not affect pending litigation —pending say in the Province of Ontario? I have a couple of letters from counsel in the Province, pointing out that certain pending litigation there, in a well-known case which had been decided, but which, should there be an appeal, would be affected by this Bill. I think that a plain statement that it shall not affect pending litigation in the Province of Ontario would meet the situation better than the language suggested.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How could it affect pending litigation?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would be glad to show my honourable friend the letters which I have received from two different counsel of some standing saying that it will.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Pending litigation could only be affected if we said so in definite words.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But the contention is that the entire Bill which came to us from the Commons, not as we have amended it, but as it was drafted in the Commons, would or under certain conditions might affect pending litigation in Ontario. I am not prepared to go into the legal complexities of the situation, and the comment I made upon receiving those letters was that if counsel in Ontario were so apprehensive of this Bill affecting pending litigation in Ontario, they should have forwarded to those with whom they were corresponding some draft amendment which would meet the situation which they have not done.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Can my hon. friend tell us if he has looked at the Bill from the Commons, and if it purports in any way to make legislation retroactive?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have not given any serious thought to litigation in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think the fears are wholly unwarranted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They do not think so. I might just read part of this letter, without stating who the counsel is, but he is one of the most prominent in Toronto:

> The Bill which recently passed the House of Commons prohibits the importation of spirituous liquor into all parts of Canada. The Bill was originally intended to meet the situation in Quebec and British Columbia, where they have Government control. Unfortunately, the Act as it passed the Commons goes much beyond the intention of the original promotors, and if passed will not only prohibit importation into Ontario but will determine litigation now pending in the courts the object of which is to settle whether or not the present Act was ever applicable to the province of Ontario. We are anxious that at least the Act should be limited in its effect to Quebec and British Columbia. If your political commitments do not prevent, may I ask you to do what is possible towards this end?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That does not affect my mind to the slightest degree.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the way lawyers differ; otherwise we would not make a living.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The House has to decide between lawyers.

The motion was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 85, an Act to amend the Naturalization Acts, 1914 and 1920.

Hon. Mr. Taylor in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—definition of natural-born British subject:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does this bring our Naturalization Act into line with the Imperial Act?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is an absolute re-enactment of the Imperial legislation of last year.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So there is no distinction between this and the Imperial Act? I understand that some years ago, when we changed our Act, we were committed absolutely to the policy of the Imperial Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no change whatever.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: How was that delay of twelve months arrived at?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is twelve months after the passage of the Imperial Act of last year.

Sections 2 and 3 were agreed to.

On section 4—certificates to enemy subjects:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What was the section that was repealed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This repeals the clause which prevented Canada from naturalizing Germans.

Sections 4 and 5 were agreed to.

On section 6—force of amending Acts:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I ask whether the effect of this would be to make the original Act retroactive?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It cannot be retroactive, because it only applies to future Acts.

Section 6 was agreed to

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD BILL

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON MOTION FOR SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand for the second reading of Bill 206, an Act to amend The Biological Board Act.

Hon. O. TURGEON: Honourable gentlemen, when I asked the honourable leader of the Government yesterday to kindly postpone the debate on this Bill, my object was to get information in regard to the change in the Biological Board, which has given great service to the country for many years past. The honourable leader of the Government has given us a vast amount of complex information which has merely increased my apprehension at the change suggested in the Bill. For many years we have had this Biological Board, composed of the most eminent scientific men in Canada, having for its Chairman Prof. Knight, whose reputation is not only well known all over Canada, but is world-wide. We have had Prof. E. E. Prince as Secretary-Treasurer, and certainly he has rendered eminent services to this country for many years while he has been in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I was pleased yesterday to hear the eulogy given him by the honourable member from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury). We have also on this Board the most learned and notable scientific men of Canada, representing a large number of our universities, who have freely given their services for the development of this great science, and their work has been very valuable to this country.

What I had expected was that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would propose to form a Board that would have to do with the marketing of our fish products on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. I would like to see such a Board, composed of the leading officials of that Department, in conjunction with one or two business men interested in the fishing industry, who could give demonstrations to the fishermen in order that they might get the full benefit of their labours and reduce the expense of bringing fish products from the field of production to the market. The diet value of our fish is not sufficiently understood in the large centres of Canada like Montreal, Toronto, and other places.

We should endeavour to help the fishermen to get cheap refrigerators along the coast in which they would be able to store the fish before they had deteriorated by heat or contact with the air, so that they could reach the markets in perfect condition, because when fish are frozen to a certain degree they remain so until they reach the table of the consumer. Unfortunately, our fishermen are not provided with facilities of that kind. Last night I heard my honourable friend from Ottawa stating that our Canadian people were not sufficiently acquainted with the proper method of cooking fish.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, I did not say that: it was some honourable gentleman opposite. What I said was that we always have great difficulty in Ottawa in getting fish that are absolutely fresh, and my remarks, were directed to the need for better marketing of fish.

Hon. Mr. TURGEON: The observations of the honourable gentleman entirely agree with what I have been expressing. That is the plan I have for the encouragement and development of the fisheries, more particularly in Canada. Perhaps one reason why the fishermen and dealers in fish have been neglectful of the Canadian market is that the American market was the natural one for them, and they were sure of the highest price over there. But since the conditions imposed on Canadian fisheries for the last year or two by the Fordney Tariff Bill of the United States, an apprehension has been created in the minds of both the dealers and the fishermen themselves.

I would not tell the universities of Canada that the services of their scientific men were no more required, and that hereafter one or two of them would be sufficient on the Board. We certainly owe a great deal to the reports of the Biological Board, and I would be tempted to ask the Parliament and Senate of Canada to invite further universities to join that Board, such as the University of Montreal, which is now separate from Laval University, the University of St. Francois Xavier in Nova Scotia and perhaps others in British Columbia and Alberta. The more scientific problems we can solve by way of research the better it will be for the development of Canada—and there is a great future for the natural resources of all kinds in this country. I fear that this Bill would perhaps throw cold water on our university people, who, instead of being satisfied with one or two representatives, might perhaps withdraw from representation on the Board if sufficient means are not provided to supply the country with all the information that such problems deserve. It is for that reason that I fear that if the Board is complex, a double Board, it will not operate. Insteal of a double Board, let us have two Boards—let us retain the Biological Board as it exists today, and form a Committee or a Board composed of the leading officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries along with one or two men engaged in the fishing industry and this will result in the greatest development of the fisheries of Canada. I trust that my views will commend themselves to the approval of the Senate.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would like to ask the leader of the Government what is the object of this Bill? What is the need that it is providing for?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend was not here yesterday when I read a memorandum from the Department. The statement has been made to me that the situation is not that which confronted us three or four years ago, when we objected to a similar Bill. I am informed that the Biological Board is agreeable to this legislation. That is what I want to ascertain before to-morrow. I would ask my honourable friend to move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I wonder if my honourable friend could not at the same time secure from the Board some expression of opinion as to whether the practical end of the fishing industry could not be more fully looked after by the appointment of other than technical men on this Board. We have on this Board twelve or fifteen professional men. I do not know that any one amongst them has ever made any special study or investigation with regard to the commercial or industrial end of the fishing industry. The proper transportation and marketing of fish is a matter in which I take a very deep interest, and that is something that has never been thought of or looked after. One of our colleagues told us that in Chicago you could buy pork for half the price of fish but we are not living in the city of Chicago, and we want some fish too. You cannot get fresh fish in Ottawa. Surely, if there is anyone who ought to investigate the question of getting fish in Ottawa or other places like it, it is the Biological Board.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No, they have nothing to do with that at all.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is part of your transportation system.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is, but if the Board would take it up and make recommendations to the transportation people, we might get somewhere; but if it is a case of simply forgetting it, nobody will look after it.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Did not the honourable member from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Turgeon) make some suggestion of that kind—that you could have an alternative Board constituted on different principles?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There would be some sense in that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not care how it is done, but let us do something. Let us not simply talk about it from one year to another and do nothing.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: You can leave the Biological Board alone. It is working well. The fish merchants in the Maritime Provinces say that it is a very satisfactory institution. Let us leave that alone and deal with the other thing by itself in another Bill.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That is a different thing altogether. The Biological Board is purely scientific. It has for its object the finding out of anything that affects the fish deleteriously, in the taking and curing, and in what microbic action takes place.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We all understand that.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Why would you harness that up with a Board that would have to do with the transportation and marketing and cold storage of fish, and how it should get from the producer—like my honourable friend from Souris (Hon. Mr. McLean), who has cold storage facilities—to your people in Ottawa? Why should these people have anything to do with the biological part of the work? If this Bill were to divide the Board, as was suggested by my honourable friend from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Turgeon), there would be some sense to it; but to take three or four laymen who know nothing about biology and put them on the same Board as these scientific men from the universities of the country, who give their time gratuitously, is ridiculous. These scientific men name the students from the universities—histological and pathological men who are used to microscopic work—who are sent to the different stations free of charge for what they will learn from a scientific standpoint. A Committee was appointed a year or so ago, and the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross), His Honour the Speaker, and myself held two separate meetings, and came to the conclusion that certain proposals would cause chaos and confusion in the scientific Board. And they did, to the extent that the Board lost the services of its best scientist, Professor A. B. McCallum, now Professor of Bio-chemistry at McGill. If you put these laymen on the Board you will lose all your scientific men.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am not so anxious that these people that I speak of should be part of this Board. That was not my suggestion to the Minister. My suggestion is to devise some means or other of arranging for the proper transportation and marketing of fish.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: We all hold up our two hands for that.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I differ entirely from my honourable friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Murphy) in this respect: I think biological inquiry is inapplicable, because biology applies to animal life.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Biology relates to everything that is not human.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: It is ichthyology—the special investigation of the life of fishes.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Biology applies to life of all kinds.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The question is between the practical application of this Bill and the purely scientific. It may be very interesting to inquire into records and books and other matters, or into the special modes of preparing fish in other countries; but those university men know nothing practical themselves—they know nothing about the life of each species of fish.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Yes they do.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: If a practical man comes in, he is accustomed day by day to treating these fishes, and knows more about the life and habits of the tribes of fishes than all the savants in all the universities of Canada. It is with regard to the value of the fish commodity to the country that the Committee ought to have its dealings. I do not defend these scientists in any way; they differ so widely that it is never very safe to pay the implicit attention to what they find.

The honourable gentleman opposite spoke about Chicago, where he said fish were dearer than pork. Well, pork is a very useful adjunct in the cooking of fried fish. The question of domestic fish cookery is urgent. How are you going to get people to understand how to cook fish, because the women who did that formule have now practically abandoned household work.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Perhaps they could cook it and send it up to us.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The fish my honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has tasted has been brought from Gloucester, because the fishermen of Gloucester fish out on the Banks, and the codfish and other deep-sea fish are pacted in the hold of the vessel, treated in the most lavish manner with a great quantity of salt, and are exposed to delay and depreciation and other vexatious elements; and when they are finally brought to the tables in Ottawa they are an odious article rather than a delicate and attractive one. Then, again, the taste of the deep-sea fish is gone from it. The refrigerator plant takes all the taste out of fish. Fish that has been frozen,—is an almost untasteable article, and the palate rejects it rather than being attracted by it.

The only way would be for people to order their fish in advance and have it prepared; and it must be put in cars where it is alive, if you want it to have the real flavour of salt water fish. Fish out of the boat at the seashore is a totally different article to what is served up in your hotels and private houses in Ottawa; and until you can send fish in vans in which the fish are kept alive, you will never have the delectable article. It should be transported in the fastest cars that can be had. In England the fishing vans are brought up to the cities, and the fish are delivered alive.

Then there is the dry fish on the seashore called shorefish. You cannot compare this article with larger fish caught by the Gloucester fishermen and others on the Banks. Fish caught in the way I have described cannot equal or compare with the shore fish. The shorefish is brought by boats to shore and the women take charge of it and dry it properly, and it is a totally different article from the Banks fish which is supplied to the cities of Canada. It is only when you come down by the sea that you get the real good article that contributes so largely to the mentality of the citizens of that coast.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not intend to follow the honourable gentleman in his argument as to the practicability of getting fresh fish here any further than to point out to the leader of the Government that the proposed Bill is an attempt to destroy the effect of the Biological Board. The Biological Board is a purely scientific Board which is doing valuable work throughout Canada. Now it is proposed to add to that Board practical fishermen for the purpose of arranging for the marketing of fish. These two matters ought not to be mixed. I submit, honourable gentlemen, that a Board ought not to be necessary for this purpose. We have got a Department of Fisheries, on which we are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, which ought to do that work. I have pointed out time after time the desirability of taking such action as would bring into this market fresh fish from the Atlantic. Some years ago, when the Hon. Mr. Hazen was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he made some move along this line, largely on the suggestion that I made to him personally, and carloads of fish were brought into Ottawa twice a week. The Department has all the machinery that is necessary to accomplish this work without adding one more member to any Board.

I differ with my honourable friend regarding the knowledge of the fishermen. The practical fishermen know nothing but how to take the fish and where to go for them; consequently it would be a great mistake to add these men to this Board, and it would destroy the magnificent work which the Board has done in Canada during the last ten or fifteen years.

I would like to impress upon the House the importance of not creating any Board for the purpose of assisting the marketing of fish in this country. This matter should be put up to the Fisheries Department itself. We have a highly paid staff in that Department, and if they are not competent to do the work they ought to make way for men who will be competent.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the honourable gentleman from Middleton has moved the ajournment of the debate, and we are probably out of order.

On motion of Hon. W. B. Ross, the debate was adjourned.

MILITIA PENSION BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 219, an Act to amend the Militia Pension Act.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will ask Colonel Orde to come to the floor.

On section 1—period of service entitling officers to pension; proviso as to officers who served in war and have been on Force for less than ten years since appointment:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The effect of this section will be to restore subsection 1 of section 4 of the Act to its original form, whereby twenty years' service is required before the officer becomes entitled to a pension.

Clause 1 of the Bill adds to subsection 1 of section 4 of the original Act a proviso whereby certain officers who were brought into the Permanent Force from the Canadian Expeditionery Force when the period of service required for the purpose of pension was only ten years, will still have the benefit of this reduced period. These officers were all brought in between the 1st of January, 1919, and the 1st of December, 1921, and all saw active service during the war. The reason for the latter date being the 31st of December, 1921, is that subsequent thereto certain cadets from the Royal Military College received appointment to the force as lieutenants, some of whom, during the annual training camp possibly served with a unit of the Permanent Force whilst cadets of the Royal Military College and there is a possibility that while they were so attached they may be legally deemed to have been on active service and would on that ground come within the scope of the proviso. The fact however that their appointments to the Force were not made until they had graduated from the College, subsequent to the 31st of December, 1921, makes the proviso inapplicable to them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: What has my honourable friend to say in reply to the inquiry I made yesterday?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would ask my honourable friend to state it again. I may be in a position to answer it if he will repeat it in concise form.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I endeavoured yesterday to call the attention of my honourable friend and of the House to the fact that the passing of the amendment to the Militia Pension Act would deprive certain men in the Military Service of rights which they had acquired under the amendments of 1921. I respectfully suggested for the honourable gentleman's consideration that it might be wise to postpone the amendment of the Militia Pension Act. The Government undoubtedly contemplate enacting a general Pension Act soon, as they only yesterday extended the Calder Act for a year. They must have in view some general pension scheme for Civil Servants. Furthermore, I notice that in section 1, which has just been referred to, certain officers who perhaps did not participate in the war at all are protected, but under sections 3 and 4 of the Bill, privates now in the Militia Service who were under the legislation of 1921 given the same right as officers, that is, a right to pension after ten years' service, are now deprived of it. The situation as I see it is that certain young officers who may have been in Kingston College and were then made officers subsequent to Armistice Day and prior to 1921, will still be eligible to receive a pension after ten years' service, whereas men who actually served in the trenches in France and who happened to continue in the Permanent Force, have to serve 20 years before they can receive any benefit. If my honourable friend agrees with this interpretation, he will see that that is a very unfair arrangement.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Honourable gentlemen, I have studied this matter somewhat since yesterday, when I offered some observations regarding it.

I think that the first misapprehension which the honourable gentleman from Welland (Hon.

Mr. Robertson) has is that any analogy can be found between Civil Service pensions and Military pensions. A comparison would at once show a difference in the terms and conditions of service, necessitating a different form of pension and a different application of the pension principle.

With regard to the Bill itself, this point may have escaped the observation of the honourable gentleman from Welland. Under the Act as amended provision was made that a pension might be secured after 10 years' service. The purpose of that provision was to permit of an adjustment in the Canadian Militia Permanent Force following the war, the accumulation of a large number of officers and men as a result of the war making the service top-heavy in the face of reductions then about to be undertaken. There is, first, this distinction. An officer could not take advantage of that 10-year period unless he was compulsorily retired. That is to say, having 10 years service in, he might resign if he saw fit, but he would not necessarily get a pension. He was entitled to a pension on 10 years' service only if he was compulsorily retired. After serving ten years he might say, "I will resign." The Government was free to say, "Very well, you may resign, but you get no pension." But if the Government desired to get rid of him at the end of ten years, it was at liberty to retire him compulsorily; but in that event he was given a pension on his ten years' service. The purpose of that provision was to enable the Government to carry out its reorganization of the Permanent Force. The war had disclosed the fact that some officers were not of much use. They had failed to make good. They had given a number of years' service. It was desired to get rid of them. Subsequently there came into the Permanent Force men who had distinguished themselves in the war, and they are referred to in the second paragraph of the Bill. Most of those men who distinguished themselves are elderly, and provision is made that they may earn a pension in ten years. At the end of ten years' time the position will be this. Some of them may have by that time passed the age limit or approached so closely to it that they will be retired compulsorily. In that case they will get their pension. If any of these men, having passed his 10 years, has not yet attained the age limit, he will be carried on if he is efficient and will not be retired compulsorily until after perhaps 13 or 15 years' service. But at the end of 10 years the officer has earned a pension, and he may reap the benefit of it if he is retired compulsorily. If he is not retired compulsorily, he must continue to give his service to the Government of Canada until the Government disposes of him by compulsory retirement.

With regard to the non-commissioned officers and men, I want you to note this essential difference, that at the end of 10 years a non-commissioned officer or man may retire voluntarily and claim his pension, whereas the officer cannot do so. Under the Act as it will be when amended, the officer must serve 35 years before he can retire on full pension. If after 20 years' service he retires and applies for his pension, he will receive a 20-year pension less a discount of 20 per cent.

What has actually happened is this. A great many young non-commissioned officers and men have taken advantage of the 10-year retirement clause. You understand that at the end of ten years they can apply for their pension and get it. They are in an altogether different position from the officers in that respect. Quite a large number of men, still young and in the prime of life, and useful, are applying for pensions on retirement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Pensions enacted, in what year—in 1919?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: In 1919. When I first saw the proposed legislation I wondered to what extent there could be an injustice. The first question which confronted me was: why should these men be getting out? The reason they are retiring is the reduction of the military forces of Canada. By reason of the action of this Parliament there is no longer a career in Canada for a man who wants to be a soldier. Take the case of an energetic young man who thought some years ago that he would enter military service in this country and make it a life work. He finds that as a result of the paring-down process all the higher ranks are filled. The chance for promotion is now so slight that many such men are leaving the service and taking their pensions. That is a result of the action of the Government, and I think the Government should bear the burden.

On the other hand, I have examined the question of cost, and it would appear that pensions on that score are mounting up at a considerable rate, and the Government must do something to protect itself. There have arisen a number of isolated cases which I have taken up with the Department. I have in mind the case of a man who served 25 years in the British Army and who will have completed 10 years of Canadian service, under the 10-year plan, in October of this year. He is obliged to leave the country on account of the illness of his wife, and he has arranged to take his discharge under the Act as it now stands. By the passing of this Bill you do that man an injustice. I have interested myself in the case, and I find upon inquiry that there is power in the hands of the Government, under the Militia regulations, to deal with his case, especially in view of the fact that he has had 25 years' previous service, a portion of which may be counted in the settlement with him. The question arises, how many other men are there who will be in a similar position? After discussion with a number of officials I am prepared to leave the matter of adjustment of such cases to the fairness and the generosity of the Government, having regard to the powers which I think the Government has. The honourable gentleman from Welland raised the question of fairness, and I am speaking to that question in reference to the cases of which I have some knowledge, and the possibility of similar cases arising.

The present situation originated with the desire on the part of the Government to adjust itself to peacetime conditions. The Government has reduced the Force, and many of the men are getting out. The Government must now protect itself against its own legislation, which was building up a rather formidable pension list, a great many men taking advantage of the law as it stood.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I would like to ask a question of the honourable leader of the Government, or the honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat. The feeling has prevailed for many years that military men were especially favoured in regard to pensions, as compared with other classes in the country. I would like a little explanation with regard to the granting of a pension to a man who has served ten years. That seems a very short period of service.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: It is at once admitted that ten years is no period at all for a pension, but that was brought about by the special circumstances created by the war.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: That is not a very good explanation. What were the special conditions to justify it?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I can explain it better by putting a concrete case. When the war broke out we had in Canada a Permanent Force, as the honourable gentleman is no doubt aware. Its members were all well-trained men, and when the war broke out it naturally gave them their opportunity, and they all received promotion. Men who had been corporals and sergeants in the Permanent Force came out of the war as majors and captains, and in some cases colonels. They were still in the Permanent Force. You could not very well deprive them of their rank, because they had earned it in the field. Canada refused to employ them at their rank, because there were no openings. What was to be done with them? The Militia Pension Act was then amended to provide that a man who had in ten years' service might retire on pension, and many retired who could not be given employment. They took their discharge under the provisions of the Act as amended.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Did those men who went out receive a pension?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: They are pensioned according to their term of service, extending from 35 years down to 10 years. Of course, the pensions on ten years' service are small. The man is pensioned at the rank which he earned in the field.

The Government was faced with the problem as to what should be done with men who had distinguished themselves in that fashion. Something had to be done with them. They could not be kept in the Permanent Force. They could not be turned loose without some recognition. So the Government introduced an amendment to the Act providing for a ten-year pension, which enabled it to dispose of a number of these men on comparatively small pensions.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Then I am not far wrong in saying that there is a pension for men who have had ten years' service.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Yes, certainly there is.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: That is what I complain of.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But we are now retracing our steps; we are making the period 20 years instead of 10.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: That is better. I could not understand, and do not understand, why a man should receive a pension who has given only 10 years' service.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Here is a man who, we will say, was a private soldier in the Permanent Force. After the war broke out he became a major, by a gradual process. Now, he is a major in the Permanent Force. There is no employment for him. The Permanent Force numbers only about 4,000 men, and it cannot have a complement of more than a certain number of officers. Canada found itself with about 250 more officers than could be used. The problem for Canada was, what shall we do with those men?

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Is it necessary to give them a pension? What right have they to a pension for that short service?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: What are you going to do with them?

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Let them go to work, like anybody else. Of course, I do not mean men that are disabled, or anything of that kind.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The honourable gentleman is a medical man. Suppose I forbade him from practicing as a medical man, and told him to go to work with pick and shovel, how would he like that?

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: But there are other occupations than using pick and shovel.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Name the other occupations, and tell those men what they shall do.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Let them go and produce.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: But the country cannot treat its soldiers like that. It may do so after a war, but not before it.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Perhaps they had a previous military service of 10 years?

Hon Mr. GRIESBACH: Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Then, if they got a pension for 10 years' service, they would get it for longer service.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: They do not get it for under 10 years; they get it for longer.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I object to giving a pension for 10 years' service to men who are young, simply because they have been in the Militia.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: That was the law, which is now about to be amended, and the Bill before the House is to make it 20 years.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: This was a very poor law, whoever made it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If we do not stem the tide, we may find ourselves with a formidable bill. In 1917-18 we paid $90,000 in pensions; in 1918-19 $150,000; in 1919-20 came that legislation, and we jumped to $225,000; in 1920-21 it was $400,000; in 1921-22 it was about $490,000; and in 1922-23 it is $550,000. That explains why we are before this Chamber with this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I am sure I am absolutely correct in saying that whoever made that law made a very poor and unjust law.

Sections 2, 3 and 4 agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: May I ask a question just here? My honourable friend has read the growth of these pensions up to the current year, and now legislation is supposed to affect that in some way. What is the estimate made of the probable pension list say for two or three years after this? Does the pension list, as an aggregate, begin to go down after this legislation, or must there still be a period of increase?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I should have said that officers' pensions are based upon a system of superannuation and of yearly payments; so much a year is taken off—I forget the amount. Prior to the war the officers carried their own pension system, with a surplus. Then, when the necessity arose for dealing with this large number of officers who were landed on the pension scheme, of course the deficits began to result. Now, with the amendment of this Act, I would say there will not be an increase. Just what the effect will be I am not prepared to state; but clearly a stop is put to the 10-year non-commissioned officers and men; and for the whole class of officers, with the exception of a dozen, you have increased to 20 years the period which they must serve before they may be retired voluntarily; and if they apply for retirement at the end of 20 years they are entitled to the 20-year pension, less a discount of 20 per cent; and you have restored the period of 35 years which all that class must serve before they may demand retirement with pension. I do not know enough about the matter to commit myself but certainly by this legislation you put a stop to the rapid increase which otherwise would have taken place.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

At six o'lock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 o'clock.

BANK BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 83, an Act respecting Banks and Banking.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in the Chair.

On section 1—short title:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand that we are just going to take up the non-contentious clauses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know whether there are any contentious ones.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You classified them as contentious and non-contentious when you spoke of them before. If you have changed your mind since we would like to know it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Am I to be the judge of their contentiousness?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Those that were made contentious in the other House are likely to be contentious here, as we are still more radical than the other House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I only know of a few clauses upon which some opposition seems to be focussed.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But something has occurred since. The Union Bank disaster has occurred since, to cause some other clauses to be contentious.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Since yesterday?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We have just heard it since yesterday. One of the large banks has made a very severe loss, and we will have to guard against that kind of thing in the future.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I beg to move that the evidence taken before the Committee of the House of Commons be laid on the Table of this House for reference.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Perhaps my honourable friend would suggest that the Clerk should read it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Every member of the Senate has been furnished with a copy of this evidence and the discussion which took place before the Banking Committee of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What I meant was to dispense with any delay.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—interpretation:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Every member of the Senate has been supplied with the explanations of the various changes. Shall I stop and note the changes as we go along? The memorandum says:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH.

Section 2 (h), page 2 of the Bill.

In the definition of "grain" the word "includes" is substituted for the word "means" and the words "corn and buckwheat" are added. Substituting the word "includes" for the word "means" harmonizes with other definitions of the like character in the section.

Section 2 (m), page 2.

The words, "pulpwood, piling" are added to the particular products of the forest already mentioned in the definition. Pulpwood has come to be so large an article of commerce in recent years that its specific mention was deemed advisable. There are one or two other verbal changes of no importance.

Section 2 (p) (iv), page 3.

There is an enlargement of the definition of "warehouse receipt" to include a Lake Shippers Clearance Association receipt. When grain is delivered by rail at Port Arthur and Fort William to the Lake Shippers Clearance Association that body, in exchange for the bill of lading, issues a voucher entitling the holder to the relative number of bushels of grain of a certain specific grade. The holder of the voucher may get delivery of the corresponding quantity of grain of the grade mentioned at some other elevator than that at which this grain was taken into storage. In that way the loading of steamers with grain is greatly facilitated as a ship being loaded by different interests can be completely loaded at one elevator and dock. In order to protect the bank which has loaned money against the original car of grain, this class of document, representing not any particular grain, has been devised to facilitate these operations.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 were agreed to.

On section 5—bank charters continued to July 1st, 1933, etc.:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is a new clause.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is the change?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It continues the charters to 1933.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is the lease of life.

Section 5 was agreed to.

Sections 6 to 9, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 10—capital stock and shares:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like this clause to stand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no change.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I know there is no change, but I may wish to make a motion with regard to that. That is one of the clauses that was discussed considerably in the other House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest, if the mind of my honourable friend is clear as to the amendment he proposes to bring before the Chamber, that he make it now so that we will have an opportunity of considering it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I was considering the advisability of reducing that amount of $500,000 to $250,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I hope my honourable friend will remain in his doubtful mood, because I doubt very much that the country would benefit very much by the reduction. I have had quite an experience within the last 30 or 40 years with banks with small capital, and I have seen them fall by the wayside. If they started interesting themselves in a certain venture, and the manager was convinced that he was on the right track in advancing funds, it would not take long before the liquid capital would be absorbed, and the bank would be in dire peril. Within the last 15 years I have known of three or four cases of small banks that could not stand the strain.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We have seen some cases of large banks that cracked under the strain too, and the air is full of rumours now of a bank that has met with heavy losses through the action of its management. It is just a question whether it would not be as well to have more small banks in the country. After all, the capital of a bank bears a very small relation to its operation. Take any of our large banks: their capital in very few cases exceeds $20,000,000, and yet they handle a business of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000, or perhaps $1,000,000,000—I am not familiar with the figures, but I know there is a very great difference. A bank with a capital of $250,000 might easily handle a business of several millions and not have its business any more out of proportion to its capital than is the business of the Bank of Montreal to its capital. This is a very big question and one which is agitating the public mind of this country, as to whether or not these huge banks are an advantage, particularly in certain sections of the country. There was a time when there were fourteen or fifteen flourishing banks in the Maritime Provinces. To-day there is not one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Because they have gone to Montreal or Toronto. They have increased and enlarged their business and gone there, and draw upon the savings of the people of the Maritime Provinces, sometimes to lose them in Cuba, sometimes to lose them in Mexico, sometimes to lose them in foreign exchange, and sometimes to permit their managers to lose them at gambling on the stock exchange.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has in mind one or two cases, and his statement is correct pro tanto. But what about the ten others?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What ten others?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend says there were 10 or 15 banks in the Maritime Provinces. They did not all move to Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They were absorbed by the larger banks. For instance, the Bank of New Brunswick, which was an old institution, established in the year 1817, I think, was absorbed by the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Why was it absorbed?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not know why. The bank was doing business all right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Too weak to stand the strain.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Too weak to stand the strain. But you asked me where they were. Now I will tell you. The People's Bank of Halifax was absorbed by the Bank of Montreal. The Merchants Bank of Halifax became the Royal, and it absorbed several other banks into its system. The Royal Bank made its headquarters at Montreal. The Bank of Nova Scotia made its virtual headquarters at Toronto, although its nominal headquarters are still at Halifax. The Bank of St. Stephen, with which my honourable friend from St. Stephen (Hon. Mr. Todd) is familiar, was absorbed by the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Oh, no. The bank failed.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh, it failed? I thought the Bank of Nova Scotia took it over. Did they not take over the corpse?

Hon. Mr. TODD: No.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: At any rate, it went out of business. That is one bank that failed. I do not know whether or not the failure was due to the fact that it was in the district from which my honourable friend comes, or whether he had anything to do with the failure or not. However, that is the only one I know of that failed.

Hon. Mr. TODD: How about the Yarmouth Bank?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The Yarmouth? Oh, that was some years ago. That was before I was born. The honourable gentleman may be familiar with it.

These smaller banks have their directors at the home office, and they know personally the people who are doing business with the bank. They stand a much better chance of knowing whether they are safe people with whom to do business. They lend money to people who are in the neighbourhood, and they know the purpose for which those people require the use of the money. A bank may have its headquarters in Toronto and a man living say in my own town may make application for a loan. There is no doubt in that case that it is safe to lend money to him. If the loan is of any size at all, the application must be referred to headquarters in order that the directors or the general manager may pass upon it. He does not know the circumstances, but must take information secondhand from the local manager. That leads to delay and often results in refusal, whereas if all the circumstances were known refusal would not be made. One of the most important securities for a loan is the moral character of the borrower. It is impossible for the directors of a bank living several hundred miles away to judge accurately the value of the risk in the loan applied for. The case was different with the smaller banks, their directors being acquainted with the people of the neighbourhood in which the bank was operated.

I am not speaking with any personal grievance, for I have none at all against the banks. They have always treated me well. I have tried to pay them one hundred cents on the dollar, and have succeeded so far. I do not know how long I shall be able to keep it up. It is not because of any personal grievance that I am speaking; it is in the interest of the Maritime Provinces, for we are having pretty hard times down there. I am not crying blue ruin. I do not believe in that sort of thing. Even if the situation were worse than it is, I would not cry blue ruin, for I have faith in the recuperative powers of our people. But I say that we are handicapped by reason of all the banks having withdrawn from the Maritime Provinces and gone to larger centres, and for other reasons, which have been detailed in this House in connection with freight rates, etc., and the necessity of the Maritime Provinces competing with manufacturing interests in Ontario and Quebec, which are much longer established and have a greater market near home. For these reasons we feel more keenly the handicap we are under in having all the bank headquarters transferred from there.

The difficulty in starting a bank is to get the $500,000 capital required. It would be much easier to obtain the quarter of a million which I was thinking of proposing. I must say that I think we should have more time to think over these matters. I have taken a rather active part in legislation and have examined the various matters that have come before this House; but I have not examined this banking question until now, when it is right upon us. Five minutes is not sufficient time in which to formulate in one's mind a scheme for the establishment and operation of smaller banks. I understand that a motion was made in the other House with regard to this matter by the member for Cumberland, and it was discussed there. I think it would do no harm to discuss the question here, and for that reason I would like to have this clause stand until a later date, when we shall have had an opportunity to consider it. My mind is not strongly made up on the question, nor have I given it that consideration which is necessary to discuss it intelligently.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Honourable gentlemen, I have had considerable business experience with both large banks and small ones, residing as I do right on the American border. On the American side of the line the banks are small. I have had a chance to see the advantages and disadvantages of the two systems. From the business point of view, the opinion in the Province of New Brunswick is all in favour of the large banks. We have at St. Stephen three chartered banks. They do a large business with American customers, simply because they can provide the necessary facilities. A bank with $250,000 is not in a position to finance any large business. The chartered banks, of course, can do it.

With regard to the history of the small banks in the Maritime Provinces, two of them that I know of failed disastrously. In both cases, before they failed they were a danger point in the communnity for two or three years. Of the smaller banks in the Province of New Brunswick—I will not speak of Nova Scotia—I do not know of one that did not fail or was not really compelled to dispose of its business to a larger bank because it could not earn money enough to continue to pay dividends to the stockholders. I think the competition which the small bank would have to meet from the larger banks would make it almost impossible for the small bank to do a successful business and pay a return to its shareholders.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: So far as the Bank of New Brunswick is concerned, I want to say this, that its stock sold higher in the market than that of any other bank in Canada. When the stock of other banks was selling from par up to 150 and 180, the Bank of New Brunswick's stock was selling at 300. That does not look as though the banks were in such a disastrous state as my pessimistic friend would seem to indicate.

Hon. Mr. TODD: I am not pessimistic, but it is worse to be pessimistic after the event. What was the Bank of New Brunswick's stock worth at the time of the sale?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: My honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) is contrasting the value of small banks, perhaps in older districts, with the branches of larger banks, In all rural communities the farmers and other traders think that banking accommodation would be a great advantage to them; and perhaps it is in ordinary times and when there is no pressure. It is very probable that the directors of a small bank would obtain from the bank loans that would be considerable in proportion to its capital. That is usually the case with the small banks. When times are dull and there is a great deal of business depression, the small bank cannot realize upon the loans which it has made, and it has not that power of expansion which would permit of funds from other places being invested to remedy the deficiency in that locality.

The drawback of a branch of a large bank is that people gather round the manager and make him out to be a little god. After a while he forgets that he is in a corporation with shareholders, and regards himself as the most important factor in the community. Very often some roguish fellows get into the bank extensively, and the manager has to be removed. The drawback of the small bank is that it cannot get assistance from the large banks, nor can it command exchanges or matters of that kind which are the main ingredients of a bank's prosperity. The small bank cannot expand, and it is unable to forward moneys to other countries, to get credit or to facilitate exchanges with merchants in other places. The large banks, with their resources and their influence, are able to tide over losses, and an unfortunate situation in one place does not interfere with the general prosperity of the other branches of the bank.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would like to cite the experience in the Province of Quebec. During the last thirty-five years five or six small banks have disappeared. Those whose directors had the greatest wisdom succeeded in being absorbed instead of going to the wall. Others who clung to life simply became extinct and paid nothing to their shareholders, if they succeeded in paying 100 cents on the dollar to the depositors. So business opinion in the Province of Quebec is unanimously against the small banks and in favour of the large banks.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course, we would have to have something like the Federal Reserve system of the United States to protect the small banks. I remember a time when a depression in the United States meant that hundreds of banks would close their doors, but that is not true to-day. If a depression occurs in the United States at the present time, it would not necessarily mean that a solitary bank would have to close its doors and refuse to pay. I am speaking of the regular banks; I do not mean the so-called trust companies, such as the one that failed in Boston a year or two ago. The ordinary bank doing business has in the Federal Reserve Bank an anchor out to windward, so that it can save itself when times of depression come on. It can rediscount its paper in the Federal Reserve Bank to a certain extent. I think that 75 per cent of its paper can be rediscounted with the Federal Reserve Bank. I fancy it would be necessary for us, if we had a regular system of small banks, to have some such arrangement as that for protection. The difficulty I see is that there are now, I think, some seventeen banks doing business throughout Canada, and their policy is guided largely by the Bankers' Association, whose Board is composed of about five persons. In the hands of those five persons is placed all the financial power of Canada. It is confined to a very small space. The whole financial power of Canada, practically, is in the hands of the Directors of the Bankers' Association.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not admit that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You do not admit that?

Hon. Mr. POPE: Certainly it is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The banks retain absolute autonomy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They do and they do not. It is all very well to say they retain absolute autonomy, just as Quebec, New Brunswick, and the other Provinces retain their autonomy in the Confederation; but after all, the Federal machine has a very great effect upon the different provincial machines, and so it is with the banks. The policy of these banks is guided largely by the Directors of this Bankers' Association. My honourable friend may be as sceptical as he likes about that, but it is a fact just the same. So in the hands of these five persons is the financial destiny of this country. That is something to be considered. There are many other things in connection with this Bill that are in my opinion defective and should be remedied; but I am not to-night in a position to discuss them offhand.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: You may come back to them later, if you wish.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to discuss this question again.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Stands.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Take it up again.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But if my honourable friend is determined to push it through, I bow to his wish.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: Shall the section stand?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend insists.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh, I do not insist.

Section 10 was agreed to.

On section 11 provisional directors:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Section 11 is a new clause.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is a very good clause, I think.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

2. A provisional director shall not be eligible to act as such unless he be a bona fide subscriber of stock of the bank for and on his own behalf, to become the absolute and sole owner in his individual right of such stock, and not as trustee or in the right of another, on which subscription not less than—

"(a) three thousand dollars have been paid up, when the paid-up capital stock of the bank is one million dollars or less;

"(b) four thousand dollars have been paid up, when the paid-up capital stock of the bank is over one million dollars and does not exceed three million dollars;

"(c) five thousand dollars have been paid up, when the paid-up capital stock of the bank exceeds three million dollars."

This amendement is intended to guard against the abuses arising when persons lend their names as provisional directors of a bank when obtaining its charter and obtaining subscriptions to its stock and, who, before the organization is complete, drop out of sight and have no connection with the institution. Such a state of things has happened in connection with at least the organization of one bank within the past fifteen years. The new subsection requires that there shall be real money put up by a provisional director.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: By him or by someone else?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The law says by him, but of course one does not look to see where he gets his money.

Sections 11 to 17 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 18, subsection 3—guarantee and pension funds:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

The added provision here is that a guarantee or pension fund for the officers of a bank must be invested in securities in which a trustee may invest. It is intended to safeguard the pension interests of bank employees.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: To whom is the constitution of a pension fund submitted for approval? Does it have to be approved by the Minister of Finance? Does each bank make its own conditions in regard to its pensions?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do they submit those conditions or regulations to anybody?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. A bank is not obliged to have a pension fund.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER. Do they not retain a proportion of the salary of the clerks, like a railway company?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are regulations which call for a subscription by the employees; there are other banks in which that it not done.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Where it calls for a subscription by the employee, should it not be subject to regulations of some kind?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is: the regulations are adopted by the Board of Directors, and in some cases by the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I can understand that where a bank supplies all the funds it would not be necessary to have supervision, but where any portion of the pension fund is supplied, voluntarily or involuntarily, by contributions of the employees, some authority should pass upon the fairness of the regulations governing that pension fund.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Those funds are administered by the employees themselves. Sometimes they form a separate corporation composed of employees to administer the funds, a certain amount being paid by the bank and the balance kept from the salaries of the employees. The funds are administered by their own Board.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Even so, it seems to me there should be something like the Treasury Board or the Finance Minister to have supervision—to approve of the articles regulating that pension fund.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I suppose the shareholders of the bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, not the shareholders, because they are a party to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This obligation of investing in certain funds will bring the capital so gathered for the pension fund under the inspection of the banks and the auditors.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not think that will meet the case at all, because the pension fund, where part of the money is taken from employees and part from the employer, involves the rights of two parties, and some outside authority should pass upon the fairness of the regulations.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would my honourable friend insist upon any outside authority intervening when the bank does not call upon the employees, but creates the fund out of its own resources?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, that is another matter. It is then in the the nature of a gift from the bank; but where an employee is levied on for part of that fund I think the reglations should be summitted to the Department of Finance to pass upon them as to whether they are equitable or not.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Being connected with a bank, I know a little about this question, and I know that a bank itself cannot touch the pension fund, which is administered by a committee of the employees themselves, and payments are made by that committee. Besides, that fund is subject to the inspection of the Minister of Finance and the auditiors, and they are obliged to report on it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I want to be fair to the bank as well as to the employees, and where there are two parties there ought to be a third who would have to pass upon the regulations. You say the bank cannot touch the fund because this money is invested in certain specific securities, but if the administration is entirely in the hands of the employees, it is not fair to the bank if they can control it without regulation. I would like to know how that is.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: The funds are set aside, and a certain amount is deducted from the salary of the staff to constitute this fund. The employees understand exactly what they are to receive out of the fund at the end of their term, or when they leave the service of the bank. I think it is purely a matter of arrangement between the bank and its employees, and I do not know that any third party should operate in the matter at all, as it is settled by both parties.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not agree with that at all. See the power that a bank exercises over the employee. Here is a man who has been paying into the fund for 15 or 20 years, and he expects to get a certain amount of money at the end of his term. See what power that gives the bank over that employee if it has the sole regulation of it. The employee does not want to resign, because he would thus lose his possibility of a pension. I think there should be supervision by an outside authority like the Minister of Finance, so that an employee leaving the service of the bank after a certain number of years could take out a portion of that money that had been deducted from him. Suppose his salary was $1,500 a year, and the bank deducted $100 a year for 15 years for the pension fund, why should the employee lose that? If he died I suppose they would arrange for his family to get his pension, but if he left the bank's service he should not lose that money, and this section gives the bank a certain amount of power over the employee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I can tell my honourable friends that the banks have been authorized by their shareholders to contribute to a pension fund under conditions that they approve, and they subscribe the whole amount, or 75 per cent, or a certain proportion of the pension fund, and regulations are made.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: By whom?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: By the Board of Directors, and those regulations are known by the whole staff, and the entire system works harmoniously. The systems are not the same in all institutions, but I have never heard of any conflict in the administration of those pension funds. There is a long association between the directors of a bank and their staff. Young men enter a bank at 17 or 20 years of age, and they decide to remain, and you find them there after 30 or 40 years, having gone up the ladder regularly, and they have received their annual increase, and become one family, so to speak. Promotion is one of the sacred things, except that the board has a right to alter the contract when an employee is not qualified to fill the higher position, but there is no question of any injustice being done. The management of the bank know that they must maintain harmony and satisfaction among the staff, and they deal justly among them. My honourable friend raises a purely hypothetical case when he thinks some protection is needed for the employees of the bank in the operation of the pension fund.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What a glorious institution the bank would be if everything worked as my honourable friend has suggested; but it does not work anything like that. There are many injustices and many hardships connected with the staff of the bank, who are ill-paid very often; regulations are made against marriage in a new country like this, where we ought to encourage marriage on account of the results which it is supposed to bring; and yet those huge banks that control the whole financial position of Canada, and whose frown is a portentous thing indeed, set their faces against marriage unless a man is earning so much money. A man may be in the employ of the bank a good many years before he is in a position to earn that much money, but in the meantime he is denied the privilege of marriage, and unless he is a youth who has been brought up very strictly he may get into bad habits.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that I know institutions that give a special bonus to the employee when he marries, and a special bonus for each child.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think that is done in the Methodist Church, but I do not know anywhere else. I do not think it is done in the banks. They will dismiss a man if he gets married before receiving a certain stipend, unless he can show that he had private means sufficient to make it up.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would not my honourable friend commend this regulation, by which a young clerk should have a certain amount before he assumes larger responsibilities?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: When he is at an age to marry and wants to marry, he should be permitted to do so, and not be kept on such small pay that he could not afford to marry. Why should a lot of old curmudgeons sitting around a table in a bank board-room —men who have passed the heat of life— say at what time an employee who is in their power should marry? I think it is an outrage, and should not be permitted.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I would like to ask if investment in a bank stock is considered security under the Act of 1914, in which a trustee may invest under the Trust Companies Act, in all the provinces?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The law varies, does it not, from province to province?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: That is what I was wondering. The reason I ask is that I do not think it is a wise provision to have any of this money invested in bank stock, particularly in the stock of the bank which is interested.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend from Ottawa is looking up the Trust Companies Act.

Sections 18 to 27 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 28, subsection 4—record of attendance of Directors:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is a new subsection. (Reading):

> The new amendment provides for a record of the attendance of directors, a summary of which is to be sent out to shareholders with the notice of the annual meeting. Provision is also made in the new subsection that directors who for any reason have not been able to attend meetings may have a record of their services summarized in the notice to shareholders.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Who recommended this change?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know. I suppose that it is made in order to bring to the attention of shareholders that there are absentee directors, and it may be the result of the experience of the last 10 years and of the excuse that was given for some bad investments—that the directors were not always in attendance and were not directing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There must be a joker in this case that covers it up, because someone makes a summary stating "the nature and extent of the services rendered by any director who, by reason of residing at a point remote from the chief office of the bank, has been unable to attend meetings of directors." So that if he did not attend the meeting, someone would make a memorandum that he had performed a very great service, just the same as Sir Montagu Allan, floating around Europe, drawing a salary of some $50,000—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He stated himself, under oath, I believe, that as he had been away he had fixed his own remuneration at $3,000 or $6,000—I know it did not go beyond $6,000.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, I commend him for his modesty, because he might have taken the whole $25,000 or $50,000 to which he was nominally entitled. But that subsection 4 is arranged so that he could be four or five years in Europe, provided he has a friendly hand to make a summary of things he did or said. For instance, he thought several nights, after he went to bed, about the affairs of the bank, spent considerable time, and so on, and so on—I could easily see how it could be arranged.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is in error; he draws on his imagination; but I will tell him some facts as I know them. Sometimes it happens that a most valuable member of a Board is called away on important business in Europe, and may be absent three or four months. He may fall sick, and when the return of the attendances is made to the meeting of the shareholders, it is seen that one has only attended 50 per cent of the sittings, but that there was a reason for the absence.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Sometimes it might be better if the man who was there was away.

Section 28 was agreed to.

Section 29 was agreed to.

On section 30—appointment of officers, etc.:

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Is every clerk or servant obliged to give a bond? Boys receiving a few dollars a week?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Every employee of a bank is obliged to give a bond, and the reason is obvious: he is dealing in liquid assets.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not think there are any other institutions in Canada that pay their employees as badly as the banks—I do not mean the employees who are at the top, but those who are at the bottom. They pay them very small pay. Any mercantile or manufacturing concern pays its employees very much better. A man might be in a bank three or four years and not get half as much pay—

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Would not get enough to keep him.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course not. It is only because of the idea that it is a little more genteel occupation than laying bricks or carpenter work. We will get away from those ideas after a while, I hope, because any honest work is as genteel as any other.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A bricklayer in New York is securing $12 a day.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: $18.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We cannot expect a bank clerk to be paid as well as a bricklayer, but he should get paid enough so that his parents would not find it necessary to support him. I think very few banks give young men going into them more than $100 a year.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: $200.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It used to be $100. They have raised it. A boy who went into a store just to sweep out would get more pay than that. I do not see how we are going to remedy this condition by legislation, but I think we should express ourselves along the line that banks should be more generous to their employees of lower rank. When a man gets to the top he gets fairly well paid; but before he gets his foot well on the first rung of the ladder he is very badly paid.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am happy to inform my honourable friend that the information he has as to the salary of a young man going into a bank is the story of quite a number of years past. I know that since 10 years ago, double the amount my honourable friend has fixed, and more, is given to a young clerk beginning.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: $400?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. HARMER: There is only one bank, the Bank of Montreal, that gives $500.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I know of another bank, and that makes two. I would be surprised if the Royal Bank was not paying as much as the Bank of Monreal.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The Royal Bank does not strain its generosity very much to its employees.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend had the opportunity of seeing the bonuses paid to employees yearly from 1917, he would be surprised.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Everybody got a bonus then. They had to, or they would have starved.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And when the question of bonuses came up for revision, the bonuses were generally added to the salaries.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: My honourable friend will please observe that half the clerks in the banks now are girls. Formerly men were employed exclusively.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I know that was the case with very many institutions during the war; but they have felt that it was work that needed the strong nerves of a man, and they have gradually replaced the girls by men.

Hon. Mr. POPE: In the investigation of the Committee of the House of Commons, did it ever strike the Government that it would be worth while consulting these employees as to their position? They are in a very delicate position. Did the Government ever fancy it was worth their while to ask these employees if they were being treated properly? Because I do not know or one of these boys—I am not speaking of the Management—who consider that their treatment is fair in view of the earning powers of the banks, and the prices their stocks sell for in the markets. I do not know whether we have the power to make it fair; I do not know whether it is our business to see that the banks treat people fairly; but if we have that power it has been very seriously neglected by the House of Commons and the Senate.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I think the manner in which bank clerks are being treated all over Canada, particularly in the West, is most disgraceful. I have an intimate knowledge of the conditions that exist. Banking is somewhat attractive, and young men are anxious to get a position with a bank; but, unfortunately, the salary which they receive, particularly in the first two years, is scarcely enough to keep them going—in fact, it is not enough. I have known of many instances in which parents had to come to the rescue and support a young man during the first year or two. I do not know whether we can do anything in this matter, but if we can I think it would be the most commendable act that we could possibly do. These young men are just starting in life, and I have always felt that it was unfortunate that this particular form of employment had such an attraction for them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw attention to the fact that the entry of a young man into a bank is not what it was fifty years ago. The multiplicity of branches has increased the chances for advancement, and if a young man is at all intelligent and active, and shows any spirit of initiative, he will rapidly advance towards positions of responsibility. The banks have opened so many branches all over the country that they offer quite an interesting field for a young man. One must not forget that they enter the bank when they are eighteen years of age, sometimes younger, and soon have an opportunity of reaching a salary—at 23 or 24 years of age—which allows them to marry. Of course, there are those who would as soon accept a humble Government position in a post office, and remain there, out of the rain, with a salary of $600 to $1,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I would like to call the attention of the honourable gentleman to the fact that if there is a school for the education of bankers, it must be within the bank itself. What he has told us is quite true—that young men of tender age—16 or 18 or 20—enter a bank. They come out of high school or common school into the bank, and their only opportunity of learning anything about the banking system or its shortcomings is in the bank itself. They have neither the finances necessary, nor the opportunities of travelling or of knowing anything about the general banking systems of the world; and from these men are selected the managers of the branch banks in the small communities all over Canada. The limitation of their education is the man who is above them; his limitation is well defined by the small salary he receives, say $2,500 or $3,000 at the outside, as manager of the branch bank in a country community. His judgment is so extremely bad that the bank does not trust him to loan anybody $500 without first consulting the head office. He can lend $490, but not $500. If you and I employed a man we could not trust beyond $500, we would be suspicious either of his integrity or his ability. And whatever ability these men have, they have got at the foot of the throne of the bank.

When you come to the country communities in which these branch banks exist, permit me to say that they have in Canada a system of taking in the deposits of the people in various communities, and never loaning in those communities 20 per cent of the deposits. They have beggared the communities in which they have been placed. They have hurt and injured and spoiled the ambition of smaller units of men in that community. They have helped to keep down the population of the Dominion of Canada, and have helped to increase the population of the United States. One of the agencies that have retarded the progress and development of the Dominion of Canada is the branch bank system as it exists to-day. I do not intend to be a Bolshevist so far as the banking system applies to larger interests. I do not know anything about the larger interests; I have never been in touch with them. I have always been in touch with the farmer and the smaller interests.

During the two or three months of investigation in another place we have heard something that the Government has heard before. Ten years ago, when I was speaking on this subject, I warned the banks that if they followed out the policy which they had adopted, the time would arrive when it would have very serious results. The results, as yet, have not been very serious; but the banks have had their warning from the small communities and the small interests in the Dominion of Canada—and the warning need not have all come from the West. It could just as well have been endorsed by the farmers and small merchants of the East. I want to say to the banks of the Dominion of Canada that if they persist in this amalgamation of banks—and they would amalgamate further to-morrow if they had the power—if they persist in limiting the control of the finances of Canada to a few directors in Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal, and other centres, this is the last charter that will be granted by the Parliament of Canada under the present conditions. I warned them 10 years ago and told them they were losing their friends; and to-day the banking system of Canada has not a single friend among the common people. That is wrong, because the banks represent not only the capital that is subscribed by the shareholders, but the capital of the Dominion Government as well. Because the first duty of a Government when it is formed is to take care of its people by law and order, police and military; its next duty is to look after the transportation of their products and to arrange for the financing of the same on national lines—not on special lines for shareholders, and not based on the price that the stock will sell for in the market. And then the Dominion Government decide, rightly or wrongly, that they will by special charter, special direction, special surroundings of law, permit any organization known as a banking system to take the place of the Government, then I say that system to a certain extent curtails the powers of the Government and the rights of the people.

The banks were given every opportunity, and what has been the result? From day to day during the last 10 or 15 or 20 years they have narrowed down the opportunity of the common man to get into the head office to meet the directors. I live close to the border of the United States—Vermont, Maine, and New Hampshire—and we go to the representatives of that community and meet them and consult with them as to whether our credit is good and as to whether they should lend us money, far more easily than we can meet and consult with the manager of the branch bank whose head office does not trust him to the extent of $500. I am not reflecting on the integrity of the branch bank manager; but I say that over and over again in the County of Compton, where I was born and where I have lived, the people go to Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine and borrow money and bring it back to help our local industries in the Dominion of Canada—and in the village in which I live we have the Bank of Montreal and the Bank of Commerce. I say it is a disgrace that the village of Cookshire, when they wanted $7,000 twelve months ago, had to go to a small bank in Vermont in order to get it. They paid 6 per cent for it, whereas if they had got it in Canada they would have paid 7 per cent.

Now you ask me, a common man, to be satisfied. You ask the Senate of Canada to shirk its responsibility in facing this issue, which concerns every man, woman and child in the Dominion: that is, the question of small units. I say to honourable gentlemen of this House, men who are bank directors, and men who are solictors for banks, that the Senate has a great responsibility, and if you have friends in the banks, or if you think the banking system of Canada is worth preserving, you will not be in a hurry to pass this Bill and have Parliament prorogue, but you will take time—you will take two months, if necessary—in order to consider this matter and take steps to stifle the rising sentiment against Canada due to the maladministration of the banks of the Dominion.

Section 30 was agreed to.

Sections 31, 32 and 33 were agreed to.

On section 34—allotment; to present shareholders:

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: There is a small amendment; it is paragraph d of subsection 1. (Reading):

The amendment provides that when new issues of stock of a bank are made payment shall be in money. This will prevent a declaration of a stock dividend. The question has been raised as to whether this were possible under the former Act. It is to put it beyond peradvanture that the amendment is inserted.

Hon Mr. FOWLER: Is there any condition there as to the figure at which the stock will be issued to the shareholders? Is there any minimum figure?

Hon Mr DANDURAND: They must be shares of $100.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They have to be issued at par?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or at a premium.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why does the clause not say that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is to be found somewhere.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not see that section 34 provides that anything should be at par.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Section 10 covers that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

10. The capital stock of any bank hereafter incorporated shall be not less than five hundred thousand dollars, and shall be divided into shares of one hundred dollars each.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How does that cover it? It does not cover it. What is the use of talking that way? I say there is nothing in section 34 to prevent the issue of capital at less than par.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And there is nothing in section 10.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, there is nothing at all in section 10 either. I am going to ask the Minister not to pass that section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We might allow the section to pass, and if I do not find the clause that my honourable friend is looking for, we could come back to this clause again.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I intend moving an amendment to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend should not move an amendment until he is sure that what he wants is not in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I want it thoroughly understood that I intend moving an amendment to that, to make it impossible for a bank to issue shares to its shareholders at less than par. That would be a beautiful way of watering stocks down. Suppose stocks were selling at $300 a share and you had a certain amount of stock in the treasury unissued, and as a bonus to the present shareholders you issued that stock at less than par. It might never be required to pay it up if the bank remained solvent—only in case of the insolvency of the bank. The stock might be issued at 10 cents a share, and only in case of insolvency would the shareholders be called upon to implement that 10 cents. That is not right.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I know of instances where stockholders were called upon to pay.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes: banks like the Sovereign Bank and the Farmers Bank. That is a different matter.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Why hurry this matter?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You may pass the section, if I am allowed to move an amendment later.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Wait a minute. There is absolutely no need for hurry. We have all summer. Since making a few imperfect remarks a little while ago I have picked up this newspaper, in which I read about the statement that the Union Bank of Canada has issued to its shareholders to-day. I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government in this House if it is possible for such a state of affairs to exist without the Government or the Finance Department or some branch of the service being in touch with the situation and knowing the condition of the bank for the last week or month. We must remember that the policy of all banks is directed from the head office. It is not the branch banks that fail; when a bank fails it is the fault of the head office. It is the result of their bad judgment in investing funds here and there. Take, for instance, the Royal Bank, which got into trouble down in Cuba in sugar transactions amounting to $18,000,000. Of course they did not tell about it at the time. If they had, it would have been a reflection on them. But they have been able to make a sugar combine. They think they can take the money out of the consumers. The Merchants Bank was caught up by the Bank of Montreal. It was not insolvent, but the shareholders must suffer and somebody must gain. When another bank is put out of business, competition is narrowed down. Now we have the Union Bank making a statement, which, I presume, has been read by every honourable gentlemen in this House. Why should not the situation have been known at the proper time? The statement reads:

(1) Losses have developed in connection with certain loans made during the period of inflation, and in addition to taking care of these, it is prudent to make provision in respect of loans, the full liquidation of which has been delayed by the well-known abnormal conditions which followed that period.

(2) The ordinary losses inseparable from commercial and agricultural banking, no further how conservatively and carefully conducted, would have been readily taken care of by the usual provision, had it not been for the unexpected and abnormal items above referred to. Prudence and sound practice call for adequate provision for such risks in the current business of the bank.

(3) To provide amply for the foregoing losses and risks it has been deemed advisable to transfer the rest account to the contingent reserve the sum of $1,250,000. This leaves the present position of the bank as follows:

Capital, $8,000,000; rest account, $1,750,000.

But, in the face of that statement, and the statements that have been given to the Dominion Government or the Finance Department by the same bank in the last six months or so, we laymen are told that we should pass over these matters quickly—that we should hurry to get home, because the weather is warm and the grass is growing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Who suggests that?

Hon. Mr. POPE: Nearly all the members of this House, including yourself. You would not say that we should sit Saturday, for instance, in order to deal with this measure. You would say we should go home.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I am not pressing the honourable gentleman. We are proceeding leisurely.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I understand. The honourable gentleman and I have been for a long time in public life and opposed to each other, and I appreciate his ability as much as anybody else does, and his geniality and all that, but he knows as well as I do that he represents a Government that has been resisting every effort of the common people of Canada in the last three months to make an impression upon the banking system of Canada.

I am not discussing what is or is not the opinion of the honourable gentleman, but he is here representing that Administration which has thrown down every suggestion that has been made—and there have been some pretty good ones. They have been turned down flat in the other Chamber, and the honourable gentleman is delegated to rush this measure through the Senate.

Honourable gentlemen of the Senate, I am as anxious to go home as anybody, but we are not going to go away from here until we give the Bank Act of Canada some consideration. We are not going to go away from here until the Senate of Canada turn down, or take up, as they please, the proposition that there shall be added to our banking system some means whereby the small units in Canada may be dealt with in the interest of the prosperity of the country. We cannot depend upon a Government that did not know the day before yesterday that the Union Bank was in trouble. The situation is a farce, honourable gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am sure every member of this Chamber will welcome any suggestion that my honourable friend can make towards bettering this legislation.

Hon. Mr. POPE: How can a suggestion be made to better this legislation when you have made it definite? You are passing it when it should be deferred. In view of the representations made in another place you should have postponed for another year the granting of charters. I am not trying to wreck the banks of Canada; let that be understood. I am trying to see if we cannot create some organization that will provide for the small units in Canada; and the doing of that may seriously affect these charters that we are granting. We have had plenty of precedents for deferring a measure for a year, and I do not see any harm at all in doing so, after the representations that were made in the other Chamber by gentlemen from the West. And you could have had as many representations from the East as well if there had been an organization to represent it. I say that under the circumstances, if the Senate of Canada insisted that the charters be withheld for another year and that a proper commission be appointed to investigate the small units of Canada, to see what additional banking accommodation could be given them, it would be conferring a blessing upon the country and doing the greatest possible good.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it thoroughly understood that this section may be reconsidered?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest to my honourable friend that we pass this clause, and when we have gone through the Bill we may come back to this if we have not found a satisfactory answer to the point raised by the honourable gentleman.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Let us deal with this section 34 now. I have looked through the Bill and do not find in it any provision such as the one contained in the Companies Act, prohibiting the issue of shares at less than par. In order to meet the objection raised by my honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler), and to avoid further discussion on this point, the Minister would be well advised, I think, to agree to the addition of the words "not less than par" after the word "price" in the fourth line.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is all right. That covers the point.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is the only point with regard to section 34. Why not set the matter right and avoid any further discussion of this?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the honourable gentleman read the clause as amended?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT (reading):

Any of the original unsubscribed capital stock, or of the increased stock of the bank, shall, at such time as the directors determine, be allotted to the then shareholders of the bank pro rata, at such price, not less than par, and on such terms as are fixed by the directors.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no objection to that amendment. If we find that the matter is already provided for, we may come back to the clause and revise it.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: It is at any rate a policy acted upon by the banks to offer additional stock by advertisement and get the best bids they can for it. Whether that is covered by a provision in the law or not I do not know, but I am sure it is part of the policy of the banks.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It will do no harm to put in this amendment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Even if there is a provision elsewhere in the Act.

The proposed amendment was agreed to, and section 34 as amended was agreed to.

Sections 35 to 39 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 40—recovery of calls and instalments:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh, do not go so fast, Mr. Chairman. I protest against this kind of work. You might as well stand up there and gabble off the numbers. I say it is disgraceful to the Parliament of Canada to have the sections gabbled off in this way when this Act comes to us at this late hour, with no opportunity to study it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that thris Bill has been before Parliament for the last three months, and has been reviewed by a Committee of the House of Commons, whose meetings we could attend, and whose proceedings have been amply distributed to us. So that we have been able to follow from day to day what has been going on in that House and that Committee. Now we are proceeding to clauses which are standard clauses, which may be reviewed and may be amended if we judge proper. But I take it for granted that all the members of this Chamber know the organization of a bank, and that these clauses are familiar to them. Of course, our Chairman will read any section that is called for.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am surprised that the leader of the Government in this House should say that because this Act has been before the House of Commons for three months and been considered by them, therefore we should know all about it. Since when does this House take its opinions from the House of Commons? I refuse to take my opinions from the House of Commons, as at present constituted at any rate, and I tell the leader of the Government so here. I am here as an independent member of this branch of the legislature, and I take my opinions from nobody.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I am simply answering my honourable friend, who says that we have just had this Bill. We have been able to follow the discussion on each clause either by reading the reports of the Committee of the other House or our daily newspapers. Of course we can act independently and do what we please, outside of the clauses that have been amended. We are not here purely and simply to take the Bill as it comes from the House of Commons. We can amend all the clauses we please.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But the Chairman seems to be in a hurry; if so, we can relieve him and let him go home, but I do not propose to submit to it. I say it is absolutely not fair. This Banking Act has been before us only for the last day, and it consists of nearly a hundred pages, and we are supposed to have studied that. It takes some time in connection with the work that we have been doing. We have been a very busy Parliament for the last three or four days about other matters that are important, some of them just as important as the Bank Act. We cannot do everything; we have got to sleep and eat as well as legislate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend has attended at least two revisions of this Bank Act since he has been a member of this Parliament.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, two at least, perhaps three, in the last twenty years, but that has nothing to do with this revision. Now, I trust that the Chairman will moderate his speed a little. Let him come down to second speed or low speed, but not go at high speed.

Sections 40 to 45 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 46—sale of shares under execution; transfer, how executed; validity:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why should the bank have any claim when a share of stock has been seized under a writ of execution? It should go to the sheriff, to be paid by him to the person entitled to it; but here the bank steps in.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, the bank remains in.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, steps in. The bank has no claim on the share, but because it has been seized by a creditor under an execution, and before he can get that share transferred to him he has to pay any claim or debt or liability due to the bank.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: A priority claim.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It gives a priority claim where they had no claim before. Where can we find any authority giving a lien on shares for a liability due by the owner of the shares to the bank?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I see it here in clause 46.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But outside of that. That only gives a lien after somebody has received a judgment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, it gives it all the time.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, it does not. I guess I understand the English language and legal verbiage about as well as anybody else.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I try to explain it to my honourable friend? The debt and liabilities referred to there are debts and liabilities to the bank of the holder of that particular share. That means, I assume, that if a share which I own in the bank is not fully paid, if there is some money due to the bank—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It does not mean that at all.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think it does. Let me make my statement.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do not get so hot about it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not think it is possible to discuss in this fashion.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I regret that my honourable friend loses his temper so easily.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I get up to explain, and anyone who will not allow me to make an explanation, whether he comes from Sussex or any place else—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I will let you explain; but because you live at the capital that does not give you more authority than if you lived at any other place.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Both the honourable gentlemen live at the capital.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not live at the capital, except during the Session, just the same as you do. Now I am going to read this section. If my honourable friend will not explain it to me, I will explain it to him.

When any share of the capital stock has been sold under a writ of execution, the officer by whom the writ was executed shall, within 30 days after the sale, leave with the bank an attested copy of the writ, with the certificate of such officer endorsed thereon, certifying to whom the sale has been made.

Now, all that process has taken place; the share has been seized, and sold by the sheriff or other seizing officer under that execution. The sale has been made to some insignificant third party, to whom no notice has been given. Then we have subsection 2 which says:

2. The president, a vice-president or the general manager of the bank shall execute the transfer of the shares so sold to the purchaser, but not until after all debts and liabilities to the bank—

—not the debt or liability on that particular share, but all debts and liabilities to the bank; that is the plain English of it, and that is what it means, and it cannot mean anything else—

—of the holder of the share, and all liens in favour of the bank existing thereon, have been discharged as by this Act provided.

Now, that is plain, and I do not think that is fair. If it said, "all debts or obligations on account of the share," then the attempted explanation of my honourable friend would be all right; but it does not say that. It says:

All debts and liabilities to the bank of the holder of the share.

That cannot mean the purchaser, because he is not yet the holder, so it must mean the original holder.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend forgets that the relation between the bank and its customers is always the relation of debtor and creditor; that if a bank has a claim against a depositor who happens at the same time to be a shareholder, the bank has a lien on everything that is in the bank, whether it is payable on a share or payable to the bank in the ordinary course of business, and there is notice there to the world at large that before buying bank shares by auction people must go to the bank and find out exactly what the conditions are there. So that nobody is hurt. If anybody is prudent enough to go and make an inquiry, which he should make, he can easily ascertain if the liabilities of the shareholder, who may be a debtor to the bank at the same time, are fully paid. One is set off against the other in the ordinary course of business. The bank is not exercising some new claim; it is only exercising the right to require the payment of a continuing liability on the part of the shareholder or depositor.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose you had 5 shares of the Bank of Nova Scotia and you offered to sell them to me; I would not buy the shares at all, because I would first have to ascertain whether you owed the bank anything at all, and if you did, the bank would have a lien on those shares.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend read clause 77:

The bank shall have a privileged lien, for any debt or liability for any debt to the bank, on the shares of its own capital stock, and on any unpaid dividends of the debtor or person liable, and may decline to allow any transfer of the shares of such debtor or person until the debt is paid.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But why should they have it? I object to any bank having such a lien as that. If there is anything owing on the shares for any purpose whatever, let the bank do like other companies—issue an interim receipt for the amount paid, but not issue a share certificate. As soon as a share certificate is issued it is a thing that can be sold and passed from hand to hand. Why should the bank share certificate differ from that of a gold mine or coal mine? It is not in the interest of business that it should be so.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That clause would not apply to a person holding a certificate of shares, because he would get no certificate unless he paid fully for his shares; so my honourable friend is dealing with something that is not in the record at all. If you buy from me a certificate for five shares in the Bank of Nova Scotia, and I hand you a certificate, there can be nothing due to the bank on that certificate, which would not have been issued if anything was due; so this is dealing with something different from that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then it is giving a lien to the bank that it should not have.

Hon. Mr. CHAPAIS: The certificate is not transferable.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is transferable with the consent of the bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Now that these two banking authorities have settled their disagreement, I will proceed. When any share of the capital stock "has been sold under a writ of execution" it is to be anticipated that it has come into the custody of the sheriff and that he has sold it under an execution—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He knows the law.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER—just the same as he would sell a cow, or a sheep, or a horse. It would be seized in just the same way and sold at public auction. A man buys say five shares, and he pays $750 for them. He walks over to the bank, and when he presents his certificate he finds that the person in whose custody they were owes the bank $750 on borrowed money—it is not an amount still due on the purchase of the shares—or has unfortunately gone security for someone who has failed in payment. So the bank says: "We will keep this certificate because Mr. Johnson owes us $750, and that is just the amount of this certificate;" and the man walks out without a cent. That is the most extraordinary lien that I ever heard of. Talk about your furniture liens under which a poor person buys furniture from a furniture salesman, and after having partially paid for it has it taken away from him—here this man walks in with the share he has paid for, and he is met with the seizure. I propose to move an amendment to this section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are not yet at section 77.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: This is 46. Take them as they come. It is a strange thing if 46 has to be explained by 77.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This section says:

The President, a vice President or the General Manager of the Bank shall execute the transfer of the share so sold to the purchaser; but not until after all debts and liabilities to the bank of the holder of hte share, and all liens in favour of the bank existing thereon, have been discharged as by this Act provided.

So you must look at the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You must look the whole Act through. I think we should have a different provision with regard to that at any rate.

Section 46 stands.

Sections 47 to 53, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 54—statement to be laid before annual meeting:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Paragraph h of subsection 2 is new.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Those are advances made by the Federal Government to the bank, under the Finance Act, against a certain number of securities.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Money loaned to the bank.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Money loaned to the bank upon certain high-class securities which the bank has offered.

The new words in paragraph i are "exceeding market value." This is to make it harmonize with the preceding and the succeeding clause.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is there not a word left out in subsection 4?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: The word "or" at the end of the line 19 should be "for."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would draw attention to paragraph q of subsection 3, "non-current loans." This is the memorandum:

This expression has been substituted for "overdue debts." There is a definition of "non-current loans" in section 113. The former expression, "overdue debts." was misleading in that a debt might be technically overdue and yet be a perfectly good debt. Under this item, as "non-current loans", will be included any loans which do not fall within the definition of "non-current" in section 113.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me that subsection 4 permits a bank to carry on any other business. I thought it was the policy not to permit banks to carry on other businesses besides that of banking. For instance, banks are not permitted to go into the lumber business or the grocery business. This would seem to intimate that they might carry on business under another name. What is the difference between putting say "The Royal Bank of Canada" over a grocery store, and carrying it on under the name of John Smith, although still controlled, managed and handled by the Royal Bank?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

This subsection provides for the publication of a collateral statement of any corporation controlled by a bank. This collateral statement is to be sent out with the annual statement. Controlled corporations in Canada, within the meaning of this section, would be companies which hold the bank premises owned by a bank, the shares of which are owned by the bank, or a subsidiary banking company of which the bank owns all the shares. There are three or four of such last named companies doing business outside of Canada and controlled by Canadian banks. This provision for publication of the annual statements of these controlled companies along with the annual statement of the bank is in accord with the practice of English banks.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I go back to paragraph 1? I wish to read k and l together. In paragraph k you have provided for loans "in Canada." Paragraph l says "loans elsewhere in Canada." I think what is meant is loans elsewhere than in Canada.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The question is whether it is prudent to allow a bank to have an accessory company, as a trust company, which lends the money of the bank on securities in ways in which the bank itself is not allowed to lend, thus evading the responsibility of the bank and the security which the bank gives generally to the public and the shareholders. That is a question of policy, and I do not know whether it is approved generally or not. There may be a point of danger hereafter in loan companies making extensive loans on securities which the bank could not consider safe and in ways in which the law does not permit the bank to lend money. That is a question that might be considered in connection with this clause—whether it would be generally approved that the bank depart from its obligation in allowing its funds to be used by accessory or subsidiary companies in ways not contemplated by the Bank Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend takes it for granted that there are subsidiary companies owned by the bank. I do not know of any of that description. I know of trust companies which are absolutely autonomous. They are not only autonomous, but they fall under an Act of this Parliament, and we have provided machinery for their control and inspection by the Finance Department.

Hon. Mr. POPE: The Department did not know until the day before yesterday about the Union Bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is generally supposed that the Royal Trust is an offspring of the Bank of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the Royal Trust has its own capital and its own shareholders. I doubt very much that the Bank of Montreal would appear as a shareholder. I have seen the list of shareholders of the Royal Trust, and I have seen the list of shareholders of the Montreal Trust. I do not remember having seen the list of shareholders of the National Trust. There may be in one of these companies a large number of shareholders who happen to be also shareholders of a bank, but the trust company and the bank are two distinct companies operating separately. There may be a disposition of one institution towards the other, but they stand on their own bottoms.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If it is found that the bank has made large loans to a company which is supposed to be akin to it, or to have the same people interested, that would afford a very reasonable suspicion of a strong community of interest between the two, would it not? Does the honourable gentleman follow me?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but I have no hesitation in saying that when a trust company has its account in a certain bank, there are many other banks that would be most desirous of having that account. Take, for instance, the companies that I have mentioned. I think they all pay 10 or 12 per cent, and they have doubled their capital by the accumulation of their reserves. Their stock is not on the market; it can hardly be obtained, so valuable are the operations of these companies, which are conducted on a very conservative basis.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER. I trust the Income Tax Commissioner is looking after those companies that pay such tremendous interest.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, and my honourable friend will see in their annual returns the amount that is collected from them.

Section 54 was agreed to.

On section 55—further statements as requested by by-law:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I see this makes no provision for any statement under oath, and it provides no penalty for any false statement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will find a number of clauses that impose very severe penalties.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They refer only to statements that are made to the Treasury Department. I am speaking now of the statements to the shareholders, and I think that the shareholders are entitled to have the truth, and to have that guaranteed to them by the solemnity of a sworn statement. I am not speaking personally, because I unfortunately have no bank stock.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think my honourable friend will find that this measure is far more severe in its penalties than the Act of 1913.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You see, the experience that we have had with the Merchants Bank has rendered it exceedingly important that the clause should be much more stringent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend allow me to read to him section 153:

153. Every president, vice-president, director, auditor, general manager or other officer of the bank or trustee who knowingly pepares, signs, approves or concurs in any account, statement, return, report or document respecting the affairs of the bank containing any false or deceptive statement, or any return which does not set forth the true financial position of the bank including all the information required by Section 113 of this Act, shall be guilty of an indictable offence punishable, unless a greater punishment is in any case by law prescribed therefor, by imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

That covers any statement.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That refers only to section 113, though.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no. It is very complete.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It would have to be stretched somewhat to be made to apply to a statement made to the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I do not know of any bank director that would make himself liable under this section, because it would be almost impossible for any ordinary director to verify all the accounts from the various branches which are brought together in the general annual statement. A great many directors would not be capable of aggregating all the accounts and making a statement as precise as that which would be required. The general manager could do it, and it might be done by a president who attended all the meetings of the bank and examined all the accounts; but it would be a very onerous charge on any director to require him to look through all the affairs of the bank and all the accounts that would be collected for the purpose of the general statement. A bank director obliged to make a precise statement of this kind should tremble sometimes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: With the use of the word "knowingly," if the bank's affairs were bad and the president hoped to escape punishment, all he would have to do would be to abstain from acquiring any real knowledge of them. Then he could sign any statement he liked.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He could hardly be asked to do more than make a statement to the best of his knowledge.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Ought he not to be obliged to have the knowledge? If he ought not to be under that obligation, then there arises the question whether your branch banks are an advantage or not; for if you had no branch banks, if every bank were an original, the officer of the bank could not help having a knowledge of its position. But the honourable gentleman says that the president or director cannot be expected to have such a knowledge because there are branch banks. That is certainly a very strong argument against the branch bank and in favour of the small bank. That is an inescapable argument.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Carried.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh! That is the way you are going to escape, is it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are on section 55. I do not know what suggestion my honourable friend is making with regard to this clause.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We were discussing that statement by the president or the general manager of the bank.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In section 153. But will my honourable friend wait until we have reached section 153? We are now at section 55.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I asked a question with reference to the special statement—whether it was to be under oath or just an ordinary statement, and if any liability was attached to it; and my honourable friend referred me to a section away ahead. So it was not my fault that we wandered over to section 153. The honourable leader said that it applied to section 55.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was in answer to the question of my honourable friend whether any penalty was attached to a false statement to the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There is no penalty attached.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In section 153.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No; because that section contains the word "knowingly." The officer could not possibly know. The branch banks might be all off and he could not possibly know it; he has to take the statement that is handed to him. So I say that is no penalty at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then my honourable friend would not want the bank officer to make a statement under oath when he must rely upon the statements from the branches.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I say that is the weakness of the system of huge banks with branches. You do not fix upon anybody the responsibility for a false statement. I will not say you cannot fix such responsibility, for I can easily conceive how you could do so; but you do not impose any penalty for a false statement, Sir Montagu, the nominal head of the Merchants Bank, could spend four years in Europe. The people, recognizing him as president of that bank and looking upon him as one of the great financial lights of Canada, deposited their money in the bank and patronized it. He was away disporting himself—I do not know where—perhaps in Monte Carlo—during all those years. At any rate he was not paying any attention to the bank and did not know anything about it. He came back and, before the court, made an exhibition of himself which was pitiable for a man occupying the position that he occupied as head of a great banking institution, and getting a big salary for doing the work—or not doing it. As to the General Manager, they were unable to fix anything on him, although he had supported a couple of rotten speculators in rotten speculation on the stock exchange.

I want to say right here and now that there should be in this Bank Act a provision absolutely preventing any bank funds—which are, after all, only trust funds—from being lent upon any gambling transaction whatever. What is the matter with the moral reformers of Canada that they have lost sight of the greatest opportunity that could possibly come to them, and that lies at their hand, to prevent enormous economic waste and save many an individual from shipwreck and bankruptcy by wiping out the gambling of the stock exchange? If half-a-dozen Chinamen get together in the back of a laundry and play a little game of Fan Tan for coppers, the vigilant police and the social reformers grab them, throw them into the lockup and have them fined $50 apiece. But the general manager of a great financial institution which is the repository of millions of dollars of the funds of widows and orphans, is permitted to gamble with that money in the stock exchange, or to lend money on stocks that others may gamble, knowing when he lends the money that it is to be used for gambling purposes. The bank president, who has been, I might say, a helpless victim, and the general manager, who has been an active villain, go scot-free. There is a field of opportunity for the social reformers, who are trying to stop the poor man from getting his beer and the poor old woman from getting a glass of gin.

Now, is it the intention of the leader of the Government in this House to amend this Act in any way so as to prevent a recurrence? Here we have the Union Bank losing $4,500,000, and it is rumoured, I would not say with what truth, that their loss came about in speculating in foreign exchange. German marks have dropped a little, and I suppose that is the cause of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why does not my honourable friend speak of the pound sterling or the American dollar or the franc? Why come down to the German mark?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Because the American dollar is in pretty good shape financially, but the German mark is very sickly, and growing sicker every day, and I fancy if they had been investing in American exchange they would not have lost that money, because there has been no depreciation there to cause any loss.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But surely no Canadian banker would speculate in German marks.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not know; I say it is only a rumour; I trust it is not so. But they have lost it, even if not in that way. Have they lost it on the stock exchange? Does my honourable friend suggest that? At any rate, their reserve depreciated by $4,500,000, according to their own statement to their shareholders. Now, that is quite a loss; but I suggest that the honourable leader will put in some amendment to this Act that will prevent the funds of the bank, which are trust funds, being loaned to brokers to gamble with on the stock exchange. It is not a good thing to encourage gambling. Why, we are asked in this Chamber to prevent a man from having a little bet on a horse race, when he sits in the stand and sees the horses perform.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: And consults the jockey.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He may know the jockey, but he knows that as long as the president of the track is the gentleman who so worthily fills a position in this House there will be no crooked work, and everything will be fair and square. Yet they would try to stop them from investing, or spending a little money—wasting a little money, they would call it and yet allow and encourage men to lose thousands and thousands. Now, if the social reformers are not alive to their opportunity, I trust the leader of the Government will be alive to his, and that a section will be introduced into this Act to prevent stock gambling.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I would draw the attention of my honourable friend from Sussex to the fact that in the case of the Merchants Bank the money was loaned to the stock-brokers by the head office, not by any of the branches.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, of course it was. That is where most of the losses occur—in the head office: that is their argument against it.

Section 55 was agreed to.

On section 56—shareholders' audit:

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: I think this section should receive some consideration. It refers to the qualifications of auditors. An auditor should be a chartered accountant of six years' standing, and subsection 2 imposes on the Accountants' Association the duty of presenting to the Minister of Finance a list or lists of all auditors who are qualified. Subsection 3 is the part that I rather object to:

> The Minister may, not later than the thirtieth day of September next following remove from such list or lists the name of any person of whose appointment to be an auditor of a bank he may disapprove.

Then subsection 4 provides that the names not removed shall be published in the Canada Gazette. There are not so many chartered accountants in this country but what the removing of a name from the list and the publishing of those who are eligible would, in my mind, cast a reflection upon those who are removed. In the first place, the list which is supplied to the Minister is only a list of those who are fully qualified chartered accountants, who have had six years' experience. Then why should the Minister have the right arbitrarily to remove the names of those who are fully qualified? It looks to me like a black list, to a certain extent. Unless there is very good reason for this I think subsection 3 should be amended.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There may be something in that, but where a chartered accountant has proven himself incapable or worse, surely his name should be removed. How can it be done otherwise?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Who is going to judge?

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: The fact that his name is removed is evidence that he is wholly incapable; but a man should not be listed who is wholly incapable. He should be given some opportunity, and not removed without some good reason. If the Minister gave a list of those he considered desirable to be submitted, it would not be so bad.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think if we relieved the Minister of Finance from his obligation in this matter he would be very happy, but it is a responsibility that is thrown on his shoulders. Since a list of accountants is to be posted from more than one association, the duty will devolve upon the Minister to make an inquiry as to the value of the names on those lists, so that the bank may pick out auditors from them. I do not suppose that the Minister has assumed this obligation with a light heart. I do not know how it has come to form part of the clause.

I see it there, but I can see that it is a protection for the public.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is some more patronage.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: It is a protection to the public, but surely there is some way of getting at it. If the Minister would prepare the list of those who are eligible, and not merely black-list a certain number, that would still be a protection. The fact that an accountant's name is not included in that list could not be taken as a reasonable proof that he was a crook, or something of that kind. The Minister might make a certain list of those who are competent, but, as I read this section, the ones who are not admitted are practically undesirables, and you cast that reflection on them.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But my honourable friend must bear in mind that the lists will be furnished to the Minister from different sources. He will publish those names, and within a year some one of those men may prove himself wholly incapable or worse. Surely there must be somebody to judge of this, and do away with those men.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But that is not contemplated here. The list is supplied to the Finance Minister by the 31st of July, and by the 30th of September he has to strike out those of whom he disapproves. There has been no test in the meantime as to the capability or honesty of anyone in actual practice. I think there is a good deal in what my honourable friend says—that it could be got at in a different way; for instance, in this way. A list of competent and tried men, who belong to the Association, is presented to the Minister; from that list he should choose a roster, and that would not throw any particular discredit upon anyone. This clause actually makes the Finance Minister disapprove of a man, and say to the whole country, "That man is not honest, that man is not capable." It is a harsh way of getting at it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But, as I read the clause a little more closely, I believe it is there for the purpose of clothing the Minister with the authority to strike out names of men who have been found too weak. It of men who have been found to weak. It is noth meant solely for the first operation, or the first list that will be brought in. Every year the Minister will have to revise the list, but I take for granted that he will do so if it is found that the work of that auditor or of those auditors has been below what he considers to be the standard.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: I appreciate that it is quite necessary for the Minister to have some discretion in the matter, but it is the method that I disapprove of. Under this section it is the duty of the Minister to publish the list with the names omitted of those whom he considers removed from the list, so practically they are black-listed. If the Minister would make a selection of names of those who were satisfactory to him, and submit it to the bank, that would get over the difficulty.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I want to impress on my honourable friend a point to which he has not given sufficient weight. He will notice that the list is to be provided of those who for at least six years have practised their profession in Canada, and who are members of the Institute, and those lists shall be given to the Minister not later than the 31st of July; then by the 30th of September next following the Minister is to strike out the incapables. He has had no time to test them in the actual practice of their work, so that this clause does not seem to be designed to give the Minister power, after those men have been at work, to remove them, if they prove incompetent or dishonest; but he actually does it before he has any chance of judging either of their honesty or their capability by their employment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think one must read subsection 4 with the others in order thoroughly to understand the situation. By subsection 2 a list or lists of chartered accountants must be furnished to the Minister, and those lists are in by the end of June. By subsection 3 he may, not later than the 30th day of September, make a choice, and leave from such list the name of any person of whose name he may disapprove; then by subsection 4 he shall publish the list, and the persons included in such published list shall be deemed qualified for appointment as auditors of a bank. So that before any publication at all the selection is made by the Minister of the gentlemen whose names are to appear in the list. It is therefore not a case of removing the name of someone who is already on the list, but rather of the Minister making a choice before any printing is done; so that there is no condemning of a man at all, because his name has not been published.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: But the honourable member will appreciate the fact that there is a very limited number of chartered accountants in this country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, there are several institutes, and I have seen delegations of accountants who do not belong to the Federal Chartered Accountants, and who insisted on being put on an equal footing with them.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: But the fact that this list is published by the Minister is the objectionable part of it to me.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend is wrong there. Nobody's name is going to be removed from the list that has been already published. The lists are sent to the Minister, he makes a choice, and then he publishes only the names of those he approves of.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: Why not draft the section in such a way that the Minister will make a selection and publish his selection?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: So it is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have a vague recollection that when this clause was being drafted in committee the question was pressed on the Minister whether he would include in that list the auditors of such an institution as had failed, so that he had to agree to declare that certain names would probably not appear, and in consequence of that he took this power.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I suggest that subsection 3 should read:

3. The Minister may, not later than the thirtieth day of September next following, select the name of any person of whose appointment be approves, etc.

Then you are selecting; you are not rejecting anyone.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is a better form.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: A more important matter than the rejection of a number of chartered accountants is that of defining the duties of an auditor, and what he is supposed to declare and prove by his inspection. The opinion of the shareholders and of the public now is that the certificate of auditors means that they have examined all the accounts, moneys and business of the bank, when they have merely examined the accounts put before them, and have added them up correctly. In the Merchants' Bank case the question was whether the auditors included everything in their report when they certified that they had verified what had been put before them. They really make no inquiry into the assets, and know nothing about the reliability of the assets, and the whole thing was merely a superficial account put down without any real inspection.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, we have done a good day's work, and I will take into consideration the suggestion made by my honourable friend, and the later suggestion of the honourable gentleman from Sussex to change the verb into a more agreeable one; so I will ask that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again to-morrow.

Progress was reported.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 22, 1923.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

YUKON BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 44, an Act to amend the Yukon Act—Hon. Mr. Green.

LAKE OF THE WOODS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 175, an Act to repeal the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: With the leave of the House, I would move that the Rules be suspended and that this Bill be read a second time on Monday next.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If there is no particular hurry to pass this Bill before the end of the Session, there is no reason why it should not go through the usual routine. As my honourable friend knows, this is a Bill that has received very special attention and met very strong opposition on two former occasions in this Chamber, and, while we are anxious to accelerate legislation in every possible way, yet the measure should not be railroaded through, to say the least.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suggest that my honourable friend allow it to be put down for second reading on Monday next, but it will not likely be considered on Monday.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have no objection to its standing on the Order Paper for second reading, but my honourable friend will understand that we shall expect it to be deferred—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Until Tuesday?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, in the event of our not being able to proceed with it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And in the meantime, if my honourable friend has some minor amendment to suggest, he may give notice of it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It will not be minor; it will be major.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is an event to happen on Monday which may really determine the fate of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I had not thought of that.

The motion was agreed to.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 217, an Act respecting the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 218, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

FISHERIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 223, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

INLAND REVENUE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 225, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 232, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Bill be read a second time on Monday next.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Has the Bill been printed and distributed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will be by Monday.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would rather that my honourable friend allowed that Bill to take the ordinary course. There will be plenty of time for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not so sure. If my honourable friend finds any special reason why we should not take it up on Monday, we can defer it until Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to.

SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

DISCUSSION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, as we have a fairly full House, I would direct attention to the fact that I have given no notice for the next sitting of the House. Under the Rules, no notice having been given, the Senate will meet on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: There will be a very slim House on Monday, as I expect the Ontario men will all be away; and unless it is absolutely necessary to sit on Monday, why not meet on Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think we shall be sufficiently numerous to carry forward our work. There is a rumour about as to the probable date of the end of the Session. Of course, it will end when this Chamber has finished its business; but I think that we owe it to both Chambers of Parliament not to needlessly delay the work of this Chamber. We will carry on to the best of our ability, and if we find that the House is not sufficiently complete to make important decisions, we may adjourn to the evening.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As the general elections for the Province of Ontario are to be held on Monday, and, as all the Ontario members will probably wish to absent themselves on that day for the purpose either of voting or of participating in the elections, and owing to what I might call the big club penalty coming into operation, no matter what a member's attendance may have been during the former part of the Session, may I suggest to my honourable friend that, instead of meeting on Monday, when there would be a very slim House, we should meet on Tuesday morning.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What is the matter with sitting to-morrow?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We could meet on Tuesday morning, and we would certainly be able to catch up with any work we might not discharge on Monday. Furthermore, I think there should be quite sufficient time to dispose of the business before us. I know of nothing of a very contentious nature that is to come before us, and if prorogation does not take place until the end of the week, I feel sure that we will keep faith with the Commons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will make this alternative suggestion as to the consideration of members losing a day. I believe this will be covered by the Act which is before us and which covers the present Session.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But the Bill, if passed, will not come into operation until the Royal Assent be given to it, and consequently cannot be made applicable to this Session. It is not retroactive.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, yes. And if there is any matter that my honourable friend feels should be taken up on Tuesday, I will abide by his request.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That of course presupposes that the Bill will go through in its present form. I know there is a sentiment among a substantial section of the Senate that the attendance during a specific time at the latter end of the Session should be made compulsory, and if that amendment should be added to the Bill, even though it be retroactive, it will not give redress.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think we can frame that amendment in such a way as to cover the future only.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not want this opportunity to go by without notifying the Senate that there will be very considerable opposition to any change in the Indemnity Bill. The Indemnity Act as it stands to-day is nearer perfection than it has ever been.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS

Bill D6, an Act for the relief of Herbert Hugh Keller.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

Bill E6, an Act for the relief of Nellie May DeBlaquire.—Hon. Mr. Fowler.

BANK BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 83, an Act respecting Banks and Banking.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Taylor in the Chair.

On section 56—shareholders' audit:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Last night we were discussing the form of this clause. According to the Bill as we have it before us, the Minister is authorized to remove from such list the name of any person of whom he may disapprove. It was suggested that this would imply a damaging judgment passed upon the names removed from the list furnished the Minister, and I have this substitute amendment for subsection 3:

> The Minister may not later than the 30th day of September next following, select from such list or lists the persons, any one of whom shall be eligible to be appointed an auditor of a bank under this section. If the Minister does not make a selection as herein provided all the persons on the list or lists shall be eligible for appointment as auditors of a bank.

Then I have a substitute section for subsection 4:

> The Minister shall as soon thereafter in each year as may be convenient, cause to be inserted in two consecutive issues of the Canada Gazette a public notice containing the names and other particulars of persons so selected, or if no such selection has been made, then the names and other particulars of such persons included in such list or lists as furnished, and the persons included in such published notice shall be deemed to be qualified for appointment as auditors of a bank.

If this is deemed to be an improvement on the clause as framed, I will move it.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is a distinct improvement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then I move to substitute these two amendments.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have a word to say on this, and I happen to know something of what I am going to talk about. I make the statement here that no audit is worth the paper it is written on as a protection.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It does not look like it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It was my privilege at one time to defend a bank manager who was accused of having stolen $80,000 from the Bank of New Brunswick. He was the manager of a branch in the city of St. John. When the General Manager of the bank was on the stand I subjected him to a day and a half's cross-examination, in the course of which he made the statement that no bank audit was worth anything. The facts of that case were that the books of the branch had been audited on the 2nd of April, and a clean bill of health had been given the bank; but on the 5th of April, only three days afterwards, it was discovered by accident that there was a defalcation on the part of the manager to the extent of $80,000. A bookkeeper who cannot outwit a chartered accountant is not worth the money that is paid to him for keeping books: There is something slack about him.

I had an experience as a member of a corporation. During the time the corporation ran, we had three audits. They were all favourable, and showed a very flourishing condition of the company. It was a lumber company. The last audit showed that we had made $14,000 clear on a capitalization of $75,000. Within three months of the time that audit was issued by a member of the Association of Chartered Accountants we went into liquidation, and we not only did not pay the general creditors anything, nor return anything to the stockholders; but three of us who were directors, and directors of the ordinary kind who do not know anything about the business they are directing, were obliged to pay a very considerable amount of money, nearly $50,000 on the guarantee to the bank for its account. We had three audits, as I say, all favourable, which shows how little you can depend upon an audit. We had also the sworn statement, which I cited to you, of the General Manager of the Bank of New Brunswick at that time.

Unless an auditor knows the value of the securities that the bank holds, how can he possibly tell whether the audit is correct or not, or whether the bank statement is correct? Here is a lot of securities put in at so much, say $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, but unless the auditor is able to value them what does his audit amount to? You might as well take the account of the bookkeeper. So I do not see how you can surround the audit with safeguards that make it of any real value whatever. The auditors would have to audit all the different branches. Here is a note of $3,000 in a branch bank; before the auditor can pass that as $3,000 he should know what the makers of the note are worth, and whether they are able to pay it when due, else it may be only useless paper; yet it is passed as $3,000 of good assets. I am not finding fault with the auditor, but I say it is absolutely impossible to make an audit which will be anything like perfect, or that can guarantee beyond peradventure the truth of the statement it gives forth.

Suppose it is a lumber business. The chartered accountant knows nothing about it, and if he is not able, when he sees a pile of lumber in the yard, to tell what it is worth in superficial feet, or what a lot of lumber in a stream will produce in superficial feet, how can the audit be any good? He must accept the statement of the bookkeeper or the estimate of the bank manager in each case as to the value of the things he is auditing. That seems so apparent when looked into that I do not see why we need worry ourselves over the kind of audit. I would leave it to the bank to make their own audit, without restriction, because it is their own audit and their own statement anyhow.

The proposed amendments of Hon. Mr. Dandurand were agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course it is understood, as my honourable friend stated at the beginning, that though these different sections pass, yet at any time while the Bill is in Committee amendments may be made to the sections.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may consider any.

Section 56 as amended was agreed to.

On section 56A—auditors' report to Minister:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I want to add another word in regard to that audit. If honourable gentlemen have any doubt regarding my statement as to the lack of value of an audit, they have only to refer to the words at the foot of an audit by which the auditors save themselves:

> This examination was made from the books and papers submitted to us.

And they do not guarantee any of them, thus protecting themselves from any comeback, because they recognize that their audit is absolutely worthless and only a fake.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, my honourable friend realized that the auditors' duties in the way of obtaining information have been considerably increased.

Subsection 10 of section 56 makes a very important addition. (Reading):

> Not only are they to report to the directors individually any transactions or conditions which are not satisfactory to them, but they are also to report to the General Manager and to the directors any loans exceeding 1 per cent of the paid-up capital of the bank which in their judgment are not adequately secured. The provisions of this section are intended to bring home to the individual directors any conditions in the bank which may require remedial action by them.

Then, under subsection 15, an auditor is not to undertake any other employment at the instance of a bank, but must give all his time, so as to be free from any influence to which he might be subjected by being employed by the bank for other purposes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They are not usually employed by the bank, unless they are using their own clerks.

Section 56A, 57 and 58 were agreed to.

On section 59—dividend limited unless there is a certain reserve:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Subsection 2 is new.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose that one of the directors does not know anything about this prohibition and accepts this division of profits, will he hold the money that he gets? It might be that a director who has not been doing a great deal of directing would get a cheque for his dividend; yet it could not be said that he knowingly and wilfully accepted it. Would he have to pay it back?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, because the expressions are:

The directors who knowingly and wilfully concur in any division of profits.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then should you not put a further penalty on those who knowingly and wilfully concur, and make them responsible for the man who innocently and ignorantly accepted the dividend?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The answer is in the affirmative. It is only those who knowingly and wilfully do it who are jointly and severally liable for the amount so divided.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: For the whole amount?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Perhaps there is no better clause under which we could consider dividends than this one. Eight per cent seems to be the amount that is chosen, and any outsider reading this section of the Act would imagine that Parliament disapproved of banks paying over 8 per cent under certain conditions, as mentioned here, but generally speaking it approves of their making 8 per cent. Now, I know of no reason why they should pay 8 per cent or 10 per cent or 5 per cent unless the business of Canada can stand that pressure. If the earning power of the banks is so great that it has to depress the business of this country, I think some consideration should be given in this Act to the people of Canada. While I am perfectly willing that the banks should have an Act under which they operate, there ought to be a place in the Act to consider the welfare and prosperity of this country as well as that of the banks.

In a newspaper I noticed that in Montreal yesterday some sales of bank stock ran to $270 on the market. I do not know of any reason why any Act of this Parliament should give those institutions the right to increase the drafts made upon the receipts of this country to such an extent as to make their stock worth $270. It is not the most excellent management, because I notice that one of those banks would not have had $270 for its stock if it had not been for a vote of some $40,000,000 by Parliament some two years ago.

In discussing this question we should remember, as I said last evening, that in doing the banking of Canada the banks represent the Government of Canada; they are a substitute for the Government; and I tell you that a Government would not last a moment which sucked up our money and earned 8, 10, 12, 15, 20, and even 25 per cent, as some of the banks do. The Government have an opportunity now of placing a check on the extraordinary earning power of those institutions, which get their profits from the business of the country and from the common people, and they should begin to reduce the interest which they charge people who borrow from them. I should not have to pay 7 per cent or 8 per cent on money; I should get it at 6 per cent or 5 per cent; and if the earning power of the banks were properly limited as to the amount they were allowed to take out of us and declare in dividends, we would be getting our money in this country at a reasonable rate. Instead of that, there is no limit fixed.

I appreciate the remarks made in reference to auditors, but I do not agree with the honourable member (Hon. Mr. Fowler) that the audit does not make much difference. There was a sentiment created by the failure of the Merchants' Bank, and this clause in reference to dividends has grown out of that. However, that has nothing to do with the subject I have under discussion.

At one time we had in the province of Quebec a bank known as the Quebec bank, which lasted 90 odd years. It never had to go to New York to lend call money; it found a place for its money and earned a reasonable dividend. Its stock never went above $130 or thereabouts, which was quite high enough; and when it got more money from the people in its reserve fund, it opened branches in different parts of Canada and gave the whole people of Canada the benefit of its earning power out of ordinary interest. The stock of that bank never soared around $250, and I do not believe that the stock of any bank in Canada that did its work in the interest of the people of this country ever did so. It did not take our money and put it on call in New York to the extent of $150,- 000,000 or $200,000,000 and then send our people down there to work and earn dividends on it; yet we call that a righteous law for the people of Canada. I say it is not; it is wrong. You may pass it, but, mark my words, you are making the last Act that ever will be made with these terms in it. Do not make any mistake: you are doing an injury to this country and retarding its progress. Why, we have hundreds and thousands of people trying to struggle not alone under the interest they have to pay, but the penalties they must pay to get money in this country, and they turn to labour rather than investment; and when those people turn to labour they turn to salaries, and they emigrate to the United States of America, because of the system under which we are operating. People every day are being driven from the Dominion of Canada to the United States of America by our system of banking. They are closing the farms in my part of this country and in yours, nailing up the doors and going away, because they cannot stand the pressure of the interest they have to pay and the ill-treatment which is given them. They cannot obtain money under right conditions, yet, while we pay 8, 10 and 12 per cent, this House unanimously passes an Act to tolerate the right of the banks of this country to rob us of the last possible dollar that they can take out of us and stay out of penitentiary.

On section 60—cash reserves in Dominion notes; supply of Dominion notes; redemption:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to ask the honourable Minister why the reserve is fixed at 40 per cent.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The draftsmanship in this section is poor. It says:

> The Bank shall hold in Dominion notes not less than forty per cent of the cash reserves which it has in Canada.

Doubtless what it means is, "Shall hold in Canada not less than forty per cent of the cash reserves which it has." It is very ambiguous.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no alteration.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Quite true, but it is poor draftsmanship none the less.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All that my attention was called to was the slight amendment which is made to that clause. (Reading):

> In the former measure the places at which the Minister had made arrangements for insuring the delivery of Dominion Notes to a bank were specifically named. It was deemed desirable to substitute for the specific naming of places at which such deliveries can be made the more general language provided in the amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think this is right as it is. The only security the Government has for the notes is the cash reserves in Canada. If any of the cash reserves are in a foreign country they would not be available as a security for the Dominion notes it seems to me.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: All that I am suggesting is that it should read, "shall hold in Canada."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is not that what it says?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: No, I do not think so. It is bad English in any event.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Why cannot the bank hold reserves outside of Canada? They would be more difficult to be got at.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The difficulty is that the reserve might have been alienated or might have disappeared. I suppose it is ascertainable and available if in Canada, but it is not so if it is not in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If a bank can, by having its reserves out of Canada, put them beyond the reach of the Government or parties interested, surely that is a very serious situation. It could thus practically do away with the guarantee that the reserve creates.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: All it would have to do would be to send its reserve to New York, for instance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is not that the reason why it is protected in this way?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think some means ought to be adopted to prevent a bank having its reserve in a foreign country.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: To the amount that it had outside, it could get less Dominion notes. This provision simply regulates the quantity of Dominion notes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is an inducement to hold them in Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have not had an answer to my question. Why does the clause speak arbtrarily of 40 per cent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not in a position to furnish my honourable friend with an answer at present, but I will endeavour to do so later.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Does this refer to the ordinary reserve that is mentioned in the statement of every bank? Take for intance the Bank of Commerce: its capital stock is $15,000,000 and its reserve fund $15,000,000. Is that the kind of reserve fund that is referred to?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. I assume that my honourable friend has in mind the accumulated surplus.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What do you mean by "cash reserves?"

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think I shall find it in the interpretation clause. The cash reserves mean the coin and the Dominion notes in the possession of the bank.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Does that 40 per cent refer to a portion of the reserve fund that is included in every bank statement and is represented by securities with the Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

The Bank shall hold in Dominion notes not less than forty per cent of the cash reserves which it has in Canada.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Then do you say that the Canadian Bank of Commerce, which has a reserve of $15,000,000, must hold 40 per cent of that in Dominion notes?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. POPE: The clause has nothing to do with that? That is what I am trying to find out. Then the reserves are so much more than the $15,000,000.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU: The reserve fund is simply the undivided profits.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Forty per cent, or $6,000,000, is undivided profits?

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU: I understand that the reserves referred to in this clause are simply to meet the issue of notes of the bank. If there is a run on the bank they cannot pay up in their own notes; they have to have Dominion notes to meet that.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Do you mean to tell me that when you start a bank with a capital of $1,000,000, you take that capital and place it with the Dominion Government as security? Is that what this refers to?

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU: No; but in the event of a run on the bank it must have Dominion bills to pay out.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What do they pay for those?

Hon. Mr. POPE: Do they pay anything for them? I am still confused. I have never discovered any way in which a bank got any money, whether a reserve or not, except out of the people of this country. Why should the banks be allowed to take the money that is doing the business of this country? It is not the shareholders of the banks who are doing the business; it is the depositors.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: There must be a reserve on hand.

Hon. Mr. POPE: They make the reserve out of us too; they make it out of the people's money that is put in there. Yet here we are abashed even at anything being said against the greatest combination that ever existed on the face of God's earth since Adam owned the world. We have in this country seventeen banks, but that number could be reduced by amalgamation. There are two or three, not far from Montreal, that would disappear overnight. They could be gobbled up, and they would be but for the fear of public opinion. So they are tailing them up, as in the old days we used to tail up the cows, feeding them on brush when hay was scarce. It is no secret—it is a well-known fact that when a bank is gobbled up some people will suffer and some will gain; and it is the public that will suffer.

You go into any of the banks and make a deposit of $100, and the bank manager turns around and lends it out. It is not his capital or his reserve; it is your money. He lends it at 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent interest—whatever he can get.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: And gives you 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POPE: And gives you 3 per cent. Talk about a combination of public thieves: I do not know of anything that surpasses this wonderful institution known as the Bankers' Association in this Dominion of Canada in which I live. There are 17 banks with 10 or 12 directors apiece. There is a combination of a couple of hundred men who conduct the whole financial business of this country, far and wide. They set up 8 or 10 of their selected specimens, and by these representatives you and I are told what we shall do when we shall do it, and how we shall do it. You have to be a most agreeable person when you go into the bank, for you have to deal with a bank manager who is so valuable that they pay him $1,500 or $1,600 a year to know everything. He is in an agricultural community, but he would not know a cow from a jackass. He knows nothing about the credit of the people to whom he lends money. He is as foreign to his surroundings or to the industry by which the people in the community gain their livelihood as any human being could possibly be.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He is taken from a place in Ontario and sent to the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. Mr. POPE: As was mentioned last night, the only schooling he has is what he received under one of those poor people whose opportunity to learn was extremely limited. He left school at an early age and went into the bank, and he cannot go beyond the training he received. He plays a little game of ball or croquet, or whatever it may be, in the village with the girls. He dances in the evening. He is a very nice little fellow. He is being trained so that he may tell you and me what we shall do in our business, and how we shall do it. Yet we are asked to have the highest possible regard for this banking institution and to give it the power of creating a reserve that is greater than the capital it started with. We are expected to provide the reserve that the Dominion Government may demand of the bank. We are expected to pay the dividends, to such an extent that their stock goes up to 200 and 270 per cent. And then the wonder is why we are not an absolutely happy and prosperous people, and why the population of the Dominion of Canada remains almost stagnant. They cannot understand—of course they cannot—those poor little fellows who never saw outside of the municipality in which they were born and the place to which they happen to have been transferred. They become so unpopular that once in a while they have to be moved, and somebody has to be put in their place; and when the other fellow comes, you discover, as a rule, in about the first week, that he is a little smaller than the one that went away, because he has been trained under a narrower mind, if possible, than the first fellow. Men of that kind are the basis of our finance in Canada. This is not a long-drawn bow at all.

What position or credit has a farmer? I have land and can mortgage it. Thank God, I do not have to deal with the bank for that, because it would crucify me. I have no credit, though I have $5,000 worth of cattle roaming on the place. I remember that two years ago, when we had that short crop, the banks issued a proclamation to all the farmers of Canada, like a proclamation from the Pope of Rome. They announced that they sympathized with the farmers because of their short crops, and all that, and they extended the invitation, "Please come in." Yes, "Come in." The farmer did not get in. The farmer has no status whatever with the banks. If he wants to get a dollar out of a bank he has to go and get all his neighbours to sign a note with him; then he has to get down on his knees before this miniature banker and ask him to be kind enough to open up the heart of the institution which he represents and bleed it to the extent of $200 or $300. You say to the banker, "I will pay you in four months," and he tells you: "No; I cannot give your four months: our institution does not give credit over three months." "Well, how about a renewal?" you ask. And the answer is: "Of course, we have no money to lend; our busines is not to lend money in this community where we live; our business is to take your money from this community and ship it away—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: To Wall Street.

Hon. Mr. POPE: "—ship it to big centres, or put it on call down in the United States." I remember that in 1907 we hollered down in the United States, and the people there were all deaf and never heard a word. There was no response from the great United States. We were supposed to be suffering from hard times just about then, because this call money could not be got. I am told—I do not know whether it is true or not—that this call money is one of the essential features of the banking system. It is a sort of reserve. They can get it at any time. Then I propose that we have a Federal Bank established, and that we take their money and give them only 4 or 5 per cent for it—that is enough—and when they want it they may have it. Let us keep it in Canada, and keep in Canada the people who earn the money and who ought to have the use of it. I think that is a sane proposal. I cannot understand why this matter of renewing the charters of the banks, which comes up in Parliament every ten years, does not arouse more interest in the minds of honourable members who know ten times more about the matter than I do and who are capable of giving us wise advice upon the question and affording relief to the people of this country. Why are such honourable members dumb? Why should the Government or any political party become paralyzed because 17 banks come to Parliament and demand something—something that they should not have. Whether they should have it or whether they should not makes no difference. Why should Parliament be paralyzed because of an application from 17 banks for the renewal of their charters? I hope that before the Bill leaves this House I may be agreeably surprised to see honourable members take part in the discussion of this question in the interest of the people of Canada. If we have to set this banking system back again, if we renew the charters for only twelve months, until we have time to consider smaller units, it will not hurt anybody. I quite appreciate that the time I am taking to discuss this question is wasted, but I think it is my duty to discuss it, and that I owe it to myself and the people who sent me here to do so. You talk about these reserves. They are nothing but money sucked from the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Has the honourable gentleman got the information asked for as to why this was fixed at 40 per cent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is just arbitrarily fixed. It could as well be 35 per cent or 45 per cent.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I would like to say a word on the broad statement that has been made by the honourable gentleman from Compton (Hon. Mr. Pope), because I think that perhaps unwittingly he has misled the Senate on some points. In the first place, he speaks about the large dividends that stockholders have received. The percentage of dividends is calculated upon the stock's par of $100. Many stockholders have purchased their shares in the Royal Bank at 221, in the Bank of Montreal at 247, and in other banks at proportionately high figures, in consequence of which they do not get 12 per cent on their investment, but very little over 6 per cent. People will not invest their money in bank stocks at 6 per cent with double liability when they can get 6 per cent on mortgages.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I do not wish to interrupt, but what about the reserves piled up every year? Are not the shareholders more than protected on the double liability?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I am going to explain that to my honourable friend, who is quite scientific on finance and other subjects. In the first place, this money is taken in generally from the public. The public are given 3 per cent—perhaps they ought to get more—upon the funds which they contribute, a part of which is reserve. I do not know what is included in the cash reserve; but a bank is required to hold 40 per cent of its reserve in legal tender. If they take 40 per cent out of the cash reserve and pay 3 per cent on that—they get no interest from the Government on the legal tender—the amount they receive is not as great as it is represented to be.

Section 60 was agreed to.

On section 61—issue and circulation of notes:

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What notes can they issue according to the capital?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN (reading):

The bank may issue and re-issue its notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation: Provided that—

(a) the bank shall not, during any period of suspension of payment of its liabilities, issue or re-issue any of its notes; and

(b) if, after any such suspension, the bank resumes business without the consent in writing of the curator, hereinafter provided for, it shall not issue or re-issue any of its notes until authorized by the Treasury Board so to do.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: Is there any possible way of obtaining information as to what amount of money the banks make out of notes that are destroyed and never redeemed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The banks are not authorized to take any advantage of the destruction of notes. They gain nothing by it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Oh, yes, of those that are lost and burned they do.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose there was a great conflagration and $1,000,000 of a bank's issue was burned. Do you mean to say that the people who lost this money would receive any remuneration from the bank? Not at all; and if the bank closes its doors and goes out of business, there is that much less to pay. When the Bank of Prince Edward Island went down there were a lot of its notes that never came back for redemption, because they had been destroyed. Take the Bank of Montreal, or any of the banks that have been running for many years; an enormous amount of their notes have been destroyed and lost.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that the banks cannot get any credit for the notes that are lost.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is capitalized.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A bank being obliged to deposit dollar for dollar in gold, will only get back its gold when it returns the money. The gold is there; the money may be lost; but it is a liability of the bank.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Does the honourable gentleman mean to tell us that the banks deposit gold, dollar for dollar, for their issues?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am only speaking of Dominion notes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: We are talking of chartered bank notes.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I would like to have a word. Perhaps gentlemen do not understand the practice of the banks. Every bank note that is issued is registered in proper form, and if that bank note is returned for deposit and placed in a bank, when it becomes dirty the registry is cancelled and the bank note is burned. If notes which are registered have been burned or destroyed, the person who has suffered the loss can go to the bank, and if he be a reputable person his money will generally be returned.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He must have the numbers.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: And must give a bond.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: That may be.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That is impossible.

Section 61 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Now I would ask the Minister, in view of the fact that nearly half the sections of the Bill have been passed or considered, that we conclude the consideration of this Bill for the day or take it up next week when we come back like giants refreshed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will consent to this—and I think my honourable friend will meet me half way: we will continue up to 6 o'clock and will not meet this evening. I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that this is the last Bill upon the Order Paper, and that there is still considerable work to be done upon it. We have only been working since 3 o'clock, and surely my honourable friend will not ask that we adjourn at half-past four.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I met in two committees this forenoon—and there are other duties that we have to perform—so I think we have worked pretty well. I am sorry that it is necessary for me to go, and I am sure the Minister will be sorry too.

Hno. Mr. DANDURAND: I have already promised my honourable friend that he may revert to any clause.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, that is all right.

Sections 62 and 63 were agreed to.

On section 64—bank circulation redemption fund continued:

Hon. Mr. POPE: May I ask what that circulation fund is?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is a fund to protect the circulation of a bank that would be unable to redeem its own issue of notes.

Hon. Mr. POPE: In case of failure?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 64 was agreed to.

Sections 65 to 75, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 76—business and powers of bank:

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Honourable gentlemen, for two or three months I have intended to engage the attention of the Senate on the question of rural credits, which to some extent is connected with this section. The matter received considerable attention in another Chamber, and in two Committees. I intended to deal with this at an earlier stage of the Session, but as it is drawing to a close I will only deal briefly with the matter.

I quite recognize that the Bank Act of Canada, founded largely as it is on the banking principles of Scotland, although immediately introduced to us from the United States, is primarily designed for commercial undertakings, and has not the elasticity in its workings to satisfactorily perform at all times, though with the best intentions, the functions of agriclutural credit. The reason is that agricultural credit is now too short, and in many cases it is useless for the farmer. A bank will lend money for three months, and if everything is going on well they will renew a note for another three months, and perhaps for a further three months at the expiration of that term; yet, although the farmer may be absolutely solvent, the banker has it in his power absolutely to say, "I will not renew your note," and everyone familiar with banking knows perfectly well that if a man's own banker refuses to give him credit no other bank is likely to give him a loan. I think there is a function that can be performed by the banks, with an extension of the powers they now possess, towards agricultural credit; or a new system will have to be devised supplementary to the present banking system.

The United States has progressed very much further than we have in aiding the farmer. Notwithstanding the fact that that country is far richer per capita than we are, and has a very much larger liquid and floating capital available for the purposes of commerce and agriculture, yet in the last session of Congress, Bills were passed intended primarily for the aid of agriculture.

Before dealing with that, let us look at what they did in regard to farm loans. We have a great number of companies in Canada making farm loans, and in addition we have insurance companies and other corporations investing their surplus money in farm and other loans, and many old country companies also are represented here, and I think on the whole they have been trying to do a very good work. I have no stones to throw at them. I have seen their operation in the West. The only objection I have at all is that the rates of interest by the loan and insurance companies of Canada are too high for agricultural purposes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What are the rates?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The current rate in Saskatchewan for many years has been 8 per cent, and never less except in very isolated cases with choice loans of considerable amount.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is that charged by the banks?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: No, by the loan companies.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Is that much higher than the rate on commercial loans?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Commercial loans to traders in good standing are, to my knowledge, given at 7 per cent. I am not saying that that rate is excessive. I think the majority of the loan companies in western Canada have not made excessive profits, and they have been handicapped by provincial legislation in nearly all the western provinces, which has rather interfered with their operations.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What is the current rate charged by the banks to the farmers in my honourable friend's province?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The current rate that the bank charges to the farmer for his commercial accommodation varies from 8 to 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Not less than 8 per cent?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I would not say less than 8 per cent. I have some illustrations of less than 8 per cent, but I think 8 per cent would be perhaps a pretty fair average, and if the loan is not paid at maturity the rate goes up a little bit or the borrower gets a little less. I have no objection to the man with the better credit getting a better rate, but I am saying that the rate of 8 per cent, which was the standard rate in the West, has been exceeded in the last one, two or three years in numerous cases when a land loan matured after its five-year period and had to be renewed. I know cases where the original loan was 8 per cent, but when it fell due and there was a paucity of money the farmer could not replace it elsewhere, and if he did he would have the expense of a new loan, and he had to pay $8\frac{1}{2}$, $8\frac{3}{4}$ and 9 per cent, and I have known cases of 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Would that be on endorsed notes?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: No. purely on farm loans, taken at 40 per cent of appraised value. Loan companies sometimes lend up to 50 per cent on approved land, but I should say the average is from 35 to 40 per cent.

Now, notwithstanding the older settlement of the agricultural states, the United States have found it necessary to pass the Farm Loan Act, whereby the Federal Government furnishes money to carry on farm loans. That Act was passed in 1916.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend say that their source of supply of money is the Federal Reserve Bank?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Not the Federal Reserve Bank. There are 12 of those in the United States; they were formed for the purpose of assisting by re-discounting for state and national banks in the United States.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Where do the farm banks get their money?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The Farm Loan banks are formed pursuant to the Farm Loan Act by the Federal Government, for the purpose of negotiating debentures and notes issued under the Farm Loan Act.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They issue their own debentures, and then loan the proceeds to the Farm Loan bank?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes, they sell them in the markets of the world.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And the proceeds of those sales are loaned to the farmers?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is the German system.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Not quite the same.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The Federal guarantee is behind them?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Largely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They go on renewing those from year to year?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes; the farm loans are nearly all on the amortization principle.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Where is the distinction between the United States law and many of the Provincial laws we have dealing with agricultural credit?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: That is, where Provincial Governments organize Loan Boards of their own. There is one in Manitoba, we have one in Saskatchewan, and Ontario has one. In Saskatchewan the Government has established its Provincial Loan Board. It sold its debentures at 5 per cent. Moneys arising in that way they apply to agriculture, but, unfortunately, in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and I think in Alberta too, they are met with a shortage of funds. There are hundreds of thousands of dollars of loans on application in Saskatchewan, but there is no money.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Have not the losses in Manitoba been so excessive as to almost destroy the system which Manitoba started?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The report made by the Commission which examined into the Manitoba Loan Board was very critical and pessimistic, but that is due to the management of the Board and the constitution of the Board: it has nothing fundamental to do with loaning under proper security.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is that the reason why they have failed, and why in Germany and Austria the Raffeisen banks have been so successful?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is it not largely due to financial administration?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The Raffeisen system has been wonderfully successful.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And they have loaned at on exceedingly low rate.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: In 1912-13 the Province of Saskatchewan sent a Commission to Europe, in company with the Southern Chambers of Commerce of the United States, to look into the question of rural credits, and an Act was introduced to carry out the recommendations of the Commission. I happened to be in the Saskatchewan Legislature at the time, and that Act had one fatal weakness; each borrower among groups of 10 had to become personally answerable for the loan to the other 9. In a rapidly changing population nine farmers in any community would guarantee the other one, and vice versa, so the Act never came into operation at all, and it was replaced by the Act to which the honourable member for Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) refers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What success have those Farm Loan banks in the United States met with, and what have they been able to do in the way of lending at a low rate of interest?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The Farm Loan banks have been very successful. They are operated in connection with the Federal Reserve Bank, and subject to the most rigid supervision by independent Boards. The appointments on those Boards are alternately a member of the Republican party and a member of the Democratic party, in order to take away any question of partizan control.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They are all run as private enterprises—not by the Government.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: They are an agency of the Government.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They are controlled by the Government?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes, because the Government agencies are instrumental in obtaining the money.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The Government guarantees the money.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What rate of interest do they get?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The rate varies. I am going to startle the House when I suggest that the bonds be, as in the United States, free of income tax. In the United States, with its enormous financial resources, the debentures issued in connection with loans are absolutely free of income tax, and the moneys to be issued for this further scheme in connection with rural credits up to three years will also be free from income tax. The result is that those bonds find the most ready acceptance in the great money markets of the East, and the Farm Loan banks are able to lend their money at 5½ or 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Does the honourable gentleman mean to say that the wealthy men of the East who pick up those bonds and debentures are exempt from income tax on those bonds?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I do. and the benefit is reflected back to the people who borrow the money. In the last year or two it was found that the farmer required not only a cheaper system of borrowing money on real estate but a cheaper and more adequate way of getting money for current commercial operations. The result was that Congress last session passed a Bill consolidating three Bills, and creating bodies known as Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, 12 in number, of which the capital of each would extend to $5,000,000, which was supplied by the National Government of the United States, and with that bank there was provision for incorporation of a subsidiary body known as the National Agricultural Corporation, with a capitalization of $250,000. That organization was found to be necessary in the interest of commerce, because commercial banks could not and would not lend on long dates of credit. The scheme provided two forms and two periods of credit for agriculturists: one, a period of nine months for the orderly marketing of crops and for goods for which they gave warehouse certificates or collateral; and a period of thirty-six months, generally for the cattle-producing industry. These companies are therefore allowed to lend at a period of nine months or a period of thirty-six months in the case of cattle production.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Stock-breeding.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Anybody who is familiar with cattle knows that a period of three, six or nine months is absolutely useless to the breeder. He cannot hope to market his stock in that time, in the West in any event, because in the West cattle are not killed until they are two or three years old. No bank, unless the borrower has a credit that is unimpeachable, or unless he has good collateral, can get credit for three years for the purpose of producing live stock.

I say the United States has provided the machinery and the working capital to start this system of rural agricultural credits. There is, first, a subscription of $5,000,000 capital by each of twelve banks; that amounts to $60,000,000. Then the subsidiary organizations provide for the collection end, selling shares in their National Agricultural Credit Association, and by the sale of shares they get up to a capitalization of $250,000. That National Agricultural Credit Association, which is to a large extent co-operative, deals with the borrower. A borrower goes to the local Credit Association, and says: "I want a loan for 36 months in order to mature certain of my stock which I am going to grow and prepare for the market." The Board approve of his loan. They take his note, and they may take a chattel mortgage as collateral thereto. That comes first and is discounted by their bank, and then passed on for rediscount to the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank; and thereafter it can be passed on to the Federal Reserve Bank, if it is only for nine months. So machinery is provided which we have not in Canada, or we certainly do not use in Canada, for an extended period of credit such as the farmers want; and they get credit at rates of interest that we cannot get in this country.

I am not for one moment attacking the banks regarding rates of interest. I believe the banks of Canada, which I know something about, are a credit and are most stable, and they give us, as far as their limitations permit, a reasonably substantial service. But they are primarily instituted for commercial and not for agricultural operations. I think it is the duty of the Government, in the interim between now and next Session, either by a portion of its Cabinet or with the aid of what expert advice it can get outside, to study the question whether we cannot have in Canada, not necessarily the counterpart of the American legislation, but something on similar lines. The Federal Government of Australia and the States of that Commonwealth are years and miles ahead of us in agricultural legislation regarding the financing of the farmer. That question has been studied in South Africa, and I think they have taken steps which indicate that they are in advance of us. I believe that one of the needs of the farmer of the West is the right to obtain credit for a longer period and at a better rate, both on his land and on his chattel property. I think that the farmer cannot, except in very favoured agricultural localities and in very fortunate seasons, pay 8 per cent. I do not believe the loan companies, in charging 8 per cent, are oppressive or that the majority are making excessive profits. I have suggested one way: I do not know whether it pleases this House or not, but I am prepared to support it. My suggestion is that the Dominion Associations, or whatever they may be called, which are formed for the purpose of selling their debentures and procuring loans, be empowered to issue their debentures tax-free. Thousands and thousands of municipalities of the United States have issued and are issuing tax-free certificates and debentures. I know that statement shocks many people, but it is a fact. That practice, I know, has been criticized, but they go on issuing none the less. Why do they do so? Because they are able to procure their money at a very much cheaper rate of interest; and what is wanted, not only in the West but by agriculture all over Canada, is a cheaper rate of interest.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Can the honourable gentleman tell us the American rates of interest on those tax-free bonds and debentures?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The debentures are selling commercially in the market at about 5 per cent. There is a market for them as for other debentures. A rate might be fixed which might bring more than par, or less than par. It simply depends on the market.

I do not think the farmer in Ontario or the older parts of Canada have suffered as much by high rates as we do in the West. Conditions in the older parts of Canada are more stable. The farmer himself in those parts is very close to his neighbour who is ready to lend at the rate of 6 or 7 per cent. I know that rates of interest in Ontario have advanced, but we in the West have not surplus cash enough to take care in our own province of the current loan necessities of the farmer, either for financing and developing his industry or by lending on the security of his property.

We are also handicapped, I think, by the present Dominion Act. As honourable gentlemen are aware, it provides that loans shall mature in five years. That provision was put in at the instance of the farmers, because in the old days some loans were made for twenty, thirty, or forty years at very high rates of interest and with no privilege of prepayment. It was really at the instance of the farmers themselves that a provision was made whereby the loan company should be obliged at the end of five years to take prepayment of the loan. I think that the amortization principle is the best principle for the farmer. We all know the principle; so I will not expatiate on it. Nearly all the Credit Associations in the United States that I have been dealing with in regard to loans to farmers not only give loans for periods up to forty years, but also allow the right of prepayment, at any time or after short notice. In our local Act in Saskatchewan the right of redemption or prepayment at any time, or at any time after short notice, is provided; but we have not in any of those provinces of the West enough current capital available for the purpose of financing either loans for production purposes alone or farm loans. We want the machinery of the Dominion Government, with its greater credit and its better borrowing at cheaper rates, to replace that of the Provincial Government; and I am perfectly satisfied that a system can be worked for the amelioration of agriculture in Western Canada without any risk at all on the part of the Dominion Government, because for every loan that would be made ample security would have to be taken.

I apologize for speaking at such length. I intended to take only two or three minutes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Go on. It is very interesting.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: No, I will not continue further, I have given a promise to the Chairman that I would not be long. I intend at the next Session, if the Government has not in the meantime done anything in the matter, to deal with the subject at some length.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to suggest a short amendment to subsection 3 of this section, known as the Insurance Clause. When this was introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Marler, one of the members for Montreal, it was confined to a prohibition upon the agent against doing any light, fire, or accident business, but by some means or other a clause has been inserted to cover all classes of insurance. There is a bank in Weyburn, Saskatchewan—

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The Weyburn Security Bank.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —which approaches the agricultural bank probably more closely than any other bank in Canada, and, as I understand, performs a great service for the farmers of that Province. Almost 50 per cent of its business consists of the commissions which it receives from its own managers or agents doing a hail insurance business. I understand their returns amount to forty odd thousand dollars, and of this amount twenty odd thousand would be made up in hail insurance commissions. I desire to have the clause amended to permit the agent or manager of the bank to do the business of hail insurance. As I understand, it was not in contemplation when the first amendment was moved by Mr. Marler in the House of Commons. I am therefore going to ask that subsection 3 be amended by adding after the word "any," in the eleventh line—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps my honourable friend would move to replace the clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will do that. The clause would read as follows:

No agent or manager of any bank shall act as agent for any life, fire, or accident insurance company, or for any person in the placing of such insurance, nor shall any bank exercise pressure upon any borrower to place such insurance for the security of the bank in any particular insurance agency but nothing herein contained shall prevent such bank from requiring such insurance to be placed with an insurance company which it may approve.

Honourable gentlemen will observe that we simply omit the word "hail," so as to permit of a bank doing a hail business.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Would not that prohibit all kinds of insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; because the prohibition is placed upon their doing "any life, fire or accident insurance." The latter part, providing that nothing shall prevent the bank from requiring the insurance to be placed with a company which it may approve, is only reasonable.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Is that bank in the insurance business itself?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. Its agents or managers are authorized to act as agents for any hail insurance company, and they receive commissions for the business which they place. The commission is placed to the credit of the bank, and practically half of its profit is made up of commissions on hail insurance, because a very large business is done in hail insurance in that province.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Of course it has advanced money.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: There is a special provision regarding hail insurance?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: I do not quite understand the reason the honourable gentleman gives for elininating hail insurance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What we do is simply to prohibit all banks from doing any business in life, fire, and accident insurance, and that would permit them to do a gives for eliminating hail insurance.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: What is the argument in favour of allowing them to do a business in hail insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This amendment would of course apply to all banks. In this particular instance that I mention the bank has advanced more or less money to farmers and is interested in the crop. The risk against hail is very great; consequently hail insurance is negotiated and the policy is lodged with the bank as collateral security, practically, for the payment of the loan. The farmer has to depend upon his crop to pay the loan.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman if this will not permit the bank to have a special claim on the hail business.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Are there not insurance companies that take the hail risk?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But the banks are not conducting a hail insurance business.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I know that violent objection is made against giving the bank that right which would be allowed by the proposed amendment.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I think it is a very dangerous thing.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: In any event, if that right is given at all, it should apply only to insurance placed for borrowers from the Bank, because the agents have gone out and canvassed for the insurance like any insurance agent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I see no objection to limiting it to borrowers. I must say that I see no objection to the bank agent or manager in a rural district negotiating a hail insurance policy on behalf of a borrower from the bank, and making the proceeds payable to the bank as collateral for the loan which the borrower has negotiated. In fact, it must be done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Where is that Weyburn Bank doing its business?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In Weyburn, Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Has it many branches?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it is a small institution.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am just informed that it has seventeen branches.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is a small number in comparison with those of other banks.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would point out that the proposal is dangerous, particularly in view of what this Bank Act is intended to cure. We let them crawl in under the sill, so to speak. We had a marked instance of that in the Maritime Provinces, in connection with the lumber business. The manager of one of our chief banks—who, by the way, was a candidate in the last Federal election—ran an insurance business. He kept about a dozen clerks, and when anybody who had lumber and went to get a loan on it from the bank, this gentleman insisted upon the borrower insuring in his company. As a result, he had all borrowers by the throat all the time. This present clause would not have been put into the Bank Act only that the revulsion of feeling against that condition of affairs was so strong that it had to be put there. Now the honourable gentleman comes in with an amendment that gives a privilege to a certain bank which is said to have 17 branches. The proposed amendment does not mention "hail"; it specifies certain kinds of insurance at the beginning of the clause; and, to my mind, it is susceptible of different interpretations as I heard it read. You allow this bank, and incidentally all other banks, to do practically the very thing it was intended to prevent. I think the amendment is vicious, and is subversive of the whole clause.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The case which my honourable friend has pointed out is, it seems to me, subject to very sound criticism, namely, that of a bank manager carrying on an insurance business. This amendment does not contemplate anything of that kind. It simply permits a bank agent or bank manager to negotiate a policy with a hail insurance company.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You said the bank got half the premiums.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I did not. Quite the contrary.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You said the bank got half.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I said the profits of the bank are made up largely of those commissions which are by their own managers put to the credit of a particular fund in the bank. The manager or agent gets nothing out of it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He gets only his salary?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He gets only his salary, but that is part of his duty. I am told that out of $40,000 odd profits almost half is made up of those commissions on hail insurance. In the very nature of things this amendment would practically apply only to this particular bank, which is regarded as an agricultural bank. It is a bank that does an exceptional business amongst the agricultural community of that province.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Do you think it is right to make this exception?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We make no exceptions. We prohibit all bank managers from engaging in fire, life or accident insurance. This would simply leave it open to them to do a business in hail insurance. I am unaware whether hail insurance is done upon any marked scale in the East; I think it is a class of business peculiar to the West. I shall move this amendment, and honourable gentlemen may consider it in the meantime. I am reluctant to obtrude in any way upon the judgment of the House.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend's amendment deals with life, fire, and accident insurance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It has been prepared very carefully.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You speak of fire, life and accident insurance. Are there not some other branches of insurance outside of hail?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is marine insurance.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And burglary.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will put "marine" in.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I was not thinking so much about marine insurance; but there is burglary insurance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, we will put that in.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And lumber insurance. A boom is liable to be carried away.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not think my honourable friend's words are quite comprehensive enough.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would be very glad to change the amendment so as to confiine it purely to hail insurance.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: What object has the honourable gentleman in mind in permitting the bank manager to place hail insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is a substantial part of the business of the bank, and from which it derives almost fifty per cent of its profits. The commissions arising out of the negotiation of hail insurance on the part of their agents afterwards return to the bank.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Insurance to farmers who have borrowed money?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Only in those cases?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In other words, you are giving them special legislation, and a monopoly in that business. You say they must approve of it; and all they have to do is to say yes or no. There is no special reason why the Weyburn bank or any other should have special legislation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will leave out the question of approval. That is well-established practice. The reason why the Weyburn bank would be justified in asking for this amendment is quite clear. Up to this time it has been allowable; the bank has built up a business through deriving a considerable profit from those commissions. Having built up a banking business upon this particular basis, combined with legitimate banking business, is there any reason why half this business should be wiped out by a revision at this time?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If it stands as it is, it will wipe out that business?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The provision incorporated in the Bill now before us would wipe out approximately 50 per cent of the profits of the bank. It is not desirable that that should be done. It is not desirable that that, I will not say the solvency, but the solidity of the bank should be interfered with in this way unless it can be shown that this practice is vicious in principle.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It is vicious in principle.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is it a rural bank?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it is a rural bank, and strictly confined to a rural business.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I hesitate to disagree with my honourable friend. If this were confined to the Weyburn bank, which is a farmers' bank, and if it were necessary to keep that bank in existence, it would not be so bad; but this amendment allows every bank to do it. You are vitiating a clause that does away with an anomaly that has worked a hardship in the past on borrowers from the different banks. This is a broad blanket amendment, giving every bank—the Royal Bank, the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Nova Scotia, or the Bank of Commerce—the same privileges as the Weyburn Bank, and there is no special reason for that. Why should we put in a clause to make dividends for the Weyburn Bank, which you have insinuated can live without them.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: It is applicable to all banks?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would apply to all banks, but in the nature of events it would be confined to the Weyburn Bank.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: If it is applicable to all banks, why do we include hail and shut out fire and life insurance?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The main part of insurance is life, fire and accident insurance. In times past branch bank managers have been in the habit of writing insurance.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Which was a very wrong thing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The banks of late years have made stringent prohibitions against bank managers writing insurance.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: How late?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know exactly. I can give the information to my honourable friend at the next sitting. They have prohibited their branch managers from doing that work.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Why?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because they would be apt to be a little more easy in granting discounts, and because it was felt that their minds should be exclusively devoted to the business and interests of the bank.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The agents got the benefit of the commissions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes. I am ready to consider the amendment of my honourable friend if it is to help a rural bank in the West which does a business radiating throughout a fairly large district. I am told it has seventeen branches.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: This takes in every bank.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but if we declare that the banks shall not allow their managers to write life, fire and accident insurance, we are making a step forward in sanctioning the practice of the banks in general. I am ready to consider such a framing of the clause as will not hurt an institution that is serving the farmers of the West

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: As far as it will help the Weyburn bank, I agree to it; but I think there is more than the honourable gentleman has stated in the banks asking their managers not to solicit insurance. There has been a great agitation in the West. The agents of insurance companies have objected to the managers of banks taking insurance, because it interferes with their business.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: If the banks by their own action have corrected an evil by issuing such orders as would prevent their managers doing business in insurance, why should we pass special legislation along the same line? If you go that far you might as well say that they shall not do any conveyancing or any other line of business. I think it is a matter between the banks and their managers. The Minister says that the banks by their own action have already corrected the evil. I do not think there is any necessity for this subsection.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: I would not like to see this amendment pass without raising the most vigorous protest I can against any such idea. I venture to say that if we place such a provision as this upon the Statute Book, we will raise a hornet's nest about the ears of the Senate that we will not fail to hear from for a long time to come.

In the three Western Provinces there are probably 10,000 people who are dependent upon hail insurance for a large part of their livelihood. The hail insurance companies have a large organization in every Province, and are represented by agents in every community where there is a bank, and, I venture to say, in every community of importance, even where there is not a bank. There might be some reason for the amendment if it could be urged that it would be inconvenient for the banks to obtain hail insurance for loans made to farmers; but I do not hesitate to say that in every community where there is a branch bank there would be from three to ten hail insurance agents who are only too anxious to negotiate the insurance made payable to the banks.

I consider this amendment absolutely unnecessary; there has been no demand for it; it is wholly gratuitous. The Weyburn Security Bank, as we know is the smallest bank in Canada. I know the community in which it operates, and know where every one of its branches is situated; and I venture to say that in every place where it operates there are at least half-a-dozen insurance agents. So there is nothing in the argument that it is necessary for the banks to have this privilege. They can get all of that kind of service they desire at a moment's notice, and from men who make a living out of the business and who are experienced in it.

It is true that in the past bank managers have been in the habit of doing hail insurance on the side. When that practice came to the notice of the head offices, they put a quietus upon it as far as they could, because they considered that branch bank managers were prone to make advances on loans to farmers who would place hail insurance with them in order that they personally might get the commission. That is the reason why the head offices of the Canadian banks have prohibited their managers from becoming interested in any kind of insurance.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In so far as they can.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Yes. They have to a large extent eliminated the practice, but it still persists to a certain extent, which probably cannot be avoided, because the banks cannot control what their managers do privately on the side.

Knowing how many people are engaged in this industry, and how well organized and how well established it is, I would urge this House to hesitate before passing such an amendment as this. It might be but the thin edge of the wedge for allowing banks to do a general insurance business. The banks are not engaged in the insurance business. Why give them privileges in connection with hail insurance?

The argument is made that this is necessary in order that the banks may protect themselves in regard to collateral loans. They do not need to do the business themselves to get that protection, because, as I say, there are five or six agents in every community in which the banks operate who are prepared to give this service, and who are experts in the business.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I think I could advance the very gravest reasons why this amendment should not carry, but I am not going to do so because of one statement that was made—that half the profits of the Weyburn Bank are derived from that source. In view of that fact, and in view of the amount of money which I understand that bank loans in the locality, I do not think it would be wise to cut it off from that revenue at the present time. I think that within a certain limited time it should be prohibited from allowing its managers to act in the insurance business. I am quite satisfied that the principle of allowing bank managers to act as life insurance agents is vicious.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suggest to my honourable friend that we suspend the clause.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Before that is done may I associate myself with my honourable friend from Regina (Hon. Mr. Laird), who has reflected my views exactly. The Bank of Weyburn is a very useful bank; I have nothing but good to say of it; but when it is said that it receives half its profits from this hail insurance business, it would be interesting to know whether or not it is a lender in connection with all the insurance placed. The agents, before they were prohibited by the banks themselves—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They have not been prohibited yet.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It was the banks themselves, as a matter of discipline and good government, that saw fit to discontinue the practice; I do not say they were prohibited by the Act. I do not find any fault with it, because it was permissible by the law, but perhaps the agents of the Security Bank made a dead set to get all the insurance they could whether they were lenders to the insurers or not.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: They had the right to do that.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: They had the right, and I very much doubt the statement that they made the larger half of their profits from commissions where they were the lenders.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I did not say that, because I have no information on that. I said I presumed that they would negotiate a hail insurance policy on any loan.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I am putting the other hypothesis. I do not think there were loans in a great many cases, because I know it is the practice of the other bank agents to go after hail insurance in the most lively fashion where they are not interested in the loan at all.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: I do not know anything about the Weyburn Bank except from hearing the representative give his evidence here, and from further inquiries which I made about the bank and its worth. Although it is the smallest of Canadian banks it seemed to me to be exercising a useful function in relation to dealing with rural people, and I thought the evidence of Mr. Powell showed that he had a great appreciation of the difficulties in the West, and a pretty sound method of dealing with them. If they have gone on till now with so considerable a proportion of their income, as the honourable leader says, it would work great hardship to cut them off.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know nothing about the Weyburn Bank except by reputation. I do not know any of the officers associated with it.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Its reputation is good.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know its reputation is good and this memorandum has been placed in my hands by a gentleman in no way interested in the Weyburn Bank. It appeals to me as an act of justice.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: An act of charity.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, an act of justice and an act of sound reasoning. Those people have had the right to do this business up to the present time, and no Act of Parliament should come in to wipe out 50 per cent of business legitimately done by an institution which is recognized to be one contributing very largely to the progress and development of the section of country in which it operates. I will place this memorandum with the Chairman, and will ask for a reconsideration before the Bill passes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The objection came from the insurance agents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: They claimed that the banks were using their influence to deprive them of a legitimate share of their business. It is only in that way that this amendment came to be inserted in the Bill as sent to us. I know that the banks answer that they were prohibiting their own managers or employees from acting as insurance agents. I am connected with a bank, and I konw that for 15 or 20 years it has been a written rule of the bank to prohibit all its managers from doing any business of that kind. The reason which has been given by the honourable gentleman from Calgary appeals to me as a matter of justice. He says that the rural bank has made it part of its business to deal with matters of that kind, and I think it has done a real service for the West. The insurance against hail should be extended as much as possible. It is a great protection for farmers, and the work that has been done by that bank was work for the general advantage of the West. As a matter of fairness, if that bank has built a profitable business in that line, is it proper to deprive them of it because of complaints made in other quarters by insurance agents in general, and which were directed not against that kind of insurance, but against fire insurance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Fire, accident and life.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That argument appears very plausible; but I want to tell the honourable gentleman who has just spoken that, although the bank to which he may belong passes edicts in Montreal, they are often observed in the breach.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I do not know about your bank, but I do know of other banks It is a vicious principle for managers of banks to hold up men for insurance when they could make better terms otherwise. If there had been no vicious principle involved, we would not have found this clause in the Bill, but it was put in not only to cover a small bank, but to take in all banks, and allow them to do insurance business. One of the largest banks in the Maritime provinces had a manager who ran a big insurance company, and men who could place their insurance at a better rate had to take the insurance from him before they could get their loans.

We had evidence the other day before a Committee of this House, on the condition of transportation on the lakes, that men who formed subsidiary companies held up people who would come to ship their wheat, and required that they should give them the insurance, so that they would rake off 35 per cent, although those parties could get insurance from other companies, just as stable, at 25 per cent. I admit that the House of Commons would not have passed this clause unless it was convinced of its justice, and I submit that this Bill should not be vitiated by an amendment which would entirely destroy the effects of that clause. The members from the West have expressed themeselves very strongly on the local conditions, and their voice should be heard.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does my honourable friend suggest that we pass the first part of this clause, and leave subsection 3 in abeyance?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, and I will come back to it again.

Subsection 2 of section 76 was agreed to.

Subsection 3 of section 76 stands.

Sections 77 and 78 were agreed to.

On section 79—acquisition of real estate; return to Minister; particulars:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

The existing section provides for an annual return to the Minister showing in detail the fair market value of the bank's real and immoveable property. To this has been added, by the amendment, the requirement that if the property is in the name of a subsidiary corporation controlled by the bank the property of such corporation shall be returned as if the title to the property were in the bank itself.

Hon. Mr. POPE: On what basis is the value of that real estate obtained? Is it by the bank, or the Government? There is some reason for that real estate valuation being placed before the Minister, and I want to know on what basis it is fixed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It would be the fair market value of the property.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Placed by the bank themselves?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As certified to by the officials of the bank.

Sections 79 to 83, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 84—loans on standing timber:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

This section deals with loans on standing timber, and the amendment providing for the registration of the instrument, evidencing security upon standing timber, merely codifies what has been the practice heretofore.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: This clause may require some attention. I know that in the province of Quebec the sale of timber by license is provided for by provincial legislation, and a registration takes place, but it is mererly against the timber and does not affect the land itself. I doubt very much the propriety of saying that it is against the land. There should be an exception of provinces which have a system of registration. I have an impression that the system which prevails in Quebec prevails elsewhere. I would ask that section 84 stand.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is very doubtful whether we have authority to enforce a registration against land in any province by this Bill. I think that comes peculiarly within property and civil rights, and inasmuch as that registration system is a provincial system, I doubt very much our right to legislate along this particular line. Futhermore, it is difficult to say what is the distinction, because timber standing on the land is part of the realty, speaking generally. Then, again, in some provinces there is a distinction drawn between standing timber and the land itself, as, for instance, under leases issued by the Dominion Government for timber lands, where the lessees have no interest in the land whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not know that the clause is open to all the objection which my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) makes. I think it provides the two kinds of security, not merely on licenses, which I take to mean Government licenses, but on standing timber on private property.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it would, but the title to the timber may be in one holder, and the title to the land may be in another; that is the difficulty I see.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And the title to both may still be in one individual. You have to distinguish there between lands which have already been granted, and lands on which only a timber license is given.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But I take it that in every province no mortgage can be taken on lands unless it is registered, so that I think what is intended to be covered is the license.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It may operate more generally in regard to licenses, but its operation can, and certainly will be wider than in regard to licenses which have already been passed by the Crown. If I have a piece of land on which is standing timber, I can go to a banker and ask for a loan, and there can be no objection to a mortgage being taken on that property. I think section 84 has its reason outside of merely government licenses to cut timber.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: All the provinces issue licenses, and those licenses are for the time being for the land as well as the timber.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Sections 84 and 84A may stand. We may have to amend 84A to make it accord with the Bankruptcy Act. I move that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again on Monday.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 25, 1923.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

COMPANIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 190, an Act to amend the Companies Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

INLAND WATER FREIGHT RATES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 235, an Act with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: With the leave of the House I move that this Bill be placed on the Order Paper for the second reading to-morrow.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: This is a very important Bill, and one that we should know something about. I was going to suggest that we should give it a second reading to-day, and refer it to the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, which would be able to deal with it to-morrow or the next day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What special reason is there for sending it to the Standing Committee, and not dealing with it in Committee of the Whole?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: It is very inconvenient to hear witnesses in Committee of the Whole. I do not think there were any witnesses called in the other House—there was the report of the Commission, of course—and we want to know something about the Bill and give those affected by it a chance to be heard in some way. You can hasten it by taking the second reading to-day and referring it to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours and asking them to deal with it expeditiously.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Is not all the evidence to be found in the Report? Anybody who wants to get the evidence can find it there.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Not evidence with regard to this Bill; there was no Bill at the time of the inquiry.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: The Bill is simply to regulate abuses that existed and that were brought to a head by the Commission.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I understand that perfectly well; but does it do that, or does it go further? You will find men who say that it does not do what it purports to do. What I propose does not obstruct the Bill, and I should think the members of the House would like to hear anyone who has anything to say.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Where are you going to get the witnessess?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Oh, there are witnesses here.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I think the suggestion of the honourable gentleman is a very good one. We ought to learn all we can about this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would have moved in a moment that we have morning sittings beginning to-morrow to expedite the business of the House. If we have a morning sitting at 11 and an afternoon sitting, when would the Committee deal with the Bill? Of course, under my motion, the Committee would be able to sit while the House was in session. I will agree to the proposal of the honourable gentleman; but there are in the Bill only a few general enactments dealing with public policy, upon which we are fairly au fait through the long public inquiry which took place and which has shown the existence of some glaring evils that should be cured. However, I have no objection to obtaining light from outside if it may help us to deal with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would not urge this matter, only I understand that the Bill does not conform altogether to the Report.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: With the consent of the House I will move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I wish to protest against this Bill going to a Standing Committee at this stage of the Session. It is a very important Bill for Western Canada. After we obtained certain concessions from the railways last year, the shipping companies have undoubtedly taken everything from the farmers by the lake freight they charged. My opinion is that if you send this Bill to a Committee when we are so near the close of the Senate, they will delay it from time to time and it will not be reported at all. I think it is the biggest mistake in the world to have this matter referred to a Standing Committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would make this suggestion. Let us take the second reading. Then I will move that the Bill be committed to Committee of the Whole House to-morrow. If an amendment is moved, we can take the consensus of opinion of the Senate on the question. It can be dealt with summarily. I move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: That is all right.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have the honour to move that this Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I beg to move in amendment that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, with the understanding that its report be not delayed beyond to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: That is all right. I will not object to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That would allow them one sitting.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: The understanding is that the Bill must come in. I have no desire at all to obstruct it.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I am not blaming the honourable gentleman at all.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: The Committee could be called to meet to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is it proper to tell a Committee that it may have only so much time to consider a Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not to consider the Bill: it is to hear the parties. It may then come back to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: As the motion reads, it is simply that the Committee must make its report within a certain time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, no.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is the way the motion reads.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: I said that that would be an understanding.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would point out that there are several committees sitting at the present time. There is the Committee on Pensions, on which there are several honourable members. If this matter were referred to the Railway Committee, the result would be that two important Committees would be meeting at the same time and there would not be adequate representation at either. I think the proper course is to refer this Bill to Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, a few moments ago I supported my honourable friend from Middleton in his motion to have this Bill referred to a Standing Committee. I did so because I thought it necessary that we should know a little more about the matter. There should be no trouble in having the Committee sit to-night after the Senate rises. I understand another Committee is going to meet to-night. Why should not this Committee do likewise?

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I do not understand the object of sending the Bill to a Standing Committee at this late date. Surely we ought to deal with it in Committee of the Whole House and have it threshed out there, where every honourable member may have a whack at it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest to His Honour the Speaker to put the amendment.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: It is moved in amendment by the Hon. Mr. Ross, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Bradbury, that the Bill be not committed to Committee of the Whole House but that it be committed to the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I observe that there was a qualification attached to the amendment,—that the Bill should be reported to-morrow by that Committee. That would make all the difference in the world.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is the understanding.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You cannot do that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If a time limit were attached to it, so as to insure the passage of the Bill during the present week, that would determine the attitude of many honourable members, I fancy.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I object to that sort of thing. As a member of any Committee I object to it being told that is must make a report within a certain time.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: The honourable member is a servant of this House.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The amendment is that the committee must report to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Then vote against it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) has just repeated it.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is a respectful request.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not in the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is the very wording of the motion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think the amendment should be put as it was moved.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: I think, honourable gentlemen, that it is quite within the power of this House to require a Committee to report within a certain time. If it is not within the power of the House to do so, that is very strange thing. A Bill might be sent to Committee and never heard of again.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is the Committee's business; it is not ours.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: If the Bill is referred in the way I suggest, it will go to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours with the understanding that that Committee report not later than to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is exactly what I object to.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: All right, object to it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Let us understand what the motion is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I did not understand that the honourable gentleman from Middleton was including that condition in his amendment; I understood he was simply declaring that the amendment was moved with that understanding.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is a gentlemen's agreement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the honourable gentleman carries a majority with him, there will be a moral obligation on that Committee to report to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That was put there for the purpose of carrying it.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the House if it is possible for the Senate to fix a time when the Committee must report.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Of course not.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: If it is not, we do not want the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was made by the honourable gentleman with the statement that the Committee should report to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: "Should" is of no use.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But it does not say that.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: If that is not accepted by the Senate, I am certainly not going to stand in the way of this Bill. It is a very important one and must go through. I seconded the motion to refer the Bill to the standing Committee on the understanding that that would be acceptable to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I would ask leave to amend my motion, to take this form: that the Bill be referred to the Committee that I named, with the understanding—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: With instructions.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Yes, that would be better still; with instructions to the Committee to report not later than to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Question.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Does the Houses want the motion put again?

Some Hon. SENATORS: Yes.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Ross was negatived, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand was agreed to.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 236, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA INSPECTION BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 237, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SITTINGS OF THE SENATE

MOTION

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND, with the leave of the House, moved:

That, commencing on Tuesday, the 26th instant, unless differently ordered there be two distinct sittings of the Senate every day the first to commence at 11 o'clock a.m., and the second to commence at 3 o'clock p.m.; and that all Standing and Select Committees of the Senate be permitted to sit while the Senate is in session, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in Rule 86.

The motion was agreed to.

ISENBERG COAL MINING LEASES

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government whether he has any information to give to this House regarding the Bill that was passed here some time ago, empowering the Government to withdraw the fiat in connection with the Isenberg leases.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I could give some information to my honourable friend, but I would rather defer it until to-morrow. Council has been deliberating over this matter and may have reached some conclusion, but an act of Council is determined only when the Order is signed by His Excellency the Governor General.

BANK BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 83, an Act respecting Banks and Banking.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Taylor in the Chair.

On section 84—loans on standing timber:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I move that the words, "if the Provincial law permits," in the third line after the word "that," be inserted; so that the words in italics will read:

Provided that if Provincial law permits the instrument evidencing such security is registered against the land upon which such timber stands or in the offices in which are recorded such rights or licenses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no objection to that amendment.

The proposed amendment was agreed to, and section 84 as amended was agreed to.

On 84A—loans to receiver or liquidator under Winding-up Act and to trustee under Bankruptcy Act:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In consequence of the language employed in the Bankruptcy Act, which we passed the other day, it will be necessary to import into this Bill certain terms we have used, such as "custodian" and "interim receiver," wherever "trustee" is mentioned; so, in line 35, after the word "a," the section should read, "or to a custodian, interim receiver or trustee under the Bankruptcy Act." The same words should be repeated in the thirty-sixth line, after the word "liquidator," and in the fortieth line after the word "liquidator."

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The section as proposed to be amended will read thus:

The bank may lend money to a receiver, to a receiver and manager, to a liquidator appointed under any Winding-up Act or to a custodian, interim receiver or trustee under the Bankruptcy Act, provided such receiver, receiver and manager, liquidator, custodian, interim receiver or trustee has been duly authorized or empowered to borrow; and, in respect of any money so lent, the bank may take security with or without personal liability, from such receiver and manager, liquidator, custodian, interim receiver or trustee to such an amount and upon such property and assets, as may be directed or authorized by any court of competent jurisdiction.

On section 85—advances for building ships:

Hon. Mr. POPE: I would like to ask if there is anything in this security that we are giving the bank that would interfere with the claim of labourers—men engaged in the construction?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I know there is a preferred lien given to labourers in general; but I would have to go through the Act to find out whether the privilege of the labourer in connection with ships is the same.

Hon. Mr. POPE: We should not pass any legislation that interferes with that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: This provision seems to be inconsistent with section 76, subsection 2, paragraph c, which says the bank shall not lend money or make advances on the security of any ships.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The lien of labourers generally is limited to other activities than shipping, but if I find it is not we can come back to this clause.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: But how is clause 76 going to work in with clause 85?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will see that, according to subsection 2 of section 85, it is subject to provincial law.

Sections 85, 86 and 87 were agreed to.

On section 88—loans to certain wholesale dealers; grain; loans to wholesale manufacturers; etc.:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I would like to call attention to this clause in connection with clause 88A, which follows. This is probably one of the most important clauses in the Act. The object is to give an opportunity to wholesale purchasers, shippers, or dealers in different products, largely natural and manufactured, to obtain advances from the bank to enable them to carry on the process of production, manufacture, or transport, which requires a certain length of time more or less extended. This system has been in process of gradual enlargement from year to year under the different rearrangements of the Bank Act, and this year there are some enlargements added to those of proceding years. Of course, the object is most praiseworthy, and security which is reasonable and necessary must be provided to the bank, otherwise those advances will not be made.

The whole of section 88A, which is a new section, is predicated upon the necessity or advisability of taking such precautions as will safeguard the creditors of a customer of the bank who proposes to get an advance in accordance with the provisions of that section. It was supposed that that, being a new provision, and a precautionary one, would be sufficient to meet all the circumstances of the case as nearly as they could be reasonably met, and so it was passed by the Banking Committee. Afterwards there was an amendment put in subsection 7 of section 88, and it is to that amendment I want to call attention, for it would seem to negative largely the practicability of carrying out the purposes intended, which were to give a creditor facility for advances upon assured security, and at the same time to protect the vendor as far as he could reasonably be protected. The section to which the amendment was added is subsection 7:

The bank shall, by virtue of such security, acquire the same rights and powers in respect of the products, goods, wares and merchandise, stock or products thereof, or grain covered thereby as if it had acquired the same by virtue of a warehouse receipt; provided, however, that the wages salaries, or other remuneration of persons employed by any wholesale purchaser, shipper or dealer, by any wholesale manufacturer, or by any farmer in connection with any of the several wholesale businesses referred to, or in connection with the farm, owing in respect of a period not exceeding three months—

And this is what has been added:

—and any claim by an unpaid vendor of or in respect to such products, goods, wares and merchandise to the amount remaining unpaid—

The section then proceeds as follows:

—shall be a charge upon the property covered by the said security in priority to the claim of the bank thereunder, and such wages, salaries or other remuneration—

Then come in these added words:

—and such claim of an unpaid vendor—

After which the section goes on as follows:

—shall be paid by the bank if the bank takes possession or in any way disposes of the said security or of the products, goods, wares and merchandise, stock or products thereof, or grain covered thereby.

It would seem as though this addition would largely nullify the purpose that was intended, of the bank making these loans and advances to the parties under the circumstances detailed in those two sections, 88 and 88A; and that would be rather a calamity, I should think.

We all know that that class of bank transactions has been in vogue and been gradually extended for several years, and it has led to a very large development along the line of production, manufacture, and transportation; and it is felt that, if you are to bring in outstanding claims in respect to the unpaid vendor, or any claims for any other consideration that the unpaid vendor may have against him, you will defeat the purposes of the Bill. I think that is an entirely reasonable view. Whilst it is all very well to try to protect every unpaid vendor, it seems impossible to make the protection universal and at the same time allow the bank a fair security for making its advance.

I therefore move that those words in italics in lines 7, 8, and part of 9, and also in line 12, be omitted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, there were complaints, mostly from Europe, where vendors, manufacturers, or wholesalers had sold goods to people in Canada, and found when their debtor failed that there was a privilege of lien given to the bank on the very goods which they had sold, and which were either wholly or partly unpaid. Representations were made to the Government and the Finance Department against that practice; but, after investigating the matter, the Minister of Finance came to the conclusion that the only protection he could give these parties would be in the obligation of the jobber or trader in Canada to register a declaration with the Receiver General or his agent in a province that he intended giving that lien to a bank. That enactment will be found in section 88A, which follows this one. So that henceforth the vendor will know that his purchaser is giving a lien to the bank, or intends to do so. He will then know under what conditions he is dealing with that party. But in order more surely to secure the vendor, that modification of the clause has been made, and the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa suggests that it be struck out.

Now, I agree with my right honourable friend, because, under the practice that has grown up throughout the land, hundreds of millions of credit have been given by the banks under the protection of a lien, which otherwise would not have been given, and the vendor has very often received the money or part of the money which the bank has advanced. Goods from Birmingham or Manchester or Sheffield are sold to some firm in Canada, for $50,000, payable at sight or at 30 days. The bank may be asked to advance 50 per cent upon those goods to meet the first payment. The bank, after examining the affairs of a client, would ask for that lien, and would advance 50 per cent of the value of those goods, which would go to the vendor.

Now, is it just that that vendor should step in and say to the bank, "I will treat you as an ordinary creditor, and you will have no lien upon my goods, you will have to share and share alike," when he will have received that very money from the bank? As a matter of fact, the bank would not have advanced that money except under the system that has grown up in Canada, and I believe that introducing such a change in business would cause considerable money loss to the general country.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: To show the absurdity of this amendment of section 88, take, for instance, the law in Quebec. which I dare say is to a great extent similar in the other provinces. The privilege of the vendor is subject to two conditions—first, that the sale has been made for cash, and that the privilege be exercised within eight days of the delivery of the goods. Well, here it would be open to the vendor of goods, in a year or two years, when he had given 6 months or 12 months credit, to come and exercise the privilege. Surely it would be absolutely contrary to all legislation governing privileges of that kind to pass an amendment which would prevent banks from making advances in such cases, and it would have the effect of crippling the industries of the country, which require millions and hundreds of millions of advances in virtue of that clause, as no advances would be made by the banks if the clause were to remain as it is.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What has been urged is very true on behalf of England and other countries, and frequently goods shipped extensively in that way are covered by the banks under bills of lading, the goods not being delivered until the money is paid. The banks provide for that. But, on the other hand, a merchant or trader is carrying on his business under false pretences when he is covered by a bank lien all the time, and he is taking credits commercially from all sorts of people, people with less money and not trading as extensively as others; and thus you have a person operating upon the whole community. Ought we not to protect our own people rather than strangers, and ought we not also to help the comparatively small merchant and others who give credits? It may be that in a large establishment the property is covered entirely by the lien which the bank holds upon it.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: I do not believe that these amendments put in by another Chamber should be stricken out, because I believe they are necessary in the interest of the business of the country at large. Cases have been cited here which, after all, are not such as come up in the regular course of business life. People do not give credit for six months or two years in ordinary business concerns, large or small; they are limited to 30, 60, 90 and 120 days. The banks already have a great deal of protection. They have protection which no other trading concern in the Dominion of Canada has. I quite recognize that there are certain conditions which would make it almost compulsory for banks to have a certain amount of protection; but they should not be protected at the expense of all the other business interests of the country; and if you wipe out this amendment in section 88 you will take away something which I consider the business interests of the country ought to have, that is, a reasonable protection for advances to the builder, the manufacturer, or the producer for the very same object for which the bank advances money, namely, so that they may carry their contracts to completion, or produce the gold or whatever they are taking from their mines, and so on. The ordinary trader of Canada is just as important to the business interests of this country as the banks are. They go hand in hand, and it is by these businesses working together that the interests of Canada are best served. I think it is very important that the section should stand. It is just as much in the interest of the bank as of the trading community—why? I can cite to this House five cases in the Maritime Provinces in which the banks lost large sums of money, running from $350,000 to $1,200,000. In each of these cases the failure was because of what I call the "concealed liability" under the Bank Act previous to the present revision. The firms concerned borrowed enormous sums of money from the banks: they got so much that the banks in order to save their own skins gave them more. They were thus able to get credits from large dealers and manufacturers all over the country. The result of the extended credit given those firms was that they went to the wall. If there had been such a provision as this, three at least of those firms, I am convinced, would not have succumbed.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: Under the Bank Act as it was previous to this revision there was no registration.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: I might have had a credit of $1,000,000 extended to me, and because of that credit I could go out and buy goods across the border or in European markets, and why? Because the business houses there would not know that I was mortgaged to the hilt to the banks from which I got the money.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: After hearing the remarks as to the purport of section 88, I am under the impression that a misapprehension exists in the minds of some honourable gentlemen. It will be observed that the object of this section is to assist the manufacturer in converting his raw product into the finished product. It is not contemplated that the finished product shall be subject to the warehouse receipts issued by the banks; therefore the unpaid vendor will not be the frequent claimant that one would imagine. For instance, if my honourable friend from Westmoreland (Hon. Mr. Black) will look at the first subsection of section 88, he will observe that the object of the section is for the advancement of money——to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in products of agriculture, the forest, quarry and mine, or the sea, lakes and rivers, or to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in live stock or dead stock or the products thereof, upon the security of such products, or of such live stock or dead stock or the products thereof.

I fancy that in nearly every Province of the Dominion—I speak subject to correction—there is a Provincial law by which, when a sale of this character is made, a chattel mortgage is taken and filed against the subject-matter of the sale. Of course, if this were so in this case, the bank would not have a prior lien against such a mortgage.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: The ordnnary dealer does not take a chattel mortgage in every sale.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In the commercial transactions of to-day the unpaid vendor is very seldom heard of. It is very seldom in business transactions that you will hear of a substantial claim upon merchants' or manufacturers' products by the unpaid vendor. He realizes the difficulty of following the particular goods he has sold into the many hands through which they may pass. If there has been a change of possession he cannot follow them under the Provincial laws, because I venture to say that every province has enacted a law by which, when there is a change of possession, the claim must be registered.

Then we come down to subsections 2:

The banks may lend money to a farmer upon the security of his threshed grain grown upon the farm.

No prejudice is going to arise from the bank advancing money to the farmer upon his grain. The probabilities are against there being an unpaid vendor in such a case.

Under paragraph 3, my honourable friend will observe that the money is to be loaned——to any person engaged in business as a wholesale manufacturer of any goods, wares and merchandise, upon the security of the goods, wares and merchandise manufactured by him, or procured for such manufacture.

There could scarcely be within the realm of probability an unpaid vendor's lien upon raw materials which are immediately drawn into the process of manufacture, and upon which the bank, under the warehouse receipt of the manufacturer, makes the advance.

My honourable friend will find the same principle carried out under subsection 4 and subsection 5. So that the occasion does not permit of the vendor's lien being enforced to the same extent as in many phases of commercial life where the vendor may be able to trace his goods into the hands of the purchaser, there being no change in their character. Hence this clause contemplates dealing with goods of a character to which a vendor's lien in practice very seldom applies. I would venture furthermore to say, from what knowledge I have of commercial transactions, that to impose upon the banks the obligation of lending this money subject to a vendor's lien would be so oppressive and would render the transaction so unsafe that no class in the community would suffer so severely as the unpaid vendor, himself, because he almost necessarily has to rely upon the manufacturer exercising the right which he has under section 88 of the Bank Act to secure the assistance of the banks in the transaction upon which he has entered of converting the raw material into the finished product.

I need not point out to honourable gentlemen the insecurity of one transacting any business when a vendor's lien is suddenly to be called into motion without any knowledge on the part of the person advancing the money. Very few of us would assume the responsibility of transacting business of any importance if a vendor's lien were suddenly to emerge from unexpected quarters and cut the ground from under our feet. If these warehouse receipts were given to secure a debt, I could understand such a protection being advanced. But such is not the case. This right is given to the banks, and it is given to the manufacturer who issues his warehouse receipts for the purpose of applying the money in converting the raw material into the finished product, or placing the goods upon the market and making use of his finished product. I would suggest to my honourable friend the impossibility of transacting business if this clause is imposed upon the banks. I venture to say that no bank would advance one dollar to a manufacturer or a wholesaler dealing in this class of goods if there were to be an unpaid vendor's lien. If there were some way of ascertaining the existence of a vendor's lien, I could appreciate the cogency of my honourable friend's argument; but there is no channel through which this can be done.

If there were a law by which an unpaid vendor in this class of goods could be compelled to place his lien on record so that the banks would have notice of it, then one could understand placing the onus on the vendor to make inquiry for the purpose of securing this information. But that is not the case. I ask my honourable friend, if he were a banker and had transactions with a manufacturer, and he was about to advance $100,000 on raw material to have it manufactured into the finished product; and if he was aware of the fact that the Bank Act imposed upon him the unpaid vendor's lien, would he advance a dollar? I venture to say that he would not. Capital is so sensitive in matters of this kind that it can dictate its own terms. Capital does not need the application of law to place it in motion; but if it is handicapped in the slightest degree, it simply refuses to do business, and this would be a hardship upon the manufacturer, not on the bankers, because they would say: "Under no consideration will we make the advance."

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It would close half the factories of the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I agree with what my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) says. I have been an observer for some years of the operations of this particular section. I think it is one of the most salutary sections in operation in the Bank Act, and has assisted in the progress and development of our trade and resources more than any other section of the Bank Act.

My honourable friend has made a reference to the absence of any provision as to notice or registration. My honourable friend will observe that under section 88A, any person intending to give a bank security shall place upon record a notice that he intends to do this. That being the case, I would ask my honourable friend from Westmoreland (Hon. Mr. Black) if this is not sufficient security to the unpaid vendor. The unpaid vendor enjoys more security than he has had heretofore. Heretofore there has been no such obligation placed upon the vendee; but now I should say the unpaid vendor would immediately stipulate that the manufacturer or the beneficiary under section 88 would at once place that lien upon record. That, it seems to me, would be his duty. I think a great deal of misapprehension exists as to the operation of this clause and the benefits which flow from it.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: I regard the remarks of my honourable friend as most excellent special pleading in behalf of the banks. If the banks were receiving no consideration for the money, it would be correct. The banks are actuated by the same motives as any other commercial institution in Canada. They are handing their money out for the purpose of being able to pay from 10 to 34 per cent interest to their stockholders—and all strength to them; but they are not the philanthropic institutions which they have been represented to be. Take the case cited by the honourable gentleman. He says that if a quantity of raw material is sold to a manufacturer it cannot be traced. I might sell a million feet of lumber to a furniture dealer or a contractor, and it is quite evident to any person that if it were sold on terms of 30 days it could very easily be traced. It is also quite reasonable to think that the man who sold the lumber had just as much right to receive his pay in the case of collapse as the banker who advanced the money at 6 or 7 or 8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The observations of the leader of the Opposition are very correct but I think he omitted one circumstance—that is, the kind of warehouse. If a bank advanced money upon certain goods, those goods ought to be contained in a warehouse of which the person who received the money was not the custodian. In many cases, I suppose, the goods are in the custody of the merchant or manufacturer in his own warehouse, and those who advanced to him the money or sold him goods do not know what are the goods of the manufacturer and what are the goods of the bank. Originally when the banks advanced money upon warehouse security the goods were placed in public warehouses under the control of other parties; but afterwards the Bank Act was enlarged and the receiver of an advance could store the goods in his own warehouse. This provided less security to the Bank, because some of the goods might be taken away. It is in the interest of those who sell the goods that the goods which the bank holds should be in the custody of someone other than the owner of the warehouse or the receiver of the money.

The proposed amendment of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster was agreed to on division: yeas, 17; nays, 7.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

Section 88, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 88A—notice of intention to give security; to be registered:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The last subsection, 7, notes the time at which this section shall come into force, it being the first day of August, 1923. That will have to be borne in mind when we come to section 160; otherwise there would be a confusion in dates. I mention that now just so that it may be kept in mind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So section 160 would need to be amended.

Section 88A was agreed to.

Sections 89 and 90 were agreed to.

On section 91—interest at 7 per cent may be charged:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is an addition to which I would ask the attention of the House. The section reads as follows:

> The bank may stipulate for, take, reserve or exact any rate of interest or discount not exceeding seven per cent per annum and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.

The added words are:

> The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note.

I fail to see why that should be made a stipulation, and I move that those words be stricken out.

Hon. Mr. L'ESPERANCE: What is the objection to them?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That leaves the matter entirely between the borrower and the lender. Why is it necessary, or to what good purpose would it tend, to put on the face of every note discounted and every draft issued, for customers or non-customers of the bank, the exact rate of interest. There would then be really no privity of contract between the lender and the borrower. It does not seem to me that it is wise or advantageous that what the borrower pays and the bank charges should be made known to others, who are neither customers of the bank nor persons interested in the transaction, and it would certainly cause much inconvenience.

Hon. Mr TURRIFF: I think those words are very necessary. The bank always knows what interest it is going to collect, but if the figures are not mentioned the borrower in many cases does not know whether he is paying 7 per cent, 8 per cent or 10 per cent. And the banks should not be allowed to charge 10 per cent. They have advantages enough, and I would not like to see those words taken out.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There is, I think, an even stronger reason. It is a matter of contract. The rate may be under 7 per cent, and the borrower would have no evidence that the rate is less than 7 unless it were stated on the note.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: He can ask the question, surely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But there is the evidence of his contract, showing that he has borrowed at less than the maximum legal rate that the bank might exact. Surely he is entitled to have it stated on the note, that he is to pay a rate less than the maximum legal rate. That is the only written evidence he has, and in the absence of such evidence, if he died, his estate might not be in a position to show that the rate of interest payable was less than 7 per cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If he discounted the note they would.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is in order to protect the borrower that these words are added.

Hon. Mr. TODD: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government a question. The clause says:

> The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note.

Does that mean that when the note is drawn, and before it is signed, the rate of interest or discount must appear?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I should think so.

Hon. Mr. TODD: I think that a proportion of the paper that is discounted is the customer's paper. I give John Jones my note for $1,000, payable possibly in three months. I do not put any rate of discount on that, for I do not know what the rate is. I do not see how the bank can put it on. It cannot very well do so after the note is signed. I do not see how this provision is workable.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: But the bank will take a note from you with your customer's paper attached to it as collateral.

Hon. Mr. TODD: They do not do that in our part of the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not necessarily. The bank may take your endorsement.

Hon. Mr. TODD: How is the rate of discount to be put on that note by the party who gets it discounted? The note has been signed. It is a completed document. I do not see how that provision would work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will be noticed that—

> The Bank may stipulate for, take, reserve or exact any rate of interest or discount not exceeding seven per cent per annum and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank. The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note.

We know that it happens many times every day that a client comes into a bank with a customer's note at three months, no interest being mentioned on the document, and asks the bank to discount it. The bank says, "Well, we will charge you"—so much. The interest may vary, for good and valid reasons. The bank must then mark on that document the rate of interest. That paper, when it eventually returns to the customer, will show him the sort of transaction that has been made between his creditor and the bank, with the rate of interest. I do not see that that is good business. It invades the privacy of the affairs of that client who must do his own financing with the notes which he receives in payment from various customers. His own private financing is revealed to his customers. There may be special conditions which would determine the bank to fix and the client to accept a higher rate. This information will go out and may tend to start gossip as to the reason why the bank's client is paying a higher rate of interest than is ordinarily charged. I do not see any special reason for that. If some paramount reason is advanced as to why it should be done I will waive it; but I am inclined to favour the striking out of that amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, it strikes me that the all-important consideration should be, what is the maximum rate of interest that the bank may charge? That is fixed at 7 per cent. That gives us a certain degree of comfort.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Oh, but the banks can get around that. You know they can.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is a reasonable rate of interest. I am not going to assume that the banks will do anything illegal and have it undone by the courts. However, the maximum rate is fixed at 7 per cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, the maximum rate that is recoverable.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. Now, it seems to me that this is entrenching upon the rights of private contracts to a degree that we have not imposed in any form of legislation that we have placed upon the Statute Book. It is going to operate more or less as a detriment to the bank's customer who has excellent credit, on account of the invidious distinction which may be drawn between the rate of interest which he may secure on account of the credit behind him, and the higher rate of interest which may be imposed upon a more doubtful customer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On a more risky document.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: To elaborate a little further upon the illustration advanced by my honourable friend the leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), here is a wholesale merchant whose credit is the highest in the community. Owing not only to the very high credit which he enjoys, but also to the assets which he has behind him, he may arrange with the bank for an extremly favourable rate or interest for his customer's paper. In fact, he might take the position: "Were it not for the reasonable rate of interest that I obtain from the bank, I would not do business; I would carry the customer's paper in my own account. The bank is therefore called upon to change the note which he has received from his customer—to place upon its face something which was not orginally part of the contract. The bank is compelled to impose upon the contract a condition, so as to speak, namely, to mention the rate of interest which it is charging the wholesale merchant. It may be 6 per cent. He may have taken the note at 8 per cent, considering that his risk in selling goods to that particular customer and taking his note made it advisable for him to charge his customer for the money which he has permitted him to have a higher rate of interest than that at which the wholesale merchant could secure money from the bank. That is a perfectly legitimate transaction.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: May I ask my honourable friend a question? Could not the wholesale merchant obviate all difficulties whatever? I quite agree he would be justified in taking 7 or 8 per cent from a customer and getting money himself for six per cent, but all that could be obviated, as is done in thousands of cases, by the merchant giving his own note and attaching the other as collateral.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Yes. I know of it being done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend were familiar with most of the transactions, he would know that a line of discount is given to a merchant, and he discounts his customer's paper and endorses the note, or he gives a guarante, as the case may be. The customer's note may be at 8 per cent, and when it is returned to him paid he ascertains that the money was advanced by the banker to the wholesaler or manufacturer at say 6 per cent. That is a disclosure. I do not call it a disclosure in any sense of which the wholesaler may be ashamed, but it creates a greater or less sense of dissatisfaction on the part of the customer that the wholesale dealer has made perhaps 1 or 2 per cent out of him in the transaction, while the customer could not get money elsewhere at less than 8 per cent. This provision therefore seems to me to entrench upon the law of contract to an undesirable degree, and in view of the fact that the maximum rate has been fixed at 7 per cent, I do not think any injustice would follow by the rate of interest not appearing upon the face of the note.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: As I understand it, the fixing of the rate at 7 per cent does not mean for one moment that the bank will not charge more than 7 per cent. It means that they will charge what they like, but in the event of a law-suit for recovery they may collect only 7 per cent. That is what it means.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it is more than that, as my honourable friend will see if he will read the section.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I agree with what my honourable friend has said; but if there is anything detrimental to the wholesaler about it, he and the bank can obviate all the difficulty. The bank can take the wholesaler's note, in which everything is made plain, and the customer will not see anything at all about the nature of the transaction.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Business is not transacted in that way.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The suggestion of the honourable gentleman is not workable, for the reason that a manufacturer or a wholesale merchant does not discount his own notes, as it would appear as a liability in his balance cheet. He discounts the notes of his customers, and no liability appears on his part, except perhaps an indirect liability only. If the transaction were to be carried on as the honourable gentleman suggests, the notes would appear in the merchant's balance sheet and he would be placed in a very bad light, for he would always appear as being liable to the bank for perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars, whereas he did not owe the bank a cent. Very often the money is owed to the merchant by his own customers.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: But he is liable indirectly.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We must take business as it is carried on; and it is not by way of discounting the notes of the bank's customer, but of discounting the notes of the bank's customer's client, the notes being endorsed by the customer of the bank, so that the bank may have the security of both parties. Now, I call attention to this, that the rate of interest depends not only upon the security of the customer of the bank, but also and very largely upon the current account he keeps with the bank. For instance, some merchants are able to command a rate of 5½ or 6 per cent interest, while others are charged 7 per cent, because the former has an understanding with the bank that he will keep in his current account the sum of say $30,000 at all times, and this enables the bank to reduce the rate of interest very much. Now, take the case of A and B, who are customers of the same bank. B is a client of A, and A discounts B's note. If the rate of interest had to be stated on the note it would bring to B the knowledge that A was getting discount at the rate say of 5 per cent, while B was being charged 7 per cent, and B would complain to the bank about the difference in the rate. The bank would be obliged to give such and such reasons, which would create discontent unnecessarily, and interfere very seriously with the banking business, and with the business of the customers themselves.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Eevery honourable gentleman seems to use the word "wholesale," but I judge that this section applies to all commercial transactions, even to a very small note. Customs may be different in different places, but I know that, in the city of Winnipeg, if I take a note for $1,000 to one of the leading and strongest banks of Canada and ask them to discount it and give me the cash, they will ask me to give my own note, and they will attach the other note to mine as security. I have had that experience. I want to know whether the manager of that important bank had a right to do that, or whether he should have discounted the note which I presented.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He would do either.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: No, he would not do either.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would depend on the character of the account he was carrying in the bank.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: But he was quite willing to take my note. The point is whether a bank is supposed to discount the notes that I take to it, or not. In Winnipeg they do not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Both those methods are being adopted.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: I venture to say that 99 out of 100 men have no experience in banking transactions, and the ordinary man reading this section would understand that a bank could not collect more than 7 per cent. I think it should read that the bank should not draw more than 7 per cent. Why not make it definite and clear what amount the bank can charge? Under this section we do not really know what transaction goes on between the borrower and the lender, but in a section of this kind I think the maximum rate of interest should be arrived at and stated clearly. I wish to state that we want to refer back to this section later on.

The amendment of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster was agreed to, and section 91 as amended was agreed to.

Sections 92, 93 and 94 were agreed to.

On section 95—deposits may be received from persons unable to contract; deposits limited to $2,000:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What does this mean —limiting the deposit to $2,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is to allow a married woman to deposit.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does this refer to savings banks?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, it refers to commercial banks. The amount which a commercial bank may receive under these conditions is raised from $500 to $2,000.

Sections 95, 96 and 97 were agreed to.

On section 98—Dominion Government cheques to be paid at par:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

The amendment to this section, in effect, provides that anyone who is paying money by cheque to the Government need not add the exchange. His cheque in favour of the Government will not be subject to deduction for exchange in any part of Canada.

Section 98 was agreed to.

On section 99—bank may sell assets to another bank; consent of Minister:

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I move to strike out in subsection 2 the words "the Minister, in writing," and substitute therefor the words, "Parliament has consented."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And when Parliament would be specially called upon to meet in order to give consent the bank would be closed.

Hon. Mr. TURRIF: That may be, but I venture the assertion that if the law during the last 15 years had provided that two banks had to receive the consent of Parliament instead of the consent of the Minister in order to amalgamate, it would have been very much to the advantage of the people of Canada. I think my honourable friend the leader of the Government is wrong when he thinks that a great deal of suffering or harm might result if the consent of Parliament had been waited for, possibly 6 months or well on to a year. I presume he has in mind the late lamentable affair that occurred when the Merchants Bank failed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And three or four others.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: They sold out their assets, and there is a very strong opinion throughout the country that it would have been better not only for the shareholders of the Merchants Bank, but for everybody concerned, if that bank had not been wound up; and if it had been necessary to wait until Parliament met, other and more satisfactory arrangements might have been made.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does my honourable friend think that the Merchants Bank could have been kept open, and that the run would not have been made upon it?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I certainly think that, when it had a capital of many million dollars absolutely intact, and part of its reserve remained, it could have kept on as a going concern, and would have been in operation to-day, although it might have had to curtail business somewhat.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Where did my honourable friend get his information that the capital was unimpaired, and likewise a portion of the rest account?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I saw the statement of the bank, that its losses were less than its reserve so that part of the reserve still remained intact for carrying on the business.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And where was its capital? More than its capital was invested in real estate.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What would you say to that? The real estate represented that.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That shows that the Bank Act in regard to the inspection of banks is in very great need of much more drastic treatment than it is receiving at present, if my honourable friend the leader of the Government is correct, and I have no doubt he is; and that is why I think Parliament would have done well if it had put off for another year this revision of the Bank Act. I am not going into that, but I still believe amalgamation of two banks should not take place until Parliament consents. Look at the amalgamations that have taken place. To-day we have not much more than half the number of banks we had 20 years ago. Many of them have amalgamated, and one bank has absorbed three or four others that were in just as good standing as itself. When the Bank of Ottawa sold out to the Bank of Nova Scotia no one would suggest it was in bad condition or poor circumstances; at least nobody seemed to know it if it was, and I do not believe it was. I think it would be very much in the interest of the people of Canada if banks had to give notice of amalgamation and had to apply to Parliament for the right to do so.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Does the honourable gentleman realize that if his amendment carries no bank can sell any piece of property it owns without coming to Parliament for permission?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My amendment has nothing at all to do with the selling of a town lot.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I would feel like supporting the amendment if my honourable friend would amend it to read "Governor in Council" instead of "Parliament."

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It is just the same as Governor in Council now.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No, there is a very great difference. Under the present law the Minister of Finance bears the entire responsibility for action, and I do not think he should be saddled with that, but that it should be borne by the Governor in Council. I have reason from experience for feeling that way.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Well, make the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I had not a cent's interest in the amalgamation of the Merchants Bank or with the Bank of Montreal, but my judgment is that if they had had to wait for Parliament the shareholders would have lost the whole of their capital, and the value of their shares, for which they got par in stock of the Bank of Montreal, while that bank was getting the good-will of the Merchants Bank; and therefore they got all that they could expect to get. The shareholders were not the only parties interested, but the people at large were concerned, as the closing of the bank would have exposed the country to a great crisis. from which the whole commercial community would have suffered immensely. The honourable gentleman and those who criticize the transaction are parties who were not interested. Those mainly interested were shareholders in the Merchants Bank, and, as the sale could not be made without their consent, they had to pass upon the transaction. Parliament could not go into the details of the assets of two banks, or of any bank, and would not do so, and the reference to Parliament would involve an exposure of the country to a crisis at any moment.

I would be against the proposition to refer the matter to the Governor in Council, because I think we have the assurance of the Finance Minister that the policy of his Department and of the Government is not to permit any amalgamation between banks unless the public interest demands it. We should be content with that assurance. When the matter of amalgamation is broached to the Finance Minister, and he is approached in an advisory capacity, I think he should not have to consult his colleagues, and thus run the risk of the application being made public, thus possibly provoking a commercial crisis. I think we have been fortunate in having had for many years past Governments and Finance Ministers who deserved the confidence of the country, and we should hope this state of affairs would continue, and we should leave the matter as it is.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Would not the Merchants Bank be in as good a position to carry on if the directors had not been stampeded as the Union Bank is at the present time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that very few men, and only those with very intimate knowledge of the situation of a bank, would be able to answer that question. In any two given cases, while the figures might appear alike, the fundamental situation might absolutely differ. My honourable friend the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) suggests the substitution of the Governor in Council for the Finance Minister, but I draw his attention to section 102, where the consent of the Governor in Council is necessary before the agreement can be effective; so my honourable friend will notice that the Minister of Finance must carry his colleagues with him in such a matter.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Then what becomes of the argument of my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique)?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The argument remains complete, because it is the Minister of Finance who is approached, and who must decide, with his staff of experts, who must sometimes make quick decision in order to save a situation. No doubt he will seek advice from some members of the Cabinet, in order to feel secure in the sanction of his action when the time comes to submit the whole matter to Council; but at the initiation the consent for bringing the two institutions together to work out an agreement is given by the Minister of Finance, and I think it rests in the proper hands.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Turriff was negatived, and section 99 was agreed to without amendment.

Section 100 was agreed to.

On section 101—agreement of sale to be submitted to selling shareholders, etc.:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Sections 101, 102 and 103:

The effect of the amendments to these sections, which have to do with the purchase of the assets of one bank by another bank, is to make clear that the shareholders of the purchasing bank as well as the shareholders of the selling bank must approve of the agreement of sale and purchase. The amendments are in accord with what has been the practice under these sections.

Section 101 was agreed to.

Sections 102 to 111, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 112—monthly returns:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

In the first subsection the time within which a bank must send its monthly return to the Minister is enlarged from twenty days to twenty-eight days after the first of the month. This was in order to make sure that the banks might receive from remote branches all returns and thus have a more accurate return.

Section 112, subsection 4 and 5.

Enlarge the Minister's powers in calling for special returns from the banks.

Section 112 was agreed to.

On section 113—return accompanied by declaration, etc.:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Subsection 8 of this section should be stricken out. Owing to the provision for an appropriation account having been stricken out in the former part of the Bill before it came from the Commons, this is meaningless.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is nothing to connect this with.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no such thing as an appropriation account.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is right. My attention had been drawn to it.

Section 113, amended as proposed, was agreed to.

Sections 114 to 135, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 135—unauthorized issue of notes for circulation:

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government or some other bank directors a question. I want a little explanation of that word "unauthorized." What I have to say does not relate directly to this clause, but perhaps I may be permitted to ask the question. In the statement made by Mr. Allan, President of the Union Bank, in accounting for the difficulties of the bank, he referred to the transfer of some $4,500,000 from the reserve, and said:

> And to this was added a substantial loss through the unauthorized transactions in sterling exchange in the London office.

What does the word "unauthorized" mean?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He was alluding to the action of the manager of the branch in London, who, without authority from his Board, had dealt in certain foreign exchange.

Hon. Mr. L'ESPERANCE: Is there not a penalty for that?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Will this correct that condition?

Hon. Mr DANDURAND: When the manager is far removed from the head office, it is very difficult to surround his dealings with such safeguards as will prevent him doing things that would be deserving of condemnation. Of course, it is a matter of regulation between the head office and the outside management.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Surely, honourable gentlemen, that is hardly an explanation of what has taken place in London. If a manager can without authority make investments which will practically ruin a great bank like the Union Bank and get away with a sum of $4,000,000, there should be some effort made to prevent that kind of conduct. If the manager of almost any other company in Canada were to violate his trust as apparently some of the managers of the Union Bank have been doing, they would be put in the penitentiary; but apparently bank managers are immune. They can do anything they like: the funds of the bank can be dissipated; investments can be made in foreign exchange without authority.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: No, no.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is what they have done.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If a loss is made, it is "without authority;" if money is made, it is all right.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The measure before the House is one of the most important that has come before it during the last ten years, and I fear very much that the public interests are not being safeguarded in this Bill. The leader of the Government practically admits that it does not make provision to protect the public against a repetition of what has taken place in the Union Bank affairs. Surely there should be something done to make that impossible. You cannot make men honest by legislation, but you can do something to punish them. It is only quibbling to speak of what they have done as a lack of judgment or faulty judgment, because these men have invested money belonging to the public without authority.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I have not yet quite all the information I wish to get. I understand now what is meant by "unauthorized." Another point that I would like to have cleared up is this. The annual meeting of the Union Bank was held in January, I think. The whole transaction in connection with the loss of that bank must have been known to the directors at that meeting of the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It was. They changed it.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: No, they did not change it. The manager in London has been changed, and the general manager of the Union Bank had also been changed before the meeting of the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: They are the fellows that caused the trouble.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: At the Directors' meeting the President gave his annual announcement, and everything was fine. It must be inferred that the President and the Directors knew the situation at that time.

Why are matters in connection with our big financial institutions allowed to go on in that way? It seems to me that bank officers should be compelled to be more careful in making their reports at their annual meetings. There is no doubt that the situation was known, because the Manager in London had been changed—dismissed, if you like; so had the General Manager in Canada. New appointments had been made. Yet the capital account, reserve fund, rest account and all were represented to the shareholders as being unimpaired. I think this is an excellent opportunity to obtain the desired information, for we have present with us several directors and presidents. The laity, who know so very little about these matters, would like to have some information.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to know in connection with this matter, if there is one rule for subordinate bank managers and another for the men who have gone up step by step and attained to one of the superior positions in the bank. In another place a quite serious charge was made against the banks, so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned. A man of prominence made the statement that we had some years ago about 15 branches of banks who were conversant with our financial and commercial conditions and were able to give direct evidence as to whether a transaction should be authorized or not; but to-day, on account of amalgamations, there are only seven altogether, and men are sent down from Ontario or some other province to the Maritime Provinces who know nothing about our conditions and must refer everything to Montreal or Toronto, where the head offices are located. That is a great handicap on business in the Maritime Provinces. There are in the Maritime Provinces men as bright as can be found anywhere. In fact, the general managers come from the Maritime Provinces. The Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia was taken the other day from a little village in my own Province of Prince Edward Island. I met in New York last year some bank managers who had come from the Maritime Provinces. You will find them all over.

If brakes are kept on bank managers in the Maritime Provinces in such a way as to hold up business, why should not similar safeguards be imposed upon a man in London who, as this debacle of the Union Bank shows, had gone into debt in foreign exchange without any authority? Why could there not be in this Bill some provision which would require him to obtain authorization to have a free hand to go out and buy foreign exchange of any kind, before he could dabble in what is, after all, speculation? You have experts at your right hand, honourable Sir, and we have the secretary of the Bankers' Association sitting outside the bar. I would like to hear some explanation as to why unauthorized conditions can obtain in one place, in higher positions in the bank, while in another place a handicap is imposed on banking conditions and on the commercial conditions in the localities where the banks maintain their branches.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I hope the honourable leader will take these questions in order. Mine comes before these of the honourable gentleman from Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: All right. Mine can be taken next.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, the banking system is carried out by human beings.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: We know that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Banks are carried on by partners called shareholders, who put in their money and select their management.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Very little have they to say in it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They select their board of directors, and they should be all the more intent upon selecting the best men inasmuch as they must always bear in mind that a double liability rests upon their shoulders. It may be said that the majority rules and that if from 40 to 50 per cent of the stock is in the hands of a limited number of persons they will have their way at the annual meeting, and there is a possibility of 49 per cent being denied any considerable influence in the action taken. Yet this is an institution wherein the owners must bear the full responsibility, and they are interested in good management, and presumably select the best men available among the shareholders. To my mind the management is nine-tenths of the whole.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In anything.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Management, with the safeguard of a duly-constituted board closely superintending all the operations. In the case of the Union Bank I am under the impression that there was laxity in the supervision of the operations, owing to the fact that the board was composed of men belonging to distant parts of the country. The bank had its principal seat of business in the city of Quebec, but transferred its head office to Winnipeg. Looking at the list of directors, I find that on the board there are representatives of the old group in Quebec. There are representatives from outside.

I believe that the board should be on the spot to superintend the work of the management and to receive a statement from the manager weekly.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I do not wish to interrupt my honourable friend, but what about the Merchants Bank. Were not the directors near enough to the spot?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may discuss that point later. But I am now talking of the Union Bank.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That is easier.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am convinced that the Union Bank had not at its head office the board of directors, who should direct operations.

The Union Bank has branches abroad. It has one in New York and one in London. We are told that at a certain time losses were incurred to a considerable extent by the London manager, who dealt in foreign exchange. I observed the suggestion of my honourable friend that the President attributed the losses to unwise speculation in foreign exchange. If that is true, there is a duty devolving upon the management of that bank, namely, to bring to book the manager in London. He had a contract with the bank. He had certain directions, or he had not.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There was nothing criminal about it, though.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will be for the directors and shareholders of the Union bank to decide in what way they should penalize the person who brought about a large part of the losses that we are now examining. We do not know the amount. The responsibility will rest on the Management to satisfy their shareholders that their official in London is solely responsible, and that they have no responsibility whatever. We cannot go further.

Reference was made during the debate in another place to the large profits of the banks and their extraordinary prosperity, and the answer given was that an accumulated reserve is a good thing and is essential. The operation in London or elsewhere, by which the Union Bank has lost four and a quarter millions establishes the fact that, if there are prosperous times, if there are large gains, there are losses also. The banking institutions and the Bank Act have stood the test in this instance, for there is still 25 per cent of profits in the reserve of the Union Bank. They have transferred $4,250,000 to contingent account. The amount set aside may be excessive; it may prove to be a larger amount than is needed; but they want to be conservative. I do not think that the accident which befell the Union Bank is an argument against our banking system, our banking institutions, or the Bank Act.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Is it not putting it pretty mildly to call that an accident?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would not call it otherwise before I had an opportunity of looking into it myself or had a report regarding it.

Let us come now to the Merchants Bank. Could the Merchants Bank have continued to carry on or not?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I asked my honourable friend that question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is for the owners of the institution to say—

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —not for us. What business have we to look into that question?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: We have.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg leave to differ with my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: They got panicky.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Who suffers? The shareholders, that is, the owners—no one else. They preferred to link up with the Bank of Montreal. It may be said on the part of some shareholders that they would have preferred to carry on by getting support, if support was needed, elsewhere; but the wiser men are probably those who knew most about the matter. Responsibility for the action taken is a matter for discussion between the shareholders and the board of directors.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Just a question at this juncture. Under certain circumstances, where a bank is solvent, does not the Bankers' Association, which represents all the banks, come to the rescue?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Undoubtedly the banks are inclined to help each other. My honourable friend will recognize that the banks are interested in maintaining a healthy condition of the whole system, and the Bank of Montreal did for the Merchants Bank what other banks would probably have been disposed to do.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In a spirit of philanthropy?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But why this outcry against the sale of the Merchants Bank to the Bank of Montreal? It is the business of the owner, the shareholders. Of coursre, the Treasury Board may have to pass upon the transfer and consider whether or not it is in the interest of the country that the banking institutions should not diminish in number, but as many as possible should be maintained; but when a crisis occurs and the bank that is assailed is threatened with the necessity of closing its doors, it is for the owners of the institution to do what is possible in order that no interest may suffer. We have those two instances, the Merchants Bank and the Union Bank, which in my opinion establish the solidarity of our banking system. There has been no loss to anybody.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Oh, yes; to the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There were big losses in the Merchants Bank. Do not say there has been no loss.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Turriff) may have been a shareholder, but nobody forced him to buy Union Bank stock.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: Was a general meeting of the shareholders of the Merchants' Bank called before the amalgamation?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No. A meeting of the shareholders was called to ratify it; that was all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The shareholders had to pass upon it.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Yes

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And they voted, I think, unanimously to ratify the agreement.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: There was not a general meeting called. I know of a large number of shareholders who were never notified of the amalgamation until it was all settled.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It was all settled before they had any say.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there are regulations governing this matter and a notice was sent to the last post office address of every shareholder. The shareholder used to receive his dividend cheque pretty regularly, and he was interested in giving his latest address, and the notices to the shareholders went in the same way as the preceding dividend cheques.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Why was not the General Manager, Mr. Macarow, put into the penitentiary? Why was nothing done to him?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He was brought before the courts and was freed.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: There it goes again.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would my honourable friend ask Parliament to institute a special tribunal, or turn this Parliament into a High Court of Justice, to try those people? We have the courts of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: No. but I think that when we are amending this Act we should endeavour to fix some sort of penalty upon the Managers. My information is that it was the fault of the Manager.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Certainly it was. There is no doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I am referring to that simply as an instance. When we are revising the Bank Act, is there no way that can be suggested whereby we may prevent a transaction such as that which Mr. Macarow seems to have perpetrated on the Merchants' Bank? Is there no way to deal with him and punish him for a transaction of that kind?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will answer my honourable friend by facts. The Department of Finance sent a high official of the Department to lay a complaint against him before the criminal courts. So the Department represented that feeling that someone ought to be punished and that light should be thrown upon the transaction. There were two long trials; the President and the General Manager were put on trial, and they were freed. But is not my honourable friend surprised, as I am, at the absolute inactivity of that body of shareholders whose money has been lost? By the increase in value of the Bank of Montreal stock they may recover part of their losses. But if the Management was as bad as—

Hon. Mr. WATSON: As we know it was.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —as we have felt it was—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: As we know it was.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —There could be a suit to recover at civil law, before the courts, for gross mismanagement. Yet that body of shareholders, among whom there must surely be business men, remained apparently helpless, notwithstanding that all the courts of the country were open to them. The shareholders could have prosecuted the wrongdoers before the criminal courts, had they so desired.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Perhaps the wrongdoer was not worth anything.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or they could have sued for damages in the civil courts to recover the losses. We have heard of not one suit.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What would be the good of a verdict for damages if the defendant was worth nothing and all his property was out of his hands?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My honourable friend asks, why do not the shareholders act in trying to bring those men who wrecked the Merchants Bank to time. Why does not the Government act?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It did.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I beg the honourable gentleman's pardon. Efforts were made in the House of Commons to have those men brought before the Banking and Commerce Committee within the last two weeks. What was the objection? It was felt throughout the country that the management of that bank was to blame. Charges were made against them and the courts dismissed the charges, and allowed these men to go free who had squandered millions of money of the shareholders by blind gambling, by stock speculation. The Government was asked to bring these bank officers before the Banking and Commerce Committee, presided over by a prominent member of the House of Commons, with the Minister of Finance present all the time. The Government was asked to bring those men before the Committee in order that Parliament might find out something as to the manner in which the losses were brought about.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: To find out what?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: To find out how that money was all lost, and whose fault it was, and to bring the blame home. The court said they were not guilty at all—that they could squander $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 in gambling, and they could not be held responsible. My honourable friend a moment ago said: "What could we do? It is a matter for the shareholders." But I claim that it is more than a matter for the shareholders. The banking institutions of Canada are on a different footing from any other body of business men in the country; they have practically the whole monopoly of the deposits of you and me and everybody else from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And the widows are shareholders largely.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Those institutions get that money for 2½ per cent. My honourable friend says no, but a very prominent bank manager told me some years ago that while the banks paid 3 per cent for money put into saving accounts it only averaged 2½ per cent, because intrest was not reckoned on amounts put in on the 3rd or 4th of a month, or if the money was taken out on the 25th or 26th of a month no interest was paid for that month. Then we all know that very few customers get interest on current account, though the banks lend that money out at 6 per cent and 7 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And 9 and 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: And in some places in the West at as high as 10 per cent. They get from one to two and three hundred per cent on the money they do loan out. Then, when a bank does what the Merchants Bank did, and as the Union Bank has evidently done by bad management, surely somebody should be brought to book; surely we should be given an option of having those men before the Banking and Commerce Committee in order to see if we could not find out how this disaster was brought about, and how it could be guarded against in the future.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They were examined by the very best lawyers.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would like to ask my honourable friend if the Government is going to take any action to look into the question of the Union Bank, which is in exactly the same position as if that $3,500,000 or $4,000,000 had been sufficient to close its doors and put it in the same position as the Merchants Bank. Surely in the circumstances it is the duty of the Government to hold an investigation. The President says they lost money through the manager without authority dealing in exchange. That may be just camouflage; there may have been some money lost there, but we do not know.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We do not know the amount.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That is just it; we do not know the amount. A great deal of money may have been lost by various banks throughout the country, and it seems to me there ought to be some action taken to investigate that bank's affairs and find out. When I was in Winnipeg six or seven weeks ago I was told by different men that the Union Bank was shaky, and that it was quite on the cards that they would lose their money, and I was advised to sell short on Union Bank stock, that the bank was going down, that it was in bad shape.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You cannot sell bank stock short, can you?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I never sold any short, or sold any long, so I do not know about that. It seems to me that when we put the banks in such a favourable position, they ought to be held to account, like any other joint stock company; and I think it is up to the Government to look into this Union Bank business, not with the hope of remedying it, as I suppose the money is gone, but in order to guard against it in the future. That is why I say the Government has not taken a wise course in extending this Bank Act for 10 years; it would have been wiser to have laid it over and found out just how we could improve the Act next year.

The point I want to make is this. Here is a case where the President and General Manager and Board of Directors of the Union Bank were sitting in their headquarters in Winnipeg, and knew what loss had been made last January or February; yet they allowed matters to go on until the revision of the Bank Act was through the Committee and in the House of Commons, before they made the fact public. Now, should not the president of the Bank be held responsible? There was nothing to hinder innocent people from buying stock in the Bank, though the manager and directors knew that it was not solvent, or very near to insolvency. There ought to be some change made in the Bank Act to provide definite punishment for bank managers who would continue doing business and deceiving the public under such circumstances.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Do not forget to secure an answer to your question as to why Macarow and Allan were not brought before the Committee.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I think the honourable leader will answer that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I am surprised that a gentleman who has such strong common sense would suggest that those men, who have been on trial before the courts, should have been brought before Parliament. The evidence has been taken in writing, and published for months in all the newspapers of the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They have had four trials.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Everybody but the jury knew they were guilty.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Four trials were conducted by leading lawyers engaged by the Government, and the shareholders were entitled also to be represented at those investigations; so that the whole history has been published from one end of the country to the other in the press, and I ask the honourable gentleman what additional information he would have asked for if those two gentlemen, Mr. Macarow and Sir Montagu Allan, were brought before the Banking Committee.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I look on my honourable friend as one of the first lawyers in Canada, and I would ask him if he would give me his opinion as to whether Mr. Macarow of the Merchants' Bank was guilty of wrongdoing or not.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You will not get that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Mr. Macarow has been found not guilty before the court, and by a judge in whom I have full confidence, and therefore I would not put my judgment against that of the judge. If the honourable gentleman is logical in his opinion of banking business, he should invest in bank shares, which are open to be bought by every person in the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Short or long.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Short or long, and if my honourable friend thinks banks have such a fine monopoly that they can coin money as they like, surely he should invest in bank shares. What is the situation? It is this, that it is recognized not only in this country but in the United States and in England that we have one of the best systems in the world, and the only criticisms we hear are from people who, as a rule, have not made a study of the question, and who have not sufficient faith in what they say to invest in bank shares. If my honourable friend would invest in bank shares, and not content himself with selling short, he would appreciate better the position and appreciate the rules which should govern banking institutions.

As far as the management is concerned, as was very properly stated, the parties mainly interested are shareholders. They are represented by Boards of directors in whom they are supposed to have confidence. The board of directors is obliged to make returns to the Finance Minister every month, going into all possible particulars, every item in detail, and that method is improved by this new Act, for now each bank is obliged to submit to an audit of two different auditors, one of whom has to be changed every two years, I think. Moreover, the Minister is given power, whenever he likes to have any additional information, to send any of his officers or employees of the Department to examine into the affairs of the bank. What else can you suggest that would improve that situation?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Some of the leaders of the Government are bank directors, and I take strong exception to the statement made by them that it is no affair of the people of Canada how these banks carry on.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You said it was the business of the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When it comes to amalgamating, when it comes to a situation such as the Merchants Bank was in, to turn around and suggest amalgamation to a stronger institution.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The honourable gentleman, only a moment ago, speaking about the Union Bank, said that this was a matter for the shareholders. But if a bank makes an application to the Government for a charter, and it gathers up money from the Canadian people from coast to coast, large sums of it, and takes it into foreign countries and speculates with it and loses it, is that not the business of the people of this country?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And their representatives in Parliament?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It is said the Union Bank lost something like $4,250,000. How much money was drawn from Canada to speculate on this foreign exchange? If they lost that amount, I venture to say they may have had $20,000,000 invested, because they could not lose that amount of money on an investment simply of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. Where did that money belong? Was it not the money of the people of Canada? And was not that money intended for the use of the people of Canada, under the system of banking we have here? The people out West are demanding money to assist them in their efforts in building up that country, and to a great extent their application is useless, because the banks will not give them any money. We know that when the Canadian wheat harvest comes on it draws to the utmost limit on every bank in Canada, and the banks have to go to the Government to get further issues; yet they think nothing of taking a large sum into a foreign country, speculating with it, gambling with it, and losing it. I say that is the business of the people of this country; it is the business of every Canadian citizen, because the banks derive all the advantages they have from the people of Canada, and that system is engrafted on the people, and is for the benefit of the people, and not for the benefit of those who take it out of the country and lose it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I speak subject to correction, but I think if the honourable gentleman consults the returns he will find that there is a larger amount of foreign money deposited with Canadian banks than there are advances made to foreigners in foreign countries, so that instead of being crippled by foreign business, as far as capital is concerned, this country derives the benefit of a larger amount of capital at the disposal of our banks.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I gathered from the statement of the honourable gentleman that it was purely the business of the shareholders, and not the business of the people.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend must notice, when he goes through this Act, that it is very much the business of the country at large, since we are surrounding this institution with all kinds of obligations and safeguards. I draw his attention also to the fact that his statement is a very wide and broad one, which, if taken without any conditions, would create suspicion and fear in the minds of the people of Canada. My honourable friend draws upon his imagination to say that $4,250,000 was lost in London on foreign exchange, and must have represented a speculation of $20,000,000. I may tell him that no one kows what amount out of that sum of $4,250,000 was lost in foreign exchange. It is not stated by the bank that that sum was lost in foreign exchange. There was some loss in that direction. My honourable friend can see monthly the amount of money the Canadian banks have abroad, how much they lend and what they receive, and what they hold in deposits throughout the country. We are trying every ten years to add safeguards to this Bank Act. I remember that a few years ago the United States sent a delegation around the world, and when they returned one of the bright bankers of the United States, who, by the way is a Canadian, Mr. Forgan, of Chicago, said that all the members felt that one of the best and most solid systems, which offered the greatest guarantee to the public, was the banking systems of Canada. Now if there is anyone here who can suggest any improvement that will strengthen our Bank Act, let him rise and do so when these clauses are being examined.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If I had to do the drafting of this Act I would seriously consider the question whether banks, gathering up money as they do from every town, hamlet, and village of this Dominion, are justified in speculating in foreign countries. That is my whole point. If I said $20,000,000, I think I modified it by saying that if there was a loss of $4,250,000 on foreign exchange an immense amount of money must have been invested. We heard the other day not only of the Union Bank, but of other banks which had lost money in sugar, and we heard of banks losing money down in South America, and we hear of losses everywhere except in Canada. My opinion is strong that we should have some limitation put upon the banks investing their money in foreign countries while we need it so much in Canada.

At six o'clock the Committee took recess.

The Committee resumed at 8 o'clock.

Sections 137 to 146B, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 147—bank not making monthly returns:

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I see there is a penalty for not making returns; but is there a penalty for making false returns such as have been made by the Merchants Bank and the Union Bank?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Very much so.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: In another clause?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 147 was agreed to.

Sections 147A to 152, both inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 153—making false or deceptive statement in account or return:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: This is new, I perceive, but the word "knowingly" seems to destroy all the benefit that the section is likely to bring. All a man has to do is to be ignorant and not look into affairs and he goes scot free. There ought to be some provision by which he should know these things.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It is his duty to know.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is his duty to know, and therefore why should he escape on the technicality of the word "knowingly"?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Why not strike it out?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Move to strike it out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You would not accept a presidency then would you?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why not? What is the good of his making a statement if he can make it without knowledge? What is the good of the president's signature unless it has the bank's knowledge behind it. It is his business to know and I do not think the position of bank president with the emolument that it carries, would go long begging. I think you would get men to take it.

We have had two object lessons very recently before us. No man has greater pride in the stability of our banks than I have. I have never been ill-treated by the banks; I have always been treated kindly and courteously, and have no fault to find with them. It is the other way. At the same time, a bank is a trust repository where the savings of the people are deposited to be invested by the officers of the bank; and it is essentially our duty, it seems to me, to see that that trust is kept sacred and is guarded so that that the bank may not lose that money. There are two cases which are notorious because they were exploited in the public press; but there are cases which do not get into the public press at all, but which are spoken of on the outside—two very flourishing and very important banks that have made very heavy losses in different cases. I do not know whether what is said is true or not; but we do know that losses were made in the case of the Merchants Bank and the Union Bank. I would strike out that word "knowingly."

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Read the following subsection. That will cover it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If you strike out "knowingly" in the first subsection, you would not need the second subsection.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman will find that section 153 must be taken as a whole, and that it is a considerable improvement upon the old one.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Subsection 2 is old.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The first part of 153 is new.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But the second part is old, apparently.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, there is an addition:

Or any return which does not set forth the true financial position of the bank including all the information required by section 113 of this Act.

If my honourable friend will read that section, he will find that the Act has been considerably strengthened in that direction.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: "Knowingly" is a very dangerous word there.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It certainly is, and it is just a question of whether "knowingly" in the first part would not govern the second part. There is a disposition, you know, to favour men in high places: bank presidents get a lot of help from the courts.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Outside of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, in the Senate too.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What are you going to do with it?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I will test the Committee by moving to strike out the word "knowingly."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that:

Every president, vice president, director, auditor, general manager or other officer of the bank or trustee who negligently prepares, signs, approves or concurs in any account, statement, return, report or document respecting the affairs of the bank, containing any false or deceptive statement, or any return which does not set forth the true financial position of the bank including all the information required by section 113 of this Act, shall be guilty of an indictable offence, punishable, unless a greater punishment is in any case by law prescribed therefor, by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years.

So he would be held liable for all he could reasonably be expected to know.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No. "Negligently" is a somewhat peculiar word. "Negligently" is a word of degrees: there is slight negligence and gross negligence and other varieties of negligence. That gives a chance for a sympathetic jury or court to let a man go. If you strike out "knowingly" and "negligently" in both those cases, you have an absolute provision that the statement signed by the President is true and correct.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: He might be in Europe at the time.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes. Here we have a President, as I understand it, spending four years in Europe, and annually signing his reports and sending them in.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Did he not sign them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then, why was he prosecuted?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because he signed returns after he came home. He had been home for three or four months. He started examining into the conditions of the bank, and found that the management had not been up to his expectations.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And I thought he signed a return.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He signed one return and he produced a statement. He was tried on the statement of October. He then claimed that he had but a provisional report from Mr. McKenzie, and that he was expecting a complete report. He decided to sign the report of October. He claimed that if he had not signed the report of October and got time to turn around, it would have been a complete collapse. I suppose he was somewhat dubious and fearful; yet he took that risk to save his bank and save his shareholders, and the following month he was before the Treasury Board and the then Minister of Finance. I doubt, under the circumstances, whether many men of standing would have done otherwise when faced with the responsibility of wrecking their bank by announcing the situation which loomed up before them. But he signed that report, and he was found not guilty.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will my honourable friend tell us under what provision the indictment was laid against him? Of course, it was under old section 153, but that has two provisions. May I read them?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: To what is the honourable gentleman referring?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am looking at the corresponding section in the Bank Act, 1913. I am trying to ascertain in what way this is different from that section. First of all, I wanted my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) to tell us, if he can, under which provision in section 153 of the old Act the indictment was laid in the case that we are now discussing. Perhaps my honourable friend can tell us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The only answer I can give my honourable friend is that I remember that the Manager was prosecuted under a different clause from that under which the President was prosecuted. The clause which the Finance Department tried to have applied to the President was a less severe one, as to absolute, direct knowledge.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Then perhaps I had better read this. I think the Committee ought to know it:

153. (a) The making of any willfully false or deceptive statement in any account, statement, return, report or other document respecting the affairs of the bank, or

(b) the using of any false or deceptive statement in any account, statement, return, report or other document respecting the affairs of the bank with intent to deceive or mislead any person, is an indictable offence punishable, unless a greater punishment is in any case by law prescribed therefor, by an imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

Now let us take subsection 2:

2. Every president, vice-president, director, auditor, general manager, or other officer of the bank or trustee who negligently prepares, signs, approves or concurs in any account, statement, return, report or document respecting the affairs of the bank, containing any false or deceptive statement shall be guilty of an indictable offence punishable, unless a greater punishment is in any case by law prescribed therefor, by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years.

Honourable gentlemen will notice that in the first case the offence is the making of a "wilfully false or deceptive statement."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That was, I think, the one under which the Manager was prosecuted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I see. The Manager was indicted under that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The punishment for that being five years. Subsection 2 is exactly the same as subsection 2 of this Bill, except for the words in italics, which have been added. In the first subsection the words, "making any wilfully false or deceptive statement," have been replaced by the word "knowingly prepares."

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It amounts to the same thing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is not the same thing. The old provision is stronger.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not think this is any improvement on the old Act at all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Certainly not. The older provision is the stronger—"makes any wilfully false or deceptive statement."

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Instead of improving it we are making it easy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We are softening it.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: No bank official except the Manager or the Inspector could conscientiously make a statement of that kind, because he does not know the facts. The only two officials that would probably know enough about the affairs of the bank to swear to a statement would be the Manager and the Inspector. In regard to returns the Inspector is the responsible man, for he receives the details from all the branches The President, the Vice-president or the Directors do not know positively what they swear to, but the Inspector knows; and the Manager ought to know, because he has all the details brought before him in condensed form.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I cannot get through my mind any reason why it is necessary to use those words, "knowingly prepares." Take for instance the returns made to the Timber Department of the Ontario Government or the Quebec Government. The lumbermen are required to file returns of their cuts. Do you think there is any loophole such as this to let those men out? They have to take an affidavit that the return is true, and if the return is not true they are liable to be prosecuted. There is no way in which they can dodge the question by saying they did not know. I submit, honourable gentlemen, that these words, "knowingly prepares," ought not to be left in this clause, because they simply leave a loophole for anyone who has signed a return that proves to be false.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It seems to me the whole object is to improve the Bill. My honourable friend said that a good deal of effort has been made to improve this clause over the corresponding clause in the present Act. Apparently it has not been improved.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: By inserting those two words, "knowingly prepares," the clause is rendered useless. You might as well leave it out, because there is in it a loophole for any bank officer to get out. You would never get a conviction against an officer who did wrong under this clause, because he would be able to escape by the plea that he did not know. Why put in the clause at all if it is not an improvement?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The prosecutor would have to prove that the bank officer knew.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Certainly, the prosecutor would have to prove it. Why should these bank managers be given that exemption? It is their duty to know. If, as the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon.

Mr. Roche) says, there are in the bank only two men who could possibly have the requisite knowledge, why not require those two men to make the returns? It would be their business to see to it that the statements they make are correct. As long as they make a correct statement there is no danger of the penalty of three or five years. They can avoid making a false statement. With a clause of this kind we would probably have returns upon which the public could rely in the future. They cannot depend on the returns at present. We need only to cite the instance of the Union Bank. Apparently, when they held their general meeting last winter they knew that things were wrong; yet no effort was made to take the public into their confidence.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Until three months afterwards.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But would taking the public into their confidence have remedied the situation or retrieved the loss?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, but it would have prevented many innocent persons from buying stock on a statement, made by those officers, that was absolutely false.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Did the honourable gentleman buy any stock in that way?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There seems to be a balance between two opinions. Some members think—and I am one of these—that to leave out the word "knowingly" might often result in a great injustice. Others think that by putting in the word "knowingly" you actually provide a loophole of escape, and that with this word in the clause a man need take no due care nor look for proper information, nor try to make his knowledge as complete as possible. The thought has suggested itself to me that instead of the word "knowingly" we might insert these words: "Without due care and knowledge." Then, any person who without due care and knowledge prepares signs, etc., etc., would be within the judgment of the court or the jury as to whether he was neglectful—as to whether he did not take care to inform himself. I want the clause to go as far as possible so as to make strong the lesson that a man who accepts office has a duty to perform besides simply wearing the honour and drawing the fees; that not only is he responsible to his shareholders, but he occupies a position of responsibility and trust in relation to the general business public.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But that is provided in subsection 2.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: No; "negligently" is quite a different word.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: "Negligently" implies duty.

Right Hon. SIR GEORGE E. FOSTER: But I do not think it is as great or as definite a limitation as "with due care and knowledge." I think these words would be an improvement upon the word "knowingly."

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It certainly would be an improvement.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And it would not go so far as to cause sometimes a great injustice.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The expression of the original clause is a much stronger section —stronger against the banker.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: How? It says "the making of any wilfully false or deceptive statement."

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: "Knowingly" amounts to the same thing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He makes a wilful statement.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Why not make the clause read:

> Every president, vice-president, director, auditor, general manager, or other officer of the bank or trustee—
>
> Leave out the word "knowingly"—
>
> —who prepares, signs, approves or concurs in any account, statement, return, report, or document respecting the affairs of the bank, containing any false or deceptive statement—

"Of which he should have been, as such official aware"—put that at the end. Then the clause would cover any statement which he, as the officer referred to, ought to have known was false or deceptive. Then you could leave out the word "knowingly." It would be his duty to understand what he is signing. It appears to me that such a provision would fill the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) says is about the same thing.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I think the clause is best as it stands.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, you must bear this in mind. Take any of the large banks; they have hundreds of agencies from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And quite a number abroad.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, and abroad. The branches are each under a local manager. Of course, the reports are prepared and sent in from the different branches to the head office by the local managers, and all these statements are tabulated at the head office. How can it be expected that the General Manager of the Bank, much less the president or vice-president, shall control those returns and answer for errors that are made in them? The responsibility must be upon the officials whose duty it is to prepare those statements and who prepare false returns. They are the persons to be reached and in my opinion the law is framed in the strongest way to reach them when it is possible to do so.

I have just sent to the library for a volume containing a reference to a case in which I was engaged before the Privy Council some 20 odd years ago. It was the case of La Banque du Peuple which failed through the mismanagement of the General Manager. The President a Mr. Grenier was sued by one of the large shareholders of the Bank, Mr. Prefontaine. The case went to the Privy Council. When I appeared in that case I heard the Lords of the Privy Council state, first of all, that the president of a bank or a company could not be expected and is not expected to follow the details of the bank or company. He has to accept the reports and returns which are made by persons in whom he has confidence and whose duty it is to make such returns. And I remember, as if it were yesterday, the expression used, namely, that it would be unbearable and no man of common sense would ever accept the chairmanship or presidency of a bank if he was expected to incur that responsibility. The question came up in England. There is a well-known case in which the question was agitated and discussed over and over again, and similar trouble was found in England, and they had to rest satisfied with a text such as we have here.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I agree in the main with the honourable gentleman. Does he wish to read the reference to his case? He might as well finish.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I shall have to look it up.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: While my honourable friend is looking it up I would like to say a few words.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If my honourable friend will allow me, I will say a few words, and then he can make his reply.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought my right honourable friend would reply to me; as he was suggesting the amendment.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is very true that under our system of wide distribution of branches of banks it is absolutely impossible for any bank president to know the correctness of statements made in the large constituency of that bank, within his jurisdiction, and, by all manner of men, as managers or sub-managers in the different places. It is impossible for any man without omniscience to know whether such statements are all correct or not. In practice the head man must take the statements that are vouched for by the managers of the different branches, and he cannot go behind those. It is impossible for him to do it of his own personal kuowledge unless he happens to visit a locality and make himself thoroughly acquainted with all the details of the branch there. But though he might do that in the case of one branch, he cannot do it with 100 or 500. That is absolutely impossible.

I think we are lax if we permit of a man accepting the presidency without being obliged to apply himself to discharge the duties of that office so far as possible. I believe that nine out of every ten persons who do business with banks and invest their money in banks do so on the strength of the president and directorate rather than on the strength of the manager. It seems to be the president and directors who give character and security to the bank, and the outsider looks to the president and the directors and says: "I trust those men. They have their eye on the affairs of the bank. They are doing their work of supervision, and I trust in the outcome." I think we should make that confidence as strong as we possibly can, so that bank managers or bank directors, for that matter, may feel that they do not have a sinecure, and that it is their duty as trustees and representatives, or acting in the interest of the common people and business people of the country, who have to do with banks or are influenced by the results of banking methods, to make the best effort to prove themselves as thoroughly capable as men can be. How can this be done? Well, I think there is a second sense, a business sense, that a manager or a president of a bank or some directors of banks have. They are used more or less to that kind of transaction. Gradually in the course of a lifetime they get a sense of quick appreciation and quick under standing of what a layman going in would have no sense of or no knowledge with regard to; consequently, if they are alert and alive to their duties, they can fit themselves by getting information, making themselves acquainted in the line of supervision and oversight, and thus they can do a great deal to stop incipient initiation of wrongdoing. They have a sort of sense as to the existence of something wrong, and they use their business capacity, if they are in earnest and alert, with great benefit to the institution itself.

Now, if you say in the Act that a man is culpable who "knowingly" signs a thing, you take away all sense of responsibility from the supervisors, be they directors or president. That is, there is a tendency to do so. But you say: "You are now before the public, and you are now before the courts of law, and you must make a sworn statement that you have used due care and knowledge in the preparation of your statement and your return; consequently if you go wrong and make a false statement you are to be haled before the courts, and a jury has its right of judgment as to whether you took that due care and made yourselves au fait and of knowledge of the affairs of the bank that it was your duty to do. If you did not do that, then you are liable for the penalty. If you did that, no mortal can do more, and therefore you go free."

I move that, instead of the word "knowingly," the words, "due care and knowledge" be substituted. I think that would be an improvement.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: In appreciating and determining what this Act should be, I think we should not lose sight of recent examples that we have had. I said a moment ago that the old section 153 was really more stringent than the one now proposed. Now, what did recent history disclose? Take the cases of the Merchants Bank and the Union Bank. There was an indictment against the General Manager of the Merchants Bank, under section 153, of having wilfully made a deceptive report. At the same time there was an indictment against the President of the bank under subsection 2 for having knowingly made a false report. The subject-matter of the indictment was a loan made by the Merchants Bank of an amount exceeding $4,000,000 to a gambling house in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To a stock-broker.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: To a stock-broker, a gambling house, in Montreal.

Hon. Sir GEORGE FOSTER.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would you say that all stock-brokers are gamblers?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, but this one was; it was known to be a gambling house.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER Speculative dealers.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That may be a more charitable term, but it means the same thing. That was a very large amount; the work was going on for years and was never reported; yet with those provisions of the Bank Act both those cases failed.

In the present case of the Union Bank, shareholders are told that there is a loss in the reserve of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, through speculating on exchange. That was not one transaction only; it could not have been one transaction; it must have been a series of transactions, because the bank could not have met with such a loss in one transaction; it must have been going on for a long time, how long of course nobody knows; but no report was made. With all the knowledge that we have of those two losses in question, they were going on for a period of years, and no report was made.

With the law stronger than is now proposed, I think, those gentlemen in the Merchants Bank case escaped. Now, if you are going to have anything in the Bank Act that imposes a duty on those people there must be a stringent provision. I quite agree with my honourable friend when he says it is impossible for one man, from the president down, to have a full knowledge of a transaction. There are inspectors who go around, but their district is limited; there is not one inspector who inspects all the branches, because he could not do it for lack of time. If there were only one inspector he might be in a position to give a statement such as we are speaking about, which would give every guarantee, but he cannot.

The result is that we might as well have nothing at all if, as proposed now, the onus of proof of knowledge on the part of the party making the return is on the Crown. In other words, if you have to prove that the president or the man who made the report did so knowingly, how can you prove it? You can prove that only in a very exceptional case. Remember that the onus will be on the prosecution. All that the accused will have to say will be, "I did not know," and then it will be for the Crown to show that he did know, and if the Crown cannot show that, the indictment fails. To my mind the law is no better than it was before, and I do not think the law as it was before was sufficient.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The argument of the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique) was a very strong argument, and I was greatly impressed by it; but it was not strong for the purpose for which he intended it. It was intended as an argument for branch banks, but it was a very strong argument against the principle of branch banks, which is the guiding principle of our banking system, because, according to his doctrine, nobody could be held responsible; nobody can make a statement for which he should be held responsible in connection with a bank. The president cannot do it, because it is impossible that he should know all about the branches. Any one auditor cannot do it, because he does not audit them all. Who is there to do it? How can the manager do it? He has had the same means of knowledge open to him that are open to the president—exactly the same; therefore he stands in the same position in regard to that.

The only way that I can see that this can be remedied and still retain our principle of branch banks—which I am not prepared to say is not the best thing for the country, although I have my doubts about the matter—would be to have the manager of each branch make his return to the head office under oath. Then we would have the general manager and the bank president protected by themselves certifying that they took the best means they had—the sworn affidavits of the branch managers—and they went according to them. I throw that out as a suggestion.

But as the honourable senior member from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has said, the present section is certainly not an improvement upon the old section if you are looking to strengthen the section against the official. Under that word "knowingly" the general manager and the president shelter themselves against the charge brought against the president, because, as the honourable gentleman has well pointed out, the burden of proof is upon the Crown, and it is absolutely impossible for the Crown to succeed.

There never was, and probably never will be again, a more clear case than that of the Merchants' Bank; yet it was not possible to fix the guilt upon either of the persons indicted. The President was as much a victim as any one else, but the General Manager was in league with the stock gambling house that was robbing the bank, and it was generally reputed—I do not know but what there was some evidence in regard to it—that he was a silent partner in the firm. If he was not a silent partner, and in that way reaping special benefit, he was a bigger fool than people took him to be, to advance so much money to this gambling concern.

Now, I think we had better either wipe out the whole section, or else strike out the word "knowingly" in the first part of the section, and "negligently" in the other. I do not know but what it would be just as sound to wipe out the whole thing and let them go without a law. What is the good of having a law that is no good? What is the good of having an enactment on the Statute Book that is absolutely non-enforceable? We have too many of these laws now, and it tends to bring all the laws into contempt.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It gives the people a false security,

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, it gives people a false security. Let us not lose sight of this fact, that the banking institution is a depository of trust funds, those of widows and orphans, and all other classes, and it is not their own money that those people are gambling with. Look at the directorate of a bank, and you see Sir Somebody or Lord This or That at the head of it, and you know he is a wealthy and successful business man. They have about 20 names of men distinguished in financial and commerical life on the list, and you have faith in that bank. But do these directors as a matter of fact direct? We know they do not. It is mighty seldom they do. Just as in commercial institutions, there is a good deal too much of that sort of thing—directors who do not direct. But I would hold directors responsible, whether they are active directors or not, if anything went wrong, and I would hold them, from the president down, because they should direct, they should know these things, or else they should not take the position.

I move, if I can get a seconder—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is already an amendment before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is that amendment?

The Hon. The CHAIRMAN: Right Honourable Sir George E. Foster moves to strike out from line 34 the word "knowingly" and insert instead the words "without due care and knowledge."

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is only shifting from one thing to another; that is not an amendment. I moved in amendment, before that, that the word "knowingly" be struck out in the first case, and "negligently" in the second. The words, "without due care and knowledge" are equivalent to "knowingly."

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: My objection to the wording of the amendment is that it would imply a duty on the part of the president or vice-president and directors to go into the details of the bank, and it would leave them open to be tried on any occasion when, from the nature of their functions, they cannot be expected to do that. I was referring to that case of Prefontaine vs. Grenier. The holding was this:

Where the collapse of a bank was due to overdrafts which the cashier, the principal executive officer of the bank under the directors, whose accounts had been duly audited by a board of auditors duly appointed and entirely independent of the directors, had irregularly and improperly allowed to certain cutomers: Held, that by the law of Quebec as by the law of England, a charge of negligence could not be established against the president of the bank simply by reason of his having in good faith failed to detect the cashier's concealment of such overdrafts.

And, in rendering judgment, they said, amongst other things:

In this country questions as to the nature and extent of the duty and responsibility of directors and others, in respect of the conduct of affairs of companies, have been frequently under consideration. Attempts have been repeatedly been made to render them personally liable, on the ground that they have trusted the regularly authorized officers of the company that they have failed to detect, and been misled by, misrepresentation or concealment by such officers, when there was no reason for doubting their fidelity. But such attempts have not been successful. It is sufficient to refer to the case of Dovey vs. Cory (1), in which the subject was fully considered by the House of Lords.

On referring to that case, I find that Lord Halsbury, who was one of the Lords rendering the judgment, said, amongst other things:

The charge of neglect appears to rest on the assertion that Mr. Cory, like the other directors, did not attend to any detail of business not brought before them by the general manager or the chairman, and the argument raises a serious question as to the responsibility of all persons holding positions like that of directors, how far they are called upon to distrust and be on their guard against the possibility of fraud being committed by their subordinates of every degree. It is obvious if there is such a duty it must render anything like an intelligent devolution of labour impossible. Was Mr. Cory to turn himself into an auditor, a managing director, a chairman, and find out whether auditors, managing directors, and chairmen were all alike deceiving him? That the letters of the auditors were kept from him is clear. That he was assured that provision had been made for bad debts, and that he believed such assurances, is involved in the admission that he was guilty of no moral fraud; so that it comes to this, that he ought to have discovered a network of conspiracy and fraud by which he was surrounded, and found out that his own brother and the managing director (who have since been made criminally responsible for frauds connected with their respective offices) were inducing him to make representations as to the prospects of the concern and the dividends properly payable which have turned out to be improper and false. I cannot think that it can be expected of a director that he should be watching either the inferior officers of the bank or verifying the calculations of the auditors himself. The business of life could not go on if people could not trust those who are put into a position of trust for the express purpose of attending to details of management. If Mr. Cory was deceived by his own officers—and the theory of his being free from moral fraud assumes under the circumstances that he was—there appears to me to be no case against him at all.

Then Lord MacNaghton and Lord Davey all spoke to the same effect.

It is said that the clause is of no use. The monthly returns are based on the reports of the manager at the head office, and on the reports made by the managers at the different branches, and the clause is useful to reach them. It is not the general manager, who must of necessity act on the reports of the subordinates, the local managers, that should be or can be reached, but it is the local man, the man who makes the false report, and it cannot be otherwise.

If the wording were changed it would open the door to juries deciding that the law intended that the president or the general manager should inquire into the details of the bank, which they cannot be expected to do.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, if I thought for a moment that the work of the president and the other executive officers mentioned in clause 153 could be performed personally by them with reasonable industry, I would be very glad to support the suggestion made by my honourable friend that the word "knowingly" be stricken out. But upon investigating the Act, upon looking at the different sections as to the details devolving upon those officers in making their statement, it will be at once ascertained that it would be physically impossible that those officers should have a personal knowledge of the statements the Bill requires them to make. It will be observed in section 112 that they are called upon to make a monthly statement, and if any honourable gentleman will look at that section as to the knowledge which is to be possessed, and evidence of which is to be included within the statement, he will observe that no human being could possibly have the personal knowledge to make a statement such as is set out in that section, upon which he might be criminally responsible. This statement is to be made monthly, and it covers the operations of the bank in its entirety. It covers the bank wherever it carries on business in the hundreds of branches which some of the banks operate; in their business overseas; in their banks on the four continents—because some of these banks are doing business not only upon this continent, but upon the four continents; and that they should have a personal knowledge of the returns to be made under section 112 is, as I say, physically impossible.

Then, if honourable gentlemen will turn to the particulars required by section 113, which likewise are to be embraced within the statement, it will be observed that he would be required to have personal knowledge of all those subjects.

Then, schedule G sets forth all the information which must be shown in detail in this statement, and my honourable friend will at once be convinced of the reasonableness of saying that those executive officers shall not "knowingly" make a false statement, or, as my right honourable friend has said, shall make it "with due care and knowledge." Schedule G covers over three pages, and deals with the operations of the banks in all their ramifications wherever they carry on business. From this honourable gentleman will see how impossible it would be to make a statement as to the accuracy of the accounts, because it is well known that so long as human infirmity exists false statements will be made by many employees of the banks.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it not like the case of the audit: you cannot have an audit that is worth a cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And you cannot have a correct statement. As long as there is human infirmity, and resourcefulness in the mind of the man who wants to perpetrate a criminal or fraudulent or false act, we cannot possibly devise legislation which safeguards property or money against all the possibilities. The result of what we are trying to do has its reflection upon the financial status of the banks. Notwithstanding the latitude which we give, say in statements of this kind, the investing public are only too anxious to put their money into the bank—in bank stocks or on deposit—and consider these investments equal to anything on the market.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They are anxious to put it into oil stock too.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You cannot protect the public against their avidity for large profits; and, no matter what legislation we build up, it is utterly impossible to safeguard humanity against human infirmity.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I should like to say a few words on the amendment of the right honourable the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster). First and foremost, I would like to say that we are trying to build up an Act that will protect the weak institutions, if there be still some in existence; and, in contradiction of the statement of my honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler), I desire to state that bank directors direct.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Some bank directors.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will mention banks that are around me—banks in Montreal; I will not speak of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Did the Merchants' Bank directors direct?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I know the Imperial Bank directors direct.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Did the directors of the Merchants' Bank direct?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What about the Union Bank?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: The leader of the Opposition says the president and directors are not responsible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will come to that in a moment. I take banks that have their head offices in Montreal. I do not think any honourable gentleman from that city who knows what is going on there will say that there is a Board there that does not direct. I think likewise of the Royal Bank, the Molsons Bank, and the Bank with which the honourable member from De Salabery (Hon. Mr. Béique) is connected, and I feel sure that no one will challenge the statement. I just mention those banks around me.

The Merchants Bank had an accident that showed that it was weak in its management. The Manager and the President were brought before the court. The suits against them were dismissed—why? As far as I remember—and I think I have a clear conception of the real cause—the point made by the judge was that the monthy return did not call for the same complete information that was required in the annual statement; and, after examining into what the President and the Manager were obliged to subscribe to in their monthly report, he did not feel justified in declaring that the return as made to the Government was knowingly or wilfully false in one case, or negligently false in the other.

I am not ready to accept the suggestion of my right honourable friend, for this reason. An effort has been made under the present

Bill to meet the situation that developed in the case of the Merchants' Bank. I will cite some cases to show that in the body of the Act there are safeguards which have been added, and which would have protected the shareholders of the Merchants Bank against some of the losses they made.

The clause now under review, the first part of which is new, says:

Every president, vice-president, director, auditor, general manager or other officer of the bank, or trustee who knowingly prepares, signs, approves or concurs in any account, statement return, report or document respecting the affairs of the bank containing any false or deceptive statement, or any return which does not set forth the true financial position of the bank including all the information required by section 113 of this Act—

And we will look at that section in a moment—

—shall be guilty of an indictable offence, punishable, unless a greater punishment is in any case by law prescribed therefor, by imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years.

The next subsection contains in the main the old clause, but with an improvement. It says:

Every president, vice-president, director, auditor, general manager or other officer of the bank or trustee who negligently prepares, signs, approves or concurs in any account, statement, return, report or document respecting the affairs of the bank containing any false or deceptive statement—

And here are the new words:

—or any return which does not set forth the true financial position of the bank including all the information required by section 113 of this Act, shall be guilty of an indictable offence punishable, unless a greater punishment is in any case by law prescribed therefor, by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years.

Now let us see what improvement has been brought about by this Bill. I draw the attention of my honourable friends to the fact that it will be much harder henceforth for the president or directors to plead ignorance. Their knowledge will be widened under the authority of the new clauses of this Bill. I feel that clause 153, which has been prepared under the authority and sanction of the Department of Justice to meet the Merchants Bank case, will sufficiently complete the Act, and will ameliorate conditions under it.

Then I call attention to subsection 9 of clause 56, which says:

The Minister may, from time to time require that the auditors of a bank shall report to him upon the adequacy of the procedure adopted by the bank for the safety of its creditors and shareholders, and as to the sufficiency of their own procedure in auditing the affairs of the bank; and the Minister may at his discretion enlarge or extend the scope of the audit, or direct that any other or particular examination be made or procedure established in the particular case as the public interest may seem to require.

This is new. Let my honourable friend following me while I read subsection 10:

It shall be the duty of the auditors to report individually or jointly as to them may seem fit to the general manager and to the directors in writing any transactions or conditions affecting the well-being of the bank which are not satisfactory to them, and which in their opinion require rectification, and without restricting the generality of this requirement they shall report specifically to the general manager and to the directors from time to time upon any loans exceeding one per cent of the paid up capital of the bank which in their judgment are inadequately secured, but this provisions shall not be construed to relieve any director from the due and proper discharge of the duties of a director. The report shall be transmitted or delivered by the auditors to the general manager at his office and to each director at his last known post office address and the said report shall be incorporated in the minutes of the directors' meeting first following the receipt of the said report.

My honourable friend will see that the auditors are under the obligation of scrutinizing the large accounts; and I draw the attention of my honourable friends to the fact that the larger accounts are always supervised from the head office, even if the money is not directly advanced from the head office. The branches are limited in the amount which they may loan, but the large accounts are scrutinized and must be scrutinized monthly by the head officers and the directors. The auditors will not have the simple mission of verifying the books and finding out whether the figures of the monthly report resemble the figures in the book. They will have to watch over the larger accounts, and to report if they feel there is anything to which the attention of the directors ought to be called.

Section 153 states that the management will have to conform to the requirements of section 113, which my honourable friend opposite mentioned a moment ago. I draw attention to snbsection 4 of section 113. This is the chapter under the title of "Returns." This is new:

Notwithstanding anything in the last preceding section contained it shall not, except as to the chief accountant or acting chief accountant of the bank—whose responsibility is not taken into question—

—be sufficient for the purposes of any return provided for or required under the said section that such return agrees with the books of the bank—

That was the old system.

—but the return shall set forth the true financial position of the bank on the last juridical day of the month last preceding the date of the return according to the latest information possessed by or reasonably available to the officers or any of them who sign the return.

Then, subsection 5 says:

For the purposes of any return provided for or required under the last preceding section, or for the purposes of any statement, or balance sheet prepared and issued by a bank, there shall not be included amongst "current loans" any loan in respect of which,

(a) The borrower has not for a period of two years—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does that say two years? That is giving pretty good leeway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but there are reasons why it should be two years.

(a) The borrower has not for a period of two years preceding the date of such return, statement or balance sheet, paid the interest thereon at the rate agreed, in cash, unassisted by the bank.

I still have echoing in my ear the claim of the farmers, as voiced in another place, that the banks should be rural credit institutions lending money which should not be recalled until there is a good crop. There have been times in the West when crops have not been good for five years. Such a loan might be good, but it would not be a current loan.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I hope the honourable gentleman is not inferring or attempting to imply that I hold the views of the honourable gentlemen in the other House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, no. I said, some members in the other House.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I certainly would disclaim it at once. I do not think you will find anybody much more conservative in this matter than I am.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

in respect of which,—

(b) the bank has taken possession of the property or any part of the property—

These are all clauses which would have protected the shareholders of the Merchants Bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: My interruption was this, that two years seems to give a pretty good leeway. I would say that an account on which nothing was paid in the way of interest for two years was in a pretty perilous way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would point out to my honourable friend that those two years would have to be years in which there has been no renewal, and it will be deemed to be no renewal if the renewal has been made with money borrowed from the same bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the bank, at the expiration of the note, renews it for three months and adds the interest, it will be the bank that furnishes the amount of interest accruing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This says that if a loan has been unprotected for two years and remains overdue for that period, even if it has been renewed, but renewed with the bank's money, it will not be held to be a current loan.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I should think so. It would be a very slow current.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are at present in many banks in the West, I am told, loans that have run for much more than two years, and that are good, safe loans, though no money has been paid on them. A delay has been requested because of failure of crop.

(b) the bank has taken possession of the property or any part of the property covered by any security given by the borrower with the intention of realizing thereon, or has realized or taken any step or proceeding for the purpose of realizing upon any security given by the borrower;

This will not be a current loan.

(c) the bank has commenced an action at law to recover from the borrower the amount of the loan or any part thereof;

(d) the borrower has made an abandonment of his estate for the benefit of his creditors or any of them;

That was the case of some of the debtors of the Merchants Bank.

or, (e) there is other cause, sufficient in the opinion of the manager of the branch of the bank where such loan is domiciled, or in the opinion of any director or officer of the bank who prepares, signs, approves or concurs in such return, statement or balance sheet, for deeming such loan not to be a current loan.

I might continue and read all the new clauses of the Bill which require the managers and directors to have a direct knowledge of the affairs of the bank, through the auditors who are appointed under this measure. So when it is provided in section 153 that—every president, vice-president, director, auditor, general manager or other officer of the bank or trustee who knowingly prepares, signs, approves. . .

It will be far more difficult for the bank officer to say that he did not know. And when he is made fully liable for preparing, signing, approving or concurring in any account, statement, return, etc., negligently, it will be harder for him to disprove the negligence. The return he is obliged to make, and the work of the auditors and all the new conditions which are introduced in this Bill will bring home to him the importance and seriousness of his responsibility. Knowing that the Department of Justice has worked very carefully upon this clause 153, in connection with the other clauses, I would hesitate to disturb the whole economy of the Act by the proposed amendment, without at all events consulting the Department of Justice. I think that the new work which has been done would justify my right honourable friend in not insisting upon the alteration of this clause

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Each honourable member who has offered an amendment has presented a forcible argument for the acceptance of it, and I see nothing in either amendment that would be objectionable. Why not accept both the amendments proposed by the right honourable the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) and the amendment of my honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler), if they are additional safeguards?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Did I understand my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) to say that this clause had been prepared or drafted by the Minister of Justice, due regard being had to the late trial of the President and the General Manager of the Merchants Bank.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, I did say that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And is the language used to meet certain questions that had arisen in that trial?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All that was found to be insufficient in the suits that were instituted against the Manager of the Merchants Bank is proposed to be remedied in this Bill, according to the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I will guarantee that no man could be found guilty, under the same circumstances, under this measure in its present form.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I take notice of what my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) has said, and I do not desire to oppose an idea of my own to the well-considered and careful study of the question by the Department of Justice, having in mind the case in Montreal which led to the suits and what we think is a failure of justice, and I do not wish to press my amendment in the face of these facts.

The proposed amendment of the Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster was withdrawn.

Section 153 was agreed to.

On section 154—director refusing to make calls on suspension of bank:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is there any change in this?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no change.

Section 154 was agreed to.

On section 155—officers giving undue preference to any creditor:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No change.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why do you use the word "wilfully" here?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because it refers to the direct action of those officials.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why not leave out the word "wilfully"?

Every person who, being the president, vice-president, director, general manager, manager, or other officer of the bank, willfully gives or concurs in giving to any creditor of the bank any fraudulent, undue or unfair preference over other creditors, by giving security to such creditor, or by changing the nature of his claim, or otherwise howsoever, is guilty of an indictable offence,

Why do you put the word "wilfully" there unless it is a sort of step-ladder to get him out of trouble?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One cannot commit or associate himself with a fraud without doing it wilfully.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If that is the case, why do you use the word "wilfully"?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is but a repetition of the expression used in the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I move that the word "wilfully" in the third line of section 155 struck out.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will my honourable friend state the reason why he wants it struck out? I should be very glad to know it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The reason I did give, but I will repeat it for the benefit of my honourable friend from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien).

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: We do not hear very much here.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand. The word "wilfully" is absolutely unnecessary in this clause. If you leave out the word, the section will read:

Every person who being the president, vice-president, director, general manager, manager or other officer of a bank, gives or concurs in giving to any creditor of the bank any fraudulent, undue or unfair preference over other creditors, by giving security to such creditor . . . .

The word "wilfully" is not necessary at all If a person were taken by the throat and held down and forcibly made to sign, he could plead duress, and that is the only way he could do the act unwillingly.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Were not directors responsible under the old Act for anything wrong they did? Are we making a new provision?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not quite catch the honourable gentleman's argument. I say that the use of the word "wilfully" can be with only one intention, and that is to make it more difficult to prove the case. The officer could not do the deed unwillingly unless he were taken forcibly by the throat and the pen in his hand guided on the paper; and in such a case he could plead duress.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: This clause creates a criminal offence punishable by two years' imprisonment. It seems to me it is a fundamental principle of criminal law that no man may commit a criminal offence unless he does it wilfully. If you eliminate from this Bill the term "wilfully," a man may be sent to prison for two years, without there being one tittle of proof that he has committed an offence knowingly or wilfully. For my part I do not think that is fair, or that it is good British law. I certainly think the amendment should not be passed. I may add that there is in my opinion no law in the world that is, on the whole, more satisfactory in its application or better in its results than this Act.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: The Merchants Bank was a good case.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Oh, yes, a few of our banks have fallen by the way. But what has been the experience of other countries? As has been observed, very properly, by the honourable leader on this side of the House, no human law will reform a man or prevent absolutely the commission of crime. If you make this law so severe that men will not accept directorship in banks, they will not have sufficient capital. After all, as I say, our banking law has given wonderful service and compares favourably in its results with any banking law in the world.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I would point out to the honourable gentleman that if the word "wilfully" were struck out the result would be this. The advantage might be fraudulent because of the act of an officer or employee of the bank. Though the president might not know that it was fraudulent he could be indicted for the offence committed by another person.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How would he sign this without knowing it? What is the use of talking such nonsense as that?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But he might not know that the advantage was fraudulent. The act might be that of another officer of the bank.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Of many officers of the bank.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: He might not know at all that it was fraudulent.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does not the honourable gentleman think he ought to know? I think he ought.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Could he give a preference without knowing it?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: You cannot investigate the mind of any person. You must prove his intention by his overt acts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, I cannot understand the pleading of my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique). He seems to think that the bank presidents have very little sense—that they are foolish—that they could give fraudulent preference without knowing it. Of what material are bank presidents in Montreal composed? Are they all like Sir Montagu Allen, who did not seem to know—I will give him the credit of not knowing—what was going on? If all bank presidents are like that, we had better have some section devoted to supplying qualifications for bank presidents, so that a man must have a certain degree of intelligence before he can be appointed a bank president. I cannot believe that there is any president of a bank to-day in Canada who is so devoid of common intelligence and understanding that he would give a fraudulent or undue preference to a creditor of the bank without knowing what he was doing unless he was—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: An imbecile.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: —under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will observe that this clause has been in the Bank Act since 1913 and has worked satisfactorily up to the present time. Expert advice was available to the Government when this clause was enacted in 1913, and it is still available. I do not see why we should alter the clause.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is falling off its hinges.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I give my view of what difference it makes to have the word "wilfully" there or not to have it? To my mind the question is reduced to one of onus of proof. If you have the word "wilfully," then the onus of proof is upon the Crown to establish as part of the crime that the accused did know that the preference was fraudulent and that he gave it wilfully. If you strike out the word "wilfully," the situation is not really changed except that the onus of proving that the accused was innocent rests upon himself.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; because the very act constitutes the crime.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But if you leave the word "wilfully" in the clause then the Crown has to show by evidence that the person did wilfully give the preference. If you take it out, the onus of proving that it was not done wilfully will fall upon the accused. That is the only difference between leaving in the word "wilfully" and taking it out. I do not think it changes the crime in any way, except that in one case the Crown must prove that the accused is guilty, and in the other the onus is upon the accused to show that he is not guilty; in other words, that he did not know.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Fowler was negatived, and section 155 was agreed to.

Sections 156 to 159 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 160—commencement of Act:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I intend moving these words as the first words of this section:

Except as herein otherwise provided, this Act shall come into force on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three.

Section 160 as amended was agreed to.

The Schedules were agreed to.

Section 46 was agreed to.

On section 76—business and powers of bank; exceptions:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I moved an amendment to this section. That amendment I propose withdrawing. I understand my honourable friend from Portage la Prairie proposes moving a section.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to move, seconded by the honorourable member for Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) in addition to section 76, as subsection 4, the following:

4. Nothing herein contained shall prevent an agent or manager of a bank with chief offices and branches in one province only from acting as agent for the placing of hail insurance.

This does not name the bank, but as a matter of fact it applies to only one bank that we know of, the Weyburn Securities Bank, and I venture to say that anybody who read the evidence before the Banking and Commerce Committee on the Bank Bill will come to the conclusion that such a bank as the Weyburn Securities Bank should receive some consideration. It is a small bank entirely within a province, having a head office and some twenty-four branches. Its total profits last year, I understand, were $48,000, of which some 37 per cent were fees from hail insurance. Anyone acquainted with the West knows that any bank that encourages hail insurance is a good thing for the country. That bank has shown, before the Committee, that it is most prosperous, that its customers are prosperous, and that quite a number of its branches, which of course are small, would have to be closed up if it were not for the fact that they got policies of hail insurance. For that reason I have no hesitation in moving this, knowing that any person who knows the Weyburn Securities Bank would agree that it should be allowed to carry on this hail insurance. This added subsection will not affect any other bank in the Dominion of Canada, and if any other bank should do the same business in the future as is done by the Weyburn Securities Bank, it should be allowed to do so. Hail insurance is one of the things that all people of good judgment in the community out West put on the land, because occasionally we have hail-storms that sweep over the country and generally destroy the entire crop. It is well that a bank, in doing a safe business on farmers' security, should wish to have it further secured by adding hail insurance.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I took exception to this, and I have not seen any reason to change my opinion. It has been the habit of banks to take hail insurance in the past, and I cited some examples in the Maritime Provinces where this custom prevailed, and it was inimical to the interests of customers of the bank. If you give the privilege of doing insurance business to one bank you should allow it to all banks.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No, it is confined to a bank where the head office and all the branches are in one province, and there is no other bank in Canada to-day that answers that description.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It will allow every bank in the province of Saskatchewan to do that business.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No, because there is not a bank in Saskatchewan that has not offices outside of that province.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It gives a preference to one bank over all the others, and it gives a preference to a bank over insurance companies. It is a vicious practice. In the Maritime provinces some banks acted as insurance agents, and held up a man applying for a loan. If his lumber was in the boom, or his oats were in the barn, he would be told he must insure his lumber or his oats, or he could not get his bank loan. In principle the method is wrong, and a bank that cannot stand on its own feet should not have a right to go into a business of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will appeal to the sense of fair play and equity of my honourable friend. I know nothing about the conditions in the West; but it is represented to us that there is really a farmers' bank that is doing business in places where other banks are not doing business, and it has been able to develop and cover that ground because its local agents have been doing that work. It was a legal act, that of placing hail insurance, and that institution is flourishing under those conditions. What my honourable friend objects to is the act of the branch manager who places insurance for his own personal advantage. In this case it is not so. It is the bank itself that has carried on and has developed and prospered because it has added this legitimate income from commissions received by local agents for the bank.

Now, there is an institution in the West, that has prospered, and it says: "Why should you at one fell blow take off a line of business that represents some 33 or 35 per cent of our income?" Here we are decreeing that henceforth branch managers or other managers will be prohibited from placing any kind of insurance, and we are asked to make that exception for a little institution in the West, which is provincial in its scope. For my part, it appeals to my sense of fair play, and I say I will vote for that amendment.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not think this matter needs to be discussed at great length. This bank at Weyburn has certainly filled a most important function there, and it is doing a lot of good work, I understand. This amendment certainly cannot do any harm, and it will do a whole lot of good. It will keep the bank in interest and give it an opportunity of carrying on. I am informed that if this permission is not given to the Weyburn bank, the refusal will almost put it out of business. This hail insurance does not fit any of the other banks at all; it only fits these small banks with the head office and branch offices in one province. Consequently I think the amendment ought to be adopted.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: We had some discussion on this question on Friday when the matter was first presented, and I must confess that I have heard nothing further to-night than we did upon the former occasion which would give legitimate support to this amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend will admit that this is a much more restricted amendment: it only covers one bank.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Yes, I admit that it is a much more restricted amendment, but I do not know that it is any more innocent for that reason. This is the first time I have seen legislation in this House or any other which specifically selected one institution and made amendments to satisfy that institution and the circumstances surrounding it. It is said that no names are mentioned, but the circumstances mentioned in connection with the amendment apply to only one institution, and that happens to be in the province of Saskatchewan. The leader of the Government says this is a farmers' bank, and for that reason it is entitled to special consideration. Let me tell the leader of the Government in this House that it is no more a farmers' bank than any other bank that operates in the province of Saskatchewan. It operates to a large extent in small communities, but at almost every point there is a branch of a chartered bank, and in some places there are five or six chartered banks in competition with this bank. I have every sympathy with the Weyburn bank, but to specifically pick out one institution in the country and pass special legislation adapted to that particular institution is, I believe, wrong in principle and wrong in practice.

It has been urged by the mover of this amendment that hail insurance is a desirable thing. There is no use in discussing that, as the principle was proved beyond question years ago, and hail insurance is universally adopted all through the western provinces. If the facilities for getting hail insurance were difficult to obtain, or if this were the only institution that could supply it in those localities, there might be some ground for argument; but I venture to say, as was stated when this motion was before this House on a previous occasion, that in every locality where there is a branch of this particular bank there are half-a-dozen agents who are prepared to supply this service in the ordinary course of business.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I do not understand that those people do hail insurance; it is simply that their agents are allowed to act as agents for hail insurance. They are not taking out a license.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: A bank which is chartered to do a banking business is specifically singled out from all the other banks in Canada and allowed to do hail insurance business.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: I would like to be corrected.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I understand that its agents are authorized to act as agents for hail insurance. It is not a hail insurance company.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: I never suggested that it was a hail insurance company, but it is in the hail insurance business to this extent, that the bank acts as agent for hail insurance, and therefore comes into competition with hundreds of legitimate hail insurance agents who are already in those different communities.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: What harm will that do?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Well, it is rather infra dig. for a chartered bank to go into hail insurance business in competition with people who are already in that business, and making their living by it. It is an unusual thing for this Parliament to pick out any one particular institution and by law say that it can do business, and that no other institution can do a similar business.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I certainly think this is a step in the wrong direction. In addition to coming in competition with well-established agencies throughout that province, this bank will come into competition with municipal hail insurance, as a large number of municipalities in Saskatchewan have a system of hail insurance of their own.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: They act only as agents.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: They are doing a hail insurance business, no matter what you call them. This bank goes into that business in competition with other banks which have not the same privilege, and in addition to that this amendment will apply to the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: The Union Bank of Canada has its headquarters in the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: This only applies to a bank that has its head office and branches all in one province.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: The principle is entirely wrong, and I think we are making a very serious mistake in giving a regular chartered bank a special privilege of doing hail insurance. As a rule, where a farmer is in need of hail insurance, the regular banks will advance the money.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It was a suggestion of mine that this bank should be limited to its own business. This amendment makes the bank a general agent for writing hail insurance, whether it is fitted as a bank otherwise to do so, by way of lending money. I think it should rather be restricted to insurance writing in connection with business in which it has made advances. I think that is as far as we ought to go.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are making a broad prohibition covering the banks and are leaving the hail insurance business to the smallest bank of the seventeen, a bank in the Western Provinces. It was because I felt that the West needed all the possible support that I made the exception.

Hon. Mr. TODD: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman, why, if the West needs that support, he does not let all the banks do hail insurance? I think this House should prevent bank managers taking an unfair advantage of insurance agents by forcing all the bank's clients to place the insurance in their hands. You make a general rule which is a good one; then you make an exception in a special case. You might as well say that a certain bank in New Brunswick can solicit fire insurance and that the others cannot. I think it is legislation of the worst kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The prohibition is along the line of the policy of the banks. They do not want their managers to become insurance agents, and prohibit them from soliciting insurance. I have been informed by an honourable gentleman from Nova Scotia, I think, or is it my honourable friend from Prince Edward Island, that some bank mangers violate that prohibition. I wonder whether it it worth while spending ten minutes over the question of allowing the smallest bank to continue to do this business. I remember some years ago the garden island of this country asked for favoured treatment, and we said, "Let us do it for the smallest unit"—perhaps the brightest and most perfumed—"of the Dominion of Canada." I say let us do this because it is the smallest chartered bank.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Does the leader of the Government admit that he is giving a special privilege in a special case?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is a privilege to that bank, but the other banks do not want the same privilege.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: What will you do if the others come here next year and say, "Let us do this too"? There are other banks in the West that are just as anxious to do this as the Weyburn Bank.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Suppose another bank came along next year and asked for the privilege of doing a life insurance business, what position would my honourable friend be in? Would he say, "Oh, I am prepared to make another exception of that one particular bank"?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I would not. I want honourable gentlemen to understand that I know nobody connected with this institution, and that nobody has asked me to take sides. But this bank is already doing that kind of business as a special line of own. It is developing in a farming district, and in allowing it to do hail insurance I do not see that we violate any principle.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think that when any bank such as the Weyburn Bank can come before Parliament and make as good a presentation of its case as the Weyburn Bank has done, we ought to encourage it in its business. I heard the President of that Bank giving evidence before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other House, and he made a presentation that was acceptable to everybody. I understand that the Bank gives four per cent on deposits and that the average rate of interest charged is nine per cent. As for the prosperity of the customers, the management was asked to make out a statement of what the Bank's customers were worth when they came to the country as compared with the present time. Ten customers were picked out from each of 17 branches, and it was shown that they had made an average profit of $1,100 a year, which was attributed to the method of management. The President said that he was acquainted with practically every customer in every branch of the Bank in Saskatchewan. He had been doing the business as a banker for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: We were present in the Committee of the Commons and heard all about that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: If you heard it, I do not see why you do not support this legislation, which as a matter of fact, is wanted. It is a question whether it is a good thing to squeeze out these small banks. I am of the opinion that a bank of that description that has taken care of its people as this bank has done, ought to be encouraged to the extent of giving it such legislation as we are asking here to-day.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Was this amendment proposed in the other House?

Hon. Mr. WATSON. I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: No, it was not.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I know the Bill came here without it. It is asked for because the bank gets the commission. In other banks the trouble lies in the fact that the commissions for insurance go to the managers personally; but in this case the fees go to the bank, and it is represented that if that right is taken away some of the branches that are doing business will have to close up shop, because it is said that their average earnings last year was some $700, which goes quite a way towards paying the cost of upkeep of the bank.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I do not agree with this proposal at all. It has not been manifested to us that the bank would have to go out of business if it did not do hail insurance. The chartered banks after a great deal of experience have found that it is not in the interest of the banking system to allow the managers to do an insurance business; therefore they have prohibited that practice of their own volition. Now this bank comes in asking for special legislation. It asks us to amend the Act to enable it to do hail insurance. I submit, honourable gentlemen, as I said in the beginning, that the principle is vicious. I can see no reason why this bank should be allowed to enter into the hail insurance business almost, I might say, in contravention of its charter, and in competition with other interests.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Watson was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I object to the third reading of this Bill to-night.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Oh, let us put it through.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does my honourable friend insist upon his objection?

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: Yes.

The motion for the third reading was postponed.

C. G. M. M. CANADIAN FARMER

SUPPLEMENTARY ANSWER TO INQUIRY

On the notice:

By the Honourable Mr. Taylor:

That he will call attention to omissions from answers to questions respecting insurance claimed for C.G.M.M. Canadian Farmer and will inquire:

1. Who on behalf of the C.G.M.M. made the specifications for the repairs by the Prince Rupert Dry Dock Company for which repairs a bill of $8,500 was rendered by the company?

2. On what date or dates and at what place or places were these repairs inspected by Mr. T. Louden, Mr. C. McCoskrie and Mr. W. A. Wallace?

3. (a) Why was not the $8,500 claimed from the insurance underwriters included in the estimated amount receivable shown in the assets as at 31st December, 1922? (b) Has this amount or any part of it been paid yet by the underwriters; and if yes, how much? (c) Has there been resistance by the underwriters against this claim or any part of it, and if so on what grounds?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have a supplementary answer to the inquiry of the honourable gentleman:

As is customary, all accounts require to be scrutinized and approved by all interests previous to being paid. This account was not received by us in completed form until January, 1923, and was not paid until April, 1923. As the amount does not appear on our books as outstanding until that date, it was not shown as recoverable from the Underwriters in 1922 but will be included in amounts recovered for 1923.

EDMONTON PENITENTIARY

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH inquired of the Government:

1. For what reason or reasons was the penitentiary at Edmonton closed down and dismantled, and Alberta convicts sent to the penitentiary at Prince Albert?

2. (a) In what year was the penitentiary established? (b) In what year was it disestablished?

3. What were the numbers of convicts in each year in the Edmonton Penitentiary, year by year, from the date of establishment to the date of disestablishment at Edmonton?

4. What are the numbers of convicts, year by year, and in each year, sent from the province of Alberta to the penitentiary at Prince Albert?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. The penitentiary at Edmonton was closed:

(a) To promote economy, it being ascertained that the convicts for Alberta and Saskatchewan could be more cheaply cared for in one institution than in two.

(b) On account of the continued demands of the citizens that it be moved.

2. (a) The penitentiary at Edmonton was established in 1906.

(b) It was disestablished in 1920.

3. The numbers of inmates are as follow:

At end of year	1907	57
of whom 24 were transferred from Manitoba penitentiary.
At end of year	1908	91
" "	1909	80
" "	1910	148
" "	1911	199
" "	1912	167
" "	1913	207
" "	1914	203
" "	1915	175
" "	1916	192
" "	1917	160
" "	1918	129
" "	1919	121
" "	1920	154

4. The following number of convicts from Alberta were incarcerated in Prince Albert Pententiary, Saskatchewan:

On March 31,	1921	90
" "	1922	122
" "	1923	137

In the penitentiary at Stony Mountain, Manitoba, the following number of inmates were incarcerated:

On March 31,	1921	58
" "	1922	34
" "	1923	20

Making the following totals:

On March 31,	1921	148
" "	1922	156
" "	1923	157

The Senate adourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 26, 1923.

FIRST SITTING

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BANK BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 83, an Act respecting Banks and Banking.

Hon. R. H. POPE: Honourable gentlemen, before we proceed with the third reading of this Bill, I desire to relieve myself by expressing my keen disappointment at what has taken place in the consideration of this measure in this House. I had hoped to see a disposition on the part of the leading influential elements of the Senate of Canada to consider more favourably the appeal of a very large portion of the people of Canada for additional banking facilities.

I am not speaking in the interest of any attempt to destroy the usefulness of any of the banks that exist, or the system that we have. I think it is a fair system so far as it goes. I do not think it is the best in the world, as has been stated here. There was a time when a comparison with all other systems was in its favour; but the creation of the Federal Bank system of the United States of America has given the people of the United States some advantages that we do not possess. I see no reason why we should not have learned some lessons from them, as well as they have learned from us, or why we could not have here in Canada a system of allied banks, with a Federal Reserve Bank to protect it, in order that the small communities might have greater use of the money that they deposit in the banks, which would redound to the advantage and development of the country parts.

I take a deep interest in this matter because I do not think it is possible to build up a nation by developing a few large centres at the expense of all the smaller ones. That is what the banking system of Canada tends to do to-day: whether it is the desire of the banks to do so or not it is not for me to say. I do not deal in big financial matters; I deal only in small things, so far as my ability and experience goes. Perhaps that is one reason why I sympathize more deeply with the smaller people—the little units, the farmers, the village communities—those places that I find stagnant to-day. When I go among the people of the small communities and speak of the service that they are receiving at the hands of our big financial institutions, I find bitter disappointment; I find feelings of serious resentment. Perhaps these are unwarranted; perhaps they go too far. Nevertheless those feelings have been growing during my 25 or 30 years of public life, until to-day the situation has become a serious one.

I had sincerely hoped that this measure would not have been hurried through Parliament; that it would not have been passed until it had been thoroughly digested and we could see if the Senate might not exert some influence towards improving it. The Senate must be useful or it should not exist. If we are to be useful, this is in my opinion one of the occasions when we might bring pressure to bear upon the Government and urge them at least to promise to investigate an additional system, which would not injure the present banking system, but would favour the small units of our population.

We have had this Bill before us for two or three days. It has been hurried through at a speed which I do not like to see, and which I do not think is fair. For many years, from this side of the House, when I did not sit here—and I can see some honourable gentlemen who did—complaints were made that the then Governments gave us too much to deal with in the last week of the Session, and played the game of politics upon us. It seems a pity that, when we have this measure to consider only once in ten years, this House should be turned into a race-course to see who can make the best speed in getting through legislation. It is not sufficient to say that a particular clause is not amended, or that some other clause has been amended; we should be given the opportunity of studying or digesting the legislation and thinking it over, and communicating, if you like, with the outside world, to ascertain the desirability of certain amendments. Instead of that, we are set up against a wall, as it were, and we have to get through or be shot at daylight. Such orders may do for some people, but they do not please me. I suffer under the great misfortune, when anything does not please me, of being liable to get up and say so; therefore I am taking a little of your time.

I have received letters from gentlemen who I believed, possibly knew something of what they were writing about; others have spoken to me. Some are business men, some legal men; all are men of good standing. They have pointed out to me that clause 88 as it is in the old Act is a dangerous clause; that the banks are able to obtain a security behind closed doors unknown to the man furnishing the goods and doing business with the bank; that the banks can know earlier than anybody else the standing of the manufacturers of this desk, for instance—earlier than I who might be furnishing the lumber to make it. While the last statement that I received from the manufacturer might be sound and might warrant me in supplying raw material, the bank could demand and get security on everything that the manufacturer had

In the House of Commons a Mr. Casgrain moved an amendment to that section, and I understand that we removed that amendment last night and restored the section which has been represented to me as being extremely dangerous. For instance, people in England or in any foreign country might be doing business in good faith on the statement that a merchant was in good standing; and in a month or two months they would discover that they had been misled and that the bank was able to stand in and establish a claim behind closed doors. An amendment was made also to section 29, which is closely related to section 88.

I would refer this honourable House to a decision rendered by the Court of King's Bench in the Province of Quebec, which can be found in volume 25 of the reports for 1916, in a case of Valentine vs. the Bank of British North America, where the hon. Mr. Justice L. P. Pelletier, former Postmaster General, together with Mr. Justice Lavergne, dissented from the judgment of the majority of the Court and gave very sound reasons, supported by numerous authorities, which can also be found at page 69 of the said volume of the Court of King's Bench Reports, volume 25, and in which the learned judge, Hon. L. P. Pelletier, found that section 88 was a law of exception, which ought to be interpreted strictly, and that those (the banks) who wanted to avail themselves of the same, should prove that they had followed strictly the meaning of the same, as well as the spirit of the law, and that otherwise, the said section and following 89 would become a public danger; that it would permit a fraudulent preference and would wipe out the admitted principle that the wealth and property of a debtor are the common pledge of his creditors, and that otherwise that article would mean that the bank could take all the assets of a debtor, and that his creditors would get nothing. This learned judge said that the legislators, the Parliament of Canada, who incorporated that article in that law, certainly had not that in view.

On page 59, the learned judge gives 10 conditions which have to be followed strictly in order that a bank may avail itself of the privileges of sections 88, 89 and 90 of the the said Act. On page 62, the judge expressed surprise in this special case at the way the transactions had been done by the bank, and this case, in which Valentine happened to be the liquidator of an insolvent estate, may be assimilated to numerous cases of similar type and nature, in which the bank finds itself in difficulty in having advances to make to a certain customer, and needs vigorous effort and a strong stroke to pull itself out of the difficulties and entanglements in which the bank has placed itself; but this stroke has to be effected secretly in order that nobody can become acquainted with it.

The judge said that sections 88 and 89 of the Bank Act, are the sections which in similar cases saved the situation, and made it possible for the bank to obtain a privilege and guarantee a debt, whereas at the beginning the bank had only an ordinary claim. This section, the learned Judge Pelletier says, allows the bank to convert the ordinary indebtness of a customer to the bank into a privileged claim in favour of the bank, and this miracle, the judge goes on to say, is performed by the wrong operation in favour of the bank of sections 88 and 89; but, as the judge points out, somebody must lose his feathers, and in most of those cases, it is the other creditors who will have nothing and the bank gets it all.

Further, on page 65 of the said report, volume 25, at the end of the page, the judge says that section 88 is like a shield or mantle under the cover of which the bank, pretending to make new advances to a customer, really makes the said advance, supposed to be for future expenditure, when in reality it is only to cover an old claim and an outstanding indebtedness long due, and which the bank has allowed to run uncovered; and this performance is done about the time when a customer is in a bad fix, in an entangling situation, and when he is on the verge of insolvency, and when the bank finds it absolutely necessary to protect itself, as it does in most of these cases, undoubtedly to the great disadvantage of the other creditors.

Under these circumstances, I would have imagined that we could have found someone in the Senate of Canada who knows more about law than I do, and who would have stood up and fought for the retention of the clause which was inserted in the Committee of the House of Commons, instead of handing over to the banks the means of crucifying us to the detriment of the development of the Dominion of Canada. There are men who have been here long enough, and who have authority, to warrant them in directing the welfare of this country.

So much for that particular clause. Now let us return for just a few moments to the question of establishing smaller banks in Canada, and then I will let you all rest. I firmly and honestly believe that that must be done, and I believe that the sooner we do it the sooner we will begin to relieve the financial difficulties of this country and create conditions of prosperity in the communities which we have under our care. I was reading in yesterday's newspaper an address by Mr. Harding, President of the United States, to which I will refer:

In an address devoted to discussion of the agricultural situation the chief executive reviewed the measures taken by the Government to aid the farmers, placing at the forefront the farm credits legislation enacted by the last Congress. This legislation when carried out, he declared, "will be capable of furnishing the American farmers, for the first time in the history of agriculture in any country, adequate investment and working capital, on terms as favorable as those accorded to commerce and industry." Furthermore, he said, it will tend to restore fair prices for farm products, and aid the farmer in lifting debts incurred during the period of depression, adding: "We have been officially informed that, owing to improved conditions, the farm products of the country for 1922 were worth $2,000,000,000 more than they were in 1921. Clearly, we are through the worst of the depression and can reasonably except gradual improvement."

Mr. Harding enumerated other measures taken by the Government to aid the farmer, including re-establishment on an active basis of the federal farm loan board, reduction of freight rates on farm products and legislation to facilitate co-operation in marketing of farm products and to prevent harmful gambling in agricultural futures.

According to the President, whom I think we will accept as an authority, the United States has discovered that the establishment of Federal banks and loan organizations has proved good. The honourable member for Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby) the other day said something which I was glad to hear in reference to that, but which I will not repeat. I would only add that Europe has had its co-operative agricultural banks—they originated there. There is no country in Europe that has not, or had not up to the time of the war, well-established co-operative banks, and long term and short term banks—loan banks, some of them, if you prefer that term. There was not a country in Europe that had not found out the necessity of having these banks. I referred to this point ten years ago in a speech which I delivered in this House on a similar occasion, when the Bank Act was under revision. When the charters came before this House, I saw the combination at work and was so disgusted that I walked out of the door; but, notwithstanding that, I could see the hand of fate at work waiting to drop as heavily as ever; and it dropped last evening. The co-operative banks of Europe enabled the people of Norway and Sweden to compete with us in the European market. They enabled the people to get their money at from 3½ to 4 per cent, and as a result those people have become our competitiors in dairy products and have established an industry fostered and helped by these combinations. Why we in this country should not profit as well as the people of Australia, New Zealand, Europe, and now the United States of America, I do not know. Why should we not have set an example to the United States, instead of allowing them to set an example to us? Why should this thing be approached in such a timid, closed-door manner, as though someone owed the banks something and was afraid of them? I do not think that is what the banks desire.

I want to make another plea—not to this House, but to the banks—or to anyone here who represents them—to consider more favourably the wages which they pay to the young men employed by them throughout Canada —to give them sufficient wages to live honourably, and to provide a system of education. Move them about and put them in touch with the large industries of this country and with the head office, so that when they are called to the management of the branch banks they will take hold of them and work in the interests of the community in which the branch is placed.

There is nothing I would enjoy more than to discuss this question for an hour. It is a great big question, and worthy of attention; but I realize that this Parliament is at its close and that the usual thing is happening. We are being hurried off our feet to accommodate people who might have proceeded very much faster than they have done if they had come along earlier with their legislation. But as it has been so I presume it will be; and I assume that nothing I may say will affect it. Therefore I move:

That this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole to amend section 5 thereof as follows:

By substituting the word "twenty-four" for the word "thirty-three" in the fourth line thereof; and that subsection 2 of section 5 be amended by substituting the word "twenty-four" for the word "thirty-three" in the third line thereof.

Hon. A. B. GILLIS: As seconder of this motion, I want just a word or two. I think that the motion of my honourable friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) is one that should receive every consideration. I quite realize that at this stage of the Session there is comparatively little hope of it carrying, but I think it would have beeen wise on our part to have left this Bill over until another year. When the Bank Act was up for consideration 10 years ago it was postponed for one year, and I think there exist greater reasons to-day for a similar extension, because of what has occurred during the past two or three years in connection with our banking institutions. In my opinion, we should have submitted this Bill to a special committee of this Chamber, to have it thoroughly considered from every standpoint, and in that way reach a wise decision as to what ought to be done.

As stated by my honourable friend, we have always pointed with a great deal of pride to the stability of our Canadian banks; but what has occurred in connection with two of our leading institutions during the past year or two has to a large extent lessened our confidence. In consequence of the dealings of the banks with the people of the western provinces, also, those people have lost a great deal of their confidence in these institutions. I think I can safely say that the prairie provinces would be better off to-day if we never had a bank.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Too much credit.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: Yes, too much credit. They would have been much better off if credit had been restricted during the years of prosperity. In those years the banks went forward and almost forced the farmers to borrow money for the purpose of developing their resources, buying stock, etc.; but when the hard times came along the banks commenced to squeeze the farmers, and to take their share without any consideration as to whether the farmers were in a position to respond.

Honourable gentlemen will understand that in the western country all grain tickets are cashed by the bank. If the farmer owed the bank some money, when he would appear at the bank with his wheat or grain ticket the bank would naturally get the first rake-off, and let others take their chances. Storekeepers and others who were helping farmers along during the season had to wait and take what was left, and in some instances there was comparatively little, if any, remaining when the banks got their share. The banks have not been true to the people, particularly during the past year. In many instances that came within my own personal knowledge the banks made promises in this way when the farmers went there: "Square up your account, and in due course we will probably renew your note or give you an additional loan." That is what occurred in almost every part of the country. I do not know whether the head offices of the banks were responsible for conditions of that kind, but when the time came for renewing the old loan or for an additional one the bank promptly refused to help the farmers at all.

That being the case, and the banks not appearing to be desirous of helping the farmers of the West, the latter have lost confidence to a great extent in our banking institutions. Would it not have been a great deal better to have lost some money in trying to develop our western country, and in fact the whole of Canada, than for the banks to go into insane speculation by which millions were lost to the whole country? Every dollar of money that was lost from the banks was so much lost to the Dominion of Canada; yet as far as the banks' business with the western provinces is concerned, I venture to state that in the older parts, where the farmers have been carrying on for years, the banks have lost comparatively little. In the older parts of Saskatchewan, for example, I believe they have not lost even up to 5 per cent. That being the case, coupled with the fact that the banks are not treating us as they should, I feel that more time should have been given to the consideration of this Bill, and an endeavour made to rectify conditions that exist to-day. For that reason I am going to support the amendment of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If nobody intends to rise to support that motion, I will say a few words.

Hon. G. W. FOWLER: I should like to speak to it very briefly. I am going to favour this motion, not because I am so very much dissatisfied with the Bank Act in general, but because of the necessity for more deliberation by this House upon its terms and details. The Bill was introduced into the other House some three or four months ago, but we have had only about a week since it came here, and in the meantime we have had to transact a great deal of other business; consequently this Bill has not received the attention which I think is its due. I had occasion to complain a number of times, when the Bill was in Committee, at the unseemly rate of speed with which the various Chairmen were pushing the Bill through. You cannot gabble off the head-notes of sections of a Bill and get a thorough understanding of the matter so as to enable you to pass a seasoned judgment on matters of policy. For that reason I am in favour of extending the Bank Act for another year, and giving plenty of time to produce a really considered Bill.

There are two points upon which it is very difficult to get a Bill that will be workable: as to the security given to the shareholders and creditors of a bank by reason of the affidavit or affirmation which the Manager and the President are obliged to make, and also as to the matter of auditing. These are the two things that should afford security for the people who are dealing with a bank either as shareholders or in any other capacity.

As I pointed out at the time the Bill was passing through this House, the audit as at present constituted is an absolute absurdity, affording not the slightest security to anybody, not even to the heads of the bank. I say this without fear of successful contradiction by any person who understands what an audit means.

The affidavit, as it is now, is another absurdity that offers no security to anybody except to the person making it that, no matter how untrue it may be, how false and deluding it may be, he will not be convicted because of the character of the statute. The words "knowingly" and "negligently" provide a way of escape which will save any man who has taken the oath. It is a glaring thing, of course, that nobody but a fool or a lunatic would be guilty of, but the affidavit that an ordinary clever man would make, though he be a crook, would enable him to escape by means of those two words in the first and second clauses of section 153.

I am not prepared at the moment to advise any way in which to overcome these difficulties. In regard to the affidavit, it is very difficult to overcome that on account of our system of general banks with branches. If each bank were an individual institution, the manager and the president could both be called upon to make the necessary affidavit, and we might take out the words "negligently" and "knowingly," because then they would be in a position, without excuse, to know just exactly the position of that bank; but, with our system of a great central bank with branches scattered all over the country, that would be impossible. I suggested that each manager of a branch should be obliged to make an affidavit with regard to the affairs of his branch, this to be forwarded to the head office, and upon it the General Manager and the President should make up their statement. That suggestion was not received very favourably. I do not know why. It appealed to me as being one method of solving that difficulty, because the branch manager who made a false affidavit covering up his fraud would be liable to the penitentiary. I suppose it was not favourably received because the great majority of this House was so much enamoured of the Bank Act and our banking system that they could not see any flaw or wrong in it anywhere.

I do not see how the audit could be remedied under any circumstances, because it is impossible for an auditor to know the circumstances of every account that comes under his supervision in a bank. It would be impossible for him to know that, unless there were an auditor for each bank. That is the only way in which it could be done, because, unless the items that make up the assets are all correct as to value, the auditor cannot make a proper return, and he protects himself by a clause at the end of every audit that it is made up from the books, and he does not vouch for their correctness.

Our Bank Act, as it is before us, is defective in those two very important particulars—one as to the audit, and the other as to the affidavit which the Genueral Manager and the President are forced to make; and I venture the assertion that, no matter what the circumstances are, you will never know of a General Manager or a President being successfully prosecuted for fraud in connection with the making of false affidavits. Prosecutions may be undertaken, but never successfully carried through, because the onus is upon the Crown to prove that the act was done knowingly, and he would be a bungler indeed if that word did not afford a very safe way of escape.

For these reasons, and many others which I will not take time this morning to formulate, I think this House would be well advised if, in spite of the adjuration of the leader of the Government, it were to accede to the wishes of those who have moved this resolution, to let the matter stand over for a year. Nothing would be hurt by it. It has been done before, and the heavens did not fall, and there was no financial crash whatever. This was done the very last time the Act was revised, and there was no disturbance either in the financial world or in the heavens above us. Then why should it not be delayed? There is a large body in the other House who are anxious for delay, but the steam-roller is in working order, and I suppose it will smash into utter flatness the resolution of my honourable friend here; but under all the circumstances, and particularly those that apply to the passage of the Bill through this House, I do not think that that should be the result. If the people of Canada could have been collectively sitting in the galleries here, and have seen this Bill passing through this House, they would be simply astounded. The Bill, containing 160 clauses, some of them of the utmost importance, relating to practically the whole financial system of this country, has been railroaded through this House in two or three sittings. Such haste would not tend to give that collective individual who represented the intelligence of Canada, sitting in that gallery, a very high opinion of this House; and for that reason I think this Bill should be delayed.

There are other important considerations. This House dealt with an amendment in regard to section 88, which was made in the other House. I was not present at the time it was up, and I am not sure that I would not have voted to restore section 88 to its original form, for I think that section is a very important part of our banking system. I think it is very important that men should have an opportunity of securing the bank, and thus of getting an additional amount of money to use in their business, which they could not do if the bank were to rank simply as an ordinary creditor. It is like a second mortgage on a ship, which, as lawyers all know, ranks ahead of the first one, for emergency reasons. So it is with section 88 of the Bank Act, and I am quite favourable to the bank, for I believe many a man has been saved from financial destruction by reason of section 88 enabling the bank to come with perfect safety to his rescue. And we must remember, in that connection, that the bank is handling trust funds, and therefore it should be secured in every possible way for this money, and not be on the footing of an ordinary person who merely sells his goods. Therefore I say that section 88 is, I think, all right and ethical.

I have taken a great interest in this Bank Act because I know how essential a good financial system is to the business welfare of this country. I made up my mind that I would examine carefully into all the different ideas that were put forward with regard to our banking system. I was very much struck with a pamphlet issued by, I think, the Bank of Montreal. I do not know who was the author of it, but it is a very cleverly written pamphlet, and it moderated some of the extreme views which I was beginning to entertain with regard to the bank system. I do not think that the bankers have anything to fear from a proper examination of the Bank Act. On that ground I think this motion should pass.

I am not going to take up the time of the House any further. I have said all I could say, and the fate of some of my amendments last night proves that my arguments have not very much weight with the honourable members of this House. Therefore I will not urge anything further.

Hon. J. J. DONNELLY: Honourable gentlemen, from long association I have learned to have a great deal of respect for the opinions of the honourable member for Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope), but I cannot see my way to support him in what he has just moved. I wish therefore briefly to state my position.

We have heard from the West and from Quebec, particularly during the time that the Bill was in Committee, what was supposed to represent the opinions of the common people in regard to the way they were treated by the chartered banks of Canada. Now, I think I may claim to be for the common people of Ontario, particularly in Western Ontario, and, speaking as a borrower, not as one who has a great deal of money tied up in bank stocks—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Ontario spoke for itself last night.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: Yes. I will refer to that later on. In my opinion, the banks as at present constituted are giving very satisfactory accommodation to the people of Ontario. I have heard it stated that bank managers are somewhat aristocratic and hard to approach. In our section of the country, when there is a farm sale it is a common thing to see the bank manager come out. In fact, I remember seeing the manager of the local branch of the Royal Bank attend three different farm sales and act as clerk, just to get in touch with the farmers. The bankers advertise in the local papers, soliciting the business of the farmers who wish to borrow money to put cattle on the grass or to buy cattle to feed them in the winter time, and I do not remember hearing of a solitary instance in the last five years where a farmer complained that he had not been getting reasonable accommodation from the banks. I am speaking only of Western Ontario.

The honourable gentleman from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) made reference to what happened in Ontario yesterday. I think that it shows that the people are getting back to a normal state of mind, which will create confidence in those who have thought of investing their money in the business enterprises, not only in Ontario, but throughout the country; and I think it will help to establish that confidence more firmly if we renew the bank charters for ten years, as proposed.

Reference has been made to some system of longer credit. So far as the Province of Ontario is concerned, that Province, either rightly or wrongly, has provided for such a system; that is, it is taking in money and paying 4 per cent for it, and arranging to lend it out on farm loans. Since the Province has started on that line, if there is any great desire for such a system, it seems to me that it is the duty of other Provinces to follow that example. It is not necessary that we as a Dominion should take up the matter. Let each Province take it up.

For the reasons which I have just given, I will not support the amendment moved by my honourable friend.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I intend to support the amendment moved by my honourable friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope). Ever since this Bank Bill has been before Parliament, especially when it was in the other Chamber, many arguments have been urged for extending the charters for only one year, and I have yet to hear any conclusive argument on behalf of the Government or the banks to show why the measure could not be left over as proposed for a year that it may be given full consideration. Who would be hurt if the charters were extended for one year only? Next year you could make the extension for ten years. Similar action has been taken before, as has been pointed out by honourable gentlemen who have just spoken, and no harm has resulted.

There seems to be an impression that those in the other House who opposed the extending of the bank charters for ten years had some wild scheme in their minds to change the Bank Act. I want to say, honourable gentlemen, that that is not so at all. Members of the Progressive Party in the other House are just as conservative in all matters of business as any other class of men in the country. There may be one or two men and one or two papers who have advocated radical action, but that does not apply to the farmers generally.

Under the present Bank Act, during the last two years, huge sums of money extending into five or ten million dollars have been lost in connection with banks; not lost merely to the banks, but to the people of Canada as well. If four millions have been lost by the Union Bank through speculation in Great Britain, nearly every dollar of that sum of money comes from Canadians, because practically all the shareholders are Canadians. If in the case of a previous bank failure a still larger sum was lost, that was all lost by Canadians. In view of the facts, why the tremendous rush to grant charters for ten years. Surely the happenings of the past two years point to the fact that there must be something wrong with the Bank Act or we would have been able to prevent such huge losses. Remember, honourable gentlemen, that there may be several other banks in a similar position for anything we know. The general public did not know anything about the Merchants Bank being in trouble. Its failure came as a bolt from the blue. We did not know anything about this other bank being in trouble. Its losses were a surprise to us. Surely, then, in view of the happenings of the past two years, it is not too much to ask what my honourable friend from Bedford recommends, that the charters be extended for only one year and that we examine the matter more fully. Next year we can extend the charters for the full term of ten years. I am sure it is the desire of everybody here to improve the Bank Act; but with regard to the main clauses, which the Banking Committee and the Government have endeavoured to strengthen and improve, two prominent lawyers in this House, men who have given a great deal of time and study to this sort of legislation, stated yesterday afternoon in this House, in my hearing, that what we were doing to the Bank Act this year was making it weaker, less in the interest of the public, and more in the interest of bank managers taking all sorts of chances and engaging in speculation with impunity. If that is the case, why should not the measure be allowed to stand for a year, in order that we may see if we cannot improve on what is at present proposed.

At this stage of the proceedings, honourable gentlemen, I do not intend to say any more on the subject except that I am heartily in favour of the amendment proposed by the honourable member from Bedford. It is a move in the right direction.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I will say but a few words in answer to those of our colleagues who have supported the amendment that is before us. It is claimed in support of the amendment that the Senate has not given proper time and study to this important piece of legislation, and that if we deferred it for another year we might devise some additional banking facilities, mainly for the farmers and the people of the West. Well, I do not believe that there is any evidence of hurry to pass this piece of legislation. I heard the honourable gentleman from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) state that it was being hurried through, but he was not with us for nearly half the time that we devoted to the study of this Bill. The honourable gentleman has been following for a few months, he states, the inquiry that has proceeded in the Banking Committee of the other House, before whom the principal banking experts were heard and examined, and theorists and faddists as well had a chance to explain their views. The machinery of Government controlling the operations of this Act has been at the disposal of that Committee for three months, and a more thorough inquiry into the working of the Bank Act has never been made since Confederation. All the information gathered has been at the disposal of honourable members of this Chamber. Many of them attended the meetings. I have been told that there was often quite an influential representation from this Chamber in attendance. We are all aware of what has taken place. We all know that this measure is not the Act of ten years ago. We all know that the Department of Finance, with the assistance of the Department of Justice, has made every effort to strengthen this Act in the light of the experience gained in recent years.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not know of an important change that is made.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the fault of my honourable friend

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He told us that a very important clause, 88, was passed when he was not present. There was printed a memorandum regarding this Bill, and the Bill itself shows in italics all the proposed changes in the Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: My honourable friend, I think, does not wish to do me an injustice; but his insinuation that I was not here—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not an insinuation; it is the statement made by my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have taken as much part in the discussion of this Bill as any honourable gentlemen in this Chamber, as a matter of fact. I was not here at one session, it is true.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At two sessions.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: At two sessions. I did not suppose the Bill was going on. I did not know that this Bill was going to be rushed through at railroad speed; I thought it was going to follow the usual course. That is the reason why I did not think it necessary to be here on that particular occasion. Otherwise I would have been here. But the Bill has been railroaded through this House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not complaining about my honourable friend not being here; but I would point out to him that if he will examine the Bill from the first clause to the last he will see that in most important particulars the Act has been strengthened in the light of the experience gained by the Department of Finance.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It happened that those particular parts were passed in my absence. If the honourable gentleman considers that the change in the clause respecting the affidavit strengthens the Act, I have a different understanding of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may differ on that point. But why do we renew the charters for ten years instead of every year? In the first place, I may say, that was the principle laid down by the Fathers of Confederation—men of experience. Some of them were highly esteemed as men of finance, and their names have gone into the financial history of Canada. It was thought that when the Bank Act should be reviewed at the end of the decennial period it would make for greater stability to give the banks an assurance of being able to continue their activities for another ten years.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But that does not mean that a member of this Chamber or of the other may not move at any Session for the amendment of any clause of the Act. Amendments have been made during the last ten years. The Act has been amended on two or three occasions that I can recall. So we are not closing the book for ten years. We say to the country: "We have reviewed the Bank Act and have strengthened it wherever we could, and the banks may continue to carry on." It is important that any of those institutions which are essential to the development of the country should feel that its operations and activities are not viewed with suspicion by the Parliament of Canada. If any honourable member of this Chamber or of the other feels at any time during the next ten years that there is reason for an amendment, it will be examined and discussed.

My honourable friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) has told us that he desired to have this Bill postponed because he thought there might be devised in connection with it some additional system for the farming community of this country. What did he say? That he recognized that any system devised for that purpose would be an additional system. I take it for granted that we could not link up with this Act any system of rural credits. The Minister of Finance has said that he would study the situation and see what Federal action might be taken along that line, but that any such action could not be intimately connected with this Act. If we are all agreed as to that, this Chamber or the other can examine next year into the possibilities of Federal action in the field of rural credit. But why delay this Bill? In passing it now we are simply stating to the people of the country that things are going well and are normal. If this conservative House of Parliament declares that there is something seriously wrong with our system—that there is something to mend—are we not creating suspicion throughout the land? I believe it is our duty to say, "All's well." "But," I may be told, "look at the Merchants Bank look at the losses in the Union Bank." So long as human beings are at the head of institutions on this planet, such accidents will happen. Let us take the system as a whole. I think it is a credit to Canada and it devolves upon this Chamber especially to see that all is well with the Bank Act and the banking institutions of Canada.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Pope was negatived.

Hon. H. W. LAIRD: I move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House to strike out subsection 4, which was added at the last sitting.

Briefly, honourable gentlemen, because I do not wish to take up the time of the House, the Bill as it originally stood placed a restriction upon all banks engaging in any kind of insurance business. At the sitting last night an amendment was passed making an exception of one particular bank, the chief office and branches of which are situated in one Province. As there is only one bank in Canada in which such a condition prevails, the Weyburn Bank, the only logical conclusion one can come to is that the exception is made to provide that the Weyburn Security Bank can engage in the hall insurance business.

I wish to move this amendment for several reasons: in the first place, because there is a vital principle involved by reason of the fact that Parliament in general legislation of this kind picks out one particular banking institution and accords to it privileges which it denies by statute to every other similar institution in the country.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: No.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: If any honourable gentleman wishes to question that, I would be glad if he would do so now.

Secondly, because it introduces a precedent which, if followed to its logical conclusion, would lead to the banks being allowed to engage in all kinds of insurance business, thus displacing and affecting a very large industry in the country.

The third, and one of the main reasons why I propose this amendment, is because the amendment was passed in this House last night, I submit, under misrepresentation of the facts. It will be remembered that the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), in supporting his amendment went to a great deal of trouble to detail at great length the evidence which he said was given by the General Manager of this particular bank at the investigation held before the House of Commons Committee. Amongst other statements that he made was one that 37½ per cent of the profits of this institution were derived from hail insurance. As I heard the evidence of Mr. Powell before that Committee, and could not recall any reference to that question, I went to the trouble of looking up the evidence which he gave on that occasion, and I find not one single reference to the fact that the bank conducted hail insurance business at all, or that 37½ per cent of its profits were based on the hail insurance business. I submit, therefore, that this amendment was passed under misrepresentation—I would not say wilful misrepresentation; but nevertheless incorrect representations made on the floor of this House, and which, no doubt, induced a great many honourable members to support it.

I have nothing further to add; but for the three reasons that I have given, I would like to see the amendment which I propose supported by this House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I happen to have in my hand proof—not from the evidence—of the statement I made last night with reference to this Bill. I hold no brief for the Weyburn Bank.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: What evidence have you?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I submit that this is evidence. It is a telegram signed by H. O. Powell, General Manager, and I think also President of the Weyburn Bank.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: To whom?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: To Henry T. Ross, Secretary of the Canadian Bankers Association.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Where is he?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think the gentleman is occupying a seat at the end of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: You were dealing last night with the evidence given before the Commons Committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I did not say last night that the evidence given was about hail insurance.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Amongst other things you said that 37½ per cent of the profits of that institution were made out of hail insurance.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I detailed the evidence given before the Banking Committee, and gave evidence from my own knowledge from information received. I will read this telegram:

> In last three years Weyburn Security Company has turned hail insurance commissions to bank on an average per branch of seven hundred fifty five dollars per year Stop Bank managers act as agents of Weyburn Security Co., at all points and receive no part of profits from business done other than salary received Stop Unless business of bank and company is combined and expenses borne jointly many of small branches would not pay expenses for years Stop Interest of customers are protected better in this way than by leaving them to agents who are only looking for their commission Stop Not letting the managers share in the profits takes away any objectionable feature.

I simply give that as an evidence that, as stated by the bank manager, they have some 17 branches which—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is this bank an insurer?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No, their managers are permitted to place hail insurance for their customers in the bank. It is part of the banking business, and the commissions go to the bank, not to the agent at all. They claim that many of these branches would be put out of business if they could not write hail insurance, and that some of them would have to be closed.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Has that bank been doing it?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Oh, yes, for years.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Under what authority?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It did not require any authority.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: It is quite clear that it is not the mouthpiece of the Senate that is speaking, but the mouthpiece of the Canadian Bankers Association, because the honourable gentleman quotes a telegram received by the Secretary of the Canadian Bankers Association; and I am in a position to say as well that the resolution prepared amending the Bill that is now before this House was either drafted by the Canadian Bankers Association or was changed by them before it was put into the hands of the mover.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That would establish the fact that the members of the Bankers Association are ready to deprive themselves of any advantages that would accrue to them from the insurance business, and are liberal enough to allow a small bank in the West to do that business in order that it may prosper.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Why not let the Bankers Association pass this Bill? Why should we bother about it?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I may be mistaken, but to my mind the point has not been made very clear that the Weyburn Security Bank does not take on one cent of liability in connection with the placing of this hail insurance. All it does is to allow its managers in the small branches to act as agents for hail insurance companies in the placing of hail insurance; and the commission received goes to the bank, because the bank pays the salaries of its managers.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Would that be of any great advantage to the farmers of that district?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not know that it is of any great advantage to the farmers. If the bank were assuming any responsibility whatever for this hail insurance, I for one would not support it in any shape or form, because I have seen the holdings of hail insurance companies in the West entirely wiped out in one year. But the bank incurs no liability whatever, and under the circumstances I think it is advisable to permit the managers to act as agents.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why should a bank interfere in the matter at all except to give their agents a free hand?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: That is all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand that they do more: it seems that they take the revenue from the agents of the hail insurance company. That is a different thing. If the bank management permit their branch managers acting as agents to take the commission, that would be all right.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: That is all they do.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand that the bank takes the income.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But, I say, that is all wrong.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Why?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is a different thing. That is a departure; that is allowing the bank to engage in the business of procuring hail insurance. I say the bank has no business to act as an agency for hail insurance, but that its managers should be allowed to act as agents, receiving the commission. That is not a distinction without a difference.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend would allow the branch managers to keep the commission and not return it to the bank?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes. I say you are violating a principle when you permit the bank to do it; you are making a departure from the general rule, because banks are not allowed to engage in other business. Why make a departure to give this bank the right to do that? I do not think it is necessary for legislative action to be taken to permit the banks to allow their managers to act as agents.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We have just prohibited them from doing so under a general clause, and this is the exception.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Whether it is perversity on the part of the honourable gentleman I cannot say; but he fails to grasp what I am driving at. You prohibit banks from engaging in other business, and by this exception you permit this bank to engage in the business of procuring hail insurance. It is not done by the agent, but by the bank.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: And their charter does not allow them to do that.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is one thing that happened when I was not here.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It shows the necessity of your always being here.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I want to give the bank the opportunity of supporting its managers in selling hail insurance or life insurance or any other kind of insurance; but I do not want the bank to have the right to become the general agent for hail insurance. As I say, there is a very broad distinction there, which my honourable friend, with his natural acuteness, must see.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: May I tell my honourable friend what is the law that we passed last night. It came from the Commons, and is new:

> No manager or agent of any bank shall act as agent for any insurance company or for any person in the placing of insurance, nor shall any bank exercise pressure upon any borrower to place insurance for the security of such bank in any particular insurance agency, but nothing herein contained shall prevent such bank from requiring such insurance to be placed with an insurance company which it may approve.

This is the principle, and the banks generally have already prohibited their agents from demanding that the clients of the bank should place the insurance with any such company. This bank in the West, the smallest bank of the seventeen, has been allowing its managers to place risks with hail insurance companies, and the commissions upon such risks have been returned to the bank and represent 37 per cent of its profits. Only with that supplementary profit has it been able to develop in small places where otherwise there would be no banking facilities. We were asked to make an exception, and the Senate last night voted to allow that exception in the case of a bank doing business in one Province only. As my honourable friend from Regina has said, it can only cover one institution of that kind. Up to the present time that bank has had the right to do that business under the law.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: So have the others.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So have the others—and the others are agreeable to this clause prohibiting the branch managers from placing insurance of any kind. We are making the single exception of a small bank in the West. If the western members are against it, surely that will influence the members from the East; but I think it would be somewhat cruel to cut this bank off from that profit with one fell blow at this moment.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is not the thing. If that were changed so that their agents were permitted to take insurance, it would be different.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would not agree with that at all, because I want the bank to get the profit, and not the agent, the bank having developed that insurance business as a side line.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But if the agent gets the profit it helps to pay his salary, just the same.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: It does not help the bank.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, it does, because the bank is able, or the local manager by that means is able, to get the profit on this insurance. If he does not, I object.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: In any case we permit the bank to get a profit by engaging in hail insurance. I think the banks have scope enough without engaging in insurance in any way, or taking a profit out of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not the banks: it is one bank.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: But why should you except one bank? If it is right to prohibit other banks from taking profits in this way, why allow one bank to do so?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There may be reasons underneath.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not agree with my colleagues from the West in this matter. I have had a good deal of experience in the West, and I know that some of the small banks there have been a great blessing to the districts in which they function. This is a case of a small bank which I understand has been doing a very creditable business in the district in which it functions, and I do not agree with my honourable friends who say it is violating a principle. I understand that the large chartered banks of this Dominion are making a concession to this smalier bank to enable it to carry on. I understand the situation to be that this bank has been making about 37 per cent of its earnings from this hail insurance work, without injuring anybody in the province, and it is simply asking for the right to carry on the business that it has been performing for years. It is not some new venture, and the larger banks have been generous enough —and God knows they are not generous very often—to waive their right in the interest of this smaller bank; consequently I feel that they ought to have that right.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Laird was negatived.

The motion for the third reading of the Bill was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 217, an Act respecting the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners.

He said: The port of Three Rivers is increasing in importance, partly through the large development of water power on the St. Maurice River, and it has been suggested that the Harbour Commission should be brought up to date, and the Bill is now before us to give it the powers that we give to the large ports. I may say that this Bill is a replica of that passed in 1913 for the port of Vancouver, so that simply with these remarks I will move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I do not propose to take up much time in speaking of the principle of this Bill, or rather in objecting to it, because I expressed my opposition to this class of legislation when the Vancouver Harbour Bill was before this House. I venture to say that it is a vicious principle for the Government of Canada to hand over to Harbour Commissioners large sums of money and abdicate the functions of Parliament in regard to the expenditure of that money. I do not direct my remarks to this particular harbour, for it seems to me that the Three Rivers harbour is one that would appeal to the mind of almost any man who saw it, and who had confidence in the development of the shipping resources of Canada, and the commercial importance of our various ports.

But in connection with all these harbours the Parliament of Canada has been called upon from time to time to hand over very substantial sums of money, running into many millions. With the exception of the harbour of Montreal, the principal sum handed over by the Parliament of Canada has never realized a cent of interest, so far as I can recall. We give Harbour Commissioners appointed by the Government full responsability for the expenditure of those large sums of money, entirely irrespective of Parliament having any voice in the application which those commissions make of those moneys. I say it is subversive of the well—established principle of government, that Parliament should assume the responsability of saying how public money should be expended, that power should not be delegated to bodies who are not only irresponsible to the people of Canada, but frequently do not possess business responsibility to justify their being entrusted with the expenditure of substantial sums.

We have already placed upon the Statute Book many Acts of Parliament constituting Harbour Commissions for various ports throughout the length and breadth of Canada, and I have no doubt that from time to time we shall be called upon to do so; but so long as this class of legislation is placed upon the Statute Book we may be assured that the commissions so appointed by the Government of the day will from time to time come back to the Government of Canada and ask for the loan of substantial sums of money for the improvement of their harbours; and scarcely in any case will they contemplate paying a cent of interest upon those extraordinarily large sums which we give to them. Yet we have abandoned all right and authority to have anything to say about the expenditure of the money.

In my judgment the harbours of Canada should be improved, but they should be under the supervision of the Government of the day, which should assume full responsability for the expenditure of every dollar, and they should not abdicate their functions by allowing these small harbour commissions to expend these large appropriations without our having any control over them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that I have not studied the question sufficiently to state that I fully agree with my honourable friend when he lays down the principle that all those harbour commissions should be swept aside, and the work directed from Ottawa absolutely.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have not gone so far as that. There might be a consultative body, or something of that kind; but what I object to is handing over to them exclusively the public money for expenditure as they may decide.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, my honourable friend is not interpreting the law as it is on the Statute Book, or as it is applied by the Department. We allow the Harbour Commission of Montreal or that of Vancouver a certain credit, say the privilege of issuing their bonds for a certain amount, for works which they detail in a memorandum to the Government. When Parliament has voted money to allow such a harbour commission to carry on its work, it has not finished its duties, nor do its responsibilities stop there. We will have a Bill here shortly for increasing the borrowing powers of the Harbour Commission of Montreal by $10,000,000; but this amount is based upon estimates, and that Harbour Commission will not be authorized to enter into any contract covering any part of that sum without submitting it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which in turn brings a recommendation to Council for approval; There is thus a direct control over the kind and quality of work, and also over the procedure to be followed in the carrying on of that work. That control may be more or less relaxed, or more or less severe; that is a question of administration. The more severe it is the better for the general interests of the country, I would say.

Where I perhaps agree with my honourable friend is in the further supervision of the expenditure of the money by these various commissions; and I may inform this Chamber that the Department of Marine and Fisheries is examining the question of a better and more uniform and more satisfactory audit system. This news will satisfy my honourable friend to a certain degree, as to a large degree it satisfied me. We must see that the expenditure is a needful and fruitful one, and these harbour commissions may be able to satisfy the country that they will be able to pay interest on their bonds. Some of the Commissions have failed to pay, but I observe by the statement of the Minister of Customs that Three Rivers has a clean bill of health on that score. I hope that Three Rivers will develop. It has three active men of substance forming its Board. There is no plan presented to the Cabinet for actual development; I suppose the plans are in course of study, but honourable members of this Chamber who have gone to Three Rivers know how enthusiastic are all the people around there for the future of that port, and quite justly so. I move, in consequence, the second reading of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I ask my honourable friend if it is the intention of the Government to maintain the same personnel as now exists in the Harbour Commission of Three Rivers?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, from the eulogy passed upon them by the Minister of Customs, who is the representative of Three Rivers, I think there can be no better. He explained what the men were in the community. He said:

> They are all men of great ability. One of them is the managing director of the St. Maurice Lumber Company, which is a subsidiary of the international company wihch has mills in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia too, if I am not mistaken. They have a paper mill in Three Rivers, which some of my friends in the House had occasion to visit a short time ago when they were in Three Rivers. It is the largest paper mill, I think, on this side of the line. Another of the gentlemen is a hardware merchant who has made a success of his business; and the other is a wholesale drygoods man. Every one of them can live without a salary as commissioner, but if we are going ta pass an act to incorporate a commission we must look ahead to the future development of the port, and I am satisfied, in view of the development of the St. Maurice region, that before many years the harbour of Three Rivers will require a staff of engineers and men who will have to devote their whole time to the interests of the harbour.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That would seem to mean, then, that it is the intention of the Government to appoint a Commission of gentlemen other than those named, whose duty it would be to give their whole time to the service. Probably a number of us in this House hesitate to approve of the legislation proposed because of what has occurred in conection with other harbour commissions. We recall that in a harbour as important as that of Vancouver a competent man has been removed from the position of Harbour Commissioner within the last year and a half, and a gentleman who, it is recognized, has little if any qualifications by way of ability to fill that important position has been substituted. I know that in the city of Hamilton the same thing was repeated. A gentleman who was running an elevator, and was a janitor in a little building there, was recently made a member of the Hamilton Harbour Commission, though he does not know anything about harbours, and has no qualifications whatever to justify his appointment. His choice for that position has been a joke in the city of Hamilton. Likewise, in the city of Vancouver, I think a certain druggist in the centre of British Columbia, who used to dispense pills on prescription, has been appointed to administer and handle perhaps $5,000,000 of public money which has been appropriated to be spent on that harbour.

Are we going to repeat that in Three Rivers and throughout Canada? It seems to me that is the main question that stands in the way of many of us feeling free to agree to legislation of this sort, unless we know that responsible, stable, competent, qualified men are to be appointed to fill those responsible positions. If the honourable leader of the Government can assure us that the gentlemen who have heretofore acted as members of the Harbour Commission of Three Rivers are to be continued in those responsible positions I would not feel like raising objection to the proposed legislation, because that harbour is developing and is increasing in importance, and is found to be a rather important port as compared with some other ports in Canada. But if those gentlemen are to be removed from the positions they now occupy, and by reason of this legislation others similar to those who have been appointed at Hamilton and elsewhere are to be given jobs, and to devote their whole time to this work, then in my opinion Parliament is making a mistake in handing over large sums of public money to be expended and administered by irresponsible men of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, I would not like to make a statement that would not be confirmed by the Minister principally interested in the port of Three Rivers, and having the main responsibility. Even if I did, he may not be in office, or be even a member, in a year or two, or whenever this Parliament is dissolved. We must look at the legislation as it is. If the Cabinet has the appointment, the Cabinet has the responsibility, and will be judged by its selection. In a democracy the people every four years have a right to pronounce upon the action of the Government. I do not see any other remedy. I cannot bind the Government. I might perhaps bind this Government for a certain period. But for how long? I could not bind the successors of this Government. It is true, we may be in office for the next 15 or 20 years—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or we may not be 24 months. We do not know.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The Minister might have this clause changed so that one or more of the Commissioners should be appointed by the Municipal Council of Three Rivers.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That might not be much better.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The Municipal Council, belonging to the locality itself would naturally appoint somebody living in the community of Three Rivers. There is nothing in this Bill to show that anybody from any part of Canada may not be appointed one of the Harbour Commissioners of Three Rivers.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has been a member of the House of Commons for the city of St. John. Would he ever have thought, as member for St. John, of making a recommendation that would not reflect credit upon his own judgment. Is it not in the last analysis a question of self-preservation?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: In regard to the Harbour Commission for St. John, one of the clauses of the Bill was that the City Council should have the appointment of one or more of the Commissioners; and I think the Board of Trade was to have the appointment of one, or some say in the appointment. The Commissioners were not to be appointed entirely by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That was the old system, which prevailed at the inception of all the ports in Canada. Montreal at one time was administered by a Commission composed of delegates from the Corn Exchange, I think—

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: The Mayor, the Board of Trade, and the Shipping Interest.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Shipping Interest and the Board of Trade and one representative of the Government. So this is the first evolution. Naturally the Government feels that it should have the complete appointment and the full responsibility.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: The old system produced good results.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. this day.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Routine proceedings.

ISENBERG COAL MINING LEASES

INQUIRY

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, I have no desire to be too persistent, but I would like to renew my question of yesterday regarding the withdrawal of the Isenberg fiat. I understand that the honourable leader of the Government practically promised to let us have an answer to-day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am sorry I lost sight of the question, for I could have made inquiry to-day. I will try to obtain the information before we adjourn this evening.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I would like to make a suggestion to the honourable leader of the House. I understand there are coming down from the other Chamber some resolutions or a Bill in relation to the construction of railways, in some of which we in the Maritime Provinces are interested. I presume there is some report or recommendation from Sir Henry Thornton or the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railway in regard to the railways in question, and as the time will be very short, perhaps my honourable friend could arrange to have any such report available to lay it on the Table when the matter comes up for consideration.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: I will inquire. I feel sure that the proposed legislation is the result of deliberations and conclusions reached by the National Railway Board, but I will ascertain if there is a memorandum from the Board.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 217, an Act respecting the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—interpretation:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I understand these definitions are exactly the same as the definitions in the other Harbour Commission Act?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Practically.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I observe that when the Bill came up in the House of Commons it was stated that it was copied from the Vancouver Act. I have asked the honourable member from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) to compare the Bill with the Vancouver Act, which he has in his hand.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: So far as I have got they are the same.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—commissioners:

Hon. Mr. CROWE: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government what remuneration the Commissioners are to receive?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the Act there is no figure mentioned. That is generally arranged by the Board, which makes a recommendation—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They are not paid by the Government anyway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —and the fees that are to be paid must be approved by the Department.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They are paid out of the revenue of the harbour?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Subsection 4 deals with that.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: If this is copied from the Vancouver Act, I hope the Commissioners will be paid as the Vancouver Commissioners were paid when the Vancouver Act came into force. They received practically nothing for a number of years. I hope the Three Rivers Commissioners will be dealt with in the same way.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: That is kind.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: In 1919 the Commissioners received something like $3,000 a year, and two years later, I think, this was increased to $4,000 or $5,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We should urge them to begin moderately.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: I hope so.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Subsection 4 deals with the payment of Commissioners:

For their services, the president and the other commissioners may be paid out of the revenues of the harbour such remuneration as the Governor in Council may determine.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: There is no amount stated.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: No.

Section 5 was agreed to.

Sections 6 to 24, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 25—repeal:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What is the nature of the Acts that are repealed?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Will you please read that section, Mr. Chairman?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN (reading):

Chapter fifty-two of the statutes of 1882, chapter forty-one of the statutes of 1883, chapter seventy-six of the statutes of 1885, chapter ten of the statutes of 1892 and chapter twenty-six of the statutes of 1895, are hereby repealed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: These are all Acts which concern the Harbour of Three Rivers. The first one, creating the Commission, was the statute of 1882, and it has been at various dates amended. We are now wiping out all that legislation, to be replaced by the present statute.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is no legislation but that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Section 25 was agreed to.

On section 6 (reconsidered)—officers and employees:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would ask the honourable leader of the Government to look at section 6 again, as I want to ask a question with regard to it. The "corporation" seems to be given absolute power to fix the salaries of all employees—Harbour Master and other officers, assistants, engineers and clerks. Has the Government reserved power anywhere to check those salaries or take any control?

Hon. Mr. CROWE.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No. The Government trusts the Commissioners for that. This is based on the Montreal provisions.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: I wanted to ascertain whether or not there was any check on that.

Section 6 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 223, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.

He said: This Bill provides that the only fee for salmon canneries shall be $20 a year. it is the result of an inquiry which took place, the Commission recommending the change. The rate heretofore has been $500. In addition to the fee, license holders will have to pay for every case of 48 one-pound cans.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is there any tariff of that kind at present?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should like to have some information from my honourable friend as to the extraordinary recommendation made by the Fisheries Commission and embodied in this Bill, by which licenses have been reduced from $500 annually to $20. Canada is not sailing through such a prosperous period that we can afford to reduce the licenses of salmon canneries, which up to the present time have been amongst the prosperous industries in Canada.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Probably the fees that are added make it up.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have asked my honourable friend with regard to that, and I understand a charge is already made along these lines.

I observe by the Bill that a charge is imposed of four cents for each case of 48 one-pound cans, or the equivalent thereto, of sockeye salmon, or the equivalent thereto, of any other species of salmon. If there is no equivalent charge imposed at the present time, and this charge would without any uncertainty bring up the revenue to the license fee already fixed at $500 per annum, there might be some justification for it; but I would point out that when the late Government came into office there was a loss annually of $250,000 in the administration of the British Columbia fisheries. That led to a revision of the licensees, and I think I am justified in saying that when the late Government went out of office the deficit was practically covered. Unless my honourable friend is prepared to show to the House that we derive some advantage from legislation of this kind, it were very much better that such a Commission had not been appointed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought I had a memorandum from the Department, but I cannot find it just now. We may postpone the second reading of the Bill, and I will furnish the information to my honourable friend.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend also be good enough to look into the question of whether this is the entire result of the inquiry made by the Commission, which was very pretentious not only in numbers but, in the changes that were to be brought about by its inquiry.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will.

The debate was adjourned.

INLAND REVENUE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 225, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen in perusing this Bill will see that it covers various amendments to the Inland Revenue Act. I could perhaps better give the explanation concerning each clause in Committee of the Whole. There is no special principle involved.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All right.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Bradbury in the Chair.

On section 1—definitions:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

"Departental Analyst" as at present defined in the Act means an analyst in the employment of the Department of Customs and Excise or any Department of the Government of Canada. The analyses made for the purposes of this Act are made in this Department by employees classified as Junior Chemist, Assistant Chemist or Chemist.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—certificate of analysis of Departmental or Provincial analysts to be evidence:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As we are here to improve Bills, I would call the attention of honourable gentlemen to the substituted section 180:

In every prosecution under this Act the certificate of analysis of a Departmental analyst or a provincial analyst shall be accepted as conclusive evidence of the alcoholic contents of any beer, wash or spirits and the suitability of any beer or wash for the manufacture of spirits, and of the authority of the person giving or issuing such certificate, without further proof of appointment or of signature.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Does the honourable gentleman think that the word "conclusive" is very strong?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I was wondering whether the expression was not too strong.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I should think that if it were changed to "prima facie" evidence, it would be enough; then it would throw the burden of proof upon the accused.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think that would be sufficient. That is why I draw it to the attention of the House.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Is there any reason given why "conclusive" was put in? There may be some Departmental reason.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

The provision for acceptance of certificate of analysis as evidence is now found in the Inland Revenue Act as subsection three to section 180, and only applies to prosecutions under this section. The Department has experienced considerable difficulty lately in connection with the evidence of analysis in prosecutions under sections 185 and 204. It is therefore proposed to strike this subsection out of section 180 and add a new section so as to make this provision for evidence applicable to the whole act, and in doing so to provide also that the certificate shall operate as conclusive evidence of the authority of the person giving or issuing such certificate without further proof of appointment or of signature.

It is all right, that far.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Prima facie would carry that out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Heretofore, in prosecutions under sections 185 and 204,, the certificate of analysis has in several cases been refused acceptance unless produced by the analyst himself appearing as a witness. Furthermore, the Department was required in a prosecution some time ago to file evidence to show that an employee of this Department classified as a chemist in the laboratory of this Department was really an official of the Department, and that he was the party who had signed the certificate produced. This applied even in a prosecution under section 180. If such evidence has to be produced in every case, it will mean that we will have to prove the appointment and signature of all the chemists of the laboratory, which might involve serious difficulties and delays and possibly considerable travelling expenses for the official concerned, as they might be called upon to appear in the courts from one end of the country to the order.

I am ready to accept an amendment to the word "conclusive."

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would move that the word "conclusive" be struck out, and that the words "prima facie" be substituted therefor.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Is it not a little odd that my honourable friend has not the reason given for a change in the law as it is at the present time? The word "conclusive" does appear to be very strong if you are to make the analysis of any analyst that happens to be appointed conclusive. He may be a poor analyst. There may be another analyst opposing him who gives evidence quite adverse to his. You cannot say all analysts are of equal authority, and under this section, whether the analyst be poor or good, his evidence must be accepted as "conclusive," and no amount of contra evidence can be taken to upset it. If "conclusive" refers simply to the man being an analyst, it would be all right; but in the other case it seems to be very strong. Why was it put in? Was there a Departmental reason?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will accept the amendment, and if the Minister in charge of the Bill in the House of Commons has any reason in favour of maintaining the word "conclusive," he will do so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is its application?—to the Canada Temperance Act?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Inland Revenue Act.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I think that the honourable gentleman will find that the explanation is this. A clause has been drafted by an officer of the Department, and during the last two years they have got rather spoiled by Orders in Council and things of that kind. Outside of a Departmental officer no one would suggest making a certificate of that kind conclusive. I have had a good deal of experience with Acts containing the phrase "prima facie."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is to say, it is conclusive until it is shown to the contrary.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes, the defendant gets a run for his money, anyhow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If we are all agreed I accept the words "prima facie" in substitution for "conclusive".

Section 2, so amended, was agreed to.

On section 3—deodorizing, etc., of denatured alcohol:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I would like to ask the Minister whether the words "methylated spirits" and "denatured alcohol" mean the same thing exactly.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The same thing.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is my honourable friend departmental analyst.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, for alcohol.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that denatured alcohol covers a much larger field. Methylated spirit is much more dangerous, because it is impossible to separate the wood alcohol.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is where your analyst is all wrong.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was not the analyst who gave me the information. The reason given is that in Part X of the Act, as amended by chapter 52, 1920, which part deals with alcohol, the words "methylated spirits" do not appear, and the words "denatured alcohol" and "specially denatured alcohol" only are defined. Hence the necessity for altering section 265 as suggested.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Does this new section, which we are putting in after repealing the old one, include methylated spirits?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed it does.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It would if so defined in Part X, but unless Part X so defines it, methylated spirits do not seem to come into this section. What is Part X, as a definition of denatured alcohol?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In Part X the words "methylated spirits" did not appear, so we are striking that off and harmonizing this clause with Part X, which describes denatured alcohol and specially denatured alcohol, which comprises methylated spirits.

Sections 3 and 4 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD BILL

SECOND READING AGAIN POSTPONED

The Senate resumed from June 21 the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand for the second reading of Bill 206, an Act to amend the Biological Board Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have the following statement in explanation of the Bill:

The proposed amendment to the Biological Board Act is desired by the Board. The facts connected with it are briefly as follow:

1. Arrangements were made for a discussion with the Board at the meeting of its Executive, which was held in Ottawa on the 21st ultimo, as to the most efficient organization that could be effected to enable the Department and the Board best to assist in the development of the fisheries. A copy of the letter to the Chairman of the Board suggesting such conference is attached. The Chairman replied stating that he was sure that the members of the Board would be glad to have the conference, and stating that the suggested date and hour would be satisfactory. A copy of his letter is attached, which is dated the 16th ultimo.

2. At that conference there was unanimity of view as to the desirability of the proposed reorganization, and the Board appointed some of its members as a committee to meet the departmental officers on the following day. There were two meetings with the subcommittee. They were quite informal, and at these it was decided that the best method would be to increase the membership of the Board by the appointment of an additional departmental officer, and two members representing the industry. As the conferences were informal, no record of them was made.

When I proposed the Bill for second reading I think I read to the House the intention of the Department. It is found in the letter of the 15th May by the Deputy Minister addressed to Dr. A. P. Knight, Chairman of the Biological Board, Kingston, Ontario:

This Department has in contemplation aggressive measures looking to the betterment of our fisheries. Much of the proposed work will necessitate the assistance of scientific work. Such assistance could of course be arranged for by building up a competent scientific division in the Fisheries Branch; but as in the nature of things such a division would have to duplicate in considerable measure work which the Biological Board would likely be doing, the Department is of opinion that the end in view could be most efficiently and economically brought about by a proper reorganization of the Biological Board so as to bring it into closer relationship with the Department.

I am informed that there will be a meeting of the Executive of the Board here on the 21st instant. That date would be a suitable one to us for a discussion of the whole matter with the Board. Hence we shall be prepared to meet the Board for such purpose in the Library of this Department,(Room 473—at 3 p.m. on that date. If the same hour on the following day would be more convenient to the Board it would be equally as satisfactory to us. Kindly let me know immediately which date will be most suitable to the Board.

So the Board met and conferred with the Department, and approved of the Bill that is before us.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: What is the date of the meeting?

Hon. Mr. Dandurand: Apparently the Board met on the 21st May. Now, all that is altered in the Act is the constitution of the Board, and I have heard no good reason why we should object to that proposed amendment, which is accepted by the Board itself.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Would the honourable gentleman read the letter of the Chairman of the Board giving his reason for the change?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is the Chairman's letter:

Alice Street, Kingston, May 16th, 1923.

A. Johnston, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 15th in which you express a desire to meet the Biological Board and discuss a closer relationship between it and the Fisheries Department.

In reply I beg to say that I am sure the members of the Board will be glad to meet you in the Library of the Fisheries Department, Room 473, at 3 p.m., on May 21st.

Yours truly,

A. P. Knight.

The statement which I read a moment ago from the Deputy Minister says that at that Conference there was unanimity of view. This is all the information that I can furnish.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Is there any record of the number of members of the Board who were present at that meeting?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes; I gave that information the last time the matter was before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I request that information, because I am informed that this subject of having additional members on the Board was not mentioned until the Board had practically dispersed, when it was brought up on May 21st. The matter was never laid before the Board till last moment, when some had left. Half the members of the Board do not know even now about this Bill. Excepting Prof. Knight, all the chief members of the Board were absent. I understand that Prof. Bailey, Prof. Prince, Prof. MacClement, Prof. Ruttan, and the Director of the Pacific Biological Station, Prof. Fraser, were absent, and were unaware of the proposed reorganization. Dr. Huntsman, who was present and approved, is not a member of the Board, but a paid employee. Not half the Board were aware of this drastic Bill. It was got up in a hurry and rushed through, passed the Commons before anyone was wise to its real character as the former Bill camouflaged. It must be rejected, or referred to a Committee, so that proper and full information, and copies of all letters, memos to the Minister, etc, can be in our hands. I understand that the information placed in the hands of the Government is entirely inaccurate.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Who is the author of that information?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I am the author.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Do you vouch for it?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I vouch for it being correct as far as I know.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Rather an extraordinary state of affairs.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: While I am the author of this, the information was given to me.

Hon. Mr. FARRELL: Are any members of the Board opposed to this?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I am told that all scientific members of this Board who have been spoken to about it, are opposed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend allow me, then, to move to discharge this order and place it on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow, so that I can obtain information from the Department? I will draw the attention of the Department to the statement of my honourable friend, and I will see if the Department will be able to give us official information as to the opinion of the Board.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is, of the individual members.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know, but I will have to be satisfied as to who were present at that conference, and whether they were representative.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: What happened at an informal meeting of the Board is not a very satisfactory thing to have in the way of a statement; but if we could get at the views of some of the leading members of the Board it would help us to know what they are doing. My objection is largely that outlined by the honourable member from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Turgeon) the other day. The Bill is not very well expressed, either the old Bill we are amending or the new one. The Government has now the right to appoint two, and then the Bill says one by the university. It means one by each university.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, by each university.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Wherever a university has a picked biologist he comes on to that Board?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: The danger about this Bill is that when you enlarge the Board from 2 to 5 you bring on to it men who are not professional or scientific; and the scientific men, whose services you are getting for nothing, and said by the fishing men in the Maritime provinces to be very satisfactory, you may lose if you ask them to sit with men who are not professionals. The honourable gentleman knows as well as I do the difficulty that he has as a lawyer in sitting on a committee and arguing with a man who never studied law, and does not know anything about it. It makes a situation sometimes almost intolerable. That is the danger you are running in opening the gate for putting men on that Board who are not scientific men.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not want to broaden the debate on a matter which will have to be adjourned, as we have important legislation before us. The only thing I am not ready to admit is that scientists would not benefit by the information that experienced practical men in the fisheries business could bring to them. But we may discuss that when I get further information from the Department.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Still, experience in buying and selling and exchange is of no value in biology. The two things are entirely distinct. If the Department want what might be called a business section, they might have, as suggested by the honourable member for Gloucester, two or three or five men to serve on the same principle as these scientific men, giving the Board the benefit of their services gratis.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: As my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) says, there are important measures on the Order Paper. Why not take the course that we followed the last time, and refer this matter to a Special Committee? The Secretary of the Scientific Board is the Commissioner of Fisheries for Canada, Professor Prince, who must, I take it, have been present at that information meeting of the Board and is in touch with the other scientific men, the representatives of the Universities. Why not give us a small Special Committee, so that we may call Professor Prince and the other interested persons?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: With authority to sit during the summer months.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No, we will not sit during the summer months. We will agree to report more quickly perhaps than the Committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, etc.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will ascertain from the Department if in their view the matter is of such importance that it ought to be dealt with at this Session. If so, I will give them a chance to be heard by a Special Committee. If not, we will postpone the matter until next Session.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Say, next February.

The debate was adjourned.

DRY DOCK SUBSIDIES BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 220, an Act to amend the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, 1910.

Hon. Mr. McMeans in the Chair.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—advances during construction on second-class docks.

Hon. Mr. TODD: I think the honourable leader of the Government promised that before we went into Committee on this Bill he would inform us whether there was any loss or any profit to the Government in connection with this change of subsidies, in the matter of the drawbacks.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Here is a statement I have from the Department on Bill 220:

There is only one first class dry dock which is being constructed under this Act, namely, the one at Courtenay Bay, St. John, N.B., the constructing firm being the St. John Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Limited. A subsidy agreement is also in existence for the construction of a second class floating dry dock in the Harbour of Vancouver with the Burrard Dry Dock Company, Limited, of Vancouver, B.C., to which this proposed amendment would also apply.

The St. John Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Limited, have made very considerable progress and expect to complete the dock in the fall of this year. The cost of the dock for subsidy purposes was fixed at $5,500,000. The third progress certificate of the Government engineer shows that on the 15th of December last work to the extent of $4,409,980.55 had been done, leaving at that date the balance of the work to be completed at approximately $1,450,000.00; but since then an estimated expenditure of approximately $750,000 has been made which would leave an expenditure of apprrox mately $700,000 to complete.

Under the subsidy agreement the total bonds to be issued by the Company must not exceed $3,826,272.34, that being the sum that the subsidy of 4½ per cent on the cost of the work, $5,500,000 will in 35 years pay, both principal and interest.

The Minister can only authorize a bond issue not exceeding 75 per cent of the subsidized amount—in this case $4,125,000. As the issue bears 5½ per cent it amounts to $3,826,-272.34.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is for the bond issue?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the bond issue. (Reading):

The following bonds have been issued with Government approval:

1st series..	$884,276 50
2nd series..	392,825 68
3rd series..	836,320.47
making a total issued to date.. ..	$2,113,422 65
Balance still to be issued..	1,712,849 69
	$3,826,272 34

The Company has been allowed subsidy only on 75 per cent of the work actually completed, the Department retaining a drawback of 25 per cent of work actually done.

The Company has still only $700,000 work to complete, whereas there is a total of $1,712,849.69 of bonds withheld which it will be entitled to issue on completion. The company have represented that the retention of this large amount of bonds makes it difficult for them to finance their operation, and have asked an amendment to the Act which would retain to the Department or Government ample security for the completion of the work, while the Company would be materially aided in its financing. The amendment suggested is that when any dock has, to the satisfaction of the Chief Engineer, been completed to 75 per cent of its cost, that thereafter the drawback or retention be limited to 10 per cent, instead of 25 per cent and that the Company be allowed, with the approval of the Minister (or preferably the Governor in Council) to issue its bonds up to 90 per cent of the subsidy actually earned. A security of 25 per cent should be maintained up to a certain stage in the progress of the work but when the undertaking has been carried on satisfactorily and is so far advanced that suspension of work would be a decided loss to the contractor the retention can reasonably and safely be reduced.

If the proposed Bill is passed a retention in the case of the St. John dock in the form of work done would be $480,000 plus floating, and other plant of the Company of an estimated value of $750,000 or a total security of $1,230,000 for the completion of $700,000 worth of work to be done.

The Department would have as security in the event of default at the present time in addition to the floating and other plant referred to valued at $750,000 the dock itself of a value of $4,800,000 a total of $5,550,000. The Government, under the provisions of the Dry Dock Subsidy Act, would take over this property, operate the dock, and the sole charge which the Government would be obligated to would be its guarantee to pay interest on the $2,068,882.76 worth of 5½ per cent bonds at present outstanding, and the additional bond issue which would follow the subsidy proposed to be authorized under this amendment, amounting to, in round figures, $480,000. The Government, therefore, would have property valued at $5,550,000 and the only liability a 5½ per cent bond issue of $2,549,000 for 35 years.

Putting the proposition another way: Up to December 15, 1922 the Company had been paid subsidy at 4½ per cent on 75 per cent of the $4,050,000 and since that time have done $750,000 worth of work, making a total now of $4,800,000 worth of work done and materials provided, on which it would be entitled under existing legislation to subsidy on (75 per cent of $4,800,000) $3,800,000.

The amount now proposed would give the Company subsidy on (90 per cent of $4,800,000) $4,320,000, or a subsidy at 4½ per cent on an additional amount of ($4,320,000 less $3,800,000) $520,000. 4½ per cent on $520,000 equals $23,400.

As the dock is expected to be completed in October, 1923, when total subsidy would be earned, the present Bill pays them $23,400 subsidy say, four months earlier thon they otherwise would receive it so all the Government is out is the cost, say, at 6 per cent on $23,400 for four months, which is $468, but with the result that the contractors are put in an absolutely easy financial position enabling them to rush the work and ensure the dock being available for receiving and repairing vessels by the date mentioned, namely, October, 1923.

I do not know whether or not that statement is sufficiently clear. I will pass it over to my honourable friend if he desires.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to ask the honourable gentlemen a question or two in connection with this matter. I must say that when he read over the statement so quickly I could not grasp the meaning of it.

In the first place, if I remember rightly, under the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, in connection with this and similar dry docks, the Government guaranteed a subsidy for 35 years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It used to be at 3½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. REID: A subsidy for 35 years 3½ per cent. That was all that the Government was liable for.

The St. John Dry Dock Company would issue bonds against the dry dock, as was done previously by other dry dock companies. I understand that other dry dock companies issued bonds and deposited them with a trust company, and transferred the subsidy as security for the interest on those bonds.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: As far as it goes.

Hon. Mr. REID: The guarantee of the subsidy was all that the Government or the people of Canada were liable for. That, as I understand, is the law on the Statute Book.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: That was passed in 1910.

Hon. Mr. REID: I never knew that the Government had any power to change that law without coming to Parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there was an Act passed in 1917.

Hon. Mr. REID: Was there?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Increasing the interest.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: There were half-a-dozen acts.

Hon. Mr. REID: I will explain what I mean, and perhaps the honourable gentleman will correct me if I am in error. I am only asking for information.

I had no idea that the Government could change that law without coming to Parliament; but it has been brought to my attention within the past month by a person selling St. John Dry Dock bonds that a St. John Dry Dock bond is just as good as a Dominion Government bond, because it has been guaranteed by the Government as to principal as well as interest.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When would that guarantee have been given?

Hon. Mr. REID: It is given now—it is given all the time. The honourable gentleman can answer that question. Every time an issue of the St. John Dry Dock has been made an Order in Council has been passed authorizing the Minister to guarantee the principal as well as the interest, or there has been a general Order in Council granting such authority.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was done by Order in Council, and I am asking the honourable leader of the Governmnet what Act was passed empowering the Governor in Council to do that. That is one of the questions that I am asking.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; my honourable friend is asking another.

Hon. Mr. REID: Well, that is one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: "Has a guarantee been given for the principal?"

Hon. Mr. REID: I will put it another way. Would the honourable leader of the Government tell me on what authority the endorsation is made of the bonds of the St. John Dry Dock, guaranteeing the principal as well as the interest? I do not know whether I can make the question any plainer.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is a fact that that has been done, is it?

Hon. Mr. REID: I make the statement that that has been done. I will tell you why I make that statement. A person selling bonds in my constituency asked me if St. John Dry Dock bonds were as good as Dominion bonds. It was advertised in the press that these bonds were as good as Dominion bonds, because they were guaranteed. I asked the Department of Public Works, and I got the answer yes.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Oh!

Hon. Mr. REID: That is my authority, for what it is worth.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: What better do you want?

Hon. Mr. REID: As I understand it, the way that the Government have secured themselves is this. They have reduced the amount, or figured out that they would not guarantee the subsidy, say on five millions, or a great deal less. But what I want to know is, on what authority could the Government guarantee the principal? Will this present Bill enable the Government, if they have reduced the subsidy, to increase it or to give practically a guarantee for the principal and interest, including this increase, as they have done in the past? That in one question.

The other question is this. We have an agreement, made many years ago, where by there was granted a subsidy of say one per cent less than what we are granting now. That means nearly $50,000 a year. Will that apply for all the bonds that have been issued? In other words, will the Government pay an additional $50,000 annually for 35 years on the St. John Dry Dock or on the Vancouver Dry Dock, or on any others that are now under construction, or that may be constructed in the future? I should like to have that information.

I do not want to do anything to prevent the carrying out of these works at St. John, Vancouver,, and elsewhere; but what did strike me was this, that if you are entering into an agreement it should apply from now on, and, secondly, the Government should not guarantee bonds as to principal and interest unless an Act of Parliament has been passed authorizing that to be done. I do not think there should be any way of changing the law without the passage of a Bill by Parliament—

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There surely cannot be.

Hon. Mr. REID: And I cannot believe that has been done. However, I remember that we passed an Act in which we only guaranteed the interest but not the principal; and, believing that an Act granting the necessary authority may have been passed within the last two or three years without my noticing it, I would like to have information on this point before the Bill passes.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: It may be that the amendment passed in 1917 will give the information for which the honourable gentleman is looking. It says this:

> No bonds, debentures, or other securities, shall be issued with respect to and as a charge upon any dock until it has been established to the satisfaction of the Minister that not less than one million dollars have been spent on the work and the material upon or for such dock, and that there are no outstanding and unsettled liens, encombrances or claims upon or in respect of such dock, but thereafter the Minister may permit the issue of bonds, debentures, or other securities, and any subsidy mentioned by this section may, with the approval of the Minister, be assigned to a trustee for the holder of such bonds, debentures, or other securities, and the subsidy shall, in that event, be payable directly to such trustee, but, until the dock has been completed to the satisfaction of the Minister, the total amount of the bonds, debentures, or other securities issued shall not at any time exceed seventy-five per cent.

Hon. Mr. REID: That is all right. That is exactly what I stated. I remember that the clause requiring that $1,000,000 be spent was inserted as a guarantee that the parties going into the dry dock business had sufficient capital to justify them in undertaking the work. After they had invested $1,000,000 of their own money in it, the Government was justified in allowing them to issue bonds. That clause, as I understood it, was inserted for the purpose of preventing any dry dock company from issuing bonds until it was certain that they had proceeded with the work and had actually expended $1,000,000 on it. Then they were allowed 75 per cent of the value of the work done. But that was only to allow them to issue their own bonds; and as I understand it, when they issued the bonds there was a provision on them stating that the Government was paying a subsidy equal to the interest on them. Those bonds would be deposited with the trust company, and they would assign that subsidy, and it would cover the interest. I now understand that they have capitalized in some way so as to make principal and interest all come out of the subsidy.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is no authorization in that for the guarantee.

Hon. Mr. REID: I do not know where it is in the Act. I have asked the leader of the Government to tell me on what authority that change has been made so that the principal is guaranteed through the subsidy; and, second, whether this really means an increase, and, if so, of how much per annum.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Will my honourable friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel), who is familiar with the dock, kindly inform me and the rest of the Senators who do not know, what is the size of the dock and what proportion is completed.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I could not say exactly. The fact is that in addition to the building of the dock itself there are other things to be done in order to enable the Company to draw the subsidy, for instance, a shipbuilding establishment must be attached to it with full equipment.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What is the size of the dock?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: 1,150 feet long. When completed, it will be, I presume, one of the biggest dry docks on the continent of America. I think it is about 125 feet wide; at all events, it is to be wide enough to take in the largest vessel in the Royal Navy; and it is so arranged that it can be divided into two docks at the same time, so as to take in two ordinary sized vessels.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Is it a floating dock?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: No, it is built out of the solid rock and so is practically indestructible. The last time I saw it it was more than half completed inside—cement sides and that sort of thing. It is expected that the dock will be completed this fall; but whether that expectation will be realized I do not know.

It is not only a dock, but a shipbuilding and equipment establishment; and the company has to keep it under way all the time, or it will not get the subsidy. The matter is complicated in that this company had also the work of building the breakwater and doing a large amount of dredging and other construction work. As a matter of fact, the building of the dry dock was forced on the original company. They did not tender for the building of the dry dock at all, but they were not permitted to have the other work unless they also undertook to build the dry dock under the Dry Dock Subsidies Act.

The original Act was passed, as the honourable gentleman says, in 1910, and it has been changed, I suppose, eight or nine times since. The dock, when it was first built, was called a first class dock; but at that time it was only 950 feet long. Since then the length and width and depth have been increased, and the value has been increased from $4,000,000 to $5,500,000, and the subsidy has been increased from 3½ per cent until it is now 4½ per cent. All those changes have been made not by Order in Council but by Act of Parliament, and anyone can find the Act in the Statutes.

As far as the present amendment is concerned, while personally I have no interest in it whatever, I cannot see any possible objection to easing up the financial strain on these people, because no doubt it is great. They are keeping two or three hundred men employed all the time, and it must take considerable money to do the financing. I think they are doing good work, and that the dock, when completed, will be one of the finest, if not the finest, on the continet.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Is the principal guaranteed also?

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The company has to provide the money, and all that Parliament does is to pay them 4½ per cent for 35 years.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But the honourable gentleman from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) says the Government is guaranteeing the principal.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The country guarantees nothing, so far as I know, except to pay this annual subsidy.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The ex-Minister of Railways says that when he was in the Cabinet he saw them guaranteeing the principal.

Hon. Mr. REID: No, I never said anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I thought you did.

Hon. Mr. REID: No.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I understood you to say that.

Hon. Mr. REID: Let me repeat again. I explained that the Subsidy Act was passed when I was a member of the Government; but I said bonds had been issued by the present Government under which they had guaranteed the principal, but that so far as I knew I did not remember it having been done. It possibly may have been.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman says that bonds have been issued by the present Government. They have not been issued by the present Government—by the company.

Hon. Mr. REID: What I say is this. The St. John Dry Dock Company has issued bonds, and, as I understand, the bonds would be issued without anything else but the subsidy guaranteeing the interest. The bonds of the St. John Dry Dock Company that are sold to the public to-day have an endorsation upon them by the Department of Public Works guaranteeing both principal and interest.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have just sent for the Deputy Minister of Public Works, and I will be able to answer my honourable friend in a few moments. If such a thing happened, it would mean that we varied the Sudsidies Act at some time, because the Government can only act with Parliament's authority. We have the Acts before us, and if no such authority is granted by them to the Governor in Council, then my honourable friend is in error.

Hon. Mr. REID: The Government may have protected themselves and probably have. I do not know whether there would be any serious loss. What may have happened is this. If they were issuing bonds without any guarantee from the Government, the subsidy is transferred to a trust company as security for the interest. They may have reduced the capital amount and guaranteed the principal. The point I wish to make is that I do not think the Government should have the power by Order in Council to guarantee the principal of any bonds unless there is some Act of Parliament giving that authority.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend need not have any fear on that score. It goes without saying that the Governor in Council will not guarantee bonds without power to do so; and the power can only be got from Parliament. I am quite willing to give my honourable friend all the information that he asks for; but I may inform him it has nothing whatever to do with the present Bill. The object of the present Bill is to add a clause.

Hon. Mr. REID: Let me explain whether it would have any effect. In the first place, until this Act is passed the St. John Dry Dock Company issue bonds at 3½ or 4½ per cent, whatever it may be.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I find by the letter it is 5½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. REID: At any rate, it is at a certain rate. Now, this Bill increases it by one per cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no; it does not touch the rate at all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend tell us how the subsidy is fixed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will again read the letter which I have received in explanation of this Bill from the Deputy Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have heard that read. But how is the subsidy fixed in the first place? On the cost of the dock?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The cost has been fixed for the purpose of the subsidy at $5,500,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The subsidy represents practically the cost of the dock. Is that the case?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, it is 75 per cent of the amount at 4½ per cent for 35 years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is this drawback you want to reduce?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The drawback is fixed at 25 per cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of the cost of the dock?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of the cost of the dock—that is to say on progress estimates. The contractor or the company is advanced only 75 per cent on his progress estimates. This Bill seeks to authorize the Department to pay 90 per cent when 75 per cent of the work has been done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is, to advance to the contracting company—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To allow the issue of bonds up to 90 per cent. That is all that this Act means. Of course, I realize that on hearing a letter read on a technical matter, one sometimes may not catch the point.

Hon. Mr. REID: That is the reason that I thought that the honourable leader of the Government in reading it over was stating that it was to be 5½ per cent instead of 4½.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. REID: That answers one question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The 5½ I mentioned is what they themselves are actually paying. We are only paying 4½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. REID: Now there is only the other question. Do those bonds that are issued and sold to the public at 5½ per cent bear an endorsement clause which guarantees both principal and interest?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not the bonds before me, and I do not know. But the question before us is this: will we vary the Subsidy Act to give authority to the Department to allow the issue of bonds upon 90 per cent of the progress estimates when the dock has been 75 per cent completed?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of course, it costs the country the difference between 90 per cent and 75 per cent, inasmuch as the bonds go into circulation, That is to say, 15 per cent at 4½ per cent is what is costs the country. Has my honourable friend a computation of what that cost would be?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have. It is a negligible sum.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me that is we alter the contract it should be made chargeable to the contractor.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will see the whole letter in Hansard as I read it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not agree with that. That computation is entirely wrong. The difference in interest would be $23,000 for the year, as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; I think I see it clearly.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: It will be $3,600,000, not $3,800,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: $4,800,000 worth of work done and material provided, on which they would be entitled, under existing legislation, to 75 per cent on $4,500,000, and I have here $3,800,000.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: No; $3,600,000.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Why do they not apply for the subsidy?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are asking that we should allow them about 15 per cent of the drawback, so that we should retain about 10 per cent. It will make no difference in the end, except the fact that we are paying them that 15 per cent to-day, while under the Act they would only be entitled to be allowed bonds—which comes to the same thing—in October next. Now, the question is whether the country is losing by advancing them 15 per cent of that drawback now, instead of waiting till October.

Hon. Mr. REID: The honourable leader has cleared up the one question about percentage, and that is satisfactory. I do not wish it understood that I am opposing the finishing of the dry dock, but, as I understand the Bill, when summed up, it means that we are guaranteeing a subsidy of 90 per cent instead of 75 per cent, so far as the Government or the country is concerned, if the company operate the dry dock successfully.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, finishes its work.

Hon. Mr. REID: Finishes its work and carries on its operations. Then of course there would be never any loss to the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, there would.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend need not go so far. They earn their subsidy when they finish the dock.

Hon. Mr. REID: I grant you that. We are paying a subsidy now on 75 per cent. If by any chance, after the work is completed and carried on, the company fails and the Government has to take over the dry dock, the Government would have 25 per cent invested in it, which they would have in taking it over; but in guaranteeing 90 per cent, if by any chance the dry dock company failed, of course the Government would have lost the difference between 75 per cent and 90 per cent in taking it over.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: More than that. The country would lose it anyway if you accelerate the payments.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are now holding 25 per cent of the dry dock, and we are asked, for what remains of the work to be done, that we relinquish 15 per cent as drawback, inasmuch as the Department feel that when the contractor has reached that point it is safe for them to reduce the drawback to 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. REID: As I understand it, on 75 per cent of the cost of the dry-dock we pay a subsidy. Now we are going to increase it to 90 per cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: We have to pay the whole thing when it is completed; what difference does it make?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We do not increase the subsidy.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You accelerate the circulation of bonds to the extent of 15 per cent four months earlier than you should; that is what it comes to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: For the purpose of subsidy the amount has been fixed at $5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. REID: If it costs that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Whether it costs that or not, the Government limits itself to 4½ per cent on $5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. REID: But suppose the dock cost only $4,500,000, would we have to pay a subsidy on $5,000,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They get subsidy on the amount mentioned in the contract—$5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. REID: As I understand, the subsidies were granted in this way. If you entered into a contract for a drydock you only paid subsidy on the cost, and if it cost more than $5,500,000 that was the outside limit to which the Government could go. But supposing this dock cost only $4,000,000 or $4,500,000, as I understand the honourable leader of the Government, we are going to pay on $5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My information is that it is a fixed amount, which does not vary whatever it costs the company or the contractor. It is a fixed amount entered in the contract, upon which the Government agrees to pay 4½ per cent for 35 years, whatever may be the cost of the work.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the evidence of the cost of this dock?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A proposition is made to the Department, and the figures are given, and the amount of the subsidy is worked upon a certain sum, and the Chief Engineer goes into those figures and reports upon them.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But there must be progress certificates.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is later on. I am speaking now of the signing of the contract.

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. But we are dealing now with the handing over of the bonds.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. We have made a contract, and we have said we would pay 4½ per cent to the St. John Dry Dock Company upon $5,500,000. Previous to 1917, or 1919—my honourable friends who brought in the law will recall when they altered the law—there was no payment until the dock was completed. My honourable friends—and we have nearly a quorum of the Cabinet here—altered the law and declared that 75 per cent of the work as it was being carried on and done would be paid on progress estimates.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That means the cost, if it is based on the cost.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I said 75 per cent would be paid; that is, would be allowed in order that the company might issue bonds to that amount.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But my honourable friend is advancing the extraordinary proposition that a maximum amount is fixed, and that it is immaterial whether the dock costs that or not, for the Government must issue subsidies accordingly. Surely that is not the law.

Hon. Mr REID: Section 8, subsection 1, paragraph 3, was repealed and the following substituted:

If of the first class, a sum not exceeding four and a half per cent per annum of the cost as fixed and determined.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Consequently there must be a determination of the cost.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At the time of the contract.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. because the cost cannot be determined until the work is completed.

Hon. Mr. REID: As I understand, there will be bonds issued for the total $5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, not until the contract is completed. It is supposed to be completed in October next.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. What will be the cost when completed?

Hon. Mr. REID: I understand that the bonds that are being issued are guaranteed as to both principal and interest, by the Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am asking the Deputy Minister if those bonds are guaranteed as to principal and interest, by the country, and his answer is that the principal is not guaranteed; simply the payment of the subsidy.

Hon. Mr. REID: When the dock is completed what is the total amount of bonds the dock company would be entitled to issue?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the statement which I read the total amount of bonds they will be authorized to issue will be $3,826,272.34.

Hon. Mr. REID: But the amount fixed on which we would guarantee the subsidy was a great deal larger than that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, I said $5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. REID: The bonds are sold to the public on the understanding that the principal is secured as well as the interest on account of that subsidy.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I think the practical question is whether the advance of this money or security will enable the contractors to complete the dock, or if the failure of that would so cripple them that the Government would have an uncompleted dock on its hands which would be an eyesore to the port of St. John.

Hon. Mr. REID: What is the endorsation on the bonds?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Government has nothing to do with the issue of the bonds; the Government contents itself by giving 4½ per cent on $5,500,000. The company issues its bonds and deposits them with a trust company, transfers its Government subsidy to that trust company, and those bonds issued are redeemable by annuities, so that arrangements are made by the trust company by which it declares that it has the Federal subsidy, and if that is not sufficient, it has further moneys that the Governement may have deposited or guaranteed. The trust company may declare that those bonds are secured by the Government subsidy, but the Government does not guarantee the bonds; it is the trust company that declares that they are secured by the subsidy for 35 years of the Federal Government, because the trust company has received the bonds. The Federal Government only binds itself to pay 4½ per cent on $5,500,000.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The trust company makes the statement?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, the trust company makes a statement that the bonds are guaranteed as to principal and interest, which means that they have in hand a sufficient amount to pay the capital and interest, according to the issue of the operation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the actual cost of this dock when completed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am told that the Department does not know and will not have that figure.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Do I understand that the debentures are to be issued on the basis of $5,500,000 entirely irrespective of the cost of the dock?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. As I understand, the debentures are only issued to the amount of $3,826,272.34.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: On what basis?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What is guaranteed is the subsidy—the 4½ per cent subsidy on the $5,500,000 for the 35 years. That is all that the Government guarantees.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But my honourable friend does not seem to appreciate that what the House wants to know is the cost of this dock. The subsidy, after all, is determined by the actual cost of the work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The Government has made a contract on a fixed amount.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know; the contract presupposes that the cost is to be $5,500,000, but if it does not reach that amount, then the subsidy must be decreased proportionately.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. Remember that my honourable friend made that contract himself; it is a contract of 1918.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Here is the law of 1917 as to dry docks, chapter 27:

> If of the first class, a sum not exceeding four and a half per cent per annum of the cost as fixed and determined.

That is to be paid half-yearly during a period not exceeding 35 years from the time the Governor in Council has determined under this Act that the work has been completed. Now, the cost must be determined; it is not simply the cost mentioned in the contract. It would be senseless to use the word "determined" unless we attached a meaning to it, and the only meaning that can be attached is that the cost must be ascertained.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: By the Chief Engineer of the Department.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has just read the statute of 1917, which says that the cost is to be determined under subsection 2.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Section 3 of the Act of 1917 states that the total amount shall not exceed 75 per cent of the amount actually spent for the work and the materials.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, on the progress estimates.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it is all based upon the cost of the work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has read that first subsection. Will my honourable friend look at paragraph a:

(a) If of the first class a sum not exceeding four and a half per cent per annum of the cost of the work as fixed and determined under subsection 2 of this section.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have just referred to subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. My honourable friend is in error. Subsection 2 of section 8 is to be found in the Act of 1910. It reads:

The cost on which the subsidy shall be calculated shall be fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister, based upon a report of the Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works, accompanied by plans and specifications of the proposed works, and such cost shall include the cost of all necessary equipment, machinery and plant and any sum bona fide expended or to be expended by the company in the purchase of a site for the dry dock, but shall not include the value of any site received or to be received by the company by way of bonus or gift; and the amount of the subsidy shall be so fixed and determined before the agreement for payment of the subsidy is entered into.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But then you must read the other part.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No the contract is made and the amount is fixed in the contract under the conditions that I have just read; and that is all that interests the Government.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Where is the contract? Have you the contract?

Hon Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Are we not to give effect to the law passed subsequent to that? That is the law of 1910.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend is reading what shall take place regarding progress estimates.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That has nothing to do with the original contract.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. I am reading as to the issue of the bonds. The next proviso is this:

Provided, however, that half yearly payments on account of the subsidy at the rate of four and one-half per cent per annum on seventy-five per cent of the cost of all work done and materials provided at the time of such payment may be made during the construction of the said dock.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: "During the construction of the said dock."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yet my honourable friend goes on to say that the Government has nothing to do with the cost of the work; that we must go back to the amount fixed in the original contract, entirely irrespective of the expenditure made upon the dock itself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But it depends upon the question my honourable friend is putting to me. If he asks me what is the total amount of the contract, I will tell him; but if he asks me what is the amount to be paid on the progress estimates, that is another question.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED (reading):

No such payments on account shall be made unless the said chief engineer reports that the work of construction of the dry dock with respect to which the payment is to be made has been done to his satisfaction, and no subsidy shall be paid except payments on account as aforesaid unless the Governor in Council, in the manner prescribed in section ten of this Act, has determined that the work required by the agreement is completed.

So the amount fixed in the contract is based upon the determination of the value of the work at its completion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, that would be my construction of the Act, and I certainly should oppose any legislation that is based upon any other principle than the actual cost of the work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will surely not oppose nor obstruct the carrying on of his own contract. If my honourable friend in 1918 made that contract, I think he will be sufficiently business-like and honourable enough to stick by it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Let us have the contract.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We want to stick by the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All right. Let us see what variation we are making in the contract. The contract is based upon the Act. All I desire is that we should understand properly the proposition before us; and then we can say yes or no, and that will be the end of the matter. But I do not want to have this legislation judged on a statement of fact or law which I deem to be erroneous.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: At the present juncture we cannot afford to spend uselessly a great deal of time in discussing academic matters.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is true.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend, in order to shorten up the debate, submit the plain question to the Department of Justice, whether the amount fixed in the contract is arbitrary, entirely irrespective of what the work costs?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Or whether the amount of the subsidy may exceed the cost of the work.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No, no.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not particular about that. But the logical conclusion of my honourable friend's (Hon. Mr. Dandurand's) argument would be this, that the Government might be called upon to pay a subsidy amounting to 5½ million dollars, as specified in the contract, although the work done might cost only half of that. Does my honourable friend claim that that was ever the intention of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or that the Act would warrant that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, I should like to see an opinion from the Department of Justice; and if that were the case, I would have no hesitancy in saying that a colossal fraud was being perpetrated upon the Government and that any proposal to grant to such contractors any concession differing from the contract should not be entertained for one moment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would draw my honourable friend's attention to this situation. He seems to be very much surprised at conditions that we meet with every day. Instead of a dry dock, the Public Works Department wants to put up a building, and it calls for tenders, and the lowest tender is $5,500,000. The contract is awarded. Would my honourable friend claim that, when he put his signature to that contract to pay $5,500,000 on the completion of the building, he is interested in the amount of profit that the contractor is making? That is the situation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is an entirely different matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, it is exactly the situation. Let my honourable friend turn it over in his mind. He will find at all events that I am simply explaining the situation; I have not made that law; my honourable friend helped to make it. I have not made that contract; my honourable friend helped to make it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The law was passed in 1910. You must have assisted in passing it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The contract was made under the terms of the law of 1910, subsection 2 of section 8.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Your Government passed that law, but we improved it in 1917.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: You did not improve it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friends opposite made it easier.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friends altered the law in order that the contracting companies might be allowed to be paid on progress estimates. It was provided that the dry dock company might receive 75 per cent of the amount of the work done on the construction. Now, under the law passed by my honourable friends opposite and the contract they made, the company has been allowed to issue bonds to the amount of 75 per cent, and they have issued three series of bonds: the first series for $884,276.50; the second series for $392,825.68, and the third series for $836,320.47; making the total that the company has been allowed to issue under progress estimates the sum of $2,113,422.65. Under the present Bill the progress estimate facility is further enlarged, and it is for this House to declare whether it is good law or not. That is all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: As I understand the matter, we are not concerned whether the law was passed by one Government or another. After having heard the honourable leader on the other side read the law, I must say that, subject to reading it for myself, I am under the same impression as the honourable gentleman, namely, that the law does not contemplate the possibility that the subsidy paid will exceed the cost of the work. If the law is to the contrary, surely we ought to know of it and repeal it as soon as possible.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely. It would be a reflection on the intelligence of Parliament that we should knowingly place on the Statute Book a statute of that character.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am surprised to hear my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) say that after hearing the law read he considers that the contract did not carry a fixed liability.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Oh, no, I do not say that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, no. I did not put it that way.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I do not say that at all; I say that from the reading of the law by the honourable gentleman opposite—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend was reading the progress estimates section.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I did not understand it that way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would point out that the 1917 legislation, from which my honourable friend opposite was reading, simply covers the question of progress estimates and deals with what should take place during the progress of the work; but the law upon which the contract is based is subsection 2 of section 8, which is referred to in this very amendment.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Subsection 2 of section 8 of the statute of 1910.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then, if the cost has nothing to do with the matter—and that is the attitude which my honourable friend takes—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, the total cost.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The amount expended.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then, if my honourable friend wishes to be logical, will he tell me how progress certificates in regard to the cost are to be drawn out and how he would reconcile the holding back of 25 per cent with the fact that he does not know what the cost is to be? There are the two elements. How can there be a progress certificate for 75 per cent and a holdback of 25 per cent if you do not know what the cost is going to be?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is very simple. The 75 per cent is paid on the amount of work actually done, according to the monthly estimates. If the contractor has done $400,000 worth of work during the month, then he gets an advance of 75 per cent, that is to say, $300,000 on that particular month.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But if the work cost only 50 per cent of that, the holdback would be 50 per cent, not 25 per cent.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What surprises me in regard to the statement of the honourable gentleman from Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) is that he expects the contractor to do work of a certain value, but not on any account to make any profit on it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I do not.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: That is absolutely the issue.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. What I say is that the subsidy must be regulated by the cost of the work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that the Department never loses sight of the fact that it has guaranteed 4½ per cent upon a certain fixed amount. Keeping that fixed amount constantly in view, it proceeds to allow 75 per cent upon the work actually done, according to progress estimates, duly checked by the Engineer's Department.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes; and finally, when all the work is finished, the contractors get the balance. Bonds can be issued only up to 75 per cent with the permission of the Government.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government if he would, before the Bill passes, bring down a copy of the endorsement on the bond and explain a little more fully as to the guarantee of the principal. I make that request for this reason. The statement of the honourable leader of the Government is that the principal is not guaranteed on the bond. I know for a fact that bond houses selling those bonds make the statement that they are just as good as Dominion Government bonds, because the principal and interest are guaranteed by the Dominion Government, and that statement ought to be cleared up if it is not correct. The matter should be fully explained, for I know that bonds are being sold on that understanding.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think the honourable leader of the Government has fully explained that. What the honourable gentleman is losing sight of is this. The bonds are what we call serial bonds, that is, they are paid, principal and interest, yearly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: By annuity.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: By annuity.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: By amortization.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: And if the amount of the subsidy payable by the Government is enough to cover the principal and interest of the bond, that is, the annuity, then the trust company is justified if when issuing the bond to represent that it is guaranteed by the Government, because the subsidy is transferred to the trust company to cover it.

Hon. Mr. REID: I asked the question whether the Government is guaranteeing the subsidy, which is 4½ per cent only. It is only the interest that the Government is guaranteeing on the $5,000,000, or whatever the total is. In that case the principal is not guaranteed. Is the Government securing the interest by not carrying out what the contract stated it was going to guarantee interest on, namely, the full amount? Is it withholding a portion of the principal, which might afterwards be issued in bonds by the St. John Dry Dock Company without the subsidy?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I cannot produce to my honourable friend any of the bonds, because the Department has none; but the Government does not allow any issue of bonds in excess of what the 4½ per cent subsidy would retire. The trust company is justified in saying that this issue is guaranteed by the Government, inasmuch as it is an issue of annuity. The annuity that the Government pays into the hands of the trust company is sufficient to retire the serial bonds which become due every year. My honourable friend will understand that the bond is the bond of the company itself. The trust company that understakes to pay has had transferred to it the Federal subsidy, and can with assurance declare that the Government is providing the funds. I do not know what the expression is.

Hon. Mr. REID: It gets back to what I said at first. The Government then is really guaranteeing the principal as well as the interest by prohibiting the issue of bonds for the full amount.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are providing the funds, but not guaranteeing.

Hon. Mr. REID: Did the Government not have any understanding with the St. John Dry Dock Company that they would only issue sufficient bonds to guarantee the principal as well as the interest?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, that is in the contract.

Hon. Mr. REID: Well, that is guaranteeing the principal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Government only binds itself to pay 4½ per cent on 75 per cent.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is the amount in the contract upon which, when completed, the Government has to pay 4½ per cent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not seen the contract, but I surmise that the contract is an undertaking on the part of the Company to build a dock of certain dimensions and certain standing, and so forth to the satisfaction of the Chief Engineer; and upon this undertaking to finish that dock within a certain period the Government binds itself to pay 4½ per cent on the amount mentioned in the contract.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is that amount?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In this case, $5,500,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What do the progress certificates show that it is to cost?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They do not show the cost. A statement of the expenditure at a certain date is produced, and under unit prices fixed by the Department 75 per cent of that amount is paid.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But when the dock is completed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The value of the work done is determined by those prices.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: According to the estimate of the Government Engineers will it have cost $5,500,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The unit prices that are fixed will amount to $5,500,000 when the work is finished. I am asking myself whether the real expenditure will be $5,500,000—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What will the certificates of the engineers show? In section 8 of the statute of 1910 the principle is laid down as to the initial estimate which shall be prepared for the Government:

The cost on which the subsidy shall be calculated shall be fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister, based upon a report of the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, accompanied by plans and specifications of the proposed work, and such cost shall include the cost of all necessary equipment, machinery and plant, and any sum bona fide expended or to be expended by the company in the purchase of a site for the dry dock—and so on. Then, in section 10 it is provided:

The work of constructing any dry dock for which a subsidy is authorized under the provisions of this Act shall be done under the supervision of the Department of Public Works, and shall be completed within the time limited by, and according to the provisions of, the agreement in that behalf, unless the time for construction is extended by the Governor in Council; and the subsidy shall be payable, during the period agreed to by the Governor in Council under section 8 of this Act, from the time the Governor in Council, upon a report from the Minister determines that the work required by the agreement has been completed, and that the reception and repairing of vessels as contemplated by this Act may forthwith be proceeded with at the dock.

That provides that the work shall be done under the supervision of the Government officials and shall be in accordance with the plans and specifications and estimates furnished the Department, upon which the contract is passed.

Then the Act of 1917 comes into play. It says:

No bonds, debentures or other securities, shall be issued with respect to and as a charge upon any dock until it has been established to the satisfaction of the Minister—and so on.

Provided, however, that half-yearly payments on account of the subsidy at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum on 75 per cent of the cost of all work done and materials provided at the time of such payment may be made during the construction of the said dock.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is progress work.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then again:

The amount of such cost to be determined by the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, but no such payment on account shall be made until the work done and materials provided shall have been cost the sum of at least $1,000,000. No such payments on account shall be made unless the said chief engineer reports that the work of construction of the dry dock with respect to which the payment is to be made has been done to his satisfaction, and no subsidy shall be paid except payments on account as aforesaid unless the Governor in Council, in the manner prescribed in section 10 of this Act, has determined that the work required by the agreement is completed.

It is just the same as any building: the cost must be determined. Consequently, I say that the Government must satisfy itself by these progress certificates and the supervision of its officers that the work is costing the amount which is anticipated in the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In order to refresh the memory of my honourable friend, I will pass him the contract which he endorsed by Order in Council on the 11th day of July, 1918. I do not suppose he will pass his night reading it, but he may peruse it. I think there must be some 40 or 50 pages of foolscap; and he will find there the obligation to which he has bound the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have not yet learned what is the cost of this dock. Has it cost the $5,500,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will see here that the proposition submitted by that dock company to the Government in 1918 showed an estimated cost of $6,390,264; and the Government has agreed to interest upon $5,500,000. I suppose my honourable friend will have no objection to the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) reading the contract in his stead?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. I have the greatest possible confidence in the honourable gentleman from de Salaberry.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Now that we have travelled all around the question, I hope we will reach the kernel. Shall we approve or shall we not? Personally it is a matter of indifference to me; but I have to submit the proposition. Of course, under the Act 75 per cent could be paid on progress estimates. a certain amount of work having been done, now that we are moving towards the end it is suggested that, instead of a drawback of 25 per cent being retained, it should be only 10 per cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know what my honourable friend has in view; but, to be candid, I think Parliament should not change that contract one iota until we are satisfied to take as cost the amount evidenced by the proper progress certificates of the Department of Public Works of the Government officials.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend surely does not want to link those two questions together. The contractor has an undertaking that the Government will pay when the contract is completed 4½ per cent on $5,500,000. Surely my honourable friend would not intend to vary that, even if it had been signed by the present Cabinet. Under the law it is the law. But it is signed by his own Cabinet, which is still more serious for the view that he would entertain of that contract.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is the interpretation that I would put on the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has not read the contract recently, and perhaps did not read it in 1918. The contract entered into was signed and sealed after an Order in Council had been passed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will not doubt the validity of the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If that is so, we must be governed by the contract.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You are trying to get out from under the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. It is all very well for my honourable friend to speak that way. He just reaches here, and surely he will not ask us to begin anew a discussion that has continued for two hours.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is the second time my honourable friend has spoken about me reaching here and there. I tell you there is not a man who is more regular in his attendance upon this House than I am. I have followed this discussion and have not missed any portion of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then I withdraw.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I hope you will.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I withdraw the implication that the honourable gentleman has not been here during the whole sitting; but I may say that I did not see him. It is my fault, not his.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I accept the apology. Now, I say, that what you are trying to do is this—the contract calls for certain conditions, and you are trying to vary those conditions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am asking this House if it is agreeable, when 75 per cent at least of the work has been completed, no longer to extract a 25 per cent draw back.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Which under the contract you could do?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then you are asking to vary the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is for my honourable friend to say yes or no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And recrimination with respect to the leader of this side of the House has not a thing to do with the case before this assembly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It does not bear on this very question?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Not at all. This is camouflage.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend tells me that we should not discuss this Bill until we have an opinion from the Department as to our obligation to pay a subsidy on $5,500,000.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes. We should not reduce the amount of drawback until we have the finding of the engineers with regard to the actual value of the work to be done. How are we to know that the contractors will carry out the contract when they have got this money? That is the only protection we have; and that term was put in the contract as a matter of protection to the people.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But we have the statement of the Chief Engineer and the statement of the Deputy Minister; and the figures are to be found within the four corners of the contract.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The Chief Engineer and the Deputy Minister do not legislate, and are not responsible for the legislation which passes this House. We are responsible. What may be agreeable to them may not be agreeable to us. I do not think any case whatever has been made out for a reduction of this drawback.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I have read the statute of 1917, and I find that paragraph a of section 8 of the Act of that year is substituted for paragraph a of section 8 of the Act of 1910. My understanding of the clause is that it provides for two things: first, that the subsidy shall not be more than 75 per cent of the cost of the work; and, next, for the payment of progress estimates.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: 75 per cent of the cost of the work on progress estimates.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No. The cost of the work. The first paragraph does not deal at all with progress estimates—and it should be that way, too. The contract cannot override the statute. The contract must have been passed in virtue of the statute, and even if there were errors in the statute, the contract would not supersede it. As I understand it, the question before us is as to whether the adoption of section 2 of the present Bill may have the effect of amending the statutes of 1917, and obliging the Government to pay more than 75 per cent of the cost of the work. That is the question for me, and, as I have some doubt about it, I would prefer to consider the wording.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I try to help to clarify the situation and to bring down to a concrete figure the cost to the country that is involved in this Bill? I understand the leader of the Government to say that an issue of bonds to the extent of $2,113,000 has been authorized by the Department of Public Works, and that there is still outstanding $1,712,000 representing the value of work done which approximately and assumedly represents the amount for which bonds will be issued ultimately. Under the terms of the contract the Department at the present time is prevented from authorizing the issue of bonds for that amount. This Bill proposes that the Department authorize fifteen twenty-fifths of $1,712,000 in bonds to be issued to help the contractors to finance. That means, as I understand it, a guarantee of 4½ per cent interest on $1,027,000 which for a period of four months—it is expected that the dock will be completed in October—would amount to the sum of $13,608, in addition to what is now called for under the terms of the contract. The question is whether Parliament is prepared to pass this Bill and thereby assume that expense.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But unfortunately it is only a supposition that this dock will be finished in four months.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The other point is not involved in this Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no guarantee.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There is no guarantee that the dock will be finished in eight months or twelve months.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Deputy Minister finds that he made an error in his figures in the letter which I read. It should have been $3,600,000 instead of $3,800,000. The result of the error allows him to alter his figures as to the loss to the Government by paying four months in advance, from $468 to $650, at 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And that saves $150 interest, and is that what this company is doing all this for?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The object of this Bill is to help that company to obtain money to complete the dock. We have proceeded towards that end, and a large amount has been spent by the Government and by that company. The representative of St. John is here and knows the situation, and he expects that we will do all that we can, without in the least jeopardizing the interests of Canada, to help by this Bill to finish the work. That is all there is in it—to help them to finance.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Has not this company the right now, without our doing anything or passing this Bill, to issue several hundred thousand dollars in bonds?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They are only issuing on progress certificates.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They could issue bonds up to 75 per cent of $750,000 on work that has been done since December last.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That would amount to half a million or so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But they have to issue their bonds at 5½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose they do the bonds would have brought nearly half a million dollars, and that would be quite a bit of financing.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I would ask that the Deputy Minister check these figures and see if 4½ per cent on 15/25ths of $1,712,000 is not more than $650 for four months.

Hon. Mr. REID: In reference to the guarantee of the bonds, I understand it is only the trust company that buyers have as security on the bonds. I would like to ask if there was any agreements made between the trust company and the Government as to the issue of bonds, or principal, or if any Order in Council was passed, and I would like to see those documents when the House meets this evening. My object in asking for them is to see that there shall not be any doubt in the public mind, and that anyone buying the bonds will feel that the principal is absolutely secured.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that there is a trust deed signed by the dock company and the trust company, which was submitted to the Government and approved by Order in Council upon the advice of the Department of Justice. So that the people are getting a splendid security.

Hon. Mr. REID: Then could I see that trust deed and the Order in Council?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, and the documents will speak for themselves. Now I would draw the attention of my honourable friends to clause 6 of the contract between the St. John Dry Dock and Ship Building Company, Limited, and His Majesty:

His Majesty shall, upon the determination by the Governor in Council upon the report of the Minister of Public Works that a dry dock has been completed satisfactorily, pay to the company in half-yearly payments an annual subsidy of four and a half per cent during thirty-five years upon the sum of $5,500,000 in accordance with and in the manner prescribed by the Dry Dock Subsidies Act and said amendments thereto. No payment on account of the said subsidy shall be made prior to the conclusion of the said dry-dock except as hereinafter provided, and in no case shall the payment exceed the amount of the dry-dock so authorized.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I make clear one point which has not been brought out yet? The $5,500,000 in this particular case is supposed to represent 75 per cent of the cost of this dock, as estimated by the Department of Public Works. I understand that was $6,000,000 odd.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, my honourable friend is in error. Clause 6 of the contract shows that the Government has obligated the country to a payment of 35 annuities of 4½ per cent on $5,500,000, independent of what the dry dock has cost.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That has nothing to do with the Bill before the House.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it true that in the original contract there was no provision for progress estimates, and that the contract was varied afterwards to provide for them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The contract was made in 1918, and the Act authorizing payment upon progress certificates was passed in the preceding year, 1917, so that under this contract the contractors would have the advantage of that preceding year.

Sections 2 and 3 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

Hon. Mr. REID: Will the honourable leader produce the agreement between this dry dock company and the trust company and the Government, and the Order in Council affirming it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Deputy Minister will bring the whole file of documents to my honourable friend's room tomorrow morning.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would commend to my honourable friend the propriety or wisdom of moving an amendment to the Dry Dock Subsidy Act if he is of the opinion, which he has expressed to-day, that the amount of the subsidy or contract entered into has nothing to do with the actual cost of the dock. I think the law does provide for that, as it is today; but if my honourable friend is in doubt as to that, there should be a provision that the cost of the dock should represent the proposed cost as appearing in the contract.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that that was the law up to 1910 and it was found that no contractor or company was willing to grope in the dark and build works and remain at the mercy of engineers representing the Government and putting a value on their work.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then they can fix the cost by arbitration, entirely irrespective of the engineer.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No; the Government fixes it before the start of the work.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then what is known as the Laurier Government must have had before them evidence of that character. It seems to me they were not justified in amending the law along the lines indicated.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does it not strike my honourable friend that this rule might work both ways?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That if a contract was entered into for a fixed amount in 1913 and 1914, which would have led the contractor straight into a period when the cost of materials doubled and trebled, he would then have the bad end of the bargain?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If it were otherwise, the Government would never get value for its bonds; the Government might eventually have to take over those dry docks.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No; in 35 years they are paid for.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: None of them have worked out yet, and none of them ever will.

At six o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 o'clock.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the Order for consideration of the report of the Special Committee to whom was referred Bill 45, an Act respecting Chinese Immigration, together with the amendments thereto:

Hon. W. B. WILLOUGHBY moved that the said Bill, with the report of the Special Committee thereon, be committed to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering a certain further amendment thereto.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the said Bill and Report.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. A. B. WILLOUGHBY: I move that Bil 45 be amended by adding the following as subsection d of section 5:

The wife and minor children of any merchant legally resident in Canada and of any naturalized Canadian citizen.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Will the honourable gentleman kindly explain the purpose of that amendment?

Hon. W. B. WILLOUGHBY: I move that the amendment is simply to allow in Canada, or to admit to Canada if not already therein, the wife and the minor children of any Chinese merchant who is in Canada.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But what about polygamy? The Chinese have many wives.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: We could treat them as having only one legal wife. Polygamy is not legal in China.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: How are you going to pick?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I do not know. Polygamy is not legal in Canada, but I am afraid that even in this country, as has been discovered in the Divorce Committee, there are in some instances more than one wife, and the number is sometimes not even confined to two or three.

I am not going to discuss this subject controversially or deal with it for more than a few minutes. I have had occasion to read the address of the Prime Minister as reported in Hansard at page 2400, in the second column, and I am instructed that the Chinese authorities in Canada, relying on what they understood to be the intention of the Prime Minister, conveyed it to their superiors and were of the opinion that the condition was satisfactory. I will read a portion of what the Prime Minister said. On Monday, April 30, of this year, with reference to this very Bill:

I do think it is desirable, if we hope to trade with the Orient, that men who are in position to carry on export and import trade to an extent that is likely to be of service to both countries should come to this country and promote further trade relations by so coming. I think if we permit them to come we ought to permit their wives and children to come with them. I do not think we should take the position that we will allow a merchant, a man of high business standing, to come to our country and start up in business, and subject him to the indignity of not being permitted to bring his wife and children with him. I would stand for a very rigid guarding of that provision, to see that the law was carried out to the letter, but this should always be taken into account as respects the legislation we are now proposing; namely that those who will be permitted to come to Canada from China will be determined, not after their arrival here, but before their departure from China, and will be determined by a officer of the government itself in accordance with the regulations which the minister may think it wise to lay down.

I do not want to stretch the interpretation, but that language might be construed as undoubtedly meaning that Chinese merchants might in future come into Canada with their wives; but that is not provided for in this Bill. If the Prime Minister desired to allow Chinese merchants in future to bring their wives and children into this country, surely those Chinese merchants who are at present in Canada ought to have an equal right to bring in their wives and children. I think it is humanitarian and makes for good feeling between this country and China, with whom we are trying to develop trade relations. The privilege may be subject to some abuses. I do not profess to have the special knowledge of the matter that many honourable members have, but I think that, in the interest of the comity of nations and for the sake of preserving the moral position of the Chinamen in the country, it might be wise to grant this privilege. We all recognize that among the best Chinamen the family tie is one that is regarded sacredly. I do not say that is true of every Chinamen who comes to this country; far from it; but in the best Chinese life and amongst the best class of Chinese citizens the family tie is certainly regarded as sacred.

The Committee of this House mitigated the severity of the Bill that was introduced and passed in the other Chamber. I think it was the Committee's intention to deal charitably in this matter, and members of the Committee, who have much more knowledge than I profess to have on the subject, may have gone as far as in their judgement is wise. This amendment is submitted for the purpose of allowing the House, if they see fit, to reconsider this point. I would not oppose my judgment to the judgment of other honourable gentlemen, with better opportunities than I have had of studying this question, but I do think it is not asking too much when according to the declaration of the Prime Minister the wife and minor children of Chinese merchants ought hereafter to be admitted to Canada, to admit also the wives and minor children of Chinese merchants already in this country. That is all I desire to say.

Hon. S. J. CROWE: Honourable gentlemen, as most honourable members realize, this Chinese Immigration Bill is of more interest to the Province of British Columbia than to any other Province in the Dominion. I was not a member of the Committee to which this measure was referred, but I attended its meetings. This question was brought up and threshed out there, and I think the consensus of opinion was that clause 9 would govern anything along the line of allowing Chinese wives into Canada. Having attended the meetings of the Committee, I know that the Committee was satisfied with the Bill as reported. I certainly am not satisfied with the amendment introduced by the honourable member from Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby), to admit the wives of Chinese merchants coming into this country. If you open the door for one, you open the door for many. In 1920 or 1921, 1,400 Chinamen calling themselves merchants came into this country. They were merchants for only a very few days; then they went into the labouring class.

If you are going to allow the wives of merchants to come in, where are you going to get off at? Then, as to the junior children, 1,400 and some odd came in last year, and it was proven that some of those children were born a long time after their father or supposed father had come into this country. We have allowed 1,800 students to come without paying any head tax. It has been proven beyond doubt that they were students in name only, and that they have scattered all over the country. If you are going to open the door and allow wives to come in, you might as well give British Columbia to the Chinese. We have enough Orientals in our Province now. When I say that there are 2,000 business licenses taken out in the city of Vancouver alone by Orientals, you will realize that. The Chinese have gone into every business that you can name, and I think there are even one or two lawyers. I have a list here which I would like to read to the House. There are 5 garages run by Chinese or Orientals in Vancouver; there are 40 butchers, 172 grocers, 144 candy and ice cream stores, 63 gents' clothing stores, 9 hardware stores, 30 jewellers, 89 restaurants, 38 express and dray men, 21 wholesale dealers, 154 hawkers and peddlers, 5 printing shops, 50 boot and shoe dealers, and 54 stationers.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They must have the whole business, then.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: They have pretty nearly got the whole business.

If you allow the merchants to bring in their wives, you will find that they never or very seldom bring their legal wives. I think the officers of the Immigration Department will bear me out when I say that they bring the best looking and the youngest and perhaps those that can best bear children to this country. As has been said, polygamy is recognized in China.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Are they good citizens?

Hon. Mr. CROWE: Some of them are good citizens, but not all. I would certainly ask this House to defeat the amendment proposed by the honourable member from Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby).

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Just one word. The honourable gentleman knows more of this subject than I do, and I do not intend to reply to him. He referred to section 9 of the Bill, which provides:

> The Minister may authorize the admission to Canada of any person of Chinese origin or descent without being subject to the provisions of this Act, and such admission shall be authorized for a specified period only, but may be extended or cancelled by the Minister in writing.

The Bill as it now stands contemplates the possibility of the Minister permitting any person of Chinese origin, man woman or child, coming into this country; the limitation being for a specified period only.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: For my part I do not object to that. That is up to the Government; but if they admit people who are objectionable they will certainly hear from the Province of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. GREEN: As my colleague has said, this question is of very much more interest to the Province of British Columbia than to any other Province in Canada. The reason is that our Province is the first port of call, and the climate and other conditions lend themselves to the Chinamen staying there with the result that out of a population of less than half a million we have 30,000 Chinese. If those 30,000 Chinese were scattered over the rest of Canada, we in British Columbia would have no difficulty in persuading the people of the other parts of Canada to exclude them from our midst. They are of no use to us; we will never assimilate them, we will never make Canadians out of them. You might far better introduce men more nearly akin to the race to which we belong.

The mind of the Chinaman is absolutely different from the mind of the ordinary white man. You cannot in any possible way find out just how the Chinese mind works. It is very true that in a way the Chinese are good citizens. They make good domestic servants and faithful workers, but they will never help us to build up a Canada of which we will be proud. Anyone who knows the Chinese knows perfectly well that our race will never intermarry with them nor assimilate them.

The Bill as it came from the Committee goes quite far enough—on some points perhaps a little too far. If you want these people in Eastern Canada, bring them here; we do not want them in British Columbia, and we will not have them there.

This opening of the door to the wives and minor children would be abused in such a way that there would be a flood of them into the country. In the old days, when the door was more or less open, it was not the minor children that were brought in, but the children of such an age that they could be put into someone's kitchen to learn how to earn money to be sent back to China. Not only that; but there is not one of those people in this country to-day who purposes when he dies to leave his bones here. They even have an arrangement under which their bones will be carried out of the country. They are coming into this country for their own good, not for our good. They practice polygamy, and when a Chinaman has several wives, how are you going to single out one and say that she may come in and the others may not? I hope, hon. gentlemen, you will protect us from this evil and let the Bill go through as it stands.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I do not intend to discuss this general question, but I may point out that the amendment moved by the honourable gentleman from Moose Jaw, as I understand it, will allow these Chinese wives very much wider latitude in coming into the country than is allowed to merchants under clause 5. This clause reads:

> The entry to or landing in Canada of persons of Chinese origin or descent, irrespective of allegiance or citizenship, is confined to the following classes, that is to say:
>
> (c) Merchants as defined by such regulations as the Minister may prescribe.

The amendment as moved by the honourable gentleman from Moose Jaw would cut out that part of the clause dealing with merchants, and would allow the wives and children to come in without being subject to regulations such as are prescribed in the case of merchants. I do not see how we could adopt such an amendment.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If the merchant is here and his wife is in China can he bring her over by paying a head tax?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Under clause 9 he can apply to the authorities and ask permission.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: That is only for a certain period.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Not indefinitely.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: From time to time.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I wanted to find out if there was any means by which a Chinese woman could be brought in if her husband were living in this country, outside of section 9.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This bill was committed to one of the Standing Committees of the House to which was added, I think, two members from British Columbia. The Committee heard all the parties interested in the Bill. The various groups of Chinese in Canada were represented by counsel. We listened attentively to all their representations. The Department also was represented by men of experience in the administration of the Chinese Immigration Act. The result of the work of that Committee is contained in the modifications of the Bill which are in the form of the amendments under review by this Committee of the Whole.

This is undoubtedly a restrictive Bill. Certain sections of the Bill seemed to be quite stern, and, after deliberating upon the whole question, and knowing the desire of the Commons and of British Columbia, the Committee made certain modifications tending towards a relaxation of the stern prohibitions. In doing this, I believe that we have met the request of the Chinese representatives in Canada to a very great degree. They believe that these amendments should be considered by the Senate. One should not forget that we have in Canada between 40,000 and 50,000 Chinese among whom it is reckoned that there are 2,422 women. Some 30,000 of these Chinese are adults, and if we consented to allow them to bring in their wives and minor children it would mean an influx of thousands within the next few years.

The situation is this. Those Chinese who have been here for four or five or six years or more and have not thought fit to take advantage of the old Act under which they could bring their wives to this country seem to have been fairly indifferent. The newcomers, if they desire to marry, will return to the young lady whom they would court. We have taken care in the amendments presented to this Chamber to respect the acquired rights of the Chinaman who has been here and has acquired Canadian citizenship through being five years in the country or through naturalization. I am informed that a merchant who is in Canada and who desires to bring his wife here, and will give the proper evidence that she is his legal wife, may obtain her entry under clause 9. As has already been said, it is difficult to distinguish the wife from the concubine, and the agents or representatives of the Immigration Office are convinced, after looking at the men and the women that come into port, that it is not wife number one, but a younger woman who is brought to this country.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There are cases in this country of oldish men marrying young women.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So I have heard. There is a danger of this facility being abused. The Department of Justice has laid down the rule that Canada will only recognize under its laws the first wife of the Chinaman as the legitimate wife; but the Department of Immigration is convinced that in very many cases it is not the legitimate wife that comes to this country, and from their ages there is a strong presumption that the younger wife has been chosen.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I can tell my honourable friend. Under their laws they have to choose.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If they have to choose, why not the youngest?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention to the fact that if a man of fifty brought a wife of fifty there would be less danger of the Chinese population increasing. Now, a number of those women who have been brought in have simply gone into service to earn money for themselves, or have really come in as bona fide wives, or they come under that cloak to obtain entry into Canada. I do not know, but I believe that for the end we have in view, the restricting of Chinese immigration, under this Act and under the amendments we have made we have travelled a long way towards the wishes of the Chinese population, and should not take that further step which may go counter to the object of this law. Furthermore, we have the statement of the Department of the Interior and its Minister that under section 9 he had and still has sufficient authority to admit the wife of a merchant when he feels justified in doing so. For that reason I support the view of the members from British Columbia, and say, let us accept the work of the Committee without adopting that amendment.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not wish to go counter to the views of the members from British Columbia, who have presented their case in a very clear and telling way; yet I am afraid that the Minister has lost sight of the moral side of the question. We must consider human nature in these matters. Here we have a population largely adult, and largely male, who are without wives, and in the interest of social purity and morality would it not be better to allow the wives to come in? Following out the honourable leader's idea, we might restrict those wives to the age of 50—I think that is a safe age—and say that wives of 50 or over should be permitted to come into the country. I think that would be a good suggestion, and would prevent the unnecessary increase of the population to which the honourable members from British Columbia object, and would also fulfil the ideas of the social uplift and moral reform element of this country, which is very strong.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: In view of the statements made by the honourable leader of the House, the expression of opinion by members from British Columbia, and personal opinions conveyed to me privately by others whom I respect since I intimated to them my intention of introducing this amendment, I am going to ask the leader of the House to withdraw it. I think it is just, but in view of the expressions referred to, I do not think it would pass this House, and it might imperil the Bill as it has come from the other House. So, with the leave of the House and the permission of my seconder, I would ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

On leave granted, the amendment was withdrawn.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have a verbal amendment I was going to move on the third reading. It is an amendment to subsection 2 of the new section 27:

In the second line, that the word "admissible" be stricken out, and in the third line the words, "as defined by this Act," and that the words be added, "admissible under this Act."

The section would then read as follows:

Any person admitted under this Act, and who at any time after admission ceases to belong to any of the classes admissible under this Act.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: What is the idea of changing the wording?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I want to provide that if any person falls out of one class, say that of a merchant, and goes into some other class and ceases to be a merchant, he may then be arrested and deported. My amendment does not provide an opening for anyone getting in; on the contrary, it is closing it up. It is merely a verbal change.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That amendment is all right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I agree that the amendment is correct.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: How would this amendment apply in the case of a minor child when reaching the age of maturity, and therefore belonging to some other class? As he grew up he might become a labourer or a merchant, but he would not be in the class in which he came into the country. This amendment would not permit deportation of a child grown to manhood?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: A minor is not admitted as a merchant; he is admitted as a minor child.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: But his status of a child changes into that of a merchant or a labourer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, a child is not interfered with.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Would it make any difference as to the length of time a Chinaman has to live in this country? A Chinaman may have been admitted some years ago under an Act then in force, and perhaps would be living here for a number of years, and if he then changed his business from one class to another I presume he would be deported, under this amendment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. Under the Act of 1917 a poll tax of $500 was imposed upon a Chinaman, but a merchant was exempt. If that merchant changed his status he could be made to pay the $500 tax. Under this law we decree that all those admitted since 1917 who have ceased to be merchants shall be required to pay the tax of $500, and if they refuse they may be deported.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: It will not affect in any way those who have paid the head tax of $500?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: As I understand the amendment, it was proposed merely to make the section more intelligible; it does not change anything, does it?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: There is no change in the principle. It merely makes the section more intelligible.

The proposed amendment of Hon. W. B. Ross was agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

YUKON BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. GREEN moved the second reading of Bill 44, an Act to amend The Yukon Act.

He said: I was asked to move the second reading of this Bill though I know very little about it. The best explanation I can give of the Bill is to quote what took place in another House. This Bill was introduced on Thursday last, and Mr. Stevens said:

> I will briefly explain this bill and in doing so I wish to expressly thank the Minister of Justice for his courtesy in permitting it to come up. This is a somewhat technical and formal amendment to the Yukon Act. The Yukon Act, as originally drafted, provided for trials, and so forth, but did not include provision for jury trials in certain cases. The reason for it was this: When Yukon was first opened up and this act was originally passed it was in the days of what was known as "the stampede." Conditions there were in an exceedingly disturbed state, and it was felt that it was not desirable to place such cases as mineral claims and disputes under jury trial as was the case in all other provinces. That condition has long since passed, twenty years ago or nearly so, and to-day Yukon is just as settled and as sober—shall I say?—in its thought and in its administration as any other part of Canada. All the feverish excitement has long since passed. This is simply to give to Yukon rights which are enjoyed by the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will the honourable gentleman read to us the first part of section 46, of the Yukon Act, because this is something to be added to that? The Yukon Act is to be found in the Revised Statutes of 1906. It is impossible to appreciate this Bill unless we know what precedes.

Hon. Mr. GREEN: I am sorry I cannot inform the honourable gentleman. All I can say is that the Minister of Justice has accepted it, and put in the amendment which appears in the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We are going it blind.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Depending on the Justice Department.

COMPANIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 190, an Act to amend the Companies Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill contains a number of amendments, which I would rather explain in Committee. We might take the second reading now and go immediately into Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the purport of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Copies of a statement from the Department of the Secretary of State have been distributed, and my honourable friend must have one before him. So we may have an explanation clause by clause when we go into Committee. Does my honourable friend think we had better postpone this? I do not suppose he will have very much time to puruse the Bill. We might as well have the explanations immediately in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The only observation I should like to make on a Bill of this character is that when so important a statute as the Companies Act is to be amended, I cannot well appreciate the desirability of its coming down in the dying hours of the Session. A Bill so lengthy as the present one ought certainly to receive considerable attention.

Moreover, I do not approve of this constant tinkering with the Companies Act, practically every Session. Professional men and others rely upon the Companies Act as they find it in the Statute Book. Companies are organized and administered according to the statute. I think I am justified in saying that scarcely a Session of Parliament goes by that important amendments are not made to the Companies Act. So one cannot rely upon any continuity of the Act in organizing or administering a company or in any way taking advantage of the statute. I think it is very bad policy for the Government to be continually tinkering with Acts of this kind. When a measure is placed upon the Statute Book, unless the best reasons are shown for amending it, it should remain there until fully tested.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No one can take exception to the remarks of my honourable friend, because they are quite general and his contention is self-evident. We should not tinker with Acts unless there are special reasons for amending them. I have not examined these amendments and cannot pass judgment upon them. Perhaps we could defer consideration of this Bill until to-morrow afternoon. In the meantime we may have an opportunity of perusing the proposed changes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But does not my honourable friend think that some good reasons should be shown by the Department administering this Act why it should be amended to such an extent as is now proposed? Has it occasioned some confusion, or does it fail to adjust itself to the necessities of business, or what is the general reason for amending it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I might perhaps give a few of the reasons that appear on the memorandum which has been distributed:

This Bill has an imposing appearance of thirty sections, but an analysis of it will show that six sections only make substantial changes in or additions to the Companies Act. The other sections merely harmonize sections, correct mistakes and clarify the wording of sections of the Act.

Nine sections, namely, 6, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 23, are all for the purpose of unifying and simplifying the phraseology defining the vote as special meetings of shareholders in certain cases. As the Act stood, the phraseology was not uniform. For instance, section 34 provides for a vote of shareholders "representing at least two-thirds in value of the subscribed stock." Section 44 provides for a vote of "not less than two-thirds in value of the capital stock represented at a meeting." This phrase is doubtful because it is open to two constructions, whether it is two-thirds of all the subscribed capital or two-thirds of those represented at the meeting. Similar doubts arise with respect to the other sections sought to be amended.

The situation is rendered more difficult in the case of companies having shares without par value. It is then impossible to comply with the exact wording of some of these sections.

A further complication arises where preferred shares are issued without any right to vote.

It is considered advisable to make the language uniform and to provide that the resolution or by-law is to be carried by two-thirds of the votes at the meeting. The charter and by-laws define who should be entitled to vote. Everyone entitled to vote must be given notice of the meeting, and it seems preferable that the control should be placed in the hands of those present or represented at the meeting to the extent of two-thirds.

I will stop there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will proceed with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Shall we deal with it now?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Willoughby in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—when company may be created a private company; when several considered as single shareholder:

Hon. Mr. TANNER: How long is it since these errors were discovered by the Department? This House has been in session five months. I would like to know why, if these errors were discovered months ago, the Bill has not been brought down earlier.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I inquired how long the Bill had been before the other House, and I am told at least a couple of months. It was introduced two months ago.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Why not introduced here?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: There were three months prior to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We can deal with the Bill now or defer it. I am in the hands of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I think that is a good reason for not passing this Bill. It should have been here long ago.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Here is a Bill that has been two months in the other House and two minutes in this. We are expected to pass it right off—a Bill treating of most important matters. I think it is very unfair. I move that this Bill be considered this day six months.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I second that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. Then I will suggest that we send the Bill to the Commons on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, that is a good idea.

Progress was reported.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I move that this Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

INLAND WATER FREIGHT RATES BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Senate go into Committee on Bill 235, an Act with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, we had occasion some time ago to discuss the situation which arose last autumn because of the rather steep rate that had to be paid for the carriage across the Lakes of grain that had accumulated or was accumulating at Fort William and Port Arthur. An inquiry was instituted by a Royal Commission, and it was found that in the handling of Canadian grain, there had been discrimination in favour of American ports as against Canadian ports on the Georgian bay. It was found by that Royal Commission that the rates had been increased by means of a combination and an understanding among the ship-owners. It was found, besides, that the ship-owners or their agents in Winnipeg were monopolizing the insurance business and holding up grain shippers, forcing them to place with them the insurance on cargoes. The Commission made certain recommendations, which are embodied in the present Bill.

It will be found on persuing the Bill that the services of the Board of Grain Commissioners are utilized in the operations of this Act. Clause 3 says:

> Any shipping company or any shipowner or person who carries or who offers, advertises or proposes to carry grain for hire between Fort William, or Port Arthur and any other port or place in Canada or the United States, by lake or river navigation, shall, within thirty days after the passing of this Act, or before entering into any contract for such carriage, file with the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada a tariff of the rates which such company, owner or person charges or intends or proposes to charge for the carriage of grain as aforesaid, and thereafter from time to time if and when any such company, owner or person, changes, varies or proposes to change or vary the tariff or any item or charge thereof so filed, he shall, previously to the making of any such change or variation in the actual charges in respect of any shipment, file with the Board a copy of the tariff so changed, varied, or amended.

I have already had occasion to read the various clauses of this Bill, and we may deal with each separately when we go into Committee.

The Board may prescribe a maximum rate under certain conditions. There is a prohibition against soliciting risks, issuing policies of insurance, collecting any premiums, or inspecting any risks. I believe that this Bill meets the needs of the times, and that if a condition similar to that which prevailed last autumn ever recurs, the Act will come into play and protect the grain owners of the West.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government if the provisions of this Bill have been submitted to people in the trade? It is a trade which is done very rapidly, and the transactions of which are often completed after quick modification, and what may to the superficial observer seem reasonable may be in the opinion of those who know the inner workings of the trade unreasonable or unworkable. I am in entire sympathy with the desire to correct the evils to which the honourable gentleman has referred; but I think it very important, before legislation of this kind is passed, that those who are most deeply interested—I mean the grain-shippers quite as well or more than the vessel-owners —should know that it is a kind of traffic regulation which will help them. It would seem to me that the best way to deal with a question like this would be to have it referred to a proper Committee, before whom evidence could be heard on various points.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: There is no time for that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will answer my honourable friend by informing him that the Committee of the Whole would perhaps be in as good a position to deal with this Bill as would a Special Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The proposal to refer it to a Standing Committee was voted down yesterday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, yes. I did not remember in what form the question had been tested.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There was a motion to refer it to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: We could not hear witnesses in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The matter was tested on the second reading yesterday.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: May I ask the leader of the Government if there is any report from the Justice Department in regard to the Bill that is now before us?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think I may safely state that this Bill was either drafted by the Department of Justice or was submitted to that Department.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: It seems to me that this is a very important Bill,, and I should think that this House would look to the Department of Justice for an opinion as to its feasibility and practicability, and as to whether it could be carried out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I recall that there was a little delay in bringing this Bill before the other House, because the Minister of Justice was examining it.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have been told, whether truthfully or not, that there have been two opinions given by the Department of Justice to one or more of the Departments of the Government, not on this Bill, but on the subject-matter out of which it grew. There was no report made on the Bill, but there were reports made as to the powers of Parliament to pass a Bill of this kind. It would be of great advantage to us to have that information, because it is very doubtful whether this Parliament has the jurisdiction to pass the Bill at all.

I became interested in this question a long time ago. Some honourable gentlemen will remember that a Mr. Armstrong, in the other House some six or seven or perhaps eight years ago, tried to get legislation along somewhat similar lines.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It was packet freight.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Yes, but he wanted to carry into lake and river navigation similar legislation to that which we had with regard to the control of railway freight rates. I remember very well a man who afterwards became a member of this House—the late Senator Richardson—who was called as a witness before the Committee of the other House. He gave a very interesting, and I thought an accurate account of the extraordinary changes in the nature of the business on the Lakes. He seemed to have the whole thing at his finger ends. On one or two occasions afterwards, when he was a member of this House, he described how conditions changed every few minutes. He was the one man in this House who I think completely understood that Lake trade.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: He was the biggest operator by far.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: He was one of the most interesting speakers that I ever listened to in this House or in any other place, and I have always regretted his death and looked upon it as a very great loss to this House.

This trade on the Lakes is very important. In order not to occupy too much time, I will simply say that when the Bill came up there were still in my mind certain principles with regard to that trade. There are two things to say about it. The first is the question of whether or not we have jurisdiction to deal with it. It may be said, "Oh, never mind that; go right ahead and let the parties take the matter into court." Well, honourable gentlemen, that is not, except in very rare cases, a wise way to legislate. It is quite clear that, if we have no jurisdiction to pass the whole or parts of this Bill, we should govern ourselves accordingly; and if we can get information from the Department of Justice, which I am informed is available, I would like very much to have it at one of the sessions to-morrow. If we find that the matter is doubtful it is easy enough, and I think more satisfactory, to put a clause in the Bill referring it to the Supreme Court of Canada to decide whether it is intra vires in whole or in part rather than disturb the whole business on the Lakes. You can have that opinion before the jam on the Lakes begins, which I understand will be in October or November.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: They are shipping grain right now.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I know they are shipping grain now, but the great rush will be later.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: It is not the rush; it is the strikes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: But the number of ships that would be required, and the price will be governed by the volume of wheat.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: No.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I am informed, I believe correctly, that some time about November of last year there was a tremendous jam on the Lakes.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: But the price started to go up long before that.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: It starts to go up just about the time shippers from the Northwest get into full swing. It should not take more than 60 days to get the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Leaving that to one side, I would be inclined not to undertake to modify this Bill at all. It was drawn, I suppose, by capable hands, on the assumption that there was jurisdiction to deal with it. Assuming that you have jurisdiction to regulate that trade, my own opinion is that you will require a great deal more drastic legislation than is to be found in this Bill. You could give it a trial, however.

I just rose to ask the leader of the Government if he could not have whatever opinions there are in the possession of the Department placed before us; or, failing that, that we should have an opinion from them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest that we should go through the Bill, and if we get it through the Committee I will get the information for my honourable friend before we take the third reading to-morrow. I may tell my honourable friend that I now have a clear recollection that the drafting of this Bill was given to the Department of Justice, and that the Minister of Justice took a few days to examine into it with the officers of his Department. That being so, there is the presumption that they have found sufficient authority for this Parliament to proceed with this legislation, particularly inasmuch as the Bill has passed the Commons and is now before us.

I have not examined the constitutional objections that could be raised, but I would be favourably disposed to the view that we were acting within our jurisdiction unless we were told by the Department of Justice that we were going outside of our powers. Then we could perhaps add such a clause as would bring the matter rapidly before the Supreme Count for review. It is pressing that we should enact such legislation as will prevent a recurrence of the abuses of which we all know, and which have been found by the Royal Commission to exist.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Smith in the Chair.

On section 2—Interpretation:

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I was unaware that this Bill had received its second reading yesterday, when I was temporarily absent. I was watching for it. I do not intend to take advantage of that fact to discuss the Bill generally, for the reason that I discussed the whole subject on the report of the Special Commissioners before the Bill was introduced.

You will notice that this section deals only with grain. I think it should deal with flour too, and that subsection 2 should be enlarged. While you are meeting the major grievance, and while I think this provision will be highly beneficial to the public, I do not think you will have cured all the evils from which the grain producers and shippers are now suffering. The grain may be ground at many points. There is a large mill at Moose Jaw, there is one at Calgary, one at Winnipeg, one at Keewatin, and doubtless there are others. The flour very frequently goes to the head of the Lakes, to go from there either by rail or by water. You are going to put into the hands of the Grain Commissioners the right to make the rate per bushel for the hauling of grain. But when you consider the grain that is converted into flour, you still have a very large portion of the grain crop of the West that is not covered by this Bill at all. I have not any figures before me at this time, but there is a very large shipment from the mills that I have spoken of, not only to points in Canada, but to Great Britain, the continent, the West Indian Islands by way of the East, and westward to the Orient. I submit that in this legislation you do not meet all the objections of the farmers and the grain dealers. The grain dealers of Winipeg, I understand, are very much behind legislation of this character. I had the pleasure of being present at at least one sitting of the Commission in Winnipeg, and I may say that the merchants are very keen for some control of shipping on the Lakes. The farmers' point of view is so obvious that I will not dwell upon it.

Now I want to deal with the constitutional aspect of the Bill. You will see that section 9 is apparently drawn with the manifest object of taking from the operation of the Bill purely provincial matters which might be supposed to come under property and civil rights. It would have been better had it been possible to deal with grain that comes to the head of the Lakes, is ground into flour there, is then shipped to millers in Ontario, all in the same Province. It does not provide for that, perhaps for the reason that I have conjectured—that the whole operation of transport is in one Province.

I do, however, raise the fundamental question of the necessity of carrying flour.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not sufficiently au fait of the movement of flour during the dangerous period. I would surmise that the object of this Bill is to provide for the movement of the crops that are brought in haste to the upper Lakes in order to be transhipped to ocean ports. It seems to me, and I stand to be corrected, for I have no expérience and no data, that flour is not concerned in that situation. I would surmise that what we want to cover is the movement of the grain crop of the West during the months of September, October, and November, when there is a formidable movement towards Fort William and Port Arthur. I doubt the necessity of covering the movement of flour, because I take it for granted that it is not in the same situation as the grain. I would like to hear the opinion of members of the Senate who have experience on this matter.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: All these very large mills in the West, and for that matter the mills in Ontario too, have large elevator accommodation; and, instead of having these elevators hold the grain for an indefinite time when the press of grain comes from the farms, the dealers hurry to get the mill elevators emptied by manufacturing the wheat into flour and getting it out of the country in order to help out the other elevators. So flour is quite an important factor. I may say that during the summer months, when there is no particular press of flour, the C. P. R. have on the Georgian Bay three vessels tied up which in the fall of the year are put into the service of handling flour.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I confess frankly that I am a little skeptical as to the effect of this Bill. No doubt the Bill is intended to empower the proposed Board to regulate the rates charged by carriers. It seems to me quite possible that the ship-owners may be able to evade the provisions of this Bill in a very simple way. If I am right in that it would nullify the whole Act. For instance, what is to prevent the shippers refusing to contract for the shipment of grain from Port Arthur or Fort William to a Canadian port. They could say: "We will contract to take your wheat from Port Arthur or Fort William to Buffalo, and from Buffalo to Montreal". This Bill would not interfere with that because, it would be an international rate.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But the Bill says they have power.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I admit I am very sceptical; I am almost sure they have not, and if so this Bill, which is offered as a remedy for this crying evil, means very little, because we know that those gentlemen who own the great transportation companies control this wheat. Their whole record has been that they want the last cent, or the last sixteenth of a cent, they can exact from that trade, and if they can get 8, 9 or 10 cents a bushel for carrying wheat from Port Arthur or Fort William via Buffalo to Montreal, when this Board is functioning properly we might fix a Canadian rate at 5 or 6 cents a bushel. But I think it is very plain to everybody that the ship-owners will exact the last cent they can from the shippers, and they expect to reap from these excessive rates, which are almost extortion, so that I am afraid the farmers of the West will be very much disappointed.

Now I am going to point out what I think is a means to checkmate those gentlemen. I think the Government holds the key of the situation in their own hands. The Government to-day owns 27 first-class ships suitable for this trade, and if they were put on the market for sale they would hardly get anything for them in proportion to what they cost.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: That is the intention.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: If I remember aright, those ships cost about $600,000 apiece; they were built during wartime. I venture to say they would not bring more than $20,000 to $25,000 apiece if offered for sale. Now, what is the position of the Government to-day? I am told that those vessels will hold from 75,000 to 100,000 and perhaps 150,000 bushels of wheat; consequently that fleet could move on every trip 2,500,000 bushels of wheat. I leave it to this House, and I appeal to the leader of the Government if he does not realize that by the use of those vessels the Government could force the situation and compel those carriers to do the right thing by Canadian shippers and by the farmers of the West. I submit that if the Government fails to do this, and if they dispose of those boats in face of the awful condition prevailing regarding transportation of our grain from the West, they will certainly leave themselves open to most serious condemnation not only by the farmers of the West, but by the right-thinking people of this country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Are those ships adapted for this trade?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I am told they are well adapted to handle from 100,000 to 150,000 bushels of wheat. Assuming that I am correct, or nearly correct, and assuming that the fleet can carry 2,500,000 bushels of grain every trip, how long would it be before that fleet would pay for itself? Those ships would pay for themselves every year. And in addition to those ships performing their work of transportation in the fall, and thus relieving the situation, and compelling the lake carriers to accept the decisions of the Board which you propose to appoint under this Bill. I submit that if you do not use the power which is in your hand, those ship-owners will not obey the rulings of your Board, but will simply carry the wheat to Buffalo and from there to Montreal, and thus nullify what you are trying to do by this Bill.

But in addition to handling the 2,500,000 bushels of wheat on every trip in the fall of the year, those boats can go back to Port Arthur, act as store-houses for at least 2,500,000 bushels of wheat, remain there until the spring, and then sail out with their cargo.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Where are those boats now?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not know. I submit that the Government has in its own hands the solution of this entire question, and if the Government allows those ships to pass from under its control, and leaves the western provinces at the mercy of the transportation companies on the Great Lakes, they will certainly not be discharging their duty to the wheat growers and the people of this country.

I desire to refer for a moment or two to what appears to be a rather unfair discrimination in this Bill. It is to be found at the end of the Bill, section 9, which proposes to take from under the operation of the Bill all grain that is shipped from one Canadian port to another for the purpose of being used in Ontario. I submit that that is not fair to the shipper, the wheat raiser in the West. Why should he not benefit by reduced rates on every bushel of wheat that leaves Port Arthur? Why should the Government say to the shipper, "All the wheat that you sell for export shall be protected under this Bill, and we shall regulate rates as far as we can; but any wheat that is shipped to Ontario to be ground there will not come under the operation of this Bill." The farmer will consequently suffer to the extent of the difference between the freight rates that the Board may provide under this Bill and the rates that the transport companies may choose to charge.

It does strike me that the Government has the key to the situation in its own hands to-day: it has these vessels. It cannot get rid of them unless it gives them away.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: That is the intention.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Well, I would not like to think that. I do not believe that the Government would dare to do the like of that. Public opinion, not only in the West but all over this country, is aroused on this question. The people are watching those vessels, and the Government could not escape serious condemnation, not only by the wheat growers and shippers from lake ports, but by the right-thinking people of this country, if they did not use those vessels as suggested. Surely the Government would not place itself in the position of having the public believe that it was in league with those companies who were extorting unfair rates from the farmers of the West.

Now, I leave this question for the consideration of the House. I ask the leader of the Government to give this matter serious consideration. I do not know that any provision can be made in this Bill by which this matter could be furthered, except a declaration by the Government—and I think we ought to have it—that the 27 ships that they own are going to be put in commission on that trade to carry grain.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable member for Moosejaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby), speaking just now of the Board of Grain Commissioners, said he went to their meeting. Would he kindly tell us who are those Grain Commissioners, also whether they know anything about navigation or about lake rates, how long they have worked for transportation companies, how much money they have invested in transportation, and how much they ever made themselves out of it? Does he know anything about them at all? I think I know one of them. I think there was Alderman Boyd of Montreal: he is a lawyer, so I do not think he would be a fit and proper person to act in that capacity. I do not think he would know very much about fixing rates, or about navigation, or anything like that. I am told he belongs to that Board: I do not know, but he has been moved from Montreal to Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: He is Chairman of the Board.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Well, are the others better than the Chairman? Do they know anything about it? Who are they, and what are their qualifications, if any?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The honourble gentleman has misunderstood me about attending a meeting of the Grain Commissioners. It was a meeting of the Commission investigating these rates.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I do not think it would take a very wise man to know that the rates were absolutely too high last fall. I think any person, even a grain commissioner, would know that.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: We would like to get their names.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Mr. Boyd and Mr. Snow, of Winnipeg. Those are two, and the other is a farmer from Saskatchewan—I forget his name just now.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Robertson.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Those are the men who are going to control the rates. These gentlemen saw last fall how the farmers and the grain dealers of Western Canada were being robbed by the vessel owners, and I think if there are any men in Canada who should know what is right and fair as to freight rates it would be those men who have control of the grain trade of Western Canada.

I think the proposal made by my honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) is a very good one; but apart from that, even if the Government do not see fit to use our own vessels for carrying grain, I am not very much afraid. The grain trade is carried on in the fall, and the ore trade from the States is over by that time, and the Government are taking to themselves power to suspend the coasting laws, which will give them absolute control, and assure us of a low freight rate on the lakes. The Government, having that control, if they use it, will assure us of a fair price for the carrying of our grain.

Section 9 has been referred to, and I would like the Minister to explain just what that means. If it means taking flour from under the control of this Board to assist the millers, I wish to move that we strike this clause out.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That motion should not be made until clause 9 is reached.

Hon. Mr REID: I am in favour of this Bill or any other that will ensure that the rates from Port Arthur and Fort William to Montreal, or to any other port, are fair and just to those who have to use transportation. What I fear in putting this into the hands of the Grain Commissioners is that a conflict of authority may arise if there is not some clause in the Act to prevent it. As I recollect, the Railway Act provides that the Board of Railway Commissioners have power to fix freight rates between Port Arthur and Georgian Bay ports on all traffic that goes on vessels owned by or operated in connection with the railways. If I am correct, the wording of the Act is sufficiently wide to give that Board power to fix the rate between those ports, whether the freight is for export or any other purpose, if the railways themselves own the vessels.

There is a difference of opinion as to who are the proper parties to have this power. My judgment is that it should be in the hands of the Railway Commissioners, and if they do not do what is right, or give decisions making the rates higher than they should be, there is power in the hands of Parliament to bring them before a committee to state why those rates were charged. Therefore, in my judgment, those men who are investigating rates and have full knowledge of them are the ones who should have this authority, instead of the Grain Commission. Even if this Bill passes, I fear the people of the West are not going to get the relief they expect, as there are so many ways of getting around this Act. For instance, the rates are fixed by this Board of Grain Commissioners. My own opinion as a layman is that, if a United States company sent its vessel to Port Arthur or Fort William and insisted on them fixing a rate between that port and Buffalo, there might be a question of authority. But that can be easily overcome. There is no trouble at all in the shipper making a through rate from Port Arthur and Fort William to Liverpool, and the railways and the sea-going vessels have a right to divide that up as they like, and we can never investigate it on the other side.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: "Ocean" would be added to this.

Hon. Mr. REID: So, a year or two after this Act goes into force, I would like to see what happens.

Then there are other ways of overcoming it, as the honourable member has stated, by shipping from Port Arthur and Fort William to Buffalo or Ogdensburg and then putting it on an American vessel. The low rate of 3 cents or 5 cents a bushel might be charged between Port Arthur or Fort William and Buffalo or Ogdensburg, just as the Grain Commissioners had fixed; but a high rate might be charged from Buffalo to Montreal. How are they going to fix that? The two rates, added together, would give a good, high rate which would control the situation.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Nothing like that would be done.

Hon. Mr. REID: It was done before. Grain was shipped to Ogdensburg, and I know that that did happen. There are other reasons why I think the Bill is hardly fair. Under the best clause, as has been stated, all grain ground in the Province of Ontario, or shipped from Port Arthur or Kenora to another point within the Province of Ontario, does not come within the Act. There is a tremendous quantity of Western grain ground and shipped through in the form of flour. If I understand this Bill aright, it means that we say to the farmer in the West: "We are going to give you cheaper rates for export, so that you may get more for your grain exported; but for all of it that is going to be ground in Ontario you will not get so much, because this measure does not apply to the vessels that are going to charge higher rates down in Ontario, in order to balance up the other rates." The result will be that the farmer in the West, for what grain is going to be ground in Ontario for export, will receive less, on account of the higher freight rates, to which this statute will not apply. Why should not the farmer get the same profit from grain that is ground into flour for export as from grain that is shipped to Port Arthur and Midland for export? I cannot see how honourable members of the Senate would go so far as to declare to the farmers of the West; "We will do all we can to get you a high price for your grain for export, but we will cut you down all we can on grain that is going to be ground in Ontario."

Then there is the question which has been raised by an honourable member, as to what is a fair profit. The vessel owners are entiled to fair profit for the use of their vessels, but if the people of the West are going to get a cheap rate on their grain, or to be charged only what is fair, why should they have to pay a high rate on cargoes they get back?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Packet goods.

Hon. Mr. REID: Why should not the provisions of this Bill, if they cannot be evaded, be applied to all goods instead of grain alone? There are many other kinds of goods coming from the West. There are the by-products, and there is flour; and immense quantities of goods are shipped to the West. I think they should all be treated in the same way.

The Government have other ways of dealing with the situation. They can, if they wish, suspend the coasting laws. We did so. When I was Minister of Customs, we had not the power, but we simply told the vessel owners: "If you are going to charge exorbitant rates, we will just suspend the coasting laws." I did that as Minister of Customs, although perhaps I had not the authority. If anything was unfair or unjust, and I did take the law into my own hands, there was no doubt in my mind that Parliament would stand behind me, in view of the purpose for which the action was taken.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: In what year was that?

Hon. Mr. REID: It was about 1914 or 1915.

I am afraid that the proposed law may have this effect also, that when our own vessels are obliged to charge only such rates as are approved by the Board, for shipments between these ports, there is the possibility of two rates being granted. The effect might be to divert grain shipments from our Canadian ports to American ports, because shipments going by the United States route might evade the requirements in several ways, such as I have suggested.

Then there are other ways in which our Canadian ports might be adversely affected. The grain might be shipped to Duluth instead of to Port Arthur or Fort William. If our grain goes to Duluth, how are we going to control the rates between Duluth and Montreal? An American vessel will take it from Duluth to Port Colborne, if you like; or she will take it from Duluth to Buffalo; and a Canadian vessel could also go to Duluth and get what rates she could between Duluth and Port Colborne—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Of course they are doing it now.

Hon. Mr. REID: —and bring it from Port Colborne down.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: And she could go to Chicago also.

Hon. Mr. REID: I am mentioning a few of the difficulties that I see might arise. I am not going to oppose the Bill. I am willing that every opportunity should be made available that the men in the West may get a fair profit from their grain. However, I would go further than the Bill does. If you are going to make provisions regarding one commodity, why not do so for all, in order that fair rates may be charged and also that vessels may get a fair return on the money invested in them?

I do not think this Board is the proper body to administer this measure. My opinion is that it should be administered by the Board of Railway Commissioners. I would like to know, if this Bill passes, how it will operate with regard to Georgian Bay ports. Is the Board of Railway Commissioners the body that will decide the rates, or is it to be the Board of Grain Commissioners?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: At what point precisely does the farmer obtain the money for his grain and transfer it to some purchaser? Reference has been made to the farmer and his interest. I would like to be informed on that point—as to where the farmer ceases to be a beneficiary. Does his interest continue in all the operations until the grain is finally disposed of?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: As I have always understood, the farmer would cease to have any interest in the grain after it was sold and delivered and he received his money at the local elevator, in any of the three Provinces, or at the head of the Lakes, if he shipped it there to be placed in storage.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Large quantities are shipped that way.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: I have no doubt that the Department in framing this Bill, intended to be absolutely impartial to all interests; but it seems to me that when the Board of Grain Commissioners are appointed, they must undoubtedly be more sympathetic to the grain trade than they are to the steamship interests. They have not duties that bring them into close contact with the transportation people. They are at all times closely in touch with the operations of the grain trade up to Fort William and Port Arthur, but they are not in touch with vessel operations and the transportation of other classes of freight, in which these vessels are engaged. In fact, it seems to be most unnatural that this body should regulate steamship operations. I think honourable gentlemen, that the authorities charged with the administration of this Act ought to have been chosen partly from among the grain interests and partly from the shipping interests.

Then, I think that the ports of Montreal and Quebec might have been considered, and some of those who are interested in the transportation business, which means so much for our Canadian ports, should also have some say in regard to these regulations. If we are going to regulate, why not regulate everything at once? Do not let this measure be simply class legislation applicable only to certain classes of commodities, to be regulated by a certain class of Commissioners. I think that, as has been suggested, we might include rail, water, lake, and ocean transportation under this Bill.

I wish, however, to dissociate myself from some remarks that have been made in regard to the sale of Government steamers, now being offered by tender. I am satisfied that those boats are being so offered in the best interest of the country, and I am perfectly willing to leave the matter to the judgment of those who are at the head of the Department. I would be willing to leave a question of that kind to the Marine Department, the Department of Trade and Commerce, or any other Department of the Government, feeling that it would act in the best interest of the country and not from any selfish motives or for any political reasons.

I would like to repeat, what has been already pointed out, that this Bill does not provide any control over Canadian grain shipped from Duluth. I understand that a considerable quantity of Canadian grain moves from Duluth.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Not at present.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: It has been shipped from Duluth to the Port of Montreal in the past. This grain, being in bond, is the same as if it were in Canada, and it should be subject to the same regulations as Canadian grain shipped from Fort William.

I wonder whether due consideration has been given to the effect this law will have upon the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William, so that they may not be discriminated against and grain diverted to Duluth by reason of the law not controlling shipments out of Duluth. Are you satisfied that failure to regulate grain shipped via Duluth would not give special advantages to that port and to grain-shipping firms in the United States, who can market wheat without being subject to these regulations?

As I read the whole Bill, I am somewhat doubtful and fearful as to the effect it may have upon the cities of Quebec and Montreal, especially in regard to the export trade that is being done through those cities at the present time. Last year, as you will remember, there were about 150 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: 165.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: I will give you the figures. The shipments of grain through the port of Montreal last year were 147,562,328 bushels; and of that quantity some 83 million odd bushels consisted of United States grain, as against only 63 million bushels of Canadian grain. There were 20 million bushels less of Canadian grain shipped out of the port of Montreal than of American grain.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Can my honourable friend explain why it is that our grain goes to United States ports and United States grain come to our ports?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Trade always follows the cheapest route. Therefore the cheapest route is by Canadian vessels out of the Canadian port.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Is the honourable gentleman speaking of wheat alone?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: No; I am talking of grain.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Is it not a fact that the so-called American grain is the early American wheat or corn? Millions of bushels of it go through Midland; I know that. It is not Canadian wheat that is going to the United States ports and is being shipped from there down.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: No, not necessarily. A great deal of it is American wheat that comes in through Canadian channels. That is another reason why there was considerable congestion last year at the various elevators. To my mind the question of freight rates was not the only one: there was also the question of the acommodation being too small for the volume of business that was to pass through, and once the congestion occurred the steamship companies were required in self-defence to ask either for demurrage on account of the detention of their boats, or to get a higher rate on their freight.

Do you find anything discriminatory or exorbitant in the rates quoted, namely, 4.13 cents per bushel to Georgian Bay and 3.81 cents per bushel to Port Colborne and 4.49 cents per bushel to Buffalo for the year 1922?

We understand that under the rates in the fall to Buffalo demurrage was in addition to the freight rate, and was not included in the bushel rate, whereas the Canadian boats carried to Canadian ports without demurrage. It would seem to me that the preference in rate was to Canadian ports.

We realize that the cost of operation of steamships on the Great Lakes has increased from 60 to 100 per cent, as compared with pre-war cost; also that the cost of reproduction of such ships is 100 per cent above pre-war cost. We realize that the dollars earned by lake ships only purchase about 60 per cent of what they would purchase before the war, and therefore would consider that a rate to be fair now should be 60 to 100 per cent higher than pre-war rates of carriage on the Lakes.

Is it not reasonable to expect, when the end of the funnel, so to speak, from Georgian Bay and Port Colborne to Montreal has been developed to handle a certain amount of grain, that when the Americans are permitted to dump such quantities of their grain into this route on account of their own rail facilities being inadequate, that the entire machinery of moving Canadian grain would be dislocated and blocked, that the hardships and losses that last fall were placed upon certain shippers who had sold grain and not chartered their boats, and the hardships and losses suffered by Canadian boats that early in the season contracted for the carriage of grain in the fall at low rates, were all due to inaction on the part of this Government in seeing that the American grain did not block our own route to seaboard.

I am told that when a boat is ready to load the lake shipper arranges for his spot wheat through a cash grain-broker. In doing this, he delivers up the option on the wheat, and pays a premium per bushel over the option price in order to get possession of the spot or actual wheat. When there are a great many boats ready to load, the terminal elevator companies may take advantage of the situation where possible, and put up their premiums upon the spot wheat. Do you not think that with all this information as to shipment, available to the terminal elevators, who are largely in possession of the spot wheat, they may take a greater additional toll out of the cost of marketing the wheat than anything that this Bill would ever save in freight rates?

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to read this clause of the Railway Act, as it relates to the matter under discussion. Clause 7 reads:

7. The provision of this Act in respect of tolls, tariff and joint tariffs shall, so far as they are applicable extend to the traffic carried by any company by sea or by inland water, between any ports or places in Canada, if the company owns charters, uses, maintains or works, or is a party to any arrangement, for using, maintaining or working vessels for carrying traffic by sea or by inland water between any such ports or places.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Without wishing to take up too much of the time of the House, I desire to draw the attention of the honourable leader of the Government to another point. I was referring to Government-owned vessels, and pointing out the wisdom of keeping them and using them in the lake traffic for the carrying of grain. An honourable Senator has just placed in my hand a copy of the St. John Globe, containing the names of all the vessels offered for sale, and the list is an amazing one. I would urge upon the honourable leader of the Government that, in the interest of the people of the West, the grain-growers and the shippers, and in order to control the transportation on our Great Lakes and make it safe for the Western farmers, this sale ought to be stopped, and these vessels retained by the Government and used for the carrying of grain. I would like to place it on record:

Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited
For sale by Tender

Sealed tenders will be received by the Undersigned at 230 St. James Street, Montreal, Canada, until noon August 1st, 1923, for the purchase of the following steamers; tenders to be based on acceptance of the respective vessels in their present condition and where now located. Any stores or bunker coal that may be on board excluded.

The names of the whole 27 steamers are given.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: When does the sale take place?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Tenders will be received until noon of August 1st, 1923.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I am inclined to think that the point raised by the honourable gentleman from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) deserves attention. If the rates of part of the vessels navigating on the lakes are fixed by the Railway Board, it seems to me that the rates on all vessels should be fixed by the same body. I think also that it would be fairer to the owners of vessels if the rates were regulated by the Railway Board. As was suggested, the Grain Board may possibly be biassed—I do not know to what extent—they may be interested in grain. Moreover, it would be inadvisable to have two different bodies determining rates of that kind, because the rates fixed by them might not agree.

I am somewhat perplexed by another point, and desire to call the attention of the leader of the House to it. It might be worth his while to bring it to the attention of the Department of Justice. Section 92 of the British North America Act, which defines the subjects of exclusive Provincial legislation contains these words in article 10:

Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:

(a) Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, and other works and undertakings connecting the Province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province.

Under this any lines of railway or steamships which extend from one Province to another, or beyond one Province, are clearly excluded from the jurisdiction of the provinces.

When I refer to portions of the Bill which define "person" "shipping company," "ship owner," I think it would be easy to cover the point. For instance the Bill says:

"Shipping company" means any person, firm or company who carries, or offers, advertises or proposes to carry grain between any ports in Canada or between any ports in Canada and the United States.

It should be amended by adding after the word "Canada" in the third line the words: "from or through one province to another province." That would cover not only the vessels navigating from one port in Canada to another but also those operating to American ports.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That would not cover shipping from Port Arthur to Midland. That would be in Ontario. A large proportion of the grain from Fort William and Port Arthur goes to Midland and would be absolutely within the regulation of the province. I would like this Bill to be made workable.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable gentleman from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) referred to the Railway Board. It is very similar to this Board, but one must not forget that the power of Railway Board applies only to works that fall within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. REID: Grain is shipped from Saskatchewan to Montreal via lake and rail, and if the C.P.R. or the Canadian National have vessels running between Port Arthur and Montreal the Board of Railway Commissioners would have power to fix the rates. If, as has been suggested by some honourable gentleman, we had some Government boats, the rates could be fixed. The Railway Board would have power to make sure that the rates between Port Arthur and Montreal are fair. They would be able to say: "These vessels are working in connection with your railway, and you must see that they charge a fair rate, or we will not allow you to use them."

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: It is not the boats belonging to the railway companies that are complained of.

Hon. Mr. REID: I admit that.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: We are not so particular about them; we want some control of the independent boats.

Hon. Mr. REID: I admit that; but as I have said, the independent boats cannot run between Port Arthur and Montreal unless they get the grain from the railways. The railways bring it to Port Arthur.

Hon Mr. SHARPE: They can deliver it to independent elevators there.

Hon. Mr. REID: You may call them tramp steamers. They come to Port Arthur to the terminal elevators, if you like; but the grain must come over the railways to the elevators.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: The railways do not control them.

Hon. Mr. REID: If the Board of Railway Commissioners have that power, I believe they could make an arrangement by which vessels carrying grain, no matter to what elevators they brought it—the elevator being only a medium through which it passes—could be made to carry it at a fair and reasonable rate, because the Act now refers to vessels working in connection with the railways.

But I am willing to go further and to enlarge this or any other Act and give more powers to have the rates fixed in the interest of the traffic. Nevertheless I believe that the Board of Railway Commissioners are the proper body.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Those who are vitally interested in this trade in western Canada are perfectly satisfied with the Bill at the present time.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What would the honourable member for Lisgar (Hon. Mr. Sharpe) think of the Railway Board? This Parliament cannot give these commissioners any more rights than they have given the Railway Board. I suppose that is admitted What objection can there be to the Railway Board? Why the grain commissioners are selected I do not know.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: The Commission went into that very fully.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The Commission recommended the Railway Board.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I think you are mistaken.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I leave it to the honourable gentleman from Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby).

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes, they did.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I think that if we are going to make the Bill at all effective, we have to keep it entirely clear of the Railway Board. We have a Board at Fort William that is familiar with every movement of our grain and everything in connection with it. If this bill is going to be made workable, we must leave it in the hands of that Commission; otherwise the West, which is not too well pleased with some of the acts of the Railway Commission, would not be satisfied.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: The question of the Board which will control these rates and the question of the efficiency of that Board have been raised. The Chairman of this Commission is Mr. Boyd, a gentleman with whom I have come in contact on a number of occasions. I have always been very much impressed with his capacity and ability in carrying out the duties of his position.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: As a lawyer?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: My honourable friend says he is a lawyer. Apparently he is satisfied with the Chairman of the Railway Commission, who is a lawyer, and who on the very day after he was appointed began to perform the duties of Chairman of that Board; and nobody ever questioned his power or capacity to fulfil his duties.

Mr. Boyd has been performing the duties of his position for several years. He has been residing at Fort William, which is at the head of the shipping trade of Western Canada, and if by this time he has not become conversant with the details and the customs of the shipping business and the grain trade it is time that he was replaced by some other gentleman who would become conversant with his duties within a shorter space of time. Another member of the Commission is Mr. Snow, who for the past 20 years has been actively engaged at Fort William in connection with the grain shipping business. When the Government appointed Mr. Snow to that position I was satisfied in my own mind that no man who was more conversant with the shipping interests could have been appointed to the position. Since that time Mr. Robinson has been appointed as the third member of the Commission. He was one of the highest officials of the Co-operative Elevator Company of Saskatchewan. His duties in connection with that company were not confined to office work, but were along the lines of transporting its enormous output, which ran into fifty or sixty million bushels of grain a year, and getting it out of the country. I think we have in that Commission three gentlemen who are quite competent to handle this business; and if I had my choice I would certainly prefer the supervision of this Board to the supervision of the Railway Commission.

It is quite possible that it would have been better if this Bill had come down early in the Session, when we might have referred it to a Special Committee. But here we are at the close of the Session. The Bill is the only one that is offered. The people of the West look to this Government for relief from the conditions that existed last year, and they are going to hold this Government responsible for affording them that relief.

This Act will be administered by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I have not too much confidence in the present Government, but if there is one member of the present Government in whom I have confidence it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, whom I consider to be the most level-headed business man in the administration.

As I say, the people of the West look to this Government for relief from the conditions that existed last year. This is the only Bill we have, and we have to protect it. For that reason I think we should accept the Bill now before the House, and put it through. The western people are not prepared again to be thrown to the wolves after the experience of last year.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: You must remember that the Board of Railway Commissioners have assessors and experts. If there is a question of engineering, it goes to the engineering branch; if it is a question of rates the Board has experts to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: So has this Board.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I shall say only a few words and then we will carry the Bill unanimously, not because of what I say, but because of the feeling of the Senate.

What has the Royal Commission done to clarify the situation? It has simply brought the operations of these gentlemen on the Lakes into the limelight. Their operations were well known, and a case was made out. What is to be found in this Bill? We find that formidable lever, publicity. That is provided for under sections 3 and 4. Who will know the rates from day to day, and who will be in a better position to watch their operations than the Grain Board, which is not in Ottawa, but at the head of the Lakes? And when these people who watch over the operations of the Bill see the rates going up, who will they notify? They will notify the Minister of Trade and Commerce? What will be the action of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Government? In the suspension of the coasting laws, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Government will have a powerful lever in their hands in case these people want to carry on as they did last year.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Will the boats be there at that time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, the threat of the suspension of the coasting laws will make all those people wiser, and I hope we will not have to suspend the coasting laws, and I hope the Grain Board will not have to fix a maximum. It is a very delicate matter, but by this Bill you are empowering the Government to use pressure on those steamship companies to see that they do not take from the people of the West, I was going to say the pound of flesh, but I will say the big loaf of bread.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Is there any arrangement in contemplation whereby some other official of the Government than the Minister of Trade and Commerce may invoke that remedy, in the event of the Minister being on the other side of the world, as he was last year when his service was required?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Governor in Council will be in Ottawa. In answer to the query of the ex-Minister of Railways

(Hon. Mr. Reid), I am informed that there is no through freight rate on grain carried in bulk. There is when it is in sacks; but the matter we are now looking into is the carrying of grain in bulk, and there is no such thing as a through freight rate on that.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I would like to have an answer from the honourable leader of the Government to my suggestion that the operations of the Act should be widened by including flour.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That matter was not discussed, or if it was there was no report of the Royal Commission on it. Their recommendation is as to grain only, and I would prefer to leave the Bill as it is until next season.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: In connection with that, might I ask the Minister to explain what section 9 is?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The whole Bill has been drafted very carefully by the Department of Justice, and they felt that section 9 should be inserted in order to recognize the division of authority between the Federal and the Provincial powers. It is simply in order to conform to that division of powers.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: On whose request was section 9 put in?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I could not say, but I believe it forms part of the whole economy of the Act. I will find out if we proceed to the clause.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: In the meanwhile perhaps some gentleman from the West may answer the question whether it is possible for Canadian grain dealers to sell Canadian grain in European markets if they cannot book their lake freight sufficiently in advance. Take James Carruthers, in Montreal, for instance: if he sells in Europe, he has to be sure that he will have space on the Lakes for that grain to come down.

Hon. Mr. REID: He can do it by giving it to Duluth.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, he would have to take it from an American port.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This clause 9 was put in, as I surmised, by the law officers of the Crown in order to ensure the legality of the Act.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: At whose request? Was it the millers'?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; by the law officers of the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Are you sure it was not the millers?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that it was by the law officers.

Hon. Mr. REID: I must object to clause 9, because it will raise the price of flour in Ontario by enabling ship-owners to charge high freight rates.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that he himself argued that the Railway Commission controlled the two freight rates. They do on flour, because it is in packages.

Hon. Mr. REID: But the honourable leader has not answered my question: will the Railway Act conflict with this one?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, it will not.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: In regard to section 9 and the proper division of power, I think it would be possible to have an interprovincial arrangement, inasmuch as we have Dominion control of the harbours. It should be necessary to take a license under this Board to carry grain or flour from one point in Ontario to another point in Ontario, using the harbours and other public utilities that are controlled by the Dominion of Canada under the B.N.A. Act. I do not speak after giving the matter consideration, but it strikes me that way very strongly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If we have to review this Act next year, I will draw the attention of the Department of Justice to the point made by my honourable friend.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—filing with Board of Grain Commissioners of tariff of rates to be charged, as well as subsequent changes in that regard; penalty for infraction:

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What control would this Board have of an American vessel? The clause speaks of an American vessel coming to Port Arthur for a load. Will that American vessel be fined for not posting up in the exchange, or in the office, or wherever this posting is to be done? It is true they do not pay any taxes, or pay any wages in the country. The Canadian will be fined, and you can collect from him, but how are you going to collect from an American vessel? Let us make this Bill so that it has some fairness.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Has any consideration been given to the regulation of prices at the receiving port rather than at the shipping port?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I think that the only regulation could be at the point of departure.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: But would not that control the American situation? We understand that to-day the minister could take control and regulate the freight rates at the receiving port, which would apply to American as well as Canadian ships. If the law goes into force, and the rates are regulated at the shipping port, Canadian shipping is going to be at a serious disadvantage as compared with American shipping.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Why would that be so?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Because it will not be under the control or jurisdiction of this Act. They will bring in grain to certain ports, and trade to those ports, and not be under this Act at all.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: They will have to do it cheaper in that way.

Sections 3 and 4 were agreed to.

On section 5—when Board may prescribe a maximum rate; variations in maximum rates; receiving toll in excess of maximum rate; penalty therefor:

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Will there be any clause included for demurrage on a vessel that may be delayed? Will the owners be permitted to charge demurrage after 24 hours have elapsed at the port of Montreal?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Or any port.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Or any port. I do not see any item in this Bill. If demurrage is permitted the steamship companies can carry the grain at a lower rate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This does not seem to be covered by the Act.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The Railway Commissioners do not determine demurrage charges on railways, therefore to be consistent this Board would not have charge of demurrage.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that this matter may be dealt with by regulations.

Sections 5 to 9, inclusive, were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL (COASTING LAWS)

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 236, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

He said: This is a consequential Act, or rather a twin brother of the Act we have just passed. It authorizes the Governor in Council to suspend the coasting laws. I move the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—power to suspend coasting laws:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why are these amendments required?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As a result of the report of the Royal Commission, which sat on this question of freight rates on the Great Lakes. This is one of the powers which Parliament should give the Government, in order to cope with the abuses that arose last autumn.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Would it not be a great thing to have a little reciprocity in this? The powers that be are in favour of reciprocity. Why should we not abrogate the coasting laws when the United States want to do the same thing for our vessels? The United States have 7 ships and 7 tons of shipping for one vessel or one ton in Canada, and there are only a few weeks during which our vessels have very much to do. As we all know, these vessels on the American side have been carrying ore all summer, and making good money, and when the harvest comes for the Canadian vessels you invite the American vessels to come and take the very cream of the business without paying any taxes and without paying any wages in Canada. That is the position. We should suspend our coasting laws only when the United States suspend their coasting laws.

Section 1 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 218, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—"ship" to include share in a ship:

Hon. Hr. DANDURAND: This section is new. It is simply an interpretation clause for the purpose of making it clear that in the following amendments to Part I of the Canada Shipping Act (the only sections to which it shall apply) where a reference is made to a ship it shall also include a share in a ship.

Under section 5 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the property in a British ship is divided into sixty-four shares. It is difficult definitely to say why sixty-four shares were decided upon. A probable explanation is that it lends itself to a convenient subdivision of ownership.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—annual returns by surveyors:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Measuring surveyors of shipping are appointed under the provisions of section 12 of the Canada Shipping Act and they are paid by fees authorized by the Governor in Council under section 13 of the Canada Shipping Act.

The Department has on two occasions received complaints that measuring surveyors were charging more for their surveys than the authorized scale of fees and travelling expenses, and the object of this amendment is to require them to make a report of their activities and the fees and travelling expenses collected by them, so that a proper check may be kept on these officials.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—registration prohibited if ship purchased from foreign subject or corporation and subject to control of foreign government; security to be given by applicant if assets in Canada not sufficient:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the explanation of that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This section is new. Under the provisions of the United States "Merchant Marine Act," no American ship can change her flag without the approval of the United States Shipping Board. Previous to November, 1922, the Board granted clean and unconditional permits for change of flag, but since that time certain conditions and restrictions have been attached which make it undesirable that these ships should be admitted to Canadian registry. Briefly, these conditions stipulate:

(1) That the vessel shall not be used for rum-running or smuggling. and that if so used she shall be immediately subject to seizure, libel and forfeiture to the United States wherever and whenever found without compensation to any person therefor.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Those are the United States regulations?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes. That is to say, they will not allow their own ships to change the register except under certain conditions.

(2) That the conditions shall run with the title to the boat; and in some cases,

(3) That the vessel is not to be allowed to engage in trade of any kind with United States ports.

As these conditions practically amount to an assertion of continued control by the United States Government of ships which are no longer vessels of the United States, the Department is not prepared to concede to the Government of the United States the right to in any way exercise jurisdiction over ships of Canadian register beyond such control as may from time to time be applicable to all vessels of foreign registry while in United States waters.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: That is a recent regulation of the American Government, is it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Sections 4, 5, and 6 were agreed to.

On section 7—regulations as to loading of grain cargoes:

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Would that be administered through the Port Warden's office?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This section is new. It is designed to give the Department, under the regulations to be made by the Governor in Council, control of the loading of seagoing ships with grain at Canadian seaports. At present there is no Canadian law or regulation which attempts to set forth in detail how grain should be loaded for transportation in ships to Europe and from British Columbia ports to the Orient and South America. Section 716 of the Canada Shipping Act simply puts it up to the Master and owner of the ship to see that the grain cargo is properly secured from shifting:

716. No grain cargo shall be carried on board any ship registered in Canada, unless such grain cargo is contained in bags, sacks or barrels, or properly secured from shifting by board or otherwise.

The Regulations contemplated under this amendment will be in harmony with the Rules of the British Board of Trade and will enable the Department to penalize stevedores and others who may contract for loading ships with grain if they do not live up to them.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Where does the Port Warden come in?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is largely at the instance of the Montreal Board of Trade.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: The Port Warden's jurisdiction is not interfered with, is it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What arrangements are in force now in regard to grain cargoes? Are there any rules or regulations governing the loading of ships now?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, there are.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: How does this clause amend them? This gives power to make regulations.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is simply for the purpose of reaching the stevedores and Masters who violate the regulations in force.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: It creates penalties?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 7 was agreed to.

Section 8 was agreed to.

On section 9—tonnage, how calculated:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: This section refers to the "registered tonnage" with the space occupied by the engine room deducted. Does this mean the net registered tonnage of the ship?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Section 922 of the Canada Shipping Act as it stands at present states how the tonnage for purposes of limitation of liability is to be calculated:

> The tonnage for the last preceding section shall be,—
>
> (a) in the case of sailing ships, the registered tonnage; and,
>
> (b) in the case of steamships, the gross tonnage without deduction on account of engine room.

The proposed amendment makes Canadian law exactly the same as that contained in the Imperial Merchant Shipping Acts; its effect is to put steamships and sailing ships practically on the same basis.

Section 9 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 223, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.

He said: The only change section 1 makes in the existing law is the reduction of the base fee or salmon cannery license fee from $500 to $20.

The existing fee is $500 and in addition thereto four cents for each case of 48 pounds of sockeye and three cents for each case of all other species of salmon packed under the license.

The existing fee was adopted in 1919. Prior to that time the fee on a salmon cannery license was only $50. At the time the fee was raised the industry was in the most paying period of its history. Conditions have greatly changed in the meantime, and the past two years have been very difficult ones for the industry, and the special commission consisting of Members of Parliament which investigated the fisheries of British Columbia last year unanimously recommended that the fee be reduced as provided by the Bill. The reduction in the fee will involve an annual reduction in revenue of from $30,000 to $35,000, as the number of canneries operated is usually from 70 to 75.

Section 2 of the Bill merely corrects an error that in some way was made when the Bill to amend the Fisheries Act last year prohibiting salmon or lobster fishing boats to leave port without a license was being printed. In the second last line of paragraph (b) of section 1 it is stated that the illegal gear, etc, shall be confiscated as provided by section "sixty" of the Fisheries Act. It should have read section "eighty" of the Fisheries Act. I have here a copy of the Fisheries Act.

The existing cannery license fee is provided by section 18 of the Act, and a copy of 12-13 George V, to which section 2 refers is also attached.

There is also attached a copy of the British Columbia Commission's final report. The recommendation for the reduction in the cannery fee will be found at Pages 18 and 19 of the report, which I think has already been tabled.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I desire to repeat what I said this afternoon, that it is incomprehensible to me that the license fee of $500 for a cannery should be reduced to $20.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was $50 in 1919.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, it was $50 in 1919, and the deficit, I am credibly informed, was no less than $250,000 per annum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The deficit in what?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The deficit in administration of the Fisheries of British Columbia. The increase of the license, I am further informed, wiped out this deficit annually. Now my honourable friend proposes, according to this Bill, to reduce the license fee to $20 per annum. I understand that the deficit is to be—what? Forty thousand dollars?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: From $30,000 to $35,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How can that possibly be? When the license fee was $50 the deficit was $250,000. Now you reduce the license fee to $20 and the deficit is to be only $35,000?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Because of more licenses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; it is the revenue that will be reduced by $30,000 or $35,000. The deficit is somewhat large.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is, the deficit in the administration of these fisheries? It seems to me that if we cannot get sufficient revenue out of the fisheries which we are administering, or which we authorize to be carried on, notwithstanding that fishing has been regarded as one of the most lucrative industries upon the Pacific Coast, the situation presented to Parliament is extraordinary. I cannot for one moment appreciate the Government of Canada allowing the canneries to carry on a business in those fisheries for the paltry sum of $20 per annum. It seems to me to be trifling with the resources of Canada. Certainly the administration should be on a self-supporting basis. I am informed from a communication which I hold in my hand that during the term of office of the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries he held a conference with the canners, and when the fee was placed at $500 they accepted the increase of the license fee without any difficulty at all.

Furthermore, I should like to ask my honourable friend what is represented by this:

> Four cents for each case of forty-eight one pound cans, or the equivalent thereto, of any other species of three cents for each case of forty-eight one pound cans, or the equivalent thereto, of any other species of salmon.

Is there a similar charge made at the present time, or is this something absolutely new?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is a charge now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is it greater or less than this? This, to be on a parity with the license fee, would be a reduction of present charges, I presume.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, I protest against business being carried on in this way. I do not think we have a quorum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Even if it is a bare quorum, there is some very important business going on.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If we are going to sacrifice $500 licenses—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The existing fee is $500 and in addition thereto 4 cents for each case of 48 pounds of sockeye and 3 cents for each case of all other species of salmon packed under the license.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes; I have read that. That is in the Bill. But what I desire is an explanation as to how we are to overcome the deficit, which will certainly pile up to an infinitely greater extent than during the time of the late Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Sometimes there is a danger of killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. Five hundred dollars as a license fee for those canneries in a time of real depression may be a cruel charge indeeed. The fee was $50 up to 1919. Suddenly it occurred to the Department that it ought to try to reduce the deficit. But, I am informed, the deficit has been always with us and it is really impracticable to eliminate it completely. There will be a loss in this operation, of $25,000 to $30,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend permit me to read an extract from a letter received from Mr. Ballantyne, late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, written only a few days ago? He said:

> I found that the administration of B. C. Fisheries was causing a loss each year of about $250,000. I had this matter up with the officials in the Department and after most careful consideration it was decided to advance the cannery licenses from $50 per year to $500 and also so much on the catch.

In addition.

This would mean that each canner would pay the Government about $1,000 per year which is not too much considering their volume of business. I met nearly all the canners at the time and explained why we were raising the fee and it was unanimously agreed upon. Now a Bill is brought in to reduce the canners from $500 a year to $20. The only reason for doing so is because the foolish Duff report recommended it.

In regard to other licenses in B.C. I had all these graded up but not too high. The increase in canners and other fishery licenses took care of the entire deficit of $250,000 per year.

What I cannot reason out satisfactorily is how, if under a $50 fee there was a deficit of $250,000 a year, there will be a deficit of only $35,000 per annum with a $20 fee. This method of calculating is most extraordinary. I should say to my honourable friend that before we do anything as radical as this, a statement should be presented to the House showing what the revenue would be. I think my honourable friend had better let the present system stand until next year, and see how we come off in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Has my honourable friend read the report of the Parliamentary Commission?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I have not. I must say that I have not the greatest confidence in reports of Parliamentary Commissions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Just the same, we sometimes act on reports.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Sometimes we do.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I shall postpone the second reading of this Bill in order that my honourable friend may acquaint himself with the reasons contained in the report.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How would it be for my honourable friend likewise to acquaint himself with the reasons?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I intend to act upon my own preaching. For this reason I would postpone the second reading of the Bill until to-morrow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We can handle it with equal advantage then.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the Senate thought that a jump from $500 to $20 was too large—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is not a jump; that is a drop.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —we could perhaps examine into a half-way measure.

I move that the second reading be postponed.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I would point out to the honourable gentleman that he has already moved the second reading.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to and the debate was adjourned.

INSURANCE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 184, an Act to amend the Insurance Act, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

MANILA FIBRE BOUNTIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 188, an Act to repeal the Acts respecting Bounties on Manufactures of Manila Fibre in Canada.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

COPPER BOUNTIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 189, an Act respecting the payment of bounties on Copper Bars or Rods.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

DOMINION LANDS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 222, an Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

BOARD OF AUDIT BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 243, an Act to constitute a Board of Audit.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SUSPENSION OF RULES

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved to suspend rules 23 (f), 24 (a), (b), (d), (e), (h); 63, 119, 129, 130, and 131, in so far as they relate to public or private Bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 27, 1923.

FIRST SITTING

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DRY DOCK SUBSIDIES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 220, an Act to amend the Dry Dock Subsidies Act, 1910.

Hon. Mr. REID: Honourable gentlemen, I asked that this Bill be held over until to-day in order that I might have an opportunity of seeing the Deputy Minister and understanding thoroughly the situation as to the issue of bonds. I saw the Deputy Minister this morning and went over the matter with him, and I find the situation to be this. During construction the Government only agreed to pay an annual subsidy of 75 per cent of the actual money expended. The Bill increases that to 90 per cent. I do not see that there is very great objection to that, as the work is supposed to be completed in a few months.

As to the securities, the Government has agreed to pay the annual subsidy, divided into two half-yearly payments, on the amount expended in connection with the dry dock. The Government has entered into an agreement with the Dry Dock Company and the Trust Company to pay this annual subsidy for 35 years on a series of bonds that are issued each year. While the Government has not actually endorsed on the bonds a guarantee of both principal and interest, it has limited the issue of the bonds to a certain amount, so that the subsidies will in the end pay both principal and interest.

After hearing the explanation of the Deputy Minister, and upon looking into the document, I am satisfied that both principal and interest will be paid by the Government through the payment of the subsidy each year. I am therefore perfectly satisfied that the Bill should pass in its present form.

The motion was agred to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INLAND WATER FREIGHT RATES BILL

THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 235, an Act with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Would the honourable leader of the Government be kind enough to let us have the information I asked for yesterday as to what communications any member of the Government has had from the Department of Justice by way of either memorandum or opinion with regard to the powers of the Parliament of Canada to pass this legislation. I understood the honourable gentleman to say that he would let me have that to-day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: After the honourable gentleman put the question I referred to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and he confirmed the impression that I had, and which I had conveyed to this Chamber, that the Bill was prepared by the Department of Justice under the very close supervision of the Minister of Justice himself. So, as it emanates from the department, there would be no memorandum criticizing or approving the Bill which is their own child.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is giving me information which I had before, but is not giving me the information I want as to whether or not the Department of Justice or any officer thereof has given any memorandum or any opinion to the Government or any member of the Government with regard to the powers of Parliament respecting this Bill. I am perfectly aware of the fact that the Department drafted it; but prior to the drafting of the Bill, memoranda or opinions were given by the Department of Justice to members of the Government in regard to the powers of Paliament, and that is the information which I want, and to which I think we are entitled.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I doubt very much that any officer of the Department of Justice would of his own initiative write a memorandum to the Minister of Justice if his opinion was not sought. Does it not suffice to say that this Bill has been framed by the Department of Justice, has the stamp of the Department of Justice upon it, and went to the House of Commons? I know there is a wide range of opinion as to the exercise of the power which is contained in this Bill, but we have to meet a certain situation, and we feel that it ought to be met. Twice within the last ten years the Government of the day has suspended the coasting laws. Apparently there was considerable doubt as to its right to do so, since we are now giving to the Governor in Council the right to suspend those laws; yet we have had a statement from the ex-Minister of Railways that in order to meet the situation it had been done in 1913 or 1914. It was done again last autumn. I participated in the discussion as to the right of the Government to excercise that power. It was exercised under special conditions of stress, in the conviction that if the right were challenged Parliament would support the action of its executive. Now we are settling the point by delegating power to the Governor in Council in the matter of coasting laws. I know that with regard to the other Bill there may be considerable divergence of opinion; but as I see no other way of coping with the difficulty, I say let us exercise our power to the fullest extent, and if it is challenged the court will have occasion to pronounce.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have entire sympathy with all that the honourable gentleman has said, and no fault at all to find with it, except this, that it is all beside the question that is in my mind. What I would like to know is, what expressions of opinion have come from the Department of Justice to the Government, or any member, Department, or official of the Government, with regard to our power to pass this legislation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend insists, we will suspend the third reading until I have had time to turn to the Minister of Justice for that information. I will ask that these two Bills be put down for this afternoon.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Order was suspended until the second sitting this day.

LAKE OF THE WOODS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—BILL REJECTED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 175, an Act to repeal the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the Senate is fairly familiar with the question which is dealt with in this Bill. I would have liked to have a little time to refresh my memory as to the events which preceded the legislation of last Session, but perhaps I may summarize it in this way. The Dominion of Canada is in the rights of Manitoba, in so far as Manitoba has rights, to the waters that have their source in the Lake of the Woods and Lac Seul. Concurrent legislation was agreed upon by the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: And Manitoba too?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am speaking of the early legislation. The Dominion of Canada passed an Act in accordance with an agreement reached with the Province of Ontario at the time. The Legislature of Ontario did not at its following Session implement its obligation by similar legislation, and the Dominion Parliament during the same Session took power to establish a Control Board and declared that the works were for the general advantage of Canada. In so declaring the Dominion of Canada was able to legislate. The statute has been on our Statute Book ever since.

The Legislature of Ontario at its next Session, did do its part, implementing its obligation to legislate.

When the Dominion Parliament passed that second Act, assuming power to deal with the matter as one declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, the Prime Minister of the day stated to the House of Commons that the Act would be repealed when Ontario carried out its agreement by enacting the promised legislation. The Prime Minister who made that statement and his Cabinet went out of office, and the succeeding Government last Session proceeded to implement the undertaking of its predecessor by bringing in legislation for the repeal of the Federal Act. But the proposed legislation met in this Chamber with some opposition; it was opposed also in the other Chamber; and the Bill of last year was rejected. The difficulty grew out of the statement that the works had been declared by a Dominion Statute to be for the general advantage of Canada. The other House, and perhaps this House, would have approved unanimously of the proposed Bill if the Government had not insisted upon repealing the Act absolutely. The divergence of opinion was as to the propriety of retaining the works under the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. The late Prime Minister felt that, although the agreement between the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario could be carried out according to its terms, yet for the future the works should remain under Federal jurisdiction, and the clause stating that those works were for the general advantage of Canada should not be repealed. The House of Commons, in response to the urgent insistence of the Ontario Government that the rights and jurisdiction of the Province, which had been absorbed by the Federal power—through that Act, should be restored to it; but this Senate, by a very large majority, refused that request. I do not know whether or not it refused the request solely on the ground that the Federal jurisdiction should continue, but at any rate it did refuse the request.

Now, I think I have fairly stated the situation which confronted us when the vote was taken last Session. The Government this Session moves in the same direction, namely, for the withdrawal of the temporary legislation that was placed on the Statute Book, which was admitted by the Prime Minister of the time to be provisional and intended to remain in force only so long as Ontario failed to pass the necessary legislation. In view of the large vote which was given against the Bill of last year, I should not be justified in bringing this matter again before this Chamber were it not that new conditions had arisen. The new conditions are these.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: A new Government in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That leaves me perfectly indifferent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It should be a matter of interest to you.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Leaves you paralyzed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And I am somewhat surprised to hear in this Chamber that a change of Government in Ontario would alter the principles that are under consideration. I have heard within the last twenty-four hours that this Bill, the object of which is to restore the provinces jurisdiction over its property, should perhaps be suspended because it would give, not to a Farmers' Government, but to a Tory Government, powers that might be retained by a Liberal Government here. I have consulted nobody; but I would consider it beneath my dignity to decline to proceed with this Bill, and I would not remain five minutes in my seat as Government leader in this House if I were asked not to present to you this Bill, even though the Conservative Government may by it acquire privileges and full jurisdiction over its own works in the Province. That is why I am so surprised to hear it suggested in this Chamber that the course which we intended the day before yesterday to follow should be altered because political conditions in the Province of Ontario have changed. Without consulting anybody, I proceed as I would have proceeded three days ago with the Bill now before us for second reading.

Honourable gentlemen, there was held in Ottawa last autumn a meeting of the Prime Ministers of Manitoba, Ontario, and the Dominion of Canada. I have not the precise date of the meeting before me. The purpose was to discuss the relations which might be established with regard to the Lake of the Woods and the works that have been constructed in the rivers flowing from the Lake of the Woods and Lac Seul. I have in my hand the agreement, which reads as follows:

This agreement, as a working basis for the regulation of the English and Winnipeg rivers, is entered into on the understanding that all parties are agreeable to the repeal of the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1920, but Ontario does not bind itself to the terms of this agreement in the event of that Act not being repealed.

That is the Act which we are seeking to repeal by the Bill now before us.

The Government representatives agreed that the general advantage legislation could be rescinded on the following basis (Mr. Bracken undertaking to urge the acceptance thereof by the Manitoba power interests):—

1. Control of Lake of the Woods

The recommendation of the Lake of the Woods Control Board that the Norman dam be expropriated, was agreed to in principle.

It was further understood that the Board should immediately investigate and report to the three Governments concerned, whether,

(1) There is some alternative method of securing control by construction of a new structure above the present dam or otherwise;

(2) Failing such an alternative being found, under what procedure and whether under Federal or provincial auspices, should the dam be expropriated.

The cost of securing the results contemplated under either (1) or (2) above should be borne on the following basis:—

One third of the total cost to be attributable to navigation and borne by the Federal Government;

The remaining two-thirds to be considered chargeable to power, to be borne in the first instance by the expropriating Government, but

(a) Ontario to be responsible for the share chargeable to the undeveloped power site at White Dog Falls;

(b) The Federal Government (as proprietors of the water powers on the Winnipeg river in Manitoba) to be responsible in the first instance for the amount chargeable to the remaining fall of the Winnipeg river in the province of Manitoba; the Department of the Interior to recover cost of same from the present power developments on the river and from prospective power developments on such basis as that department may consider advisable.

So far as the amount chargeable to power is concerned, the basis of settlement between the Dominion Government and the province of Ontario should be that of the ratio of potential head in Ontario and Manitoba.

2. Regulation under Concurrent Legislation

It was agreed that the Lake of the Woods Control Board should be instructed to immediately canvass the necessities of the situation and make appropriate recommendations to the Governments of Canada and Ontario with a view to having approved and authorized whatever operating regulations are considered necessary to make practically effective the existing concurrent legislation.

3. Lac Seul

With regard to storage on Lac Seul, it is agreed that if the power interests in Manitoba or their administrative agency desire storage on Lac Seul, they shall immediately notify the Government of Ontario to this effect. In the event of such notification the Government of Ontario shall undertake not to permit the construction of any development which would later be destroyed, wholly or in part, by the creation of this storage, and shall agree to grant flooding rights, on Crown lands affected, under the customary conditions, including recompense for timber destroyed, and the usual rental for water powers which may be wholly or partially destroyed incidental to the construction of the said works. Further the power interests benefited shall be prepared, when required by the Government of Ontario, to pay the said Government an amount to be ascertained by the Control Board, sufficient to pay the difference between the cost of power feasible of development at Pelican Falls and the cost of a similar amount of power to be developed at some other possible site designated by the Government of Ontario and delivered at Sioux Lookout at a distribution voltage.

It is agreed that whatever storage scheme may be worked out covering Lac Seul shall be under the jurisdiction of the Lake of the Woods Control Board, the cost of the same to be borne by the power interests as and when benefited.

4. International Questions

With regard to the international issues it was unanimously agreed that there was not sufficient data to enable a commitment at the present stage with regard to storage and regulation on Rainy and upper international lakes, and that in any case all the interests concerned, governmental, municipal, corporate and private, on both sides of the boundary, should be afforded the opportunity and the advantage of presenting their views, and of hearing the views of others presented, to the International Joint Commission.

It as further agreed that the basis for an international arrangement between the two countries arrived at by the technical advisers of the United States and Canada at Washington in December, should be adhered to, namely:—

(a) An immediate settlement by treaty of the Lake of the Woods issues; and

(b) Concurrent with the ratification of such a treaty an appropriate reference to the International Joint Commission respecting Rainy and upper lakes matters.

It was further agreed that once a reference of the upper lakes matter has been agreed to, the Canadian Governments, Dominion and provincial, should facilitate in every possible way, a thorough investigation and an early report by the International Joint Commission, but that pending such a report, the Dominion Government could not make any commitment as to policy.

With regard to financial obligation arising under settlement of the Lake of the Woods issues it was agreed that the same should be borne by the respective Governments on the same basis as that set out above for the acquirement of the Norman dam.

(Sgd.) E. C. Drury, for the Government of Ontario.

(Sgd.) John Bracken, for the Government of Manitoba.

(Sgd.) W. L. Mackenzie King, for the Government of Canada.

Ottawa, November 15, 1922.

It will be noticed that Ontario agreed to this document under the express reservation that it does not bind itself to the terms of this agreement in the event of the Act of 1921 not being repealed, and to this reservation the three parties agreed.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Did not Mr. Drury agree at that time to go on with the preliminary arrangement and get ready to carry out this agreement?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have an Order in Council from the Ontario Government which may cover the question of my honourable friend:

Ontario

Executive Council Office

Copy of an Order in Council, approved by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, dated the 18th day of May A.D. 1923.

The Committee of Council have had under consideration the report of the Honourable the Prime Minister, dated May 18, 1923, wherein he states that an agreement (copy of which is hereto annexed) was reached at Ottawa on November 15, 1922, between representatives of the Governments of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, as a working basis for the regulation of the English and Winnipeg rivers, and looking to the repeal of The Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921; and whereas such agreement was executed by the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King for the Dominion Government, by Honourable E. C. Drury for the Government of the province of Ontario, and by the Honourable John Brackin for the Government of the Province of Manitoba.

And whereas an application for the right to store water in Lac Seul as provided by paragraph 3 of the said agreement has been received by the Prime Minister from W. W. Cory, Deputy Minister of the Department of the Interior, on behalf of the power interests on the Winnipeg river in the province of Manitoba.

The Prime Minister recommends that the said agreement be approved by Your Honour, and that the Minister of Lands and Forests be authorized on behalf of the Government of the province of Ontario to enter into an agreement with the applicants for the right to store water in Lac Seul under and in conformity with the provisions of paragraph 3 of the said agreement and that this Order shall not come into force or take effect until the repeal of The Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921, by the Parliament of Canada.

The Committee concur in the recommendation of the Honourable the Prime Minister and advise that the same be acted on.

Certified,

(Sgd.) C. F. Bulmer,
Clerk, Executive Council.

Now, the situation is this. The agreement of the three Governments was conditional on the withdrawal of that Act of 1921, and the Ontario Government has by Order in Council supported the view of its delegate at that conference.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Has it gone any further than that, was what I was asking.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I could not say. My information is limited to the documents and what I will now lay before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to draw the honourable gentleman's attention to one question. I am sure he does not want to leave the House under any mistaken opinion. There was no agreement between the three Governments as to what you say. The Government of Ontario may have made it a condition that it would not carry out the agreement unless the Bill was repealed, but the other Governments did not do that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The documents speak for themselves, and my honourable friend is welcome to peruse them and comment upon them. Now we are in what I would call a vicious circle. The Ontario Government says: "I can agree to that, but on the condition that my rights, which were absorbed by the Federal authority under the Act of 1921, be restored. This is a condition precedent."

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why should you restore—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not discussing that at all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why do you not discuss it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not intend to. I intend to lay the facts purely and simply before this House, and the Senate will decide. That is the stand of the Province of Ontario. Now, the Province of Manitoba comes and says: "We object to the withdrawal of this Act of 1921, which makes these works for the general advantage of Canada and leaves them within the jurisdiction of the Dominion of Canada, which represents Manitoba, until certain conditions have been complied with." So Ontario says: "We will not proceed to implement this agreement till this Act is withdrawn;" and Manitoba says: "We want the conditions to be carried out before this Act is withdrawn." I think that I am stating fairly the conflict between Manitoba and Ontario.

The Dominion of Canada stands as an arbiter. The Dominion has no interest to favour one Province as against another. We stand here as free and disinterested arbitrators holding the scales of justice between those two Provinces. Of course, there is this fact, that in these discussions Ontario is shorn of powers that it had, and it says: "We agree to all that, but before we start to execute this agreement you will put us back in the status quo ante."

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How had it those powers? The power was latent, all the time, in the Parliament of Canada to declare these works for the general benefit of Canada; therefore Ontario did not have an undisputed power; it had power so long as the Parliament of Canada did not make a declaration with regard to its own power.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I agree to that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then I do not see why Ontario should demand anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not judging Ontario; I am stating facts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not think this Parliament is called upon to give up any of its rights to any province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend is bound by his own legislation. When the first Act of the Session of 1921 was passed through this House my honourable friend was here as well as I, and we agreed to a working agreement, to the establishment of a joint board, and we passed an Act—I am speaking not of the one we are now repealing, but of one that had been passed a month or two before, in the same Session, if I am not mistaken. We agreed to that without disturbing or invading the jurisdiction of Ontario over its land. We could have done so, but we did not do it. We had the power. It was only when the Legislature of Ontario failed to pass concurrent legislation with the Dominion of Canada that the Cabinet of the time took up the matter, and my honourable friend opposite (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) was quite an active agent in all those pourparlers at the time, and the documents before me show that many of those conferences took place at his office. When the Legislature of Ontario failed to implement that agreement, this second Act was passed, to give power to the Federal Government to carry on that agreement, and declare that those works were for the general advantage of Canada. The present Bill purposes repealing that last Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And saying that these works are not for the general benefit of Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, we are withdrawing the whole Act. If this Bill passes we are establishing the situation as it existed before the second Act was passed, the status quo ante.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think you are doing more than that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; my honourable friend may say that in a moment. The Prime Minister, in introducing that second Act, and stating the facts as I am now stating them summarily, said: "This is a provisional Act; it will be withdrawn when Ontario proceeds to pass its concurrent legislation"— because the Prime Minister of Ontario had said: "I cannot proceed at this Session, but I will proceed next Session." The Prime Minister of Canada said that this was provisional legislation, which was to be withdrawn. I do not remember whether at that time he made a reservation in favour of retaining the clause which declared the works for the general advantage of Canada. I have not had time to review that discussion, but it does not matter very much.

Now, I have reached the point when, after the agreement which I have read had been signed, there came a conflict of opinion between Manitoba and Ontario. Ontario says: "I put down in my agreement, as a condition anterior to my carrying out the conditions contained in it, that this Act of 1921, which withdraws these works and these properties from my jurisdiction, shall be restored." Manitoba says, on the other hand: "We want those conditions to be carried out before we consent to this Bill being withdrawn."

I have said that we stand as judges, as arbiters; and that situation appears on the face of the Bill itself which is before us. I will read it, and I have made my case. It is in 5 lines:

1. The Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921, chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1921, is hereby repealed, and the works mentioned or described in the said Act shall no longer be or be deemed to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

That is clear. I draw the attention of my honourable friend to this second clause:

2. This Act shall come into operation on such day as may be prescribed by the Governor General by proclamation.

That means that the Act, if sanctioned by Parliament, becomes the law of this country, but the executive of this Parliament will only bring it into effect by proclamation when the conditions contained in this agreement are carried out. I do not see any other way to get out of the impasse.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do you say that you will make proclamation when the terms are carried out?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the terms are carried out.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do you say you will make proclamation? Because to say that the Act shall only come into force on proclamation, without adding the further condition that that proclamation shall be made when the conditions are carried out, is vastly different from a positive promise to proclaim the Act.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Vastly different.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am only taking the statement of the Prime Minister of Canada, as it comes from the House of Commons, that the intention is for the Governor in Council not to bring this Act into effect until the conditions have been implemented.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But does he say that he will make proclamation when the conditions are implemented?—because if he does not, the proclamation is at the whim of the Government.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Sure; that is the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But if he himself says that on the conditions being carried out, then the proclamation will follow a matter of course, we know there is a definite time when it will come.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But of course there are questions of fact; there are reports by engineers. I have prefaced my conclusion with this affirmation: that the Dominion of Canada had to maintain even justice between those two provinces; that the Dominion of Canada is interested in seeing that this agreement is carried out, and assumes the responsibility of not bringing into effect this Act until those conditions have been carried out.

Now, if my honourable friend will allow me for one moment—because I do not want to repeat myself two or three times—if this Bill passes, the Ontario Government will then have the satisfaction of knowing that it can go on carrying out those conditions, and that thereby it will be re-established in its rights. The condition precedent to the implementing of the agreement which Ontario has affirmed is carried out by us. We have our part in that agreement. The Prime Minister of this country has signed it. He has taken note of the fact that the Government of Ontario insists upon the restoration of its rights as a condition precedent to the carrying out of the agreement; and the representative of the Dominion of Canada proceeds to embody in this Bill that anterior condition. But in order to satisfy and meet the point of view of Manitoba he says: "I take power; I satisfy Ontario, but I do not proclaim until Ontario has proceeded to carry out its obligation."

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Supposing all that is done and there is a dispute between Manitoba and Ontario, who is going to be judge whether Ontario or Manitoba has carried out the contract?

Hon. Mr DANDURAND: I would say the Governor in Council—the Dominion authority.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: That is to say, the Government that is in power?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The Government of Canada in power for the time being.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Government of Canada, by its Prime Minister, has signed an agreement. Authority has been given to say when this Act shall be proclaimed. If any honourable gentleman can find another way by which we can get out of that impasse, he is welcome to suggest it.

Hon. Mr FOWLER: The only difficulty that I see is that you are not bound ever to make the proclamation, if you state it to be a condition of the Act. You say you bind yourself not to make a proclamation until the conditions are fulfilled by the two Provinces; but you do not bind yourself then to make the proclamation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I say yes, morally, by a public statement made in Parliament by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Did he say that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend will refer to the Debates, he will find that he stated that he would see that this Act was not proclaimed until the conditions in the agreement had been fulfilled.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I admit that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is not part of the Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But my point is this Under the agreement he cannot make it until the conditions are fulfilled; but there is nothing which says he will make it then. Do you not see my point?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I see.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Moral and spiritual obligations are all very well; but with Governments written obligations are much better.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That argument would have considerable weight if my honourable friend were drafting a contract between private parties; but when we are in the full light of day carrying out an agreement subscribed to by three Governments, and in which the Federal Government has no special interest, but stands as an arbiter, as a judge, to mete out even justice to these provinces, that is a different matter.

I have been somewhat longer in my explanations that I had intended. I express the hope that there will not be a long debate on this question. We have considerable work to do. If the Senate is of the same opinion as it was last Session, I suppose the debate will not be long.

The Hon. The SPEAKER: Honourable Mr. Dandurand moves the second reading of the Bill, seconded by Honourable Mr Watson.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No.

Hon. Mr DANDURAND: Seconded by Honourable Mr. Ross of Regina.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, my honourable friend has just occupied almost an hour in presenting this Bill to the consideration of the House, and has closed his observations by expressing the devout hope that very much time will not be occupied in dealing with it. I suggested to my honourable friend yesterday what I thought to be a very happy solution of this very complex problem. I directed his attention to a certain event which had taken place in Ontario, of which he may not have taken official notice, and suggested that it would opportune for the Government, in view of the negotiations which had taken place between this Government and the Government of Ontario, to open negotiations with the new Government upon this subject. But my honourable friend did not see his way clear to do that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do you really think any Government of Ontario would alter the situation as to claiming jurisdiction?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think that, when the new Government reviews the facts as to the action taken by what was known as the Dury Government, there will not be any approval, but, on the contrary, most emphatic disapproval.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is side-stepping the question. The question is, will the present Government of Ontario, or the Government of to-morrow, ever relinquish its claim to this jurisdiction?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Under the British North America Act, section 92, paragraph 10, the Province has exclusive jurisdiction in—

Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:—

(c) Such works as, although wholly situate within the Province are before or after their execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the Provinces.

These works are wholly situate within the Province of Ontario, but they are manifestly for the advantage of the two Provinces, the Province of Ontario and the Province of Manitoba, and the exercise of the authority which has been placed upon the Statute Book by the Federal Parliament is clearly within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. My honourable friend will not for a moment controvert this position. Consequently, entirely apart from the local conditions which have to do with this subject, constitutionally we are sound in the legislation which has been placed upon the Statute Book.

Now, to deal with a few of the facts which have led up to the passage of that legislation, which the present Government now seeks to repeal, I may remind the House that this matter came before us for consideration at the last session of Parliament. The Government brought in a repealing measure in respect of this particular Statute, and by a vote of 52 to 12 this Chamber pronounced in favour of the retention of this legislation upon the Statute Book.

The facts that led up to this have been mentioned by my honourable friend, but he has not emphasized, as he might have done, the breach of faith on the part of the Ontario Government, to fulfil the promise made to the Government of Canada in 1921 touching concurrent legislation. Hon. Mr. Drury, then Premier of the Province, entered into an arrangement with the Federal Government of that day touching concurent legislation to be passed by the Legislature of Ontario and by the Federal Parliament concerning the joint control of the waters in question. There was a definite and emphatic agreement to that effect. Legislation was prepared; similar Acts were drafted; Mr. Drury was to pass the legislation through the Ontario House; this Parliament was to pass its Bill, as it did, during that session. When Mr. Drury was in Ottawa there was no question not only as to his willingness but his anxiety to place upon the Statute Book concurent legislation dealing with this subject. But when he returned to Toronto some mysterious influence was thrown about him, to which for a few minutes I may refer, with the consequence that he took the position that it was impossible for him to place upon the Statute Book the particular legislation which had been agreed upon, and which we in the meantime had placed upon our Statute Book.

As to the influences and the apprehensions which not only have been expressed, but have deeply exercised the Province of Manitoba, I may say that there is a gentleman whom I may term the prince of pulp manufacturers, known as Mr. Backus, a citizen of the great Republic to the South of us. By some means or other he induced Mr. Drury, through the Provincial Government of Ontario, to convey to him a very large slice of that Province. Recently, in addition to his having been the owner of 1,860 miles of pulpwood, under the Drury regime he became the owner of 3,046 square miles of territory situated in the district of Kenora in the northwestern part of Ontario. This territory is equal to an area of 85 nine-mile townships, or geographically equal to the counties of Simcoe, Middlesex, Oxford, Elgin and Lambton, in Ontario, all put together.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: About the size of England.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: To give you an idea of what a potentate this gentleman has become in controlling territory of the Province of Ontario, I may say that the land that I have described would make a strip one mile wide extending across Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific; or it would make a seven-and-a-half-mile strip extending from Montreal to Windsor. This area which has been given to him by Mr. Drury, namely, 3,046 square miles, is worth, it is estimated, at least $25,000,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What effect will all this statement have on this legislation?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If I occupy the length of time my honourable friend occupied, I think I shall be able to convince the House that it has a very direct bearing upon the subject.

Mr. Backus apparently secured this enormous area, this empire within an empire, as I may call it, for the small consideration of $50,100. When you contrast what he has paid for this enormous area of land with the fact that the lands in Ontario sold in 1913 realized over $1,000,000 in bonuses, you can imagine the very generous treatment this gentleman has received.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It was by public competition.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Has my honourable friend implicit confidence in the kind of public competition that has recently taken place in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend says no, that is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I think in cases of this kind, where there is a large extent of land and a moderate amount of pulp on it, only very few big pulp and paper people can tender on it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: In the trial of the libel suit against the Toronto Telegram, the engineer testified that it was impossible for any man to tender if the White Dog Rapids could not be acquired. Mr. Backus, long before this land was put up, or was proposed to be put up, had acquired the White Dog Rapids from the Province of Ontario. There were three bids put in, and the evidence showed that Mr. Backus was behind all three.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: He was paying double the stumpage.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: So that I may impress upon honourable gentlemen to some greater extent the magnitude of the concession which this gentleman has obtained from the Province of Ontario, may I say that according to the sworn evidence taken before the Commission in Ontario this represents: in spruce, at least ten million cords; in red and white pine, 250 million feet board measure; in jackpine, one billion feet board measure; in other words, 25 million cords. That was not sufficient.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I think it is only fair that my honourable friend should state that Mr. Backus, besides paying $50,100, also paid double the amount of stumpage previously charged in Ontario.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We know that in addition to the bonus he complied with the regulations, whatever they are.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He paid the price everybody does.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Mr. Backus having become possessed of these enormous possessions, it was desirable that he should also become the owner of other possessions by which he might develop this empire. He therefore became the owner of the Norman Dam and became, by gift of Mr. Drury, the owner of the White Dog Rapids, thus commanding practically all the water-powers in that enormous territory, over which he was the potentate and almost exclusive ruler.

This, honourable gentlemen, is not only a Provincial matter; it is not only an interprovincial matter; but it is an International matter. A treaty was entered into in 1909 between the United States and Canada touching these particular waters. They are international waters. They are navigable waters; and, as I have said, they are within the compass of international and interprovincial authority. The control of the Norman Dam had to do with the international question, namely, the regulation of these waters as between Canada and the United States. That is in the regulation of the Lake of the Woods. The Province of Manitoba depends almost entirely, I may say, upon these waters for the water-powers which they have generated within that Province. I am informed that 80 per cent of the power of the Winnipeg river has been generated within the Province of Manitoba, and that some $20,000,000 have been expended within the district tributary to Winnipeg in developing the water-powers which flow from the Winnipeg river. Practically the whole of the power enjoyed by the great city of Winnipeg—

Hon. Mr. WATSON: And the Province of Manitoba.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And the Province of Manitoba, comes from this particular source. The peculiar commanding position occupied by Mr. Backus as the owner of the Norman Dam and the White Dog Rapids gives him practically the control of this enormous water-power. That has been established over and over again before Commissions which have sat, not only in the Province of Ontario, but, I understand, in the Province of Manitoba, and it is conceded to be the case.

What was the Government of Canada to do, in view of the fact that the concurrent legislation which had been agreed upon in 1921 was refused by the Ontario Legislature? Was the Government of Canada going to sit idly by, notwithstanding the demand for protection which had been made by the Province of Manitoba? Was it going to fold its arms and remain silent and helpless because Mr. Drury, owing to the mysterious influences which had been brought to bear upon him when he returned to Toronto from Ottawa, refused to place the legislation upon the Statute Book? Why, honourable gentlemen, the only thing to do, after the non-fulfilment of the promise he had made, was for the Dominion Parliament to exercise, as my honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler) has said this morning, the power which was vested in this Parliament to declare the work to be one for the general advantage of Canada.

It was necessary to invoke and exercise this power not only on account of any disagreement between the Province of Ontario and the Federal Government, but also as a matter of guarantee to the people of Manitoba and to those who had invested their 20 millions of money. It was only reasonable, entirely apart from all mutual or concurrent legislation by the two Provinces, that there should be on the Statute Book a guarantee that this was a work for the general advantage of Canada—and I say that within the boundaries of this enormous country in which we live there has been no exercise of power more salutary or more necessary than the exercise of this exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. It is a guarantee to the people of Manitoba that they shall have the power which they have generated, that they shall have security for the money which they have expended, and that they may utilize the water-powers upon which they absolutely depend. To the investing public at large—to the world at large—it is necessary that this guarantee should remain upon the Statute Book, no matter what may be the agreement between the Province of Manitoba and the Province of Ontario, or what assurance may have been given by the Prime Minister or anybody else.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Hear, hear. That is the situation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I refer to this bearing of the case, to show the angle from which the investor views a subject of this kind? When this subject was discussed on the floor of this Chamber last Session, I read to the House a letter from Mr. Julien Smith, Supervising Engineer of the Manitoba Power Company, Limited, dealing with the financial situation which presented itself, not only to his mind, but to the mind of the investing public. He said:

> I feel it my duty to protest against the passing of the proposed Bill which is now before the Parliament of Canada, by which the former Act concerning the control of the Lake of the Woods is to be altered.
>
> The banking interests who have financed the seven and a half million dollars of bonds of the Manitoba Power Co. appointed me as supervising engineer to represent their interests in the Manitoba Power Company.
>
> These seven million and a half dollars (7,500,000) of bonds were sold to a syndicate of American and Canadian bankers and have been distributed all over Canada and the United States.
>
> Water-power bonds in Canada have always had a good reputation, and this is the first time to my knowledge that any Act of the Dominion of Canada has been suggested which would in any way affect injuriously the investments which people have made in good faith in the water-power propositions of this country.
>
> The taking away of the control of the Lake of the Woods from the Dominion Government is a serious matter to all of the water powers on the Winnipeg river, and particularly to the plant now under construction at Great Falls, Manitoba.
>
> This plant is one of the great water powers of Canada, and when completed will have a capacity of over 150,000 horsepower.

Entirely apart from those local circumstances which have been mentioned or the local conditions which come within the compass of our consideration, will any honourable gentleman controvert the wisdom and soundness of the policy of the placing upon the Statute Book the declaration that the works in these waters are for the general advantage of Canada? I would point out this fact, that political conditions in those two Provinces are always changing; that any agreement which they may arrive at to-day regarding legislation, concurrent or otherwise, may be abrogated to-morrow. Is there any assurance that the legislation which Mr. Drury placed upon the Statute Book of Ontario will not be repealed next month, when the new Government comes into office? Is there any assurance that the legislation which the Province of Manitoba now enacts will not be repealed a year hence, when a new Provincial Government will probably come into office? I say there is no assurance at all, and to ask that important interests of this character, involving millions and millions of money and the rights of the Province of Manitoba to its water-powers, should be dependent upon the capriciousness of political feeling or political action in those two Provinces is to ask something extremely unreasonable and equally unreliable.

What astonishes me, honourable gentlemen, is that the Prime Minister of Canada has asked those two Provinces to consent to the repeal of this legislation upon that basis. The Canadian Prime Minister wants Manitoba to accept an assurance from him that the repealing Act will not be proclaimed except on conditions satisfactory to Manitoba. How long will this assurance continue? The present Prime Minister of Canada has no certainty of occupying for a prolonged period the high office which he holds to-day.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In other words, he has a most precarious tenure.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. And what about his successor? Is this undertaking to devolve upon his successor? If his successor should say, "I refuse to be bound by any verbal assurance given to the Province of Manitoba by my predecessor," what then? I venture to say, honourable gentlemen, that, with reference to important legislation such as we are considering to-day, you will find no parallel to this so-called assurance which the Prime Minister of Canada wants the Province of Manitoba to accept.

The reasonableness of the Province of Manitoba is shown in the answer which they gave. They have said: "After the most careful consideration on our part we are prepared to intimate to you that we still feel that our interests could only be adequately protected by making the proclamation repealing the Act contingent upon the formal request of both the Provinces to that effect." But the Prime Minister would not agree to that. I wonder at the reasonableness of the Province of Manitoba. If I were speaking for that Province I should say: "Nothing less than the retention of this Act upon the Statute Book will satisfy the requirements of the Province of Manitoba." And I think that will be the view of this House.

Honourable gentlemen I have occupied only half the time that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) occupied in presenting this case. It is unnecessary for me to deal further with the matter. I feel satisfied that the Senate has not changed the views which it so emphatically expressed last Session and demonstrated by a vote of 52 to 12. I simply ask the Senate to give to this measure the same consideration that they gave to the Bill of last Session, and to express their opinion in the same emphatic way.

I therefore move that this Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read this day six months.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

Hon. L. McMEANS: Honourable gentlemen, I am going to comply with the request made by the honourable leader of the Government, and will not occupy your time at any great length.

The address that has been made by the honourable leader on this side covers the situation pretty fully; but there are one or two points to which I would direct the attention of the honourable leader of the Government.

In the first place, the Dominion of Canada erected a dam at the mouth of the Lake of the Woods. It has been replaced by the present Norman Dam. They appointed an International Joint Commission at the request of Ontario and Minnesota. They appointed a Commission to regulate the flow of the waters. So the Federal Government has exercised jurisdiction on three different occasions in connection with these waters.

It surprised me to hear the honourable gentleman make the statement that the exercise of the Federal power infringes upon the rights of the Province of Ontario. This is merely a matter of regulation. It takes nothing from the Province, which is still the owner of everything within its own boundaries. However, if any precedent is wanted for the action taken by the Federal Parliament, let me point out to the honourable gentleman that works on the Ottawa River, which flows between the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, have been declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

The navigation of the river Ottawa is declared subject to exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, and all canals, dams, slides, piers, booms, embankments, and other works in the channel or waters of said river, and whether constructed or to be constructed by Canada, by either province or by private party, shall be held to be works for the general advantage of Canada, and all works of like character.

That is pretty clear. If you want further precedent you can take the Niagara Power Company, the Hamilton and Erie Power Company, and all the other power companies that have built upon the Niagara river. Each and every one of them has been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

There is just one thing more that I would like to point out. It was in the year 1904 that the Winnipeg Electric Company first determined that electricity could be transmitted a considerable distance with advantage. They started in 1904 to erect their works on the Winnipeg river. The money invested in those works, when the work that is now going on shall have been completed will amount to over $25,000,000. The city of Winnipeg began about the year 1912 to secure electricity for the people, and in that connection I would like to give you these facts. The electric lighting rates have been as follows:—

1906..	20	cents	per	kw.	hour
1907..	10	"	"	"	"
1911..	7½	"	"	"	"
1912..	3⅓	"	"	"	"
1922..	2½	"	"	"	"

The maximum rate to-day is 3⅓ cents, and the minimum rate one-half cent.

The city of Winnipeg has invested in the neighbourhood of $17,000,000 in these electric works. Furthermore, the Manitoba Government takes a certain amount of this electricity from the city of Winnipeg and transmits it to various parts of the province. Therefore, honourable gentlemen, the very life of the entire Province depends upon the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act remaining in its present state. If those works were not declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, the Province of Manitoba would be left at the mercy of any private individual; and I have no hesitation in saying that that is the great fear of the people of Manitoba at the present time. If we were in such a position we might as well give up. Our investments would become useless and the man who would have the whole Province at his mercy could dictate terms and exact such powers as he might think fit.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Can Mr. Backus hold back the water or send it into another river?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Yes, he can. Perhaps the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) will be able to give you a better explanation regarding the Norman dam than I can. Mr. Backus paid $100,000 for the Norman dam and all the other property of the Keewatin Lumber Company. He went to Winnipeg, as has been stated by the honourable gentleman from Portage la Prairie, and wanted over $1,000,000 from the city for that power.

Let me tell my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) another thing. I may be a little too fearful in this matter, but to my mind it is a very serious one for the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Backus, in acquiring certain rights, has acquired water-powers from the use of which he may shut off the Province of Manitoba. He may dictate terms. He may say to the people of Canada. "I purchased that power with my good money from the Province of Ontario, and the Dominion Parliament has repealed the Act whereby it held jurisdiction." What position would he be in? We have had some experience of that.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Would that prevent the water from coming down the river?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: He could hold it back, could he not?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No, he could not. It must come down.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Does the honourable gentleman seriously mean to tell me that Mr. Backus cannot regulate the power?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: He cannot prevent the water from coming down.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: In what quantity?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It must come down.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: He can affect the power. Otherwise, when he had bought the Dam for $100,000, he would not have offered to sell it for over a million.

What position does he occupy? We had a little illustration of that a short time ago in connection with the Hoppe leases. They were cancelled, and the American Consul entered a protest. Surely the people of Canada are not going to hand over to a private individual the rights that have been outlined by the honourable leader on this side of the House.

The people of the entire Province of Manitoba look to this Parliament to protect them in their rights. They appeal to you not to allow the investments which they have made to be interfered with. I think my honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) will agree with me in this, that if the Senate of Canada has been created for any purpose it is for the protection of the rights of the different Provinces, I think this is a good oportunity for the Senate to carry out the purpose for which it was created.

Some Hon SENATORS: Question.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT: Just two minutes. The presentation of this important Bill in the Senate at this time is a striking illustration of the treatment that is meted out to this House every year. We have had not half-a-dozen, but dozens of Bills of the greatest importance thrown at our heads during the last ten days, and have been told we must pass these Bills.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Twenty-nine of them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg to enter a protest. I never said that the Senate must pass this Bill.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I withdraw the word "must."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend may remain easy on that point.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I withdraw the word "must," and I shall avail myself of the opportunity of doing the other thing, on the invitation of my honourable friend. But what I want to point out is that, with regard not only to this particular Bill, but also the Companies Bill, which was introduced last night, and a dozen other Bills, I for my part shall not feel that I have discharged my duty if within the time left at our disposal these Bills are passed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there is no time limit. We have the whole summer.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But we are pressed every day and in a few days we shall be urged to finish our work, as the gentlemen who sit in another place have decided that they must go home this week and we must enable them to do so. I protest against that, as I have protested before. I ask how in common sense and reason it is possible for us to determine that the time has now arrived when the control which was given to the Dominion Parliament only two years ago over this whole situation must be abandoned. I cannot make up my mind whether the declaration that these works are for the general advantage of Canada should be repealed or not, unless we have an opportunity of inquiring into all the facts—unless we have an opportunity of inquiring as to what has been done by the different governments, and particularly what has been done by Mr. Backus in performing the obligations imposed upon him. We do not know about that, and yet we must go it blind and pass this Bill.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Well, we must deal with it; we must either pass it or reject it; and I say that either one of those things is impossible. At all events, it would be impossible to my conscience.

Hon. Mr DANDURAND: But my honourable friend has already voted against it. He had his judgment then.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And I am going to vote against it now.

Hon. Mr. DANDRAND: I do not object.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend was accusing the leader of the Opposition a moment ago of side-stepping. This is manifestly another case of side-stepping. I am not discussing the Bill at all, because I do not know enough about it; but I protest against being asked to pronounce on this Bill when we have dozens of other Bills to attend to. Some of us have been sitting on a subcommittee almost for the last 48 hours, and have been able to give very little attention to what has been going on in this House. That kind of thing is not conducive to proper legislation. It is unfair treatment by the Government and by the other House, so far as we are concerned. I think we ought to insist upon having these matters submitted to us in such time as will afford us an opportunity to inquire into them fully and properly, and make proper decisions. We cannot do that under these circumstances. I was going to protest last night when the Bill to amend the Companies Act came before us.

The Senate divided on the amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed, and the same was agreed to on the following division:

CONTENTS

Honourable Messieurs

Barnard,	Calder,
Belcourt,	Chapais,
Bennett,	Crowe,
Black,	Daniel,
Blain,	David,
Blondin,	Donnelly,
Bolduc,	Fisher,
Bourque,	Foster,
Foster (Sir George),	Prowse,
Gillis,	Ratz,
Green,	Reid,
Kemp (Sir Edward),	Robertson,
Laird,	Ross (Middleton),
L'Esperance,	Schaffner,
Lougheed (Sir James),	Sharpe,
Macdonell,	Smith,
Martin,	Stanfield,
McCall,	Tanner,
McCormick,	Taylor,
McDonald,	Todd,
McLennan,	Turriff,
McMeans,	Watson,
Michener,	Webster (Brockville),
Mulholland,	Webster (Stadacona),
Murphy,	White (Pembroke).—51.
Pope,

NON-CONTENTS

Honourable Messieurs

Boyer,	McCoig,
Casgrain,	McHugh,
Dandurand,	Mitchell,
Dessaulles,	O'Brien,
De Veber,	Roche,
Farrell,	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Hardy,	Tessier,
Lavergne,	Thibaudeau.
Legris,	Turgeon.—18.

YUKON BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Green, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 44, an Act to amend The Yukon Act.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Green, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

LITTLE BRAS D'OR GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH OPERATOR

FURTHER ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Before moving the adjournment of the Senate, I would like to give further information I have obtained, at the request of the honourable Senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. McCormick), concerning the removal of Mrs. Richard as telegraph operator at Little Bras d'Or. I have received the following letter from the honourable the Minister of Public Works:

Ottawa, June 26, 1923.

My Dear Colleague,—

With reference to the answer to question asked in the Senate, re telegraph operator at Little Bras d'Or, I beg to advise you that the removal of Mrs. Richard was requested by the late member for the county, the former Solicitor General, for the reason given in the answer to the question which you already have.

I further beg to advise you that since the date of answering this question, Mr. Benjamin Young has been appointed in her stead.

Yours sincerely,
J. H. King.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. this day.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Routine proceedings.

INLAND REVENUE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 187, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

PETROLEUM BOUNTIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 214, an Act respecting the payment of bounties on Petroleum.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For the purpose of facilitating the discussion of this Bill without losing time, would my honourable friend acquaint himself with the relation of the Bill to the production of oil in the West. Heretofore the bounties on oil have been worked out in such a way as to be applicable only to Ontario oils. A great deal of dissatisfaction prevails by reason of that fact, and there has for some time been a movement to make them applicable to the particular class of oils produced in the West. My honourable friend might furnish himself with that information so that he in turn can furnish it to the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will try to obtain the information. I have not yet read the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a matter of very great interest to the West.

HEMP BOUNTIES BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 215, an Act respecting the payment of Bounties on certain manufactures of Hemp.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 216, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 230, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 231, an Act to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act, 1913.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

EXPORT BILL (PULPWOOD)

FIRST READING

Bill 242, an Act to amend the Export Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

FINANCE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 245, an Act to supplement the Finance Act, 1914.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

DOCTORS BROOK POST OFFICE

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: May I ask the leader of the Government when the papers in connection with the dismissal of the Postmaster at Doctors Brook, Nova Scotia, will be brought down?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When was that?

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: About a week ago.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ADMINISTRATION IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I want to call the attention of this House to a matter that to my mind is one of urgent public importance. As you are aware, it has been stated by Sir Henry Thornton, with a great flourish of trumpets, that politics are not to enter into the administration of the Canadian National Railways, and that a man's employment will not be affected one way or the other by his politics. In my Province, which is the smallest Province, some of the people are comparatively poor, and I want to call attention to the fact that in my district employment on the Canadian National Railways is governed altogether by the local Liberal political club. The Government is broadgauging the railway in the County of Prince, and this is a matter which affects every district from one end of the county to the other. It began last year. The custodian of the employment bureau is the secretary of the local Liberal club in the town of Tignish. The trackmaster, to whom I presume authority flitted from his superintendent and from the present superintendent, Mr. L. S. Brown, who is under the aegis, I understand, of the Minister of Militia, whom they are afraid to send back to his own county of Pictou, has direct orders to take instructions from the gentlemen who control in the different polling divisions. There is considerable work going on in connection with this broadgauging, and not only in my own polling division, but in the one adjacent to it—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg my honcurable friend's pardon. I would suggest that my honourable friend will find an occasion—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: This is an occasion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. I do not believe this is a question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It is not a question of privilege: it is a question of urgent public importance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We have a Bill coming down concerning the railways.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: You might as well let me finish now: you will only be wasting more time later on.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is nothing before the Chair.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I call the honcurable gentleman's attention to the fact that he has not placed any motion before the House.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Then I move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: You cannot do that.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I cannot do it? I will not take your ipsi dixit.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend is nearly through, I will not object.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I did not say I was nearly through. If the Speaker rules against me, I will take more time later.

I have related the circumstances. If we are to have Civil Service reform, if we are to have the words of Sir Henry Thornton implemented, this thing should be stopped, and I draw the attention of the leader of the Government to it.

I will give an example. There were butchers who supplied the steamer Prince Edward Island from Mulgrave and the other steamer which replaces her when she is in dry dock. They were men who had been in that business at Borden—very good men, you will admit. This year the superintendent of the railway, probably taking his orders from headquarters, cut off those men and put in another man who was not in the business and not capable of supplying anything. There was no call for tenders or anything of that kind. There might not be a necessity for calling for tenders, because the amount is small; but the principle is the same. This man was put in as a figurehead to furnish the supplies and to send to Charlottetown for them every day, taking them from the President of the Liberal Association of the County of Queen's, thus cutting out a man because he was a Liberal-Conservative. If that condition is to obtain, if that is to be the principle of the exemplification of the effort of Sir Henry Thornton, we want to know. I draw the attention of the Senate and the Government to the condition of affairs that exists in so far as this broadgauging business in Prince Edward Island is concerned. Boys can go to work at $2.50 to $3 a day. It is a very good way of seduction from the path of rectitude, as I would call it. My honourable friend may not agree with that term. The purpose is to get them to vote, as a local election is coming on in the near future.

ISENBERG COAL MINING LEASES

FIAT WITHDRAWN

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not desire to trouble the honourable leader too much, but I would like to know if he has any information to give to the House regarding the Isenberg leases.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may inform my honourable friend and the Senate that an Order in Council has been passed withdrawing that fiat.

INLAND WATER FREIGHT RATES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 235, an Act with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation.

He said: In moving the third reading of this Bill I desire to inform my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. Mr. Ross) that I have sought the information which he seemed to be desirous of having, and that there is no memorandum written nor any letters which could be brought before Parliament. The only thing approaching what my honourable friend thinks may exist would be alternative propositions made to the Minister by Departmental officials during the preparation of Bills, to indicate the preference of one form of Bill over another, or to indicate the weak points and the strong points of the legislation. For instance, as my honourable friend will understand, there would be a suggestion that a certain Act now on the Statute Book had better be amended; or there might be another suggestion to the effect that perhaps the Criminal Code might be amended. My honourable friend will see what ground would be covered. There is discussion on the general application of the Act and its constitutionality, which is crystallized in the Bill as it is before us.

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, I have been asked to say a few words on behalf of the owners of shipyards regarding a point that has not been touched at all during the discussion of this measure. I have no illusion as to the effect that anything I say may have upon this House, but I think I am only fulfilling my duty in telling the House that in the opinion of those who own the shipyards this measure will have a serious result. Remember, honourable gentlemen, that the shipyards extend all the way from Halifax, along the St. Lawrence and west to the Great Lakes, not to speak of those in British Columbia, which I suppose would not be affected by this legislation. You have shipyards at Halifax; you have shipyards opposite Quebec at Levis; you have the tidewater shipyards at Three Rivers; and there are at Montreal some small shipyards and a big one, that of the Canadian Vickers. Then, proceeding up the St. Lawrence you find a large shipyard at Kingston, one at Toronto and one at Collingwood. The Collingwood shipyard, I may say, is one of the oldest in Canada, having been in business for many years; and, I may say, it is very much at their instance that I put this matter before the House. Collingwood also has built the most luxurious and best Canadian steamers on the Great Lakes—boats like the Hamonic. Then, at Port Arthur you find the largest freight boat on the Great Lakes, and also passenger steamers constructed in this yard.

The shipyard-owners say that, ever since there has been talk of regulating rates or of this proposed legislation, they have not been able to obtain any orders, and that the yards are now idle. So, incidentally, these two measures—the Bill to regulate the freight rates for the carriage of grain on the Great Lakes, and the Bill to authorize the Government to abrogate the coasting laws—have had the effect that people who were to have given orders to the shipyards this spring have decided not to do so. Millions and millions of dollars have been invested in the shipbuilding industry, and that money will be practically lost. Furthermore, hundreds of men who have been engaged in shipbuilding have left and gone to the adjoining Republic, and some of them have sent for their families, and their houses are empty.

I thought it well to place these facts before this honourable House in order that honourable gentlemen may realize more fully perhaps than they have done that by the enactment of these two Bills a very old industry representing an immense amount of capital and providing plenty of employment will be injuriously affected. I am surprised that the honourable the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has not taken a hand in this, because a great many people will be thrown out of work because of this legislation. You cannot build ships in Canada to be sold in the United States, because you cannot get American registry for ships not actually built in the United States. No country in the world can sell a ship to the United States; the ship must be built in that country. On the other hand, it is easy for an American boat, on payment of 25 per cent duty, to do a coastwise trade in Canada. It is not necessary that the vessel be owned by British subjects. A small company can be organized. But in the United States, while you may have all the companies you like, 75 per cent of the real owners must be American citizens. Now, the coastal laws, the only protection that the Canadian ship-owners have, are to be abrogated, and American boats will be allowed to come in whenever they choose. There will be, the owners say, no more shipyards. There will be no more Canadian bottoms built after a few years. At present only one in seven now on the Great Lakes is a Canadian boat. In a few years those ships will have disappeared, and no one will attempt to build, because of the Americans having the right to trade on both sides of the Lakes. No one will want to own a boat that can trade on only one side. Little by little the Canadian ships will disappear, and we shall be at the mercy of American boats for the transportation of Canadian grain. That is all I have to say.

Hon. W. H. BENNETT: For fear the melting eloquence of the honourable gentleman might prevail on some honourable members, let me give an example, taken from one of the papers last winter, of the zeal of Canadian vessel-owners, or of those interested in Canadian vessels, in patronizing shipyards in Canada. If the honourable gentleman will make inquiries he will find that there have been only one boat built in Collingwood for a long time, and it was built for a trade on which a number of other vessels have gone, namely, the trade between Buffalo and Montreal, or perhaps Port Colborne. I do not think there has been one built at Port Arthur. This talk about the vessel-owners having a bit of sentiment in their composition is utterly unfounded.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN I was talking about the shipyards only—not about the other question. That is settled.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: We hear talk about the sympathy of the Canadian vessel-owner and his desire to patronize these shipyards. How much sympathy is there on the part of those companies for the men employed on the vessels? I will read an article for the honourable gentleman, and perhaps, as he is a director, he may take it to some of his fellow directors. It is from the Globe of December 16th, 1922:

The winter perils of the Great Lakes are recurring. "Many big carriers are being risked," says a Sault Ste. Marie despatch, "in the attempt to make the last possible trip while insurance rates allow, and many sailors' lives are being jeopardized as the great vessels make their toilsome progress through the rapidly accumulating and thickening ice fields."

Every year sees the same gamble in sailors' lives. Every ship that leaves the Head of the Lakes after the ice begins to form runs the hazard of destruction. Vessel owners act as if it were a moral duty to continue to carry cargoes so long as the property risks are covered. What of the human element? Is life not of more account than profits and the movement of wheat and oats?

The autumn rush of grain carriers from Port Arthur and Fort William to the unloading ports in the East before the close of navigation is an essential, part of the national economy. It is a wonderful achievement, and every year sees the Canadian Lake marine better equipped to do its share of the work of marketing the Western crop. But there ought to be some limit in the interest of safety beyond the very dubious one set by the insurance companies. The lapsing of insurance on December 15 is no reason why the lives of sailors should be staked on the weather up to that date. There is a great temptation to vessel owners to enter this annual race against time. They are assured of full cargoes, high profits, and protection against loss. But there is no corresponding protection for sailors.

At any season danger is at the helm on too many Lake vessels. There is no Plimsoll line on the Lakes, no legislative safeguards approaching those which the seamen of nearly all nations enjoy in ocean navigation. There is need for radical reform so as to raise the standard of safety all round, but even the staunchest of Lake ships cannot be sure of winning the battle against the ice king and the storm king in December.

Yet the honourable gentleman, with a lump in his throat, pleads to-day for the vessel-owners. The honourable gentleman could name companies that let old tubs by the dozen, on Lake Superior and the other lakes, go to the bottom during the last few years. I have known of cases where a whole crew have gone off one of these vessels—I am not naming any of the companies—and the men were driven out like sheep to the shambles late in the fall. If they do not go, they understand that they cannot get back their positions on the vessels the next year. Let us have done with this talk of those gentlemen the ship-owners, being such patriots. They are only longing for the day when they can get an opportunity to build a vessel in Canada.

I have here a quotation which I desire to read—and I could quote half-a-dozen such items that appeared in the papers this spring:

Six of a fleet of ten vessels which have been built in British yards for the recently-formed Eastern Steamship Co., Limited, are due to arrive at Montreal, shortly to be placed in service on the grain-carrying route between Buffalo and Montreal. The remaining four are expected to leave the other side within the next ten days.

And it goes on to say who are the people connected with this.

Any person who knows anything about the shipping trade knows that since the end of the war a large number of such vessels have been brought over to Canada—probably thirty or forty, if not more. These patriots and philanthropists, anxious for the welfare of the poor labouring man who works in the shipyards, would not build in Canada, because they could go to the British or the French Government and buy these rattletraps and bring them here. In the United States they are being put on inland waters from Buffalo down.

As to this Bill, I am going to support it. I have read the report of the Commission from beginning to end. The newspapers of this country have cried aloud that there should be some criminal action taken against those companies who have entered into a conspiracy to defraud the public. It was a conspiracy pure and simple. Now, the Government has it within its power to make it unnecessary ever to enforce this law. The Government can any day, if they will only raise their hand, make the enforcement of this proposed law unnecessary, because they have 20 vessels, every one of which can be placed on the Great Lakes and put into the trade, so as to give the farmer a decent rate on the Upper Lakes instead of allowing those companies to make 100 per cent profit and gamble with the lives of men every fall, as the Globe states. A resolution was passed only recently by a convention of women in Toronto, begging the Government to put into force some rule regarding the reliability of ships and the operation of them in the fall and also in the spring. Will the Government rise to the occasion and, instead of selling these 20 odd vessels, let them be used on the Upper Lakes to do the trade of the country? Why does not the Government give them a chance to do business instead of leasing them to party friends? I want to tell the honourable leader of the House, and the House too, that this Government have leased certain of these boats at a figure so low that they cannot bear to tell it to the House. If it were generally known, the Government would be a laughing-stock.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend allow me?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Government has not leased those boats.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Oh, for Heaven's sake, have we the old story again, that this Government is wholly in the hands of the National Railways Management and it cannot move hand or foot?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the policy.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Very well, then. If the National Railways sell those boats at one dollar apiece, the Government are going to stand by and see them sold, are they? If the Canadian National Railways want to take the largest locomotive they have and sell it in the United States for a song, the Government are going to stand by and say: "We have nothing to do with that: we are only putty molded by the Canadian National Railways." The public does not understand this, and the public cannot understand it. It is not the position at all.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What about the hotel building in Paris.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: As my honourable friend suggests, the Government are powerless even though they advance $2,000,000 or $1,000,000, whichever it was, on that hotel building in the city of Paris.

I beg the honourable leader of the Government to go to his colleagues and insist that not one of those vessels be sold. Everybody knows that if they are sold they will go for a mere bagatelle. They were never built for less than $300,000 or $400,000 apiece, and at the prices at which vessels have been selling they would not to-day sell for over $30,000 or $40,000 apiece, if they sold for that.

Furthermore, let me tell the honourable leader of the Government what the National Railways are doing, so that he may know the high-handed manner in which they are acting. They now have vessels tied up which they are not using, and at the same time they are hiring American vessels to carry coal for the National Railways. If anybody disputes that statement, I can tell him that he is mistaken, for I can refer to the town of Midland, where the Canadian Nationl Railways, under contract, will put in about 250,000 tons of coal for the railways this year; and that coal is actually being carried by American boats while the Governments's own boats are tied up. What is the answer to that? The answer will be this, that the Government, knowing that they had these boats, knowing that they were lying tied up, a certain number of them, gave a contract for the carrying of their coal to some of their friends, and without competition either.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is that the Railway Board?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Your National Railways.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Our National Railways?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Well, I think we on this side of the House have a better claim to say that they are ours, because we may be able to frighten the Board into doing something; but that side of the House apparently does not care what the National Railways do. Now, those vessels could be placed in the grain trade, and they would keep the rates down; they would give a chance to the Canadian sailor; they would afford an opportunity of promotion for the men; they would be able to cary this coal; and the country would make money out of them. If those companies that run the vessels by friendly contracts make money out of them, why cannot the Government do so? Give the boats a chance; let them go into this trade of 250,000 tons of coal that you had to ship.

Let me tell the country something more. To-day the country owns at Midland two large elevators that have not between them carried enough Canadian grain to have occupied one of them for two weeks. I do not blame the Government for that; I blame these Canadian vessel-owners, who are not at all anxious to carry grain on the Upper Lakes, because they prefer to go over to England and buy small boats to carry grain from Buffalo or Port Colborne down to Montreal. The Government cannot stop that, but what the Government can do, having this fleet of vessels, having three lines of railway from the Georgian Bay, and having half-a-dozen elevators, is to use those Government boats to carry grain at decent prices for the benefit of the farmers of the Northwest, and thus keep down prices for the carrying of grain. Then they would not have to invoke the conditions of this summary law, and would not have to abrogate the coasting privileges. You have thousands of cars lying around the country to-day unused, and you could have had those at different points on the Georgian Bay carrying thousands of bushels of grain. Your elevators are empty, your cars are unused, and your vessels tied up at the dock; yet the Government stands idly by and says, "We are willing to do something, but Sir Henry Thornton will not let us." If that is the position of the Government to-day, it had better be admitted once for all, and the general public would say, "Put an end to the contract with Sir Henry Thornton"—which I understand is to pay him one or two years' salary in advance—"and let us try to handle the railway business ourselves, without the Board at all."

I am going to vote for the Bill if it comes to a vote, but, in the first place, I ask that the Government give their railways and their cars and their vessels a chance to carry grain. The result of that would be to give the farmer of the Northwest relief from the persecution that he has endured at the hands of those grasping, greedy vessel-owners of Canada, who are combined in one mighty octopus to press the life out of anybody, and are prepared in the fall of the year, as the Toronto Globe and other papers say, to make the almighty dollar, at the risk of men's lives, no matter who is drowned or who is not drowned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will have occasion before we separate to lay before the Senate a list of the steamers that belong to the Canadian people, and their location. We have so often heard of those steamers, and asked ourselves individually and collectively what they were doing, that I have succeeded in getting from the National Railway Board their location. I do not think their location last week will be their location this week; but before the end of this week I will lay before the Senate a complete list of the steamers with their present movements.

I believe this discussion has gone somewhat wide of the Bill that is under review, but I simply desire to remind the Senate of this situation. I have heard nowhere any statement as to the policy that should be pursued in the administration of Canadian railways other than this, that we must have state ownership, and we must give it a fair trial, and we have bound ourselves to do our utmost to keep politics out of it. I understand that we can only keep politics out by keeping politicians out of it. The door must be either closed or open. We are trying just now to administer the state-owned railways through a non-political board, giving a free hand to that administration, with as little interference as possible. It has been said that this is the only policy by which we can obtain fair results. We may change that policy, but it seems to have been decided that we should give it a fair trial.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government if, when he is presenting the statement to which he has referred, he will not also endeavour to give us whatever fragments or crumbs there may be in the Justice Department in regard to the legal side of this Bill, that is, whether the Justice Department consider that this Bill can be enforced in its present form? Last night the leader of the Government was asked if any report from the Justice Department in regard to this Bill could be laid before the Senate, and he replied:

> I think I may safely state that this Bill was either drafted by the Department of Justice or was submitted to the Department.

I feel that this is a very important Bill, not only for the grain-growers of the West; but I am sure there is no one in this House who is not sympathetic towards the farmers. The success of our country depends upon the success of the farmer, and I am satisfied that there can be co-operation for the benefit of all concerned. Yet I have some doubt as to whether this Bill is ever going to be carried out in the way in which it has been proposed and drafted, and whether 12 months from now the relief expected from this Bill will be realized, or whether the farmers will be any further advanced by it than they are to-day. Before the shipping interests of this country get a ruling from the Supreme Court of Canada or elsewhere, I think it would be fair, and it is only our duty, to know what opinion the Department of Justice has in relation to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend was perhaps not in his seat a moment ago when I stated that my information from the Department itself was that these Bills were prepared by the Department of Justice after being very carefully studied; so that the Bills have the endorsation of the Department of Justice. That is all the information I can give.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING BILL (COASTING LAWS)

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 236, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CANADA TEMPERANCE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 43, an Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I voted for this Bill when it was first introduced into this House, but conditions have so much changed since that I think it would be well to leave the Bill over for some time. The province of Manitoba has declared for Government control. In the light of affairs as they exist at the present time, no one can tell whether private importation into Manitoba is legal or not, and in fact the Canada Temperance Act will have to be remodelled to meet the circumstances as they may arise. I am no prophet, but I can confidently say that without question a referendum will be taken in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and all the Western Provinces will probably change their policy. Then we will be met by a condition of affairs for which no statutory provisions have been made. I think the honourable leader of the Government will agree with me when I say that the province of Manitoba does not know where it stands especially as to importation. When this Bill was first brought in it provided that importation could be stopped by an Order in Council of the Provincial Government if a vote had been taken in the Legislative Assembly asking for the prevention of the importation of liquor. Since then it has been changed so that a plebiscite must be taken. Personally I think it would be very much better if this Bill were left over till after this Session because nothing can be done in Manitoba for at least three or four months and by that time we would begin to think about holding another Session here. Nothing can be done in British Columbia in the way of taking a plebiscite before this House meets again. I think it would be better to drop this Bill altogether so that next year when we will have changed conditions, we can deal with it in a way that will be intelligible to all the provinces concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I realize the value of the suggestion, if the Senate does not retrace its steps in relation to the plebiscite amendment which was voted in this House, and which will be reviewed in Committee if my motion is adopted. It has been agreed that some new form of plebiscite should be examined into, and I believe that the honourable gentleman from British Columbia who moved the amendment which was adopted intends to reconsider that amendment, and propose another form of amendment. Then I will strongly urge my honourable friend from British Columbia, and those of his friends who shared his view when the vote was taken, to abandon the idea of adding the obligation to take a plebiscite, and leave the Bill to pass practically without this addition. I intend to do that. If I fail, and my honourable friends persist in their determination to have the people of British Columbia pass upon this legislation before the Federal Government could by Order in Council prohibit importation, then I will readily believe that there is very much in the statement that my honourable friend makes. But once the Bill is passed with that provision for a plebiscite added to it, we can leave the House of Commons to decide whether to accept the Bill as it is or to refuse to concur in aur amendments.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What about withdrawing it altogether?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, I have no mandate.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Neither has the British Columbia Government.

The motion was agreed to, and the House went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—importation of intoxicating liquor; prohibited:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I move that the Committee rise.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen. I suppose we can explain the effect of the motion, which will be simply to kill the Bill; that is to say, this Bill will disappear from the Order Paper, and we will be absolutely refusing the legislation which is asked for by the provinces that have voted government control. I know the fear that my honourable friend entertains in connection with this legislation being put on the Statute Book. I will not make the argument that he could better make himself, and I do not intend to detain the atention of the House very long.

We have given to provinces that have voted prohibition, Federal authority to prohibit importation. As to the provinces that have voted Government control, we are now seeking to give them effective control, and in those provinces by this legislation we are limiting the importation to the Government or its agency, to a public carrier, and to distillers for flavouring or blending purposes.

Now, if we have done the most, we can do the least. But it is objected that in the case of total prohibition of importation, a province has pronounced itself; and it is also alleged that in the case of one province—and perhaps the same thing could be said also of the province of Quebec—the people have not been questioned on that point, and their will has not been ascertained as to their denying themselves the constitutional right that a private citizen has, of importing from abroad. With regard to British Columbia, the province from which the opposition to this Bill appears most clearly in this Chamber, my answer has been that the people of British Columbia have voted for complete Government control as against prohibition, which was on the Statute Book; that when the people went to the poll they had not in mind that the people generally could, in spite of Government control, buy wherever they pleased, which meant simply and purely the negation of Government control. If the Government controls, then it is complete, or it is not. If the people can buy where they please without the consent or the authority of the Government, and outside its control, then it is not Government control.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: But is there not a difference between importing for personal use and importing for trade and sale?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The importation to sell is prohibited under Government control, and the only exception in favour of the trader is that he can say: "I am not importing to sell in the province; I am importing to sell outside." This class we are doing away with by agreeing to lend our authority to whatever province asks for it. The other class is that which has the general right of every private citizen in a Province where there is Government control. By this Bill we are denying to the private citizen the right to buy outside.

I said that 99 per cent of the people of British Columbia went to the poll without any thought of depriving themselves of any right that they had utilized. When they voted for Government control they could not have had in their minds any idea that they were retaining a constitutional right. I said that 99 per cent of the people of British Columbia went to the poll with a single thought: prohibition or Government control? I added that it seemed to me that, when 99 per cent of the population were in that state of mind, we were not depriving any considerable group when we said to British Columbia: "You shall have complete Government control." It occurred to me that I could test the statement that not one per cent cared a fig for the retention of the right to buy outside. I looked around this very Chamber, which I take to be about the average in the community, and with a few questions I sounded some of my colleagues; and I venture to say that there are not 15 members of the Senate who have ever taken the trouble to go beyond the boundaries of their Province in order to buy in Scotland or in France. One per cent of British Columbia's 500,000 population would be 500 people.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend be good enough to tell us how those of us living in the dry Provinces would have an opportunity of purchasing liquor abroad and bringing it into those Provinces?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, my honourable friend is far more virtuous than the people of British Columbia or of Quebec. He has deprived himself of the right to buy.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, I am as big a sinner as any; but I would like my honourable friend to tell me how we can get liquor into those Provinces.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He has not the right to import.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then what is the good of speaking of the 15 members here?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am speaking of the last 25 years. We are asked to impose upon the Province of British Columbia the necessity of spending from $75,000 to $85,000 for a plebiscite for that infinitesimal part of the population.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I dispute my honourable friend's figures when he says that only one per cent of the people of British Columbia are in a position to take advantage of the importation powers. British Columbia, in proportion to its population, is a very wealthy Province; and a great many more than one per cent have been able to import.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am glad my honourable friend makes that observation. It is not simply a question of being able to do so, but whether they have ever thought of doing so, because in the minds of nine-tenths of the people who buy liquor for their homes there is the idea that when the liquor is to be had at hand it is easier to get it there, because there is some trouble in writing to Glasgow to get it direct, and there is more trouble in writing to Bordeaux to get a cask of wine; because, first, you must know the agency, then you must be assured of the quality of the wine, and then you must take the risk of the transportation. There are very many conditions that make for the purchase at home.

It struck me that I could probably find out how many people there are in British Columbia who buy outside, and I have written to the Department of Customs for that information. After I have read these letters we will see what is the proportion of British Columbians for whom we are asked to add a clause to this Bill providing for a plebiscite.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You must figure only on the adult population.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Last week I asked the Department of Customs to give me the number of people in British Columbia who had imported last year for private use. This is the first letter I received. It is dated June 25:

As instructed, the officers of this branch have looked into import entries entered for consumption in the Province of British Columbia since April 1st, the beginning of the current fiscal year, with a view to ascertaining the amount imported by private individuals.

Up to this date our records show 104,239 gallons entered for consumption in that Province. Of this amount, 50,500 gallons were entered by the Liquor Control Board and practically all of the remainder by the Consolidated Export Company, the Pacific Coast Storage Company, the Canadian Export Corporation and similar firms. We found imports to the amount of about 130 gallons by private individuals. This investigation covered about 1,500 entries taken since the fiscal year.

Robert Telford,
Chief Statistical Clerk.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I submit that you should cover a period of at least a year. It might not be the particular season for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Department is working backwards.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is the way Departments usually work. I think they are following the usual course.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have the figures for the three months which precede it:

The entries of liquor in the Province of British Columbia during the months of January, February and March, 1923, have been examined, and during those months the total imports entered for consumption in that Province were 140,658 gallons. Of this amount, 70,331 gallons were entered by the Liquor Control Board, and, as in the succeeding months, most of the remaining entries were by firms such as those mentioned in my memorandum of the 25th instant. We found about 25 entries which appeared to be by private individuals covering importations of 392 gallons. In addition to these, there were 19 entries by Chinese or Japanese parties amounting to 2,684 gallons. We are unable to determine whether these importers are private individuals or business firms but the entries are large, averaging over 125 gallons each, which might possibly indicate that the parties are not importing for private use. The total number of entries in the three months was about 1,900.

I have made a summary analysis of this statement, which I will read:

Total imports entered for consumption in British Columbia during January, February and March: 140,658 gallons, of which 70,331 gallons entered by the Liquor Control Board and most of balance, to wit: 70,327 gallons, by the Consolidated Export Co., the Pacific Coast Storage Co., the Canadian Export Corporation and similar firms. Some 25 entries appear to be by private individuals covering importations of 392 gallons. 19 entries by Chinese or Japanese parties amounting to 2,684 gallons. Impossible to say if latter are private individuals or business firms as entries are large, averaging over 125 gallons each.

Since 1st of April, 104,239 gallons entered for consumption. Of this amount, 50,500 gallons entered by the Liquor Control Board and practically balance by the same firms as above, with 130 gallons by private individuals, so that in six months, private individuals imported 522 gallons. At most, 35 private citizens have imported from outside the province. If you double that number for the year, this would mean 70 entries, or 1-6th of one per cent. This stands to reason: Natural to buy at home as most people buy small quantities at a time and have the goods under their eye and can taste them; beside, difficult to buy abroad as it needs knowledge of the firm and in the case of wines, it implies a risk in the quality, in the flavour and strength with the risk of deterioration in transit.

The public in general would never think of going to the trouble and taking the risk.

Now we have a verification of my statement.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Who is that letter from?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The two letters I read are from Robert Telford, Chief Statistical Clerk. So it appears quite clearly that very few white men in British Columbia go to the trouble of writing to Montreal or Glasgow or Bordeaux to get their favourite brands. We were told by the honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Taylor) that there were as many as 79 brands of Scotch whiskey on the lists of the Government agency. Surely that is enough to satisfy the most varied tastes in the Province.

I have indicated the difficulties, and it is because there are difficulties and risks in importing directly that so little is imported into British Columbia directly by private importers. Now, I put to my honourable friends from British Columbia the question: will they insist on forcing their Province to take a plebiscite at a cost of from $75,000 to $85,000, to deny the private importers the right to import? There are not 100 citizens, I venture to say, who during the last year were importing from outside the Province. Before the House prorogues I will endeavour to get the figures for the other six months. I ask honourable gentlemen not to insist upon the plebiscite, and to allow full play and a fair trial to the system of Government control. Those who prefer Government control— and I know that some honourable gentlemen from British Columbia are of that mind—should, it seems to me, allow a fair trial of that system. If the Government in British Columbia is changed at the next electoral contest, the new Government will not be bound by this law. It will have the privilege of recalling this Order in Council; so I do not see why my honourable friends from British Columbia should insist upon maintaining the privilege of less than one-sixth of one per cent of the whole population.

No other Province has registered its opinion against this law; on the contrary, the Attorneys General of all the Provinces have said that they are in favour of the law, and I think it would be showing a fair spirit if my honourable friends from British Columbia were to say: "We will not stand in the way; we have registered our votes, and we can easily retrace our steps." When I was looking at the returns from the Customs Department, it struck me that there was very little in the objections that came from the Western Provinces; and I suggest that it is not yet too late to abandon this amendment.

My honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. McMeans) moves that the Committee rise. That, of course, would deny the Province having Government control the right to obtain absolute effective Government control.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: My only desire is to make sure that the Province of Manitoba under the present unsettled condition of the law should not be put in the position of having to take a plebiscite. If the Bill were withdrawn altogether we would know in what position we were. I only moved the motion in order to give the honourable gentleman an opportunity of withdrawing the Bill, so as not to complicate the legislation as it exists at the present time. If it is the desire to continue the debate, I will withdraw my motion.

The motion of Hon. Mr. McMeans was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Honourable gentlemen, having heard the leader of the House just now, I am in a position, and I am sure the House generally will be in a position, to know what all this legislation is about. It seems that there have been imported into the Province of British Columbia by private importers during the last six months an average of 80 gallons a month.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Outside of Chinese and Japanese.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes. I presume we do not have to mix that subject with this one just at present.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, it comes in.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: If the honourable gentleman wants to discuss the Chinese question first of all, I have no objection to discussing it, and I will say that this virtuous Attorney General of British Columbia, who has no idea except to promote the highest grade of morality and propriety and temperance in British Columbia, has been so keen after the almighty and dirty dollar that he has made a special drive for months on the Chinese Sam Suey and the Japanese Saki in order that he might offer the oriental peoples of British Columbia the greatest possible inducements to buy from his Government stores. That is the attitude of the Attorney General of British Columbia —a special drive to induce these people to buy and debauch themselves—if these things do debauch—from the stores of the Province of British Columbia.

As to private importation, on the word of the honourable gentleman himself (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), there have been 80 gallons a month imported; and yet we have the representation of the Attorney General of British Columbia that the administration of the law in that Province is paralyzed by that importation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Plus the importation of the exportation houses.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: The figures themselves have only to be stated to show the absurdity of the whole contention. There must be something behind the contention other than the desire expressed on the surface.

When you come to the export warehouses, let it be recalled that the request of the Attorney General of British Columbia to this Parliament did not include the suppression of the export houses—that his request to this Parliament specifically exempted export houses. Knowing that they were the only people importing into British Columbia, he came to this Parliament with a Bill—as you will see by referring to the measure as passed last year by the Commons and as introduced in the Commons this year—with a special exception in favour of export houses, which were to be interfered with only if at some future date he saw fit to make special recommendation in that behalf.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then he could, by a demand on Ottawa, have the export houses closed?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, if in the meantime he had not made his peace with them, or they had not made their peace with him.

Let us be plain about this. The Attorney General did not ask for the suppression of the export houses. The provision to that effect was inserted in the House of Commons without any request from him, or from anybody in British Columbia in his behalf, that that should be done.

The very figures given here to-day show his insincerity. The day after we took the vote here I read in an Ottawa newspaper, a message from the Attorney General of British Columbia, which is confirmed by the press of British Columbia. I would like the honourable leader of the House to note these facts. The sole request for this legislation is from the Attorney General of British Columbia. The honourable gentleman read a most insulting letter from that gentleman respecting the Parliament of Canada and the Senate, and when the Attorney General's attention was called to it he sent a very questionable withdrawal, with the extraordinary statement in it that the long paragraphs of his first letter meant nothing and he intended no reflection upon this Parliament, particularly upon the Senate. Yet, after the Senate had taken the vote the other night—the vote of the free men who constitute this House, which was not extraordinary, but was in accordance with precedent—we find it referred to by the Attorney General of British Columbia in these words:

> I appreciated from the outset that bootlegging interests were powerful. I am now quite convinced that I did not over-estimate their power.

That is, the Attorney General of British Columbia broadcasts over Canada that the majority of this Senate were purchased last week by bootlegging interests to vote as they did vote.

I do not know what attitude the honourable leader of the House takes—whether he thinks that it is proper to allow such an imputation to be passed upon the House which he controls, or should control, without any notice being taken of it; but as one member of the Senate of Canada, I resent an imputation of that kind. When I heard the honourable gentleman from Manitoba move a little while ago that the Committee rise, although he moved it with an entirely different object, having regard to circumstances in his own Province, it did seem to me that that would be the most fitting answer to make to a person who continues to heap insults upon the Parliament of Canada because he cannot achieve his purpose in the dubious application which he has made.

The honourable gentleman's second argument was that it would cost $75,000 to take a plebiscite in British Columbia. What do the Liquor Board and the Attorney General of British Columbia care for an expenditure of $75,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the honourable gentleman himself should care.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: True, I should care, and do care; but I know from sorry experience that the Attorney General of British Columbia does not care, and that when he puts $75,000 as the obstacle to prevent a reference to the people of British Columbia, that is only another evidence of his insincerity. I will tell you why I say this. I have in mind a concrete case. This, again, is from the records of the Province of British Columbia; it is not rumour, or fiction, or imagination. The Liquor Control Board—that is, the Board controlled by this Attorney General of British Columbia—had under lease in the city of Vancouver a substantial liquor warehouse. There was no necessity for their dealing particularly with that warehouse at all, because the lease extended over the ordinary term of office of the Board. There was suddenly registered in the Registry Office the announcement of the transfer of that property to the possession of the Liquor Control Board. We found on inquiry that while this property was valued on the city assessment at $58,000, and while it was listed for sale with every realty office in Vancouver and the valuations in connection with those listing ran from $60,000 to $70,000, yet the Liquor Control Board—that is, the Attorney General of British Columbia—had bought these premises privately for $150,000. That is $80,000 more than the highest valuation placed upon that property, and $92,000 more than the municipal assessment upon it; and we have no redress.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Will the honourable gentleman excuse me He knows that the Attorney General who was responsible for that has since resigned his position.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, as the honourable gentleman says, the Attorney General who was responsible for that has since resigned his position; and he is in greater favour than ever with the Government of British Columbia. He is receiving far more than his former official salary in commissions from the Government of British Columbia, and his attitude in connection with the purchase of these Liquor Board premises was confirmed publicly by his colleagues, and especially by the Prime Minister of British Columbia. So the fact that he has disappeared from the scene makes no difference, inasmuch as his colleagues were a unit in sanctioning or approving this scandalous waste of the money of the people of British Columbia, who have no redress except to wait for the next general election, whenever it may be.

As to the cost of taking a plebiscite, the Government of British Columbia have had it in their power at any time within the past two years to take, without any cost whatever, a plebiscite of one-fourth of the population of British Columbia on this subject. The city of Vancouver, returns six members to the Legislature from the city at large, and these represent one-fourth of the population of British Columbia. Since the fall of 1921 a seat for the city of Vancouver has been vacant. Two sessions of the Legislature have passed without that seat being filled. At any time the Government of British Columbia could have called for an election and made this an issue there, but they have not done so—why? The answer is that they know that the sentiment of the people of British Columbia is against their administration of the liquor law, and that sentiment would be made plain at any time a constituency like Vancouver had an opportunity to pronounce upon the subject. It is because of a knowledge of these facts, possessed by every citizen of British Columbia, that we are averse to enlarging the powers of a Board who scandalously abuse the powers already conferred upon them. We say that if this Board came to Parliament with clean hands and showed that they were hampered in a clean administration, they would be entitled to special consideration. But they do not come to Parliament clean; they some to Parliament smirched in every possible way, showing a disregard of public sentiment, a disregard of all their pledges, and they say, "Confirm our monopoly."

With the exception of the message from the Attorney General of British Columbia protesting against the action taken by this House last year, the only messages I have had commended the action of the Senate. The only reference I have seen in the British Columbia press—that is the informed and interested press—has been in commendation of the action of this House. The people out there know what this means. They do not wish any extraordinary powers to be conferred on the Liquor Control Board of British Columbia.

I would suggest to the honourable gentleman that he is most unfair in his argument as to one per cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One-sixth of one per cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, make it one per cent. Allow us one per cent.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Even make it two per cent. We had two per cent, and we abolished it because we were not satisfied with two per cent.

The question is not, how many people in British Columbia use any right we have? How many people in British Columbia use the right to appeal to the Exchequer Court to sue the Crown? It would be one-thousandth part of one per cent. Would the honourable gentleman say that he would destroy that right or take it away from them because only one-thousandth part of one per cent of the people ever use a right of that kind. We do not have to use every day every right which we possess in order to appreciate or value that right. The fact that we do not use it is no reason why the powers that have granted it to us should arbitrarily take it away.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend allow me a question?

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Yes, certainly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Under the Prohibition Act you allow 51 per cent of the population to impose its will on 49 per cent, saying, "You shall not drink this, or you shall not drink that." Now we say to one-sixth of one per cent of the population of British Columbia, "Kindly buy from your own Government stores."

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I do not think that is a very powerful answer. The proposition of the amendment now before this Committee is to allow 51 per cent of the voting people of British Columbia to say that they are satisfied to give the Government this exclusive control. The majority must rule. When the majority has expressed itself, if 51 per cent of the people, or any majority, vote by the plebiscite to give the Government the complete monopoly which they ask, so as to put all this extra money into their pockets, I for my part, as a representative of British Columbia, shall have nothing further to say.

Another point, as to the question of cost to the Government. We have in the literature from the Attorney General, broadcasted in Canada recently, the statement that the bootleggers were making from one to two millions a year in profits. A very simple calculation will show that if bootlegging is to be ended by this legislation the Attorney General of British Columbia will very soon recoup the $75,000 that he says it will take to hold a plebiscite. Why, one month's extra profits would more than recoup him for it. So, as a business man, he is absolutely foolish in throwing away the chance to get an extra million or two millions a year for the sake of a $75,000 preliminary investment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He may take advantage of it.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: I doubt it. Our message is that he hopes that the King Government—that is his expression—will find means to induce the Senate to reverse its action of last week. I for one hope that they will not, but that he will be sent before the people of British Columbia; and if he be sent before the people of British Coumbia, I am quite satisfied, as I have said, to take their verdict on this legislation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Question.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the question before us?

Hon. J. H. ROSS: What do you move?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Honourable gentlemen, the honourable leader of the House appears to be of the opinion that I am desirous of substituting for the amendment which was inserted in the Bill when it was in Committee before, a fresh section providing for a plebiscite. Personally, I am not particularly worried about the form that the amendment took the other day, but when the honourable gentleman suggested that there should be no doubt about the cost of the plebiscite being placed upon the province, and that there should be no difficulty about the machinery for taking the vote, I agreed that an amendment might be drawn by the Clerk of the House embodying the principle which I advocated, and that, should such an amendment be drawn and be satisfactory, I would have no objection to it being substituted.

I would like to understand, before moving to make any change, just what is going to be the situation in this respect. I do not intend asking for a change, but if my honourable friend will accept what I suggest might be inserted to embody the ideas mentioned by him the other day, I shall have no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have simply drawn my honourable friend's attention to the difficulty in which the Government of British Columbia would be placed in using the machinery that my honourable friend proposed to add to this Bill, because that machinery, which at first was based on the Doherty Act, had been at the last moment altered in part by the honourable gentleman, by the insertion of the word "Lieutenant" before the word "Governor." When later I read the proposed amendment in the minutes of the Senate it occurred to me that we were getting nowhere; that this legislation would be unworkable. I pointed this out to my honourable friend and I think that either he or the honourable gentleman opposite said: "We had seen the difficulty, and we intended revising this amendment which we passed last evening, and which had been very hurriedly drawn".

Now, my honourable friend may do just as he pleases. This is his amendment. I voted against it. I will vote against all amendments embodying the principle of the plebiscite; but the majority in this House is free to add such a provision to the Bill if it pleases. When I rose it was simply to suggest that the amendment was in my opinion unworkable. My honourable friend felt that same way. The Law Clerk has prepared an amendment, but I do not intend to vote for that amendment. I will vote against all amendments that carry the idea of a referendum.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: In that event I see no particular object in making the change. We have the authority of the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) that the machinery that was provided could be made workable; therefor there is no object in changing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend give me his opinion on this point? According to the Act as it is, will it be the Federal authorities who will be called upon to demand a plebiscite in British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: No, it would be the Provincial authorities who would call for the plebiscite. The machinery is provided in the Canada Temperance Act for the taking of an ordinary plebiscite. In order to answer one or two points made by the honourable gentleman in his speech a few moments ago, and to show that there is more interest being taken in this question in the province of British Columbia than he appears to think, I would like to read a telegram I received the day before yesterday from Vancouver, dated the 25th June:

Honourable G. H. Barnard, Ottawa, Ontario.

Kindly inform Sir James Lougheed and the British Columbia Senators that the Moderation League of British Columbia are now and always have been strongly opposed to any restriction on rights of private citizens to import liquor solely for their own use (Stop) We appreciate very much the effort to preserve the rights of citizens of the province, and urge that they be continued. Executive Moderation League, by H. O. Bell Irving, Chairman.

I may say that the Moderation League is a body that is numerically pretty strong in the province of British Columbia, as was evidenced by the result of their efforts when the plebiscite was taken there on the last occasion that this question was before the people.

In addition to that, I propose to quote from an editorial in the Victoria Daily Colonist of 21st June, as follows:

An Issue for Plebiscite.

The Senate has chosen the logical course in dealing with the attempt to put an end to the right of the private importation of liquor into provinces where Government control laws are in force. It is a question for the people to decide. The whole issue of prohibition, in any shape or form, has been thrown into the melting pot of a fluctuating public opinion, and there it seems destined to remain, chopping and changing with the years. Since the principle has been laid down that in Canada each province shall decide for itself on the issue of prohibition, that principle, if it is to be observed in its entirety, involves a plebscite on any such radical course as a departure from a right laid down in the British North America Act. It is true a plebiscite in a province like British Columbia is a costly performance. If there is an overwhelming demand on the part of public opinion to make the provincial Government's monopoly of the liquor traffic airtight, the expense incidental to a plebiscite will not be objected to by the people.

One of the gravest dangers involved in a Government's airtight monopoly of the liquor business has been drawn attention to by Senator Taylor of New Westminster. He points out that the legislation designed to put a period to private importation would, if adopted, "create a number of mushroom distilleries in British Columbia and provide an immense corruption fund." It is idle to deny the possibility of this, no matter what protestations of pure-hearted innocence our legislators might make. In the Senate debate on the Bill to amend the Canada Temperance Act, the same old perennial discussion on what the people of this province meant by their decision in favour of Moderation was again aired. Senator Barnard of this city said they did not mean to deprive themselves of the right of private importation. As to whether they did or did not we are unaware, but what we know is that the people did not intend to put into the hands of the Government any authority, or inclination or temptation, to use the control of liquor for the purposes of creating a party campaign fund. The possibilities of this are to be deprecated in every possible way.

It is now a matter for the Provincial Legislation to decide if there will be a plebiscite on the right of private importation of liquor. There is no real need for such a plebiscite before a general election is held. In conjunction with a general election the expense involved would be greatly lessened as compared with what would be incurred were a plebiscite held at another time. The fact is that a plebiscite would probably cost the people of British Columbia $100,000 if held at any time other than when a general election was in progress. The Legislature will decide if it believes the people should be involved in such expense at this time. The state of public opinion in the Dominion on this whole question of further prohibitory legislation of any character is distinctly one of unrest.

I would call my honourable friend's attention to the last few lines of this editorial:

Governments are showing a tendency to exhaust the patience of the people by harassing legislation and sumptuary laws which are proving disturbing factors in the social, economic and political life of the nation.

I would suggest that the honourable gentleman allow the amendment to stand as it is, and let the people of that Province decide what they want on this particular question.

The Bill was reported as amended.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments to the Bill made in the Committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move that all the amendments be concurred in except the one contained in clause 5, which carries the obligation of a plebiscite being taken.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I now move that the amendment contained in clause 5, which imposes the obligations on a province of a plebiscite, be not concurred in.

The motion was negatived on the following division:

CONTENTS

Honourable Messieurs

Béique,	L'Espérance,
Belcourt,	McCoig,
Bostock (Speaker),	McHugh,
Boyer,	McMeans,
Chapais,	Mitchell,
Cloran,	Pardee,
Dandurand,	Ratz,
David,	Roche,
Dessaulles,	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Farrell,	Tessier,
Foster,	Thibaudeau,
Foster (Sir George),	Todd,
Hardy,	Turgeon,
Laird,	Turriff,
Lavergne,	Watson—30.

NON-CONTENTS

Honourable Messieurs

Barnard,	Donnelly,
Bénard,	Fisher,
Bennett,	Fowler,
Black,	Gillis,
Blain,	Girroir,
Blondin,	Green,
Bolduc,	Kemp (Sir Edward),
Bradbury,	Lougheed (Sir James),
Calder,	Macdonell,
Crowe,	Martin,
Daniel,	McCall,

Michener,	Sharpe,
Mulholland,	Smith,
Murphy,	Stanfield,
Poirier,	Tanner,
Pope,	Taylor,
Reid,	Webster (Brockville),
Robertson,	Webster (Stadacona),
Ross (Middleton),	White (Pembroke),
Schaffner,	Willoughby—40.

The amendment was agreed to on the same division reversed.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Before the Bill is read a third time, I have an amendment to propose. It is one of the amendments that I moved the other evening when business was somewhat congested, and when honourable members were perhaps somewhat in a hurry to get through. I therefore move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole to insert the following amendment:

163B. (1) Any person holding a license to carry on the business or trade of a distiller or brewer issued under the provisions of any Act of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada who is convicted more than twice within any period of five years of any violation of any law whether of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada or of the legislature of any Province relating to the prohibition or control of the use, manufacture, sale, transportation, importation or exporting of intoxicating liquors shall forfeit his license and shall thereafter be ineligible to hold such a license.

I gave some reasons before with reference to the amendment, and I am not going to repeat the arguments which I made in support of it. In addition to what I have already said, I wish to read a letter from the Chairman of the Board of License Commissioners for Ontario in reference to shipments that are made in violation of the law, and about which they have had a great deal of trouble and difficulty:

These shipments have been kept up for a good while, and they have given our officers endless trouble.

Under the pretence of shipping liquor to Mexico, Cuba or some other foreign place, a brewer or distiller goes through the form of making out export papers which it is pretended are to accompany the shipment. The liquor is then loaded upon a small boat, and Provincial Officers are warned that they must not interfere, because the liquor is for export, and only Dominion Officers can interfere. The boat, loaded with liquor, then sails away and the liquor is regularly smuggled into the United States, against the laws of that country, or under cover of darkness is landed somewhere in Ontario to be resold by bootleggers.

The smuggling into the United States is very distasteful to many of our people, and is strongly resented by many of the best people in the United States. The distribution in Ontario is wrong and indefensible, yet the conditions which make it possible, and I may say easily possible, are sanctioned by the laws of the Dominion. We have made many unsuccessful efforts to reduce this evil to a minimum, but generally without much success, and we feel very strongly that the Dominion Parliament should apply a speedy remedy. Surely the people of this Province who voted with such large majorities for prohibition are entitled to something better than the present law, which tolerates such a condition of affairs, under the sanction of Dominion laws.

The offending brewers and distillers quite openly admit that so far as violation of the laws of the United States are concerned, they are without conscientious scruples. They pretend that they will obey the laws of the Dominion and the Province. In spite of their profession, however, they are continually violating the prohibition laws of their own province.

For instance, during the past year, and up to the present in this year, three brewers alone have been convicted of more than eighteen distinct offences against The Ontario Temperance Act, yet they are still allowed to carry on under licenses obtained from the Dominion authorities. Some of these concerns are nothing better than outlaws. Where eighteen convictions have been obtained, doubtless twenty times eighteen offences have been committed by these same companies.

That this is going on and has been going on my honourable friend can easily ascertain by inquiring of the Customs Department. What I contend is that it is not for the good order and good government of a country that brewers and distillers living in the Province of Ontario, for instance, which has over and over again and by very large majorities expressed its wishes that this traffic shall not be carried on, should be allowed to countervail and contravene the laws of the Province—do it repeatedly, be brought up for it, and convicted for it, and yet be sustained by the Dominion Government in holding a continuous license The lawbreaker is a lawbreaker, and to my mind it is not healthy, orderly or in the interests of good government that lawbreakers under such circumstances should be countenanced to the extent of having their licenses continued. If they have not obeyed the law and have been brought up and punished by a fine or some other punishment, and if they do it again and again the time should come when their licenses should be taken away from them That is the object of my amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentleman, I am trying to find the statute of 1907 or 1909 which I cited when my right honourable friend made his motion before. I have a recollection that there is already in the Statute Book a provision which gives the magistrate the right to order the cancellation of a license in the case of a third violation of the law by a distiller or brewer. I do not know whether honourable gentlemen remember that I made that statement. If that is true—

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I do not think it is true.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I think it is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think that is so, on the third offence. So my honourable friend could at all events alter the words of his motion and make it conform with the Act protanto.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, this comes peculiarly within the administration of the Internal Revenue Branch of the Customs Department. The Federal Government assumes full responsibility for the issuance of licenses to brewers and distillers, and it seems to me that it is not sound policy to introduce into this Bill what I might term a sumptuary provision which might work a great injustice to interests that would in no way be personally responsible for the infraction of the law.

The Bill before us deals only with three parties: the Government—and this would not apply to the Provincial Government, although it might be the worst sinner of all—the common carrier and the distiller. This provision would not apply to the common carrier, and it would be idle to apply any such law to the carrier of this kind of goods. He has the right by statute to carry the liquor, and a license does not issue to him. The only other party mentioned in the Bill is the distiller. The brewer has been stricken out. The distiller cannot secure his license for the manufacture of spirits within the Province or within any part of Canada unless that license be issued to him by the Federal Government; and the license is issued to him, I fancy, after very much investigation into his qualifications to carry on the business which he presumes to carry on.

Cannot we rely upon the Dominion Government to say that if there is an infraction of the law, the right issued by the Dominion Government to the distiller will not at a future time be renewed? This is simply piling up sumptuary legislation, it seems to me, to prevent the proper administration of the Department chargeable with this particular class of business.

I do not think honourable gentlemen will accuse me of being in sympathy with the distillers; I do not think I have a personal acquaintance with any of those gentlemen in the Dominion of Canada. At the same time we know very well that the business which the distiller carries on is carried on throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion. If he is a large distiller he probably has branches from the Atlantic to the Pacific; his operations extend throughout the whole of the Dominion. He may have in his employ thousands of men. If any one of the men in his employ should violate the provisions which we have been considering, his license would be in jeopardy. Is it a reasonable thing to say that, because some informer should lay information that there has been an infraction by the distiller on the part of one of his employees, which would be entirely foreign to his knowledge, his license, which is his authority for carrying on a business which runs perhaps into millions, should be cancelled? Surely we have not reached that stage of puritanical insistance upon an academic law, so to speak, where we are prepared to place in jeopardy milions of dollars of property because some employee of a distiller may violate the law. That, in the final analysis, is what is proposed.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Has my honourable friend looked at the section which empowers the granting of the licenses? And, next, is not the power or the authority absolutely discretionary?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The authority is discretionary with the Government, and I was particularly impressed, when my honourable friend read the Act the other day, that it was discretionary on the part of the Government; and if there is any infraction of the law, all the Government has to do is to refuse to issue the license, or refuse a renewal of the license. Much as I sympathize with a due observance of law, I think there is a limit beyond which we should not pass. It seems to me that this proposal would result in confusion, and for that reason we would not be warranted in placing such legislation upon the Statute Book. I think we should rely upon the Government authorities to exercise proper discretion in issuing licenses, when there have been infractions of the law.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am somewhat dubious as to what is the right thing to do with regard to a distiller who has convictions recorded against him. I hardly know to what extent the distiller operates by his agents throughout the country; and, as I have not studied the question, and my right honourable friend's proposed amendment did not seem to meet with favour when I consulted the Minister of Customs, I feel that I am treading on uncertain ground. I am not fully acquainted with the whole situation. I would therefore suggest that my right honourable friend do not insist on his proposed amendment to this Bill, which is already rather heavily laden with amendments and will have to go back to the Commons, and that he should reserve action till next Session.

I will take occasion to draw the Government's attention to the fact that there are distillers and brewers who have as many as 15 or 18 convictions against them.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If I may be permitted, I have just two remarks to make. It is not by virtue of a charge that has been made once, twice or three times that the penalty may be imposed. There must be three convictions.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: After the passage of this amendment?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes; and these convictions are imposed after a trial before the courts of the land. The court which tries the case has the circumstances before it, and when a conviction is made it is not based upon a technicality. All the circumstances are weighed and taken into account, and a conviction is made. This happens the second time, and it happens the third time. I say that then it is fair to impose this penalty.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Suppose the act is committed by an employee or agent without the privity of the person to whom the license is issued. It is clearly an infraction of the law, and would clearly be brought within the amendment which has been proposed.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, but the penalty I propose is not exacted simply on an allegation, or on an elleged infraction which has not been proved or on which a conviction has not been made.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But though the act has been committed by an agent or employee without the privity of the license holder, the conviction would be made all the same. Is it reasonable that that penalty should be attached to a deed that has been committed without the knowledge or privity of the license holder?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: My own thought in that respect is that a man is not convicted without all the circumstances brought before the court at the time of the trial being taken into account. If the circumstances as brought before the court go to show that the man was not culpable, but that the infraction was an indiscretion of an employee, or something of that kind, it would seem to me that a conviction would not be made. However, you can follow out that line of argument against any charge brought with reference to the infraction of any law, and I think we ought not to refine too much upon it. For my own part, I think it is a dangerous thing for the Goverment to associate itself with lawbreakers, whether they are distillers, brewers or simply the common man who commits the common daily infraction.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I understand the right honourable gentleman makes his amendment to cover three infractions instead of two.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would point out to my right honourable friend that the American Government has been seeking protection against the invasion of its territory by Canadian alcohol, and that the Government is investigating the situation; so its inquiry will cover those probable violations of American law, as well as violations of Canadian law.

The proposed amendment of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster was negatived.

The motion for the third reading of the Bill was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA INSPECTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 237, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, under the present law the sale of naphtha for illuminating purposes is regulated by statute, which specified the mode of usage. The present amendment has for its object to give the Governor in Council power to regulate the sale for illuminating purposes, in order to allow the public to take advantage of new discoveries and new devices.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Bradbury in the Chair.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

FUEL SUPPLY OF CANADA

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN moved concurrence in the report of the Special Committee on the Fuel Supply of Canada.

The motion was agreed to.

INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 184, an Act to amend the Insurance Act, 1917.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill seems to be rather compact. It adds only two clauses to the Act. One clause, somewhat lengthy, contains conditions for the insurance of automobiles. When we go into Committee we can discuss these clauses.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—returns of British or foreign unlicensed insurance:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the object?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At the present time persons in Canada who insure their property in unlicensed insurance companies are required to make two returns to the Government—one under section 129 of the Insurance Act, the other under section 5 of the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, as amended in 1922. The object of the amendment contained in section 1 of the Bill is to render unnecessary the former of these returns. Hereafter the only return necessary will be that under the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That will be a sufficient return?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, it is a complete return.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is all right.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—French version amended:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What is the purpose of that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This section corrects an error in translation in section 134, subsection 2, paragraph b, of the Insurance Act, 1917. I suppose I need not proceed to explain the error, but I can explain it fully if any honourable gentleman so desires.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—conditions of license for automobile insurance:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is that more restrictive or what is the effect of it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This section is the most important part of the Bill. It enacts statutory conditions which will be required to be included in all policies of automobile insurance issued in Canada after January 1st next. In 1910 Parliament enacted statutory conditions for life insurance policies. In 1917 it enacted statutory conditions for accident and sickness policies. The effect of these two amendments has been to make practically uniform the conditions of these classes of policies throughout Canada. The legislation has been greatly in the interests of the insured as well as a convenience to the companies. It is now desired to extend this principle to automobile insurance.

There is an additional reason why this is desirable. Many automobile policies insure against loss of the automobile by fire and there has always been some doubt as to whether the statutory conditions for fire insurance policies would be held to apply to policies insuring automobiles against fire. In the Province of Ontario this doubt has been set at rest by a judgment in the Supreme Court, confirmed by the Appellate Division, in the case Rockmaker vs. Motor Union Insurance Company, in which it is held that the fire insurance statutory conditions do apply to the automobile policy.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Even though not specifically mentioned?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suppose so. In this particular case the condition in question was applicable equally to an automobile policy and to a fire policy, but there are other fire conditions of which this is not true. The statutory conditions referring to the storage of gasoline, to storage in buildings while under repair, and the change of location of the property insured, are instances of conditions which are inapplicable to automobile policies. The result of the judgment is to cause considerable confusion as to the construction of existing automobile policies and it is therefore most desirable to enact conditions which will be wholly applicable to the business of automobile insurance and equitable alike to the public and the companies.

The conditions prescribed have been disdiscussed very thoroughly with organized bodies of automobile owners, such as the various motor leagues, and the conditions are entirely satisfactory to them. They have also been discussed with the insurance companies, who have likewise given their approval. The solicitor for the Ontario Motor League has given expression to his views as follows:

> There is a fundamental principle in connection with insurance which many do not recognize; that is, the insured, not the insurer, pays the loss. Let me repeat; it is not the Insurance Companies that pay the losses, it is the insured. They must contribute enough in premiums to absorb the losses and pay the company's reasonable operating expenses and profits. In this sense it is a partnership undertaking; an undertaking in which the insured is vitally interested in seeing that the business is conducted according to sound principles, and that waste and extravagant losses, such as we have known to exist in the past, are eliminated.
>
> From one point of view it might be asserted that the insured has even more interest in reducing the loss ratio than has the insurer. The insurer makes his gain on the turn-over of business which means a turn-over of premiums. If, therefore, there is a loss of one million dollars in one year, the insurer makes more on the premiums collected than he would make on half a million dollars. If, then, the insured has an interest in the losses of the business, which I maintain he has, it behooves him to see that losses by criminal negligence and fraud are eliminated, and I assert many such claims are made and frequently paid.
>
> In my dealings with insurance companies, representing as I have many of the insured who are members of the Motor League, I must say I find the insurance companies have treated the straightforward claimant with every fairness and consideration, and if I have any criticism of the insurance companies it is that they are too prone to pay claims that are not made in good faith.

Subsection 6 and 7, on page 8, were inserted in the House of Commons, these being the only amendments in that House. Subsection 6 gives discretion to the Court to relieve against forfeiture of a policy for non-compliance with conditions binding upon the insured upon the occurrence of a loss in cases in which the Court deems it equitable that such relief should be given. This condition is similar to what is now contained in the provincial statutes, but in some provinces the provision is limited to fire insurance.

Subsection 7 prohibits the issue of valued policies. There have been, from time to time, demands made for such a policy, in which a definite sum is payable on the occurrence of a loss regardless of the value of the property destroyed at the time of the loss. It is believed that such a policy is an incentive to incendiarism and therefore an undesirable moral hazard. This is because an automobile loses a certain percentage of its value yearly; yet after three or four years the owner would receive a fixed sum, although the automobile would have deteriorated.

Sections 3 to 8 inclusive were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

SENATE AMENDMENTS INSISTED UPON

The Senate proceeded to consider a message from the House of Commons disagreeing to the amendment made in the Senate to Bill 84, an Act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, the Industrial Disputes Act was amended in two or three particulars, materially altering the end which the Department of Labour had in view when it introduced this Bill. We have now a message from the House of Commons informing the Senate that that House disagrees with the amendments made by the Senate to this Bill for the following reasons:

> That the said amendments defeat the objects aimed at in the Bill, and would complicate rather than simplify procedure.

I move that we do not insist on our amendments.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In reference to what my honourable friend has said, I would answer that the amendments which have been inserted in the Bill are but reasonable. The message which has been sent from the House of Commons, which we treat with all due defenence, is certainly not an answer to the amendments made by the Senate. The first amendment, dealing with a strike or lockout, is a most reasonable amendment; in fact, I fail to see how anyone can take exception to our amendment. It seeks to perfect the Act, to give it a facility for operation that was not to be found within its four corners; and surely the amendment which we made as to the impartial selection of an arbitrator cannot be criticized, at least in my judgment, by the most advanced labour man. The Act required amendment in that particular respect, and if the Minister of Labour had been anxious to amend this Act so that it would commend itself to the public and appeal to the fair judgment of men, he would have made some proposal in view of the fact that two Sessions ago, I think, we amended the Judges Act, which prevented the selection of judges as chairmen of Boards. Now, in the absence of any provision taking the place of that important provision, it was not unreasonable to expect that some suggestion would have been made by the Minister of Labour to fill the void which was quite apparent as to the machinery for selecting chairmen of Boards. The bald message sent down from the House of Commons, without any reasoning, or without any detailing wherein any injustice will occur, does not appeal to me in the slightest degree, and I think the House should insist upon its amendments.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will the honourable gentleman tell us what the other two amendments are?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I only recall two amendments—the so-called Béique amendment, and the arbitrator amendment.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Section 58, the penalty clause which was coupled with 57 I had an opportunity of reading in Hansard the debate on this question in the other House a day or two ago, and noted the objections raised by the Minister of Labour to the amendments made by this House. Frankly I confess that I did concur in the amendments as introduced by the Department of Labour in the other House at their inception. But, for the purpose of trying to meet the situation reasonably and fairly, having very sincere regard for the views expressed by the honourable member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) and what appeared to me the reasonable amendment he offered to section 57, I supported his amendment, believing it was preferable to do that rather than leave the Act as it was; my only object, then and now, being to have the Industrial Disputes Act so framed that it would best serve the purpose for which it was intended, namely, to maintain industrial business as far as possible in Canada.

I was and am opposed to the amendment of the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), respecting the method by which Chairmen of Boards are selected. My views have not changed on that point, and I quite agree that the Government were probably well advised in not concurring in the amendments of this House in that particular respect. I am of opinion that if this House saw its way clear to waive objection to the view of the House of Commons respecting the amendment to section 8, but would insist on its amendment to section 57, that should be a fair solution of the whole difficulty; that is, to accept the amendment of the honourable member from De Salaberry, but not to insist upon our amendment to section 8, as moved by the honourable member from Hamilton.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: As it is nearly 6 o'clock, I would ask that the Speaker call 6 o'clock, so that we may discuss this matter further when we reassemble after recess.

At six o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 p. m.

DIVORCE BILL

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS

Bill F6, an Act for the relief of Flossie May Pinkham.—Hon. Sir James Lougheed.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

SENATE AMENDMENTS INSISTED UPON

The Senate resumed the consideration of the message from the House of Commons disagreeing to the amendments made in the Senate to Bill 84, an Act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Honourable gentlemen, I said a few words with regard to this matter before recess. I have not had an opportunity of reading the speech made in another place by the Minister of Labour; but I know that he lays special stress upon the fact that if our amendments are to be insisted upon, some confusion and perhaps delay may be caused in the carrying out of the Act. I do not think it is the desire or purpose that any such delay or such confusion should occur. We gave this matter very careful consideration; we discussed the question in its various aspects; and while at first we were not all agreed upon the proper way and the best method of amending the Bill; yet, after an amendment had been proposed by an eminent K.C. of Montreal, one whose judgment is very much respected in this House, we agreed to accept his amendment, feeling that both in law and in practice it was perfectly sound.

It is this amendment, I understand, that is questioned at the present time. I feel, honourable gentlemen, that if we follow out the amendment suggested, we will find that there is nothing complicating or nothing confusing in regard to the Act. It has already been stated that the Bill as originally introduced into this House would work considerable hardship upon several of our manufactures and industries. That matter has been fully gone into.

When the further amendment was moved, that a Chief Justice should appoint the third arbitrator, some of us felt that it would be safe to have the Chief Justice name the third arbitrator, in case of a difference of opinion.

I think it was in that sense that these amendments were accepted by this House, and I feel, therefore, that we should insist upon these amendments which we have discussed fully and at length, and which some of us feel are in the best interests of both capital and labour.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I have very little to say with regard to this Bill. The difficulty is to say anything without repeating what has been said before. I think we ought to adhere to our amendments. There are only two of them. One of them was introduced by the honourable member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), and I think it does full justice to both parties. If you strike out the amendment and leave the Bill as it was, it is one-sided, because the workmen are a shifting body, and if you attempt to collect from them a past due sum or sums that have been paid over and beyond what the award fixes, the award being retroactive, even if the men are in your employ, you would find that they would resent it, and I doubt very much whether it would be practicable to collect from them. Under the Bill as amended, justice would be done to both sides.

The other amendment with regard to the Chief Justice is of even greater value from my point of view. It is not a new thing. The late Senator Nicholls, when he was a member of this House, complained to me about this Act from that point of view. He said that the men appointed their arbitrator, and the employer appointed his. The third arbitrator was appointed by the Minister of Labour. Senator Nicholls said that in the cases in which he was concerned he regarded the arbitrations as a farce, and was not going to have anything more to do with them. I have made some further inquiries about the working of this part of the Act since the matter was before this House I have discused it with one man who has been concerned in quite a number of arbitrations. I asked him if there was any difficulty or any complaint with regard to the appointment of the third arbitrator. I did not ask him for permission to use his name, and shall not do so. He told me that he had great complaint, and that for anyone to say that there was no complaint against the Minister of Labour appointing an umpire was entirely a mistake.

We have had experience in the Province from which I come in the appointment of arbitrators under our Arbitration Act. The appointment is made by a judge, and it works very satisfactorily.

If you look at the thing on its merits apart from what anyone says, you can see at a glance that a Board of Arbitration should be something in the nature of a court. You have two men who certainly will be biased—the one that is appointed by the men and the one that is appointed by the employer. It is therefore of importance that the umpire should be chosen by someone who is not subject to political influence and who will not be pulled by anyone. I would think that the Minister of Labour would be very glad to get clear of the duty of appointing these men and would prefer to leave it to the Chief Justice of the Province. As a matter of fact, I do not think it is a fair criticism of the Chief Justices to say that they are not qualified to choose these arbitrators. I do not know anyone who is better qualified to do it, and for this reason. The Chief Justice of a Province knows practically the whole Bar; he has a pretty good knowledge of the business men of the country—the men who are before him. He has therefore a knowledge of the men who are chosen by business men to act as arbitrators, and I should think that it was very doubtful whether any other man in the Province would be as well qualified to choose an umpire. I attach enormous importance to that point, and would be very sorry to see this House beaten in the position it has taken in that regard. For the life of me, I cannot see why the Minister of Labour or Labour itself should complain about the Chief Justice of the Province selecting the third arbitrator. It ought to be just as good for them as for the others, and I hope this House will adhere to the position that it has taken.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, may I make a suggestion which I hope will be helpful towards an amicable solution of this problem? I crave the indulgence of the House for a few moments to add something to what was said before the six o'clock adjournment was taken.

Two amendments have been made to this Act by the Senate during the past few weeks. One is an amendment to section 57 providing, briefly, that an employer may make a change in conditions or rates of pay even before a Board has dealt with the case, but not until the party seeking the change has made application for a Board.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That is going part of the way towards complying with the request of the Department in submitting their amendment to the other House. It grants, not all that was asked, but a part, and in my opinion it substantially helps the situation, though still leaving a discrimination against labour. I think this House should insist upon the amendment of the honourable member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) being accepted by the other House, unless this House is prepared to accept the Bill as it came from the Commons. If honourable members do not feel inclined to accept it in that form, I think we should at least insist upon the amendment to section 57 as passed here.

Then, in order that the House of Commons may feel that the Senate is trying to meet the situation fairly, and is not arbitrary in the matter, I would further recommend that the amendment to section 8, which originated in this House be not insisted upon. It would never have become the subject of consideration or discussion had not the Bill come from the Commons for consideration of the amendment proposed by the Department. I think we would be well advised not to insist upon our amendment to section 8. By not insisting upon it we shall probably be able to effect an amicable adjustment of the question between the two Houses. If we insist upon all our amendments, after the Commons have determined otherwise, I fear that we may reach a deadlock that will nullify all that it is desired to achieve in the amendment originally proposed.

To that end I would move—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I moved that we do not insist upon our amendment.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Then I would move in amendment, that this House do insist upon its amendment to section 57, but do not insist upon its amendment to section 8.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Will the honourable leader repeat what he has just said as to his motion? I was not here when he moved it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The message from the Commons informed this Chamber that they did not concur in our amendments. It is now for us to say whether or not we shall insist upon them. If we do, there will be only one door left open: we may hold a conference. I have moved that the Senate do not insist on its amendments, that is, all the amendments that have not been concurred in. Now my honourable friend from Welland (Hon. Mr. Robertson) moves that we do insist on one amendment—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The amendment to section 57.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —but that we do not insist on the amendment to section 8.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would suggest to my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Robertson) that he should not put the amendment in that form, because it would require an affirmative vote and a negative vote at the same time; that is, that we do insist upon one amendment and do not insist upon the other. Would it not be better to move that we insist upon the first amendment, and when that question is disposed of, move that we do not insist upon the second amendment.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Otherwise you have a double question.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. You have a very awkward situation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In order to facilitate the procedure I will, with the leave of the House, withdraw my motion.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand was accordingly withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My motion, then, is that the Senate do insist upon its amendment to section 57, by adding section 57A. The purport of that amendment is that when a dispute occurs as to a proposed change, the party seeking or desiring the change must make application for the establishment of a Board. That is all it means. It simply places a definite interpretation upon what has already been the law. My honourable friend from De Salaberry (Mr. Béique), in moving the amendment, I thought, was trying to meet the situation fairly and overcome what is obviously a misinterpretation and misapplication of the Act.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I move that the Senate do not insist upon its amendment to section 8 of the Bill.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is with reference to the appointment of the Chief Justice.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen for my part, while I voted for the amendment, I do not attach a great deal of importance to it, and in any event we should not risk the other amendment to the Bill for the sake of carrying this one. I would agree with the suggestion which has been made by the honourable the ex-Minister of Labour that we give way on this amendment. We may have at next Session an opportunity to amend the Bill further if we so desire. For my part, I am disposed to give way to the House of Commons to that extent.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think, honourable gentlemen, we ought to insist on that amendment. It is a matter of justice pure and simple. Nowhere at any time, under any circumstances, should a third arbitrator be appointed by one who is more or less interested in the matter in dispute. The Minister of Labour cannot and will not be indifferent in a matter of this sort. I think it is only right and fair that the appointment of the third arbitrator should be by a disinterested person, and it seems to me that no injustice can be done to anyone by placing the appointment of the third arbitrator in the hands of the Chief Justice of a Province or the Chief Justice of Canada. I cannot understand why the Minister of Labour should object to that.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: He should be glad of it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It seems to me he ought to be quite willing to share the responsibility in the award to be made, by having the appointment made outside of the Department and in the way we have decided on, namely, by a judge. I do not at all agree with my honourable friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Béique). I think we ought to insist upon that amendment as well as the other. To my mind it is really more important than the other.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I represent a minority view in this matter; but I intend supporting the motion of the honourable the ex-Minister of Labour. So far as my experience goes, I have often observed the appointments of chairmen in the past ten years, and I have felt that the person selected was one would carry weight with both employers and employees. The appointment was generally a very fortunate one. It was in most cases, up to 1921, I daresay, a judge who was selected. Whether the investigation was held in Nova Scotia, where I had some interests, or in the Province in Quebec or in Ontario, the choice was generally one that commended itself to public opinion.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Can my honourable friend tell me what objection there could be to the selection being made by a judge?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Honourable gentlemen, I think it would be quite as well to give labour three representatives as to give them two. Why should the dispute be settled by two of their representatives? You might as well appoint all three members of the Board.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Not having spoken to this motion yet, I may be permitted to say a few words. I would like to clarify if I can the difficulty that arises in the mind of the honourable the senior member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) as to why a Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or the Chief Justice of Province, cannot appoint a chairman of a board as intelligently or as well as the Minister responsible for the administration of the law.

Perhaps I can best indicate the reason by an illustration. The Deputy Minister of Labour is Registrar of Boards of Conciliation and Investigation under this Act. When an application is received from an employer, or from a union of employees, for the establishment of a board, the party making the application submits at the same time the name of a person who is willing to act as its representative. The Department then advises the other party to the dispute of the fact that an application for a Board has been received, and asks them to send their representative, or to make a statement in reply if they object to the Board being established. Granting that the application is received from the employees, then the employer sends in his reply within a period of five days, naming some person to represent him in the investigation. Up to that point the Minister has had nothing to do with the case; the Registrar has handled it as a matter of routine. After the two representatives on the Board, nominated by the respective parties, have been appointed, they are notified by the Department of their appointment, and under the law they have a period of seven days within which to agree upon a third member of the Board. If they fail to agree within that time, or such further time as the Minister may deem proper to grant, for cause shown, then the Minister appoints the chairman.

It happens that the two members of the Board, in their endeavour to agree upon a third man, propose several names. I have known of instances in which a dozen different names had been suggested by one member or the other. Finally a name is suggested upon which both agree. In some cases, however—in probably 40 per cent of the whole—the Board members are unable to agree upon a chairman, and the Minister is notified of that fact. He must then of necessity select the chairman.

If the appointment of the chairman rests in the hands of a judge of the Supreme Court of the Province of New Brunswick, for instance, or in the hands of the Chief Justice of Canada, he has absolutely no knowledge of what has transpired and may appoint some person who has already been rejected by one or other of the parties. Thus, as was stated by the Minister of Labour yesterday in the other House, time is lost and endless confusion ensues because the Chief Justice is usually ignorant of the facts of the case, having had no connection with it and knowing nothing of what has already transpired.

As to the other point, that the Minister should be glad to be relieved of the responsibility, I am sure the present Minister's view must be to the exact contrary of that; and why? The Government first, and the Department of Labour, are held primarily responsible by the people of Canada for the proper, successful, and efficient administration of that law. The Minister knows that if he appoints as chairman of a Board some gentleman who is not acceptable, or who may be objectionable to the one party or the other, the operation of the Act cannot be successful, and there will be grievous complaint from the party that feels injured because of the unfair selection. In the desire which is always uppermost in the Minister's mind to make the administration and operation of the Act successful and advantageous, in avoiding or settling industrial disputes in Canada, he is constantly and deeply interested in the personnel of the Board; and if the responsibility rests upon him to select the third arbitrator, he realizes the responsibility that lies behind that appointment, and acts with caution instead of carelessness, as some honourable gentlemen seem to think might be done.

For 17 years the Act has stood as it is, and had we not removed judges from the field of usefulness as chairmen, this question would probably never have arisen. My own thought is that judges should be used as chairmen of Boards. But that is not the fault of the Department or of the Minister, and it seems to me that the situation will not be improved one iota by placing the appointment of chairmen in the hands of the Chief Justice, and still debarring him from using judges as chairmen of Boards. On the other hand, it will probably provoke unnecessary and undeserved comment and criticism on the part of the many thousands of workmen in Canada, who feel that there must be in the minds of gentlemen behind this amendment and its supporters some idea that the changed conditions will work to their advantage. I do not think that that is the case. A number of honourable gentlemen in this House who are large employers of labour have strongly supported this amendment. I think they did so believing that it would cause the Act to be impartially administered by a chairman selected by an impartial person. But that will not be the view entertained by those who are affected by the administration and operation of this Act. They will feel that there is some motive behind what has been done. Certainly no one can doubt that such will be their feeling, because honourable gentlemen in this House have held the view that because the Minister of Labour happens to be a man who has been associated with and worked for the labour unions for a number of years, he must of necessity be biased in his selections. If intellectual and educated business and professional men in this House hold that view as respects the Minister of Labour, surely we cannot for a moment blame a million workmen in this country, who are far away from the scene of discussion, for believing that there is some motive behind the amendment that has been introduced into this House.

Therefore, for the sake of maintaining and if possible still further promoting industrial business in Canada, I hope that the House will listen, if not to my appeal, to that of the honourable member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), who is a director of companies that employ 60,000 men in this country, and who knows the necessity of attempting to maintain industrial peace.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: What fees are paid to the arbitrator?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I forget the section of the Act which provides the fee of $20 a day for each arbitrator, plus necessary expenses.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I know it is quite small, and while I am inclined to favour the appointment of a judge, the question has arisen in my mind whether or not the Chief Justice would be able to select anybody willing to accept a fee so small as that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would like to put a question to my honourable friend from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross), because he has been twice instrumental in amending the Judges' Act, and I have not the Act under my hand. Did we not find recently, when discussing this Bill, that under that Act henceforth no judge can sit on a Commission without the consent of the Governor in Council? If that is so, and if the Chief Justice of any Province realizes that the best arbitrator would be a judge, as we all believe, and he appoints that judge, is not that appointment subject to the review of the Governor in Council, who will have to give authority to that judge to act? Are we not, therefore, coming back again to the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend to my left says no; but the judge will be debarred from acting if the Governor in Council does not allow him.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: You are making your appointment doubly good by having the Chief Justice and then the Governor General.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But why not go direct to the Governor in Council?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: The other is very good.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not think the argument of my honourable friend the ex-Minister of Labour is exactly right. It strikes me that when Labour appoints one of the arbitrators, and the employers appoint the second, any judge or any good man that the Chief Justice of a Province or the Dominion might select would be in a splendid position to give justice and fair play all round, even if he was not particularly au fait on the question of a coal strike or a strike in any other industry.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Why not make it the Governor in Council?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No, it is better the way it is.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That might be better, but I think that what is proposed is very good. And here is the other side of the question as advocated by my honourable friend, the ex-Minister of Labour. I remember that his proposition the other day was that a judge should be appointed, and that he had to get extra pay if he acted as arbitrator in a strike dispute. At present a judge can be appointed as an arbitrator, but he does not get extra pay.

Now, here is the way it might easily work out. Take the case of a judge who is very anxious to earn something more than his salary. We have known of judges trying to get appointments on commissions where they would get extra pay, and if a judge were known to be anxious for extra pay, and the Minister of Labour had the right to appoint such a judge, the man appointed by the labour men could refuse any third man that the two of them might select, and then the Minister of Labour might have a judge in view who was anxious to serve on these Boards; and he could be called as chairman if his judgments were satisfactory to the Minister of Labour and the Labour party generally. So that by this plan the Labour side would be solid with two arbitrators, and, as my honourable friend Senator Mitchell stated a little while ago, you might as well let them appoint the three.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: May I be permitted to add two or three words? I wish to say that the House should weigh the reasons which have been given by the honourable member from Welland (Hon. Mr. Robertson), which are these: that the Minister acts as a conciliator between the parties, and therefore, when the time comes to appoint the third arbitrator, he is the best man prepared to do so. Then, we cannot forget that not only is the Government responsible for the good working of this law, but the Government and the Minister of Labour are responsible for good order in the country and for peace between capital and labour.

The law has worked well thus far, and we should hesitate on insisting that it be changed. For my part I supported the amendment because I was under the impression that the Minister of Labour would be glad to be relieved of the responsibility of making appointments.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He ought to be, too.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But, on the other hand, I felt that it would not change the practice—that the judge would consult the Minister of Labour before making the appointment. If I were a judge I would do so, because the Minister is the party mainly responsible for the good working of the Act, and no judge would act discreetly when called upon to appoint the third arbitrator if he did not consult with the Minister of Labour. So that I do not think it would make much difference in practice. I do not say that the judge should absolutely follow the suggestion that the Minister of Labour would make; but he would be influenced in accepting any well qualified person suggested as umpire by the Minister. In practice I do not think it will make any change, and for my part I would hesitate in giving way on that point.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman if he would advise the judge to consult the employer as well as the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I both spoke and voted on this matter when it was up before, and, unlike the honourable member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), I have not changed my mind. He seems to be able to make an argument of about equal strength on both sides of the question. I have not that facility of mind. When I make up my mind I make it up for good; I do not make it up until I find that the reasons for doing so are the best reasons. Now, the Minister of Labour is drawn from the ranks of labour. That precedent has been established.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Generally a union man.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And it is probable that precedent will not be changed, because when labour makes any advance it reaches out for more all the time. Therefore I take it that in the future of this country we will always have a Labour Minister drawn from the ranks of labour, a member of the labour unions; and, as several honourable gentlemen have pointed out, there are two men appointed through the influence of labour, and, as the honourable member from Wellington (Hon. Mr. Mitchell, says, you might as well have the three, because the man appointed is the umpire.

Now, who is so well qualified to make an appointment of that kind as a Chief Justice, who has absolutely no interest whatever in the matter? He would not appoint a judge, because the law sets its face against the appointment of judges. Surely there are other men who could be appointed to positions of that kind, who would be quite well qualified to hold the position of umpire as well as any judge—men of the very best business experience, qualified better than any judge from every other except the legal standpoint. As far as I am concerned I hope this House will not eat its words, or go back on itself, but will maintain the amendment as it is now.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Robertson was negatived on the following division:

CONTENTS

The Honourable Messieurs:

Béique,	Gordon,
Bennett,	Laird,
Calder,	Lavergne,
Chapais,	Martin,
Dandurand,	McCall,
Daniel,	McMeans,
Donnelly,	Michener,
Farrell,	Montplaisir,
Foster (Sir George),	Murphy,
Poirier,	Schaffner,
Robertson,	Tanner,
Roche,	Turgeon,
Ross (Moose Jaw),	Watson—26.

NON-CONTENTS

The Honourable Messieurs:

Barnard,	McLennan,
Belcourt,	Mitchell,
Black,	Mulholland,
Blain,	Prowse,
Blondin,	Reid,
Bradbury,	Ross (Middleton),
Casgrain,	Sharpe,
Cloran,	Smith,
Crowe,	Taylor,
Foster,	Tessier,
Fowler,	Thibaudeau,
Green,	Todd,
Harmer,	Turriff,
Kemp (Sir Edward),	Webster (Brockville),
Lougheed (Sir James),	Webster (Stadacona),
Macdonell,	White (Pembroke)—32.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Dandurand it was ordered, that Hon. Messieurs Belcourt, Foster, Fowler, and Lougheed (Sir James), be appointed a Committee to draw up the reasons for insisting upon the amendments made by the Senate to Bill 84, an Act to amend The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, and to report to the Senate at the next sitting.

MANILA FIBRE BOUNTIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 188, an Act to repeal the Acts respecting Bounties on Manufactures from Manila Fibre in Canada.

He said: A bounty equal to the amount paid as export duty in the Philippine Islands on manila fibre was authorized by Chapter 5 of the statutes of 1907, the bounty not to exceed seven-eighths of a cent per pound. An Act to raise revenue for the Philippine Islands, approved 5th August, 1909, was repealed October 3, 1913, by the United States Tariff Act. No bounty has been paid on manila fibre exported from the Philippine Islands after October 3, 1913.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no duty on it, you say?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is to repeal the Act respecting bounties on the manufacture of manila fibre in Canada.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Does that mean there is no further bounty?

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to ask what was the object of giving a bounty on manila fibre from the Philippine Islands. I do not know of any other place where fibre of that kind is grown. I did not know that anywhere in Canada a similar fibre could be grown, because unlike the climate of this country, the climate of the Philippine Islands is very hot. I do not understand why a bounty was given.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I cannot give the history of that legislation, but there has been no bounty paid since 1913.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I do not suppose that we need go into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

COPPER BOUNTIES BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING POSTPONED

On the Order:

Second reading of Bill 189, an Act respecting the payment of Bounties on Copper Bars or Rods.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have before me Bill 189, but I have no explanation to make to the House beyond what is contained in the Bill itself. The purpose is to encourage the industry.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Is that all the information we are to get? We have all that in the Bill itself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Instead of moving the second reading, since I have no memorandum explaining the reasons for these bounties, I will move that the order be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Could we not proceed with it to-night? I think the Bill is clear.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the present law? Is any bounty being paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is new legislation on copper production in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: Is this an entirely new proposition?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is a new proposition.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: It gives a bounty out of the revenue of Canada of $30 a ton on copper bars and rods for the first year. Consequently on the large consumers and users of copper rods in Canada, such as telephone or telegraph companies, it will likely impose an additional tax, and any copper that is exported from Canada will go out at the cost less the bounty. If this tax is imposed on consumers in Canada, there should be some direct benefit to offset it, in the way of increased employment, increased wages, and the establishment of new industries. I think we should have a further explanation before it is passed.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Here is an expenditure which will amount to at least $1,000,000 in five years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, that is a maximum.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, that is the maximum amount. If it accomplishes its purpose, that maximum amount will be paid; therefore you have to contemplate that as a possibility. And we have not a scrap of information.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My motion is to discharge the order.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think we must out of respect for ourselves, have some information.

The motion was agreed to.

DOMINION LANDS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 222, an Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is a Bill that amends a number of sections of the Dominion Lands Act. I will give explanations of each clause in Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—further inquiry as to value of improvements prior to entry:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

1. Subsection five of section eleven of The Dominion Lands Act, chapter twenty of the statutes of 1908, as enacted by chapter nineteen of the statutes of 1918, is amended by adding the following paragraph thereto:

Subsection five of section eleven refers to homestead entries. I will read the marginal notes. It deals with the "declarations as to improvements prior to entry, and valuation by homestead inspector; adjustment of payments; liability of applicant for seed grain, fodder and other relief indebtedness."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: From what section is the honourable gentleman reading?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am referring to the section in the present Act.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is chapter 19 of the statutes of 1918.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: "Former entrant not relieved from liability." Now there is to be added this new clause:

(e) In any case where doubt arises as to the correctness of the valuation made by a Homestead Inspector under the provisions of this subsection, the Minister may order such further enquiry as he may deem advisable for the purpose of fixing the actual value of the improvements; and the actual value so ascertained shall be the amount to be collected and paid by the person obtaining the land in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—transfer of holders of letters patent in pre-emption and purchase homestead area to another homestead, by Provincial certificate:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Has my honourable friend an explanation of that section?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Two orders in Council have been passed for the purpose of facilitating the removal of settlers in the southern portions of Saskatchewan and Alberta, who have suffered repeated crop failures, to other districts where the prospects for an adequate return for their labour seem more assured. These Orders cover all classes of settlers except those for whom a fresh homestead entry will have to be provided in order to give them a new home. This section of the Bill is designed to meet those particular cases. The benefits of this section are restricted to settlers at present located in that part of the old pre-emption tract south of the south boundary of Township 31. While it is not admitted that it is impossible to farm in those southern districts from which removal is being facilitated, it is pretty generally acknowledged that a thinning out of settlement would have a beneficial effect by enabling those who remain to increase their holdings to an extent where they could carry on profitably.

It is therefore proposed to amend the Act so that an actual settler in the southern portions of Saskatchewan and Alberta, who has exhausted his homestead right, may be granted a quarter section of land elsewhere, to be earned under the same settlement conditions as an ordinary homestead.

In every case of this kind, to obtain the benefits of this section, the settler must secure the approval of the Province and divest himself of title to his present holdings.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to take exception to the principle which has been introduced into this section. I think the idea which is embodied within it could be substantially carried out without sacrificing a principle which should be in every way conserved.

This Government, or, to be more explicit, the Department of the Interior, should not be permitted to delegate its power or shift its responsibility to a Provincial Government in regard to a matter of this character. The object in view could easily be effected through this Government consulting with the Provincial Government and carrying out its recommendations. It is not necessary to provide, as we are called upon to do in this Bill, for the practical abdication to the Provincial Government of duties which should be discharged by a Department of the Dominion Government. In lines 26 to 32 the section states:

—upon submitting proof of his bona fides as a settler in the form of a certificate from the Government of the Province setting forth that the said applicant conscientiously endeavoured to farm his land but failed because of circumstances not favourable to successful agriculture.

That practically places the whole subject in the hands of the Provincial Government. I do not look upon that as sound legislation. The Department of the Interior can just as readily carry out the object in view by taking up the subject with the Provincial Government and conducting its inquiries through that channel, and yet assuming the responsibility, as they should before discharging the duties which have been vested in them by the Dominion Lands Act. I hope my honourable friend will see his way to change this, because it is a matter of principle and we ought not to establish a precedent of the character proposed.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend, I think, is not quite right. I do not think that the Dominion Department abdicates completely its authority. The provision is that the Department may allow the man who has exhausted his chances of farming in this area the right to make an entry for another homestead.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the discretion of the Minister.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: In the discretion of the Minister; and one of the conditions on which that permission is granted is that he shall submit a certificate from the Provincial authorities. Even when he has submitted that, the Department is not bound to grant the right. That is only one of the necessary conditions preliminary to the grant. So it is not, as my honourable friend thinks, a complete abdication by the Department. This is only one of the conditions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am aware of that.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The matter is still in the discretion of the Minister, and the responsibilities still rest with the Department of the Interior.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But may I draw attention to this point? The machinery for the ascertainment of the fact as to whether the man has conscientiously endeavoured to farm his land or not is peculiarly in the hands of the Department of the Interior. They can ascertain these facts with greater facility and accuracy than the Province. The Province does not assume to exercise the supervision, or to possess or seek knowledge as to the facts involved.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They can have better information than the Department here.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They would not have any information, but the Department of the Interior has its agents, its homestead inspectors—in fact, the most complete machinery for determining the facts. The Province will have a general knowledge, say, as to a certain tract of land suffering from aridity or something of that kind; but, as to the particular inquiries which should be made and should be the subject-matter of the certificate referred to in line 29, I say unhesitatingly that the Department of the Interior is in a very much better position than the Provincial Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that the Department has been actuated to submit this legislation by the request of the Provincial authorities themselves, who have already removed settlers other than homesteaders, and who are busying themselves in trying to improve the conditions of those settlers and homesteaders in those localities. The advantage of obtaining a certificate from the Provincial authorities will allow the latter, who are nearer those settlers and homesteaders than the Interior Department—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, because the officials of the Interior Department are scattered all over.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, my honourable friend is from Southern Alberta.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I know that of which I speak.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would not oppose my judgment to my honourable friend's, but I am simply stating the postion the Interior Department is taking, that the Provincial authorities know more of the circumstances of those people, their indebtedness, the reasons why they have failed, and it is part of their policy to remove settlers independently of the homesteaders. So I do not see that the Interior Department should be reproached for drawing upon the knowledge of the provincial authorities. Their interest is in the same line, and it seems to me that this is not an improvident Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not taking exception to that; I make no charge of improvidence; I think it is very desirable that this should be done. My only objection is to the methed by which it is done. I do not think they should be obligated to the Provincial authority; the duties should be clearly carried out by the Federal authorities. I do think there should be the most cordial cooperation between both, and I am sure that without any abandonment of the duties which appertain to the Department of the Interior the object could be attained quite well.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is not that what this means, after all—the discretion and responsibility remains in the Interior Department? The object of this, I imagine, is to have a double source of information—that which is in possession here, and that of the Provincial authorities.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The discretion is a limited discretion. While the Minister has discretion it can be used only on the fulfilment of a condtion, and that condition is that the Provincial Government shall grant a certificate. Unless the applicant has that the discretion of the Minister vanishes, it seems to me.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not think so.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think that introduces a principle which is foreign to all responsible management on the part of the Dominion Department. As to the question of who has the best knowledge, let us see how it works. Say a settler gets a homestead not through the local Government or local officials, but through Dominion officials The officers of the Department, the Homestead Inspectors who are scattered all through there, have the history of each one of those from the beginning up to the present. They follow them. It is not the office of the Provincial Government to follow them. The Homestead Inspectors have to see, in the first place, that the conditions of homesteading are carried out. To do that they have to keep in touch with the settler, in touch with his improvements, and these are all matters of record. If there is anything in the way of loans or liens it is the Dominion officers who carry those out, and it is in the Dominion records where one finds the record of all those transactions. In fact, the settler begins with the Dominion Government officers, continues with them, and ends with them. Now, why in the world you should introduce another authority, and say to those men, "You have got to go to another Province and get a certificate, and unless you get that you cannot make the application," and the discretion of the Minister can only be used, to my mind, when that certificate is got. But why in the name of good administration do we mix up Province and Dominion in reference to a matter which is absolutely under the control of the Dominion Department. If there is any information that they want in the Dominion Department which they can get from the Provincial officer or Provincial record or Government, the best of co-operation should exist between those two towards the gaining of that information; but do not make it an absolute condition that the interference and consent of the Provincial Government are necessary before this transfer can be made. It does seem to me that you are unnecessarily mixing up an absolute division of responsibility, and I do not know that that is good administration.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I think that any person who is familiar with the situation as it exists in Southern Alberta, and the reasons why the Provincial Government is endeavouring to move some settlers from Southern to Northern Alberta, where there is more moisture, will know that it is on account of the crop failures for years. They have come to the conclusion at last that there is a portion of Southern Alberta that never should have been opened for homesteading at all. Many people were induced to go in there and locate. I quite appreciate that the Federal Government would not wish to assist in moving people from one portion of that Province to the other without the consent of the municipalities in which they reside, because I venture to say that practically every person who is moved from Southern Alberta to Northern Alberta owes the municipality or the Provincial Government for aid which he has received, and also is liable for school tax, and one thing or another. It is really the municipalities who are interested in the liabilities of those persons whom it is proposed to remove, and which they will not be able to pay. The Provincial Government, in turn, is liable for the taxes of the municipalities, and therefore it should be consulted. Honourable gentlemen can quite appreciate that if the Federal Government undertook to assist people to leave one municipality in Southern Alberta to live in another in Northern Alberta there would be a hardship on the people who are left, and it would be strongly objected to by the municipality, and probably by the Province, because they would have to stand the loss. I think that is the reason why the Provincial Government is really active in trying to move settlers from Southern to Northern Alberta. It has been quite a live issue for a number of years there, and I think quite a number of people have moved from Southern Alberta to Northern Alberta. That is the explanation why the local Government should be consulted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We can agree on that, but the question is how it is to be done. May I point out this anomaly. It is that the Provincial Government will say to the Dominion Government: "Here are 150 settlers, or 500 settlers, as the case may be; you must provide lands for them."

Hon. Mr DANDURAND: Oh, no; if my honourable friend will read the proviso—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is what it means.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no; the only thing that is asked of the Provincial Government is that the settler, the homesteader, will have to submit proof of his bona fides as a settler in the form of a certificate from the Government of the Province, setting forth:

> That the said applicant conscientiously endeavoured to farm his land, but failed because of circumstances not favourable to successful agriculture.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then suppose that the Provincial Government refuses to provide homesteaders with a second homestead upon presentation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I am informed that the Interior Department is today lending its inspectors and other officers to the Provincial authorities to carry on, jointly with the officers of the Provincial Government, an inquiry over all that area. The Provincial authorities have to solve the problem of the settlement of the school and municipal debentures, and to see that they are protected. I suppose they would do this by maintaining a certain number of settlers throughout that district. If there are debentures issued, I would take for granted that the authorities would try to see that a certain part of the population remains there—those better situated and those who had more ability to stand the strain during the succeeding years of bad crops. This is a matter which should be under the supervision of the Province, as the municipal institutions are the creation of the Provincial authorities. Under these circumstances the Minister of the Interior has men of intelligence in his Department to obtain the close co-operation of the Province in solving those problems. Now, this Act provides that there is a certain part of the responsibility in having the Province give a certificate of the honesty of the settlers' efforts.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I would just ask my honourable friend to read that over:

> Be granted the right to make entry for another homestead—subject to the provisions of this Act—
>
> When?—
>
> Upon submitting proof of his bona fides as a settler . . . . that the said applicant conscientiously endeavoured to farm his land but failed because of circumstances not favourable to successful agriculture.

Leaving out the words that I left out, what bar is there to the Dominion Government getting that very same information in any way that it pleases? Only if you leave that out you do not divide the responsibility, and put it into the hands of an official of the Provincial Government to refuse a man, and give an excuse to the Dominion Department to say that the responsibility rests on the local Government because it refused to give the certificate.

With all that has been said about the co-operation we will all agree; but suppose you leave out the words that I left out, does it militate one iota against the Department at Ottawa getting information through any source that it pleases, that is available, and that is best adapted? I do think that it is bad legislation, and contributes to bad administration, to put in a proviso like that, and institute a bar which may cause a great deal of trouble as to the action of the Department, because it did not get, in a particular case, the certificate from the Provincial Government.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: The question we are discussing is that a settler wishes to have a transfer, and applies to the Federal Government. All they ask of the Provincial Government is a certificate that the applicant for transfer has made a conscientious effort to farm successfully. It seems to me that is all there is in that. The Provincial Government has nothing to do with making the application, or with granting the request; they simply give the certificate, I suppose because they are on the ground and know what effort the man has made. But it seems to me that this is going to lead to considerable dissatisfaction. I am fairly well acquainted with farming conditions in the three Western Provinces; I doubt if there are many in this House more familiar; and I know there are many places in all three provinces—and I will confine my reference to Alberta—where men are farming or attempting to farm, and for some years they have been on land that is entirely inadequate, and unfitted for farming at all. If that be so as to Northern Alberta, why should this Act be restricted to Southern Alberta? I believe it is going to lead to dissatisfaction in any case.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The answer is a general one, which will not likely bring much information to my honourable friend: it is that Northern Alberta has a larger proportion of moisture and has not suffered as Southern Alberta has. There may be bad land in Northern Alberta; there is bad land in every province that I know, closer to me, but there is a larger area in Southern Alberta which my honourable friend knows has had no crops for 5 or 6 years.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Are they going to transfer a large number of settlers from Southern Alberta? Has there been a large number of requests?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Interior Department will transfer as few as possible, and it is in order not to be inundated with requests under this Act that the Department has organized a buffer in the form of the provincial authority, who are interested, because of the obligations undertaken by the district, to keep in those regions as large a proportion as possible of settlers.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I suppose the transfer is confined to the province of Alberta, is it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: They can go from Alberta to Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; they can go from Alberta South to Alberta North, or from the south of Saskatchewan upwards towards the north.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: And Manitoba is not included? That is a tremendously good recommendation for Manitoba. Is there very much vacant land either in Saskatchewan or Alberta within a reasonable distance of a railway that is suitable? And is there vacant land there which can be homesteaded to any great extent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My information is that there is some, but to what extent farms will be found within a certain area of near approach to a railway I could not answer.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I think the general impression is that the land is pretty well taken up.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have often seen the declaration that it is difficult to find land near a railway that has not passed into private hands.

Sections 2 and 3 were agreed to.

On section 4—issue of patent if applicant becomes insane:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

When a settler becomes insane before completing the settlement duties his Estate must build a house and complete the cultivation. Section 20 of the Act waives further residence duties and therefore it is proposed to do away with the necessity of building a house for the same reason as in the preceding section.

Section 4 was agreed to.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—terms of payment for school lands:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What change is made in that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Section 41 of the Act calls for the completion of payments in the case of school lands sales within ten years. At the request of the Provincial Governments concerned, a longer term is now being provided for the payment of the purchase price, the instalments being spread over a period of twenty years instead of ten years as at present.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The same interest?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: 6 per cent.

Section 6 was agreed to.

On section 7—permits to cut timber on Dominion Lands:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Section 59 of the Act gives authority for regulations for the issue of permits to cut timber. It is desired to provide authority for regulations granting portable saw mill berths in the Peace River Block in the Province of British Columba. The Act as it now stands does not contain any provision for a regulation of this kind.

The second change provided by Section 7 of the Bill is intended to enable the Department to frame regulations for the cutting of other classes of timber on a cord-wood berth, besides those classes now mentioned in the Act (cordwood, pulpwood, etc.), the intention being to compel the party cutting timber to take all the merchantable timber on the berth as he goes along, otherwise the operations would be wasteful.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: I notice that the permits are limited to one square mile. The Bill says:

Provided that no person shall be granted more than one permit at a time.

I would like some explanation as to the meaning of that. I have heard of hard drinkers who justified their conduct by saying that they took only one drink at a time. Will one permit be granted one day and another the next, or will the granting of the second permit depend upon the completion of work under the first.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that he has to finish his work under the first permit before obtaining another one.

Section 7 was agreed to.

Sections 8 to 11, both inclusive, were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF AUDIT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 243, an Act to constitute a Board of Audit.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I do not kuow that I need explain this Bill. It is only necessary to read it to see its purport. I would suggest that we take the second reading and go into Committee on the Bill.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Stated generally, what does the Board do?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Board shall inquire into and report upon the present system of audit as respects the public accounts of the various Departments of the Dominion Government, and shall make such recommendations as may be deemed useful for the more effective control of the public revenue and expenditure. The Board shall inquire into the system of accounting employed by the Canadian National Railways Company and subsidiaries thereof, and shall make such recommendations with respect thereto as may be deemed necessary in the public interest. The Board may inquire into financial affairs of any commission or other public body, the operations of which are carried on at the public expense, and may make recommendations which in their opinion will assist in the control of the expenditure. The Minister of Finance may extend the powers of the Board to include inquiry into any other undertaking or service which may be deemed to be in the public interest. I would point out that the words "out of any available appropriation" in section 13 should be struck out. The section will then read:

The Board may, with the consent of the Minister of Finance, engage from time to time such skilled assistants as may be required to facilitate the work of the Board, and such assistants may be paid such compensation as the Treasury Board may allow.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Instead of a salary?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have a little note on this which says:

Provision for payment—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Does my honourable friend intend to go into Committee on this Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps, if there is no objection—

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think it is an excellent idea. On looking through the Bill I do not see in it any objectionable features. I think we might as well go on with it and put it through.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The explanation I have from Mr. Viets is as follows:

Please note that the words "out of any available appropriation" in lines four and five of section 13 should be struck out. Provision for payment of necessary expenditure under the Act is contained in section 17. Section 17 was added after the rest of the Bill had been printed and through oversight the words in section 13 referred to were left in. By reading sections 13 and 17 together the reason for striking out the words in 13 is apparent.

Hon. Mr TURRIFF: It strikes me that this is a very far-reaching and most important Bill. I notice that the Auditor General is to be the Chairman of the Board and the Deputy Minister of Finance the Vice Chairman. I notice also that the other two members of the Board are to be public accountants who shall not be paid a sum exceeding $3,000 a year.

The Bill in its present shape practically provides that the members of that Board shall be members of the Civil Service. There is the Auditor General who gets $10,000 a year and the Deputy Minister who gets $10,000 a year, and the other two men whose salaries are not to exceed $3,000 a year. These men are going to audit the Government Railway accounts, which run into hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, and I claim that you cannot expect to get men capable of dealing with that subject for $3,000 a year, or that if you get men who are not accustomed to earning more than $3,000 a year they will be absolutely dominated by the other men who are getting $10,000 a year, and that you might as well have nobody but the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister of Finance. It seems to me that the matter is much too important to be put into such hands.

Hon. Mr. REID: Do I understand that the salary is limited to $3,000, or would it work this way? Suppose you had a first class man in the Finance Department or in any other Department of the Government—and there are some very capable men in the Service—

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. REID: Suppose such men were getting $3,000 a year or something of that kind. I do not think this Bill would prevent the Treasury Board from appointing those men and paying them $3,000 in addition, thus giving them $6,000.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Here is what section 7 says:

Each of such two members shall devote to the public service such portion of his time as may be found reasonably necessary for the purpose of discharging the duties of his office, and shall be paid such sum for his services as the Treasury Board shall allow, but not exceeding the sum of $3,000 in any year.

Hon. Mr. REID: That does not say that they shall be from outside the Department.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Take section 6:

There shall be two other members of the Board, who shall be public accountants, members in good standing of an institute or organization of accountants incorporated under the authority of the Legislature of a Province of Canada.

Hon. Mr. REID: But there are men in the Service who are members of an organization of accountants.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: If it is proposed to have members of the Civil Service act as members of this Board, there is no necessity for the Bill at all.

Hon. Mr. REID: I agree with the honourable gentleman in that, and I also agree with him that to ask men from outside to come here for $3,000 a year and do this work and accept the attendant responsibility would be absurd. No such man would come here and accept a position at $3,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw attention to the fact that clause 7 does not convey the idea that these two accountants are to give their full time. I have just now looked into the Debates of the House of Commons to see what explanations were given, but I find none, either on the resolution or on the Bill explaining the working of the Bill or the intentions of the Minister of Finance. I surmise that these two accountants will be asked to make audits of certain institutions while carrying on their own work. They may give some weeks or some months to an audit—it may be a particular branch or a harbour commission—and they will receive fees; but in any one year those fees must not exceed $3,000. I am convinced that the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister will soon find that they have not at their disposal the kind of men they would like to have; and I am under the impression that it will not be long before the Minister will come asking for a larger grant than $3,000 apiece. Of course, this is simply surmise on my part; but I think it will probably be found that when accountants are asked to leave their ordinary work and to devote weeks and months to examining through our railway system of accounting and such other matters, that a larger sum will be needed.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: So far as that is concerned, I am disappointed entirely when I come to read the clause. To put the Bill through in that way would, to my mind, only be establishing a plaything with a pretence of accomplishing something with a Board which is really not equal to the important work which is to be done. In the first place, you have two men, the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister of Finance, both of whom have very onerous and very constant duties to perform. Are you going to take them away from the performance of their duties and put them upon this very onerous and extensive task of establishing an audit and carrying it into the operations of a Government service spread over such an area and with so large a turnover each year? The best that the Auditor General and Deputy Minister of Finance can give you is advice and some direction, but they cannot give their time to the work—time which is absolutely necessary if the work is going to be made effective at all.

Then, as to the other portion of the Board, if you are simply going to take two clerks out of some of the Departments and add them to those two officials and give them $3,000 a year—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or they may be accountants secured outside the service.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If they are from outside, what kind of accountants will $3,000 give you?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: May I suggest to my right honourable friend that he read clause 13.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I have read that. That gives them the authority to get assistants.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Expert assistants.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But in order to get expert assistants and direct them properly you must have men of parts and genius in auditing. They are to select the kind of assistants that they require, and they must be able afterwards to collate what work these assistants do. I know from my own experience, which is a rather long experience, that there is a tremendously important work remaining to be done in connection with the auditing of the accounts of the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. Mr. REID: Which have been increased by the Canadian National Railways, included in this Bill.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, but which within the last 20 years have never been dealt with on any plan adequate to the necessities of the case. Are you going to engage third-class men as directors of that immense operation, giving them authority to employ expert assistants and subordinates, and entrusting to them the duty of directing the work and of collating and digesting the information gathered and directing it upon the objectives that are sought? You cannot pick up qualified men for $3,000 per annum.

Hon. Mr. REID: Oh, no.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: You might get one man from the service, but to my mind it is indispensible to bring into the service auditors and accountants who are engaged in the wider range of business, with its enterprise, its experience and its efficient, up-to-date methods. You want to bring in something to reinforce the more staid and conservative operations within the Government Service. Men in the business world may be no brighter in intellect, but they have had their attention turned in different directions and have been working on different standards. You want that new element from outside.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend allow me to direct his thought into another channel? I have been examining this Bill. I have no brief or explanatory notes, but I may be able to put another complexion upon it. There may be in the mind of the Minister the simple idea of forming a board of management composed of the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Auditor General and two accountants. These accountants would receive as a fee for attendance at the meetings of the board an amount not exceeding $3,000 a year, and the four men comprising the board would have experience and standing. They would investigate, not the details of accounting or bookkeeping, but the systems of accounting followed by the various institutions spending public money, and for the purpose of such investigation they would, under section 13, employ the very men whom my right honourable friend has described. Section 13 provides:

13. The Board may with the consent of the Minister of Finance, engage from time to time, such skilled assistants as may be required to facilitate the work of the Board, and such assistants may be paid out of any available appropriation such compensation as the Treasury Board may allow.

There is no limit. Skilled accountants may be selected because of special knowledge in the business to be investigated. Some accountants specialize in certain lines, others in other lines. I understand there are a few high-class men who specialize in railway accounting. Such men will be selected to carry on investigations. This is only a surmise, but I think that it is probably a correct one, as to the workings of this board.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I do not know how a Bill could be drafted to suit the right honourable the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) better than the present Bill. As I understand it, the Board of Audit is to be composed of four members, and the sum payable to each is $3,000 per annum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: For the outsiders.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: That is the fee payable to the two outside members, and it is a fairly large one. The directors are to have authority to secure assistants and pay them any remuneration. There is no limit to the salary which may be paid. So it appears to me that this is exactly what my right honourable friend the junior member for Ottawa desires. Perhaps he had not looked at clause 13 before he spoke.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I wonder if we are all clear on the point that this Board is expected to hold office only until the first day of July, 1925. The arrangement is not permanent. As I understand this Bill, the purpose of it is to provide for a review of the various systems of accounting in the Public Service and in the Canadian National Railways.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And in other institutions that are receiving public money.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The aim is to standardize the methods of accounting and improve them if possible. The Auditor General of Canada and the Deputy Minister of Finance, together with two experienced, competent accountants who are ordinarily engaged in commercial accounting, are to be a temporary board until July, 1925. They are to direct an investigation into the systems of accounting in the various Departments of the Public Service.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And make recommendations.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes. I personally think that the idea is a commendable one, except that I would respectfully suggest to the Government that there might be a semblance of interference on the part of the Finance Department and the Auditor General in the affairs of the Canadian National Railways—an interference which, according to all indications, the Government are endeavouring to avoid.

Our railways in Canada have a very up-to-date system of railway accounting. The Canadian Pacific Railway about 15 years ago made an exhaustive inquiry into the question of railway accounting and adopted generally but with some improvements a system that was in vogue on a number of large railway lines in the United States. Since that time the Canadian Pacific Railway have had first-class accountants of their own, and the tables have now been turned; American railroads have during recent years been sending representatives to Canada for new ideas in railroad accounting. The Canadian Northern Railway a number of years ago adopted the system of accounting in use on the Canadian Pacific, and that has gradually become the system on the entire Canadian National Railway system. The Grand Trunk always had a different system, but I think it is being merged into the general Canadian National System now. However, I would respectfully point out to the Government that the system of accounting in vogue in the accountants' offices in the several departments of the Government and in the Auditor General's office itself vary greatly from the accounting systems of our railroads. I would hesitate to recommend the acceptance by the railroad management of the opinion of an accountant in the Public Service as to the best system to adopt for railroad accounting. I think the Government would be well advised to eliminate section 9 and let the railroad accounting alone, because I do not think they will improve it a bit by sending accountants from the Public Service to inquire into it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But that would not likely be done.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That is contemplated.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Public opinion will not be satisfied if you leave out the railways. If there is one thing more than another about which the public is at present nervous and dubious, it is the Canadian National Railways, and if you omit from the investigation the accounting of those railways the public will want to know why. It seems to me that an audit of this kind is probably most necessary and most useful in regard to the railways. If my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Robertson) is right in his estimate of the efficiency of the book-keeping done in connection with the railways, this inquiry will only reveal that fact and the public will be better satisfied. The investigation will serve a useful purpose in restoring to some and confirming in others a feeling of confidence in the way in which the books are kept in our National System of Railways. I would be very sorry indeed to find, if a board of this kind is created, a disposition to exclude the Railways from its operations. As a result of the inquiry, either my honourable friend's estimate will be confirmed, or it will not. If it is not confirmed, then this Board will recommend something which will set matters right.

Hon. Mr. REID: I agree with the honourable member that the clause regarding railway accounting should be left in. I do not consider the intention to be to investigate the Canadian National Railways with the idea of changing their whole system of accounting. My understanding of the reason for this provision is this. At the end of the year we may receive notice that the Canadian National Railways are $40,000,000, $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 behind—or whatever the amount may be—and the Finance Department may want some explanation; they may want to go and see how that deficit is made up. Again, we are voting many millions of dollars for construction every year. Are we going to hand over those sums to the Railways without being allowed to investigate how they are spent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or how the accounts are kept.

Hon. Mr. REID: Or how the accounts are kept. I think we should have some check.

Again, there may be some public statement —I was going to say, some public charge— that money has been spent by the Canadian National Railways in a way which is not in the public interest. Should not the Finance Department have some authority to investigate?

I do not think that that clause is intended to go as far as has been stated; I think the purpose is merely to permit of an examination of the railway accounts if necessary, to see how the accounting is done. I think that if you are going to establish this Board of Audit, its operations should include the railways. But I would go further. I am in favour of this Bill, or a Bill of this kind, because I think that anything that may be done to provide an audit or check for every Government expenditure ought to be done. After merely glancing at the Bill I thought that it did not permit of the employment of men competent for the duties intended

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It does under clause 13.

Hon. Mr. REID:—but from the explanation given regarding section 13 I take it for granted that adequate provision is made. I do not object to the Bill. I shall be glad to see it pass and hope it will work satisfactorily and that the men employed will be qualified for their duties. At all events we can let it pass, and if we find that it is not working right it is for us to say so, and the Government will likely bring in an amendment.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Its operation ceases automatically in two years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I had not the opportunity of making some observations of which I would like to relieve myself and which have been suggested by this Bill. In my judgment it does not go far enough in protecting the public interest. What I very much regret is that instead of this being a Board of Audit it is not a Board of Control. Unfortunately the auditing of accounts is a work which has to do only with expenditure; that is to say, the auditors come in after the expenditures have been made. The great need of Canada to-day is to curtail expenditure. We are being overwhelmed by expenditure, and from Confederation down to the present day I have not been aware of any effective machinery placed in operation by the Government of Canada to control it.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is correct.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am unaware of any large industrial, commercial or financial institution that has not its board of control to supervise minutely all expenditures made, but I challenge my honourable friend to point to any protection which the Government of Canada has in regard to its expenditures. Every man who is at the head of a branch or occupies a position of any authority is a law unto himself in the matter of disbursements. We know that after a man has been in the Public Service for a little time all his sense of thrift, economy and retrenchment becomes atrophied. All he thinks about is expenditure. He reaches out to secure for himself more power, more responsibility, more authority, by means of the expenditure which he makes and the power which it gives. It does not require any great effort to visualize what a competent Board of Control could do by going through the various departments and ramifications of the Government, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and investigating the needless expenditure of millions of dollars which is being incurred to-day. Millions of dollars of expenditure are being made that could be saved to this country. I would commend to my honourable friend his discussing with his Government the necessity of Canada to-day appointing a competent Board of Control that will control, and that will supersede the Government itself so far as controlling expenditure is concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What about the Auditor General who is supposed to watch over the faithful payment of the moneys appropriated by Parliament for certain objects?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely, but that is just where the curse is; he watches over the appropriations, but the curse lies in the appropriations. Look at the present Supply Bills which are being brought down this Session, and about which I hope we will have something to say hereafter. The curse lies in the appropriations that are being made. The Government of the day is no protection to Canada as to expenditure. The Government is expected to make expenditures. The Government is expected to revel in expenditures, and if does not revel in expenditures it is subject to criticism.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And the Auditor General makes his audit after the money is spent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely. The idea of relying on an audit for the purpose of controlling expenditure is like locking the door of the stable after the horse is stolen. No; what Canada to-day needs is one of the strongest and most influential Boards that could be appointed, of the most competent business men, that would have the most absolute authority to supervise all expenditure and to curtail appropriations that have been made. There is no reason, because appropriations are made, why the expenditures should follow the appropriations. Why, when we take into consideration that the House of Commons is made up of 235 members, I think, the paramount duty of those members being to secure expenditures from the Government—all banded together as a legion in importuning and bringing the strongest pressure to bear on the Government that the most reckless expenditures should be made in their constituencies—how in the world can Canada cease from becoming overwhelmed by debt unless we provide machinery to prevent that kind of thing going on?

The Ministers cannot prevent it. The Ministers, if they are going to occupy a popular position in the country, must necessarily bow their necks to the yoke that is placed upon them by the members who want the expenditure. So there is no brake placed upon the expenditure. I suggest to my honourable friend that he should give some thought to that, and I venture to say that if we had a Board of Control in Canada, with ample power to control expenditure, we could save millions and millions annually.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: An example of that is right before our eyes in what has been done in the United States during the last year.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And more so in England, and in France too.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: In England it has been in force for years; but last year, when President Harding came into the Administration, one of the first steps taken by him was to appoint a Board of Control to control appropriations. I am not going into detail with reference to it, but that Board has been functioning and doing its work now for over twelve months. It has failed only once in preventing a Department from overlapping its recommendation. It has cut off appropriations by tens and hundreds of millions of dollars, and in only one case was that overridden by the two Houses; and in the end, during the last financial year in the United States of America, somewhere over $300,000,000 was saved by that Control Board, cut off from the appropriations which were first made, and actually saved during the year in expenditure. It is well worth while for the Government to study that method of procedure.

The British method of procedure is more or less well known, although it is not practised by us here. But what my honourable friend has said with reference to the control of expenditure is a very important thing.

My honourable friend knows, of course, that our Auditor General simply audits after the expenditures are made, and all that he can do, really, is to hold a sort of control over the advance that has been made to each Department. Even in that respect, experience shows that we do overrun, and overrun in nine cases out of ten, in the different Departments of the Government. An audit after an expenditure is made is good as an example of what has not been done, but it has no effect at all in restraining what the audit is supposed to restrain.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: The mind of my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) has been running in the same groove as that of the honourable leader opposite, and that of my right honourable friend. We have had conversations over this matter, which fills our mind—the large expenditure that we have to face yearly. I suggest that my honourable friend will have another opportunity. We have Finance Bills to come before us, and he may then give his views.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Or this Bill might afford an opportunity.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may go into Committee on this Bill and pass it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would suggest that my honourable friend from De Salaberry reserve his remarks until the Supply Bill is brought down, and that he join with us in criticizing the expenditure. It would be an excellent opportunity.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I am ready to do it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Sections 1 to 12 inclusive were agreed to.

On section 13—board may engage skilled assistants:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move to strike out the words in line 26, "out of any available appropriation."

Hon. Mr. REID: Where will they get the money, then?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As the Treasury Board may allow.

Hon. Mr. REID: How do they pay it out?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I wonder.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections 13 to 17 inclusive were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD BILL

SECOND READING—THIRD READING POSTPONED

On the Order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the Second Reading Bill 206, an Act to amend The Biological Board Act.—Hon. Mr. Ross (Middleton).

The Hon. The SPEAKER: The order is in the name of Hon. Mr. Ross.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have his consent to move the second reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will put on Hansard these few remarks, because I am moving that we dispense with the Committee, and pass to the third reading.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If the House is ready to pass it why make the remarks?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think I owe it to the members who opposed that I should tell them the situation. It is simply this, that there is in the Supplementary Estimates an amount of $70,000 for the improvement of our fisheries, the work to be done in co-operation with the Biological Board. It is intended to establish plants to cure fish, to freeze fish, to salt fish, to cook fish, etc., by way of two stations, on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. That is why the Department and the Industry should be represented. With the leave of the House I move the third reading of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I think there are a number of members who wanted to say something on that Bill. Do I understand the honourable Minister to say that he intends to refer it to a special committee?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no; the Bill is a very simple one. It gives power to appoint one representative of the Department, and two representatives of the fish industry, one from the East and one from the West. That is all it is. It is in order to bring some practical knowledge to the men of science who are on that Board, and who agree to co-operate with those three new members; that is all. The Government is taking power to appoint five members instead of two who are on the Board at present.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Do I understand that the Board as at present constituted is satisfied with the Bill as we have it before us?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the official information I received from the Deputy Minister.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: That is not the information that several of us have received, but the contrary.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But surely it would be a very extraordinary stand on the part of the Board that they would refuse an addition of three members, two being men who have practical knowledge of the fish industry, one in the West and one in the East, and a representative of the Department, because the Board is composed of quite a number of men. It is a formidable list, and I cannot see that they could not dominate that Board three times over.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Try it as it is.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I understand the Board consists of a certain number appointed by the Government, and also a very much larger number appointed by the various universities.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Well, the honourable gentleman said the Board consisted of only four.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The Government now has the right to appoint only two, but it has taken the right to appoint five, which will be a small number compared with the total make-up of the Board.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If this Bill is so simple and easy as the Minister indicates, it would take only a minute or two to deal with it to-morrow, and I hesitate to see this Bill come on for third reading in the absence of so many members who expressed themselves on it, and who ought to have the opportunity of saying more.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have the consent of the principal opponents.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I have no objection, in view of that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I will put the Bill down for third reading to-morrow; I would rather that they would be here.

The debate was adjourned.

NATIONAL RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 234, an Act respecting construction of Canadian National Railway lines.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 28, 1923.

FIRST SITTING

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PAYMENTS TO JUDGES

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. GEORGE GORDON rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the payments made since November 1, 1922, by the Province of Ontario to Mr. Justice Riddell and Mr. Justice Latchford, and inquire if the Government will submit to this House the opinion of the Department of Justice as to the right of the above named judges to receive such sums.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I think it is incumbent upon me to give the House a little information regarding the subject of this inquiry. It appears that on the 9th of March 1920 two judges were appointed as commissioners by the Government of Ontario to make a certain investigation. For the information of this House I will read the first part of their report which is as follows:

To His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario: in Council.

We, the Commissioners appointed by the Commission dated the ninth day of March, 1920, have the honour to report as follows:

1. We opened the said Commission and began to act under it, April 12, 1920; we held sittings on various days until January 27, 1922, at Toronto, Sudbury, Port Arthur and Fort Frances, hearing evidence and argument upon 86 days.

I want the House to mark this that previous to the passing of the Act which was assented to by the Governor General in July of 1920 these Judges who had been appointed only about three months before were paid by the Province of Ontario the sum of $2,000 each, about which there can be no question. But after the passing of the Act in July, 1920, prohibiting judges from accepting payment for acting on commissions of any nature whatsoever, they were paid the sum of $10,000 in contravention of that Act.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: To what Court do they belong?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: The High Court of the Province of Ontario. Notwithstanding the passing of that Act, these Judges for nearly two years dilly-dallied with the investigation, infringing on the time for which they were paid by the Dominion their usual salaries of $9,000 each and their expenses, and after having done this they accepted the payments which I have indicated.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: By which Government was the $10,000 each paid?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: The Government of the Province of Ontario. It appears to me that Parliament was very wise in amending the Act in 1920 by the prohibition which was contained therein, because in this case particularly the judges, to my mind, and to the mind of the bulk of the people of the province, degraded the Bench from the very high esteem in which it has always been held in Canada. It is this which impels me to insist that something should be done to show that they were entitled to this money, because otherwise it is going to create a feeling, and it has created a feeling, that an injustice is being done.

A few days ago I brought this matter to the attention of the leader of the House, and asked him to present it to the Department of Justice for a ruling; but he did not see fit to do so, because I had not brought the matter forward in the shape of a motion. As the Session is now drawing to a close, I respectfully ask the leader of the Government to have that information brought to us from the department as quickly as possible. I believe it is in the interest not only of the country as a whole, but of the judiciary of Canada, that this matter should be shown up, and I hope the leader of the Government will see the importance of it and not delay any longer, because it cannot be allowed to rest here; and if the matter is not definitely settled during this Session it means that it will be taken up more vigorously next year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will press the Department of Justice to give the Senate the information which my honourable friend asks for. If it cannot be had in a satisfactory form before the end of the Session, we will ask the Department of Justice to bring us the whole record. There is no question that the Senate is entitled to know whether its legislation has been obeyed, and I will get all the light I can upon that point.

Hon. Mr. REID: Did the leader of the Government say that he would have a report from the Deputy Minister of Justice or the Department of Justice stating whether these judges were within the law in accepting that amount of money or any money?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will try to obtain all the information that is being sought.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Will you say that you will have that information here to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will drop one of my meals.

Some Hon. SENATORS: No, no.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no, we protest against that.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Be careful where you drop it.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 206, an Act to amend the Biological Board Act.

Hon. GEO. H. BRADBURY: Before this Bill is read the third time, I desire to say a few words in connection with it. I was not in the House last night when the Bill received its second reading. I opposed this Bill in its earlier stages because I believed that it meant the destruction of the Biological Board. This Board is a purely scientific Board. It has performed for many years a work of great value to our fisheries. It is composed of men of the highest reputation in Canada. The proposal now, I understand, is to add to that Board of eight or nine members three of what they call practical men.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Two men representing the fish industry, one from the West and one from the East.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: And one from the Department.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That means the addition of three laymen. I am credibly informed that the gentleman who had the honour, I think, of being the first chairman of this Board—he is now one of the leading professors at McGill—was in the city within the last week, and, on learning what was taking place, he protested to the Deputy Minister in the interest of the fisheries of Canada that the proposition meant the destruction of the usefulness of the Biological Board. The statement which I made to the House the other day that the members of the Board were not consulted regarding this Bill, was, I believe, absolutely correct. This gentleman, I presume, knew what he was talking about when he gave this information.

This Board, as I say, is purely biological in its nature. I want to give the House in a few words some of the things it has been doing, to show how absurd it is to attach to it laymen who know practically nothing about the subjects that come before the Board.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am sorry that my honourable friend was not here last night when I read the statement from the Minister, and when I informed the Senate that the Department had an appropriation of $70,000 in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of vigorously prosecuting a policy for the development of our fishing industry. A plant will be put up on the West coast and one on the East coast, and investigation will be carried on in regard to the curing, the salting, the freezing, and the cooking of fish. All this is for the purpose of developing the industry. It is intended to take advantage of the knowledge of this large Board of scientists, and to add to the Board two men who are familiar with the practical side of the fishing industry, and one man from the Department. If these gentlemen still remain in their ivory tower and refuse to come into contact with the practical men, it is time that they were thrown to the winds. I am told by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he will conduct a vigorous campaign for the purpose in view, which is a commendable one, and that if, through the defeat of this Bill, he has not this instrument with which to carry on his work, he will be obliged to postpone his efforts until next year and to drop the amount in the Estimates. He has there an organization which he can implement by adding to it three men; and I have not yet heard a reason why these representatives of science, who are not fallen from heaven, should be so much afraid of being polluted by contact with laymen.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I am sure the House has been edified by the display of eloquence of our honourable leader in regard to this question. I may say that it has not impressed me a little bit. The Biological Board was formed for certain purposes. That Board, I understand, has functioned and has done splendid work—work of which these laymen will have not the slightest knowledge.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What is it they have done?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I can give you a résumé of it. I hold in my hand the report of the Canadian Biological Board of 1914-15. I will run over two or three headings: "Investigation into the Pacific halibut fisheries, by Professor Arthur Willey; Notes on egg and larval stages of the halibut, by Professor Prince." what would these practical men know about that?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: All about it.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY (reading): "The commercial value of the kelp beds of British Columbia; lobster sanctuaries and hatching ponds; report on barren oyster bottoms."

Hon. M. SCHAFFNER: Take it as read.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: There is a whole list of this kind of thing, showing the work this Board has performed. I agree with my honourable friend that if this Board is not functioning to suit the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the proper way is to disband the Board, not to add to it and thus add to the expense of the country. My honourable friend makes a great deal of the fact that $70,000 is going to be spent this year. They spent nearly $50,000 last year in this investigation. This is no new scheme of developing our fisheries—talking about how to cook fish and salt fish and cure them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: How many members constitute the Board to-day?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Nine, I think.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will they not remain with a majority to direct their investigations and their work as they see fit? How are they being injured by the addition of two practical men and one Departmental man when they still remain in the majority?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I hold no brief for this Board. I am not claiming that they are being interfered with; I am claiming that you are destroying the purpose of the Board.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In what manner will they be hampered in carrying on their investigations? They have a majority, and can continue their own work on their own lines. If some new matter is brought to their attention wherein science will help the industry is it not to the advantage of Canada?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: We have a highly paid staff of officials in the Fisheries Department, with ramifications extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. If that Department is not big enough to handle that end of the business through its Deputy Minister and Fishery Commissioners and inspectors and other officials who are drawing down big salaries, I think it is time a reorganization took place in that Department instead of in this Board. I am not going to detain the House: I am just protesting against what is being done. I think it is not in the best interest of Canada.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: I think that we will better understand this question if we approach it in a quite way and without getting unduly excited over the question, which, after all, is a very simple and easily-understood one, I would not rise to oppose the passage of this Bill did I not honestly believe that there were very strong reasons why it should not be passed. Those who are opposing the passage of the Bill are not perhaps so much opposed to the adding of practical men to the Board as they are to the bringing of this Board practically under the Department of Fisheries.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, nothing is changed.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: This Board is appointed for a special purpose. That has been said often, but, in order to explain my view, I have to say it again. It is appointed to do scientific work of a special kind. These men are working without pay of any kind in the interests of science. They are all very able men and men of wide experience along this line. That is why they have been selected to serve on this Board. Their work has been carried on intelligently, and, I understand, with great benefit to the fisheries. Their work has been carried on independently of the Department of Fisheries; that is to say, there have been no officials of the Department serving on the Board—

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Yes, two: Professor Knight and Professor Prince.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR:—except scientific men.

Apparently the object of the Bill is to put upon this Board one member from the Department of Fisheries who has no scientific knowledge of the questions with which this Board is called upon to deal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He may have. He is not prohibited from having the knowledge.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Nevertheless, we leave it open to the Departmental officials to name a man who has no scientific knowledge of the questions with which he is called upon to deal. Remember, these scientific men are working without pay; they are doing the work voluntarily and in the interest of science, and will naturally resent the introduction on the Board of some member of the Department who may, by his meddling and interference, and endeavouring to overrule and override, cause these men to resign from the Board. I do not say they will, but no doubt there will be a certain amount of resentment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But they remain in the majority.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Quite true, but that may not satisfy them. They may not control the situation as well as they desire it to be controlled from a scientific standpoint.

This Board has functioned to a certain extent separate and apart from the Department. I understand, if I have not been misinformed, that the Department has no control over their expenditure—that is to say, a certain amount of money is granted each year for this work, and is expended by these scientific men, who make a report. Their report of expenditures, with vouchers and receipts and everything necessary to prove a proper expenditure, goes to the Auditor General's Department and is passed upon. That, I believe, is a correct statement of the facts. Naturally, the officials of the Fisheries Department, who are not scientists, but who may occupy very important positions in that Department, are jealous of the separate control which these scientists have over this particular work, and are anxious to get their fingers in the pie. They would like to know just what is going on, and would like to keep tab on those men who, because of their scientific training and knowledge, have been raised to the prominent position of being members of the Board. If you want to get at the bottom of this matter you will do so by inquiring whether there is not just a little bit of jealousy between the officers of the Fisheries Department and the members of this Board.

Now, there is a very real objection to the appointment of laymen on this Board. I have pointed out what objection there is to the appointment of a Departmental officer on it: it is because these men are doing scientific work of a special character, and the introduction of anybody but a scientist from the Department will be to a certain extent resented by them.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What is this purely scientific work which these men are doing, when expressed in English? The vague term scientific work has no meaning for people in practical business, who believe that science should be utilized in some way in the industry, or on the value of fish products.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: I would refer my honourable friend to the report of the Commission, which is issued every year and gives details of the work of this Board. If he reads that report he will know what work they are doing. The crux of this whole question is the feeling of resentment on the part of the members of the Board against bringing in a Departmental officer who is not a scientist. The Commission is doing special work, it is allowed a special appropriation, and has to account for every dollar it expends, and must report to the Department as to the way it functions.

With regard to the appointment of two laymen on the Board, I would ask who will these laymen be? Perhaps one will be from Halifax and one from Vancouver. Will they be ordinary practical fishermen? No, they will not.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: How do you know they will not be?

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: I am just going to give my reason.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Your opinion, that is all.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: They will not be ordinary practical fishermen, who would not have time or means to attend meetings of the Board at Ottawa or other central points. Naturally men will have to be selected who are engaged in the fishing industry in a big way. Such men will not be representative of the ordinary practical fishermen, but will be business men who, on account of their means and opportunities for travel, will be able to come long distances to attend meetings of the Board. The honourable leader of the Government asked what objection there would be to the appointment of practical fishermen on this Board, and whether they did not want to know the opinions of practical fishermen and men engaged in the fishing industry. If I were a member of this Board, and desired to obtain the opinion of practical men in the business, to whom would I go? I would go to practical fishermen who have the knowledge and experience of handling fish and the curing of fish. This Board has all the opportunity that any Board could possibly have for obtaining such information We know from their reports that they have repeatedly had conferences with fishermen and obtained this information from them. Surely it cannot be argued that two men at the head of the industry at different places would afford this Board better information as to the practical working of the industry than it could obtain by summoning before them practical fishermen and inquiring from them. This Board meets at different places near where the fish are being cured and the fishing industry is carried on, and it makes its investigations there, and is not in the least hampered for opportunity.

May I add that the men on this Board have given a great deal of time and effort to this work without remuneration, and no doubt they are very proud of the work they have done, and what they have discovered and worked out in the interest of the fisheries; and they resent the attempt to take from them the absolute direction—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But they are the majority, and they will be the majority to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: —the absolute direction of their investigations, by placing on this Board men who have no scientific knowledge. As scientists their direction will be hampered to that extent. Unless my honourable friend can show that this Board has failed in some respects to carry on the work for which it was appointed, why add new members, when we all know they will resent that addition?

No one is more anxious than I am to see everything done in the interest of the fisheries, because I come from a county where a large part of our industry is fishing; but I know that the fishermen of my county would very much prefer to consult personally with this Board at its meetings, to having some rich fish merchant or trader or canner in their vicinity placed on the Board. I do not think the fishermen would feel that such men could represent them as they desire.

Honourable gentlemen know that in a fishing community very often one view on fishery questions is taken by the practical fishermen who go out in the boats and fish, while a different view is entertained by the man who is making money out of their efforts to earn a livelihood. There have been innumerable and important disputes between the fishermen and the canners and packers, and some of those disputes are now going on. In my own county of Antigonish during this fishing season there have been strikes among the fishermen, protesting against the manner in which the rich and aggressive companies have dealt with them, and I honestly feel that the appointment of one of those prominent men on the Board would not satisfy the fishermen, who would feel that such a man would have an advantage over them in the argument.

If the Department has some policy beyond what this scientific Board has been carrying on, let us know what it is. This Board is not designed to carry on any other policy than that of the scientific investigation of the fisheries and fish problems. If the Department wishes to tack on to the Board some other policy or programme, we should know of it, and I think it would be a mistake to make any change in the law regarding the scope of their work. If there is something else to be done, let it be done by the Department in some other way, because the scientific Board is not designed to carry on any work other than what it is doing. I cannot imagine what the new policy would be; but if there really is a new policy I would be glad to know about it and have an opportunity to disscuss it. The leader of the Government has not indicated what that new policy is. If it is for the promotion of the fisheries, to increase the opportunities of fishermen for curing fish, such work, which is not scientific but practical, should be done by the Fishery officers of the Department. If they are going to pay a bounty on fish, or give fishermen assistance to get gearing and boats and better equipment for their work, that is for the Department and not for the scientific Board, and should not be mixed up or connected with scientific work. I have done practical fishing in my day, and have lived all my life in a community of fishermen, and I know a little about it, and I think my honourable friend should give us an opportunity to discuss the new policy, which he has not disclosed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the Senate is sufficiently informed on this question, and I would suggest, in order to expedite the work, that we now vote on the third reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 187, an Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill has for its object the altering of the excise duty on cigarettes, which is decreased from $7.50 to $6 per thousand; on cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand; and on cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $11 per thousand; they were $12.50 under the Act of last year. This section shall be deemed to have come into force on the 12th of May, 1923.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What has led to the idea of reduction?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The increased duty has not produced more revenue—in fact, it has produced a little less—than the lower duty. Under these circumstances, we are bringing it down a degree.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I suppose the idea is that the duty was placed really so high that it defeated its own object?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To a certain extent, and I am told that it created an incentive to smuggling on the border.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is a limit that you cannot pass.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would like to point out to my honourable friend the leader that that same argument applies all round, and if he would make a general reduction on the tariff he would get more revenue.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In certain cases I would agree with my honourable friend.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friends express no desire to go into Committee on the Bill, I move that it be now read the third time.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not know whether this is good legislation or not. Is it the intention of the Government to encourage the smoking of cigarettes?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is to discourage smuggling.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Bootlegging in cigarettes?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the duty on cigarettes is high it becomes profitable to evade the customs, and an illicit trade is encouraged. If the duty is reduced we may return to normalcy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The question is whether that will be to the general advantage of the country or not. I doubt that there is much smuggling of cigarettes from the other side, because it is pretty expensive for a man to travel across for 10, 15 or 20 miles to buy cigarettes. Do you not think that the reduction in the sale of manufactured cigarettes is caused by people rolling their own cigarettes? Many people buy the tobacco and the papers, and by rolling their own cigarettes they save the cost of manufacture. They do not delay themselves very much by having to make the cigarette. I do not smoke cigarettes myself, but I believe that some men become so expert that they can roll a cigarette with one hand, while the other is in their pocket. Are you not encouraging extravagance by reducing the duty? The men who on account of the high price occasioned by the higher duty have rolled their own cigarettes will now, because the price is reduced, purchase manufactured cigarettes. Thus you are teaching the youth habits of extravagance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No doubt, when manufactured cigarettes become somewhat expensive there is a tendency for people to roll their own cigarettes, and that would partly explain the decrease in duties collected on the manufactured article. But the Department has noticed that the decrease in the importation of cigarettes occurs mostly in the Windsor district and other places near the border, and that has created the impression, if not the conviction, that the higher price of the cigarette, caused by the increase of duty, had incited illegal importation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would it not be better to see that the vigilance of your officers is increased instead of encouraging extravagant habits among the people by discouraging the rolling of cigarettes by the smoker himself? Do you not think that if you stirred up your officers to greater vigilance this smuggling would not take place?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps the proposed method is a cheaper one than that which my honourable friend suggests, and which might require a considerable addition to the staff.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am glad to have even this slight evidence of care for the finances of the country, shown by the Minister and by the Government, because such evidence is rare. On the other hand we find plenty of evidence of reckless expenditure. It is refreshing to have this one little whiff—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of the cigarette.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER:—of economy.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PETROLEUM BOUNTIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 214, an Act respecting the Payment of Bounties on Petroleum.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the object of this Bill is to limit the period of payment of the bounty on petroleum, with a view to its extinction. The rate for the coming year is the same as heretofore and will continue until the 30th of June, 1924, and the rate for the second and final year will be reduced from 1½ cents a gallon to ¾ of a cent a gallon. That is the only object and effect of this Bill.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And the bounty ceases when?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It ceases on the 30th of June, 1925. It has two years yet to run, but it is on a diminishing scale.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do the government not think that the time has about arrived when the bounty on petroleum should cease to be paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is exactly the policy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why not let it cease? Why ease it down in this way? Why not cut it out absolutely? When fabulous fortunes are being made in oil, either by the man who owns the well or by the man who manipulates the stock, would it not be advisable to put an end to this?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will see that the payments of that petroleum bounty were not very large. In 1922 the amount was $93,636. This year it is $89,223.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is what the lady said when she was caught in default: it was such a very small one it should not count. The principle is the same, no matter what you pay. Cut it out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, we are proceeding to do it, but not brutally.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What is the total amount of the bounty in a year?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The amount of bounty paid was: in 1916, $109,177; in 1921, $312,000; in 1922, $93,636; in 1923, $89,223.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why, that is the interest on several millions of dollars. It is a very serious matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are now in sight of the end. The rate for this year will continue the same, namely, 1½ cents a gallon, but next year it will be down at ¾ of a cent.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What will be the cost of this gradual extinction—this painless dentistry, so to speak?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Judging by the figures for the fiscal year ending June, 1923, I should not be surprised if we were called upon to pay another $89,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then, next year?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then the bounty is to be cut in two; so the amount payable would be something like $45,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That would total about $135,000.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There are a few Civil Servants who have not been put up to $8,000, and speaking on their behalf—on behalf of the poor, down-trodden, ill-paid Civil Servants—I think you had better take that duty off altogether, so that you may make a level figure of $8,000 a year for all the Civil Service. That seems to be the smallest amount upon which a Civil Servant can properly subsist, and if you cut off this bounty altogether you may have money enough to bring a few more of those poor fellows up to $8,000 a year, and to hunt up a few more stipendiary magistrates down in the Province of Quebec and increase their salaries to $8,000, and so level up things in this country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Minister of Finance is in contact with the producers of oil. My honourable friend has said that immense fortunes were made. Of course, he has in view a person who is prominent in North America, but he is not on this side of the line. I am told that there are not immense fortunes made in this country. After having examined the situation thoroughly, the Minister of Finance, who is desirous of saving money to the country, has decided for the first time to fix a limit to the payment of the bounty. It is to continue for two years, but for the second year it is cut in two. I think we are moving in the right direction and in a way that ought to be approved by my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think I would get on a little more speed in eliminating this bounty, because if we are to believe the literature we are furnished with gratuitously, there are great fortunes in oil. We know that the fortunes made in oil are not confined to the other side of the line. We have right in our own country the instance of the late President of the Imperial Oil Company, whose estate was probated, I think, at four or five million dollars. That is a comfortable fortune for a country lawyer to make. He was four times a millionaire.

It is necessary, as I say, to bring the Civil Service up to a certain point, and we must get the money somewhere. I would hate to see any increase of taxation for that purpose, worthy as it is; I would hate to see an additional Sales Tax put on, or the Income Tax doubled. So I think it would be well to reconsider this Bill, and wipe out the bounty altogether.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It strikes me that this Bill may conceal an important fact. It does not state in express language that the period for the payment of bounties has expired. Is not that the case? I would so infer from the language of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There was no limit in the Act. This Bill fixes a limit for the first time.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: The bounty has been on for 25 or 30 years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This apparently gives to the Governor in Council fresh authority:

> The Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada of a bounty payable only on crude petroleum.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then this must be additional.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that the operation of the old Act was to continue indefinitely until repealed by Parliament.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Has it been repealed by Parliament?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are now repealing it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This would seem to be a fresh authorization to pay bounties.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will observe that clause 4 provides:

> The Petroleum Bounty Act, 1909, Chapter 46 of the Statutes of 1909-10, is repealed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No period was mentioned in that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No period was mentioned.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I wonder if there is any more reason why a bounty should be given on oil than on silver, copper or gold.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend might have wondered ever since he has been in Parliament, for this bounty has been paid since 1909, and now we are at the end of it and about to cut it off. My honourable friend might have attempted earlier to solve the problem.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I believe you would have done better to cut off the bounty now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no special data. I do not know very much about the petroleum industry. My honourable friend from Lambton (Hon. Mr. Pardee) is more au fait. However, I take it for granted that the Minister of Finance examined the whole situation and felt that in order to maintain the industry it was well to notify those interested that the bounty would be continued for this year, that next year it would be cut in two, and then it would cease.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I must confess that, although I have been here for a considerable period, this is the first time I have heard that a bounty was being paid. My opinion is that there is no more reason for a bounty on oil than for one on nickle, gold, or copper.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I object to the third reading being taken now. I want to look into this matter.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Next Session.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Next Session? That is this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Next Parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest that my honourable friend allow this Bill to pass. I am sure he will not move an amendment. If he doubts the soundness of the policy he had better challenge a vote right away.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, I cannot resist the appealing face of the honourable leader of the Government. I withdraw.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

HEMP BOUNTIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 215, an Act respecting the Payment of Bounties on Certain Manufactures of Hemp.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill has for its object the encouragement of the cultivation of hemp in Canada, to replace the importation of Manila fibre for binder twine and other cordage. It is, I believe, highly desirable that we should give the West a chance to increase its variety of production. The bounties payable according to the Bill would run from 1926 to 1933. The figures are given in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That would be about eight years?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Has my honourable friend any information as to the growth of hemp up to the present time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Practically none.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What are the probabilities of hemp being successfully cultivated? Is the Department of Agriculture doing anything to promote the cultivation of hemp, and what prospect is there of an industry being built up in twine or yarn?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Bounty on Hemp

There is another industry to which we are going to extend similar aid. We have been working together to encourage the cultivation of hemp, for which article we are assured the soil of parts of our country is particularly adapted.

It is believed that with some encouragement a large manufacturing plant can be established in Manitoba, drawing its raw material from the crop to be raised in the immediate vicinity. Here again is a case were the helping hand may only have to be extended at the beginning. There is a large market in Canada for products manufactured from hemp, and other articles of similar character. If we can economically produce the hemp ourselves and turn it into manufactured products in factories within easy reach of the fields in which it grows, surely that is an industry which may be well worthy of the helping hand. We therefore propose to apply in this case substantially the same rule as in the case of the copper industry. Under the aid we are affording copper rods and bars should be turned out in Canada at an early date. The development of the hemp business will be slower. To complete the plans of the authorities who are giving attention to the promotion of the movement, to raise the crop and to prepare and manufacture the hemp, will take a considerable time. We therefore propose that in this case the eight-year period shall begin on the first day of January, 1926. By that time binder twine and other products made from Canadian hemp should be ready for the market and the producers will be in a position to claim the bounty. In this case also we propose a bounty beginning at one and one-half cents per pound on the hemp and diminishing from year to year, until at the end of the eight years the bounty is extinguished.

By that time binder twine and other products made from Canadian hemp should be ready for the market.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What are they going to do with the hemp?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It is for the purpose of making binder twine.

In reply to the question whether hemp can be successfully grown in the West, I may say for the information of the House that adjacent to Portage la Prairie there were 200 acres of hemp grown two years ago. It was a magnificent crop. The hemp grows to a height of 12 or 14 feet and produces quite a large tonnage per acre. There is only one question in regard to the feasibility of the scheme working out, and that is whether we have sufficient moisture in the fall to rot in on the ground.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They rot it in brooks.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: They are considering the construction of tanks in which they can immerse the hemp and carry on the rotting process in that way. A company has been established in Winnipeg, and it has asked for this bounty. There is no question at all about a market.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What about the quality? How does it compare with the sisal manila?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I do not know.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is a very important consideration. The use of flax fibre for the making of binder twine has not been a success so far.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: This company is perfectly willing to take the risk, and we are taking no risk at all—only paying on the manufactured product.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: If the Government is going to adopt a policy of giving bounties, I would suggest that they look into the feasibility of giving a bounty to develop iron in Northern Ontario. Without any aid there have been developed in Northern Ontario perhaps the greatest gold mines in the world. Silver and nickel mining also has been carried on without a bounty. Iron, which we require in Canada perhaps more than any other metal, has been neglected. As every person is aware, practically all our iron ore comes from the United States; yet we have in Northern Ontario millions of tons of undeveloped iron ore. If the Government is going into the business of giving bounties, I think they should seriously consider the advisability of fostering that industry.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, my honourable friend is aware that a considerable bounty was paid on iron and steel for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Very little.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Millions of dollars were given in bounties by the Government. The bounty was paid on a sliding scale, and was gradually extinguished, and by it we created an industry in Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If the Government wants to assist the iron industry of Canada it can do so by establishing a research council for the purpose of inventing or discovering some process whereby our refractory iron ores can be treated economically. If our ores were like the American ores, not refractory, they would not require this special treatment. There is no question about the tremendous deposits that we have.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The question before the House is one of considerable importance to Manitoba. I happen to know a little about the organization of this Company, and I have no hesitation in saying that the proposition is a good one and ought to be encouraged. I have met Mr. Coats, a man from the North of Ireland who is largely interested in the manufacture of linens. He is closely identified with this organization, and I hope to see this thing given a fair trial. If it is a success, it would be of great benefit to Manitoba and the Northwest; if it does not succeed it will not cost the country anything.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, Bill 215, an Act respecting the payment of Bounties on Certain Manufactures of Hemp, was read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 216, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, one of the main features of this Bill is the increased preference of 10 per cent under the British Preferential Tariff on goods imported to sea or river ports of Canada which are already paying a duty in excess of 15 per cent.

Another interesting feature, upon which there may be diversity of opinion, is the clause providing that:

> The Governor in Council may authorize any Minister of the Crown to enter into negotiations with any authorized representative of the Government of the United States with a view to the making of a commercial agreement between the two countries on terms that may be deemed mutually beneficial. Any agreement so made shall be subject to the approval of the Parliament of Canada.
>
> If the President of the United States, under authority of the United States Tariff Act of 1922, determines to reduce the duties imposed by such Act on the following articles, that is to say:
>
> Cattle; wheat, wheat flour; oats; barley; potatoes; onions; turnips; hay; fish as enumerated in paragraphs 717, 718, 719 and 720 of the Tariff Act of 1922, the Governor in Council may by Order in Council make such reductions of duties on such articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We have not had any chance to look at this Bill. It is an amendment to the Customs Tariff, and I do not think it should go through in this way. I protest against it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend desires to study it longer—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: How long does my honourable friend desire?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Put it down for the next sitting of the House. I have not had a chance to read it over. We are being rushed off our feet. I am not used to this, and do not want to be rushed in passing legislation that I do not understand. I feel a certain responsibility, and I trust every other honourable member of this House feels the same responsibility to the country. I want to have an opportunity to give it the "once over," as we call it. We in this House do not even get a chance for the "once over."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I must reproach my honourable friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) with having occupied the attention of my honourable friend from Sussex when I was explaining the main features of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: While I have every confidence in every utterance that falls from the lips of the honourable gentleman, I choose to read the Bill for myself and to see what it contains.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will have that opportunity. I move that the Bill be put down for third reading at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 230, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.

He said: The main object of this Bill is to alter the conditions under which the Sales Tax will be collected, and to eliminate the pyramiding which occurs from one stage to another. Under the Act as it is to-day, there are as many as five or six stages at which the Sales Tax is collected.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What has been the experience of the Government, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance was warned last Session that disastrous results would ensue? What has been the experience in the enforcement and working out of this tax?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Under the Act which we are now trying to amend the levying of the tax was exceedingly complicated and difficult of management. The purpose of this Bill is to simplify the process. I think my memory does not fail me when I say that the Manufacturers' Association, in their memorandum of January last, made a request along this line. I was present when they made their representations. There were representatives from all parts of the country, and it is to meet those representations and to simplify the system of collection that this Bill is brought in.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I notice that the maximum to be charged on cheques is $1 instead of $2. Of course, it is a very nice thing for us to have our taxes reduced, and at first glance it looks all right; but I submit, in view of the large revenue required, and the deficit which we have, that this is a very injudicious step and one which is altogether in favour of what are generally called rich people. It seems to me altogether illogical that the stamp tax should be less than the note tax. I understand that the old tax of four cents per hundred will still continue without any maximum limit, but that the maximum on cheques will be $1. It seems to me absurd that a cheque for $1,000,000 should bear only the same tax as a cheque for $2,500. It rather operates in favour of those who are well off and against those who are poor. I am sorry that this is being done when revenue is so much required, and I submit that the most painless way for extracting revenue from the public is by a proper stamp tax.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that Canada is the only country in which there is a variation in the tax upon cheques and other instruments. The legislation of last year was an experiment, and it is felt that the maximum of $2 which was fixed last year should be cut down to $1. The $2 tax tended to send across the border deposits which should have remained in Canada, but which were sent there for the purpose of eluding the payment of the $2 tax. The minister has given the following reasons for this Bill:

With regard to the cheque tax, we passed last year graduated taxes on cheques, with a maximum of $2. There has been some objection with reference to this. It has been represented that there are transactions in which several cheques have to be given, but which really represent but one business deal, so that in that way the tax operates as a burden. It is also represented to us that on the boundary this tax induced men who have opportunity to do so to keep their accounts on the other side of the border. There is probably some force in all these criticisms. We do not feel, however, that we are prepared to give up the tax, which is a valuable source of revenue, and we intend to retain it, but it is provided that the maximum shall be $1 only.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I think those reasons are very flimsy, and I think that the revenue loss will be very substantial. Again I ask, why reduce the maximum tax on cheques and still leave the tax on notes as it existed, namely, 4 cents per hundred dollars? We all know that people who have notes to sign generally have less money on hand than people who are doing nothing but issuing cheques. If you issued a cheque for a million dollars the tax would be $1; if you issued a note for a million dollars the tax would be 4 cents per hundred. Now, what is the reason for that?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will doubtless presently move the third reading of this Bill, and I would direct his attention to the fact that he has said nothing whatever about its other features, which propose amending the Excise law, the Customs law, and the Sales tax. The Stamp Tax is one of the minor considerations of the Bill. I do not wish to protract the discussion on the subject, but the House should certainly have some reasons why these very substantial changes are made in the law.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I submit to my honourable friend the leader that this is a pretty important thing, too.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I admit that.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I was not on my feet, but I was waiting for a reply from the honourable leader.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not at hand the reason that has been advanced for this difference, but it was made last year, and we are not altering it.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I know; that is why I see no reason for reducing the stamp tax and not reducing the tax appertaining to notes. I do not think the stamp tax should be reduced at all, for that or any other tax reduction would imply that the revenue of the country was going to be such that an increase was not required. What I say is that there is no more painless method of collecting revenue from the people than through this stamp tax, and I protest very vigorously against this tax being reduced and the note tax being maintained.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Surely it is not the intention of the Minister to move the third reading of this Bill immediately?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend will first allow me to get the second reading, we will then try to satisfy him as to the third. I suggest that we take the second reading, and if my honourable friend desires explanations of each item we may take them up in Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I am not thirsting for information, but it would be a seemingly proper thing to give us some reason for imposing several millions of additional taxation upon the people of Canada. Even though it should occupy some five or ten minutes, it might be time well spent; it might possibly reconcile the tax-bearing public to the additional burdens imposed on them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know that we can amend this Bill, or purely and simply reject it. If we cannot or do not intend to amend it, perhaps it is as well not to go into Committee, but take the third reading.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Still my honourable friend might be able to administer some crumbs of comfort to the tax-paying public, which would permit of their bearing their burdens more easily than they can if they do not know why they are carrying them.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Perhaps the honourable gentleman could explain how people could come to pay this without feeling it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Has my honourable friend any political anesthetic that he can administer?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: They are so stunned now by the actions of this Government, without any further paying.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The anesthetic has been applied since 1867. We cannot go further back, because our existence dates from that year.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But your surgery is not as skilled as that of your predecessors.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, the situation is not the same. I do not know of any greater anesthetic than indirect taxation. It is extraordinary how the people will accept and bear burdens that they do not see clearly.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But they see this.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You forgot that now they are getting both, and a double dose of both.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, a new principle is being introduced, which makes the taxbearer realize what he is paying in certain directions; it is direct taxation, and it has the advantage of linking the taxpayer with the administration of his own Government. So long as it is indirect taxation he will carry the load, make his purchases, and pay his taxes indirectly; but when the bill is presented to him he begins to put on a double pair of spectacles.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He will be glad to know that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is perhaps an advantage in the Income Tax, because I have noticed that since we have had it the people seem to be far more wide-awake as to the expenditure of the Government, and the why and wherefore. I would only hope that all the people of Canada would be reached in some way, even if it be very light, in order that they should realize that they have an interest in the good administration of the country.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: But in connection with this Bill you will find that, so far as the Sales Tax is concerned, the whole dose is being administered at once, whereas before it was distributed, as in the case of a man paying municipal taxes, who is allowed to pay in instalments, perhaps four times a year in place of one. What I suggest is that you are taking away the painless method, and submitting others that are painful. I believe that this Bill should not be passed without going through the Committee stage.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I cannot allow the observations of the honourable leader of the Government to pass without pointing out to him that indirect taxation has other virtues than simply that of being an anesthetic. It places the burden of taxation where it should be, upon the spendthrift, and not so much upon the industrious man. Indirect taxation penalizes the spendthrift and the waster, and rewards the industrious, frugal, economical man, whereas direct taxation, on the other hand, remits from its burdens the waster and the spendthrift, and penalizes the honest, economical, industrious man. That is the difference between direct and indirect taxation; but unfortunately we are now getting a dose of both direct and indirect. That is why the burden is being felt so greatly by the people. I hope the Government will establish a distinctive stamp for these taxes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is provided for.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Because you cannot tell what any particular tax is producing without distinctive stamps. The Postmaster General throws out his chest and says, "Look how the revenues of the postoffice have increased during my regime," whereas those revenues have increased because of stamps purchased under the Stamp Act, altogether outside of postage. It seems to me that is very unfair, and should be changed. I can understand that it is very convenient not to have to keep a supply of special lines of stamps. After all, the convenience of the public ought to be considered, but when the system is clouded as to knowledge in another direction, it ought to be changed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That will be so on the first of October next.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am very glad. That will reconcile me to some of the disagreeable features of that Act. Is it the intention to have a separate stamp for each separate thing?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There will be an excise stamp only, which will be very plain, and different from the ordinary postage stamp.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Will the use of the postage stamp for the excise tax be absolutely prohibited?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: After the first of October. I move the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move the third reading of this Bill now. I will give the reason why.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think we had better go through it in Committee. There are some explanations to be made and my honourable friend can make them on the items as we go through them in Committee much better than he could now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will accede to that request. I realize that under the resolution of the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) we laid down what we claimed to be our right as to amending money bills. As we have not claimed under that resolution the right to increase the burden of a Bill, or to appropriate money, or to reduce a tax Bill which has been voted by the Commons, we could not move to reduce the levy which is comprised in this Bill. The only object, therefore, is to impart information, and that I will do with very great pleasure; besides, it is my duty to do so. I move that this Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to.

DAIRY INDUSTRY BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 241, an Act to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

HALIBUT FISHERY BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 247, an Act for the protection of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 248, an Act to amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

INCOME WAR TAX BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 249, an Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

MONTREAL HARBOUR BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 250, an Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. this day.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Routine proceedings.

CO-OPERATION OF CANADA IN WAR MEASURES

NOTICE DROPPED

On the Notice of Inquiry:

By the Honourable Mr. David:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the questions to be discussed at the next Imperial Conference in connection with the military and monetary co-operation of Canada in the war measures which may be proposed, and will ask what position the Canadian Government intends to take in the discussion of those questions.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Honourable gentlemen, I intended to bring up this question about a month ago, but as I was then ill I had to postpone it. I had hoped that we might have an interesting discussion. Now I am told, and am convinced, that it is too late for the discussion of this matter. I therefore beg to be allowed to withdraw the inquiry.

The notice was dropped.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

THIRD READING

Bill 216, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 230, an Act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 1—stamp tax on cheques; stamp tax on bills payable on demand, etc.; stamp tax on receipts for money paid by bank; issue of cheque without stamp; penalty; receipt for money paid by bank without stamp; penalty:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: We discussed that this morning.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What change is there in this?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It reduces the stamp tax on cheques from $2 to $1 as a maximum.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why is that? Have you too much revenue now, that you want to get rid of some of it? What is the reason for the change?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I mentioned two reasons. Many representations have been made that the tax was too heavy in the case of a single transaction in which cheques were exchanged. The $2 tax was imposed on each cheque. The second reason is that it has been noticed that a number of accounts have been opened in border cities of the United States in order that the heavy tax on cheques in Canada might be evaded. The stamp tax is an experiment which Canada has been making alone, and in advance of all other countries. It has been felt by the Minister of Finance that we should accept the suggestion to reduce the maximum tax on cheques to one dollar. This may involve some loss, but there is a compensation in the greater readiness to accept the law. There have come under my own notice a number of devices used throughout the country for the purpose of escaping the stamp tax. Probably the country will stand to lose nothing by the reduction.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Are you not rather discouraging the exercise of ingenuity by the people in making this change? Another point: does it not seem like a discrimination against the small dealer in favour of the large? You have made no reduction on the smaller cheques; you still charge 2 cents for a cheque of $1, $5, $10 or $20, and it is usually for such small amounts that the ordinary cheques are written. On the other hand, you make a reduction in favour of the people who are doing large business, involving thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The large dealers have more transactions, and issue ten cheques for every one issued by the small dealers; so they pay in proportion to the operations they carry on, which are closed by cheques. All are on the same plane. Those who issue checques for current household expenditures do not have to pay more than $1 tax. People who have an income ten times larger than the average usually have to issue ten times as many cheques. Furthermore, the issue of a large cheque does not necessarily indicate prosperity or profit. It is hard to see how, by limiting the maximum tax to $1, the more prosperous people escape the obligation of paying their fair share. I do not believe it is so.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Every argument which you have advanced for reducing the taxation on cheques applies with much greater force to a reduction of the tax to the borrower. The lender of money is continually issuing cheques and under this Bill he will get off with the maximum tax of $1, whereas the borrower must pay 4 cents per 100, as in the case that I instanced this morning. A cheque issued for $1,000,000 bears a stamp tax of $1, whereas the borrowing of $1,000,000 is taxed $400. Why this discrimination? I could understand the proposed reduction if the tax on the borrower were also reduced. At the same time, I doubt the wisdom of reducing either, because, as I said before, this method is one of the least painful ways in which taxes may be extracted from the people. You have advanced no reason whatever why the borrower should be taxed so much more than the lender.

Hon Mr. CASGRAIN: The Minister of Finance in another place explained that the maximum tax should be limited to $1 because in large transactions the margin is so small, amounting to perhaps one-sixteenth or one-thirty-second of one per cent. Many transactions in which cheques must be exchanged would not be made if the tax were large. That is the reason given by the Minister—that the margin on the transaction was so small that it would not stand a stamp tax of more than $1.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is very refreshing and encouraging that at least one member of this House keeps himself au fait with the transactions in another place.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I hope my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) did not intend that as an answer.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No. The honourable leader will answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The only answer I can give to my honourable friend is that the Minister of Finance thought it would be too great a loss to the Treasury of Canada to make a reduction also on notes and drafts.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It is desirable to have the taxes made as equitable as possible. Every citizen in Canada should be willing to pay his fair share of the taxes, and no doubt we are all interested in having the taxes distributed equitably. It must be patent to every person that the tax, as it was originally, imposed little hardship as compared with other taxes. It is being reduced because of strenuous representations made from different quarters for some time past; but I think most of those representations for the reduction of this tax have come from brokers, who continually issue large cheques. It did bear somewhat heavily upon them. However, there is also the other fellow to be considered. In view of the substantial loss which the Department would suffer by this reduction, I do not think there is any reason for it at all. Last year when this matter was before the House I asked the same question, and the answer was that there was no reason for it other than it had previously been contained in the Act. As it is now, I submit that it is altogether in the interest of the moneyed man and the lender, and altogether against the poor man and the borrower.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may assure my honourable friend that if the matter comes before Council again next year I shall be happy to lay his views before the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: Can the Minister tell us whether the present Act affords any relief in regard to the cancellation of stamps on drafts that have not been accepted? I have frequently heard complaints in regard to that. I may give one instance as an illustration. On going to a bank I met a business man who complained that he had made a draft for $1,000 to which he had attached 40 cents in stamps. The draft was not accepted, but came back with the stamps cancelled, and then a cheque was sent in payment of the account, and the Government, instead of getting 40 cents, got 80 cents. His suggestion was that the stamps should not be cancelled until the draft had been accepted.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: My honourable friend has said that the Government introduced this $2 stamp tax as an experiment, and that it has been found to be impracticable. To my honourable friend as a banker it must have appeared that this was impracticable from the outset. A man in Windsor or Niagara Falls would surely do his business in the United States if it cost him only two cents per $100, whereas in Canada it would cost him four cents. What steps are taken by the Finance Department when these radical changes are made—because it is a radical tax, no other nation in the world imposing a tax of $2—to find out from bankers or business people what course ought to be pursued? This changing from Session to Session is not satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know what influenced the Minister of Finance to bring down the measure of last year. I point out to my honourable friend that it is almost impossible for the Minister of Finance, before bringing down his Budget, to solicit information from outsiders without giving the cue as to what will be his statement before the House. He must be very guarded and keep his own counsel. When he placed his Budget before the House last year there was no limit to the tax; then representations were made to him and he stopped at $2, and after one year's experience he has reduced the maximum from $2 to $1. Many people were somewhat dubious about the orthodoxy of the new tax, which was somewhat experimental inasmuch as it was pioneer work.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose a man borrowed $100,000 from the bank. The bank would give him a cheque which would bear only $1 in stamps. On the other hand, he would have to put $40 in stamps on the note which he gave to the bank. Does that not look like discrimination in favour of the lender as against the borrower? If there is any discrimination at all it should be against the lender, because he is the man who has the most money. You make the poor borrower pay not only the interest to the usurer who lends him the money, or the banker, if you prefer that term; but every time he issues a cheque for the interest he has to attach to it a stamp of high denomination.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend from Regina (Hon. J. H. Ross) remarks that the borrower will pay anyway.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is poor satisfaction. You make his burden heavier.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: That is where I claim the injustice is done. The borrower is taxed heavily, and the lender is not.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: If the borrower does not pay back, the lender gets the worst of it.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—exception from stamp tax on receipts, etc.:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: As we have not had time to peruse this Bill and give it some consideration, I would ask that the Chairman read the section so that we can follow it.

The Hon. the Chairman read the section.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What does subsection 6 mean? I see the leader of the Government is not able to answer that offhand. How could we be expected to do so?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The penalty for not putting a stamp on a receipt is $50; if it is paid before it comes into court the penalty will be $20. If the party volunteers to pay before he is brought into court, he will be freed from the lawsuit.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But if he does not?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I would like to ask whether all this procedure would apply to receipts at stores. For instance, if you have a written bill at a dry-goods store or any store, and they furnish you with a receipt, would you require to have a stamp on it?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: If it is over $10.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Suppose it was $11.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They would have to put on a stamp.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Suppose you did not pay and you went again with your bill and required a receipt, would you have to get a stamp upon that also?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is the one giving the receipt who puts on the stamp.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Suppose he says, "I will give you a receipt."

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: He has to put a stamp on it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That has been the practice in Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: And there was a great revolution against the Stamp Tax. They lost America over it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Will the leader or the assistant leader, I do not care which, answer my question with regard to subsection 6?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Subsection 6 embodies the British practice. Clause 3 is a replica of the British provision.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But you are changing it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is for the better enforcement of the Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Has the British Act been changed? Are you following the British Act?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is simply to make it conform to the British Act as regards penalties.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does subsection 8 mean that in case of criminal matters the receipt can be given although it has not gone through in accordance with the procedure? I see an exception is made of criminal proceedings. Why should not that receipt be subject to the same penalties and liabilities as a receipt offered in civil proceedings?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not understand the reason for the exception.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There must be some reason, and I am sure the Finance office have the reason within their knowledge.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will try to get the answer before the third reading.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not want my honourable friend to think that I am asking these questions for the purpose of embarrassing him, because I am not. I do not blame my honourable friend for his lack of knowledge of this Bill, which has only recently come to this House. We have had no opportunity to consider it, and therefore he is in the same position as the rest of us; he is blundering along in the dark, doing the best he can, and doing that best in his usual inimitable way. But it shows the evil of legislation being pitchforked into this House without time being allowed for members of this House to properly consider it, and I wish again to protest against that sort of procedure. I say it is treating this branch of Parliament with very little respect, to expect us to accept, holus-bolus, without consideration, legislation from the other House, which has had plenty of time to deal with it. I do not think we are called upon to follow the proceedings of the other House; we have enough to do to attend to the proceedings in our own Chamber. For that reason I say we should have more time to consider these questions if they are important at all.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I venture a possible explanation of subsection 8? The exception is in regard to criminal proceedings. I am assuming that there is a case in which it is necessary for the Crown to produce a cheque, in order to establish an offence. The Crown in that case would not be bound to produce a duly stamped receipt, because very likely none was given. That is possibly the reason for the exception in regard to criminal proceedings.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I have no doubt that is the explanation.

Sections 3 and 4 were agreed to.

On section 5—excise tax on wines; sparkling wines:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is a reduction to conform with the French Treaty that was signed lately.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Wines come in cheaper under the French Treaty, do they?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—tax on sales:

Hon. Mr. GORDON: In the case of a manufacturer of paper and pulpwood, where would the tax be payable?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If he sold to a paper manufacturer there would be no tax until the paper was paid for.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Then the tax would be paid by the paper manufacturer, not by the pulp manufacturer?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not by the pulp manufacturer.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That 6 per cent on newsprint is a great imposition, and if we had the power to do it I would move that the tax remain as it was before. Paper sells around $75 a ton, and a newspaper has to pay to the company that sells the paper $4.50, bringing the price up to $79.50 a ton. I know that it costs one paper in Montreal La Presse, $60,000 a year. Formerly the tax was $2.25.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Cannot they pass that on to the purchaser?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is the trouble with a newspaper; the publishers cannot pass it on. They could mark the price on the paper, 2 cents, and Government tax, one cent, but that would not make any Administration very popular. The paper sells for 2 cents or 3 cents.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But the advertisements sell for any price they can get. Leave them alone; they will pass it on.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They cannot pass it on. More than that, the rates on advertising are regulated, and I am told they have reached the maximum, and cannot raise them any higher.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have some pity for the poor man, but none for one whose profits are half a million a year.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: I would like to get the view of the Government on the question of lumber, which is sold net at 90 days. Suppose the lumber merchant sells a carload in June and does not get his money for 3 months, does the Government consider that the change of possession constitutes a sale, and that he has to make a return in July and remit his tax on that carload of lumber, or is he to wait till he gets his money?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that he is obliged to make his return and pay although he has not himself been paid.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Are there any exemptions to the regulation that 6 per cent will be paid on the importation of all goods? And when would that have to be paid? Suppose a person received a cargo of goods and they were entered at the Custom House, would the amount of the Sales Tax have to be paid at the time the goods are entered at the Customs House?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is a very large list of articles that are exempted in the Act of 1915, which still remain exempt, and in this Bill there are two or three additions to the exemptions.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Would the tax on those that are not exempt have to be paid on the invoice being presented at the Custom House?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My information is that the tax must be paid when the duty is paid, except in the case of licensed manufacturers and licensed wholesalers.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: But suppose there is no duty?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They pay whether there be duty or not. The tax is paid at the time of entry.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: What increase will the changes of this year make on the amount of the Sales Tax that is being levied?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It may be the same as last year. It is impossible to give anything more than an estimate.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: This Sales Tax of 6 per cent means in many cases really a tax of 8 or 9 or 10 per cent when the goods reach the consumer depending on the number of hands they go through because the wholesaler buys from the importer and adds his profit to the 6 per cent; then the retailer buys from the wholesaler and adds his profit to $1.06; and so on. So we are really paying a tax amounting to something around 7 or 9 per cent at least.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is quite correct. The consumer pays more than the 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Except in the newspaper business.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: May I inquire what precedent there is, if any, in respect to this particular form of taxation? What other countries have this form of taxation?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At the moment I can only indicate France as having a turnover tax similar to this one.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: Perhaps my honourable friend is not aware of the fact that this form of taxation was very carefully inquired into both in Great Britain and the United States, and after a very searching inquiry those countries came to the conclusion that it was entirely impracticable and did not adopt it. It is a new form of taxation, and it is an experiment in Canada. My own view is that it will not prove a success, any more than the stamp tax did, but it is a far more serious thing.

I thought the leader of the Government might make a general statement to the Senate in respect of the whole matter, so that perhaps we need not go over every single item. For instance, in subsection 4 of section 19BBB, reference is made to taking out a license and a man has to pay the Government 6 per cent on his turnover. But he might have to wait from one to six months or a year to get the money in again, and in a great many cases he would never get it at all. I would like to ask the leader of the Government if he thinks that the industries of this country upon which this tax is put are in a financial position to stand this burden. Some of them are, but there are many, perhaps the majority, that are not. An industry may be under a liability to its bank, or may be embarrassed financially, as a great many are. They may be pulling along as best they can, borrowing all the money they can, but the Government comes along and demands 6 per cent of their sales every month. How can a manufacturer pay that when he is very much involved in his finances? How can he raise the money?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But he pays the Customs duty; it is the same thing.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I listened last night to the Minister of Finance. He has brought in a Bill by which he is going to give people time to pay.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: Anybody accustomed to business knows that very often when you give time to pay you do not get your money, and the Government will find itself with a great many creditors scattered all over this country. You cannot collect from people who are more or less financially embarrassed, even though at the same time they are solvent. I believe the Finance Minister has said that the Government cancelled the legislation of last Session because they thought this would be an easier way of getting the money; but he has put the responsibility of raising this tremendous amount of taxation upon only a few industries of the country. The industries are already burdened with taxation—industries in which the Government is already a partner to the extent of 10½ per cent of their profits, if they have any. The Government has put itself in the position of a partner in every business in this country to the extent of that 10½ per cent profit, and in addition it comes along with this burden. There is no precedent for it in any English-speaking country, and I imagine that the conditions in France are so different that that country affords no precedent.

Then I turn to subsection 7 on page 6, and I do not understand what it means with respect to a man having to put up bonds of a guarantee company.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The wholesaler or jobber need not take out that license. He does so only if he thinks it is to his advantage.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is the object of it if he does not have to do it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If he takes out a license he can get his goods in the raw state, to sell to the manufacturer, and he does not pay at the time he receives those goods.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: When does he pay?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If they are sold to a licensed manufacturer he does not pay at all. The manufacturer pays when the raw material he receives is manufactured and sold.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Supposing the wholesaler does not give a bond. Must he pay then, though he sells to a manufacturer?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, he would have to pay.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And he gets a rebate?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, he gets a refund.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: The honourable Senator from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) stated a few minutes ago that the Finance Minister was bringing in a Bill whereby time was going to be given for the payment of the sales tax. I would like to know if that is the case.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: With reference to the arrears of the Business Profits Tax, I think.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I know nothing of that. I think my honourable friend refers to a Bill that will be before us this afternoon, extending the period during which the Department will collect arrears on the Income Tax.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That provides a very fine means for the introduction of discrimination on the part of the Department. Friends of the Government would be permitted longer delay.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend kindly wait until that Bill comes before us so that we may discuss it?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It has already been spoken of. That is why I refer to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But it has been spoken of in error, for it does not relate to this Bill. I do not say the error is on the part of my honourable friend; it is the error of the honourable gentleman who sits to my left (Hon. Mr. Casgrain).

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Surely the honourable leader would not insinuate that the honourable gentleman who sits to his left could do anything in error.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We on this side do not claim to be the only infallible parliamentarians.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But I think the honourable gentleman in question claims infallibility for himself.

Section 6 was agreed to.

On section 7—penalty for neglecting or refusal to pay tax; records, books and accounts to be open to inspection by officers:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest, honourable gentlemen, that any honourable member who desires a particular explanation on one of these clauses, which we cannot amend, should make an inquiry. But if we continue reading the Bill clause by clause we may never get out of Committee. Of course, questions may be put at any stage. We are in Committee in order that an explanation may be furnished on any particular clause which requires it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I was going to point out to the honourable Minister the difficulty confronting him. We have not had an opportunity to read this particular Bill. If it is too much labour for one Chairman to read the clauses, we can have the Chair occupied by relays. When we hear the text read we get some sort of glimmering as to what is intended.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I think that if you will read this over you will conclude that a person might be excused for not knowing exactly where it is intended to apply the tax. In the case of pulp and paper, I understand, the tax would be applied when the paper is sold or shipped. I would like to inquire where the tax will be collected in the case of lumber sales.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: When it is sold to a licensed manufacturer there is no tax. It is paid by the manufacturer who transforms the lumber into something else.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: What about the case in which lumber is sold to a wholesaler?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then it is liable, unless the wholesaler is licensed.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I do not quite understand that yet. If lumber is sold to a manufacturer, you say, there is no tax; it is not the duty of that lumber manufacturer to collect it; but if the lumber is sold to a wholesaler, there is a tax. Is that the idea?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: If he is not licensed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, if he is not licensed.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Surely that cannot be right.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: There is only one tax.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I know there is only one tax, but I want to know who pays it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Mr. Consumer pays everything.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Look at subsection 6, page 4, line 47:

Which tax shall be payable by the producer or manufacturer at the time of the sale thereof by him.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: But I am asking where the tax would be applied to lumber, and the reply to that question is that if the mill-man sells lumber to a manufacturer, then he pays no tax.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The mill-man pays no tax.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: But if he sells it to a wholesaler, then, it is said, the mill-man pays the tax. Is that right?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Unless as I understand, the wholesaler has a license to manufacture. Then you wait until the manufacturing process has gone on, and the manufacturer pays the tax.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: The result will be that a manufacturer of lumber cannot afford to sell to a wholesaler. Suppose his lumber is worth $50 a thousand. He would have to pay in one case a tax of $3 a thousand, and in the other case no tax. Therefore he could not sell to the wholesaler.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: Is it not a fact that 6 per cent must be paid in any case, and that the lumber manufacturer may assess that tax if he so desires; but if a manufacturer transforms the lumber into completed articles such as desks, chairs, etc., the purchaser need not pay the tax of 6 per cent, though the manufacturer must pay it. In other words, in this case the 6 per cent tax must be collected and paid either by the lumberman or the manufacturer. I may be quite wrong, but I think the safest plan for the lumber manufacturer is to assess the tax of 6 per cent on every sale he makes, except to manufacturers. True, he has to pay that over to the Customs authorities at the end of 30 days, but that will bring the transaction down to a cash basis, which perhaps may not be detrimental to the business interest after all. The ultimate effect of all this on the manufacturer of any line of goods in Canada is that he must sell his goods for cash and not on credit; otherwise he runs the risk of having to pay the Government tax of 6 per cent himself and of losing the 6 per cent and in some instances his original investment as well.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would point out to my honourable friend from Nipissing (Hon. Mr. Gordon) that subsections 6 and 7 cover the point which he has raised.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government; is it not a fact that the manufacturer of lumber or any other article can in every case assess the tax on his invoice, except where goods are intended for export, in which case of course there is no tax?

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: If he is selling to a licensed manufacturer, there is no tax, but with that exception, he must pay it.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: I would like to obtain a little more information in regard to the tax on lumber. Speaking from memory, I thnk the old Act assessed the lumber manufacturer, and the exporter is exempt from the tax. Some of the minor officials of the Department have put on it the construction that if you sell lumber for export you are bound to collect the tax, make a return, and then ask for a refund. I think myself that this construction is wrong. Perhaps the Minister might enlighten me upon this point. I think the lumber manufactured for export, and exported, is not liable to any sales tax.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

For the purpose of calculating the amount of the consumption or sales tax, "sale price" shall mean the price before any amount payable in respect of the consumption or sales tax is added thereto.

The answer is in the proviso:

Provided that the consumption or sales tax specified in this section shall not be payable on goods exported;

Section 7 was agreed to.

On section 8—failure or refusal to keep books:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Can the Minister explain this?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is only the penalty.

Section 8 was agreed to.

Section 9 was agreed to.

On section 10—Government or provincial sales; use of postage stamps:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What does that mean?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: You cannot use postage stamps for inland revenue purposes after this Bill passes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The paragraph that is struck out is subsection 3 of section 19, which reads:

3. Postage stamps of the requisite value may, in lieu of stamps prepared under subsection 1 of this section, be used in fulfilment and discharge of any requirement under this Part that adhesive stamps be affixed.

We are doing away with the postage stamp.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is, you cannot pay in postage stamps?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; you have to pay in excise tax form the 1st of October next.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I see. It is to have it in conformity with the other Act.

Section 10 was agreed to.

On section 11—schedule I amended:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What is the effect of that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It strikes out the tax on confectionery and beverages.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does it not refer to "settlers' effects"?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It strikes out all the words after "settlers' effects".

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You mean, there is no Sales Tax on confectionery?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no sales tax on confectionery. This is a special tax, which was 5 per cent. That is now taken off, and replaced by the regular 6 per cent.

Section 11 was agreed to.

On section 12—schedule II amended:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am interested in that, because in my town we have some large manufacturers of beverages. I would like that explained, if you please.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Beverages derived wholly or in part from cereals or substitutes therefor; unfermented fruit juices and imitations thereof; carbonated beverages or aerated waters; all other compounded or mixed soft drinks, per gallon.....five cents.

That is struck out and replaced by:

Carbonic acid gas, per pound.....one cent.
Provided that carbonic acid gas manufactured or produced in Canada and used in the manufacture of other products shall be deemed to be carbonic acid gas manufactured or produced in Canada and sold.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is, as I understand it, the manufacturers of beverages such as ginger ale and kindred drinks pay no Sales Tax?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They pay the 6 per cent tax; but there was a special tax that they had to pay, and it is removed pro tanto.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do you charge them on carbonic acid gas?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is, what they use of that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What they use.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: In addition to the 6 per cent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When it is sold by the manufacturer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: When he sells the gas?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That would be, for instance, a manufacturer who charged a drug store for the retainers? Is that what it means?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 12 was agreed to.

On section 13—when sections 1, 2, and 3 come into force:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That refers to the new stamps.

Section 13 was agreed to.

On section 14—when sections 6(2)b, 11 and 12 come into force:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is the idea in having that come into force on June 1st, when it is being considered now, on June 28th? Is that date, June 1st, the time the Bill was introduced?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The first clause repealed is the one which fixed the maximum stamp tax at $2. Now that it is being reduced to $1, the provision which made it $2 is repealed by section 13. The clauses referred to in section 14 cover the exemptions that were added.

(b) The said paragraph four of subsection one of section nineteen BBB is further amended by adding thereto the following items:
"manuscript; raw furs; wool not further prepared than washed; drain tiles for agricultural purposes."

These exemptions come into force on the 1st day of June, 1923.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is, you have one part coming into force the 1st day of June and the other part coming into force—when?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The stamps come in only on the 1st of October.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And something else comes into force in August?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Sales Tax on the 1st of January.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: By instalment. Was that to let the public down easily, or what was the purpose?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is in order to meet new conditions.

Section 14 was agreed to.

On section 15—when section 10 (2) comes into force:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the imposition of the Excise stamp instead of postage.

Section 15 was agreed to.

On section 16—when sections 4, 6 except (2)b, 7, 8, 9 and 10 come into force:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is this?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The 6 per cent Sales Tax.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It does not come into force until the 1st of January?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You are still carrying on business under the old Act to the 1st of January.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: In case goods are bought and paid for but not delivered and still at the point of shipment to the 1st of January, 1924, what will be the tax?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This provision will be in operation on the 1st of January, so until then the present Act applies.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Then, goods bought and paid for but not delivered previous to that time will come under what tax?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The present tax will be collected.

Section 16 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 231, an Act to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act, 1913.

He said: There is an Act under which two savings banks in the Province of Quebec operate—the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, and La Caisse d'Economie de Notre-Dame de Québec. Like the Bank Act, this Act must be renewed every 10 years.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It is simply the renewal of their charters.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, for another 10 years.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why could they not have the same charter as the other banks? Do they do business as savings banks?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The conditions which govern their operations are totally different. They are not commercial operations. The right is given to them to receive deposits and place them, according to enactment, upon more conservative security than the commercial institutions.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I suppose the honourable Minister is perfectly familiar with these banks.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I know of their operations.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: They are in a good sound condition, I understand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have heard that they are.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXPORT BILL (PULPWOOD)

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 242, an Act to amend the Export Act.

He said: This Bill gives power to the Governor in Council to prohibit the export of pulpwood—

> Of the variety, kind, place of origin, or having the particulars of identification or ownership or production described in the regulation.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Is that a regulation already passed or to be passed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To be passed.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I doubt the wisdom of the Government taking authority to prevent the export of pulpwood. We all know the Provinces helped out the country considerably by preventing the exportation of pine and other woods without their being manufactured into lumber. But that is a different proposition altogether, because there is not much occasion for that export, as the lumber can be manufactured by very small manufacturers in this country to better advantage than it can be shipped away.

In respect of pulpwood I would just say this—and I only speak of that portion of the country which I know. In Northern Ontario there are large tracts taken up by settlers who every winter are engaged in making pulpwood, and who sometimes cannot get as good a price from the paper manufacturers as they can get by exporting it. Therefore they take advantage of the best market and export it. I would further say that if they do not cut the pulpwood and export it, it invariably gets burned and the country derives no benefit from it whatever, and the settler is held back. It appears to me, therefore, that it would be very injudicious for the Government to interfere with the exportation of pulpwood. They certainly will get into trouble.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I agree with what the honourable gentleman says, but I do not think there is any intention—at all events, not immediately—to exercise that power; but it is understood that the Government will take that power and it may be used as an offset in bargaining for certain things with the adjoining Republic. It seems to me that if I had pulpwood on my farm and wanted to sell it no Government would have the right to interfere.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is only the export.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: It is a peculiar thing for the Government to take to itself powers which it never expects to exercise.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Governor in Council may by regulation prohibit the exportation of pulpwood. I have this statement of the Minister of Finance:

It is to give the government power to make regulations having in view the prohibition of export of pulpwood. It might be a general prohibitory regulation with out any qualification, or a regulation prohibiting export under certain conditions. For example, it has been suggested that it would be wise and expedient to exempt farmers who have pulpwood to clear off their land. We have not any plan in detail. If a plan is evolved we might put it in operation in a general way or subject to qualification; this would be a matter for further inquiry. The wording of the resolution implies that it may be desirable to distinguish between quality and character of wood.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: At the present time the Provinces do not allow it to be exported in the raw state from licensed lands; the settlers, of course, have that right. Do you say the Government is taking authority to prevent that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Minister of Finance says:

It is argued that the forests are becoming destroyed, that we need to put on some general restrictions, and particularly that this is a very valuable article that we need at home. There is much to be said on both sides of the question, but generally speaking the argument is that we should use it at home instead of exporting it. I am giving the current view on the subject; just how far we may act on this resolution is a question that remains to be considered.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There has been too much exportation of pulpwood from this country, and, owing to that exportation in large quantities, and owing to the fires that unfortunately have taken place in the forests of this country, they are being rapidly denuded and the matter of forest protection is becoming a serious question. If it is necessary that the rights of individuals should be invaded in the public interest, it should be done, because we are very largely dependent upon water-powers in this country, and will be more dependent upon them when our population increases in time to come; and the protection of our forests means the protection of our water-powers. If you destroy the forests you have no reservoirs for the water. The water flows to the sea, destroying the denuded lands as it flows. Parts of China and Spain have been almost destroyed for the same reason; and the same was true of India until a system of reforestation was undertaken by the British Government. In my own Province and in the Province of Nova Scotia the land, if left to itself, will become reforested. It is not necessary to do any planting, as perhaps it would be in the Province of Ontario and in the West. I am strongly in favour of any legislation which will tend to protect the forests of this country, and I hope the Government will exercise their power, or, if necessary, will take power to bring about that protection.

Hon. F. B. BLACK: There is just one objection that I have to this measure, and that is that it does not go far enough. The prohibition of the export of pulpwood in Canada is no new thing. Quebec, New Brunswick, Ontario, and British Columbia have prohibited the exportation of pulpwood from Crown lands.

In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick we have a very good illustration of the effect of such legislation. In the Province of New Brunswick we have been able to establish very important industries, which are growing and being added to year by year, by retaining the pulpwood in our own Province. The reverse side of the shield is seen when you look at our neighboring Province of Nova Scotia, the Government of which has not taken similar action in that respect. In that Province they have not had the same industrial development that we have had along that line. Their lands are now almost entirely in the hands of owners in the United States, who are cutting pulpwood off the Crown lands and privately-owned lands and taking it into the United States for manufacture. It is true that if you put a prohibition on the export of pulpwood from privately-owned lands, you apparently create a hardship; but, after all, that hardship exists more in the imagination of those opposed to it than in the facts.

We have now a very large number of mills established in Canada making pulp and paper. The amount of pulp in sight for those mills is not nearly as great as their circulars advertising their stock and bonds for sale would indicate, and many of them will have to look to privately-owned lands to keep their operations going. Therefore there will be a market for the pulpwood cut on privately-owned lands, and where a cord of pulpwood brings $10, $12 or $16 a cord after it is put on the cars, it would mean $60 or $75 to the people of Canada if it were manufactured into pulp and paper in the Dominion. It is time we used our own resources in our own country, and stopped exporting them to our neighbours across the border. As long as we give them our pulpwood, they will take it; but I say, let us manufacture it in our own country and get the full benefit.

Hon. IRVING R. TODD: I am sorry I cannot agree with my colleague from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Black). I know that what he says about there being a number of pulp and paper mills in New Brunswick and none in Nova Scotia is true. The reason for that is plain. New Brunswick has plenty of water-power, and Nova Scotia has almost none.

I am quite familiar with the pulp and paper business, and I know that you cannot manufacture pulp or paper unless you have large water-power. In New Brunswick we have three paper mills at present, and the bulk of the wood that is going from New Brunswick is from the southern counties. Not one of those mills can afford to buy wood that is being shipped out of the country. If you are going to interfere with farmers' wood, it means that he must sell his wood for $3 or $4 a cord less than if sent to the United States, because the wood has to go to Bathurst, Edmundston, and possibly as far as St. John. That is the position as far as the farmer is concerned.

There is a strange thing about this campaign against the export of pulpwood, and that is, that there has been a very vigorous campaign in favour of it in Canada. I know the managers of two or three of the mills of New Brunswick, and they are both opposed to an embargo on the export of pulpwood. The president of one of the largest pulp-mills in Canada voted against this resolution in the other House. The reason is that the pulp and paper business here is in a very prosperous condition. They can compete successfully with the American mills if there are no retaliatory measures. Timber-land owners in Canada are not asking for this, certainly, because it is going to diminish the value of their property. The only interest that is going to make a large amount of money by an embargo on the exportation of pulpwood out of Canada is that of the timber-land owners in the United States. I know one large mill in the United States that, on the quiet, is one of the strongest advocates of an embargo on the exportation of pulpwood out of Canada, for the reason that they have surplus wood; for as the price of pulpwood is reduced in Canada by an embargo, just by that amount it would increase in the United States. There is no more reason for prohibiting the exportation of wood than there is for doing so in the case of pulp, because the difference between the labour used in shipping wood and that used in pulp manufacture is not much greater than the difference as between the making of pulp and of paper, and no one advocates the exportation of pulp.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: I do not like to disagree with my colleague and room-mate, the honourable member from Milltown (Hon. Mr. Todd); but of those two mills to which reference is made, one is interlocking in its management and ownership with the pulp interests of the United States, and they would naturally object to have any prohibition, because they are working together. It would be equally reasonable to expect those whose business it has been to export pulp in the raw state to the United States to see only one side of the question. If you listened to the argument of the owners of private timber limits, some would want prohibition, and some would not. I personally being an owner of private timber limits, want to see the export of pulpwood shut off. I am perfectly willing to take the loss if it comes at present, because I believe we shall gain in future.

Hon. Mr. TODD: The companies I mentioned in New Brunswick were two Canadian companies. They may have American capital; I know nothing about that; but they are not interested in any way in the pulp and paper industry on the American side.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I happen to have some experience in that branch of business, and I cannot agree with what the last speaker has said. It is well known that the value of timber limits held by Americans—and there were a great quantity of them—was decreased when the legislation was enacted by the provinces preventing the export of pulpwood from those limits, because the United States is interested in using pulpwood and the export of pulpwood to the United States tends to give value to the owners of limits. I know that a large number of factories and a great amount of capital from both the United States and England were imported into this country for the purpose of building up the pulpwood industry, and I am sure it would tend to foster that industry very much if the prohibition provided by this Bill were put into effect. It is only proper, after capital has been induced to build up factories in this country, that our forests should not be depleted to the advantage of rival companies in the United States.

On the other hand, I appreciate the argument which has been advanced by the honourable gentleman from North Bay (Hon. Mr. Gordon), that the interests of the settlers must be considered. If restriction of that kind were imposed it would tend to reduce the price of pulpwood. In putting into effect such a regulation the Government should see that it is done in such a way that it will not bear too heavily upon private owners of forest lands.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

FINANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 245, an Act to supplement the Finance Act, 1914.

He said: The object of this Bill is to renew what is called the Finance Act of 1914, under which the Government is authorized to make advances to banks as against certain securities. The Act was adopted as a war measure, and no doubt was exceedingly useful in the financial operations during the war. It may be said that the war being over we no longer have any need for the Act, but experience has shown that the Act is still required. On the day we would abandon it we would very likely need to enact some other legislation on the same line, and such interests as the present Act covers and protects would need a permanent Act such as this in our financial system. The Americans have the Reserve Bank Act.

Under the Act as it stands to-day, the Act as passed some years ago, the Government are authorized to advance to the various chartered banks, and to the banks mentioned in the Act, sums of money as against certain securities not specified but left to the judgment of the Treasury Board. Any securities of which the treasury board may approve can be accepted for the purpose, and the Government can make advances against them. The Bill simply renews the Act but is a little more specific: Instead of leaving the whole matter to the Treasury Board the Bill will indicate the classes of securities upon which advances should be made. The securities of the higher class beyond all question are acceptable. Then we come to the class of securities as to which there may be more room to question. We do not need any particular advice or consultation respecting the standing of the higher class of securities—the high class Imperial Government securities the Dominion Provincial and municipal securities; but there is also a class included in the general expression of what I may call commercial securities.

When the Act was passed it was probably not contemplated that those commercial securities would be used. The Act was designed to serve another purpose. But there is no machinery in the Finance Department for making inquiries into the character of securities of that class. We do not need any machinery to know the value of certain high class securities. We can all easily ascertain the value of these; but when we come to what are called commercial securities, commercial paper and securities like that, machinery for determining their value does not exist. The Minister of Finance says that although it is a mere matter of opinion, originally it was not intended that these securites should be used in a large way. However, they are to-day a part of our financial system and there is a growing feeling, perhaps, that there should be some method of rediscounting such as this Act provides for. Having in view that class of securities we might be seeking the advice of somebody who is competent to advise. The Department of Finance has no section that would determine that value, and in this Bill it is proposed that the gentlemen who are trustees of what is called the Central Gold Reserve Institution, which was pretty largely discussed in the Banking and Commerce Committee, shall be deemed an advisory committee, and that we shall have the right to ask their advice. They are not to control the matter, but the Department may at any time seeks their advice as to the character of the securities that are offered.

Another portion of the Bill relates to the proclamations by which the export of gold is forbidden. We propose, for the present, to continue the power to prohibit the export of gold, with the addition that, if at any moment it may be deemed necessary, that power may be waived and the export of gold continued.

These are the main features of the Bill which is now before us, the second reading of which I have moved.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do you put all municipal securities in the first class?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Clause 2 says:

At any time when there is no proclamation in force under the authority of paragraph (a) of section four of The Finance Act, 1914, the Minister of Finance (hereinafter called "the Minister") may make advances to the chartered banks and to the savings banks to which The Quebec Savings Bank Act, 1913, applies by the issue of Dominion notes upon the pledge of the securities hereinafter mentioned:

(a) Treasury bills, bonds, debentures or stocks of the Dominion of Canada, the United Kingdom, any province of Canada, and of any British possession;

(b) Public securities of the Government of the United States;

(c) Canadian municipal securities;

(d) Promissory notes and bills of exchange secured by documentary title to wheat, oats, rye, barley, corn, buckwheat, flax or other commodity;

(e) Promissory notes and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes and which have been used or are to be used for such purposes.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Does that extend the present list?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course it remains at the discretion of the Minister, as to the amount to be advanced, and even as to the value of the securities under this clause.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But as to the classes of securities, are they the same as those on which advances have already been made under the Finance Act, or are you adding new securities?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I understand that there are no limitations under the law as it now is, but under this amendment there will be limitation.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Then it is restricting?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, restricting.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Act authorized the making of advances to chartered banks, etc., by the issue of Dominion notes on the pledge of securities deposited with the Minister in such kinds and amounts as might be approved by the Treasury Board.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is not an answer to my question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The present Act gives the indication that we find in clause 2, which I read.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But I want to know if you put all municipal securities in the first class?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: There is no first or second class.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand there is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; the memorandum of the Department explains that there are securities that can be called first-class securities—that need no special investigation, like Imperial, Dominion and Provincial securities; but there are others that will need investigation, and the Treasury Board passes upon those which could be placed in the second class as compared with the first. But in the Bill there is no such distinction.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But you read "municipal."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And that they were in the first class.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, of course there are municipals that are in the first class; there are others that are not, and there are even some that are not even in the second.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And a very bad third.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And some that would not be taken at all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You are only asking for an Advisory Board to advise with regard to those securities that are not in that list. I understand that on some securities the Finance Department does not require any information, because it goes without saying that those securities are all right; on others it does require information. I understand from the Minister that municipal securities were of the class that are called gilt-edged, but I was just going to point out that there are a few municipal securities that are a little shaky.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suppose the Finance Department is fairly aware of that situation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I hope so.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Willoughby in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—advances by issue of Dominion notes on pledge of securities:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would like to ask the honourable Minister the explanation of paragraph e:

Promissory notes and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, and which have been used or are to be used for such purposes.

That seems very indefinite. How do you earmark those?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is allowed to the Department of Finance to make advances on such notes, but with the safeguards that are contained in the other clauses.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The advance is made to the bank upon the deposit of those securities.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: But what is the meaning of "agricultural"?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable member will see that it is explained somewhat in section 11, which says:

No advances shall be made against the pledge of promissory notes or bills of exchange issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other securities, and no advance shall be made against promissory notes or bills of exchange, the proceeds of which, when issued or drawn, were employed on capital expenditures of any kind, and the Minister may direct the trustees to make enquiry and report as to whether any notes or bills offered in pledge fall within the prohibition of this section.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That only explains a few things. But suppose a farmer borrows the money from the bank? Can the bank take it to the Government and rediscount it? You are making a rediscount bank out of the Government. I have no objection to that; I think this rediscount bank is a rather good idea; but I cannot attach any meaning at all to paragraph e. A farmer or anyone else —a barber or a haberdasher—may borrow $1,000 from his bank. Can the bank rediscount that loan? As to these other items, we know what they are. If they are examined properly it will be seen that they have something behind them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think that section 11 bears on the question. Paragraph e mentions "promissory notes and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial or commercial purposes."

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Would the honourable gentleman give me an example of a bill drawn for agricultural purposes?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One for the shipping of wheat.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, for advances that have been made in the fall. In fact, the Act was passed largely for the purpose of providing for moving the crop.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: But paragraph d, immediately preceding, provides for "promissory notes and bills of exchange secured by documentary title to wheat, oats, rye, barley, corn, buckwheat," etc. The farmer shipping in the fall has his crop to put up against his note.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is limited to bills accompanied by documents; but the next paragraph goes beyond that. It refers to notes or bills which need not be secured by a warehouse receipt; whereas under paragraph d the promissory note or bill of exchange must be secured by the warehouse receipt.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: It does not say that: it says "documentary title."

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is what is meant by "documentary title."

Hon. Mr. ROSS: It might not be. That is only one of the forms of documentary title.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: There is provision in a section of the Bank Act regarding a lien on an article without a warehouse receipt; but paragraph d is confined to the promissory note that is secured by documentary title, that is a promissory note that is secured by a value against which it was drawn.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: I understand that, but what I am trying to find out is the meaning of paragraph e. The preceding paragraph is perfectly clear, and I have no objection to it, but I would like to know what is the meaning of the terms "agricultural purposes" and "to be used for such purposes."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They cover paper which may be held to be first-class commercial paper and may be taken as security for advances.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: But there is no collateral provided for. They are rediscounted notes and bills that are made by a single individual or by a company without any security at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No doubt about that.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: This is a good farmers' bank, I think, from the look of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The bank may offer the best paper that it has in its vaults, from the best firms, and the board may, after looking at the paper, advise that it is paper upon which an advance can be made.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: The banks will have no excuse hereafter for not lending to farmers all the money they want, because the farmers can say to them: "You can rediscount with the Government."

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But the honourable gentleman drew attention to section 11 just to show that the promissory note must not represent investment of capital.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: That makes it all the worse, so far as I can see. The farmer may spend that money in travelling, or at the circus. It would be far better for him to put it into capital on the farm.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not see why an attempt has been made to classify promissory notes or bills of exchange as agricultural, industrial, and commercial. It is very difficult to conceive of any promissory note in connection with anything outside of these three classes mentioned in paragraph e. Why attempt to make a distinction? It is not plain. I think I see my honourable friend's (Hon. Mr. Ross's) difficulty.

Hon. Mr. DONNELLY: I do not think the clause is any inducement to banks to advance money to farmers or take notes for agricultural purposes. The bank becomes the endorser of the note. If the man is no good, the bank loses the money. The banks will protect themselves and will not make any advances without proper security.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: It is far better to put in a general statement that the Government can rediscount any note that the bank offers to it. You need not mix up the matter at all.

Section 2 was agreed to.

Section 3 was agreed to.

On section 4—documents may be forwarded with commodities:

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not see why that is merely optional? Why should it not be obligatory? If there are any documents validating or supporting any security, they should be produced with the security itself. I think it should read, "shall permit... to go forward."

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is because of its application to bank practice. Sometimes it is not practicable to have the note accompanied by the bill of lading. The bill of lading follows the goods, and the document is sent by a bank to another bank, in England or the United States, to make the connection.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And in that case—

The bank shall be a trustee for the Minister, to the extent of the advances, of the proceeds received for such grain or commodity.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is all right.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—maturity of promissory notes pledged:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Sections 5 and 6 seem to conflict. Clause 5 requires that the pledged bills shall not have longer to run than six months from the time they are pledged, whereas clause 6 provides that the term of the advance may be twelve months. If the pledged bills are sufficient to pay the note, it will be paid in six months instead of running for a year. Does the Minister see the point that I am trying to make?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The advances are not limited to promissory notes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But they may be made on promissory notes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And why should not those promissory notes run the same length of time as the loan? That is the point. Suppose they are made for six months and the loan is for a year. The note will be paid when only half the term of the loan has expired. There will be that much of the payment made; so it is not really a loan for a year.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I understand that the loan, in so far as it is made on promissory notes, cannot be made for more than six months.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is it exactly.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But it may be made on other security.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course it may be made on other security; but why should not the promissory notes to be pledged be confined to notes that have only six months to run? Why should they not be coterminous with the loan?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is because the notes are documents in the hands of the bank. They may be made for three months or for six months. Section 5 says that those notes against which the Department will advance money will have to have definite dates, independent of the advance which is made by the Finance Department under clause 6, dealing with "term of advances and interest," that is, advances made by the Department of Finance against notes, drafts, etc.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Exactly. I understand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Department will advance for a year, but it takes securities that may be of different terms and may mature before the twelve months.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: May, of course. Why confine it to notes that do mature before the maturity of the document?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But clause 5 does not go that far. It says:

All promissory notes or bills of exchange when pledged pursuant to this Act shall have a maturity, exclusive of days of grace, not later than six months from the time at which they are pledged.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But the note for which they are given as collateral security has an extent of twelve months.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; it is the advance by the Department of Finance that must not go beyond twelve months.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is the advance I am thinking of. I suppose that advance is covered by a note, and these notes and goods are put in as collateral. Why should not the notes put in as collateral have the same length of time to run as the document that covers the loan? Or why should they not go that far if necessary?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: May I inform my honourable friend that he will find that banks very seldom have notes of even six months duration, and the chances are that most of them are for three months or under. So they could not possibly give over notes of that long term. They can give only what they have.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: After the very lucid explanation given by my honourable friend the legal gentleman from North Bay, I will say no more, if he cannot understand what I have tried to make clear.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: In reply to my legal friend from Sussex, or from Ottawa, may I say I was only endeavouring to do my duty in setting him right, he seemed to be so badly mixed up.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He is not mixed up.

Section 5 was agreed to.

Sections 6 to 15, inclusive, were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

COPPER BOUNTIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 189, an Act respecting the Payment of Bounties on Copper Bars or Rods.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, what I have to offer in explanation of this Bill is the illuminating explanation given by the Minister of Finance himself.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is the illumination a bright and shining light?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think it is. The right honourable member from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) asked me for an explanation of this Bill. The Minister of Finance says:

We have been asked from time to time to do something to encourage industries of various kinds. Where these applications take the form of a request for higher duties, the problem is not an easy one. One of the difficulties of such a situation is that there are many items in the tariff which cannot stand alone for consideration; they are closely related to one another. The article which is the finished product of one man is practically the raw material of another, perhaps of several others. If you increase duties to assist the first man, you disturb the whole scale and all the others will expect compensatory increases.

Of course, I am not giving that information to my right honourable friend, for he has heard that statement before.

Industrial aid of this kind naturally meets with widespread objection. There is another form in which it may be possible to assist industry without the disturbing results I have mentioned. The granting of a bounty simplifies the case. Many people, willing to see industry aided, would prefer the bounty rather than protective duties, especially if the bounty be of a temporary character and placed on a sliding scale. One merit of the bounty system is that you know precisely what you are paying and can compare the cost with the results. We have given careful consideration to requests made to us on behalf of the copper interests of Canada. Canada is a copper-producing country. Our for western province, British Columbia, is rich in this respect. Yet the copper industry has made but moderate progress. There is a duty of 1½ cents per pound on copper in the form of ingots. A very large enterprise has been established in British Columbia which is encouraged by this duty. The next stage of the copper business is the production of bars and rods, which become the raw material of other manufactures, such as the making of wire. Copper bars and rods are the raw material of wire manufacturers. To assist them, these bars and rods were some years ago placed on the free list for the use of manufacturers in their own factories. All these bars and rods are thus imported free. Neither of these copper products is produced in Canada for the reason that our producers are unable to compete with large manufacturing enterprises in the United States. We sympathize very warmly with the desire to have a larger development of the copper industry in the Dominion. Since a duty on bars and rods would probably necessitate increased duties on the manufactures of a number of articles made from copper, we are unwilling to grant aid in that form. We have concluded that if the copper industry is to be encouraged as we would desire, it will be better to deal with it directly in the way of a bounty than by higher duties on that which is the raw material for other factories. I said that a bounty will be regarded by many as a better form of aid than any increase of protective duties. But even a bounty would be objected to with much reason if it were not of a temporary character. Much has been heard in times past of the importance of assisting infant industries. Most folk will be kindly disposed towards the industries while they are in their infancy. But experience has shown that the infant grows up, and when he has attained to all the strength of manhood he is still found clinging to protective duties and claiming that he cannot live without them. A new industry which is to have that kind of experience is not a very desirable one for the country. An industry based upon the natural resources of the Dominion which wants a helping hand at the beginning and is prepared later to rely on its own strength and character is worthy of consideration. We propose to afford a measure of help to the copper industry of Canada on the condition that that help shall take the form of a bounty, that the amount of the bounty shall be held within proper limits and that is shall be reduced from year to year until it is extinguished. We propose to allow a bounty for a period of five years, beginning at 1½ cents per pound and diminishing from year to year until the end of the five-year term. The bounty will apply to copper bars and copper rods manufactured in Canada, from copper produced in Canada, and sold for consumption in Canada, and not to include exports. The privilege now granted to manufacturers to import copper rods and bars for their purposes free of duty will continue. What we desire is that the aid we are giving will enable the Canadian producers to compete as he has not been able to compete before with their American rivals and that they will get a reasonable command of the market. We are placing a limitation of $200,000 per annum upon this bounty. At the beginning the industry will not earn anything like that. As the time rolls on it will probably earn that much, but when it gets to its highest point it cannot get more than $200,000 in any one year.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Who is the author of that essay on protection?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Minister of Finance.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

He said: As the Bill simply affirms the principle, and specifies the amount of the bounty, I would suggest that we take the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

COMPANIES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE

Hon. Mr. FOSTER presented the report of the Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 190, an Act to amend the Companies Act, and moved the adoption thereof.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I wish to suggest that clause 21 be further amended. Since the Bill was passed by the Committee it has occurred to me that this provision could be very much improved. I do not object to the principle embodied in the clause. We all know that operations in mining are very uncertain; to a certain extent they are a matter of guesswork. A mine may have an appearance of great value, but a month or two later it may be found to be of very little or no value at all, and it is known that under such circumstances the capital of the company, so to speak, is distributed in dividends.

I would like to guard against parties interested in such companies making use of this legislation for the purpose of increasing the market value of their stock, and perhaps selling it at a high price after having distributed a large amount in dividends, which they have pocketed, leaving the purchasers with nothing at all. To guard against that I would suggest that the clause as adopted by the Committee be amended by adding the following:

No such dividend shall be paid unless the announcement thereof is given to the shareholders by letter addressed to each shareholder at his last known address at least two weeks before the date fixed for the payment of said dividend, and unless such notice mentions that such dividend is paid under the terms of this section; and such notice shall have inserted therein the full text of this section.

This is to enable the public to know the nature of the dividend—that it is a dividend paid under this section. It will put the people on their guard, and then they may do what they like.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Under that proposition, what constitutes a sufficient advertisement in the press? If the notice goes to the shareholders, they all know; but "the press" may be just one inconsequential newspaper.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I say "to the shareholders or through the press." The company will be at liberty to announce it either through the press or to their shareholders. If it is announced by circular to the shareholders, that is sufficient.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: My honourable friend hardly gets my idea. If a circular goes to the shareholders, the circulation will be just as wide as the shareholders; but if the press option is chosen, to what extent must it be advertised? The advertisement might consist of a line or two in some obscure paper, but that would not carry out the object of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Of course, it must have the same circulation as the announcement of the dividend.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: It would be attached to the dividend notice.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I therefore move that the report be not now concurred in but that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of adding to clause 21 of the Bill the proviso I have suggested.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I see that section 21 as it appears in the Bill itself refers to a mining company or any other companies whose assets are of a wasting character.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is amended.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I was going to ask the reason why. Take, for instance, a company which is formed solely for the purpose of dealing in lands, and whose profits are constituted from the sale of lands—a company with wasting assets; it is surely not the intention to prevent such a company declaring dividends out of its capital, or out of its receipts, which are receipts of capital.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The amendment proposed by my honourable friend will be of some value provided a time is fixed when the announcement is to be made. I understand that what my honourable friend wants to accomplish is to inform the shareholders in time so that they may take proceedings to prevent the payment of the dividend.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No. It is to protect the public. I am afraid that this section will be used for the purpose of unduly raising the market value of shares, and that after the dividend has been distributed the shares will be worth nothing in the hands of the purchasers. It is to prevent fraud of that kind.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It seems to me that this legislation is uncalled for and in advisable. It will put it into the power of a board of directors more or less to fob the public if they want to; it will facilitate their doing so; it will legalize it; and will put them in a position in which, as my honourable friend from De Salaberry has said, they can pay out the money from the treasury in dividends, with the result that the stock probably will rise in value.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: They might sell that stock.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Big holders will sell out their stock to the general public, who will find that the mine is played out and the cash in the treasury dissipated, and they will get little or nothing for their shares.

The amendment of the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) is along the right line; but I do not think it will accomplish anything in its present shape, because when the company sends a notice to every share holder, what is to prevent it mailing those notices in such a way that the shareholders will never get them? The Bill does not provide for the notices being registered or anything of that kind. It also gives another option—that of putting a notice in the newspapers. As my honourable friend from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has pointed out, that newspaper may be some little backwoods paper that not one shareholder in a hundred will see.

So that if this amendment is to have any effect at all it must be changed. To my mind the whole thing is wrong; we are making it easy for a Board of Directors who wish to be crooked to carry out their designs on the general public.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: It will go about as far as we can go in warning the shareholders. The terms as to notice in a paper might have to be further defined, but the proper plan for it would be in a notice of dividend.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend add to his suggestion that this notice shall be given say two weeks in advance or whatever time may be required to enable anyone who wished to object to it, or even take legal proceedings, before the dividend was actually paid.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: The learned member who drew the amendment is more competent to do that, and the dividend notice is always given two or three weeks before the dividend is paid.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Is the intention to pay a dividend to shareholders really out of capital?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Mining companies must necessarily pay a dividend out of proceeds of what they are taking out of the ground. It is the opinion of the Government lawyers that they can do that as the law now stands, but this section provides that they cannot do it if they have not sufficient assets to pay their debts. When I heard the suggestion of the honourable gentleman this morning I was very much taken with it, but on reconsideration I doubt whether it is necessary. I am told that the Hollinger mine, for instance, is careful to state to their shareholders at every annual meeting how much they have paid in dividends, by way of reminding them that pro tanto they are reducing their assets.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We want the other mines to follow the same good practice.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: But do not make an amendment that will tie the matter up so that they will not know what to do. I do not think there is any necessity for that amendment, but I am not going to oppose it. I think that the practice of the Hollinger mine, and the knowledge the people have when they are going into a mining enterprise, would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: This appears to me to be legislation of a very dangerous character. For instance, take the paper business, you might classify that as of a wasting character.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No, that term is confined to mining companies.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: But a mining company might figure that they had assets sufficient to meet their outstanding liabilities, and yet there might be accidents that would change that condition. I think when any company is allowed to impair its capital we are travelling on dangerous ground.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: You cannot help it. From the day a mining operation starts it is eating up its capital. A coal company has no capital but a block of coal in the ground, and if they pay a dividend this year, pro tanto they have eaten up their capital.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: But any company starting business must start with money capital.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That capital has been used to buy the mine and the machinery, and sink the shaft. The chief cost of a coal mine is in sinking the shaft; it will cost four or five million dollars; but the shaft is only a hole in the ground, and the only asset is the coal.

Hon. Mr. GORDON.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: To my mind we are passing legislation that is very bad, and this is one effect of bringing legislation down in the last days of the Session. I think no interest would suffer very greatly if this matter were left over till next Session. But if we are going to pass it now it ought to be made clear that the shareholders will know what is being done. I listened this morning for an hour to what was said here, and I do not know now what the section means, and how will a shareholder understand it?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable gentleman and myself think very much alike, and I was trying to give effect to his idea. Companies of that kind are of such a nature that they cannot state what proportion the balance after payment of dividend may represent.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Beique was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Willoughby in the Chair.

The amendment proposed by Hon. Mr. Béique was agreed to, and the Bill, as further amended, was reported.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Foster, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

At six o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at 8 o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE BILL

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. PARDEE moved concurrence in the Report of the Special Committee to whom was referred Bill 102, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, together with the amendments thereto.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman who is the Chairman of the Committee will explain the amendments.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is not necessary.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: If the House desires it, I shall be very glad to do so.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The amendments are long and numerous. Should we not have an explanation?

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Honourable gentlemen, Bill 102, which was referred to a Special Committee, has been very carefully examined by the Committee and certain changes have been made therein. The purpose of the first and second sections of the Bill, as we have been advised by the Department of Justice, is to bring the Code into agreement with the provisions of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. These were not particularly discussed by us, because we considered that what the Department had advised ought to be done.

The purpose of section 3, as set out in the Bill, was to prevent Canadian newspapers from publishing certain news with regard to betting. It was also desired by the amendment that all other publications should be likewise prevented from supplying any information regarding betting. That prohibition would include American newspapers. The Committee came to the conclusion that it was absolutely impossible to shut out from Canada American newspapers containing the information that the Bill was intended to prohibit.

It was suggested by Mr. Shearer, who appeared before the Committee, that all forbidden news should be blotted out with a brush or blue-pencilled, and that anyone sending newspapers containing such news, not so blotted out or erased, should be liable to punishment I think the House will agree with me that it would be absolutely impossible to carry out that suggestion. How would it be possible to shut out about 200 newspapers that are now coming to Canada daily, or prevent them from publishing the odds on horse-racing and information as to weights, etc.? The attempt to exclude them would have this result, that Canadian newspapers must not be allowed to publish such information, and at the same time there would be American newspapers coming in with such news; consequently the prohibition would operate to the detriment of Canadian papers. It appeared therefore, to the Committee that even if it were enacted and Canadian newspapers were thus forbidden to publish such news, we would be powerless to keep out American newspapers, unless we closed the mails to them, and the evil would not be abated in the slightest degree.

Another great evil, in the opinion of certain newspapers, was the publication of "Racing News." That is a publication which comes in from Buffalo and contains nothing but racing news. The Committee were unanimously of the opinion that it ought to be shut out from Canada, so far as possible, and we have made a provision to this effect. The Committee do think, however, that it is an absolute impossibility to shut out news regarding racing and odds on racing, and so long as we have not, or do not desire to exercise, the power to shut out American newspapers, the evil would not be one whit lessened. The Committee were also of the opinion that, even if the newspapers were shut out, there would be nothing whatever to prevent forbidden information from being disseminated by radio all over the country. In regard to section 3 of the Bill, therefore, the Committee decided to recommend that it be not adopted.

We come now to section 4, relating to the age of consent. The purpose of this section was to raise the age from 14 to 16. I shall not discuss the arguments on that question, but the Committee unanimously came to the conclusion that this year, as in former years, the section ought to be rejected.

The next clause of the Bill, section 5, deals with girls between the ages of 14 and 16, and proposes to strike out of the existing section the words "of previous chaste character." After long discussion and serious consideration by the Committee, it was decided that the amendment was not desirable and ought to be rejected.

Section 6 refers to persons gaining admission to race meetings or getting on railway trains, steamboats, etc., and proposes to insert the word " badge " after the word " ticket." The proposed amendment goes on to provide that any person who gains admission to a performance or amusement, or obtains passage on a railway train or steamboat by wearing a badge falsely shall be liable in the same way as those who falsely present a ticket.

Section 7 of the Bill proposes that section 1024A of the Criminal Code be amended by adding the words "or acquittal" after the word "conviction." In this connection the Committee thought that the proposed amendment would add to the Criminal Code a feature which might be extremely dangerous and ought not to be approved, and, we ask that this matter be left in abeyance until such time as the Law Officers of the Crown reach a decision as to the best means of carrying out the purpose in view.

Section 1024A says:

> Either the Attorney General of the province or any person convicted of an indictable offence may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from the judgment of any court of appeal setting aside or affirming a conviction—

Then the amendment comes in, "or acquittal"—

> —of an indictable offence, if the judgment appealed from conflicts with the judgment of any other court of appeal in a like case.

It was thought that the insertion of the words "or acquittal" might result in a prisoner who had been acquitted being brought up on appeal and tried over again. The Committee therefore decided that the proposal would make this provision of the Criminal Law too broad and that it consequently ought to be stricken out.

Certain new clauses have been added to the Bill. New clause A reads:

Paragraph (g) of section 235 of the said Act, as the said paragraph is enacted by section 13 of chapter 16 of the statutes of 1922, is hereby amended by inserting after the word "contest" in the fourth line thereof the words "or any result or contingency of or relating to any contest."

That was added for this reason. Mr. Shaw, member of Parliament for Calgary, appeared before the Committee and pointed out that there had been published in Calgary, and perhaps elsewhere in the West—I do not remember where—a certain sheet relating to football matches in the old country. That paper had been found to be illegal. After having been precluded from publishing that news, the publishers issued a statement to the effect that they were content to publish the odds on what certain football teams and other teams would do in the ensuing year. This sort of thing was bound to be a source of great evil, and much money was lost in that way. It was simply an evasion of the law, and Mr. Shaw asked that the Committee take this matter into consideration. The Committe did so, and has decided to add the clause that I have quoted.

Then there has been added new clause B. The honourable member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) can perhaps explain that better than I can. The original section sets out to what extent racetracks may deduct percentages on each race. In his opinion and, I believe, in the opinion of many racing associations, the clause was not clear as to how much might be deducted over a certain amount mentioned in the original Bill. Therefore the Committee have added the following new clause:

Where the total amount staked or deposited is under $20,000, 7 per cent; over $20,000, 7 per cent on $20,000, and on the excess up to $30,000, 6 per cent.

which I think the House will very readily grasp, is just what is desired.

Then, we have new clause C, which says:

Section 242A of the said Act, as enacted by chapter 13 of the Statutes of 1913, is amended by inserting the words "upon indictment or" after the word "liable" in the first line thereof.

I have here an explanation given by W. Stuart Edwards, Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice:

The purpose of the amendment is to remove a doubt which exists as to whether the provisions of the recent Supplementary Convention with the United States by which the offence of wilful desertion or wilful non-support of minor or dependent children was added to the list of extraditable crimes can be made effective in Canada. The offence covered by the Treaty is contained in section 242A of the Criminal Code, as enacted by chapter 13 of the statutes of 1913, and is punishable on summary conviction. Since the ratification of the Supplementary Convention representations have been made that the Treaty applies only to indictable offences, and that in order to make the Supplementary Convention effective it is necessary that this particular crime be made an indictable offence in Canada. While the question is not free from doubt, it is not unlikely that this view would be given effect to by the courts, and it is considered advisable, therefore, to amend section 242A so as to make this offence punishable upon indictment as well as upon summary conviction.

After having heard the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, the Committee felt quite justified in accepting the advice of the Deputy Minister of Justice and recommend the enactment of that legislation.

Then we come to clause D. We have had letters from the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Manitoba stating that it was the wish of the Government of that Province to do away with the Grand Jury. I understand that neither Alberta nor Saskatchewan have grand juries, and it is the desire of Manitoba to be in the same position as those Provinces, and the Committee passed that recommendation.

Then, we have new clause E, which I would ask the honourable member for Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans) to explain. Last year he introduced a Bill in this House which was thoroughly threshed out and passed. We have simply embodied that Bill in this report so that it may appear in a more uniform way.

There is another new clause which we have added, and which I desire to read. It has to do with the question of prohibiting the publication of what is known as racing news or racing tips in the Dominion of Canada. This clause was added, although the Committee was not absolutely certain that it would accomplish what was desired:

For clause 3 substitute the following:

"3. Section 235 of the said Act is hereby amended by adding to paragraph (f) thereof the following:

(ii) imports or brings into Canada any matter, whether printed or in writing, which from the nature of its contents or from other evidence adduced which is not a newspaper published in good faith mainly for the purpose of supplying news and comment, other than information intended or likely to promote, assist in, or be of use in gambling, bookmaking, pool-selling, betting or wagering upon any race of any kind, fight, game or sport whether held within or without Canada and whether published before, during or after such race, fight, game or sport; or is not a magazine or other periodical published in good faith mainly for the purpose of supplying literature and comment, other than such information as aforesaid; but is intended or likely to afford such information as aforesaid."

These are the recommendations contained in the Report on Bill 102, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, which the Committee has unanimously decided to present to this House.

The Report was concurred in.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. PARDEE moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 248, an Act to amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is a Bill of one clause. It reads as follows:

1. Subsection three of section thirteen of The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, is amended by striking out all the words after the word "liable" in the second line thereof down to and including the word "payable" in the third line thereof, and the words "within the said three years" in the seventh line thereof. The said Act shall be construed as if the words struck out by this amendment had never been contained therein.

If the Senate is agreeable to this amendment, clause 3 will then read as follows:

Any person liable to pay the tax shall continue to be so liable, and in case any person so liable shall fail to make a return as required by this Act, or shall make an incorrect or false return, and does not pay the tax in whole or in part, the Minister may at any time assess such person for the tax; or such portion thereof as he may be liable to pay, and may prescribe the time within which any appeals may be made under the provisions of this Act from the assessment or from the decision of the Board.

It will be seen that any person liable to pay a tax would continue to be liable for the period of three years from the time when such tax was payable. Three years have elapsed since the Act came into force, and out of $200,000,000 that was assessed under this legislation there is $8,000,000 still outstanding and to be collected.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: On profits tax alone?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On business profits war tax alone. By far the larger part of this $8,000,000 that is still outstanding comes within the three-year period; but there are a certain number of persons whose assessment has been unpaid for three years. When the Act was passed we set a prescription, so to speak, of three years, feeling that that was a long enough period for the Department of Finance to collect the tax. Yet some arrears are apparent, and it is sought to do away with that time limit so that the persons who have been owing the debt for the last three years, and who under the present law would have been freed from further liability, will fall back among the live debtors of the State, and collection will be possible. It is felt that it would be unfair to those who have made payment that these people should be free of liability. It may be argued that we are depriving these people of an acquired right. When Parliament fixed that time limit of three years, it did not immediately free the debtor from paying his debt. Because a date is fixed in our laws up to which a creditor will have the right to exact payment of a debt, it does not mean that the debtor upon the arrival of that date is immediately free from his obligation.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: There are cases that have not been mentioned by the honourable leader, in which people who were taxed have questioned the law and defended their rights. How are they to be affected by the retroactive legislation?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are not at all affected by the Act. Their rights are reserved. Of course, if one had been sued after the expiry of the three years, and he had pleaded estoppel, his defiance could not avail him, since we are giving retroactive effect to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Take the case of a farmer's company, who owed the Government $1,000 on this account; the three years elapsed a month ago, and in the meantime before this Act was passed, the company had sold all their assets. Would the Government be out then?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We have a French saying that where there is nothing the King loses his rights. I suppose that will apply.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would ask that we take the third reading without going into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 250, an Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

He said: We last year voted an authorization to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to expend the sum of $5,000,000. They are before us again to-day asking us to authorize them to spend $10,000,000 on works which they feel are absolutely needed if the port of Montreal is to function properly and receive and expedite the crops of the West, and other merchanidse that reaches that port from the interior and the exterior.

I need not repeat what I have had occasion to say before—that the Harbour Commission of Montreal is prosperous, that it meets its charges in interest and amortization, and has still a surplus. The Commissioners feel that they would be reproached for not furnishing the necessary facilities if the work that they are called upon to do did not meet the demands of the trade as it developed. They would prefer developing ahead of the trade, but they have not been able to do so. They are just meeting the exigencies of the day.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What is the total amount advanced up to the present time?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: $31,000,000 guaranteed—not advanced.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The total amount authorized for advance on loan to date is $37,250,000. The last Act passed last year authorized $5,000,000. The total expenditure on improvements to date on items such as harbour, piers, dredges, buildings, electric freight hoist, grain elevator system, etc., up to December 31, 1922, was $35,733,000.

Hon. Mr. REID: What rate of interest will the Harbour Commission pay for this loan?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Section 5 of the Bill says 5 per cent, payable half-yearly.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You are not borrowing money for them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: What, in a general way, are the betterments to be made in Montreal?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The whole programme is as follows:

1. Cold Storage Warehouse.. .. .. $350,000
This amount is to cover over-expenditures already made over the approved estimates, and is simply required to reimburse the Commissioners for this expenditure.

2. Railway, Victoria Pier to Queen City Wharf.. 237,000

(a) Elevator No. 3, (yard).. .. $85,000
In connection with proposed elevator No. 3, Tarte Pier, there is an expenditure of $85,000 to provide railway tracks in and around the elevator (yard).

(b) Shore wharf tracks, Sections 27 to 30.. 18,000
During 1922 the Commissioners extended their high level wharf a distance of 1,687 ft. from section 27 to section 30. This wharf is now being filled to proper length and upon it the Commissioners propose to lay railway tracks, without which, of course, the wharf will be useless.

(c) Pius IX subway extension.. 15,000
In providing tracks to elevator No. 3 for connecting trackage, it is necessary that an embankment above the present pier level be provided, upon which to lay the trackage. This embankment continues past Pius IX Avenue, and, if a subway were not provided, would block access to the port in that district.

(d) Aylwin Street subway extension and ramp.. 78,000
The explanation of item (c) also applies to this item.

(e) Richelieu Street subway ramp 12,000
The explanation of item (c) also applies to this item.

(f) Completing Papineau Avenue ramp.. 29,000
On account of the raising of sections 27 to 30, referred to in item (b) above, it is also necessary to extend the ramp in this location; extending from low to high level application.

3. New track work, McGill Street to Victoria Pier.. 200,000
Between 1918 and 1922, the Commissioners electrified their railway system between Victoria Pier and the Eastern terminus of the port at Montreal East, out of the appropriation of $500,000. An amount of some $40,000 was left at the end of 1922 with which the Commissioners are presently electrifying the railway on the Victoria pier and the tracks connected with elevator No. 2, so that the railway traffic to that elevator will be electrically operated at the opening of navigation 1923.

It is the desire of the Commissioners to complete the electrification of all the high level tracks in the port, and when they came to consider the electrifying of that portion between Victoria pier and McGill Street it was found that the rails and track work were in such condition that practically an entirely new set of rails would have to be laid in that section. The rails at present in service are 85 lb., and half of them require to be renewed at once. The Commissioners are asking for an appropriation of $200,000 to relay this, the most intensely operated part of the port, in 100 lb. rails, which will be electrified at once, thus saving the bonding of the old rails and the rebonding of new rails in the course of twelve months or so.

4. Paving and track extensions:.. 131,000

(a) Paving at Elevator No. 3. $21,000
This is to provide a paved roadway 50 ft. in width in front of proposed elevator No. 3 from the subway at Aylwin St. to Pius IX Ave.

(b) Paving at new sheds, section 29.. 11,000
This covers paving of the roadway on the new high level wharf from sections 27 to 30.

(c) Paving at sheds Nos. 24 & 25, to Papineau Ave.. .. .. $27,000
Since 1914, when sheds 24 & 25 were put into operation traffic to these sheds has been over rough macadam road, which has now been chewed to pieces by the heavy traffic in that vicinity. The Commissioners, having completed the paving of the harbour, in front of the cold storage warehouse, from McGill Street to shed 24, now propose to carry on this paving programme in front of sheds 24 and 25 down to the present high level.

(d) Paving Bickerdike Pier.. .. 42,000
Bickerdike pier is utilized for the receiving and delivery of much the larger part of all coal which is handled in the port of Montreal, and no roadway. Up to the present time, no permanent roadbed has been provided on this pier, the traffic on which has increased very greatly during the past couple of years, and particularly during the past six months since the beginning of the construction of the mill of the British Empire Lumber Corporation at the extreme end of the pier. The amount provided is to build and pave a roadway 30 ft. wide from the in-shore end of the pier to its extremity.

(e) New tracks on Bickerdike Pier.. 30,000
This amount is to provide new railway tracks on the pier,—extensions from the present Grand Trunk Ry., for lease by the Harbour Commissioners to the allotees of the pier,—required by the different coal and lumber companies, which of course, will be rented to them at the rate of $2,000 per mile per annum.

5. Electrification of railways.. 766,000

(a) Overhead catenary trolley system, 20 miles high level tracks extensions, including track bonding.. .. .. $139,000
The amount of $139,000 is required to complete the overhead equipment for the electrification of about 20 miles of highlevel tracks, i.e. the portion between McGill Street and Victoria pier, including the length of piers, as well as the electrification of all the new railway lines and storage yards, required in connection with the proposed grain elevator No. 3.

(b) Railway Power House Equipment.. 115,000
In the Power House at present, attached to the cold storage plant, are sufficient generator sets to operate two electric locomotives on the main line between Victoria pier and Montreal East. It is now the intention of the Commissioners to operate four electric locomotives, which will require the installation of another generator set to double the capacity of the present equipment, which will cost $115,000.

(c) 5 Electric locomotives and charging set for batteries.. 355,000
This item is self-explanatory.

(d) Power transmission lines.. .. 44,000
These lines are required in connection with the enlargement of the Grand Trunk Railway elevator where additional power is required, and also for the transmitting of power to the ships berthing at both Windmill Point wharf and the Bickerdike pier, as well as for the operation, electrically, of the sawmill and timber mill at the end of the Bickerdike Pier. It also covers the erection of a line to the harbour mechanical shops on the Mackay pier, which it is intended to also operate electrically.

(e) Sub-stations at Nos. 1 and 3 Elevators, Elevator "B" and Bickerdike Pier.. 75,000
These sub-stations are required in connection with the increased loads placed upon the harbour power lines through the erection of the new elevator No. 3, and the enlargement of the Grand Trunk Railway elevator, as well as the operation of the ships and timber plant in the Western section of the port.

(a) Machine shops (Mackay Pier) 12,000
The amount of $12,000 required is for the providing of motors, etc., for supplying power in the mechanical shops on the Guarde pier.

(g) Series lighting circuits, wharf extensions.. 26,000

Covers electric lighting circuits required on account of the extension of wharves in different parts of the port.

6. Dredging and filling in general.. 300,000

Inserted in the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Co., for the transferring of their elevator to the Harbour Commission is a clause to the effect that the Commissioners will deepen the Windmill Point basin for two berths to a depth of a least 30 ft. This basin has a rock bottom and varies at the present time from 25 to 27 feet of water on the North side, or the side upon which the elevator facilities exist. It is the intention of the Commissioners to blast and dredge this basin within the next two years to the extent of about 2000 ft., or four ships' berths, which will cost in the neighbourhood of $300,000.

7. Bickerdike Pier Approach.. 500,000

Some years ago an amount of $500,000 was appropriated for the dredging of the channel approach to the Bickerdike Pier. The amount appropriated having become exhausted, the Commissioners apply for a like appropriation of $500,000 to cover this work for the next two years. This work is absolutely necessary in order to obtain fill to complete the lengthening of the high level pier, as well as the high level wharf, from sections 27 to 30 and its continuation, already authorized, to be carried out during 1923, as well as for the construction of the railway embankment leading to and from the proposed grain elevator No. 3, upon which the tracks serving that facility are to be laid.

8. Shore wharves—Sections 38-42.. .. .. .. $1,700,000

(a) New quay wall.. .. .. .. $1,500,000

The Commisioners are providing elevator No. 3 with five shipping berths, four on the Tarte Pier and one at the shore wharf, section 45, i.e.—between Tarte and Sutherland Piers. The wharf from sections 37 to 42 is low level and in a dilapidated condition. The Commissioners propose in the next three years to raise this extent of wharf 2,500 ft. in length to high level so that both transit sheds and conveyor galleries may be erected on it to be served from elevator No. 3.

(b) Filling up to elevation.. 200,000

Provides for the filling at the rear of the new quay wall for the proposed high level, referred to in item (a).

9. New Transit sheds, and extension of existing Transit Sheds.. 1,735,000

(a) Three single storey sheds, sections 26 to 30.. .. .. .. $400,000

On the Tarte pier, at the present time, are four single storey sheds presently occupied by the Hudson Bay Company, the Elder-Dempster Co., operating services to South Africa and the West Indies, as well as by the New Zealand Company and the Ellerman-Buchanan Co. line, operating services to New Zealand and Australia. None of these lines carry grain, and it is proposed, in view of the construction of elevator No. 3 in the vicinity, to provide sheds, three single storey on the new high level from sections 27 to 30 for these services, which will permit of cargo lines taking general cargo and grain to be substituted in their stead at the Tarte pier.

(b) Extensions to sheds, Jacques Cartier Pier.. 475,000

This amount is to extend the sheds on the Jacques Cartier pier. These sheds are required at once. Applications for them have already been received from the Headon-Hughston Lines, as well as from the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, both of which companies cannot accommodate their vessels or their business in the space which the Commissioners have been able to allot to them for 1923.

(c) Extension to sheds, King Edward pier.. 460,000

(d) Extension to sheds, Alexandra pier.. 400,000

These amounts are to provide extensions to sheds on the King Edward and Alexandra piers, lengthening of which piers will be completed during 1923. In view of the fact that some time will be required for the settlement of the fill in the extensions to these piers, these appropriations can be left over for another year.

10. Works in connection with elevator No. 3.. 483,500

(a) New Jetty.. .. .. $430,000

(b) Embankment for tracks leading to elevator.. 53,500

In the original specification of elevator No. 3, it was provided to unload one lake vessel at a time lying along the bulkhead wharf in front of the elevator. The original plans have now been amended by the Commissioners, in view of the large number of lake vessels being constructed in the diffrent shipyards at the present time, to provide a jetty in front of elevator No. 3, at which two lake vessels can be unloaded at the same time, each vessel having two travelling marine towers to unload its grain.

The $430,000 covers the construction of this solid jetty, built solid on account of the travelling marine towers which operate upon it, as well as the fact that that a tunnel has to be constructed throughout its length to take the grain from the marine towers to the grain elevator.

The $53,000 covers the cost of the embankment for the tracks leading from the present lines of railway to and from the new grain elevator.

11. Saw mill and timber shed, Bickerdike Pier.. 175,000

This amount is to provide for the construction of a concrete sawmill and timber shed on the Bickerdike Pier, to be leased to the British Empire Lumber Corporation upon completion, arrangements as to conditions of lease having already been made

12. Elevator No. 2, extension of jetty & conveyors.. 75,000

This amount covers over-expenditure on the jetty and conveyors built during 1922 opposite elevator No. 2.

13. Windmill Point development.. 2,150,000

(a) Purchase of G.T.R. Elevator "B".. .. .. $1,100,000

(b) Extension to present annex to elevator, increasing storage capacity by 1,252,000 bushels, adding new Marine leg to working house, and providing 1,600 ft. of conveyor galleries to four additional berths.. 750,000

(a) and (b) are self-explanatory and are in accordance with agreement with the Canadian National Railway.

(c) Underpinning 2,000 ft. of existing wharf.. 300,000

This amount covers the underpinning of the Windmill Point wharf in front of the Grand Trunk Railway elevator and new conveyor galleries.

14. Industrial wharves.. 300,000

Is an item of $300,000 to cover an industrial wharf which is shortly to be expected to be called for within the next three years.

15. Water mains and drains.. 50,000

This is to cover the installation of water mains along the Bickerdike Pier, as well as in connection with the extension to the G.T.R. elevator and proposed grain elevator No. 3, as well as in connection with the wharf between sections 27 and 30 already raised to high level, and the continuation between sections 30 and 33 already approved.

16. New pier below Sutherland Pier, 1,200 ft. long, 300 ft. wide, built to elevation 107°, including dredging for pier foundations.. 1,350,000

This pier is to provide accommodation for the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery and other industries in Maisonneuve which are now handling their business over the low level Sutherland pier, which latter pier is to be hoped will be raised to high level in future. Before work, however, can be done on the raising of this pier, it is necessary that some other location be provided upon which these industries can handle their business, hence the provision of a new pier in this connection.

Total.. .. .. $10,502,500

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I am quite satisfied.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend say what supervision is exercised over the carrying out of the works in question by the Government of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is under the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Are estimates submitted to the Government, and are the works approved by the Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And are they carried out under the supervision of the Government?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Everything is done under Government specifications.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: To what extent does the Government make inquiry into the manner of expenditure?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Those estimates are received in a general way, indicating what works they will cover, but when they are prepared to do some extension or other work under those estimates they must obtain the approval of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who submits the estimates and obtains an Order in Council sanctioning the expenditure.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is there any rule that the work is to be let by tender, or what is the method?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are works which would be carried on by tender and contract, but there are very many others that are done by day work.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Are the charges on shipping for wharfage and storage very heavy, or not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not think I have the data.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They are sufficient to pay the interest on all the bonds, and for all the work, and leave a surplus. It is not like that in any other port that we know.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How will it be in the case of the $10,000,000, because that will add, for interest alone, some half million dollars a year, and then a sinking fund will have to be provided.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, but there will be additional receipts for that, I am authorized to answer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I will accept your answer without an authorization.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: At the foot of the current they are now building an elevator which will be capable of holding 10,000,000 bushels, and as building now costs a dollar a bushel for labour and material, the whole $10,000,000 will be eventually spent. They are developing now for 2,500,000 or 3,000,000 bushels, and this elevator will be extended to the full 10,000,000 bushels, so that a greater part of the money will be expended on that elevator, which is badly needed. The congestion that made all the trouble about lake freight was caused by the boats having no place to put the grain last year. That resulted in congestion at Port Colborne, and caused all the trouble that the people are having there now.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How much sinking fund do you provide for?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I cannot answer that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I might say that there is the sum $1,100,000 provided for the purchase of the Grand Trunk Railway elevator, which will come under the estimate.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is bought from the Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That belongs to the Government.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What percentage will be provided for sinking fund?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not that figure.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Is it expected that this $10,000,000 expenditure will enable the Harbour Commission to handle the grain from the West and from the United States as quickly as it should be handled?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They will develop enough now to take care of the grain, and they will be able to keep ahead all the time, so that there will be no congestion for many years to come.

Hon. Mr. SMITH: How much has been set aside for interest and amortization fund?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The Government simply guarantees the bonds. The Government has never been out of pocket one dollar for the harbour of Montreal. The dues have always provided enough to take care of all the money that has been guaranteed by the Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In answer to the honourable gentleman from Wentworth (Hon. Mr. Smith), I will say that I do not see any statement in the memorandum furnished me, except that the payments on the debt and the amortization fund have been regularly made, according to the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the other Chamber, which I read this evening.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I was sorry to hear the honourable member for De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) state that this $10,000,000 expenditure would make the port of Montreal efficient for many years to come. I should hope that the growth of trade would be so great at the metropolis of Canada that this $10,000,000 would not do for more than two or three years, so that we would be called upon again and again. The trade at the port of Montreal is the trade barometer of Canada, and I am very sorry that my honourable friend takes such a limited view.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: With the regulation of rates under the Bill we passed, the grain may all go to Buffalo now, so that we may have space to spare in the port of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will inform the Harbour Commission of Montreal of the happy state of mind of my honourable friend from Sussex (Hon. Mr. Fowler).

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Belcourt in the Chair.

Sections 1 to 6 inclusive were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

INCOME WAR TAX BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 249, an Act to amend the Income War Tax Act, 1917.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is submitted for the purpose of bringing the Act into harmony with the change in the Income Tax which has been made recently Instead of explaining each clause at the second reading, I will defer the explanation until we go into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Taylor in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say, honourable gentlemen, that these amendments are mostly declaratory of the practice of the Department. Those which alter present conditions refer mainly to appeals, and have been submitted to one of the Judges of the Exchequer Court for his opinion. The proposed changes have been endorsed by that Judge, who has had considerable experience in this matter.

On section 1—income to be not less than income from chief occupation:

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: I understood the honourable leader of the Government to say that in this Bill there is no change in principle—that it related rather to the interpretation of former Acts. Is that the position?

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—restriction on deductions; outlay of a capital nature not allowed:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This merely declares the law and does not vary the practice of the Department.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Suppose that bad debts were incurred. Ought they not to be a proper deduction from the profits of a business?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is a reserve allowed for bad debts.

Sections 3 and 4 were agreed to.

On section 5—pensions:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is an addition. What is the effect of it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is this addition:

"or to any member of the military, naval or air forces of His Majesty's allies," and by inserting after the word "forces" in the fourth line thereof the following words: "or in the forces of His Majesty's allies."

The reason for the change is to grant equitable treatment to persons resident in Canada who served or whose husbands served, in the Great War.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is, then, for Canadians who served with the Allies?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It applies mainly to widows and to soldiers who were resident in Canada and who served during the war in the armies of the Allies.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: It makes them eligible for pension?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Section 5 was agreed to.

Sections 6 to 9, inclusive, were agreed to.

On section 10, new section 25—taxes to be a lien:

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Section 25 provides that the taxes shall constitute a lien. I have no objection to that: It has a priority over all other liens in favour of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As against the subject.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes. I am not objecting to that. What provision is there for registration in so far as it affects real property?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no provision for registration.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The public should know of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is the general practice throughout the world that no registration is needed for a lien of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I do not want to detain the Committee for more than a second. You have enunciated the principle of the priority of the rights of the Crown as against those of the subject, without registration. Take the case of a lien on real property. In our provinces in the West, where the Registrar of Land Titles issues a certificate of title, which gives a guarantee by the Crown subject to such conditions as are mentioned, how is the purchaser going to protect himself?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: He has to find out.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: How is he going to find out?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He would have to inquire of the Government, just as he would inquire of a municipality.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: This would apply in the same way as it has always applied.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It might be impossible to put through a property transfer.

Section 10 was agreed to.

On section 11—When provisions of Act come into force:

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The retroactive effect of this section might cause an injustice to a person who had good grounds for a certain interpretation of this Act. He may have been right in his interpretation of the existing Act, and the claims which he may make are perhaps absolutely legal, but this proposed amendment cuts the ground from under him by placing a new interpretation on the Act and making it conform to the interpretation placed upon it by the Tax Inspectors.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I inquire of the honourable leader of the Government, what is the reason that the effective dates referred to in this clause range all the way from 1917 to 1924. The first subsection makes section 1 of the Act retroactive to 1917. There must be some good reason for making legislation retroactive for six years.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I would like to emphasize what the honourable gentleman has said. We have people who are right in their contentions as against the tax inspectors or tax levyers. By this retroactive clause a person who is now correct in his contention may be put in the wrong, and be deprived of his legal standing. That is very bad legislation, and legislation which would be resented by the country generally.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The statement which I have from the Department is to the following effect. There have been a number of amendments made at various dates to the Act of 1917. The amendments now proposed are intended to be retroactive only to the date of the amendment:

(1) Section one of this Act shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1917 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to subsequent periods.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: This does not change the position of those who may have had claims under the various Acts.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That perhaps explains fairly the reasons why the different dates appear. But does my honourable friend think that it is good legislation to change a statute by making its effect retroactive for six years? Take, for example, the Criminal Code, which we amended an hour ago. Suppose we were to say that the amendments were to be retroactive in their effect for six years. It would appear ridiculous, it seems to me.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But I think there is no comparison to be made between the two cases. Here is a debt which should have been paid and was not; perhaps because the party liable was not duly informed or was granted a delay. At any rate, he should not, in fairness to other persons who are taxed and have paid their taxes, be allowed to escape payment. It is a debt to the Crown. As has been stated by the honourable leader of the Government it is a moral debt that still exists, notwithstanding the delay which was not supposed to prevent the collection of the tax, but was considered to be sufficient to enable the Government to collect it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: But if the taxpayer pays his taxes in good faith and in compliance with the law in force to-day, is it fair to call upon him six years later to pay six years' arrears of taxes simply because the law is changed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may inform my honourable friend that there is no such case. Any legislation which would increase the obligation of the subject by a retroactive clause would be bad, but this is simply to maintain and preserve the rights of the subject in absolutely equality with those of his fellow citizens.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Oh, no, that is not so. We must not pass this section on that interpretation, because it is not correct.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is the information I have from the Department.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Well, the information is wrong. You are making this retroactive for six years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Give us one clause as an example.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is what I am trying to do if you will let me. Subsection one makes section one of the Income War Tax Act of 1917 retroactive, as my honourable friend from Welland (Hon. Mr. Robertson) has said, for six years. Now, what does it authorize the Minister to do?

1. Paragraph (f) of subsection one of section three of The Income War Tax Act, 1917, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(f) In any case the income of a taxpayer shall be deemed to be not less than the income derived from his chief position, occupation, trade, business or calling, and for the purposes of this Act the Minister shall have full power to determine the chief position, occupation, trade, business or calling of the taxpayer. Where a taxpayer has income from more than one source by virtue of filling or exercising more than one position, occupation, trade, business or calling, then the Minister shall have full power to determine which one or more, or which combination thereof shall for the purpose of this Act, constitute the taxpayer's chief position, occupation, trade, business or calling, and the income therefrom shall be taxed accordingly and the determination of the Minister exercised pursuant hereto shall be final and conclusive."

That means that the Minister may to-day reopen every one of these cases even though payment has been made and say, "You have not been properly assessed; we are going to start de novo."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will read to my honourable friend the original section:

(f) Deficits or losses sustained in transactions entered into for profit, but not connected with the chief business, trade, profession or occupation of the taxpayer shall not be deducted from income derived from the chief business, trade, profession or occupation of the taxpayer in determining his taxable income, and the Minister shall have power to determine what deficits or losses sustained in transactions entered into for profit are connected with the chief business, trade, profession or occupation of the taxpayer, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

The proposed Amendment does not vary the present practice of the Department. The phraseology of the present provision is rather obscure and infers that capital losses connected with the taxpayer's chief business may be deducted in determining profits, which is contrary to the intent and spirit of the Act. Further, the present provision does not give the Minister power in so many words to determine the taxpayer's chief business.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: But you are making that retroactive. Under this the Minister can reopen every single case that was settled six years ago, and alter completely the result of the assessment.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I can give a concrete case that would exactly apply. Take a dispute in which the person taxed was formerly clearly within the law. In the application of the proposed law to the condition existing in 1917, that person would be put out of court.

The motion was agreed to.

On the preamble:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman to look at section 15, the notice of dissatisfaction. It strikes me there is something wrong there. It says:

In re the appeal of of the of in the Province of stating that he desires his appeal to be set down for trial and shall forward therewith a final statement of such further facts statutory provisions and reasons, etc.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the taxpayer is dissatisfied, he gives notice of appeal to the Minister of Finance who answers his appeal. If he disagrees, then, the notice of dissatisfaction follows.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: He gives notice of dissatisfaction "in re the appeal of" etc., "stating that he desired his appeal to be set down for trial." That is the notice. Then he is to forward the final statement. If it were a new sentence after the words "for trial," I think I could make sense out of it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Suppose there are cases at times in which the appeal succeeds.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that there are many of them, which may give us some encouragement.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS CONSTRUCTION BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 234, an Act respecting the Construction of Canadian National Railway Lines.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it is some time since we have had a Bill of this character before us for review. I do not remember when we last voted to add to our railway system, and I realize that many have been under the impression that we had a plethora of railways, and that it would be some years before we would feel the need of adding to our present mileage. But there are stern realities which we must face, and, I hope there are enough members of the Senate who, coming as they do from all parts of this country, will confirm this statement, as they know the conditions and necessities of their respective provinces.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Your hope is likely to be realized.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is absolute need for a number of railway branches throughout the West, and a few in the East, not only to draw population to the regions which they will serve, but to retain in those regions the population already there. It will be seen that in the majority of these cases several miles have already been graded. The work already done and to be executd, I will be able to state when we go into Committee.

I am informed that some of the lines have been graded for some time for the purpose of following up and serving a population that had gone into those regions in the expectation that the railways which were promised would soon follow. I am also informed that some of the people who have been waiting and waiting for the railway have been discouraged and are leaving those regions. If there are districts in the West that should be developed, regions where the land is good and which are capable of maintaining a fairly large population, and if they need these branches in order to retain their present population and to attract more population, I would take it for granted that these branches form part of the whole scheme of development of the Canadian National Railways, tending to increase our area of production through immigration.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: These things we have heard of for 25 years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will be for each member of the Senate who has a greater knowledge than others of any particular region to bring in his testimony, because it stands to reason that a member from New Brunswick will know very little of conditions in Saskatchewan, or that a member from Prince Edward Island should not be expected to know very much about conditions in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Or any other place.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am approaching this question with an open mind. The Senate has within it men of experience who know the needs of the country. When I looked over the list of branches to be developed or completed, I saw just one small branch that I knew of, and I said, "This one branch is a necessity." It was at my door.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will explain what it is, and if each member of the Senate who has a personal knowledge can bear testimony as to the necessity of the branch in his district, I will feel that the case is made and that everything is going on smilingly.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: So would the rest of us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In order that my honourable friends may understand my point of view—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is quite apparent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will give this illustration. There are some 60 miles of railway belonging to the people of Canada that start two or three miles from the town of St. Jerome in Terrebonne County, and run from there into the interior of the County of Argenteuil. I visited this region in my first attempt at politically evangalizing the population. I was 17. In that region I met the Hon. Sir John Abbott, who was Prime Minister of Canada, and there I made my maiden speech. As the population was bilingual—and I must confess I am not very proud of the English I speak now, but I positively murdered the language then—I spoke in English against the ex-Prime Minister of Canada. But I got even when he started speaking French. Later on I used to meet Mr. Abbott, and I confess that I felt a feeling of pride when he recognized me on the street. This region, which some 40 years ago was undeveloped forest, is dotted with lakes, and is a splendid country for summer resorts. The people of Montreal have invaded that region.

Last spring I was with the Minister of the Interior, who happened to be the member for Argenteuil, when he received in Montreal a delegation, headed by a good friend of mine who is a member of this Chamber—and who does not sit behind me—representing to the Minister the necessity of building 12 miles of railway. He said: "We have 60 miles of railway that belongs to the Government of Canada. The railway brings trainloads of residents from Argenteuil county to the junction near St. Jerome; there is a considerable movement of freight and passengers and it is a paying line. Yet, when it comes to within 30 miles of Montreal the passengers are dumped off at a small station and handed over to the C.P.R., which carries the freight and passengers to the City of Montreal, while the main line of the Canadian National Railway is within about 12 miles of that station." I see in his seat my honourable friend the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Reid), who agreed that there should be a line linking the Canadian National branch with the main line at that point.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Does my honourable friend mean that it would parallel the C.P.R?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; the Canadian National Railway parallels the C.P.R. running to Montreal or thereabouts; but a link is necessary to connect that 60 miles of railway running to St. Jerome with the main line passing near by. An attempt was made to build it; the ballasting was done, the ties were bought and distributed along the line; yet here are the people of Montreal still going up to these regions by the hundreds and having to use the C.P.R. part of the way as far as St. Jerome so as to connect there with the C.N.R. branch line. It would be good policy and good business to build that line, in order that those 60 miles of railway could be linked up to the main line of the Canadian National railway for the purpose of providing a through route and a through rate between that region and Montreal. It seemed to me that that was a work that was commendable.

If there were before this House only a demand for the completion of that link in order to save the money invested in the roadbed and the cost of the ties, I would support it. That is the only part of the branch lines that I know personally.

The project is to vote an authorization for the construction of these branches on a plan to cover three years. I will not go into the details of the Bill, but I submit the proposition. It is said that those branches are absolutely necessary to serve the populations that are already there, and have been waiting for them for a considerable time. I know nothing personally of the absolute need of those various branches, but this program comes to us from the Canadian National Railway Board. This is the Bill we have before us. Will it make for the creation of feeders to our railways, and help to bring to them prosperity through increased population? It is for the honourable gentlemen who know most about those various lines in the West to express their views.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: May I ask if the Government has been furnished with information from the Board of National Railways as to the necessity for those railways?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have in my hand a memorandum that comes from the Railway Board, and I quote from the Minister of Railways in another place the following words:

What I have submitted is the Canadian National board's programme, as handed to me, and which I think is a good thing for the railways and for the country generally. One of the reasons for this three-year programme being placed on the statutes is that the people may understand exactly what they are going to get for some time. It has been stated, and quite properly so, that the psychology of those who advocate a thing has a great deal to do with influencing its promotion. Many of these branch lines in the West are not new structures; very many miles of these lines have been graded, some of the grades having been constructed since the war, although the rails have not been laid down. There are some four hundred miles of grading already done, and all we propose to do is to lay the rails. Surely, no one would suggest that it is bad business, if after investigation the previous board decided to build these lines, for the present board to complete the work. It will be a good investment for the company and for the country as well. If the committee will agree to my suggestion and let us get this matter embodied in a Bill I think it will expedite our business.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Can the honourable leader of the House tell what the construction of those railways will cost?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: A little more than half the cost of the Transcontinental.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A little over $28,000,000.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: For 1,000 miles.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: In view of the very weak plea the honourable leader has put up for the only road that he knows about, by stating that the 14 miles which are to be built will parallel the C. P. R.—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I understood you to say that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; the main line of the Canadian National railway passes at a distance of 12 miles from the junction where the C. P. R. and the Canadian National Railway branch meet, and the idea is to link that Canadian National Railway branch with the main line. I simply mention this as an example of the necessity for those branches. That one I know, because I happened to see an imposing delegation six months ago explaining it to the member for Argenteuil, Hon. Mr. Stewart, and urging that that branch be completed, inasmuch as it was graded and the ties were on the ground.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Has the honourable Minister a map of this road that he could lay on the Table?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, the map is here and will be laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Both of those lines leave St. Jerome, and both come to Montreal, so they cannot be far from parallel.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We cannot argue against the fact that they both run to Montreal, but that 60 miles of railway belonging to the Canadian National brings its freight and passengers to the C. P. R. near St. Jerome. If a small branch were built, it would enable those 60 miles to be linked with our own system, the Canadian National, so that it would have a through train for those 60 miles to Montreal, while, to-day the C. P. R. is being fed by that C. N. R. branch.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: If that question is addressed to me, in view of present conditions I would say it should not be done. I think the only possible excuse for building a link with our National road is to get feeders for business where there is absolutely no other railway now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, one would naturally suppose that when the Government of the day at this, the eleventh hour of the Session, brought down this Bill for our consideration, particularly after Parliament had been in Session since the 31st of January last—a Bill involving, according to the schedule, an expenditure of at least $28,000,000—the Senate would have been furnished with such information as to satisfy themselves at least that there was some public demand for the undertakings which have been set out in the Bill.

There is a well-established practice in Parliament that when public moneys are voted the fullest information should be furnished by the Government and presented to Parliament; and not only that that information should be furnished, but that Parliament should be fully seized of the importance and advisability and necessity of proceeding with such an expenditure as is involved in this measure.

It was with the greatest surprise that this Chamber and in fact the House of Commons itself learned of the retention of this Bill in the hands of the Government until the eve of prorogation. Now entirely apart from the paucity of information—I will not even say the paucity, but I will say the utter absence of information—I should like to refer for a moment to a well-established parliamentary practice which has obtained from Confederation down to the present time touching the vote of public moneys, particularly in regard to the building of railways; and I would say to my honourable friend, in dealing with that phase of the question, that he will not find upon the Statute Book of the Dominion of Canada any precedent for what is submitted to us to-night. It has been the practice of Parliament, without exception, that the Government of the day should place upon the Table of Parliament or in the Estimates a statement of the specific sums required for the building of such undertaking's, and furnish Parliament with all necessary information. Furthermore, if the undertaking was not proceeded with, if the money was not expended during the fiscal year, the money would lapse, and Parliament would have the opportunity of again pronouncing upon the subject. Not only that, but Parliament would have the right, and has always exercised the right, of supervising with the minutest scrutiny the expenditure and application of every dollar which Parliament had voted for such purposes.

Now, we have had submitted to us, honourable gentlemen, a Bill which proposes apparently, to hand over to the National Railway Board the powers which hitherto have been exercised by Parliament. We are practically asked to abdicate those powers to this Board —of whom we know very little, and what we know is not very favourable—the extraordinary power of administering, entirely irrespective of Parliament, a fund which, as I hope to show very shortly, will be not short of $100,000,000.

Do honourable gentlemen know enough of the Canadian National Railway Board to entrust them with the expenditure of the public moneys of Canada? Have they demonstrated, since they came into office, their ability to administer an undertaking of the magnitude of the Canadian National system? Have they improved in the slightest degree upon their predecessors? And are you satisfied, is Parliament satisfied, are the people of this country satisfied, to hand over to those gentlemen —irresponsible gentlemen, men who are not in any sense responsible to Parliament, who have never distinguished themselves as administrators of business, as men capable of handling a situation such as this that presents itself to the public—the enormous expenditure involved in this Bill?

This Bill proposes that we should hand this power over absolutely to the Government of Canada—not the Parliament of Canada; that we should entirely eliminate for three years all Parliamentary action touching the construction of those roads, and touching the application and expenditure of the moneys; and, notwithstanding the fact that those moneys may not be expended this year or the following year, Parliament will be helpless in making any inquiry or any scrutiny whatsoever into the application of such expenditures.

Now, may I direct the attention of honourable gentlemen to section 7 of the Bill, and, for the purpose of better understanding it, may I read it? In view of the few remarks that I desire to make after reading it, I draw attention to the fact that this is the joker in the Bill. Honourable gentlemen who have participated in well-known games will understand what an important role the joker plays in some of our national amusements:

The mileage of the said lines of railway and the cost of construction thereof, as mentioned or referred to in the schedule to this Act, are merely estimated distances and costs for the information of Parliament, and shall not be taken to restrict the Minister in the issuance of such certificates nor the Company in the performance of the work of construction and completion nor in the issue of its securities.

So that the information furnished to honourable gentlemen in the Bill itself, on page 3, is not to be relied upon at all. Section 7 says so. It is simply an estimate; and I would point out how distant the estimate is from the facts as we know them to be.

Now, this schedule makes provision for the construction of over a thousand miles of road —I think 1,011 miles to be exact. The estimate of the cost of constructing those 1,011 miles represents $28,300,000—in other words less than $28,000 a mile. Honourable gentlemen will recall that, in the building of the National Transcontinental, the then Minister of Finance, who is the present Minister of Finance, made an estimate as to what the cost would be; and it is rather an interesting coincidence that that gentleman who was then Minister of Finance, and made his famous prediction as to what the cost of the National Transcontinental would be, is to-day apparently playing the role of prophet and making a like prediction as to what the cost of these 1,011 miles will be.

The National Transcontinental was to have cost $24,000 a mile, or in all $61,000,000. It was established on sworn evidence that it cost at last $89,000 a mile. That was twenty years ago, when costs were very much below, one might say at least 50 per cent below, what they are to-day. And yet we are asked to accept the information furnished by the Government in this Bill, and to vote this money on the strength of the representation that is made to us that this thousand miles of road can be built for $28,000,000, or in other words, $28,000 a mile. We are safe, honourable gentlemen, in concluding that this road cannot be built for less than the Transcontinental cost twenty years ago, which was $89,000 a mile. In other words, honourable gentlemen, this thousand miles will cost at least $100,000,000. Any honourable gentleman who is interested in the building of public works, particularly the building of railways, can easily satisfy himself, from what he knows of costs to-day, that this thousand miles of road cannot be built at less than $100,000,000. Yet without any information at all before us, we are asked by this confiding Government to believe that this thousand miles of road can be built for $28,000,000, and to trust the present Board of the National Railways to carry out the project.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman is making an error. I have here a statement giving detailed information regarding each line. I did not desire to read 15 or 20 pages of foolscap describing all the lines and explaining the necessity for their construction. I thought that we might examine each line in committee to see what merit there is in the project. May I draw my honourable friend's attention to the Okanagan and Lumby Branch, on which there has been expended $5,330,000? The estimated amount required for the completion of it is $2,307,000. Here is the respectable sum of $5,330,000 of Canadian money invested on this line.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I suppose it is in operation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; there is not a mile in operation. It is only graded. Now the question is, will we try to save those 5½ millions by spending $2,307,000 on construction?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: When was it graded?

Hon. Mr. REID: May I ask the honourable leader a question?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am mentioning simply the case of one important district in which the Government has spent 5½ millions. There is a detailed statement about this Railway, with the whole history of it. I hope I was not expected to occupy two hours in reading a statement explaining in detail the necessity of each of these branches on the 2nd reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It would not be too long a statement on an expenditure of $100,000,000.

Hon. Mr. REID: Does the honourable leader of the Government say that $5,000,000 have already been spent on 100 miles?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So I am informed.

Hon. Mr. REID: That is, $50,000 a mile have already been spent on 100 miles, and $2,000,000 more are required. It is evident that it will cost $70,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As my honourable friend knows, that is in a mountain district.

Hon. Mr. REID: Yes, but a great deal of it is new road, and the new road is estimated to cost $28,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend built that road—or it was under his supervision that it was built.

Hon. Mr. REID: I did not say it could be built at $28,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They say that is only half the cost.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I think we may deal with the subject, now that it has reached this stage without entering into the details of the merits of each particular branch, inasmuch as they have been withheld from Parliament up to the present moment. I cannot too strongly express myself as to the failure of the Government to furnish this Chamber with the information necessary for the intelligent consideration of this very important subject. There is no information whatever before this Chamber as to the necessity for building those branches. But entirely apart from that, I desire to direct the attention of the House to this more important consideration, that in view of the position of Canada at the present time, we are not warranted in entering upon an undertaking involving the expenditure of $100,000,000 for the building of branch railways without having ample evidence of their necessity and full information as to the financial results. The Government of Canada assumed the biggest responsibility that it has ever undertaken when, during the war, it took over 22,000 miles of railway. In taking over those railways it never contemplated that extensions of the substantial character now proposed would be made until by wise administration and proper consolidation satisfactory results should be obtained. When the Government of Canada took over the railways the intention was to re-organize and consolidate them, and to obtain the fullest possible information as to whether or not they could be wisely and advantageously operated. But has that been done? The late Government during the short time it was engaged in the responsible task of administering the Railways, exercised caution, prudence and fair economy, but never did it dream of entering upon an undertaking such as is involved in this Bill. If the Government wishes to destroy the possibility of the National Railways being operated successfully as a public utility, all that it has to do is to proceed as is proposed in this measure, weighing down the country with a load of debt which must necessarily prove disastrous, not only to the railways, but also to Canada itself.

We have before us an expenditure of half a billion dollars for the present fiscal year. The Supply Bills which have been presented to Parliament, and which will doubtless reach this Chamber within a day or two, represent a proposed expenditure of no less than half a billion of dollars, and the Finance Minister in his Budget Speech declared that the revenue of Canada for the fiscal year would be $372,000,000. And now, honourable gentlemen, it is proposed to add to that enormous expenditure to which I have just alluded. I ask, how is the deficit to be met?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Borrow the money.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is precisely the design which has been worked out in this Bill, and in the working out of that design lies, in my judgment, the condemnation of the Bill. It is proposed to evade the responsibility of appealing to Parliament for the moneys necessary to build branches and to operate the Canadian National System. It is proposed in this Bill that Parliament shall practically hand over to the Canadian National Board, for no less a period than three years, the authority to issue all the necessary securities, the Governor in Council carrying out the behests of the Board, entirely irrespective of any limitation of expenditure. The limitation placed in this Bill is only an estimate. It is only necessary to point to the cost of building a thousand miles of railway to convince honourable gentlemen that the expenditure will easily reach $100,000,000.

Besides the Bill now before us, there is one regarding which my honourable friend has said nothing. The Government has introduced into the House of Commons a measure known as Bill 244, by which authority is given to the Government in the following terms:

> The said securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty and any such guarantee may be in such form and on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may determine, and may be signed by the Minister or Acting Minister of Finance on behalf of His Majesty.

Thus it is proposed to supersede Parliament entirely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: To what guarantees does that refer?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This has reference to this same transaction on the Canadian National Railways. The Bill has not yet come up from the Commons, but it has been introduced there and has, I understand, received its second reading.

In all our railway operations the Government of the day never resorted to this method of financing its undertakings. As I said a few moments ago, from Confederation down to the present time all appropriations for railways, whether by guarantees or by payments in cash, appeared in the Estimates and from year to year lapsed, Parliament being thus given authority either to re-vote the moneys or to refuse to re-vote them, and likewise to exercise the closest scrutiny of the application of all such supplies. If the Bill which is before us to-night is passed it will of course be followed by the Bill to which I have referred—an auxiliary measure which will complete the transfer to the Canadian National Railway Board, for the next three years, of power to deal with this enormous sum of money, and this power the Board will exercise without regard to the voice of Parliament.

The question is, what should Parliament do with this Bill? I fully appreciate the responsibility which rests upon us in revising measures of this character and perhaps in going to the extremity of refusing to pass them; but it seems to me it is the duty of the Government to submit to this Chamber measures which will appeal to the judgment of the House as embodying sane legislation, and to furnish this House with full information as to the necessity of proceeding with undertakings of this character. I doubt that any honourable gentleman will controvert the position taken by us. We should be recreant to our duty if we accepted such measures as this without having an opportunity to exercise our judgment on the fullest information available, and without being convinced of the necessity of the undertaking. We must also take into consideration the unfortunate position in which Canada stands to-day as to her public indebtedness and the load of taxation which we are bearing.

My honourable friend is fully aware of the extraordinary character of this measure. In view of its extraordinary nature the Government, anxious as it is to proceed with those branches, ought to be ready to adopt the practice which Parliament has followed for the last generation or more, by placing in the estimates specific information regarding each road. Thus Parliament would have an opportunity to determine whether or not the moneys should be voted for the purposes indicated, and could also exercise supervision over expenditures.

Therefore, honourable gentlemen, I express my disapproval of a measure of this kind and of the failure of the Government to fulfil its obligation towards this Chamber and the people of Canada by neglecting to furnish us with the necessary information regarding so stupendous an undertaking, involving an expenditure of $100,000,000. In view of Canada's inability to meet so huge an expenditure, I see no alternative but to urge upon my honourable friend that this Bill should be withdrawn and that the Government at next Session furnish the necessary information to warrant Parliament in assuming responsibility for the proposed undertaking. If my honourable friend does not see his way to furnish this Chamber with the information to which we are entitled, then, it seems to me, only one course is open to the Senate of Canada, and that is to reject this measure. I therefore, honourable gentlemen, move that the Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months.

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: I feel, honourable gentlemen, that for my part I should not give a silent vote on the motion which has been made. We have been told that Government operation of railways was an experiment, and that within a year or two, or perhaps three years, it would be ascertained whether or not it would be possible to continue it. That led me to expect that the country would not be committed to a further expenditure for the building of new lines and the extension of a railway which already has taken on a great magnitude.

I am surprised at the way in which this Bill has been treated by both sides in the other House. One would have expected that a Bill of this importance, involving an acknowledged expenditure of $28,000,000—an amount which may be doubled if the experience of the past is followed—would have been carefully inquired into to ascertain in every case the necessity of building these lines. This Bill, for reasons that I cannot understand, seems to have been treated as a kind of necessity; but on reading the Debates of the House of Commons one is unable to find any satisfactory information in support of the present measure.

I believe that the time has came when this House should assert its power and its right to deal with matters of this kind—and to deal with them in an energetic manner. I think that no building of railways of this kind should be continued without proper information being furnished to this House, and furnished in proper time. I quite agree with the leader of the other side of the House that this Bill is coming too late—that it is not on the eve of prorogation that a Bill of this kind should be sent to this House; and I believe if it is sent again this House will affirm its right and will do its duty by referring the Bill to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, where it will be possible to inquire fully into the necessity and advisability of building any number of miles of railway which may be suggested. This country has been brought to the brink of bankruptcy by the building of too many railways—railways which are operated at a loss of about one hundred million dollars a year. Surely this House, which is an independent body, owes it to the country to assert its power and to do its duty. For my part, I will not hesitate in voting in favour of the motion which has just been made.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, I am going to speak but two words. I want to join with my honourable friend in his appeal for the withdrawal of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I need not apologize to the House when I state that I have been unable to give very much time to the study of this Bill. I have never before seen a Session so fruitful of legislation from the other House during the last two months.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And so late.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: 41 Bills in two weeks.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have simply glanced at the Bill. There is only one thing that disturbs me. When I look through the list of railway undertakings, I find that between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000 of the money of the Canadian people have been sunk into these branches up to the moment.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would you sink $90,000,000 more?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I therefore ask myself if there is not a pressing need in some cases to proceed with the work in order to save the millions that have already been expended in places where the finished work would be an asset to the country.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I point out this fact to my honourable friend? In the Estimates there is an item of $73,000,000 which has been voted the Canadian National Railways for betterments and other purposes. If there is any pressing need between now and the next Session of Parliament, surely my honourable friend can have his Government dip into that $73,000,000 as freely as the President of the Canadian National Railways dipped into the Exchequer a short time ago to buy an hotel in Paris. If the necessities of building branch railways be equally great, there is no reason why some of this $73,000,000 should not be made available for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I realize that the Senate has up to this moment received very little information as to the necessity of proceeding with any of these works. When I rose a moment ago it was to say that there was a sufficient knowledge in this Chamber of the needs of the various regions covered by this Bill to enable us to go into Committee and to examine into the necessities of all of these branches and pass upon them in sober judgment.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Does my honourable friend suggest that we should go into Committee of the Whole on this Bill, and that it should not be referred to and investigated by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I realize that this Bill comes to us very late in the Session.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And would my honourable friend consider this phase of it that the most objectionable feature of the whole transaction is the character of the Bill itself?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There again I would tell my honourable friend that we are here to put our stamp on a Bill when it comes to us. I will not stop to discuss the drafting of this Bill; when we have it in our hands we are masters of the Bill; and if it went to Committee it would be part of our duty not only to scrutinize the occasion for building each and every one of these lines but to see whether or not the Bill could be amended.

However, in view of the general expression of opinion that this is too important a matter for us to grapple with at this moment of the Session, I will ask that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow so that I may have an opportunity of consulting with my colleagues. I may say that in this we have perhaps an object lesson on Government ownership. We have promised a free hand to the Railway Board.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Not too free.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And we have repeated that we would give them a free hand.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: To operate, not to construct.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —and a fair trial. We are confronted with a proposition of some magnitude, and I am not ready to say that it is without merit even in one instance, because I have not the direct knowledge. I was relying upon the members in each locality to help us to pass judgment. I did intend to duly weigh their opinions; but, after hearing the protests that have been expressed, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I hope Parliament is not committed to the Board of Directors of the National Railways to such an extent that it will vote blindly any amounts that are asked for the building of railways.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: They may be given a reasonably free hand, but surely Parliament is entitled to know whether the demands made and the expenditures suggested are warranted.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: May I suggest to the honourable gentleman that when he is bringing this matter before Council he might ask them to take into consideration the question of whether it would not be better to remove some of the rails where there are duplicate roads and put them on some of these roads that are in such great need?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And I would ask if our western friends include the Hudson Bay Railway in their condemnation?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Honourable gentlemen, I trust that the request made by the leader of the Government will appeal to the sense of this House. The invitation was extended by him to any member to express his opinion in regard to the necessity of building any of these branch roads. The Parliament of Canada decided some time ago to enter into the Railway business. They have taken over what is now the Canadian National system, and any person looking at the map which is before us, will observe that all the branches referred to in this Bill are feeders of the Canadian National Railway.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, bleeders.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I do not want to see the House summarily dispose of this measure in this way. I have a personal knowledge of some of the lines proposed, and of the necessity of building them, and it seems to me that if we went into Committee we could, if necessary, eliminate some of them. As has been stated, a number of them have been graded for some five or six years.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is my honourable friend serious in thinking that the Senate will go into Committee and decide to accept one road after rejecting another?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Why not? That is our business. I know that settlers have been located in the vicinity of some of these proposed lines for 25 years.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If a man went to the North Pole, that would be no reason for building him a railway.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: When these men went in the roads were promised to them, and the charters were granted, and in some cases the roads were graded. I think we should not summarily reject the Bill without considering what would be a fair mileage to build this year and what could be put over for the future.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I wish to call attention to another phase of the matter that would be bound to follow. We all know that a railway once constructed must be operated.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We are finding cut that it costs some money too.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: On the 22,000 miles of the Canadian National Railways there are 2,486 locomotives, or approximately 11 to every 100 mines, which means that 110 locomotives would be necessary for these branches. Locomotives cost from $50,000 apiece upwards. There are 2,600 odd passenger cars in operation on the Canadian National Railways, or 12 to every 100 miles of tracks. Those cars cost from $10,000 to $20,000 apiece, according to their class. The system to-day has 130,000 freight cars, or 5.45 to every mile of track, which means 5,450 freight cars of all sorts that would have to be built in order that there might be the same percentage of rolling stock on these branch lines. The cost of that motive power and rolling stock at present prices would be approximately $20,000,000 more. I suggest that my honourable friend should call that to the attention of the Government when they are taking this matter into consideration.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I move that the debate be now adjourned.

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

HALIBUT FISHERY TREATY

RESOLUTION OF APPROVAL

The Senate proceeded to consider a message from the House of Commons requesting the Senate to unite with that House in a resolution that Parliament do approve the Treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America with respect to the preservation of the Halibut Fisheries of the northern Pacific Ocean.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A treaty was signed on March 2nd at Washington by plenipotentiaries representing His Majesty the King and the United States with reference to the preservation of the halibut fishery on the Pacific Coast. Early in March it was laid on this Table. The treaty provides for a close season for halibut in waters contiguous to the Pacific Coast in the United States and Canada. A period of close season is declared for 3 months, from November to February, for a period of 5 years, but it may be denounced after the 5 years by a 2 years' notice by one of the contracting parties.

Halibut, under the treaty, may nevertheless be caught during prohibited season for purposes of food by crews of vessels fishing for other kinds of fish, the balance caught being transferred to officers of the Marine Department of Canada and the Uniter States, to be disposed of by those officers at such prices as they may be able to obtain. This provision is made in order to eliminate the element of profit in the catch of halibut by those fishermen. They will not be able to dispose of their surplus for their own profit.

There is a further provision by which an International Fisheries Commission will be established in order to study the life history of the halibut, and the best means of preserving this important natural resource.

This treaty, by virtue of one of its clauses, is to be approved by legislation by the Parliaments of both countries.

The Senate of the United States has assented to the treaty, with the following reservation, added to it.

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein) that the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive D. 67th Congress, fourth Session, Convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed March 2, 1923, for the preservation of the Halibut Fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, including the Behring Sea, subject to the understanding, which is hereby made a part of this resolution of ratification, that none of the nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of any other part of Great Britain shall engage in halibut fishing contrary to any of the provisions of this treaty.

I need not say that extraordinary circumstances must have accompanied the passing of this rider, as indicated by the phraseology and the description of the other part of Great Britain, and it was written in the dying hours of the last session of that Congress.

The reason for that addition to the Treaty seems to be found in the fear, which was expressed by a western Senator, that ships from Great Britain would or could come into those waters and fish for halibut. This fear was groundless, because Canada and the United States have agreed to provide that their nationals and citizens of all other countries shall be prohibited from operating from a Canadian or an American base, or attempting to fish in those waters. This prohibition to use any Canadian or American port will ensure full protection against all comers.

Parliament is now asked to ratify this treaty, and the Government has reason to believe that the reservation added to the treaty by the Senate will be withdrawn at the next session of Congress.

The Address which we have before us is for the purpose of confirming the treaty. I may say that, in connection with this resolution, which is offered to the Senate for the confirmation of this document, we will have presented to us an Act for the protection of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery. That Act is brought to us in Bill 247, to give effect to this treaty.

There are certain conditions surrounding the recall of a vote in the American Senate that would be necessary for retracing its steps and abandoning this condition; but if the American Government feels that it is an easier way to get around the difficulty, it may—and I understand it has allowed the Government of Canada to be informed that it may—proceed as we are doing, by concurrent legislation. So we are confirming the treaty between His Majesty the King and the United States that was signed in March last; but if, through some difficulty, it becomes inoperative, the legislation which we are submitting to the Senate at the moment will be duplicated by similar legislation on the other side, and the same result will be obtained.

I have the honour to move:

That the following Joint Address be sent to His Excellency the Governor General:

To General His Excellency the Right Honourable Julian Hedworth George, Baron Byng of Vimy, General on the Retired List and in the Reserve of Officers of the Army; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George; Member of the Royal Victoria Order, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of the Dominion of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to approach Your Excellency with our respectful request that you will be pleased to transmit our Joint Resolution that Parliament do approve of the Treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, which was signed at Washington on the second day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, a copy of which has been laid before Parliament, and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty, acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiary therein named, and that the Senate do approve of the same, and requesting that the Commons will unite with the Senate in the said Resolution by filling up the blank therein with the words "Commons and."

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: May I ask a question as to the treaty itself? With the rider which has been added by the American Senate, does the treaty become operative on the part of the United States when we pass the legislation which is asked here?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Without having had very much time to deliberate over the question, I would think that the treaty is inoperative until that addition has been withdrawn, or until Canada has consented to the addition.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But Canada does not propose to assent to the addition, as I understand?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Canada could not well assent, because it would need the confirmation of this addition by the Parliaments of Australia and of South Africa and of New Zealand.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: What need would there be for that? As I understand it, the treaty that was made was signed by a Canadian Minister. The Government did not want the British Ambassador to have anything to do with it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was signed by a Canadian Minister, but it was signed by a Minister Plenipotentiary, with credentials from His Majesty the King.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: Certainly, and if the King authorizes a Canadian Minister to sign such a treaty it must necessarily apply to all British subjects in the world.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. His Majesty the King authorized his delegate to sign a special treaty, and that treaty covered a matter which exclusively interested Canada and the United States, so there would be no reason for calling the other Dominions to join in this instrument.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: But supposing that the treaty had been completed, and, as my honourable friend says, only Canada and the United States appeared for the time to be interested, yet if British subjects from islands in the Pacific Ocean, or from Hong Kong, or Singapore, or Australia went up there, that would not be very satisfactory to Canada or the United States. It seems to me the Senate of the United States was perfectly justified in inserting a section there, and it would have been an easier way of getting out of the difficulty if the Canadian Government had accepted the Senate's view, and gone on with the treaty.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my honourable friend will realize that this was hurried legislation, in the dying hours of a session. We have had similar examples of resolutions that did not do much honour to the parties who contributed to bringing them into being in the last hour of the session. I would ask my honourable friend if the United States would like to have that addition reviewed by the Parliament of Great Britain. Great Britain does not mean the British Empire.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: It is the Empire in description.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But this would not comprise the other Dominions beyond the Seas, and I think—and I have reason to know—that Senators of eminence in the United States intend to do their utmost to have this reservation withdrawn, because of its form and matter.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved:

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table to acquaint that House that the Senate have agreed to the said Resolution, by filling in the blank space therein with the words, "Senate and".

The motion was agreed to.

HALIBUT FISHERY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 247, an Act for the protection of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I have just explained the purpose of the Bill,

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Sections 1 to 13 inclusive were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

DAIRY INDUSTRY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 241, an Act to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, we can reserve a discussion of the Bill in detail until we go into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

The sitting was resumed.

SOLDIERS' PENSION, INSURANCE, AND CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT BILLS

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I have the honour to present the report of the Special Committee to whom Bills 203, 204 and 205 were referred. I would suggest that the report, which is somewhat lengthy, be printed during the night, so that we may have it to-morrow, and be able to take it into consideration to-morrow with the Bills. I would move that it be taken into consideration at the first sitting of the House to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It is not probable that this report will be printed and distributed before 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, it will be printed during the night, and if it is not ready to-morrow morning we will wait till the second sitting.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Will the evidence be printed with the report, or not?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Oh, no, just the report.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would suggest that the Printing Bureau be ordered to suspend our Hansard for to-morrow, and give preference to this work, if necessary.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, June 29, 1923.

FIRST SITTING

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may state that the Senate has sat with closed doors to consider the internal economy of the Senate.

FEEDING STUFFS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 238, an Act to amend the Feeding Stuffs Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would move the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McCOIG: I would say that the amendments made to this Act are such as were recommended by the feeders and stock raisers from all parts of the country. The Bill is intended to prevent frauds in supplying feeds that are adulterated instead of being pure.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 246, an Act to amend the Post Office Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of the Bill.

He said: This Bill reduces the postage rates on certain newspapers and periodicals from one and a half cents a pound to one and a quarter cents. I believe that this is an amelioration of the heavy taxation which reaches publishers through the sales tax. Representations have been constantly made to the Post Office Department for a reduction of both the tax and the postal rate. The Government has refused to reduce the Sales Tax on newsprint, but it is making this reduction in the postal rate.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I have not the good fortune to have the Bill before me, but I understand the purport of it from what my honourable friend has said. He is doubtless aware that for some years the policy of the Post Office Department has been to increase rather than decrease the rates for the carriage of newspapers. I recall that recommendation after recommendation has been made for some years past in that direction, and that it has been conclusively established that we are carrying newspapers and periodicals, or published matter of that character, at a very substantial loss, thus causing a heavy deficit in the Department. Now, if for the purpose of imposing a tax in one direction we are to put our hands in the public pocket and pay for it in another direction, we had better not impose the tax. If the law could be administered strictly as to legitimate newspapers there would not be very much objection. Public sentiment would probably approve of the policy of the Government in reducing the rate as far as that could possibly be done. But the difficulty is that there is an evasion of the law in this particular regard, that advertising matter which does not come strictly within the term "newspaper" makes use of the privilege of distribution throughout the entire Dominion at the expense of the public exchequer. There is no reason why this matter should not be worked out on a scientific basis if for the purpose of furnishing a public service to those who profit by it, the Government of Canada has to make up a deficit out of the public exchequer. It cannot be justified; it is indefensible.

This is an age of commercialism, an age in which taxation is imposed upon the public for absolutely necessary purposes; and why there should be a reduction in an impost which should be governed entirely by commercial considerations I cannot understand. If it has been wise to impose a sales tax on newsprint, why should an exception be made in regard to the carriage of newspapers that pass through the mails? To strike a blow at an important policy of raising revenue for the purpose of offsetting a small tax that has been placed upon a general commodity is, it seems to me, a policy that is anything but sane, and one that must be subversive of good government.

I appeal to my honourable friend. I say that this is a matter that should not be dealt with at this period of the session; that it should receive every consideration; and that this is peculiarly no time for reducing our revenues and thus bringing about a deficit and a disturbance in our postal conditions.

Hon. Mr. REID: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to raise an objection to this Bill and to other Bills that may come before us at the present time. I think it most unfair that we should be asked to proceed with Bills before they have been distributed to the members of the House. Bills are sent over here and we are asked to put them through, without having been furnished with copies of them. There should at least be a number of copies placed upon the Table of the House so that we might have some idea of what we are discussing. I suppose more Bills will be brought over this afternoon. We cannot know what we are discussing at all until we have the Bills before us. Until we get them I do not think we should proceed.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The leader of the Opposition knows that every issue of a paper is scrutinized, and that only so many columns of advertising are allowed to so many columns of reading matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: For the purpose of facilitating further discussion of this matter, I intend to ask my honourable friend whether a computation has been made as to the additional revenue to be derived from newspapers by reason of the increase of the sales tax. I understand that the increase is only one and a fraction per cent.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: From 2¼ to 6.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: And the sales tax on newsprint is 6 per cent. On a ton of paper that amounts to $4.50.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But you have increased your advertising rates and your subscription rates very substantially.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is it not a rule of this House that Bills should be distributed?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. Would my hon. friend tell me what this reduction in the postal rates will represent?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The figure may have been given in the other House—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend let the Bill stand until we get full information? This is an important matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will withdraw my motion for the second reading, and will ask that the Bill be put down for second reading at the second sitting.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I suggest that the Bill be distributed in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And the question my honourable friend puts is what?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I want to know what the increase of revenue would be by reason of the sales tax, and what would be the total amount of the reduction in postal rates.

The motion for the second reading was withdrawn.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT SHIPS

INQUIRY

On the notice:

By the Honourable Mr. Bennett: That he will call attention to the advertised sale of some twenty old Government ships and inquire if the Government propose to sell the said vessels.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I would like to ask the leader of the Government whether or not he has a list of these vessels owned by the Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, I will give my honourable friend that information.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I would ask that the notice stand until I get the information.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS CONSTRUCTION BILL

INQUIRY

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I would like to ask the leader of the Government if he will place on the Table of the House the estimates, etc., with reference to the Bill that was brought down yesterday for the construction of railways. We have not a shred of information except a little that was given to us—and that was very little—by the leader of the Government himself. I tried to find in the Debates of the other House what were the real calculations, but I found scarcely anything but appeals by individual members for their particular pet railway; but data was not given to the lower House and it has not been given to us.

We have taken certain action on that Bill, one ground for that action being that we had no information, and you cannot find any information in the Senate records. The papers which were prepared for my honourable friend, and from which he read to us some slight extracts, ought to be placed on the Table of the House along with the railway map, as a permanent record.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think I handed back to the representative of the Railway Department the document that I had last night. If I have not kept it, I will ask for it this afternoon.

DAIRY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 241, an Act to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I was mistaken when I explained this Bill upon the second reading. I had hurriedly gone through the Bill and was under the impression from reading the newspapers that it still contained a clause allowing the Department to make regulations for the renovation of butter. That clause was struck out, and my mistake was because of the erroneous marginal note, "Renovated Butter." Section 2 contains only the definition of "Inspector," and of "Provincial analyst."

Hon. Mr. BENNETT.

Section 3 is an amendment concerning the minimum standard of fat in butter, and provides that:

> No person shall manufacture, import into Canada, or sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale any milk or cream or substitutes therefor which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk.

Section 4 bears the side notes: "minimum standard of fat in butter imported or sold;" "fat in manufactured butter;" "weight of butter in prints, blocks, etc." Section 5 increases the penalties for violation of the regulations. Section 6 has to do with: "Establishment of guilt for violation of Act," and "procedure to be followed; samples, analysis and certificates." I think this Bill is a move in the right direction. It does not contain any prescription concerning renovated butter, although those words appear in the marginal note.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 232, and Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is based upon the recommendations of a Joint Committee of both Houses. Those recommendations were endorsed unanimously by the two branches of Parliament. After the second reading of the Bill, I will ask that it go to Committee, because I have an amendment to submit to the House.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Willoughby in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 were agreed to.

On section 3—deductions for non-attendance:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am opposed to this Bill altogether, and I do not want it to pass without registering my protest. I believe that the Indemnity Act as we have it to-day is giving good service. It has increased the average attendance of members very considerably. I have not been a member of this Senate for very many years, but under the loose regulations prevailing at the time of my becoming a member, the attendance was very bad. Under the more stringent regulations now in force the attendance has been excellent. The work of the Senate has been tremendously improved by reason of the increased attendance, and I am afraid that if we relax these regulations—because that is what we are doing—we will fall back into the old slip-shod ways that prevailed before the Act of 1920 was passed. I have no more desire to be here than anybody else, but I recognize my responsibility and the duty that I owe to the people of this country in the position which I occupy as a Senator of Canada; and I protest against any change, because I am afraid it will be for the worse.

I know of no reason why there should be such a change. The honourable gentleman who proposed the Bill has not given any reason why the relaxation should be made. You are breaking a solemn contract entered into with the people of this country—more than an implied contract, an actual contract, entered into for a very important and valuable consideration, to wit, the increase of the indemnity from $2,500 to $4,000 per year. You are breaking that contract in the face of the people of this country. You are relaxing the law in a way which, I greatly fear, will reduce the efficiency of this chamber. You ask the people of Canada to let you out of the contract that you entered into by the Act of 1920, and you say you are going to make certain regulations. You ought to produce those regulations so that it may be seen whether or not you make up for what the country loses by the breach.

I am here very often at as great an inconvenience and injury to my private business as any other member of the Senate, but, in accepting appointment I realize that unless I could fulfil the duties and responsibilities attendant upon the position, I ought not to accept it. In accepting the position I undertook to fulfil those duties and responsibilities, and this I have tried to do. There are many members of this House who are regular in their attendance and take an interest in the proceedings. There are other members who take no interest whatever; and that is true, I suppose, of every deliberative assembly. It is not necessarily the man who is silent that is not taking interest; it is the man who absents himself.

If you revert to the old regulations, a member may draw almost the full indemnity, if the Session lasts only 65 days, even though he may have been here only one day. That is something that is absolutely wrong. If any member of this House is so conscienceless as to be willing to take his full indemnity under those circumstances, you should not permit him to do so. It is almost equal to stealing to take money under such circumstances, yet it has been done. You are reverting to the regulations that prevailed before you entered into the contract set out in the Act of 1920, for this Session at least, because there is not time in the last days of the Session to make new regulations.

I quite understand that this is not a popular speech that I am making, but there are in this Chamber some honourable members to whom it will appeal. There are some—I hope there are a good many—honourable members who have a proper idea of the solemnity and importance of a contract and their duty to endeavour to keep it. You are absolutely violating the contract. You are discarding it for this Session at least, and members who have been hardly ever in attendance will draw considerable sums to which they would not be entitled under the existing Act. Is that right? Do honourable gentlemen think that is right?

I would suggest to the honourable leader of the Government and the honourable leader of the Opposition, who seem to be in perfect harmony in this matter, that they add some sort of rider to this amendment that will permit of the existing Act applying to the present Session, because you have not provided regulations to modify the amended Act. Does the honourable gentleman follow me?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I understand the point.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You understand it? I hope my appeal does not fall upon deaf ears. I hope that you not only understand it but will adopt the suggestion. There is the difficulty. I say that the change in the Act is not fair to the country.

Now let me repeat, at the risk of being somewhat prolix, the argument which I have advanced. I think it important, though my honourable friend may not. In 1920 this Senate entered into a contract with the people of Canada, agreeing, in consideration of the indemnity being increased from $2,500 to $4,000, to abide by certain regulations which were incorporated into the Act, with regard to attendance and other matters. Now you are changing that Act without any mandate from the people. You, a party of the one part, are changing a contract between two parties, namely, the people of Canada and the Senate. Instead of doing that, would it not be honest to adhere to the Act of 1920 at least for this Session, until it is possible to put into force the regulations which you say you are going to supply to make up for the relaxation of the former requirements? What does my honourable friend think of that proposition?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend forgets that when we were discussing the question of adjourning over last Monday in order to permit members of this House to register their votes in Ontario—which was a fair proposition—I suggested that a Bill which was coming over from the Commons would free them of the penalty for non-attendance at that time and they might safely go and register their votes as good citizens of Ontario. I am bound by that statement.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I remember that at that very time it was pointed out as a warning that if honourable gentlemen went they would be absent at their own risk. Their attention was called to the possibility that the Bill might not pass, and the honourable leader could give no assurance that it would pass.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I was in the hands of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, in the hands of the Senate, and you still are, and you are in good hands, I must say. But, after all, supposing the honourable gentleman did say that, and had the right to say it and the power to back it up, does it alter the case so far as the country is concerned? What mandate had you from the party of the other part?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The same as in 1920.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Ah, but you gave a quid pro quo in 1920; you increased and tightened up the regulations with regard to attendance. But you are giving nothing in return now, and that is why I say this measure should not apply to the present year. You have not the regulations which are to supplement the new Act. To the extent that members have been absent this session they should forfeit their indemnity under the Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All I will say in answer to my honourable friend is that when the Act of 1920 was under consideration, in the last hours of the Session, I drew the attention of the honourable gentleman opposite (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), who had presented the Bill, to some gross imperfections in it, and he replied that if imperfections were found to exist the Act could at the following Session or at any time be amended. We are now dealing with it for the first time. If the honourable gentleman from Sussex will bear with us until we have reached a certain section, he will find that we are seeking power to make more stringent regulations if they are found necessary.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But you are not going to make those regulations this Session. If you were, I should have nothing further to say on this point. For this Session honourable members who have been absent are to go scot free: the lid is off.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: After the Bill is passed it will be open to us to make regulations this Session.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, and it will stay open. That is the intention. It is not going to be done. If my honourable friend will assure us that those regulations will be made, I shall have nothing further to say on this point. What is the good of saying it will remain open? Anybody knows that it is open, but the question is whether it is going to be closed or not. That is the point we have to consider, and that is the point that is important.

New section 37 was agreed to.

New section 38 was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move that the following be added to section 3 of the Bill as new section 38A:

38A. The Senate or the House of Commons may respectively make regulations from time to time, by rule or by order, rendering more stringent upon its own members the provisions of this Act which relate to attendance of members or to deductions to be made from the sessional allowance.

In order that the Commons may know why we propose this amendment to authorize the making of these regulations, I may explain that there are conditions peculiar to each House which should be dealt with in each case by the House concerned. We are asking power, not to relax the requirements, but to make the amended Act more stringent in its application. I think that the Commons will agree with this proposal of the Senate.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

On section 4—application of this Act:

All the provisions of the said Act as enacted by the present Act shall apply to the present session of Parliament except the provisions of section thirty-four, which shall only apply to the sessions of Parliament held subsequent to the date of the passing of the present Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I move that that be stricken out and that these words be substituted:

This Act shall not come into force until the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-four.

I do not think it should apply to this Session at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We ought not to break faith with the House of Commons, which has accepted the report of the Joint Committee and sent this Bill to us. We are amending it only in order that we may, if we deem proper, make the provisions regarding attendance and deductions more stringent upon our own House.

The proposed amendment was negatived.

Section 4 was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

MOTION—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from June 15 the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Barnard:

That at least two of the vessels now owned by the Government be placed on service between British Columbia in the west and Quebec ports during summer months and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick ports in the winter months, for the purpose of assisting in the development of our Natural Resources, and to increase the interprovincial trade between Eastern Canada and Western Canada, and that such service shall be increased as business demands.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I adjourned this order from day to day with the constant hope that I would have some time to examine into the question which was raised in the course of the very interesting debate which took place on the motion of the honourable member from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Barnard). Unfortunately, I have had very little time—indeed, I should rather say I have had no time—to give to this matter. The Bills which came from the other House monopolized all the time that I could command, and I should perhaps have given still more to some of those Bills if I had been able to do so.

I asked the Railway Department for a memorandum on the main questions that were submitted to this House, and I have received one. At the threshold of this memorandum we find that the Canadian Merchant Marine is not being administered by a department of the Government, but by the Canadian National Railway Board. The following is the memorandum:

The arguments put forward by the honourable gentlemen who have spoken in support of the establishment of a service by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine between British Columbia in the west, and eastern Canadian ports, by way of the Panama Canal, will be brought by the Government to the attention of the President of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine (Sir Henry Thornton), who will be asked to have the representations as to latent traffic carefully investigated and to see that the possibilities of such a service are fully considered.

It is claimed by the Management that the co-operation of the fleet has proved of advantage to the National Railways; that shipments turned over to the Railways for the eleven months ended November, amounted to 172,577 tons, to which should be added 36,949 tons of import freight handled over the Government dock at Vancouver during the same period.

The total value of commodities exported from Canada by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine for the 12 months of 1922 was $41,064,148, and from the United States $2,361,367. The value of traffic carried by these vesels from the inception of the service in 1919 to November, 1922, inclusive, was,—Canadian, $145,511,343; American, $10,971,828, a total of $156,483,171.

Revenue accruing to the Canadian National Railways from passengers carried to and from the steamers for the 11 months ended November last amounted to $32,101, business which the Management feel would have been handled through other channels and by other roads had the company's facilities not been in operation.

At the present time the fleet consists of 64 steamers, three of which are of 2,800 tons dead weight; six of 3,400 tons; three of 3,500 tons; ten of 3,750 tons; eight of 4,300 tons; eight of 5,100 tons; twenty-four of 8,100 tons and two of 10,500 tons.

At present the following services are being operated:

Montreal to St. John's, Nfld. (every three weeks)—Canadian Sapper.

Montreal to Barbados, Trinidad and Demarara (fortnightly)—Canadian Carrier, Canadian Runner, Canadian Squatter, Canadian Otter.

Montreal to Bermuda, Nassau, Jamaica, Belize (every three weeks)—Canadian Fisher, Canadian Forester.

Montreal to London and Antwerp (fortnightly)—Canadian Victor, Canadian Commander, Canadian Planter, Canadian Conqueror.

Montreal to Cardiff and Swansea (fortnightly)—Canadian Challenger, Canadian Mariner, Canadian Explorer, Canadian Leader.

Montreal to Australia and New Zealand (monthly)—Canadian Pioneer, Canadian Cruiser, Canadian Constructor, Canadian Miller, Canadian Ranger, Canadian Seigneur, Canadian Spinner.

Vancouver to Australia and New Zealand (monthly)—Canadian Winner, Canadian Importer, Canadian Scottish, Canadian Traveller, Canadian Prospector.

Vancouver to Japan and China (monthly)—Canadian Transporter, Canadian Highlander, Canadian Freighter, Canadian Skirmisher.

Vancouver to India—(as occasion warrants)—Canadian Britisher, Canadian Inventor.

Vancouver to California Ports (weekly)—Canadian Volunteer, Canadian Rover, Canadian Observer, Canadian Farmer.

Operating in Great Lakes, carrying grain from Head of Lakes to Port Colborne and Bay Ports—Canadian Adventurer, Canadian Sower, Canadian Trader, Canadian Sailor, Canadian Engineer, Canadian Pathfinder.

Special charters—Canadian Navigator, Canadian Logger, Canadian Coaster, Canadian Harvester, Canadian Beaver, T. J. Drummond, J. H. McKee and Sheba.

Respecting special charters, with the exception of the T. J. Drummond and J. H. McKee, which are leased on the bare boat basis, the Company is operating and handling all of the same.

The foregoing comprises the presently active fleet. In addition, there are the following vessels at present tied up;

At Montreal: Canadian Aviator, Canadian Hunter, Canadian Trapper, Canadian Rancher, Canadian Raider, Canadian Trooper.

At Goderich: Canadian Warrior, Canadian Signaller.

At Halifax: Canadian Gunner, Canadian Miner, Canadian Sealer, Canadian Settler, Canadian Voyageur.

Services cancelled since May 1st: Montreal to Liverpool, fortnightly: Montreal to Glasgow, fortnightly.

New service inaugurated since May 1st: Montreal to Antwerp, fortnightly.

The deficit in connection with the Canadian Government Merchant Marine for 1922 was $9,649,478.72; but, as pointed out by the honourable Senator for Grenville, this includes interest and depreciation. The actual deficit from operation was $2,384,189.17.

Route	Number Voyages	Receipts	Disbursements	Balance
		$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
United Kingdom	82	2,566,573 69	3,040,915 95	474,342 26
West Indies (Freight)	29	855,947 20	744,526 52	111,420 68
West Indies (Passenger)	18	344,559 53	599,880 49	255,320 96
Newfoundland	21	216,409 85	176,571 10	39,838 75
Pacific Coast	38	653,755 91	517,433 68	136,322 23
Australia-Pacific	15	1,280,421 79	1,569,866 05	289,444 26
Australia-Atlantic	13	1,761,669 10	1,982,881 39	221,212 29
Orient	14	638,004 52	858,672 44	220,667 92
South America	2	69,159 77	121,213 69	52,053 92
India	3	518,791 89	517,204 62	1,587 27
Mediterranean	4	146,153 10	194,675 71	48,522 61
Russia	5	239,730 41	357,472 15	117,741 74
Continent	3	68,318 32	97,782 54	29,464 22
Lakes and Pulp Charters	12	312,918 23	306,759 51	6,158 72
	259	9,672,413 31	11,085,855 84	1,413,442 53

The balance of the operating deficit is made up of overhaul and lay-up expenses	$ 352,301 37
General expenses, wharf expenses, etc	651,818 93
Less the following credit items:—
Profit on operation of Vancouver wharf	30,754 13
Commission handling outside steamers	2,619 53
Operating deficit	$2,384,189 17

A number of the smaller vessels have been of service in the grain trade on the upper Lakes. They are not suited for the St. Lawrence route as, structurally, they are not adapted for service through the St. Lawrence Canals under full load.

To assist in relieving the acute fuel situation last season, vessels of the fleet were used in transporting coal to Canada from British ports. The total tonnage of coal thus imported was 108,139 tons.

The loss on account of the West Indian passenger service during 1922 amounted to $255,320.96, not including interest or depreciation. This service was established as a result of the Canada-West Indies trade agreement, and as against the loss, there were received from the Governments of the Bahamas, Jamaica and British Honduras subsidies amounting to $59,090. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine vessels, both freight and passenger, were put on the West Indian route to retain for Canadian channels Canadian traffic which was going out of American ports, as well as to carry forward any other traffic offering. That the business is regarded as desirable is indicated by the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway have now put on steamers.

The Canadian Government Merchant Marine Australian service was commenced in February, 1921, in the interest of Canadian trade, in the development of which it has performed useful service. The subsidy previously paid to the New Zealand Shipping Company of $140,000 a year was cancelled in March, 1921.

The ships have carried a goodly share of Canada's export lumber trade in recent years, though lately lumber shipments have declined. Arrangements have been made to cater to the prospective cattle trade between Canada and Great Britain which is expected to result from the recent change in the Imperial regulations governing the admission of Canadian store cattle into Great Britain.

The Management have made several important recommendations; one is that interest due the Government be regarded as payable only if earned, allowing for depreciation, such remission of interest to be payable for a period of five years. On the notes at present in the hands of the Government this would reduce the deficit to the extent of $4,263,952 a year.

But of course this would not alter the charge upon the public treasury; it would simply change the method of bookkeeping.

But the Management recommend also that the capital cost of the vessels be reduced to what may be considered present replacement value, which they estimate to be in the neighbourhood of $50 per deadweight ton. The capital cost of the ships averaged $191 per deadweight ton.

Again I would remark that this would not alter the obligations of the Federal Government, but would simply be a matter of different bookkeeping.

The Management have also under consideration the possible disposal of a number of smaller vessels of the fleet which are unsuited to successfully compete in overseas trade with vessels of the larger type and which, while suited to coasting trade, are not suited for Canadian inland trade, being too deep in draft for the canals, and of the wrong type. The Canadian coasting trade is limited, and the Management of the Merchant Marine feel that they have more vessels of the smaller type than can be utilized to advantage, while to try to operate these small boats in foreign trade would, they feel, result in serious losses.

There is nothing in this report from the Management which covers the inquiry as to the advisability of installing in New York a Customs agent to allow for freight going from the East to the West, from Vancouver to Halifax or other eastern ports, and from eastern ports to Vancouver, through the Panama Canal, when they have to stop in New York and break bulk.

I may say that personally I am favourable to the idea of establishing customs facilities at the port of New York to allow of this operation being carried on. The matter has not been finally decided by the Government, and is being studied from various angles. I realize that there may be some loss to the railways in certain directions, but I doubt if they will be affected to any degree. As has been well stated by honourable gentlemen who have taken part in this discussion, there will be considerable freight that will move from the East to the West, and from the West to the East, which would not otherwise be exchanged, owing to the heavy railway rates. I believe we must take a large view of the question, and all that will make for the greater prosperity of Canada should, in the last analysis, make for greater prosperity to our whole railway system.

I will convey to my colleagues of the Cabinet the suggestions that have been made and the representations that have come from the members of this House who have spoken on the subject, when the question is finally taken up and decided by them.

Hon. Mr. REID: Some of those vessels have been constructed so that they will carry passengers. Some of them are now on the West Indies route, and are advertised for sale about the first of August. This is the particular season when they might be put on that route—the summer season for tourists. May I ask the honourable leader of this House if he will give this matter personal consideration, and take it up with the Cabinet, and if possible urge that those vessels be given a trial for at least a year? In my opinion those vessels that have been fitted up for passengers are suitable for this service. The loss, if any, would be very small; indeed, I do not think there would be any. The policy of having a Customs Officer at New York would, in addition to promoting good feeling between the East and the West, be of great service to both of those districts, and would afford to British Columbians the opportunity of calling at New York and getting goods shipped either by Canada or by New York.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am very much impressed with the argument that has been made in favour of such a policy, and I will try to carry to the Cabinet the conviction that is within me, for their benefit.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. this day.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Routine proceedings.

SOLDIERS' PENSION, INSURANCE AND CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT BILLS

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Consideration of the Report of the Special Committee to whom was referred:

Bill 203, "An Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act."

Bill 204, "An Act to amend the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act."

Bill 205, "An Act to amend The Pensions Act,"

Together with the amendments made to the said Bills.—(Hon. Mr. Beique.)

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is not the first item. Cannot my honourable friend give an answer to the question as to whether he is going to withdraw the Railway Bill or proceed with it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not ready to withdraw the Bill, and I will have to give explanations why; so, although it appears as the first Order, I think it should give way to this. My honourable friend does not intend to withdraw his amendment for the six months hoist?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If he carries it, that disposes of the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend withdraws the Bill, the amendment falls to the ground. All I want to know is whether my honourable friend is going to withdraw or proceed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is my intention to proceed after I have given some explanations. I have been asked to follow that course, and I suggest that we take the Order as called.

The Senate proceeded to consider the Report of the Special Committee.

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, when this important Committee was formed I hesitated very much in accepting the Chairmanship, because I felt that many members of this House were much better qualified than I was to do the part of the work that always falls to the Chairman; and I must confess that, when I was called upon to exercise the functions of Chairman, I found, even more than I expected, that my mind was not sufficiently prepared for the work, and that it would have been better to have made another choice. However, I have done what I could, and I think I have given enough time and attention to the matter to understand it thoroughly, and to have become possessed of the facts to a sufficient extent. I was helped by the members of the Committee, who were numerous, and amongst whom were several who had had a large experience in the working of the law.

Our attempt in dealing with the Pension Bill as passed by the House of Commons was to render full justice, as far as could be, to the returned soldiers, and, in their own interests, to decrease as much as possible the expense of working out the law. We thought also that it was our duty to see that the Act was not used for the purpose of giving benefits to persons who had never been in contemplation, and who, in justice, should not derive benefits from that law.

It has always been the opinion of Parliament, I take it, that the law should deal liberally with returned soldiers or members of the forces and their dependents, in regard to injuries or disabilities arising from service. This principle has been jealously maintained by the Committee, and I think there should be no ground for criticism in that respect.

It was stated in the press that the Bill as passed by the House of Commons was the Bill as presented to Parliament by the Minister who had the responsibility in matters of that kind. At the outset we found that this was not the case; that there were in the Bill as passed by the House of Commons no less than four different sections which were not in the Bill when it was presented to Parliament, and which were introduced by members in the House of Commons without proper consideration, as the Committee believes.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Is it a fact that any or all of those four clauses which were introduced were recommended by the Ralston Commission?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: None of them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No. We have ascertained from the Report of the Commission, and from examining the Chairman of the Commission himself, that the Commission knew nothing about those. They were never considered by the Royal Commission.

I will refer in a few moments to those four different sections and shall give the clause which the Committee has adopted, as intended to cover such cases as should be taken care of.

The Committee finds that one of the main questions is the effect on pension of Bill 205. The Committee find that under the existing law every soldier disabled during service is pensionable, but under the proposed legislation, that is, under the Bill as passed by the House of Commons, the pension privilege would extend to dependents of all such men upon their death. The evidence before the Committee indicated that the adoption of this new legislation would involve an expenditure which in the course of 25 years would amount approximately to $32,000,000. The Committee thought that it was worth its while to see that the returned soldiers were properly treated, but that the expenditure be curtailed, if it was possible to curtail it.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY I would like to ask just one question. When the honourable gentleman states that the expenditure would amount to $32,000,000 in 25 years, does he mean the expenditure for administration, or does he mean the payment of the claims that would come in?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The amount that would have to be paid.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: In 25 years?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: In 25 years.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is not very serious.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Under that one clause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Under that one clause. The Committee found that under the law as it is now on the Statute Book, ex-service men are entitled to pensions for any disability, whether it was attributable to service or incurred or aggravated during service, and that this provision should be maintained; but that the pension should not pass to dependents unless the disability was attributable to service.

I repeat; the Bill as recommended by the Committee provides that pensions be paid in all cases of disability, whether attributable to or incurred or aggravated during service, but that pensions be not paid to dependents except in the case of attributability to service. That is the distinction which is made between the Committee's recommendation and the clause in the Bill as passed by the House of Commons, which will be found at the foot of page 1 and at the top of page 2 of the Bill as reprinted.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do you give your reasons for that?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Oh, yes, the reasons are given in the report, which is printed. I do not think I should take up the time of the House in reading the reasons. Copies of the report as printed in the Minutes are in the hands of every one of the members.

The second important point relates to insurance. The Committee found that under the original Act ex-service men were under all conditions entitled to take out insurance up to $5,000 without medical examination. The law provided, however, that the Minister might refuse the insurance contract if after investigation the circumstances warranted it. In certain cases it was held that insurance had been taken out in favour of interested people other than dependents, under the 1922 amendment. The Committee decided that of 71 cases 50 would be rejected on this score. The Committee came to the conclusion that the intention of the law was that the insurance should be granted only to ex-soldiers in favour of their dependents, and that ex-soldiers without dependents were ineligible. That is the second ground on which the recommendation of the Committee is not in accordance with the Bill as passed by the House of Commons.

The third ground is this. The Bill as passed by the House of Commons provides for nine different Review Boards and for a Federal Tribunal of Appeal. The Committee, after inquiring what would be the expense—the yearly expense in the operation of that part of the Act alone would be about $500,000—came to the conclusion that one tribunal of appeal, composed of not less than five and not more than seven members, would be able to cope with the work. The members of the Board of Appeal would divide up the work among themselves, and one member would go to one part of the country and another to another part of the country to hear any appeals that would be presented and to pass upon them, subject to review by a tribunal composed of a majority of the Board. That is, if the Board is to be composed of five members, there would have to be three of the members; and the member of the Board who had originally passed upon the case would not form part of that tribunal or Board. The case would be reviewed by men who had not taken part in the original decision. The Committee recommends that those appeals should be limited to cases of entitlement. That is, there would be no right of appeal in cases that concerned only medical opinion, or the question of ratability or the amount to which the party is entitled. In such cases the rates to which a person is entitled are covered by Order in Council and have to be determined by medical men, and the decisions of one Board of, say, three medical men, A, B, and C, should not be reviewed by another Board composed of three other medical men. That would create confusion and open the door to any number of appeals, which would increase considerably the work and expense. With that change the Committee is satisfied that the expense will be considerably reduced, because the number of appeals will be considerably less, and the applicant will have an opportunity to be heard in his own district, and also an opportunity, if he so desire, to be present and to be heard when the appeal is finally passed upon by the Board of Appeal composed of a quorum.

The next point deals with the four sections to which I have referred. I will give the text of the clause which your Committee recommends as meeting such cases. It is to be found on page 541 of the Minutes:

> Any individual case which in the opinion of the majority of the members of the Pension Board and the Appeal Board acting jointly appears to be especially meritorious and for which in said opinion no provision has been made in this Act, because such case did not form part of any class of case, such meritorious case may be made the subject of an investigation and adjudication by way of compassionate pension or allowance irrespective of any schedule to this Act.

Under this clause it will be left to the majority of the members of the Pension Board and of the Board of Appeal, acting jointly, to pass upon any individual cases which have not been provided for under the Act, because they could not properly come within any class. The Committee think that this will enable the Board of Appeal to deal with all meritorious cases which are not otherwise provided for by the Act.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Of what nature would the cases be that would not be covered by the Act, and of which the honourable gentleman speaks as being possibly meritorious?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The four sections to which I have referred are these. The first is subsection 2 of section 2 of the Bill as passed by the House of Commons, namely:

(2) Paragraph (p) of section two of the said Act, as enacted by chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1922, is amended by adding the following thereto: —"and also a mother whose husband is in a helpless and dependent condition."

It was proved before the Committee that this amendment would open the door to abuse and to a large number of cases—we could not determine what would be the number—in which dependents would receive very large amounts. I think there was one case in which the amount would have been exorbitant. Such cases would have fallen under this section.

The next section referred to is section 15 of the Bill as passed by the House of Commons. It again refers to pensions of widows:

15. Subsection one of section thirty-three of the said Act, as amended by chapter sixty-two of the statutes of 1920, is further amended by inserting after the words "married to him" in the second line thereof, the words "within one year after date of discharge from the forces or."

This would have opened the door for the pensioning of large numbers of members of the forces who, being very ill, would have married for the purpose of bringing a dependant wife under that provision.

The next clause is 16—widows' pension again:

Clause 16 of the original Bill has been struck out. It read as follows:—

16. Subsection two of section thirty-three of the said Act is amended by striking out the words "provided that the death occurs within five years after the date of retirement or discharge or the date of commencement of pension."

Clause 17 of the original Bill has been struck out. It read as follows:—

17. Subsection two of section twenty-six of the said Act, as enacted by chapter sixty-two of the statutes of 1920, is amended by adding the following proviso thereto:—

"Provided, however, that the Board of Pension Commissioners shall have discretion to pay the pension to any person who was being, or was entitled to be, supported by the pensioner at the time of his last examination."

The meritorious cases which were intended to be provided by these different clauses can be provided for under the new clause which I have read.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Would this clause making provision for meritorious cases cover any other case than those provided for in the 4 subsections you have mentioned?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, the clause is general; it is intended to cover all such meritorious cases as would come within the clause. It would not be restricted to the 4 sections of the Bill.

Now, I have but one word to add. When the Bills are in Committee of the Whole there are members of the Committee who will be much better able than myself to answer any further questions which may be asked in connection with the Bills. I desire to say, in fairness to the officials of the Department connected with this matter—and in this I am expressing merely my own opinion—that I was impressed by the intelligence, the fairness, and the ability displayed by them. Those officials limited themselves, as was their duty to do, to answering questions of fact. On several occasions questions were asked as to their opinion, and the invariable answer was a refusal to give an opinion, they saying that they were to answer facts and not to give opinions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The witnesses likewise.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: All the witnesses the same, except one witness, Mr. MacNeil, who stated his opinion.

I move that the report be concurred in. In the last part of the report we ask that 5,000 copies of the report be printed for distribution to the soldiers themselves and the public.

It will be found on the face of the report how members of the force are treated in Canada as compared with the treatment given to the forces in other countries. Honourable gentlemen will have the satisfaction, as I had myself, to find, on reading the report, that our soldiers are treated very liberally, as they should be, as compared to those of other countries.

I move that the report be received, and that the Bills referred to in the report be committed to the Committee of the Whole House, with the three Bills.

Hon. W. A. GRIESBACH: Honourable gentlemen, I was a member of the Committee which dealt with this report, and with some portions of the report I am in agreement, and with others I am not. With respect to those portions with which I am not, I shall have an opportunity of discussing them on the second readings of the respective Bills; but there are a few observations with respect to the whole matter embraced in the report which I should like to offer now, as an opportunity may not present itself later.

As a matter of fact, as disclosed by the report of the Royal Commission, that Commission appears to have concerned itself in its travels throughout the country with questions of rights and justice, and of such amelioration as Parliament might provide. It does not appear anywhere in the report or in the proceedings of the Commission that there was an inquiry or a discussion as to what the financial implications would be if the numerous proposals as to amelioration were put into effect by Parliament. I think I may say at once that if the Royal Commission had concerned itself in what the cost to the country would be of carrying out the various schemes and proposals which were laid before them, and which the Royal Commission discussed with the persons who put those schemes before them, we should have a very much more valuable report before us, and a better understanding of the whole matter so far as the public and press are concerned.

I desire to offer a few observations with respect to the Board of Pension Commissioners, and the officials of the Government generally, in addition to what my honourable friend the Chairman of the Committee has just said. I agree with what he has said with regard to those people. The complaint has been made throughout this whole country, and so far as I am aware it has not been controverted, that the Board of Pension Commissioners, in the administration of pension law, were lacking in sympathy. Well, I desire to say far myself at once that I do not ask this Board to interpret the law sympathetically, or sentimentally, or in any other way than according to the well-known principles of interpretation of law. If we are to permit or expect that any body of men charged with the administration of the law will allow sympathy or sentiment to interfere with the interpretation of the law, then a great and incalculable injury will be done not only to ex-service men but to the country as a whole. Therefore I say, if those men interpret the law according to the well-known principles of legal interpretation we shall have an opportunity of knowing whether the law is right or not. If it is not, we can change it.

In my opinion, the Board has been unjustly and unfairly attacked on that count, and on a number of other counts. The Board is silent, necessarily; it cannot defend itself. In agreement with the honourable Chairman, I have found throughout this discussion, and previous to the discussion, as one having to do with hundreds of cases of pension claims, that the members of this Board and the other members of the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment who came before us, and with whom I had dealings previously, are capable, honest, industrious, efficient, and deserve well of this country, and the country is well served by them. On the whole, I do not believe it would be possible to get men who are more able and more conscientious to discharge this difficult task, than the men who came before us, the officials of this Board.

In that respect I am not alone. The Ralston Commission itself, on page 129, says this:

> On the other hand, the heavy responsibilities of the Pension Board have already been referred to. It is obvious that it has nothing to gain by refusing pensions. It could have courted popularity and lightened its work by taking a less determined and zealous attitude, and following the line of least resistance; but that the action taken was bona fide, and in the course of what is considered to be its duty, the Commission is satisfied.

Again I say, Canada is fortunate in having men of this type in the administration of a most intricate law, involving vast sums of money, and dealing in considerations which touch the heart and the conscience and the mind of the people of this country very deeply indeed.

With respect to these three Bills, these facts were disclosed. In the first place, we learned that these Bills had been prepared by the Government without reference to some of their responsible officials, and with very brief and cursory reference to other officials. These Bills were not considered by any Committee of the House of Commons. No member of that House during the discussion made any serious inquiry as to what these Bills would cost the country if put into effect; and no member of the Government volunteered any information to the House of Commons as to what the financial implications of those Bills were.

Bill 205 received in the House of Commons, in one sitting, its second reading, its commitment to the Committee of the Whole House, and its third reading.

These Bills reached the Senate in the closing days of the Session under these circumstances, and I venture to say that when these facts are known the action taken by this House in appointing a Committee to go as fully as possible into the circumstances will be fully concurred in by the general public.

The inquiry has disclosed that these Bills are badly drawn and ill-considered; that it is difficult to know that the results will be so far as ex-service men are concerned, and what the financial effects will be on the country. We find in two of the Bills that an expensive and cumbersome machinery is built up, the result of which is that it will cost one dollar to pay three dollars to the ex-service men of this country. In other words, 25 per cent of the total expenditure contemplated by the House of Commons is deflected from the ex-service men into a costly and cumbersome bureaucracy; and the extent to which the report of the Committee deals with this has my entire approval.

Lastly, we find that these tremendously important measures are brought to this House in the closing days of the Session, necessitating an inquiry which must necessarily be hasty, which must necessarily be incomplete, and which, with the best will in the world on the part of the members of this House, must result in a certain inefficiency in dealing with the matter of the proposal before us.

I am hopeful that, with respect to those matters wherein I disagree with the report—a disagreement which is shared by other honourable members of this House who are overseas men—that with an opportunity for reflection, with the passing of time, other members of this House, hustled as they have been in the matter, may in a year or so agree with us.

I am perfectly satisfied that in the Committee the members approached the matter in the very best frame of mind, with a genuine desire to be of service to the ex-service men, and at the same time with an eye to their obligations to the people of this country as a whole. That is all I wish to say at present; but as the various phases of the Bills come before us I will have more to say.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Beique was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do I understand that the three Bills are now committed to the Committee of the Whole?

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Yes.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 203, an Act in respect of the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in the Chair.

On section 1—where applicant died prior to delivery of policy, the insurance is payable if application approved and premium paid:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Page 544 of the Minutes of the Preceedings.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The amendments to Bill 203 will be found at page 546.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move that Bill 203 be amended as follows:

Page 1, line 8.—After "persons" insert "with actual dependents."

Page 1, line 11.—After "that" insert "certain of."

Page 1, line 15.—After "dead" insert "provided such applicant had any person actually dependant upon him at the date of making application for insurance."

Page 1, line 30.—After "death" insert: "Provided such applicant had any person actually dependant upon him at the date of making application for insurance."

Page 2, line 10.—Leave out from "applicants" to "they" in line 11, both inclusive, and substitute therefor: "applicant now living shall be given the right to insure, provided such applicant had any person actually dependant upon him at the date of making application for insurance, whether he."

Hon. F. B. BLACK: When this Bill was introduced into this Chamber I made some remarks indicating my views with regard to it and the other Bills referred the special Committee for consideration. At that time I stated that Bill 203 in my opinion should be passed as it came to us from the other Chamber. My reasons for saying that are as follow.

The Act of 1920 gave the impression to the returned ex-service men that, irrespective of any conditions, every man was eititled to insurance. I am quite aware that if the Act is read from beginning to end there are conditions which limit that. Nevertheless, that impression was broadly disseminated among the returned men; and, further than that, for a period every individual soldier who applied for insurance got it. For that reason, and for no other, it occurred to me that the 71 cases affected by Bill 203 ought to be considered not entirely as a correct interpretation of the law would indicate, but sympathetically.

Some very pertinent remarks have been made by the honourable member for Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), with all of which I agree. There are some things to which perhaps all of us who served overseas take exception, and my opinion with regard to this Bill is still as I expressed it in this House on another occasion. What reconciled me to this Bill as amended is the fact that each of these 71 cases will be considered and will be given an opportunity to establish claims which, in my opinion, are just claims.

Hon. W. H. SHARPE: Before this clause passes, I wish to add a word of protest. I feel, and have felt all along, that this Bill should pass as it came from the House of Commons some days ago. There are 71 cases of returned men who made their applications under regulations formulated by the Department, some of whom died before the Department had an opportunity to act. As they came in under the regulations laid down by the Department, I think it is only fair that the Bill should be passed as it came from the Commons.

35 out of 71 men have passed away, and there are 36 that are supposed to be still living, and the Ralston report recommends that payments be made at once in the case of the 35 men who have died, and that investigation be made into the other 36 cases.

Hon. J. A. CALDER: Will the honourable gentleman allow me just a moment? He states that these applications were all in, and that under the regulations in existence they would have been accepted. As a matter of fact, in so far as the officials dealing with the matter were concerned, some of the cases were actually rejected. They were referred to the Minister of Finance, and because of the fact that the House of Commons was sitting and that a Committee of that House was going to deal with the matter, he said: "Just wait and we will refer the whole matter to that Committee." But, as I said, as a matter of fact some of those applications had been actually rejected. Let me give you one example. A man applied for $1,000; the application was received on April 22nd, 1922; death occurred on October 3rd, 1922; the application was rejected on May 18th, 1922, on account of serious illness. In other words, we must not assume that all those opplications were simply received and were lying there. Some of them had been rejected. But, as I say, the Minister of Finance, instead of putting his final stamp of approval or disapproval on them, said: "We will let the Parliamentary Committee deal with them."

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What is the exact difference between the Bill and the proposed amendment?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The Bill that came from the Commons provided that all of the 71 applicants should be granted insurance, and that the dependents of the 35 who have died should receive the insurance money.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The 35 had no dependents.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: How is it changed, then?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The amendments propose that we should go back to what was the apparent intention of Parliament when the Returned Soldiers Insurance Act was passed. While it is quite true that every soldier had the right to apply for insurance without medical examination, no matter what his condition was, and while it is true that throughout the country all the soldiers were under the impression that they could get insurance by simply applying for it, that is not the law and never was. That is where a great many people have gone wrong in their impression of the Statute. In the original statute, section 13 gives the Minister of Finance absolute discretion to refuse any application.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: For what reason?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: For any reason he pleases. Let me read it. It is as follows:

The Minister may refuse to enter into an insurance contract in any case where there are in his opinion sufficient grounds for his refusing.

So it is not the law and never was intended to be the law that every soldier could get insurance to the extent of $5,000, regardless of his condition and all other circumstances, simply by applying for it.

Hon. G. V. WHITE: Was there any refusal made by the Minister under that provision?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I have had the record of these 71 cases placed in my hands by the responsible officials of the Department. This record shows that even the cases of those who were actually refused, and whose applications were not accepted, were each referred to the Minister for approval, and he said: "We will wait and hand it over to this Parliamentary Committee."

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Were those applications refused or just held in abeyance?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I think they were simply held in abeyance until such time as the Parliamentary Committee would deal with the law.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The Minister was the only one who could refuse.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. STANFIELD: Under this recommendation of the Committee, how many of those 35 cases will be able to get their insurance?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: You mean of the 71?

Hon. Mr. STANFIELD: I mean of the 35 now dead.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Under our recommendations on this Bill, every one of those who had immediate dependents—a wife, children, father, mother, dependent brothers or dependent sisters.

What we have tried to safeguard against is what you might call the commercializing of this law. From the evidence that came before us it would appear that certain persons who are not dependent upon soldiers at all would get a man to insure at the last minute, when death impending, in order that some person who was not a dependent would get the benefit of the insurance.

Let me give one of two examples of what actually happened. Take this case—I will not give his regimental number or his name: "Amount applied for, $5,000. Beneficiary, parents. Application received February 7th, 1922. Application rejected March 12, 1922, on account of serious illness. No dependents". In other words, the parents were not dependent upon this man in any way according to the information in the possession of the Department.

Here is another one: "Amount applied for, $5,000. Beneficiary, future wife—brother, alternative." That is, if he had no wife, his brother was the alternative. "Application received, November 10, 1922. Application approved, November 11, 1922. Death occurred November 19, 1922. The policy had not been delivered, and claim not admitted in view of the fact that applicant was in hospital when he signed application, evidently in very serious condition, and no one dependent upon him."

We tried to lay down the principle—and I am convinced it was the intent of Parliament at the time the original Act was passed—that insurance would be granted to those men when there were dependents who would get the moneys accruing from the policy in case of death. It was never intended at all that collaterals, more or less disinterested persons, should come in at the last minute and acquire that benefit. That principle is carried out in the amendment of 1922, and we are simply trying to amend this Bill so as to carry out the intent of Parliament as shown in the amending Bill of 1922.

Now let me ask this. If we adopt this clause, who is going to suffer? Is there any reason why Parliament should provide by law that this class of soldier, many of them practically on their death-beds, should get insurance up to $5,000 and pay it over to someone not dependent on them?

Some Hon. SENATORS: No.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I think it is very important that a number of these cases should be put on record so that the public may know exactly what is the situation.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: There is no doubt in the world that when this law or regulation was brought into effect it was to give insurance, not to the well man who had returned from overseas, but to the man who had been wounded or had taken sick, or something along that line. That was the whole idea from the very first, of giving this insurance, because if a man was in such shape that he could get insurance from an insurance company he would not be bothered with the regulations in connection with the Government insurance. This was for wounded returned soldiers, and I claim, and always have claimed, that every one of those 71 applicants who came properly under the regulations is entitled to his insurance.

My honourable friend from Regina (Hon. Mr. Calder) says that they never came under these regulations. I will admit that the boys out in the country, or the boys in the city, unless they took particular pains to find out, did not know the regulations but I want to tell you that 90 per cent of the boys who went overseas and returned were under the impression that no matter what the condition of a man might be he was entitled to insurance.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR May I ask for information? What was the object of this insurance? It was to provide against what, or for what? That seems to be the point.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE I suppose the object was the same as that of any other insurance. Why does any man insure?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Was not the real object the protection of his dependents?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: I do not think so. I will admit that there has been some fraud in connection with this matter; from what I have heard I do not think there is any doubt about that. But what is there that we go up against to-day in which there is not some fraud? I say that if these boys came in under the regulations laid down by the Department, they are entitled to their insurance, and we have no right to amend the Bill and cut them off.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I support the amendment for several reasons. I believe there has been fraud in a most repellant form. That is to say, a man lying at the point of death has been insured by interested persons who subsequently endeavoured or succeeded in drawing the insurance. After all, the pension was to benefit a dependent, and as a matter of fact, the present situation arises—I will not say from a neglect of duty or from indifference, but from a certain sort of carelessness on the part of the Department of Finance. Here the Act stood; applications were coming in; the Board expressed some doubt as to the propriety of certain applications, and the matter was referred to the Department of Finance. The Department hesitated. They delayed taking action. Then they referred the matter to the Committee. The 71 cases have accumulated in that way.

Now, I support the amendment for this reason, that these cases will now be referred back to the Finance Minister. He or his deputies are responsible for the situation that has arisen, and if he looks up Hansard of the Senate he will find therein the opinion which I now express, that, having got the Government and the country and himself into the difficulty that now exists, he should give to the amendment which we are about to enact an interpretation which will do substantial justice to all the deserving cases under the Act.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Béique was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move further that section 2 of the Bill be amended by striking out the words "applicants who are now living shall be given the right to insure, whether they," and by substituting the words "applicant now living shall be given the right to insure, provided such applicant has any person actually dependant upon him at the date of making application for insurance, whether he;" and by inserting after the word "shall," in line 15, the words, "subject to the above proviso;" and by inserting after the word "applicants," in line 19, the words "actually had dependants and had."

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PENSION BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Commitee on Bill 205, an Act to amend the Pension Act.

Hon. Mr. Bradbury in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

Subsection 1 of section 2 was agreed to.

On subsection 2 of section 2—"the war":

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move that subsection 2 be struck out of the Bill. That is the provision regarding the widowed mother. It is one of the clauses to which I referred.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Has a provision to that effect been recommended by the Royal Commission?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No, it was not before the Royal Commission.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: The mother whose husband is in a helpless dependent condition will, as I understand, be able to come before the Board and have the case considered?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, there can be consideration of any special cases.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I did not hear what the honourable gentleman said, as there is a good deal of noise down here; but before the amendment is carried I desire to say that the intention was to make a wife whose husband was entirely crippled rank as a widow. We—that is to say, the ex-service men—considered that without doubt an amendment of this sort should carry, for the reason that the woman whose husband is absolutely paralyzed is worse off than a widow. On consideration, we are inclined to think that such a case—

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Is the honourable gentleman speaking of subsection 2, or of the amendment now proposed?

Hon Mr. GRIESBACH: The amendment is merely to strike out subsection 2, and I am speaking to subsection 2 as it now stands. We consent to the amendment on the distinct understanding—and we are placing on Hansard what I am now saying for the purposes of interpretation—that this is a meritorious case which it will be proper for the tribunal we are about to create to consider with a view to amelioration. That is the understanding on which we would consent to the striking out of this subsection.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: If her husband got better, what would you do?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: That is a matter of medical opinion. If the husband completely recovered, then the case would not longer be meritorious.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: There would have to be another Act?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Not at all. Pensions are constantly increased and lowered or cancelled. That is a matter of rating.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

On section 3—disabilities in respect of which pensions claimed:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move;

That section eleven of the said Act, as enacted in by chapter sixty-two of the statutes of 1920, and amended by chapter forty-five of the statutes of 1921, and by chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1922, is repealed, and the following section is substituted therefor:

"11. (1) The Commission shall award pensions to or in respect of members of the forces who have suffered disability in accordance with the rates set out in Schedule A of this Act, and in respect of members of the forces who have died in accordance with the rates set out in Schedule B of this Act, when the disability or death in respect of which the application for pension is made, was attributable to military service as such. Any disability from which a member of the forces who served in an actual theatre of the Great War was suffering at the time of his discharge, shall for pension purposes be deemed to be attributable to or to have been incurred or aggravated during his military service, unless and until it be established by the Commission that the disability was not attributable to or incurred or aggravated during such service."

(1920, c. 62, s. 3. as amended by 1921, c. 45, s. 1 and 1922 c. 38, s. 5).

"(2) No deduction shall be made from the degree of actual disability of any member of the forces who has served in a theatre of actual war on account of any disability or disabling condition which existed in him at the time at which he became a member of the forces provided that no pension shall be paid for a disability or disabling condition which at such time was wilfully concealed, was obvious, was not of a nature to cause rejection from service, or was a congenital defect;

"(3) An applicant shall not be denied a pension in respect of disability resulting from injury or disease or the aggravation thereof incurred during military service or in respect of the death of a member of the forces resulting from such injury or disease or the aggravation thereof solely on the ground that no substantial disability or disabling condition is considered to have existed at the time of discharge of such member of the forces;

(d) * * * * * * * * *

(e) * * * * * * * * *

"(4) Subject to the proviso in subsection (2) of this section, when a pension has been awarded to a member of the forces who has served in a theatre of actual war, it shall be continued, increased, decreased or discontinued, as if the entire disability had been incurred on service.

(2) * * * * * * * * *

"(5) The Commission may require a pensioner to submit periodically in such form as may in the opinion of the Commission be necessary or advisable, a statutory or other declaration that he is the person to whom the pension is payable, and that his dependents in respect of whom he is in receipt of additional pension are living and are being supported and maintained by him, and in the event of his refusing or neglecting to submit such certificate, the Commission may suspend future payments of pension until the same is received."

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Does the honourable gentleman, the Chairman of the Committee, intend to lead the discussion of this question?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No, I leave it to the honourable gentleman.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: This clause, honourable gentlemen, may be described as the essential meat of this Bill. The situation is this. There are two pension principles, of which the House has heard a good deal in the last few days,—the insurance principle and the "due to service" principle. The insurance principle may be described as giving entitlement to a pension for any injury producing a disability which is due to the man's service in the army; that is to say, from the date of his enlistment to the date of his discharge It is called the insurance principle because, in effect, the State says, "Anything that may happen to you during your period of service will be made good by the State." That is the so-called insurance principle. The other principle of pensioning is described sometimes as the "due to service," which in effect means that a man is pensionable for a disability resulting from an injury received by him while in the service, due to some form of military service. An example will be given of each case. First of all, as to the insurance principle. A man joins the army, finds his way to England, goes to London on leave and is injured in a motor accident. Under the "due to service" principle he would not be pensioned, for the reason that he had not been injured while engaged in military service. Under the insurance principle, however, he would be pensioned, because he was injured while in military service.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We maintain that.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I have made that plain. The next step is to deal with the period 1919, in which our Parliament legislated that members of the forces who had a disability resulting from an injury received while on service, or in accordance with the insurance plan, were entitled to a pension, and, flowing from that entitlement, the dependents of such men, in the event of death, were also entitled to a pension. Such was the law from 1919 until the 1st day of September, 1920. An amendment in the year 1920 produced a different state of affairs. Then it was enacted that the dependents of a man who had suffered a disability due to any injury sustained while in the service, but whose injury was not attributable to military service, should not have a pension; that the only dependents who might continue to be pensionable in the event of the death of a pensioner, were the dependents of those pensioners whose injury, whatever it might be, was due to military service. You see at once that by the passing of the Act of 1920 there were cut off a class of dependent persons who previous to that date had been entitled to pension. Now we have before us a Bill which in effect restores the pension principle of 1919—the pension principle whch was withdrawn in 1920.

Now, honourable gentlemen, in considering whether or not we should pass the amending Bill, there are, it seems to me, only two questions: the question of justice and right on the one hand, and the question of cost on the other.

I realize that while I may establish the justice and right of granting certain pensions, the House may decide that it is just and right, although the country cannot afford to do so. I will deal with that question separately. In the meantime, I address myself to the question of justice and right.

I go back to the beginning of things, in a search to ascertain what was the contract between the people of this country and the men who constituted the Expeditionary Force. I shall not look for that contract in any written document, nor in any Act of Parliament. I shall look for it—and I think I shall find it—in the statements of 10,000 recruiting officers, in the statements of public men, in the statements of societies and organizations and newspapers from coast to coast, made in an endeavour to secure men for the Expeditionary Force. It was stated that any man who gave up his civil occupation and joined the Force for the purpose of proceeding overseas would be fully and absolutely protected, not only in himself, but also as to all those dependent upon him. What difference, after all, does it make, now that the war is over, now that it is an episode of the past—what difference does it make whether a man lost his leg in a bus accident in London or lost it on the field? It is more than probable that that man may have been on leave from the trenches in France for eight days—

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman a question. Why were not the venereal conditions taken into consideration? I do not know why the position of things as respects venereal diseases was not gone into, because that was as much a war fatality as anything else. Although I had four sons there, they did not belong to that category, but I wanted to hear what the honourable gentleman had to say on it.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I think the argument is that a man may escape venereal disease if he wishes to. I was dealing with the contract that existed. I leave it to the judgment of the House whether it was not the fact that all the discussions that took place, and the whole attitude of the people, related to the insurance principle. The people of this country in effect pledged themselves to men who took up military service and went to the war that their dependants would be looked after, as well as themselves. There can be no escape from that by any man who had anything to do with the war, either in Canada or elsewhere. Now we have the Act of 1920, which alters the principle of the Act of 1919. Parliament having accepted the principle and having carried out the contract in that Act, the Act of 1920 breaks the contract.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What was the justification alleged for the Act of 1920?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: What I think happened was this. I think the amendment was slipped in, and it passed without observation—because all the members of Parliament and the members of this House are continually learning more about this Pension Act. Five or six days ago it would have been possible to make many statements to our Committee which could not have been made five days later. If any of us feel now that we failed to ask any questions in Committee that we should have asked, it was because we did not know of them. I do not know how this amendment got in, and perhaps it is not germane to the discussion how it got in, but the fact is it got in, and it constitutes a breach of contract.

Let me pass from that for a moment to discuss the unwisdom, shall I say, and the unfairness, of endeavouring to make a distinction between the two sorts of injured men and their dependents. Suppose a man is injured in a bus accident in London when on leave from the trenches. Now, leave to England or some other place was as essential a part of a soldier's life as was his food and his clothing; it was as important to his morale that he should leave the trenches for a period as that he should have food and be clothed and properly housed. Those of us who were there know that absolutely, and honourable gentlemen who have imagination will know that it must be so

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Was the soldier on leave still under pay?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Oh, yes. The man was sent to England or elsewhere in order to recuperate him and build up his health; yet if he suffered an accident under those conditions we say his accident is not attributable to military service as such, and consequently, under the Act of 1920, although he may receive a pension for his injury, his dependants do not receive a pension.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Take the case of a man who was in the trenches and had to walk back to a resting camp, say five miles, and on coming back he stumbled into a hole and broke his leg; he would partake, would he not?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I think he would, if he was walking along the road. But suppose, for the sake of argument, that he was passing an orchard in which there was a good deal of fruit hanging from the trees, and he climbed the fence and climbed a tree to get a couple of apples, and he fell off the tree and broke his leg, he would get a pension, but his dependants would not, because, though he had been injured while in military service, his injury was not due to military service.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If he was entitled to a pension, his dependants should be entitled to a pension.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Quite so. The Act of 1919 gave to the man injured on service a pension, and provided that in the event of his death his dependants should receive a pension. The Act of 1920 continues that provision with respect to the man injured due to service, but it provides that the dependants of the pensioner injured while on the service in the way I have described are not entitled to pension. Therefore, looking back on the war as an episode, you have in this country, living side by side, two women. The husband of one woman had his leg broken in a runaway accident by the artillery running over him; he got a pension; he is dead, and she gets a pension. The other woman's husband, we will say, climbed an apple tree to pick an apple, or was injured in a bus accident in London; in his lifetime he got a pension, but on his death his wife does not get a pension.

Now, it is a question of contract, and I think I have established the contract. It is a question of right and justice as one looks at it in retrospect, so to speak; and I think I have established my case, to my own satisfaction at all events, and I believe to the satisfaction of the ex-service men in this House. It is to be borne in mind that from 1919 to 1920 the pensions were running on the insurance principle. In 1920 that is cut off, so that you have people in Canada today, women and children, drawing pensions for husbands and fathers who were pensioned on the insurance principle between certain dates, and not pensioned after the year—a form of injustice and unfairness that will be apparent to every one of you.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: How will these amendments affect the ex-service men—that is, the Act of 1920 and the amendments proposed now?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The Bill proposes to restore the conditions of 1919 as altered by 1920—the repeal of the 1920 Act, and restoring the conditions of 1919.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What about the Committee?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The Committee proposes to strike out the paragraph in the Bill, and leave the law as it was in 1920.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They do not intend to legislate.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: They do not intend to legislate in respect to that portion of the Bill. I should add that at the present moment, under the interpretation of the law, all men who suffered an injury while on service, resulting in disability, are pensionable, but only those dependants who belong to a man who suffered an injury due to military service receive a pension.

Hon Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: How wide is military service? What is an injury received in military service?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Due to military service? Give me any case you like.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I do not mean physical injury. What is the extent?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Here is a man who desires to go from one place to another, and he is run over by a motor car. He can suffer injury that is not due to his military service. That is my argument. Now, having turned to the question of justice and right, I must in fairness turn to the question of cost, because trouble has been that everybody is willing to discuss the rights of soldiers, but very few people are willing to discuss with any degree of courage and common sense the question of cost, and we will never get anywhere in endeavouring to put our ex-service men in a proper position unless at the same time that we discuss the rights and obligations we also discuss cost.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I go with you all the way except that. I think the question of justice and right is more important than the question of cost.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Quite so. The question of justice and right is of paramount importance, but what good is it to arrive at a conclusion as to justice and right when we have exceeded the financial ability of the country? And, after all, a bankrupt Canada is no good to anybody, and least of all to the ex-service men. Now, I want to discuss the cost that has been given. We have been given the cost involved in the passing of the Bill as it stands, without the amendment proposed by this Committee.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The additional cost?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I am talking about what it would cost if we passed this clause.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Additional to what we are paying at present?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Yes; whenever I speak of cost I mean additional cost.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You mean the cost additional by restoring the condition of 1919?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: 1919 on top of of the present expenses. I said that the law of 1919 stood to September 1920, and at that time the law was altered, and if we pass the Bill and reject the amendment we have to deal with the arrears. We have to deal with those people who, had the law not been changed in 1920, would continue to have been dealt with under the Pension Act; so I shall refer to those people as the arrears to be dealt with.

We asked the Board of Pension Commissioners what it would cost to deal with those arrears, and I take it that the Board of Pension Commissioners could give us precise information on that point. The information that they gave us is that it would cost $450,000 in a lump sum to compensate or to deal with those arrears.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Up to date?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Up to the 31st of March of the present year. That, I take it, is definite and known amount to settle with them,—$450,000. Then the question arises, what would the obligation be with respect to the future? Upon that score it was apparent to the members of the Committee that only an estimate could be given. It is obvious to the Committee that men die, and that the pension of a man thereupon ceases. I you consult the tables in the Act, you will see a pensioner gets a pension himself during his lifetime according to his disability, and according to his disability his wife gets something, and his children get something. On his death the pension to him ceases, and the widow goes off what is called the Married Women's Allowance, and comes on the pension; and I fancy, although I have no information on that score, that the pension to the widow and the pension to the children after the husband's death will exceed what the pension to the husband and the allowance to the woman and the children were before the death. That is why we have an increase due to this clause.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: At what age does the pension to the children stop?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Seventeen and sixteen; under very special circumstances there may be provision for a year or so longer to provide for higher education.

Now, the Board of Pension Commissioners estimate that for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1924, the amount required in respect of this class will be $100,000; and then they make this assertion, which I am not able to controvert, and which honourable members will find a little difficult to understand—they make this extraordinary assertion, and it may be perfectly sound, based upon tables of mortality, that $100,000 would be required to cover the period from March 31, 1923, to March 31, 1924, and that every year thereafter the amount will be increased by $100,000. That is to say, the first year, $100,000; the second year, $200,000; the third year, $300,000; and so on; the tenth year, $1,000,000; the twentieth year, $2,000,000; the twenty-fifth year, due to mortality, a larger amount. In the twenty-fifth year, when the decrease will begin, the total amount which will have been paid, according to this estimate, with respect to this class, will be $32,000,000 in 25 years. In the twenty-fifth year I suppose the amount paid would be $2,500,000.

I may say that this estimate is questioned. I have examined the questioning, and I am bound to say that the questioning is no stronger than the estimate. The questioning may be right or wrong, and this estimate may be right or wrong. After all, these man are the advisers of the Governement in matters of this sort, and we must deal with their information as correct.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Quite a small percentage in number would come under this clause.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Quite a small percentage.

Hon. Mr. TODD: What I am trying to get at is this. If this class of pension, which I imagine would be small in proportion, amounts to $32,000,000 in 25 years, what would the total be?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Our pensions now are $31,000,000 odd a year, and if they were not increased or decreased they would amount in the aggregate to $310,000,000 in 10 years. I was going to say that, after the consideration of $32,000,000, one is apt to be staggered.

Hon Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Have we not paid out at the end of 25 years $325,000,000?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: You pay $100,000 the first year; $200,000 the second year—that is $300,000; we pay out $300,000 the third year—that is $600,000. You pay $100,000 each year and add $100,000 each year. I have not made the computation. I have accepted these figures, and I think the Board of Pension Commissioners is prepared to stand by them.

I have discussed the justice of the case. The cost is before us. It is represented to me, first, that an injustice was done in cutting these people off, and that there are in Canada to-day a number of wives and children and not a few dependent parents who are urgently in need of this assistance by reason of the loss of the breadwinner of the family. Having regard to the cost of the present Pension List, which stands at $31,000,000, I would say this with respect to this clause. If we were to strike out all the other provisions of this Bill that involve cost or were to strike out this clause, personally I would prefer this clause. It would increase your Pension bill $100,000 the first year, as I have described, and so on. It increases the Pension bill no more than $2,500,000 in any one year, and that is in the 25th year.

The question is whether we, in addition to all the other charges we have to meet, can afford to add to our present Pension bill a sum of money which in the first year amounts to $550,000, which at no time throughout the whole period amounts in any one year—and that only in the last year—to more than $2,500,000. As I say, this clause is the meat of this Bill. If we are to increase the Pension list anywhere, I submit here is the place to do it.

I have given the matter thought and consideration, and I have undertaken to differ from my colleagues on the Committee, and, with respect to this clause, I will support the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the overseas forces, I am very much interested in the explanation of the honourable gentleman from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) of the various clauses of this Bill. It must be apparent to members of this House that those who had the opportunity of serving on this particular Committee were in a much better position to familiarize themselves with the terms of it and what was proposed than those who were not acting on the Committee and who had to wait for the information contained in the Report.

I do not propose to enter into any discussion in detail as to the information which has been advanced by the honourable gentleman from Edmonton. I could not throw any more light on the subject than he has done. But, having received the information which he has given us, I must say that he has created an impression upon my mind to the extent at least of encouraging me to support the Bill as it was introduced into this House.

I not only commanded a unit overseas, but I enlisted thousands of men in Western Canada and encouraged them to join the overseas forces. In doing so I had to give certain assurances to them and their families before they entered the service. I told them, as almost everyone did who recruited men for overseas, that in cases of emergency their families and dependents would be properly protected and cared for. I did not tell them, and I would have been ashamed to tell them that, if it so happened that they met with an accident while on leave or when they happened to be disengaged from military service, their dependents at home would not receive the protection of the people of Canada. I assured them, as I have no doubt other men recruiting overseas forces did, that they would be amply protected if they gave their services for war purposes.

When they went overseas the people at home broke into song, and said they would keep the home fires burning; but they did not say they would only keep them burning while the men were actively engaged in the front line trenches, and that they would entirely neglect a man who might be injured in a football game while in reserve, and physically incapacitated. The contract, as stated by the honourable gentleman from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) between the people of Canada on the one part and the men who served overseas on the other, was that the State should own the services of the men who enlisted from the time they enlisted until they were discharged. That was the contract, whether stated or implied; and that is the contract which the people of this country are morally bound to maintain in any legislation that may be brought before this House.

The best evidence that that was the contract is the fact that it was embodied in the law; and I must confess that I am not very proud of the action taken—although I must have been a party to it, for I was a member of the Chamber at the time—when this Parliament reneged from the contract and passed the legislation of 1920, possibly because they felt it was costing too much money. But, having done what I did, now that this Bill is before us for making right what in my opinion was an injustice, I am prepared to make amends by supporting the Bill as originally brought to this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: While I am in accord with both of the amendments proposed by the Committee, on this point I propose to vote for the Bill as it originally stood. I am a great believer in the carrying out of contracts, and, as pointed out by both the honourable gentleman from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) and the honourable member for Regina (Hon. Mr. Laird), a contract was entered into the people of Canada and the soldiers that the dependents of the soldiers would be looked after. I shall vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POPE: As one of those who did not go overseas owing to the age limit and some other conditions, I repeated very often, upon every platform upon which I stood in an endeavour to induce men to go overseas, that if the opportunity ever came to me when I could do anything for them or their dependents I would avail myself of that opportunity. I am going to do so to-day by supporting the Bill.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Honourable gentleman, I want to make it clear what amount is involved in this proposition to restore conditions to what they were in 1919 $32,000,000?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The arrears are $450,000; there is $100,000 for the first year, and $100,000 is added each year afterwards, so that 10 years from now the payments will have been $10,000,000; 20 years from now they will have been $20,000,000; and by the 25th year, when the decline commences, we shall have paid with respect to this class a total sum of $32,000,000.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: As I have to vote upon this question, I suppose I should give some reasons before I cast my vote in favour on the proposition embodied in this Bill, which is to restore conditions as they were under the Bill of 1919.

We had a proposal before us the other day to build branch lines of railway, involving an estimated expenditure running into $100,000,000. No one could exactly foresee what amount would be spent; but anybody who knows anything of the cost of building a railway under present conditions, and the cost of equipping and running it, can figure out fairly well the enormous expenditure that is involved in such a proposition. There was not a single reason advanced in support of that proposition; there were no details given and nothing that would convince anyone of the necessity for it; yet the House of Commons, including the Minister of Finance, did not hesitate to pass the Bill and send it over to us. If, in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, a proposition of that magnitude could be put through without sending this country into bankruptcy, I do not see why we should hesitate for one moment to support a proposal to restore conditions as they were in 1919 to the men who served this country in a great emergency.

I cannot say anything that would strengthen the position of those who are arguing in favour of restoring those conditions, more than has been said by the honourable gentleman from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach). It seems to me that he puts the case so very strongly that anything I can say would not add any strength to his case, but might weaken it.

I was not eligible for military service when the war was on; I did not raise any battalions; and I did not go overseas. Others went overseas and foutht my battles, and I think the very least I can do is to endeavour to assist the dependents of those who took part in the war and fought to preserve to me the conditions as they exist in this country and throughout the Empire to-day. I heartily support this proposition, and I think every honourable member of this House will feel that it is his duty to do his utmost to place the dependents of the men who died from injuries received overseas, no matter what may have been the cause, in the very best condition that this country can afford.

There are votes sanctioned in the House of Commons, and have been during the present Session, that are not nearly as deserving as this, and for that reason I am heartilly in accord with the honourable gentleman from Edmonton in his proposal to restore the Act of 1919.

Hon. Mr. TURGEON: Honourable gentlemen, I have not gone to war either, but I am responsible for hundreds in my riding who went at my request. My promise to them was that they would be well rewarded, and that their dependents would be looked after.

I was greatly interested in the explanation given by the honourable gentleman from Edmonton, whose career as a soldier is well known, not only in Canada but in other parts of the Empire, and I may say that it will be my pleasure to vote with him on this Bill and to ask the country and the Government, both present and future, to economize in other lines and to develop our ressources in every way possible in order that we may pay a just debt to those who saved us from the slavery of the Germans.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: We have under consideration at the present time section 3 of the Bill, which, without question is the most important part of all these Bills, and the one, possibly, that involves the largest expenditure. When you come to take into consideration the amount of money involved, I think I may say that, so far as the Committee is concerned, and, if I am not much mistaken, so far as the great majority of the members of this House are concerned, it is not worrying us very much, because, after all, it is not very great.

I ask that this body do not too hastily come to a conclusion as to what should be done with this section. I will go further than that, and say that, outside the members of the Committee, who have for four or five days wrestled with this question in all its bearings, I doubt very much if many members of the Senate clearly understand what it means; and I would ask that we be not carried away simply by sentimental appeals and that sort of thing. We should clearly understand exactly what we are doing, and why we are doing it.

It is quite true that in 1919 the Parliament of Canada gave to a certan class of dependents the right of pensions; but subsequently, one year afterwards, the other Chamber appointed a Committee, and that Committee wrestled with this question day in and day out, along with other questions, for weeks. and finally came to the conclusion that the decision which Parliament had previonsly given- should be reversed. Am I stating the position fairly? I say that in the year 1920 a Parliamentary Committee was appointed in another place for the purpose of considering this question which we are now trying to settle in an hour's debate, many of us not knowing the facts at all; and I say that after full deliberation in the other House the conclusion was reached that the pensionability right that had been given previously, and perhaps without due consideration at the time, should be taken away.

The problem came before the Committee of the Senate, and, so far as I am concerned, I regret very much that we had not a great deal more time in which to consider all the questions that are raised by these three Bills. I consider it unfortunate indeed. I do not blame anybody. The Ralston Commission's Report came down late. Parliament had not these Reports before it. But I say it is unfortunate that in dealing with these various problems, which are exceedingly technical and complicated, these reports did not come down to us, and that the members of the other House had not the fullest opportunity to examine every phase of the propositions, from top to bottom, in order to understand their nature and effect.

The position is very simple, and I would like to state it in such a way that every member of the House may understand what is the real problem before us;—and I will not state it in the language of the Bills, because that is rather technical.

A man who is in the forces goes on furlough or holiday to visit friends up in the North of Scotland. He goes out shooting, and he is shot somewhere in the body by one of his companions, and is injured permanently. The injury is not due to military service in any sense. That man, under our law and practice as they are now, and as they always have been, gets a pension, and it will continue as long as he lives. But, he dies, under the existing law, his dependents will not receive a pension.

Another man goes on furlough to Paris. He is walking along or crossing a street and a motor bus hits him. He is not on military service at all, but is in Paris on leave—enjoying himself, if you like—when he is struck by the motor car. Under our law and practice, that man himself gets a pension as long as he lives, but if he dies his dependents are not pensioned.

Now, the question that is raised by the present section is this: should the dependents of those two men, injured as they were, receive a pension when those men die?

What do we find? We tried to get evidence as to the law prevailing elsewhere, and we find that in Great Britain and in the United States the law is a little different. For example, we find that, if I remember the evidence correctly, in certain classes of those cases in Great Britain the man does not get a pension at all, but if he lives for 20 years and then dies his dependents will be pensioned.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Seven years.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Seven years, is it? For seven years the man himself does not get any pension, but if he dies at the end of the seventh year, his dependents are pensioned.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: No, no; at any time within the seven years.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Oh, he must have died within the seven years? Well, it just shows the position we were in, so far as evidence was concerned. At any rate, under the English law and practice, that class of men, as I understand, does not himself get a pension, but if he happens to die within seven years, his dependents will. On the other hand, so far as the United States is concerned, the most that we could gather from evidence given by one of the chief officers of the Pension Bureau—Dr. Rogers, was it not?—was to the effect that they stretched their law and regulations to such an extent as to give pensions to dependents in some of these classes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Not in some of these classes, but in some cases.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Yes, in certain cases. That is the way I understand the evidence. You must remember, honourable gentlemen, this question was thrown at us at a very late stage. I would have liked to have had another three weeks to examine it. For the past four or five days we have worked night and day in order to get at the bottom of the question. So far as we can learn, the practice of the United States as regards the dependents of men of that class, that is, men whose injuries were not attributable to service, is to stretch their laws and regulations so as to make provision for individual cases, or certain kinds of cases.

What do we say in our report? Read our report. We have not committed ourselves one way or the other as regards this principle. We are not asking Parliament to commit itself. We simply say that at this time we should hesitate to write this permanently in our law. All those other countries have thoroughly considered and thoroughly discussed the principles upon which pension law should be based. Surely it cannot be said by anybody, even the honourable gentlemen who have spoken, that the Parliament of Canada has shown any disposition whatever to do anything but justice to our returned men. You have only to read the schedule in our report, which shows clearly that in regard to pensions Canada has gone further than any other country in the world.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Much further.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: It is to our credit.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I do not think we should allow a question of sentiment to carry us away at this time. All our Committee asks is that Parliament should pause and think, and that it should get exact and reliable evidence upon which to base its judgment. Such evidence we have not at the present time. I think we are asking for only what is right.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: What will be the result of that?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: We simply ask that the matter be allowed to stand for one year, until Parliament is placed in possession of the evidence and information which we think it should have.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: My honourable friend deprecates sentiment in dealing with this matter. May I ask him this question? Was it sentiment or was it cool business that sent our boys overseas?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: That is clearly apart from the question, if I may be allowed to say so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is an Act of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: There is a sentiment, and there has always been a sentiment, behind this whole problem, and Parliament has acted on that sentiment. The Parliament of Canada has shown, by great majorities in both Houses, that sentiment has led them a long way in dealing with this question.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: Why say that sentiment did not enter into it?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I do not say that, but I say we should not allow ourselves to be carried away by sentiment alone on this question.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: I agree with you there.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I have listened attentively to what the honourable gentleman has said, it seems to me there is no necessity to make further inquiry into this particular phase of the Bill. The question is entirely one of cost. Everybody admits that there is merit in the proposed legislation. No person that I have heard speak has distinguised between the merits of the case of the man who is killed in the fight and the merits of the case of the man who is killed while on leave. To my mind the one question for us to decide is not what distance other nations have gone in granting pensions, or on what principles they have acted, but whether or not, when we have ascertained the cost—and I assume that the honourable gentleman from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) has given us the correct total—whether or not it is too great a burden for us to bear. Granting the merit, the only question remaining is that of cost.

Now, if the Committee fought for a year, they would get no further enlightenment on that part of the question than they have to-day, and it does seem to me that if we are not afraid to place on the Statute Book an amendment increasing the pension cost to this country by the amount which has been stated to us as the ultimate liability, we should vote for the Bill as it stood.

Hon. Mr. TAYLOR: Honourable gentlemen, I think it is true that the pension scale in Canada is the most liberal paid anywhere, but what satisfaction is that to the widows and orphans of the men whose pensions were cut off by the legislation of 1920? The cost is stated to be $100,000 a year. As to the $2,500,000 in 25 years, I am very sceptical. I have seen no authority for that estimate. To my mind it cuts no figure whatever. Twenty-five years is a long time and we shall have many, many opportunities of revising our legislation between now and the end of that period. As I see it, the question is this. There is at present a cost of $100,000 a year being borne by the widows and orphans of the men who served this country when we needed the service of real men. We have a report of a Committee that has given a great deal of attention to this subject, recommending to us as a nation to assume that $100,000 that these widows and orphans are now bearing. For my part, I desire to support the recommendation of that report and to oppose any suggestion that because of timidity we should further suspend a measure of justice to those widows and orphans.

Hon. GEORGE GORDON: Honourable gentlemen, I cannot understand at all why there should be any distinction between the dependent of the soldier killed at the front and the dependent of the soldier who, having been at the front and become exhausted, has been sent back to Paris or elsewhere to rest, and is killed while on leave. Without that rest, the soldier would be of no further use. Perhaps after a rest of three or four weeks he is able to go back to the front again. As I understand, if anything happens to the soldier while on leave, his dependents are treated differently from those of the soldier whose death is attributable to service. It seems to me that this is one of the most ridiculous propositions that has ever been put before this House, namely, to cut off the dependents of that man and treat them differently from the dependents of the man who was killed at the front.

The next thing to be considered, we are told, is the matter of cost. We are told that it will take $100,000 a year to place these men or their dependents in the position in which they ought to be placed.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: That is not so. The expenditure is increased at the rate of $100,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I know it is an increase of $100,000 a year. As a citizen of Canada, I would be ashamed if I were unwilling to shoulder my share of the cost. I hope that this Senate will put the Bill through in such a form that justice will be done to these people.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Honourable gentlemen, I quite agree that the Committee are entitled to a great deal of thanks for the time and trouble they have taken in order to bring in this report but, as to this particular amendment, I must say that I cannot support it. I think the dependents of a soldier, a man who was enlisted for the war, whether his death occurred right at the front or during a period of leave, ought all to be treated on the same basis. So far as the dependents are concerned—and this question refers only to the dependents—it appears to me that it makes no difference whatever whether the injury or death occurred in the trenches, or whether it occurred when the man was on leave. I think that we as a people should take care in every possible way of the dependents of soldiers who have died or become disabled in the discharge of their duty while under enlistment and in uniform, whether they happened to be in the trenches or on leave.

The very case mentioned in the report is one that convinced me that I ought to vote against the amendment. Let me state the instance. A man on leave in London was injured in a street accident. His injury occurred on service, but is not attributable to service. Now, that man, to my way of thinking, is just as much entitled to his pension, supposing he were run over by an auto, or something of that sort; he is on service, he is on duty; he has dependants, his wife and family. Surely the right is just as great in that case in regard to his dependants as if he had been actually killed or disabled in the trenches. That is my view of it, and I shall not be able to support that amendment.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: There is one phase of the discussion that we should get quite clear, and that is the question of expense. As I said, so far as that is concerned, it does not bother me very much. But the law was changed in 1920. Certain of those soldiers who received injuries not due to service have died; but if we say we should go back and restore that law, immediately there is $450,000 to be paid on that account to their dependants.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What of that?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The House does not understand the financial position, and I want to make it clear. I say there is $450,000 to be paid on that account.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: That we owe the widows and orphans.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: No, not that we owe them. The existing law has been carried out. During the present fiscal year it is estimated that the liability will be $100,000 in addition to the $450,000, and that next year and succeeding years up to 20 or 25 years there will be an increasing amount each year. It is estimated that in the tenth year the amount to be voted by Parliament will be $1,000,000 and in the twentieth year $2,000,000, and at the end of twenty-five years the total amount that will have been expended on this account will be $32,000,000.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Will that be the end of it?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Practically.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think that perhaps every honourable member in this House has distinct views on this question. I listened to some of the evidence submitted when the Committee was in session, and the difficulty that I cannot overcome is that if a soldier while on leave in London, for example, meets with an accident, whether through his own carelessness or not, he is given a pension, but when he dies his dependants are not given a pension. In my opinion, if there is to be any discrimination between accidents while off active service and on active service, the discrimination should be against the man himself, and not against his dependants. If a soldier met with an accident that disabled him, either by injury in battle or while travelling in the streets of London, his wife and children should be entitled to a pension, providing he was injured while on his country's service, though not actually on duty at the moment. I cannot agree with the report of the Committee in this regard, and must of necessity vote against it, although I do agree with some of the other recommendations made by the Committee in other matters.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: If the report of the Committee was such that we either had to vote for the Bill or throw it out, my inclination, after listening to the evidence, would be to support the Bill; but the report does not propose to throw the Bill out altogether. The Committee feel that this subject is one on which they have not had sufficient time or full information, and all they are asking for is that this particular question be left over for one year.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: That is all.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would like to point out that we have an example before us in the American pensions. I do not suppose a greater scandal ever occurred in this country or the United States than that relating to their pensions. They started in moderately, but though the war ended in 1865 the American Government is paying out today to the dependents of soldiers who were killed or wounded in the war from 1862 to 1865 more than they paid when the war closed. Now, are we in danger of running into something of that kind? We are facing one increase after another all the time, and our pension bill is rising, and rising very high. I would be the last to suggest that we should not deal fairly and liberally with those who suffered during the war, but the fact remains that we have been more liberal with them than any country on earth has been with its soldiers; probably 50 per cent more liberal than the United States, 50 per cent more than Great Britain, and double and treble as much as some other nations.

Hon. G. V. WHITE: Does the honourable member think we have been too liberal with them?

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: That is not the point.

Hon. M. TURRIFF: It is not whether we have been too liberal or not, but it is whether it is the proper thing to pass this legislation that is going to put an extra cost of $32,000,000 on the country, without getting all the information we should have. I think there would be no injury to anybody if this matter were left over till next Session, when we could get all the information that could be brought, and take up both sides of the question, and see at that time what is the proper thing to do.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Can the honourable gentleman assure us that none of those dependents will suffer during the next year if this matter is left until next Session.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, I cannot assure him.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I would like to know just exactly what we are dealing with. I have just discovered that we have two Bills before us: we have the Bill as introduced in the Senate two days ago, and the Bill as amended by the Committee. What Bill are you putting before us?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Bill 205.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: As amended by the Committee?

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: No; Bill 205, and then the amendments.

Hon. Dr. BEIQUE: We are on clause 3 of the Bill as passed by the House of Commons, and I beg to move that clause 3 be amended.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Those who desire to vote for the Bill will vote against the amendment; that is all there is to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, the Government has charged me with the mandate of presenting this Bill to the House. It had passed through the Commons. It was the outcome of an inquiry by Royal Commission. The principle underlying Bill 205 is contained in this clause which is sought to be amended. I represent the Minister of Pensions or Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. He has responsibility for this Act. His mind is settled on the principal of the Bill which we are now reviewing. The Bill came into the House of Commons and was amended there. I take for granted that I am a freer agent in discussing the value of these amendments from the Commons than when I stand face to face with the principle which is contained in the Bill.

Machinery has been provided for the carrying out of the Act. That machinery is indicated by the conclusions of the Royal Commission. But more than one system was presented to the Royal Commission for carrying out the conclusions of that Commission as embodied in this Act. I feel free to adhere to one system rather than to another, when it comes to the working of the Act and the end to be attained. If I am convinced that the machinery offered to this House by the Committee, is more simple and less costly, I feel free to adhere to the conclusion of the Committee. I do not feel free to relinquish the principle, the vital part of the Bill which is in this clause; and therefore, having the statement of the Minister of Solders' Civil Re-establishment that he desires to embody this principle in the Act, I shall be obliged to stand by the Bill as to this clause.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Mr. Béique was negatived: contents, 20; non-contents, 41.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suggest that we proceed with the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; the House has taken the Bill out of the hands of the Committee. It changes the entire Bill. Take charge of the Bill, Mr. Leader; it is your Bill; it is the Government Bill; they did not support it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Subsection 2 of section 2 was omitted with the understanding that a new provision would be substituted for it; and I would now move that the Bill as passed by the House of Commons, with clause 3 that was adopted by the Committee, be amended by inserting as 3A the following amendment:

3A. Section 12 of the Pension Act, as amended by section 4 of chapter 62 of the statutes of 1920, and by section 2 of chapter 45 of the statutes of 1921, is further amended by adding thereto as subsection (2) the following:

"(2) Any individual case which in the opinion of the majority of the members of the Pension Board and the Appeal Board acting jointly appears to be especially meritorious and for which in said opinion no provision has been made in this Act, because such case did not form part of any class of case, such meritorious case may be made the subject of an investigation and adjudication by way of compassionate pension or allowance irrespective of any schedule to this Act."

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: This amendment is to take care of those cases that are mentioned in paragraph 2, of section 2?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

In section 4—pension in accord with extent of disability:

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: As far as I am concerned, I am not in a position to grasp the effect of the rejection of the amendment suggested by the Committee to clause 3, of the Bill; therefore I cannot take the responsibility at this moment of suggesting that clause 4 be either amended or adopted. I could take the responsibility for the parts of the Bill referring to the Appeal Board, and I am willing to deal with them; but, so far as the rest of the Bill is concerned, I am not in a position to deal with it any more. The Government will have to see to that, because I cannot grasp at this moment the effect of disturbing the Bill as reported by the Committee.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I say that the Report of the Committee was a compromise. Some members of the Committee were not in favour of some of the dispositions contained in the Report. There was one part of that Report with which I did not agree, but the members of the Committee compromised their views in order to get at some definite conclusion and to make a unanimous report. If that is not the case, I feel that I have lost all interest in the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may say as a member of that Committee that it laboured, I think, during the whole week, sitting up until 12 and 1 o'clock almost every night, in addition to which the members attended to their duties in this Chamber. I had not the opportunity of attending all the meetings of the Committee and was not present when this particular principle was discussed. I was under the impression that while some of the members dissented from some other principles embodied in some of the clauses, that, as my honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) has stated, it was a compromise; otherwise we could not have arrived at any conclusion.

This Bill involves a subject which has absorbed the exclusive attention of a Royal Commission for I think at least six months, and in perusing the report of that Commission we found nothing that was satisfactory to our minds to give to us a clear opinion upon the subject now in controversy. We therefore regarded this question as one of the most complex questions which we could deal with; and, knowing that the ex-soldiers have represented to Parliament from Session to Session their additional needs, a recommendation was made that at the ensuing Session this matter should be fully considered, when it could be taken up at the early part of the Session and threshed out and the practice followed in other countries adopted if necessary.

The leader of the Government sat on that Committee, and I am bound to say that if I had thought that my honourable friend would not have supported the Committee in this report, I would not have sat upon the Committee five minutes. I understood, when my honourable friend sat there, that he represented the Government and supported the findings of the Committee in this matter and did not dissent from them.

If I thought the honourable member from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) was going to move against this report—he did reserve to himself the right to speak upon it, as he has done—yet if my honourable friend was going to pursue this course, he should have brought in a minority report and should have intimated to the Committee that he was going to do so. Authough I heard my honourable friend say that he would express his dissent, I never understood that the matter would resolve itself into a test motion as to whether this clause should be adopted or defeated.

This is a complex Bill. During the time it was under consideration we had the Law Clerk of this House and the legal advisers of the Departments—

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The Law Clerk for two or three days.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —and I recall no measure that has been before this honourable House for years that received the expert attention that this question did.

The sections of this Bill are largely interdependent; you strike out one prop, and down comes the edifice; and to say that the work we bestowed on this matter last week, from early morning to midnight, must go for naught, and that sentiment must assert itself to the extent of striking out this section, thus destroying the expert work done upon it, is, to say the least, disappointing to me.

I voice only my own feelings upon the subject. I think that when a Committee of this House gives serious attention to such a problem as this, its members are entitled to consideration and the support of their fellow members. It is an easy matter for honourable gentlemen who have not given very close attention to this subject to rise instantaneously to their feet and say they differ from the Committee. The tendency of human nature is probably not to consider that the midnight oil has been burned to try to work out these very problems. If this were a conclusive matter that could not be remedied at some future time, it seems to me that a very much stronger case would lie against the Committee; but without having taken any stand on the principle involved—and I must say that I sympathize with the view held by the honourable gentleman from Edmonton—when I learned that in my absence the majority of the Committee had viewed the matter in another way, I freely accorded my support to the Report which had been prepared.

I certainly think it is due to the members of the Committee who laboured early and late to prepare a report and a Bill which, in my judgment, is a most carefully prepared piece of legislation upon this subject, and a credit to them, that it should be adopted and should not go for naught.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I was going to propose that we should adopt the Report of the Committee. They were much better informed than we could possibly be, and if we have confidence in the Committee we should adopt the report.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Before the Chairman rises, I desire to draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that when I entered the Committee I entered it as the representative of the Government. My honourable friend knows the limitations with which I am surrounded. I received this morning from the Minister who has charge of this Bill a letter representing that the Government in the House of Commons would be unable to accept the abandonment of the insurance principle. How, as leader of the Government in this Chamber, can I do otherwise than state the view of the Government?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If my honourable friend had stated that in the Committee, we would not have laboured on this section for the hours and the days that we did.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend does not forget that, from the time when I first took charge of the work of the Government in this Chamber, I stated that I recognized no followers and no opponents —that the Senate was a free body that could alter Bills coming from the other Chamber; but, trying to be logical and to follow the clear course of duty, I suppose it is imposed upon me also, so long as there is in this Chamber a representative of the Government, to state what is the view of the Government. Can I take two courses when I lay down the view of the Government? When I have explained a Bill and the view of the Government, I endeavour to leave every member sitting on this side free to act as he pleases. Ever since I have sat here I have refused to recognize or tolerate the action of a whip in this Chamber representing my views.

Hon. Mr. GIRROIR: As I supported the Bill and voted against the amendment, I wish to say that I voted in that way from conviction, believing the amendment was not a proper one to make to the Bill. I did not intend it in any way to reflect upon the Committee who were appointed by this House to examine the Bill, and I have yet to learn that when a matter is referred to a Committee for a repart the finding of the Committee is final. I have always thought that it was a matter for consideration by the House, and that the members of the House, examining that Report and taking into account the arguments adduced in support of it, still had the privilege and opportunity of voting as they thought proper and just in respect to the matter in hand. I do not think it is fair to intimate that the members who voted against the amendment are going back on the Committee which they appointed. We who had the benefit of the Report were in a very fair position to judge. We may be wrong. We judged according to our best knowledge, and I do not think for a moment it should be said by anyone in this House that we have been disloyal.

At 6 o'clock the Committee took recess.

The Committee resumed at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Bradbury in the Chair.

On section 4—pension in accord with extent of disability; how extent of disability estimated; when no deduction of pension:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is this. The report of the Committee contemplated the substitution of a new subsection for subsection 1 of new section 11, of section 3 of the Bill. The Committee having decided that the subsection as in the Bill shall remain, I take it that there will be no further amendment until we come to clause 9, which deals with the District Review Boards, with the exception of a small amendment here and there.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The provision as to ratability, as printed in the Bill, may be changed. The Report was to the other effect, that no change be made in the ratability. That comes under section 4.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Will the honourable gentleman kindly state that again?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Subsection 2 of new section 25, of clause 4, reads:

2. The estimate of the extent of a disability shall be based on the Instructions and a Table of Disabilities to be made by the Commission for the guidance of physicians and surgeons making medical examinations for pension purposes.

Section 4 was agreed to.

On section 5—date of coming into force; review; pensions to be granted under present legislation; effect upon payment of insurance benefit:

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: How much is that going to add to the payment?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The whole of section 5 consists of retroactive clauses bringing into effect the benefits which were denied between the period of 1919 and 1920, and with reference to them the Board of Pension Commissioners in their statement say:

The retroactive provisions of this section will result in increased expenditure, as stated.

With respect to this section, on which we had a discussion this afternoon, these are the retroactive clauses that make effective the payments of pension, that is to say, the arrears of $450,000 and the $100,000 per year, mounting up by $100,000 each year.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Do I understand that that estimate is correct, and is the same?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The same thing.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: This does not add anything?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: No; these are merely the clauses that make the other clauses effective.

Section 5 was agreed to.

On section 6—jurisdiction of Board of Pension Commissioners:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I move to amend by striking out the words "District Review Boards or" in line 24, in accordance with the report of the Committee.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

Section 6, as amended, was agreed to.

Section 7 was agreed to.

On section 8—appeals and rehearing:

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: What does the repealing section mean?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The Board of Pension Commissioners say:

This section repeals the right of personal appeal to the Board of Pension Commissioners. No additional expenditure is incurred thereby.

Section 8 was agreed to.

On section 9—District Review Boards:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: From here onwards for some distance we have the report of the Committee, which I think may be followed, at least with respect to the striking out of the clause in regard to the District Review Boards and the constitution of the new Board of Appeal which is provided for in the report. I think this was unanimously agreed to by the members of the Committee.

Hon. G. V. WHITE: I would like to inquire as to the difference in cost between the proposals submitted by the Committee and that contained in the clause as it stands now with regard to the reduction of the number of Appeal Boards.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Under this clause 9, District Review Boards were constituted in each of the 9 districts, with 3 members for each Board. The estimated cost of those District Review Boards was $480,000 per year, approximately. The committee propose to strike out that paragraph, and at the same time eliminate those Boards. Then, in section 10 we take that section which deals with the appointment of a Board of Appeal, and we amend it so as to increase the membership from 3 to 7—our amendment says from 5 to 7 appointed by the Governor in Council. The cost of the Federal Appeal Board, standing at 3 members, with their secretariat, and so on, was estimated to cost $100,000. We are increasing that Board by 4 members, and consequently the expenditure will be increased proportionately over the estimate of $100,000. But we have wiped out the $480,000, and we have that to the good, and the difference between the increased cost of the Federal Appeal Board and the $480,000 is saved by this proposal.

A vast quantity of evidence was given before the Royal Commission as to the right of personal appeal. Three incidents were stressed in support of these District Boards of Review. The first was the right of personal appeal on the part of ex-service men; secondly, there was facility, that is, the court was to come to the appellant, as it were; thirdly, there was the speed in winding up these cases. The committee feel that we shall meet those conditions by substituting for those District Boards the increased membership of the Federal Appeal Board; that is, the ex-service man shall have the right of personal appearance; the court will, as it were, come to him; and, by reason of the numbers on the Board, the business will be taken care of with all reasonable speed.

We were induced to take this course primarily by the desire to save this sum of money, and thereby make it available for distribution to the ex-service men themselves. I stated this afternoon that 25 per cent of the money under consideration was deflected to costly, and as we thought unnecessary, bureaucratic machinery.

Under the heading of the third essential—that there should be uniformity of decision—it is obvious that 9 Boards sitting separately would scarcely be able to accomplish uniformity, while under our proposed scheme of 7 members travelling about the country, very much as the members of the Railway Commission do, and hearing these appeals, uniformity would be secured through the medium of the secretariat of the Board. We have provided further, as you notice by the amendment, for a quorum of three. We leave that to the Government; but three members of this Board shall frequently be sitting as a quorum hearing appeals from single members, as provided for, and as these members come together to hear those appeals they will still further standardize procedure and secure uniformity in decisions. We think, therefore, that we have secured the three essentials which the soldier asked for—the right of personal appearance, the right of convenience, speedy determination of these matters, and also what is very important, uniformity of procedure and decision from coast to coast.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: As I understand, section 9 of the Bill is now wiped out?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes, it is replaced.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: What is now section 10 of this amended Bill becomes section 9?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: It will, on being redrafted. The new clause 10 is to be found on page 547, about 10 lines from the bottom of the page.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: Section 9 disappears from the old Bill?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Section 10 of the old Bill is partially amended, and new section 10 is to be found on page 547.

Section 9 (new section 10) was agreed to.

On section 11—appeals to District Review Board:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Section 11 is now amended in a number of particulars to carry out the provisions of section 10 and the report of the Committee. The Committee are unanimous in their report on that clause. I move the adoption of that as printed in the new Bill.

Section 11, as amended, was agreed to.

Sections 12 to 14 were agreed to.

On sections 15, 16 and 17:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Just a few words with respect to sections 15, 16 and 17. These are the clauses which were introduced in the House of Commons, the subject-matter of which was not dealt with in the Report of the Royal Commission, and the Special Committee struck them out, and substituted the clause which refers to meritorious cases. It is clause 3A. If the situation that has developed had not arisen, we might have had a good deal to say in regard to these clauses; but in view of the situation that has developed, I think we shall have to take the ground that the clause which provides for meritorious cases must be tried out for the present year, in the hope that the Board of Pension Commissioners and the Federal Court of Appeal sitting together and empowered to give amelioration in these particular cases will exercise their powers and deal with them.

At this late hour of the Session, with the desire of getting the Bill through as it is, I think we may concur in the Report.

Sections 15, 16 and 17, as reported from the Special Committee, were agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported, as amended.

SOLDIERS CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 204, an Act to amend the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Act.

Hon. Mr. McMeans in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—appeals, and review and appeal tribunals:

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I move that this clause carry, with the amendment.

Section 2, as amended, was agreed to.

Section 3, the preamble, and the title were agreed to.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I also move the adoption of the Report of the Special Committee as modified by this Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was reported as amended.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH moved that the Report of the Special Committee as amended by the Committee of the Whole House, be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION BILL

DEBATE ON MOTION FOR SECOND READING —BILL REJECTED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand for the second reading of Bill 234, an Act respecting the Construction of the Canadian National Railway Lines.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When we adjourned the debate last evening on the amendment moved by my honourable friend that this Bill be not read a second time now but be read this day six months, it was suggested that the situation be examined into anew to see what would be the action of the Government in view of the position taken by some honourable gentlemen in this Chamber. It is now my duty to state that the Government has adopted as its policy, heralded to the public, the principle of giving a free hand to the Board constituted to administer the railway business of Canada. It has appointed a President who has experience and a high reputation in the railway world. That President and his Board, surrounded by a Management composed of old officials of the three systems that have been amalgamated, have gone through the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific to see what reforms could be made in the way of an amelioration of the physical and financial conditions of the system. The new railway Management, having surveyed the ground, has suggested a certain policy to the Government. That policy consists of building a certain number of branches, upon which the country has already spent some $10,000,000, and to develop a scheme of construction in order to complete those railways within a term of three years. The Government has obtained information from its own railway officials, and, after a close study of the request of the Railway Management, has decided to submit to Parliament the programme of the Railway Board.

That programme was accepted by the House of Commons, and it is now before us. I stated last evening that it was late in coming before this Chamber, and that I expected that if and when this Bill went into Committee, every member of this Chamber who had a personal knowledge of a line of railway projected in his locality or region or Province should give his opinion upon the necessity of the work. It seemed to me that we might examine closely into the value of the propositions before us; that if there was merit in any of them, we should so declare; that if it was doubtful that any of these various branches were absolutely needed to-day or in the near future, we could withhold our assent. But I thought that when the Railway Management submitted to the Parliament of Canada a plan of development which, in their minds, would improve the financial condition of the railway and help to increase the population by attracting immigration to the regions which will be served by these branches, we should not refuse to examine into the proposition.

I did not go further, and I now say to the Senate that it is the desire of the Government that Parliament should give its attention to the proposition.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Would the honourable gentleman allow me a question? It has been stated to me that unless we accept the whole programme we are not in a position to do anything. Do I understand the leader of the Government in this House to say that if in the opinion of this Chamber any one of those lines should be abandoned we have the right to express our views, and it will be abandoned? Is that the position?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no mandate to answer in the affirmative; but I have the right to say that I hold the view that the Senate has power thus to act. Holding that view, I feel that the Government is on safe ground when it brings this legislation before this Upper Chamber and asks: "Will you kindly give your ratification if you deem it proper?" I would not object if this Bill, going to Committee of the Whole, were deemed of such importance as to be referred to a Standing Committee of the House in order that persons and papers might be called for and the Senate might reach a decision regarding it. I believe it to be the duty of the Senate of Canada to scrutinize this Bill carefully, and all the more so because of what it means at present and for the future. It is more important than most Bills that come before us. It needs our ratification. I believe we have the right to say how far we will go in approving of it.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: The honourable gentleman has stated his personal views. On the other hand, we have before us a motion that this Bill be given the six-months hoist. I am not in favour of that motion if I am in a position to vote for such portions of the Bill as I think should be passed; but when we come to a vote to amend the Bill, the ruling may be given that we have no power to do so. Before we vote on the motion to give this Bill the six-months hoist I would like to know exactly where I stand, because I am in favour of a large portion of this Bill and would like to see some parts of it passed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I stated in the first speech which I made from this place that I accepted entirely the principles laid down in a resolution which had been passed unanimously by this House, and which may be called the Ross resolution. While standing by the conclusions arrived at by the Senate, I feel that this Chamber might well declare, for instance, that it will agree to the policy of completing railways that have already been begun, or that have already been graded, and upon which money has been spent, but will not agree at present to sanction the construction of new roads.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Will the honourable gentlemen permit me? Suppose I move when we go into Committee that, for instance, item No. 17 in the schedule be struck out, where am I? The Speaker may rule that the Senate is not competent to strike it out.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Why?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course I cannot control the decisions of the Chair. Perhaps my honourable friend, if he looked in the Debates and Minutes of this House, would find that His Honour the Speaker is somewhat bound by a vote that he gave on this question.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: We shall have to be content to wait.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We shall have to wait. But I wonder if we have a right under the present circumstances to say that this Bill shall be given the six-months hoist. It may be important to proceed this summer with the construction on some of those branches.

As I have stated, I am not personally familiar with the conditions prevailing in provinces other than the one in which I live; but I have appealed to my honourable colleagues in this Chamber to give us the benefit of their experience and judgment as to the value of the branches which it is sought to develop in their own provinces. That does not mean that the majority in this House will readily and blindly accept the opinion of one of their colleagues, who may be more interested in a branch near his home than in branches farther away, but it would be useful to have information from honourable gentlemen representing the various provinces.

Therefore I ask my honourable friend who has moved the six-months hoist to reconsider the desirability of allowing this Bill to go to Committee of the Whole, so that we may examine into the merits of the proposition before us.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Surely the honourable leader of the Government can give us a straight answer. This is a very important point. Can we, if this Bill goes into Committee of the Whole, strike out one line of railway and adopt another, or can we strike out several lines and adopt others? That is the question that was put to the honourable gentleman. It is, I think, a simple one, and the honourable leader of the Government should give us a straight answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: According to my view, the answer is in the affirmative.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No one in this House can give that assurance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The accompanying summarized statement gives each line on which any work is proposed during the three years. The lines are numbered from 1 to 30. The statement shows the amount of grading now completed ahead of the track-laying and the amount of grade and track work, in miles, to be done each year, and the estimated expenditure to be made on each line during the three years. It also shows the present position or mileage of the grade and the track, and to where it is proposed they will be extended by the end of the year 1925, and gives the amount of grade which will be without track by December 31, 1926, if the programme is completed.

Another statement shows for each year what mileage of grading, tracklaying and ballasting is proposed for each line and the estimated cost of the same. These are totalled for Eastern lines, Prairie lines and British Columbia, as well as for the year.

A further statement gives the grade now without track on each Branch line, divided into Active and Inactive lines. Inactive lines have been treated as remaining such for some time. The 372 miles of grade ahead of track on Active lines has been set up in the second statement as the grade ahead of track at end of year 1922. The reduction of this year is shown by the mileage of grade ahead of track being given at the end of the years 1923, 1924 and 1925.

The estimates of cost are based on using relay rails.

A brief statement on each line is appended, giving some facts pertaining to the work and the country through which it runs; also the justification for constructing it.

The programme for the year 1923 is quite large to accomplish in one season, particularly the part on the Prairies which covers 238 miles of tracklaying and 260 miles of ballasting. Not that the amount of work would be much to accomplish if in large stretches, but as it consists of ten places to lay track and 11 places to ballast, the preparations incidental to getting work going will consume considerable time. The effective season for doing work on the Prairies is very short. The climatic conditions limit it at the beginning and the labour situation when the grain harvest starts practically terminates it.

The programme, then, as set out for each year would be the aim, but would be subject to labour and seasonal conditions of weather.

I have here a statement showing the "three-year construction programme of new lines, recapitulated to show under grade and track work done each year and total in miles."

I have another statement on a "programme of construction of new lines for the three years, 1923, 1924 and 1925, giving miles and grading, tracklaying and ballasting proposed in each year and on each line, and the estimated cost of same; showing the miles of grade ahead of track at end of each year on active lines only."

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Will the honourable gentleman tell me how these estimates are made? Are they made in the office, or are they made from preliminary surveys on the ground?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They must have been surveys made on the ground for lines that have already been graded. There are quite a number.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You do not want estimates for those that are graded. They are already done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have a statement showing "miles of grade ahead of track on branch lines, divided into Active and Inactive lines." I do not intend to read these long statements. Each road is described, and the reason given for its construction.

I stated yesterday that I knew of one little link which a rather imposing delegation of citizens of Montreal and district had asked the Government to complete. I will give the description of these 12 miles, because it will be clearer than the statement given by myself.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The honourable gentleman said the other day it was 14 miles. Now he says it is 12.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I find that my memory—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No; the honourable gentleman was right. It is 12 miles, but there are 2 miles at the end of the line, at Huberdeau. The station is 12 miles from a certain point. That makes 14 miles.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:: The 12 miles are already graded and ties are on the ground, and it is affirmed by those gentlemen whom I heard making their request that the line would pay for itself in 24 months by means of the increased traffic. The cost is $357,000.

It is proposed in 1923 to grade 12 miles and lay track on it at a cost of $357,000, thus completing this line between Grande Fresniere and Rinfret Junction. The purpose of this line is to shorten the route from the Huberdeau Branch and St. Jerome into Montreal. The right of way for this line has already been secured, but no further work has been done on it.

The Huberdeau Branch runs into the Laurentian Mountains and gives communication to a district which has become one of the important summer tourist and cottage resorts out of Montreal. On account of our present routes via Rawdon or Joliette being so long, passengers all use the C.P.R. between Montreal and Montford Junction, and undergo the inconvenience of a change of trains at this point, and the consequent delays this always involves. The result of this has been that despite the admitted advantages of the country on our Huberdeau line for summer holidaying over the C.P.R. St. Agathe Branch into the Laurentians, we are unable to develop this business as we should, and we lose a great deal of the haul on business we actually originate and we have to accept the onus of the inconvenience and delays the present route to points on our line entails.

The justification for this line lies in the direct passenger connection it will give and also the shortening of the routes for freight over our existing routes via Joliette or Rawdon, by 34 and 23 miles respectively, which will mean considerable economy in operation on present business, besides attracting further business by the better service it will give.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? I may be very stupid, but I really do not understand this Bill. It is proposed to build a certain number of railways, and the Government of the country has asked for a certain amount of money for the purpose. Glancing over this list of proposed lines, I find that there is a grant asked for a line from Long Lac to Nakina, Ontario, 29 miles, cost $1,944,000. That is, I understand, the cut-off, and that line has been under construction for nearly a year past, and will be completed, as I am told, in two or three months. It may be a very desirable line, but whether it is desirable or whether it is not, I understand how the Canadian National Railways can build that line and pay money for it, and then come to the Parliament of Canada and say, "We want this amount of money to build the line." They have built it without our concurrence or consent, and now they come here with the Bill which is before us and say, "We want so much money to build so many lines of railway." The line is already being built, and $2,000,000 is being spent on it already. I do not object to the line being built, but I would like to know what position I occupy here as a member of this House when I am asked to vote for this grant. I do not want to vote for a line that has already been built. I want to vote before the construction is begun.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is near Capreol.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Long Lake Cut-off, Mile 0-29

Proposed in 1923—29 miles grade; 29 miles track, cost $1,944,000.

It is proposed in 1923 to finish the grading of 29 miles, lay the track on it and move the terminal facilities from Grant and establish them at the junction point near Nakins, at an estimated cost of $1,944,000.

The purpose of the cut-off is to obtain a more direct routing from Toronto and Montreal and other eastern points to Winnipeg, the prairies and the Pacific Coast, and thus put us on an equal footing with our competitors.

The saving in distance will be—102.6 miles for all freights and from Toronto and Winnipeg;

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I do not object to that. I think it is proper to build that line, but I want to know why, after the line is built, they come here and ask money for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may be able to explain, if my honourable friend will allow me to finish the statement:

102.6 miles for all freights to and from Montreal and Winnipeg; 211.4 miles for all trains to and from Port Arthur and points on the Transcontinental west of Quebec; a saving of 99.1 miles for all trains to and from Port Arthur and Quebec as against the present shortest route via Joliette. Besides the shortening of distance the grade over the through route would be considerably better and a slight improvement made in the alignment, with considerable less rise and fall on the line.

These savings will mean economies in operation besides improved service. It has been computed that there will be, on present freight business alone, a net annual saving of $389,000, which would pay over 20 per cent on the cost of construction. For the immediate passenger business it was assumed that until this grew there would not be any material saving in train miles, but with the improved service by the decreased distance, our passenger trains would be filled up which would increase their revenue $300,000 per year with practically no additional expense. Any increased freight business would make a proportionate saving, so to assume the freight business doubled would mean a saving of about $800,000 per year. Therefore, when the business increases to double that at present, the saving will not be less than $1,500,000 per year, or pay 75 per cent on the investment.

Now, if there is any explanation that any honourable gentleman desires to have as to any of those lines, I am ready to give it; but I felt when moving the second reading that it would be more in order in Committee of the Whole; or if the majority of this Chamber felt that it was desirable to refer the Bill to such a Standing Committee as that on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, we might do so, and then every explanation would be forthcoming, not only from this memorandum which I have in my hand, but from the officials of the Department of Railways.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I quite realize what the honourable gentleman has said, that the line may have been properly built, but what I do not understand is that, after the line is built, they should come here and ask for the money for it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But they say there is no grading done.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: But the line is there.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: But there is no grading. Look at your Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: They are building a railroad, and then coming for the grant afterwards.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think there is an answer to the question of the honourable gentleman from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans), which is very plain and simple. In the Main Estimates of this year there is an amount of $73,000,000 provided—for what? For the payment of deficits, for the payment of bonded indebtedness, for construction, for betterments, and for all the purposes of the Canadian National Railway Board. There was a vote similar to that last year, and also two years ago, and in the years preceding; and out of that vote the Canadian National Railways have from year to year been making such extensions and improvements as in their judgment were necessary, under the direction and with the approval of the Minister of Railways. This Long Lac cut-off has been constructed and nearly completed out of that vote, and there is no reason why it cannot be entirely completed out of that vote in the Main Estimates this year, just as several other lines which it is proposed to do some work on could be done.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They say there is no grading done on it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: But there is; many of us have seen it. I want to call the attention of the House also to the fact that the memorandum to which the honourable the leader of the Government has just referred, specifically states that when the harvest in the West commences the season for railway construction comes to an end. That is true, because the labour is required for harvest purposes. Harvest will be on in the West in less than 90 days from this moment, and that being the fact, what is the necessity of Parliament blindly voting anything from $28,000,000 to $100,000,000 which cannot possibly be spent at this time? There is provision in the Main Estimates for all that is required, or that can be required this year, and I think the reason that construction has gone on in the Long Lac cut-off is because the money is appropriated in the Main Estimates, and is available for that work as well as other work, and I doubt if there is any necessity for this Bill to pass.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I do not wish to intercept the argument of the leader of the Government, but there is one question which I would like to have settled clearly in order that some of us in this Chamber may understand where we are. In so far as the bulk of those proposed railways are concerned, I state quite frankly, without any hesitation at all, that I approve. I am not going to take up the time of this House in running over the western lines. I was Minister of Railways in the province of Saskatchewan for some five or six years, and it was my duty then to study the situation, and to understand it, and I have followed it ever since, and I know the railways that are proposed to be constructed here. I know the necessity for them; I know where they are located; I know the number of people settled there; I know what those people are trying to do; and I know what their difficulties are in getting their products to market.

Now, what is the proposition before this House? The proposition is, because the Government has brought down legislation in this form, that we should stop all railway legislation in this country. Well, I think that is not right. And if that is the objective, surely even at this stage we can prevail upon the Government to bring down their legislation in such form that it can be properly considered by this House.

Now, the question I ask is this. The leader of the Government says: "Now, gentlemen, let us refer this to a Committee, and let us consider each of these propositions separately." Well, I want to know where I stand when I get into that Committee. Can I move to strike out certain of those items in the schedule? Now, the question is very plain. The member for Winnipeg raises the same question that I raised a while ago: if we can get an assurance that, so far as this whole programme is concerned, the members of this House can express a clear-cut, definite judgment as regards each of these items, then we know where we are. But if you ask us to accept the whole thing holus bolus, I do not know. I must maintain that so far as certain of those lines are concerned, they should have been constructed long ago. They are late now, and the development of Western Canada is being delayed because they have not been constructed. But if the Government of Canada at the present time put us in a position where we must accept all or nothing of these, I say it is exceedingly unfortunate indeed.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I want to say just a word in relation to this.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The leader is not through yet, is he?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am through, unless some honourable gentleman would ask before voting on the amendment of my honourable friend that he needs some further information, or some special information on any lines that appear in the schedule.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: But the honourable gentleman is not answering my question. I have asked it twice.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I was answering another.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: Before I vote on this question I desire to know whether I have a right to move in this House that any one of those particular items be struck out. If it is referred to Committee, then I desire to know whether, after consideration in committee, we can strike out those items.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The majority will do that; no one man can do that.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I ask, can they? I have no reply to that as yet.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I thought I had made myself quite clear on that point.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: As far as your personal opinion is concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But my personal opinion is backed by the unanimous resolution of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That we cannot do it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That we cannot do it, and I would ask the honourable mover of the resolution, in order to verify my own interpretation of that resolution.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Ask the opinion of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I am speaking of the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross).

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Do I understand the honourable gentleman to say that by that resolution we are authorized to amend a Money Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not legislation; it is a declaratory resolution as to our powers. A Committee worked upon it, studied the constitution of Canada, obtained the legal opinion from outside of two very important barristers of this country, and in this report, which I think has been distributed since the beginning of the Session, we unanimously adopted a resolution declaring what we conceived to be the concurrent powers of the Senate with the House of Commons. In that resolution I believe that I shall find justification for my answer. Now, I cannot go further. I do not know whether the Senate, whose composition has been changed by the departure of members and the addition of others, would still find a majority to affirm that same principle. I do not know what the House would say, but I believe His Honour the Speaker voted with us and was a member of that Committee.

I do not know what stand the House of Commons will judge proper to take on this question. It has in very many instances accepted amendments such as the one we are now discussing, by adding a rider that it should not be a precedent, but it went on from one statement to another to the same effect, and as a matter of fact I can point to decisions by this Chamber altering Bills of this nature which were accepted even with a "no precedent" clause. So that all I can say is that it lies with the Senate to affirm its right to do what it pleases. I am not consulting the members of the Commons or my colleagues in the Cabinet; it is a question of constitutional power.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, my honorable friend last night moved the adjournment of the consideration of this Bill for the purpose of consulting the Government, and he has made his answer to-night. It did appeal to me last night that there were insuperable objections to the Bill on account of the principles which were to be found within its four corners; but never did I conceive that we would reach that stage in the handling of public money that was declared by my honourable friend this evening when he said that the Government of the day had given a free hand to the Canadian National Railway Board.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On general lines.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: On general lines. That is even broader still. I ask my honourable friend, have we reached that stage when we have abandoned the fundamental principle of representative institutions, and handed over to an irresponsible Board the expenditure of public moneys, thus depriving Parliament of making any inquiry or investigation into so important a subject?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I certainly did not state anything of the kind, except to hand the programme over to the Senate, to review, and to accept in part or in whole.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My answer to that is this. That is an insignificant matter in comparison with the principle involved in this Bill, that we hand over to the Canadian National Railway Board practically $100,000,000 for expenditure without their accounting in any way to Parliament, and having three years in which to handle that sum. Suppose such a subject was broached in this Chamber, and my honourable friend from Moose Jaw (Hon. Mr. Willoughby) selected his particular branch out of the schedule attached to the Bill, is the Senate prepared for one moment to swallow the vicious principles embodied in this Bill, by which we abdicate the functions of Parliament and hand them over to this Board? That is the principle involved in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But do I understand that we will not allow that Board, the Railway Management, to do the construction work of one of those branches after we have voted them money to do it?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Canadian National Board has been appointed for the operation of the Canadian National Railways, not for the purpose of extending National railways and duplicating mileage. That is the function of Parliament. The Board was not appointed for the purpose of demanding from the Government of the day $100,000,000, and spending it in any way that may appeal to their judgment, irrespective of the voice of Parliament. That is not the function of the Canadian National Railway Board that is the function of Parliament, and if I know this Parliament, it will reserve to itself all the ancient rights which it has exercised from time immemorial down to the present time. Parliamentary institutions as we know them to-day, free institutions as we know them have not been established for the purpose of handing over the privileges which we enjoy to an irresponsible Railway Board of some five or six men who never entered upon an important undertaking in their lives and allowing them to spend the public money of Canada freely, irrespective of the voice of the people, and particularly of the Parliament of Canada.

That is the great question involved in this Bill to-day and I am astonished that my honourable friend does not recognize it. In the first place, my honourable friend has said that the Government has given a free hand to the Canadian National Railway Board. That Board has said to this Government. "We want sufficient authority to issue certificates to build the roads which are shown in the schedule. "But if that authority be given to them, the same authority will be given to duplicate this mileage, and the Government of the day, with a docility which would do justice to the most docile animal we know, have brought in legislation permitting this particular Board, according to their own sweet will, to enter upon the construction of over a thousand miles of railway, and to spend the $100,000,000—because I am satisfied it will cost that much—of the public money of Canada, entirely irrespective of the voice of Parliament. We are asked to consider favourably this Bill, and to go into Committee and select our road.

Now, honourable gentlemen, has Parliament ever presented to the public of Canada such a spectacle as this which we behold, not only in the invitation which has been given us, but in the Bill which is now before us—that each member is to select his road, and the National Railway Board will go on and build it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: With the consent of the majority of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You pay your money and takes your choice.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of course, each of us can have his road. There is a little bit of road I would like myself; it is not on the schedule, but we can add it to the schedule, and I will have the Senate approve of it, and we will go on with its construction.

Now, up to a short time ago my honourable friends were not in sympathy with the nationalization of railways. In the last general election, which we can recall very well, my honourable friends particularly expressed their disapproval of the policy adopted by the late Government in assuming the responsibility of operating the Canadian National system. I say this is in all seriousness, that if these honourable gentlemen wanted to conceive a plan by which they could destroy the confidence of the Canadian people in the operation of this great system of railways, they could not have placed in print and on paper a more successful scheme than that which is before us. Here is a scheme by which securities may be issued entirely irrespective of Parliament, to cover all the deficits of that road. Here is a scheme by which the operations, no matter how diabolical they may be, can be obscured and hidden entirely from Parliament. Securities may be issued ad libitum so long as the National Railway Board and the Government of Canada—not the Parliament of Canada—stand in together. In view of the declaration which has been made by my honourable friend, that the Government is prepared to accept all that the Board recommends—because I am using his own language—we can readily understand that that means the abdication of the Government of Canada, and the handing over to this Board of the judgment which is to be exercised as to the operation of the Canadian National system and the expenditure of whatsoever money they require.

Now, honourable gentlemen, do we know these gentlemen long enough? Are we sufficiently familiar with their abilities to step into the position at present occupied by the Government and Parliament of Canada and take control of the public funds of Canada for this purpose? From our present experience and observation we know of no institution that can absorb funds so quickly as the railways of Canada. I for one, no matter what the invitation of my honourable friend would be to select our branch and have it proceeded with, would not accept any such invitation on the strength of the bill before us.

If the Government of Canada were really sincere on this subject they would follow the parliamentary practice which has been faithfully observed from the time of Confederation down to the present. They would place in the Estimates the particular appropriation which may be required for a particular road or group of roads, because Parliament has been more than generous in voting money to this Board. Parliament this Session voted a lump sum of $73,000,000. But that is not sufficient, honourable gentlemen—why? Because it means that the Canadian National Railways would have to report annually, and the Government would have to report annually to Parliament, and this would necessitate a close supervision over the appropriation and the expenditure of these moneys.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend could put that condition in this Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But my honourable friends have not seen fit to restrict themselves to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the Senate can do so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: When I said a few moments ago that this one thousand and some odd miles of railways would cost no less than $100,000,000, I think the statement made by my honourable friend was that this branch road from Montreal to Joliette, being 12 miles long, through graded and tied, would require $350,000 to put the steel on it. That means practically $30,000 a mile for steel alone; and yet it is proposed to build these roads for about $27,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I corrected myself by reading the statement. I am informed that the statement which I heard made to the Minister was incorrect, in so far as the roadbed only has been bought, and that there has been no grading and there are no ties.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is still worse.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not want to accuse my honourable friend of insincerity in this matter; but when I look at the smile which surrounds the visage of my honourable friend when he looks at this Bill, I cannot be convinced of his sincerity in this project, or the sincerity of the Government. If they want to build the 29 branches enumerated in this schedule, there is a very simple way of proceeding with the work—just as their predecessors have done for the last 50 odd years—by following the well-established parliamentary practice which ensures the opinion of Parliament being expressed as to the expenditure and the promise of Parliament to make due examination as to its proper application.

As to whether my honourable friend can give an assurance that each member may select his own branch without our trespassing upon the constitutional practice which has been followed in this Chamber of our not being able to amend a money Bill, I may say that no one honourable gentleman can give that assurance to this House. It is for the House to say whether such a subject is within the power of this Chamber. I fancy that if such a power were exercised we would hear a very strong protest from our friends at the other end of this Building.

I again say to my honourable friend that if the Government are sincere in their desire to proceed with this work if they are sincere in their desire to comply with the wishes of the people who expect to be served by these branches, this House is prepared to give the most sympathetic consideration to any Estimates that may be brought down for the purpose. But when the Government of the day departs from well-established practice and submits to this Chamber a Bill which proposes that Parliament should abdicate its functions and hand over to an irresponsible Board absolute authority over the expenditure of this money and refuse to account for it to Parliament until three years have elapsed, then I say this House is justified in insisting upon the submission of the amendment which was moved last night, and which I am satisfied the House will accept.

Hon. J. A. CALDER: Honourable gentlemen, I have not the right to speak again, but I would like to say just one word. The leader of the Opposition has intimated that, even if we should decide that we have the right to amend the schedule to this Bill, a question might be raised as to our power to do so.

It is quite clear, and I am sure every member of this House from the Province of Saskatchewan will agree with me, that there are certain branch lines in that Province the building of which has been held up since the beginning of the war—lines that are absolutely necessary and will pay from the day they are built. Are we going to be placed in such a position that because of certain procedure in this House the building of those lines is to be delayed for another year?

I could give the names of those lines and explain the circumstances connected with each of them, but I do not want to take your time. Among those lines there is not one which, in my judgment, should not have been built long ago; and if their building is to be delayed because the Government has brought its legislation before us in this form, and because certain rules of this House and the other House interfere, I say there is something radically wrong.

The leader of the Government has said that we have certain power; that we can strike out certain items in this schedule. Suppose we do so, and the Speaker rules against us, and there is an appeal against the ruling of the Speaker and we agree to do so by a majority vote in this House, where are we at?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It does not follow that because this Bill is thrown out the lines should not be built. The Government has got $73,000,000 already. They have built Long Lac railway.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: My judgment is that every cent of the $73,000,000 will be required for other purposes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is expressly voted for construction and betterment, and other matters; that is to say, there is no limitation placed upon the construction and betterment in the vote.

Hon. Mr. CALDER: I would take it that that is all covered.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Where did they get the money to buy the hotel in Paris and the site in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. CALDER: That is away from the question altogether. I am not discussing that at all. What I fear is this. There are some 8 or 10 lines in the Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba proposed under this Bill, and I know those in Saskatchewan and know the necessity for them. I know also that from the moment they are built they will pay. They are all through settled communities, and will assist in the development of the country.

Because we have got into this muddle, so to speak, by reason of the Government having brought down this legislation in a certain way, and because we have certain rules in this House, it is suggested that we should postpone the building of these lines. I am not in favour of that proposal, and I desire, if possible, to get out of this tangle.

Hon. GEORGE LYNCH-STAUNTON: I agree with every word uttered by the leader of the Opposition. I think it is a great departure not only to hand over to this Board the administration of our railroads, but to allow them to dictate the policy that Canada should adopt for the development of this country. Even if the objection which the last speaker mentioned was got rid of, in my humble judgement the Senate would not be justified in going on with this Bill, and for this reason. We have the word of the leader of the Government that the Bill is founded on the Report of the Railway Board to the Government, and on the Government's investigation of that Report. How long has this Railway Board been in existence? It has been in existence for some months only, and during most of that time the President has been making speeches throughout Canada.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: And poor speeches too.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUTON: And as he has gone through Canada he has promised new railroads right and left. Without consulting Parliament he has told the people that he will do this, that and the other. What time has he had since he has been here to investigate the advisability of building a thousand miles of railway spread over this vast Dominion? How can he give any honest assurance to the Government that these railways are needed? And must the Government take the assurance on his part that "it is a good thing, push it along, it will pay from the day is is built"? Are we here to register the wishes of a Board that has been in existence for only nine months? If they reported on the road, they must have reported within two or three months to give the Government an opportunity of investigating the report. Or are we going it blind as the Government did on the Transcontinental Railway?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of the 14 roads 440 miles have already been graded during the last 10 years.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: And I counted and found 14 lines which have not been surveyed, and on which not a dollar has been spent. I have tried to calculate the expenditure, and it is nearly $3,000,000 for grading and putting the steel on these fourteen miles of railway.

Putting aside all technical practice, my objection to this Bill is that this House is asked without a scrap of information before it to pass the Bill with the same rapidity with which the House of Commons passed it. I think the Senate should not do it. They should say: "No; if you want legislation of this description, you must bring it down in the early part of the Session when we go into the matter before a Committee and satisfy ourselves as to the advisability of it." I am not prepared to cast a vote on a Bill of this kind on information received from anybody else. We are the judges here, and I want the evidence. We must know what the real requirements of the country are. I was told in regard to one of these roads, by a gentleman who made a speech opposing it in 1916, that it is a little cut-off, and that they are going to give 40 per cent of the gross revenue to the Province. Of course, this is information from outside sources; but we have had no real information placed before us at all. We are going to operate this road for 60 per cent, and the Province will get all the profit while we hold the bag. Before I vote for that road, I want to know all about it. My experience of this country is that we have gone it blind in railroads too much. In my opinion, the Senate of Canada should know as much about this business as if we were going to put our own money into it. Then we would be able to say to the people of the country: "We put your money into a good thing, something that is required for the benefit of Canada."

Hon. A. B. GILLIS: I think it is extremely unfortunate that the Government should have so complicated this Bill as to make it practically impossible for us to get branch lines that are really needed, and that would not be bleeders but feeders for the Canadian National.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Cannot we simplify it?

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: Yes, by bringing in a Bill for each branch and putting specific items in the Estimates. Otherwise I do not think it is possible to get the branch lines of railways that are really needed in the West to help the settlers and to provide freight for the Canadian National Railways.

Take the Thunderhill branch, 69 miles in length. The estimated cost of that line is $1,650,000. That is in a district that was settled more than 20 years ago. The line is supposed to lead into the city of Prince Albert. Fifteen or twenty years ago the country to be served by that line was settled by an excellent class of people, good Canadian farmers, and they were promised a railroad. They have been labouring under the difficulty of having to draw their grain from 30 to 60 miles to market. That is a case in which some redress should be provided, but not in a blanket Act which gives the Canadian National Board the power to usurp the functions of Parliament as far as voting money is concerned. I think the policy of this Bill is impossible. The branch I refer to is of sufficient importance, to my mind, to justify the Government in passing a special Act and including in the Estimates a special vote for its construction.

This is only one of the many branches in the Prairie Provinces that I might mention. There are many other branches included in this schedule which I am not going to criticize. So far as the western Provinces are concerned, I think I may safely say that any branch line that is built in the arable parts of the country will be a great source of revenue to the Canadian National Railways. For that reason I think the Government should pick out a few lines where the need is particularly urgent and should provide for them at the next session of Parliament. There is every prospect now of an excellent crop this year, and I think it is most unfortunate that the people to whom I have referred are to be compelled to labour under these difficulties for a further period, and that we cannot devise some scheme to give them relief. With the other lines in the province of Saskatchewan I am not so familiar, but I think the Government should take this matter into consideration and if possible provide some remedy for those people who have suffered during all these years.

Hon. GEORGE GORDON: In case this Bill may not be referred to Committee of the Whole, I desire to make a few remarks on it. The honourable leader of the Government has very kindly intimated that each of us may have in mind some favourite road which he would like to see built. I select No. 6. I do so for the simple reason that, as I understand, is pretty nearly completed. I know that many months ago a contract was awarded for the construction of that road, and I know as well that it is usual for railway contractors to be paid. By this time the contractors on that line must have been paid a very substantial sum. If that is the case, why should item No. 6 of the Bill be presented to us in this way, as if no expenditure whatever had been made on that line? The item states: "Mileage already graded, O." I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government; has not a considerable sum of money been expended on that road, and, if so, what is the amount?

Hon. Mr McMEANS: It costs $68,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: About $150,000 has already been expended on it.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Is that all?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is my information.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: And there is yet to be spent practically $2,000,000? Well, if only $150,000 has already been spent upon it, I will withdraw any accusation with reference to that line. There is another place in that district in which a road would suit me better.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Take No. 7.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Like my honourable friend from Calgary, (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) I am interested in a certain place where I am desirous of seeing a road built.

I am of the opinion that this House must do one or other of two things with this Bill; that is, either accept it as a whole or reject it as a whole, and for my part I intend voting to reject it.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: With a great deal of what has been said by my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition I am in hearty accord. I think it is an outrage that such a proposition as this should be brought down at this late day of the Session. Even if it had been brought down in the ordinary way, so that we might deal with each road separately, it would have been bad enough; but to include within one Bill all these branches, turning over the whole responsibility for their construction to a Board that has been newly appointed and that has been constituted for another purpose altogether, is very much out of the way. What has happened under this Board operating the Government Railways may be all right, but we do not know yet, and there are two or three things which to my mind are very suspicious. I refer to the purchase of a site for a building in Toronto, and more especially to the securing of officers in Paris, 12 Americans in the city of New York, having been selected to hold the property, and we having put up $2,000,000 in connection with this project, about which we know nothing. Now it is proposed practically to hand over to the Canadian National Railways Board the building of Government lines for the future, and under this Bill it is intended to give the Board money to build a thousand miles of railway, Parliament having no control or no responsibility in the matter.

While I agree with all that my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition has said in that respect, my reason for rising was to appeal to him not to insist on the six months hoist. If we cannot agree on this Bill, let it be sent back to the Government and let us see if some arrangement cannot be made. I appeal not only to the honourable leader of the Government and the honourable leader of the Opposition, but to every Senator here, for God's sake do not turn down the project to construct those branch lines in the province of Saskatchewan. I will speak only of them, because I know them best. Other lines may be just as important. I know that at all events some of them are.

I want to confirm what has been stated by my honourable friend from Saskatchewan (Hon. Mr. Gillis) that on the prairies—in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—in any of the settled parts of the country, any branch line of railway, that you build, and that does not parallel another line, will not merely pay for itself, but add a great deal of profit to the main line that it feeds. That has been the result in the past, and that will be the result in the furture.

Surely two bodies of sensible men, the Commons and the Senate, will not reject a deserving proposal because it has been wrongly submitted, and by rejecting it disappoint those settlers, many of whom I know personally, who have been waiting 15, 20, or 25 years and hoping against hope for the construction of these roads. According to the figures given in the schedule showing the amount of grading done, the total mileage, which I have added up, is about 400 miles. Most of that grading was done when the war began in 1914, that is, 9 years ago, and the people have been heart-sick with waiting. No one here can understand what it has meant to the men, women, and children to live on farms, 15, 20, 25, 30—up to 60 miles from a railroad. And now, when it is proposed to build the line, just because the proposition is submitted in what is undoubtedly to my mind a very wrong way, it is to be rejected and nothing is to be done this year. There cannot be a great deal done this year at the best, but surely to goodness we in this House can confer with the Government to see if we cannot agree upon some arrangement. Let the Government bring down appropriations for separate lines, so that we may judge of them individually and those may be constructed which will be of advantage to the settlers and to the railways. Let me point out, honourable gentlemen, that there are certain parts of the Prairie Provinces which if these roads are not built in the near future, will be depopulated. We shall have a continuation of what has been going on for the past year—people leaving those provinces by the hundreds and by the thousands. We are getting some new settlers in, but I tell you 10 new settlers are not worth an old settler who knows the country and has been on the land there for some time. If the railway construction is much longer delayed, many of these people will be forced to leave their farms. So I make an appeal, not only to my honourable friend opposite, (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), but also to my honourable friend the leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), to see that proper steps are taken to reach some understanding whereby the necessary branch lines may be built.

Hon. R. H. POPE: I am very much interested in the remarks which have just been made by the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff). Having myself spent many years in the West, I appreciate the difficulties to which he has referred. He tells us that the people there have been waiting for twenty years. Permit me to point out to the honourable leader of this House that in the Province of Quebec, where I was born, there are sections of country in which no railroad has been built for over forty years. When railways were constructed they ran through an area entirely in forest. Settlement has been extending from the main lines for 20, 30, and even 40 miles, but the people have now no more railway communication than they had thirty or forty years ago. Now, some railroad lines are to be picked out. It is quite true, according to what the honourable leader has stated, that we can make additions to or substrations from the total. I supose we may make aditions there?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I have not said that.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I did not say that you said it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Or make substitutions.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I asked if where one line was dropped out we could not substitute another, perhaps a line in Quebec. Is not some accommodation to be given to the people in the old Province of Quebec? I appreciate the citizens of Saskatchewan for all they are worth—and no more. The citizens of Saskatchewan are no better than the citizens of the Province of Quebec, and no more entitled to consideration. Our people are native-born; they are not immigrants from some foreign country. If there is one thing that should appeal to the Government of Canada more than any other, it is the welfare of the men and women who are native-born Canadians. Under the circumstances, which I have not exaggerated but merely mentioned, I appeal in the name of the Province of Quebec to the hearts of the people of Canada, and particularly to the Senate of Canada, to include the Province of Quebec in the programme of railway construction, so that the native-born citizens of that province who live 30 or 40 miles away from a railroad may have an opportunity of getting nearer to the markets and to the centres of consumption. I think that I am speaking in a good cause. I am asking for simple justice and nothing more. The honourable leader of the Opposition—no, he is not in Opposition, but he should be—the honourable leader of the Government turns the back of his head to me. I am surprised, Sir, that you do not want to face me with warm and hearty sympathy. I am disappointed that my appeal to you does not indicate that you will recall your colleagues in the sacred Chamber down below, and consult them, and make it possible for the native-born citizens of Quebec, from which I come, to share in this splendid new railway policy of the Government to which you belong. It is a policy that proposes to build railroads anywhere, at any time; that proposes to finance them as they please, anyhow and in any way and at any time. We who live in the Province of Quebec never had any such proposition as this laid before us. In the old days we had to measure the distance; we had to say from where we started, and where we went to; we had to give the absolute mileage; we had to take a positive estimate of the cost; we had to form an organization called a company; we had to assume responsibility associated with the early financing of that enterprise—buying the right of way, and all that—before we could come to Parliament and get a miserable subsidy. Originally it was $1,600 a mile, afterwards $3,200, and still later $6,500 a mile, if we could make the road cost that much. We made an effort to see that those roads were worth all that subsidy of $6,500 a mile, and as a rule we won out. And now we find that it is possible for vacant places in Canada to be able to go forth and build a road without any organization whatever, without any disturbance to finance, without an appeal to anything, without a survey, without knowledge of distance, without guarantee of cost, without guarantee of mileage; that we can come to the Parliament of Canada and get a blank letter of credit to go forth to the world and get the money to build those roads. And I am living in the Province of Quebec, a native citizen of Canada, and yet we are refused a single mile to be included in this list. Did some honourable gentleman say 12 miles? Those 14 miles have been disputed here. I do not think they should be. I was going to say it was mean of the leader of the Government in this House to ask for only 14 miles out of one thousand; and to deny him that I think is too awfully mean. I think it is unworthy of this great Chamber to deny that. I think we should build those 14 miles. I am almost inclined to go and build them myself, but those 14 miles should be built, because it is not in keeping with the dignity of this body that we should refuse our leader a little link of 14 miles out of 1,100 miles of road.

Permit me to turn to the West. We had a delegation here this year which the honourable leader of the Government remembers well. It came from the Peace River Country, representing possibly 10,000 people today, but formerly 20,000 people. The Government to which he belonged was appealed to from every point of view for some recognition to be given to those people. We discovered the great Hoppe coal lands back there, and the Government have been finding out their importance, because they have rescinded a fiat that they had given, in order that those coal lands might remain the property of the Dominion of Canada. There is a road that is needed, my honourable friend; if you are going to make 29 you ought to have made 30. If you could not do any more, you might at least have put that on the list in order to encourage those people in the Peace River country. They are worthy of encouragement by the people of Canada, and the Hoppe coal fields would pay all the cost of that road, would make it a success from the start, and relieve the fuel situation in eastern and western Canada, on the Pacific slopes of the United States, and in Japan. It is a wonderful field. The honourable leader knows these things perfectly well, and I was bitterly disappointed to find that he forgot that area and took up those other parts.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I will gladden the heart of my honourable friend by informing him that in the Supplementary Estimates there is a sum of $50,000 for a survey.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I am delightered. I thank you in the name of the people of Peace River. It will be a mighty poor consolation to them when they ship away their grain this year, but it is better than nothing. A straw to a drowning man is something. I will write to the people of Peace River and tell them that a straw is thrown out by the Grit Government that is in power to-day.

Hon. J. D. REID: I would like to say a few words on this subject before the vote is taken. I was as greatly surprised as was the honourable leader of the Government that a Bill of this kind had been introduced into Parliament. If I remember rightly, he said it was a long time since he had seen a similar Bill. I was a member of the House of Commons for some thirty years, and no Government during that time, so far as I can remember, ever submitted a Bill of this kind and tried to pass it through Parliament.

A great deal of time has been taken to say that the Government could have done this in other ways, and the honourable leader of the Government a few minutes ago explained how it could be done. The Government might have submitted a brief outlining of the plan for building the lines, as has been done for many years, and a general amount like the $73,000,000 could have been asked for in the House of Commons, with a detailed statement of the lines that were to be built with that money. When the honourable gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) spoke about including in this Bill an amount for a railway in Alberta, the leader of the Government said there was in the Supplementary Estimates an amount for building that railway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: For a survey.

Hon. Mr. REID: Well, a survey is the beginning, and the money that is to be voted here is for survey, and for construction if there is enough left over and above the cost of the survey. It the Government were anxious to build these railways, why did they not put in the Estimates the long list we have in this Bill? Former Governments made out lists of railways, which were taken to the Governor in Council, and the Government decided what lines they would build; then the list of those railways was included in the Estimates, either in a general amount or in detail; the estimate was taken up in Parliament, and thus the members of the House and the public knew exactly where that money was to be expended. The money was voted, and the following year the members had a right to discuss the whole of the details of the expenditure.

Now, what does this Bill say? The honourable leader of the Government said that the Canadian National Railways had been handed over to a Board of Management under the Canadian National Railway Act, and, if I understood him rightly, he said that whatever those men say we must follow. But, as he knows, Parliament never gave the Government authority to give that Board constructing powers. Here are the powers that were granted by the Government to the Board of Management:

> The Governor in Council may from time to time by Order in Council entrust to the Company the management and operation of any lines of railway or parts thereof, and any property or works of whatsoever description, or interests therein, and any powers, rights or privileges over or with respect to any railways, properties or works, or interest therein, etc.

That is, they could only give them the management and operation. Then we have clause 23:

> With the approval of the Governor-in-Council and upon any location sanctioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals, the Company may from time to time construct and operate railway lines, branches and extensions, or railway facilities or properties of any description in respect to the construction whereof respectively, Parliament may hereafter authorize the necessary expenditure, or the guarantee of an issue of the Company's securities. A copy of any plan and profile made in respect of any completed railway shall be deposited with the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Then of course they can entrust the Management to proceed with the construction. That is the Canadian National Railway Act as passed by Parliament. Surely the Government of the day does not intend to act on every request or suggestion of the Board of Management as to construction, without first considering whether these lines should be built, and then taking the responsibility for them by placing the amounts in the Estimates in such a way that they can be thoroughly discussed, and that we in Parliament can get the details hereafter. We all know that if the amount is placed in the Estimates the details must come out in the Auditor General's report, and of course every member has full knowledge.

There will be one advantage to the Government if this Bill goes through, that the Management of the railways will simply say —and the Government will back it up, because they admit the Board is to have full power: "It is not in the public interest to give information as to what these roads cost, who the contractors are, etc." Therefore Parliament will not be able to get any information, because the figures will be kept out of the Estimates, and will not appear in the regular way in the Auditor General's report.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would like to put a question to my honourable friend: could we not put that condition in this very Bill, that a report will have to be made to Parliament annually of the construction cost, the number of miles of railway that are built during the preceding year and so on?

Hon. Mr. REID: Of course, if we could amend the Bill we could put anything in it, but I have my doubts whether we have the power of amending, on account of it being a money Bill. Taking that position, it does seem to me very strange that the Government are afraid to put the amounts for these railways in the Estimates, as is the custom.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But why should the Government be afraid? They will have to come to Parliament for the money.

Hon. Mr. REID: Of course, the honourable leader of the Government should answer that question himself. If I had to give an answer, I might suggest that the amount that is being voted in the Estimates for the present year is staggering to the people of this country, and if $28,000,000 or $30,000,000 were added I do not think the Government would like the public to be advised of that fact. By covering it up in a Bill of this kind they thought they could get it through.

There are other reasons why I do not like this Bill. If passed it will mean that our Estimates will not show to the public what we are spending, and next year we will have another Bill in this House with another long list of railways, the cost of which will not appear in the Estimates at all. Even this Bill permits the Board of Management to go on and construct not only 1,100 miles of railway, but many more, because clause 7 of the Bill says:

> The mileage of the said lines of railway and the cost of construction thereof, as mentioned or referred to in the schedule to this Act, are merely estimated distances and costs for the information of Parliament, and shall not be taken to restrict the Minister in the issuance of such certificates nor the Company in the performance of the work of construction and completion nor in the issue of its securities.

Why, instead of a thousand miles they could build another Transcontinental, and not come to Parliament. Then this Bill gives the Government power to issue securities on those lines without consulting Parliament. So that we might just as well admit that from now on the Management of the Canadian National Railways can build any further railways that are to be built, practically without coming to Parliament, and this country can be saddled with hundreds or thousands of miles of railways that will not only not pay after construction, but may never be constructed. So the deficit on the Canadian National Railways will be increased, and we may make up our minds that those railways will never pay; it will be impossible to make them pay. Thus public ownership would be destroyed by the way the new work was being constructed. The honourable leader of the Government stated that these are lines which should all be built.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. REID: Do I understand that the honourable leader, as representing the Government, submits a Bill here, and says now that they should not be built?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I did not say that; but when my honourable friend stated that all those lines should be built, I simply said that I was submitting them for the consideration and best judgment of the Senate upon the opportuneness of building them.

Hon. Mr. REID: Do I understand now that the leader of the Government, who has sat at the Council table and agreed to this Bill, now says that he does not think the whole lot of these lines should be built?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I say they all should be built, subject to the approval of both branches of Parliament, and my honourable friend's responsibility begins here.

Hon. Mr. REID: I am going to accept that responsibility, but my honourable friend, as a member of the Government, must have thought, when he submitted this Bill, they all should be built. He gave one instance of a line that should be built, and that is a line of 12 miles in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I gave an example, an illustration.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: A sample.

Hon. Mr. REID: All right, a sample. Now, on what particular point this is the position of the railway situation. From St. Jerome to Montreal the C.P.R. has a direct line, and the Canadian National has also a through line, so that a passenger getting on at St. Jerome, no matter which road he uses, can go through to Montreal on that line, but to go on the Canadian National takes longer, for this reason. From St. Jerome to Terrebonne the roads practically parallel each other; then, at Terrebonne the Canadian National takes a longer circle and the route to Montreal is a number of miles longer; but passengers who want to go more quickly get on the Canadian National at St. Jerome or any station between there and Terrebonne and they just step off that on to the C.P.R. and arrive at Montreal at exactly the same time. Because of this, the honourable leader asks us to vote $357,000 to build 12 miles of line to connect St. Jerome branch with the Transcontinental that runs into Montreal. I ask how any man can approve of an expenditure of that kind. The honourable leader has to admit that the Finance Minister in another place stated that this country would lose, $70,000,000 or $80,000,000 during the present year.

It is said that other lines mentioned in this Bill are urgent, and Sir Henry Thornton and his Board have approved of them. Well, I think the honourable leader knows more about them than Sir Henry Thornton. Twenty-five or thirty years ago, when I was a member of the House of Commons, the question was brought up of building a railway of about 67 miles in the constituency of Mr. Sinclair, who was then a member of Parliament, and is now a member of the railway directorate. It was prior to 1896, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier came in. An investigation was made by the railway officials of that day, and they reported against it. Instead of costing $3,500,000, it would cost $8,000,000 if my memory serves me rightly, and that was before the war, when railway work could be constructed for probably one-third of present cost. That was the position when the Conservative party was in power. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into power the road was going to be built, and during 16 years Mr. Sinclair appealed to Sir Wilfrid and his Government. There is a stack of reports a foot high on that project, and while they wanted to let Mr. Sinclair down easily, there never was a report sufficiently strong to warrant undertaking the building of that road, when we had lots of money. I know that while I was Minister of Railways and Canals a deputation came up about it, but I never heard any officials of the Intercolonial Railway admit that they were justified in going to such an enormous expense to build that particular road.

We have here, to begin with, 67 miles of road, the construction which would cost some $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 at pre-war prices. That is only a sample. I do not say that applies to all these lines. Money has already been expended upon a number of these lines in the Northwest. Some of it was spent when I was Minister of Railways and Canals.

But let me tell you what this construction means. When the Canadian Northern Railway lines went into Saskatchewan and Alberta they went in as colonization roads. The company started building roads into the prairie probably 10 or 20 or 30 miles. They moved ahead of the population, and as the population grew they were justified in extending them. But remember, the extension helped to bring traffic of the kind needed by the railway to make it pay.

I have no hesitation in saying that I would not at any time refuse to extend lines along which the people had settled; and I am convinced that they would provide sufficient traffic and would justify the expenditure made upon them. If I remember correctly, nearly all the branch lines in Saskatchewan pay by reason of the grain carried over them.

The railways proposed under this Bill will probably not be constructed this year. Under the old system they would be half completed by this time and I will tell you why. Before the 31st of March, one-sixth of the total amount required, as shown in the Estimates, would be voted and passed by Parliament and sanctioned by the Governor General, and the money would be available for construction in the spring, which is the proper time of year to get the road ready for the wheat crop next fall. Even if this Bill is passed, the crops will be harvested before the road can be constructed.

There is perhaps a fear among honourable gentlemen from Alberta and Saskatchewan that if we do not pass this Bill the Government will not be able to proceed with the construction of railways. The honourable leader of the Government has stated that the expenditure of this money is to be extended over the next three years; the total amount, according to his estimate, being $28,000,000.

If honourable gentlemen possessed all the information that I do, I do not think they would for one moment consent to this proposal: they would realize immediately how unfair it would be to proceed with these works under existing financial conditions. Under this Bill about $11,000,000 would be the proportion assigned for construction in Alberta and Saskatchewan. That expenditure is to extend over a period of three years, which means that the expenditure during the next twelve months would be about $3,500,000. If the Government thinks these roads are necessary, it should be easy to apply $3,000,000 of the $73,000,000 provided in the Estimates to build these roads and thus avoid any delay. In fact, as soon as we passed the first Supply Bill, under which we voted one-sixth of the supply for the year, the work on these roads could have been commenced. In some cases bridges have been built and the roads have been graded, and it is not such a serious thing if this Bill is not passed.

The most serious thing that could happen would be for the members of the House of Commons and the Senate from now on to give to the Board of Railway Management the right to go ahead and build railways without first obtaining a vote from Parliament, and without the details, which we have had in the past, being placed before us.

Let me give the House some idea of the amount we will have voted when the Supplementary Estimates now before the House of Commons have been passed. The Main Estimates for the year amount to $427,551,-235.73. Of that sum $73,000,000 is for the construction and betterment and operation of the railways. Then there is a Supplementary Estimate of $5,500,000—I think that is for bonuses to the Civil Service. There is a further Supplementary Estimate of $18,-202,105.66, and a still further Supplementary Estimate of $14,711,351.05. These sums total $465,924,692.44. In addition to that there are other amounts which do not appear in the Estimates. By this means, the Government will be able to show that their Estimates were only so and so. I am not finding fault with that. We voted $10,000,000 for the Montreal Harbour Commission, and $5,000,000 for the Vancouver Harbour Commission under Bills similar to this one, and under which we gave them power to spend the money as they liked. I suppose the management of the Canadian National Railways has looked up the matter, and has thought it would be a delightful scheme for them to build a thousand miles of railway this year or another thousand next year if they did not have to report to Parliament, where the expenditure might come under criticism. For that reason they ask in this Bill for $28,307,900. If the Bill were to go through, the total amount of money voted this year would amount to $509,232,592.

In the face of that, honourable gentlemen, I ask is it fair to adopt any such policy as this for the construction of railways, many of which, I claim, are unnecessary and will only add to the deficit of the Canadian National Railways? In addition to the cost of building the roads, the cost of equipment must be taken into consideration. The Government of the day states that there will be a loss on the railway of $50,000,000 or $60,-000,000 this year; in fact that the deficit will be greater than last year. I understood that when the present Government was in opposition, and even after it came into power, the watchword was economy. I could show, honourable gentlemen, that the expenditures to-day are greater than they have been in the past and that if the Bill is passed the watchword should no longer be economy, but extravagance. I do not believe it is in the public interest to pass this Bill, and I trust that it will receive the six months' hoist, and that the Government will realize the situation and bring in Supplementary Estimates when they want to build railroads, so that we may have an opporunity of dealing with them on their merits. We all know that railroads must be built; but they must be built with an eye to reducing the loss on the Canadian National Railways so that they will become an asset to the country instead of a liability.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: My difficulty in connection with this Bill is not only the form in which it is presented to this House, although I agree with those who have spoken in that regard. I also agree with the motion moved by my leader, and intend to support it.

Various plausible reasons can be advanced, not only with respect to the building of the railroads which we are now considering, but with respect to dozens of other projected lines in this country. We have a sparsely settled country, a great deal of which may be said to be very new country, and it is owing, to some extent at any rate, to the general railway policy of the past 20 years that we find ourselves in such a difficult position. I need not go into the question of who is responsible for the railway situation in this country.

It is my intention to address the members of this House for but a few minutes. My reasons for supporting the motion of the leader of the Opposition are perhaps somewhat different from those which have been advanced by other speakers. I do not want to be a pessimist. I never have been a pessimist with respect to the development of this country; I always have been the very opposite. I do not want to advance arguments to-night which may be quoted in other places than Canada, and which may have a detrimental effect upon the development of this country and upon immigration and capital coming into this country. There is enough of that sort of thing going on in another place. But I think the time has arrived when we should do a little sane thinking.

We might as well realize, honourable gentlemen, that we have built railways for a population of 18,000,000 of people rather than for 9,000,000—and as I said before, I do not propose to say who is responsible or who is not. That is a matter which has been threshed out over and over again, to be generous regarding it, I think we might say we have all been overly optimistic.

But we have this railway situation on our hands to-day. I need not review the question of public or private ownership. That has nothing to do with my argument at the present time. The liability is upon us. The railways are operating, and we have to try to make the best of the situation.

I would like to draw the attention of the honourable members of this house again to the fact that the Finance Minister stated in his Budget speech that the deficit on our national railways last year was $92,190,000. That money was raised by borrowing to the extent of $50,000,000 and adding to our debt; the balance came out of the taxpayers of this country. Every man who has an income of over $2,000 is taxed to help to pay that deficit upon the railways.

We have in this country almost every method of direct taxation that has been adopted either in Great Britain or in the United States; and we have some other methods of direct taxation that are not in vogue in those countries. On top of that we have lately added another tax—one which has been discarded by both Great Britain and the United States—a tax of 6 per cent on the turnover of certain industries. We therefore have a higher taxation than they have. Industry is being bled to a great extent, and is being paralyzed by this taxation. So much money is being taken out of the people of this country that it is impossible to find money for investment in new enterprises.

In 1913, the year before the war, our national debt was $314,301,625 net. At the present time it is approaching the two and a half billion mark. This is chiefly owing to the war, but is partly by reason of our railway policy. It is said that if the provincial and municipal debts of this country were added to the national debt, the total would amount to four billion of dollars for a population of under nine million people.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would my honourable friend allow me to ask him if that includes the Government guarantees on railways?

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: No. I am very glad my honourable friend has asked me that question. Besides that, there is over $300,000,000, as noted in the Public Accounts, which is represented by the bonds of our railways. That is not included in the national debt—and I am not sure whether it includes the Grand Trunk liabilities or not. I do not think it does.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No, it does not. The Grand Trunk liability is $500,000,000.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: I would also like to draw attention to the fact that our expenditure in 1913, the year before the war, was $144,456,878.

I have looked at the Money Bills which have been introduced into the House of Commons this year. I did not examine them all, because when I found that they were approaching the half billion mark I thought there was no use in bothering about the matter any further. I would like to draw attention to the fact that the interest on our war debt, our pensions, and matters of that sort, that are attributable to the war, added to the expenditure as it existed before the war, would amount to something over 300 millions of dollars. But, you see, there is a considerable margin between that and the amount of money which has been voted in another place this year. I feel that the time has come when there should be great retrenchment.

There has been created in the minds of the public of this country, owing perhaps to what might in a sense be called an unimportant incident, a great lack of confidence in the Board of Directors of the National Railways, not only with respect to certain other affairs, but particularly with respect to a report which has appeared in the press that a sum of no less than $2,000,000 has been extracted from the Treasury of this country and invested in a foreign city—in, it is said, a hotel; that this amount has slipped out of the Treasury of this country in some way which has not been satisfactorily explained. The Government may say that they are not quite responsible for this, but I think they are responsible for it. In any event, whatever position the Government may take, the Board of Directors and the President of that Railway should have known better than to do any such thing. It is unprecedented in the history of this country, and I regret very much that it has happened. I hope there will be a thorough investigation of it. I say that this has created mistrust and lack of confidence in the Board of our National Railways in this country. I would not under any circumstances have placed in their hands such powers as are given in this Bill; but since that transaction I do not see how the Government itself could have as much confidence in them as it is desirable to place in a board possessing such administrative authority.

I regret very much the manner in which the accounts of this country are kept; and I believe that it would be far better to stop the pooling of our revenue. Long ago we should have had three classes of accounts. There should be one class representing the ordinary expenditure such as was incurred before the war; and the revenue for that should be raised in the same manner as before the war. There should be, secondly, a class including our war liabilities, and that money should be raised, it seems to me, largely by direct taxation; and if there is raised for that purpose more money than is needed to meet our war liabilities, reduce the debt, pay interest on pensions, provide for civil re-establishment and all that sort of thing, then the taxation should be reduced. The third class of accounts, which should be entirely independent of the others, are our railway accounts. It is scandalous that the money paid by the people of this country in taxes on incomes over $2,000, should have to be used to meet the deficit of the railways of this country. The people of Canada do not know it, but I think that as soon as they learn it there will be found a way of reducing the deficit on our railways. In my opinion, honourable gentlemen, there should not be any such deficit. Our railways have no dividends to pay. The Grand Trunk system is one of the finest systems on this continent. I believe they should be self-sustaining, and economies should be instituted which would make them self-sustaining. So long as the Board of Directors of the National Railways feel that they may spend any amount of money they like, practice all kinds of extravagance, and just lean back and take the amount of the deficit at the end of the year out of the general treasury of this country, so long will you have deficits on these railways. Therefore I do not believe in the pooling of our revenues, and in my opinion, it would lead to better management and more economies in connection with our railways to abolish that system.

In addition to our burden of taxation and our railway deficit there is another very serious problem in connection with our railways. It is the question of freight rates. Passenger rates are higher than they were before the war, but they are not so important. The freight rates of our railways, what are known as the class rates, are between 80 and 100 per cent higher than they were before the war. In order to ascertain the increase in income of our National Railways, you multiply by 2, or a little less than 2, the revenues of the railways prior to the war. That tremendous amount of money is coming out of the pockets of the people of this country.

This situation is interfering with interprovincial trade throughout this country. The fisheries of the Maritime Provinces, I am told, are not in a prosperous condition. Soon after Confederation the people of the Maritime Provinces started to develop industries, and at the present time they have many splendid industries, which are in a position to do, and are doing, business all over this country. I have had conversations with manufacturers in the Maritime Provinces recently, and I know of my own personal knowledge that they are finding the present situation most difficult and are losing trade with distant parts of the country because of the high freight rates. Furthermore, the people of other parts of the country who visit the Maritime Provinces are finding it difficult to do business there for the same reason. The people of the province of Quebec have had three bad crops in succession. We hear of troubles there, and of people leaving for the United States. From the Northwest, too, we hear a good many complaints. From the mouths of certain persons who live in distant parts of this country, chiefly in the East, I have lately heard statements, that they might have been better off had they not entered Confederation. We are confronted with these problems, and we are bearing this frightful burden of taxation, which is raising the price of commodities and making the cost of living higher than it should be; the high freight rates, which increase the cost of certain commodities shipped from the East to the Prairie Provinces from 5 to 20 per cent; this 6 per cent tax on gross sales, which increases the cost of commodities by 6 per cent, and perhaps more, before it is collected. We have heard the rumblings of dissatisfaction, which are largely the outcome of the high freight rates and the bad adjustment of taxation, and these evils are sapping the very foundations of interprovincial trade and perhaps the foundations of Confederation.

What we need in the present situation is economy. We in this country at present are apparently unwilling to make sacrifices. We want to spend all the money we can for everything in sight. Thousands of our young men made the supreme sacrifice of their lives during the war; yet we are not willing to economize sufficiently to enable us to pay the interest on our war obligations and extricate ourselves from our difficult situation in connection with our railways. Honourable gentlemen, I will tell you what I would do with the money that is represented in this Bill, and with more if this country could raise it; I would apply it to reducing the freight rates to and from our Prairie Provinces. I believe that in doing that, and in effecting economies we would be doing far more good than by continuing the railway policy indicated by this Bill. We do not know where it will land us. It is a fine thing to have these railways. They may be needed, and we may need dozens of other lines, but we have not the necessary money, we cannot afford them just now. What is required in this country still more is a determination to practise economy and return to sounder principles than we are following at the present time.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I rise, not to enter into any lengthy argument, but for the purpose of making a suggestion which I hope the Government will seriously consider. According to the notice given yesterday by the honourable leader of the Government, we are on the eve of the prorogation of Parliament, and whatever is to be done with this most important question must be done quickly.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Now.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: There is one feature which to my mind is very important and which has not been touched upon. I will refer to it in passing, and then make my suggestion.

There is one part of the great Canadian National Railway system upon which it does not take more than a dollar to earn a dollar. The Grand Trunk Railway proper, in Canada, earns a dollar on an expenditure of about 92 cents: but the expenditure of the Grand Trunk lines in the United States, both East and West including the Central Vermont, runs over the dollar mark; so the average of the whole Grand Trunk system is approximately 96 cents to earn a dollar. That has nothing to do with bonded indebtedness or guarantees, but refers simply to operating expenses. The average of all the rest of the lines—Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk Pacific, Transcontinental, etc.—according to the latest report, which I have under my hand, is an expenditure of $1.12 and a fraction to earn one dollar. Therefore the more business the Canadian National Railways does to-day the more it loses. Is it good business to build $100,000,000 worth of more lines and spend the $20,000,000 necessary to equip them, as I pointed out last night would naturally follow, and thereby aggravate the situation still more?

But that is not all. To my mind one of the considerations of most importance to this country is the financial credit of Canada. One of the most valuable assets that Canada has to-day is the financial stability and standing of the great Canadian Pacific Railway. If this mad competition goes on and we build lines at public expense to run into every hamlet which the C.P.R. touches, God help Canada.

What I desire to suggest to the Government to-night is that there is a way out of the dilemma in which we find ourselves. Ample justice can be done to all the localities where railway extension is found to be necessary. My suggestion is that the Government agree to withdraw this Bill, the principle of which it is obvious this House cannot and will not adopt, and that the Government forthwith proceed to amend its Supplementary Estimates so that they will cover the expenditures proposed for this year only. There is no necessity of providing at present for expenditures for the years 1924 and 1925. For the three-year period referred to in this Bill the Government wants $28,000,000. I respectfully urge the Government to reduce the Supplementary Estimates to $10,000,000, which is more than one-third of the amount asked for in the present Bill—

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Is the honourable gentleman in favour of building all these lines?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The ten million he proposes is more than one-third of the cost.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I am trying to be generous; I am trying to find a way whereby no necessary railway construction may be held up. I am sure that the House will be inclined to give sympathetic consideration to a proposal of that sort from the Government, but that this House will not, with proper regard for itself, for Parliament, and the right of the people of Canada to protection, endorse a vicious principle such as is embodied in the Bill before us.

As the honourable member from Toronto (Hon. Sir Edward Kemp) has just said, the performance of the present Board of Directors, as it has come to public knowledge during the last few weeks, does not inspire confidence or encourage Parliament to give a blank cheque to the Minister of Railways to be handed over to the Board managing the Canadian National, to enable them to construct more than 1,000 miles of additional lines at whatever price they see fit to pay.

I hope that the honourable leader of the Government in this House will take cognizance of the suggestion made and will see fit to withdraw the Bill and will urge upon the Government that if there are any lines on which in their opinion expenditures must be made this year, over and above what are provided for in the $73,000,000 in the Main Estimates, they will submit their requirements to this House before prorogation; and if prorogation is to take place to-morrow the Government must act quickly.

Hon. H. W. LAIRD: Honourable gentlemen, this is a matter of such transcendent importance to the Province of Saskatchewan, from which I have the honour to come, that I do not intend to allow it to approach the vote which must ultimately be taken without making a few observations upon the situation created by the discussion of this measure.

We have heard a great deal in this House to-night with regard to the conditions in the Province of Saskatchewan, and I propose to confine any remarks of mine to that Province. We have been given much information regarding the territory in that Province through which the proposed lines are to be built. It is unnecessary for me to supplement what has already been said, except to state that I have personal knowledge of the areas which would be served by the proposed branch lines, and I can assure this House that in every case they are absolutely essential to the development and progress of that province. These are not new lines; they are merely extensions of present lines for the purpose of supplying the needs of the settlers who went in before railways were built. Those men have borne the burden and heat of the day for many years. They have had to haul their crops of grain for 20, 30, even 60 miles in order to load it upon the railway cars. I have a personal knowledge of the great Carrot River district, north and east of Prince Albert, which is to be served by one of these proposed lines. It is the garden of Saskatchewan, one of the most magnificent parks in the whole of Canada. I have a knowledge of the Willow Bunch country in the southeastern part of the province. I have myself seen 55 bushels to the acre grown on land in that district 30 or 40 miles away from any railway track. The House will therefore recognize at a glance the absolute necessity for giving at least some service to those people, who have settled there in good faith and opened up that country and are cultivating the land. They must at some time or other be served with railway facilities, which must be provided by this Government.

I will not say anything further as to the need of the territory to be served by these roads. I think we may take for granted, from what we have heard this evening, that they are entitled to railway service. That being the case, we ask why, under these circumstances, the Government does not bring down this legislation at this Session in such a form that it can be accepted by Parliament, and provide these services which ostensibly they are willing to grant. Let us ask the question, do they really want to build those roads?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: Ostensibly, from the Bill brought down they do; but, if we investigate a little further, some doubt arises in my mind. If they wanted to build those roads, why was not the usual course followed in bringing down this railway legislation? Why did they depart in this particular case, and impose conditions which they surely must know could not be accepted by this House? Whether or not the Government as a whole are disposed to desire these roads, we are certain that some of the most important elements in the Government ranks are not disposed to accept them. Even my honourable friend the leader of the Government did not seem any too earnest in his presentation of these Bills. We know from his capacity, and from past experience in presenting legislation to this House, the earnestness of which he is capable, and the ability with which he can present his case; and I think, reading between the lines, that in this case we have seen some evidence that even he was not quite so much in earnest in presenting this legislation as he has been on other occasions. But whether the leader is particularly in earnest or not, we have the absolute certainty that his leading lieutenants surrounding him are not in favour of passing this legislation. Last evening one of the most distinguished members on the Government side of the House, the honourable member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) rose in his place and without any qualification whatever stated his absolute opposition to this whole Bill. He was followed a moment afterwards by our distinguished friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) who in terse words practically demanded that the Government withdraw this Bill. I happen to know the mind of some other honourable gentlemen on the front benches to the left of the leader of this House, and they are no more in sympathy with this legislation than the ones I have mentioned. So that it cannot be said with any degree of truth that all the opposition to this Bill comes from this side of the House.

When objection was taken by the leader of the Opposition to this Bill the leader of the Government said, "Pick out your lines and we will deal with them separately." I do not think that was a very creditable suggestion for my honourable friend to make, because he knows that we do not govern this country: we were relieved of that responsibility a year or two ago, and it has fallen into the hands of others whom he represents, and it is their business to govern this country. If any lines are to be picked out it is the Government of this country, represented in himself, who should pick out the particular lines, submit them separately to this House, and ask for our endorsation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, I will ask this question of my honourable friend: suppose I brought in as many Bills as there are lines, would not the majority of this Chamber select lines that they would vote for and practically pick out those that they would prefer, and let go by the board those that they would vote against? Would not the result be the same?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD: I am very glad my honourable friend has asked me that question, and I am going to answer it, and then I am through. I am going to say that if my honourable friend is absolutely in earnest in regard to this legislation, and desires to have it passed at this Session, and desires to give that railway service at an early date to those Western people who are anxious to get it, let him follow my suggestion, and we will stay here until next week if necessary; and if I sense correctly the opinion of this side of the House, I think I can assure him that most of the lines in the province of Saskatchewan, at least, will find a favourable endorsement at the hands of members on this side of the House. I am glad he asked that question, so that I could make that suggestion to him, because, as coming from the province of Saskatchewan, I want to place the responsibility for the defeat of the proposed legislation which would provide those lines in that province exactly where it belongs, and that is on the head of the Government of this country.

If anything should happen in the vote which is about to be taken whereby this legislation is postponed, it will not be the responsibility of members on this side of the House, but it will be that of the Government of the day, which has failed to bring down legislation in the way in which they know they should bring it down, in order to command the confidence of this House.

The proposed amendment of Hon. Sir James Lougheed was agreed to on the following division:

CONTENTS

The Honourable Messieurs:

Béique,	Lynch-Staunton,
Belcourt,	McCall,
Bénard,	McDonald,
Bennett,	McLennan,
Black,	McMeans,
Blain,	Montplaisir,
Blondin,	Mulholland,
Boyer,	Poirier,
Casgrain,	Pope,
Chapais,	Reid,
Crowe,	Robertson,
Daniel,	Ross (Middleton),
David,	Schaffner,
Fisher,	Sharpe,
Foster,	Smith,
Foster (Sir George),	Stanfield,
Fowler,	Tanner,
Gillis,	Taylor,
Gordon,	Todd,
Green,	Webster (Brockville),
Griesbach,	Webster (Stadacona),
Kemp (Sir Edward),	White (Pembroke),
Laird,	Willoughby—47.
Lougheed (Sir James),

NON-CONTENTS

The Honourable Messieurs:

Dandurand,	Roche,
Farrell,	Ross (Moose Jaw),
Harmer,	Thibaudeau,
Lavergne,	Turriff,
McHugh,	Watson—10.

Hon. Mr. TURGEON: I am paired with the honourable member from the Gulf (Hon. Mr. L'Espérance). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

PENSION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill 205, an Act to amend the Pension Act.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I move that this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in the following particulars:

The amendment to clause 11 provides for the manner in which the appeal shall be taken and reads as follows:

(1) Upon the evidence and record upon which the Board of Pension Commissioners gave their decision an appeal shall lie in respect of any refusal of pension by the Board of Pension Commissioners on the grounds that the disability resulting from injury or disease or the aggravation thereof or that the injury or disease or the aggravation thereof resulting in death was not attributable to or was not incurred during military service.

It forms the basis of appeal.

Then, there is an amendment on page 5, line 48:

After "hear" insert "but only upon the evidence and record upon which the Board of Pension Commissioners gave its decision."

There is then a consequential amendment to subsection 5 of clause 11, which provides that in addition to the applicant or appellant a member of the Board of Pension Commissioners shall also be represented. It reads:

Every applicant and the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada or its representative shall have the right to attend in person, at any and all sittings for the purpose of hearing an appeal held by the Board or by a member thereof, under such conditions as to the payment of an applicant's expenses thereby incurred as may be fixed by regulation of the Governor in Council, and the applicant may if he so desires, but at his own expense, be assisted thereat by counsel or representative other than the official Soldier Adviser appointed under The Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act."

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Are those amendments made by the Committee?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: They are amendments made by the Law Clerk, consequential upon the amendments which have have been offered. I move that the Bill be not now read a third time, and that it be amended by inserting the above amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

POST OFFICE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 246, an Act to amend the Post Office Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I was asked, I do not remember now by whom, what would be the reduction of revenue on account of the change in the postal tariff on newsprint. The answer which I have received from the Department is that it would be about $200,000.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: May I ask, what is the justification for reducing this cost to newspapers in view of the fact that we are already losing hundreds of thousands of dollars on their carriage?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Here is the statement made by the Postmaster General himself:

By an amendment to the Post Office Act in 1920 a new schedule of postal rates was applied to newspapers and periodicals. At that time the rate was one-quarter of a cent per pound. The new schedule raised the rate on an ascending scale until it reached the maximum of 1½ cents per pound, which went into effect January 1, 1922. Strong objection was made to this maximum rate, particularly on the part of publishers of small town dailies and of weekly newspapers circulating in the rural districts, and it was alleged that the increase represented an added expense of at least five hundred per cent to this class of publishers. They asked that the maximum rate be reduced to three-quarters of a cent per pound, or that in any event it be made not more than one cent a pound instead of the 1½ cents established by the amendment of 1920. This request has been repeated at frequent intervals during the past year and a half both by individual representatives of these publishers and by delegations and correspondents, and after observing the operation of the act the Government is of opinion that the maximum postal rate on these publications might fairly be reduced to 1¼ cents a pound. It is to give effect to this decision that the present amendment is introduced.

That is to say, the reduction is from 1½ cents to 1¼ cents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And it will amount to $200,000. May I ask my honourable friend, has he been able to make an estimate on the other question which I put to him as to the extent, to which the increase of the Sales Tax will bear upon the particular papers that would taken advantage of the reduced rates? I understand that this reduction will not affect all newspapers. I suppose they could take advantage of it, but in the natural order of their business it will be limited to a few.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All the users will have the benefit of this.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but this reduction in the rate, I understand, will chiefly affect the larger weekly newspapers that are distributed to very distant points from metropolitan centres.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: Papers that sell for 10 cents each.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have tried to obtain the information, but the Department was not in a position to give me an estimate.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It might be difficult.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I have heard some of the parties who will have to bear the increased Sales Tax claim that the tax on newspapers in general would be some $500,000 or $600,000.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is, if it is placed on all of the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I have heard on what I consider very good authority that the increase in the Sales Tax means $60,000 to one large paper concern, and the decrease under the Bill which we are now discussing will mean a saving of $8,000. I do not know whether that is absolutely correct, but I have reason to believe that it is about correct.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Can my honourable friend tell us whether or not there is any intention on the part of the publishers to reduce the price of the Sunday papers? Prior to 1920, when the postal rate was increased, we used to get a Sunday paper for five cents. When the rate was increased, the price went up to ten cents, and since that time it has been increased to fifteen cents. If there is any evidence or indication of an intention on the part of the publishers to reduce the price to the public, it would have a very substantial bearing upon what our decision should be. If, on the other hand, there is no such intention, and the selling price of the paper being 300 per cent of what it was when the rate was down, I think the House should hesitate before passing this Bill.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I understand that the Postmaster General says the present rate did not pay for the carriage of these papers. That being the case, I do not see the justification for reducing the rate. For example, in the West, we have papers that have increased the subscription price from $8 to $12 a year. They claimed that the reason for that was that the price of paper had been increased by the paper manufacturers from $80 to $160. I understand that the price is now reduced to about half that figure; but the subscription price has not decreased in proportion—in fact, it has not decreased at all. That being the case, I do not see what grounds there are for this reduction.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Can my honourable friend answer my question?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no information on that point.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The reason I asked it was that a gentleman who is making himself known to the members to-day made that statement that such was the intention of some of the publishers.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I hope there is some element of truth in it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I hope so too.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I hope also that the statements have been made in writing to the Goevrnment, so that they may go on record.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Honourable gentlemen, as I was responsible for the increase in the rates on newspapers, and had the honour of submitting the law to this House, I may perhaps give a few words of explanation. The increase in the newspaper rates was made because it was found that the newspapers of this country were not paying their fair share towards the cost of the administration of the Post Office Department. To give you an instance of that, I might just quote the explanation which I gave to this House when the Bill was proposed. I said:

> The last report of the Post Office Department states that the carrying of newspapers costs the country from five to six millions, while the total amount of money paid by the newspapers to my Department does not exceed $261,000. We are charging the people of Canada 2 cents an ounce for carrying their letters, which means $32 for 100 lb., while we charge for the carrying of third-class matter only $8 for 100 lb., and ever since Confederation we have been charging newspapers only 25 cents per 100 lb. In this we have been following rather the American post office system than the European or British system.

At the present time the ordinary man pays 48 cents a pound, or $48 a hundred pounds, for the carrying of his letters. Legal documents, business papers, partly printed and partly written, pay from $32 to $48 per hundred pounds. Books and samples pay 8 cents per hundred pounds. The rate per parcel post is from 5 cents to places within 20 miles, and newspapers pay one cent and a half.

When we were reorganizing the Post Office Department, in order to try to put it on a business basis, we saw that it was unfair to the rest of the population to continue carrying newspapers for practicaly nothing. It will readily be understood that during the early days of Confederation, when the population was small and scattered over a large territory, there was a reason for protecting the newspapers to that extreme limit; but to-day I believe we have reached a period when the newspapers, whilst still receiving considerable protection, ought to contribute a little to the ever-increasing cost of the administration of the Post Office.

The new law was made not by a rule of thumb of the Department, but after many conferences with the representatives of the newspapers of this country. I met those gentlemen, and represented to them that in this new and growing country the Department had to face many demands for a better, speedier and larger service. When I tell honourable gentlemen that about 9,000 post offices out of a total of 12,000 do not pay for their maintenance, and that the Post Office Department has to maintain them in order to carry letters to all parts of this country; and when I tell them that the Post Office has to give a railway mail service, and to improve it as much as possible to keep it on an equality with the service in other countries, they will readily realize the position of the Postmaster General in refusing any reasonable demand; but that there is no reason for reducing their rates when millions of dollars are given towards the carrying of newspapers. We came then to a conclusion, which was accepted by the newspapers represented, and I daresay all the newspapers of this country were represented there. The decision was to make an effort to reach the rate which is charged to the newspapers in every country in Europe a rate which would approach the lowest rate charged for transportation by rail, namely, from 5 to 8 cents per pound. But the newspapers represented that, as their tariff was fixed for a year in advance, it would be a tremendous increase to make all at once, to raise the rate from a quarter of a cent to 2, 3 or 4 cents in the same year. After much discussion a sliding scale was adopted, and the newspapers agreed to an increase of the rate by one-quarter of a cent per annum. In European countries the lowest rate is 5 cents, and in England the rate is much higher.

This has worked satisfactorily, no complaint having been heard. I know that many of the large newspapers in this country are in favour of the change. I know that they recognize that it is unfair to give to the newspapers a large share of the mail service provided at public expense without adequate remuneration for it. This increase meant at the start, if my memory serves me aright, about $600,000 a year.

It may be that the proposed change will result in a loss of $200,000 or $300,000, but that is not the most important consideration. The important factor is the principle which we abandon by this Bill. We are reverting to the old system, the system of carrying newspapers for practically nothing and obliging other people to wait until we have the money with which to provide better railway service, or open post offices or establish rural mail delivery, or perhaps improve the general postal service of Canada. If we adopt this Bill to-night, the question will be closed for a long time to come. We revert to a charge which is not justified and which will not bear comparison with the price charged for any other article or service to other people in this country, and we are preventing the increase of that rate to what it ought to be. I maintain that the newspapers should pay their fair share, and that is something like 5 cents a pound.

Is the Post Office Department in a position to sacrifice revenue and increase its expenditure? Perhaps honourable gentlemen are under the impression that surpluses are flowing into the coffers of the Government through the Post Office Department. They may be surprised, some of them, to learn that the deficit of the Post Office Department is $9,000,000. The actual deficit on the gross revenue of the Department is $1,500,000; but there must be added to that the proportion of postal revenue which is obtained through the tax. This is not a declaration of my own, but the official report of the Department, and here is what the Minister himself says.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is that for this year?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: It is the Report of the Postmaster General for the year ending March 31st, 1922:

> The net revenue for the year, including war tax, amounted to $26,554,538.24 and the expenditure to $28,121,425.07, increases of $223,419.27 and $3,460,162.81 respectively. The expenditure for the year exceeded the revenue by $1,566,886.83. Excluding the war tax, calculated at $7,435,270.64, the expenditure exceeded the actual postal revenue by $9,002,157.47.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is unusual, is it not?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes. I have here the revenues and expenditures for a series of years, but I will take only the last three or four.

Year	Net Revenue	Expenditure
1918	$21,000,000	$18,000,000
1919	24,000,000	20,000,000
1920	26,000,000	24,000,000
1922	26,000,000	28,000,000

Salaries were increased, and there were changes made in the Post office; but the changes were made previously, and I do not think they account for that great difference. However, in 1921, when the net revenue was $26,000,000 and the expenditure $24,000,000, there was an apparent surplus of $2,000,000; but there was actually a deficit, because from that $26,000,000 of revenue it is necessary to deduct about one-third, contributed by the War Tax.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: How is it computed at one-third? The amount of War Tax revenue must be very difficult to ascertain.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: It is a little less than one-third. That is the estimate that has been made by the Department. The calculation is a rather complicated matter. It is not absolutely exact, but I think it is fairly so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How is that imposed or collected?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: By stamps. Honourable gentlemen will understand that stamps are practically the only revenue of the Post Office.

I would draw the attention of honourable gentlemen to another phase of the question. Take the expenditure. The largest expenditure for for the conveyance of mail. Of a total expenditure of $28,000,000, the conveyance of mail by railway train and steamboat, cost $14,900,000. Now, here is an interesting point. Of this total cost the newspapers are responsible for practically one-half.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Fifty-four per cent.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes. That is more than half the cost. You are aware that three-quarters of the space occupied in the mail car is occupied by the newspapers, which pay only 25 cents per 100 pounds, whereas letters, which occupy one or two square feet, pay $38 per 100 pounds. There is the unfairness of the situation. Though the newspapers are responsible for a large proportion of the cost of the administration of the Department, they pay practically nothing.

I have been obliged to refuse or defer the requests of people living in remote parts of the country—poor, hard-working settlers, but at the same time an asset to Canada. They would come to me asking for the establishment of a post office, but when I examined the cost in comparison with the revenue for a post office in a community consisting of 20 or 30 houses scattered here and there, I found it would mean a loss. It is necessary to hire a mail carrier to take the letters from the station and carry them miles away. That costs $700, $800 or $1,200. Still it is the first duty of the Department to provide a mail service for even the poorest and remotest of our citizens. It is a humanitarian duty. One result of a deficit is that those citizens who are entitled to that service must continue to be deprived of it. If the newspapers paid their proper share, not only would the revenue be increased, but there would be this further effect, that the postal service could be improved. When the Department was reorganized every source of expenditure was checked, and a rule was laid down for each branch as to when and how an expenditure would be sanctioned. The rural mail service, for instance, has proven to be a tremendous expense, sometimes unjustified. We had to lay down the principle that no rural mail delivery should be established except in places where the revenue justified it. The railway mail service had to be curtailed in order that the ever-increasing expenditure might be met and the Post Office Department might be prevented from becoming a sort of Canadian National Railway system on a smaller scale, piling up millions and millions of deficits. How can the Postmaster General ask a member of Parliament or any citizen of this country to forego a proposed improvement when that man can point to what is being done for the newspapers of this country?

For these reasons I am sorry that the Postmaster General has chosen this particular time, when the financial situation of the country is far from bright, to ask this House to consent to a retrograde step, undoing what has been, I think, a great improvement in the Post Office Department. Therefore I cannot approve of this Bill, and unless the honourable leader of the Government changes his mind, I will certainly have to move that the Bill be not now read a second time, but be read this day six months.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I ask the ex-Postmaster General, is it not correct that since the increase of 1920 there has been a substantial increase in the rates paid by the Government to the railways for the handling of newspapers?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes. I forgot to mention that point. I should add that the railway rates, which were 4, 6, 8 and 14 cents per mile, according to the space occupied in the car, have been raised to 16, 20, 25 and 36 cents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Doubled.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: They have been more than doubled.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I will put the amendment first. It has been moved in amendment by Hon. Mr. Blondin that the Bill be not now read a second time, but be read a second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: I will withdraw that.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think we are all indebted to the honourable gentleman for the statement of facts that he has put before us. I was his colleague when these improvements were being made, and I remember very well how carefully we examined the whole subject. We commenced with the newspapers, as almost a dead burden upon the finances and revenues of the Post Office. We arranged, as my honourable friend has stated, for a gradual increase towards something like remunerative rates, with the idea that in time the newspapers—commercial undertakings—should pay at least the bare cost of their carriage through the mail. Why should we at this particular time take a backward step and diminish the revenues of this country? I cannot conceive why it should be done. We have had two or three examples of that. The treaties which we have made have brought about, according to the confession of the Finance Minister himself, a loss to us in direct revenue of $850,000, but when you take into account their probable effect you find that for the benefit of those treaties we are losing a revenue of about $1,000,000, and that loss must be made up from taxation in this country. Now you throw off $200,000 and for what reason? For the benefit of the newspapers, who to-day have the softest thing in the whole transport system carried on by the Post Office Department, and are paying but a mere fraction of what they cost. Why is it that the Government proposes at this particular time to throw away revenues in cases like that, when it is increasing the debt and taxation of the country from year to year and from time to time? Surely this is the most unsuitable time to take a backward step, and surely the rates on newspapers ought to be the last to be reduced when they are only a fair charge, in view of the cost of carriage. I am entirely in sympathy with the expressions of my honourable colleague, and I hope that the Minister will not press this Bill.

Hon. F. B. BLACK: I want to say a few words on this question. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the honourable ex-Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Blondin), and I am entirely in accord with everything he has said. I know there has been a considerable canvass made of all those interested in newspapers, in an endeavour to get them to assist in the reduction of the rate. I want to say, further, that I am interested in newspapers in my own province to a small extent, and if this reduction came into effect it would mean for our papers down there a saving of several thousand dollars a year.

Further, I want to say that this is a time when we need every dollar of revenue we can get. We had a Bill before us to-night which, if we had passed it, would have given a certain class of people about $200,000. I am not finding any fault with the action taken in this House on that Bill, but we decided that we would not give that $200,000 to that class of people; yet by this Bill we are proposing to take from our revenue $200,000 without any justification whatever.

I have only been in the newspaper game three or four years, but before I was interested in it, I had felt, and said on many occasions, that the newspapers of the country had been carried at the expense of everybody else. A poor man who wants to send a letter pays 3 cents, or at the rate of 48 cents a pound for his letters, while a newspaper has been going for a quarter of a cent a pound up to one and a quarter or one and a half cents a pound —an absolutely unjustifiable proposition from every standpoint. There are certain large newspapers that would save a considerable amount of money, running anywhere from $50 a year up to $40,000 or $50,000 a year on the most largely circulated papers in Canada. It has been stated, and I maintain falsely stated, that if this Bill went into effect it would be in the interest of the small newspapers of the country. In my opinion, and in that of any person who has knowledge of the small country newspaper that goes out twice a week, or weekly, or even daily, instead of this Bill being a benefit it would throttle them, because it would give an opportunity to the large papers which circulate not only weekly but daily through the country because of their enormous advertising possibilities, to circulate through the country districts and shut out the small paper.

So far as I am concerned, regardless of the personal element, I do not think there is one argument in favour of the Bill, and I hope the Government will withdraw it. I would be very glad indeed to second a motion far the six months' hoist.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: I would like the ex-Postmaster General to state whether the suggestion has been considered of charging newspapers on such a basis as they do in the parcel post?

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: Yes, but that would be very costly and impracticable in Canada. It is done in the United States, but on account of our small population and the large area of the country it was found impracticable here.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I understand that Canada has subsidized the newspaper publishers to the extent of nearly a million dollars by carrying their papers at such a low rate, and this is all the result of the false system which has been in vogue. I honestly believe that if the people of Canada, and the majority of members of Parliament, were seized of the fact that this was a subsidy and nothing else, the matter would not have gone along as it has done. At this particular time, when we are faced with deficits, when our taxes are large, when transportation charges are not coming down, and when the cost to the Government for this particular service is increasing, why should a reduction be made of from one and a half to one and a quarter cents a pound?

I am informed that in the United States the charge on newspapers is now a minimum of two cents, and goes up to a maximum of ten cents per pound, in a country whose population is so dense, and where transportation costs less than it does here. I believe also that Great Britain charges from two to four cents per pound; I think the publishers have to attach a one-cent stamp to every copy, and that would amount to at least four cents a pound.

Hon. Mr. BLONDIN: The average is between 7 and 8 cents.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I have here a statement which was prepared by the Secretary of the Post Office Department, which perhaps covers some points that were not given by the ex-Postmaster General:

According to statistics taken in August, 1918, the total weight of newspapers carried by post is 87,501,490 pounds per annum. The sum collected for newspaper postage last year amounted to only $291,104. Newspapers now occupy 60 per cent of the floor space required for the transportation of the mails.

As this is paid for by the car mile it means that for railway transportation alone papers cost the department over $2,000,000 per annum. This cost is for carriage alone and does not include a single cent for transfer to stations, transfer between trains and stations, sortation and distribution at the office of posting and on trains, mail courier service, handling and delivery at post office of destination, etc. The total expenditure for the carriage of mails and the cost of mail bags during the fiscal year 1918 was $8,293,515.24. Sixty per cent of this amount, or $4,976,109.15 might therefore be charged to newspaper service, in addition to a percentage of the salaries of postmasters and other post office employees, which it would be difficult to apportion.

In the last analysis the question is one of transportation. The department pays for the carriage of mails across the country by the car mile, and every car added means a very considerable amount added to the cost of transportation.

In view of these facts, and of the exceptionally low rate which the newspapers are now enjoying, I contend that the time is most inopportune for allowing this Bill to pass, and I will move:

That this Bill be not read the second time now, but that it be read the second time six months hence.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have received no special memorandum from the Post Office Department explaining this reduction, but in reading the Debates in the other Chamber I noticed that the statement was made by the Postmaster General that the representations which came to him were mostly from the small newspapers, which claimed this reduction because they were otherwise already labouring under considerable difficulties, being taxed in divers ways by the federal government. That would appeal more to me, than the statement that the large newspapers are the principal beneficiaries. I have not heard that the large dailies of the country were in dire straits, but I have always been under the impression that the country newspapers were having considerable difficulty in maintaining themselves.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Is it not a fact that the country papers to which you refer get free transportation within a radius of 40 miles?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, the weeklies within that radius are getting free transportation; but there are even weekly papers which cover a much larger area, and there are papers that are not weekly that come under this taxation that use the mails to a considerable degree, and that claim that the rate for one and a half cents is a hardship. It is suggested to me that I should withdraw this Bill. My right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) will realize that my mandate is to submit the Bill, to the Senate and it is for the majority of this Chamber to decide as to the merits of the proposition.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: There are only a few large newspapers, such as the Montreal Star, but I think it only fair to say that I think the publishers of the smaller papers have been asking for this relief. A year ago I was present in the office of the Postmaster General when about twenty-five newspaper men made the representations upon which I presume this Bill is founded. It is fair to them to say that they did not complain of a reasonable increase in the rate, but they asked that the Minister should graduate the rate of increase so that it would not come upon them as suddenly as was proposed by the Act of 1920. Previous to that Act I believe the rate was less than three-fourths of one cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: A quarter of a cent.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: The Bill of 1920 increased that in the course of two years—exactly doubled it, if not more.

Anyone who is acquainted with the newspaper business of this country knows well that while a few publishers may be making very large profits, a great many of the newspapers have difficulty in making both ends meet. I have in mind the class of newspapers which sell for only two or three cents, and which have not increased their rates. In Nova Scotia the newspapers sell for three cents. They circulate all throught the province, and they were represented at the conference to which I referred. They are willing to pay a reasonable rate, but they desire to have the rate increased not too suddenly. Their other expenses have increased very much on account of the higher cost of labour and material, and they are not making enormous profits, as some papers are. They are willing to consider the matter fairly, and for my part I am going to vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: On further consideration, and in deference to the leader of the Government, I wish to withdraw my motion, and have the sense of the House taken on the second reading.

The proposed amendment was withdrawn.

The motion for the second reading of the Bill was negatived: contents 14; non-contents, 26.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 11 a.m..

THE SENATE

Saturday, June 30, 1923.

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 244, an Act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1919.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 3

FIRST READING

Bill 252, an Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the Public Service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st of March, 1923, and the 31st of March, 1924.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of the Bill.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill contains the supply voted for the current year, which runs from the 1st of April this year to the 31st of March next. I am informed that it includes not only the principal supply, but the supplementaries, as well. They were voted during the course of the night, which will explain why I have been unable to examine into the details of the Bill. I will have to leave it to honourable gentlemen who want to do so, to speak upon the details or the total from whatever information they may have received when these Bills were presented in the other House. I cannot even state what changes were made when they were taken into consideration by the House of Commons.

The Bill has not been distributed, but it has been the practice since Confederation for the Senate to receive this Bill in the last hours of the Session, so that we are following tradition in fact, perhaps we are in a little better position than usual to speak our minds upon the general policy embodied in the Bill, because we are given a few hours to examine into it. We are not limited in any sense; we can take the whole month of July to criticize each and every item.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, we will not do that. Half a month will be quite satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is to assert the rights of the Senate that I so express myself.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: May I ask what are the totals?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster), who has had the direction of the Finance Department, and who cannot have lost all interest in the administration of that Department since he has been transferred to this House from the House of Commons, will be able to give us the details, which I have not now before me. I thought I would see the Minister of Finance before 11 o'clock this morning; but, as I understand the House of Commons adjourned at 8 o'clock this morning, I suppose the Senate will excuse him for not being in his office at 10 o'clock when I called.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: Honourable gentlemen, the leader of the Government evidently is very fond of association with his colleagues in this House, otherwise he would not have hinted that we might stay here during the month of July for the purpose of considering this Bill. I cannot agree with him. Whilst probably I am quite as fond of the association of my colleagues as he is, I think no good purpose would be served by our sitting here and discussing each item.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I did not suggest it; I simply said it was our right.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: Of course, I understand it is our right. We cannot amend these Bills under our Constitution; all we can do is to vote for them or reject them altogether. I am not in favour of the latter course, although I desire to protest very strongly against the tremendous amount of money involved in this Bill. I have not examined the Bill, but I presume it covers the Main Estimates and the several Supplementaries.

I have not all the Supplementaries here. The Main Estimates amounted to $427,511,235.73; then there were Supplementaries amounting to $5,500,000; further Supplementaries of $18,202,105.66; and still further Supplementaries of $14,711,351.05. The total of these amounts is $465,924,692.44. But there are one or two other Supplementaries which I have not got before me and which would increase this amount; and there are various other Bills carrying with them money votes which have been passed by the House of Commons. So that when we say that the Estimates approach the half billion mark this year, I think we are well within the mark. I have already pointed out that our pre-war expenditure in 1913, according to the Year Book, was $144,456,878. We have had a war with its burdens; we have to pay the interest on the debt, the necessary pensions and other things which are chargeable to war; and I estimate that these would bring our expenditure, upon the basis of the expenditure before the war, to a little over $300,000,000. But we have had before us Bills looking towards the expenditure of half a billion dollars. I need not repeat what I have already stated; but to me this is very alarming, and I really feel that the Government are going ahead as though there had been no war, as though there were no war debt, as though there were no railway problems and no railway deficit, as though there were no exodus of people from this country to the United States, and as though there were perhaps 200,000 or 300,000 people coming into this country annually and settling on the land. These are things, it seems to me, which the Government have overlooked; otherwise they would have endeavoured in some shape or form to practise economy.

Last year Great Britain had a surplus of revenue over expenditure—and we all know her expenditure is very burdensome—of £100,000,000 sterling, or, roughly, $500,000,000. She reduced her debt to that extent. In Canada, apparently, we have not given any consideration to the matter of reducing our debt, and I am of the opinion that we ought to set aside a small fund, perhaps half of one per cent per annum, and that the part of our debt which is directly chargeable to war should be wiped out over a period of 50 or 60 or 70 years, or some such period. We ought to have some policy with regard to wiping out our war debt.

I am also in favour of abandoning altogether the pooling of our revenues. That is taking all the money which we derive from the various forms of taxation and putting it into a pool.

We have in this country every known form of taxation in effect in the United States and Great Britain, with one or two minor exceptions; and on top of that we have this extraordinary form of a tax of 6 per cent on turnover. I do not want to repeat or to enlarge upon that subject at this late hour of the Session; but I do not believe it is possible to estimate what effect our taxation is going to have upon the business of this country. This country needs all the energy and strength that men of affairs can put into the business of the country; it needs it for the purpose of trying to conduct business in a profitable way in order that revenue may be collected. The effect of this enormous burden of taxation, which is heavier than that of any other country—at any rate, of any other English-speaking country—is having a paralyzing effect upon business. Whilst the business turnover is considerable, the results at the end of the year are disheartening and discouraging, and young men in business who have plenty of energy and of whom we are proud are, I regret to say, going to the United States because they are hampered in businesses here. It seems to me we should pursue a policy the result of which would be to retain their services for Canada.

What I want to get at is that more economy should be practised in dealing with the public affairs of this country, and that that word "economy" should be understood, as I do not believe it is understood at present. When one takes up the last Supplementary Estimates one is astonished to find that at a time like this the Government engages in so many expenditures all over the country. I do not want to single out any particular province. I know that the demands upon the Government are very great; that constituents press for this, that, and the other thing, and it is very hard to refuse; but really we must sacrifice something in this country in order to put it on a sound financial business basis, and we might as well make up our minds to do it. No doubt the Government is approached from every quarter for improvements in various directions.

I cannot help feeling that it would be a great thing for this country if we had a controller or an official holding some such position, in which he could exercise a great deal of influence, a gentleman of the type of the late Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, who was Prime Minister of Canada. Mr. Mackenzie put this matter better perhaps than any other man has done, in a letter to Mr. Thomas Hodgins, who was Liberal member for West Elgin in the Ontario Legislature from 1871 to 1879. This letter was published in the Toronto Globe some years ago. In that letter Mr. Mackenzie said:

"Friends (?) expect to be benefited by offices they are unfit for, by contracts they are not entitled to, by advances not earned. Enemies ally themselves with friends and push the friends to the front. Some attempt to storm the office. Some dig trenches at a distance, and approach in regular siege form. I feel like the besieged, lying on my arms night and day. I have offended at least twenty parliamentary friends by defence of the citadel. A weak minister here would ruin the party in a month, and the country very soon."

Those conditions do not apply in exactly that form to-day, but the idea and the sentiment need to be kept before this country. Many of the men who ask for money to be spent for certain projects in their own constituencies are perfectly honest men, and the only thing necessary in dealing with them is for the Government representatives to have the courage to say no.

If I might be allowed to refer to a personal experience, I felt, when I returned from England in 1919, after demobilization, that I would not have a friend in this country because of my frequent refusals to the numerous ambitions and desires of people. I learned what it was to be obliged to say no, to say it frequently, and to stick to it. But I did not find that it did me very much harm, particularly when one had right and justice on his side. What this Government needs is to have the courage to say no and stick to it; otherwise this country's credit will in a short time be in a condition that we will very much regret.

These are my views in regard to the tremendous amount of money that is being voted in the Estimates. I do not think we can afford such expenditures. I think we have overdone it, and that it will result in disaster. The phrase "pork barrel" is in some senses a little offensive in relation to the expenditure of public money. It was invented in the United States, and we have not used it much in Canada; yet are not those words as used in the United States applicable to some things we see in this country at present? The idea is that a little money should be voted in this place, and a little money in the other to counterbalance it, so that it will go all round and nobody will kick. We are not in a position to adopt such methods. I do not think that we can go on spending money just as if we had no railway problem, as if we had no war debt, and as if there were thousands of people coming into the country and settling on the land.

These conditions as I recite them ought to be considered and faced. The Government are the trustees of the people of this country, and it seems to me that they should understand their position. If a man in business conducted his affairs in such a way as to be unable to pay his debts, and was reckless and careless, he would become bankrupt and would be denounced by the public. On the other hand, a man who struggles earnestly to meet his obligations and pay his debts is considered an honourable man. I admit that it would be difficult to bankrupt this country, but we want a happy and contented people here, and we want to reduce the cost of living in Canada. Unless taxation and the cost of living are reduced, and excessive freight rates, which are about 100 per cent more than they were previous to the war, we cannot develop interprovincial trade. Very great complaints are being heard in this regard from the Maritime provinces and also from the West. I think the time has arrived when the situation as I have outlined it should be taken into consideration by the Government, and I wish simply to enter my protest against this great expenditure.

Hon. J. S. McLENNAN: I wish to associate myself with the ideas of the honourable gentleman who has just spoken, and to recall to the House that three or four years ago we had a Committee on the Machinery of Government. One of the things that Committee suggested to the Government of Canada was a method by which they might be relieved of what is undoubtedly always a difficult position—refusal of requests of their friends. The idea was to have a Board of Public Works to which could be submitted all propositions made for the expenditure of public money in applications from constituencies. This Board would be independent, and would have no power other than ascertaining the facts and laying them before the Government, and thus before Parliament and the country, so that cases of expenditure which were justifiable would have an easier course in being carried out. Other cases, where expenditure was not justified, but was asked purely for the aggrandizement of a locality, such as building a $25,000 post office in a place where there was a revenue of $250 per annum, would be made much more difficult to carry out. If the personnel of such a Board justified themselves, I think that any Government proposing an expenditure such as that which we spent a considerable time over last night, and which met its proper and merited fate, would find their path easier by submiting such propositions to that independent Board and securing its endorsation. It would be a great step forward if this Government would seriously consider the advantges of establishing such a Board.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: On this, which I suppose is the last day of the Session, as we cannot amend this Bill in any way and can only accept it or reject it, I wish to take the opportunity of entering my protest on behalf of the Progressive party of Canada against the tremendous expenditure that the Government of the day is indulging in.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Why is it that the Progressive party never enters a protest that is effectual in the House of Commons?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They leave it for the Progressive party in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My honourable friend has not paid much attention to what has been going on in the House of Commons. They have protested on many occasions against the expenditure. I wish to point out that, although we are now almost five years after the conclusion of the war, all the Departments of the Government, with the exception of a couple, are adding more and more every year to their expenditures. The only two that show any reduction are those that could not help doing so; one is the Defence Department, and the other is the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. Though they are spending much more money than to my mind; they should, still it is a good deal less than it was during previous years, for there can be absolutely no justification for keeping up that expenditure. But all the other Departments are spending more money, and on matters for which there is absolutely no necessity.

I want to emphasize what my honourable friend from Toronto (Hon. Sir Edward Kemp) has said. Where are we heading for, or where are we going to land? As my honourable friend has pointed out, if a businessman or a farmer conducting any kind of work found that year after year, through extravagant expenditures, he was going behind, and was not able to make both ends meet, that he was putting on mortgage after mortgage, there could be only one result—bankruptcy. While it would be pretty hard to bankrupt Canada, as my honourable friend from Toronto said, still it could be done, and to my mind the Government of the day is taking a course which, if not stopped, is going to lead to that very condition.

Let me point out to my honourable friend the leader of the Government, and to the Government itself, what took place this week. A Government was practically wiped out of existence—why? I was out through the country somewhat, and one great thing that defeated that Government—I refer to the election last Monday in Ontario—was that they had advocated economy and had practised extravagance. There were several other factors; I think the wet vote in Manitoba and the dispute between two prominent men in the party helped somewhat, but not as much as one might suppose. What defeated that Government was that they had advocated one thing and practised another.

Now, what did the present Government advocate before they got into power? They advocated economy, yet they have practised extravagance on a scale never before reached in the Dominion of Canada under any government. If a halt is not called, the result is going to be absolutely the same as it was in Ontario.

My honourable friend from Toronto referred to Great Britain reducing the debt of that country by $500,000,000. How did they reduce the debt? Not by collecting extra revenue, but by cutting off expenditure in the administration of government. Unless we do that in Canada I cannot see what the end will be. I am not usually pessimistic, but if we keep adding from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year—and the present Finance Minister has estimated that we will this year have a deficit of something like $90,000,000 the condition of this country will be very serious. Yet, in spite of that, my honourable friend brings down Supplementary Estimates of the most glaring political character that I have ever seen in Supplementary Estimates, and I have been a good many years in one House or the other. What is going to be the result?

The people will have to judge for themselves, but I would suggest to my honourable friends of the Government that a halt ought to be called in expenditure. I have often said in this House and in the other House that from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 of the present expenditure could be cut off without anybody suffering. I know it would be hard to do, but what is wanted is a Finance Minister who has the courage to say no, and stand by it, and if he did that he would not have to do it many times. I would venture to say that a Finance Minister with nerve and courage could say to the Deputy Ministers: "I want 20 per cent or 25 per cent cut off those Estimates, and if you cannot do it I will get another man in your place who can do it." I venture to say it would be done in short order. I do not see anything else that is going to save us. I do not intend to say any more; I am just making a general protest on behalf of the Progressives.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why do you not say on behalf of the people of Canada?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I say, of the Progressive people. I am afraid, from my past experience, that if I said all the people, the words would fall on deaf ears. However, I hope that something better may occur in the future. If not, I do not know where we will land. The expenditure is going up every year. Here we are voting altogether this year over half a billion of dollars. People are going out of the country, and very few people coming in, and I will venture to say that three out of every four who are coming are merely going to pass through the country if the present condition of affairs continues. So I say that something ought to be done, and done speedily, not in the interest of any party, but in the interest of the whole country.

Hon. GEORGE H. BRADBURY: I desire to associate myself with what has been said with regard to the awful expenditures in this country. It seems to me that no intelligent effort has been made by the Government to curtail expenditures. I hold in my hand a return that I had a great deal of difficulty in getting, showing the cost of the Civil Service of Canada. Everybody knows that Great Britain has made wonderful reductions in its Civil Service, and has saved hundreds of millions of pounds; but in Canada, instead of saving money we are increasing our expenditures enormously. I would like this return placed on record, because I believe it is a document that everybody should understand and know. I have returns here showing in each of the Departments increased expenditure from 1919 to 1922, a period of only 3 years instead of the expenditure being cut down, when everybody knows that the Departments have not the work they had during or even previous to the war. Settlers are not coming into the country and a great many of the Departments have not one-half the work they had; still the expenditure has run up.

Take, for instance, the Agricultural Department. In 1919 we spent $1,772,961. In 1922 that expenditure climbed to $2,392,309.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What does that cover? Salaries?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It covers simply the salaries of the Civil Servants, showing that the salaries have been increased to this extent, which is an enormouse increase considering the position that Canada is in today.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Has the honourable gentleman in the statement the increase in number as well as the increase in salaries?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: No, I have not computed it that way. I just figured the increase in salaries, and I am going to give the totals and ask that they be placed on Hansard. The totals, honourable gentlemen, are amazing—alarming. The cost of the Civil Service of Canada in 1919—that is, after the war and the enormous expenditure that had been necessitated by it—stood at $38,432,502.66. In 1922 it had climbed up to $56,429,142.02—an increase in less than three years of over $16,000,000, just in connection with salaries. That is the only item to which I will at present draw the attention of the House; but I do say that a matter of this kind calls for a thorough investigation and, if necessary, some weeding out. Either you have too many civil servants or you are paying them too much salary.

In this connection let me emphasize just one phase of the recklessness and carelessness of the Government. Two or three years ago this House placed itself on record—in fact, Parliament adopted a resolution which, I think, was moved in this House—regarding the elimination of public holidays in Canada. The Government has ignored that statute and continued illegally to grant five holidays which it was distinctly understood should not be granted. This entails an expenditure of nearly a million and a quarter of dollars. That is just one phase of the situation. Some honourable member may say, "Oh, it does not make any difference; it does not entail any extra expenditure, because the Civil Service does the work just the same." My argument in that connection is that if, in compliance with the decision of Parliament, those five holidays had been abolished, we would dispense with at least a thousand civil servants and still the work would be done. That is only a small item, but it shows the trend of the Government's action in neglecting to curtail the expenses of this country.

I ask permission to hand in this statement and have it placed on Hansard:

Return to an order of the Senate, showing the total cost of the Civil Service for the year ending March 31st, 1919, and for the year ending March 31st, 1922.

Department	1919	1922
Agriculture	$1,722,961 71	$2,392,309 95
Public Archives	98,160 66	119,675 28
Auditor-General	206,573 75	293,555 84
Civil Service Commission	149,399 96	342,482 32
Customs and Excise	5,713,793 22	7,560,649 21
External Affairs	83,522 88	178,032 33
Finance	796,086 01	579,126 80
Governor-General's Secy.	31,320 00	33,625 00
Indian Affairs	542,025 00	612,821 62
Insurance	41,715 45	67,194 02
Interior	2,639,354 49	3,691,657 65
Justice	644,198 66	892,781 83
Labour	123,184 25	246,078 46
Marine & Fisheries	1,312,266 98	2,227,882 52
National Defence — Naval	327,783 25	464,358 52
National Defence — Militia	4,407,271 82	2,015,491 62
National Defence — Air	.....	428,274 09
Mines	468,953 12	592,063 05
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	20,150 09	56,277 58
Post Office	10,653,868 16	15,790,116 53
Privy Council	43,361 78	45,313 89
Public Works	557,568 14	672,186 61
Printing & Stationery	69,342 40	446,654 89
Railways & Canals	1,914,813 67	2,782,205 86
Secretary of State	80,980 46	154,823 33
Trade and Commerce	1,061,549 87	3,783,592 02
Immigration and Colonization	972,035 68	1,115,260 39
Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment	3,535,843 51	6,948,616 51
Patents and Copyright	113,125 57	173,343 73
Soldier Settlement Board	102,291 72	1,363,788 29
Health	.....	358,902 28
Total	$38,433,502 66	$56,429,142 02

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, it may not be amiss, and it may serve a good purpose, to apportion responsibilities for the extravagance and want of thrift in Canada. I am not prepared to dissent at all from what honourable gentlemen have said this morning with regard to Governmental extravagance, but I think that everyone in Canada ought to make a serious examination of conscience on this matter of extravagance and thriftlessness. Unless Canadians, individually and collectively, make up their minds to practice thrift, it will not be practised, and our burdens will soon become unbearable. It is all very well for honourable gentlemen, either here or elsewhere, and for other people in Canada, to preach economy, but it would be in my opinion far better if everyone practised it in his personal affairs. We have learned nothing from the war. We do not realize the enormity of the burdens which have been put upon our country, and spending goes on to-day at just the same rate as before the war, if it is not worse.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Worse.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Probably worse. One has only to consider, for instance, the matter of automobiles. I have not the exact figures, but I am told that there are considerably more automobiles in Canada than in the whole of the British Isles.

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP: That is right.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Over half a million.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: People who cannot at all afford to buy and run an automobile are mortgaging their farms, their furniture or their chattels. Go down to our Court House here in Ottawa and ask the Clerk of the County Court to show you the register of chattel mortgages, bills of sale, etc., with regard to automobiles. For this city alone, it would take a diligent person at least a month to read over the names of those who have given chattel mortgages in order to buy automobiles.

We have made necessities of many things which were merely luxuries. Let us each ponder and see if we have started to practise what we preach to others and what we ask of the Government of Canada to-day. I think everyone will have to admit that he has himself failed to practise what he preaches.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Should not the Government lead in the matter?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No; Governments always follow public opinion rather than direct it. It is one of the greatest mistakes of modern days that leaders follow and do not lead. No collective attempt is made in this or any other country to direct public opinion into the proper channels. It is a game of politics from the first day of the year to the last. I believe in democracy; but at times my democracy receives some very rude shocks. I wonder if democracy will not fail unless we learn the lessons it teaches and take means to put into practice what democracy requires.

Can we not take pattern, for instance, by what has been accomplished and what is still being accomplished in a small country like Belgium and its bigger neighbour

France? It is almost inconceivable for us in Canada, indulging in extravagance as we are and having huge deficits every year, to realize just what those countries have done since the war. The industries of France were almost completely ruined. The northern parts of the country, where the great industries of France had been established, were devastated. Just remember what was done in France and Belgium. Yet to-day France, with less taxation than ours, has a surplus. Its revenue more than equalizes its budget.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, it equalizes the budget.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Except for extraordinary expenditure.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: They have a billion francs of deficit.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Yes, but I am speaking of their ordinary budget; I do not refer to the complete budget, including extraordinary expenditures.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To be repaid by Germany, for instance.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Exactly.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But when a budget is dealt with in the Chamber of Deputies it goes to the Senate, and it may come back in a very different form; and vice versa. But to give the impression that France is not having a struggle with deficits would be to give a wrong impression.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Of course, she has and is bound to have deficits. I am not including the moneys which have to be raised for the rebuilding of France, and I think that in making the comparison one must leave them out. We are not rebuilding anything in this country. We have nothing to rebuild. France has had a great deal of reconstruction to do, and naturally that must be excluded from her ordinary budget. But I say that the ordinary expenditure of France is more than equalized by the revenue.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I saw that the other day.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is true. I had the actual figures. I am sorry I have not the figures before me at present, but I had no expectation whatever of discussing this question. I was speaking, honourable gentlemen, of the ordinary budget of France. Belgium has been doing likewise, and has almost completely reconstructed everything that was destroyed in that country. Why? Because economy and thrift are practised not only by the Government, but also by the people. That is not something new in those countries. France, after the Franco-Prussian war, cleared off the war indemnity in less than half the time within which she had to pay Germany—how? It was simply that the people of France practised economy and thrift.

We in Canada, or on this continent, have never learned the lesson. This continent has been inhabited by a race of wasters. Almost everything on this continent has been wasted. We have wasted our forests, we have wasted our fisheries, and a great many of our other natural resources. They were in such quantity, they could be so easily had, that people took no care of them. The result is, we have gone on from one extravagance to another until we have reached such a stage that, unless we stop, the country will in a very short time be without credit of any sort. Let us not merely preach, but also try to practise. All of us in our different communities can do something towards encouraging thrift among the people. I do not think we are doing it. We lament the condition of affairs, which we cannot ignore, yet we do nothing to bring about a change. It is a duty especially incumbent upon honourable members of the House to call a halt and ask the people to think and realize whither they are going. I agree that the Bill which is presented to us is extraordinary. I agree that this Government must practice economy. But why should not members of the House of Commons and members of this House exert whatever influence they have with the Government to bring about a better condition of things? Why should not members of Parliament abandon the practice of coming every year with an insistent demand for a wharf or something of that kind? It is all right enough to ask the Government not to do this or not to do that, but members themselves should not bring pressure to bear upon their friends, as they are constantly doing, to have the Government undertake extravagant expenditures.

I had no intention of speaking on this matter, and am sorry my remarks have been so disjointed. If I had had time I might have been a little more interesting. While I do agree with those who have protested against the extravagance in which our Government is indulging, yet, I repeat, we must share the responsibility and see just how far we are individually to blame for this mad expenditure of money, both publicly and privately, and try to do something to bring about a change.

Hon. J. D. REID: Honourable gentlemen, I agree with the honourable gentlemen who have spoken, that the increase of expenditures in every department should not be continued. I have made a comparative statement of the expenditures in several of the Departments for the fiscal years ending 1915, 1921 and 1923, and the estimated expenditures for 1924, and, without taking time to read this statement, I would like to have it placed on Hansard, so that during the recess honourable gentlemen may have an opportunity of examining it.

The complaint is made, with regard to the Estimates that one-sixth of the total appropriations are submitted first and have to be passed immediately, without sufficient opportunity being given for criticism, and that another appropriation bill comes down just two or three hours before prorogation. Of course, we have the right to keep Parliament in session, but we feel hardly justified in doing that. I have never yet heard any means suggested whereby the Senate could have these Estimates submitted in any way different from the practice followed for many years. I have risen simply to make a suggestion to the honourable leader of the Government and the honourable leader of the Opposition, which they might consider between now and next Session, with a view to giving the members of the Senate plenty of time and opportunity to criticize or at least examine all the Estimates, and also giving the Senate more work to do during the early part of the Session. My suggestion is this. The Estimates are placed on the Table of the House of Commons at the beginning of the Session, but we cannot get them until they have been passed by the Commons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But copies are distributed to the members of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. REID: I admit that, but we have no right to discuss the Estimates until they are brought here. Now, I would ask the honourable gentlemen to consider whether it would not be possible, when the Estimates are laid on the Table of the House of Commons, for both leaders to agree to pass one item for each of the Departments, and then have the Supply Bill sent over to this House. It might be understood that when the Bill comes here we shall have the right to discuss any item in the Estimates, even before the entire Estimates are delivered to us. True, we would have before us only one item of the Supply Bill, but if I remember rightly the practice in the House of Commons, when one item was taken up, members had the right to discuss any item relating to the Department concerned. With the one item before us, we might be in a position to offer a great deal of assistance, and the Government might be willing to strike out some of the items when they were brought up for discussion in the other House.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would like to draw attention to the fact that when I suggested that the statement I had should be put on Hansard, I said I would do so with the consent of the House.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I think I ought to point out to the House the practice with regard to certain papers appearing in Hansard. The honourable gentleman from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) read part of a document and asked that the remainder should appear in Hansard; the honourable gentleman from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) makes a similar request but does not state just what it is that he wishes to appear. Such documents should not appear unless they are read.

Hon. Mr. REID: Of course, I agree with His Honour the Speaker's ruling. He is quite correct; but with the consent of the House, as it would save time, I would like to put it in. The figures are taken from official documents that have been placed before us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All right.

Hon. Mr. REID: This is a Statement showing Comparative Expenditures in following Departments for years named, as taken from the Auditor General's Report:

	Fiscal Year Ending Mar. 31, 1915	Fiscal Year Ending Mar. 31, 1921	Fiscal Year Ending Mar. 31, 1923	Fiscal Year Ending Mar. 31, 1924
1. Charges of Management	$ 498,450	$ 774,000	$ 965,000	$ 1,085,550
2. Civil Government	6,681,045	8,881,940	11,086,405	11,436,905
3. Justice Department	1,430,983	1,728,133	2,200,133	2,179,933
4. Penitentiaries	804,300	1,069,600	1,670,900	1,670,500
7. Legislation	1,736,526	1,829,280	2,355,880	2,344,500
8. Agriculture	3,950,000	5,003,000	6,084,500	6,315,500
9. Immigration	2,103,800	1,443,190	2,008,190	3,386,190
10. Pensions	309,806	27,520,485	33,879,846	33,527,277
11. Manitoba	10,867,000	12,520,106	10,788,400	12,801,737
12. Public Works Inc	28,330,048	11,372,956	10,061,241	10,729,081
13. Ocean and River Service	1,257,300	1,645,300	1,788,300	2,542,780
14. Scientific Institutions	508,600	627,900	693,825	1,252,489
15. Labour	80,800	380,000	1,522,000	1,373,000
16. Trade and Commerce	.....	1,848,095	3,152,075	3,029,907
17. Fisheries	1,447,900	1,435,000	1,359,000	1,563,000

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If no other honourable gentlemen wishes to speak on this subject, I will close with but a very few words. I could, perhaps, touch upon the different matters that have been mentioned by some of my colleagues, but I feel that a better purpose will be served if I can succeed in making a practical suggestion.

I agree with all that has been said concerning the necessity for economy. The question is how to apply it successfully. The Executive is but a Committee of the House of Commons, and that Committee is constantly pressed by the commoners to give attention to what they consider to be the special needs in their respective constituencies. That pressure is exerted from the first day of the Session to the last, and the measure of its success is generally to be found in the Supplementary Estimates.

It is for the Cabinet to see whether these needs are absolute. I recognize that in these times expenditures under the title of "Improvements" should, except in very exceptional circumstances, be limited to maintenance. But there is no question that it is good economy to take a stitch in time. The Government of Canada is a big business firm with works throughout the land, and money which has been expended in the past on permanent works must be maintained if they are to be saved.

As we have very little time at our disposal, and as there are one or two pieces of legislation to which we must give attention, I will make one suggestion. It is in relation to the Civil Service of Canada and the general impression which exists throughout the land that our Departments in Ottawa and elsewhere throughout the country, are very much overmanned. My honourable friend from Manitoba has said that if we went seriously about it we could reduce the general staff by 1,000 employees.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I did not say exactly that. I said that if they did not receive the holidays to which they were not legally entitled, the Civil Service could be reduced by 1,000, and still be able to carry on. But I do say now that the Civil Service could be reduced by 10,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have often heard this statement made. Is it not our duty to inform ourselves as to the facts? Is it not our duty to enlighten the people of Canada in regard to this impression which exists throughout the land with reference to the efficiency and overmannning of our Departments?

I may say that since I have had the honour of representing the Government in this Chamber, I have come in contact not only with the Deputy Ministers, but other officers in the various Departments, and I must render them this homage—that in every case I have found them to be most intelligent and most devoted to the service of the Government; men who know their business and know it thoroughly. On a few moments' notice I have been given the information that I needed, and I may say that I am proud of the public officials of this country—proud of their knowledge, of their skill, of their experience, and of their devotion to duty.

Then, I ask, have the Ministers a complete knowledge of the operation of their Departments? The experience of a Minister at the head of a Department may not be a long one; he is so pressed by problems that must be solved daily that I wonder how long he must be at the head of his Department before he can familiarize himself with all the details of it.

Could we not do our share in trying to solve the problems of each Department, at all events as to its efficiency and as to the economies that could be effected by a proper reduction of the various staffs, if reductions can be made at all? If the statement of my honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) is at all true, could we not help to bring about economy? What I say will be a form of notice to the Deputy Ministers of the various Departments, a notice which will be followed up by action unless I am checked by a majority in this House. My idea to-day is to tell all the Deputy Ministers that at the opening of the next Session of Parliament we will call each and every one of them before a Committee of the Senate to give us a list showing the total number of employees in their respective Departments as of 1st of July, 1910, the 1st of July, 1914, the 1st of July, 1918, and the 1st of July, 1922. This statement will show the number of employees in the various Departments as of these dates, and the salaries received by each in a separate column, and I will ask them to show not only the totals, but the number of employees in each branch of each Department; and not only in each branch, but in each locality; so that we may know how many employees the Department of Marine and Fisheries, for instance, has in the various places where it functions. In Toronto, for instance, the number of employees in the Public Works Department, or the Customs Department; and likewise in Montreal and at other places throughout the country. There is an impression abroad that the Post Office Department is considerably overmanned. Last evening the ex-Postmaster General gave us a statement showing us the increase in the expenditure which has taken place in that Department. He mentioned one reason for it—that it was partially due to the large increase in salaries. We all know that increases in salaries and bonuses were given during the war; but the public of Canada should be informed as to the increase in the Civil Service List, and should be made aware of the justification for it.

As I say, I give notice to every Deputy Minister in the Service that I will ask that a Committee be appointed at the next Session of Parliament to obtain that information, and to hear the explanation and justification of the various increases which have taken place since 1910, if there really are increases.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would it not be as well to set an example by asking them to give a justification for the increases to Deputy Ministers this Session, many years after the war, when the high cost of living has to some extent at least been reduced? These men were able to exist during the period of the high cost of living. Surely they can get along now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There may be much to be said either for or against the policy.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Probably against.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But let my honourable friend remember that in the administration of companies, which are less important than the administration of the country, there has been an increase in expenditure. I personally know that companies in which I am interested, and on whose boards I serve, have had to increase the salaries of their higher officers in order to retain them. What would have been looked upon as a good position 25 or 30 years ago at a salary of $5,000 would not be looked at to-day at $10,000; and when I compare the importance of the work carried on by some chiefs of Departments—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Some chiefs.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: —when I compare it with the work carried on by officials of some of the companies with which I am familiar, there is very much to be said in favour of doing the needful in order to retain and satisfy efficient men who, outside of the Service, would perhaps receive twice what they are getting in it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I will guarantee that there are three men in the list who could not get any private employment to-day at $1,200 a year; and yet you have increased their salaries to $8,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As I have not seen the list, I can only speak generally. Yet I repeat that during my contact with the officials of the Departments—and I have in mind the Deputy Ministers and the chiefs of branches—I have not met a man who seemed to be inferior to his task.

There are ex-Ministers of the Crown here who have had the same experience. My honourable friend who leads the Left of this Chamber (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) has had the same experience; and I believe that all of us who have come in contact with the chiefs of the various Departments can testify to their efficiency.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Does my honourable friend intend to bring that information down to the 1st of July, 1923?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I was commencing with 1910 and taking four-year periods. We could say 1923 instead of 1922.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I would think so. And would my honourable friend have in mind the inclusion of the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is such a big, complicated system that we could perhaps treat it separately. Let us content ourselves with discussing this proposition. There is an opinion that the Services are overmanned and have been tremendously increased because of the war. Let us find out what the staffs were in 1910, 1914, 1918 and 1923, and ask the Deputy Ministers to explain and justify the increases. In this way we may receive information as to the working of the Departments which will prompt us to go somewhat further in probing into the work performed by those Departments.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why "us"? Do you mean the Senate or the Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I mean the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to have some of these gentlemen paraded.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I suggest that my honourable friend ask the Deputy heads to indicate the minimum staff with which they could get on. If we wait until they are before us they may say that time is necessary for them to consider the matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I had that in mind, and I thought that the expression, an explanation and a justification of the increases, would bring about their opinion as to what the staff should comprise.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, they would not do that. They would not feel that they must volunteer any statement of that sort.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will submit that question when the deputy ministers appear before the Committee. I give that notice now, on the 30th of June, because when we meet in January next the Deputy Ministers will have had time to prepare the statements that I say the Senate will require.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Will my honourable friend say that he will ask that particular question?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I will ask the honourable gentleman also to make inquiries on this particular subject. The Government offices are scattered all over this city. A plain man like myself coming from the country to do business with the Government would require a guide and a taxi. There is an enormous waste from having the offices scattered about as they are. I understand there are some 53 buildings rented by the Government. Some two or three men out of the Civil Service, without forming another commission or wasting any more money about it, should be asked to go over the whole situation and see if they cannot make a rearrangement of those offices, and save time and money. I understood one of the Deputy Ministers to say that if he had to go out at nine o'clock and visit all the branches of the Departments in a taxi, spending 5 or 10 minutes in each place, it would be six o'clock in the evening before he could get back. Now, there must be a lot of time and inefficiency in that arrangement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We should examine into that question next Session. I move the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 244, an Act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1914.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill deals with bonds which the Canadian National Railways, under the Guarantee Act of 1919, have a right to issue. Here is the explanation I have from the Department:

> The purpose of the Bill is to afford a check on borrowings by the Canadian National Railway Company. It is not the purpose of the Bill to create fresh borrowing powers, nor to enlarge the borrowing powers of the Company. The Bill applies only to borrowing powers which the Company or its subsidiaries may already have, or may hereafter obtain, by proper authority derived from Parliament. The Bill is intended to provide that no such borrowings may be made without the approval of the Governor in Council. It further provides that such securities so approved (including equipment securities) may be guaranteed by His Majesty, the object, of course, being to ensure that the best possible price may be secured. Some difficulty arises is explaining the exact legal status of subsidiary companies. That phase of the question is dealt with in this memorandum.

Section 26 of the Canadian National Railways Act, Chapter 13, 1919, provides that the Company with the approval of the Governor in Council may issue securities "in respect of the mileage of the lines of railway which it, from time to time, constructs, acquires, owns or controls,—not including the Canadian Government Railways nor exceeding with outstanding securities, in the aggregate seventy-five thousand dollars ($75,000) per mile."

The Bill does the following:

1. It reiterates that any securities issued under the authority of Section 26 of the Canadian National Railways Act, must be approved as to form, terms and amount by the Governor in Council.

2. It provides that such securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty.

3. It enlarges the definition of such securities so as to include equipment issues.

4. It extends the provision requiring approval by the Governor in Council to securities which may be issued by non-amalgamated subsidiaries. Without such provision in the Bill it would technically be possible for a subsidiary (acting doubtless by the Canadian National Company) to make further issues so far as they have authority to do so.

As I understand this explanation, each of the companies that are now under the control of the Canadian National Railway Board, principals and subsidiaries, has the power to issue bonds of any sort, on equipment or on the road, under former Acts—I think those of 1919 and 1920. Under this Bill, they will need the sanction of the Governor General as to terms and form. The Governor in Council may guarantee those bonds. The explanation is self-evident. Those are all bonds and securities that in fact become national debts, and if we can obtain the money at a lower rate by guaranteeing them, since we have the obligation to meet them whether we guarantee them or not, it will be to the advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why is it necessary to have so many subsidiary companies? And how many such companies are there in the Canadian National Company?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend will remember the debate that took place in this House when the Canadian National and the Grand Trunk Railways were taken over, he will know that there were a number of subsidiary companies which had issued bonds, which are distributed among the public, and there is a necessity of maintaining their entity because of the obligations that all those companies have issued to the public.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me it must complicate matters very much to have so many different companies. Why would it not be possible to have them transferred to one company, which would assume the obligations of the others?

Hon. Mr. J. H. ROSS: A holding company?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, making the Canadian National Company a holding company for the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is one of the problems that the legal lights of those companies and the Government have been wrestling with for a number of months.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If it is only the legal lights, take care that they do not complicate matters more.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In to whose hands would my honourable friend confide those entangled problems?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The actual work has to be done by them, of course.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Has the question been raised that the issues by those subsidiary companies were not covered by the previous legislation, in 1920?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are governed by preceding statutes under which they would have the right to issue securities, but of course those rights could only be exercised by the Railway Board, which has their management. The Canadian National Railways have not absorbed any share of the control of those subsidiaries.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I did not make myself clear. I understood my honourable friend to say that this Bill is introduced so as to make it quite clear that the issues by subsidiary companies are really governed by the same provision which governs the issues by the Canadian National Railway.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not limited to subsidiary companies.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not understand the object of the legislation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I will point out to my honourable friend that he has not given us any explanation whether that section 26 permits the Canadian National Railway Company to construct lines from time to time. It permits of their issuing securities, and of their securing the approval of the Government to those securities, subject under section 23—about which the Bill is silent—to their getting the consent of Parliament. The guarantee cannot be issued now without the consent of Parliament. May I read section 23 of chapter 13, and my honourable friend will see its application, and will observe its absence from this Bill. This is the statute you are amending, but you are amending section 26 and remaining silent upon section 23:

With the approval of the Governor in Council and upon any location sanctioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals, the Company may from time to time construct and operate railway lines, branches and extensions, or railway facilities or properties of any description in respect to the construction whereof respectively Parliament may hereafter authorize the necessary expenditure, or the guarantee of an issue of the Company's securities. A copy of any plan and profile made in respect of any completed railway shall be deposited with the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Then section 26, goes on to provide:

The Company may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, issue bonds, debentures, debenture stock, perpetual or terminable, or other securities (hereinafter called securities) in respect of the mileage of the lines of railway which it, from time to time, constructs, acquires, owns or controls,—not including the Canadien Governement Railways, nor exceeding, with outstanding securities, in the aggregate seventy five thousand dollars ($75,000) per mile.

But observe that under section 23 the building of the road has to be sanctioned by Parliament. Now this Bill comes in, and proposes amending section 26, and subsection 2 of the Bill deals with the equipment certificates and so on, and construction likewise—that is, the issuance of bonds for any of those purposes, with the approval of Parliament; but subsection 3 permits of the Governor in Council guaranteeing those securities entirely irrespective of Parliament, at least impliedly. I contend that that is the object of the Bill—to evade the necessity of Parliament authorizing the construction of the particular mileage, and of guaranteeing the bonds. Now, whatever is done, should be done subject to section 23. My honourable friend will observe that, it is so patent. This is a blanket power given to the Governor in Council and to the company itself to proceed with any construction entirely irrespective of Parliament, and to issue securities, which the Government may guarantee. It is not desirable to give that power. What I would suggest to my honourable friend is that either it should be made subject to section 23 of the Act or he should provide that the amount so to be guaranteed shall each year be included in the estimates and voted by Parliament. I do not wish to be too captious in criticism or to be too distrustful of the operations of the Canadian National Board, but it is quite evident that all this legislation is calculated to evade the duty which has hitherto been cast upon the company, of coming to Parliament for sanction.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that the intention is not to enlarge in any way the powers of the Canadian National Railways; it is simply to restrict them and to make them subject to approval by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is not the language of the Bill. My honourable friend will see that under section 23 they cannot enter upon any construction without the approval of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the amendment is simply an amendment to section 26 of the Canadian National Railways Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, and it destroys all the safeguards which precede that section of the Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Let us see. I confess that all I have to guide me is the text of the Bill and the memorandum I have in my hand.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I acquit my honourable friend of attempting for one moment to mislead the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Let us make sure that this Bill not only has no other purpose, but cannot possibly be interpreted as having any other purpose.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does it enlarge the powers of the company or of the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no objection to making it clear. The proposed amendment is to add two subsections to section 26. I will read the section referred to.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend first read section 23? My honourable friend will then see what are the obligations that are thrown upon the company.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will do so.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will not my honourable friend concede that this is a condition precedent to the company entering upon any construction, or to the Governor in Council guaranteeing any securities that may be issued upon such construction?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, I recognize that approval can be given only when Parliament has hereafter authorized the necessary expenditure, or the guarantee of an issue of the company's securities.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I interpose here the suggestion that perhaps that provision has regard only to such securities as are referred to in the schedule; that is, Chapter 13 of the Statutes of 1919, and Chapter 13 of the Statutes of 1920; and that it applies only to construction, or securities with regard to construction, authorized by Parliament later on. That may be the explanation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This would apply to all construction—

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: —because the schedule simply relates to, or is descriptive of, all the lines owned by the company.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I am not quite sure of my interpretation—this is only tentative—but what I mean is that section 26 perhaps deals only with those securities referred to in the schedule, and that section 23 was enacted for the purpose of dealing with securities to be issued later on, as authorized by Parliament.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That may be the explanation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. Section 26 deals with all securities—securities issued, or that may be issued from time to time, for lines that may be constructed.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Comprised in the schedule, though.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Of course, this Bill is confined to the schedule, but this schedule includes the main line and includes all the properties. But section 23 deals in the first place with a condition that is precedent and that must be set in motion before any authority is given to the company to proceed with construction. Then we come down to section 26, which simply follows logically the procedure that must be adopted in pursuance of the obligations thrown upon the company under section 23.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I may be all wrong, but what I am trying to explain is this, that the Act first had in contemplation two kinds of securities. There were the securities referred to in section 26, and which are confined to the schedule. The reason would be that that has already been approved of. Section 23, on the other hand, would be dealing with securities other than those mentioned in section 26, and would apply only to such securities as might be issued later on, when authorized by Parliament. I do not know.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) accept that amendment?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You might read it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED (reading):

Provided that the amount so to be guaranteed shall each year be included in the estimates and voted by Parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will ask that the Senate adjourn during pleasure, and I will ascertain from the Minister of Finance whether the proposed amendment is acceptable. If not, he will state the reason.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved in amendment, as subclause 4 of clause 2 of the Bill:

Nothing herein done shall be construed as granting power to guarantee any securities the issue of which has not been authorized by Parliament.

The proposed amendment was agreed to.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CANADA TEMPERANCE BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT INSISTED UPON

The Hon. the SPEAKER presented a message from the House of Commons disagreeing with the fifth amendment made by the Senate to Bill 43, an Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move that we do not insist upon that amendment.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, all I have to say can be put in two sentences. As I understand the matter, British Columbia took a plebiscite, one of the questions at the time being whether or not the people had the right of private importation. Whether that was contemplated by one per cent or by 99 per cent I do not know and I do not care. The plebiscite was taken. Now it is proposed by a majority vote of the Legislature to interfere with that condition of things. To my mind that is not fair. I say: "You have appealed to Caesar; go to Caesar"—you have appealed to a plebiscite; go to the plebiscite. I adhere to my opinion that before that right is taken away from the people of British Columbia there should be a plebiscite. If they vote to take away that right, it is their own business.

Hon. Mr. GREEN: Honourable gentlemen, I am not going to detain the House for more than a moment or two. In the first place, the Canada Temperance Act says that if the people of any particular Province vote for prohibition they must, if they want to stop private importation, have a plebiscite. We in this House have acceded to the view of a good many people in British Columbia that they are entitled to deal with their own internal affairs as they see fit. We from British Columbia view that as a term of the Statute. The other House now refuses to concur in that view for the reason that the expense of the plebiscite will be put upon the Province. I think the Senate should say unequivocally that they are prepared to stand by their amendment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me that the reasons assigned by the House of Commons do not touch the question at all. We are asked to balance the rights of the citizens of British Columbia in one hand against an expenditure of $50,000 or $75,000 in the other. If the people of British Columbia enjoy a statutory right, why should they not express their willingness to sacrifice it or their desire to retain it? The mere expenditure of the amount involved in taking a plebiscite, in a Province where a business is being carried on by the Province which represent profits to approximately $4,000,000 a year, should not weigh for one moment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will simply say that the Government of the Province of British Columbia has felt that under the vote they, impliedly were authorized in their action. We have gone thoroughly into that question, so I will simply move that we do not insist on our amendment.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand was negatived ,and it was ordered that a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House that the Senate doth insist upon its said amendment.

COLD STORAGE BILL

WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill 9, an Act to amend the Cold Storage Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not intend to proceed further with this Bill this Session.

ADMIRALTY BILL

WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

House again in Committee on Bill 117, an Act to amend the Admiralty Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. GREEN.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We have had three or four discussions on this Bill, and it has met with some opposition for various reasons. The objection seemed to be the scope of the authority given the Governor in Council; and various suggestions were made. I do not know whether the members who objected are ready to waive their objections.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I pointed out to my honourable friend that the appointment of Deputy Admiralty Judges should be confined to judges. The Bill is so widely expressed that it would permit of the appointment of laymen.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What class of judges would my honourable friend insist upon?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHED: In many districts the County Court judges or the District judges act as judges in Admiralty. I think my honourable friend should withdraw the Bill for this Session, and should give consideration to the proposal made that the appointment should be of a judicial character. I do not limit myself as to the class of judges.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Then there is the question of emolument. I doubt whether we could come to a conclusion unless we gave considerable time to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Under these circumstances I will not press the Bill.

FISHERIES BILL

WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill 223, an Act to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.—Hon. Mr. Beique.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This Bill proposes to change from $500 to $20 the fee which the canneries are now paying. This slump has surprised the House, and the question has been asked: "Why do you make such a reduction?" My honourable friend read a statement from the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries who had raised the fee from $50 to $500. It is represented to me by a member of this House when that was done there was an implied condition which does not appear in the Statute, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was to limit the number of licenses. Such a policy was not followed, and it makes me somewhat doubtful whether the statement was made as a condition or as binding the Government. There seems to be a contradiction which requires some explanation. I would not doubt his loyalty if he made a statement of a public or a semi-public nature. The canneries have not been very profitable during the last year, and I am informed that this $500 fee is a very high one.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I ask this question? Is it good policy to practically wipe out a license fee at this time when every industry should bear its fair share of taxation? Could not my honourable friend let the law remain as it is, and ask the Department to make a recommendation to Council, if necessary, to make a refund during the present year or during dull times? I am satisfied that a recommendation of that kind would be sanctioned by Parliament if there was merit behind it. Next year times may be prosperous, and it will be difficult to increase the license fee again. There is no reason why the Government should face a deficit, as is proposed, of between $35,000 and $40,000. If my suggestion were followed, the Government could then make a recommendation to Parliament for the refund of these licenses.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You could provide that when good times come again a higher license fee shall be paid. This is one species of paternalism that we are ever resorting to. Why should not the fishing industry, like any other, take its chances and take the bitter with the sweet? This is only encouraging the very thing which many of us are agreed should not exist.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yesterday we had newspapers making princely incomes asking to have the postage rates reduced.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Some years ago I had something to do with increasing the license fee in connection with our inland fisheries. We were spending thousands of dollars every year for food and hatcheries in Lake Winnipeg and other places in Manitoba, and the fisheries license fee was not sufficient to cover the expense and warrant the upkeep of the fisheries in that Province. The result was, on representations being made to the Department, that the license fee was increased. These men are making considerable money. They do not produce the fish, but simply take them out of the water. I maintain that it would be a great mistake to reduce the fee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is only the figures that surprise me. First the fee was increased from $50 to $500; now we propose to reduce it to $20. This is done as a result of an inquiry by a Committee of members of the House of Commons representing, I believe, all shades of opinion, and their report was unanimous. The Senate believes that the Government should stay its hand for a while and see whether conditions are such as to make this an unconscionable fee to impose upon the canners. I will submit the suggestion of my honourable friend to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not know whether the Governor in Council has power to give a rebate.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think the canners will live through it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not insist upon my motion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We will be meeting again in six months.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: They can come back every year when the fishing is not up to the standard.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government as to what has happened to the notice that was sent back to the House of Commons with reference to our insisting on the amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no news. Nothing has come back from the House of Commons.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the sitting was resumed.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

ITS NEXT MEETING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, at the last meeting of the Interparliamentary Union the Senate was honoured by the chairmanship of the Canadian group being given to one of our esteemed members, the Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster. I would ask the right honourable gentleman to tell us at what date this summer the next meeting will be held, in order that any Senator who may be in Europe at the time may obtain his credentials.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The honourable member from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) and myself attended as representatives of this Parliamentary group at the last, the twentieth, Session of the Inter-parliamentary Union, held at Vienna. The session lasted for three days and was interesting, being attended by from 200 to 300 delegates of different Parliaments of the world.

The next meeting, the twenty-first, is to be held in Copenhagen in the early part of August. Any member of Parliament, whether of the House of Commons or of the Senate, has a right to attend that convention and take part in the deliberations, and if any honourable members, either of the Senate or the House of Commons, intend being in Europe about that time, I would be very glad to give them the necessary credentials to enable them to attend and take part in that twenty-first session of the Interparliamentary Union. I hope some of our members will find it convenient, if they are in Europe, to take the trip to Copenhagen, where, I know, they will be most cordially welcomed by the people of that city and by the members of the Association from the Parliament of Denmark.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the sitting was resumed.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

His Excellency the Governor General having come and being seated on the Throne:

The Hon. the SPEAKER commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that: "It is His Excellency the Governor General's pleasure they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber."

Who being come with their Speaker:

The following Bills were assented to, in His Majesty's name, by His Excellency the Governor General:

BILLS ASSENTED TO

An Act to incorporate Family Trust.
An Act to amend The Immigration Act.
An Act for the relief of Lillian Beryl Brayman.
An Act for the relief of Roland Bergeron.
An Act for the relief of Florence Cohn.
An Act for the relief of William August Kruger.
An Act for the relief of Thomas Benjamin Brown.
An Act for the relief of Elva Burnside.
An Act for the relief of Alfred Thomas Candy.
An Act for the relief of Cecilia Maria Taylor.
An Act respecting the Canadian Order of Woodmen of the World.
An Act to amend The Judges Act.
An Act to amend The Public Service Retirement Act.
An Act to amend The Naturalization Acts, 1914 and 1920.
An Act to amend The Militia Pension Act.
An Act to amend The Bankruptcy Act.
An Act respecting The Calgary and Fernie Ry. Co.
An Act for the relief of Abraham Brooks.
An Act for the relief of Clara Wellena Bristol.
An Act for the relief of Emma Jean Walker.

An Act for the relief of Ella Maude Gee.
An Act for the relief of Enid Louise MacDonald.
An Act for the relief of Mary Theresa MacIsaac.
An Act for the relief of Jane Edna Near.
An Act respecting the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners.
An Act to amend The Dry Dock Subsidies Act, 1910.
An Act to amend The Canada Shipping Act.
An Act to amend the Yukon Act.
An Act for the relief of John Samuel McDonnell.
An Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Conkey.
An Act for the relief of Margaret Marie Pope.
An Act for the relief of Loretta May Girard.
An Act for the relief of Birdena Frances Wallace LeMay.
An Act for the relief of Jessie Anne Epstein.
An Act for the relief of Herbert Hugh Keller.
An Act for the relief of Nellie May DeBlaquire.
An Act with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation.
An Act to amend The Canada Shipping Act.
An Act to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act.
An Act to amend The Insurance Act, 1917.
An Act to repeal the Acts respecting Bounties on manufactures from Manila Fibre in Canada.
An Act to amend The Dominion Lands Act.
An Act respecting Banks and Banking.
An Act to amend The Biological Board Act.
An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.
An Act respecting the payment of Bounties on Petroleum.
An Act respecting the payment of Bounties on certain manufactures of Hemp.
An Act to amend The Customs Tariff, 1907.
An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.
An Act to amend The Special War Revenue Act, 1915.
An Act to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act, 1913.
An Act to amend the Export Act.
An Act to supplement The Finance Act, 1914.
An Act respecting the payment of Bounties on Copper Bars or Rods.
An Act respecting Chinese Immigration.
An Act to amend The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.
An Act to provide for further advances to The Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.
An Act to amend The Income War Tax Act, 1917.
An Act for the Protection of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery.
An Act to amend The Feeding Stuffs Act.
An Act to amend the Dairy Industry Act.
An Act for the relief of Flossie May Pinkham.
An Act to amend the Criminal Code.
An Act to amend the Companies Act.
An Act to constitute a Board of Audit.
An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.
An Act in respect of The Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.
An Act to amend The Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act.
An Act to amend the Pension Act.
An Act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1919.
An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 31st March, 1923, and the 31st March, 1924.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the second Session of the Fourteenth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following Speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In bringing to a conclusion the work of the present session of parliament I desire to express my gratification at the many useful and important measures which have been enacted.

The passing of the Bills respecting Treaties with France and Italy completes Canada's part in the desired commercial arrangements. Early completion on the part of the Governments of France and Italy and the exchange of ratifications necessary to give effect to the Treaties are confidently expected. It is anticipated that the operation of these Conventions will promote our trade and increase our good relations with these two nations, which were among our great allies in the late war.

The decennial revision of the Bank Act deservedly received careful attention at your hands. It is confidently hoped that the amendments made, in the light of experience, will, so far as legislation can, provide the safeguards required to ensure the efficiency of the banking system.

The changes made in the customs and excise laws will, it is believed, make for a simplification which is desirable and at the same time strengthen the financial position of the Dominion.

Pursuant to the recommendations of the Royal Commission appointed by the Government prior to the opening of the session, legislation has been enacted with respect to lake and river transportation which, it is hoped, will prevent the control of freight rates and insurance upon grain shipments such as has hitherto existed.

The whole subject of the handling and marketing of grain in Canada and other matters incidental to the buying, selling and transportation of grain is being further investigated.

The Act to provide for the investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers will afford the public a much needed safeguard against possible undue enhancement of prices or unfair restrictions of trade.

Several legislative enactments in pursuance of the report of the Royal Commission on Pensions and Re-establishment have shown your desire to take every possible means of fulfilling just obligations towards the ex-service men, and their dependents.

An increasing immigration has been a significant feature of the present year. Agreements have been negotiated with the British Government for co-operation in an Assisted Passage Scheme; and closer co-operation has been effected between the Railways, Shipping Companies and the Department of Immigration and Colonization which, it is anticipated, will produce a large increase in the number of desirable settlers.

It is gratifying to note that the position of the Government railways has steadily improved, as the co-ordination of the national lines and facilities has become increasingly effective.

The important agricultural enactments of the session should prove of substantial service in the development of the fruit, livestock, grain and dairying industries of the country.

The revisions and amendments of the Acts respecting Patents of Invention, Trade Marks and Designs, Copyright, and Naturalization render these measures more effective and give to their provisions a wider international significance.

The approval given the treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, and the legislation incidental thereto, make possible the conservation of this great natural resource to the mutual benefit of our country and of our neighbour to the south.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The many evidences of a returning prosperity which, with the passing of the months, have become increasingly apparent, are now supplemented by the promise of a bountiful harvest. For these and other blessings I join with you in humble thanksgiving to Divine Providence.

INDEX TO SENATE DEBATES

SECOND SESSION, FOURTEENTH PARLIAMENT, 1923

ABBREVIATIONS:—1r, 2r, 3r=first, second, or third reading. Com=Committee. M=Motion. Ref=Referred. Rep=Report.

Address in reply to the Governor General's Speech Motion for, 3
Adoption of, 57

Admiralty Bill. 1r, 330. M for 2r, 428; 2r, 455. Com, 485. Withdrawn, 1322

Agriculture
Animal Contagious Diseases. See that title
Cattle embargo, British, 13, 36, 55
Cold storage. See that title
Feeding stuffs. See that title
Fruit. See that title
Live stock. See that title
Seeds. See that title

Alberta coal deposit. See Fuel

Animal Contagious Diseases Bill. 1r, 323. 2r, 351. Com. 3r, 409

Appropriation Bills
No. 1. 1r, 260. 2r, 263. 3r, 264
No. 2. 1-2-3r, 783
No. 3. 1-2r, 1308. 3r, 1318

Baker Memorial Committee, 63

Bank Bill. 1r, 985. 2r, 986. Com, 1005, 1028, 1049. 3r, 1085. See 16, 22

Bankruptcy Bill. 1r, 782. 2r, 803. Proposed amendments, 872. Com, 896, 950. 3r, 951. See 103, 797

Barnard, Hon. George H., K.C.
Bonded warehouses, 260, 287
Canada Temperance Bill, 618, 726-736, 745, 934, 971, 1170
Companies Bill, 1227
Hoppe coal leases, 133
Interprovincial trade, 391
Judges Bill, 830, 890

Beaubien, Hon. C. P.
Bank Bill, 1079
Bankruptcy Bill, 903
Canada Temperance Bill, 958-962
Combines Investigation Bill, 648
Copyright Bill, 559, 578, 587, 589
France in the Ruhr, 244
French Convention Bill, 709

Beaubien, Hon. C. P.—Con.
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 538, 764, 770, 910-913
Italian Convention Bill, 635
Judges Bill, 830, 891
Most Favoured Nation Clause, 315
Patent Bill, 517
Vimy Ridge Memorial, 67, 75, 96

Beique, Hon. F. L.
Bank Bill, 1044, 1045, 1051, 1056, 1065, 1071, 1074
Bankruptcy Bill, 803-828, 896-904, 950
Bills, form of, 363
Canada Temperance Bill, 741, 742, 858, 955-971
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1245, 1247
Cold Storage Bill, 525
Combines Investigation Bill, 651, 683
Committee of Whole, sub-committee of, 236
Companies Bill, 1226
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 85
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 169, 239, 465
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 1114, 1118
Explosives Bill, 331
Finance Bill, 1223
Forget, the late Hon. A. E., 798
France in the Ruhr, 331
Fruit Bill, 419, 448, 469
Income War Tax Bill, 1238
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 537-543, 757, 763, 768, 795, 1180, 1182
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1136
Judges Bill, 829, 895
League of Nations, 331
Live Stock Bill, 470
Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 661, 666
Northwest Territories Bill (criminal trials), 154, 157
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 407
Pension Bill, 1258, 1265, 1276
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1220
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 984, 1258, 1265
Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Bill, 1258
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 552, 565
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 172
Vimy Ridge Memorial, 70

Belcourt, Hon. N. A., P.C.
Animal Contagious Diseases Bill, 352
Appropriation Bill, 1313
Bank Bill, 1017-1026, 1031, 1046, 1068, 1069, 1072, 1080
Bankruptcy Bill, 808-828
Bills
Form of, 348, 349, 361-363, 371, 874, 988
Notice of amendments to, 470
Biological Board Bill, 975, 1000
Board of Audit Bill, 1193
Canada Temperance Bill, 962
Canadian National Railways Bills
Borrowing powers, 1319-1321
Construction, 1246
Combines Investigation Bill, 775
Companies Bill, 1227
Copyright Bill, 488-496, 558, 563, 573, 587
Dominion Lands Bill, 1185
Finance Bill, 1224
Fish, marketing of, 975
Immigration Bill, 557, 613-616
Income War Tax Bill, 1238
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 1180
Judges Bill, 923
Lake of the Woods Bill, 1156
Legislation—report of Joint Committee, 874
Patent Bill, 367
Pension Bill, 1277
Railways
C.N.R. Express Bill, 477
Government operation, 384

Bennett, Hon. W. H.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 22
Transportation, 23
Lake shipping rates, 28
Our canals, 30
Admiralty Bill, 457
Canada Temperance Bill, 748
Canadian Government Mercantile Marine, 28, 378, 605, 686, 828, 841
Canadian National Railways
Coal for, 279
General officers, 994
Midland Grain elevators, 201
Toronto office building, 377
Dismissal of Government officials, 546
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 982
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1130, 1160. See also 28, 378, 605, 686, 828, 832
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 449, 451, 453
Shaughnessy building, Montreal, 377

Bills. See Parliament

Biological Board Bill. 1r, 887. 2r, 973, 998, 1103, 1195. 3r, 1197

Black, Hon. Frank B.
Bank Bill, 1051, 1054
C.N.R. diners, advertising in, 467
Copper Bounties Bill, 1184
Criminal Code Bill—stock subscriptions, 206
Maritime Provinces, railway rates for, 444
Post Office Bill, 1306
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1219, 1220
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 918, 1262
Special War Revenue Bill, 1216

Blain, Hon. Richard
C.N.R.—Toronto office building, 358
Shaughnessy Building, Montreal, 343

Blondin, Hon. P. E., P.C.
Bankruptcy Act, 797
Post Office Bill, 1303

Board of Audit Bill. 1r, 1144. 2r, 1189. Com-3r, 1195

Bolduc, Hon. Joseph, P.C.
Scott Junction Postmaster, dismissal of, 467

Bostock, Hon. Hewitt, P.C. (Speaker)
Bills, form of, 348
Chinese Immigration Bill, 1123
Committee of the Whole, sub-committee of, 235
Debates, quoted statements in, 1315

Bourque, Hon. T. J.
Kent Northern Railway, 102, 179, 275

Boyer, Hon. Gustave
Explosives Bill, 81, 331, 433

Bradbury, Hon. George H.
Appropriation Bill, 1312
Bank Bill, 1060, 1069, 1081, 1096
Biological Board Bill, 976, 1001, 1103, 1197
Civil Service, 32, 90, 140, 159, 276, 483, 1312
Cold Storage Bill, 595
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 162, 210, 237
Fisheries Bill (license fee), 1323
Fruit Bill, 365, 417, 420-422
Immigration Bill, 557, 612, 615
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1047, 1049, 1130, 1136
Isenberg Coal Mining Leases, 459
Live Stock Bill, 461
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 918
Victory Tower—suggested carillon, 543
Vimy Ridge Memorial, 95

British Columbia
Attorney General
Letter, 715
Telegram, 783
Bonded warehouse licenses in, 260
Temperance laws. See Canada Temperance Bill

Business Profits War Tax Bill. 1r, 1209. 2-3r, 1231

Calder, Hon. J. A., P.C.
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1281, 1285, 1288
Pension Bill, 1272, 1275
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 915, 917, 1263

Canada Shipping Bills
Coasting laws. 1r, 1049. 2r-Com, 1140. 3r, 1163
General. 1r, 1027. 2r, 1140. Com. 1141. 3r, 1142
Pilotage. 1r, 685. 2r, 771. Com. 782. 3r, 783

Canada Temperance Bills
General. 1r, 415. M for 2r, 617, 714; amendment to postpone, 739. Telegram from Attorney General of B.C., 783. Bill restored to Order Paper, 797. 2r, 848. Com, 924, 954, 997, 1164. Senate amendments insisted on, 1321
Licenses, abolition of. 1r, 2. M for 2r, 141. Bill rejected, 149

Canadian National Railways Bills
Borrowing powers. 1r, 1308. 2r, 1318. 3r, 1321
Construction. 1r, 1196. M for 2r, 1239; rejected, 1301
Express. 1r, 415. 2r, 473. Com, 497. 3r, 500
Insurance. 1r, 322. 2r, 353. Com, 409. 3r, 410

Canals, 30, 37, 38

Casgrain, Hon. J. P. B.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 32
Vimy Ridge Memorial, 32
Rush-Bagot treaty, 34
National Railways, 34
Immigration, 36
British cattle embargo, 36
St. Lawrence ship canal, 37
Lake shipping rates, 37
Welland Canal, 38
Shipbuilding, 39
Canada Shipping Bill (coasting laws), 1140
Canada Temperance Bill, 141, 726, 740
Canadian National Railways
Capital account, 360
General officers, 993
Receipts and expenditures, 714
United States, lines in, 372
Combines Investigation Bill, 647, 705
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 204
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 78

Casgrain, Hon. J. P. B.—Con.
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 168
Fuel
Bienfait experiment, 140, 221, 258
Peat, 258, 261
Germany, conditions in, 325
Hudson Bay route, 627
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 913
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1132, 1139, 1160
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 341
Insurance, Government railway and marine, 262, 359
Judges Bill, 924
League of Nations, 323
Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 662, 666
Members of Parliament as directors of companies, 300
Montreal Harbour Bill, 1235
Patent Bill, 515
Petitions of right, 168, 257
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1219
Special War Revenue Bill, 1210, 1213
Vimy Ridge Memorial, 72

Cattle. See Agriculture

Centre Washabuck Wharf, 202

Chapais, Hon. Thomas
Copyright Bill, 494, 562, 582
Franco-German situation, 279
League of Nations, 279

Chinese Immigration Bill. 1r, 433. 2r, 484. Ref to Special Com, 484; rep, 1120. Com, 1121. 3r, 1125

Civil Service
Cost of, 32, 90, 140, 159, 276, 483, 551, 1312, 1316
Dismissals, 546
Holidays, 158, 1312
Taxation, 256, 319, 322

Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Bill. 1r, 685. 2r, Com, 3r, 772

Coasting laws. See Canada Shipping

Cold Storage Bill. 1r, 330. M for 2r, 360; 2r, 433. Com, 522, 594. Withdrawn, 1322. See 752

Combines Investigation Bill. 1r, 543. M for 2r, 621; 2r, 639. Com, 675, 687, 773. 3r, 782

Companies Bill. 1r, 1046. 2r, 1126. Com, 1127, 1226. 3r, 1228

Copper Bounties Bill. 1r, 1144. 2r, 1184, 1225. 3r, 1226

Copyright Bill. 1r, 415. 2r, 471, 488. Com, 558, 567. 3r, 590

Criminal Code Bills
Appeals. 1r, 2. 2r, 64. Ref to Special Com, 65. 3r, 263. See 1229
General. 1r, 358. M for 2r, 463; 2r, 543. Ref to Special Com, 543; rep, 1228. 3r, 1231
Marriage and Divorce. 1-2r, 264. Com-3r, 277
Stock subscriptions. 1r, 179. 2r, 202. Ref to Com on Banking and Commerce, 209

Crowe, Hon. Sanford J.
Bank Bill, 1057
Chinese Immigration Bill, 1122
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 173, 177

Curry, Hon. N.
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 758, 906, 908, 913

Customs Tariff Bill. 1r, 1158. 2r, 1205. 3r, 1209. See 43

Dairy Industry Bill. 1r, 1209. 2r, 1249. 3r, 1252

Dandurand, Hon. R., P.C.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 17
Trade conditions, 17
Immigration, 18
Rush-Bagot treaty, 20
C.N.R. management, 21
Bank Act revision, 22
Admiralty Bill, 428-432, 455-458, 485-488, 1322
Alberta coal deposit, 102, 125. See Fuel
Animal Contagious Diseases Bill, 351
Appropriation Bills, 263, 783, 1308, 1316
Bank Bill, 985-988, 1006-1026, 1028-1046, 1049-1084, 1091. See 22
Bankruptcy Bill, 811-827
Bills, form of, 349, 361, 371
Biological Board Bill, 973-976, 1103, 1195, 1198
Board of Audit Bill, 1189-1195
Bonded warehouses, 260, 287
Business Profits War Tax Bill, 1231
Canada Shipping Bills, 1140, 1141
Canada Temperance Bill, 146, 617-620, 714-730, 740-750, 797, 868-872, 937-950, 954-971, 997, 1164-1174, 1321-1322
Canadian Government Mercantile Marine, 501, 667, 685, 687, 797, 828, 952, 1084, 1255
Canadian National Railways Bills
Borrowing powers, 1318-1321
Construction, 1239-1246, 1280-1301
Insurance, 353, 409
See Railways
Canteen fund, C.E.F., 887
Centre Washabuck wharf, 202

Dandurand, Hon. R., P.C.—Con.
Chinese Immigration Bill, 484, 1123
Civil Service
Cost and number of, 90, 140, 159, 551
Dismissals, 548
Holidays, 158
Reform of, 1316
Taxation of, 257, 322
Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Bill, 772
Cold Storage Bill, 360, 524-528, 594, 751
Combines Investigation Bill, 621, 657, 675-684, 687-705, 773-782
Committee of Whole, sub-committee of, 235
Companies Bill, 1126
Copper Bounties Bill, 1184, 1225
Copyright Bill, 471, 493, 563, 567, 585, 588
Criminal Code Bills
General, 464
Stock subscriptions, 208
Customs Tariff Bill, 1205. See 4
Dairy Industry Bill, 1252
Divorce, publication of proceedings in, 256, 264
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 80
Dominion Lands Bills
Coal, 161, 210, 235-239, 466
Homesteads, etc., 1184-1189
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 979-982, 1105-1120
Duncan, Walter, employment of, 330, 342, 483, 502
Edmonton penitentiary, 1084
Explosives Bill, 313
Export trade of prairie provinces, 179
Finance Bill, 1221-1225
Fish from unregistered trawlers, 105
Fisheries Bill (license fee), 1100, 1142, 1322
Forest Reserves and Parks Bill, 347, 408
France in the Ruhr, 332
French Convention Bill, 629
Fruit Bill, 364, 416, 423, 448
Fuel
Alberta coal deposits, 102, 125, 135
Bienfait experiment, 140
Peat, 261
Government private cars and motor cars, 320
Halibut Fishery Treaty, 1247-1249
Halifax, differential rates against, 874, 952
Highways Bill, 472, 496
Hoppe coal lease, 125, 135. See Isenberg
Hudson Bay route, 627
Hurds Point Pier, 239
Immigration Bill, 555, 610-616, 803. See 18
Imperial Service Order, 278
Income War Tax Bill, 1236-1239
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 347-351, 529-543, 754-771, 795, 799, 905, 912-914, 954, 1176, 1179, 1181

Dandurand, Hon. R., P.C.—Con.
Inland Revenue Bill, 1101, 1201
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1046-1049, 1127-1130, 1138-1140, 1145, 1159, 1163
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 320, 342
Insurance Bill, 1175
Insurance, Government railway and marine, 262, 359
Interparliamentary Union, 1323
Interprovincial trade, 1255
Irrigation Bill, 369, 428
Isenberg leases, 1159. See Hoppe
Italian Convention Bill, 634-639
Judges Bill, 828-832, 888-896, 905, 922
Judges, extra payments to, 62, 953, 989, 1197
Kootenay Park excluded lands, 102
Lake of the Woods Bill, 1146
Lake Rates Commission, 605, 705, 845
League of Nations, 332
Legislation, joint committee on, 433
Little Bras d'Or Government telegraph operator, 887, 951, 1157
Live Stock Bill, 432, 459-461
Lockeport, N.S., wharf, 985
Manila Fibre Bounties Bill, 1183
Maritime Provinces, railway rates for, 436, 663-667
Marriage Bill (deceased husband's brother, etc.), 201
Militia Pension Bill, 976, 1002, 1005
Montreal Harbour Bill, 1231
Naturalization Bill, 971, 998
Northwest Territories Bill (criminal trials), 104, 151-157, 198
Nova Scotia Supreme Court, vacancy in, 89
Oleomargarine, 202
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 344-346, 395-408, 448-455
Ottawa, Government offices rented in, 259
Patent Bill, 365, 424-427, 503-522, 590-594, 609
Pension Bill, 920, 1276, 1278
Petitions of right, 127, 135, 161, 257, 322
Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Bill, 1174
Petroleum Bounties Bill, 1202-1204
Pilotage Bill, 771
Post Office Bill, 1250, 1302-1307
P.E.I. Court of Appeal, 546
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1219
Quebec Savings Banks Bill, 1218
Radiotelegraph Bill, 472
Railways
Canadian freight cars in United States, 62, 244
Canadian National
Atlantic region, 125
Canadian ports as terminals, 243
Capital account, 360

Dandurand, Hon. R., P.C.—Con.
Railways—Con.
Chicago terminal, 65
Detroit grade separation, 65
Diners, advertising in, 467
Express and telegraph services, 263
Express Bill, 473, 481
General officers, 953, 992-995
Hotels, 179
Insurance, 359
Management, 21
Midland grain elevators, 201
Paris property purchase, 797
Receipts and expenditures, 714
Toronto—new Union Station, 63
Toronto office building, 358, 377
Transcontinental connection, 65
United States, lines in, 372
See Canadian National Railways Bills
Kent Northern, 102, 179, 276
Mail carrying charges, 686
St. John-Montreal freight rates, 102
Ralston Royal Commission, 888
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 914-919, 983-985
Rush-Bagot Treaty, 20, 686
Scott Junction postmaster, dismissal of, 467
Seeds Bill, 461, 483
Senate
Appointments to, 3
Deceased Senators
Forget, the late Hon. A. E., 797
Godbout, the late Hon. Joseph, 263
Proudfoot, the late Hon. Wm., 58
Legislative work of, 58, 62
Senate and House of Commons Bill, 1252, 1254
Shaughnessy Building, Montreal, 343, 377
Soldier settlement, 262
Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Bill, 919
Special War Revenue Bill, 1206-1209, 1210-1218
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 312, 553, 566
Three Rivers Harbour Bill, 1096, 1099
Trade Mark and Design Bill, 462
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 149-151, 170, 176, 197
Victory Tower—suggested carillon, 546
Vimy Ridge memorial, 65, 73, 82, 90, 91, 93, 134
Wars, Canada's participation in, 158

Daniel, Hon. John W.
Bankruptcy Bill, 816, 824, 826, 899, 900
Biological Board Bill, 974
Combines Investigation Bill, 689
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 981, 1107
Fruit Bill, 447
Judges Bill, 831
Live Stock Bill, 460
Pension Bill, 1274
Senate, appointments to, 2

David, Hon. L. O.
Bankruptcy Bill, 811. See 103
Canada Temperance Bill, 864
Combines Investigation Bill, 688-692, 774
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 76, 86
Export trade of prairie provinces, 179
Imperial Conference, 1209
Supreme Court, appeals to, 299

Debt, public. See Finance

Divorce Bills
Andrews, Gertrude. 1r, 314. 2r, 330. 3r, 343
Beach Mahlon. 1r, 299. 2r, 323. 3r, 330
Bergeron, Roland. 1r, 667. 2-3r, 751
Biggs, Minnie E. 1r, 279. 2r, 299. 3r, 321
Black, Hilda M. W. 1r, 358. 2r, 433. 3r, 448
Black, Lillian. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 197
Bottomley, Thomas H. 1r, 279. 2r, 299. 3r, 321
Boyle, Fanny. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Brayman, Lillian B. 1r, 667. 2-3r, 751
Bristol, Clara W. 1r, 782. 2r, 796. 3r, 799
Britton, Edward L. 1r, 226. 2-3r, 257
Brooks, Abraham. 1r, 782. 2r, 796. 3r, 799
Brown, Thomas B. 1r, 714. 2-3r, 782
Brown, Wilfrid C. 1r, 314. 2r, 330. 3r, 343
Bryans, Katharine. 1r, 314. 2r, 330. 3r, 343
Buchan, Ethel J. 1r, 343. 2r. 395. 3r, 415
Burden, Henry J. 1r, 201. 2r, 255. 3r, 257
Burgess, Jane E. 1r, 261. 2r, 279. 3r, 298
Burke, Arnold C. 1r, 179. 2r, 209. 3r, 226
Burnside, Elva. 1r, 714. 2-3r, 782
Butler, Maud V. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 197
Campkin, Christopher. 1r, 226. 2-3r, 257
Candy, Alfred T. 1r, 714. 2-3r, 782
Chrimes, Emily M. 1r, 201. 2r, 255. 3r, 257
Clayton, David A. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Cohn, Florence. 1r, 667. 2-3r, 751
Conkey, Mary E. 1r, 874. 2-3r, 924
Craig, Ross J. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Darton, John. 1r, 279. 2r, 299. 3r, 321
Davidson, William H. 1r, 314. 2r, 330. 3r, 343
De Blaquire, Nellie M. 1r, 985. 2-3r, 1028
Dodds, Florence. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Dowd, William R. 1r, 279. 2r, 299. 3r, 321
Duncan, Ethel L. 1r, 87. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Dunnet, James. 1r, 551. 2r, 596. 3r, 610
Epstein, Jessie A. 1r, 888. 2-3r, 982
Eversfield, Thomas P. 1r, 261. 2r, 274. 3r, 279
Finn, Violet M. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124

Divorce Bills—Con.
Forbes, James. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Foster, Winifred R. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Frankland, Elizabeth. 1r, 179. 2r, 209. 3r, 226
French, Maybelle E. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Fulton, Hugh R. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Gardiner, Violet. 1r, 244. 2-3r, 261
Gee, Ella M. 1r, 782. 1r, 796. 3r, 799
Girard, Loretta M. 1r, 874. 2-3r, 924
Graham, Frederick W. 1r, 158. 2r, 209. 3r, 226.
Haden, William G. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Hall, John F. K. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Hamilton, Christina J. 1r, 395. 2r, 448. 3r, 470
Hare, Charles M. 1r, 358. 2r, 433. 3r, 448
Herdsman, Irene. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Hilton, Blanche. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Johnson, Lyle. 1r, 201. 2r, 255. 3r, 257
Johnston, Mabel G. 1r, 314. 2r, 330. 3r, 343
Kain, Smith. 1r, 395. 2r, 448. 3r, 470
Kay, Julia T. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Keller, Herbert H. 1r, 953. 2-3r, 1028
Kelly, Alfred W. 1r, 299. 2r, 323. 3r, 330
Kingsley, Harriet E. 1r, 105. 2r, 134. 3r, 141
Kruger, William A. 1r, 687. 2r, 772. 3r, 782
Le May, Birdena F. W. 1r, 874. 2-3r, 924
Levin, Esther. 1r, 358. 2r, 433. 3r, 448
Lindsay, Edgar. 1r, 358. 2r, 433. 3r, 448
Logan, Robert A. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
MacBrien, Laura. 1r, 551. 2r, 596. 3r, 610
MacCordick, Marian E. 1r, 179. 2r, 209. 3r, 226
MacDonald, Enid L. 1r, 782. 2r, 796. 3r, 799
MacDonnell, John S. 1r, 796. 2-3r, 874
MacIsaac, Mary T. 1r, 782. 2r, 796. 3r, 799
Martin, Herbert. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
McAllister, James. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
McCabe, Charles P. R. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
McCausland, Emily A. 1r, 469. 2r, 503. 3r, 552
McDonald, Florence E. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 197
McKinley, Elizabeth. 1r, 469. 2r, 503. 3r, 552
McMaster, Olivette. 1r, 298. 2r, 321. 3r, 323
Melville, Gretta. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 197
Meng, May E. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 197

Divorce Bills—Con.
Moran, Algernon C. A. 1r, 469. 2r, 503. 3r, 552
Moran, Margaret E. 1r, 87. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Mould, Albert E. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Murray, James. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Mushett, Gladys M. 1r, 395. 2r, 448. 3r, 470
Near, Jane E. 1r, 782. 2r, 796. 3r, 799
Northgraves, Eliza H. 1r, 298. 2r, 321. 3r, 323
Odell, Catherine G. C. 1r, 158. 2r, 209, 197
Olmstead, Ethel. 1r, 226. 2-3r, 257
Pickell, Wilmot A. 1r, 299. 2r, 323. 3r, 330
Pope, Margaret M. 1r, 874. 2-3r, 924
Porter, Ernest W. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 197
Rafferty, William F. 1r, 395. 2r, 448. 3r, 470
Ramsden, Florence M. 1r, 87. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Redmond, Chester A. 1r, 551. 2r, 596. 3r, 610
Saunders, Frederick J. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Scatcherd, Winifred. 1r, 483. 2r, 564. 3r, 590
Scott, Thomas W. 1r, 261. 2r, 279. 3r, 298
Small, Emily M. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Smiley, Grace L. 1r, 502. 2r, 590. 3r, 596
Smith, Alice M. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Stallworthy, Ruby M. 1r, 226. 1-3r, 257
Suffel, Andrew G. 1r, 226. 2-3r, 257
Taylor, Cecilia M. 1r, 687. 2r, 772. 3r, 782
Teague, Gladys. 1r, 469. 2r, 503. 3r, 552
Trow, George A. 1r, 343. 2r, 395. 3r, 415
Tull, Abigail A. B. M. 1r, 372. 2r, 433. 3r, 448
Vogelman, Annie M. 1r, 299. 2r, 323. 3r, 330
Walker, Emma J. 1r, 782. 2r, 796. 3r, 799
Wallace, Joseph R. 1r, 226. 2-3r, 257
Webb, George R. 1r, 314. 2r, 330. 3r, 343
Wemp, Louisa. 1r, 343. 2r, 395. 3r, 415
Wilson, Annie B. 1r, 201. 2r, 255. 3r, 257
Wilson, Marietta I. 1r, 158. 2r, 209. 3r, 226
Wood, Gertrude I. 1r, 274. 2r, 298. 3r, 299
Woodbridge, May. 1r, 88. 2r, 104. 3r, 124
Young, Frederick F. 1r, 261. 2r, 274. 3r, 279

Divorce, publication of proceedings in, 105, 255, 264, 277

Doctor's Brook post office, 888

Dominion Elections Bill (female electors). 1r, 46. M for 2r, 76; negatived, 85

Dominion Lands Bills
Coal. 1r, 134. M for 2r, 161; 2r, 210. Com, 235. Ref to Special Com, 239; rep, 465. Com, 466. 3r, 467
Homesteads, etc. 1r, 1144. 2r-Com, 1184. 3r, 1189

Donnelly, Hon. James J.
Bank Bill, 1024, 1025, 1043, 1070, 1090
Finance Bill, 1224
Special War Revenue Bill, 1211, 1216

Dry Dock Subsidies Bill. 1r, 887. 2r, 979. Com, 1105. 3r, 1145

Duncan, Walter, employment of, 330, 341, 483, 502

Edmonton penitentiary, 1084

Europe. See France in the Ruhr, League of Nations

Explosives Bill. 1r, 81. 2r, 313. Ref to Special Com, 331; rep, 982. See 433

Export Bill (pulpwood). 1r, 1158. 2r, 1218. 3r, 1221

Feeding Stuffs Bill. 1-2-3r, 1250

Finance
Debt of Canada, 62
Expenditure, public, 16, 47
See Appropriation Bills, Bank Bill

Finance Bill. 1r, 1158. 2r, 1221. Com, 1223. 3r, 1225

Fish and Fisheries
Marketing, 975
Unregistered trawlers, 105

Fisheries Bill (license fee). 1r, 1027. 2r, 1100, 1142. Withdrawn, 1322. See Biological Board Bill, Halibut Fishery Bill

Forest Reserves and Parks Bill. 1r, 322. 2r, 347. Com, 408. 3r, 409

Forget, the late Hon. A. E., 797

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George E., P.C., G.C.M.G.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 46
Canadian financial conditions, 47
The national spirit, 48
Our economic situation, 48
National Railway management, 50
Population of Canada, 51
Legislative work of the Senate, 53
Bank Bill, 1025, 1050, 1054, 1070, 1071, 1078

Foster, Right Hon. Sir George E., P.C., G.C.M.G.—Con.
Bills
Amendments to, 470
Form of, 348
Board of Audit Bill, 1190-1195
Canada Temperance Bill, 143, 617-620, 718, 746, 864, 868, 948-950, 955-970, 1172, 1174
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1252
Combines Investigation Bill, 691, 698-708
Companies Bill, 1226
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 78
Dominion Lands Bill, 1186, 1188
France in the Ruhr. See League of Nations
French Convention Bill, 634, 667
Fruit Bill, 419-422
Immigration Bill, 611
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 347, 348, 910
Inland Revenue Bill, 1102, 1201
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 321
Interparliamentary Union, 1323
Italian Convention Bill, 636-639
League of Nations, 179
Post Office Bill, 1306
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 918
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 177
Vimy Ridge memorial, 68, 82

Foster, Hon. George G.
Explosives Bill, 982

Fowler, Hon. George W.
Admiralty Bill, 429
Animal Contagious Diseases Bill, 351
Bank Bill, 985, 1006-1026, 1028-1035, 1067-1079, 1088, 1094
Bankruptcy Bill, 813, 827
Canada Temperance Bill, 618-620, 718, 728, 741, 871
Canadian National Railways
Borrowing powers Bill, 1319
Express Bill, 481, 500
General officers, 993-996
Insurance Bill, 353, 410
Chinese Immigration Bill, 1124
Combines Investigation Bill, 653, 675-682, 687-704, 773-782
Copyright Bill, 562
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 78
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 980, 1118
Finance Bill, 1224
Governmental private cars and motor cars, 63, 277, 320
Hemp Bounties Bill, 1205
Hudson Bay route, 627
Immigration Bill, 556, 611, 613
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 350, 530-542, 799, 909, 1183

Fowler, Hon. George W.—Con.
Inland Revenue Bill, 1202
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 320
Judges Bill, 830, 922
Oil shales, Fuel and Iron Deposits—Special Committee, 319
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 400-405, 450-453
Patent Bill, 426, 514-522
Pension Bill, 1271
Petroleum Bounties Bill, 1202-1204
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1219
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 983
St. John-Montreal freight rates, 102
Senate and House of Commons Bill, 1252-1254
Senate reform, 59
Special War Revenue Bill, 1208, 1210-1218
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 309
Vimy Ridge memorial, 74
Wrangel Island, 549

France in the Ruhr, 192, 226, 244, 279, 323, 331. See League of Nations

French Convention Bill. 1r, 372. M for 2r, 629, 667, 709; 2r, 714. Com and 3r, 714. See 12

Fruit Bill. 1r, 330. 2r, 364. Com, 416. M for 3r, 447. 3r, 469

Fuel
Alberta coal, 96, 125, 135
Bienfait experiment, 140, 221, 258
Peat, 258, 261
Special com, 106
See Dominion Lands Bill

Germany, imports from, 158

Gillis, Hon. Archibald B.
Bank Bill, 1014, 1063, 1082, 1087
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1290
Cold Storage Bill, 527
Combines Investigation Bill, 652
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1137
Lake Rates Commission, 844
Post Office Bill, 1303
Soldier Settlement, 262

Girroir, Hon. Edward L.
Biological Board Bill, 1199
Canadian National express and telegraph services, 262
Doctor's Brook post office, 888
Maritime Provinces, railway rates for, 441
Pension Bill, 1271, 1278

Godbout, the late Hon. Joseph, 263

Gordon, Hon. George
Bank Bill, 1043
Board of Audit Bill, 1192

Gordon, Hon. George—Con.
Canada Temperance Bill, 742
Canadian National Railways, 390
C.N.R. Express Bill, 479
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1242, 1290
Companies Bill, 1228
Fruit Bill, 418, 419
Hemp Bounties Bill, 1205
Judges, extra payments to, 62, 953, 988, 1196
Pension Bill, 1274
Petroleum Bounties Bill, 1204
Post Office Bill, 1307, 1308
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1218
Special War Revenue Bill, 1206-1208, 1210, 1215

Governmental private cars and motor cars, 63, 277, 320

Governor General
Reply to Address, 278
Speeches from Throne
Opening Session, 1
Closing Session, 1324
Vimy Ridge Memorial—acknowledgement of resolution, 796

Grain, transportation of. See Combines Investigation Bill, Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, Lake Rates Commission.

Green, Hon. Robert F.
Canada Temperance Bill, 737, 1321
Chinese Immigration Bill, 1122
Kootenay Park excluded lands, 102
Yukon Bill, 1125

Griesbach, Hon. W. A., C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O.
C.E.F. canteen fund, 887
Copyright Bill, 558
Duncan, Walter, employment of, 330, 341, 483
Edmonton penitentiary, 1084
France in the Ruhr, 226
Imperial Service Order, 278
Militia Pension Bill, 355-358, 979, 1002
Pension Bill, 1260, 1265-1280, 1302
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 917, 918, 1260, 1264
Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Bill, 1260

Halibut Fishery Bill. 1r, 1209. Approval of Treaty, 1247. 2r-Com-3r, 1249

Halifax, differential rates against, 874, 952

Hardy, Hon. Arthur C.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 3
The sessional programme, 3
Conditions in Europe, 4
The customs tariff and trade, 4
Transportation, 6
Vimy Ridge memorial, 7

Hardy, Hon. Arthur C.—Con.
Marriage Bill (deceased husband's brother, etc.), 199

Harmer, Hon. Wm. J.
Ottawa, Government offices rented in, 258

Hemp Bounties Bill. 1r, 1158. 2r, 1204. 3r, 1205

Highways Bill. 1r, 415. 2r, 472. Com-3r, 496

Hoppe lease, 100, 125, 135. See Alberta coal, Fuel, Northwest Territories Bill

Hudson Bay route, 623

Hurds Point Pier, 239

Immigration Bill. 1r, 483. 2r, 555. Com, 610, 803. 3r, 803. See 10, 14, 18, 36, 44, 51

Imperial Oil Company, in Sydney, N.S., 276, 287, 300, 411, 552, 564

Imperial Service Order, 278

Income War Tax Bill. 1r, 1209. 2r, 1236. Com, 1237. 3r, 1239

Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill. 1r, 322. 2r, 347. Com, 370, 528, 751. 3r, 795, 799. Re-Com, 905. 3r, 954. Senate amendments insisted on, 1176

Inland Revenue Bills
General. 1r, 1027. 2r-Com, 1101. 3r, 1103
Taxation. 1r, 1158. 2r-3r, 1201

Inland Water Freight Rates Bill. 1r, 1046. Com, 1127. 3r, 1145, 1159. See Lake Rates Commission

Inquiries. See Parliamentary procedure

Insurance Bill. 1r, 1144. 2r-Com, 1175. 3r, 1176

Insurance, Canadian Government railway and marine, 262

Interparliamentary Union, 1323

Irrigation Bill. 1r, 330. 2r, 369. Com-3r, 428

Isenberg coal mining leases, 1159. See Hoppe

Italian Convention Bill. 1r, 501. 2r, 634. Com, 635. 3r, 639

Judges Bill. 1r, 783. 2r, 828. Com, 888. 3r, 905, 922

Judges, extra payments to, 62, 953, 988, 1196

Kemp, Hon. Sir Edward, P.C., K.C.M.G.
Appropriation Bill, 1308

Kemp, Hon. Sir Edward, P.C., K.C.M.G.—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Construction Bill, 1296
Chicago terminal, 65
Detroit grade separation, 65
Freight cars in United States, 62
Halibut Fishery Treaty, 1249
Special War Revenue Bill, 1211, 1214
Toronto—new Union Station, 63

Kootenay Park excluded lands, 102

Labour
League of Nations, 271
See Combines Investigation Bill, Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill

Laird, Hon. Henry W.
Bank Bill, 1043, 1081, 1093
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1300
Cold Storage Bill, 522, 527
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1137
Pension Bill, 1270

Lake of the Woods Bill. 1r, 1026. M for 2r, 1146. Rejected, 1157. See 13

Lake Rates Commission, 605, 705, 845. See 28, 37, 42. See Inland Water Freight Rates Bill

League of Nations, 179, 226, 244, 264, 279, 323, 331

L'Espérance, Hon. D. O.
Canada Temperance Bill, 749
C.N.R. diners, Canadian fruits on, 469
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 207

Live Stock Bill. 1r, 358. 2r, 432. Com, 459. 3r, 470

Little Bras d'Or Government telegraph operator, 887, 951, 1157

Lockeport, N.S., wharf, 985

Lougheed, Hon. Sir James, P.C.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
The Prime Minister's New Year greeting, 11
French treaty, 12
Rush-Bagot treaty, 12
Lake of the Woods waters, 13
Removal of British cattle embargo, 13
C.N.R. Management, 14
Immigration, 14
Revision of Bank Act, 16
Public expenditure, 16
Admiralty Bill, 428-432, 456, 485-488, 1322
Appropriation Bill, 783

Lougheed, Hon. Sir James, P.C.—Con.
Bank Bill, 1031, 1039-1046, 1049-1080
Bankruptcy Bill, 809-828, 896-904
Bills, form of, 361, 460
Biological Board Bill, 973
Board of Audit Bill, 1193
Canada Temperance Bill, 619, 717-728, 739-750, 936, 942, 957-971, 997, 1165, 1173, 1322
Canadian National Railways Bills
Borrowing powers, 1319-1321
Construction, 1242-1247, 1286-1289
Insurance, 353
C.N.R. diners, advertising in, 469
Combines Investigation Bill, 639, 676-684, 693-706, 773-777
Committee of Whole, sub-committee of, 236
Companies Bill, 1126
Copyright Bill, 493, 567, 588
Criminal Code Bill, 463-465
Divorce proceedings, publications of, 105, 255
Dominion Lands Bills
Coal, 161, 236
Homesteads, etc., 1185-1187
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 1110-1120
Fisheries Bill (license fee), 1100, 1143, 1323
Forest Reserves and Parks Bill, 409
Forget, the late Hon. A. E., 798
Fruit Bill, 416, 448
Godbut, the late Hon. Joseph, 263
Immigration Bill, 556, 614
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 349-351, 800, 1176, 1179
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 341
Judges Bill, 829-832, 888-896, 905
Lake of the Woods Bill, 1151
Live Stock Bill, 460
Militia Pension Bill, 355-358
Northwest Territories Bill (criminal trials), 104, 152-157, 198
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 345, 346, 396, 449-454
Patent Bill, 367, 424-427, 503-522, 590-594, 610
Peat experiments, 258
Pension Bill, 1276, 1277
Petitions of right, 257
Petroleum Bounties Bill, 1158
Post Office Bill, 1250, 1302
Proudfoot, the late Hon. Wm., 58
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 917, 983
Seeds Bill, 462, 483
Special War Revenue Bill, 1207
Three Rivers Harbour Bill, 1096
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 150, 170, 174, 177
Vimy Ridge Memorial, 68, 73, 82, 90, 94

Lynch-Staunton, Hon. George
Bills, form of, 362
Canada Temperance Bill, 143, 725, 743, 748

Lynch-Staunton, Hon. George—Con.
Canadian National Railways
Construction Bill, 1289
Toronto office building, 372
Transcontinental connection, 65
Combines Investigation Bill, 655
Copyright Bill, 586
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 202
Germany, imports from, 158
Imports—valuation for duty, 121
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 536-543, 763-768
Northwest Territories Bill (criminal trials), 153-157
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 396-408, 454
Pension Bill, 1273
Vimy Ridge memorial, 70, 83

Macdonell, Hon. Archibald H., C.M.G.
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 919
Rush-Bagot Treaty, 686

Manila Fibre Bounties Bill. 1r, 1144. 2r, 1183. 3r, 1184

Marine
Government mercantile marine, 28, 378, 394, 501, 667, 685, 686, 828, 952, 1084, 1255
Insurance on, 262, 359, 796
Lake Rates Commission, 783, 832. See Inland Water Freight Rates Bill; also 28, 37, 42
Pilotage. See Canada Shipping Bill
Shipbuilding, 39
St. Lawrence ship canal, 37

Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 434, 596, 659

Marriage Bill (deceased husband's brother, etc.). 1r, 90. 2r, 199. Com-3r, 201

McCoig, Hon. Archibald B.
Seeds Bill, 482

McCormick, Hon. John
Centre Washabuck wharf, 202
Combines Investigation Bill, 692
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 914
Intercolonial Railway—earnings of Eastern Division, 223
Interprovincial trade, 885
Little Bras d'Or Government telegraph operator, 887, 951
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 308, 311

McDonald, Hon. John A.
C.N.R. hotel system, 179, 224
Copyright Bill, 584
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 205, 208
Express, railway, and telegraph expenditures, 314, 330

McDonald, Hon. John A.—Con.
Interprovincial trade, 883
Maritime Provinces, railway rates for, 434, 663-667

McLennan, Hon. John S.
Appropriation Bill, 1310
Bank Bill, 1044
C.N.R. Express Bill, 481
Fuel Supply of Canada—special com, 106
Imperial Oil Company. See Sydney
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1047
Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 659
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 64, 276, 287, 553, 564, 567

McMeans, Hon. Lendrum
Admiralty Bill, 487
Bank Bill, 1066, 1067
Bankruptcy Bill, 815-825
Bienfait coal briquetting, 258
Canada Temperance Bill, 148, 937, 964, 1164, 1167
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1247, 1283, 1288
Criminal Appeals Bill, 2, 64
Criminal Code Bill, 463
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 169
Hoppe coal leases, 131
Lake of the Woods Bill, 1155
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 344, 398-400, 408, 449, 451
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 177

Michener, Hon. Edward
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 208
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 217

Military
C.E.F. canteen fund, 887
Ralston Royal Commission, 887
Soldier settlement, 262
See Militia Pension Bills, Pension Bill, Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Bill

Militia Pension Bills
1r, 322. 2r, 354. Com, 411. 3r, 416
1r, 887. 2r, 976. Com, 1002. 3r, 1005

Mitchell, Hon. William
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 756, 764, 908

Montreal Harbour Bill. 1r, 1209. 2r, 1231. Com-3r, 1236

Most Favoured Nation Clause, 315, 675

Murphy, Hon. Patrick C.
Admiralty Bill, 430
Bank Bill, 1040, 1042, 1045, 1061, 1080, 1083
Biological Board Bill, 973, 975, 1000, 1104
C.N.R. Express Bill, 480, 500

Murphy, Hon. Patrick C.—Con.
Cold Storage Bill, 526-528, 1322
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 982
Fruit Bill, 423
Hurds Point Pier, 239
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 536
Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 596
P.E.I. Court of Appeal, 546
Railway administration in P.E.I., 1158

Naturalization Bill. 1r, 886. 2r, 971. Com-3r, 998

Northwest Territories Bill (criminal trials). 1r, 81. 2r, 104. Com, 151, 198. 3r, 199

Nova Scotia
Disallowance of Provincial statutes, 32, 279
Supreme Court, vacancy in, 88
See Maritime Provinces

Oil Shales, Fuel and Iron Deposits—Special Com, 319

Oleomargarine, 201

Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill. 1r, 322. 2r, 344. Com, 395, 448. 3r, 470

Ottawa—Government offices rented, 258

Pardee, Hon. Frederick F.
Admiralty Bill, 431, 458
Canada Temperance Bill, 742
Combines Investigation Bill, 679
Criminal Code Bill, 204, 463, 543, 1228
Imperial Oil Company. See Sydney
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 916
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 312

Parliament
Legislation, joint committee on, 433, 874
Members as directors of companies, 300
Royal Assent, 277, 800, 1324
Session
Opening, 1
Prorogation, 1324
Speeches from Throne, 1, 1324
Victory Tower—suggested carillon, 543

Parliamentary procedure
Bills
Form of, 348, 361, 371, 460, 874, 988
Notice of amendments to, 470
Committee of Whole, sub-committee of, 235, 239
Debates, quoted statements in, 1315
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 320, 341

Patent Bill. 1r, 330. 2r, 365. Com, 424, 503, 590. 3r, 609

Penny Bank Bill. 1r, 322. 2r, 351. Com, 371. 3r, 372

Pension Bill. 1r, 874. 2r, 920, 985. Ref to Special Com, 985; rep, 1257. Com, 1265. 3r, 1301. See Militia Pension Bill

Petition of Right Bill. 1-2-3r, 467. See 101, 127, 135, 161, 257, 322, 751

Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Bill. 1r, 1049. 2r-Com-3r, 1174

Petroleum Bounties Bill. 1r, 1158. 2r, 1202. 3r, 1204

Pilotage. See Canada Shipping

Planta, Hon. Albert E.
Canada Temperance Bill, 859, 860

Pope, Hon. Rufus H.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 54
Population question, 54
The Government and trade policy, 55
Removal of British cattle embargo, 55
C.N.R. Board of Management, 57
Alberta coal, 96, 211
Baker Memorial Committee, 63
Bank Bill, 1013, 1014, 1016, 1030-1033, 1085
Canada Temperance Bill, 870
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1291
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 211
Hudson Bay district, 623
Pension Bill, 1271

Post Office
Railway mail-carrying charges, 686

Post Office Bill. 1r, 1250. M for 2r, 1250, 1302; negatived, 1308

Prince Edward Island
Court of Appeal, 546
Freight rates for, 596
Railways, administration of, 1158

Private Bills
Alert Guarantee Company of Canada. 1r, 202. 2r, 255. 3r, 261
Brazilian Telephone Company. 1r, 125. 2r, 160. 3r, 299
Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Company. 1r, 279. 2r, 300. 3r, 344
Calgary and Fernie Railway Company. 1r, 685. 2r, 771
Campbell, Robert A., Patent. 1r, 261. 2r, 298. 3r, 323
Canadian Niagara Bridge Company. 1r, 261. 2r, 2300. 3r, 344
Canadian Order of Woodmen of the World. 1r, 685. 2r, 771
Canadian Press, Limited. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 323
Channell, Charles A., Patents. 1r, 157. 2r, 209. 3r, 279
Community, General Hospital, Almshouse, and Seminary of Learning of the Sisters of Charity, Ottawa. 1r, 261. 2r, 300. 3r, 360

Private Bills—Con.
Dominion Fire Insurance Company. 1r, 157. 2r, 209
Essex Terminal Railway Company. 1r, 202. 2r, 255. 3r, 300
Frontier College. 1r, 274. 2r, 298
Holbeck, Austin A., Patent. 1r, 782. Withdrawn, 796
Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. 1r, 261. 2r, 286. 3r, 323
La Banque des Cultivateurs. 1r, 157. 2r, 209. 3r, 277
Landreth, C. T., Patent. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 323
La Société des Artisans Canadiens Français. 1r, 157. 2r, 235. 3r, 279
Manitoba and North Western Railway Company. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 300
Manvers, Albert, Patent. 1r, 157. 2r, 209. 3r, 279
Montreal, Duluth and Transcontinental Junction Railway Company. 1r, 257. 2r, 261. 3r, 299
Montreal Finance Trust. 1r, 160. 2r, 209. 3r, 261
National Surety Company of Canada. 1r, 299. 2r, 358. 3r, 564
Nipissing Central Railway Company. 1r, 202. 2r, 255. 3r, 299
Northern Trust Company. 1r, 299. 2r, 358. 3r, 564
Olson, Hans M., and Esther Maud Butcher, Patent. 1r, 158. 2r, 235. 3r, 279
Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 299
Protestant Federation of Patriotic Women of Canada. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 323
Quebec Central Railway Company. 1r, 202. 2r, 255. 3r, 300
Richardson, James M., Patent. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 323
Ridge, Leonard Clayton, Patents. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 323
Royal Guardians. 1r, 202. 2r, 255. 3r, 279
Rutland and Noyan Railway Company. 1r, 261. 2r, 277. 3r, 344
Subsidiary High Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters in the Dominion of Canada. 1r, 358. 2r, 433. 3r, 590
Transcontinental Assurance Company. 1r, 330. 2r, 370. 3r, 395
Wells and Southcombe Patent. 1r, 261. 2r 277. 3r, 323
Wilfley, Arthur R., Patents. 1r, 157. 2r, 209. 3r, 279

Prohibition. See Canada Temperance Bill

Proudfoot, the late Hon. William, 58

Public Service Retirement Bill. 1r, 887. 2r-Com-3r, 973

Pulpwood. See Export Bill

Quebec Savings Banks Bill. 1r, 1158. 2-3r, 1218

Radiotelegraph Bill. 1r, 415. 2r, 472. Com-3r, 496

Railways
Canadian freight cars in United States, 62
Canadian National
Atlantic region, 125
Auditing. See Board of Audit Bill
Canadian ports as terminals, 239, 276
Capital account, 360
Chicago terminal, 65
Coal for, 279
Detroit grade separation, 65
Diners, advertising in, 223
Eastern division, earnings of, 223
Express and telegraph services, 262, 314, 330
General officers, 953, 989
Hotel system, 179, 224
Insurance, 262, 359
Management, 14, 21, 50, 57
Maritime Provinces, rates for, 434, 596, 659
Midland grain elevators, 201
Paris property purchase, 797
Receipts and expenditures, 714
Toronto office building, 358, 372
Transcontinental connection, 65
United States, lines in, 372
See Canadian National Railways Bills
Government operation, 34, 384
Kent Northern, 102, 179, 274
Private cars and motor cars, Governmental, 63, 277, 320
St. John-Montreal freight rates, 102
Toronto, new Union Station at, 63

Ralston Royal Commission, 887

Red Flag in Canada, 415

Reid, Hon. John D.
Admiralty Bill, 431
Appropriation Bill, 1314
Board of Audit Bill, 1190, 1193
Canada Temperance Bill, 724, 950
Canadian National Railways
Construction Bill, 1293
Express Bill, 473
Hotel system, 224
Toronto office building, 375, 384
Combines Investigation Bill, 677, 690, 695-704
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 1106-1120, 1145
Fuel supply of Canada, 110
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 912, 913
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1132, 1137
Interprovincial Trade, 875, 1257

Reid, Hon. John D.—Con.
Irrigation Bill, 370, 428
Judges Bill, 889-896, 905
Kent Northern Railway, 103
Northwest Territories Bill (criminal trials), 152, 153
Patent Bill, 366
Post Office Bill, 1251
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 411
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 171-175

Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill. 1r, 874. 2r, 914, 983. Ref to Special Com, 985; rep, 1257. Com, 1262. 3r, 1265

Robertson, Hon. Gideon D.
Board of Audit Bill, 1192
Canada Temperance Bill, 147, 947
Canadian National Railways
Construction Bill, 1247, 1284, 1299
Express Bill, 476, 497-500
Toronto office building, 383
United States, lines in, 214
Cold Storage Bill, 528
Combines Investigation Bill, 649, 683, 689, 690, 708, 781
Copyright Bill, 580
Dry Dock Subsidies Bill, 1119
Fruit Bill, 364, 421
Fuel supply of Canada, 117
Immigration Bill, 612, 616
Income War Tax Bill, 1238
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 529-543, 759-769, 795, 799, 801, 906-914, 1177-1180
Inquiries, unsatisfactory replies to, 321
Judges Bill, 922
Labour. See Combines Investigation Bill, Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, League of Nations
Lake Rates Commission, 847
League of Nations, 271
Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 661-666
Members of Parliament as directors of companies, 300
Militia Pension Bill, 978, 1002
Oleomargarine, 201
Pension Bill, 1275
Post Office Bill, 1303
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 309, 311
Three Rivers Harbour Bill, 1097
Vimy Ridge memorial, 71

Roche, Hon. Wm.
Bank Bill, 1009, 1021, 1022, 1026, 1034, 1035, 1051, 1078
Bankruptcy Bill, 810
Biological Board Bill, 974, 1000
Canada Temperance Bill, 968
C.N.R. Express Bill, 478
Combines Investigation Bill, 679
Copyright Bill, 582
Fuel Supply of Canada, 116

Roche, Hon. Wm.—Con.
Income War Tax Bill, 1238
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 767
Interprovincial trade, 883
League of Nations, 265
Pilotage Bill, 772

Ross, Hon. W. B.
Appropriation Bill, 1318
Biological Board Bill, 1000, 1104
Canada Temperance Bill, 1321
Chinese Immigration Bill, 484, 1124
Companies Bill, 1228
Dominion Lands Bill (coal), 237
Finance Bill, 1223
Immigration Bill, 611-615
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 751, 758, 771, 1178
Inland Revenue Bill, 1102
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1046-1049, 1128, 1145
Judges Bill, 892, 922
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 345, 346
Patent Bill, 519-522, 593, 610
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 306
Three Rivers Harbour Bill, 1100

Rush-Bagot Treaty, 12, 20, 34, 686

St. Lawrence Ship Canal, 37

Schaffner, Hon. Frederick L.
Bank Bill, 1057, 1060, 1063
Combines Investigation Bill, 641, 704, 706
Dominion Lands Bill, 1188
Immigration Bill, 612
Interprovincial trade, 882

Scott Junction postmaster, dismissal of, 467

Seeds Bill. 1r, 358. 2r, 461. Com, 482. 3r, 483

Senate
Adjournments, 58, 257
Appointments to, 2
Debates, quoted statements in, 1315
Deceased Senators
Forget, the late Hon. A. E., 797
Godbout, the late Hon. Joseph, 263
Proudfoot, the late Hon. William, 58
Legislative work of, 53, 58, 433, 874
New Senators, 1
Reform, 59

Senate and House of Commons Bill. 1r, 1027. 2r-Com, 1252. 3r, 1255

Sharpe, Hon. W. H.
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 205
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1047, 1132
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 1262, 1264

Shaughnessy building, Montreal, 343, 377

Shipbuilding, 39

Shipping. See Canada Shipping, Inland Water, Lake Rates

Smith, Hon. E. D.
C.N.R. Express Bill, 480
Cold Storage Bill, 524, 528
Fruit Bill, 418, 421

Soldiers. See Military

Soldiers Civil Re-establishment Bill. 1r, 874. 2r, 919, 985. Ref to Special Com, 985; rep, 1257. Com-3r, 1280

Special War Revenue Bill. 1r, 1158. 2r, 1206. Com, 1209. 3r, 1218

Stanfield, Hon. John
Fruit Bill, 416
Live Stock Bill, 459

Stock subscriptions. See Criminal Code Bill

Supreme Court, appeals to, 298

Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 64, 276, 287, 300, 411, 552, 564

Tanner, Hon. Charles E.
Canadian National Railways
Atlantic region, 125
Canadian ports as terminals, 239
General officers, 953, 989
United States, lines in, 239
Civil Service
Holidays, 158
Taxation, 256, 319
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 208
Debt of Canada, 62
Fish from unregistered trawlers, 105
Halifax, differential rates against, 874, 952
Imperial Oil Company, 300, 565
Lockeport wharf, 985
Nova Scotia
Disallowance of Provincial statutes, 32, 279
Supreme Court, vacancy in, 88
Post Office Bill, 1307
Ralston Royal Commission, 887
Sydney, N.S., sale of land at, 300, 565
War, Canada's participation in, 158

Tariff. See Customs

Taxation
Civil Servants, taxation of, 256, 319, 322
See Business Profits War Tax Bill, Customs and Excise Bill, Customs Tariff Bill, Income War Tax Bill, Inland Revenue Bill, Special War Revenue Bill

Taylor, Hon. James D.
Canada Temperance Bill, 728, 848, 871, 924, 939, 963, 1167
Canadian Government Mercantile Marine, 501, 685, 796, 952
Combines Investigation Bill, 679
Pension Bill, 1274
Returned Soldiers Insurance Bill, 916

Tessier, Hon. Jules
Admiralty Bill, 456
Dominion Elections Bill (female suffrage), 78

Three Rivers Harbour Bill. 1r, 1027. 2r, 1096. Com, 1099. 3r, 1100

Todd, Hon. Irving R.
Bank Bill, 1008, 1055, 1082
Pulpwood—Export Bill, 1220
Vimy Ridge memorial, 95

Toronto
New Union Station, 63
C.N.R. office building, 358, 372

Trade, 4, 17
Germany, imports from, 158
Interprovincial, 391, 875, 1255
Prairie Provinces, export trade of, 179
Valuation of imports for duty, 121
See Treaties

Trade Mark and Design Bill. 1r, 358. 2r, 462. Com-3r, 596

Transportation, 6, 9, 23. See Railways, Shipping

Treaties. See French Trade Convention, Italian Trade Convention, Rush-Bagot Treaty

Turgeon, Hon. O.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 8
English and French races in Canada, 8
Vimy Ridge memorial, 9
Trade and transportation, 9
Commercial treaties and reciprocity, 10
Immigration, 10
League of Nations, 10
Biological Board Bill, 998
Canadian National Railways
Canadian seaports, 276
Express Bill, 478, 497-499
Interprovincial trade, 886
Introduction to Senate, 1
Maritime Provinces, railway rates for, 436
Pension Bill, 1271

Turriff, Hon. J. G.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 40
Government ownership of railways, 40
Lake shipping rates, 42
Tariff reduction, 43
Immigration, 44

Turriff, Hon. J. G.—Con.
Appropriation Bill, 1311
Bank Bill, 1054-1058, 1064-1069, 1091, 1094
Bankruptcy Bill, 814
Bienfait coal experiment, 222
Board of Audit Bill, 1190
Canada Temperance Bill, 146, 749
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1291
Cold Storage Bill, 595, 751
Combines Investigation Bill, 623, 647, 700
Companies Bill, 1227, 1228
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 207
Freight rates on inland waters, 388, 793
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 1182
Judges Bill, 893
Maritime Provinces—railway rates, 601
Pension Bill, 1275
Railways
Government operation, 387
Mail-carrying charges, 686
Senate, legislative work of, 61
Vancouver Harbour Bill, 174
Vimy Ridge memorial, 67, 74, 84, 91
Wrangel Island, 551

Vancouver Harbour Bill. 1r, 90. 2r, 149. Com, 169, 197. 3r, 198

Vimy Ridge Memorial, 7, 9, 32, 65, 82, 90, 134, 278, 796

War, Canada's participation in, 158

Watson, Hon. Robert
Bank Bill, 1080, 1083, 1093
Canada Temperance Bill, 743
Canadian National Railways Construction Bill, 1247

Watson, Hon. Robert—Con.
Dominion Lands Bill, 1187
Hemp Bounties Bill, 1205

Webster, Hon. Lorne C.
Canadian Mercantile Marine, 383
Combines Investigation Bill, 701
Fuel supply of Canada, 113
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 535, 795, 914, 1177
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1128, 1134, 1139
Red Flag in Canada, 415

Welland Canal, 38

White, Hon. Gerald V.
Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, 913
Patent Bill, 508, 592

White, Hon. Richard S.
Vimy Ridge memorial, 74

Willoughby, Hon. W. B.
Bank Bill, 1031-1044, 1082
Bankruptcy Bill, 810-817, 897-904
Canadian Mercantile Marine, 386
Chinese Immigration Bill, 1121-1125
Copyright Bill, 489, 558, 581, 588
Criminal Code Bill (stock subscriptions), 205
Income War Tax Bill, 1237
Inland Water Freight Rates Bill, 1129, 1139
Lake Rates Commission, 783
Opium and Narcotic Drug Bill, 347, 408

Woman Suffrage. See Dominion Elections Bill

Wrangel Island, 548

Yukon Bill. 1r, 1026. 2r, 1125. Com-3r, 1157