The Debates of the Senate

OFFICIAL REPORT

THE SENATE

Wednesday, January 31, 1923.

The Parliament of Canada having been summoned by Proclamation of the Governor General to meet this day for the despatch of business:

The Senate met at 2.30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

The Hon. the SPEAKER informed the Senate that he had received a communication from the Governor General's Secretary informing him that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate Chamber to open formally the Session of the Dominion Parliament this day at 3 o'clock.

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

Hon. Onesiphore Turgeon, of Bathurst, New Brunswick, introduced by Hon. Raoul Dandurand and Hon. Pascal Poirier.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the sitting was resumed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

At three o'clock His Excellency the Governor General proceeded to the Senate Chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and that House being come, with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to open the Second Session of the Fourteenth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following Speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I am glad to welcome you to a return to your parliamentary duties. In the interval which has elapsed since the last session, I have had the pleasure of extending my travels throughout Western Canada and as far as the Territory of the Yukon. The cordial hospitality everywhere enjoyed by Her Excellency and myself will be long remembered.

It is gratifying to note that in a period of world-wide trade depression following the Great War, Canada has made substantial progress towards recovery.

The increase in the volume of trade, the diminution of unemployment as compared with last winter, and the restoration of our currency to a position of equality with that of the neighbouring Republic, are indications of the improved situation. The economic condition in European countries makes for embarrassment the world over. A much better situation in Europe will be necessary before we can expect a complete restoration of confidence in business affairs here. In the meantime, the Dominion has much reason for satisfaction with the improvement that has taken place, and with the many evidences of a returning prosperity.

The desirability of obtaining the best available terms for the admission of our products in foreign markets has engaged the attention of the Ministry. Conventions have been made to govern trade relations between France and Canada and between Italy and Canada. These Conventions will be submitted for your approval.

Since last session, acting under a Statute of 1919, with amendments thereto, an Order in Council has been passed appointing a Board of Directors to be known as The Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railway Company, having under its control and operation the various lines which go to make up the system, and also the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. The various units of the system are being consolidated as rapidly as possible. This, it is expected, will increase the efficiency and decrease the cost of operation.

It having been represented that an amalgamation of interests of shipping companies and vessel owners upon the Great Lakes has operated to control freight rates and insurance upon grain shipments in a manner which has deprived agriculturists of much of the benefit to which they were entitled, as well as led to discrimination against Canadian ports and harbours, a Royal Commission has been appointed to investigate and report upon this alleged combine.

A bill will be submitted to you to safeguard the interests of consumers and producers from undue enhancement of prices or unfair restriction of trade by combines, monopolies, trusts, or mergers.

As a consequence of an agreement entered into between the Government of Great Britain and members of the Canadian Government, the law with respect to the landing of imported animals in Great Britain has been amended by the British Parliament. The removal thereby effected of the embargo on Canadian cattle entering the United Kingdom is a source of general satisfaction. It has materially improved the outlook as regards live stock, and should lead to the re-establishment of a profitable trade with Great Britain.

The adverse conditions with which agriculture generally is confronted in many parts of Canada, despite the abundant crops of the past year, render it desirable that a special committee, with powers to make recommendations, be appointed to look into various agricultural matters such as the mixing of grain in private terminal elevators, the marketing of farm products, the development of the live stock industry, and the possibilities of further diversification in our Canadian agriculture.

The matter of securing an increasing flow of desirable settlers to develop the large areas still available for cultivation in Canada has had the serious consideration of my advisers. Additional advertising and general publicity campaigns have been launched in Great Britain and in the United States and, as opportunity offers, will be extended to other lands from which a suitable class of settlers may be attracted. In other particulars, the activities of the Department of Immigration and Colonization are being expanded.

The time for the usual decennial revision of the Bank Act having arrived, a measure for that purpose will be laid before you.

Having regard to the recent decennial census, a readjustment of the representation of the Provinces in the House of Commons, as required by the British North America Act, is also due. A Bill will be introduced for that purpose.

In pursuance of the announcement made in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of last Session a Postal Conference with the United States was held at Ottawa in the month of December last. The results of the Conference were embodied in a new Postal Convention which has been in force since January 1st. It is a pleasure to record that arrangements were made not only for extending and improving the international postal service, but also for the conveyance through the United States of parcel mail from Canada to all South American countries.

The Government of France has graciously offered to the Canadian Government a tract of land of 250 acres on Vimy Ridge, at the site selected for the erection by Canada of a monument commemorating the exploits of Canadian troops in the Great War. This gift has been gratefully accepted, and a bill approving the agreement has been duly introduced in the French Parliament. An appropriate resolution expressing Canada's appreciation of the action of the French Government will be offered for your acceptance.

During the course of the session your attention will be invited to other agreements of an international character and significance, and to other matters requiring legislation.

Members of the House of Commons:

The Public Accounts for the last fiscal year, and the Estimates for the coming year, will be submitted at an early date. A strict economy in all public expenditures continues to be a necessity of the existing financial situation.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

Since you last assembled, Canada has harvested the largest wheat crop in its history, and an abundance of other kinds of grain and fruits. May the Divine Providence which has vouchsafed this basis of our material prosperity guide and bless all your deliberations.

His Excellency, the Governor General, was pleased to retire, and the House of Commons withdrew.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

APPOINTMENT TO THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Honourable gentlemen, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the honourable members present, and especially that of the honourable member representing the Government in this House, to a statement made in another place yesterday to the effect that Mr. Onésiphore Turgeon, Esquire, had vacated his seat for the electoral district of Gloucester on account of his having accepted an office of emolument under the Crown. That struck me as a very original and unauthorized way of making the statement that the honourable gentleman referred to had been appointed as a member of this honourable House. It does not appear to me that being appointed to this part of Parliament is being appointed to an office of emolument under the Crown any more than being elected as a member of the House of Commons. For a great number of years in the past it has been the custom of members of Parliament in the Mother Land to serve without any emolument whatever. It may be possible that in the future even members of the Senate of Canada may consent to attend to their duties without receiving any emolument. The point I make, however, is that the statement has been very incorrectly given to the public by His Honour the Speaker of the House of Commons, although I may say that it did not originate with him, but that he stated that the Chief Electoral Officer had received a communication to this effect, and had handed it to him.

I would like the honourable member who leads the Government to take note of the statement. I think it is one which should not be allowed to remain.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the statement departs in any way from tradition I will draw the attention of His Honour the Speaker of the House of Commons to it, so that he may take occasion to correct the form.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ADDRESS IN REPLY

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the Session.

Hon. ARTHUR C. HARDY rose to move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General to offer the humble thanks of this House to His Excellency for the gracious Speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament. He said:

In rising to move the reply to the Speech of His Excellency the Governor General, I wish to express my very sincere appreciation to the honourable leader of the House for the honour which he has bestowed upon me in allotting to me the honourable and important duty entailed therein. I also beg to crave from the honourable members of this House the indulgence which one who has not the experience in public life is entitled to claim from those who are both experienced public speakers and parliamentarians, as so many in this House are.

May I be permitted, as one of the later members of this House, to compliment and congratulate the honourable leader of the House on the most capable and able way in which he conducted affairs during the last Session of Parliament. While he received many congratulations at that time—they were showered upon him, I remember—may I say that I think he has quite fulfilled all that was expected of him, as every one who knew him in his past career in public life would expect him to do.

Although I am on this side of the House, I am sure I shall not be debarred from extending my respects and warm compliments to the leader of the Opposition for the very able and gracious way in which he fulfilled the duties of his important and difficult office during the last Session of Parliament.

The Speech from the Throne foreshadows a large and important volume of legislation to be laid before Parliament at this its second Session, and undoubtedly this will be added to by many measures not therein referred to, as is usual. This means without doubt, particularly as some of the measures are bound to be more or less controversial, that we are faced with a long and arduous Session. I have no doubt, if we may judge from the demands that we have heard for the revision and improvement of the Bank Act from members of various organizations throughout the country, that that measure alone will take up a very large portion of the time of both Houses, particularly of the House of Commons. Personally I should be quite satisfied to see the Bank Act stand just as it is for another year. We are not treading the easiest paths, and anything that is going to move or shake our present financial status is a serious thing. I have no doubt that the Bank Act is quite capable of being amended, but it must be amended in a cautious and conservative manner.

We know that one of the chief things which shall be brought up for discussion will be the disaster to one of our large banks two years ago. I do not think that any Bank Act can prevent that kind of thing; I do not think any legislation that men can put upon the statute book will avoid it. We have first of all to depend absolutely and entirely upon the integrity and honesty of those in charge; and when I say that I do not wish to make any insinuations against the gentleman who was at the head of that bank and who was supposedly to have signed, and who, I believe, did sign, certain declarations. For my part I would give him all credit for having signed that declaration and for having sacrificed himself for the people of Canada and in order to save a more serious situation. I am not a financial expert and have no idea of what changes may be proposed or brought about in connection with the Bank Act. I merely mention it as one of those measures that may take up a very considerable portion of the time of the House.

The fourth year after the war does not seem to have brought any decrease in the perplexities that have involved the world since the termination of that conflict; in fact, it would rather seem that instead of decreasing them, it has only increased them. Even to-day, in what we call the peace of Europe, we see the extraordinary state of affairs of several nations occupying enemy or foreign territories, and only within the last few weeks another invasion has taken place by a victorious power of the territory of the vanquished in order to compel the fulfilment of treaty obligations. If we could have imagined such a thing ten or twelve years ago, we could have foreseen only one result, and that would have been war. To-day it is looked upon as a very serious complication, and, although the territories are occupied by thousands of soldiers, the occupation is not considered an act of war. We also see the situation in which our own mother land is involved with another of the vanquished nations. All these things complicate the situation, and from day to day when we pick up our newspapers we wonder what the outcome will be.

To my mind one of the serious and very important psychological developments of the war and the results left by it is the intense spirit of nationalism that seems to have seized all nations. One would have thought that after having fought for four years and more side by side they would have understood each other with a more sympathetic understanding, and that the old-time prejudices and the old-time national exclusiveness would have been broken, if not entirely done away with. Instead of this, we see just the opposite. We see an intense nationalism. Each nation is watching the others with suspicion, and every move made by one state is watched with jealousy. The great hope of the world, the League of Nations, offered an instrument to do away with this suspicion and antagonism, and to bring about a better and more kindly feeling as well as a more workable condition of affairs throughout the world. But it has not functioned as we had hoped, and I venture to say that it is not through the failure of the principles of the League of Nations that it has not been entirely successful, but rather through the failure of governments and states, and perhaps individuals, to apply the principles which the League of Nations stands for. Instead of the principles of the League of Nations being sought after and followed out, we find that the nations of Europe, and perhaps the nations of other continents too, rather rely upon the old-time methods of diplomacy, the old-time nationalistic spirit, and even the use of force.

We see to-day a feature that goes to increase this spirit of nationalism—that is the breaking up of the great empires of central Europe. We see Austria broken into four or five or even six separate nationalities; Russia is broken into so many that we cannot follow them out, and the change is, if not overnight, at least from month to month and year to year. These small nations, bounded by other small nations, from which they have seceded on account of racial and religious differences, are even stronger than the great nations in their national feeling. Take the reports of the last few days that a world-wide war is threatened over the disposition of Memel. One of the smallest nations, Little Lithuania, is threatening to call in Great Lithuania with Russia and Germany behind it. It is inconceivable to us that a world-wide war should follow such a thing as this; and if the time should come when the nations of Europe cannot agree upon such small differences, I trust that this country will hold by itself. I believe the mother land is to-day able to judge better than any other country the value of the League of Nations, and I believe that where her interests are not vitally concerned and her honour not touched, she will not indulge in these wars. If she should, then it is a question whether Canada should be dragged that far.

This national spirit has given rise to an economic problem in our own country as well as practically all the other countries of the world: it has resulted in the raising of more tariff barriers to trade relations in every direction. The United States has raised her tariff to unparalleled heights; even Great Britain has put a tariff on in the form of a protection of her key industries. We find that Australia, formerly a low-tariff country, has such a tariff now that many of our Canadian goods are prohibited from entering that state. Even Canada, which three or four years ago contained a very large element, I think I may say a preponderating element, which called, if not for free trade, for freer trade relations, has been satisfied with a small reduction of 2 or 2½ per cent in the tariff. I do not mention that as a criticism of those who came into power. Theoretically I am a free trader, but practically I am just about where we stand to-day. We have got to protect what we have. I know that two or three years ago we greeted with loud applause a resolution for drastic reductions in the tariff. I was only too glad to see it; I would have advocated it myself; but I think we are quite justified in saying that two or three years can make a great change. In 1919, when this resolution was passed, everything was at the height of prosperity; but since then there have been very great changes, and I venture to say that a reduction in the tariff according to the resolutions passed by several schools of thought of this country, would have resulted in an almost disastrous course of events.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HARDY: I am very glad to hear my honourable friends on the other side join with me in this position. I do not take it on partisan ground at all, but because of what I believe to be an actual state of affairs to-day, and it has been justified by Parliament, which was quite satisfied to make a small reduction in the tariff at the last Session.

While in this country our immediate perplexities are not such as involve us in international difficulties, nevertheless we have our own problems, and great ones, to face and work out. These problems are domestic, and it is for ourselves to work them out, which we must and shall do. While domestic they are made more difficult by conditions in Europe. In common with the rest of the world that had not actually suffered from the ravages of invasion, we in Canada had looked towards a period after the war of at least some years of increased industry and production—let us call it prosperity if we will—in order to restore what was destroyed during the conflict. We all forgot that the destruction of capital does not make for prosperity merely by causing a replacement of what has been lost, and it came indeed as a blow to learn that there was little or nothing in Europe to pay for what was to replace that destruction. On the other hand we have found the nations of the old world so impoverished that they have not been able to buy even those things of everyday life that formerly were considered necessities in anything like the old-time quantities, at low prices, if at all. Instead, therefore, of being called upon to supply abnormal demands for those goods which Canada can export, we find ourselves deprived to a greater or less extent of our normal markets, with the result of a great decrease in industry of all kinds and lack of markets for our natural products. The great fall in prices everywhere accentuates the difficulties we have to face. Many features of the present depression are common to most countries throughout the world; but Canada must always have a great surplus of natural products to export, and therefore must find outside channels to dispose of them. Our old markets having been broken in upon by the war, we must re-open them and find new ones in addition and in this effort we are confronted with a great difficulty in the present condition of credits and exchange.

Since this House last met commercial treaties have been entered into between this country on the one hand and France and Italy on the other. The Administration is to be congratulated upon its prompt action in taking steps in this direction, which I trust may have the effect of no little increase of trade between these countries and Canada. I find that in the year 1922 Canada's exports to France amounted to $12,350,000, and those to Italy amounted to $12,300,000. These figures show the importance to Canada of these two markets, these countries ranking fifth and sixth, being exceeded only by the United Kingdom, the United States, Australia and Japan. While we have not yet learned the details of these treaties, I have no doubt that they will greatly improve our trade conditions, as have similar treaties in the past, and I trust that they are only the first of a series of others.

The total imports in 1921 amounted to $799,000,000; in 1922 to $762,000,000, a decrease of $37,000,000. Exports in 1921 were $802,000,000, and in 1922, $884,000,000, an increase of $82,000,000. The fact is that there has indeed been a satisfactory increase, as the tonnage is much higher proportionately.

In 1920 there was a balance against us of $65,000,000; in 1921 there was a balance in our favour of $3,000,000; and in 1922 a balance in our favour of $122,000,000.

Foreign goods re-exported from Canada are not included in these figures. These balances of trade are given for what they are worth. The balance of trade may show a lack of buying power, but at present, I am satisfied that it is a healthy sign.

I believe that the future will show a decided tendency on the part of the nations generally to base their tariffs and trading relations under them on reciprocal agreements with each other as conditions may make them advisable. The world has had it brought most concretely before it how completely dependent each country is on many others if not on every other—that they must live with and for each other. The action of one nation affects another even in regard to the things of commonest use. A clear-cut example is shown in the United States, where the millers are crying out for Canadian hard wheat, within a year after that country shut our wheat from their market. This new American tariff has dealt us a severe blow, particularly to our agricultural interests, and at a time when rapidly falling prices in those products, makes it more severely felt. In our western provinces today we find our stock raisers faced on the one hand with United States duties of 1½ and 2 cents a pound, when cattle are selling at from 6 to 7 cents for feeders and 11 to 12 cents for fat cattle, and on the other hand by such high rates of transportation that stock raising with any profit is well nigh impossible. The same exists with our wheat and grain growers. While we cannot by any means blame our neighbours' new tariff entirely for these conditions, it has, as is seen, done much to accentuate a problem which was already desperately acute in our West. This is bound to react on immigration, and we are told by the president of our national railways that what we need to support our railways is immigration and greater population.

In the Speech from the Throne we find the following:

> The adverse conditions with which agriculture generally is confronted in many parts of Canada, despite the abundant crops of the past year, render it desirable that a special committee, with powers to make recommendations, be appointed to look into various agricultural matters, such as the fixing of grain in private terminal elevators, the marketing of farm products, the development of the live stock industry, anad the possibilities of further diversification in our Canadian agriculture.

I trust that failures in the past may not prevent us yet from negotiating with the republic to the south a trade treaty in the not distant future.

The removal of the cattle embargo by Britain as announced in the Speech from the Throne has been received with the liveliest satisfaction by all classes in this country. And not only for the commercial advantage it offers, but as a further evidence of good will and regard and gratitude on the part of the mother country. It is another example of Britain fulfilling her pledge. I trust it may bring to us as much advantage as we had hoped for from it.

The Speech from the Throne announces the appointment of a Royal Commission to investigate shipping and insurance rates in connection with transportation on the Great Lakes, and to inquire into the existence of certain alleged combines and rings. Unfair discrimination has been alleged against shipping interests, and much fault has been found with these combines against Canadian ports and railways by the diversion of immense quantities of grain to American ports and roads. On the other hand, it has been claimed that storage facilities in Canada are not sufficient to care for the Canadian production, especially during the rush season. It is a fact, however, that vast quantities of grain do go east via Buffalo and New York, and steps must be taken to remedy conditions, for on these shipments much of the success of our roads depends. If American railways carry our grain because certain shippers decree so for their own advantage, or if our Canada storage facilities are insufficient, then our government must at once devise a remedy, and apply it and save this great traffic for our own railways.

But important as this may be it is relatively a small matter compared with our great problem of railway transportation. I believe that the Prime Minister of the Province of British Columbia is at the present time in the Province of Ontario, if not in the city of Ottawa, for the purpose of discussing the diversion of grain by way of the Pacific ocean and the Panama canal to Europe. This opens up a great field, and while certain objections have been raised, on the ground that it would take away certain revenues from our railways, what we want is to get the grain to the coast—any coast—where it can go to Europe in the cheapest and most expeditious way. If this can be accomplished by the establishment of storage facilities on the western coast, I think it is a matter that should be taken up by the Government without delay. I believe it would be of great benefit to the Pacific coast, to say nothing of the farmers of the West, if the grain could be more expeditiously shipped by that route.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Do not forget the Hudson Bay.

Hon. Mr. HARDY: I would like to say a word or two in connection with our great railway transportation problem. It engages, as we know, the attention of every person in this country, and upon it depends, I believe, the financial and commercial success of Canada for some years to come. It involves two of the greatest railway lines in the world, one privately, one publicly owned. This great question is so immense and is so dependent on population, and consequently on immigration, that it is not easy to discuss intelligently one without the other, reacting as they must on each other. I am not an expert in railway matters, not even a student, and it is not my intention to discuss at any length this great question. A great step has been made by the Administration in the consolidation of the Government lines, and the country is anxiously looking to better days. We must not expect results to-morrow. Our efforts must be directed to co-operation and not to criticism for the sake of such. The country is to be congratulated upon securing the services of so eminent a man in the railway life as the new general manager, whose appointment has given the greatest satisfaction to all classes, and his general attitude thus far fully bears out the early approbation.

In spite of the criticism of the Government that it moved too slowly in the appointment of the new Board, I consider that it was wise in its caution, assailed by cries for haste, as it was. Too many things of great import have been rushed through, only to leave regrets, and I consider that it was the very best evidence of good faith that they acted with caution. We see the same cautious spirit manifested by the new General Manager—who is also hastening slowly, in spite of the piteous cries of Toronto that it should forthwith be made the central headquarters, which indeed seems outwardly to be the chief interest of the city in the National railways. Toronto having for two generations quarrelled with almost every public utility service within its limit, has at last absorbed so many of them, that it is now looking for a new victim. I have no doubt that the new head offices will be established where open minds consider is the best location for the roads, regardless of what city it may be. The public I believe, will not be concerned about any other consideration.

As I have already said, we see on the one hand industry immensely handicapped by high freight rates, and, on the other, see a vast deficit even in spite of these high rates, The whole country cries for relief from these rates, the West especially, where they bear so much the harder. But how can they be reduced in the face of the deficits? The consolidation of the railways must effect great economies, and doubtless the new management will make this their first duty; but in my humble opinion, so long as we are to pay the present rates of wages to railwaymen, I can see no clear way to substantial rate reduction, even if deficits can be avoided. Under the system of time and wages imported from the United States into the country, where conditions are so different, it looks hopeless. But it is one of the problems to be solved nevertheless.

The new President, almost at the beginning of taking up office, told us that we must have a much larger population to support these railways—to feed them and supply them with traffic. The Speech from the Throne refers to the necessity of renewed immigration to fill our vacant lands. This and the working out of our railway question, seem to me to be the two greatest problems before Canada to-day. They open up a great opportunity for co-operation on the part of our federal and provincial Governments.

The Speech from the Throne referred to the great and noble gift that France has given to this country to serve as a memorial to those of our soldiers who died for that country and for the mother land. It is indeed a great thing for us to think that France, almost at the moment of her greatest travail since the war, should be able to think of us and to appoint a great tract of land in one of the most historic parts of the country as a memorial to our Canadian soldiers. That great and brilliant nation has suffered, I believe, beyond all that we can ever imagine; and the most unfortunate thing is that, instead of improvements taking place in her relations with those who were her former enemies, there seems to be a determined effort on the part of those enemies to thwart all her efforts and bring them to naught. I am sure I voice the sentiments of nearly every Canadian when I say that I hope that great nation will be rehabilitated soon in her devastated districts, and that those who caused that devastation shall be made to pay.

On the memorial tract of land, situated on Vimy Ridge, where in one week eleven thousand Canadian soldiers fell, and which forms one of the most glorious Canadian battle fields, our Government is to erect one of the finest monuments the world has seen. A great authority, perhaps one of the greatest authorities on monumental architecture that we have, told me a few weeks ago that of all the monuments that are being prepared in the world to-day there is nothing which will be in the same class with this Canadian memorial on Vimy Ridge. This gentleman even goes so far as to say that since the building of the Arch of Titus there has been no monumental erection in Europe, except possibly the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, to compare with this. In the carrying out of this work of art, as well as in the artistry itself, this gentleman informed me that not even Rodin could excel. The work is to be carried out by a Canadian boy and is to be done by Canadian workmen. I trust that Canada will guard it well, and will make it a mecca in France for our people forever.

Honourable gentlemen, I do not propose to take up the time of the House any further. I therefore have the honour to move:

That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, to offer the humble thanks of this House for the gracious Speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament.

Hon. ONESIPHORE TURGEON (Translation): Honourable gentlemen, I have come within a theatre which is quite new to me, and the eminence of which I had not appreciated until my entrance to-day. The contemplation of so many Canadian dignitaries brings to my mind from Canadian history the recollection of those principles upon which this Dominion of Canada has been founded—principles truly British, extending in their generosity to minorities as well as to majorities, and by which our country, within its half century of existence, has been able to attain a position that excites the admiration of other nations.

It is as representative of the Acadian minority in New Brunswick that I have been called from among my generous constituents by the right honourable the Prime Minister of Canada and his colleagues, and have come to play my humble part in this august assembly, removed as it is from popular clamor and the engulfing waves of partisanship, guided in its deliberations by a spirit purely patriotic, and seeking only the general prosperity and happiness of the Canadian nation.

To-day the whole world is apprehensive of the future. If in the midst of all the prevailing difficulties and misgivings there is a young nation specially endowed with those qualities which make for development and greatness, both material and moral, that nation is Canada.

Over and above its abundant natural resources, Canada possesses two languages—the most beautiful, the richest, the most useful—two universal languages which together typify all noble and legitimate human aspirations. One is the English language, the language of industry and commerce, which has crossed every sea and penetrated every country wherein a shop or a bank is to be found, to fill it with British merchandise or British money, and has left everywhere in its wake the spirit of fraternity, developing and expanding with the increase of trade. The other is the French language, the language of the sciences and the arts, revealing their treasures and their merits; the language of the heart and of love; the language of eloquence; the language of diplomacy, in which international treaties have been written. These universal languages, placed in contact, develop energies, sentiments, and virtues, the application of which must necessarily make for the happiness of a people. Such is the good fortune of the people of Canada.

Yes, I affirm and repeat, always with faith: the cultivation of the many virtues of the English and French races will soon dispel the few clouds that still obscure parts of the Canadian sky, and then we shall live in an atmosphere that is pure, wholesome, invigorating. The result will be a happy blending of Canadian and Acadian good-fellowship, French affection, and British fair play, guaranteeing ample justice to the minorities of to-day as well as to those of to-morrow. Expressions of affection from the French will be showered upon the heads of their English-speaking neighbours, evoking sentiments of mutual esteem, generosity, and brotherhood, which will cause us to forget that we have minorities, and to say to one another, "Nous sommes tous Canadiens"—"we are all Canadians." And the generations to come, in the excess of their joy and happiness, will sing the praises of John A. Macdonald, George Etienne Cartier, Mackenzie, George Brown, Laurier, Mathieu, Moore, Sissons, MacPhail —worthy apostles of concord and harmony.

Honourable gentlemen, the Speech delivered yesterday by His Excellency the Governor General is a very comprehensive one, dealing with subjects of the greatest national importance at the present time. I hasten to call your attention to one of them. Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux, Speaker of the House of Commons, and member of the Legion of Honour, was sent, on behalf of the Canadian Battlefields Memorials Commission, to the governments of France and Belgium, for the purpose of acquiring ground in which the bodies of our Canadian heroes might find a resting place. Mr. Lemieux's noble mission has been attended with great success. A corner in the north of France, the Ridge of Vimy, now belongs to Canada, through the generosity of the French Government—a gift which will shortly be dedicated by the Deputies and Senators of France. The negotiations of Mr. Lemieux with the French Government have resulted in the establishment of a Canadian field at Vimy, where the Canadian troops fought for the first time as a Canadian unit. It is to the valour of the Canadian soldier that Vimy owes its fame, and to-day, under the patriotic eye of Colonel M. N. Ross, who directs the works of construction and ornamentation, Canadian beauty is reflected from Vimy Ridge.

The Canadian Commission made a wise choice in selecting Hon. Mr. Lemieux, who, in addition to his merits, well known in England and France, shares the glory of having given to the cause of Christian civilization his only son, whose remains now lie among those of the 50,000 Canadian martyrs in the land of France.

The hero of the Battle of Vimy is His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, now Lord Byng. It was my agreeable duty last year to express to him the devotion and esteem felt towards him by the Acadian soldiers who fought under his command. To-day I may say to His Excellency that since his coming to Canada the better they know him the more they admire him.

The Speech from the Throne mentions an inquiry into the transportation of grain on the Great Lakes. The complaint is made that the navigation companies form a trust which is exploiting the public for its own gain. It is claimed in the Prairie Provinces that the benefit of the reduction of railway freight rates on grain, granted last Session, has been offset by the increase in transportation rates on the Lakes. The decision of the right honourable the Prime Minister to have a commission of inquiry on this question has received the approval of the farmers' co-operative organizations of the Prairie Provinces.

It is to be hoped that this investigation may have the effect of increasing patriotism among Canadian shippers and inducing them to use Canadian in preference to foreign ports; that they may also recognize the seriousness of the handicap they have imposed on the Western farmers by yielding to the deceptive smiles of foreign ports instead of being attracted by the smiling ports of Quebec, St. John, and Halifax, formed by the hand of the Supreme Being for the benefit not only of the Maritime Provinces, but of the whole of Canada.

An item in the Speech from the Throne calls the attention of Parliament to the Bank Act. Our banking system has always been considered one of the best systems established, superior to that of the United States. The only shortcoming has been the failure of directors to take the precaution to examine personally the reports of their auditors before attaching their signatures. Too much confidence in subordinates has been the chief cause of the misfortunes of some of our Canadian banks—indeed, it is more correct to say the only cause. Parliament should make presidents and directors responsible for any report which they sign. A more substantial guarantee should be exacted for loans to traders, contractors, and promoters.

It is true that at present there is a strong movement, especially among the farmers, for the establishment of national banks. I admit the many needs of the day, but the example of the State Banks in the United States, particularly in the past year, should put the Canadian people on their guard and cause them to give serious consideration to any such project before carrying it into effect. The example of North Dakota especially should give us pause.

The Speech from the Throne announces the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle. The British Government, yielding to the constant representations of Canadian Governments, has decided to remove the embargo against Canadian cattle which has existed for nearly thirty years, and, by an arrangement entered into between the British Government and the members of the Canadian Government, the law regarding the disposition of imported animals has been changed. The whole of Canada, particularly the West, has suffered enormously by the embargo, which practically closed the English market to our livestock breeders. This disability was followed recently by a similar measure on the part of the United States Government by the putting into operation of the Fordney Bill, which by means of a prohibitive tariff closed the American markets. Our Western farmers have suffered considerable loss, and likewise our railways, who in consequence of this Act have been deprived of a great deal of traffic. This prohibitive law of Great Britain had an injurious effect on Canadian products in European markets. We may now expect a new impetus in this branch of industry.

The Speech from the Throne mentions the consolidation of our railway lines. The condition of Canadian railways has recently been the subject not only of uneasiness, but also of embarrassment. The numerous causes of this state of affairs I will not mention. The war, I may say, was one cause. It is the duty of all Canadians to second by their efforts and goodwill the endeavours of the Board which has just been appointed, with Sir Henry Thornton at its head. Sir Henry Thornton comes with a splendid reputation from a high sphere of activity, and deserves to receive from the Parliament and the people of Canada all possible assistance to enable him to re-establish our railways in such a way as to eliminate the deficits which for years have been increasing our public debt. Canadian products ought to be shipped by Canadian rather than foreign routes. Goods shipped across the Atlantic from Great Britain or the continent of Europe, and intended for importation into Canada, should be carried to their destination on Canadian lines. Recently one-half or two-thirds of the grain shipments from Port Arthur across the Great Lakes have gone to American ports. I would remind the people of Canada that the Transcontinental from Winnipeg to Quebec was built in accordance with twentieth-century knowledge, and offers the shortest and cheapest possible route to the seaport of Quebec in the summer months, and enables the Government to carry the products of the West from Quebec to St. John and Halifax in the winter time at a minimum of additional cost. If all Canadian shipments are forwarded by our Canadian railways we may be certain that our railway systems will soon be able to meet the cost of operation and maintenance.

Another important item in the Speech from the Throne announces to the Canadian people that commercial treaties, or understandings with regard to treaties of reciprocity, have recently been made with France and Italy by our Canadian delegates, Hon. Mr. Fielding and Hon. Mr. Lapointe. Commercial treaties are certainly the most economical and most praiseworthy sort of relationship that can exist between nations. May I remind you, honourable gentlemen, that Napoléon Bonaparte, whose genius as an economist equalled his military genius, regarded commercial treaties as a sure means of establishing harmony between nations and promoting national prosperity. In what I may term his spare moments between the wars in which he was constantly engaged he liked to make commercial treaties with the different nations of Europe which he favoured, the only nation with which he refused to enter into treaty relations being the British, the one to which he had an aversion.

Last year it was my privilege to compliment the honourable the Minister of Finance of Canada for having, on taking over his Department, made an offer to the United States of reciprocity with Canada. The offer was refused, it is true, but his action remains as an example to the United States, and to other countries as well, and we can already see that the United States regrets having erected insurmountable barriers to trade between Canada and itself.

The nations of the world must expect to take a new course if they would secure happiness and prosperity. The old Roman adage, "Si vis pacem para bellum," has been proven false. The Roman Empire itself fell beneath the weight of militarism in the first centuries of the Christian era. After nineteen centuries of Christian civilization, Germany, by her stupendous preparations for war, attempted to overthrow and dominate the world; but when faced by those nations that had been preparing for peace, Germany too was at once dismantled, and carried down with her in her ruin nothing but the maledictions of the world. These commercial treaties are among the greatest incentives to harmony among nations.

The Speech from the Throne refers also to the question of immigration. Immigration is necessary for Canada. It is necessary in quantity, but still more in quality, and therefore great care is required. It is averred that Canada, in the last twenty years, has lost more population than it has gained by immigration. We must not make vain promises, which inspire wrong ideas in the mind of the immigrant. We must make known to him our resources, but must also let him understand that it is only by work, energy and thrift that he can succeed. I like the immigrant who comes to us from France, Belgium, Scandinavia, or the British Isles, and am ready to do all possible to assist him towards prosperity and happiness; but I hold dearer the immigrant from the Canadian cradle. He has a special claim upon our solicitude, and we must keep him beneath his native sky, close to his father and mother, the imitation of whose virtues will prove his fitness for Canadian citizenship. I am pleased to learn from the words of the Minister of Immigration, Hon. Charles Stewart, that he intends to take up the matter of repatriating Canadians now in the United States. That is certainly a fine work. It will not cost the country more to bring back the 10,000 or 20,000 Canadians from the United States than to bring the same number of foreigners to this country. I hope that the Government will give effect to the wishes of the Minister of Immigration.

I do not wish, honourable gentlemen, to take up your attention further. I have already spoken long enough, and I would not weary you dignitaries of Canada the first time that I have the honour of speaking in these noble precincts. However, I deem it my duty before taking my seat to express my sincere hope for the success of the League of Nations, the chief aim of which is to abolish the military spirit among European countries. I have always said that the League of Nations could never attain the success expected of it until the United States decided to take part. It is to be regretted that that country did not join the League at its inception. Humanity would not then have suffered as it has suffered for the past three years and is still suffering to-day. It is to be hoped that the United States will join with Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and all other nations, and that together they may prevail upon German mentality to adopt a different attitude towards other countries. It will be necessary to establish in Germany a new system of education, especially in its institutions of learning, where the Prussian spirit still inculcates its principles of oppression with regard to the rest of the human race. We must train the minds of the rising generation into conformity with the aspirations of other nations. I can only urge upon the Canadian Parliament and people to continue in the path of moderation and charity, and I trust that the nations will treat each other as neighbours are expected to do in a community.

I thank you sincerely, honourable gentlemen, for your indulgence, and have much pleasure in seconding the motion for the Address to His Excellency the Governor General to thank him for the Speech which he was pleased to give us yesterday.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I have much pleasure in extending my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, for the very satisfactory way in which they have discharged the duties assigned to them by the Government. I was particularly interested in the very thoughtful address delivered by the mover of the resolution, and, as I listened attentively to the sentiments which he expressed, particularly upon the fiscal question, it occurred to me that he was quite as qualified for this side of the House as for the side on which he sits.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: I always said there should not be two sides.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is no occasion for my honourable friends to apologize for any timidities in discharging the duties of moving and seconding the Address. While they have made their maiden speeches in this body, yet we know that both honourable gentlemen have been engaged for a considerable period of time in the active political conflicts of the party to which they belong. I am not one of those who decry the appointment to this Chamber of honourable gentlemen who have been actively engaged in political life. I think that experience gives them a broader and more generous view of life than they might have if they had not engaged in political activity; and a broad outlook upon life and a well-balanced and sane judgment on all public questions are, it seems to me, essential to the proper discharge of the duties of a member of this honourable House.

I am always interested in seeing honourable gentlemen who belong to the Liberal party accept membership in this House. It is always pleasing to note the alacrity with which they accept membership when it is offered them, notwithstanding the murmurs and threats of the party to which they belong with regard to the abolition or reform of this body. I therefore congratulate my honourable friends the mover and the seconder of the Address upon their having accepted appointment to the Senate, and I foresee for them both a very useful service in this Chamber.

In looking casually over the Speech from the Throne, one cannot say that it suffers from any paucity of material of promised legislation, as many Speeches from the Throne do. There is a programme sufficiently long to keep us here for several months, and if the Government will implement the promise of legislation foreshadowed in it, I have no doubt that we shall have a very interesting Session.

I was somewhat interested in observing the language employed in the Speech from the Throne and comparing it with a declaration that, by way of New Year's greeting, was issued by the Prime Minister to the people of Canada some few weeks ago. The Speech from the Throne is supplementary of that declaration. One or two expressions in that declaration were very comprehensive indeed. I shall ask my honourable friend's indulgence while I read one of the clauses. The Prime Minister said:

> Treaties have been arranged with France and Australia for the betterment of trade conditions between the Dominion and those countries, and other treaties seeking a widening of markets in other directions were in course of negotiation. Treaties have also been negotiated with the United States looking to the settlement of the Great Lakes disarmament question and the Lake of the Woods international levels. The Government had also succeeded in securing the removal of the embargo against Canadian non-breeding cattle in Great Britain and the embargo against breeding types of cattle would be removed under the agreement early in the New Year.
> Among other important matters decided had been the formation of the Board of management of the Canadian National Railway systems and the securing of Sir Henry Thornton as President and General Manager of the railways. The personnel of the Board, said the Prime Minister, was such as to inspire confidence on the part of the public and there was a great deal better feeling toward the National roads as a result.

The cheerful view which the Prime Minister took of the situation at that time led one to analyze somewhat the statements contained in the few sentences I have read, and they seem to constitute an appropriation of clothes stolen from the political party to which we on this side of the House have the honour to belong. They indicate also a number of hallucinations which seem very seriously to affect the mind of the Prime Minister as to what had been accomplished. Inasmuch as many of those subjects have to do with the Speech from the Throne, we might analyse a little more closely some observations made by the Prime Minister, which have been re-echoed in the Speech of yesterday:

Treaties have been arranged with France and Australia for the betterment of trade conditions between the Dominion and those countries.

One would fancy that this Government had initiated all the negotiations which have taken place between this country and France. The French Treaty, which is at present upon the statute book—placed there by Parliament, I think, about two years ago—was preliminary to the Treaty which the present Finance Minister, seemingly, has negotiated within the last few months. The preliminary negotiations for that Treaty originated with and were conducted by the late government, and when it is brought down, if it possesses advantageous features, I fancy it will not be unfair for this side of the House to claim as much credit for it as my honourable friends opposite.

The Prime Minister seems to be under a hallucination as to a trade treaty having been negotiated with Australia. This is the first intimation I have had that an Australian treaty has really been entered into. Only a few ago a public statement was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who had just arrived from Australia, to the effect that unfortunately he was not able to negotiate a treaty with that country. How it happened that the Prime Minister was under the impression that that treaty had been negotiated raises a question as to how he concluded that it had been entered into.

We are told also that a treaty has been inaugurated with the United States looking to the settlement of the Great Lakes disarmament question. It certainly is news to Parliament and to the people of Canada that a treaty has been negotiated with the United States to supersede the Rush-Bagot treaty, with regard to war vessels on the Great Lakes. One fine summer day, some few months ago, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia, suffering probably from monotony, left for Washington. They had an interview with the President and some of the executive officers in the capital of the United States, and the press of Canada rang out the news that a new treaty had been entered into and that the Rush-Bagot treaty was to be entirely superseded.

Well, those of us who have followed public affairs for some years know that there is no truth in the statement that such a treaty has been concluded. I fail to understand why claims of this kind are made and the people of Canada deluded into the belief that treaties are concluded when such is not the case. Those of us who have followed public affairs know—and my honourable friends opposite know as well as I—that to conclude a treaty with the United States involves not only the negotiation of that treaty with the Executive, but also its approval by the Senate of the United States. The experience not only of Canada but of Great Britain as well has been that to succeed in negotiating a treaty with the United States means the expenditure of very considerable time and the lapse of several years. Why the Dominion of Canada should take the initiative to supersede a Treaty which has been in effect for over a century I fail to understand.

Of all the treaties between Great Britain and the United States there has been none so satisfactory in the friendly relations which have obtained under its operation as the Rush-Bagot treaty. True, great changes have taken place since the negotiation of that treaty over a century ago. The battleship of that time was an insignificant affair compared with the enormous leviathan that sails the deep to-day, but that treaty is just as effective to-day in the security it affords to both nations against war vessels being placed on the Great Lakes as it was on the day it was signed; and I am satisfied that no Treaty has given the people of the United States and Canada greater satisfaction. Before the declaration of war in 1914 both countries had entered into most satisfactory arrangements to celebrate a century of peace, of which this Treaty was the foundation. Why should it be disturbed at the present time? Why should the Prime Minister, upon his own responsibility, proceed to Washington without any sentiment having been expressed in Parliament, or in Canada, for the purpose of abrogating that Treaty and throwing another treaty into the cockpit of the United States Senate, where it would be opposed by all the elements antagonistic to Britain in that country arrayed against it? And why should Canada take the initiative in negotiating a Treaty of this kind, entirely irrespective of Great Britain? If we are to maintain the proper relations between this country and Great Britain, we should proceed through the traditional channels which have been followed at all times when negotiations have been entered into for the making of Treaties. So the Prime Minister was clearly labouring under an illusion when he spoke of having negotiated a Treaty to supersede the Rush-Bagot treaty.

We are also informed that a treaty was negotiated dealing with the Lake of the Woods levels. Any arrangements that have been entered into between the United States and Canada affecting the control of those waters were entered into by the late Canadian Government and the Government of the United States. The present Government of Canada has not a settlement of that question. That question to-day is concluded as embodied in legislation placed upon the statute book of the Dominion of Canada. The only act performed by the Prime Minister or by the present Government since they came into office was to disturb the security given to the province of Manitoba and the very important interests represented in that province, by their seeking last Session to repeal the legislation which had been enacted the previous year. Honourable gentlemen will probably recall that the interests involved in the settlement of that difficulty represented the expenditure for the building of water-powers of no less than $25,000,000 in the province of Manitoba, which water-powers can only be maintained by this Government taking a strong position as to the control of the waters of the Lake of the Woods and the flowage of that lake into the Winnipeg river. Not only have $25,000,000 been expended in the development of water powers in the province of Manitoba all dependent upon receiving the proper volume of water from those waters, but it is said that $40,000,000 have been expended in industries in that province dependent upon the maintenance of those water-powers. This Government, last Session, at the instance presumably of Mr. Drury and Mr. Backus, brought down a measure looking to the repeal of the measure which we had passed in the preceding Session, declaring the works in those waters to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. I trust that there will be no further meddling with the legislation on the statute book, particularly regarding the declaration which has been made as to those works. They in no way handicap the province of Ontario or interfere with the public interests of that province, and I say that no more salutary legislation has ever been passed than the declaration embodied in that statute.

We have this further statement, which is repeated in the Speech from the Throne, that "the Government has also succeeded in removing the embargo against Canadian non-breeding cattle in Great Britain," and so on. If anything stands to the credit of the late Government it is the fact that embargo has been removed. This Government had nothing to do with the removal of the embargo. Yet cheerfully the Prime Minister says this is one of the acts of the present Government and proclaims it to the people of Canada. Why, the first step taken towards the removal of that embargo was initiated by Sir Robert Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, when he secured from the Imperial Government during the war a promise that that embargo would be removed. Then, nothing for some time having been done towards its removal, the late Government insisted upon action being taken, which led to a commission being appointed for the purpose of making a full investigation into the entire subject. A most influential commission was appointed, evidence was taken, and finally a report was submitted to the British Government strongly recommending the removal of that embargo. True, some of the leaders of my honourable friend's party in the province of Ontario thought it their duty to go over to England and participate in an election there. That was resented by the Imperial authorities. Whether the action of the minister from the Province of Ontario in proceeding to England resulted in hindering action being taken, I cannot say; but I know that it was very deeply resented by the British authorities, and was said to have delayed the removal of the embargo to an extent that probably would not have occurred but for such interference.

I therefore claim, honourable gentlemen, that the late Government, the party to which this side of the House belongs, have carried out most of those great measures and are entitled to whatever credit may be attached to them, and I certainly resent my honourable friends opposite stealing the apparel which was worn so fittingly by the late Government. If the Prime Minister chooses to deal in illusions with regard to achievements that have no existence in fact, I make no protest unless it be that the people of Canada should know the facts.

Among other important matters the Prime Minister points out that a board of management has been appointed for the Canadian National Railway System. I say in all seriousness, honourable gentlemen, that if there is any act of the present Government of which they should not boast it is the appointment of that board. This country has sounded a protest at the introduction of political partisanship into the constitution of the board. I am satisfied that when the announcement was first made of the personnel of that board, not only the majority of the people of Canada, but the majority of the party to which my honourable friend opposite belongs, were disappointed at the partisan character of the appointments. A capable board of executive officers who were not partisans was dismissed, and this new board has taken its place. True, two or three members of the board, executive officers of the Government, cannot be said to be partisans in any sense; but, with the exception of Mr. Stewart, of Manitoba, and also Major Bell and Mr. Ruell, officers of the road, I venture to say that no one will deny the partisanship of the lay members of the board. However, if I may use an expression which is very popular in the United States, they are regional representatives of the Government, to attend to the interests of the Government in their particular districts. In the present election campaign in the province of Quebec, the other day, we had one of the Ministers of this Government promising a large district that he would secure for them representation upon this board; and in the recent by-election in Lanark the most illusive promises were made as to what would be done by the Government on behalf of the manufacturers in that constituency in the way of their furnishing railway material, and so on, if the Government candidate were elected. Is this the kind of thing that is to give that confidence in the national road and that better feeling towards it to which the Prime Minister refers? It may possibly give inspiration to my honourable friends opposite, but it certainly will be disapproved by the people of Canada, and it will prove disastrous to the success of the National System of Railways. During the time the late Government administered those railways, so far as I can recall, no charge was ever made of partisanship in that system. In fact, it was conducted in a manner as free from partisanship, in my judgment, as the administration of justice upon any Bench in the Dominion of Canada. Now, if these roads are to be administered to the advantage of the people of Canada, it seems to me that every semblance of partisanship should be avoided. Would it have been unreasonable for this Government, in order to impress upon the people of Canada that partisanship would be excluded from the administration of the system, to have appointed upon that board two or three representatives of the opposite political party, who would balance, so to speak, the disposition of those who might represent the Government party? Is it going to inspire the people of Canada with confidence to have four or five partisans on the board? I am not taking any exception to men occupying offices of that kind because they have been actively identified with political parties; but if the public is to be convinced that these roads are to be protected as a non-partisan public utility, then there should not be the slightest appearance of partisanship entering into the constitution of such board or any appointment thereto.

Considerable reference has been made, honourable gentleman, to the subject of immigration. I venture to say that no more important subject could have been alluded to. While on the present occasion, in discussing the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, one cannot enter into so important a subject at any length, yet I should like to point out some of the disadvantages under which we are labouring on account of this Government not having awakened to a full appreciation of the duties of their office in dealing with this important matter. An acute crisis has been reached within the last twelve months, not only in the West, but throughout the whole of Canada, in connection with this subject. There is an exodus going on at the present time. It is evidenced by the fact that during the last nine months the exports of settlers' effects to the United States have exceeded by 25 per cent the imports from that country. At nearly all the Canadian ports on the Pacific coast there are to-day, unfortunately, hundreds—yes, thousands—of the best of our population leaving for the Pacific States. There seems to be a wave of prosperity sweeping over the United States, which is peculiarly attractive and is resulting in a large exodus, particularly from the Western provinces—and I am told that a similar exodus is marked in the East, especially in the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Quebec too.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is estimated that any increase in population that Canada has had from 1911 down to 1922 has already been lost. Competent authorities have estimated that over two millions of people have left Canada in that period, especially in the more recent years.

One hesitates to draw attention to such a deplorable condition of public affairs, but it is necessary to do so. It is necessary because of the disastrous results which are accruing from the exodus now taking place. What has the present Government done since its accession to office to deal with this important subject? I give credit to the present Minister of the Interior, who likewise looks after immigration, for doing what he can. But this is a subject that is more important—I say it advisedly—than any other with which the Government has to deal. There is not a special department allotted to look after it. There was a time, when it was not so necessary that we had a Department of Immigration, with a staff to give exclusive attention to the promotion of immigration and the conducting of propaganda in the United States and in Europe. There was a time when we had public offices in nearly every leading city in Europe and in the United States. I am not acquitting the late Government of indifference to the subject of immigration; but it is now a matter of sufficient importance to demand the attention of the present Government, entirely irrespective of what former Governments have done. So far as I can ascertain, nearly all the ramifications that were established at considerable expense, and which were effective in their results, have been wiped out, and we are to-day depending upon such little propaganda as proceeds from Canada, by way of advertising and otherwise, to secure immigrants. At one time we depended largely upon the steamship and transportation companies to secure immigrants from European points. That system was subject, and very properly subject, to censorious criticism on account of the class of citizens brought into Canada.

In my judgment, honourable gentlemen, until a special body of competent experts is organized by the Government to deal exclusively with this subject, and to conduct propaganda not only in America but throughout Europe, through coming into close contact with the governments on both continents, we shall never have satisfactory results from our immigration policy. The mere advertising of the resources or advantages of Canada to the immigrant, whether it be in the United States or in Europe, is in my judgment futile. Of course, there is this to be said about it—and it is a problem that should engage the attention of the best minds in Canada—that it is futile to bring thousands of people to Canada at enormous expense if they are then to emigrate to the United States. That, of course, is one of the problems that has to be considered. But this subject is invested with such important results to Canada that we are now reaching the question of whether the destiny of Canada of becoming a great people is to be fulfilled, or whether we are to fall into a decadent period of non-progress and are to remain as we have been since Confederation.

When we think of the United States less than a century ago having less population than Canada has to-day, and to-day having 120,000,000 people, and being practically the greatest national entity in the world, we wonder what Canada is going to do. Unless Canada makes extraordinary progress, she must necessarily fall back and become reactionary without any hope of a national future.

This involves something more than the question of immigration. It involves the question of national sentiment. Are we in Canada going to become a people? Is there a national sentiment in Canada to-day? I hesitate very much to express my opinion, but in my judgment there is no adequate national spirit in Canada to-day. The spirit of Canada to-day is not very much more national that it was at the time of Confederation. I do not find the people of the different provinces interesting themselves in the propagation of a Federal spirit to the same degree as the people of the different states in the republic to the south of us. The same parochial feeling exists to-day that has ever existed. Until we get beyond that and feel that a national duty is upon our shoulders to build up a national spirit entirely irrespective of the province to which we belong, Canada will never fulfil its destiny.

I was very much amused in reading an article from the Montreal Herald in which it joined in the chorus of adulation to the declarations of the Prime Minister. That paper, in speaking of the achievements which I have pointed out, and which are a little illusory, said:

> These short twelve months have served to change the whole face of the Dominion. Disunion and doubt have been replaced by unity and understanding. Confidence and trust have taken the place of distrust and despair. Even Providence has graciously taken a part in restoring prosperity to a country struggling for weary years under the burden of Conservative mis-rule and we are enabled on this anniversary to expand our chests and boast of being the greatest wheat exporting country in the world.

Even to the appropriation of the dispensation of the bounties of Providence, the Prime Minister has made his claim, and likewise my honourable friends opposite. Of course, if the Government of Canada is revelling in this class of optimism expressed by the Herald as to the declarations of the Prime Minister, I can readily understand nothing being done in the matter of immigration or the other great questions with which we have to do.

May I say a word as to some of the other subjects referred to in the Speech from the Throne? Attention has been called, and very properly so, to the revision of the Bank Act. I am disappointed, and I think members of Parliament generally will be disappointed, that on such an important subject, no information has been brought down to Parliament. An intimation is given that a Bill will be introduced dealing with this particular subject. There are very few questions involving so much technical knowledge as that of banking, and, with all due deference to members of Parliament, I will say there are few questions that come before us for consideration about which we know so little as the questions involved in legislation of the kind which is promised. It seems to me that the Government would only be paying proper respect to Parliament if it had prepared a review of the different banking systems which obtain not only on this continent but in Europe. The United States give the closest and most scientific attention to matters of this kind when they are before Congress, in furnishing information of the fullest character as to what may be to the advantage of the people of the country. The science of banking and the experience of different systems are submitted to them. Why should it not be done in Canada?

I would suggest to my honourable friend that before this Bill comes before the House —I am not criticising the Act as we have it on the Statute Book, because I think Parliament has not only been educated to looking upon the Bank Act of the Dominion as a perfect act, but is inclined to believe from its own experience that it cannot be amended to very great advantage—it would be very desirable to have before us the experience of other countries.

I notice that in Australia, in recent years, the experiment has been entered upon by the Government of establishing a bank of very considerable proportions, and I believe it has been productive of very satisfactory results. It would be very desirable to know what the experience of Australia has been in that experiment, and likewise the experience of other systems elsewhere.

Before sitting down, may I say a word upon the question of our expenditures? If there was anything which during the last election the Liberal party emphasized, it was the alleged wasteful expenditures of the late Government, and the many promises which they made of retrenchment and economy. Although the present Government has been in office for some thirteen months, up to the present time I have failed to see any efforts made to cut down the expenditures of the Dominion, and to adopt a policy of retrenchment, or to show the slightest sympathy with reducing public expenditure. The whole trend of Government action has been to impose further taxation. Every activity in our commercial or national life that could be taxed has been taxed, and I have no doubt that during the present Session of Parliament we shall have further imposts placed upon the business of the country. If there is not a determined attempt made by the Government along the line of retrenchment, we shall have a repetition of these additional taxation imposts every year. The supertaxation which was imposed during the war was not intended to permit the Government of Canada to indulge in extravagant expenditures; but that has been the result of it. Take, for instance, the increase in Civil Government to which Canada has been subject since the war. The figures I give are approximate. Civil expenditure has increased from $22,000,000 to $50,000,000, and yet I will venture to say that the volume of Government business to-day is no greater than it was then.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: From what date to what date?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: From 1914 to 1922. And yet nothing is being done by the Government. We have not even been favoured, so far as I can ascertain, with that traditional clause which almost invariably appears in the Speech from the Throne as to measures of economy and retrenchment being adopted. This continuous increase of expenditure is largely responsible for the disastrous condition of trade in Canada to-day.

We are living to-day in probably the most expensive country in the world. I do not think there is any other country so expensive to live in as Canada. We live under adverse conditions, climatic and otherwise, and unless Canada be made more productive than it is, through the cost of living being reduced by reduced expenditures, there will be a falling off of the population until the per capita debt and expenditure become so great as to break the backs, practically, of the Canadian people.

This is not an exaggerated statement. We are imposing taxation to such an extent as to throttle business, prevent development and progress, and bring about final collapse. The Government of the day is not showing the slightest interest or intention of grappling with this very important problem. We have taxing bodies multiplied throughout the Dominion. We have the Federal Government imposing taxation; we have the Provincial governments imposing similar taxation, such as the income tax; and many of the municipalities have power likewise to impose income tax. The provinces to-day are imposing a direct tax upon property as the municipalities are doing; and, unless some intelligent effort is made to deal with this very important subject, Canada will be taxed to a condition of disaster.

There certainly should be some organization of experts to take up this matter with the provinces and the municipalities so that there will not be this multiplicity of taxing bodies imposing similar taxes. I say this, honourable gentlemen, not with a view of criticizing the Government, but simply to point out the duty of the Government at this particular crisis.

I have occupied more time than I intended in dealing with this subject. One can but casually make reference to these important matters. One must be satisfied with simply mentioning them, in the hope that the Government will reduce them to the form of Bills, so that when those Bills come before Parliament ample opportunity will be given for consideration and discussion.

Before sitting down, may I suggest that among the multiplicity of bills foreshadowed in the Speech from the Throne, the Government should favour this body with a reasonable amount of work, so that we may employ our time to the advantage, and, I hope, to the profit of the people of Canada.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I will first join with my honourable friend in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the Address on the excellent speeches to which we have listened this afternoon. The speech of the honourable member from Brockville (Hon. Mr. Hardy) was that of a broad-minded citizen and a thinker, and showed that he was worthy of the name he bears. Our young colleague represents the best traditions of all that is best in Ontario. The honourable member from Bathurst (Hon. Mr. Turgeon) is an old parliamentarian, and his experience will avail us in the solution of the numerous problems that will come before us. Harmony reigns in his province by the Baie des Chaleurs between the two races which inhabit that province. It is a good example of an united Canada.

I think we can all agree with the statement which is to be found in the last paragraph of the Speech from the Throne, and can unite in thanking Providence for the fair measure of prosperity which Canada has enjoyed during the past year. We have had a bountiful crop which has been rapidly moved towards the Atlantic seaboard, but we have had a congestion of traffic at the Georgian bay which has caused a sharp advance in lake rates. A commission has been appointed which may bring in some recommendation which will enlighten Parliament in framing regulations or legislation which will tend to overcome that congestion and the diversion of our crop to foreign ports.

The prices of farm products have fallen more rapidly than those of industrial products. Lower freight rates have not been counterbalanced by lower wages, but the big crop movement has helped the railways. The problem of the high cost of transportation can only be solved, in my judgment, by a readjustment of the wage scales in the coal mines and upon the railways. We have made very little progress in that direction. As we all know, there was an attempt made in the United States to reduce the wage scale of the miners; it was strenuously resisted, and we are still paying exceptional prices for the drawing of the coal from the pit. Progress in that direction will tend to solve the high cost of transportation, and will help towards the happiness and prosperity of our western farmer.

The honourable gentleman from Brockville (Hon. Mr. Hardy) has said that some grain had left the prairies of the West and had found its way across the Rockies to the port of Vancouver. My last information is that some 20,000,000 bushels had been handled via that port, and application is being made to the Federal Government, and in turn will be made to Parliament, for assistance in the building up of storage warehouses and additional elevators at that port, so that next autumn they may be able to handle a still larger quantity of grain. I know that this demand has met with the sympathy of the Government, and will also meet with the sympthay and co-operation of this Parliament. I hope that more and more grain may find its way across the Rockies to the port of Vanvouver, and I may confess that I have more confidence in grain from the western plains being shipped in this way than by the Hudson Bay route.

Building operations have shown considerable activity throughout the year. Building in Montreal is rapidly returning to normal, and permits to the extent of $21,000,000 were issued in that city during last season. In the city of Toronto more than $35,000,000 of buildings were put up. Montreal's boom period in 1912-13 only showed $25,000,000 a year of building operations. This activity has helped to reduce unemployment to a considerable degree in those two cities. In Winnipeg, also, conditions are improving, and building was quite active last summer.

The removal of the embargo on cattle has come at a favourable time, when the hostile American tariff was checking our exports of live stock to that country. We may find a profitable market in Great Britain, and, in spite of the high tariff, our sales to the republic to the south of us will continue to be large.

My honourable friend criticized the Prime Minister for having stated, at the beginning of this year, that Canada should congratulate itself upon the removal of the embargo. If my honourable friend will again read the article which he read to us, he will find that the Prime Minister did not say that the Government should be congratulated, but that Canada should be congratulated, and that there was no very great boasting upon the part of the Prime Minister.

Our foreign trade has improved to an appreciable extent, which has doubtless helped to bring our dollar back to a parity with the American dollar. Our exports during the twelve months of 1921 amounted to $802,699,000; in 1922 they went up to $884,362,000. Our imports from the United Kingdom have increased from $123,149,000 in 1921 to $136,866,000 in 1922, while our imports from the United States during the same period have decreased from $555,091,000 to $509,823,000.

Our exports to the United Kingdom not only increased over those of 1921 but over those of 1920 as well. The figures for those years are as follows: 1920, $341,168,000; 1921, $308,866,000; 1922, $374,751,000.

In spite of the Fordney tariff, there has been an increase in exports to the United States during the past year over those of 1921. In 1921 our exports to that country amounted to $325,651,000, whereas in 1922 they amounted to $340,156,000. This is not a very large increase, but it is a move in the right direction.

We have also increased our exports to Australia, Hong Kong, New Zealand, and other parts of the British Empire, as well as to the Argentine, China, Cuba, France Germany, Japan and Switzerland. On the whole, Canadian trade appears to be in a very healthy condition.

We need increased production, and we can only accomplish it by stimulated immigration and larger foreign markets. The Government is very active in its efforts to open up new channels of trade. We have succeeded in making Treaties with France and Italy, which I hope will stimulate trade with those two countries. Negotiations which have been carried on with Australia, but which have been suspended, will, I think, be concluded to the satisfaction of both Dominions. It is true that some difficulty has been met in the negotiations with Australia; we have been able to enter that market to a considerable extent, but Australia has found very little opportunity of increasing its trade in Canada.

The Government has not neglected, as my honourable friend seems to think, the question of immigration. He, like all good Canadians, regrets that from 1911 to 1921 we have been losing more population than we have obtained through immigration; but surely my honourable friend, in the face of this result, will not throw stones at the present Government. I think he was an ornament to the Cabinet that reigned supreme between 1911 and 1921; so he will have to take his share of responsibility for the acts of omission or commission of that Government. We are now entering the year 1923. My honourable friend has given us no figures, but he might have stressed the point that in 1922 fewer immigrants came to our shores than in 1921. That is quite true. But again I would ask him to go slow in charging the present Administration with the responsibility for those results. No one knows better than my honourable friend that the immigration of 1922 was the result of the activities or inactivities of 1921. The ground must be prepared, and the work must be done during the preceding winter and autumn; then we reap the fruit the following year. In view of this, I refuse to accept for the present Administration any large degree of responsibility for the unsatisfactory results that have been shown during the last year.

Since the beginning of last Session the Immigration Department has not been inactive. A sub-committee of Council was appointed which has been in constant contact with the various officers of the Department. My honourable friend made a broad statement when he said that the organization which had been established and was in its place ready to function had been thrown to the winds. He should not boast too much about the value of that organization, in view of the results during the ten years of administration in which he played no mean role. But I want to assure him that the organization—most of it in Canada and in the Immigration Department—is still functioning, and that I, as a member of the subcommittee of the Council, have had occasion to attend very many meetings of the officers in the various branches of that department, and have found them most zealous and active. The Provincial Governments and all the organizations in Canada which it has been thought might be of assistance have been consulted. Our main effort must be directed to getting agriculturists and household workers, but we are very far from refusing skilled labour. Every available organization will be mobilized to check the outflow of Canadians, and to induce the dissatisfied ones to move to other parts of our country.

A comprehensive campaign has been inaugurated for the repatriation of Canadians who have already crossed the line to the republic to the south of us. Publicity and advertising activities have been very greatly increased both in the old countries and in the United States. A committee has been formed to coordinate the efforts of the Federal Government and outside organizations which are actively engaged in immigration work in foreign countries. This will increase the value of that work by over 60 per cent.

Our immigration agents in Great Britain have been carrying on an intensive lecturing campaign, which should be productive of good results when the spring movement commences. On the Continent of Europe special efforts are being directed towards obtaining immigration from Scandinavian countries Holland, Belgium, France, and Switzerland. Personally, I do not expect very many immigrants from France, and I am not in favour of any active campaign in that country, so badly bled as it has been, and whose surplus population does not even enable it to provide emigrants for its own colonies. The Government of the Netherlands is co-operating with us with a view to encouraging Dutch farmers to come to Canada. The Swiss Government, likewise, is co-operating with the Federal Government with a view to placing a thousand farmers in this country. This is a beginning. If the Swiss Government seems disposed to transplant some of its nationals outside its own borders, and we succeed in satisfying the first thousand, we may hope that many others will follow.

The Immigration Department is studying the problem of northern Italian immigration for our farm lands. The farmer of northern Italy is a good, industrious farmer and all we can get from Tuscany upwards, towards the Alps, comprising the provinces of Piedmont and Lombardy, would make good immigrants. I am told that the present Prime Minister of Italy, Mr. Mussolini, is disposed to view with favour the immigration of farmers from the north of Italy to outside countries, with the hope of a gradual movement of the surplus population of the south on to the north. Honourable gentlemen all know that Italy is one of the countries which is looking around with a view to placing emigrants. The legislation of the United States that limits the immigration of any race to three per cent of the number of that race already in the country has prevented the Italians from going to the United States in as large numbers as formerly. This may be our opportunity, as I think there is a splendid type of manhood to be found in northern Italy.

Specially trained immigration officers have been placed on the continent to interview and advise intending immigrants to this country. This will inspire confidence on the part of the class of immigrants that we desire, and has already developed a good and effective check on the undesirables who otherwise would have to be rejected at the port of entry.

A nominative system has been established whereby friends or friendly organizations, such as churches, and municipal and community centres, can undertake satisfactorily to place farmers from Great Britain or the continent, who may come forward with the recommendation of the co-operating organizations on the other side. A system has been inaugurated in the United States to encourage tenant farmers with limited capital to take land in the Canadian West, with the expectation that they will become purchasers. They bring in with them their farming equipment and some little capital. In this way it is hoped that we may succeed in getting people who are already seasoned in the Western States, and who will become creditable additions to our population.

My honourable friend has said that of course the bringing in of an immigrant was a desirable thing, and he urged the Federal Government to do its utmost to bring in that immigrant. But he added, with the common sense that characterizes him, that when the immigrant reaches here he must be retained. We all agree as to the necessity of not having our efforts annulled by losing our immigrants to the country to the south of us. But there the question arises: why is he going? My honourable friend has spoken of an exodus from the Canadian West, and from other provinces as well, over the line to the south of us. So long as that exodus continues we may be bringing immigrants to this country who will simply join in that procession. I take it for granted that there are conditions which work against us. My honourable friend has said that this country, with its cold winters, is a hard and costly country to live in. But these conditions have prevailed during the last fifteen years, and yet our population has not moved away so rapidly, and has seemed to be contented in the West. I believe the whole question is one of the remuneration of farm work. If a farmer finds that he is working at a loss, naturally he will try to go elsewhere, to some place where he may make a profit. The situation has been such that he has found that with all his labour, transportation costs and living costs being so high, he had a deficit at the end of the year. This condition must be righted. Can this Government do anything towards reducing the cost of transportation? It comes down in the last analysis namely to a question of wages. We have but 8 per cent of the total railway men of North America, and we are dependent upon the decisions made on the other side. What will the United States do? Will they be able, with their Government, to dominate the situation and assert the will of the people as against men who want to thrive by forcing their fellow men to pay them a higher wage than is reasonable? The near future will tell. The same question applies to the case of the wages of the miners.

I have suggested to the Quebec Government a scheme for the purpose of endeavouring to retain our people on this side of the line, and it has been to a certain extent put into practice. I suggested to the Minister of Immigration and Colonization of Quebec that a circular be sent to the parson or priest, to the secretary-treasurer of the municipality, and to the postmaster, telling them of the necessity of helping to retain our people on this side of the line, and asking them, by simply returning the postal card which accompanies the circular, to notify the Department if So-and-so, or the son of So-and-so, is speaking of leaving this country and crossing over to the United States. That is not a costly organization, and I am wondering if the other provinces could not do likewise, so that four or five important persons coming into daily contact with the people of their municipality or township would send to either the provincial or the federal department the names of any persons disposed to leave the district. The Government will then have an opportunity to influence such persons to remain in this country by offering to them the advantages we have to offer, in land grants or otherwise. Why should not the advantages offered to strangers be offered to our own people? I think there is some merit in the very simple suggestion that I have made. It strikes me that it would have the further advantage of giving the Governments, federal and provincial, an idea of the reason for that movement southward. They would engage in correspondence with persons who were thinking of leaving or were somewhat uncertain or dissatisfied, and it is probable that in the multiplicity of answers received we would obtain a fair general view as to the reasons why people leave their own country. There is no doubt that the profitableness of agriculture and the settlement of our land are one and the same problem.

My honourable friend opposite seemed scandalized that the present Government had engaged in negotiations with our friends to the south with a view to replacing or renewing the Rush-Bagot treaty limiting war vessels and armaments on the Great Lakes. He criticized the matter and the form. My honourable friend does not seem to have noticed the evolution that has taken place in the increased powers of the Dominion. I would ask him to read the address delivered before the American Historical Association at New Haven on the 20th of December, 1922, by his former leader, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden. He will see there—or he will be reminded, for he was a member of the Administration—that we had outgrown the stage at which we needed to ask London to attend to our business in matters that were specially Canadian. I must express my admiration for the work that my honourable friend's Government succeeded in doing in 1920, in making arrangements with Great Britain and the United States to allow of Canadian representation at Washington. This was the statement which was made, I think, by Sir Robert Borden, if not by his successor, in May, 1920, to the House of Commons:

> As a result of recent discussions an arrangement has been concluded between the British and Canadian Governments to provide more complete representation at Washington of Canadian interests than hitherto existed. Accordingly it has been agreed that His Majesty, on advice of his Canadian Ministers, shall appoint a Minister Plenipotentiary who will have charge of Canadian affairs and will at all times be the ordinary channel of communication with the United States Government in matters of purely Canadian concern, acting upon instructions from, and reporting direct to, the Canadian Government. In the absence of the Ambassador, the Canadian Minister will take charge of the whole embassy and of the representation of Imperial as well as Canadian interests. He will be accredited by His Majesty to the President with the necessary powers for the purpose.

This new arrangement will not denote any departure either on the part of the British Government or of the Canadian Government from the principle of the diplomatic unity of the British Empire.

The need for this important step has been fully realized by both Governments for some time. For a good many years there has been direct communication between Washington and Ottawa, but the constantly increasing importance of Canadian interests in the United States had made it apparent that Canada should be represented there in some distinctive manner, for this would doubtless tend to expedite negotiations, and naturally first hand acquaintance with Canadian conditions would promote good understanding. In view of the peculiarly close relations that have always existed between the people of Canada and those of the United States, it is confidently expected as well that this new step will have the very desirable result of maintaining and strengthening the friendly relations and co-operation between the British Empire and the United States.

This is the action, not only of Sir Robert Borden's Government, but of my honourable friend himself, and now he expresses surprise that the Canadian Government has been in conference with the Washington authorities over matters distinctly and especially Canadian.

My honourable friend has spoken somewhat in disparagement of negotations between the various parties interested in the waters of the Lake of the Woods, which is an international lake. I would urge him to wait until these matters are brought directly to the attention of the House of Commons and the Senate, to be discussed on their merits.

I have already mentioned the fact that the Prime Minister has not taken upon himself the whole credit for the removal of the cattle embargo. I know there have been good labourers in that field for a number of years. I would remind the honourable gentleman, however, that it is due to the vigorous action of our Canadian representative in London, Mr. Larkin, and to the presence there of Mr. Fielding and Mr. Lapointe in November and December last, that the Imperial Parliament decided to take up the question and put through an Act. Considerable pressure was exercised upon the Imperial authorities to have the matter deferred, and I may say—and I know whereof I speak—that it is due to the vigorous representations of our Canadian representatives and our Ministers abroad, as well as to the action of the Government here, that the matter has been brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

My honourable friend has spoken of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways. He said it was a pity that the board was composed of party men. My honourable friend is in error. I have not in mind at the moment the names of all the members of the other board, but all those I knew were competent and honourable men. If I had their names before me I would probably say that all these men were good citizens of Canada. There was, however, a reason for removing them, just as there was a reason for selecting a president for the new national railway from outside of Canada, or at all events outside of the two systems that will form the Canadian National Railways. For the purpose of maintaining harmony and giving full scope to the authority of the new directors it was necessary that they should not belong to one system or the other. That was a very important consideration on the part of the Government in removing the old directors, the selection of a new president was made for a similar reason.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the honourable gentleman to which division Mr. Hobson, a strong Liberal of Hamilton, belongs?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: He voted for you in the last election.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: I do not mind that.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: To which group did he belong—the Canadian Northern or the Grand Trunk?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I could not say: I am speaking in general terms. But I may say that the few men who will bring their influence to bear on the board of management, and who are not railway men, compare favourably in stature with those who have gone, and among the men who comprise the board I know of only one who has been in active politics. That is Mr. Sinclair, who, besides being a legal authority, is a shipbuilder and has had considerable experience. A representative from each province was not chosen, but one was taken from the Maritime Provinces, another from Quebec, and another from Ontario. They will simply bring to the Board the experience they have had in their own regions. The individual members will be submerged in the whole board and be guided by the technical men upon it. But it will not be a bad thing for the Maritime provinces to have on the board a member who can explain the point of view of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and express the grievances and the sentiments of the people. It will be the wisdom of the entire Board that will rule. I am convinced that the board as it stands cannot be accused of being a body of partisans. I know Mr. Ernest Decarie, of Montreal, who with three other men administered the city of Montreal. Those Conservatives in this Chamber who have seen him at the helm will bear me out when I say that he administered the affairs of the city of Montreal with a firm hand —some said, with an iron hand—but with a single eye to the public weal. I am reminded that that gentleman has the entire respect of the community, is of independent means, and has an independent mind. My honourable friend has admitted that Mr. Stewart, of Winnipeg, is an ideal representative from that district.

Reverting to the all important question of immigration, I desire to inform my honourable friend that Australia, according to figures I have been given, received 80,000 immigrants last year, but lost 70,000 by emigration.

We are to have a revision of the Bank Act. My honourable friend says it would be a fine thing to have a statement showing the various systems prevailing throughout the world, and we should be made aware of the suggestions for improvement that are being offered. No one is better posted than he is with regard to those suggestions. They come mostly from the West—from his own section. But I may say this, that when the Bank Act comes to this Chamber it will be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and will be there studied by competent men, most of whom understand banking and who will devote their best experience and judgment to the framing of a good Bank Act. I remember that the Commons tried for three years to prepare a revised Insurance Act, but when the measure came to the Senate our Banking and Commerce Committee studied it for five or six weeks and brought forth an Act which is a credit to Canada. The Commons accepted it, I think, without the addition of a comma. I am sanguine that the work of the Senate on the Bank Act will be on a par with the work which was done on the Insurance Act.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Will it be introduced in the Senate?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not think so.

My honourable friend (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) spoke in conclusion of the desirability of economy. He had better wait and see the results of the fiscal year ending the 31st March before expressing an opinion. I have been clamouring, day in and day out, for economy. I could preach it all the more easily, perhaps that I did not have to practice it personally, having no department. But I may say that if the Senate is in favour of economy it has had a very earnest champion in your humble servant.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Bennett, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ADDRESS IN REPLY

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the Session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Hardy for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. W. H. BENNETT: Honourable gentlemen, in rising to resume the debate on the Address, I wish, along with the other gentlemen who have preceded me, to tender my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address. The mover is a new member of this House, but I am sure he gives evidence of what his usefulness will be here. As to our honourable friend from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Turgeon), as he is an old parliamentarian we expected an address from him along interesting lines, and I am sure we had it, although I did not understand it, as he spoke in French.

The Speech from the Throne, it seems to me, is divided under three principal headings; and, after all, there is in effect one. There is the question of immigration, that of the standing of the agricultural interest, and that of transportation. These three subjects are so interwoven that they may well be termed a trinity of the interests of Canada.

The eastern part of Canada has its future bound up with that of the West. Last fall most men were carefully reading the newspapers to learn the crop prospects in the Northwest provinces. The reason for this was that we are interdependent. A magnificent crop in the West means a speeding up of our industries in the East, where most of our manufacturing concerns are situated. Thus interested as we are, the transportation problems of Canada should be well looked after, our agricultural interests should be carefully guarded, and our future immigration should be carried on along lines which will result in benefit to all. I propose therefore to address some remarks to the question of transportation in this country; and I shall quote from the Moncton Transcript an item on this very question that puts the whole matter in a nutshell before the public of Canada. It has regard to our enormous public debt, which aggregates about two and one-third billions of dollars, to our limited population, and to the fact that we are commencing to ask ourselves, where is it all going to end? The article in question refers to the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway, and says:

> It is high time that some plain speaking was done on this very important subject. To what purpose has Canada spent hundreds of millions in building and maintaining thousands of miles of railway, if a large portion of this is to be allowed to rust through the building of new competitive routes designed to take away traffic from the originally contemplated routes? The heavy railway deficits will continue for an indefinite period, unless the existing railway mileage is used to a much greater extent than it is to-day.

In this connection I am going to take the opportunity to make a few remarks as to Canada's position in reference to the Transcontinental railway. The unity of the Intercolonial, the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the Canadian Northern is, we are told, an accomplished fact. The operation of the Government railways during the past year has resulted in a deficit of about $60,000,000. This is a better showing than was made in the previous year, when the deficit ran to about $70,000,000. But the question is, how long can this continue or how soon may we expect it to come to an end?

Let us look at the amalgamation of the railroads, and more particularly at the Grand Trunk, which has recently come in. Let us look at the effect this will have on the transportation from the West to the East, not only of grain but of cattle and every other product of the farmers in the Western Provinces as well as of the farmers in the other provinces.

We have had in the past, and always must have, export markets, because we do not consume everything that we grow. This means, of necessity, that our market will be, as it has been in the past, in Europe to a very large extent. Therefore we must look to our transportation between the West and the East.

Let us take a retrospective glance at the transportation system of the province of Ontario. Some gentlemen here will recollect the old Northern railway, which was built at a time when it was thought to develop the country north of Toronto. That road ran from Toronto to Barrie, and from Barrie to Collingwood. It was constructed through a country that was teeming with timber, and it was also thought that it would ultimately be a means of intercourse with the Northwest. That line was constructed with English capital. In the earlier years it was believed that a system of transportation from the western states could be developed, and an elevator was constructed on the Collingwood division. The elevator is still there, and while it is a rather old one, Collingwood is in the strategic position that from there to Barrie the line, so far as grades go, is in magnificent condition, having a splendid bottom. From there the grain would have to be carried to Orillia, a distance of about 25 miles, where it would reach the main line between Midland and Montreal. In times of congestion, the Collingwood line could be resorted to, and with improved elevator facilities that line would be a very advantageous one.

Following that line was the road from Midland to Belleville, which connects with the main line of the Grand Trunk to Montreal, and the line to Port Hope. There was a time when men dreamed that Port Hope would become the rival of Toronto, and would be the greatest city on Lake Ontario. Dream as it may have been, it had one effect, and that was the development of a valuable line of railway. In due course of time, after many years, that line reached the shores of Georgian Bay at what is now Midland. What was the result? The line had passed from the hands of a private company into the hands of the Grand Trunk, and within the last thirty years they have been able to develop a grain trade between the West and Midland. Later on came the development of the trade of the Northwest. When that road was acquired by the Grand Trunk, Charles M. Hays looked forward to that branch from Midland becoming the backbone of the Grand Trunk's transportation system from the Canadian Northwest. It had many advantages. If the Grand Trunk railway had a system in the West to connect with Fort William or some other point at the head of the lakes, it could carry its grain by water to Midland, and from there over a good system of railroad to Belleville, and in the summer months it could proceed to Montreal, and in the winter months Portland could be made the objective. Although Mr. Hays, during his term of office, did not succeed in bringing that route up to the high standard which he had hoped for, because his main ambition was centred on the line between Chicago and Montreal, he always had the object in view of building up a trade route which would rival the Canadian Pacific railway from the West. He foresaw that from Montreal there could be built up not only an overseas trade but a large trade with the Eastern States.

You all know what next followed in the matter of railroad construction. It was the famous line built by Mr. Booth from this city to Parry Sound, or rather to Parry Harbour. That was a tremendous undertaking, and while in the main it was built to carry timber, nevertheless a trade was built up in the transport of grain from Chicago as well as from the Canadian Northwest.

To-day Canada has invested its millions, and has on its hands these different lines of railways. In addition to the advantage of being able to use the port of Portland during the winter months, Canada has the benefit of the port of St. John. Well might the article to which I have referred ask whether we are going to let all these systems that have cost the country millions of money rust away, and whether we are to indulge in Hudson Bay enterprises, the deepening of the St. Lawrence canals, the building of Georgian Bay canals, and all such schemes. Rather let us set ourselves to the task of developing what we now have, encouraged by knowing that nothing succeeds like success. If imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, as is said, let us look at another development of transportation from the Georgian Bay to Montreal and to St. John. As honourable gentlemen know, for many years the Canadian Pacific railway had as now a line to Owen Sound. After many years, because of its distance from Montreal, and because of the heavy grades, they constructed a line from Port McNicoll, which is some four miles distant from Midland, a line which has no superior in Canada, and over which they can haul a train of seventy cars, each carrying 1,500 bushels. Experience has proved that they made no mistake when they established that line. Last year they carried 60,000,000 bushels of grain to Montreal over that system. In six or seven years a trade to that extent has been developed, and that line has become one of the liveliest competitors to date with the Buffalo route. More than that. To-day preparations are being carried on to add 2,000,000 bushels to the capacity of the elevator at Port McNicoll, which at present has a capacity of 2,500,000 bushels. This is proof positive that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company feel that the transportation from the West can be done cheaper and more effectually via the waters of the Georgian Bay, even though in the winter months the traffic has to be carried to St. John.

In addition to the grain which is carried over that system thousands—almost hundreds of thousands—of bags of flour are carried for export at the Atlantic coast, and in the summer, when the grain from the Middle States comes in an enormous quantity, it is shipped to Montreal via this route for distribution in the Eastern States.

I am only instancing this to show the great success of the Canadian Pacific railway and in view of the fact that the people of Canada to-day own these other lines, including the one from Midland to Montreal, which is the best of all both in point of distance and in other respects. The Government should take hold of that line and develop it in order that vast quantities of Canadian grain that we have seen going by way of Buffalo from year to year should be diverted to Canadian channels.

The year before last a special committee was appointed by this House under the chairmanship of my honourable friend from the Gulf (Hon. Mr. L'Espérance), to examine into the whole question of the routing of grain. I would advise honourable gentlemen to study that report if they have not done so; for it is a report that to my mind—and I do not say this in any egotistical sense because I happened to be a member of the Committee—contains more real information on the transportation and handling of grain than perhaps any other parliamentary report that has ever been presented. When that Committee was convened the honourable gentlemen composing it made up their minds that the thing to be done was to secure only the best information possible. Therefore the witnesses who appeared before that Committee were all leaders in their several callings. For instance, Mr. Lanigan was present to give information as to the Canadian Pacific Railway and his views on transportation. Mr. Hayes appeared on behalf of the Canadian National. On the question of grain in the Northwest and its handling, we had Dr. Magill, who is doubtless as good an authority on this question as anyone in this country. On the question of shipping on the upper lakes we had Mr. Norcross; and on the question of grain and the business of grain-handling we had Mr. Richardson, of Kingston, the representative of probably the largest grain exporting firm in Canada. I will not even limit the comparison to Canada; his firm will compare favourably with perhaps any in the United States. I shall later refer to some parts of the evidence that is given in the report of the Senate Committee.

My contention at the outset is this, that, having regard to the enormous investment we have made in the Collingwood division, the Parry Sound division, and the Midland division, and, having demonstrated what business they can do in competition with the Buffalo route and with the C.P.R., we ought to endeavour to make them more efficacious than they are to-day. Remember, it is not merely the handling of the grain that goes by the Canadian Pacific railway that makes that branch a profitable one; it is also the fact that to the West they carry manufactured goods, not only from Canada, but from the United States as well. If you were at Port McNicoll in the summer, or, better still, in the fall of the year, when the trade is in full swing, you would see trains running in with perhaps 20 or 30 cars, all bonded, that have come through from the Eastern States; and that freight is going to our Canadian Northwest, to be distributed there. A great deal of freight, no doubt, goes up by the other route, what is known as the Algoma Branch, through Sault Ste. Marie, and is distributed through the State of Minnesota and other States in that region.

In addition to the export trade, of which I have spoken, there is an enormous trade to be developed on the Canadian railways, particularly in view of the fact that the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern have now been amalgamated. The milling industry in Canada is a large industry. There are millions of dollars invested in it, especially in the larger mills; and all over the country there are smaller mills which, in order to manufacture flour that will compare favourably with the better grades of flour made by the big mills, have to use, and do use, a sufficient quantity of Canadian Northwest grain. In the elevators at Port McNicoll, Midland and all other points on the Georgian Bay, there are millions of bushels of grain that are never exported, because they are sent to all these mills throughout the country. So there is that big trade, which is a trade that cannot go to Buffalo, because the flour would not be brought back from Buffalo to the Canadian mills.

Let me, before leaving this question, call attention to another point that I have here jotted down. The Canadian Pacific railway, and the Grand Trunk railway at its different points on the Georgian Bay, have done this: they have carried a large quantity of grain from Duluth, for a large quantity comes through the Northwestern States that does not see Buffalo at all.

Now, what has this country to prevent the rails of the Georgian Bay district rusting, as pointed out by this newspaper? We have the great port of Montreal, which has cost Canada millions of dollars to equip. We have those lines of railways coming down from the Georgian Bay. The Canadian Pacific have theirs, and they have demonstrated that they can do business and make it pay. Why, then, should not we, guided by the experience of others, and being to-day, the possessors of these railways, stimulate them to the greatest possible extent? At the town of Midland there is one elevator belonging to the Government, built by the Grand Trunk Company. Two others there are owned by private capital. One is owned by what is known as the Great Lakes Steamship Company, a Company with which the Richardsons of Kingston are closely connected. And let me mention this point in that respect, that, while this elevator that the Richardsons, or their firm, the Great Lakes Company, bought was an old building that carried about 1,000,000 bushels, yet, right in the midst of the war, and during the lifetime of the late Senator, they made a cement addition to it that holds, I think 1,500,000 bushels. This proves that the late Senator Richardson believed that a cheap and favourable route for carrying grain from the Canadian Northwest for export, and for distribution throughout Canada as well, would always be by way of the Georgian Bay and the port of Midland.

There is at Midland a third elevator. I am not quite sure as to its ownership. There was a time when a Hamilton gentleman had a large block of stock in it, but I think it is owned to-day by a company located in the city of Chicago.

What is the Government's position at Midland? Private capital has placed two large elevators there. The Government has a large one, having a capacity of 2,500,000 bushels. The harbour is the best on the Great Lakes. Never does an accident happen to vessels coming in there. The one or two points that have to be guarded against are equipped with splendid lighthouses. The result is that accidents to vessels coming in there are utterly unknown. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have brought in there 3,000,000 bushels of grain, and they also operate weekly five large boats, and they have never had an accident there. It is not necessary for the Government to make any initial expenditure for the betterment of the Georgian Bay route. Not a dollar need be spent to-day in that respect. The Grand Trunk, nothwithstanding its imperfect condition and the fact that it has grades that must be rectified, has done business to the extent of 40,000,000 bushels this year. Had there been proper elevator accommodation on the Georgian Bay last fall, it is probable that 75,000,000 or 100,000,000 bushels of grain which found its way to Buffalo would have been carried to Midland; and the same is true of Port McNicoll.

Now, let us look at the head of the Lakes. What is the present position of Canada with respect to lines of railway up there? First, we have the Canadian Northern Railway coming down to Port Arthur. Then, we have the line that was built to Fort William, known as the Grand Trunk Pacific. Are we going to continue to carry grain down to those two points by those two lines of railway that have cost the country many millions of dollars, and then, to our mortification, see it shipped in vessels to Buffalo? That is the point. Buffalo is carrying a very great quantity of our Canadian grain. We should follow the example of the Canadian Pacific Railway and that of our own railways at the eastern end of the Georgian Bay. So well satisfied is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with the trade that it has developed in the carriage of grain and flour that it is very considerably extending its elevator accommodation at that point.

There is another trade that can be developed at Midland, and that is the trade to the Eastern States. I think I have referred to that before. All honourable members who have kept posted on the grain trade in the United States are aware that early in September the grain moves from the West towards the Eastern States, and there is just as good an opportunity to carry that grain over the Canadian railways via Midland as to carry it via Buffalo.

The question remains: is this Government going to allow our railway system to continue underdeveloped, or will it embrace the opportunity of going after business much more aggressively than has been done? I read the other day in a newspaper under date of January 12 an item to the effect that work on the 10,000,000-bushel elevator designed to meet the problem of grain congestion that has been insistent in the port of Montreal for the last two seasons, will be commenced early in the coming season, and that the first unit is expected to be completed before the 1923 navigation period is over. The elevator will be located at the east end of the port. The financial part of the undertaking has been met, and as soon as the winter is over the work will commence. With the present elevator accommodation in Montreal, which is, I think, about 5,000,000 bushels, and with the Government and the Harbour Board contemplating the construction of elevator accommodation for 10,000,000 bushels more, surely it is to the interest of the country to have at that port a funnel with two ends—one at which the grain may come in from the Upper Lakes, and the other for shipment only.

The advantage possessed by the Government railways from the Georgian Bay, as compared with the C.P.R., is that, after prohibitory insurance rates and the climate have stopped the export of grain from Montreal, Canada can, by its system of railways, have the opportunity of shipping out of Portland in the winter months—and we have the alternative of shipping out of St. John as well; and if it is an advantage to the American system of routing grain to have the different ports of Newport News, Philadelphia, Baltimore and New York, it is equally an advantage to us to utilize Portland as much as we can.

I have stated the general position. I have also pointed out the results that have been attained by the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and shown how similar results might be attained by the people of Canada with their railway system, if it is only developed along the proper lines. While I have been simply making statements of fact, I desire to add to these the opinions of practical men, as contained in this Committee's report, and I shall be as brief as possible. Mr. Richardson was examined by the Committee. As I have already stated, his firm is one of the largest grain-handling firms in America, and he has given evidence that he believes that a great trade could be built up from the Port of Midland to Montreal over the Government system. The Richardson firm, instead of going to Buffalo to build, provided accommodation for the handling of their grain at Midland. They have also built and they possess two or three more elevators at Fort William. Anyone who is familiar with the elevator situation at Fort William knows that almost weekly there appears an announcement that a new elevator is being constructed there by some company or other. The Government railway system and other huge concerns have immense elevator accommodation at the head of the Lakes, and are we going to stand idly by and see the grain going from those elevators to Buffalo, when private capital in this country says: "We have a better system in the Government railways, only give us a chance to develop it." That is what the Richardsons have said by the construction of their elevators; that is what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has said in like manner. There is a well-defined rumour that at a point called Victoria Harbour, across the Bay from Port McNicoll, a private company is now contemplating to build a 2½-million-bushel elevator. There is to-day in the minds of a great many persons the idea that a mistake was made in building so many elevators at the head of the Lakes. It is thought that a lighter class of elevator should have been built there, simply for the transfer of the grain into the vessels, and that there should be a great series of elevators erected on the Georgian Bay, from which shipments could be made in the winter months to various points.

Let me call the attention of the House, as briefly as I can, to Mr. Richardson's evidence. It has always been a great difficulty to preserve the identity of Canadian Northwest grain. It is said that once it disappears at Buffalo, an admixture of it may follow; but by means of the Canadian system of elevators at the head of the Lakes and the transference to those on the Georgian Bay, as well as to the one belonging to the Government at Port Colborne, the identity of the grain can be preserved. Mr. Richardson in his evidence says the very fact that it has the imprimatur of being Canadian shipped grain adds three cents a bushel to its value. When you consider that 300 or 400 million bushels of grain come out of the Northwest, and bear in mind the statement of a buyer of millions of bushels of grain that by shipping through Canadian channels you improve its value to the extent of three cents a bushel, you realize what an enormous advantage accrues to the farmers of the Canadian Northwest. That is due to the fact that there is no chance of mixture and that, whether rightly or wrongly, Canadian inspection is considered to give the grain a value of three cents more than it would have if shipped by another route.

There is another matter to which I desire to refer, namely, the fact that Montreal is the cheapest port from which to ship. That is the evidence of Mr. Richardson, who says there is no port in the United States from which you can ship grain as cheaply as from Montreal.

One other point he accentuates. I am referring to pages 131 and 132 of the Committee's report. We have so developed our trade at Montreal that we now have magnificent big liners sailing from there to the old country. Some of those liners carry as much as 120,000 bushels of grain, as stated by Mr. Richardson, and, if that quantity of grain were not in the vessels, water ballast would have to be substituted for it. It is therefore very clear that the grain must be carried from Montreal at very cheap rates. The liner has her complement of passengers, her mail subventions, and so on, and the statement is made that grain can be shipped out of Montreal much more advantageously than out of American ports.

There is another point. Owing to the development of the trade of the country, we have now coming into the port of Montreal no inconsiderable number of tramp ships, which, according to this gentleman, carry up to 288,000 bushels. During this winter, owing to the shortage of coal here, we have been importing Welsh coal. If this coal turns out to be as excellent as it is claimed to be there is no reason why we should not develop quite a trade in coal from the old country. If that were done the vessels bringing coal would return from Montreal with grain.

Mr. Richardson proceeds to say that in his view the solution of the whole difficulty is further elevator accommodation. The Government and the Commission in Montreal appear to have agreed on that point because, as I have read in the Press, they are going to build another ten-million-bushel elevator in that city. But if you have a ten-million-bushel elevator in Montreal you will need feeders at the other end. The Government has to-day at Midland the large elevator of two and a half millions bushels capacity, and it is so situated that I believe grain can be loaded in cars there as cheaply as at any other point in America. There is also plenty of land for extensions. There is a large esplanade, a mile or so in length, where trains can pass in and out without shunting. Immediately beyond this property is another large elevator owned by the Aberdeen Elevator Company. Let the Government purchase that elevator and add to it another of a million bushel capacity for loading, and they will find that they have gone a long way towards solving the problem of transporting grain through Canada.

I see that the Government is going to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the question of lake rates. I am not going to discuss that just now, but hope to have an opportunity of doing so later. What happened last fall? While the rates were high, in the main that was due to the fact that there was such congestion of elevator accommodation, not only at Buffalo but at the Georgian Bay points, that vessels carrying 400,000 or 500,000 bushels of grain were compelled to lie at the docks for a considerable time, and had to pay demurrage which increased the rates.

While I am on that point, let me say that I have seen it stated in the press, and have heard practical men argue, that there is no reason why probably 20,000,000 bushels of grain in vessels should not be brought to Georgian Bay points. and be allowed to freeze in. I formerly believed that this plan could be adopted, but last Falls' operations have caused me to change my opinion—I will tell you why. About thirty or forty miles this side of Buffalo is the old town of Erie. While I have never been there, I am told that there is a large deep bay of about seven miles in length; and that if you were there to-day you would find—I believe I am within the mark in saying this—a hundred vessels all loaded and anchored in that bay and waiting to be moved down to Buffalo in the spring of the year. If that is so, there is little or no hope of American vessels coming to the Georgian Bay, because they would prefer to go to Erie and avoid any contravention of the coasting laws.

Last fall the Canadian Government allowed American vessels to come in for the last trip and ply from the points at the head of the lakes to points on the Georgian Bay. I do not think that action had any appreciable effect, however, as I do not believe there was an American vessel tied up in Midland last fall.

I refer again to the evidence of Mr. Richardson. On page 132 he says that the shipment of grain by the Canadian route is three cents a bushel cheaper than by the American route. That is a very important factor. Further than that, he says he is a firm believer in the Canadian route because it has been demonstrated to him that grain originating in either Chicago or Duluth can be carried to Montreal and there exported. If any honourable gentleman will ask the authorities of the port of Montreal, I think he will find that a large porportion of the 152,000,000 bushels of grain that went through Montreal was American grain.

Now I come to what is probably the most crucial point in Mr. Richardson's evidence. He says that the route from the head of the lakes to Midland is beter than the route to Buffalo. By that, I take it, he means from the financial point of view. A vessel coming to Midland is on the high seas, so to speak, all the way, and is running at top speed; but a vessel going to Buffalo, as soon as she reaches Sarnia and enters the narrow and congested waters from there to Detroit, has to lessen her speed. A glance at the map will show the situation. Take two vessels leaving Detour, the point where they emerge from the Sault channels into Lake Huron, at the same time, one going to Midland and one going to Buffalo. You will find that the vessel going to Midland would make three trips for every two trips the other vessel would make to Buffalo. This, of course, shows the manifest advantage of shipping by Midland. Another point to remember is the fact that the bulk of the grain does not move until late in the Fall. What is the result? I have a newspaper clipping of the 4th of October, which I will read:

> Two giant steel freighters, the James E. Davidson and the Arcturus, collided near Mama-Juda Light, 12 miles down the Detroit River, in a dense fog late last night, and the latter was so badly damaged that it sank. The Davidson would have gone down also had its nose not been run on the channel bank.
> The Davidson struck the Arcturus just aft amidship, crushing in its steel side for some distance. The Davidson's bow was stove in, and water began rushing into the forepeak.
> The Arcturus' Captain managed to get his ship out of the channel before it filled and settled. The boat's deck and upper works are all above water. Nobody on either ship was injured.
> The Davidson, which is owned by G. A. Tomlinson of Cleveland, was downbound with iron ore. It is 504 feet in length. The Arcturus is owned by the Interlake Steamship Company of Cleveland, and is 514 feet long. It was upbound with about 10,000 tons of coal.

That is one reason why the rate to the Georgian Bay ports is cheaper. It is well known to men conversant with the lakes that sometimes you may see fifty or one hundred vessels tied up in Detroit channels because of fog or snow storms. I presume that these are some of the considerations that led Mr. Richardson to make the statement that actual experience had proved to him that the Canadian route was three cents cheaper.

At page 135 Mr. Richardson dwelt on the great advantage that it was to Canada to have a port available at Portland. At Newport News, a short distance south of New York, I have seen a large number of freight vessels lying at anchor; they were tramp ships, and were waiting for cargoes; but it was cheaper to leave them lying at anchor in Newport News than to take them up to New York City and pay the dockage. That demonstrates the fact that, as compared with Canada, the United States has a great number of tramp ships.

We should also recollect that when the port of Montreal is closed, or when insurance rates become almost prohibitory, Portland is still open. If tramp vessels will wait to get cargoes at New York, why should they not wait at Portland? I wish that Portland were part of Canada, but it is not; but this country owns a railway and docks and elevators there, and when the port of Montreal is closed we have the choice of doing no business at all there or of doing it by way of Portland. Large quantities of grain will not be held in Montreal all winter; the dealer wants to have it at some point where he can ship it. Portland has the further advantage that vessels coming to the United States and discharging their cargoes are available for return cargoes. So you will find, Mr. Richardson says, that Portland is the logical winter port of Canada.

Further on in his evidence he accentuates what I have already said about the trade in the Eastern States being handled through Montreal, the grain having come down by the Midland-Montreal route. He also mentions the fact that a large trade in American grain could be developed.

Another matter which may have a far-reaching effect on the use of the Government railways is this. As Mr. Richardson says, at page 140, the tendency to-day is to ship less flour and more wheat to England, the reason assigned for this tendency being that in England large grain elevators and very fine flour mills have been erected, because of the fact that the mixed population in the old country are not in the market for the high-grade flours that we ship from Canada. Our wheat is blended with the soft wheat from the Argentine and the United States, in order to produce an intermediate grade of flour. If that is the case, we are going to have increased shipments of wheat and decreased shipments of flour; and the Government should take cognizance of that situation when making preparations for the handling of this grain trade.

I am going to quote briefly from what Mr. Norcross, Manager of the Canada Steamship Companies, says. He is well acquainted with the business, not only on the lakes but on the ocean. At page 153 he expresses the opinion that what is wanted is more elevator accommodation at the port of Montreal. He says they now have a capacity of nine million, and should have a capacity of five million more. Further than that, he says that at Montreal they have a large quantity of American grain—that is, the early grain to which I referred, the product of Kansas and other western States. He also expresses the opinion that with proper elevator facilities at Montreal and Midland, that route would be better than the Buffalo route. He emphasized the point that the Midland route was much the better from the insurance point of view, and that as insurance rates out of Montreal are higher than they are out of New York, advantage should be taken of every opportunity to make up this handicap. He claimed that the insurance to Midland or to Georgian Bay points was 30 cents on the hundred, while to Montreal via canals it was 60 cents. At page 162 he said that the rate to Port Colborne, which point corresponds to Buffalo, at certain times was 2¼ cents, while to Midland it was only 1¾ cents.

Now, that is all the evidence with which I am going to weary the House. I have quoted it because it shows the opinions of gentlemen who hold positions in these transportation companies, gentlemen who must know their business, and to whose opinions a great deal of weight should be given.

Before I forget it, let me refer to another matter in which the Government is gravely concerned. We have a line of communication between Montreal and Quebec. Enormous amounts of money have been spent in harbour improvements at Quebec, where there is a large elevator of 2,000,000 bushels capacity. Since it was built it has done practically nothing. There is no reason why the business should not be handled at Quebec when there is a surplus of grain at Montreal. The cars could very easily be moved down to that port. We have millions of dollars invested, and surely we are not going to let the rails rust, while we go into wild-cat schemes of transportation.

The daily press from time to time has commented on the fact that a large quantity of grain is being shipped by way of the Pacific. It is being demonstrated that it can be carried that way. I understand that upwards of 20,000,000 bushels was carried that way last year. The people of the Pacific coast are asking for more elevator accommodation, and if they can demonstrate that shipment through their ports will be a success, they are entitled to have that accommodation. It may be possible to ship grain that way from Alberta and the western part of Saskatchewan.

One thing we must remember is the fact that there never was a time when the railways were in such jeopardy as they are in to-day. The history of railways in the United States proves, and it is being proved in Canada as well, that in the summer months thousands of people who formerly rode on the railways are now riding in automobiles. This is a serious matter. And when it comes down to the question of freight, let me say that, although the town in which I live is a hundred miles from the city of Toronto, and although the roads are very indifferent, nevertheless huge trucks carry some of the products of our planing mills in competition with the railways; and any gentleman who is engaged in mercantile life can tell you that tons of freight are carried by trucks from the city of Toronto and distributed among the towns within an area of sixty to seventy-five miles. Any man living within 100 miles of Toronto, unless his furniture was very expensive would not think of moving it otherwise than by placing it on a truck to have it taken down to the city. Our railways are hit hard in respect to freights and passenger traffic, and what are we going to do about it? There is only one thing for us to do, and that is to devote ourselves to the effort to invest as little more as possible and to utilize to the very best advantage that which we have.

I did intend making a few remarks about the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway, but, as this is a subject that is practically in the air, I will reserve my remarks on it for another occasion. What folly it is to talk about the deepening of the St. Lawrence! Even if millions of dollars are spent for that purpose, how are you going to change the face of nature? How can you bring down to Montreal and other ports in June the wheat that is shipped across the Atlantic in November? The wheat would not be ripe in June, and if the St. Lawrence canals were open, the vessels could not get the grain, because there is not much available then.

At the time when the deepening of the St. Lawrence was first discussed it was said that ships would go up to the head of the Great Lakes and would come down with cargoes of grain for England. What could be more farcical than a procession of ships going to England and returning light? If all the grain of this country were carried over to England in tramp vessels, they would return with little cargo. The tramp vessels now available are not able to get anything like adequate return freights. A liner, as Mr. Richardson and other witnesses have pointed out, will always carry out of Montreal cheaper.

Last session this matter was discussed by my honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), who showed that the estimated cost of $250,000,000 was a mere bagatelle. It is idle to talk to-day of the deepening of the St. Lawrence Canal. I do not believe that with the public debt as high as it is, this Government will be insane enough to plunge into any such scheme. I think they will be disposed rather to give the existing modes of transportation at least a fair chance.

I would ask the House to bear in mind this prediction, that when the Welland Canal is deepened Canada will find to its mortification that it has made the most colossal mistake it has ever made, and we shall see Oswego and Ogdensburg built up at the expense of Montreal. Can anyone tell me that when, through the deepening of the Welland canal, a vessel with a capacity of half a million bushels can be taken to Oswego, with its proximity to New York city, where there will be a procession of boats waiting to be loaded for England, the grain is not going to take that course? There is also a twelve-foot barge canal at Oswego, from there to New York. It is, I believe, the greatest act of folly ever committed by Canada to deepen that Welland canal. I remember one day when I happened to be in that neighbourhood in New York state, I engaged in conversation with a gentleman who turned out to be one of the engineers on the canal. I professed utter ignorance of the undertaking. I said: "Why, you could cut a new canal across there in Canada near the Welland, and then bring the big boats right down to Ogdensburg." "Yes," he said, "the United States would do that, but it would be going through Canadian territory, and Canada would not allow us to do it, or we would cheerfully pay for it ourselves." It has often been said that the people of the United States would willingly pay half the cost of the Welland canal to-day. Any man who knows it and who has been to Oswego knows that since the deepening of the Welland canal was started, the value of real estate in that vicinity has appreciated to a great extent.

Time will tell, but I think that for a number of years, there is no danger of this Government, or any other Government, tackling this question of the deepening of the St. Lawrence canals. Always remember this, that even if the St. Lawrence waterway were deepened, that would be of no use at the time when the rush of grain comes in. The vessels could not be taken past Montreal anyway. Here is a system which Mr. Richardson declares is better—the use of the railways at present owned by the Government. And here is a corresponding system, invested in by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think we may as well postpone any further remarks on the deepening of the St. Lawrence.

There would be one great advantage, and a very manifest advantage, in having increased elevator accommodation on the Georgian Bay. No railway system that is operated with due regard to wholesome economy can have enough cars to carry every bushel of grain offered if during the summer months the cars must be placed on the sidings. There are at present on the Georgian bay at least three Government-owned elevators, and I am inclined to think that another one there, called the Aberdeen, is also the property of the country. Now, if you were in the position of being able, late in the fall of the year, to store upwards of 10,000,000 bushels of grain in elevators there, that grain could be moved out in the winter months. When that grain was lying there in the elevators, cars could be hurried back to bring on other carloads.

I thank the House for its indulgence in listening to my remarks. It may be said that this is a matter of local interest, concerning that part of the country in which I live; but, in concluding, I would point out that Mr. Charles M. Hays, on the occasion of his first visit to Midland, when I called on him as a matter of courtesy, had firmly fixed in his mind the idea that there should be a system for transporting a great portion of the grain of the Canadian Northwest, and the Western States as well, from the West through to the East by way of that Midland division of the railway. While the matter occurs to my mind, let me tell the House that there was in Canada a time—perhaps the honourable gentleman who leads this House knows of it, as his friends were then in power—when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Company appealed to the Government of Canada—to do what?—To purchase the Midland line of railway. That was before the C.P.R. had built their line. Mr. Tarte was the Minister. It was urged that the Government of Canada should purchase the line in Midland to Peterborough, make it a line of the best possible grade, and continue it on from there to Belleville; and it was proposed that the two railways, the Grand Trunk and the C.P.R., should build their elevator accommodation at Midland and use that road in common, as tenants under the Government of Canada. Had that project been carried out at the time, this country would have been saved millions of dollars and would have the finest system of transportation on the continent for grain, not only from the great North-West of Canada, but from the Western States as well. I do not know what happened, but the plan fell through, and the result was that, left as they were to their own devices, the C.P.R. had to proceed with the building of their own line.

Now that the Government have these railway systems on their hands, it is a question whether they will allow them to do little trade and spend millions of dollars on new schemes that may from time to time be projected and promoted. For my part, I say, take heed to the advice that is given by this Moncton paper and use the present systems.

A gentleman has come to Canada to undertake the management of the Canadian Government Railways. He has had considerable experience, according to what we read in the newspapers. It has been stated by the Prime Minister of Canada, and by this gentleman himself, that he has an absolutely free hand in the management of these lines. I should feel flattered if the honourable leader of this House, who is a member of the Government, would discuss this whole question with Sir Henry Thornton, and, whether he agrees with these views or not, would place them before him.

I would ask the honourable leader of the House to remember that the honourable gentleman sitting beside him (Hon. Mr. Béique) is a Director of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I would suggest that he ask for his advice regarding the success of the C.P.R. line from Georgian Bay. If it has been satisfactory to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, why should not a similar line be a success in the Canadian Government system? True, the increasing of elevator accommodation will cost money, but we have the railways, and, although it may be a matter of one, two, three, or four million dollars more of expenditure, it is better for Canada to concentrate on that line from Midland to Montreal and make it what Mr. Hays thought it could be made, the proper transportation route from East to West, and make it, as the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk, when Mr. Tarte was Minister, wished it to be,—a Government route in connection with two railway systems. Speaking as a Canadian and as a member of this honourable House, I hope that the Government, through the General Manager, Sir Henry Thornton, may be able at the close of next year to show, instead of a deficit of $60,000,000, at least an even break. Sir Henry Thornton has a reputation as a railway man to sustain. He is to be paid a handsome salary. I believe I interpret the feelings of every honourable gentleman on this side of the House in stating that our only desire is to do everything possible to tender to Sir Henry Thornton, what he has invited—and, I think, honestly invited—any suggestions that may be offered, from whatever point of the country they may come, so as to render the great task he has undertaken as easy as possible. I thank you.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, if no other member is disposed to address the House now, I beg to move on behalf of the honourable member from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) that the debate be now adjourned, to be resumed by him at the next sitting. The honourable gentleman from De-Lanaudière has prepared some remarks upon the subject before us, but he has been called away to Montreal for a very important engagement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We could entertain that motion at the present moment only in the event of no other member being disposed to address the House.

The Hon. THE SPEAKER: If no other honourable gentleman wants to address the House, I will put the motion made by the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche).

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 6, at 8 o'clock p.m.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ADDRESS IN REPLY

The Senate resumed from Friday, February 2, consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the Session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Hardy for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, my first words will be words of congratulation to the mover and the seconder of the Address. The mover, in very clear diction, speaking like one who had been accustomed for many years to speak in public, made a carefully prepared and very interesting address.

He spoke of that very wonderful monument that is to be erected on Vimy Ridge—a monument which, he says, will be the finest in Europe. It will be a very fine monument if it is. May I suggest to those who will have to do with the erection of it that they might well imitate what is done in Italy and other continental countries where there are beautiful monuments. The plan is made and a temporary monument, an exact replica of what the monument itself is to be, is made of stucco or some other cheap material and is allowed to remain up for two or three years in a public place. During that time, not only the people of the locality, but artists and other visitors, examine it and ascertain whether it suits the surroundings. There is everything to be gained by adopting such a method with regard to the Vimy monument. As this will be a wonderful memorial and will last for ages, it is important not to make any mistake with it. I remember seeing in Florence, Italy, a beautiful monument which, on closer inspection, I found to be nothing but stucco and canvas and wood,—a temporary erection, but painted to look exactly like a real monument. I expressed my astonishment, and was told that this temporary construction was there on approbation. After two or three years if people are all satisfied that the proposed monument is exactly suitable to the locality; then it is erected in stone, bronze, or marble.

It has been of great advantage to Canada to have at our disposal a man like the First Commoner. The Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux was asked by the Government to proceed to France and to obtain from the French Government the right to purchase, or if necessary, even to expropriate, in the name of Canada, about 100 acres of land for the purpose of erecting thereon a suitable monument. When Mr. Lemieux met the President of France and told him the purpose of his mission, the President said: "No, we will not allow Canada to purchase such territory, but France, out of gratitude to the Canadian people, will cede you the land in perpetuity." And Mr. Lemieux returned to Canada with the title to the land in his pocket; it was not 100 acres, but 250 acres that France gave to Canada.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux was well qualified for this undertaking in many respects. If his only qualification had been that he had lost his only son in the war, which would certainly appeal to the President of France, the Premier, and the other authorities, we could not have sent a better representative. He had had experience in diplomacy. We all remember that at one time he was sent on a most delicate mission to Japan. A proud people, the Japanese. Before Mr. Lemieux departed on his mission, a colleague of ours, the member for Brome (Hon. Mr. Foster), desiring that the first Canadian to go abroad as an ambassador should go from Canada, not as representing one political party only, but the whole country, invited to the Mount Royal Club about 80 guests, of whom at least 60 were Conservatives, to a function in honour of Mr. Lemieux, so that he might feel that in this mission he had behind him the entire support of the Canadian people. He went to Japan, and, as you all know, succeeded by his tact and diplomacy in making an agreement with the Japanese Government whereby immigration from Japan would be restricted. That was many years ago, perhaps fifteen or sixteen years, yet up to the present time there has not been, so far as I know, any serious complaint. It was a particularly difficult mission, because Japan was an ally of Great Britain, and one of the conditions of the alliance was that the citizens of either country should have access to the other.

At another time Mr. Lemieux was sent to South Africa to represent Canada. On the same occasion His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught represented the Imperial Government. It was at the time when the union of the South African colonies was brought about. The Boers were naturally attracted to Hon. Mr. Lemieux, because they had but recently assumed a position somewhat analogous to that of the French Canadians. England had taken their country, just as Canada had been ceded to England. The newspapers of South Africa at that time stated that Mr. Lemieux was a great orator. Those who have sat with him in another place know how gifted he is, not only in the French language, which he speaks perfectly, but also in the language of Shakespeare. After one of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's famous speeches, the Hon. Edward Blake, then leader of the Opposition, declared:

> It is the crowning proof of French domination. My honorable friend, not content with having for this long time in his own tongue borne away the palm of parliamentary eloquence, has invaded ours, and in that field has pronounced a speech which, in my humble opinion, merits this compliment, because it is the truth, that it was the finest parliamentary speech ever pronounced in the Parliament of Canada since Confederation.

Those words might admirably apply to the First Commoner of this country to-day, for I am sure that on many occasions in the other House he has made the most eloquent speeches.

I desire to offer my congratulations also to the seconder of the Address, the honourable gentleman from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Turgeon). He spoke in a language which, I fear, every one in this room did not understand. Some honourable members may have missed something. But have patience. The honourable gentleman speaks in English just as well as he does in French, and if he makes such speeches in this Chamber as he did in another place, you will become perfectly convinced that he is, like the mover of the Address, an acquisition to this House. The honourable gentleman is the proud father of very distinguished sons. He has two sons who have been cabinet ministers. One of them was a cabinet minister in Alberta for several years. The other was Attorney General of Saskatchewan for a long time, and is to-day a member of the Supreme Court in that Province. It is certainly something to be proud of. I only wish that my boys could achieve such success as the honourable gentleman's sons have done.

We welcome both the mover and the seconder as members of the Senate, and I am sure you will all agree with me that they are valuable acquisitions.

The honourable leader of the Opposition, the honourable member from Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) spoke of the Rush-Bagot Treaty. I entirely agree with him, as I have often agreed with the honourable gentleman in the past twenty years. I am very much in favour of letting well enough alone. That Treaty has been good for a hundred years and more, and what better could we ask? I agree with the honourable gentleman also when he says that any such Treaty should be negotiated through the ordinary diplomatic channels, that is, through the British Ambassador. What about our Canadian Ambassador? Well, he is not at Washington—and he should not be there either. However, I think it is quite right, if Canada is to enter into a treaty with a foreign nation, that it should be done through the Ambassador. But there is no hurry, and there is no objection to leaving untouched the treaty or pact that has stood us in good stead for over a century. We may as well leave it alone for a few years more.

Coming now to a familiar subject, the National Railways, I am sorry to observe that the honourable member from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid), Minister of Railways in a former Administration, is not at present in his seat, because he would appreciate what is said on this subject and could correct me if I am in error. The National railways in 1920, when we were operating 14,000 miles of road, had the deficit of $70,000,000. Dividing 70,000,000 by 14,000, you find that on every mile of that road from one end of Canada to the other there was a deficit of $5,000. If the average deficit was $5,000 a mile, on some miles it must have been more. We all remember the days when the gross receipts of the C.P.R. were around $4,000 a mile, but still it was paying 10 per cent dividends on its stock. How that a deficit of $5,000 a mile on every mile of the National railways occurred has always been a puzzle to me, and I would like to know—and I am sure the people of Canada would like to know—where the leak was, because it seems like an impossibility.

It is only by comparison, honourable gentlemen, that you can realize the fact. For the purpose of comparison let us take the Matane Railway, which, by the way, belongs to an honourable member of this House, the honourable gentleman from Renfrew (Hon. Mr. O'Brien). The Matane Railway runs from Mont Joli to Matane, a distance of 40 miles. The gross receipts of that railway were $3,000 a mile making $120,000 in all. I have travelled over that railway. Indeed, the courtesy was extended to me of travelling over it in a special train. The cost of operating that railway was $2,000 a mile anually, and the company have $1,000 to the good on every mile, instead of a deficit; and it is in the same district where the I.C.R. is supposed to have a deficit of $5,000 a mile. Now, deducting from the $120,000 the $80,000 that is required to pay the cost of operation, maintenance and all other expenses, there remains for the honourable Senator from Renfrew $40,000, which gives him a little more than 4 per cent on his investment in that road. There is a private road and private operation as compared with Government operation in the same locality.

If the Matane railroad could be allowed the deficit of the I.C.R., namely, $5,000 a mile, it would earn on the 40 miles $200,000, and, after the cost of operation, $80,000, was deducted, there would remain $120,000, and our colleague (Hon. Mr. O'Brien) would be getting 12 per cent on his investment. These are absolute facts.

Going down the Intercolonial a little farther to a station called Matapedia, you find there a railway extending along the north shore of the Baie des Chaleurs called the Quebec Oriental. That railroad is exactly 100 miles in length, and runs from about a mile and a half beyond New Carlisle. That road was operated in 1900. The total receipts of the road in 1900 were $33,000 for the 100 miles, and the total expenditure was $34,000, or, to be more exact, $34,020. There was a deficit of $1,020. There was no $5,000 a mile deficit. That was in the year 1900. The receipts of that road to-day under private ownership are $300,000. They have multiplied ten times in the last twenty years. The railway has given a good service to the people and has never cost one cent to the taxpayers of this country. Now the gross earnings are $3,000 a mile annually. The cost of operation is $2,500. That leaves a profit of $500 a mile, or $50,000 over the whole line. That provides ballast, new ties, etc., and improves the condition of the road.

Going from New Carlisle to Gaspé, another 102 miles, you find a road very much in the same condition. The gross receipts are about $300,000, or $3,000 a mile. It is kept in repair and in efficient operation.

Now, if you apply that deficit of the Government roads to those 200 miles of railway, you have $1,000,000. The total receipts of these two roads are only $600,000. Therefore, if you are going to spend the amount of the deficit, why not apply it in that province as well as you do in other provinces? Supposing $1,000,000 were applied there, and $600,000 would do all the business. The owners of the road would put $400,000 into their pockets, and they could afford to carry all the passengers and every ton of freight for nothing. That is private ownership. Now, it appears that this Government is going into the railroad business. We are expected to give a fair trial to Government ownership. If there is one country in the world where that experience should not be required it is Canada. We have given a fair trial to the I.C.R., to the best of my knowledge, for the last 50 years. If you want to get anywhere you will have to give the other roads a trial of one hundred years, for after fifty years we are still having a trial with the Intercolonial railway, and are trying to make both ends meet. It never paid a coupon on its bonds: still we are having a trial.

Just look at what the Intercolonial railway did for the Maritime Provinces. It stunted the growth of those provinces. There was no initiative, no encouragement, no building up of hotels, as was done by the Canadian Pacific railway, or as other private concerns have done. And what do you see? The sun does not shine upon a fairer land than Nova Scotia—the Annapolis valley for instance; still, that province has been losing in its representation in the House of Commons and will lose still further after this census, simply because it has the curse of Government ownership throughout the province. It is said that Nova Scotia contains twenty-five per cent of all the coal in sight on God's earth. Then, too, it has its fisheries. It has everything; but the encumberance of Government ownership has stunted its growth.

Then, take New Brunswick, with its fine forests, its great fisheries and its good agricultural land. Where is New Brunswick? It is losing too.

Prince Edward Island has excellent agricultural lands, there are fisheries all around the island, and there are the famous Malpecque oysters in Malpecque Bay, the finest in the world. Prince Edward Island has all these things, but it is losing population. When I first came to Parliament I think Prince Edward Island had six members; then there were five; now there are four. There are as many Senators from that province as there are members of the other House.

The Montreal Gazette yesterday morning contained just a short article, which I will read:

Rail Operations Costly for United States. Losses Sustained From War-Time Operations Estimated at $1,800,000,000

Washington, D.C., February 3.—Losses sustained by the United States Government from war-time operation of railroads and its after-math of earnings, guarantees and damage settlements, will total approximately $1,800,000,000, according to data made available to-day for the first time in a report by James C. Davis, director-general of railroads, transmitted to Congress by President Harding.

Mr. Davis' estimates are based on the showing actually made in liquidation of accounts between the Government and corporate owners of 80 per cent of the railroad mileage, which the Government took over.

Losses in direct operation of the roads and in the later settlement of capital investment and other claims are expected to reach a total of $1,250,000,000. To this is added a sum of between $525,000,000 and $600,000,000, which has or will be paid by the commission to short line railroads and to class one carriers. This last amount includes payment under the guarantee given the roads by Congress of earnings during the six months of 1920, just after the Government relinquished the properties.

Oh, a Government in business is a fine thing. For some reason or other certain Congressmen with no personal knowledge of the management of large industrial concerns, or even small ones, for that matter, want the United States to manufacture all that may be needed for the army and the navy as though private concerns, with the keen competition between them, had not assured to the public the very cheapest article. They are competing one with the other.

Railroads are not suspected of paying more than they can help for their supplies, yet how few of the thousands of articles they buy are made by the railroads themselves. Car wheels furnish a ready example. Railways consume practically all the car wheels made, yet not one railroad in a hundred manufactures its own wheels. If private railway corporations cannot manufacture in their shops as cheaply as they can buy outside, will Government operated railways manufacture in their shops cheaper than they can buy elsewhere? To merely ask the question is to answer it. The most tragic demonstration of what a Government did, was when it undertook to manage the railroad systems of the United States of America. The appalling result should suffice as an object lesson for at least a century. These railroads will not recover their previous morale and state of trained efficiency in a quarter of a century according to the best experts.

Every year the railways realize that they can buy the things they need more cheaply, for the same quality, from the manufacturers who specialize in these multitudinous articles. Not only is the effort of the Government of going into the manufacturing business a vicious one but it kills competition and cripples productive organization so that when an emergency comes and vast supplies are wanted on the instant, the Government would find itself limited for the time to what its own factories could turn out.

The Post Office Department is one which all governments assume to themselves, but any business man who has studied the proposition of handling the despatch, and delivery of mails, could do so much more efficiently in many ways, at less cost to the public and still pay better salaries. Incidentally, it would save the yearly appropriation of millions to make up the deficit in this American department. A few years ago, a successful business corporation offered to give whatever bonds the Government required to ensure perfect performance, to save the annual appropriations, to cover the deficits and to pay the Government the sum of $5,000,000 each year for the concession of handling the mail and to do all this without increasing the rate of postage on any class of mail. The American Government will do well to keep out of business, such as some of their supporters are now suggesting. I would add that Canada would do very well to leave business alone, and leave business men to handle their business without interference.

There is some talk in the Speech from the Throne about immigration. I will not have the sympathy of my honourable friends from the West in this, but the Northwest is to blame if there are no settlers coming into Canada. We do not expect very much immigration to Ontario and the other Eastern Provinces. With the farmers of the West continually complaining of their lot, complaining that help is too dear, complaining that freight rates are too high, complaining of everything under the sun, is it encouraging to immigrants? For the last ten or twelve years—ever since Laurier went out of power, at all events—there has been a similar complaint that everything was wrong, whether there was drought or frost—

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Or prohibition.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Or prohibition. I am not opposed to immigration. I would like to see this country fill up. The Northwest is a good place for immigrants; there is plenty of room there; but running down the country like that and complaining of everything will not bring immigration. Look at what took place from 1900 to 1910. What was the population in 1900? Five million and some odd. What was it in 1910? Seven million and some odd, an increase of thirty-four per cent. That was under another Administration. In those days there was no complaint. It must still be the same old Northwest, but what is the matter? The census of 1920, when another Administration was in power, showed very disappointing figures. It appeared that we had not got any more than our natural increase; that all the immigrants that came here must have left. The fact remains that under the policy that we have had there has been no increase except the natural increase, and that immigration from 1910 to 1920 has been wasted.

There is another question mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, upon which considerable has been said. I refer to the cattle embargo, which has existed for some thirty years, the British authorities accusing our cattle of being diseased. I might tell what I heard about Sir Charles Tupper—and let me say here that he was a great and wonderful man—who was High Commissioner at the time. When the British experts were contending that our cattle were infected with some disease, he and Sir William Van Horne, of the C.P.R., who was very much interested in the export of cattle to England, went up to Liverpool to see about it. On the way to the station Sir Charles Tupper stopped at a bookstore and bought the very best book on the diseases of cattle that he could get and read the book on the way, and became perfectly posted on the subject. He was not a veterinary surgeon, but he was a real doctor. He met these wonderful British veterinaries of the British Isles. He said: "Pick out any steer you want to; open it up." He rolled up his sleeves and took the lights out of the animal, and shook it in their faces and said: "What is the matter with this animal?" The consequence was that a report was made that there was no disease; but the embargo remained on last summer. While the embargo was on, I took it upon myself, unsolicited by anybody, to write to the Hon. P. C. Larkin, High Commissioner, stating that, being a strong Imperialist, I was sorry to hear the way the people of the old country were talking about that embargo, and that the Canadian people were saying they were selfish and had forgotten what we had done for them, and so on. I said: "You can use this letter if you like; show it to whom you will; the Canadian people are in no temper to have that embargo stand any longer. Let the British Government put on a duty if they like, but let them not say that our cattle are contaminated with disease when they are not." I said that Britain was glad enough to accept five hundred thousand of our boys; why should they refuse our steers? I wrote also to one of the powers behind the Throne, Lord Beaverbrook, who is a Canadian, who has a paper called the Express, and asked him to agitate in his paper for the removal of the embargo, which he did. And perhaps people generally are not aware that he is one of the men helping to govern England to-day. It is a matter of pride to know that a Canadian, born in New Brunswick, Bonar Law, is Premier of England. I believe those two Canadians will give England good government. If they only had a French Canadian with them, they would be all right.

I wrote also to Lieut.-Col. Grant Morden, and I read in the London Times the following:

Col. Grant Morden Hopes to Export Cattle to Canada

London, Oct. 31.—The only Canadian born member to take part in the recent debate in the House of Commons, which resulted in the removal of the embargo on Canadian cattle, was Lieut.-Col. W. Grant Morden.

Colonel Grant Morden said that as a breeder in a small way of pedigree cattle in England, he hoped to export to Canada. He was firmly convinced that the removal of the embargo would not interfere with his farming operations or his breeding. On the contrary, by allowing Canadian cattle to come into England, he felt sure that the result would be that more of his pedigree cattle would be purchased by Canadians. The pledge at the Imperial Conference did not refer to the stigma only. To suggest that it did was to underestimate the intelligence of Canadian statesmen. If they were going to shut the door in this way to their own people, who had gone out to the Dominions, then he was afraid of what would happen. Suppose that pledge was not carried out in its entirety, was it possible to have another Imperial Conference? Would it not be humiliating if the greatest Dominion, invited to attend such a conference, should demand a guarantee that any agreement entered into by the representatives of the Imperial Government would be carried out?

We also have Sir Campbell Stewart, who manages the London Times; we have Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express and another paper; we have Col. Grant Morden with John Bull, and the People, a paper with a circulation of 500,000, and Mr. Robert Donald, the manager of that paper, has agreed in his contract that if the circulation does not go up to a million the contract will be null and void.

Now I come to the honourable gentleman from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett), who came out so strongly against the St. Lawrence River Ship Canal. I want to say here and now that I do not believe there is a man in this House better versed in navigation on the Great Lakes than the honourable gentleman from Simcoe. He has been brought up at Midland, on the Great Lakes, and knows all about the question. I think he was perfectly right. I have read the report of his speech, and I may tell him, if he has not seen it, that the Montreal Gazette devoted an editorial of nearly a column to commenting on his speech and approving of it. I will not speak of the St. Lawrence Ship Canal; I worried the House with it for three hours last year, and that is enough. But there is great satisfaction in knowing that during the summer the Regina Board of Trade appointed a committee of six to investigate and find out whether the St. Lawrence Ship Canal would be of any use and whether it should be gone on with. The secretary wrote to me stating that they wanted to get information and that they had heard that I had made a speech on it in the Senate, and asking for six copies. I sent them six copies, and said to them that all I asked was that they should let me know their finding, favourable or not. I waited quite a little while. Then the committee made a report, which was presented to the Board of Trade of Regina, and which was adopted unanimously. I have a copy of it here. The Regina Board of Trade unanimously adopted a resolution against the undertaking. So it cannot be said any more that the people of the West are in favour of the St. Lawrence River Ship Canal.

As the honourable member from Simcoe says, the trouble is that there are not enough elevators, though there are plenty of ships. The congestion at Port Colbourne last summer was due to what? Ships had come to the elevator but could not get unloaded, and the result was that ships lay there that might have turned around and made another trip. Those ships did not make money by waiting there; if they had been able to make another trip, they might have been able to charge a lesser rate and make more money. Elevators should be built at Midland in proportion to those at Port Arthur and Fort William. The early wheat which comes from Kansas and other Western States comes through Chicago, and I am informed that that wheat could be transported to the Georgian Bay port and railroaded from there to Montreal and distributed in the Eastern States, and that it would be a much shorter rail haul than the present one.

Last summer, or towards the fall, there was a great deal of talk about profiteering on the lakes. Well, those who have stocks in those shipping companies and have had no dividends, and do not know when they will get any, even on preferred stock, know that there cannot be much profiteering. As far as combining is concerned, I think the honourable member from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) will bear me out when I say that the ship owners in his own town have no love for the ship owners in my town.

Now, a few shiploads may have been carried at 15 or 16 cents a bushel, or even 18 cents may have been obtained in one case, but these were carried in tramp steamers from the United States, the regular liners having contracted in advance when the rates were low, a long time previously. Once our trade becomes good, they give up their business in the States and come after ours. There is where our law is wrong. Although the United States will not allow us to trade there an Order in Council was actually passed by this Government, which I am supporting, allowing American vessels to come and take what little profit there is in Canada, which might help us to pay dividends on our preferred stock.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Quite right.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: In the spring of the year everything that is left over at Port Arthur and Fort William comes down. The month of May is perhaps a busy month, but in the first week of June shipments commence to stop, and by the second week of June all the wheat is down. What are you going to do with your ships for the rest of the summer? You cannot utilize them as the Americans do for carrying ore. The United States will not allow you to do that. Some of your Canadian ships have to tie up at the wharves and wait until another crop grows before they can do anything. Because the laws of the United States forbid it, you cannot take your ships across the line and work them over there. You will see many ships tied up every summer on the Great Lakes—actually tied up, with nothing to do. Then, when the grain begins to come down, the American boats give up the ore trade on which they have been employed all summer, and come and take the bread and butter out of the mouths of the Canadian people and you call that protection.

My honourable friend from Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett) condemned the Welland Canal. It is true that the big Welland Canal was not required at all. The ex-Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. M. J. Butler, said once that you might sit on the bank of the Welland Canal and smoke several pipes of tobacco before you could see a ship on it going one way or the other, and that the old canal could take care of ten times the number of boats going through. Why enlarge the canal to such an extent when the original one was more than sufficient? But it is done now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is half done.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The big ships will probably use it but very seldom. They will probably continue to unload at Port Colborne. They would go down loaded all right; but going back you could not get enough water ballast in them to steer them properly in that canal if there was a beam wind, and they could not sail up until the wind died down, or until night, when there is no wind. That is true, and anybody who knows anything about navigation knows that, with the bow sticking up, the least little breeze would put the ship on the bank. Moreover, your insurance rates would go up immensely. Those big ships are not built for restricted waters; they want plenty of sea room. So we might have dispensed with the deepening of the Welland Canal. If the ships come down the Welland Canal, they will come to either Kingston or Prescott, and there elevators should be provided in anticipation. From Prescott or Kingston you have a river and canal navigation that is the cheapest of any the world over, because you can put on barges there that will cost you only $15 a ton to build, and a tug will draw them at low speed in canals, where you are not allowed to go more than 4 or 5 miles an hour. With a small motive power you can have as many barges as you want drawn behind a very small tug. That is the cheapest method in Europe to-day —river and canal transportation. You must have a staunch boat to come from Port Colborne, because it has to run down Lake Ontario and must therefore be a seaworthy boat, but once it has passed Kingston or Prescott there is no more to worry about, and anything that is watertight will carry the grain down. But the probability is that the boat will be unloading at Port Colborne, and these big ships for which we are spending so much money will not use the Welland Canal, according to what we hear from the people who own the boats—and they ought to know, and they have no interest in deceiving people.

Our canals have a depth of 14 feet, and it is quite deep enough. Compare that depth with the depth of canals elsewhere. In Germany, surprising as it may be, there is 8,000 miles of canals and improved river navigation, and the maximum depth—that is, at the mouth of the Rhine—is ten feet. The average depth of the German canals is only 4½ feet. But look up the immense trade that they do for their 70,000,000 people. At the present time Germany, which pleads poverty, is building a canal which will have a depth of probably 7 or 8 fet. It is an immense affair, starting from Hamburg. According to the original plan it was to start at the Scheldt, in Belgium, as they expected to take possession of that country. But they had to change their plan. It starts from Hamburg and continues until it strikes the Valley of the Rhine; it follows the Rhine and then the Valley of the Neckar, and goes up to Lake Constance, going over the almost incredible height of 568 meters, which is equal to about 1,800 feet. How they will get water at that elevation to feed the canal I do not know, but it appears they have solved the problem. From that height the canal runs to Lake Constance, tapping Switzerland, and then it goes down to the Danube and step by step right on to the Black Sea. It is called the Mittel Europa Canal. From that canal they have subsidiary canals branching to every industrial centre. They worked at this construction all during the war. It was a French Commission in its investigation that got hold of the plans and have made them public. Anybody can read a description of this in La Revue des Deux Mondes. The new canal will have locks 600 feet long, and some nearly 1,000 feet in length, which will be able to take a whole tow at one locking. Whether they go bankrupt or not, the Germans will have that canal. Still they put on a poor mouth and say they cannot pay the reparations.

In France I was very much surprised to see that they have 4,500 miles of river navigation and 3,000 miles of canal. The maximum depth of any of those canals in France is 8 feet, and the average depth of a canal is from 5 feet to 18 inches only. There are in France 19,000 men, 10,000 women, and 16,000 children who have no other homes than cabins on board of the barges on these canals. Those barges have stables on them, and there are employed in this system of transportation some 20,000 horses, 12,000 small mules, called "bardots," and 10,000 donkeys. Heavy commodities are carried more cheaply over those canals than the great American railways can carry them. In the morning the donkeys are taken out of what they call a stable, though in size it would not be as large as this table, and a piece of line is tied to each of them, and away they go at 2½ miles an hour, the man controlling the boat and driving the donkey by simply speaking to him; and when they come to a lock the donkey is taken on board and fed while the barge is locked through. Then they go on again. The wife is downstairs cooking the meals and minding the children. Those people live all the year round on those boats, and they all own their boats. Very few own as many as three, but if a man owns three he stays on one, bossing its operations, and watching the other two. Transportation is done in that way very cheaply throughout France.

The Speech from the Throne has a good deal to say about prosperity. Well, there is nothing more significant in recent history than the astounding fact that prosperity lies upon the Liberal Party in the Dominion, just as surely as stagnation lies in the years of power of the Conservative Party. There are evidences of this, but the barometer of conditions in Canada is to be found in the rise and fall of Canadian Pacific Railway stock. From the time that Sir Wilfrid Laurier took office market quotations rose from 62½ up to 283. Then the Conservatives took office and the market prices dropped and continued to drop until they had fallen to 122. Fortunately for the C.P.R., there has been a change of Government again and the stock has started to go up. In the very first year it went up to 150. Here is a diagram taken from the Stock Exchange record, showing that in the period 1896-1911 it went up to 283, and after that it tobogganed down to 122.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: What about the Canadian Steamships about that time?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Oh, they were poor.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: That is cruel.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Now there is a Royal Commission, I understand, being appointed to investigate the doings of the ship owners and the shipping companies on the Great Lakes. This is a most serious matter. It concerns not only ship owners, but it affects every shipyard on the Pacific, the Atlantic, the Great Lakes, and the St. Lawrence river. I met to-day some owners of shipyards, and they told me that people will not give orders for anything, because they do not know what is going to happen. I ask honourable gentlemen here, would any one of you build a house if somebody else was going to decide what the rent should be?

The shipyards have had a hard time. Owing to the existing conditions Canada is building in England 40 ships for the Lakes and the St. Lawrence, whereas in this country only one ship is being built. Why is that? Because those ships can come in here without paying any duty. Is that protection —to permit those ships to come in here free? The United States will not register a ship unless it has been built in the United States and is owned in that country; and they will not give it a coastwise permit except on those conditions. If an American ship gets into trouble away from the United States and has any repairs done, there is a duty of 50 per cent on all repairs made to that ship abroad; including, mark you, not only the wages, the material, the dockage, and the rent of the drydock, but even the fees of the surveyor. Therefore if an American ship on our Great Lakes and other waters needs repairs, all that is done is to make it water-tight or repair it temporarily until it returns to the United States. Thus we lose that business.

There are, as I have said, 40 ships being built in England. If those ships were built in Canada—I see the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) is interested in this —there would be $4,000,000 spent in wages, besides all the money that would be spent in preparing all the material that would go into the ships. Now, is it not time that we should do something? Millions and millions have been invested in our shipping industry. At first the shipyards were established for repairs only. Then they went into ship-building, because it is necessary to have work to keep the yards going. The honourable gentleman the ex-Minister of Labour knows that. It is necessary to have some standard job, and repairs are done only when there is an accident. Therefore, you have to take work at cost to keep men on hand. In the United States to-day the ship owners have that protection of 50 per cent. We are supposed to have 25 per cent, but that 25 per cent applies only to certain things, not to everything. Are we going to lose our ship-building trade? It is languishing now. These yards cannot go on forever losing money. They must have some protection. Well, this idea of having a Royal Commission to say that they shall not make more than so much with their ships has had the effect of absolutely discouraging all shipyard owners in the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, including those on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence. It is a very serious thing. It is another mark of Government interference, and I believe that the less a government interferes in business the better it is for the country.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, in rising to say a few words on this occasion I also wish to extend my hearty congratulations to the honourable member who moved the Address (Hon. Mr. Hardy), who showed us that he is a very able man on the floor of the House, and I bespeak for him a long and very useful career in this Chamber.

As for my old friend from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Turgeon), it was a pleasure to me to hear him once more, and when he speaks in English, you will all enjoy it very much.

We have listened to an address by my honourable friend from DeLanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), and it is probably one of the best addresses I have ever heard him make. He took up the question of railroads as usual, and spoke of the wonderful advantages of private ownership, and dilated on that subject, as he usually does. But he forgot to tell us that all the trouble and difficulties of the Government roads to-day, which he blames on private ownership, were brought about, as he knows perfectly well, by private ownership. Who owned the Grand Trunk? Who owned the Canadian Northern? It was private ownership that plunged them into debt to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars, and now that the Government has been forced to take them over and manage them, my honourable friend puts the blame on Government ownership.

The honourable gentleman cites the C.P.R. as an illustration of private ownership. No doubt the C.P.R. is a splendid railroad and is well run, and is making money; and it may well do so. Who paid for that great expensive part of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the rocky portion of Ontario? The Government, the people of Canada. Who paid for the expensive work in British Columbia? The Government, the people of Canada. Who gave the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a land grant, amounting to many millions of acres, that they are to-day selling for $10 and $15 and $20 and $30 an acre? The people gave it to them. They might well have a good road, and a good property. I give them credit for the manner in which the property is managed and run; but that is not to say that the Government roads cannot be run reasonably well. Remember, I am no great believer in Government ownership and operation of railroads; I believe that private ownership is better. But who is to blame because the Government has taken over these thousands of miles of road, until we now have, I believe, 22,000 miles? The Government was forced to take them over. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) is one of the men who would hand them all over to the Canadian Pacific railway for a dollar, or for nothing. Well, we have got $1,000,000,000 invested. Are we going to lose it all? But neither the Canadian Pacific nor any other company will take the roads over with all their liabilities. The offer of the Canadian Pacific railway was not to take over the roads and the liabilities too, but to take the roads and operate them, and to let the Government and the people of Canada retain the liabilities, and also guarantee, in perpetuity, interest at seven per cent on all the stock of the Canadian Pacific railway as well. In addition to this, they were to retain the great part of the assets, the steamships, the lands, the town-sites, and the hotels.

My honourable friend spoke of the railroad down in Matane, and of the road from Matapedia along the north shore of the Bay of Chaleur. I know something of those roads. He cannot tell me much about them. I was born and brought up down there.

If private ownership is such a great success, will my honourable friend tell me how it is that the owners of those railroads are breaking their necks all the time to hand them over to the Government as part of the Intercolonial railroad? If you run only one train a week, and only run it when there is a good big load of freight to be carried, you may make your revenue more than your expenditure; but are there in Canada any people, or many people, who would put up, if they could help it, with such a service as is given on the Matapedia to Percé road? No. It is a service that would not serve the traffic of the people of Canada.

My honourable friend is very ready to take a slap at the West about the railroads. I remember he made the statement in another place that the Province of Saskatchewan had failed to pay the interest on the railroad bonds it had guaranteed. I want to characterize that as an absolutely misleading and false statement. The Province of Saskatchewan never repudiated one single dollar of the interest on the bonds it had guaranteed; and the Province of Saskatchewan did not guarantee the bonds on a single mile of railway that is not earning more than the interest on those bonds. The Province of Saskatchewan did not guarantee the bonds of a single mile of railway that it could not take over and make money by operating.

But my honourable friend did not tell us anything about the railroads that had been handed over to the Intercolonial shoved on to the Intercolonial, under the Government he and I supported, and other Governments.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What road?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: What about that road from Quebec down to Baie St. Paul?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That was done by Borden.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I said the Government you and I supported, as well as the other Governments.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Borden did that.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: And there are several others that were taken over by the late Liberal Government. So my honourable friend does not need to cast any slurs about the railroads in the West.

During the last week or so we have seen that the Government that my honourable friend is supporting—there will be no question about that—

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The Quebec Government?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: —has completed the amalgamation of the Government roads and has placed the head office in Montreal. That may be all right from a business point of view, I am not enough of a railroad man to know; but I would like to point out one thing, honourable gentlemen: they are putting the head office right where it is subject to all the influences of the C.P.R., which is a great influence, and also putting it in a city and a province where practically nine-tenths of the business interests are dead against Government ownership, and will do their utmost to see that those roads will not get fair play. There is absolutely no question about that. Any honourable gentleman who is willing to transfer for one dollar, as one of the present members of the Government offered to do—not a member in this House—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Nobody would take it with the debts for a dollar.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF:—that would offer to hand it over for nothing, is not in favour of Government ownership. And my honourable friend, the genial leader of the Government in this House (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) a few months ago in a by-election in Quebec made statements that showed that his heart was not in favour of Government ownership of railways. So, if the Government ownership and operation of the roads can succeed it will be against the views of many of the members of the Government and of the great bulk of the people of Montreal. It seems to me that it was a questionable advantage to put the head office in Montreal. I hope, however, that under the new management the Government roads will get a fair show, and I believe that we will lose less money in working out our salvation by operating those roads properly than we would in other ways. One thing is certain. If the people of Canada, who have to keep up these roads and pay the deficits, you and I and everybody else, would only do as I always try to do—give every bit of my patronage when it comes to buying tickets, or influencing anyone else to go on the road—it would help to cut down the losses. I think the losses will be cut down very materially in the future.

I think that we have too many railroads; we have duplications; but I am not going to say who is to blame. I know the Government I supported made their mistakes, and I know the other side made their mistakes. But we are dealing now with a concrete fact. We have got the roads and we have to handle them to the very best advantage possible, and try to work out something better than we have at the present time. I trust that my friends in the Government who do not favour Government ownership will at all events do what the Government says it will do, and give Government ownership an absolutely fair trial.

Now, just a word about inland lakes navigation. The honourable gentleman who preceded me (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) spoke of the heinous offence of the Government thinking of allowing American vessels to come into Canadian waters for a time in the Fall to carry some of our wheat from the head of the lakes down to the foot of the lakes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The Americans won't allow us to do it.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I am not dealing with what the Americans do or don't do, or will or won't do in the future. The fact remains that in the early part of the season you can take wheat from Fort William to Montreal at from 2 to 4 cents a bushel. Some of the advocates of the deep waterway system say that by deepening the waterways and taking ocean-going boats up to the head of the lakes we will save 5 or 6 or 7 cents a bushel. Well, honourable gentlemen, how can you save 5 or 6 or 7 cents a bushel when the average rate for the last ten or fifteen years has been under 4 cents a bushel.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: From where?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: From Fort William to Montreal.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No, no, it is around 9 cents.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Well, to the foot of the lakes. What happened last fall? They were carrying wheat down for less than 4 cents a bushel.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: From where?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: From Fort William to the foot of the lakes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: To Port Colborne.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: And then the price was suddenly jumped up three or four times, and this same inland navigation company, of which my honourable friend was a director for many years—I am not sure whether he is now—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I am now—the oldest director.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: —is very anxious that there should be no competition, that no ocean steamer or tramp steamer should be able to go up and get wheat, and prevent them charging three or four prices when the rush is on in the fall. And the claim is made that the whole increase is caused by the congestion in Montreal, that the ships could not get unloaded. There was delay in some cases, but those ships made more trips this year than they did last year. It has all been worked out, and I can get the exact figures and give them to my honourable friend, showing that the wheat-carrying vessels on the lakes made more trips this year than last year, when there was no congestion, and that the farmers of the West were paying as high as 12 to 14 cents instead of 3 or 4 cents to bring down their wheat. And yet my honourable friend thinks it would be a crime to allow American boats to come in and bring wheat down at ordinary prices. Not only that, but they carried wheat to American ports, and our own ports were at a disadvantage. Wheat was going to Buffalo at 2 or 3 cents a bushel less than it would go to Montreal. Talk about loyalty to the trade, wanting to keep out all competition so that these inland lake steamers can make three and four profits.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They get no dividends.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not wonder that they do not pay dividends considering all the circumstances connected with them. If they cut out the watered stock and cut out Grant Morden, the great hero my honourable friend dilated upon, they might pay dividends and good dividends on the money invested; but not on the millions taken out by the speculators who put up that job. No, honourable gentlemen, last year there was a good deal of discussion about putting again into effect the Crowsnest rates. It was done, and this year the people of the West got their wheat hauled down to Fort William for several million dollars less than last year. And what became of the difference? Practically every bit of it, or a great part of it, was taken by my honourable friend's company in excess freights from Fort William to the foot of the lakes. Those are the facts and you cannot get away from them.

My honourable friend objects to the Government appointing a Royal Commission to look into that swindle. That is one thing the Government is doing for which I give them credit. If there is no other way to bring freight rates down, appoint a Royal Commission to find out where the trouble is, instead of allowing my honourable friend, sitting on the board of directors to say, why prices jump 100, 200, 300, 400 per cent. I believe, honourable gentlemen, that will be put a stop to in the future irrespective of my honourable friend sitting across the floor (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) and his board of directors.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: He does not belong over here.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My honourable friend wants us to bonus shipbuilding. Forty ships are being built in England—why? It is because the Canadian ship men are a pretty sensible body of business men and know where they can get them built best and cheapest; and they go to a free-trade country to have it done. You cannot get ships built cheaply and well in a country that has a high protective tariff. I am aware that ships come in free, and that is to the interests of everybody in Canada but a few ship-builders who want to do as they did during the war, and build ships at three times the price for which they could be bought. If Canada wants to continue buying ships at three times the price at which they can be got elsewhere, and quite as good ships, then she will follow my honourable friend's lead.

There was no mention made of the tariff in the Speech from the Throne; but I noticed that my honourable friend who moved the Address (Hon. Mr. Hardy) stated that he was a free trader in theory, and that last Session the Government reduced the tariff about 2½ per cent. Well, they reduced it about 2½ per cent on certain lines, but I have seen figures quoted—I have not verified them, and do not know how correct they are—I think my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition made the quotation—showing that under the tariff this year we are paying a higher rate of duty than we paid last year before the tariff was revised. Whether or not that is correct I am not prepared to say absolutely of my own knowledege just now; but I know that whereas the Finance Minister last year claimed that he took off about $1,000,000 in taxation under the tariff, he immediately proceeded to add what he thought would bring about $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 in a sales tax. Well, I cannot see that that was much reduction in the tariff.

My honourable friend who moved the Address (Hon. Mr. Hardy) said he thought the whole people of Canada were pleased with the reduction that was made, and were not looking for any more reductions—why? Simply because the Government did not say anything about it in the Speech from the Throne. But I want to say to the leader of the Government that if the Government thinks for one moment that the people of Canada are satisfied with the reduction that was made last year, and do not intend to implement that reduction by further reductions this year, they will have a rude awakening whenever they appeal to the country, whether it be now, a year from now, or at the end of their term, because the people are not satisfied. And let me tell my honourable friend the leader of the Government that it was just that complacent spirit of the mover of the Address that lost to the Liberal Party practically the whole of the three prairie provinces. Simply because when they were in opposition they were tariff reformers, and when they were in power they were high tariff men. That is what lost the West. Out of over 50 seats in the three prairie provinces the Liberal party is to-day represented by two members only—and one of them will have the job of his life to come back.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: How many Conservatives?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not think there are any; but that is not troubling me a single bit, honourable gentlemen.

Mon. Mr. WATSON: We make a good second, anyway.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: There is this that can be said for the Conservatives: they make no bones about being low tariff men; they come out straight and say: "We believe in high protection, or at least in adequate protection for industries." They believe exactly as the Manufacturers' Association believed about fifteen years ago. They used to pass every year a resolution chock full of Imperialism and loyalty, declaring that they wanted protection. They were in favour of Empire preference—

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Adequate protection.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: But they wanted adequate protection on all Canadian manufactures. They wanted sufficient protection to keep the Canadian market for the Canadian employers, and you could put up a tariff wall up above the Imperial preference as high as you liked. As long as the British preference allowed the Canadian manufacturers to hold the market, they did not care how high you made the wall. That is just about the attitude; but it is honest at all events. But what have our friends in the Government done? If the Government would simply try out, not the Progressive policy, but the policy that the honourable the Prime Minister and the honourable Minister of Finance advocated in the House of Commons during the last two years they were in Opposition, the Progressive Party of Canada would ask nothing more. But do you think they are going to do it?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: No.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I thought they would do pretty well. I thought they would do something, but they have done nothing. They did very little last year, and this year there is no reference to the matter in the Speech from the Throne, and, from what my honourable friend the mover has said, I take it for granted that the policy of the Government is to do nothing further in that respect.

Let me, before sitting down, say just a word about immigration. There is a great difference of opinion about the class of settlers we should let in and the class that we should keep out. The only time in the history of Canada that I remember when we had an active immigration that worked out well in settling up the country, was during the years from 1907 to 1910 or 1911. People were coming in steadily during that period. In my judgment we need settlers, but how are we going to get them? We have an Immigration Department. Time and again, after the war started in 1914, I asked officials of that Department, "Why keep on spending so much money when you are doing practically no work? It was not their fault at all. It was during the years of the war. They said: "It is necessary to keep our organization intact, so that when the war is over and the proper time comes we shall be able to get to work and bring people to this country." To my mind that was good policy. I know that immigration organization fairly well. It is an excellent organization, and if the Government will only leave the immigration work to the Immigration Department, they will get good results. But what have they done, or what are they doing? They are handing over a good deal of that work to the Salvation Army. Now, I have great respect for the Salvation Army, and nothing to say against them. I think they do more good than many of the churches. But do you think that the Salvation Army are likely to get the class of people that we want? I do not think they will. But even if they do, can they get those people as well as the Immigration Department can? I do not for one moment believe they can.

Then there is the colonization scheme of which Sir John Willison was the head. Mr. J. H. Ashdown, of Winnipeg, was a member, and a man named Brandon was another member. I saw circulars of theirs announcing that they did not charge anything—that they did not want to make one cent out of the scheme. Honourable gentlemen, I am always afraid of those fellows who are going to do everything for nothing—all for the good of the cause—all for the country. I was delighted to see that the gentleman at the head of it had resigned, and I hope they will all resign. I trust the Government will not give them any consideration at all, but, instead of handing over money to them, will let their own organization work out the problem. In that way the Government will get much better results.

I hear people advocating that the Soldier Settlement Board should be used. If there is any organization on earth that should not be used, it is in my judgment that Soldier Settlement Board. We have spent practically $100,000,000 in putting soldiers on the land. I stated in the House of Commons, before coming to this Chamber, and have stated in this House every year, that I did not believe that 10 per cent of those men would remain on the land. That statement stands to-day. We shall get the land back in most cases, but the bulk of the money invested in cattle, horses, implements and buildings will be lost.

My honourable friend the leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) stated the other day that for the purpose of keeping our people in the country he had promulgated an idea that was a good one. Well, I can congratulate my honourable friend on this, that at all events he has come to recognize that the first thing to do is to keep the people we have in the country. It is a step in the right direction. But I can tell him a far quicker way to accomplish that purpose than by writing to the notary, the priest, the minister, the merchant, the municipal clerk, and all such people. I can tell the Minister the answer he will get straightaway from most of them. It is this: "Let the Government make conditions in Canada such that the man on the land can get a good living and be comfortable; then they will not need to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to bring immigrants to this country." Every contented settler on the land will bring his friends.

Immigration is, in my opinion, absolutely necessary. Our taxation is something terrible, and is going to be worse, and the only way we can lessen it is to increase our population. We want the right class of people. I have never been in favour of assisted immigration. Nine times out of ten you get the wrong people, no matter how they are picked. You bring them out and spend a great deal of money on them, and inside of two or three years they drift into the city and in many cases become a public charge.

Some of the best settlers we got in the West were people from the United States. But remember this, that they come over in hundreds and thousands and are good settlers as long as everything goes well, but when hard years come and they find it difficult to make a living and have perhaps run into debt and cannot pay, they size up the situation and say: "We will go back to where we came from. We can get far better prices there for our wheat, our oats, our barley, our cattle, our hogs and our sheep, and we pay far less for the implements that we use for the production of crops. We will go back home, where the climate is milder." You will always have that tendency to work against, in the case of people coming from a mild country.

There is one class of immigration on which I would be willing to see some money spent. Quebec is my native province. I have been through Northern Ontario and Northern Quebec. We have there, honourable gentlemen, great stretches of millions of acres of first-class land. You have all seen it. From Sudbury north about 25 or 30 miles on the Canadian Pacific Railway you pass Chelmsford and two or three other stations where the country is thickly settled, the settlers being nearly all French Canadians, well-to-do farmers, happy and contented. The land is easily cleared. It is soft wood land, with very little timber that is over a foot in diameter. The soil is a rich white clay and grows good crops. You can place 20,000 families along the Transcontinental in Quebec and from Cochrane west for 200 miles. From Haileybury to Cochrane along the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario road you have first-class land, easily cleared, and the settlers coming on that land have a better chance of success than if you put them on any land that I know of in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The reason is that this land is nearly all covered with pulpwood. There is work there every winter for every young man who wants to go into the camp. He can get work at good wages. He can get work for his team. He can find a ready market for all the hay and oats he can raise on his farm. The farmer that stays at home can take out pulpwood, draw it to the nearest station and sell it at remunerative prices, to go to the pulp mills along the Transcontinental railway.

I would advocate the Government, not through the Salvation Army, or through any colonization scheme or company, but through their own agents, going into the northern parts of Europe and selecting a class of foreign settlers, and putting them on that land, even if the Government advanced them $200 or $300 to enable them to put up a house and a stable.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Bring back French Canadians from the States.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Bring back the French Canadians. I prefer the French Canadians to any people that we can get from Europe. I want to say this, after a long experience, that you cannot get English-speaking people to go on wooded land and clear it up and farm it. The French Canadian habitant will do that. The people from Northern Europe will do it. And there is this about it: You put them on the land, and though times may be hard and they may have all sorts of difficulties, if you go back there in five years, those men and their wives and children are there working away, clearing up the land, and they are paying their debts. Go back ten years afterwards and you will find them still there. Go back fifteen years and they will still be there, only then they will be in comfortable circumstances. On the other hand, in the case of the English-speaking settlers from Eastern Canada, the United States or Great Britain, if things go badly with them for two or three years, where do you find them? British Columbia — Australia — New Zealand — any place but where they settled originally. That is true to a very great extent. I do not say that there are not large numbers of these people who do make good. There is always a percentage. But, generally speaking, for a district such as I speak of, you do not want the English-speaking people. They simply will not clear up the land and make a success of it.

Honourable gentlemen, I have spoken at much greater length than I intended, but let me, in conclusion, express the hope that the honourable leader will see to it, as far as he can, that the Government will take hold of this immigration policy themselves and leave it to their own organization to carry it out. They will have ten chances of obtaining good results in that way as compared with the one they would have by handing it over to irresponsible companies or associations, or even to responsible organizations, that have not as good facilities as the Government for doing the work.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Trained organization.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: It is necessary to have trained organization, and the Government have it, and we are paying big money every year to keep it up. Why not let them do the work instead of handing money over to other people to do it and leaving their own organization, which can do it better, practically idle?

I trust that the Government during the present Session will make a reduction of the tariff. I trust that they will organize a good, active immigration policy to be carried out through their own Department, to enable us to get in a number of settlers and keep them. But the one thing that I desire to drive home if I possibly can, is the way to keep the settlers on the land, for that is something we must do. Let me tell you, honourable gentlemen, that conditions in the West are bad. There is no use blinking the matter. We have no immigration now. There is a large emigration. There are far more settlers' effects going out of the West than coming in. The customs statistics prove that. What we want to do first of all is to hold the people that we have, and in order to do so we must cut down the cost of every article of production and reduce the cost of living, and it cannot be done by keeping up a high tariff on these articles.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Honourable gentlemen, if there is no Senator who is prepared to continue the debate tonight, and if there is no objection on the part of my honourable friend the leader of the Government, I beg leave to propose the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is there any other member of the Senate who has any remarks to offer this evening? If my honourable friend is not afraid of the hour, I would ask him to give us the privilege of hearing him this evening. It is only 10 o'clock and we might sit at least until 11. I do not urge that upon my honourable friend, but if he would now address the House we should be very happy to hear him.

Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I must claim the privilege of my age. The hour is scarcely advantageous.

On motion of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

DOMINION ELECTIONS (FEMALE ELECTORS) BILL

FIRST READING

Bill C, an Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act as regards the qualifications of female electors.—Hon. Mr. David.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ADDRESS IN REPLY

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the Session, and the motion of Hon. Mr. Hardy for an Address in reply thereto.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER (Translation): Honourable gentlemen, before making a few general observations on the subject of this debate, I desire to express my saitsfaction at the noticeable improvement in the acoustics of this Chamber. Honourable gentlemen will remember that at the last Session I had occasion to complain of the poor acoustics of this room, and urged that the necessary steps should be taken to remedy this defect. Now, for the first time, I can hear distinctly the prayers which His Honour the Speaker reads from his place, and the announcements of the clerk, and the words of honourable Senators who take part in our deliberations.

In order that the improvement may be complete, there are, it seems to me, only two things necessary: first, that each speaker should raise his voice to a reasonable degree; secondly, that he should not speak only to his next neighbour, or even to the Speaker of the Senate, but should speak so as to be heard by the Senators farthest from him. With these conditions fulfilled, we can conduct the business of the Senate easily and agreeably. I congratulate the authorities upon their action in this respect. I desire also to add my sincere and cordial felicitations to those which have been offered to the mover and the seconder of the Address by the leader of the Government, the leader of the Opposition and the other speakers who have taken part in this discussion. The father of the honourable Senator who moved the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne played an active and distinguished part in public life. The duty devolved upon the honourable Senator to uphold the reputation and traditions of his family. We may judge by his speech that he gives promise of fulfilling that duty and walking in the footsteps of his eminent father.

As to my friend the honourable Senator from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Turgeon), he has been my colleague, my adversary, and my very good friend in another place. I have often heard him make excellent and interesting speeches there. I offer him my most cordial congratulations, and it gives me pleasure to think that during our sojourn in this Chamber, whether it be long or short, I shall have the pleasure of hearing him speak often in the language he loves so much, and on behalf of the race which he honours.

Now, honourable gentlemen, I will take shelter in the English language—the language of Chaucer and Shakespeare, of Walter Scott and Bobbie Burns; the language of Emerson, Lowell, Longfellow, Channing, and other writers of the United States; the language which is the means of communication for nearly two hundred million people, among the most powerful and most civilized in the world; and, better than all, the language in which the inexhaustible love of the mother has been communicated to the soul of her little child.

(Text.) Having vindicated my right to use the language of "la belle France" in this Chamber, I shall continue speaking a language which is more natural and more easy.

I do not purpose making other than some general observations on some two or three of the points that have been raised in this discussion. I do not think that the debate on the Address is very suitable for going into details on measures that are promised but not brought down; consequently I shall hold myself almost entirely to general observations. These observations may have in them some suggestions which honourable members may care to hear, and which may not be without some use to us later on.

I think one detects, both in the discussions in the Houses of Parliament and in the newspapers, a faint tinge of something which might be called pessimism and panic. I think we ought to resist that, both in the Houses of Parliament and outside. There is no occasion for pessimism or panic in the situation of Canada and the conditions in Canada at the present stage. It is well for us, when we think upon these conditions and this situation, to take a comparative view and to contrast ourselves with other sections of the human race, who are gathered in nationalities and empires, who have gone through somewhat the same experience through which we have gone, and by comparison to lighten our lot, or at least bring ourselves into communion with the brotherhood of humanity which has passed through the misery of a terrible war, and which, in consequence, must now bear the burdens of the same. Thinking a little in that direction, we might also take into consideration the fact that a country must bear the penalties of its own mistakes and errors; and, summing up the situation to take into account the conditions in Canada to-day, we must take account of the penalties inflicted by over-optimism and by mistaken policies entered into in good faith at the time, and with the best intentions, but which have not come up to the hopes that were inspired at their commencement and have entailed consequences which were not then foreseen.

Foremost among these is the railway situation. Our condition would be infinitely easier to-day if we did not have to provide for a deficit of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 on the operations of our National railways. That is a burden of which we may complain; but it is there, and it has been entailed by our own work, by our own policies, by our own enterprise. We must simply bear the burden. But it is borne more easily if we, in faith and in fair hope, let our vision go a bit forward and contemplate the time in the future when in the progress of Canada these railways which are to-day a burden may, if properly worked out and operated, not only balance their receipts and expenditures but be a source of revenue to ourselves. To take a burden and bear it with our eyes fixed upon the ground is different from taking it and bearing it with our eyes set forward to a time when the burden will be taken away and may be changed into a revenue-producing asset. If we bear the present burden more hopefully, more lightly, we will the more readily bring about a successful conclusion.

Then, we have to take into consideration that we have passed through a war, and that we must abide by the results of that war. We have to-day a net debt of $2,400,000,000. Before the war our debt was by comparison the small sum of about $330,000,000. Our debt was imposed upon us by ourselves because we went into an undertaking, a war, the result of which has been to entail this expense upon us; and we must meet the burden of this expense in the same spirit, and by the employment of the same will and determination that we exercised in so successfully carrying on the war.

To-day we have to pay an interest charge of $136,000,000. Before the war our interest charge was a comparative trifle of $11,000,000 or $12,000,000. We may think that the burden is heavy, but it is a part of the great undertaking of 1914. How did we get through the war? By self-denial, by self-sacrifice, by thrift, by denying ourselves the pleasures that we might otherwise have enjoyed, and by sacrificing the things which we held most dear. How are we to get through the results of the war, and bear the burden that has been placed upon us? By the very same mentality, the very same spirituality, and the very same exercise of labour and work; denying ourselves, practising thrift, doing without things that we might otherwise enjoy, in order that we may lift the burden which we undertook voluntarily for the liberty and justice and good of the world as a whole.

We must also, I think, for our own benefit bear in mind that this is but a temporary burden, and that if, in the spirit and by the means which I have indicated, we set ourselves to the bearing of this burden, it may each year become less, and the prospects in the future will be that it will be taken off our shoulders entirely, or measurably so. But by all manner of means let us avoid getting into a pessimistic state of mind, and, although it seems like abridging the privileges of a public man or a member of Parliament, we should advise caution of speech in public places rather than give occasion for lack of confidence in those who read our speeches and who hear what we say; and we should also avoid giving advantage to those who are our competitors in the great world in national enterprise.

Some one has asked whether or not we have a national spirit in this country, and has almost expressed a doubt as to whether our national spirit has improved from Confederation up to the present time. I have not the least doubt upon that matter. I believe that the national spirit of Canada is strong and virile and is growing and increasing. I could spend much time in bringing evidence to bear upon my belief and conviction in this respect, but I do not think it is necessary; and I am not one of those who, in speaking in public places, would think it wise to say too much about the temporary difficulties which surround us. We have committees, we have conferences, in which we need blink none of the difficulties that are ours to-day; in which we may probe to the very bottom the causes and reasons for these things. But I would do it in conference and committee rather than give countenance to a general idea that our prospects were sombre, that our future would be gloomy, and that it was a question whether or not we should survive the burdens which are at present upon us, and come out at last into the brighter atmosphere of prosperity and happiness.

What we have in all parts of this country is, I think, a love for Canada as a whole, a spirit of union for the common purposes of our common nationality, and a hope, which is strong and will not be denied, that the future holds for us, if we are wise, patient, and energetic, if we love labour and pursue it, a prospect which might well be the pride of any country or any nation in the world.

A word now with reference to another subject. I think two phases of the situation are most important at this time: the economic position, and the question of immigration or of population in our country, and I wish very briefly to deal with each of these.

You often hear the argument, and see in the newspapers articles which put the argument: why is it that in Canada, with such abundant natural resources as she has, there should be any unemployment or any real want? There are the mines, there are the forests, there are the fisheries, there are the wide agricultural lands. Canada has awaiting development resources sufficient to give employment to all and to supply the necessary articles of consumption to every inhabitant of this Dominion. Why then is there any unemployment? Why then is there any need or want that is left unsatisfied? One says it is due to governmental administration. Another says it is due to a radical defect in our economic or social system. One or the other, or both of these, are blamed for the situation, and the critics pounce upon the one or upon the other. One wants to turn out the Government in order to have the whole thing rectified. Another wants to pull to pieces our social organization. To revamp it? No. To recreate it from the beginning, in a day and a night, and so get rid of our difficulties and open up the way to a better future.

Now let us examine this argument, which is a specious one, and see what there is in it. True, there are your mines; true, there are your fisheries; true, there are your forests; not inexhaustible by any means, but very abundant; and there are your wide, fertile agricultural lands. They are productive potentially, but, standing as they are to-day, they are not productive to anything like the extent of their capacity to produce. But they will stand there unproductive, in the same measure, forever and a day unless there are certain conditions which invite them to life and activity. They will become operative and productive only when consumptive demand presses for the things that are treasured therein, and when that consumptive demand is backed by the wherewithal to pay for that which consumption demands and needs. There lies a point for us to consider, and to consider pretty seriously and thoroughly. Unless those conditions are fulfilled, production of the richest resources cannot be carried on—cannot be prosperous in a country.

Now, what is it that in these days weakens the consumptive demand and makes it impossible for it to incite into full activity the productive resources of the country? The wherewithal is not there. The wherewithal is called for in other directions and has to be apportioned in part for other purposes. Here is the earner's wage for the year. We say that it is in his box. It is so much and out of that he has to meet the necessities of the situation and satisfy the demands that are made upon him. Before the war that box was invaded by demands for certain necessities, and answered to them; since the war there are additional hands which grasp something from the store of the man's yearly wages. I have hinted at that already. Before the war the hand of the war-tax did not come and demand income tax, sales tax, tax on business profits, and other war taxes. As a result of the war that hand is extended towards the box, and it must be filled, and takes from the sum total which otherwise would go more largely in the direction of exciting and sustaining production. If you sum up these things, you will find that a large proportion of the earnings of the householder and the business man are forfeited to the payment of an unproductive tax, which diminishes by that amount the consuming power in so far as it is backed up by the wherewithal to pay what it is desired to consume.

Take, for instance, the British debt to the United States, which is solely a war debt, amounting in round numbers to £1,000,000,000 sterling. The interest upon that has to be met, and amortization brought about, and it is calculated, under the arrangement made, that before the whole debt is wiped off the slate, the British taxpayer will have sent to the United States in cash or in kind £2,000,000,000 sterling, an immense amount of money, which but for the war debt would have gone into the channels of consumption, and would consequently have called for production and the employment which increased production demands and must have when it is carried on. These things have to be taken into account.

There is another thing which has to be taken into account as well, and it is this. While the war was going on we cultivated or acquired some expensive tastes. While war destroys the very vitals of the countries engaged, it produces a period of tremendous activity, tremendous prosperity, financially. In the production of war materials and war supplies, and all that war requires, a scale of expenditure and living was assumed, which went up like a sky-rocket, and which has not yet completely come down. Are we harbouring still some of those expensive tastes? Necessity compels most people to resist them, and prudence should advise everybody to resist them and come down to the elements of plain, simple, reasonable living. If this were done, it would place in the common treasury, for the payment of consumptive demands and for the incitement and support of productive energy, in the aggregate a vast amount of money.

Now, this can be carried out along other lines, and it is fruitful wherever you go along those lines. It has been shown, despite Governments or any theory of economics, how, as a result of war, the domestic capacity for consumption has been reduced, and consequently the power of production has been thereby curtailed. But a country produces not only for its own people. It produces as well for peoples outside of its bounds. Foreign commerce is important in its way, though not as important as domestic commerce. When you look at foreign countries, what is the situation with regard to this consumptive demand, backed by the wherewithal with which to pay? The consumptive demand is there. No man can spend a few days in Austria or in any other part of central Europe without being convinced that the stomach of the world needs far more food than it is able to get; that the back of the world needs far more clothes than it is able to provide; that all the common needs of life, the reasonable comforts of life outside of the luxuries, are hungered for, are desired.

But what is the trouble? The desire is there, the capacity to consume is there, but the wherewithal in cash and credit is almost absolutely lacking, or is lacking to such a degree that it explains in a moment, if a man lets his thoughts wander over that field, why there is such lagging in trade, why there is such unemployment, and why the productive enterprises of the world have not the prosperity of former times. When, for instance, the currency of Austria goes down to the value of 320,000 crowns for a British pound, or when it takes 40,000 or 50,000 marks to buy an American dollar, which before the war could have been bought for 4 marks—when you come down to a situation in which credit is absolutely gone, and cash is a paper commodity which has to be put in sacks or large parcels in order to have an equivalent value —when we come to consider these things, we get the plain answer as to what production lacks, despite Canada's rich resources, and consequently what employment lacks in the way of production. At home, as I have shown, and abroad, as my view will lead us to see, the consumptive demand, though large, is not able to refresh and fill itself because of the lack of the wherewithal.

That does not get us out of the difficulty, I grant you; but it gives us the reason for the difficulty, and it causes us to avoid the flighty fads and schemes of chance fraught with peril and danger in order to bring about a different condition. Patience alone will do it—patience and the operation of natural causes; patience and the co-operation of the better nations of the world for the rehabilitation and stabilization of the standard of money value and the commerce of the world. That is a process which takes time, and whatever may be our wishes or our theories, time will necessarily be taken to bring about a perfect rehabilitation.

So much for that. I leave that as it is. The moral to be drawn from it is that in individuals, thrift, economy, self-denial, are still as necessary as they were during the war; that in administrative and governmental situations they are as necessary now as they were then; and that consequently both individuals and administrations, municipal, provincial, and national, should through thrift and economy and saving, and the patient working out of administrative and legislative matters, make the situation as easy as possible, in order to bring about more quickly the day when the prospects will have enlarged and the conditions will have been greatly improved.

In line with these remarks may I be permitted a remark with reference to the management of the railways, a matter which I approach with a good deal of diffidence and upon which I have no very abstruse theories. One thing I will say: about $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 are imposed upon us at present as a yearly penalty for the errors of the past. We must look to a railway management so wise, so careful, and so free from deleterious and harmful influences, that it will be enabled to work towards its object on business lines absolutely unhindered by ulterior considerations.

I look with a good deal of suspicion upon the first gesture of the Government with reference to this railway management. What has taken place is as plain as the nose on a man's face. It is this. A party cast has been given to the management, which did not exist before the appointment of the new Board. No one can doubt that, outside of some notable exceptions, the Board of Directors is a board which has been appointed by the Government for party reasons and with party considerations underlying. It is unfortunate that party considerations should be so emphasized, by the Government's dismissal of a non-partisan board, and its replacement by a majority partisan board, as to awaken the suspicion and arouse the fear of the people at large that deleterious influences may be at work in this new management of our railway enterprise. It is not only a partisan appointment of directors; it is all the worse for being sectionally partisan. If business men of ability and experience who had served the Liberal party, business men with knowledge apropos of and pertaining to that most complex business of managing a great railway corporation had been appointed, and if they had been chosen irrespective of geographical limits the matter would not have been so open to suspicion, and so liable to produce a want of confidence. But these men have been appointed, and they represent districts, and they represent the Government on that Board, in a partisan and political sense. You see what is happening already. Nova Scotia has a member on that Board; why was he appointed? Primarily to look after the interests of Nova Scotia, and incidentally not to prejudice the party interest in that province. I will not go any further than that and say that the appointment was for the purpose of keeping up the fences of the party in the interim between elections. But that is the fact in reference to that appointment. If geographically or sectionally, the Province of Nova Scotia should have a representative on that Board of Directors, why should not New Brunswick also have a representative on that Board? Has New Brunswick no sectional interests other than those that appertain to the Province of Nova Scotia? Already you see the fruits of that. An appointment was made from the Province of Quebec. That was supposed to be sufficient, that was supposed to be the only needed representation; but demand is made that another section of Quebec shall have another representative on that Board, and I am told that the appointment will be made. That raises the sectional spirit all through the Dominion, and it will not be many weeks until the Government will have that problem straight before them. Why give representation on the Board for the direction of the interests of one section to one part of the Dominion and refuse to give it to another? That, to my mind, is a gesture made in the wrong direction. If a change of directors takes place in government after government, when one goes out and another comes in, and partisans of the incoming government are put in the places of those who are dismissed or asked to resign, you will then have a partisan directorship with all the ills that flow therefrom, and with all the perils which beset the path of such administration. What I should like to have seen, what I believe would have been in the interest of the party itself now in power, and certainly in the interest of the Dominion, would have been the selection of men on business grounds and on business grounds alone—those who, by their experience in business, in operation of companies, in various ways, know something about, and are able to devote their entire attention to, the complex problems of the management of a railway 22,000 miles in extent. That I should have liked to have seen, and I think it would have been far better, if not for the party in power, certainly in the interest of business and of the railway as a whole, that that course should have been pursued.

In the Speech from the Throne no reference is made to the Civil Service Act or the Civil Service of the country; but I notice that strong supporters of the Government have resolutions on the Order Paper in another place either to modify or to do away entirely with the Civil Service Act and all that it implies. I am told—but I do not know how true it is—that continual pressure is being placed on the present Government to make holes and breakages in the line of civil service rules and regulations and so to introduce little by little, and at last as fully as possible, the old vicious system of political patronage. I think it is the place of honourable gentlemen who have seats in this Chamber—it is the place of all good citizens who desire economy and efficiency in the public service—to set their faces against any attempt to make modifications which will injuriously affect the Civil Service and bring back into it the old system of patronage, because under that, you may be certain, you cannot have either the efficiency or the economy that is to be had under a well organized and well carried out Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Have we had economy under it?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, we have had economies under it. I think any person who will study carefully the operation of the Civil Service Act since its inception will find abundant testimony to its economical advantages. I am not speaking on that subject to-day, but if the matter comes up again in debate we shall be able to deal with it.

The next and only other subject that I shall speak about is the subject of immigration. I would like if that term could be in some way or other enlarged. It seems to me that when we set ourselves to discuss the subject of immigration and to devise means for furthering immigration into this country, we do not get the full significance of the country's want or of the possible methods of supplying that want. Immigration refers simply to the importation of foreign material into this country. But the whole question which is at stake is the important question as to how the population of this country may be increased, and how the population from natural increase may be kept in the country and may be so trained as to become the most useful citizenship possible. I do not think there is any doubt at all in the minds of members sitting on these benches that a unit of the population born and brought up in Canada, in the Canadian atmosphere, under Canadian institutions, with the Canadian spirit and Canadian ideals constantly in view, is, other things being equal, a far better unit of the population than a person brought from some European country, in middle or later age, out of conditions so different from ours, and set down amongst a population that is to a large extent alien to him. I do not think there is the least doubt about that; and, speaking generally, I would say that ten thousand Canadian children, brought up to good, sound citizenship, are a better asset than twice or three times that number imported in adult age from foreign countries and mixed with the population of Canada.

So there are two branches to this question. The whole is embraced in the idea of increasing the efficiency as well as the numbers of the population of Canada. We have now 9,000,000 people in this country. It is said that people are leaving this country and going to another. That will always be the case. There will be ebbs and flows in that kind of migration. There will be circumstances in other countries to attract our population, as at the same time there will be in this country circumstances which will attract the population of other countries. Sometimes the ebb is greater than the flow; at other times the flow is greater than the ebb. We have had experiences of this in our 50 years of Canadian history. But I do not think that any one will deny the fact that the attention of Canada should be drawn not only to the inflow of people from outside countries, but also to the conservation of the population that is born and brought up to greater or lesser age in the country itself.

I suppose that no science has been so backward as what may be called social science; that is, a knowledge of the conditions of society as affecting the individual and the family, and all the influences which bear upon the upbringing of the child from infancy to manhood or womanhood. That science has been neglected until within the last few years. To-day it is making strides, and a number of most influential organizations are at work, there is an efficient and uniform method of gathering, analysing and distributing information, and remedial means are being taken to make as effective as possible the upbringing of the youth of Canada. I think myself that Governments should have an eye towards that branch of the subject, as well as spending money and forming organizations to bring in people from abroad. Is it not a fact that strikes one as somewhat deplorable that, whilst in other branches we have adopted the latest and most efficient methods possible for the production of that which is best, we have not paid the same attention to nurture of our own population, and that consequently this has been carried on under difficulties and there have been debilitating influences at work, which have taken away from the efficiency as well as from the numbers of the native population? I think we must mobilize all the best institutions and influences of our country—the medical faculties, the educational processes, the religious influences, the humanitarian impulses and enterprises of the country—along the line of increasing the possibilities for the efficiency and the growth of our native population and its maintenance within our country.

As regards the inflow of population from abroad, all of us are in favour of any reasonable, sound method of increasing our population by that means. I am one of those who believe in the work of the Salvation Army. I think their influence on the populations of countries outside of Great Britain has been good. In Australia, New Zealand, and in the Dominion of Canada they have introduced an element which has been void of most of the dangers and difficulties of inflowing population—an element which has been carefully selected and, what is far better, has been supervised and attended to after it has become a part of the population of the new country. Consequently I am in favour of any fair method of co-operation with such an organization as the Salvation Army. It has done fine work in the past. It is an organization which may do good work in the future.

I have not heard what conclusion the Government has reached in reference to a new phase of emigration from Great Britain and immigration to this country; but I know that the Government of Great Britain has appropriated a large sum of money, and is disposed to continue appropriations along the same line, for working in co-operation with outside Dominions, in the matter of expense of transport, training and the like, for the purpose of building up a system which will retain Empire citizens in Empire countries and prevent the waste of valuable national resources by the dispersion of those citizens to other than British countries. I know that the Commonwealth of Australia, which under labour auspices has been not at all inclined to help immigration into that country, has to-day turned a new leaf and is following the policy of co-operating heartily in the way that I have intimated with the British Government. Already plans have been made by which at least 75,000 British emigrants will be within the next few years settled in the Commonwealth of Australia under the mutual effort and mutual burden-bearing of the old country and the Commonwealth itself. A similar policy is operating in Africa and in New Zealand.

What is being done with reference to this in the Dominion of Canada? Perhaps the Government has settled on its plan. But I noticed an extract from a speech that was given the other day by a British minister in which he deplored the fact that, whilst in Australia, in New Zealand and in the Province of Ontario the proposals had been fairly met and co-operation was being carried on, it yet remained for the Dominion of Canada to say what it intended doing in this respect. An offer of co-operation, the purport of which is to bring British stock into this country, is a proposition which, I think, should not be ignored, but should be eagerly and carefully considered and accordant action should be taken in connection therewith. I hope that this is part of the policy of the Government.

Honourable gentleman, I have spoken these few random words in a general way. I end my few remarks by drawing the attention of my honourable friend the leader of the Government to something about which he was quite enthusiastic a year or so ago. I am not satisfied with the position that the Senate holds with regard to the legislation and government of this country. I do not think that the Senate, which is a constitutional part of the legislative entity of this country, occupies the position which it ought to occupy. Here are 96 men drawn from every section of the Dominion of Canada—men of experience, men of large business experience, many of whom have had long experience in legislative matters, some of whom have been ministers of departments in federal or provincial legislatures and governments. Here we are, and we spend our time during the Session ostensibly ready to do, or doing, the work of the state which constitutionally devolves upon us. I do not think we are equipped or are given exactly the proper means to enable us to carry out that work. It is impossible for my honourable friend the leader of the Government, even though he worked every hour of the day and every hour of the night, to make himself acquainted with the principles, not to say the details, of the different departments of the Government. He cannot be expected to do it; he cannot do it. He himself knows that he cannot do it. When 96 members set their faces towards a subject and ask for information, trying to ascertain the mind of the Department which proposes the legislation in question, and to learn what has been the effect of previous legislation, and what are the details and results that have been worked out, it throws the damper of a very wet cloth upon those 96 men to be told by the honourable leader of the Government here: "I do not myself know, but I will ask for information." There is nothing more depressing. A query of information is sent to some practising member of the Government in a Department, and it is handed over to a clerk, and perhaps 10 days, or 20 days, or even a month, afterwards, a lifeless and unvivified memorandum is brought to this House and is laid on the table. All the spirit has died out. The desire for information is only a living thing when the information can be given at the time it is required. We have no proper liaison between that part of the Governmental entity that sits in another Chamber and that which sits here. What this Government ought to give us is at least two operating ministers of departments in this Chamber. In the olden times we had them—sometimes more, hardly ever less. Then you will impart real life to the doings of this Chamber, and you will find that members will take an interest in its business, and that these seats will be occupied rather than vacant.

I commend that suggestion to the Government, in the interest of the Government, the interest of the country at large, and in the interest of the Senate. Senates are powerful bodies in other countries. Take the Senate of the United States, for instance; take the House of Lords in Great Britain, which, though shorn of some of its powers, is still a mighty factor in the administrative work of the United Kingdom and the Empire. Who on the street asks to know what is the opinion of the Senate upon this or upon that question? Who in the press really takes any trouble to know whether the Senate has any ideas, and, if so, what they are, upon any branch of legislative concern, or upon conditions which require the best and most united work of all in order to arrive at a successful conclusion?

I think this might be done. I see on the other side of the House, seated around my honourable friend who represents the Government (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), men of great ability, men of large experience, men who have energy and a desire to do their work in the way of legislation. What is to prevent my honourable friend making a levy of a certain number of men on his own side of the House and arranging that they shall be responsible to their brother Senators for the affairs of departments which are not represented in this House? That would give those honourable gentlemen something to do which they would be very glad to do, and it would be of immense interest and help to us all. Surely something of that kind might be done.

Then, again, our experience of last year saw almost all the Bills that came to the Senate for examination pitched in during the hot days of summer in almost the last week of the Session of Parliament. What opportunity or chance is there for good work under those conditions? Why could we not have a reasonable number of important Bills given to the Senate to take up and dissect, upon which we could bring our experience and wisdom to bear to put them into shape for the Chamber below? I do not know whether the British constitution or the Canadian constitution would be absolutely broken into bits if an arrangement were made somewhat like that foreshadowed by my honourable friend—that in the case of very important measures a member of the Government in active administration of a department should have a seat in this House for the purpose of explaining to the members the details and inner workings which it is almost impossible to get in any other way, and which could so easily be communicated in some such way as I have suggested. The British constitution has stood many an assault from the days of Cromwell down, and it still lives and is vigorous; I do not believe that the pillars of the Canadian constitution would be pulled down if some such practical arrangement as I have outlined could be made.

Honourable gentlemen, that is my humble contribution to the gaiety of the Senate in respect to the debate upon the Address.

Hon. RUFUS H. POPE: Honourable gentlemen, it was with a great deal of pleasure that I listened to our new and young Senator who speaks both languages (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster). While I could not understand one of them, I have no doubt that his speech in that language was very eloquent.

If I had been going to select an authority on the classification and the improvement of the human race, I would not have selected the honourable gentleman who has just spoken to say why there were weaknesses in the reproduction from one generation to another. I would have gone elsewhere. I would not have made that comparison between the rearing of animal life and of human life. Having been a farmer all my days, and a breeder of stock, I know that while we can to a certain extent control what shall be repeated in animal life, we have not any such control in human life. Therefore we have to take those chances; and when I look over the human race as represented in Canada, I think we have to thank the women, the mothers of Canada, for being able to reproduce from generation to generation a wonderful people, in spite of the weaknesses of the men. I pay that compliment to the women, as the founders of the race.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER.

Speaking of the question of immigration, I quite agree, let the Government be what it may, that we must find some policy that will keep our native-born people at home. I quite agree with the honourable gentleman that they are the best qualified citizens for this country, having been born and reared in our climate, and knowing its conditions. I think the native-born baby is the best immigrant in the world. Down in our province of Quebec we have appreciated that fact, and have kept on doing business in the old-fashioned way, and in that we have an immigration of our own which is not only supplying our own necessities, but is contributing largely to the deficiency in many of the other provinces of Canada. You will find these people economical, good agriculturists, indusrious good-living people. But we must have a policy, and the Government of the day, not the honourable gentlemen on this side of the House, for we have no power, are responsible for that policy. I want the leader of the Government in this House, the only representative of the Government here, to carry back to the Cabinet of which he is a member the assurance that if they desire the liberal, independent support of the majority of this Chamber, it is up to them to put in force some legislation that will redound to the benefit and prosperity of Canada and keep our people at home, instead of spending millions of money to bring immigrants from abroad. We have brought many immigrants to this country who are undesirable; the United States brought many immigrants to that country who were undesirable; and to-day you find many restrictions placed upon Europeans coming into the United States because it has been discovered that there are certain kinds of humanity on the continent of Europe which they do not want reproduced in that country. We do not want them here either. We must select men and women from the best centres of Europe, and I say let us go slow until we can formulate a policy that will keep our own people at home. There is not a port of entry from Halifax to Vancouver in any of the provinces of Canada where to-day there are not men and women going over to the United States—and why? Because there is a weakness in our national policy.

The honourable gentleman who moved the Address (Hon. Mr. Hardy) said that there was a time when at heart he was a free-trader. He said that in 1919 everything was at the height of prosperity, but that since then there had been very great changes; and he ventured to say that a reduction in the tariff would have resulted in an almost disastrous course of events. I do not know that we have ever had come into this House so consistent a Liberal as that honourable gentleman, who stood on both sides of the question inside of five minutes. I think that if there are any medals to be struck for Liberal consistency, one should be struck for the honourable gentleman from Brockville (Hon. Mr. Hardy): he has won it, and deserves it. He did not try to deceive us. He told us plainly that he stood astride of the fence, ready to drop one way or the other. That is the case with the Government: they stand astride of the fence; and in that utterance, he truly represented the Government. They dare not come down in the House of Commons with a pronouncement of policy—and without a strong policy you cannot govern this country and redeem it from the position in which it is placed, financially and otherwise. I quite agree with the honourable gentleman who has taken his seat (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) that this should not be emphasized in public places. But let us realize that we are not here simply to occupy space, but to lend our best efforts in legislation, and to remedy the weaknesses that we find in the national life of Canada.

Let the Government pronounce a policy and come down with it. If it is free trade, let them bring it down; if it is protection, let them do likewise. If they are defeated in the House of Commons, let them go to the people. Let Canada have a policy that is strong and national in its character, and protective of all the people of Canada. Let it come from where it may, it will receive the support of the sound people of Canada. What is the policy of the present Government? We have seen the spectacle of them going around last year with a snuff-box, and saying: "Will you please smell; take a sniff of this; when we find a flavour that suits everybody and suits nobody, we will inaugurate a policy for this country.".

We have a destiny, and it is not to be conceived or created by weakness or cowardice, or by any Government that is afraid to come down and face the issue and get on one side of the fence or the other. There they are: let them choose whichever side they like. I say to you, who represent the Government in this House, that it is impossible to develop Canada to the full promise of our national assets with a policy that is not strong in all its features. We talk of bringing in farmers. Good God, we have farmers going away by the hundreds, all through the length and breadth of Canada; nailing up their houses and deserting them in the Province of Quebec, and deserting their equipments in the West; and you are asking a foreigner, a stranger, who knows not our climate or soil or methods of agriculture to come here and make a success while men who have tried it have failed.

Last year we had a policy in regard to a wheat board, which was so weak that even the gentlemen out west who fostered it in the Committee of the House of Commons failed to make it go. There was not a man in Parliament who knew anything about legislation but knew when it went through this House that it was doomed to failure. It was not timely: it was weak from A to Z; and any Government that does not recognize that Canada has in the West a country that produces the best wheat in the world, now that Russia is out of the market, and that we have a mortgage on the markets of the world for quality, but is willing to trade off our wheat to be mixed with American soft grain so as to compete with us in the markets of the world is unworthy to be called the champion of agriculture, whether it has forty farmers or none at all supporting it. What is the good of these people, having acquired a claim from nature, crying to the Yankees: "For God's sake, buy our wheat and mix it with yours so that you can compete with us in the market."

Honourable gentlemen say that they are going to have in the House of Commons another committee to offer us another measure. I presume it will be after it has been snuffed around. After this one has smelt, and that one has smelt, and everybody has smelt, they will bring this thing here to occupy the attention of this House, and if we on this side of the House dare to criticize it, we shall be called blind partisans.

Now, they speak as though this Government and its Cabinet Ministers had done something to get the cattle embargo removed. Let us be honest with ourselves, and let us be fair to the men who were able to get that embargo removed. In the first place, it was due to a promise made by the British Government to Canada through Sir Robert Borden in 1917. It was the fulfilment of that promise. You will find in the Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire a speech delivered by Mr. Asquith, in which he said:

> The legislation for the prohibition of the admission of foreign cattle was proposed by a Government of which he was a member, not for the protection of the British farmer against foreign competition, but for obtaining the immunity of their herds and flocks against the possible importation of foreign disease. In the years which followed a growing agitation arose for the removal of those restrictions as regarded the Canadian source of supply.

Although for many years he had been firmly convinced that Canadian cattle ought to be and might be freely admitted to this county without any real danger to their own herds and native sources of supply he had always been ready to concede that there was a very strong case to be made upon the one side as well as upon the other.

There were, however, two new factors which ought to be conclusive to the House.

I do not see that in the Speech from the Throne.

The first and more important was what took place at the Imperial Conference in 1917.

The honourable gentlemen were not in power in 1917.

He could not conceive how anyone who had read the proceedings of that conference, and the authorized and official comments subsequently made upon them by no less an authority than the Prime Minister himself, could seriously maintain that they were not bound in honour to one of the greatest of their own Dominions to implement the solemn promise which was then given.

It is the implementing of that promise, based upon the health of our cattle. And I desire to say something in praise of a gentleman who is not in this Chamber, but who happens to be in another House, and who was then, fortunately, Minister of Agriculture for Canada. He is a veterinary and farmer. I am speaking of Hon. Dr. Tolmie. It was Dr. Tolmie's conclusive evidence before that Commission in England that sealed the fate of that prohibitory legislation and made it possible for us to establish the fact that for the past 30 years Canada has been the healthiest country for cattle anywhere in the world —anywhere in the world, mark you. Never again can this be questioned, after the conclusive evidence that Dr. Tolmie gave.

There are some complications in this matter. We have an arrangement with the United States whereby our pure-bred stock may go into that country free. If we were to bring pure-bred stock from England, where the foot-and-mouth disease existed, and admit it to this country, you may be sure the markets of the United States would be closed against our pure-bred stock. That is a very serious matter, and we have to take that into consideration as well as the other things.

Then, if you examine the details of this matter, you will learn something about the regulations which surround the wonderful gift that is referred to in the Speech from the Throne. Who the present Minister of Agriculture is, who has had so little experience in the handling of live-stock as to offer this unqualified approval to the representative of His Majesty to be transmitted to us, I do not know, but it would do no harm if he were replaced by someone else. We find in the regulations, in the first place, that these animals have to be kept separate from other animals for at least three days—in Montreal, we will say. They have to remain there and be fed for three days, and have to be examined every day by a veterinary surgeon, so that he may see just how they are getting along. Then there must be a veterinary on every boat, and during the voyage these animals have to be inspected every day by that veterinary. When they arrive on the other side, there is no limit to the time they may have to wait for proper inspection before they may be sent to the market. Now, consider the feeding and care, and the expense of all that in connection with the shipment of ordinary store cattle; for that is what this Importation of Animals Act refers to. It does not refer to pure-bred stock; it does not use even the word "beef"; it uses the word "store cattle". Consider all that expenditure which must be incurred for each one of these animals. Therefore I say again that it is a false note of encouragement that the Government of the day have asked His Excellency to give to us in the Speech from the Throne.

There are a number of impracticable things about the arrangement. But who went from this Government to England to deal with this matter? There were, as I understand, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the Minister of Labour. I do not know if any one of the three could milk a cow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There were the experts from the Department of Agriculture.

Hon. Mr. POPE: They went over also? I am glad of it. But if you have no better experts than those who would agree to all these complications, again I say, change your experts. Think of Canada for just a minute or two. Never mind those people and their responsibilities, but think of the farmers of this country, who are suffering far and wide. Think of them. You cannot ship cattle under that arrangement; it cannot be done. Honourable gentlemen of the Senate, we cannot develop our cattle trade under the restrictions contained in those regulations. There they are, and the truth of my words will be proven by the effort that will be made. We have been handed a lemon with the juice all squeezed out.

The Minister of Agriculture from Ontario, Mr. Doherty, I think, claims credit for the removal of the embargo. He was over in England and worked in an election there. I am quite sure they did not think much of his work in that election. Still that would not faze Doherty—a little thing like an election.

Now, I desire to refer to the question of the railways. The ex-Minister of Railways, the late Mr. Kennedy, is here no longer. I am sure we all regret his sad death. I am one of those who sincerely believe that, if Mr. Kennedy had not been taken ill, the reorganization of the Board of Management would not have been on the same lines as it is to-day. I am quite convinced of that, and I am not alone. There are many people with whom he had communication, who were satisfied in that respect.

This document, mark you, is the Journal of the Parliaments of the Empire, a book or magazine which goes, as you know, to all the Parliaments of the Empire, and it should contain the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. This is read by people in the old country and in the other Dominions, and it is in the light of the information contained in this publication that those people think of our legislation and judge us. This is what Hon. Mr. Kennedy said:

> This Board would be thoroughly representative and would include in its number the most competent railway men.

Now, here is Mr. Graham's list:

Mr. John Sinclair; ex-Liberal member for Antigonish, a played out politician of ordinary ability, put on the Board to watch the Grit party's interest. Number one.

Mr. Ernest Decarie, former Controller of Montreal; appointed by Mr. Gouin; a Liberal. He has been given another job by the Liberals, by the way.

Mr. Tom Moore, representing the employes. Never worked on a railway, but was preferred to any of the 90,000 railway employes. The representative of Labour and the railroad men! A real Labour man! I do not know that he ever saw a railway.

Mr. Gough, fur merchant of the city of Toronto. The only thing I can find out about his record is that he is a Liberal.

Mr. James Stewart, President of the Maple Leaf Milling company, and Director of the Bank of Montreal. He was put on the Board because Mr. King, the Prime Minister of Canada, objected to men with large interests being appointed to this Board. In order to show Mr. King that he did not amount to a—(whistle)—Mr. Stewart was put on there as representing Mr. King's promise.

Mr. Dawson, of Prince Rupert; a Liberal. I do not know anything about him. I am told that he has a certain qualification, but I do not know how true it is. They say he carries things in the legs of his boots. If he does I wish they had put him into the Senate instead of on the Board. I might have found some use for him.

Then you have Mr. Graham Bell, the Deputy Minister.

Then you have Sir Henry Thornton. I know nothing about Sir Henry Thornton except that he is a fine-looking man. He has had a good deal of experience in railway operations, but it has been in densely populated areas. He is quite new to the problem of operating these 22,000 miles of railroad.

But when I think over what this road was when it was taken over by the Government that has just gone out of power—when we had to take over the wreck that was left on our hands as the result of the Liberals having been in power for 15 years, and when I compare it with what Mr. Hanna left behind him, I say that I do not believe that we had in Canada, available to us, a man who could have done better than Mr. Hanna and his associates in that system. That is all I have to say. The Board was non-political in every respect. The Lord knows what they were politically. I do not. I know they were not Conservatives, or I could have smelt them. I have that sense by which I can smell a Conservative. Especially in these days, he is sweet. The Liberals in Montreal will soon be as sweet if they keep on.

I hope that Sir Henry Thornton will achieve all the success that is anticipated. He cannot receive any hearty encouragement from the gentlemen who form the Government and who sit around him. They were not in favour of the nationalization of railways. I do not know what they were in favour of, but they were not in favour of nationalization, and the honourable gentleman who leads this House knows it quite well, from the election that took place last December in the city of Montreal. But, judging by the election that took place two or three days ago, I am beginning to think that he did not know anything about the opinions of the people of the city of Montreal. I have some hope that, since the headquarters of the railway system are to be in that same city, the Board of Management will be surrounded by good advisers and will receive encouragement, and that the aspirations we in this country have for the perfecting of the national system will be realized, and that, in spite of all the faults you committed in 15 years—and God knows they were many—the time may arrive when you and yours will be forgiven.

Thank you, honourable gentlemen.

The motion for the Address was agreed to.

THE LATE HON. SENATOR PROUDFOOT

TRIBUTES TO HIS MEMORY

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, since we separated in June last we have had the misfortune to lose a member of the Senate who left us in the full enjoyment of health, and whom we were sure, so far as anything in this life is sure, to meet again when this Session should be called.

The late Senator Proudfoot had an interesting career, which was that of a good citizen who was prominent not only in his profession, but also in various financial and industrial activities, and who, from the day when he left the university, took an interest in public affairs. He was trusted by the community in which he lived. He was sent to the Legislature of the Province of Ontario, and in that Legislature attained the high honour of leadership of his party. He came here with the reputation of a public-spirited citizen. We had him with us for a few years only, but we can all testify that he was painstaking and industrious and a factor for good in the activities of this Chamber. He accepted the arduous duties of Chairman of the Divorce Committee. We all know that it was not a sinecure. Since the war the work of that Committee has been a real burden upon its members. The late Senator Proudfoot did his work with a judicial mind, and when he brought before the Senate the decisions of that Committee he was always ready to show that they were based upon the principles of justice and the rules of the Senate.

What more can I add? He seemed deeply interested in all legislation which made for a higher moral life throughout the community. In many discussions we heard him strive for the enactment of laws to that end. At times we did not see eye to eye with him as to the remedies that he suggested, but we recognized his earnestness in promoting a better, purer, and higher life for the people of Canada.

I am sure that I represent all the honourable members of this Chamber in expressing our heartfelt sympathy with his family in their bereavement.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, speaking for this side of the House, I join in the expressions of regret which have been so fittingly uttered by my honourable friend the leader of the Government as to the death of our late colleague, Senator Proudfoot. He was not one of the older members of this Chamber, as his appointment was made only four or five years ago; but I do not recall within my experience any new member of the Senate identifying himself so speedily and actively with its work, particularly in connection with the subject of divorce. There certainly has been no member of the committee who has rendered more diligent and valuable service in the discharge of the important duties which from time to time have been delegated to that Committee. The services that the late Senator rendered to this Chamber were, in fact, incalculable.

The late Senator was not what might be termed an uncompromising party man. He was a man of peculiarly strong convictions, and I do not recall that during the time I knew him and enjoyed his friendship he ever permitted expediency to stand in the way of conviction. He might have been said to be equally sympathetic with both parties in this Chamber.

He was one of the most industrious members of this body. At almost any hour of the night one might find him in his room actively engaged not only in his work as a Senator, but in carrying out the duties of his profession.

He stood high in the profession to which he belonged in the Province of Ontario. He was one of the leaders of the Bar, and his services were eagerly sought by those who had a knowledge of his ability and his desire to serve them.

He likewise may be said to have identified himself in a very prominent way with the local activities of the community to which he belonged. He was very active in many of the industries in the city of Goderich, of which he was a resident. His loss will be deeply felt by this Chamber, and he will be missed by the public, particularly in the Province to which he belonged, and it is needless to say that his loss will be very severely felt by his family. We convey to them condolences in the bereavement which they have suffered, and join in the general mourning which has been expressed for the loss of our late colleague Senator Proudfoot.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE

THE QUESTION OF SENATE REFORM

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I intend to move that when the Senate adjourns this evening it do stand adjourned to Tuesday evening, the 27th of February, instant, at 8 o'clock p.m.

I ask the attention of my colleagues while I explain why I am making this motion, and at the same time answer the inquiry of my right honourable friend the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) as to the reason why the Senate is not furnished with more work at the beginning of and throughout the course of the Session.

The speech which my right honourable friend has made on this subject has been heard, I am sure, every year during the twenty-five years I have been in this Chamber; and I am convinced that every year during the twenty-five years that preceded that time some Senator rose to ask why more public business was not introduced into the Senate and why more work was not given to it during a period of the Session when this House could apply all its faculties to the solution of the problems before it. I myself have made five or six speeches, perhaps more, on this very point; but I think I have discovered the reason why public Bills do not originate in this Chamber. I may say that during the Liberal Administration of 1896-1911, we had in this Chamber for a number of years the Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat, who was succeeded by the Hon. Mr. Mills. At the same time we had here the Secretary of State. Any Bills that would emanate from the Departments of those Ministers would be introduced in the Senate. They might be many or they might be few. But we had at the hands of those gentlemen no Bills that emanated from any other departments, and the reason is obvious. A Minister who has a Bill prepared by one of his officers or by himself naturally wants to introduce it himself. If he is a member of the other Chamber, he presents the Bill as his child. Naturally we do not receive it here until it has passed the Commons. Some Bills would be peculiarly interesting to the Senate and fitted for our committee work, but for the reason which I have given they start in the Commons. It is to meet that condition that I have on more than one occasion advanced the proposal that members of the Cabinet sitting in the other Chamber should, under our rules, be allowed to come to this Chamber for the purpose of introducing here their own legislation. When we meet again I may bring this matter to the attention of the Senate, and move that our rules be amended accordingly.

My right honourable friend has suggested that, if Ministers belonging to the other Chamber do not come to this House owing to our inaction in amending our rules, or unwillingness on their own part to come, we could distribute their work among a number of Senators instead of leaving all this kind of work to one alone. I think I submitted that idea in my speech on the Address last year. I am quite ready to support such an innovation, whether it be in the one form or the other. If the Ministers from the other House will not come here, I know of no reason why more Senators should not handle Government Bills. I would not stop at members on this side of the House. The Bills are numerous, but most of them are not party Bills, and if there were some Senators specially fitted to handle a Bill from one of the departments, even though he were sitting on the other side of the House, I would gladly ask him to take upon himself the responsibility of proposing and supporting that legislation in this House.

This explains why the Senate generally adjourns for a number of weeks when we have voted the Address. But this does not tell the whole story. My right honourable friend knows that the House of Commons takes at least five or six weeks during the Session to dispose of Supply in committee. We take five minutes; sometimes we have a short debate that lasts an hour. This alone would suffice to explain and justify the adjournment of the Senate for some weeks. The rest of the legislation of Parliament, whatever it be, whether it starts in the other Chamber or in this one, is handled by this Chamber of 96 members in much less time than it takes the Commons, with 235 members, to deal with it. This again explains to the members of the Senate and to the public why this House works only four days in the week—not sitting on Monday or Saturday —while the House of Commons works five days, not sitting on Saturday. Furthermore, very few of the 235 members of the House of Commons who make set speeches there care what has been said during the debate by twenty other members who may have preceded them. When they have prepared their speech they deliver it for their electors. Here we do not speak for the electors: we speak to the question; and during a short debate of a few hours no one would think of making in this Chamber a set speech which would be but a repetition of what had been said by two or three preceding speakers. A member introducing any subject makes a speech, and is answered by another member, and the matter is rapidly exhausted, because when we discuss a question we address ourselves to it, whereas very often the Commoners address themselves to their electors.

For these reasons I make this motion.

Hon. GEO. W. FOWLER: I suppose this is a motion that may be debated. I quite appreciate the necessity of an adjournment for some length of time, in order to wait until the House of Commons has some business before it. But it does seem to me that two weeks, or nearly three weeks, is too long an adjournment. I question the wisdom of that. There are many things we can do while we are here. We can discuss public questions that require to be discussed; we can introduce measures ourselves that require to be introduced for the general benefit. But what will people say when we adjourn for three weeks? Notwithstanding the most excellent argument made by the leader of the Government, they will say: "Does not that prove the lack of necessity for such an institution as the Senate?" Therefore I think we should not take that long adjournment. I am not talking now for the reporter, but for the House. We know that there is a somewhat erroneous idea on the part of the unthinking and ignorant among the general public—ignorant, I mean, of the facts and the reasons —as to the necessity for the Senate, because they have not been informed thereon. I believe there is no more essential and necessary body in Canada than the Senate of Canada. I say this, not because I am a member of the Senate, but because I have always believed so; and I think any student of political history will come to the conclusion that it is for the good of the government of the country, and to prevent legislation becoming wild and hasty and improper and bad. A great deal of legislation from the lower House has been remedied in passing through this House; and the country should be grateful to the members of the Senate for what they have done in that regard.

I regret that there is not a greater interest taken by some of the members in the work of the Senate. There should be more hard working, industrious men, like the man whose loss we deplored a few moments ago. There are many members of this Senate who pay no more attention to the business of the House than they would if they did not belong to it at all. It is men like that who lend some appearance of right to the people who criticize the Senate.

There is still some time before six o'clock, and if we are going to have a long vacation of three weeks, honourable gentlemen will not mind if I run the risk of tiring them with my ideas as to a change in the constitution of the Senate. Unlike the honourable junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) who advocates that there should be more members of the Government in the Senate, I take the ground that no man who is a Senator should be a member of the Government. The Senate should be a sort of advisory body to whom legislation would be submitted. There would be in it no leader of the Government and no leader of the Opposition. If you have a leader of the Government, you are bound to have a leader of the Opposition: one follows the other as night follows the day. But you should have the proper kind of men appointed to the Senate. I would not interfere with the system of appointment. I believe in a Senate appointed by the Government of the day. I believe that when men come to the Senate they should divest themselves of their partisanship. I know that is a very difficult task, but it would be rendered less difficult if there were no parties here, and no leader of the Opposition and no leader of the Government. When a man comes to this House and finds arrayed before him all the paraphernalia of Governmen and Opposition that he thought he had left in the other House, he finds it very difficult to divest himself of partizanship. I believe that every man who comes here should approach public questions with one idea alone, namely, the welfare of Canada, irrespective of whether it helps or hurts the party with which he was formerly affiliated. But so great are the infirmities of human nature, so strong are party feelings, that it is almost impossible for men to divest themselves of those feelings. That condition would be very greatly assisted if there were nothing to hope for but to take legislation when it comes before us and discuss it from the standpoint alone of what is best for the Canadian people, irrespective of the source from which it is introduced.

I would allow a Minister to come here and speak from the floor of this House and explain his position, or the points of a measure which he had introduced. I would allow him to be here to answer all questions that might be asked in the course of the debate, if he chose to remain for that purpose. But, of course, he would have no vote in this Chamber.

You may ask: how would you expedite legislation? That might be done by the selection from among the members of either a single member or of a committee of the Senate for that purpose. There must be some person charged with the duty of bringing matters before the House. Unless you have that, you are going to have stagnation and trouble and difficulty. It does seem to me that the proper course would be to charge somebody with that duty—and it is a very onerous duty—and pay him a certain amount over and above the indemnity paid to other members. That would overcome the difficulty, and would tend to make the Senate what it should be—a non-partisan body receiving legislation from the other House, and looking at it with one eye only, and having that eye directed to the benefit of the people of Canada.

I would make some other reflections with regard to the improvement of the Senate. One of them would be that no man should be appointed to the Senate after he is 50 years of age, and no man should be allowed to remain in the Senate after he is incapacitated by reason of illness, or after he is 75. So we would have in the Senate men from the age of 30 up to 75—men in the full vigour of their manhood and their intellect; men capable of grasping the affairs of state and deciding what measures would be for the benefit of Canada.

Then, in order that a Senator should not be turned out, like an old horse turned to pasture, to end his days in poverty, there should be provided, as in the case of the Judges, a pension or superannuation allowance, which would be smaller, very much smaller, than the indemnity now paid, but would be sufficient, so that it should not be said that a Senator of Canada was obliged to beg for a living, or go to the almshouse, or depend upon charity.

It seems to me that would give us a Senate constituted in the best possible way. I have given this matter a great deal of careful consideration. This scheme may sound unreasonable to some people, who, like the population of the world outside, are unthinking, but I am willing to leave it to any honourable member who will study the question, and am satisfied that he will see it is not an unreasonable scheme or one that would be detrimental to the Senate itself. After all, the one thing we want to consider is the interest of the people of Canada. If we have here a body which can be improved, it is our duty to provide the remedy ourselves, and it should not be necessary to call in the assistance of any outsider. If this Senate is at all worthy of its name, there should be within it members with sufficient intelligence and sufficient patriotism to make the necessary reforms.

I do not believe in an elective Senate. If the Senate were elective you would have two administrative bodies with the same source of authority, and they might come into conflict, each claiming that it represented the sovereign people and obtained its mandate direct from the people. You cannot have that conflict between the nominative Senate and an elective House of Commons.

I would say also that this Senate, the model Senate of which I am speaking, should not oppose legislation founded upon a policy that had been placed before the people in an election campaign and upon which the party propounding it had been elected, because there the voice of the people has directly spoken, and I say, however mistaken or misguided the people may have been, when a majority of them have spoken, their word should be obeyed by this Chamber and by the other. In such an event there can be no proper conflict between the two Houses. But when the Government introduced a measure which to the members of the Senate appeared to be not in the best interest of Canada, the Senate should have the right to reject that measure, and they should reject it. If afterwards the Government introducing that measure goes to the people and with that measure as part of their platform obtains a mandate from the people, then I say the objections of the Senate should cease and the measure should be permitted to become law.

These, to my mind, are briefly some of the ideas that have come to me for a reformation or change of the Senate. To sum up, I do not believe in any change in the manner of appointments. I do believe in the changes of which I have spoken, as to members of the Senate being prevented from being members of the Government. If a man wants to be a member of the Government, let him go to the people and have them return him. That is the proper course to pursue. The Government ought not to take men who have no seats in the elective chamber, and with regard to whom the people have no chance of saying whether they are suitable or not, or whether they wish them as members of the Government or not. It is not in the interest of responsible government that such men should be foisted upon the country. Every man who holds a portfolio in any Government should be obliged to go to the electors and get their mandamus, their permit, for him to sit and to exercise the powers of office. All members of the Government would then be members of the Lower House.

I thank you honourable gentlemen, for listening so patiently to these somewhat innovating remarks, and trust you will ponder over them.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I would like to suggest to the honourable leader of this House that when he is discussing with his colleagues the advisability of members of the Government coming here to give information about their Bills, it might be desirable also to discuss whether the Government should not require all private legislation to be introduced in the Senate. I am firmly of the opinion that if all private legislation were considered here and licked into shape, more or less—

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Or licked out of shape.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: —or licked out of shape, as it would be if my honourable friend had charge of it—when it went to the Commons it could be dealt with there in a great deal less time that is required at present.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It would probably never get there.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I simply suggest to my honourable friend the leader that he might discuss that point with his colleagues and see if something along these lines could not be done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have already suggested that there should be but one clerk to receive private petitions and Bills for both Houses, and that the even numbers be given to one House and the odd numbers to the other, in order that we might have 50 per cent of the private legislation coming to this Chamber and 50 per cent going to the other.

At present the method works in this way. The petitioner for private legislation sends his cheque; if he sends it to the House of Commons the Bill originates there; if he sends it to the Accountant of the Senate, the Bill is introduced in this Chamber. That is why I thought the procedure might be very easily arranged between the two Chambers, by having one clerk in charge of the receipt of petitions and Bills, and with authority to divide them equally between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 27, at 8 p.m.

If the Government is aware that two Judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario have accepted $10,000 each from that province for services performed while in receipt of their regular salaries of $9,000 each per annum, in apparent violation of the "Act to amend the Judges' Act, sec. 34, c. 56, 10-11 George V, 1920."

2. What amount of "travelling and living expenses" was paid (a) to Mr. Justice Latchford during the fiscal years 1920, 1921 and 1922; (b) also to Mr. Justice Riddel.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The answers are as follow:

1. No.

2. (a) In 1920-1, $1,013.15; in 1921-2, $1,037.90; in 1922-3, to Jan. 31, 1923, $867.65.

(b) In 1920-1, $105.00; in 1921-2, $58.30; in 1922-3, to Jan 31, 1923. $319.60.

CANADIAN FREIGHT CARS IN UNITED STATES

INQUIRY

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP inquired of the Government:

How many freight cars the property of the National Railways were in United States territory according to latest statistics?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On February 1st, 28,672 Canadian National (all lines) freight cars were located on foreign lines in the United States.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Have you any information as to what number there is at the present time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; this is the answer I received from the Department.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Have you any information as to when these cars will be returned to Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is a constant interchange of freight cars between Canada and the United States. Of course, the honourable gentleman is aware that these cars, when detained a certain number of days, are paid for, and that there is an exchange office at Chicago, to the maintenance of which all railways contribute, for the purpose of tracing the cars and reporting daily as to their movements. We can always know from day to day where the Canadian cars are, and it would perhaps be interesting to know, when there is a majority of cars on the other side, what is the total return to our railways for demurrage.

Hon. Mr. REID: May I ask the honourable leader what is the date of his return?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The first of February.

THE NEW UNION STATION IN TORONTO

INQUIRY

Sir EDWARD KEMP:

When will the new Union Station in Toronto be used by the National Railways of Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

The Canadian National Railways represent only a partial interest in the new Union Station at Toronto. Before the station is opened for service, a number of related questions will require to be considered and decided by all parties interested. It is hoped that negotiations to that end will be shortly inaugurated by the Canadian National Railways' Management.

CANADA'S TRADE

2. What was the volume of export trade from Canada to each of the said countries during the said years?

3. And also, what was the volume of imports into Canada from the said countries during the said years?

CRIMINAL APPEALS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. McMEANS moved the second reading of Bill B, an Act to extend the right of appeal from Convictions in Indictable Offences.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in moving the second reading of this Bill I do not desire to take up the time of the House unduly in discussing it. Last year a similar Bill was introduced and received the approval of this House, and was referred to a Special Committee. That committee made a report to the House stating that they had considered the Bill and desired further information upon it. Requests were accordingly sent out to the different attorney generals and judges in Canada for their views, and a request also was forwarded, through the Department of Justice, to the Home Office in England, asking for information. This information was gathered together during the Recess.

The present Bill is the same as that of last Session with the exception that the Bill of last year did not provide that the Court of Criminal Appeal could order a new trial. When the English Act was first passed the Court of Criminal Appeal in England were bound to deal with every case that came before them. They could take new evidence, and could diminish or increase a sentence, or could find a man guilty on a count on which he was not indicted.

The Bill of last Session was based upon the same grounds as the English Act, but, from information received, it has been thought better to provide in the present Bill that the Court of Appeal may order a new trial if they so desire. I may point out that the chief opposition to such a measure, if there is any opposition at all, comes from some of the Judges in the Eastern part of Canada, who base their opposition on the ground that they will have more appeals to deal with and that consequently their work will be increased. I have discussed the matter with some of the Judges of the Court of Appeal in the West, and one Judge in the Province of Manitoba told me that they would be inundated with appeals. I believe that the Judges are mistaken in this view. Since the committee met last year we have received detailed information from England, where, I understand, with a population of 30,000,000 or 40,000,000, there were 471 applications to appeal, 81 of which were allowed and dealt with by the Court. The Court of Criminal Appeal is composed of Judges of the King's Bench Division. In Canada, of course, it will be necessary to go to the Trial Judge or the Court of Appeal to obtain leave to appeal. In this country, with a population of about 9,000,000, I believe we have about 132 Judges; and yet some of the gentlemen who adorn the Bench seem to think that this might impose upon them further responsibility or more work.

I would ask that the Bill be read a second time.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Will the honourable gentleman permit me a question? In case of an acquittal, can the Crown appeal?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: No. There is no provision for that in the English Act. The English Court of Criminal Appeal can take new evidence, or can increase the sentence or diminish it, or, if the evidence justifies it, can find a man guilty of an offence with which he has not been charged. For instance, if a man is charged with stealing, and the evidence shows that he was guilty of receiving stolen goods, he can be found guilty of the latter offence.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose he were acquitted on the charge of stealing the goods, and the Court upheld that finding, could they find him guilty on some other count?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Oh, no, I think not. Suppose he were accused of stealing and were found guilty on the trial, and appealed, the Court of Appeal, if the evidence did not justify the conviction, might find him guilty of receiving stolen goods.

I only ask for the second reading of the Bill so that it may go to the committee for which I intend to move.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL REFERRED TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. McMEANS moved:

That the Bill be referred to a special committee composed of Hon. Messrs. Barnard, Béique, Bennett, Beaubien, Belcourt, Dandurand, Foster (Alma), Fowler, Girroir, Lougheed (Sir James), Ross (Middleton), Tanner, Tessier, Willoughby, Gillis, Hardy, Laird, and the mover.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Is this the same committee that was appointed last year?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It is the same except that I have added the names of two gentlemen who are not lawyers, and have dropped the names of Hon. Mr. Proudfoot and one or two others. The difficulty has been that the lawyers have been engaged in conducting the work of the Divorce Committee and have not been able to attend this committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

G. T. R. DETROIT GRADE SEPARATION

INQUIRY

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP inquired:

1. Has the Government made tentative arrangements with the City of Detroit for a four million dollar grade separation programme?
2. Have the officials of the Grand Trunk Railway signed the agreement, and if so, what amount of money will require to be furnished by Canada for this project?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The estimated cost of the Detroit grade separation is $4,600,000, of which the Grand Trunk Railway Company's proportion is approximately $3,000,000 the city of Detroit being responsible for the balance. The work in question will be spread over a ten-year period.

CHICAGO G.T.R. TERMINAL STATION

INQUIRY

Hon. Sir EDWARD KEMP inquired:

1. Has the Government made any and if so what arrangements for the use of the projected State Street Terminal Station in Chicago?
2. What amount of money will require to be furnished by Canada for this project?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The terminal in question is used by the Grand Trunk Railway, which, with four other railways, own the holding company, the Chicago and Western Indiana Railway. No definite action in regard to a new station is expected for several years; meanwhile, published estimates of possible cost are mere guesses. Should a new structure finally be decided on, it should be financially self-sustaining.

RAILWAY CONNECTION BETWEEN CANADIAN NORTHERN AND TRANSCONTINENTAL

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON inquired of the Government:

1. Is the report that has appeared in the press that a contract has been awarded by the Board of Directors for construction of a railway between Canadian Northern Railway and Transcontinental Railway correct?
2. If so, what is estimated cost?
3. To whom has contract been awarded?
4. Was money voted by Parliament for this special vote?
5. If so, what vote was it included in?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. A contract has been let for clearing, grading, culverts and bridges, on the line referred to.
2. Estimated cost of above work, $775,980.
3. Foley Bros. & Hervey.
4. Amount required to cover expenditure up to March 31, 1923, was provided last Session.
5. Vote 112, 1922-23.

THE VIMY RIDGE MEMORIAL

RESOLUTION ON GIFT BY FRANCE TO CANADA

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I have much pleasure in moving the following resolution, which has already passed the House of Commons:

That Parliament do approve the acceptance by the Government of Canada of the gift graciously made by the Republic of France of a tract of land 250 acres in extent on Vimy Ridge at the site selected for the erection by Canada of a monument commemorating the exploits of Canadian soldiers in the Great War and in so doing records its sense of gratitude for and its appreciation of the motives which prompted France to associate herself with a project so dear to the heart of the Canadian people.

It will be deemed supremely fitting that the principal monument commemorating the exploits of our soldiers and testifying to Canada's eternal gratitude for their sacrifice and their achievements should be placed on the Vimy Heights where their glory shines so pure and so radiant. The battle of Vimy stands, among the innumerable clashes with the enemy, as a clear-cut victory of the Canadian corps which had the inferiority of the position and was facing a well prepared adversary.

We are thankful to the French Government for its generous gift and to our official delegate, the Hon. Mr. Lemieux, for the success he has attained, as well as to our many friends in France who interested themselves in this Canadian project. The dedication to our heroic dead of a piece of land which forever will be Canadian land, and the erection to their memory of a monument projecting its shade over their tombs will bring them nearer home and will bring us nearer to them.

No nobler cause could ever have drawn them into a world conflict. They fought against the enslavement of the world; against a materialistic and brutal Prussian hegemony. They fought so that justice should survive. They lie in the very midst of the nefarious work of the modern Attilas.

It was my good fortune, in August 1913, to journey from Amiens to Arras, to Vimy, Lens and Lille, on my way to a Peace Congress at the Hague. Town and country presented to our gaze an enchanting view. Arras and its medieval monuments; Lens, which looked as a city of women, all the men being in the coal mines underneath—Lille, Roubaix, Tourcoing, the mighty triple-headed industrial center; all around the fields blossoming; peace, contentment, and gaiety—such was the spectacle which this region and its inhabitants offered us.

The Hun has since come and gone. He has left that country in ruin. Arras is no more than an empty shell. Lens and hundreds of villages in that region have been completely wiped out, and the three industrial cities of Lille, Roubaix and Tourcoing were stripped of every piece of machinery which could be carried away, the balance being maliciously destroyed. The blossoming fields around Arras and Vimy are now vast cemeteries where our soldiers lie side by side with tens of thousands of their British and French comrades-in-arms.

These men gave their lives so that justice should triumph.

Have they died in vain?

Justice moves slowly, but it is moving onward. It is nearing the goal.

The Austro-Hungarian dual monarchy, which started on a punitive expedition against a small people, has returned shorn of its crown and of its subjugated states and provinces.

Germany, the haughty, the insolent, prussianized Germany which, unmercifully, cruelly, trampled under its iron foot little Belgium, has given to the world this supreme joy, in the hour of its abasement, of being amputated of two small pieces of territory, Eupen and Malmedy, by its little neighbor whom it intended to annex and gobble up.

Yes, Germany has had to make restitution to all the despoiled countries—to France, to Denmark, to Poland—and it has lost all its colonies; but the irony of fate has willed it that the mighty Empire would be dismembered by little Belgium, the heroic victim of an infernal lust.

The humiliation fits the crime. Pride, plethoric pride, is justly humbled. But the criminal is not repentant. He is only sorry that he failed.

He has systematically, scientifically, ruined every industrial plant in Belgium and France, which he has had under his hand, in order to destroy his competitors, and he has returned to his haunt, to his unharmed, untouched land, to pursue his trade as heretofore, without any remorse; to work diligently during the day and to enjoy a soft bed during the night, unconcerned about the ruins he has made and the people to whom he has left but their cellars to live in.

Is justice halting? Will the villain escape, not the chastisement he deserves, not the cost of the war, but simply the obligation to repair? Justice is moving onward. The French Poilu duly represents it at this hour. He has crossed the Rhine and he has laid his hand on very valuable property, industrial and mineral—just such riches as were destroyed in Belgium and France. The recalcitrant debtor, the fraudulent bankrupt, will now have to pay. The Hun will only repair when he knows that he must.

There is a feature in this coercive expedition which gladdens my heart: It was at the Spa Conference, in July, 1920, that Hugo Stinnes, one of the barons of the Ruhr Valley, who should have presented himself in sackcloth before his victims to humbly sue for mercy, had the audacity to raise his voice in anger and to insolently accuse the Allies of suffering from the disease of victory. He was not then chastised for his arrogance, but little Belgium has also invaded Germany and is now holding the big bully by the collar.

Are we not justified in thinking that the spirit of our fallen soldiers accompanies their living comrades, and that, in the devastated regions where they lie, they join with the victims of the Hun in their clamour for justice?

With the resolution which I submit to this Chamber, we desire to affirm our sympathy and friendship for the French nation. We know that nothing will please her more than to assure her that our best wishes accompany her in her determination to obtain from Germany the full measure of reparation to which she is so justly entitled.

Hon. C. P. BEAUBIEN: Honourable gentlemen, for those who had the opportunity of knowing the French people better, it seems a more pressing duty of gratitude to associate themselves with the sentiments so ably and so feelingly expressed by one whose position in Canada and authority in France lend them additional weight and value.

The monument intended to be erected at the summit of the Vimy Ridge, will be imposing and beautiful—imposing because it will dominate the long sloping hill of the Calvary of untold sufferings and of final immolation of thousands of unsurpassed Canadian soldiers; imposing because its adamant granite will forever keep and reveal to the world the glorious name of that improvised army who vanquished where veteran soldiers had failed; imposing especially because it will be the pathetic mausoleum of Canada to her 20,000 missing children, lost beyond a trace in the horrible hecatomb. This monument will be beautiful because an able artist has given to it the best of his genius, and because those who by the thousand journey to it to mourn those who are no more, must see in it the lesson that remains forever of those who, superior to human nature, have willingly exchanged all the seductions of life for the horrors of the duty of death.

But this memorial pile will lay deep its foundations in the soil of France—in that sacred "Wide Acre" ceded so generously by the French Government to Canada, upon this occasion so fittingly represented by His Honour the Speaker of the House of Commons, a man whose sacrifice and sorrow had clearly designated him for these moving negotiations. It is this donation that we record to-day with due sentiments of gratitude in the annals of this House, so that they may officially voice the appreciation of the whole Canadian nation.

In doing so, is it not appropriate that we should also remember with deeper gratitude the eleven departments of France, with their thousands of cities and villages, containing no less than 85 per cent of her industrial life, which were sacrificed for the common cause of the Allies, and of humanity?

Is it not fitting also that, as we adorn the graves of our children, we should pause and bow our heads reverently over the million and a half of dead Frenchmen who composed more than half of the manhood of France between 21 and 42 years of age?

Is it not fitting that we should have also a thought for the millions of wounded and crippled French soldiers whose living bodies were made the rempart of civilization?

Is it not eminently fitting that, remembering the two first years of the war, when the Allies were recruiting and organizing their armies, we should have a deep feeling of gratitude to the nation who was then holding the breach, throwing in all that she held dearest—her own flesh and blood, her whole wealth, her land sacred by the passage of history and the touch of genius.

In a matter so closely related to the gigantic struggle, where the horror of injustice and the terror of slavery drove practically the entire world to combine for common salvation, is it not fitting also that we should remember the nation who is continuing the struggle of right against might?

I believe the very great majority of the Canadian people see with resentment, if not with anger, Germany, the aggressor, prospering, free of unemployment, practically also of bankruptcies, shipping more goods than before the war, building more ships than before the war, constructing more costly public works than before the war, and still evading by all possible trickery her just obligations under the peace treaty?

They see with regret, if not with sorrow, France, the victim, bled white, despoiled, stripped, and practically bankrupted, staggering under the crushing load of the war. But they see her with admiration undaunted and with unbroken spirit still facing her ruthless foe and taking the means to oblige him to fulfil at least a part of his due undertaking.

Having these thoughts deep in my mind, as we express our heartfelt gratitude to France, I for one cannot help adding in the language of that distinguished Englishman, Lord Rothermere, "Hats off to France."

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, as a member of the Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission, I would like to say just a word expressing my gratitude, and I am sure the gratitude of everybody else in Canada, for the generosity and kindness of the Republic of France in granting us this block of land on Vimy Ridge. I might point out that the Commission was quite prepared to buy a site there, but that for years it would have been practically impossible to secure this site by purchase. In the first place, the landmarks were practically all obliterated on that part of the Ridge, and many of the owners were dead while others had removed. The Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux, Speaker of the House of Commons, and a Member of the Commission, was asked to go over to France to see what he could do towards securing the site; and I can say, I think without fear of contradiction, that no other man in Canada was in as good a position to handle the matter as that honourable gentleman. He is a man of standing not only in Canada, but is well known in Paris; and we all know of his ability and tact.

The French Government, in order to show their appreciation, and to join with Canada in commemorating the Canadians who had been killed during the war, and especially at the Battle of Vimy Ridge, decided that they would make a gift of this piece of land to the Canadian people. They were in a position to do so, as it had already been included in what they call the "Zone Rouge." They have given this land and have undertaken to settle with any claimants who may have owned portions of that land previous to the war.

As has been pointed out by the leader of the House, the monument to be erected is a splendid one. From all the Commission has been able to learn from connoisseurs, it will be one of the finest monuments to soldiers in the whole world. The work of completing this monument will ocupy some three or four years. There are eight or nine other monuments being erected throughout France and Belgium—three in Belgium and the remainder in France. The first monument to be completed is the St. Julien monument, which it is anticipated will be ready for unveiling about the 15th of May coming, and the others will be erected during the course of the next year or two.

I might say that while there have been some additions to the cost of this monument, there are others that will not cost as much as was estimated, due to the exchange and other things; and I think the total cost will be kept well within the original estimate. One particular item of cost was the securing of a building in London in which the models and statues could be prepared; but while that building has in the meantime cost considerable money, the High Commissioner for Canada in London assures us that when we are through with the building, in a few years, the lease, which has still seventy years to run, can be sold so that we will not lose any money, but possibly make a profit.

I am sure everybody is in sympathy with France in what she is undergoing at the present time. My own sympathies are altogether with France. Why our own country has not seen fit to take the same attitude I do not know, but to me it seems clear that Germany had made up her mind that she would not pay, and that she was not going to be crowded into paying. But I believe that, through the action taken by France, Germany will be forced to pay at least part of what she ought to pay, for the physical reparations that are required in France. I certainly hope she will be forced to pay, and that France will come out all right in the course she has undertaken.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I would like to ask the leader of the Government a question with reference to the gift—in perpetuity, I suppose, of course—of Vimy Ridge. What are the obligations that Canada has to assume in the matter? I have not noticed whether papers have been laid on the table in the other House giving full information in that respect. If they have been, then, if my honourable friend would give us the same information in the Senate, that would answer my question; but if not, what generally are the duties that devolve on the Canadian Government and the obligations that we undertake in connection with the grant that has been made of the land by the French Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not the documents before me, but I have read the agreement or undertaking, and it may be stated in a very few words; it is the proper maintenance of that lot of land by the Canadian Government in perpetuity.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Fee simple in possession.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The agreement, then, has been laid on the table of the other House?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would surmise so. I can procure it for my right honourable friend.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, there is a homely saying that a gift horse should not be looked in the face.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: In the mouth.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or in the mouth, or under any other condition. I hesitate to strike anything like a discordant note in reference to the resolution which has been so fittingly moved and seconded by my honourable friends; and yet at the same time I cannot overlook the fact that, from a perusal of the documents which have been placed upon the Table, there lacks that generosity or that graciousness on the part of France in reference to Canada which we would naturally expect as a recognition of the services which were rendered by Canada's sons to that great Empire, and under whose soil thousands of Canadians lie buried.

In the document, which will be found upon page 188 of the Commons Debates, I find obligations imposed of a nature as onerous as would be imposed in the case of two individuals entering into a lease or a real estate transaction; and that, I think, is not in harmony with the spirit which should characterize an act of this nature.

I desire to refer to the second column on page 188 of the Commons Hansard, in which the agreement is set forth in its entirety, and in it this recital will be found:

Whereas the Government of Canada desires to erect on Vimy Ridge (Pas-de-Calais), in the centre of a park which they intend to lay out, and the maintenance of which they will assume, a monument to the memory of the Canadian soldiers who fell on the field of honour in France during the war of 1914-1918, the French Government put at their disposal the necessary land which will remain the property of the French Republic.

So that it is an entirely mistaken idea that the French Government is handing over in fee to the Dominion of Canada this so-called park, or grant of land.

Then, following the exactions which have been imposed by the French Government upon the Government of Canada, we may peruse to some advantage Article II, which reads—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend would read the first article—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED:

The French Government grants, freely and for all time, to the Government of Canada, the use and free disposal of a parcel of land—

But that disposal must be controlled by the statement made in the preamble.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is not free disposal; it is free use.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, that is as to user. The word "disposal" is simply tantamount to the term "user", but the absolute title to the property remains in the Republic of France. Then we come to the obligation which is imposed on the Government of Canada, and which will be found in Article II of the agreement, reading as follows:

The Government of Canada pledge themselves to lay out this land into a park and to erect thereon a monument to the memory of the Canadian soldiers fallen on the field of honour in France during the war of 1914-1918.

They moreover pledge themselves to provide for the maintenance of the park and monument, in default of which French Government would resume the free disposal of the park, except however the land on which the memorial is erected.

In my judgment that sounds a discordant note in this document which I think destroys the graciousness of the act which we are called upon to consider; and I am surprised that France, considering the conditions under which this grant is made, should impose obligations of this character upon this country. It does not need the transfer of 250 acres of land to keep alive the memory of the gallant acts of the sons of Canada who are buried under the soil of France. Those heroic acts will live for all time, entirely irrespective of monuments or of grants of land, and the brightest annals of future history will record the prowess and gallantry of the sons of Canada who fell on the battlefields of France. I regret, honourable gentlemen, that the thousands of our sons who went from Canada and to-day lie buried under that soil should receive the bare recognition from that great Republic of a grant limited, bound up, by conditions and obligations such as I have pointed out.

France could not have been too gracious in its recognition of the services rendered by Canada, not only by freely giving this land to the Dominion of Canada, but by entering into an obligation for all time to maintain, and to maintain as Canada would desire, this park or grant of land, which, under the terms of the agreement, has to be maintained by Canada itself. Is it a gracious undertaking? Is it a nationally generous act on the part of that Republic that the Dominion of Canada should be called upon, in a country thousands of miles distant, to maintain this large tract of land, this park, for all time, subject to the imposition of those obligations? Was it not sufficient for Canada to build a monument which is said to be the finest monument which will be erected to the fallen dead of any of the Allies?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will my honourable friend allow me to inform him that it was the Canadian Government, through its representative, that asked for the gift of these 250 acres; it is not imposed upon us.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Precisely; but France should have been gracious enough, immediately it was intimated that the Government of Canada desired, with a generosity unexampled, to erect a monument to her fallen sons in France, to have said: "We freely give you anything you want, and freely enter into an obligation for all time to maintain such a monument and such grounds."

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would the honourable gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is he aware at all of the obligations assumed by the French Government towards its own people in relation to the upkeep of that very zone? And does the honourable gentleman realize what would happen if this 250-acre plot, after having been given to Canada, were not kept as the French Government has bound itself to keep it up, as a cemetery—a land sacred to those who have fallen there? That is one thing I would like to know, and whether he would not look at it more favourably under those circumstances?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend apparently misapprehends the position I am taking. My position is this, that when there was intimated to the Government of France, on the part of Canada, the intention to erect a monument in the heart of France to its fallen dead, France should have responded at once by a generous recognition of the services and the sacrifices which were made by the people of Canada in this great war, and should have said: "For all time to come we shall not only maintain this monument, but we do it freely, and as a recognition of the services and the sacrifices of Canada to France in the great war through which we have passed."

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would my honourable friend bear with me for a moment more—because this is a very serious matter? What would happen if nobody assumed the obligation to maintain this sacred plot of land for all time to come?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I say that France should have done it.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: Somebody must assume it. Will my honourable friend admit that somebody must have the obligation to maintain that land for all time to come?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Allow me to put to the House a case in illustration of my point, if I am not imposing on the Senate. If this war had been fought out in Canada, and if 10,000 sons of France had fallen upon our soil and had been buried within the boundaries of Canada, would not the Government of Canada have responded with alacrity to a proposition for the building of a monument, and the maintenance for all time of such a monument and park as would bear testimony to the generations to come of the country's appreciation of the conduct of the sons of Frnace? I say there would be no hesitation on the part of Canada to have done this, and it was as little as Canada might expect that France should have met that situation as Canada would have done under similar circumstances.

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: I think it is to be regretted that there is to be found a voice, and such an authoritative voice as that of the honourable gentleman, in dissent from the feelings that have been so fittingly expressed by both sides of this House, and by both sides of the other House, on this question. I take it that the honourable gentleman does not fully comprehend the conditions under which this agreement was arrived at. I could understand that there would be some ground for his attitude if he were in a position to say that Canada had demanded that France should assume the maintenance of the area. I am quite certain that that position was not taken by Canada, and surely the Canadian people would not have approved of the Hon. Mr. Lemieux going to France and not only asking that land be given for the purpose of erecting a monument to our Canadian sons, but consenting that another nation than the Canadian nation, another government than the Canadian Government, should maintain that cemetery or that monument. Even if it had been voluntered by France—and I take it that it would have been very improper on the part of France to have made any suggestion of that kind—I trust that it would have been refused by the Hon. Mr. Lemieux on behalf of the Canadian nation.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER: And resented.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: And resented. Well, surely it would never enter the mind of the French Government to make any suggestion of that kind. I understand that the French Government was asked if the Canadian Government could be allowed to purchase a proper area of ground for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a monument to the Canadian soldiers—to buy it, or to expropriate it. The demand was answered not by the granting of permission to do what was asked, but by the offer of a piece of land to the extent of 250 acres. Then, what do we find in the agreement? We find that it covers the use of the land—and in English and in French the same words are to be found—the disposal of it, the disposition of it. I admit that under the circumstances, the ownership being reserved in the Government of France, it should be taken as meaning the free use of it for all time to come for the purpose for which it was asked and for which it was needed—the erection of a monument to our Canadian sons. Surely it would not have been proper for Canada to have asked or to have expected that either France or England or any other government would maintain that cemetery of ours. It is a cemetery to our sons, and it is but proper and convenient that it be maintained by the Canadian Government.

Hon. GEORGE LYNCH-STAUNTON: I must admit that when I first heard the argument advanced by the honourable leader of this side of the House it struck me as quite reasonable; but when I listened to the answer my mind changed to a great extent. We are building this monument in France, not to show France 's gratitude to us, but for the purpose of perpetuating the memory of our sons in Europe, so that for all time men who come and men who go will see what Canada has done for the remembrance of her children in the great war. But I do think that while that was the proper step for us to take, it was the duty of France —not as an act of generosity, but as a duty— to grant us our request. Though there is no person who has a warmer feeling for France than I have, I do think that it was ungracious to add any condition to that grant. I do think that, if France made us a grant of a site for a monument to our sons, she should have relied on the consideration, the generosity, the rare thoughtfulness and gratitude of the Canadian people to maintain that cemetery in a suitable manner for all time, without being dictated to by France or her Government.

I do think that we should not accept a site for a monument for our sons with any condition attached to it. It should be ours— under our jurisdiction, under our care, and if we forget, as men do sometimes forget, the care of the cemeteries of their dead, that should be our disgrace, and there should be no forfeiture made to France of the land that was given to us. I do not see that it is in memory of our sons that we are to maintain a park in France. I do not see why we should be bound to maintain a park for the recreation of the people of France or of any other part of Europe. We are to erect a monument in memory of our children. If the park is not maintained, are we to forfeit the monument? Are the French people entitled at a future time to take down the monument?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The agreement does not say so.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I have not read the agreement, but the land is to revert to France.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. I beg the honourable gentleman's pardon.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: How are you going to maintain the monument?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

They moreover pledge themselves—that is, the Canadian Government——to provide for the maintenance of the park and monument, in default of which the French Government would resume the free disposal of the park, except, however, the land on which the memorial is erected.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I did not hear that part of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is, if we do not maintain the park properly, then the French Government will do it in our stead.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; they will take it back.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I understand it is a condition of the grant to us of a site for the monument that we shall maintain a park in France.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I do not think that is right. There should be no condition attached to the grant. We should not be asked to maintain a park at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We asked for the 250 acres of land.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But did we ask for it on the condition that we should forfeit it if we did not maintain it in a manner suitable to the French? We might maintain it at a standard suitable to ourselves, but not suitable to the French. They might ask us to maintain a park with all kinds of things in it—an amusement park. They might make an endless amount of money. Then, this is a matter of business, and at least there should be a limit to the amount that we are bound to spend annually.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to add a word to the discusssion that has taken place on this subject, and to refer particularly to Article IV, previously mentioned, which appears on page 188 of the Commons Hansard, and which provides:

There shall be obligatorily mentioned on the monument the names of all units of the same class of the Canadian army having fought on Vimy Ridge during the same period of time.

There are many Canadian soldiers lying buried in France—some of them, unfortunately, in unknown graves—who aparently are not to be remembered, and I would suggest to the Government and to the War Graves Memorial Commission, that there is a feature that ought in some way to be rectified.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: May I inform my honourable friend that it is provided that the names of 15,000 soldiers of the Canadian army whose bodies were never found are to be placed on the monument on Vimy Ridge. The missing total about 20,000. The names of 5,000 of them will be placed on another monument, near where they fell.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why the names of missing men? Does that apply only to missing men?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, but it is provided by another commission that a headstone shall be placed on every grave where the body of a Canadian soldier is known to be buried.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I thank the honourable member from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) for the information he has just tendered. Speaking further to the subject I wish to associate myself entirely with the views expressed by the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), which are, I think, to the effect that Canada should have been given free scope in this matter and should not be bound by restrictions or terms such as we find in an ordinary lease between landlord and a tenant. I am sure that every honourable gentleman in this House, and the Canadian public generally, have a full realization and appreciation of the sentiments of the people of France towards Canada as a result of the part Canada played in the Great War. Fitting recognition on our part of the grant of this land by the French Government is proper; but I do respectfully submit, honourable gentlemen, that a full dress parade such as is being put on is entirely out of keeping with, and far beyond, the necessities of the case. As the honourable leader of this side of the House (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) said a few minutes ago, had the conditions been reversed Canada would never have thought of imposing such restrictions or requiring any such agreement.

I hope that the memory of our dead will not be used for a purpose such as I fear is being accomplished in connection with this resolution. It is too sacred a matter. There are in this country too many families who have been saddened and will mourn for many years to come, and will not approve of this —what term may I use?—I think the proper term is, performance. For them it is an opening up of wounds which have perhaps in some cases partly healed. I think it is not the function of Parliament to pass resolutions of a character that will have that tendency.

Only a small proportion of the soldiers who lie dead in France will be commemorated by this monument on Vimy Ridge. I am glad that it is being erected. I hope that it may be kept in a becoming manner, and may be a credit to Canada as well as to those whom it commemorates. But I do feel that the War Graves Commission should have a care for the rest of those who lie over there, and that the valour and the sacrifices that have been made by the Canadian soldiers, whose memory we desire to honour, should not be overshadowed by expressions of gratitude to the Government of another country for granting us, under certain conditions, a long-term lease of 250 acres of land.

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN: May I ask the honourable leader of the Opposition a question? By what process of international law could France or any other country give away a part of its territory, absolutely enclosed within itself? That would be impossible. All that the country can give us is the use of the land in perpetuity. Surely the piece of land itself remains part of France, no matter what is done. France could not give a part of its territory to any foreign nation. It would always be part of France, would it not? Perhaps the honourable leader of the Opposition could tell us what he desires, and to what he objected at the beginning. Is it that France did not give the land out-and-out to a foreign country.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No, it is just a grant.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: One moment, if you please. I was asking the honourable leader of the Opposition.

Let us come down to earth and be practical. It is provided that the land shall be returned to France if Canada does not maintain it. This mounment is to stand for centuries and centuries to come. What may be the position of Canada two or three centuries hence we do not know, but it is necessary to provide for the future. Suppose that in a century or two, for one reason or another, this land is neglected. Suppose that all this has been forgotten. Suppose we are not on friendly relations with France at that time. If weeds should be grown up and the ground there left desolate, would it not be fit and proper for whoever may be ruling France in those days, two or three centuries hence, to reassume this land and say, "We cannot allow weeds to grow in this sacred ground"? Is there anything more painful than walking through a cemetery to see—as, I am sorry to say, we see often in our own province, and in other provinces too—graves overgrown with weeds and tombstones that are almost covered by vegetation. If such were the conditions, would it not be fit and proper for the French Government, or whatever Government would then be ruling that part of the world, to say, "We will take back this land and keep it as it should be kept—sacred to the memory of those who have fallen." I would like to hear from the honourable leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The honourable gentleman has asked me a question. I took no exception to the provision that the use of the land should be enjoyed in perpetuity. My reply was in answer to what my honourable friend said. Some honourable gentlemen on this side asked a question, and my honourable friend at once said, without looking into the agreement or, apparently, without familiarizing himself with the contents, that the land was given in fee simple. The land is not given in fee simple.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is so far as a nation can do it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I take no exception to the tenure under which the land is held, but what I do object to is that this agreement should embody within its four corners the different restrictions which are imposed upon the Government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I confess my regret that the form of the agreement has given occasion for remarks which will read rather queerly when the report reaches the donors of this land. I regret it infinitely. When the Canadian representative was in Paris he was looking for the purchase of 250 acres of land on Vimy Heights and was trying to ascertain how he might go about it, since there were, as the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) has stated, no division marks. He got in touch with one of the Ministers of the Government, stated his errand, and was invited to return. When he did return, the Cabinet having examined into the situation, the Minister whom the Canadian representative was interviewing said purely and simply: "You need not look for the owners of the land; we have certain regulations that will cover this blood-soaked ground, which we call 'la region rouge,' and we will make a gift to your country of the 250 acres which it seeks." That was the simple decision and statement of the French Republic. The Canadian delegate was invited to return to sign a deed of agreement, and every honourable gentleman in this Chamber well knows that, the Cabinet having decided to grant to the Canadian people the use in perpetuity of 250 acres of land, the matter was then referred to a legal gentleman attached to one of the departments, who drafted this agreement. What must be considered above the cold terms of the agreement is the simple act of the French Government in saying: "You will not buy the 250 acres which you seek; we will give you the land."

Now, what is the objection to the form of this document? It is that the Canadian Government is required to maintain the land. I may say that I have it from the lips of the Canadian delegate that he himself stated: "We want 250 acres of land. It is more than we shall need for the monument, but we want to dedicate this land to our Canadian soldiers, and we will maintain it." That is the obligation which was mentioned by the Canadian delegate. The reference to maintenance in the agreement is simply a confirmation of the Canadian Government's undertaking, but the French Government or the draftsman saw fit to add that if in the course of time those 250 acres were not properly maintained, the land should revert to the French Government. All those who know that region know that it is but part of an area which is to be dedicated by the French Government to the soldiers of the various nations who have fallen there. It is but part of a big piece of property which will have to be maintained in a certain form, and I agree with the statement made by my honourable friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) that it is proper for the French Government, in making that gift, to reserve the right of re-entry if it should happen that some of those pieces of land allotted to Canada, to England, and to Belgium should become neglected. In that event the land should be maintained by the French Government.

I do not see that there is any special reason for raising objection to the form of this document. Of course, you have before you the cold print, but what we thank the French Republic for is not the form of the draft. It is not a humiliating agreement. In spite of my honourable friend's statement that France should have felt that for all time the Canadian people would have enough heart and sentiment to maintain the ground—in spite of that statement, we must remember that centuries come and go and that the property remains there, and we do not know in what condition the ground will be maintained in perpetuity. I hope that there will be in perpetuity a Canadian Government to maintain it, and that this provision will not apply. But, looking at the document itself, I cannot feel that it contains any conditions against which we should rail. For these reasons I move, seconded by Mr. Watson—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Before my honourable friend sits down may I make this observation? An impression has been left on the House that this side was somewhat censorious as to the negotiation of the transaction with the Government of France by the representative of Canada, Hon. Mr.

Lemieux. I am sure that Canada's delegate did not impose those restrictions upon the Government which he represented, and I know from what I have observed in the press, from the discussion which has taken place in the House of Commons, and from what I have learned otherwise, that every credit is due to Canada's representative for the manner in which he negotiated this transaction. Yet, notwithstanding the ability which he brought to bear upon the negotiation, exception is taken to the attitude of France in imposing the restrictions of which I have complained.

Now, in answer to my honourable friend as to the question of re-entry. I apprehend that the Government of France can exercise the right of eminent domain, which is exercisable by all governments and can, without making any provision in the document, re-enter and take possession of the land at any time.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I was trying to get some information as to what this is to be a monument to. Is it only to the men who fell at Vimy Ridge? Is it not to perpetuate the memory of all the men who fell in all the various battles of the war?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Apparently not.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then I protest absolutely against it. No matter what heroic incidents took place at Vimy Ridge, there were others equally heroic at other places, and many a man fell in some unknown skirmish. The memory of the sacrifice of those men should be commemorated just as much as the memory of the men who fell in the more spectacular fight at Vimy Ridge.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I might inform my honourable friend that there is a chain of monuments, eight or nine in all, and that this is to be the principal one. This, I am happy to say was decided upon without any Government interference, while my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Fowler) and my right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) were in power.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: We are only discussing a monument at Vimy Ridge, which, in addition to the names of the men who fell at Vimy Ridge, is to contain the names of 5,000 of the missing.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Fifteen thousand.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not know how many men were missing.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Twenty thousand.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What about the other 5,000?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Their names will go on the other monuments. It was thought better to put their names on the monuments near where they fell or were missing.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is there a monument for every battlefield?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No. There are either eight or nine.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I thought they were all grouped in this park.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Oh, no. I can give my honourable friend the names of them.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It suggests itself to me that this matter was very ill-considered. A certain amount of land is to be devoted to a park. Why not have all the monuments, no matter where the battles took place or where the men fell, grouped in one place so that they could be cared for? That would seem to me to be infinitely better, because you are not putting a monument on every battlefield where the Canadians distinguished themselves.

Hon. R. S. WHITE: I think I might answer the honourable gentleman's question. I understand that the Canadian graves are maintained in all parts of France where there were battles. Those graves will be maintained notwithstanding the monument to be erected at Vimy Ridge. Vimy Ridge is simply the central point. As I understand the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff), the smaller monument is to the men who fell at Vimy Ridge, and the larger is to the men who fell in the other parts of France. I am informed that this larger monument would bear the names of some 17,000 men, some of whom were missing and some of whom were killed and over whose graves there is no mark.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: To all the dead?

Hon. R. S. WHITE: Men who may have fallen in other parts of France, or elsewhere. This is to be a central monument, and Vimy Ridge is the site selected for it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Are the names all on this monument?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I will try to give my honourable friend the information. The men who fell throughout France and Belgium, and whose bodies were found, were gathered into cemeteries near where they fell and were buried there. That has been done by an Imperial Commission of Great Britain and all the overseas Dominions, who are erecting over every grave a headstone with the name of the soldier buried there.

The question of whether it would be better to erect one monument or several to commorate the Canadian dead was discussed, and it was decided, I think rightly, to erect nine monuments in different parts—six in France and three in Belgium—near the places where great battles had been fought and where large numbers of Canadians had been killed. It was decided to erect the principal monument on Vimy Ridge because the Battle of Vimy Ridge was the first battle in the war in which the Canadians acted as an independent unit, and furthermore it is a high ridge and offers a beautiful site. For the reason that a large and expensive monument was being erected, and that there would be thousands and tens of thousands of Canadians and people from other countries going there, and that if there were only a few acres of land around the monument, hotels and restaurants where all sorts of objectionable buildings might be put up close by, it was decided to try to get a considerable area. The French Government has very cordially and kindly given the land. It has been given just as fully as if it were given by patent or in fee simple. It is given in perpetuity as long as it is used as a resting place for our dead soldiers. What more than that can we want? If we do not want to use all the land we can give it back at any time. There will be no great expense incurred in keeping it up. It is not in an agricultural country, but is in a rocky range of hills, and it is the intention to plant Canadian trees there—maples and others—the same as is being done at the sites of the other monuments. We are planting millions of trees around these monuments.

I am sorry that there has been any discussion of this kind. It seems to me that it will rather cause the reflection that we do not appreciate what France has done. I think France has done the proper thing, and as a Canadian I cannot see any objection to the stipulation that we should maintain this property for all time as a resting place for our Canadian dead.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I would like to add just a few words to what I have already said.

I must first of all express surprise at the statement that a foreign government can own a tract of land in any other country in any other way than that provided for in this agreement. I do not think such a statement will redound to the honour of the Senate of Canada. No other method could be resorted to than the one which was used in this instance. My honourable friend stretched out his hands in a gesture of ample generosity and asked if the positions were reversed what would have been done. I can tell him. He would have taken up his statutes and would have studied and scrutinized them, and then he would have taken up his pen and followed letter by letter the words of that document. There was and is no other way of drafting it.

The second point raised is the condition attached to the deed. A great deal has been made out of a very small matter. The French Government took possession of that land in virtue of a law, which law requires that Government to maintain that land as a cemetery. The lawyers who hear me, including the leader of this side of the House, know as well as I do that such land could not pass unless it passed with the obligation of maintenance attached to it. The Government of France could not have taken the property promising that it would be maintained, and then freed itself of this inherent obligation by unconditionally turning the land over to a third party. For that reason this resolution was unanimously approved of in the other House by the leaders of the three parties. When one country deals with another, most people, even if they have objections, refrain from expressing these objections in such a manner as we have witnessed to-day. For my part, I want to disassociate myself from the criticism aimed at the resolution, or from anything in the future, whatever my ties may be, that would connect me to an exhibition of that kind.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You are free to do it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Not being a lawyer, I would like to ask my honourable friend one question. If it were legally proper or possible for the Graves Commission and Canada's representative to go to France and offer to purchase a site, it surely must have been possible for Canada's representative to obtain a deed in fee simple by purchase. If that be so, I as a layman cannot see why it is not possible for France to make a gift to Canada in the same way.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The Honourable Mr. Dandurand moves, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Watson:

Resolved, that the Senate unite with the House of Commons in the said resolution by inserting in the blank space therein the words "Senate and," and

That His Honour the Speaker do sign the said resolution on behalf of the Senate, and that a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the clerks at the table to acquaint that House that the Senate have agreed to the said resolution by filling in the blank space therein with the words "Senate and."

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I desire to move:

Resolved, that the following joint address be sent to His Excellency the Governor General:

To General, His Excellency the Right Honourable Julian Hedworth George, Baron Byng of Vimy, General on the Retired List and in the Reserve of Officers of the Army; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George; Member of the Royal Victorian Order, Governor General and Commander in Chief of the Dominion of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, beg leave to approach Your Excellency with our respectful request that you will be pleased to transmit our joint resolution that Parliament do approve the acceptance by the Government of Canada of the gift graciously made by the Republic of France of a tract of land 250 acres in extent on Vimy Ridge at the site selected by Canada of a monument commemorating the exploits of Canadian soldiers in the great war, and in so doing records its sense of gratitude for and its high appreciation of the motives which prompted France to associate herself with a project so dear to the hearts of the Canadian people, in such a way as to Your Excellency may seem fit, in order that the same may be presented to the President of France.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the clerks at the table to acquaint that House that the Senate have passed an address to His Excellency the Governor General praying His Excellency to transmit our joint resolution to the President of the Republic of France approving the Government's acceptance of the gift made by the Government of France of a tract of land on Vimy Ridge for the erection of a monument commemorating the exploits of Canadian soldiers in the great war, in such way as His Excellency may see fit; and to desire the concurrence of the House of Commons in the said Address by filling in the blank space therein with the words "and House of Commons."

The motion was agreed to.

DOMINION ELECTIONS (FEMALE ELECTORS) BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. L. O. DAVID moved the second reading of Bill C, an Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act as regards the qualifications of female electors.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the last electoral law gave the right to vote to every woman in Canada of the age of twenty-one years. When the question came before the Senate, I moved to replace the words "twenty-one" with the word "thirty," in order to make our law similar to that of England. I thought that what was good for England should be good for Canada. There was no vote taken on the motion but it was declared lost. At the time I did not judge it proper to divide the House. Last year I moved a resolution to declare that it would be expedient to amend the law in that direction. A vote was taken, and I was happy to see that a good many of the members of the Senate shared my view. I promised them that at every Session as long as I was a member of the Senate, I would endeavour to have my views accepted by this honourable House. I keep my promise. I bring up the question in the form of a Bill, and I hope that the House will vote unanimously for it. If I persist on this question it is because I am sincerely and deeply conscious that the introduction of women, and especially of young girls into politics, is erroneous, and contrary to the spirit of our constitution, to the working of our British institutions, and to the welfare of our families and our country in general.

The limiting of the right to vote in Britain to women over 30 years old was evidently because the members of the British Parliament shared the views of those great English statesmen, Brougham and Fox, and the other great men who in 1832 and 1834 discussed that question and laid down the principle, as a fundamental one in suffrage, that the right to vote should be given only, to use words of Brougham, "to the greatest number of those who were able to give an intelligent, independent, and honest vote." They were of opinion that women generally could not give an independent vote, and a great number of them not even an intelligent vote—I mean that they could not vote with knowledge of politics or the knowledge necessary to cast a good vote. The Bill presented in France, which was wisely rejected by the French Senate, had a similar clause, limiting woman's right to vote to those over 30 years of age.

What has been done in England and in France should be done in Canada. We are always happy to say, when interpreting our Constitution, that we are guided by English precedents, and are proud to say that the English parliamentarians are our advisers in all these matters. Let us prove that this is true, not only by word, but by deed. I first intended to adopt the English law in its entirety, but finally concluded that my bill would perhaps be more acceptable if it were limited to young unmarried women from 21 to 30 years old; but I would have no objection to a sub-amendment applying the law to married women of that age, which I think would improve my Bill.

Can girls from 21 to 30 years of age give an intelligent vote?—I mean a vote with the knowledge necessary to give a good vote? Where will those poor girls learn politics, like boys—because it is argued that we give the right to vote to boys of 21 years. Yes, but there is a great difference. Will you allow your girls, your young daughters, being 21, 22 or 23 years old, to do as boys do—frequent clubs, public meetings, publicly discussing political questions, and doing as young men generally do, even in their schools and colleges? Where will our daughters learn politics? Is it in those clubs and political meetings that they will learn what they need to know in order to be wives and mothers? No. What good will politics do them? Nothing good, but a great deal of evil. When we ask if girls can give an intelligent vote we must conclude that they cannot, because they cannot get the training, the education, which is required to enable them to give a good vote.

But can they give an independent vote? No, for they will vote like their father, or their mother, or their brothers. Well, if they vote like their father and their mother, you will have a multiplicity of votes; but if they are to be independent, what will be the result? You will then have the vote of the father—the head of the family, who has studied politics for 20 or 30 years in order to be able to give a good vote in the interest of his country—cancelled by the vote of a poor little girl, very often a poor little servant, who does not know the first word of politics, not even what the word "tariff" means. There was a woman at the last election who refused to vote because she wanted to vote for Sir Wilfrid Laurier—who was dead, poor man. He might have been happy if he could have known this woman's wish.

In old times the head of a family, the man who was responsible for the welfare of the family, and who had worked for 20 or 30 years for its welfare, was the only one empowered to represent the family in public matters; but what do we see now? Every day we find that his authority is diminished, to the great detriment of society. Naturally the progress of education has made it necessary greatly to extend the suffrage, and naturally we could not object to that; but I think our politicians are going very far in that line, so that all the parliaments of the world will soon be at the mercy of majorities imbued with radical and communistic principles, and what is going on in England would lead us to believe that perhaps British institutions themselves will not be able to withstand that danger. But I do not want to discuss that matter now.

The discussion in the English Parliament shows how much the right to vote was appreciated and regarded as a privilege; but can it be considered so precious when it is given to anybody, even to those poor girls and little servants who do not know anything about politics? What will those poor girls do when the father will vote on one side and the mother on the other, and the brothers on opposite sides? Imagine the troubles that will be caused by those disunions in families. And how can we subject our daughters to the annoyances which will be the result of such voting?

Then, consider the cost of the insertion on electoral lists of thousands of names of girls who will not vote, or who will do so only as they are told? It would be very amusing and instructive if members of the House of Commons would say what they think, and what they have heard and seen at election times.

Perhaps we do not attach the necessary importance to the fact that we are a young country, which requires all its moral, intellectual and physical strength in order to reach its high destiny. But if our women are to do their fair share in the patriotic work of that development, they must not be deterred from the duties which they are called to perform as wives and mothers. What we want in a young country like Canada in the way of development is wives and mothers, and the more we have of politics among women the less we have of mothers and children. Those women are doing much good outside of politics by exercising their activities in charitable and social spheres, in making their homes agreeable and happy, in giving society good, honest and patriotic citizens, and in taking part in helpful work. That ought to be enough to make them appreciate their noble mission, to satisfy their ambition, and to occupy all their time. Unfortunately we are living in an age when the fundamental laws of society and the main laws of nature are upset, and we do not realize enough what pernicious effect the theories which are running through the world will have upon the future of society.

I submit to the wisdom of this House the present Bill, and I know it will receive all possible consideration. If there is a public body whose mission and duty are to guard the principles which must govern the social and moral order of our society it is the Senate, which has all the qualifications required to fulfil that mission.

With these remarks I move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. JULES TESSIER: I told the honourable gentleman who has introduced this Bill that I would assist in its discussion, and that I would be glad to be convinced by the strength of his arguments. I understand that the honourable gentleman wishes that no vote should be given to young ladies who are under 30 years of age. He is well qualified to speak on this question, as he is the proud father of nine daughters.

There is no doubt that very young women are apt to be influenced easily by ulterior motives, and very light motives, and that they are not in a very steady position, if I may use that expression, to give a wise vote. After 30 years of age they are more accustomed to the business of life, and they can resist with a great deal more tenacity the attacks of canvassers, and at that age they can give a vote with a great deal more wisdom and independence in the interest of the country.

I am quite convinced of the strength of the arguments which have been brought out with so much clearness and eloquence by the honourable gentleman. He has gone into the discussion of woman suffrage with a great deal of force. To my mind that question does not come under this Bill, which is only intended to restrict the suffrage as indicated. I am quite happy to second his motion, and I am disposed to support the Bill.

Hon. GEO. W. FOWLER: I must say that personally I am in favour of this Bill; the only objection to it is that it does not go far enough, and wipe out female suffrage altogether. I am an opponent of female suffrage. I think it would be in the best interests of the country if even the male vote were restricted somewhat from manhood suffrage. I believe in a property qualification. It may be old-fashioned and all that, but it seems to me that a man who has not some stake in the country has no right to a vote or say with regard to the country. Distinctions are made in some towns in allowing certain persons to vote on ordinary matters presented at election time, and allowing only ratepayers on property to vote on questions relating to the expenditure of money. As I say, this Bill does not go far enough to suit me. However, I have always gone on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread, and if my honourable friend can succeed in getting his Bill through and thereby shutting out the vote of some of those flappers and ignorant girls who have a vote to-day, and whose vote is as effective as the vote of my honourable friend himself, I think he will have accomplished something.

I do not quite understand why he would allow a woman to vote at 21 if she is married, while a woman who is single remains without the vote until she is 30. There may be many girls of 21 who are much better qualified to vote than are some married women at 30. There is nothing about the marriage tie that gives a woman the capacity to vote. It may have effects along certain lines, but it certainly does not have any along that line. I do not see why my honourable friend did not place the limit for every woman at 30 years of age. It would not do to go further, because if you did you would abolish votes for women entirely; no woman would admit being 35 in order to get a vote, even if she were 50 according to the number of her birthdays; but I think my honourable friend should have made 30 the limit for all, instead of making a distinction between single women and married women. However, I shall have great pleasure in voting for his Bill, even in its present form, because I am absolutely opposed to woman suffrage.

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, I am in favour of the Bill—very much in favour of it. Like my honourable friend on my left (Hon. Mr. Fowler), I am not in favour of female suffrage, and this curtails some part of it. In my opinion it may curtail it much more than is supposed, for when the question is asked, in conversation, "Are you going to vote at this election, my dear?" I hear the answer, "Why, no, dearie, I wouldn't think of voting: I am not old enough to vote." And so on, and so on. I think, with the limit at age 30, we shall have a good margin of safety. Many over that age will not admit that they have the right to vote.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Honourable gentlemen, it seems as though either the proposition does not excite much interest among the membership of the Senate or else there is a singular unanimity of opinion in favour of my honourable friend's proposal. It is a somewhat serious matter to undertake to change the franchise unless we have thought it over thoroughly, and it at least merits a discussion. We in this House are not dependent upon the electors for our seats—that is, directly; indirectly probably most of us are. This is a matter which more particularly pertains to the House of Commons, by whom the suffrage is primarily fixed, and whose members must take the suffrage on the basis established.

I have been listening very carefully for an argument that would convince me that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. David) was right and that if I took the other side I should be wrong, and I must say, with all due deference to my honourable friend's presentation, I cannot see the logic that is in it. In the first place, he differentiates, it seems to me, between the feminine portion of the community and the male portion as advantageous possessors of the vote, and he brings to us the argument that the reason why a girl who is 21, or who has not reached the age of 30, should not vote, is simply because she is a girl and not a boy. He does not seem to have any quarrel with the immaturity or lack of information and knowledge that may be found in a boy of 21. His speech would lead us to believe that he differentiates thus between the feminine and the male capability for voting.

So far as my experience has gone, I have found girls just about as intelligent as boys. I have taught in schools, in colleges, in universities, and have had a good deal of experience of boys and girls in that line. I take it that it is a fair thing to say that the girls of a family, taken by and large, are just as intelligent as boys of similar age in the same family. I believe that on the average they are more intelligent than the boys.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The girl matures earlier.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Why, then, does the honourable gentleman discriminate? If aptness of knowledge or maturity of judgment of the girl as compared with the boy depends on age, then he has an argument; but if it does not absolutely depend on age, why should he apply the restriction in the case of one and not apply it in the case of the other? I would just as soon trust to a young girl of 20 up to 30, having as good a judgment and as sound a knowledge of the issues which ordinarily come up in the choosing of a representative as a male member of the family. I believe that her moral sense is likely to be somewhat sharper, if anything, than that of the male member. I would as soon trust the vote in her hands as in the hands of the boy of similar age. That is, I do not think that there is any reason to differentiate between the woman and the man simply on the ground that one is a woman and the other a man.

The honourable gentleman argues that the woman who is past 30 must necessarily be wiser and have better information than the woman between 21 and 30. My experience does not carry out that contention. There are many things in which years add wisdom, but I am not at all certain that you will find a case for differentiation in a simple matter of ten years' difference in age and that you can in that way fairly allow the right of voting to one and deny it to the other.

The honourable gentleman depends somewhat on the argument of the young girl being under the force of the parent or older member of the family. Well, for my part I cannot see that that argument is applicable to the difference of age between 21 and 30. Your young girl between 21 and 30 may be married or may not. If she is not married, she goes for her opinion very often to her father or her mother, and she is guided a great deal by what father or mother thinks; but, while deferring to them—perhaps following them—she does not necessarily give up her own independence of thought. She agrees with them because, after talking the matter over they have common ground and common thought upon it; not simply because one is the daughter and the other is the mother or the father of the daughter. But you do not escape from that dilemma in regard to a woman of 30 who is married. Her husband takes the place of the father in the family of which the girl is a member when she is unmarried, and the compulsion of the husband is apt to be just as strong as the compulsion of the father. So I do not see that my honourable friend overcomes the difficulty by limiting the vote as he proposes in respect to the matter of age.

If in discussing the suffrage we were in the independent position of being able to fix the terms of a suffrage which we thought would be best all round, I do not say that I would choose the suffrage as we have it at present. But we can never get back to that position. You cannot expect to wake up one morning and find that the wheels of progress, which have been turning continuously for 50 years towards the enlargement of the suffrage, have during the night-time been turned back. We have not a clean slate on which to begin anew; we have to take things as they are; and all of us, I think, pretty well subscribe to this proposition, that once a suffrage has been fought for and gained, it is not in democratic countries afterwards curtailed. The drive is toward a still further enlargement, if further enlargement is possible. So I think we waste time in saying what we would do if we only had a clean slate on which to work.

Coming down, then, to things as they are, we see that woman suffrage has been granted. I would not be one who would say to a girl having equal rights with a boy in the family, "Your brother has a right to vote for So-and-so, but you have not a right to vote for So-and-so, because you are not intelligent enough to vote." I would not assume that responsibility, and I do not think the ground is a fair one to take. The girl is generally apt to give just as straight and well-based a vote as the boy; and in many cases her home instincts and her womanly instincts will lead her to choose the better representative, whilst the boy, not having quite those same instincts, would perhaps give his vote to the worse of two candidates.

I am an advocate of a woman doing whatever a woman is capable of doing. I do not think we have any right to shackle a woman simply because she is a woman. Man has made the laws from the earliest generations. He has made laws as unjust towards womanhood as laws could be made—and there are some of them that are yet on the Statute Book, and that never would have been made if there had been equal suffrage at the time that these laws were canvassed and put upon the Statute Book. We have gone the distance of suffrage to woman. I therefore would not limit it outside of the limits of the suffrage to the man. A boy of 21 years of age has a right to vote: I would give the girl of 21 a right to vote as well.

We are living in a different age from what we were living in 25 years ago, or 20 years ago, or even 10 years ago. There is more moving in the minds and hearts of men and women than was moving then. Legislation has taken a far wider range than it had before. It has to do with the home and what tends to the protection, the progress, and the happiness of the home, and I trust woman's instincts and woman's purity and woman's perception and woman's tact in all those subjects, and I would trust women to go straighter to a decision, and to a better decision, than the male portion of the community. So I would not for my part be one who would restrict or restrain in that respect.

Now, with all kindliness towards the views of my honourable friend, I do not think we ought to interfere with the suffrage as it is at present in that respect, by discriminating against the womanhood of the country.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, although I have not made any preparation, I intend in a few words simply to give expression to my views on this question, as I have long held them. The right honourable gentleman Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has, on the whole, fairly expressed them for me in far better terms than I could ever hope to do. He has to my mind, rightly said that a move towards a reformation of the suffrage would perhaps come better from the House of Commons; yet, we have a right to discuss questions of this kind and to go on record when they are presented to us.

I have expressed the view that inasmuch as all laws govern women as well as men, women are interested to the same degree as men in the form and in the matter of the laws. In democracies laws are supposed to be made with the consent of the governed. That being so, why should not women, who are governed by these laws, have a voice and a share in their making? I admit the equality of women with men in society; I admit that they have a similar degree of interest in the welfare of society; I admit their equal rights in the administration of society and of the laws which are framed to govern society. Although holding those views, if I had had my way in going about the solution of the problem at its inception, I would have held a referendum in order to obtain the opinion of the women as to their general desire to exercise the franchise. If a large majority, or let us say a majority, of the women expressed a desire to maintain the situation as it was, without enlarging the suffrage to include themselves, I would not go further; but, recognizing their equality with men in the welfare of society and its management, I would not deprive them of the right if a majority of them claimed it.

My honourable friend who is moving to limit the suffrage to women who are 30 years of age and over claims that there is a certain inferiority in girls. That point, I think, has been fairly disposed of by my right honourable friend the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster). The sponsor for this Bill has repeated two or three times "poor girls" and "poor servants." Those poor girls and poor servants have poor brothers, and yet he agrees to giving them the vote. Are they not on an equal footing?

Hon. Mr. DAVID: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Cannot the furnace man of my honourable friend, who may be totally ignorant, or who may know just enough to read and write, annul the vote of my honourable friend at the same poll where he casts his ballot? Yet my honourable friend accepts that situation. Any man who is 21 years of age, even though he has had no training whatever, may follow my honourable friend into the poll and annul his vote, and yet my honourable friend is not scandalized at that.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: I do not want to double the evil.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We in Canada are now governed practically by universal suffrage. I admit that that suffrage is not perfect; it has not given the last word of wisdom in its judgments; but are we not all agreed that it is much superior to any other form of government? Have we not had occasion to rejoice at autocratic government being wiped out in Europe in the last war? Do we not all feel that, although democracies may make mistakes, may even give governments that are far more costly, yet the whole of the community has had a voice in shaping the destiny of the country, and bears a share of responsibility, and feels that it is governed through its own will, and that every four years it can cure the evil that its error of judgment has brought about?

We are governed by universal suffrage. What actuates that suffrage, represented by hundreds of thousands of votes in this country and in some countries by millions of votes? What actuates it, I ask? Do all the voters vote upon one and the same question? Are they all actuated in solving a certain problem? In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred there is a diversity of questions presented to the electorate, and the reasons that actuate electors are sometimes most extraordinary; but when the vote has been counted a government is installed and governs according to the will of the majority. This is the least evil form of government that centuries have brought about. I admit with my honourable friend that the result will be no better if that suffrage is doubled. I believe that the giving of the franchise to the two sexes in countries where it has been practised for some years has not resulted in any great difference in the vote. Young girls, as well as wives, have been influenced by their surroundings, by the atmosphere about them, by their own makeup. They have grown up with certain ideas; they are swayed by the interests of their class; and in nine cases out of ten they have voted with their fathers, because they have read the same paper, have listened to the same arguments, and have been swayed by the same passions. But if women claim the right to vote—and I am not sure but that a majority of the women in Canada would have gone to the poll and claimed that right—it is very hard, as the right honourable gentleman has said, to go back upon an extended suffrage and to try to limit it. The women have been granted the suffrage, and now that they have it I cannot see that it is possible to take it away from them or to limit it in any way. If my honourable friend, or someone in the House of Commons, were to move for a referendum on the question of the limitation of woman suffrage, I would be ready to support him in this House; but I recognize the equality of position of the two sexes, and that women have a similar right to that of the men to exercise an influence in society if they so desire. I remember that Paul Bourget, a novelist of considerable standing, a member of the French Academy, and quite a philosopher, was asked a few years ago when passing through this country if he was in favour of woman suffrage. I may as well state that Bourget is somewhat monarchical in his views; he has not much confidence in democracy. His answer was: "Why not? They could not do worse than the men."

Hon. Mr. DAVID: That is a poor consolation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There was a time, although it is waning, when girls were always to be found under the parental roof. There was a time when, in nine cases out of ten, if not in ninety-nine out of one hundred, men took care of women. We did not find girls earning their own living, those who did so being the exceptions. But what do we find to-day? Are men taking care of women to the great degree that they did? In large cities do not see thousands, or tens of thousands, of girls of 21 years of age who have already been earning their living and acquiring experience outside of the home in all walks of life? They are an army. When they are doing the same things as boys of 21, why not treat them on a parity? For these reasons, I will, with regret, vote against my honourable friend's motion.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Béique, the debate was adjourned.

VIMY RIDGE MEMORIAL

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to call the attention of the leader of the Government and the members of the Senate to yesterday's resolution and the discussion which took place thereon. The resolution was, as I understand it, simply to return our thanks to the French Government for their donation of 250 acres of land as a cemetery, in which a monument might be erected to the Canadian soldiers. I think it was somewhat unfortunate and regrettable that a tendency was given to the discussion which went beyond that purpose; and a remark at the end of the address of the leader of the Government, which I will ask liberty to quote, is the reason why I rise at this particular moment to make one reservation. The honourable gentleman said:

> With the resolution which I submit to this Chamber, we desire to affirm our sympathy and friendship for the French nation.

With that I have every sympathy, and to that I have no objection. But the honourable gentleman went on to say:

> We know that nothing will please her more than to assure her that our best wishes accompany her in her determination to obtain from Germany the full measure of reparation to which she is so justly entitled.

Subsequent remarks made by the seconder of the resolution more strongly led to an implication that in passing this resolution solely with reference to the Vimy Ridge donation we are giving our assent to the particular line of policy which is being pursued by France in Germany to-day. My honourable friend knows that there is a distinct and wide divergence of opinion amongst the Allies with reference to the mode of operation which has been adopted as a policy by France, and, whilst I voted for the resolution, which is as expressed upon the Order Paper, I desire to dissociate myself absolutely and entirely from any implication that by the passage of that motion I am, or this Chamber is, led to stand by and approve the particular policy now being carried out by France in the Ruhr. If my honourable friend wishes to test the opinion of this Chamber, there is a way in which it can be done. It ought not, even by implication, to be done on the motion which was before us yesterday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The remarks which have fallen from the lips of my honourable friend should, I believe, have been made yesterday when the debate was in progress. The only consent that he gave by his silence was to the official document that I presented. The statement made by any member in the debate is a personal statement of his own feelings, and it may be qualified by the speaker following.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Will my honourable friend allow me? I wish to make just one remark. My honourable friend, as leader of the Government, can hardly, to my mind, make that plea. The resolution which was passed, going as it will go to the French Government and probably to the French Chamber with the assertion of the sympathy of this Chamber with what France is now doing, will be taken by them as an approval by the Senate and by the Canadian Government of the plan which is now being carried out. My honourable friend will see that that is my objection, and that is why I have spoken.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Before my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) rises again in his place, may I, with the permission of the House, make this observation? The resolution was introduced hurriedly and, I venture to say, without adequate knowledge on the part of the House. I myself did not know until yesterday that it was coming on. There was an absence of information from my honourable friend, and I am sure that information would have been of great interest and must necessarily be submitted to the House before we can have a full grasp of the subject. Before the resolution is transmitted to the Government of France we ought to know what are the designs of the Government of Canada in reference to the creation of a park of 250 acres. We very well know that the land is intended not for graves, but for the creation of a park and its maintenance in perpetuity. Now, the question arises, what would it cost to make this land into a park that would be in harmony with all the surroundings? What would it cost annually to maintain a park of 250 acres in the very heart of France? It seems to me the Government must have some designs. They must have made some estimate. They must not have entered upon an undertaking involving so much expenditure without giving matured consideration to the subject. As this matter has been introduced simply by resolution, not by Bill, and has taken the House by surprise, I think my honourable friend owes it to himself and to the House to furnish us with the fullest information as to what the scheme will involve in cost to the Government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This resolution came from the House of Commons through the hands of His Honour the Speaker, and when it was brought to the attention of this Chamber I asked that it be taken into consideration the next day. I might as well have said the next week, but there was hardly anything on the Order Paper for the following day, and the resolution, without any representations or any criticism, was placed on the Order Paper for that day. I must confess that, if I had suspected that there would be criticism of any part of the document which was laid before Parliament, I would have allowed far more time for the Senate to consider the document. I could only form an impression from the fact that in the Commons three short speeches had been delivered by the leaders of the three parties, expressing congratulations and approving of the form of the resolution. I was under the impression that a similar procedure would be followed in this Chamber.

Now, my honourable friend rightly asks what will be the cost of the erection and maintenance of the monument.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, no. We are already committed to that, but we are not committed to the creation of the park, except under this resolution.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The creation of the park?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This falls within the scope of the Commission created by my honourable friend's Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; excuse me. My honourable friend will recognize that the scope of the Commission and its duties have already been defined, but this is something of a special character that has been entered upon since last Session of Parliament. It has not been submitted to Parliament except by a vague resolution, and neither branch of Parliament is in possession of information regarding the very large expenditure which I know will be invloved in carrying out the idea.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think, with all due respect, my honourable friend is in error as to what body will have to study the question which he submits to this Chamber. That body will be, I have reason to affirm, the Commission. That Commission, appointed by the late Government, sent one of its members to France with authority to acquire 250 acres. When he received from the French Government the gift of 250 acres, he corresponded with the Canadian Government for the purpose of obtaining authority to sign the deed of acceptance which was being submitted to him. Now I think that Parliament—this branch as well as the other—is entitled to a full statement as to the cost of the general plan; the cost not only of the maintenance and administration of this piece of land, but of the whole scheme for the erection of eight or nine monuments.

Hon. Sir. JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, well, we are already committed to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are committed in principle, but I am not sure that we know what will be the total cost.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: There is no estimate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This will come before us, and I hope it may come in such a form that we shall have an opportunity to express an opinion upon the whole scheme when a demand is made for money for the purpose of carrying it out. The Commission has been given some powers, but, while it may make its decisions, I suppose it can do nothing without the sanction of Parliament: that is, without Parliament voting the money required. So I am sure that this Chamber, as well as the other, will be entitled to full information when Parliament is asked to pass a vote in this connection.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend be good enough to bring the information down to the House at the earliest possible day, in order that the Government of Canada may not be so far committed as to be unable to retrace its steps, to the scheme which we so hurriedly discussed yesterday, without having any information upon it. My honourable friend will clearly understand and recognize that this is a new undertaking in addition to what has already been assumed by the Memorial Commission. It is not intended that the Memorial Commission shall go on entering upon unlimited undertakings for all time to come. Whatever they commit the Government of Canada to will have to be paid for out of the exchequer of Canada; consequently both branches of Parliament should have the fullest knowledge as to the expenditure to be involved.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Will the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) allow me to ask him a question? Do I understand from this discussion that the Commission has been given absolute power to erect as many monuments as they choose, or a stated number of monuments, in France? Is or is not the scheme for the erection of memorials to be submitted to Parliament before it is acted on?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will ask Council to give me all the information which my honourable friend now seeks. This Commission is of rather long standing. It has done considerable work. I understand that a building has been either erected or rented in London in which models are exhibited and in which the architect in charge of the erection of that monument is working. I do not know what is the expenditure, nor whether any information on that point has been given to the other Chamber or not. My honourable friend (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) can tell us whether he brought the information to this Chamber.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: However, considerable work has been done.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But what I want to know is this. Giving the proposal only a cursory consideration, I think it is quite wrong to put up more than one monument in France. Half a dozen monuments scattered all over France will be neither as imposing nor as desirable, to my mind, as one great monument. To find them on every battlefield and everywhere would, it seems to me, make them common, just as a great mountain is noticed, while a dozen lesser mountains are not. I think it is for Canada's Parliament, not for a commission, to decide ultimately the form of a memorial to our soldiers in France. That is the business of the people of Canada, and I would like to know if Parliament has authorized any person or any commision to carry out this work without further reference or submission to us of the plans and schemes.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I may say for the information of my honourable friend that the Commission works altogether under the direction of the Minister of Defence, Hon. Mr. Graham, at the present time, and everything done is done with the full consent and approval of the Minister, who consults with Council. In securing this tract of land on Vimy Ridge the Commission had the approval of the Minister, the Prime Minister and the other members of the Government. The amount of money needed for the erection of these monuments was set apart some years ago. Whether my honourable friend is right in his contention that there should be only one monument, or whether there should be nine, is a question of personal opinion. It was considered by the Commission that the work entrusted to them would be carried out better by the erection of one main monument on Vimy Ridge and eight others elsewhere—three in Belgium and six in France. That scheme is being carried out. The principal monument, on Vimy Ridge, will be in size and in merit, according to all the information we have been able to get, the equal of any monument that has ever been erected in this world in honour of the soldier dead.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is going to be "some" monument.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Yes, it is going to be "some" monument. The Commission expect to erect that monument and prepare the grounds and erect the other monuments at an expenditure within the amount of money that was set apart for the purpose.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Will it be as great as the pyramids?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I have never heard that the pyramids were erected to commemorate dead soldiers.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I thought so.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would like to ask the Government whether it is proposed that the monument on Vimy Ridge shall be a purely Canadian monument. I am led to understand that it is not to be so—that the names to be put on that monument will comprise those of the soldiers who fell on Vimy Ridge, irrespective of the nations to which they belong. I would like to know whether that is correct or not. Is it to be a purely Canadian monument, or is it not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is a detail as to which I cannot give my honourable friend any information at this moment; but perhaps the representative of that Commission in this Chamber could.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, the monument is a purely Canadian monument. If I remember rightly, the names of the divisions, or possibly the battalions, of the soldiers who took part in the battle of Vimy Ridge will be mentioned on the monument; but the names on the monument will be only—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Canadian names.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Only the names of the missing; not the names of individual soldiers who were killed in battle and buried in cemeteries in the vicinity. Those cemeteries are under the control of another commission, an Imperial Commission, in which all the Overseas Dominions are represented, and a separate headstone will be placed on each of the graves. But on this monument will be placed the names of 15,000 of the Canadian missing, and the remaining 5,000 names will be put on another monument in the vicinity of the place where the soldiers fell.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Are those the only names to be placed on this monument?

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: They will be only Canadian?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: So far as I understand, those will be the only names.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Will the honourable member from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) inform the House whether or not the estimate to which he refers, and which, in his opinion will cover the whole cost, will include the cost of maintaining the 250 acre park to the end of time?

Hon. Mr. WATSON: No.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: As well as the building of the monument?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, honourable gentlemen, I do not pretend for a moment to say that. The making of a park on Vimy Ridge will not be so very expensive. The work will consist largely in building some roads through it and planting trees The matter has not been much discussed, but I do not think it would be the intention of the Commission to put all of that 250 acres into park. At every place where monuments are erected a considerable area of land has been secured, and that land is being prepared and planted out. I am sure nobody would like to see the land immediately surrounding a monument left to every Tom, Dick and Harry to do what they liked with it. I think it is well that it has been stipulated that the land given to us shall be kept in condition and maintained as a park. In almost any part of Canada you will find cemeteries in which lie Canadian and British soldiers who fell fighting for their country. To-day they are so utterly neglected that we would be ashamed to show them to visitors, though they are the resting-places of soldiers who fought and died for their country. It will not take a great deal of money, and I feel sure that there will be no call on the exchequer of Canada for any further money than has been already set aside for these monuments.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING NEGATIVED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. David for the second reading of Bill C, an Act to amend The Dominion Elections Act (as regards the qualification of Female Electors).

Hon. F. L. BÉIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I had intended to give a silent vote on this Bill, and as usual to try to see eye to eye with my esteemed friend, the honourable member from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David); but I have had to examine into the question more closely and form an opinion of my own, and on this occasion I shall have to walk by myself. The honourable member was logical, as he always is. He stated yesterday that, being against the female franchise, he feels bound to try to curtail it as much as possible; but as far as I am concerned I am not able to follow him to that extent. I do not propose to go into the discussion of the question at any length, but merely desire to place before this honourable House two or three thoughts that have occurred to me, without taking the time to elaborate them.

I am afraid that we have not a proper conception of the right of suffrage in our modern democratic society. We do not sufficiently bear in mind that it is a great privilege, the proper exercise of which is bound to have a profound influence on the progress of society. I think we do not fully appreciate the fact that it is nothing short of taking part in the framing of laws and the administration and government of the country. In our childhood enough attention is not given, either in family life or in schools, to the importance of the franchise and its exercise. Male or female, we are all moulded in great measure by our mothers, and, as they are the main factors in forming the character of our citizens, they should, to my mind, be best equipped for that great task.

One of my honourable friend's main objections was that young girls have no opportunity, before the age of 30, to form proper opinions as to the exercise of the franchise. But we all know that political clubs have been and are being organized by and for women, where political, economic and social questions of all kinds are discussed. If we are to have female suffrage, women of all classes and of all standings, young as well as older girls, should be induced to follow the discussions in such clubs. They would thus be better prepared to form, direct, and educate their children when they became mothers. As a rule, women are much more religious than men, and have a stronger sense of morals, and I believe them to be better equipped for social work, which is an important part of politics, because a great many of our laws bear on social matters. One of the reasons why I have been induced to believe that the female franchise may not be an evil is that I am convinced that women are better prepared than men for work of that kind, which is one of the most important features of our modern society.

Another consideration which weighs in my mind is that a large number of women, both married and unmarried, are inclined to waste a good deal of their time in frivolous occupations because they have not been made to understand, as they have been growing up, the satisfaction and pleasure which are to be found in a truly useful life for both the family and society. This applies especially in large cities and industrial centres. My comforting belief is that the day has passed for unequal treatment to men and women, except in matters in which nature itself makes a distinction. For these reasons I shall be unable to support the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: If there are no other members of the House who desire to speak, I will close the debate with a few remarks.

I regret that my honourable friend, the honourable member from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Beique), does not share my views, because generally we are of the same opinion. I would be inclined to say to him, "Tu quoque, Brute?" But I would replace the latter word with "brother" or "friend"—"You also, my friend?"

I want to refer to two or three objections which have been made in the course of the debate. The honourable member for Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler) said that he was in favour of my Bill. I regret that I do not see him here, for if those who favour my Bill are not present I have reason to fear the result. That gentleman regretted that the limitation in the Bill did not apply to married women as well as to girls until they are at least 30 years old. Well, yesterday I stated that if a sub-amendment was made in that direction I would be happy to receive it, and I thought it would improve my Bill. We must now, however, take the Bill as it is, and test the view of this House. There will always be time to bring in a Bill on the line suggested by my honourable friend from Kings and Albert.

I was not surprised to find that the honourable junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) was opposed to my Bill, because having been a member of the Government that passed the original Act he is only defending his child, which is the act of a good father. The honourable gentleman has had a good many of such children, but his feelings are too tender in relation to this one. The principal objection made by the honourable member was that he did not see why the girls from 20 to 30 years old were not entitled to vote as well as the boys of the same age, that they had as much intelligence, and perhaps more, than boys. I have no objection to admitting that in many matters, but not in everything, girls of that age are as intelligent as boys. What I meant was that in politics girls have not acquired and cannot acquire the knowledge, the education, and the training that boys have acquired, and consequently are not in a position to give a good vote. I say that they cannot acquire that knowledge and that education without going outside of their own sphere and neglecting their duties—duties which they will be called upon to fulfil as wives and mothers. I said, and I repeat, that they should prepare themselves to be good housekeepers and to make home happy for their husbands and their children. That is enough for them, and it is not in a political sphere, in clubs, or in public meetings, that they will acquire that knowledge.

Let me add that, after looking into the question, I find that there is not another country in the world where fewer restrictions and conditions are attached to the voting of women, particularly girls. I believe I am justified in thinking that the opinions and views expressed in England should receive a great deal of consideration in this House. I like to speak of what takes place in England and to quote, as I did yesterday, the opinions of great English politicians like Brougham and Fox and others who have made England what she is. Listen to the English law:

> A woman, 21 years of age, is entitled to be registered as a local government elector where the conditions of her occupation of property would entitle her if she were a man.
> Thirty years of age where she is the wife of a man who is entitled to be so registered in respect of premises in which they both reside.
> A woman, thirty years of age, must be entitled to be registered as a local government elector for the occupation of land or premises of £5 yearly value, or of a dwelling house, or is the wife of a husband who is entitled to be so registered.

So you see, honourable gentlemen, that there is much greater restriction in the English law than there is in ours. I have not with me the book containing the law of the United States, as I did not think I would be able to speak at any length to-day; but in that country women are subject to all kinds of conditions and restrictions. So I think I am justified in discriminating between the male and the female vote, as I have done in my Bill, especially between the franchise of girls and that of boys of the same age. I would be happy to hear from some honourable member the name of another country in which girls can vote as freely as they can in this country.

Another objection raised by the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right. Hon. Sir George E. Foster) was that such a Bill should be presented and discussed first in the House of Commons, because the members of that House are more interested in such a question than the members of the Senate. Well, notwithstanding my respect for the honourable gentleman, and the respect in which he is held generally, I take the liberty of differing from him on this point. It is because the members of the House of Commons are so interested in this question as it may affect their position that I think the members of the Senate are better qualified to treat it with impartiality and independence. I was told by some members of the House of Commons that they would be happy if something were done to restrict the suffrage, but that it could not be done in the House of Commons. I contend, honourable gentlemen, that the Senate is not obliged to wait for the House of Commons to move before doing what is considered good and proper and in the interest of the country. The Senate stands too high in my estimation for me to entertain such an opinion. The Senate is not the servant of the House of Commons; it was instituted in order to exercise a check upon and to revise the legislation passed by the House of Commons.

What harm will be done if this Bill is passed? It will be sent to the House of Commons to be dealt with. What harm would be done if the Senate were to express the opinion that, for the welfare and peace of our families, and in order that women may do what is required of them in the interest of the country, it is inopportune that the right to vote should be given to these poor little girls who do not care for it? How many girls have I met who said: "We do not care about having this right." I have known women at the heads of women's clubs which were in favour of woman suffrage who said: "Preserve to us the right to vote, but take it away from girls, and we have nothing to say."

Honourable gentlemen, I do not want it said that in matters concerning the moral and social order of our country the Senate cannot or must not say or do what it thinks proper because the House of Commons has not expressed its view. I will go further and add that, even after a law has been passed by the House of Commons and has been accepted by the Senate, if the Senate is of opinion that it shopld be amended, it is the duty of the Senate to amend it, and thereby give evience of its usefulness and sincerity.

The Senate divided on the motion for the second reading of the Bill, and the same was negatived on the following division:

VACANCY IN SUPREME COURT OF NOVA SCOTIA

INQUIRY

Hon. CHARLES E. TANNER rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will inquire if it is the intention of the Government to cause an appointment to be made to fill the vacancy in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and if so when the appointment will be made, and that he will call attention to the matter.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, in connection with this inquiry I would like, if I can, to impress upon the Government the desirability of making the appointment referred to. I am asking if it is the intention of the Government to fill the vacancy which now exists on the Supreme Court Bench of Nova Scotia. I hope my honourable friend the leader of the House will be able to tell me that it is the intention to make the appointment at an early date. I would like him to be able also to tell me that that means that the appointment will be made immediately.

I may inform the leader of the House that this subject is engaging very considerable attention in the province of Nova Scotia. The Supreme Court of that province is so constituted that all the work, including trials, circuit business, chamber work and appeal cases, is in the hands of one Court, which ordinarily is composed of seven judges. At the present time there are only six, and one of those, if I am correctly informed, is absent on sick leave.

I am quite satisfied from the information I have received that the Government has been urgently pressed to make an appointment for the reason that the public business requires it. I have no direct information from members of the Court themselves, but I should be surprised if my honourable friend would not admit that he has received communications from the Chief Justice of the province to this effect, and in addition has received representations from other leading men in the province pointing out the need of making an appointment.

It seems to me an extraordinary thing that the Government should delay this appointment so long. The death of Mr. Justice Longley, which occasioned the vacancy, took place on March 16th, 1922, so that his place on the Bench has been vacant now for nearly eleven months. My observation in regard to other provinces is that there has been no lack of diligence on the part of the Government in making appointments. I observe that when vacancies occur in the province of Quebec, in the province of Ontario, and in the western provinces, they are filled with reasonable dispatch. I can remind the House of the fact that last year political exigencies as I understand, made it necessary, in order to provide a friend of the Government in one of the western provinces with a seat on the Bench, to have legislation passed in the Provincial House creating the position; and immediately thereafter to put legislation hurriedly through this Parliament for the purpose of providing a salary. After that legislation was passed there was a very little delay in making the appointment.

The impression is gaining ground in Nova Scotia that whereas political exigencies in other cases caused the Government to hasten in making appointments, in this case they are holding the Government back. I would like my honourable friend to tell me whether that is true. I would like him to tell me whether this seat on the Bench in Nova Scotia is being held for the purpose of accommodating some politician. Personally I have no objection to politicians being apointed to the Bench; in many cases they make very excellent and reputable judges; but I would consider that the first obligation of the Government was to find a lawyer of repute to fill the vacancy. If my honourable friend wants the name of competent lawyers in Nova Scotia, I can give him the names of men who are friends of the Government.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And who are willing to accept the appointment.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I have conversed with some of them, and I know they are friends of the Government, and some of them would accept it. I could give the names.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What is it—D. D.?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: No, I am referring to men who are not in politics at all, but men of high standing who would fill the position most acceptably and who would have the absolute confidence not only of the Bar of Nova Scotia but of the people of that province. I am at a loss to understand why my honourable friends should be holding up that job for Mr. D. D. McKenzie, Solicitor General, when there are eminent lawyers of the Liberal persuasion, as well as eminent lawyers of the Conservative persuasion, who would accept the position. I would like my honourable friend, if he can, on behalf of the Government, to give an explanation, because, I want to assure him, there is widespread consideration of this matter in Nova Scotia and the people of that province are wondering why other provinces should be served so expeditiously in this regard while the province of Nova Scotia is compelled to wait.

I said a moment ago that I had no objection to the appointment of a politician—that is, a man who is in public life, and a friend of the Government. I was interested enough in the matter to look into the record in that regard, and I would like to give it to my honourable friend. I find that between 1878 and 1896, under Conservative administration, there were eight appointments to the Bench in Nova Scotia, and that only three of the eight appointed were taken from the ranks of politicians, the other five being selected as distinguished members of the Bar. Between 1896 and 1911 my honourable friend's friends made five appointments to the Bench in Nova Scotia, and every one of the appointees was a politician at the time of his appointment. From 1911 to 1921 the Conservative Government and the Union Government made five appointments, and not one of the five appointees was in active public life as a politician at the time the appointment was made. I think the record of the party that I have heretofore supported is a very creditable one, and I would like to see my honourable friends emulating that example, and, forgetting the political exigencies which would seem to surround the present Government in regard to this appointment, select one of the eminent lawyers of Liberal persuasion in Nova Scotia to fill the seat.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why not of Conservative persuasion?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: In conclusion, let me read a resolution recently passed by the Bar of Nova Scotia. It was passed on the 8th of February, and was, I understand, transmitted to the Government. For the information of the House, I may say it is signed by the Hon. W. J. O'Hearn, Liberal Attorney-General of Nova Scotia, who happened at the time to be President of the Bar Association. This is the resolution:

> The following resolution was unanimously passed at a special meeting of the Council of the Nova Scotia Barristers' Society, held yesterday:
> That we respectfully but earnestly request that the Government of Canada, in the interest of the administration of justice in Nova Scotia, appoint only to high judicial positions persons whose professional attainments and legal experience fit them for such important office. We respectfully submit that political services, however great and useful, are not sufficient to justify judicial appointments unless the appointee has also outstanding professional qualifications, and that the importance of maintaining the high traditions of the Bench for juristic learning and ability should be a controlling consideration. We also express our entire concurrence in the recommendation of the Canadian Bar Association re judicial appointments passed at the last annual meeting of that Society.
> W. J. O'Hearn,
> President.
> J. L. Barnhill,
> Secretary.

One can read between the lines, honourable gentlemen, that there is a fear in the minds of the members of the Bar Association that this Government is not going to maintain the traditions of the Bench. They are fearful that the Government intend to select a politician and not a lawyer to fill the vacancy which now exists. I hope that will not be the case.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am sorry that it has been the custom to answer an inquiry on the Order Paper without giving the Department the advantage of the information contained in the supplementary remarks of the inquirer. The information in my possession at present falls somewhat short of the lengthy and interesting remarks of my honourable friend. Of course, the inquiry went as it was to the Department of Justice, and I thought the answer, short as it was, would be perfectly satisfactory to my honourable friend. The answer is:

> It is the intention of the Government to make this appointment at an early date.

I hope it will not be made so rapidly as to prevent the Minister of Justice reading the remarks of my honourable friend as they will appear in to-day's Hansard.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the leader of the Government whether, in the event of this appointment being made in Nova Scotia, there will be enjoyed a condition similar to that given by the honourable gentleman's party when they were previously in power, namely, that if the judge did not like the office he could have the Lieutenant Governorship?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the condition was just the reverse. The one to which my honourable friend refers was that if the gentleman did not get the Lieutenant Governorship he would get a judgeship.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: The honourable gentleman is referring to a case in Quebec. I am referring to a former case in Nova Scotia.

NUMBER OF CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I desire to direct the attention of the leader of the Government to the inquiry I made on February 1st, just a month ago, regarding the number of Civil Service employees. I would ask that the reply be expedited. Every Department ought to have the particulars at their fingers' ends, so that the public might know how many civil servants we have, and what they are costing Canada; but a full month has passed and there is no reply yet.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I laid on the table a return which I think bore on that matter, but perhaps not exactly, in answer to a request by the honourable Senator from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David). At all events, I will press the Department for an answer to the query as made.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 6, at 8 o'clock p.m.

The Hon. the SPEAKER presented a message from the House of Commons as follows:

That Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House doth agree to their Address to His Excellency the Governor General, respectfully requesting that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit our Joint Resolution to the President of the Republic of France approving the Government's acceptance of the gift made by the Government of France of a tract of land on Vimy Ridge for the erection of a monument commemorating the exploits of Canadian soldiers in the Great War, in such a way as to His Excellency may seem fit; by filling in the blank space therein with the words "and Commons."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that His Honour the Speaker be authorized to sign the said joint Address on behalf of the Senate and to present the same to His Excellency the Governor General.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, in view of the discussion which took place in this Chamber some days ago, when the resolution was submitted, and of the absence of information as to the expenditure involved in carrying out the proposal embodied in the resolution, it is very undesirable to dispose of this matter until the Government furnishes this House with the information which has been asked for. As I pointed out the other day, it is scarcely conceivable that at this time, when the Government of Canada can hardly furnish funds for the public buildings required for the housing of our public service, a large amount should be spent in a country 3,000 miles distant in creating a park of 250 acres and providing all that that implies for its maintenance in perpetuity. I feel satisfied in saying that this country will not endorse an expenditure of that character. I further say, and say it advisedly, that there has been so much misapprehension as to what is involved that it is not seemly for the Government to proceed in this matter until it furnishes this Chamber, at any rate, with the information desired.

I would point out in this connection that if the matter had been submitted to the House by way of a Bill, and the Government had not furnished the information which must necessarily be forthcoming at an early or more distant date, such a Bill would not pass. Is it seemly that by a resolution of this kind all the safeguards of Parliament should be evaded? This proposed expenditure has not been put in the public Estimates. It has not been submitted to this House. Simply a resolution of courtesy to a foreign Government has been brought down, and we are asked to join in that resolution without having any information upon this very important subject.

I voice my opposition to this with very great hesitation because I know the delicacy which necessarily is involved in seemingly criticizing the relations between our Government and that of the Republic of France, more particularly owing to the very crucial situation which obtains to-day between that great country and Germany. Nevertheless there is a duty which members of Parliament have to perform, and that duty is, I hold, to insist that Parliament be furnished with adequate information touching expenditures, particularly expenditures which we know will run into very large sums of money. I venture to say that the creation of that park will cost anywhere from one-quarter to one-half million of dollars, and that the maintenance of it will cost, in perpetuity, $50,000 a year. Is Canada prepared to send a staff of men from our shores to France and to have them established there for all time to come, in order to maintain that park—a park that will not be visited by Canadians and will be of no advantage to this country. I am surprised, in view of the discussion which took place a few days ago, that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) should seek at this moment, without furnishing the House with the information which was asked for, the passage of the final stage of this resolution.

Hon. JOHN G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I regret very much that this matter has come up again for discussion. It seems to me that we are treating the gift that France made to Canada in rather a small way in the discussions we have had, and in the further debate that my honourable friend apparently wishes to bring on in connection with the matter.

My honourable friend makes out that it is going to cost from a quarter to a half million dollars to prepare that park, and $50,000 per annum afterwards to maintain it. I would like to know where my honourable friend gets that information, for all that the Commission possesses is absolutely contrary to such an estimate. As I said here the other day, I do not believe that the amount originally estimated in connection with the different monuments that are being erected in France and Belgium will be exceeded. It is not the intention of the Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission to continue maintaining those parks. They will be handed over to the Imperial War Graves Commission to maintain, as that Commission is looking after all the graves in France and Belgium.

One honourable gentleman opposite complained the other day that all the bodies were not buried in one grave. Why, there are two thousand cemeteries in which the British and Canadian soldiers in France and Belgium are buried, and the Imperial War Graves Commission is going to look after those cemeteries; and it is anticipated that in the course of four, five or six years the monument on Vimy Ridge, as well as the park, will be completed and handed over to that Imperial Commission, in which Canada has an eight per cent interest, to be kept up and looked after in the years to come. I cannot possibly understand, therefore, how my honourable friend gets the idea that it would cost from $250,000 to $500,000 to set out the park, or $50,000 a year to maintain it.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: Has my honourable friend any figures at all to show us what it would cost?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, I have not.

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: You are on the Commission.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No one can make any estimate in that matter. My honourable friend the leader on the other side of the House has made his estimate.

Hon. Mr .SHARPE: Do you not think we are entitled to some definite statement before we pass this resolution?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I have already stated twice that it is anticipated that the estimate for this work will not be exceeded in any respect.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend pardon me if I interrupt him?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Certainly.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: When the appropriation was made for the memorials to which my honourable friend refers, this one was not thought of. This is a special expenditure, entirely outside of that contemplated by the Memorial Commission. My honourable friend knows that; and I would further say that it has nothing to do with the maintenance of graves, or of cemeteries, or of the Vimy Ridge monument; it is an entirely special undertaking which was never contemplated at the time the Commission was organized.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, wherever a monument is being erected the Commission had to secure land on which to erect that monument. In some cases a small area has been obtained, in others a larger area; but when it came to the erection of this largest monument to be erected on Vimy Ridge it was thought by the Minister of National Defence and by the Prime Minister that as the country around the spot where the monument is to be erected was not an agricultural country, but a range of rocky hills, it would be advisable in the interest of Canada that a larger area should be obtained. The Commission did not ask for any particular quantity of land, but the Commission's officers over there selected a piece of ground on Vimy Ridge, and when it was decided to try to secure a somewhat larger area, the Government of France came forward and very honourably, very kindly and very generously offered to give us 100 hectares of land or 250 acres.

A great deal of criticism was made here the other day by my honourable friend the leader on the other side of the House, who likened the gift to a bargain between a landlord and a tenant. Some other gentlemen likened it to a real estate deal. The grant has come to the people of Canada in exactly the same words by which the Government of France granted to the British people the ground in which to bury their dead. It could not be otherwise, for, as I understand, no Government gives land to any foreign country except for a residence for the ambassador of that country. Therefore in that respect there has been nothing to object to in the slightest degree. That land has come to Canada for all time as long as it is used for the monument.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, for park purposes.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: For park purposes, and in the same way as the land was given for the burial of our dead. What objection can there be to that? It seems to me that this criticism of France for giving this land in the way it has been given is altogether uncalled for, and altogether unworthy of this House. That is the way it appears to me, though of course other gentlemen may have their own ideas.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? This matter has been discussed on two occasions, and nobody that I have heard in this House has yet enlightened us as to the likely cost of this monument itself.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I have stated twice to my honourable friend, who has asked me this question before, that two or three years ago, when honourable gentlemen opposite were in power, they decided on something in this line being done, and it was estimated that $1,500,000 would be necessary, and that amount was set aside for the purpose, part of it being voted each year. I say again that from all the evidence the Commission has obtained the amount is not going to be exceeded in building these monuments and carrying out the intention of the Government of some two or three years ago.

During the debate the other day some honourable gentleman said that the Government of Canada, and not the Imperial War Graves Commission, should have had to decide on this matter. I have since looked the matter up, and I find that a committee of the House of Commons was appointed by my honourable friends opposite to do this very thing, and they recommended to the Government of that day that another Commission, the War Memorials Commission, should be appointed to give effect to their proposals. That is exactly what has been done, and I would say to my honourable friend from Selkirk (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) that so far as we can tell the cost is not going to exceed what was originally estimated for all the monuments. It is quite true that some money will be required to prepare the land, or part of it, but we are not bound to put the 250 acres into a park or flower-beds. There will, however, be a large piece of land around the monument set out as a park, in order to prevent buildings of all sorts being erected and businesses carried on in the vicinity of the monument. Is that not a proper work? Is that not right? Would the people of Canada want to see the monument erected to their dead sons in the vicinity of all sorts of buildings, some common hotels, and possibly gambling places? Anything at all might be there is there were not land enough to prevent it.

The proposition has been discussed at meetings of the Commission at which I was present, that part of this land might probably with advantage be given back in exchange for a piece of land for a main road extending from one of the main roads to the site of the monument. If it is decided that the whole of the ground is not needed, all that we have to do is to ask France to take it back and use it for any purposes that they desire. We only need to spend money on land that is necessary in connection with that monument. I am not prepared to say, nor is anyone else, just how much it will cost. We have an engineer, General Hughes, of Vancouver, who has charge of that work, and when he makes a thorough examination of it he will report what he expects it will cost to put that land in shape for a proper park within the meaning of the gift of the land around the monument. It is not going to be very expensive, and I expect we will be able to keep that also within the amount estimated for the whole work.

The French Government have imposed no conditions on Canada, except that the land be kept for the purpose for which they gave it; and they make the same reservation in land that is set apart for any cemetery in France.

I might add that the placing of the names on our monument at Vimy Ridge was undertaken by the Imperial War Graves Commission. It was decided that 15,000 names of our Canadian boys who were killed, but whose bodies were never found—the missing ones, of whom there were some 20,000—would be put on this monument at Vimy Ridge. We will get a credit from the Imperial War Grave Commission of something like $45,000, which will be about the cost of putting those names on the monument; so that I think there is not much ground for criticism in that respect. I do not care how much the Canadian Commission is criticised. You may criticise it as hard and as much as you like, and you will not hurt my feelings at all; but I think that the criticism of France in this connection has been utterly unworthy of Canada, and I hope we shall have no more of it. To my mind it will be something that we shall be ashamed of eventually, when we consider the gift that was made to us freely and without any restrictions for all time to come, except that the land be maintained for the purpose for which it was given to us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to enter my protest at the statement made by my honourable friend opposite that I have been somewhat hasty in moving this resolution. I took for granted that it was a matter of course, as the procedure had been carried on to the point of authorizing His Honour the Speaker to put his signature to a resolution of both branches of Parliament.

But if my honourable friend, before he registers his vote on this motion, desires detailed information which I have not in hand, I am ready to adjourn the vote to whatever day will be suitable. I draw his attention to this fact, however, that he is making very much ado about nothing, or about very little indeed. It was his Government, which he adorned in years past, which organized the Commission to raise these monuments to our dead in France. It is that Commission, constituted as it was when he left the Government, that is now functioning and administering this whole matter, having received a mandate from his Government and from Parliament. There is this variation—and I even hesitate to say that it is a variation—that the Commission have come before us and stated that for the principal monument they have secured 250 acres of land.

Now, I understand that $1,500,000 was voted, or was mentioned as the outside figure, and it was resolved that the amount would be set aside. Every year we put a certain amount of money at the command of my honourable friend and his Government in the Supply Bill to carry out the scheme which had been propounded and no doubt reported on to his Government. That undoubtedly implied, as stated by my honourable friend from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff), the purchasing of land upon which to erect those monuments.

In the exercise of their mandate the Commission decided that for the principal monument on Vimy Heights they would need a certain larger area, 250 acres, or 100 hectares—which does not represent a very large piece of property. In their judgment they saw fit to send a delegate across, in the person of Hon. Mr. Lemieux, deputing him to try to secure 250 acres of land. It was not the Government that sent the delegate across. So far the Government had no responsibility. When Mr. Lemieux succeeded in securing the 250 acres instead of purchasing them, getting the land in perpetuity, he thought he should be empowered by the Government to sign the agreement, and he cabled to that effect, and the authority was given him.

So to-day I present the simple motion to give to His Honour the Speaker the right to sign the resolution in order to implement the work of that Commission as organized by my honourable friend and the Government to which he belonged.

Now, the question has been asked: what will be the cost of that monument?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: By my honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury). I do not suppose he insists on getting a definite answer at this moment, because it does not affect the resolution and the agreement which is before the Senate. The resolution is simply that we thank the French Government for allowing us the use of the 250 acres of land. Of course we may, on this resolution, declare our dissent from this undertaking of the Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission. The query of my honourable friend is: what will be the cost of the upkeep? —because I suppose that is all; there is nothing else, except perhaps the levelling and beautifying of the ground. The cost of the upkeep of those 250 acres is what my honourable friend wants to know. Well, I do not know whether a statement of the cost has been prepared by the Commission. I may say that I have inquired when the Commission made a return or report to the Government, and I was informed only last week that it was the colleague of my honourable friend, the ex-Minister of Militia, General Mewburn who every year from his seat in the House made a statement of the operations of that Commission. He made such a statement last year, to which I would refer my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition, and the honourable gentleman from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury). I will look it up myself.

I understand that another statement will be made this year. I will try to obtain the information for my honourable friend, but I may inform him that the Government will have to apply to the Commission to ascertain the probable cost of upkeep of this 250 acres.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I be permitted to make this observation? I am sure that my honourable friend would not deliberately do me the injustice of interpreting any remarks which I have made as a criticism of the policy of the Battlefields Memorial Commission. That is a commission which has been doing certain work in the way of erecting monuments upon the various battlefields with which Canada was associated in the late war. I am not directing the attention of the House in any way to any of those monuments, or to the maintenance of any of the graves, which are very properly maintained in France, and which I hope will for all time to come be maintained, at the expense of this Government. What I am directing the attention of the Government to is the fact that they have entered upon the entirely new undertaking of creating a park of 250 acres, or nearly two-thirds of a mile, in the heart of France, on Vimy Ridge. My honourable friend is too good a parliamentarian to overlook the fact that if this resolution involved a like expenditure in the Dominion of Canada, Parliament would be furnished with the most detailed information before committing itself in any way to the undertaking. Much as we appreciate the action of France in giving the Dominion of Canada the use in perpetuity of the 250 acres, subject to certain conditions, I say we should not commit ourselves to that undertaking until Parliament is furnished with all the details of expenditure. Surely that is not an unreasonable thing to ask, and I should not, by reason of asking for that information, provoke the sensitiveness of some of my good friends from the Province of Quebec. There is no better parliamentary practice than that information should be furnished to Parliament touching all expenditures; and because the expenditure is to be made in a foreign country and is to be continued for all time for the purpose of maintenance, it does not follow that we should dispense entirely with the long-established practice of Parliament simply by a gracious resolution of thanks. Furthermore, my honourable friends may think I have taken an extreme view as to the park; yet I will venture to say that it would be difficult to find any modern park of 250 acres the creation of which has not involved an expenditure of at least $250,000, and the maintenance of which does not cost $50,000 a year.

Now, I hope my honourable friends will acquit me of being censorious or unnecessarily critical in this matter. I simply say that we are evading a well-established practice of Parliament in committing ourselves to this undertaking by merely passing a graciously-worded resolution to France. If the matter had been brought down in any other way it would have been fully debated in both Houses. I am told by some of the members of the other House that when this resolution went through they had no conception that it involved expenditure; they thought it was simply a graciously-worded resolution, a conventional courtesy which this Government owed to the Government of France, and they gave no more thought to it. But it has happened that some of the inquiring minds in the Senate of Canada, which, in the opinion of some people, has little to do with the expenditure of public money, have thought it desirable that this information should be obtained. I think my honourable friend owes it to the House to furnish that information.

The Battlefields Commission is of course but the creature of the Government. Whatever expenditure it makes is made out of the public exchequer. The members of that Commission are not making it out of their own pockets; they are taking the money from the taxpayers of Canada; they are simply the channel through which the expenditure goes; and I am sure that this side of the House will be quite as prepared as the side on which my honourable friend sits to do full justice to France in the matter of giving whatever recognition should be given in connection with the concession which has been made.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Speaking from the land surveyor's point of view, I must take exception to what my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition has said. My honourable friend said that 250 acres would be equal to two-thirds of a square mile.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is more than half a mile square.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman comes from the Northwest, and knows that half a section is 320 acres.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is half a mile by a mile. A quarter section is half a mile square.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman should not persist. It is much nearer to a third of a mile square.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, no.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: There are 640 acres in the square mile, and 250 acres cannot be more than half of that, and my honourable friend wants to make it two-thirds. But my honourable can correct that in the revised edition of Hansard.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I desire to say just one word in reply to the leader of the Government. I would not like honourable gentlemen to think that the question I asked was any criticism of cost, because I do not think that any amount of money we could spend would be too much to commemorate the sacrifices made by Canada. But I agree with what has been said as to the upkeep of the 250 acres. I do not think it is necessary. I approve of the appointment of a Commission to build monuments in different parts of France, but this is to be one great monument, and I was just wondering if it was a mark of any great generosity on the part of a country for which we had sacrificed so much to sell or give us this park on the understanding that we were to keep it up in perpetuity. One way to arrive at a measure of what is fair or generous is by comparison with what took place after Waterloo. Many honourable gentlemen have seen the great monument that stood on the site of that battlefield. By whom was that built? Was it built by the British or maintained by the British? No, honourable gentlemen: It was built by the Netherlands, Belgium, and Holland as a recognition of the great services rendered by Wellington. I have in my hand a statement which I think I will place on record for the purpose of comparison:

> The mound at Waterloo was built between 1823 and 1826 is about 200 feet high. The Lion was cast in Belgium, the sculptor being Van Geel, and the cost of everything apparently borne by the Netherlands, (Belgium and Holland being united at that time). After Waterloo King William of Orange gave Wellington and his descendants, not only the income from about 2,500 acres of land, but also a pension not to exceed eighty thousand francs, which was paid from the Belgian Treasury.
> In 1890 the remains of English soldiers which had been buried in various parts of the Netherlands were collected and interred in a cemetery provided by a Committee of English and Belgians.
> In 1903 a monument was put up at Waterloo to French soldiers the cost being defrayed by public subscription in France.

Now, it may be said that that is hardly a fair comparison; but I maintain that it is. I believe that if France had wanted to be generous—and I believe they would have been if they had been approached properly—they would have said: "Build your monument here," and would have allowed Canada to spend the money on the monument, but would have said, "We will take care of it."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman was probably not in the House when I made the statement that it was the Canadian delegate, the representative of that Commission, the Hon. Mr. Lemieux, who insisted that Canada should have the land and maintain it herself. So France simply complied with our request. The Chamber may criticize the action of our representative, but should not criticize the action of France in saying: "What you ask you will get. You are coming here to purchase a piece of land from private individuals. We will not permit you to purchase it: we will give it to you."

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not criticize the action of the great Republic of France. As I said, if our delegate had approached France in the proper way, I have no doubt at all that France would have done the same as Belgium did many years ago. I do not blame France so much as I blame the delegates who went over.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: May I point to the honourable gentleman that the Belgians charge 25 cents to go up to the top of that monument.

Hon. Mr. TODD: Does the honourable gentleman think that the people of Canada want Belgium and France to keep up a monument to our soldiers? I think the trouble is that this whole matter has been treated too much like the building of a wharf. When the expenditure comes down in the Estimates, are honourable gentlemen on this side going to ask to have it reduced?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not the memorial.

Hon. Mr. TODD: The park is just as much a memorial to the soldiers as the monument. You cannot dissociate the one from the other. I am opposed to the agitation on this side of the House. In the last debate that we had on this question, honourable gentlemen were protesting against France; now the great majority who speak against this resolution are praising France. Possibly, if this matter is adjourned for four or five days more, they will praise the whole undertaking.

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: I want to add just one word more. I am sorry to see the course this whole matter has taken. The question asked now is whether or not we are going to spend money to honour our dead. After all, it comes to that. I am sorry for it. It shows, after all, how fast time flies, and how short is memory. Did anybody think, three years ago, when this Commission was appointed, and when, I understand, they were authorized to spend $1,500,000, that the Canadian nation would have hesitated to maintain a park given to it for the purpose of honouring its fallen children, and more especially, those 20,000 soldiers who have no graves at all—those who are really "the unknown soldiers of Canada." For my part I am sorry. I do not think the Canadian people will take very kindly to this proceeding. We may be, after all, within our rights as parliamentarians to inquire whether or not the money is properly spent; but, on a resolution of this kind, for the purpose of thanking France for a donation, I do not think we should stop and say, "We do not know whether we will accept, because it may cost too much."

The question having been put:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does the honourable gentleman insist upon the postponement of the passing of this resolution?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does not my honourable friend think that he owes it to the House to bring down some information?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend desires this information, I will ask to have the resolution placed on the Order Paper for Thursday.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I may point out that it will be necessary for some honourable gentleman to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Donnelly, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

ALBERTA COAL DEPOSIT

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. RUFUS H. POPE rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the importance of what is known as the Hoppe coal deposit in Alberta, and will inquire of the Government the present position thereof?

He said: Honourable gentlemen of the Senate, I rise to call attention to a question that I consider of very great importance, not merely to a certain area of Canada, but to the whole country. I refer to the coal deposits and the development of the Peace river country.

There is little use in our proceeding with a policy of immigration if we are not prepared to take care of the people who have already come to this country. In this particular instance there is a two-fold object which may be accomplished by the Government of the day. There is a wonderful coal deposit in Alberta, formerly known as the Hoppe coal mine, and now known as the Isenberg coal deposit. I referred to this matter last year, and, if permitted, I cannot do better than quote briefly from what I said upon that occasion as to the importance of the matter—since that time my opinion has been, I think, justified by events:

Locally this area has a most extraordinary value because it is the last deposit of coal on the way to the Peace river country. The Peace river country will to a large extent find its outlet on the Pacific ocean. This coal area is situated about 75 miles from the National railway, and in building a railway to this coal area we would be proceeding 75 miles in the proper direction towards developing the Peace river country. I am not giving my own opinions, but those of authorities on this question. Therefore, from the national point of view this great asset should not be parted with by the Dominion and given to a licensee by any Minister of the Crown. If Canada ever parts with this property it should be by Act of Parliament and in the full light of day. This coal field is 500 miles nearer to Winnipeg than the coal fields of the United States, and there are in this deposit, within 75 miles of the National railroad of Canada, millions of tons of anthracite—enough to supply not only the Great West, but an area for 1,000 miles around the area itself. It is within 30 miles of being as close to Fort William as the Pennsylvania coal fields, and is nearer than those fields to the Pacific coast states. If you develop this coal field you can offset the declaration sometimes made in the United States that they will starve us for coal in the East; this will give us the opportunity of replying to them that if they do so we can starve them in the West.

Since I made that statement conditions have become aggravated. Canada has had a certain warning—I do not say it is, and I trust it is not, final warning—from the United States that the time is approaching when, if they see fit to keep their coal for their own use, they will do so. We have seen such a statement in the press made with more or less authority. I quite understand that the time has not yet arrived; but, honourable gentlemen, a warning should be sufficient for a young nation like Canada, endowed with such wonderful natural resources of all kinds, to spring to her feet to protect herself and to see that no foreign nation shall have an opportunity of bringing her down to her knees. That is the position I take in this respect.

Now, with reference to the Peace river country, the opening up of land is an invitation to people to come and settle there. Many have said that people should not have settled so far away from railroads. The answer is that the Government should not have given them the opportunity to do so. In opening up homestead lands you extend an invitation to people from the four corners of the earth to come and settle in that particular place. As I understand the obligations of a Government towards its people, the first is to maintain law and order. The next duty of Government is to see that financial arrangements are such that the people may do their business, exchange their products, buy and sell. When they have done so, the next duty of Government is to provide for the transportation of those products to the markets of the world. Those are the fundamental obligations of any Government, whether the present one or the Government which preceded it. When we opened up those lands in the Peace river country and asked people to come there from all parts of Canada, the United States and other countries, we assumed the obligation of taking care of those people by providing them with markets, with transportation facilities, and with the necessary financial arrangements. I have here, honourable gentlemen, a private report in reference to those people, from a gentleman whom I have known for many years. I do not care to use his name, but can give it to any honourable gentlemen who desire it. This gentleman has been conducting a banking and financial business in that northern country for ten or twelve years. I knew him in the West before he went north, and I have never in all my experience known of a better pioneer banker. In fact, he is a model. I wish many of our banks had just such a man as he, to penetrate into new settlements and offer the people aid and assistance in a practical way, as this gentleman has been able to do. Here is his statement. Somebody suggested, if you please, as a relief for the people who were leaving that country, that there should be a colonization scheme to bring in more people to settle there. The fact that nobody can settle in a section of that sort should have presented itself to the gentleman who made that proposition, which evidently does not appeal to my friend.

The colonization scheme will not do any good to the Peace river district, as prospective settlers are advised that there is no use coming here until we get a coast outlet—

An outlet for their products to the Pacific ocean.

While in Edmonton, on different occasions, I found this to be true.

The trains are leaving here packed with passengers, most of them for the Western States, and the incoming trains are practically empty. The last one to arrive had two Inspectors, Dominion Lands Branch, a retired engineer on a visit, a Priest and one woman—none of them producers.

The following are the approximate figures of part of the investments in the Peace River District by various institutions, governments, etc.:

Banks	$2,300,000
Loan Companies	1,000,000
Soldiers' Settlement Board	1,000,000
Cow Bill	320,000
Seed Grain and Relief, Provincial and Dominion	10,000
School and town debentures	250,000
Total	$4,880,000

To this can be added the millions comprising the assets of the individual settlers and the cost of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway system and Government utilities such as telephones which will be lost if the district is allowed to go to decay.

The word "decay" is a very strong one to be used in a young country like Canada; and, when it comes from a man of the responsibilty of this gentleman, should command attention in either this or the other House of Parliament.

The farmers are discouraged beyond belief, not that they have lost faith in the land but in having no profitable market, and an alarming number are ready to throw up everything and get out. I am enclosing an original statement from one of my customers who has given me permission to use it for any purpose. The land is situated close to Bear Lake and there is not a better producing farm here. Three hundred and twenty acres are cultivated. In June, 1919, his statement showed a surplus of $28,000 with no liabilities. At that time he borrowed $5,000 to purchase stock. His assets are practically the same to-day with the exception that he owns a larger quantity of stock and owes $6,000 all told. He came here with practically nothing in 1910, and homesteaded and through hard work got into the enviable position shown by this statement. To-day he is offering to turn over his equity in everything he owns for $1,000 which he considers will be enough to send his family East and permit himself to get out and make a fresh start in some other country. This is not the exception to the rule. The going of one attracts several others and it is only a matter of a short time before there will be a general exodus.

One bona fide settler had the courage to pass the portal at Edmonton recently from Miles City, Montana, with farming equipment and stock. He was impressed with the country and intends to come back when conditions are better, but in the meantime sold out last Saturday. One team of 1,300 lb. geldings sold for $44, and one gelding 1,400 lb. 5 years old sold for $23. These were the pick of the horses he had in Montana. Before leaving Miles City he sold horses of the same weight for $450 per team.

You can buy cows and similar stock in that north country for from $5 to $8 apiece.

Numerous cases can be quoted where the grain shipped by carloads did not pay the freight by about $25 and upwards. After the end of this year it will be found necessary to close about half the schools, as settlers are unable to pay taxes.

What seems to me the only solution to our difficulties is the building of a railway from Grande Prairie to connect with the C. N. R. at or near Brulé Lake. It might be argued that this would do serious damage to the E. D. and B. C. Railway which is not self-supporting now, but in my estimation it would have the opposite effect. With the fame our land has for producing and with a Coast market our population would soon reach the point where both railways would be warranted.

Which I have not got—

—it will be seen at a glance that a line to Brulé would serve the whole of the farming districts in the Peace River, including Pouce Coupe, by giving them a very direct connection with Vancouver or Prince Rupert.

And that road would come down by the route I referred to last year when I spoke of the Hoppe coal mines. In this way it would serve in the development of those mines, as well as in the development of the Peace River country and the relief of the people there.

In war times the farmers were urged to produce, which brought the country into a high state of development. Now, with poor markets and the farmers playing a losing game, we find the land being allowed to go back. A few lean years appeared to be good medicine to bring people back to pre-war conditions, but they are now getting more than they can recover from in our part of the country unless relief is given soon.

I have been very closely in touch with the affairs of a large number of the settlers here through taking their financial statements and knowing their private business for so many years that I feel that I should know local conditions as well as anyone. I also feel that I could have my assertions endorsed by all the associations or public bodies operating here, although I have never taken an active part in any of them.

I have urged those about to get out to stay and carry on in the hope of better times being round the corner, and now doubt if the advice were sound, as they are getting deeper in the mire and losing what they might have saved if they had followed their own inclinations.

When the pioneer farmers, who withstood the rigors of the winter trails to get here and survived for years before the railway arrived, cannot succeed, it is not likely that newcomers from other countries could.

If you are in a position to make any definite statement, not necessarily to me, but through the proper channels, it would only be humane to do so. No matter whether the decisive answer were favourable or otherwise, the individual could judge for himself if he should stay or get out and bend his energies in other fields where he could make a success.

That is the statement of a gentleman who, I believe, knows very well the conditions in that country, and it is as strong evidence as could be presented.

Last year, when the Bill respecting the cancellation of leases of Dominion lands was before this House, I proposed an amendment to the Bill to prevent that coal field being disposed of to speculators. My proposal was that it should not be disposed of except by Act of Parliament. I did that because I believed, first, that it was essential to provide fuel for Canada, and second that its development was absolutely essential in the interest of those people who are now suffering. My estimation of its importance at that time is thoroughly corroborated by circumstances to-day. In a debate which occurred in another place the other day the statement was made that the expense of shipping coal to the East from the West brings the cost up to $18 a ton. In answer to that I find the following:

Edmonton, March 4.—Recent statements in the House of Commons by Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of Mines, in which the Minister was reported to have said that Alberta coal was too far away to be moved to Ontario with profit, evoked a discussion at the meeting of the Edmonton branch of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy here on Saturday.

Mr. Stewart was reported to have given the cost of transporting Alberta anthracite to the east at $16 a ton, but various members who spoke on the subject claimed that the present rate was $12.50 a ton.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: $22 in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. POPE (continuing):

It was stated that there was at present in effect a rate from the coal spur, near Edson to Prince Rupert of $3.40 a ton. If this rate, which is a mountain rate, were applied on a ton mile basis to Toronto, the rate would be approximately $8 instead of $12.50, which is the existing rate. The Prince Rupert rate is a rate applying to car lots and if coal were hauled east in train lots with a fast service it should be possible to give a considerably lower rate than the rate quoted.

A strong resolution to this effect was passed, and copies wired to the Minister of Mines, and the president of the Institute of Mines and Metallurgy, which is now in session in Montreal.

You have that in contradistinction to the statement made by Mr. Stewart and those who corroborated him in the other House last week.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Stewart said that it would cost $4,000,000 to put a railroad into the coal deposit at High River. I am not discussing the anthracite coal deposit at High River, as I do not know anything about it except that there is one there. I am speaking of coal that I do know something about, that the Department of Mines knows something about, that the entire public of Canada knows something about—and about which, if my information is correct, somebody else knows something about. I have here a statement as to the quality of that coal which was given to me yesterday by the Department of Mines. This Hoppe coal deposit is not an undeveloped property. There are five tunnels on the property that should belong to the Dominion of Canada, and it should not be trifled with. These tunnels run in to a depth of one hundred or two hundred feet. Above these tunnels, and above the water level, which means the cheapest mining in the world, there are, according to statistics, millions of tons of anthracite.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Do I understand the honourable gentleman to say that they belong to the Government?

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes, sir; if it does not give them away. That is why I am talking to you—so that they will not be given away.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Did the Government make the tunnels?

Hon. Mr. POPE: The honourable gentleman knows who made the tunnels. That German, Hoppe, made the tunnels. I need not tell the honourable gentleman who made them. The analysis of the fixed carbon in this coal runs as follows: in an 8-foot vein it is 63.4; in a 9-foot vein, 69.8; in a 17-foot vein, 74.0; in a 12-foot vein, 69.4; and so on all the way down. This analysis runs as high as 83, 82, 73, 81, 69 of fixed carbon. Now, compare this with the highest class of coal which the United States produces. Anybody who burns coal from the United States knows that what I am going to quote is not true of the coal ordinarily brought from that country, because if next spring he looks at the pile of material left from his winter's fires and figures out the number of units of heat it took to warm that material, he will realize that the coal we are getting from the United States to-day is not of a very high class. The fixed carbon in coal from the Lehigh coal market runs as follows: egg size, 88; stove size, 83; nut coal, 80; pea coal, 79; buckwheat coal, 76. And, mark you, that comparison is unfair to our coal, because the American coal is mined at great depths, and is as good as or better than any coal they can expect to get, while ours is comparatively near the surface.

Now, honourable gentlemen, this is not a coal mine; it is not a single vein; it is a great coal field. And I plead with you to see that it is not given away to any bundle of speculators, no matter who they may be. This is our coal; it is the future coal of this country. An area within a radius of 1,000 miles of that deposit includes the Pacific coast, California, the state of Washington, the Dakotas, and the whole of the Canadian Northwest. That deposit is within thirty miles of being as near to the head waters of navigation as Pennsylvania; and while we have trains lying idle from the time when the wheat has gone out, which is about now, until next autumn, it is useless to tell me that we, owning these national railroads, cannot afford to operate those trains, even at a loss so far as overhead is concerned, in order to furnish coal to keep the people of this country warm, and to keep our money in our own country. To trifle with this thing, to hesitate, is to be lost.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: It is to be frozen.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes, frozen if you like. I want to tell you that in the province of Ontario this spring many children will be in their graves who would have been alive if we had had plenty of fuel for the poor people to warm themselves with. There is a human side to this question that should appeal to everybody. It is not only a matter of commercial or transportation development. We must realize our responsibilities in putting people into the Peace River country. If the Government would undertake the construction of this road from Pouce Coupe or a point near Park Gate on the Transcontinental, a matter of 75 miles would take it to the coal field, and another 75 miles would take it to Grande Prairie. Engineers have gone over the first 75 miles, and from conversation with men who made the survey I personally know that it is an easy road to construct. I do not know about the balance; but I am told by people who have been over it that it is through a country not only of coal, but of forest and minerals, and agricultural possibilities all the way. In the first 75 miles you pass over areas of steam coal and veins 100 feet wide of lighter grade coal that could be handled with a steam shovel and loaded on a train as cheaply as you could load earth.

Now, if you undertake this railroad, what do you do? You provide the only line of transportation that will enable those people to remain in the Peace River country. They cannot export their products to the East but by the Pacific Ocean, else no farming is possible in that northern country. It requires only the building of a railway 150 miles long to secure prosperity for those people, and when they come to this Government I hope they will be successful in their application. They are here to-day presenting their claims, and I am speaking on their behalf, in order that the Government may have the fullest information that any honourable gentleman in this House possesses in reference to the matter. It is important in the interest of that northern country that they receive what every citizen is entitled to, namely, transportation for their products to the proper market.

There would be no difficulty in building that railroad of 150 miles. I do not know what it would cost to-day, but it would be an easy road to build. Suppose it cost four, six, or eight million dollars, it would at once give employment to those people of the Peace River district and provide work for their teams of horses, thus helping them to earn a livelihood, and enabling them to remain in that country, which otherwise they might be forced to leave. It would immediately give value to their assets, for which they have worked hard. The road would also furnish us with coal, which now belongs to the Canadian people and is at our disposal for the general benefit of Canada as well as of those northern citizens. That railroad could be built completely inside of twelve months, and that coal could be coming down east to us within that period, as well as taking care of that western country.

But what have I heard on the streets of Ottawa, from the first day I arrived in this city? One of the first things I heard at the opening of Parliament was that this coal field had been given back, or was on its way back, to the representatives of Hoppe and Isenberg, whoever these people are. I said: "No, that cannot be; that question was brought up in our House last year, and I had the honour of proposing an amendment to the Bill that was before us, adding thereto a clause by which this property would not leave the national ownership except by act of Parliament." It is quite true that the Government did as all Governments do—stuffed the Senate with Bills at the last hour, when there was no time to consider them. We have always been stuffed like a stuffed turkey at the end of the Session. I do not blame this Government more than any other, for if we are fools enough to sit here to be stuffed we will always find a Government that will stuff us. They brought in this legislation at the last moment, and it was amended as I say, and then there was a conference between the two Houses.

I was not on that conference, but a gentleman who came back from it told me that while they thought better not to insist upon the amendment, they had been assured on a "gentlemen's agreement"—if you like to put it that way—that this property would not be parted with until the people of Canada, through its Parliament, had been consulted. I thought possibly there would have been something more on record than I find in Hansard, but I do find that the question was brought up in the House of Commons, and I read something there that perhaps is important enough for us to consider for a moment:

> Mr. Mackenzie King: Rather than drop the entire Bill we are prepared to let section 5 go.
> Mr. Meighen: That would leave the Bill in the form in which it was first introduced into the House.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: Yes.
> Mr. Meighen: That is to say, the cancellations will now be confirmed as valid.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: Yes.

That is, the cancellation of the Hoppe or the Isenberg claims would be considered valid. Very good. Then, later on.

> Mr. Meighen: The view taken by the Senate on the matter is the view I expressed in this House, but I do not wish to argue now either in support of one side or the other of that question. The Bill as it stood when it left this House provided that all cancellations should stand as valid save only those in respect of which litigation had been entered or a petition of right applied for. That proviso has been struck out by the Senate. The Bill, as the Government advises us to accept it now, will make all cancellations valid. My experience of the Department convinces me that no man whose lease has been cancelled has anything better than the flimsiest technicality on which to base a claim against the Crown.

According to what is said there, we have the right to anticipate from the rumour which is becoming intensified every hour, that the promoter, who is inside these buildings every day, is associating with himself men who would, if the report is true, reflect on the motive of the members of this Chamber as to independence. I have no proof of that, and I make no charge, but I may tell you that I saw that promoter to-day, and I see him half of the time moving about this place and making his arrangements. I understand that he has arranged for the sale of this property in England for $3,000,000. I understand that they intend first to put up $100,000 in order to pay the arrears on the leases, and when that is done there is an Order in Council waiting that will violate the gentleman's agreement that was made by the House of Commons with the Senate one year ago. That is the reason that I hasten to inquire of the Government in reference to this matter.

I notice that in the House of Commons last year Mr. Cannon, who I suppose is some big gun over there, said:

Mr. Cannon: I have only this to say, that the Senate is attempting in these last few days to increase their privileges and rights. I think that the Senate should realize that the House of Commons, being the elective House, is more responsible to the people than the other Chamber, which is not elected, and which is irresponsible, and this being the last day of the session, I would recommend to the Government in view of what has taken place that the sooner we have Senate reform the better.

Well, while a Cannon is all right in the small sphere in which he revolves, he is really a miniature. I remember when Mr. Metcalfe, of Kingston, some years ago in the House of Commons, referred to another gentleman, Mr. McMullen, who was narrow and contracted, and who kept interrupting him. Finally Mr. Metcalfe said: "My honourable friend who interrupts me has a soul that is just so big that if it were put inside of a peanut shell it would have more room to wabble about than a pollywog in Lake Ontario." I might transfer that to somebody else in regard to what he has to say about us.

No, honourable gentlemen, this honourable body is not a joke; it is a part of the constitution of Canada, part of the British North America Act, one of the Houses of Parliament, and it is our obligation to see to it—not from a partizan point of view at all—that the interests of the citizens are protected when anybody tries to rob the nation. That is why we are here. There is no other reason why we should draw our salaries. Such an occasion as this may not often occur, but we have to assume the responsibility. I admit that it is much easier to slide down hill than to crawl up; it is much easier to avoid responsibility than to accept it; but if we are not prepared to take our proper place in the protection of the great rights of this country when they are infringed upon by any unfairness upon the part of any Government, be it Liberal or Conservative or Progressive, or by whatever name it may be called, then I say we are unworthy of the position we occupy.

I am not qualified to argue this matter from a legal point of view, for I am not a lawyer, but a farmer, and we farmers have something to do besides studying law. But we have splendid legal talent here, and I would ask that the legal gentlemen take this matter into consideration, even though by permission it be adjourned for a day, in order to find out its precise legal aspect. What I have ascertained is that the Hoppe lease has been transferred to Isenberg, and that now the Hawaiian Trust Company and the widow of Isenberg are the legal representatives of whatever Hoppe and Isenberg had. I find that on June 14th they sent a petition of right asking for a fiat under which to proceed. I am also informed that on the 23rd of June they forwarded another petition, setting forth the matter in a different light as they saw it, and asking for a fiat. The Department of Justice said that they must make a selection, and asked them on which of those petitions they proposed to act, and they selected that of the 23rd. This is important, because the Department of Justice, fearing that there might have been some illegality or technicality to void the service of notice of cancellation of the lease, prepared and served a second notice of cancellation between the dates of the 14th and the 23rd, so that if they secured their fiat they would go before the Court after they had been served with a notice that the Department considered sufficient to guarantee the cancellation.

I believe the information I have received to be absolutely correct. At the Department of Justice I met an official who seemed to be well posted, who gave me the foregoing particulars. Now I understand there is an Order in Council passed waiting for operation. I hope that part of the information is incorrect, for I do not think these people had any right to acquire interests in those coal lands. I have no objection to any man getting back his money after he had expended it on that or any other property. If he wanted to go to arbitration or to a court of justice or a court of equity and plead his case, I would say that if he found a first-class thing for Canada and spent some money on it he should have his money back with interest. But that is not the object of this fiat. It relates, as I understand it, to the ownership of this property by these people; and do you think that the widow and this man Murdock, who is running around here, intend to operate that mine in order to relieve those northern people and furnish coal for Western Canada, the Northwest Territories, and the people of Eastern Canada? Not on your tintype, gentlemen.

This puts the matter up to the Government, and I say to the leader that he never stood in a more responsible position to the people of Canada than he does on this question. The matter will not be allowed to pass by in silence. If my voice is not sufficient there will be other voices raised, because we are going to have justice for Canada and for those northern people, and we are going to obtain that coal, as a guarantee that in the future we will be under no special obligation to any nation in the world for the fuel of Canada. If my honourable friend is not prepared to answer the question I have placed on the Order Paper, I would like to know how this property stands in every detail, what the Government have done to alienate it from the public domain, and whether it is the intention of the Government to so alienate it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I had occasion to state a few days ago that it was unfortunate that the Government should be called upon to answer a question before it had been enlarged upon. I am in the fortunate position, however, of being able to tell my honourable friend that when the answer comes it will cover not only the broad general question, but the detailed and precise questions to which my honourable friend wants an answer. So that I would ask him to leave his question on the Order Paper till to-morrow.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: In order to put the matter in proper shape, I think some honourable gentlemen should move the adjournment of the debate.

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the debate was adjourned.

ST. JOHN-MONTREAL FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. FOWLER inquired of the Government:

1. Is it or is it not a fact that a carload of goods can be shipped from Montreal to St. John at a lower rate than a carload of similar goods from St. John to Montreal?
2. If so, why?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As this inquiry does not mention any particular kind of goods, the Traffic Department of the Board of Railway Commissioners can only deal generally with it in the following terms:

The standard class rates, which are the maximum rates approved by this Board, apply in both directions between Montreal and St. John, N.B., (448 miles), and are as follows:

Rates in cents per 100 lbs.—1, 144; 2, 125½; 3, 108; 4, 90; 5, 72; 6, 68; 7, 50; 8, 52½; 9, 54; 10, 49. (C.P.R. tariff C.R.C. No. E-3904.)

The special, or working, class rates are also the same in both directions, viz:

Rates in cents per 100 lbs.—1, 104; 2, 91½ 3, 79; 4, 65; 5, 52½; 6, 49; 7, 37½; 8, 40; 9, —; 10, 36½. (C.P.R. supplement 3 to tariff C.R.C. No. E-3219.)

Commodity rates are published from St. John to Montreal on certain articles originating at that point, and there being no movement from Montreal to St. John, class rates (which are higher) would be applied. Similarly, commodity rates are published on certain articles from Montreal to St. John which do not ordinarily move in the opposite direction, and the higher class rates would apply from St. John to Montreal.

Where commodity rates are published from both points on the same article, it is noticed the rates are the same. For example, the following rates are published from St. John to Montreal, and from Montreal to St. John: Ship handling gears, carloads, 23½c. per 100 lbs.; Iron and steel bars, 28c.; Scrap iron and steel, 28c.

KOOTENAY PARK EXCLUDED LANDS

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. GREEN inquired:

1. Has any of the land excluded by Order in Council of the 2nd February, 1922, from the Kootenay Park, as the same was established by Order in Council, of the 21st April, 1920, been sold or otherwise alienated by the Government, and if so to whom and when?
2. Have any applications been made for the purchase or leasing of any of such excluded lands, and if so by whom and when?
3. If any of such excluded lands have been sold or otherwise alienated, what is the quantity of such lands so dealt with and upon what terms as to price and time of payment were the same disposed of?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. No.
2. No.
3. Answered by one and two.

The honourable gentleman will find a statement, bearing upon the questions put, which may be of interest to him.

KENT NORTHERN RAILWAY

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. BOURQUE inquired of the Government:

1. If, in New Brunswick, the only branch line railway not taken over by the Government, is the Kent Northern Railway?
2. If this railway serves an important farming, fishing and lumber district?
3. Have any negotiations been carried on by the Government or the Railway Board, with a view to acquiring such railway? If so, when were such negotiations commenced, and what point have they reached and when was such point reached?
4. Is it the intention of the Government to acquire said railway, and if so, when?
5. What is being done at the present time towards the acquisition of said railway?
6. What representations have been received by the Government and from whom, in respect of the necessity of the acquisition of said railway?
7. What reports have been received by the Government, and from whom, with reference to the condition of said railway and the advisability of purchasing it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Kent Northern Railway was one of a number of short lines in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, connecting the Intercolonial, which the Government contemplated leasing under Branch Line legislation of 1910, in view of which engineers in 1910 and again in 1913 made a report on the physical property of the road, and the traffic possibilities of the territory served.

The proposal to lease these roads fell through, and in 1915 legislation was passed authorizing the construction, purchase or lease of the branch lines in question. In the Appropriation Act, No. 2, Chap. 52, Statutes of Canada, 1918, provision was made for the purchase of the Kent Northern Railway for $60,000. This offer the owners failed to take advantage of.

Since the change of Government, a deputation waited on the late Minister of Railways, and urged that the railway be acquired. At that time the deputation was informed that the question of purchasing additional branch lines would have to wait the reorganization of the Canadian National Railways.

Should any concrete proposal be received from the owners of the Kent Northern Railway, it will be referred to the Management of the National Railways for consideration and report.

Hon. Mr. REID: Honourable gentlemen, with reference to this matter, may I draw the attention of the honourable leader of the House to the fact that when it was decided to purchase the branch lines in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick we fixed a certain rate per mile at which we would take over any one or all of those railways, and, as I remember it, we purchased all the railways in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia at the same rate per mile, with the exception of the Kent Northern, which refused to accept that rate. I hope that if the Government decide to purchase the Kent Northern they will treat it exactly the same way as they did the several other railways in those two provinces.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will draw the attention of the Acting Minister of Railways to the remarks of my honourable friend.

THE INSOLVENCY LAW

MOTION

Hon. L. O. DAVID moved:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the insolvency law, and especially to apply it only to traders.

He said: The older members of this House know that it has been my custom to introduce here all kinds of motions and questions for the purpose of having them discussed in the public interest by honourable members of this House, in order to show that the Senate is not idle. I will continue to do so in the same spirit. I sometimes do not care much about the vote, and have often withdrawn my motion after the discussion had taken place and I had attained my object, as I attach more importance to the views expressed by honourable members of this House than to their vote. But, honourable gentlemen, I must say that when I shall have ascertained that the members of this House take no part in the discussion of the questions which I raise, I will give up the job, because I have no personal interest in bringing up these questions, and also because I am not able now, as I was 20 years ago, to speak at length. The fact is, honourable gentlemen, that I make these motions and raise these questions rather for the purpose of having other members of the House speak than for the purpose of speaking myself. This is exactly what I desire in the present instance. I hope that the honourable members of this House will discuss this question. There are many persons in another place, including, I am informed, even a Minister, who are anxious to know what are the views of public men on this matter.

When the Bankruptcy Bill came before this House it was contended by some honourable members of the Senate, and especially by the honourable member for DeSalaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), the honourable leader of the House, and the honourable member for Red Deer (Hon. Mr. Michener), that there were grave doubts as to its constitutionality, because it applied not only to traders, but also to any man who wanted to take advantage of the law; even to notaries, doctors, lawyers, and farmers. I do not know what lawyers of the past would have thought could they have known that the Bankruptcy Act would apply to their successors. However, it was stated at the time that the law was required by the English-speaking provinces, and especially by the Prairie Provinces;—and you know, honourable gentlemen, that the voice of the representatives of the Prairie Provinces is very strong and they know how to get the Government to listen to it. We had at the last Session many proofs of the power of that voice.

Now let us consider for a few moments the results of that law. Those results have opened the eyes of a good many people who were in favour of it, and we now hear people everywhere complain of its mischievous operations.

One of the effects has been to increase considerably the number of bankruptcy cases. I have here a statement showing what has taken place in Montreal in connection with the operations of this law. You will see the difference between the years before it was in force and the period since its inception. In 1915 there were 525 cases of insolvency in Montreal; in 1916, 282; in 1917, 286; in 1918, 213; in 1919, 162; in 1920, 169. Since the law has come into force; in 1921, 901; in 1922, 1,094; and for the last two months, January and February, 215. If the increase continues in the same proportion, the figures will be distressing at the end of the year.

Another result of the law has been to give rise to all kinds of dishonest devices to defraud creditors. I could establish that assertion by numerous facts. There was a resolution passed at the last Session of the Quebec Legislature which embodies the views of all our people of the province of Quebec without distinction:

That this House regrets that the Bankruptcy Act as amended incites dishonesty and fraud, causes serious trouble to both trade and industry, which is of a nature to ruin credit, and it requests the federal Government to repeal that Act.

Owing to the condition of my voice, I will not speak at length; but I wish to consider particularly the effect of the law upon our rural population. I contend that it has demoralized our farmers in causing them to lose the honourable feeling that bankruptcy is dishonest and that the payment of their debts is a sacred duty. That honourable feeling won for them the respect and confidence of all other classes of our community.

I find that I cannot continue, honourable gentlemen. I would ask that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow, and perhaps I shall then be in a better condition.

On motion of Hon. Mr. David, the debate was adjourned.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 7, an Act to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, the object of this Bill is to allow stipendiary magistrates to try, outside the Northwest Territories, and under the laws and procedure of the Northwest Territories, persons charged with having committed crimes within the Northwest Territories. The immediate purpose of the Bill is to permit of the trial of several Eskimos who are charged with having committed a crime in the Northwest Territories, and who are at present on Herschell Island. It is not deemed that that place offers the proper facilities—guardhouse and court, I suppose—to enable these offenders to be brought to justice; and for this purpose the Northwest Territories Act must be amended.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can my honourable friend point out the necessity of a stipendiary magistrate appointed for the Northwest Territories, or the unorganized territories, sitting in any of the provinces of Canada for the trial of cases which may have originated within the territories? It seems to me to be rather unique to have a stipendiary magistrate appointed for the Northwest Territories practically exercising his jurisdiction within the provinces of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is in the Yukon territory.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That may be, but it gives the magistrate authority to sit in any province in Canada and to try a case, the cause of action for which may have originated in any of the territories of Canada. The constitutional soundness of a stipendiary magistrate having authority to sit in one of the provinces of Canada and try a case of that kind is a question on which I am not prepared to express any dogmatic opinion at the moment; but it seems to me rather an extraordinary power to give him, and at the moment it also seems to me unnecessary, because I cannot conceive of a cause of action arising that could not be tried in the territories, either organized or unorganized. For instance, this measure would give the stipendiary magistrate authority to sit in the city of Montreal to try a case which had arisen in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. Is it necessary to go to that extent? We are establishing a precedent which may possibly be made use of on some future occasion to bring about a combination of circumstances which would be undesirable.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not pretend to know anything about this Bill, but about a week ago in one of the daily papers I saw the statement that its object was to enable the court to get a jury—that in most parts of the Northwest Territories you could not get a jury of men who would qualify under the Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I see the difficulty in the mind of my honourable friend. He wants to know why were not magistrates outside the Northwest Territories empowered to deal with cases arising inside the Northwest Territories. I see that by this Act the Department of Justice extends the jurisdiction of magistrates appointed for the Northwest Territories to the extent of allowing them to sit within the provinces. At the moment I am not certain as to the status of the Yukon, although this Bill is for the purpose of allowing magistrates in the Northwest Territories to go anywhere in Canada to try cases that have originated in the Territories. I will draw the attention of the Department of Justice to the point raised by my honourable friend, and we may discuss it further when the Bill is taken up to-morrow in Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PUBLICATION OF DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

On the Order:

Consideration of the 24th Report of the Standing Committee on Divorce, in the matter of the recommendation that Rule 135 of the Senate relating to Divorce be amended, etc.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I desire that this order should stand. It is a question whether we can acomplish what we desire by rule or regulation of the Senate, or whether an amendment to the Act will be involved.

The object of the proposed amendment is to prevent the publication in newspapers of the proceedings of or evidence taken before the Divorce Committee. At the present time a certain paper in Canada is publishing in its entirety the evidence taken before the Committee on Divorce. It is very undesirable that this class of parliamentary proceedings should be reported in the press of Canada. Heretofore the press have refrained from doing it, and I am not prepared to say they have the right to do it; but in one particular case that has come under our observation it has been done. Something further than an amendment to the rules of the Senate may be necessary to carry out the object which the Committee has in view. For that reason, it is my intention to take up this question with my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What is the substance of the report?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is to preclude the publication in the press or otherwise of evidence taken before the Committee on Divorce. The hearings on divorce are conducted in camera, practically, and the publication of reports of the Committee has never before been attempted: but recently it has been attempted, and to some extent successfully.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suppose they take advantage of the printed reports of the evidence that are distributed.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

The Order stands.

CARGOES OF UNREGISTERED TRAWLERS

MOTION FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired:

1. Was any fish trawler which was not registered in Canada allowed in 1922 to land fish at any maritime province port without payment of customs duty on its catch?

2. (a) From what trawler or trawlers was fish so landed?

(b) What was the respective value of each cargo so landed?

(c) At what port or ports were such cargoes landed?

(d) On what date respectively was each cargo landed?

3. Under what (a) provision of the customs law of Canada or (b) other authority was any such cargo of fish allowed to be so landed?

4. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada to allow fish trawlers not registered in Canada and not manned by Canadian fishermen to land their catches at Canadian ports without payment of customs duty?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have been asked to suggest to my honourable friend that he transform his question into a motion for a return. He may do so now.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I have no objection whatever to transforming my inquiry into a motion for a return, although I must confess that I am unable to understand the logic of the request. I understand that a motion for a return is made when the answer is one of great length. The answers to the question which I am asking must necessarily be brief; they cannot take up very much time either in their compilation or in the printing. However, I am quite prepared to defer to my honourable friend's request if I can get an answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may inform the honourable gentleman that the request was not made directly to me by the Minister; but an official in the Secretary of State's Department, who very likely received the request from somebody else, transmitted it to me. For this reason I do not know exactly why the request is made.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: As I say, I am quite willing to accede to the request. I would like to have the answer expedited. I have had two or three inquiries on the Order Paper since the beginning of the Session, and have not seen any indication of speed on the part of the Department.

The inquiry was passed as a motion for a return.

CANADA'S FUEL SUPPLY

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Hon. J. S. McLENNAN moved:

That a Special Committee of this House, of five members be appointed to consider the question of the fuel supply of Canada, its most efficient use, and whether such Committee can assist the work of the Dominion Fuel Board.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, before taking up the wider aspect of this question, to which I desire to call the attention of the House, I would like to endorse entirely and absolutely the view expressed by the honourable Senator for Brome (Hon. Mr. Pope) yesterday, that the so-called Hoppe areas should be safeguarded for the ultimate use of the people of Canada, and not be disposed of in any other way inopportunely or prematurely. All the evidence we obtained before the Special Committee pointed to the fact that these were reserves of coal of a very high quality, and of the utmost value, and that, when there is a population to justify their development, they will prove to be of reasonably easy access. I would like also to endorse the opinion that I understood him to express, that if there are to be deficits on the National railroads of Canada the people of Canada would bear them more cheerfully if they were created by our using these railways for the transportation of the coal of Canada to supply the wants of the people of this country, rather than in the way that they are now created year after year, and, unfortunately, with not too great prospects of their being reduced to a bearable condition.

Coming now to the general aspect of the fuel problem of Canada, I desire to say, before dealing with it, that in my opinion, in every discussion in either House of Parliament, or wherever the fuel situation of Canada is discussed, in public or private, due recognition should be given to the way in which Canada has been treated by the United States. Never in my knowledge of international dealings has one country been better treated by another than has Canada in respect to coal been treated by the United States. In 1917, when this trade was first considered otherwise than as a matter of ordinary commercial relations, President Wilson established the principle that Canada should be treated exactly as if it were a part of the Republic; namely, that Canada should get the same quota of the available supply of coal that, according to its consumption, should be allowed to any State of the Union. This winter we have been treated in the same way. People in the United States, living in a climate quite as rigourous as our own, have seen trainload after trainload of coal going through their territory to a foreign country, and have not liked it any better, than we would if the condition had been reversed. The people of Canada would not have liked to see what was for us a necessity of life going into a foreign country.

This is not a political question. It is a question that in the deepest way affects all the people of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

President Harding has carried out the same policy as his predecessor. I do not think that the spirit of fraternity has ever been more fully displayed; and it demands from us, its beneficiaries, the fullest recognition. In thus speaking I feel that I am speaking for this House and for all in the country who realize that a powerful State, without bargaining, without entreaty, has granted part of a short supply of a necessity of life to a foreign country and has treated us as it has treated its own citizens. Members of this House who have been at all familiar with the matter will agree with me in this, that the smoothness with which our relations with the United States in this respect have been carried on has been very much due to the urbane ability of Mr. Magrath, who has represented this country in these dealings with our neighbours.

The present condition is a most serious one. To a certain limited favoured number it means only a certain amount of irritation and the writing of a larger cheque for their coal supply; but for the great bulk of the people of Canada—and it is with them that Parliament should be the more concerned—the cost of coal and the difficulty of obtaining it have meant in some cases privation, and in all cases the diversion from other and better purposes of a large part of their income to pay an excessive price for coal. I do not think we can build a happy, prosperous, and contented people on a foundation of a price of $18 a ton for fuel, which in a climate like ours is as necessary as food and shelter.

The conditions of this winter may not soon occur again. But they have occurred in the past; they have occurred more than once; and the probability is that they will occur at intervals again. One thing is absolutely certain, namely, that the cost of the supply of coal, which we all must use, is bound to increase, owing to the fact that mining is ever and ever becoming more expensive. The extraction of coal was easier ten years ago than it is now; it is probably easier now in all coal fields than it will be ten years hence. It is therefore absolutely necessary, quite apart from the scarcity or lack of coal, for us to strive to promote the economic advantages of Canada to the highest degree by making the use of coal as economical and effective as possible.

First of all, it has a great deal to do with the cost of living. A young friend of mine living in Ottawa estimates that the cost of his coal supply this winter has been equivalent to an increase of about 40 per cent on his house rent, which is a very considerable thing. Cheap coal—economy in the most effective use of coal—means cheaper production. It also means cheaper distribution, because the item of coal is to the railroads an extremely important one, amounting to about $10,000,000 out of $32,000,000.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: One-third.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Yes; out of every $100 that Canada spends for coal the railways pay very close to $30.

Secondly, in so vital a matter as our fuel supply we should be as far as possible self-contained; that is, we should draw the maximum amount of our fuel from Canada in so far as that is economically possible and can be carried out without injury to our production or without imposing too heavy a burden on us in other ways.

Thirdly, so far as possible, we should try to make our sources of supply those with which we can develop reciprocal trade. For example, if we can bring from the Old Country Welsh coal which will serve as ballast on vessels that are coming out to take back our grain, it will reduce the cost of the round voyage. It will give us cheaper fuel, and it ought to make cheaper freight back from this country for the products of our farms and our fields and for whatever manufactures we export.

I would like also to express the opinion that whatever is worked out in the way of developing trade in the manner I have indicated will be on sound economic lines. Trade should be developed in such a way that it will be profitable to the people to undertake it, and that trade will thus become permanent. Provision should be made not only for its establishment, but also for its expansion, if possible.

Again, in my opinion, the clearest possible case should be made for the Government doing more than experimental and investigating work, and bringing the results of their investigations and experiments clearly and forcibly before the people of Canada.

The economic problem is an enormously important one, quite apart from any question of scarcity or of a permanent supply. In 1920 we bought from the United States about $98,000,000 worth of coal; say, $12 worth a head. Out of the total of 32,000,000 tons of coal consumed in Canada, the railways use 10,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Is that both soft and hard?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Soft and hard combined.

Another feature, which is not an encouraging one, is that the ratio between our own production and our importations is not becoming more favourable. In 1886 our consumption of coal was 3,480,000 tons. Forty-six per cent of that was produced within the boundaries of Canada; 54 per cent was imported. In 1920, 45 years later, consumption had risen to $32,000,000 worth, which shows not only the increase of population but also the industrial increase in our country. Only 43 per cent of that was domestic coal; 57 per cent was imported. Our best showing was in 1903, when we produced 52 per cent of our consumption; and our worst was in 1917, when we produced only 37 per cent of it—that, of course, owing to the diversion of trade due to the activities of the war.

This, I submit to the House, is not a good showing for a country which contains the second largest amount of coal in the world. According to the International Geographical Congress, of the world's available supply, as far as known, the United States contains 51.9 per cent; Canada 16.7 per cent; China 13.4 per cent; Germany—that is, old Germany, because this Congress made its report before the war—5.7 per cent; Great Britain 2½ per cent. This table shows how complicated are such matters. When the dominating factor in the international coal trade is a country which contains but one-fortieth of the world's supply, the quality of that supply, the enterprize of its people, the command they have of shipping and of reciprocal trade, show how unimportant, for the time being at all events, are the mere quantities of coal within the boundaries of a country.

Here is another phase of the question. It is almost within the memory of man that the great anthracite fields of Pennsylvania, containing practically the continental supply of anthracite coal, lay useless because people thought that anthracite coal would not burn; it was supposed to be too hard; it came out in lumps too big. Not until appliances for breaking, sorting, and sizing it were devised did anthracite coal come into use in the United States and afterwards over the whole continent.

We too have our difficulties, topographical and other. When Providence distributed the coal measures of this continent, no regard was had to the fact that a very long time afterwards there would exist international boundaries running across it. Canada has coal on either seaboard. The United States has coal directly across Lake Erie from the most thickly populated and the most industrially active part of Canada. The Americans, as an active commercial people, have rightly used their advantage in placing their coal on our markets. The whole machinery of transportation for the central part of Canada is so arranged that coal may easily be shipped across Lake Erie, and there are a great many more difficulties to be surmounted in bringing coal from our own fields in Nova Scotia.

people have become accustomed to dealing in that way, and not only in domestic life but in business life, routine is a formidable thing to overcome. Any plan to make a real change in the sources of our fuel supply will call not only for patriotism, but also for a desire that will bring about the practical effect of looking to the future rather than to the immediate gain. Perhaps a more difficult thing than all will be to get Canadian people out of the paths in which they have walked very comfortably for some time.

The situation as regards Nova Sotia coal and the supplying of the markets on the St. Lawrence was better some time ago than it is at present. The honourable Senator from Stadacona (Hon. L. C. Webster) will bear me out in saying that in the later nineties the Nova Scotian trade had captured and was holding the St. Lawrence markets just as far as there were no special disadvantages against it. It had the bulk of the trade in Montreal and Quebec; it supplied Ottawa with a very considerable part of its consumption; it furnished the Grand Trunk at Brockville, and sometimes, when the supply of American coal was short, the mills at Cornwall and Valleyfield; the Canadian Pacific took our coal as far as North Bay. But there was an anomaly in dealing with the small trade. We could load, transport, discharge, and put into barges coal from Sydney to Montreal for certainly not more than 75 cents a ton.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: 53 cents a ton.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: That was since my time; I am speaking of 20 odd years ago; but I want to be safe, and so say it cost about 75 cents tot take it up and discharge it less than 50 or 60 miles from Montreal, up the river.

Between 1885 and 1900 the Nova Scotian coal trade increased from 215,000 to 934,229 tons. In 1915 it had reached 1,828,769. In 1920 it had fallen to 243,480. In 1921 it was 887,701. In 1922 it had come up again to 1,380,000 tons. In 1880 our competitors in the United Kingdom sent out 142,000 tons, mostly to Quebec and Montreal, and principally as ballast freight. In five years that had fallen to 103,000 tons, and in another five years, namely, in 1890, it was down to 59,000 tons, having been displaced by our own product.

Take, again, the United States. In 1890 the amount of United States coal used in the province of Quebec was only 38,845 tons. It rose in 1918 to over 4,000,000 tons, and in 1922, it has fallen again, as our own coal rose, to 1,300,000.

Here, obviously, is a market which Canadians once held, and which ought to be regained. I might say that the loss of that market has not been due in any way to lack of facilities, or because the people handling that business were not doing so with the best possible appliances, for there is no port on the seaboard of North America or the whole continent where coal can be loaded more rapidly than at Sydney. I can safely appeal to my honourable friend from Stadacona—who, if I may say so, was once my apprentice in the coal trade—whether he knows of any place north of Newport News, New York, Boston, or any other place, where coal can be unloaded as rapidly as in the ports of Montreal and Quebec. So it is a question of cost of production, of energy, and of time, to displace competitors in this market, and to give back to Nova Scotia the markets in the St. Lawrence which it once held. There is no question that water transportation for bulky articles is by far the cheapest. It probably amounts to a quarter or a fifth of the cost of rail transportation, and it is possible that the extension of the markets for Cape Breton coal further west up the St. Lawrence may be enhanced by developments in the St. Lawrence river.

I understand that erudite and expert gentlemen, one of whom is not far from me at the moment, are not inclined, on account of the advantages which the port of Montreal now enjoys, to look unfavourably on extensive works in the St. Lawrence river; but my observation of the history of Montreal, from what its people of the past have accomplished, and what is being worthily carried on by its citizens to-day, as well as the position that that port occupies among the ports of this continent, is that any extension of facilities by rail or water or by increase of power, will benefit that port and the people who are connected with that great city.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Nobody denies that.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Would the honourable gentleman at this point give us a description of the kind of American coal that has displaced Nova Scotia coal at the time he indicated?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Coal from the more northern coal fields of Pennsylvania—Reynoldsville, I should say.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What kind of coal?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Run of mine, now coming down the river even as far as Quebec in great volume.

There is no question that what bulks largely in the public mind in connection with this question is anthracite. It comes into our houses instead of our workshops and offices, and there is a general impression that it is absolutely indispensable as a domestic fuel. I think no one would deny that it is the cleanest and most easily handled of all domestic fuels; but no country is dependent on it, and it is simply because there was a large and steady market in Canada and in the northern range of the American States, on account of the severe climate, that the producers of anthracite have been so successful. All our manufacturers have designed and built their furnaces for anthracite coal, and therefore it has gained an undue prominence, as it seems to me. But even if anthracite is absolutely abundant, and as low in price, relatively, as it has been, there is no question that if the people of Canada could succeed in burning anthracite or any other fuel to the utmost advantage a very great saving could be made —possibly by improved designs in furnaces, in the matter of radiation and more complete combustion. I went the other day into the cellar of a house, and it was like a Turkish bath, because the furnaces, which were large, were going full blast, the day being cold, and the furnaces were not insulated, nor were the pipes. When I called the man's attention to this his answer was that things in the cellar would freeze otherwise; yet a couple of small radiators using perhaps two tons of coal would have kept the cellar above freezing for the whole winter.

Whatever agency takes up this question, the economical use of domestic fuel, whatever kind may be used, should be brought home to all the people of Canada. While anthracite continues at its present high price, substitutes will be used. There are possibilities in oil, in electricity, in gas, and in Welsh anthracite substituted for the American article. That would fulfil absolutely and perfectly the second condition I laid down—that if we cannot produce the fuel ourselves we should get it from such sources as would benefit other trades of ours in the way of return cargoes of grain, paper and other products, thus reducing the cost of both.

There is another aspect to this question. Whatever agencies can be utilized should be worked to create a widespread and effective demand among the people of Canada for economical furnaces, preferably of Canadian make, in order to save all the coal they can, and burn the cheapest kind of fuel. I believe that such a demand, if created, would be supplied. How is a young householder to know how to get the best furnace or other appliance? That is an important matter, and whatever agency deals with this question should be prepared to give the widest possible publicity to what it might ascertain in reference to the apparatus which would be most efficient because if a householder buys the wrong article he will not only be discouraged, but his money will be lost. One important method would be to have demonstrations of appliances.

I gave you figures showing the extraordinary advance in certain years in the Cape Breton coal trade, namely, from a quarter of a million tons to a million in a comparatively short time, although our coal had the disadvantage in price in the eighties of $1 a ton as compared with American or Old Country coal, the latter being $4 a ton, while we sold ours at $3. It took us from 10 to 15 years to wipe out that disadvantage and create a reputation for our coal, and that long time was required because we were working through seven or eight separate companies, and had no combined work. If we had had five or six practical firemen demonstrating in Montreal, showing manufacturers there how to fire with our coal, and had those demonstrations continued for some days, we would have cut down that long period of 10 or 15 years to about two years, with the great benefits that would have resulted. It seems to me that the same kind of thing should be done with any new development in appliances, or any substitute for the coal the people are now using. I do not know how that could be done, but possibly if the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or some other body would put their stamp of approval on certain apparatus, furnaces or whatever they might be, stating that they were properly constructed and designed, and ought, with due care, to accomplish certain work in the combustion of coal, it might be of great help towards the good work of economizing fuel, and thus saving money for the people of Canada.

The present situation as regards fuel is that a Dominion Fuel Board was appointed last autumn by the Government under Mr. Camsell, the Deputy Minister of Mines. On that Board there are a number of eminent scientific gentlemen. They have shown that they were not "in the air," as trained experts are supposed to be, for the first thing they sent out were admirable circulars describing the proper way of burning the various kinds of fuel which might be substituted for anthracite. Whether that Board can deal with all phases of the question I do not know. Perhaps the best way, in relation to the commercial and economic phases of the question, would be, for them to be supplemented by certain members more familiar with general trade questions, especially with the possibility of the commercial development of the coal trade.

At all events, the object we all have in view is to use so much Canadian fuel that we may be as absolutely independent regarding heat, as we are regarding our food and housing; that we should get the co-operation of the producers of apparatus and appliances for the most effective burning of whatever fuel we need; and that there should be brought home to the general public the importance of this matter in all its phases.

If the House feels that a Committee of its members could assist to this end, which we all consider most desirable and patriotic, and which if successfully pursued, will do much for the economic rehabilitation of the country, I would suggest that such a committee should consist of Messrs. Hardy, Deveber, Laird, Webster (Stadacona), and the mover. I am inclined to think that such a committee could with advantage deal only generally with some of the phases of this matter. With others, a scientific committee or the Dominion Fuel Board could unquestionably deal to the best advantage, and if such a Committee is appointed I think it should work in harmony and close consultation with that Board.

Hon. J. D. REID: Honourable gentlemen, I come from a part of the Dominion where the fuel question is a very serious one, and for that reason, and also because I took some interest in this matter when I had the honour of being Minister of Railways and Canals, I wish to say a few words. I am glad the honourable gentleman has brought this question before the House; I believe there is no more important one to-day than the fuel question. I was glad also that another honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Pope) brought before the House yesterday the question of anthracite coal in the West, for I agree with him that none of our natural resources should be alienated from Government ownership. We have sufficient coal in Canada to protect ourselves at any time from the possibility of famine. As has been stated, we have coal in Nova Scotia and in the western provinces, and to my mind the whole question is how to get it from those points to central Canada. If the question were solved of transporting it to central Canada at a rate that would justify its use, I think we would not have the difficulties that arise each and every year due to a shortage of coal.

I claim also that it is of the greatest importance that we should use as much of our own Canadian coal as we possibly can. I make that claim for several reasons. In using our own coal we are developing our own natural resources, turning them into money and keeping the money in our own country. In addition to that, we are creating a demand for labour. Coal mining and the transportation of the coal requires the services of a great many men. So that the development of our own coal industry is a very important matter in the way of providing employment. Further than that, if we can provide coal for our industries at a price which would justify them in using it, we are assisting them to manufacture more cheaply, and are thereby benefiting the people of Canada as a whole. But the most important feature, to my mind, is that if we could assure all parts of Canada of a supply of coal at all times, we would be saving life. There are times when, owing to the shortage of coal, lives are in danger, and even lost.

I think we all agree that something should be done. When I was occupying the honourable position which I have already mentioned, I made a suggestion publicly in the House of Commons. My suggestion was that the Government of Canada should purchase equipment for the transportation of fuel—that is to say, 5,000 cars and a sufficient number of engines to haul those cars. My idea was to hand over half of this equipment to the Canadian Pacific railway and the other half to the Canadian National Railway, on the understanding that they would carry so much coal to Central Canada—part from Nova Scotia, and part from the western provinces. The railways would not be charged any interest on the cost of the equipment, but would simply be required to haul the coal at actual cost, and to keep the equipment in repair. If this was done the country would to my mind lose only the interest on the cost of the equipment, and, if 5,000 cars were put into operation, every time they were loaded they would carry 50 tons per car, or 250,000 tons of coal.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: What would that capital investment amount to?

Hon. Mr. REID: At the time the suggestion was made the capital investment would have amounted to about $3000 for each freight car. Prior to the war it would have amounted to about $1,000 per car. Five thousand cars at $3,000 would cost $15,000,000. I believe the actual cost would be probably about half that amount. I do not know what number of engines would be required, but I suppose $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 would do the whole business.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: If that were a good proposition, would not the Canadian Pacific railway undertake it?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: No, they would fight against any such plan.

Hon. Mr. REID: I believe we all realize the importance of this question, honourable gentlemen, and I think that if each of us were to help to solve the difficulty some suggestion might be made that would meet the situation. For this reason I am giving my suggestion for whatever it is worth.

If my suggestion were carried out, honourable gentlemen, in addition to keeping large industries going, and giving employment to many men engaged in those industries, the railways would also give employment to their men during slack times.

Some honourable gentleman will ask: why would not the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian National Railways do that? I will tell you why, honourable gentlemen. If you asked the railway to carry the coal at actual cost, without allowing for overhead charges, interest on the cost of the road, cost of management, and so on, they would say that that would bring down the rate so low that other parts of Canada would say: "If you can carry coal at that price we want other rates reduced." And, if allownces were made for the things I have mentioned, it would be impossible for the railways to bring the rates down low enough to justify the hauling of coal to central Ontario. Therefore, I believe the Government will have to assist in some way to bring the coal from those extreme points. Had I been in a position to take up my proposition with the railways, I would have done so, and perhaps we would have come to some conclusion along that line. I could not take it up at the time because the railways were very short of equipment to carry wheat and pulpwood and other natural products that it was necessary for them to carry, and then there were war conditions, which increased costs to such an enormous degree that the matter had to stand aside for the time being at least.

I never met anybody who agreed with me on this matter until last evening, when, in reading over the Toronto Globe, in the column called the "Voice of the People," I saw a letter on this very question written by M. J. Butler, who was at one time Deputy Minister of Railways. I have not seen nor heard from Mr. Butler for many years, but I know that he was a very able man and understood the transportation situation well. If the House will listen to me for a few minutes, I will read this letter, which may be of benefit in considering the solution of this question. It says:

The Coal Problem

To the Editor of The Globe: The problem of transportation of coal from the West to the East is surely so important that "a plea for courageously attacking it" in the words of President C. V. Corless, Mining Engineer, ought not to require an apology.

The usual condemnation given out by Traffic Officers ought not to be considered. The freight rate is quoted on a basis of a certain class of rate in the freight schedule, and it is predicted on an experience had in handling odd car lots, instead of what might or could be done in treating such a special train load lot on the most economical possible basis.

I venture to submit for consideration the following solution:

(a) Solid trains, from a central point, where train loads may be assembled from the mine or mines.

(b) A locomotive of the latest and most powerful type, capable of hauling over our Transcontinental lines with 4-10th of one per cent grades, 7,500 tons gross, a net tonnage of 5,000 tons; this may be increased in favorable weather.

(c) Coal cars of a capacity of 100 tons, 50 cars to the train, so that the length of the train over-all will be about 2,400 feet.

(d) Local distributing yards, where ample facilities are provided for the quick and economical discharge of the train.

The Virginian Railway Company is doing much better than the above. 120 ton capacity cars are in use, 84 cars to the train, making 10,080 tons of coal per trip.

Engines and vans are changed every 2nd Division, or as may work out best.

From the Alberta Mines to Winnipeg is about 975 miles. Allow earnings per train mile of $5.00. A fairly generous rate, run the train back empty, and the cost will be 975 x 2 x $5.00—$9,750, or per ton on the basis of 5,000 tons at $1.95. Using 10,000 tons train, the cost would be cut in half or 97½ cents per ton of coal.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Is that for the whole distance?

Hon. Mr. REID: For the 975 miles from Alberta to Winnipeg. The letter goes on to say:

The distance from the said mine to Cochrane is 1,751 miles, or with the same allowance the cost per ton would be $3.50.

The mileage to Port Arthur is 1,413 and the cost per ton delivered would be $2.82 from which point with properly equipped shipping docks, it could be transported to all points on the Lakes, Erie, Huron, Georgian Bay, and after the Welland Canal is completed to Lake Ontario points at a cost on the dock not exceeding $2.50 additional per ton.

So that a fair average transportation charge from Alberta mines to Port Colborne would not exceed. should not exeeced, $5.32. I understand it may be bought loaded on the cars at the mines for $2.00, hence total cost would be in the neighborhood of $7.50 per ton. American coal is now costing at Toronto, $10.30 per short ton—local yard charges would be the same for all coal delivery to any consumer.

Oakville, March 6. M. J. Butler.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman will admit that that can only be done on the Transcontinental and the Grand Trunk Pacific. It would not work on the Canadian Pacific railway, with its grades.

Hon. Mr. REID: It would work on the C.P.R. if you give them the equipment, they can haul it just as well as the Transcontinental.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: To Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. REID: To Port Arthur; that is what I mean. If that were done, it would solve the problem in central Canada. In the provinces of Quebec and Ontario we would at all times have sufficient fuel, and the money that is spent on fuel would be kept from going into foreign countries. I believe that if this question were taken up by the Government along some such lines as Mr. Butler has laid down—which is practically the same as the idea I had in mind—some conclusion could be arrived at with the railways, so that we could use our own Canadian coal from Nova Scotia in the East and Alberta in the West in the other two provinces that I have mentioned. I have no objection to a committee. I should be glad to see a committee appointed if they can do anything towards solving this question. However, I believe that every honourable gentleman in this House is satisfied that we have at least in Nova Scotia coal that is suitable in any part of Canada for fuel, either for manufacturing or, in case of famine or shortage, for household purposes. Similarly we have coal in the West, although I have understood that the coal of the West would be apt to crumble and would not keep as long as the Nova Scotia coal. If the western coal were coming along in trainloads from time to time, however, there would be no difficulty in that respect.

If this committee is formed I would like to see it try in some way to find out how we can get coal hauled from Alberta to Ontario, and from Nova Scotia to Quebec and Ontario, at a much lower cost of transportation. Here is the difficulty. In shipping, for instance, from Nova Scotia to Quebec or Ontario you have a tremendously long haul, and, owing to the extra charges, the cost of operation, etc., it is not possible to bring coal of that grade to Ontario or Quebec and sell it at a price at which it could compete, or at a price at which many people could use it. The same difficulty applies in the West. The long haul from Winnipeg to Sudbury would make the cost of transporting the coal so high that many of the poor people, at least, could not use it. I therefore urge that the Government take up this matter on lines such as I have suggested. I ask that this committee, if it is appointed, will see if something cannot be done in that way. The honourable member (Hon. Mr. McLennan) is of course right in saying that something should be done to educate the people to use this coal, but I am quite satisfied that if we can get the coal here at a price at which it can be used, there will be no trouble: those who want to use it will find a way of doing so without much education.

Honourable gentlemen, I thank you for listening to these few remarks. Having dealt with this matter before, and being so much interested in the province of Ontario, I felt the question to be of such importance that I could not let the opportunity pass without making these observations.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do I understand from the honourable gentleman that the railways, the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific, are not at present equipped to carry on that trade?

Hon. Mr. REID: Yes. I would like the House to understand that in my judgment the railways to-day have not sufficient equipment—or cars, if you like—to haul coal from those extreme points. They have sufficient equipment to make short hauls, but not sufficient, in my judgment for the hauling of coal from Alberta or Nova Scotia to Ontario and Quebec; and I would not feel like urging the railways to spend $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 on equipment in order to transport that coal at cost. If they furnished the equipment, and if coal were placed on the same basis as other commodities by the Board of Railway Commissioners it would certainly put the railways in a very unfair position to ask them to haul coal at a much lower rate than they would be entitled to. If the railways furnished the cars and equipped and operated them, they would have to accept whatever rate the Board of Railway Commissioners fixed, which must be on the same basis as the rates for other commodities. Special favour could not be extended to coal. Therefore, I say that, as the railways have at present only sufficient equipment for local purposes, the additional equipment required should be furnished by the Government to both railways and they should be put on an equal basis to bring the coal from the West and the East.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask the honourable gentleman just one question? He has been for a long time Minister of Railways. If a ton of coal can be carried as cheaply as he says for that distance—there are 1,350 miles between Winnipeg and Quebec—it should cost very few cents a bushel to carry wheat from Winnipeg to Quebec.

Hon. Mr. REID: When I spoke the idea I had in mind was that the city of Quebec would be supplied with coal from Nova Scotia, not from Alberta.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is wheat I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. REID: I might add, in so far as transportation is concerned—

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: It would be much cheaper by the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. REID: I was going to say that in the summertime the coal could be transported by vessels. But I desire to point out to honourable gentlemen that coal has been brought from the United States to Quebec more cheaply than it could be from Nova Scotia, owing to the very long haul.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: May I ask the honourable gentleman, the late Minister of Railways, if his suggestion could not be carried out on the National Transcontinental line, which the people own, without interfering with the regular freight rates at all?

Hon. Mr. REID: Yes, it could be done entirely by the Government, without asking the Canadian Pacific Railway to take part. I do not think the Canadian Pacific would object to doing it. I believe they would prefer taking part, for this reason, that many of the coal mines and many of the industries are on their lines, and my impression is that they would like to keep in touch with those mines and industries. If, on the other hand, they said they did not want to have anything to do with it, then I would say, let the Canadian National railways do it at cost. It would not put the National railways in any worse position than they are to-day, because they would be repaid the actual cost of operation.

Hon. LORNE C. WEBSTER: Honourable gentlemen, judging by the very forceful remarks which have been made by the previous speakers, I am sure it will be admitted that the question of the fuel supply of Canada deserves our best consideration and our earnest investigation. The fuel question has been both a live and a burning subject for many centuries.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: No doubt it is a burning question.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: If we go back to the ninth century we shall find that controversy on this subject was rife at that time. In the reign of Edward I, in 1305, laws were enacted to prevent the burning of soft coal in the city of London. It may be of interest to some members of this honourable House to hear that in the time of Elizabeth, such was her consideration for the members of Parliament that when Parliament assembled the use of soft coal in London was forbidden, that the air might not be contaminated and affect the health of the members from the country, who were accustomed to breathe the pure air of heaven.

Great Britain to-day possesses the largest and most valuable coal areas in Europe and controls the coal business of Europe and other parts of the world. Her manufacturing and export trade has depended largely upon her coal mining, and her present supremacy is due to those wonderful coal areas which she possesses. The wealth of Canada—in fact, the wealth of any country—depends upon what lies in her ground. Coal is one of our most valuable minerals. Therefore, honourable gentlemen, I think it is quite appropriate that we should consider carefully the fuel supply as it affects our Dominion.

What is the position in Canada to-day? We have tremendous coal fields, not only along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, but also in our middle northwest, and we are in an advantageous position on the Atlantic and the Pacific to do a large exporting trade. Our mines are so situated that there is practically no haul to the seaboard. That is in contrast with the fact that our friends to the south have to haul their bituminous coal hundreds of miles from the Pittsburg district to their seaboard.

Of discovered and available coal Canada has the tremendous quantity of 1,235,000,000,000 metric tons. Alberta is said to contain 1,070,000,000,000 tons; and in Nova Scotia the quantity, according to the figures given me, is 10,000,000,000 tons. There is practically no coal of any commercial value in either Ontario or Quebec.

The consumption in Canada amounts to about 5,000,000 tons of anthracite coal, which we import largely from the United States; and our consumption of bituminous coal is in the vicinity of 25,000,000 tons. Yet we mine practically no anthracite coal. We produce about 12,000,000 tons of soft coal and import the other 13,000,000 from our neighbours to the south.

The success of our export trade depends on the cost of our manufactured articles; and two items enter very largely into this cost, namely, labour and fuel. If Canada is to take her place as an exporting country we certainly should have cheap fuel. Our railway and other transportation systems and our manufacturers all require cheap fuel. Our fuel should not be twice as dear as the fuel which is used in manufacturing in the republic to the south. Our freight rates are affected by the cost of fuel, because fuel enters very largely into the cost of transportation.

Turning for a few minutes to the question of domestic coal, we find that in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec American-made furnaces have been installed for the heating of our houses, and if we consider only comfort, ease, and luxury, this style of furnace requires the use of a certain kind of fuel. That is largely American anthracite coal. This coal carries 85 to 95 per cent of carbon as compared with 50 to 75 per cent of carbon contained in bituminous coal. There is therefore, I think, an opening for a thorough investigation into the facts and into the possibility of using our soft coals for household purposes.

We are told that the carbonizing of lignite has been a success in Saskatchewan. I trust this report is true, because if it is, we may have solved one of the problems of using our Canadian coals for domestic heating purposes.

Our Maritime coal, especialy that from the province of Nova Scotia, can produce coke of a satisfactory nature, and this has already been tested and has been found to be suitable for domestic purposes.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: How does coke compare with anthracite coal?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: In what way?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Regarding the practicability of using it for domestic purposes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: About 75 per cent.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: There are certain disadvantages to it, but they may be overcome, and an investigation as to the economy and the cost and value of using coke manufactured from our own Canadian coal may assist us greatly; and such an investigation may also help us to improve this fuel.

As has already been mentioned, Welsh coal can be imported in reasonable quantities during the season of navigation. Last season a large quantity was imported, not only into Quebec and Montreal, but also into cities in Ontario. When it has been properly prepared and screened and delivered like American anthracite coal, it has been found equal and in many cases superior to the American anthracite, upon which we have depended so largely in the past.

As the members of this House are probably aware, the United States Coal Commission some time ago held an investigation into the conditions of the United States fuel supply, and I have before me an extract from their preliminary report, which reads in part as follows:

> The Commission has discovered that labour troubles, transportation difficulties, and overdevelopment of the mining industry are primary causes of the present very unsatisfactory condition of affairs.

That is, in the United States.

> Some of the facts which it presents have already been published, but they are worth remembering. The industry is capitalized at $2,330,000,000, of which $430,000,000 is in anthracite mines, and the rest in bituminous. There are at least 6,000 producers of bituminous coal. About 180 railways handle this coal, and there are 90,000 buyers of carload lots. The combined charges of the railway, the wholesaler, and the retailer in most localities exceed the price of the coal at the mines. There are more mines and miners than can be profitably used. The largest annual consumption—

I take it that this applies to the United States—

—of bituminous coal was 579,000,000 tons and the present capacity is 800,000,000 tons. In 1921 it took 663,000 mine workers to produce 416,000,000 tons, while in 1910, 556,000 miners produced 417,000,000 tons. But in 1921 the whole working year of the miner was 149 days, while in 1890 he worked 213 days. The operators blame the miners for not working, but the miners declare that the operators themselves are to blame.

And so it is a case of fifty-fifty.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Too many miners.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Too many miners is suggested. One method by which more anthracite could be expected from our neighbours to the south would be for our Government to grant licenses for a term of years to responsible parties to encourage the investment of large amounts of capital necessary for the development and exportation of electric power. We have only so far developed something like 2,500,000 horse-power of electricity, and the supply is unlimited. We have millions of horse-power going to waste—undeveloped electric energy which could be used for practical and business purposes.

It is possible, and good business, for us to consider exporting say 500,000 horse-power annually and to expect in return—as we would certainly have a right to expect—to obtain, if necessary, 5,000,000 tons of American anthracite per annum to keep the people of Canada provided with their winter fuel. This figures out at a proportion of about ten to one. For even 200,000 horse-power we might reasonably expect 2,000,000 tons of American anthracite. Our American friends have played the game and have treated us fairly during the last six months, giving Canada her fair proportion of anthracite coal. Should we so export our electricity, we can be assured of every consideration from those taking our power, and of their assistance in regard to securing our requirements of anthracite coal.

Our water-powers are well situated. We have large surpluses going to waste every year, equivalent to many tons of coal in value. British Columbia and Nova Scotia are provided for by their extensive coal fields, while we in Ontario and Quebec have similar protection in the electrical energy that is passing our doors every day. I cannot think of our natural position being adversely affected by such wholesale exporting of electrical power. In this connection I wish to draw the attention of honourable members to an editorial in the Montreal Gazette of February 28, part of which with your permission I will read:

The situation is simple. It is as legitimate for a Canadian producer of electric current to supply a demand from the United States as it is for the producer of wheat or lumber or asbestos, or anything else, to sell his goods in the same market. To act on any other theory and put restrictions in the way would be to interfere with a proper development of commerce and restrict business without justification. There are sections of Canada wherein the local demand for electric power exceeds the capacity of the development plants, as there are sections where, unless an export demand existed, the plants could not be operated at their capacity and their water power would be running to waste. The lack in one case is not the result of the export of power in the other, but usually of geographical situation. To stop the export at Niagara or Fort Frances would not help those in central Ontario who would use more if they had it. If it were advisable to interefere by law with such a situation, no general prohibition would be advisable. Each region would have to be dealt with according to its peculiar circumstances. Embargoes as restrictions on freedom of commerce are almost essentially mischievous. The war time produced many of them. They were generally submitted to as having some good object in view, though evil in themselves and the product of greater evil conditions. No wise merchant or manufacturer would desire their establishment. Merchants and producers generally know that the wider the markets they have for their goods the better for them; and embargoes restrict markets. The general argument must be against them. The special argument advanced by Dr. Deslauriers was not sufficient. The United States has been suffering all winter from a restricted coal supply. The Government at Washington knew what the facts were, and took measures to distribute available fuel, so as to reduce the general inconvenience and prevent one section from suffering while another had abundance or more. Canadian dealers were treated on the same footing as those of the United States. There was a continuous movement over the border of anthracite, and the people of Montreal did not suffer more than those of northern New York. Such a national neighbor is not one to threaten. There may arise occasion for Government interference with the distribution of electric power generated in Canada. It will be in the nature of an emergency, however, and should cease with the emergency. Though the House of Commons did not divide on the issue raised by the resolution, the effect of what was said was to put the idea into the background, where it should stay.

Meantime, honourable gentlemen, I think we should impress upon our Canadian people the great importance of using our own Canadian fuel. Anything that will tend to the development of our coal areas, and insure an adequate supply of both bituminous and anthracite coal for the people of this Dominion should engage the careful and close attention and consideration of this House.

I have very much pleasure in associating myself with the motion as presented to us this afternoon by the honourable member from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. McLennan); but I would suggest that he kindly name someone else in my place, for various reasons, one of which is that I am closely associated with the coal trade of this country, and I would not wish my position to be misunderstood in any way were I to act upon the committee.

Hon. WM. ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, my apology for offering an observation or two at the present stage is that I have been actively engaged in the coal business for the past fifty years, and I have witnessed with closest attention the transitions that have been made in that business during that period. I remember distinctly when sailing vessels from England brought coal to Quebec and discharged it at the wharves there at the price at which coal was sold in England. They brought out the coal for ballast. In this discussion general terms have been used in place of specific terms: for instance, honourable gentlemen speak of anthracite coal, of bituminous coal, and of coal. Well, there are various grades and values of coal, and they are used for different purposes: hence to speak of coal generally is not to give an exact expression of the value of the article, or to bring the quality of the article to bear upon the question of economy. I heard a reference to English coal. Well, they have all kinds of coal in England, from the lowest quality to bituminous and steam coal of the very best quality. For instance, in South Wales they have the best quality of steam coal, and other coals which are about fhe best steam raisers for steamboats and other purposes in the world. Newcastle also has some of the best domestic soft coal, which is used very largely in London.

The price of labour is a very important ingredient in the production of coal, and the price at which it can be sold. For instance, in the north of England, where they work some small seams of coal, a year or two before the war all that the labourers got for toiling in the most exhaustive manner was seventeen shillings a week. I would like to know how that would apply generally to the labourers in Cape Breton or in Pennsylvania.

The honourable gentleman who made the motion for the committee referred to the displacement of Nova Scotian coal in the markets of Montreal and Quebec for manufacturing purposes by the debris of American anthracite.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: American bituminous coal.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: American anthracite also.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: No.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: I beg pardon. I was quite familiar with the fact that what would be called waste with us in the coal was used with slack bituminous coal to make the kind of fuel that could be used by manufacturers, which displaced the Cape Breton coal, with which my honourable friend is very familiar. The output of coal and the transportation of coal from Cape Breton to those two places were very much diminished, and to a considerable extent the falling off could be accounted for by labour conditions.

For transport by water there are no facilities that I know of in the United States or anywhere else that can compete with the water transportation from Cape Breton to Montreal or to any other place where rapid transfer of coal from the vessel to the receptacle can be had. I know of no transportation which is so economical as that by water. I believe the Dominion Coal Company four or five years ago agreed with the Everett Gas Company in Boston to supply the waste coal, as we may call it, the slack coal, at the rate of $1.50 per ton for coal and freight. Of course, this strike of the miners and other circumstances have altogether disturbed the sale of that article, and I think the company was very happy to be rid of the contract on the close of the war.

Honourable gentlemen speak of anthracite coal for domestic use, there is anthracite coal of chesnut, stove, egg and other sizes, which are high-priced, but there are other qualities of anthracite at very small prices indeed, which can be utilized for manufacturing purposes, which would interfere with the sale of Nova Scotian coal.

There are mines in Nova Scotia, and there are possibilities in mines undeveloped, which would afford sufficient coal for the whole of eastern Canada. In this connection let me point out that the mode of transport suggested by the former Minister of Railways consisted of coal being carried in one direction without any return freight to reduce the cost, so that the rate on the coal would be too high. But coal from Nova Scotia would have this advantage, that if grain were transported from the West to Halifax, St. John, or other ports on the seaboard, the same cars could be utilized to return coal to any points where it could be consumed and thus cut in half the cost of transport. That was a consideration which did not occur, I think, to the honourable Minister of Railways. I was gratified to hear him say that he had taken advantage of his knowledge and position to endeavor to solve that problem, and it could be solved in that way—that to all places within an economic radius of Nova Scotia coal for domestic and manufacturing purposes could be supplied from that province at a lower rate than from the United States, if that mode of transportation were adopted.

Let me add that the whole of the shortage, the whole of what might be termed the embargo, on this necessary article of fuel, arose entirely from the labourers refusing to work. The same thing occurred in Cape Breton. There was no natural shortage, no inadequate supply of coal in the earth, but those who were operating the mines simply would not work and produce the article. The whole situation might be largely modified, or the whole question solved, if there were a sufficient supply of moderate-priced labour. About 30 years ago I bought the best quality of anthracite coal for domestic purposes at $2.50 a ton. The other day I paid for a cargo of the same kind of coal, perhaps not so good, $10 a ton. That shows the immense advance in the cost of labour, for I do not think the cost of transportation is greater by more than 25 per cent. Honourable gentlemen will thus see that cost of labour has been the main element in the price of fuel. But that does not affect the practical question of transport of the article. If you had a sufficient quantity of that article so essential to us, means could be found for its transportation. The coal of Nova Scotia is as good for domestic purposes as the bituminous coal of the United States. The anthracite coal is different in the length of time it burns.

Something has been said about English coal. English coal, some of it, is of very excellent quality; some is of very poor quality. There is anthracite coal which is of very high grade and burns as well but not quite so long as the American anthracite coal for domestic purposes. But the cost of that coal is very high, and the cost of transport would also be very high. To say that anthracite coal can be purchased at a very low rate does not solve the question at all, because there is coal of low quality and coal of high quality. I think the solution so far as Eastern Canada is concerned depends on the fact that wheat and other goods can be transported to the East and coal and other articles can be brought back, the two freights reducing the price of coal, so that it would be available for domestic use in every city within the radius of the service of the railway.

That the coal trade is in a transition stage everybody admits. That a great improvement will be made in future, both in transportation and in facility of handling, is what practical experience would suggest. But, in addition to that, the reduction of the cost of transport by rail will solve the whole question, because there are many mines in Nova Scotia on the line of the railway that could supply coal at a less rate than that on coal from the United States, and thus the railways would be assisted, the coal industry would be advantaged, and the whole people of Canada would be benefitted by a good fuel at a cheap cost, which would be all they require.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, having had some oportunity and inclination during the past few years to look a little into the coal problem, may I add just a few words to the debate? Let me say first that Canada has all the coal necessary for domestic consumption, and can, if the requirement arises, transport it to any populated part of this country at prices not exceeding those now prevailing. But there is no continuity of market guaranteed, and it is possible, were arrangements made to transport Canadian coal to the markets of Ontario and Quebec, that competition would quickly reveal the fact that outside prices would be cut and the capital involved and invested in making these arrangements would find itself in difficulties.

Our main concern, and that, I think, of the people of Canada, is first, what are our requirements? What is the necessity of affording some relief to the Canadian people? I, perhaps, am prone to view this question from the standpoint of the ordinary workingman, who must of necessity burn coal, as must every other resident of the country. The statistics issued by the Department of Labour show that, in 1914 the cost of fuel per week for an average family of five was $1.90, and that in January, 1923, it was $3.61 for the same quantity and quality of fuel. This means that there has been a very substantial increase in cost—something like $1.71 per ton. Put into dollars and cents at present prices it means that the increased cost of fuel to the ordinary workingman in Canada is approximately $8 per month more than was the cost in 1914.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Have you the cost of the mining during those two periods?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No. A remark was made by a previous speaker to the effect that the increased cost of coal was due, in his opinion, almost exclusively to the increased cost of labour. I desire to point out a few pertinent facts having a bearing on that observation. Specific mention was made of the Cape Breton coal fields. I remember very well participating in an investigation in January of 1918, wherein it was claimed that the production of coal per man per day was less than it had been in 1914. The investigation revealed the fact that the number of men actually engaged in the cutting of coal below ground, the actual producers of coal, was cut almost in half. Those men were the cream of the country so far as physical fitness was concerned, and a very substantial proportion of them had come out of the mines and laid down their shovels and picked up their guns, and had gone overseas; and the employers had not been able to replace them in the mines. the number of men engaged in hoisting the coal and above ground remained stationary, while the number cutting the coal was reduced by about fifty per cent. The result was that when they were grouped togther the output per man per day was slightly decreased. When these facts were brought to the attention of the employers, they readily admitted that when you divided the number of tons of coal produced by the number engaged in that work, they were producing seven-tenths of a ton per day more per man in January, 1918, than had been the case in 1914. I therefore submit that it is not fair to indicate to this House or to the country that the coal miners have wilfully attempted to decrease production. Under provocation, in times of dispute with their employers, that may have been done in some instances; but it has not been the general practice.

Now, as to the increase in wages of coal miners. It has been stated, I think, by my honourable friend from Stadacona (Hon. L. C. Webster), that the miners in the United States had the opportunity to work or did work 147 days in the year. I believe that to be the fact. I know that Mr. John L. Lewis, President of the United Mine Workers, only a year ago, when a dispute was pending with the employers over there, offered to accept the proposed reduction in wages which employers asked for if they would guarantee to the men an opportunity to work 240 days in the year. The situation at that time, as I understood it, was that the number of days that men worked, or had the opportunity to work, mark you, was 187. The honourable member from Stadacona quotes 147. Accepting these figures, on the basis of $7 per day their earnings would be only $1,029 for the year, or less than $100 a month, which we all recognize is not a living wage. So it was impossible for the miners to accept a reduction in their compensation unless they had some guarantee of continuity of employment.

Therein lies one of the difficulties in the coal problem in Canada. During the war the Government of Canada exercised control over the production and selling price of coal as well as over the wages paid to the miners in what is known as District No. 18, in the province of Alberta. In the year 1916, by mutual consent, the Western coal operators and the miners sat down together with the representative of the Department of Labour, and agreed upon what would be a right and fair basis of compensation in relation to the existing cost of living. That basis having been reached, it was agreed to be right and fair that whatever might be the increase or decrease in the cost of living, a corresponding decrease or increase in wages should be granted and a corresponding decrease or increase in the selling price of coal should be established. The Director of Coal Operations, in the person of a gentleman from British Columbia, whom both parties agreed to as a fit and proper person to undertake the responsibility, did undertake it; and for four years he carried on with great satisfaction to both the workmen and the employers; and the basis struck in 1916 was maintained, notwithstanding the fact that wages and the selling price of coal from time to time increased as authorized by the Director. Yet the relationship between the cost of living and wages was maintained. Now, here is the point. It has been charged, and held by many that the wages paid were very high. A year ago an attempt was made to readjust the agreement, because the old one had expired, and what were the facts revealed? They were these. Prior to 1920—I am not prepared to give definite figures since that date—the production in Alberta was four and a half million tons. The capacity of production was twelve and a half million tons, which meant that the men were unable to obtain employment for more than four or five months in the year. There are many factors entering into that. Much of the coal mined in the province of Alberta is lignite, and it is therefore somewhat difficult to stock it. Furthermore the inhabitants of the Prairie Provinces do not stock their winter requirements during the summer months, but prefer to wait until their wheat is marketed. The result is that the transportation companies are put to their wits end to supply equipment to handle coal and grain at the same time. If means could be found whereby transportation of the five or six million tons of coal annually mined in Western Canada could be spread over the whole twelve months, I venture the statement that there would be no difficulty in obtaining a reduction in wages. I furthermore hold that if that could be brought about in such a way as to spread the overhead expense over a longer period, so that the mines could be worked to capacity, the cost per ton would be substantially decreased.

But there is going on in Alberta an over-development of coal mines. I can say, I think authoritatively, that about twelve years ago there were two mines in the Drumheller Valley; to-day there are twenty-eight. It does not cost much to develop a new mine there; the coal is near the surface, and mining is not costly. But some control in that direction might be exercised.

Two years ago I discussed the transportation problem with officials of the Canadian National Railway, and I know that coal can be fleeted, just as grain is fleeted to the head of the Lakes, in full trains at a very much cheaper rate per ton than it is possible to handle a full car for a short distance. Honourable gentlemen who know anything about rialroading know that the long hauls are the profitable hauls for the railroads. It is absurd, I think, to believe that the hauling of grain could be made profitable to the railroads if the length of the haul were under one hundred miles; but because the haul is one thousand miles in length and the grain is transported in full trains, they are able to handle it at a comparatively low rate, and yet at a profit to themselves. The Canadian National and the C. P. R. both have good grades west of Port Arthur from the source of supply; but east of Port Arthur the Canadian Pacific Railway cannot compete with the Canadian National railways, for the reason that the C. P. R. grades east of Port Arthur, along the shore of Lake Superior, are very heavy. I think it is correct to say that an engine that hauls 27 cars east out of Port Arthur on the Canadian Pacific railway, over the Schreiber Division, will haul 65 cars out of Port Arthur east on the Canadian National railway. It cannot, therefore, be expected that the C. P. R. could haul coal from the Prairie Provinces into Ontario as cheaply as the Canadian National railways.

I do not fully agree with the expression of opinion of the honourable the former Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Reid) with reference to the necessity of new equipment for the handling of coal, or, at least, to demonstrate the possibilities of putting coal into Eastern Canada. There will be from this time until next September thousands of empty box cars lying on the sidings of both of our great railways. In the terminals you will find scores of locomotives leaded up and put away, that will not be used until the grain traffic moves again. A substantial number of the mines, particularly in Alberta, are equipped with what is known as box-car loaders. Those box-car loaders operate mechanically, and so successfully that it is very interesting to watch them loading cars. They will load a box car just about as cheaply as a coal car can be loaded. The lignite coals which are used largely for domestic purposes in the West ought to be transported in covered cars, but if some of these box cars could be put into service, and some of the locomotives which are leaded up could be put in use to haul them, it would be possible to find out what it would cost to put coal from Drumheller into Toronto, say, by all rail—and I submit the opinion that the cost per ton would not exceed $7 and would leave a reasonable profit to the railway. If a market could be found which would enable the production of Western Canada's mines to be increased from the present capacity to full capacity, it would give full time employment to the men, and my estimate, worked out somewhat carefully two years ago, is that the cost of coal at the mine's mouth could be decreased by $1.50 a ton. If Canada could be sure that the price of American coal would be maintained at or near its present level, not a moment should be lost in putting into operation the necessary equipment and organization to bring Alberta coal into the province of Ontario—because, I hold, it can be done in competition with the prices we are now paying.

The great difficulty that I see is that we are likely to get cheaper coal from the United States—for a limited period only, but not for very long. I hope I am not digressing too much. During the war, when coal supplies in Europe were shut off—When Germany had captured the French mines and when Britain's demands were so very heavy—a tremendous exportation of coal took place from the United States and there was a great increase in the development of United States mines. When normal or nearly normal conditions were restored in Europe, when France was again putting some of her own mines into operation and got coal by way of reparation from Germany, and Britain was again producing her full requirements, the export of coal from the United States decreased. This meant that other markets had to be found.

There is to-day no scarcity of coal production in the United States. Only yesterday, just about 24 hours since. I was talking to a prominent gentleman from Connecticut, who stated that to his knowledge some mines in the United States were not operating two days a week at present, because they could not get cars. The reasons they cannot get cars are two-fold. One is that during the time that the United States railroad administration was operating all the railroads in that country the equipment was kept rolling and was not renewed, and when the roads were turned back to private management it was necessary to repair and renew equipment and to replace that which had been destroyed or worn out during the years of war.

On top of that came the machinists' strike of last year, which further crippled their power and their cars. So there are to-day, I think I am safe in saying, more than 100,000 freight cars in the United States as well as much motive power, that ought to be used and are not, because they have not yet been put in a condition to move. As soon as transportation conditions in the United States are adjusted and become something like normal, there will not be the difficulty that there is to-day in procuring coal because the mines are standing idle. Men are awaiting employment or are getting only two or three days' work a week. They are waiting for an opportunity to work more steadily.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: There may be another strike, and that will prevent it for another six months.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My honourable friend says there may be another strike. I would inform the honourable gentleman that a public statement was made only a few days ago that there would not be a strike this year—that arrangements were being made which were satisfactory to both parties concerned. In my opinion there would have been no strike last year if a guarantee of reasonable continuity of employment could have been given to the miners. I hold that that was the case in Canada. I hold further that if our organization and equipment for the transportation of fuel were such that coal could be mined and transported day by day to meet the daily requirements, a great deal of the excess price that the people are now paying and of the loss which has accrued to the mine operators themselves by reason of their inability to operate steadily, would be eliminated. The cost of coal could be reduced.

May I in closing refer to just one further point, with reference to the effect that these things have upon the daily life of our working people? I have refrained from calling attention to it often, but perhaps this is an opportune time to stop for a moment to consider the necessity of an increased wage for the men who are mining coal or are engaged in other kinds of labour in Canada. May I point out to the House that in the reports of the Labour Department issued in February, 1923, as contained in the Labour Gazette, it will be found that the cost of foodstuffs used by an average family is $12.09 per month in excess of what it was in January, 1914? For the two items of fuel and rent, according to the report of the Department of Labour, the cost in the month of January, 1923, as compared with January, 1914, is $16.81 greater. The Department of Labour has always estimated that the items of fuel, rent and food constituted 65 per cent of the cost of living of the average family, 35 per cent representing all other expenditures. Thirty-five per cent of the cost of the items that I have named would be $10.09.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I have often wondered how the Department arrives at the average rent. I know of many places where the rent was different.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I shall be glad to explain that, if my honourable friend will allow me to continue for one moment. Thirty-five per cent of the cost of the items to which I have referred would be $10.09. The total increase in living cost to the average workman's family in January, 1923, as compared with January, 1914, is $38.99.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Will the honourable gentleman tell us, if he has the figures, how that compares with last year?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: The figure for January 1923 was $21.18 per week, and the figure for January 1922 was $21.52 per week. There has been a decrease of 35 cents per week.

The honourable member from Nipissing (Hon. Mr. Gordon) asks how the figures of the Department of Labour are arrived at. The Department has 64 correspondents, located in 64 different parts of the country most of them being centres of over 10,000 population, and information as to prices is gathered regularly from the same sources. It is therefore a fair basis of comparison as to facts. Some criticism has been offered from time to time because the Department's estimate omits a number of things that enter into the household expenditure of the ordinary family. The reason for adhering to the articles enumerated by the Department at the outset, in 1900, is that comparison would be useless if you interjected into the budget articles that have not been included in it in the past.

A special and exhaustive inquiry into the important question of rents was made in the year 1921. Rent and the cost of fuel have a particular relation to each other. Only two weeks ago I was present at a meeting of railroad men in the city of Montreal, at which they protested vehemently against certain conditions, stating that they were then paying a cent and a quarter a pound for coal in Montreal and could not get more than 200 pounds at a time, and they had just received notices that on the 1st of May their rents were to go up $1 a month. Now, rents advance as the landlord sees his expenses increasing, especially in the case of an apartment, which the landlord has to heat and for which he may have to buy 100 or 200 tons of coal. If the price of coal increases $2 or $3 a ton, up go the rents in proportion. So, even the tenant who does not buy coal, because he lives in an apartment, has to pay for the heating of his home just the same.

There is, in my opinion, honourable gentlemen, no question to which this House can more fittingly or with greater profit give detailed attention than this very matter. I sincerely hope that the motion of the honourable member from Sydney (Hon. Mr. McLennan) for the appointment of a committee will be accepted and that this committee may make an exhaustive inquiry into the whole matter and obtain information from all classes in the country who are in any way interested, whether they produce coal, or sell it, or transport it, or burn it, and I feel sure that such an inquiry cannot fail to be of distinct advantage and benefit to our country.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the name of the Hon. Mr. Webster of Stadacona be withdrawn from the names of the committee, and the name of Hon. Mr. L'Espérance be substituted in place thereof?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Honourable gentlemen, I have no objection to the name that was last mentioned, but as one member of the Senate I have a decided objection to the name of the honourable member for Stadacona going off. The reason that he gave why he might be omitted from the committee is to my mind the very best reason why he should remain a member. Surely the man who knows a great deal about the coal business, the transportation of coal, and the burning of coal, is in a better position to be useful in a committee of this kind than a person who does not know so much about such matters.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: We will retain him.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: For my own part I should be very sorry to have the honourable member's name left off, provided he has no absolute objection to devoting his time to it. His excuse as to why he should be left off is, to my mind, not a good one.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: May I ask the mover of the motion if he would not allow it to stand over for a day? I think it would be right to have some Alberta men and probably some Nova Scotia men on it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: You have an Alberta man on it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: Then to have a Nova Scotia man on. I think the committee might be somewhat enlarged.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You can add to it at any time.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: I may say, honourable gentlemen, in answer to the question, that my reason for suggesting a small committee was that in other matters I have found a small committee to work more easily than a larger one. I have no objection to enlarging the committee at the suggestion of the House.

While I am speaking I should like to explain why I acquiesced in the wish of the honourable member from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Webster) to have another name substituted for his. There is no one who knows the coal trade better than the honourable gentleman; but he promised that his information and advice would be just as fully available if he were not on the committee as if he were. I therefore complied with his request and suggested the other honourable gentleman.

The motion for the appointment of the committee was agreed to.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Do I understand that the honourable member from Stadacona wishes to resign from the committee?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: No; if it is the wish of the honourable members present, I shall be glad to serve on the committee.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Then the committee will be Hon. Messrs. Hardy, De Veber, Laird, Webster (Stadacona), and the mover.

C. N. R. ATLANTIC REGION

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

1. Are Rivière du Loup and Monk the points fixed as western limits of the Atlantic division of the Canadian National Railways?
2. For what reasons are they fixed as the western limits?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. Yes.
2. That part of the Canadian National Railway System which serves the Maritime Provinces is considered by the Management to require close and concentrated attention, in order that the railway may more adequately meet the requirements of the public than has been the case in the past, and also in order that nothing be left undone to promote development and increase traffic. It was felt that if satisfactory results are to be obtained, that part of the property in question should be under the direction not only of competent officers who enjoy the confidence of the public, but also that those officers should devote themselves unreservedly and continuously to their work. For these reasons it was the desire of the directors of the Canadian National Railways that, for the time being at least, the officers of the Atlantic Region should not be burdened with too much territory. They point out that the dividing line could not be drawn at Quebec, because in good railway practice it is always disadvantageous to split operating regions in the centre of a terminal. The same thing applies to Montreal. Furthermore, it is claimed there is no point between Quebec and Montreal at which a line could be drawn without seriously disturbing the General Superintendents' operating districts. It is said that a division might have been made at Brockville, but that this would put too much mileage in the Atlantic Region; and, furthermore, it is considered to be highly important that this main artery from Quebec, through Montreal, Toronto and Detroit, to Chicago, should remain under one General Manager. Since it was considered to be impracticable from the point of view of efficiency and the welfare of the property to divide the Atlantic and Central Regions at Quebec or any point west thereof, the only other points which could be selected were Rivière du Loup and Monk.

ALBERTA COAL DEPOSIT

DOMINION LANDS (COAL) BILL INTRODUCED

The Senate resumed from March 7 the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pope:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the importance of what is known as the Hoppe coal deposit in Alberta, and will inquire of the Government the present position thereof.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, the honourable Senator for Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) prefaced his inquiry of the Government as to the present situation of the claims in the Smoky and Muskeg River district with a general dissertation upon the situation of the farmers in the Peace River district. He painted quite a gloomy picture of that region, showing that the high cost of transportation prevented profitable farming. I have heard before of the situation of the farmers in that district, and I realize that they have had considerable difficulty owing to the very long haul in carrying their products to market. The honourable gentleman has suggested that these people should be afforded the opportunity to ship their produce to the Pacific coast, and that that could be easily accomplished by the building of a line from Grande Prairie to Brulé Station on the Canadian Northern, a distance, by the direct route, of some 138 miles, or, if it extended to the Smoky and Muskeg River coal fields, a distance of 151 miles.

There is no doubt that the construction of the line proposed would benefit that district. Judging from the map, it seems to be quite reasonable to suppose that some day such a line will be built. The honourable gentleman has told us that the cost of constructing such a line would be some four millions of dollars. I am told that the district through which the 151 miles of railway would run is quite mountainous and not desirable for agricultural purposes.

Referring to the possibility of favouring that region with a railway line, I may remind the honourable gentlemen of the present conditions of our finances, more especially in connection with the railway situation. In addition to that, there is a preliminary difficulty which would have to be overcome in some way. The fact is that the Dunvegan railroad is at present leased to the C.P.R. under a five-year lease which will expire in two or three years, and I surmise that if the Canadian National railways undertook the building of this line they would ask to be put in the place of the C.P.R. in operating the Dunvegan railway, because the proposed line would meet the C.P.R. at Grand Prairie, where its interest would be to divert the freight over its own line towards Edmonton. However, there will be plenty of time to meet that contingency, because I do not suppose that there is any great hope of this railway being constructed before the expiration of the lease to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The honourable gentleman has indicated the benefits that would accrue from the building of that line, not only to the district through which it would run, but to the public generally by reason of its reaching the coal area known as the Hoppe leases. If the latter consideration were the principal inducement for building the line, I would not, with the information which I have at present, be in favour of incurring such an expenditure, because I am informed that there are at present in Alberta, along our lines of railway, ample coal mines to supply the market with quite as good coal as is to be found in the area which is now occupying our attention. I have been told by officials of the Department that it is estimated that there are to-day in that province some 300 mines in operation, 10 or 12 of which could probably produce all the coal for which there is a market at present, and that under existing conditions the market could hardly absorb more than 6,000,000 tons, whereas the mines are equipped to produce some 15,000,000 tons. The Drumheller coal is used for domestic purposes, as well as lignite coal, of which there is a large body around Lethbridge and in the Brazeau Pass. As most honourable gentlemen know, Drumheller is 65 miles east of Calgary. It is stated by people whose business it is to watch over the production of those mines, that there are to-day sufficient mines along the railways to supply the market for many years to come.

My honourable friend has spoken of Brulé as a point at which the proposed railway should link up with the Canadian National Railway. There are now mines at Brulé which are producing from 500 to 600 tons of soft coal a day. The company operating those mines has, I am informed, leases of coal areas some 40 miles north of Brulé station along the line proposed for this railway, and these areas are reckoned to be as good as the Smoky and Muskeg River deposits. This company speaks of building a line in that direction. There is also a deposit of semi-anthracite coal of as high a grade as that found in the Smoky and Muskeg River deposits, some 45 miles west of High River and some 85 miles southwest of Calgary. This property belong to Mr. Pat Burns and others. There is good agricultural land in the vicinity, and a railway built in that direction from Calgary at a cost of less than $2,000,000 would open up a fertile country. If the Government were appealed to for assistance for the building of this railway, it could justly answer that our present financial situation would not justify it, and that there are already plenty of mines along the existing railways to meet the demands of the Canadian markets. It is quite apparent that the market cannot absorb all the coal that is at present being mined in the Alberta mines. Those mines do not operate for more than six months of the year, and the high cost of production, is, I suppose, as the ex-Minister of Labour told us yesterday, due to the fact that, although the miners work but three days a week, they want to be paid a sufficiently high wage to enable them to live six days, which means that the country is obliged to support double the number of men engaged in that occupation that would be required if they were working every day. The consequence is that the railways are obliged to pay double what they used to pay for coal, and the people in turn are obliged to pay a higher rate for transportation.

It was suggested yesterday that the members of this House, as well as the members of the other House, should give their views as to a solution of the transportation problem, which is so intimately linked with the fuel problem. The suggestion which I am about to make does not originate with me, although I have felt that some investigation should be made along this line. It is that the Board of Railway Commissionners and the railway companies should consider the fixing of a seasonal rate on coal. During six months of the year the railways have a surplus of freight cars and are hardly working 40 per cent of their capacity. During those six months prior to the moving of the crop, could they not keep the mines working at 100 per cent of their capacity by transporting coal? At the present time coal comes as far east as Winnipeg from the Drumheller mines, and even from the Crow's Nest and the Brazeau Pass mines. Could not an effort be made to solve the problem of bringing that coal by rail as far as Fort William? Here is a question which it seems to me might well be studied by the new railway administration, and by the committee which has been asked for by my honourable friend from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. McLennan). Drumheller lignite sells in Winnipeg to-day at $13.50 a ton; American anthracite sells at $22 a ton.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: $22.50.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Last week an offer was made to deliver Drumheller coal in Ottawa at $18.40 a ton.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman a question. What is the carbon content of that lignite? And how long would it keep under ordinary circumstances?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not suppose it would keep as long as anthracite coal; but the coal brought in during the summer would, I am informed, keep for winter use.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Does the honourable gentleman know the carbon content of the lignite as compared with anthracite?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I have not that information before me.

I am told that the freight on the Drumheller coal offered in Ottawa at $18.40 would amount to $12.70. The price of American anthracite in Ottawa is $17.50. Of course I realize that one of the difficulties is the fact that the cars return to the West empty, the cost of which must be added to the freight one way.

I now come to the question which is on the Order Paper. The following memorandum has been put into my hands by the Department:

The following would appear to be the coal mining leases to which Mr. Pope refers:

Lease	Date of Issue
760	15th May, 1912
761	15th May, 1912
762	15th May, 1912
763	15th May, 1912
764	15th May, 1912
765	15th May, 1912
782	22nd June, 1912

These leases were transferred to the late Paul R. Isenberg, and were cancelled in the records of the Department on the 1st August, 1918, owing to the recorded owner thereof having failed to make payment of the rental due.

Leases were subsequently issued, comprising the coal mining rights in practically the same areas, and these leases were cancelled by Order in Council dated the 1st July, 1919, P.C. 1369, a printed copy of which is hereto attached, and the rights described in these several leases were reserved to the Crown.

By an Order in Council dated the 6th October, 1919, P.C. 2044, a printed copy of which is also attached, the coal mining rights, the property of the Crown in Townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, Ranges 7, 8 and 9 west of the 6th Meridian, comprising the coal deposit at the junction of the Muskeg and Smoky Rivers, and including the locations which were at one time leased to the late Mr. Isenberg, were withdrawn from disposal under the provisions of the Coal Mining Regulations, and are now the property of the Crown.

A petition of right appears to have been submitted to the Minister of Justice on behalf of the estate of the late Mr. Isenberg, asking that the coal mining leases above enumerated be revived, and it is understood that a fiat has been granted the petitioners.

Respectfully submitted,

H. H. Rowatt.

Hon. Mr. BRADUBURY: Does it give the date of the fiat?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, I will give the date. This perhaps will cover the question put by the honourable gentleman; but, as there has been an Order in Council passed which some one might claim, and some one has claimed, to affect those coal areas, I will read the Order in Council, and the subsequent one which was passed qualifying this Order in Council. I find in the Official Gazette, page 3232, that on the 18th day of January last, the following Order in Council was passed:

P.C. 91—Thursday, 18th January, 1923.

Whereas by section 17 of the Coal Mining Regulations, approved by Order in Council dated the 20th April, 1910 (P.C. 729), it is provided that if during the term of the lease the lessee shall fail to pay the rental in advance for each subsequent year, at the rate of one dollar per acre per annum, within thirty days after the date upon which the same became due, the lease shall be subject to cancellation in the discretion of the Minister, and to the immediate forfeiture of all the rights granted thereunder;

And whereas a large number of coal mining leases have been cancelled in the records of the Department of the Interior, owing to non-payment of the prescibed rental, and applications have subsequently been made by the former recorded owners of such cancelled leases for permission to make payment of all arrears of rental and interest due, in order to obtain reinstatement in the rights which they formerly had to such cancelled leases;

And whereas it would appear to be advisable that a person who has incurred a considerable expenditure in connection with a coal mining location, but who has suffered the lease thereof to be cancelled through failure to comply fully with the provisions of the regulations in respect of the payment of rental, should have the right to reinstatement, provided payment is made in full of all arrears due to the Crown for rental and interest.

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, is pleased to order that section 17 of the Coal Mining Regulations, approved by Order in Council, dated the 20th April, 1910 (P.C. 729), above referred to, shall be and the same is hereby amended by adding the following thereto:

"Provided that if at any time after a lease has been cancelled through failure to pay the prescribed rental, the person in whose favour the lease stood recorded on the date of cancellation applies to the mining recorder for the district for reinstatement in the rights which he formerly had to such lease, and tenders the full amount of the rental which should have been paid to maintain the lease in good standing, with interest, such person may be reinstated in the right which he formerly had to the location sought to be reacquired or to any portion thereof, which may still be available.

Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Does that provision apply to cases in which leases have been cancelled by the Crown, or simply to cases in which they have not been cancelled?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This applies to all lands, the leases for which have been cancelled, and which are still in the possession of the Crown in part or in whole. Of course, it does not cover the cases in which the Crown has disposed of the leases, and the Order has been made for the purpose of allowing the Department to collect arrears where arrears are offered. Where the Department refuses to reinstate a lessee, its only course is to grant a lease for the future, in which case it would lose all the accumulated arrears.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Is there any limitation of time within which those men can be reinstated or can tender their rental?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has heard the Order in Council, and I have not any further information.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Is its operation retroactive?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It seems to me ridiculous to suppose that a man five or six years in arrears on a lease of coal lands would pay up all the arrears when he can re-lease the land.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But possibly he would be in danger of meeting a competitor, and he might prefer to pay the arrears, as he might have a large amount of capital invested.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: There is nothing in that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But, if the honourable gentleman will allow me, this is outside the question which is before us. He may afterwards raise any question he wishes, and I will answer it to the best of my ability.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

The Minister having been asked, after this Order was passed, if it could possibly cover the Smoky River and Muskeg area, immediately put a question before the Department of Justice, and the information of that Department was that inasmuch as the land formerly comprised in the Hoppe leases stood as a reservation by Order in Council, such rights were not available, and the Order in Council of January last did not apply. Yet the Minister felt that he should make doubly sure of his position, and some days ago he applied for an Order in Council in this matter, which was duly passed, as follows:

P.C. 423—Thurday, 8th March, 1923.

Whereas by an Order in Council dated the 6th October, 1919 (P.C. 2044) provision was made that the coal mining rights, the property of the Crown, in townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, in Ranges 7, 8 and 9 west of the 6th Initial Meridian, shall be withdrawn from disposal under the provisions of the Coal Mining Regulations established by Order in Council of the 20th April, 1910, and the amendments thereto, and shall form a coal reservation in the northern portion of the Province of Alberta;

And whereas by an Order in Council dated the 18th January, 1923 (P.C. 91) provision was made that section 17 of the Coal Mining Regulations, above referred to, be amended by adding the following thereto:

—that is the proviso I have just read—

And whereas the reservation created by Order in Council dated the 6th October, 1919, was for the public benefit, and should therefore extend as far as possible to all the lands within the townships described in the said Order;

Therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, is pleased to order that the provisions of the Order in Council of the 18th January, 1923 (P.C. 91) above quoted, providing for reinstatement, shall not apply to coal mining leases comprising any portion of townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, in ranges 7, 8 and 9 west of the 6th initial meridian, which have in the past been, or which may in the future be cancelled in the records of the Department of the Interior, owing to failure to comply fully with any of the provisions of the regulations under which such leases may have been granted.

Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What was the date of the fiat?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am just coming to that. This covers all the action of the Department of the Interior. The statement from Mr. Rowatt speaks of a fiat which has been granted by the Department of Justice. The fiat was issued on the 9th of October, 1922, and the petition of right was filed on November 14, 1922. The defence was filed on January 8, 1923. I have before me the petition of the Hawaiian Trust Company, which sued for the fiat, and I have the defence of the Department of Justice, representing His Majesty the King, which is based on all the arguments which would occur to any legal gentleman in this Chamber, and also upon the statute which we passed last year, respecting Notices of Cancellation of Leases of Dominion Lands. It will be remembered that we cured all the defects which the Privy Council had found in the preceding case which had been submitted to the courts, which defects were of a technical nature; and I would surmise that the petitioner in this case, being estopped from alleging those defects, will have to rely on some other points of law in order to succeed in this instance. I need not tell my legal colleagues in this Chamber that there are certain well-defined rules in the Department of Justice by which any aggrieved party can apply for a petition of right to sue His Majesty.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Is a petition of right always granted?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not always. This is a matter which appertains to the Department of Justice, and I will take for granted that there are principles from which they could not deviate, perhaps less in the case of strangers who apply for justice before our tribunals than in the case of our nationals, although I assume that justice is, in a sense, justice for all.

Now, this matter is as I have stated. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Pope) recalled the fact that, when I presented the Bill which has become the Act respecting Notices of Cancellation of Leases of Dominion Lands, Chapter 21, he moved an amendment providing that any contract or any form with respect to these areas, before it became valid, must obtain the sanction of Parliament. He regretted that that amendment had not been adopted. He felt that those coal areas were of such importance that he was justified in suggesting that they be reserved for the nation and disposed of only with the consent of Parliament.

I may say that at the time the amendment was proposed I did not take much exception to it; but the Department of the Interior, more especially the Minister of the Interior, felt that it was a departure which seemed to imply a lack of confidence in his administration, and he refused to accept it. Well, honourable gentlemen, since the Minister of the Interior has heard of rumours such as those which my honourable friend has mentioned in his speech, he has come to the conclusion to adopt for himself the amendment of my honourable friend, and I desire to introduce Bill E2, which will read as follows:

An Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Notwithstanding anything in the Dominion Lands Act, Chapter twenty of the Statutes of 1908, and in the amendments thereof, coal mining rights and lands containing coal, if such rights or lands are within or adjoin the coal reservation near the junction of the Muskeg and Smoky Rivers in the province of Alberta, which reservation was established by the Order in Council (P.C. 2044) dated the sixth day of October, 1919, withdrawing from disposal and the provisions of the regulations then in force certain coal mining rights which are the property of the Crown in Townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, Ranges 7, 8 and 9, west of the Sixth initial meridian, shall not be sold, leased or otherwise disposed of except under the authority of and in accordance with the provisions of any Act of the Parliament of Canada hereafter passed and specifically relating to such rights or lands and to the sale, lease or other disposition thereof.

The Minister of the Interior had the conviction last year that within a few months all these properties would revert to the province of Alberta. He finds that that province is not disposed to accept the terms proposed for the transfer of the natural resources within its boundaries, and he has to continue to administer these properties. He knows the responsibility of his trust, and he knows that those lands, with a number of others, are such as in the interest of Canada could very well be preserved for some time to come, since we have hundreds of mines which are opened and fully equipped, but which work only at fifty per cent of their capacity, and he has no objection whatever to place this area, as well as some other properties, under the sanction and final disposal of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Will the honourable gentleman permit me a question just there? A fiat is issued and this Government is waiting for the trial. What effect will this Bill, just introduced, have on that fiat?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will mean that no title to these lands will be given by the Department without the sanction of this Parliament. The situation remains just the same as it would have been if this Bill had been passed last year. It means that the Department or the Government will not be able to dispose of these lands without the sanction of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I understood from the honourable gentleman's reading of the proposed Bill that it referred only to lands which have not been alienated or which have reverted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The amendment is, word for word, the amendment moved by the honourable gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) last year.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: But a fiat has been granted in the meantime. Supposing that the petitioner were successful on the fiat, would that not mean as a matter of fact that these lands had not reverted, and that the honourable gentleman's present legislation would therefore not apply to these lands?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know what will be the final judgment. I am not exactly in a position to say what would be the effect of the judgment if the court decided that the plaintiff had rights in those lands; but I feel that the hands of the Department would be so firmly tied that it would not be able to make any new contract or sign any new lease without the sanction of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: But if the petitioner were successful in his fiat there would be no necessity for action by the Department. It looks to me a little like locking the door after the horse has escaped.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But, may I ask my honourable friend, if this Act had been passed last year would the situation not be the same?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Certainly not.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: It is not the same situation to-day.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: There was no fiat.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: There was no fiat last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: When the Bill was before the House last year there had been no fiat issued.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But it does not matter. If this were part of chapter 21 of 1922 it would not alter in the least the rights of the claimant as defined by the courts of justice. Whether the fiat be taken in June or in October, if this Act is on the Statute Book it does not alter the situation. The courts would be fully seized of the question. What does this amendment mean? Whether it was on the statute book last year or is placed on the statute book to-day, it means that the Department of the Interior will not be able to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of these lands except with the sanction of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: There is right there one point that occurs to me. I am not a lawyer and do not wish to argue with my honourable friend. The Isenberg people already had leases; they were the holders of these lands. They claim that the leases have been wrongfully cancelled. Consequently, if their contention is upheld in court, it will not be necessary, in my opinion, for the Department to issue new leases, as the old leases will be already in existence.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then my honourable friend agrees with me when I state that this Act, whether passed last year or this year, cannot affect the judgment; because the fiat opens the question as to the rights of Isenberg in the leases which he has.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I understand that the fiat is simply the permission of the government to these people to file a petition of right. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I understand it is the usual practice to state the grounds in the statement of claim. Can my honourable friend tell the House what are the grounds and what the petitioners ask for?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are five printed pages, which I would gladly pass over to my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I thought my honourable friend might summarize them. At the conclusion the grounds are usually stated briefly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I can hardly read the conclusions without reading the allegations.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Perhaps my honourable friend would put them in the Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Here is the petition of right, which I hold in my hand; and here is the answer of His Majesty the King, presented by the Minister of Justice. When this Bill is read the second time, on Tuesday next, my honourable friend can dilate upon this matter if he so desires. This debate will not close to-day.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Would there be any objection to include them in Hansard of to-day?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It would perhaps be attaching considerable importance to these documents. I have no particular objection. My honourable friend can read these papers and may summarize them himself if he wishes. I would not like to ask the Senate to have them placed on Hansard without being read in the House. They contain many statements that may not be deemed important enough to extend upon the official record. I will simply put these two documents on the table, as I am only moving the first reading of this Bill. The Bill will not be read a second time until Tuesday, and my honourable friend will have plenty of time to read them.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What is the objection to putting them on Hansard, so that they may be most readily available for honourable members to read?

Hon. Mr. REID: The honourable leader of the Government has referred to several Orders in Council passed between October, 1919, and the present time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I read them. They will be in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. REID: Some of them the honourable gentleman did not read. I would ask that all the Orders in Council referred to, also the opinion of the Department of Justice, and the memorandum from that Department, be placed in Hansard, so that the record may be complete.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the honourable gentleman speaks of a "memorandum" he refers to the defence in the case?

Hon. Mr. REID: Yes. The honourable Minister stated that he had it there, and I suppose he would have read it had we asked for it. He having referred to it, I take it for granted that we are entitled to see the whole document, and it should go on Hansard.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Both the petition of right and the statement of defence, as well as the Orders in Council.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If it is the unanimous wish, the petition of right and the defence will be placed on Hansard. These include the allegations of the petitioners and the answer of the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask my honourable friend one question, because this whole transaction is not very clear in my mind. The Senate discussed the matter last year, as I understood, on the ground that the Department of the Interior had cancelled a great many coal mining and other leases and the Privy Council had held that they had been improperly cancelled. It was explained that the notice sent out stated that the lease was cancelled on account of non-payment of the rent, and the notice should have called attention to the non-payment of the rent and stated that if it was not paid the lease would be cancelled. Then this House was asked to approve of a Bill that had been passed by the House of Commons and had been brought here, to provide a remedy for the technical irregularity in the cancellation of the leases. That Bill was passed and, as I understood, affected over 15,000 leases.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: From 15,000 to 20,000 leases.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: So that Act is there to remedy the mistake made by the Department of the Interior. Now, as I understand, you grant a fiat regarding one of these leases as to which the defect in cancellation was cured by the Act of last Session. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The honourable gentlemen means one of those Orders in Council.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Oh, no. I am referring to the Hoppe leases. In the first place, notice of cancellation was given; then, according to a decision of the Privy Council, the supposition was that the leases had not been properly cancelled. Then there was introduced and passed here a Bill that had been passed by the House of Commons for the purpose of rectifying the defect in the cancellation of leases. There were 15,000 or 20,000 leases involved. We have here to-day the fact that out of 15,000 or 20,000 leases one has been selected.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, no. I beg the honourable gentleman's pardon.

Hon. Mr.McMEANS: At any rate, all we know about it is this, that with regard to this particular Hoppe lease a fiat has been granted by the Crown, whereby will be tried the question whether the lease was properly cancelled or not. May I ask the honourable gentleman this question: are the 15,000 or 20,000 other cases to be treated in the same way as the Hoppe lease?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will answer that. I have, I think, demonstrated that the Order in Council of January last refers to the lessees in cases where their leases have been cancelled, but the properties are still available. It does not cover the Hoppe leases, because they were not available on the 21st of January, as the property had been withdrawn from sale by Order in Council passed in 1918. According to the statement from the Department of the Interior, that was the opinion of the Department of Justice, but I have not the opinion before me. In order to make doubly sure that the Order in Council of January last does not cover the Hoppe leases, the Minister of the Interior last week submitted to Council a recommendation declaring clearly that those leases that had been withdrawn from sale by the Order in Council of 1918 were not covered and were not meant to be covered by the Order in Council of January last.

Now, why was that January Order in Council passed? The honourable gentleman says, "But you are undoing the work that we did last year." Not at all.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I am glad to hear it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Act was passed last year because for 15 years and more notices had been given and cancellations made by means of certain printed forms which were later declared by the Privy Council to be technically irregular, although the intention was quite clear and was understood by the parties who received the notices of cancellation. The difficulty in which the Government of Canada was placed was this. In a number of instances leases had been cancelled and the properties had been re-leased to other parties—in some cases re-leased for the third, fourth or fifth time. The danger was that the original lessee might avail himself of the technical flaw in procedure and demand to be again given possession of the land that had been re-leased to other parties, who might have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in the development of the property. There was the danger that millions and millions of dollars' worth of damages might be claimed from the Government of Canada. That was the reason why the Act was passed last year, But in regard to lands of all kinds formally held under lease, when the lease has been cancelled and the land is still in the hands of the Department of the Interior, what objection is there to the former owner coming in and asking to be re-instated by paying the arrears due? A stranger might come in and lease the land without paying the back dues. Under what circumstances the former lessee might feel it to his interest to pay the arrears rather than have the lease taken by a third party, it is not for me to say; but there were before the Department cases in which the re-entry was allowed on payment of the dues, and the Order in Council of January last covers such cases. It does not cover the cases in which the Government was bound to protect the people of Canada because the properties concerned had passed into the hands of third parties.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I do not quite understand the honourable gentleman. My understanding is that, where the lease had been improperly cancelled, the Act of last Session cured the defect and made the cancellation valid. A third party comes in and acquires an interest in the property; therefore the matter cannot be opened so that the original lessee would have any claim. That is the honourable gentleman's argument, is it not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That applies to the last 15 years.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Very well. What is the difference between a third party coming in and acquiring an interest in the land and the land coming into the possession of the people of Canada? As I understand it, by the cancellation of the Hoppe leases the people of Canada acquired those lands—acquired them, to my mind, in just the same way as would a third party who came in and paid down a deposit on them. It is to take away the interest of the people of Canada that this fiat has been granted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the honourable gentleman allow me to put to him a question?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Just one moment, until I draw the honourable gentleman's attention to this one fact. The Hoppe leases were cancelled. After the cancellation of those leases another party, Shillington, came in and re-leased the land. If anybody had an interest that should be protected, it was Shillington. Was any fiat granted for him?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He has asked for none.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg pardon. I withdraw that statement, because I heard that a year and a half or two years ago he did—not he, but Mr. Barnard, who advanced the money—and I was told that he obtained a judgment for a few thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Against whom?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Against the Government of the country. I wish to correct the statement that if he did not get a fiat it was because he did not ask for one.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The Hoppe leases were cancelled and a second party obtained the interest. His interest was cancelled by Act of Parliament, and the people of Canada became the owners of those lands. Now their rights are jeopardized by the giving of a fiat. Will fiats also be granted in the case of the fifteen or twenty thousand leases that have been cancelled, and in which third parties have come in? That is what has been done in the Hoppe case. Why should not the same thing be done in the case of every other lease?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Last year we passed an Act respecting Notices of Cancellation of Leases of Dominion Lands, section 2 of which says:

No action, suit or other proceeding, either at law or in equity, shall lie or be instituted, prosecuted or maintained against His Majesty or against the Minister of the Interior, or the Attorney General, or any officer of the Government of Canada, claiming any relief or declaration against or in respect of the cancellation or forfeiture of any such lease, license, permit or other authority by means of any such notice as aforesaid, unless the same was or shall have been instituted within one year from the date of the giving of the said notice.

That is the answer to the honourable gentleman. We both participated in the passage of that law: it is his law as well as mine. The honourable gentleman now claims that a fiat jeopardizes the interests of Canada. My honourable friend is a member of the Bar, and he knows that petitions of right asking for the right to sue for damages always to a certain degree jeopardize the interests of Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Oh, no. Does the honourable gentleman say that the petition of right is only asking for damages, or is it asking for these lands?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It asks for a right. What do I care what a suitor asks? He asks for his rights.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: A suit for damages is a different thing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, it is the same thing. Is it justice to refuse to grant a petition of right to a claimant for $10,000,000? I think a petition of right was granted in the case of Sir Charles Ross's gun industry in Quebec—and he walked away with $4,000,000. Surely, it would have been safer not to have granted him a petition of right.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: My information is that Shillington applied for a fiat, in the same way that Hoppe or Isenberg has done, and was refused, and that the money paid for the lease was returned to him. Is that true, or is it not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know. If my honourable friend will put a notice on the Order Paper I will try to procure the information for him. I was informed that a fiat was granted to one of the parties interested in that transaction, and that he got a certain amount of damages. Perhaps someone else in this Chamber can give the information asked for.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Will the honourable gentleman bring down an answer without formal notice?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will try to get the information for Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: I have here the petition of right. The first clause of the prayer reads as follows:

That it be found and declared as prayed for in the Petition of Right already presented, that the Leases aforesaid and numbered 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782 are still valid and subsisting leases and having full force and effect between His Majesty represented by the Minister of the Interior for Canada as Lessor and your Suppliants as the executors of the deceased Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg as Lessees, notwithstanding the alleged notice of cancellation dated August 1st, 1918, or any other notice which may have been given by the said Minister of the said Department subsequently to the tender referred to in paragraph 12 hereof and notwithstanding the said Order in Council dated October 6th, 1919.

I would like to ask my honourable friend what will be the effect of the Bill introduced to-day if the suppliant is successful in this petition? Will it affect the matter at all?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At first sight, it strikes me that it would not. If the Privy Council or the proper tribunal decided that the claims were valid, I suppose the Government of Canada would have to abide by the judgment. What I meant to say was that the amendment which I propose would have no more effect upon the action of the courts than if it had been put upon the statute book last year.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Except that the fiat has been granted since the legislation of last session.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: If the judgment of the court goes back to 1912, or the date of the supposed default, or the date of cancellation, then it antedates two procedures: it declares the cancellation of the Isenberg lease null and void, and it declares the lease to Dr. Shillington and all that follows null and void. It maintains Isenberg in the title that he had when the first notice of cancellation was given, because the tribunal would have to decide whether or not the lease was properly cancelled. Of course, the statute we passed last year will come into effect as an estoppel. It says that such and such defects cannot be urged against the cancellation of leases. This is the practical work which the Government of Canada has done. It has cured all the technical defects that the Privy Council found in that other case, the name of which I forget.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It is a retroactive statute, in other words.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: May I call the attention of the leader of the Government to the fact that when the leader of the Opposition left here last night I understood there was an arrangement that this matter should stand until Tuesday. Am I right?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I told the honourable gentleman that when he returned I would see that he had an opportunity to express his opinion upon this question. I have moved the first reading of the Bill. The second reading will come on Wednesday, and the whole matter will be open for discussion.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Then it is understood that anyone who wishes to do so will have an opportunity to speak on Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have laid on the table a map showing the district surounding this reservation; it also shows the existing railway lines, and the proposed railway. There is also a small map showing the location of the Burns coal areas, near Calgary.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first time.

DIVORCE BILL

SECOND READING

Bill W, an Act for the relief of Harriet Ethelwyn Kingsley.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

VIMY RIDGE MEMORIAL

On the Order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Dandurand: That His Honour the Speaker be authorized to sign the said Joint Address on behalf of the Senate, and to present the same to His Excellency the Governor General.—(Hon. Mr. Donnelly.)

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not see the Hon. Mr. Donnelly here. I was asked by the honourable leader on the other side of the House for certain information.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Has my honourable friend any objection to letting this order stand over until the next sitting of the House? The Hon. Mr. Donnelly will then perhaps be here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He told me he had not very much to say, and Sir James Lougheed notified me last evening that he would be obliged to absent himself to-day, and authorized me to state that he had just received information from General Mewburn, the Chairman of the Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission, concerning the grant of land on Vimy Heights by the French Government, and that if it had been imparted to him before the resolution thanking the French Government for the grant was introduced into this Chamber, he would not have opposed the resolution. I also have received from Colonel H. C. Osborne, Honorary Secretary of the Canadian Battlefields Memorial Commission, a memorandum concerning the acquisition of land for a war memorial on Vimy Ridge, which reads as follows:

1. Under French law a foreign Government is not competent to acquire title to land in France and erect structures thereon.

This was the statement of the Vice-Chairman, Imperial War Graves Commission and of the Commission's legal adviser. The Imperial War Graves Commission has had extensive experience in connection with the acquisition of land in France and Belgium for some 2,000 British military cemeteries.

2. The provisions of the Accord or Agreement between the French and Canadian Governments covering the gift to Canada of land on Vimy Ridge are substantially the same as those dealing with the gift of land by the French Government for British Military Cemeteries; that is to say, the land is to be acquired by the French Government at the cost of the French nation, and held in perpetuity by it for use by the Canadian Government for a specific purpose, namely the erection of a monument and the creation of a park.

3. The conditions of the gift were in entire harmony with the views of the Canadian representatives. It was not considered advisable to bind the Canadian Government to definite undertakings. It was and is the intention of the Canadian Government to erect a memorial on Vimy Ridge; but account had to be taken of the fact that Governments may change their minds, or unforeseen circumstances may intervene. On the other hand account had to be taken of the fact that the gift was to be made for a special purpose and for no other. It seemed that the best and most effective form which the gift could take was the one adopted in the case of grants for military cemeteries, namely a grant to the Canadian Government gratuitously and in perpetuity, of the free use of the land for the purpose in question. Any possible future difficulty or complication was obviated in advance by the simple proviso that should the Canadian Government change its plans the French Government would resume the free disposal of the land—excluding however the land on which the monument stood, should it be erected in the meantime.

4. Furthermore the gift covers a parcel of 100 hectares (250 acres). It was impossible for the Canadian representatives to indicate with entire precision just what land would be required. It is probable that the proposed park will be limited to a much smaller area. In such an event any balance not needed will simply revert to the French Government.

In this connection, the use of the word "park" is perhaps misleading. Vimy Ridge is a barren tract of land, miles in extent, devastated and pitted with shell holes, etc. The object of the Commission is to reserve and develope in a suitable way sufficient land to form a background for the monument and prevent the erection of unsightly structures in its vicinity. Such further land as may be reserved for the proposed "park" will be left largely in its present state. The only development would probably be in the form of a moderate forestation scheme, that is the planting of some trees, and the construction of roads or paths leading to the monument. No large expenditure for this purpose is contemplated.

As to maintenance, it is altogether likely that in the future, some years hence, the maintenance of ground surrounding all British memorials in France will be undertaken by the Imperial War Graves Commission. This is a permanent body which will always have its forces in the field in connection with the maintenance of military cemeteries.

5. The French Government imposed no conditions as to either the period in which the work should be completed or the extent or nature of the park to be maintained. Canada has an entirely free hand. There was on the part of the French Government an entire absence of any spirit of bargaining or bartering. The gift was freely and graciously made.

6. The project of erecting eight memorial monuments on selected battlefield sites in Belgium and France was considered by a Special Committee of the House of Commons in April 1920. The report of this Committee was subsequently adopted by Parliament.

In accordance with the Committee's recommendation the Canadian Battlefields Memorials Commission was appointed composed as follows:

Major-General The Hon. S. C. Mewburn, C.M.G., K.C., M.P.
The Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux. K.C., M.P.
Lt.-General Sir R. E. W. Turner, V.C., K.C.B., etc. etc.
Lieut. Colonel R. W. Leonard.
The Honourable J. G. Turriff.
Honourary Secretary-Colonel H. C. Osborne, C.M.G.

The scope of the Commission's work has been enlarged recently by two proposals: (a) the acquisition by Canada of a tract of land on Vimy Ridge; (b) the commemoration on the monument at Vimy of a large proportion (possibly 15,000) of the Canadian missing, that is those who lost their lives and have no known graves.

In connection with (a) above, Canada's expenditure will be controllable through the Canadian Battlefields Memorials Commission. The Commission's expenditures are subject to the approval of the Minister of Militia and ultimately of Parliament.

In connection with (b), a substantial contribution towards the cost of the Vimy Ridge Memorial will be received from the Imperial War Graves Commission. That body is primarily responsible for erecting memorials to the missing, and, as Canada is relieving it of that duty to the extent above mentioned, there will be an adjustment of accounts accordingly. This phase of the matter is at present being negotiated with the Imperial War Graves Commission by the High Commissioner for Canada in London.

H. C. Osborne,
Colonel,
Honorary Secretary, C.B.M.C.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 13, at 8 p.m.

Following are papers referred to in the debate on Alberta Coal Deposit, here printed by unanimous consent of the Senate:

Ref. 96082 on 146348 (M. L. & Y.).

Certified Copy of a Report of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by the Deputy Governor General on the 1st July, 1919.

P.C. No. 1369.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a Report, dated June 30, 1919, from the Minister of the Interior wherein it is stated that in May and June, 1912, certain tracts situated in unsurveyed territory near the junction of the Smoky and Muskeg Rivers in the Province of Alberta, were staked out under the provisions of the Coal Mining Regulations, and leases of the rights applied for were issued in favour of the several applicants.

These leases were subsequently assigned to Paul R. Isenberg, of Oakland, in the State of California, U.S.A., but owing to the failure of the assignee to comply with the conditions of the leases and the provisions of the regulations under which they were issued, the leases were finally cancelled in the records of the Department of the Interior on the 3rd day of August, 1918.

On the 29th and 30th of August, 1918, applications were filed in the office of the Mining Recorder at Edmonton for leases of locations represented to have been staked out under the provisions of the regulations, which locations appear to cover to a considerable extent the tracts described in the leases originally assigned to Mr. Isenberg.

Leases of the rights applied for were issued in favour of the several applicants, and on the 27th of January, 1919, these leases were assigned to C. A. Barnard, K.C., of the City of Montreal, and Adam T. Shillington, M.D., of the City of Ottawa.

It has since been brought to the attention of the Department that in the summary report issued by the Department of Mines for the year 1916, there appears a report prepared by Mr. John MacVicar, on the Foothill coal areas north of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway in the Province of Alberta, a portion of which report reads as follows:

"On Sulphur River, on Smoky River and on Sheep Creek, claims were visited, upon which some surface work was done and a number of good coal seams of workable width exposed. On the Isenberg claims on Smoky River considerable prospecting has been done. Tunnels have been driven on five of the seams, one hundred feet or more into the hillside. In the table on page 92 is given the results of the analysis of the average sample taken. The following is a partial section of the measures on these claims in descending order:

It would appear from information received that the present lessees benefited by information obtained from the departmental records in Ottawa, which information was not available to other possible stakers.

That the declarations of citizenship as required by the provisions of Order in Council No. 572, dated March 5, 1917, having reference to alien enemies do not comply with the provisions of said Order, nor are they the same as used in other cases.

In view of the circumstances above set out, the Minister recommends that the eight coal mining leases bearing date the 29th and 30th of August, 1918, issued in favour of Alfred Ernest Austin, William Barnett, Robert W. McClung, Arthur Hicks Weir, Charles W. Coppock, Gordon Edgar, Howard Hauff, John Alexander Leask and William Raynor Gouin, and assigned on the 27th of January, 1919, to Messrs. Barnard and Shillington, be cancelled in the records of the Department of the Interior, and that the rights described in these several leases be reserved to the Crown.

The Committee concur in the above recommendation and submit the same for approval.

(Signed) Rodolphe Boudreau,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

To the Honourable
The Minister of the Interior.

At the Government House at Ottawa
Monday, the 6th day of October, 1919

Present:

The Deputy Governor General in Council

P.C. No. 2044.

Whereas regulations for the disposal of coal mining rights the property of the Crown in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories, and in portions of the Province of British Columbia, were established by Order in Council dated the 20th April, 1910, and amended by subsequent Orders in Council;

And whereas the Minister of the Interior reports that representations have been made to the Department of the Interior that there is a very large and valuable deposit of high grade coal on Dominion Lands near the junction of the Muskeg and Smoky Rivers in unsurveyed territory in the Province of Alberta, situated about seventy miles distant from railway communication;

And whereas the coal mining rights already disposed of by the Crown under the provisions of the Regulations and those available coal mining rights with which railway communication has already been established in the said Province appear to be sufficient to supply all present requirements, and as it would appear to be in the public interest that a coal reservation should be created in the northern portion of the said Province;

Therefore the Deputy Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, is pleased to order that the coal mining rights which are the property of the Crown in Townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, Ranges 7, 8 and 9 West of the 6th Initial Meridian, shall be and the same are hereby withdrawn from disposal under the provisions of the coal mining Regulations above referred to.

Clerk of the Privy Council.

The Minister of the Interior.

IN THE EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty

Province of Ontario,
County of Carleton,
City of Ottawa.
To wit:

The humble Petition of The Hawaiian Trust Company, Limited, a body corporate, having its head office and chief place of business in the city of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, in the United States of America, and Bertha A. S. Isenberg, of the said city of Honolulu, widow,

Respectfully sheweth:

1. Your suppliants The Hawaiian Trust Company, Limited, and Bertha A. S. Isenberg, are the executors of the Last Will and Testament of Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, sometimes known as Paul R. Isenberg, in his lifetime of the City of Honolulu, aforesaid, who died in or about the 19th day of April, A.D. 1919, acting under Letters Probate duly granted in their favour.

2. In or about the month of May, A.D. 1912, His Majesty The King, represented by the Honourable the Minister of the Interior of Canada (hereinafter refered to as the Minister) duly demised and leased, by Indentures in writing, to the several parties therein named as Lessees, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, all mines, seams and beds of coal in on or under certain parcels or tracts of land and premises situate in what is known as the Smoky River District in the Province of Alberta, and said Leases were duly entered and recorded in the books kept for that purpose in the Department of the Interior, and were known under numbers 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 769, 780, 781, 782, and 901. The said leases were made under certain terms and conditions therein fully set forth, to which your suppliants will on the trial hereof crave leave to refer.

3. In or about the month of July, A.D. 1912, the said Leases referred to in the immediately preceding paragraph were assigned to the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, there designed as Paul R. Isenberg, by Indentures in writing which with the consent of the said Minister were recorded in the said books of the Department of the Interior.

4. The said Isenberg on acquiring the title to the said Leases duly observed the conditions and provisions thereof and in or about the year 1914 he surrendered to the Minister, and the said Minister duly accepted the said surrender, four of the said Leases, namely the Leases known as numbers 769, 780, 781, and 901.

5. The combined rental payable annually under the remaining leases amounted to $18,876.15 and this amount was duly paid by the said Isenberg, in advance, for the period up to and including the 15th May 1918 as to seven of the said Leases and up to and including 22nd June 1918 as to the other Lease.

6. The said Leases are all in the same words and form in so far as the terms and conditions are concerned and each of the said Leases contains a clause in words following, that is to say:—

"That in case of default in payment of the said rent or royalty for thirty days after the same should have been paid, or in case of the breach or non-observance or non-performance on the part of the lessee of any proviso, condition, restriction, or stipulation herein contained and which ought to be observed or performed by the lessee and which has not been waived by the said Minister, the Minister may cancel these presents by written notice to the lessee and thereupon the same and everything therein contained shall become and be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever and it shall be lawful for His Majesty into and upon the said lands (or any part thereof in the name of the whole—to re-enter and the same to have again, repossess and enjoy anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding. Provided nevertheless that in case of such cancellation and re-entry the lessee shall continue to be liable to pay and His Majesty shall have the same remedies for the recovery of any rent or royalty then due or accruing due as if these presents had not been cancelled but remained in full force and effect."

7. In or about the 1st day of August 1918 the Controller of the Mining Lands and Yukon Branch of the Department of the Interior addressed a letter to one J. R. Galt, the Vice President of your suppliant the Hawaiian Trust Co., Ltd., in the following words:—

"Department of the Interior"
Mining Lands and Yukon Branch.

File No. 80798 ML & Y

Ottawa 1st August 1918

"Dear Sir:—I beg to refer you to your letter of the 20th February last, with respect to eight coal mining leases isued in May and June, 1912, comprising locations situated near the Junction of the Muskeg and Smoky Rivers in the Province of Alberta, which leases were subsequently assigned to Paul R. Isenberg.

"The rental of these locations has been paid up to the 15th of May and the 22nd of June last, on which dates the rental for the current year, amounting to $18,876.15 became due.

"Payment would not appear to have been made to this Department on account of the rental due for the current year of the locations in question, and the several leases provide that default in payment of the rental for 30 days after it should have been paid renders the lease subject to cancellation.

"In view of the conditions of the leases referred to, and the fact that no payment on account of arrears has been made, these leases will now be finally cancelled in the records of the Department, and the Mining Recorder at Edmonton advised of such cancellation. The eight leases in question are Nos. 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782.

Your obedient servant,
(sgd.) H. H. Rowatt, Controller."

"J. R. Galt, Esq.,
Vice President,
Hawaiian Trust Co., Ltd.
Honolulu, T. H."

8. During the period from 1912 to 1918 the said Isenberg expended a substantial sum of money in the development of the area covered by the Leases, and in tunnelling and timbering work, amounting in all to $90,000.00; and in addition there was disbursed by him a further amount of $85,000.00 for surveying the areas, the acquisition of grazing rights from the Indians, and in general administration expenses.

9. In or about the month of August 1918 and immediately after the date of the said alleged notice of cancellation, the Minister purported to lease the mines, seams and beds of coal in on or under the lands comprised in the Leases in question herein to other parties, as your suppliants believe and aver.

10. On or about the 6th day of October, 1919, by Order in Council (P.C. No. 2044) it was attempted to withdraw from the Suppliants the lands covered by the said Leases and to create a Crown reservation of certain lands in the said District of Smoky River comprising among other lands the area included in the said Leases.

11. Your suppliants either directly or through their agents or servants have frequently insisted with the said Minister and other officers and officials of the said Department that the said alleged letter of cancellation was invalid insufficient and of no legal effect so as to deprive your suppliants of any of their rights under the said leases and in particular your suppliants by their agent, on March 18th, 1922 made a final effort to have the adjustment of the matters in dispute settled and then and there offered to make payment of all rents then due on the leases and were specifically informed that the said Minister and the said Department would refuse to accept the tender of any amount in payment of such rents.

12. Your suppliants in order to preserve their rights under their leases did in or about the 25th day of March, 1922, cause to be tendered to the Minister the sum of $4,488.92 in payment of rental due under the aforesaid leases, the said amount being made up as follows:—

Rent due for period from 15th May 1918 and 22nd June 1918 on the respective Leases to August 1st, 1918..	$3,764.27
	$4,488.92

The said 1st August 1918 was the date on which the said alleged notice of cancellation was made and was also the date from which your suppliants were deprived of the quiet and peaceable possession of their property under the Leases by the issuing of new Leases by the Minister as hereinbefore alleged.

13. The said amount so tendered was acknowledged by the Deputy Minister of the Interior by letter dated 25th April, 1922, which is in part in the following words:—

"I would remind you that no rent has been paid upon these leases since 1917, and that notice of cancellation for default of payment was given on 1st August, 1918. The amount of the cheque is equivalent only to a small percentage of the rent which fell due in 1918, to say nothing of the rent which has since accrued if you assume that the leases are still subsisting."

14. Your suppliants caused to be written to the said Deputy Minister a letter dated April 28th, 1922, wherein your suppliants again tendered the amount mentioned in paragraph 12 hereof, and gave full particulars of their claim for damages suffered by reason of the alleged letter of cancellation, the issue of the leases mentioned in paragraph 9 hereof, and the Order in Council mentioned in paragraph 10 hereof.

15. The said letter of April 28th, 1922, was not acknowledged until May 22nd, 1922, when your suppliants received a letter from the said Department stating that the Department of Justice was being consulted with respect to the several matters referred to in the said letter of April, 28th; since then no further reply has been given to your suppliants' said letter.

16. In or about the 12th May, 1922, there was introduced into the Senate of the Parliament of Canada a Bill known as Y2 entitled "An Act respecting Notices of Cancellation of leases of Dominion Lands" which had for its object the validation of certain irregular notices of Cancellation issued by the Department of the Interior.

17. By reason of the provisions of the said Bill and the fact that no further answer was given by the said Department to your suppliants tender of the rents and their claim for damages, your suppliants did on the 19th June, 1922, duly file a Petition of Right praying that their leases be found and declared to be valid and subsisting leases and for damages through their being deprived of the quiet and peaceable possession and the use of the lands described in said leases, and for other relief, all as more particularly set forth in the said Petition of Right.

18. Your suppliants are now informed that the said Department, has since the presentation of the said Petition of Right by your suppliants, issued or is about to issue further notices purporting to cancel the said leases.

19. Your suppliants submit that by reason of the issue of the leases referred to in paragraph 9 hereof, and the Order in Council of October 6th 1919, referred to in paragraph 10 hereof, your suppliants were liable only for the sum due for rental at the time of the alleged notice of cancellation, which sum is the amount tendered as mentioned in paragraph 12 hereof.

20. Your suppliants bring into Court with their Petition the aforesaid sum of $4,488.92, tendered by them as hereinbefore set out.

1. That it be found and declared as prayed for in the Petition of Right already presented, that the leases aforesaid numbered 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, and 782 are still valid and subsisting leases and having full force and effect between His Majesty represented by the Minister of the Interior for Canada as Lessor and your Suppliants as the executors of the deceased Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg as Lessees, notwithstanding the alleged notice of cancellation dated August 1st, 1918, or any other notice which may have been given by the said Minister or the said Department subsequently to the tender referred to in paragraph 12 hereof and notwithstanding the said Order in Council dated October 6th, 1919.

2. That it be found and declared that the amount now brought into Court namely $4,488.92 is the full amount of rent due under the said Leases including interest to the date of said tender and that the said amount was duly tendered to the said Minister.

3. That your suppliants are entitled to be paid by His Majesty the sum of $1,000,000.00 or such other sum as to this Honourable Court may seem just as and for the damages suffered by your suppliants by reason of the matters complained of herein.

4. That your suppliants be found entitled to their costs herein.

5. For such further and other relief as to this Honourable Court shall seem meet.

Dated at Ottawa this 23rd day of June, A.D. 1922.

IN THE EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA

Between

The Hawaiian Trust Company, Limited, and Bertha A. S. Isenberg, executor and executrix of the last will and testament of Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, deceased,

Suppliants;

and

His Majesty the King,

Respondent.

Statement of Defence

The Attorney General of Canada, on behalf of His Majesty, submits that the Petition of Right does not set forth any case or facts giving rise to any cause of action against His Majesty; that it is not within the jurisdiction of this Honourable Court to give effect to the prayer of the petition in any particular; that the declarations prayed for cannot be made against His Majesty upon Petition of Right; that no facts are pleaded which justify any claim for damages, and that this petition ought therefore to be dismissed for these and other reasons which appear upon the face of it, but, reserving the foregoing and all other objections to the sufficiency in law of the Petition of Right as pleaded, the Attorney General says:

1. He does not admit the allegations, or any of them, set forth in the first and second paragraphs of the Petition of Right.

2. He denies the allegations, and each of them, set forth in the third paragraph of the Petition or Right.

3. He does not admit the allegations, or any of them, set out in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh paragraphs of the Petition of Right.

4. Further, as to the said seventh paragraph, Mr. H. H. Rowatt, Controller of the Mining Lands and Yukon Branch of the Department of the Interior, on 1st August, 1918, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, wrote a letter to Mr. J. R. Galt, Vice-President of the Suppliant Company, at Honolulu, who was the agent or attorney in that behalf of the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, notifying Mr. Galt, for the information of his principal, the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, that the rent upon the said leases, numbers 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782, amounting to $18,876.15 became due on 15th May and 22nd June, 1918, and had not been paid, and that in view of the conditions of the said leases, and the fact that the said rent had not been paid, the said leases would on the said 1st August, 1918, be finally cancelled in the records of the department, and that the Mining Recorder at Edmonton would be advised of such cancellation; and the Attorney General avers that the said letter or notice was duly received by Mr. Galt in due course of the post, and that the said leases, and each of them, were on the said 1st August, 1918, by the Minister of the Interior, so cancelled as aforesaid, and that the Mining Recorder at Edmonton, where the leases were registered, was then advised accordingly.

5. The original letter of 1st August, 1918, contained a fourth paragraph which is not printed in the copy as set out in the seventh paragraph of the Petition of Right, which fourth paragraph reads as follows:—"Seven of the leases above referred to became subject to cancellation on the 15th June last, and the remaining lease became subject to cancellation on the 22nd ultimo."

6. He denies the allegations, and each of them, set forth in the eighth paragraph of the Petition of Right.

7. He does not admit the allegations, or any of them, set forth in the ninth paragraph of the Petition of Right.

8. He denies the allegations, and each of them, set forth in the tenth and eleventh paragraphs of the Petition of Right.

9. He denies the allegations, and each of them, set forth in the twelfth paragraph of the Petition of Right.

10. He does not admit the allegations, or any of them, set forth in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth paragraphs of the Petition of Right.

11. He does not admit the allegations, or any of them, set forth in the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth paragraphs of the Petition of Right, and he denies that these allegations, or any of them, are material.

12. He denies the suppliants conclusion as set forth in the nineteenth paragraph of the Petition of Right, and the facts, if any, in that paragraph alleged.

13. The suppliants are not entitled to the damages claimed by the Petition of Right or to any damages.

14. Mr. H. H. Rowatt, who signed the letter of 1st August, 1918, which is as aforesaid in part set out in the seventh paragraph of the Petition of Right, and who also signed the other letters or notices on behalf of the Department of the Interior hereinafter set out or alleged, was and is an officer of the Department of the Interior, and he wrote the said letters and notices, and each of them, under the direction of the Minister of the Interior, and the said letters and notices, and each of them, were and are effective as a notice to cancel and annul the leases therein mentioned by reason of the condition of the said leases set out in the sixth paragraph of the petition, or by reason of Chapter 21 of the Acts of the Dominion which received assent on 28th June, 1922.

15. By the provisions of Section 37 of the Dominion Lands Act lands containing coal or other minerals may be leased under regulations made by the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council by Order of 20th April, 1910, made regulations for the leasing of coal mining rights the property of the Crown, in the Province of Alberta, wherein the lands lie in respect of which the leases in question herein were issued, and these regulations having been duly published had and still have the force and effect of law.

16. The aforesaid regulations include among others the following, references therein to the Minister meaning the Minister of the Interior:—

"11. The lessee shall not assign, transfer or sublet the rights described in his lease, or any part thereof, without the consent in writing of the Minister being first had and obtained.

"14. The lease shall be in such form as may be determined by the Minister of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of these regulations.

"17. If during the term of the lease the lessee shall fail to pay the rental in advance for each subsequent year, at the rate of one dollar ($1) an acre per annum, within thirty days after the date upon which the same became due, the lease shall be subject to cancellation in the discretion of the Minister and to the immediate forfeiture of all the rights granted thereunder.

17. The leases in respect of which the suppliants claim, viz.:—those numbered 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782, were granted by His Majesty represented by the Minister of the Interior, in the form determined by the Minister, and pursuant to the authority and subject to the provisions of the said regulations, copy of which was appended to and made part of each of the said leases. The said leases, and each of them, reserved, as by the regulations required, the clear yearly rent or sum of one dollar for each and every acre of land comprised therein, payable yearly in advance and the lessee thereby covenanted that he would well and truly pay said rent to the Minister of the Interior at Ottawa, and that he would well, truthfully and faithfully observe, perform and abide by the obligations, conditions, provisos and restrictions in or under the said regulations imposed upon the lessee.

18. The said leases, and each of them, contained a clause, term or condition in the words quoted, paragraph 6 of the Petition of Right.

19. The combined annual rental of the said leases amounted to $18,800.00, or thereabouts, and was payable as to the first seven enumerated of the said leases on 15th May in each year, and as to the other lease, Number 782, on 22nd June in each year, but neither the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg in his lifetime, nor the suppliants herein, as his executor and executrix, have paid any rent subsequent to that which accrued due on 15th May, 1918, and 22nd June, 1918, nor has the same or any part thereof been paid.

20. Mr. H. H. Rowatt, Controller of the Mining Lands and Yukon Branch of the Department of the Interior, by letter of 1st August, 1918, written at the direction of the Minister of the Interior, notified Messrs. Pringle and Guthrie of Ottawa, the Solicitors and agents of the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, that the said leases, Numbers 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782, would then be cancelled by reason of non-payment of the rent, amounting to $18,876.15, which had accrued due there under on 15th May and 22nd June, 1918, and that the Mining Recorder at Edmonton, where the said leases were registered, would on that date be advised of such cancellation, and the fact is that the said leases, and each of them, were on the last-mentioned date, for the reason aforesaid, cancelled by the Minister of the Interior, and the Mining Recorder at Edmonton was then advised accordingly.

21. On the 14th August, 1918, Dr. Reinholdt Hoppe, the agent and attorney of the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, telegraphed the said H. H. Rowatt, Controller of Mining Lands nad Yukon Branch, of the Department of the Interior, from San Francisco, referring to the aforesaid leases Numbers 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782, and enquiring whether matters could be held open for him for sixty days, stating that if so he would come to Ottawa at once, to which Mr. Rowatt, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, replied on the following day, stating that all leases of coal mining locations in the Province of Alberta acquired by the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg (including the leases in question herein) had been finally cancelled, and that the department had no power to reinstate the lessee in the rights which he formerly held, and on 19th August, 1918, Mr. Rowatt wrote to Dr. Hoppe at San Francisco confirming the aforesaid telegram; and again on 26th August, 1918, Mr. Rowatt, by direction of the Minister, wrote to Dr. Hoppe informing him that the leases aforesaid, and each of them, had pursuant to the aforesaid conditions of the said leases been duly cancelled by the Minister for default in payment of the rent thereby reserved for thirty days after the same became due, and that the leases could not be reinstated, but that the locations in question were then available for application.

22. The said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg made default in the payment of the rent reserved and payable by or under the said leases Numbers 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765 and 766, which fell due on 15th May, 1918, and the said lease Number 782, which fell due on 22nd June, 1918, the said rent amounting in the aggregate to $18,876.15, and the same remained unpaid for thirty days after the said due dates, and has not been paid; and therefore, the Minister of the Interior, in the exercise of his power or authority under the aforesaid leases, and each of them, and the regulations aforesaid, by written notice to the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg on or about 1st August, 1918, and after the expiry of thirty days from the respective days of default in payment of the said rent, cancelled the said leases, and each of them, and thereupon the same, and everything therein contained, became and were absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

23. On 20th February, 1918, Mr. J. R. Galt, Vice-President of the Suppliant Company, wrote from Honolulu to the Department of the Interior at Ottawa stating that the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg was an American citizen and a client of the Suppliant Company. He referred to the said coal leases, Numbers 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766 and 782 as comprising an area of about twenty-nine and a half square miles of coal mining rights, and carrying an annual rental of $18,800.00, and he stated that at that time Mr. Isenberg was in poor health, and owing to that and the then present war conditions had requested the Suppliant Company to ask whether it would be possible to make an arrangement whereby the continued payment of the rent reserved by the said leases could be postponed during the period of the war, without Mr. Isenberg losing the rights outlined in the said coal mining leases, and to this communication Mr. H. H. Rowatt, an officer of the Department of the Interior, under the direction of the Minister, answered by letter dated 28th March, 1918, addressed to Mr. Galt, as Vice-President of the Suppliant Company at Honolulu, expressing regret that under the provisions of the regulations the department had no authority to postpone payment of the annual rental of the locations in question during the period of the war; and subsequently, on 1st August, 1918, Mr. Rowatt, by the direction of the Minister, wrote to Mr. Galt telling him, as the fact was, that the said leases and each of them would on that day be cancelled for non-payment of the aforesaid rent which fell due on the then last preceding 15th May and 22nd June, amounting to $18,876.15, and the Attorney General avers that the said J. R. Galt was at all the times aforesaid and continued to be until the death of the said Isenberg the latter's agent or attorney duly authorized by him in respect of all matters concerning the said leases and the cancellation thereof, and was authorized to receive, and did in the course of the post receive, the said letters or notice and each of them on his behalf, and did thereupon duly communicate the same to the said Isenberg.

24. The said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg departed this life on or about 12th April, 1919, having first made and executed his last will and testament whereby he nominated the Suppliants to be the executor and executrix thereof, and moreover devised and bequeathed the residue of his estate, including as part thereof all his right, title and interest if any in the aforesaid leases and demised premises, to the Suppliants upon certain trusts therein described; and letters of probate of the said will were granted to the Suppliants by the Surrogate Court of the First Circuit of the Territory of Hawaii on 20th May, 1919.

25. The Minister of the Interior of Canada, the Honourable Charles Stewart, by notice under his hand, signed at Ottawa on 7th April, 1922, and directed to the Suppliants herein, after reciting the said leases and each of them, the assignments thereof, the death and last will and testament of the said Daniel Paul Rice Isenberg, and the fact that the rent reserved and payable according to the terms and covenants of the leases aforesaid for the years 1918, 1919, 1920 and 1921 had not been paid when due, and that the same remained wholly due and unpaid and in default, therefore cancelled the said leases, and each of them, and everything therein contained, so that subject to the provisions thereof the same were and should forever be and thereby became absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever for and by reason of the aforesaid default in payment of the said rent and each of the said defaults severally; and the said notices, and each of them, were subsequently, on or about 21st June, 1922, and before the submission or filing of the Petition of Right herein, personally served upon the Suppliants, and each of them, whereby in the submission of the Attorney General the said leases, and each of them, became and were and are cancelled and absolutely null and void pursuant to the regulations aforesaid, and the terms and conditions of the said leases, and by the provisions of the aforesaid Act, Chapter 21 of 1922.

26. It was a term of the said leases, and each of them, that no waiver on behalf of His Majesty of any breach of any or either of the provisos, conditions, restrictions and stipulations therein contained, whether negative or positive in form, should take effect or be binding upon him unless expressed in writing under the authority of the Minister and that any waiver so expressed should extend only to the particular breach so waived and should not limit or affect His Majesty's rights with respect to any other or future breach.

27. It was a term of the said leases, and each of them, that no implied covenant or liability of any kind on His Majesty's part was created by the use therein of the word "demise" or "lease", or by the use of any other word or words therein or should arise by reason of the said lease or anything therein contained.

Solicitor for the Attorney General of Canada.

EMPLOYEES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

UNSATISFACTORY RETURN

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to direct the attention of the honourable leader of the House to an incomplete return. On the 6th day of February I moved for a return showing:

The total number of persons, including Deputy Heads, employed on the 31st December, 1922, in the Civil Service and in all other positions in the public service of Canada to which the provisions of the Civil Service Act, 1918, and its amendments apply as to the holidays to be observed.

The return that has been sent to me is very incomplete. Not one of the questions is answered fully. The amounts are carried out in detail and have never been added up. The questions might have been answered on one sheet of paper. I find that two or three of the Departments have made no returns at all. Even from the Department of the Secretary of State I find a most incomplete return regarding the amount of salaries; and the answer to question 5, asking for the cost per day of the Civil Service, gives the total as $4.19. I want to say to the House that if this is a sample of the efficiency of the Civil Service as it stands now, it is no wonder there is a hue and cry in Canada against the Civil Service. This return I consider on outrage—an insult to this House, and I ask the Government to see that a proper and full return is brought down in response to the order of this House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is this indicated as a partial return?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It is indicated as a partial return. But the return itself is not clear. I cannot understand it. It would take me hours to go through it, and I would have to do as much figuring as the clerks in the Department did, in order to arrive at a conclusion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is a matter that calls for an answer?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will bring it to the attention of the official who has special charge of returns covering more than one Department. He is in the Department of the Secretary of State. He has informed me that when a question is a simple one, affecting but one Department, it does not fall under his supervision; but when it is a question concerning more than one Department, it is his special function and duty to try to obtain the information from various sources. So this would be a matter for him, and I will ask him to look particularly into it.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: The return is certainly no credit to the official who is responsible for it.

DIVORCE BILL

THIRD READING

Bill W, an Act for the relief of Harriet Ethelwyn Kingsley.—Hon. Mr. Bennett.

CANADA TEMPERANCE BILL

SECOND READING PROPOSED—BILL REJECTED

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN moved the second reading of Bill A, an Act to amend Part IV of the Canada Temperance Act by providing for the abolition of licenses to manufacture intoxicating liquor in provinces wherein the sale thereof is prohibited.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I beg to move the second reading of this Bill, seconded by the Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster. With the kind permission of the House I may explain my position in this matter. It is perhaps within the rememberance of some honourable members of the Senate that last year, while we were making amendments to the Canada Temperance Act, I proposed an amendment somewhat on these lines, having practically the same effect as this Bill would have. On that occasion there was no record made of the vote, the result only being recorded. Since then I have been receiving very many requests to bring in a Bill to give effect to the proposed amendment of last year.

On the second reading of a Bill, I take it, nothing but the principle is to be discussed. I have given notice of certain amendments, which have been before the Senate for many days. The purpose of the Bill is simply to give to each province the right to decide for itself whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be manufactured within the province. It is very evident that if we decide this question in the affirmative we must provide certain machinery or procedure by which the province desiring to act in this matter may approach the Federal government.

Now, I do not intend to draw a picture of the abuses that have been taking place of late. Let us forget all abuses—all the bootlegging that is going on. Even murder has been committed near Windsor, if not in the city of Windsor itself, when a man was shot at his own door.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Is the honourable gentleman speaking of Quebec or Ontario?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Speaking of Canada. I am also informed, and by the very highest authorities, that in the provinces where prohibition exists there is a leakage from the distilleries to the boundary—that, under the pretext of exporting it, liquor is shipped to a place just outside of Canada and finds its way back to Canada. Only to-day I was informed that a large quantity of Canadian whiskey which had been sent to Buffalo came back to Canada.

Let us forget these abuses and remember only all the legislation that we have had for many years on temperance. We have had the Scott Act, local option, the Doherty Acts, the Canada Temperance Act. And how illusory they have all proven to be, one after the other—and why? Because the liquor interests, having immense wealth at their disposal, can always retain the very best lawyers to argue their cases. They have also a great organization, extending from the distiller to the wholesaler, the licensed vendors, and even the corner groceries. See what has taken place lately in Montreal. The whole city, by 13 out of 15 seats, reversed its previous voting—made a perfect revolution; and the other 2 seats would have gone the same way but that one was a Jewish seat where the voters were all for Mr. Bercovitch, and the other was St. Anne's, where our good friends the Irish preferred an Irishman, Alderman Hushion, to the other candidate.

The power of legislation is very great, and I will be quite frank with the members of this honourable House, that a good measure like this is almost too good to be realized; but I would invite honourable gentlemen to read in the Globe of two Saturdays ago the first editorial entitled "Closing the Side Door." It will not take very long to read it, and honourable gentlemen will see that it agrees almost entirely with the principle of this Bill. They will see in that article that Ontario, having succeeded in closing and barring the front door of the saloon and making it absolutely proof, now wants to close the side door.

Now, the question is one of autonomy—whether we in this Parliament should grant a full measure of autonomy to the provinces. When Confederation was formed there were a great many people who would have preferred a federation like the United States Commonwealth, where the States reserved to themselves all powers, delegating to the central government only such powers as were necessary for the exercise of the duties devolving on the central government, and the right to raise by way of taxation enough money to provide ways and means for carrying on the government.

The various states in Australia prepared a Bill themselves, and presented it for sanction and approval to the Imperial Government, and when the Imperial authorities remonstrated that certain features of the Bill did not meet with their approval the gentleman representing Australia simply said: "This is the Bill we want, and this Bill has to be passed as we have prepared it, or we will have no Bill at all." On that occasion the Hon. Edward Blake, who was then a member of the Imperial Parliament, referring to the Bill of the Commonwealth of Australia, said: "This creature was not conceived in the womb of the mother of Parliaments." Our Bill, the British North America Act, was conceived in the womb of the Imperial Parliament, and there every power was given to the Federal Government, and certain powers were delegated to the provinces.

This is simply to show that we have here all the sources of power, and that we could well afford to give a full measure of autonomy to a province if it desired it; and all that this Bill proposes to do is simply to say to the province, "If you want so and so, ask for it." That is all there is in the Bill. There is no revolution involved in it. Nothing may come of this Bill if the provinces do not desire it; but if the provinces do desire it, why should they be denied the right of saying what shall take place especially if it is to preserve law and order?

Look at what took place in the United States when prohibition was brought in. After the Bill had been passed at Washington, still known as the 18th Amendment to the Constitution, that Bill had to be not only referred but carried by a two-thirds majority of the States, and more than two-thirds voted for the Bill, showing that those States had full autonomy, even two to one, before the amendment could be brought in.

I am informed by those who perhaps know more about temperance than myself that this Bill should appeal to every friend of temperance. On the other hand, I see here some friends of provincial autonomy to whom it should appeal on that ground.

To give an instance of the abuses that are taking place, I may say that a boat was loaded ostensibly for Mexico, but instead of heading towards the Gulf it headed towards the Great Lakes, and if it had not been shipwrecked it would never have been known that that liquor was to be distributed throughout Canada. I may say that there is no waterway to Mexico except through the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I was also informed that a man came to Montreal the other day and asked a large business man of Cleveland, who has an office in Montreal, if he would pay $35,000 for a carload of whiskey to be delivered in Cleveland. He was to be allowed 12 hours to ascertain that it was not water that was in the bottles, and after he had made his examination, and had had possession of the intoxicants for 12 hours, he could then pay if he was satisfied. I may add that my friend said he had plenty of business in Cleveland, but not in the liquor line, so he had no interest in the proposition.

Since the United States of America has decided to have prohibition, I would ask if it is a friendly act on the part of this country to send liquor that is manufactured in Canada into that country? Such liquor must be sent somewhere, and I do not think many members of this House would deny that at least a certain quantity of Canadian liquor finds its way to the neighbouring Republic. Is that a friendly act? Might it not cause a lot of trouble if it is not stopped? I was reminded a moment ago by a very great friend of labour in this House that 3,000 or 4,000 people were making a living out of the manufacture of whiskey, and that this Bill might endanger the livelihood of those people. Well, it may, but they might perhaps find some other occupation; for instance, they might go farming.

I said that I had amendments to this Bill. Those amendments have been seen by the Attorney General of the province of Ontario, and I am glad to declare here that he agreed with them. The honourable member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) last Session said that the provinces had the right to prohibit, but at that time he said also that he had not had time to look into the matter carefully. The Privy Council would not decide whether or not the provinces had the right to prohibit. It is said the question was not exactly put to them. But many legal gentlemen to whom I have spoken—one was the ex-Minister of Justice, Judge Doherty, who prepared several Temperance Acts—have considerable doubts whether the provinces would not have the right to prohibit, if it was necessary to so legislate in order to maintain law and order, the manufacturing of intoxicating liquors. Legally they may have the power. The question was left open, but Mr. Doherty has strong doubts whether they would not have that right. But when it comes to export, or what is supposed to be export, then Ottawa alone has the control. I may say also that Mr. Francis H. Gisborne, K.C., for many years Parliamentary Counsel in another place, has seen this Bill and finds that it is exactly within the law.

Honourable gentlemen, I have very much pleasure in moving the second reading of this Bill, seconded by the Right Hon. Sir George Foster.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask the mover whether this Bill has been introduced at his own instance, or whether it has been introduced at the suggestion of the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario or any other province.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I am sorry that the honourable gentleman did not listen to the first part of my speech, because the very first thing that I said just now was that last year I brought in an amendment which was on all fours with this Bill, and that amendment, although it was not adopted, was printed in our reports. Many people have asked me to bring in this Bill—friends of temperance, I may say, though I do not want to mention any names; but here is the Social Service Council of Canada, and I think all the most noted divines belonging to the faith of my honourable friend are on this paper. I have had many letters asking me to go on with this Bill, and I have done my duty.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I ask the honourable gentleman if he will answer my question: was the Bill introduced by him at the request of the province of Quebec or any other province of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Certainly not the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Or the province of Ontario, the province of Manitoba, or any other province? The honourable gentleman has evaded my question.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I will reply once more, if it amuses the honourable gentleman —it may not amuse the other members— that last year it was on my own initiative that I proposed that amendment. Is that all you want?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: That is all.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Then I do not need to say any more.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Honourable gentlemen, I was very much moved by the heart-rending speech of the honourable gentleman. I think he is moving in the right direction, but I do not think he is moving quite far enough. I therefore beg leave to move:

That paragraph 157A and paragraph 2 of the Bill be struck out and the following be substituted therefor: "It shall be unlawful to manufacture within Canada any intoxicating liquor other than such as is to be used for sacramental or medicinal purposes."

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: May I ask the honourable gentleman, does that mean that the manufacture of liquors for export is prohibited?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No manufacture of liquor. I think no person can vote against my amendment after listening to the honourable gentleman's speech.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I ask for information.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) may have occasion in Committee to explain his amendment, but surely he will not move it as an amendment to the second reading?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Does the honourable leader suggest that my motion is out of order? If it is, the honourable the Speaker may declare that it is out of order.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The motion the honourable gentleman has made, I take it, is a notice of motion for the committee stage of the Bill. We are now on the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Then I will move another amendment which I think will be in order. I move, seconded by Mr. Pope:

That the Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If the question is now to be put on that motion, I propose to say a few words before it is put.

In the first place, I think it would have been kinder and more in accordance with the doings in Parliament assembled if on a question as important as this my honourable friend had allowed the second reading, and the Bill to go to Committee, and introduced his amendment then.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: To give it the six months hoist?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That, however, is a matter for the consideration of my honourable friend, and he is at perfect liberty to take whatever course he chooses. I am seconding the motion made by the honourable member who introduced this Bill. I would also vote for the first amendment proposed by my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), and I think it would be opening up the lists to a really good expression of opinion on a fair field of fight if we were to take all these matters into Committee of the Whole and debate them there and give all an opportunity.

The Bill which has been introduced by my honourable friend is one which, I understand, has the support of the Social Service Council and the Social Service organization. That means that it has the support, through these as its representatives, of the temperance feeling and sentiment in the prohibition provinces of this Dominion, and that embraces all with the exception of two—Quebec and British Columbia. It has also the sentiment and approval of the people in those two provinces who are not favourable to the particular form of temperance legislation which at present exists in British Columbia and in the province of Quebec, and that is by no means a small proportion of the inhabitants of those two provinces. One cannot tell how many, because it has not been expressed in actual voting numbers; but, arguing from what one knows and what one hears and from experience, there is a strong body of sentiment in both those provinces which is not in accord with the legislation that at present exists in them.

The province of Ontario particularly is interested in this measure, and a petition and representation has been made to the Government of Canada for legislation in the other Chamber to bring about certain amendments to the present law, all of which are designed as a result of experience of enforcing the law in Ontario, for the better enforcement of the will of the people in Ontario and other prohibition provinces. The will of the people in Ontario, to take that province alone, may not be in accordance with the sentiment or the opinion of some honourable gentlemen in the legislative branches of the Federal Parliament, but it is still the will of the province of Ontario, expressed under constitutional methods by the largest and most popular majorities that have ever been obtained in the course of legislation.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Will the honourable gentleman permit me to ask him when the people of Ontario passed on this question?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I have not said that the people of Ontario passed on this particular question. I am speaking generally with reference to the temperance and prohibition sentiment of the people in Ontario as expressed in legislation.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: There should be a plebiscite on this.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Referenda after referenda have been had in the province of Ontario, and those referendums have been progressively sustained by increasing majorities as each has been held. There is always difficulty in the enforcement of new laws. There is difficulty in the enforcement of old laws. It is not a thing peculiar to prohibition laws, as we understand them, that there are violations of those laws, failures of those laws, and multiplied instances in which the law is not absolutely enforced, but in which it is specifically broken. As long as humanity is humanity, that will be the experience of all laws. We have laws against the taking of a man's life by a brother man, a law as old as legislation in our country, and yet we find that that law is repeatedly broken and that murders do take place. That is an instance of an extreme case, but all through the history of legislation and the enforcement of laws which put upon the Statute Book the sentiments of the majority of the people as it grows from time to time we find the same things repeated —that there will be breakages of and failures in the law to reduce to an absolute minimum the vice or the crime against which it is directed. But none of us give up our faith or withdraw our support from such laws, because of individual instances.

The same thing takes place in other countries outside our own in reference to prohibition laws. It is history that after legislation first comes upon the Statute Book through the constitutional methods that are employed in registering the will of the majority working against old customs, old habits, old prejudices. it gradually becomes better and better enforced, until there is an average enforcement, or a better than average enforcement, and in such cases the law is held to be a success. Under democratic government there is no other way by which we can carry on our legislation and our improvement and betterment as we seek for it than through the medium of concentrating the majority will of the people into the Statute Book, and putting behind the force of law the executive and administrative powers of justice.

The temperance people of the province of Ontario—I speak particularly for that province—ask for this legislation, for two reasons: in the first place, that they may be better able to enforce the law. The law in the province of Ontario prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and the executive and administrative machinery of the law in the province is put to the enforcement of that article upon its Statute Book. It is found that there are two influences at work. Along the border between the province of Ontario and the United States—in which country intoxicating liquors are neither allowed to be manufactured nor sold, but which, as far as legislation is concerned, is on the bone-dry principle—there is a certain amount of infringement of the Ontario law through operations conducted upon the other side of the line. Vice versa, through operations conducted from the Ontario side of the line, the enforcement of the prohibitory amendment of the United States is rendered more difficult of enforcement to the authorities of the United States. These two authorities at the present time are striving in co-operation one with the other to assist in the enforcement of the prohibition laws in both countries. Wherever you have a place in which the manufacture and export of intoxicating liquors is authorized by law, there you have an opportunity offered for the breaking of the law. It is legal to manufacture it; it is legal to sell it for export purposes; and under that form of legality it becomes possible, and in multiplied instances the liquor manufactured to be sold for export, and during the passage to the ultimate consignee goes wrong and adds to the difficulty of enforcing the law within the territory through which it passes. That is a common occurrence. That has been the experience in the western provinces, which are under prohibitory enactment. Export warehouses were an institution in the provinces in the middle west, and export warehouses, having the legal authority to establish places of business in which to keep liquors and sell them for export, became centres of activity for bootlegging and all kinds of breakage of and opposition to the law. Well, those establishments have now come to the end of their tether. I think there is no doubt at all that all through those provinces the sentiment has been absolutely in favour of their withdrawal and consequently of a better and easier enforcement of the law.

The temperance people of Ontario, who are backing the enforcement of the law, ask that this legislation may be passed in order that if the Government of Ontario comes to the conclusion that it is better to have no manufacture of intoxicating liquors in that province, machinery may be provided by which they may forward that opinion to the Dominion Government, so that thereafter the manufacture may be stopped, and the manufactories closed up. That is all that is asked, and on these two grounds: first, because of a comity of feeling and of action between the province of Ontario and the United States in the better enforcement of the law in both countries, and secondly, to prevent the province of Ontario becoming a possible centre for the easy breaking of and easy opposition to the law.

So far as I am concerned, I would be quite willing to vote that this should apply to every province in the Dominion, and that it should apply to the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in toto These were my principles during boyhood; they are my principles yet. I have lived for a sufficient number of years to see the dreams of youth and boyhood much more fully wrought into habit and custom and sentiment of the people than I had ever expected to see in this world. Some people say that it is a Utopia, an impossible dream, to think that intoxicating liquors can ever be banished from use in individual countries or from the world as a whole. Very well, I would agree that if you are looking forward to a condition where they never would be used, and where the laws against them would never be broken. that may be true; but I have as firm a belief as a man can have in anything that the progress of the world, in its social sentiment, its business sentiment, its utilitarian sentiment and humanitarian sentiment, is marching right ahead to as effectual a carrying out of enactments against the sale and use of intoxicating liquors as has been attained in any law which is upon the Statute Book to-day.

Some people look for a sudden reversion or change in the United States of America. My opinion is that no man lives to-day in Canada so young that even though he lives to a great age, he will ever see the 18th Amendment of the United States of America blotted from their Statute Book. My own opinion is that in the Dominion of Canada, taking it as a whole, so far as we have gone, the average advantage that has been gained, the average progress that has been made in sobriety and in everything that comes from it, because of the prohibitory enactments of the last ten years, are in evidence and patent to every reasonable man. It only requires time, education, and settling down by custom and habit into the re-enforcement of newly enacted laws, as well as educative and legislative work, to bring about the period when we shall have the maximum of sobriety and the minimum of intemperance. No man lives, who has the good of his kind at heart, who does not hail with joy and with hope and satisfaction the prospect of that time.

We may think that in some cases these laws are strong and severe, and that they hamper individual rights. I grant that. They hamper individual right. But society would never have begun to organize and improve itself if it had not been upon the principle that progress must be by the restraint of individual right, and the coalescing of the general effort for the good of the whole. It is impossible for a man in civilized society to stand for naked, natural, individual rights and privileges, and yet to be a member of society. We must give over certain things to gain the general advantage which is best for the whole.

Now, I have kept honourable members much longer than I should have in making these rambling remarks, but I have been led to do so because I thought perhaps my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) would let the Bill go to Committee, before shutting off the discussion.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, we have heard a very clear statement of the views of those who feel that it is possible to make people virtuous in this world by legal enactments. That conception, I believe, is peculiar to the United States. It is there that blue laws flourish; it is there that the legislator thinks that an enactment can be found to cure every evil and every sin which contaminates humanity. My right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has expressed the opinion that our children will not live long enough to see the Volstead Act repealed. Possibly not, but I think the honourable gentleman has heard, as I have, that there will be a tempering of that Act by a declaration of what is an alcoholic beverage and what is not. For my part I have always stood and still stand in favour of the liberty of the individual. I think this is the feeling which pervades the whole of Europe. I have seen no sign in any state or nation in Europe of an evolution towards prohibition.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I am afraid my honourable friend's reading has not been very extensive.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that I have travelled fairly extensively through Europe, and I have found no sign of any prohibitive feelings. I believe that respect for human liberty will prevail longer than the Volstead Act in the United States.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Vodka was stopped in Russia.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am ready to recognize that some limitation should be placed on the use of alcohol, but I doubt that our great grandchildren will ever see any state in Europe prohibit the use of wine or beer.

Now, coming to the bill of my honourable friend, I regret that it has been introduced by an honourable member from the province of Quebec. I regret it because the province of Quebec has taken a certain stand.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It does not look sincere.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It has taken a certain stand, and the vast majority is, I think, perfectly satisfied with the limitations with which the disposal of alcohol has been surrounded. Outside of Quebec, in what provinces are there distilleries and breweries? Are there many outside of Ontario? Whether there are some in the Maritime provinces or on the Pacific Coast I cannot say. But what bulks largely in our minds just now is the fact that there are distilleries and breweries in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: There are in all the provinces.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: In the Maritime provinces too.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, I do not know to what extent. However, I would have preferred to see this Bill submitted by a representative of a province that would be affected by the proposed legislation. Speaking for myself alone, I would have preferred that the legislature of a province, or its executive, should have petitioned the Canadian Parliament, or the Federal Government, for such legislation. I do not believe that such a petition has been laid before the Federal Government. This proposed legislation is not endorsed by even the provincial cabinet or the legislature of Ontario.

There is another very large question which would have to be solved in my mind before I would ally myself with this proposition. There is the question of trade as governed by our federal laws. But I will not enter that field just now. I am not favourable to the idea of jumping forward and enacting the proposed legislation at this moment, when no province has officially asked for it.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I intend to take up the attention of the House for only a very few minutes. I was surprised last year and I am surprised this year, at the action taken by my honourable friend from De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain). Whether he has taken this action for the purpose of furthering prohibition in Canada, or whether he has done so in order to put all the manufacturing of liquor into the province of Quebec and the province of British Columbia, I do not know. But I think he was fully as honest in bringing forward the Bill as was my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) in proposing that it should apply to all manufacture of liquor. I do not believe either of them was in earnest in his proposition. But I do feel this, honourable gentlemen—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, I rise to a point of order. You must not impute motives. There is a very stringent rule in this respect, and I call upon the Chair to ask the honourable gentleman not to impute motives.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I rise to a point of order. I protest with the same sincerity as my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen,—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Take it back.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: If I have been unjust to my honourable friend, the great temperance advocate from Quebec, I have no hesitation in taking it back; and my withdrawal applies also to my honourable friend from Hamilton. But in all seriousness, honourable gentlemen, I think that to give this Bill the six months' hoist is not a fair way to deal with the proposition that my honourable friend has brought forward. Never mind with what intentions it has been brought forward, it appeals to the great majority of the people in seven of the provinces of the Dominion, and, as my right honourable friend across the way has said, there are a large number of people in the other two provinces in favour of it as well. I agree with every word that the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has stated. I may add that in the province from which I come it commands the support of the great majority of the people, and I think it should be fairly dealt with. I do not think that this House would be doing a just or proper thing, or treating the people of the country properly, if it did not allow this Bill to go to the second reading and be referred to committee of the whole House. Then whatever opinion the majority of this House holds will be carried into effect.

Some Hon. SENATORS: Question.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I promise to be brief; but apropos of the remarks of the honourable member from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff), it would seem to me to be proper to remember this fact, that it is usual for legislation passed by Canadian Parliaments to have been at least discussed in the country in order that the wishes of the people might be fairly understood and an effort made to interpret them by legislation. There is an absolute absence of any indication on the part of the people of Canada, in any of the provinces that I know of, that it is their desire to have enacted a law of this kind; and until such time as the people of the province to be affected give some indication of such a desire, it seems to me improper indeed for the Senate of Canada to initiate legislation of this kind. If it were introduced in the House of Commons, it would be a different matter. Reverting to the time of King John, one is inclined to wonder whether or not it becomes the prerogative and duty of this House to hand legislation out to the country and say, "This is what you must take."

With reference to the right of this Parliament, let me cite what might be termed an analogous case. Suppose, for example, the provinces attempted to intrude upon the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. The second clause of section 91 of the British North America Act provides that "the regulation of trade and commerce" shall fall exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. Likewise, under the second clause of section 92 it is defined that there shall be exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature "direct taxation within the province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes." Suppose the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec were to introduce a Bill proposing, in anticipation, that whenever the Federal Government desired to take away their right of taxation they would concur in such legislation. It would appear ridiculous, of course; and it does seem to me that we should be in an equally ridiculous position to pass legislation of this sort before such time as the people concerned, or at least the provincial government concerned, indicated a desire for the enactment of such legislation.

Now, just a word, honourable gentlemen, with reference to temperance legislation itself. I think it is true to say that I have supported temperance legislation in every referendum that has been brought forward in Canada, wherever I have happened to be located when it was under consideration. But I do say this, in all seriousness, that it is possible to make progress too rapidly in this respect. People cannot be made good by the enactment of laws. People do resent infringements upon their personal liberty. I have witnessed the experience of the working out of prohibition legislation in the state of Maine. I was a resident of that state for nearly seven years, when employed on the Canadian Pacific railway—and I desire to say to you most frankly that I saw more drunkenness in the state of Maine during the period that I lived there than I ever saw in the province of Ontario under the license system.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Why, then, do the liquor people want to do away with that law under which more liquor is sold than under any temperance law?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: In reply to my honourable friend's question, I would say that most of the liquor that was drunk in that state was not made in any distillery. And, incidentally, that is what would occur if the distilling business were cut off suddenly in this country; you would have moonshine whiskey and poison dispensed to the people instead of something that has passed inspection and been made under sanitary and otherwise proper conditions.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL: It is illegal to sell what good whiskey is made; so you have to take bootleg or nothing.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Quite right. As to the United States, reference has been made to the application and the permanency of the Volstead Act. Let me give you a personal experience. I was in one of the large southern states a little over a year ago, attending a convention. I arrived there at five o'clock in the morning. About half-past six in the morning there was a tap on my door, and I was asked if I wanted anything. I said, "What have you?" The answer was, "The best of Scotch whiskey." I said, "What are you asking for it?" I was told, "Five dollars a bottle, but you must take a dozen bottles. We do not sell it in less quantity than a suitcase full." I said: "Thank you, that is more than I could consume; therefore I will not have any." But does not that appeal to one as furnishing food for thought on the question whether prohibition legislation is really prohibiting, when a man, instead of stepping in and buying a drink for 10 cents, must buy a suitcase-full—a dozen bottles at $5.00 a bottle? These and similar points ought to be given most careful consideration before we rush forward and enact legislation that will result in law being held in contempt and disobeyed in a wholesale way. There is, to my mind, nothing that brings respect for either religion or law, in any country, into contempt so quickly as to see it disobeyed every day by those to whom we look for example. We see it every day in the province of Ontario. It is a byword, and we know that liquor is being manufactured, sold and used clandestinely and unlawfully. Honourable gentlemen, I would be glad if it were impossible to manufacture intoxicating liquor—if the law of fermentation could be abolished, well and good; but I think we should be well advised to proceed cautiously and slowly, and to watch carefully the developments that arise from the legislation that has already been passed, and to pass further legislation only when it appears to be the will and wish of the people who are to be affected by it. I therefore desire to support the amendment as submitted by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton.

Hon. L. McMEANS: Honourable gentlemen, I rise, not to discuss the merits of this Bill, but simply to point out to the honourable gentlemen from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turiff): that he is in error in his statement that the province of Saskatchewan, which he represents, is overwhelmingly in favour of this Bill. In answer to that statement, I would point out to him that in the province of Manitoba, where we have had some experience in prohibition, the local Government are to-day submitting to the people a new Bill to provide for Government control, and a vote is to take place in June.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The honourable gentleman might mention that that is being done on petition of the people.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Yes, on petition of the people. I think that the previous vote in the province of Manitoba represented less than one-tenth of the total inhabitants of the province, and the petition that is to-day being presented to the Legislature is from over 70,000 people. The vote, as I have stated, is to take place next June. So, when the honourable gentleman says that the province of Saskatchewan is overwhelmingly in favour of a Bill of the nature of that which has been introduced by the honourable gentleman from De Lanaudiére (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), I think that probably he is mistaken or has overstated the case. I am not saying anything either for or against the Bill, but I will say this—that if you go into the province of Saskatchewan, or into the city of Edmonton, or into any of our large cities, you will find that liquor is sold openly. There is no question about it. You can go into the city of Winnipeg and buy beer over the bar of any hotel in the place. They charge you a high price for it. They say to you: "Of course, you have to pay the price, because we are fined about once or twice every three weeks." Until the time comes that the people of Manitoba have stated that they are absolutely in favour of the prohibition that they have at the present time—until I know what the people say, I cannot vote for this Bill.

The Senate divided on the amendment of Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton, and the same was agreed to on the following division:

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 16, an Act to provide for further advances to the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill has for its object the authorization of a loan of $5,000,000 to the Corporation of the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners. We are all aware of the considerable progress that has taken place in the movement of grain and other commodities from the port of Vancouver. This movement is of recent date. In 1921 only 1,000,000 bushels of wheat moved from that port, but last season the amount jumped to between 12,000,000 and 14,000,000 bushels, and I am informed that on the 1st of January there were contracts for 5,000,000 bushels to be moved from that port during the following months.

Undoubtedly the opening of the Panama Canal has had considerable to do with that development. During the year before that canal was opened, only 132 ships entered the port of Vancouver. The record for the years from 1914 to 1920 does not afford a fair showing of the possibilities of the port because of the shortage of steamers, the heavy freight rates, and the blockade in the Panama Canal, which stopped traffic along that canal for nearly two years. In 1920 ocean rates became a little more normal, 333 ships entering Vaucouver harbour in that year. In 1921 there were 496 ships, of which 103 passed through the Panama Canal. For the nine months of 1922, 509 ships came to dock at Vancouver. In 1921 the imports from Europe through Vancouver. were 20,416 tons; in 1922 they were 149,553 tons; while the exports from Vancouver to Europe in 1921 were 154,513 tons, and last year they were 470,272 tons. There was last year such a large movement of grain through the port of Vancouver that orders were given to stop the shipping westward of grain from Calgary in order to relieve the blockade. If there had been adequate facilities at Vancouver during last autumn and this winter there would undoubtedly have been a much larger movement of wheat and other freight from Alberta through that port.

All these developments, I believe, justify the Government in opening a credit for that port, as it has done for eastern ports, by advancing to the Harbour Commissioners the necessary amount to organize their port for the trade that is offering.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: Will the honourable leader of the House kindly indicate for what facilities the money is to be advanced? What are the objects?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There had already been opened in 1919 to the Vancouver Harbour Commission a credit of $5,000,000, which was utilized as follows: $300,000 was paid to redeem bonds that had previously been issued; property was acquired for a site for the Ballantyne pier, which is now being erected, to the amount of $672,900; and the following expenditures were made:

Repairing foundations and dredging, berthing and turning basin for the main pier..	$ 512,095
Work to December 31, 1922, on construction of pier and sheds..	2,814,871
Engineering and contingencies..	121,583
Development of other harbour property and acquisition of plant and tools for harbour work..	35,319
Interest during construction charged to capital account..	68,032

This makes a total of $4,524,800, leaving a balance upon that credit opened in 1919 of $475,200, which is available for present development.

The Ballantyne pier is not altogether completed, and, besides absorbing this $475,200, it will require to complete it the sum of $1,760,765, which will be advanced upon the present Bill if it passes Parliament.

It is proposed to add to the present elevator, which has a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels, an extension which will accommodate 500,000 bushels, bringing the capacity to 1,750,000 bushels. That would cost some $400,000, but the plans are not closed nor accepted, because they are subject to the study of experts who will pass upon them, and to their adoption by the Department of Marine.

Then, another elevator may be built at a place on the Ballantyne Pier, suggested by the Vancouver Commissioners having a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels, and costing $2,000,000.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Is the construction of that additional elevator contemplated in the estimate you are bringing before the House in connection with the Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, it is contemplated, but the plans are not yet prepared, and the Harbour Board will have to pass upon those plans, which will then have to be reviewed by the Department of Marine and sanctioned by an Order in Council.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend apparently has a large reserve of information which he is giving out as questions are propounded to him. May I, before the second reading is submitted to the House, ask for certain information? I presume in the first place that this is a loan?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And that the Government has some expectation of the interest, at least, being paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It has.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We have been extremely unfortunate, it seems to me, in these harbour loans throughout the whole of Canada, with the exception of those which the Government of Canada has made from time to time to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. Now, it seems to me that my honourable friend's information is defective in respect to the revenue. What revenues are expected by the Harbour Commissioners of Vancouver to meet the obligations which they are now contracting? It is comparatively easy for the Government of Canada to make a loan of $5,000,000 and hand the money over to a Board of Harbour Commissioners and tell them to spend it; but the chief consideration is, what sources of revenue will the Harbour Commissioners have, from a proper expenditure of this money, for the purpose of meeting the obligation to the Dominion Government? That will largely depend, of course, upon the personnel of the Commission itself. Unfortunately too much political sympathy enters into the appointment of Harbour Commissioners, entirely irrespective of the question of their ability to make the undertaking pay. I would assume that the administration of a Harbour Commission is quite as important as that of any of the great commercial institutions which are controlled by boards of directors or managers, and that the personnel of the Commission itself should be men of the highest business attainments. Can my honourable friend say who are the Harbour Commissioners for the port of Vancouver?

I understand that a gentleman has been placed on the Commission who was in a small business in the interior of British Columbia, and who possessed the necessary sympathies with one member of the present Government, so as to make way for him by resigning his seat, and as a compensation therefore was made a member of that Board. I should like to know who are the other gentlemen composing that Board. Are they men of business ability and capacity, with the knowledge necessary to properly expend $5,000,000, and with the experience required to administer a great port such as that of Vancouver must necessarily be? Or are we simply handing over this money to three or four or half-a-dozen favourites of this Government, or of any other Government, entirely irrespective of their business capacity to assume all the responsibilities and obligations of so great an undertaking—not only the spending of this $5,000,000 but the administration of loans which will be made from time to time, and the managing of the port as well? My honourable friend should give that information to the House, namely, who are the Board, and what are the sources of revenue on which we may depend?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may state to my honourable friend that I have not the slightest idea of the names or the standing of the members of that Board. If my honourable friend does not object to the principle of the Bill we might take the second reading, and I think it will be easy for me to procure the names of the Commissioners before we go into Committee. There are possibly some gentlemen from British Columbia sitting in this Chamber who could furnish my honourable friend with all these names. Perhaps he himself has the names unofficially, and is simply seeking to get them on Hansard in order to discuss them. I cannot give my honourable friend the information at present.

In answer to the question of the honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche): "What are the intentions of the Harbour Commission of Vancouver as to the expenditure of the $5,000,000?" I have spoken of increasing the capacity of the present elevator and the building of another elevator of 2,000,000 bushels capacity. There are also the following expenditures:

Log booming ground	$171,000
Marine ferry terminal	155,375
Ballantyne stage yards	76,000
Railway equipment	81,000
Strips of land adjacent present Government elevator	50,000
Lumber assembling wharf	190,000
Grenville Island Harbour	27,000
Overhead approach to Ballantyne pier	65,000
Contingencies	23,860

As to the sources of revenue, of course the port dues take care of the interest.

Hon. Mr. REID: Do the items which the honourable gentlemen has just read amount to $5,000,000?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend will allow me, I will make the addition and tell him. The addition which I have made of these figures—they are in small type, and I confess I may have made an error—amounts to $3,239,235.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like the honourable gentleman to bring down a detailed statement of the whole expenditure of $5,000,000 when this Bill is considered in Committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman knows that these amounts are granted individually.

Hon. Mr. REID: I am not asking the question with a view to opposing the passage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will procure all the information the Department has as to the intended expenditure. I may say that the receipts for last year were extremely satisfactory, amounting to $423,307.98, while the expenditures totalled $131,240.75.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Have they paid the interest on the debentures already issued?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, because the Board is authorized to capitilize the interest on the loan. There is a considerable increase in the revenue over that of the preceding year. The increase of receipts over expenditures on operation amounted to $292,067.23. The expenditure on revenue account showed a decrease of $34,123.16; so that, if this port develops as it seems destined to do, I would look for perfect security for the interest on the loans.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I suppose the Board makes an annual report to the Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is obliged to do so.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If a report has been issued, as I suppose it has, it would be of benefit to us to have it on the table here. I for one would like to see the individual items that went to make up both the receipts and the expenditures.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will ask for that from the Department.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Can the honourable gentleman inform me what the proposed railway connection expenditure that he has mentioned is for? My information is that the present Government elevator is not connected with the Canadian National railways, but only with the Canadian Pacific railway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is so.

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Is the amount mentioned to be expended upon making a connection with the Canadian National?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would rather postpone my answer until we go into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—PROGRESS REPORTED

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill 7, an Act to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Hon. Mr. Blain in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend asked me why power was not given to the magistrates or courts in the organized provinces to try persons charged with having committed offences in the unorganized territories, instead of authorizing magistrates from the unorganized territories to conduct trials in the provinces. I find that there is a fairly complete answer to be found in section 586 of the Criminal Code, which reads as follows:

All offences committed in any part of Canada not in a province duly constituted as such and not in the Yukon territory may be inquired of and tried within any district, country or place in any province so constituted or in the Yukon Territory as may be most convenient.

2. Such offences shall be within the jurisdiction of any court having jurisdiction over offences of the like nature committed within the limits of such district, county or place.

3. Such court shall proceed to trial, judgment and execution or other punishment for any such offence in the same manner as if such offence had been committed within the district, county or place where the trial is had.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The question that I was desirous of submitting to my honourable friend was this. If a stipendiary magistrate were given jurisdiction to try a case within a province, in what way could he make use of the judicial machinery of that province in the trial of the case? Of course, if there is such a provision in the Criminal Code as has been pointed out, apparently the trial is treated as one within the province though the cause of action has arisen outside the province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

On section 1—jurisdiction and powers of stipendiaries:

Hon. Mr. REID: Not being a lawyer, I must confess that I hardly understand this clause. Would not this give a stipendiary magistrate of any province power to try a case in any other province? Might not an Ontario magistrate try a case in Manitoba, or vice versa?

I would like to ask with regard to another point. Does this Bill not give a stipendiary magistrate authority to try a case with a jury all of whom might not be British subjects? I understand that this Bill is brought in to allow a magistrate in Alberta or Saskatchewan to try cases arising in the Territories adjoining those provinces; but from reading the clause it is not clear that their powers are limited to that. It seems to me that it really means that a magistrate of one province is given power to try a case in a province in which he does not reside, and also to try it without every one of the jurors being a British subject.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If I had a map of the northern district, I could show my honourable friend the necessity for allowing the Department of Justice discretion to send a magistrate to any part of the Northwest Territories, or even down to the border of the provinces that adjoin the unorganized territories, in order to try some of these cases. At the present moment there are Eskimos on Herschell Island, on the western side of the mouth of the Mackenzie River, awaiting trial for murder. There is there a proper guard house in which to keep these Eskimos, and the nucleus of a population which is sufficient to form a jury; but the Department of Justice is informed that it is doubtful whether a jury of British subjects can be found at certain times of the year. This form of Act has been adopted so that twelve jurors may be gathered together to try these Eskimos.

Hon. Mr. REID: Admitting all that, I hesitate to put such a provision into the law. Even these Eskimos are entitled to British justice. Suppose a stipendiary magistrate should go away off to the north and find one English-speaking person to serve on the jury. All the others might be Russian or Italian or of any other nationality, and unable to read or write or understand English; yet they would be qualified to act as jurors. The result would be that the whole matter would be practically in the hands of the magistrate himself. A British subject, even though he is an Indian or an Eskimo, would not get the same justice that he would get in any other part of Canada. In any other part of Canada, as I understand the law, he would be entitled to be tried by a jury composed of either English or French-speaking citizens. Under this provision all the jurors may be foreigners, and the prisoner would be entirely in the hands of the stipendiary magistrate. I wish to do what I can to assist the Department of Justice in carrying out the law, but at the same time I wish to emphasize the two points that I have just mentioned. If he cannot be given that where he is, then he should be brought to some place where twelve British subjects can be got to try him and give him justice.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is, I think, the object of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. REID: No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. REID: A clause in the Bill says:

Provided that a person shall be qualified to serve as a juror although he is not a British subject.

To me at least it is quite plain that the stipendiary magistrate can take twelve Russians, who do not understand one word of English, to try the accused. So, as I have said, a British subject, be he an Eskimo or of any other race, should be given the same treatment and justice as is given in any other part of Canada. That is one point.

The other point is that it should be made quite plain that if a stipendiary magistrate is to be allowed to try cases of this kind he may try them only in the Northwest Territories and shall not have jurisdiction in the provinces.

A third point is this. I understand that this Bill is being passed now in order to permit of certain citizens of Canada, British subjects, being tried for murder. Their lives are at stake. I do not know what a stipendiary magistrate can do in the Northwest, but in Ontario at least, as I understand the law and legal gentlemen can correct me if I am wrong —if a citizen is accused of murder, he is tried by a high court judge, who understands the law, and not by a stipendiary magistrate. Is the Eskimo to be treated differently from a citizen in Ontario or any other part of the Dominion? British justice in the Northwest Territories should be exactly the same as it is in Ontario, and I do not feel that for the sake of saving some money, or any such purpose, an Eskimo or any other citizen whose life is at stake should have his rights left unprotected. Instead of making it perhaps easy to convict him, we should place him in the same position as he would be in if he were in any other part of the country.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government what is the qualification. This clause says:

Provided that a person shall be qualified to serve as a juror although he is not a British subject.

Now, what is the qualification for a juror in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is the opinion of the Department of Justice that the enactment against which my honourable friend protests is already in the Northwest Territories Act. Section 44 of the Northwest Territories Act, Chapter 62 of the Revised Statutes of 1906, gives the judge unlimited jurisdiction in choosing jurors. It provides:

Persons required as jurors for a trial shall be summoned by a stipendiary from among such male persons as he thinks suitable in that behalf; and the jury required on such trial shall be called from among the persons so summoned as such jurors, and shall be sworn by the stipendiary who presides at the trial.

Hon. Mr. REID: Must they not be British subjects, according to that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not in the opinion of the Department of Justice. The effect of the proposed legislation is simply to carry the application of the Northwest Territories Act into a neighbouring province and have the Act applied by a stipendiary magistrate appointed for the administration of justice in those territories. I am told that it is a judge of the Superior Court at Edmonton—I am subject to correction when I say "Superior"—who has been appointed, not recently, but some time ago, to exercise jurisdiction as a stipendiary over the whole Northwest Territories—the unorganized territories. This will allow him to do west of the mouth of the Mackenzie river, on Herschell Island, what he has the right to do east of the Mackenzie river, in the unorganized territories.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If it is so plain, then will the honourable leader state why the Bill does not simply extend the jurisdiction, instead of adding all this amendment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I submit to this Chamber the legislation just as it comes from the other Chamber. The clause seems to be fairly clear. Honourable gentlemen must remember that this is an amendment to the Northwest Territories Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, to which it is proposed to add, immediately after Section 59 thereof, the following section:

Every stipendiary shall, with respect to any criminal offence committed or charged to have been committed within the Northwest Territories, have and may exercise, not only within the Northwest Territories, but also in any part of Canada not within the Northwest Territories,—

This legislation will enable the Department to shift its magistrate from the Yukon to the Saskatchewan or Manitoba border.

—but also in any part of Canada not within the Northwest Territories, any or all, the jurisdiction and powers conferred upon him by sections thirty-six to fifty-nine, both inclusive, of this Act, or which he otherwise possesses with relation to the administration of criminal justice; and all statutory and other provisions of the law which would be applicable with respect to criminal proceedings within the Northwest Territories shall in like manner apply with respect to proceedings instituted or to be instituted or prosecuted under the authority of this section at any place not within the Northwest Territories: Provided that a person shall be qualified to serve as a juror although he is not a British subject.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government if it is not a fact that in every province, including Alberta and Saskatchewan, and in the Yukon, the jurors in the case of a murder trial must be British subjects.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Offhand I should say that the legislation in the Northwest provinces would most likely be the same as in Ontario and Quebec, where it is essential for a juror to be a British subject.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If jurors are not required to be British subjects, why not provide that they must be able to speak the French or English language?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would ask my honourable friend if it is not somewhat dangerous to jeopardize the chances of a trial on account of a technicality, when it is necessary to send a magistrate hundreds of miles.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Thousands of miles.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Perhaps thousands of miles. I was told by the Deputy Minister of Justice that it was in that region that some officers of the Mounted Police were murdered some time ago by their charges. The Department of Justice has felt that the best spot at which to try the accused is where they are to-day, on Herschell Island, in the Yukon Territory.

Hon. Mr. REID: In my judgment the difficulty could be overcome in this way. If you are sending a stipendiary magistrate out to try a case, you must send half-a-dozen or a dozen men along with him. He cannot go alone The difficulty could be overcome by selecting a number of men to accompany him as jurors. I do not like to see any person put on trial for his life by a jury composed of perhaps a lot of foreigners. Then there is this other danger, which might prevent justice being done. You might have on the jury, as I have stated, persons from a foreign country, such as Russia, who would not understand the law or the proceedings in the case. When a stipendiary magistrate is going to try a case and must take a number of persons with him, it would be much better, even if it did cost considerably, to have twelve British subjects who could give the accused a fair trial. It would probably be necessary to take six or eight men in any event, and the magistrate would not have to take many more if the men accompanying him went out as jurors. Men could be selected who would not have other business to attend to, and they could go and render an honest verdict in a case of that kind.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I am inclined to think there is a good deal in the objection raised by the honourable member (Hon. Mr. Reid), and I would suggest to the honourable leader of the Government that he consider whether it might not be better to enable the magistrate to reduce the number of jurors.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You would not want it below six. That is the number under the Northwest Territories Act.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: It is six now.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You would not want it less than that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The honourable leader might consider whether it would not be better to have the accused tried by four or even three British subjects than to render the accused liable to be tried by a jury composed entirely of foreigners. Or, if suitable jurymen cannot be found, would it not be better to allow the stipendiary magistrate to try the accused rather than have him tried by foreigners?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I regret very much that I cannot follow my honourable friends in their objection to this legislation. It seems to me to be of a very salutary character. As I understand it, it permits of a stipendiary magistrate holding the trial of the accused within the province that may be the most convenient to reach. Take for instance a criminal offence committed in the Arctic Circle. It is surely undesirable that the machinery of a court should be established at so inconvenient a place as one within the Arctic Circle for the purpose of trying the accused. The object of this Bill is to permit the trial of the accused to take place in the province most convenient to the point where the offence has been committed. Under the Northwest Territories Act the stipendiary magistrate has all the jurisdiction of a Superior Court judge. It is only of recent years, in fact, that the stipendiary magistrates of the Northwest Territories have been designated as judges. Their jurisdiction was not increased, practically.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: In 1887.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The criminal jurisdiction exercisable by a judge in any of the Western provinces to-day is the same as it was prior to the erection of provinces in the Northwest Territories, when criminal justice was administered by stipendiary magistrates. It seems to me it is very desirable to bring the accused within the boundaries of one of those provinces and to have the stipendiary magistrate who is designated to try the case make use of the machinery of the court of that particular province.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It is the jury we are thinking about.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The jury would be that provided by the laws of that province for the trial of criminal cases.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It does not say so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, that is it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is as I take it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If it said that, I think it would be most satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have read clause 44 of the Northwest Territories Act, which provides that:

> Persons required as jurors for a trial shall be summoned by a stipendiary from among such male persons as he thinks suitable in that behalf; and the jury required on such trial shall be called from among the persons so summoned as such jurors, and shall be sworn by the stipendiary who presides at the trial.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen will keep in view, that each province of course has authority to legislate with regard to its own jury system. For instance, in the province of Alberta our juries are composed of six—

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I quite follow the honourable gentleman's argument; it seems to me most reasonable; but if the accused is to be tried, we will say, in the province of Alberta, why should the judge have the right to pick the jury? There are plenty of men to try the accused in this case as in any other.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not in that region.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If the accused is tried in the province of Alberta, he should be tried by a jury according to the law of that province. But under this Bill the juror need not be able to speak the English language; he need not be a British subject. He may be hand-picked by the magistrate. Now, there is no sense in having this made the law outside the Northwest Territories themselves. If the accused is to be tried in Alberta, why should he not be tried by a jury according to the law of Alberta, or by the judge himself?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the honourable gentleman must know that in those northern regions there are posts at which intelligent men will be available, from whom the selection may be made—for instance, men connected with the Hudson's Bay Company.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I quite agree.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or men may be taken from Revillon Freres, who are Frenchmen from France and are not British subjects. Men of other races may be selected, but the judge will decide as to their fitness, and it seems to me that there is a guarantee for the accused when the judge has to pass upon the fitness of the jurors.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But the point that I make is this. That is all very well, and is perhaps reasonable, if the man is tried in the Northwest Territories or in the Arctic Circle; but where the man is tried in the province of Alberta it is different.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is mistaken. He is under the impression that the accused will be brought down to an organized town where there is a court, and that there will be a tribunal. The intention is to utilize this machinery in order to try some of those offenders in the Northwest Territories at the spot most convenient to their homes, because they are entitled to certain witnesses, and it would be a hardship to drive them down to one of the provincial capitals unless the whole tribe were brought with the accused, if they are Eskimos. The idea is to send the magistrate as far north as possible to a place where he will find a guardhouse, etc., and will be able to hold court. That is the reason, as I have mentioned, why this legislation is not specially drafted to cover the particular case on Herschell Island, in the Yukon Territory, or just bordering on the Northwest Territories. I went last week to the Department of Justice to obtain some information, and the Deputy Minister pointed out to me the outlying parts of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba to which it will actually be necessary to endeavour to send magistrates to try other accused persons, and he explained that that was the reason why it was desired to obtain the general power to enter any of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Is not all of Canada except the provinces in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No: there is the Yukon Territory.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: There is the unorganized territory?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, and there is Ungava, which is unorganized. I doubt that it falls under the Northwest Territories Act.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I thought Ungava was part of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I think Ungava is under Quebec jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Ungava is part of Quebec, is it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Is there any part of Canada which is not embraced either in the provinces or in the territories?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The Yukon is a separate territory.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It is a territory, but what I want to get at here is this. Suppose a man commits a murder in the most remote part of a province. He must be tried by the same kind of tribunal as would try a man who committed a similar crime in any other part of that province. If a man who is charged with a crime in the Territories is to be tried in a province for the sake of convenience, it seems to me he should be tried by the same tribunal—I speak of a jury now—as any other man in the province in which he is tried. There could be nothing unreasonable about that. I understand from the honourable leader that the intention is to apply this only to cases outside of a province. If that is so, it should be made clear, but once you bring a man into a province he should be able to get a jury like any other man there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Perhaps my honourable friend may not recall that the Northwest Territories are defined by the Northwest Territories Act, and this is an amendment to that Act. The provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were carved out of what was originally known as the Northwest Territories, the legislation for which then covered the whole of the Territories. I apprehend that this legislation would only have relation to what, under the Northwest Territories Act, is known as the Northwest Territories. It does not deal, for instance, with the Yukon Territory.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It does not say that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is an amendment to the Northwest Territories Act.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It says "in any part of Canada."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is where the trial takes place, but the offence must be committed in the Northwest Territories.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But the point I am making is this, that when a man is charged with the commission of a crime committed in the Northwest Territories, he may under this amendment be brought, for convenience, to be tried in one of the provinces. That seems to me quite reasonable; but once he is brought within a province there should be no right of the Crown to have him tried by other than a jury according to the law of that province. Let the magistrate try him, but let him call a jury which is qualified by the law of the province. It seems to me that this Bill is intended to apply only to trials which take place in the Territories, or in some other part of Canada outside of a province; but in the case of a party tried in a province surely there is no necessity for any special legislation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, there is none, because the Northwest Territories Act, provides outside of this legislation, now for the holding of a trial in any province under the laws of that province.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But this Act is going to change that law.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, it will allow of the holding of a trial within the borders of a province, including the Yukon, and the laws of the Northwest Territories will be carried over the border and applied to that trial.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is what I object to. I object to a man who is not a British subject being put on a jury in a province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend speaks of a province as one fairly organized, such as the older provinces, or the new provinces in their populous centres; but, as I have stated, there are hundreds of miles of practically unorganized territory within a province which offenders in the Northwest Territories might have to cross in order to reach an organized seat of justice.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Well, they ought to be brought there.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the Department of Justice sees very great difficulties, because it will mean the carrying not only of the accused, but of all the witnesses, to that point. Hence the Department, having weighed the pros and cons, feel that some trials could take place which would not be very costly, comparatively, and which would yet allow full justice to those accused of committing offences in the Northwest Territories, who may be brought to a point on the border, or perhaps inside a province, and tried in accordance with the laws that they have violated. There is a case to be tried within a few miles of the border of the Northwest Territories, but it happens to be on an island which belongs to the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That will not be in a province.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will be in a Territory. This Bill is proposed because the Department of Justice realize the very great difficulty they may meet in having the necessary jurors who will be British subjects. It is for Parliament and this Chamber to decide whether they will allow of such a departure from the general rules.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let it stand until to-morrow, and get an opinion on it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: As the case may involve the life of one of our citizens, I would like to say a few words. There are other parts of Canada that are just as hard to reach as the Northwest Territories; for instance, Ungava, on James Bay, or the Hudson Bay. You will bring an Indian all the way into the province of Quebec so that he may be properly tried; he will have a solicitor to defend him, and a jury of citizens who are English-speaking, or who can understand either English or the French language. That is what happens in another part of Canada that is just as far distant as the territory in this particular case. The matter is serious, for this reason: Suppose an Indian were brought in guilty by a jury, probably not one of whom understands the English language, or knows what is going on. Then the sentence would be carried out right in the Territory, and there would not be any appeal, and of course, the Indian would suffer the penalty of the law, possibly being hanged. In any other part of the country there would of course be a chance to appeal. The accused would have the advantage, as others have, of investigation on the question of insanity, or on other grounds; but, as I understand, this man would be tried without having a solicitor to defend him, probably by men who do not understand our language, who are not British subjects, and he may be executed without a possible chance of appeal. I do not wish to oppose legislation that would facilitate the work of the Department of Justice, but I believe that if we are going to try Indians or British subjects we should give them a sufficient number of jurors—I am quite satisfied with six good British subjects—and we should send along a man to defend the accused and give him all the advantages that a citizen in any other part of Canada would enjoy if he were in a similar situation and had not a dollar with which to defend himself. That procedure may cost a few dollars more, but I believe that is what should be done.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Another consideration is that this is one of the most important trials under the jurisdiction of the Crown; it is the trial of a man for his life, and we should not say: "Oh, well, it is going to be convenient for the Government; it is going to be convenient for the Department of Justice." We should be perfectly sure that the man has a fair chance, and we should see that a judge goes up there and selects a proper jury, and not simply one of people just because they are human beings—for that is all it would mean. We surround men in civilized parts with every possible safeguard, giving them the right to challenge the jury, and every possible presumption in their favour; but it is proposed to sweep all that away in this case, simply for the convenience of the Crown. No question of money or convenience should permit of that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let the Committee rise. There is not a quorum present.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Before the Committee rises I may be allowed to put on the Minutes the Act that I have before me, the Northwest Territories Act. I am referring to section 38, which provides for summary trials of certain offences by a stipendiary magistrate without a jury. Section 39 reads as follows:

> When any person is charged with a criminal offence not within the last preceding section, and which is not otherwise by any law made summarily triable without the consent of the accused, the charge shall be heard, tried, and determined by a stipendiary with the intervention of a jury: Provided that in any case the accused may, with his own consent, be tried by a stipendiary in a summary way and without the intervention of a jury.

Then section 44 says:

> Persons required as jurors for a trial shall be summoned by a stipendiary from among such male persons as he thinks suitable in that behalf; and the jury required on such trial shall be called from among the persons so summoned as such jurors, and shall be sworn by the stipendiary who presides at the trial.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They must be British subjects.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not under the Northwest Territories Act.

Progress was reported.

GOVERNMENT HOLIDAYS

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

1. What are the days of the year prescribed and observed by the several Departments of Government in Ottawa as holidays?
2. Which of these days are made holidays by statute? Under what authority are the others made holidays?
3. Are all of these days observed as holidays by employees in the Civil Service in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island respectively? If any of such days are not so observed in any of the said provinces, what are the days not observed, and what is the reason for non-observance of them respectively?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. Section 6 of the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1920, describes the holidays which are to be observed in the Civil Service. These days are the following: 1, Sundays; 2, New Year's Day; 3, Good Friday; 4, Easter Monday; 5, Victoria Day; 6, King's Birthday; 7, Dominion Day; 8, Labour Day; 9, Chistmas Day; 10, any day fixed by proclamation as a general fast or thanksgiving or as a holiday. Armistice Day was added to this list by Section 6 of the Armistice Day Act, Chapter 16, 11-12 George V.

2. The holidays mentioned in (1) are statutory holidays. Other holidays observed are granted by the Governor General in Council.

3. No information.

VALUATION OF IMPORTS FROM GERMANY

MOTION FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON inquired of the Government:

1. What was the total amount in value German money was shown on invoices for goods imported from Germany between July 1st, 1922, and January 1, 1923?
2. What value in Canadian money did Customs Department extend such German money valuations?
3. What was the total amount of duty collected in Canadian money on such importations?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I suggest to the honourable gentleman that he change his inquiry to a motion for a return; and, as there is some question on the part of the officials as to its exact meaning, I would ask him to revise it and make it clearer.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The honourable gentleman informed me of the difficulty, but I could not find where the obsecurity was.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If my honourable friend is satisfied with the form of his inquiry I am content, provided he changes it to a motion for a return. It will take some time to prepare it.

The inquiry was agreed to as a motion for a return.

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN WAR

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

1. On what dates in 1899 was the Canadian Military Force which served in the South African War, mobilized for active service and despatched to South Africa?
2. On whose authority was such military force mobilized and despatched?
3. (a) Was Parliament summoned to consider the mobilization and despatch of such military force? (b) Did Parliament approve of such mobilization and despatch and authorize expenditures therefor? (c) When did Parliament authorize such mobliization and expenditures?
4. How and when did the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier provide for the expense of mobilization and despatch of such military force?
5. On what date in 1914 did the Government of Sir Robert Borden communicate to the British Government that Canada would assist if war should break out in Europe?
6. (a) On what date was Parliament summoned to consider the matter of participation in such war? (b) On what date did Parliament meet?
7. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada that events which might involve the British Empire in war shall be submitted to and be considered by the Parliament of Canada before any action shall be taken on behalf of Canada?
8. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada in such an event that parliament shall only be summoned when the Cabinet is of opinion that participation by Canada in a war may be advisable, and that parliament shall not be summoned when the Cabinet is opposed to or doubtful in regard to such participation?

9. (a) Is it the policy of the Government of Canada that Parliament shall be promptly informed of all the facts which would enable it to decide the question of participation or non-participation in a threatened war? (b) For this purpose is the Senate regarded by the Government as a constituent part of parliament. (c) For what reason did the government omit to make any statement or submit any information to the Senate in regard to the questions that recently arose in the Near East and are referred to in reported correspondence between the British Cabinet and the Canadian Cabinet.

10. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada,

(1) in the event of a threatened invasion of Canada, or

(2) of danger to the person or property of a Canadian National in a foreign country, or

(3) a quarrel between Canada and any other country—that Canada should fight the matter out herself without British support or Empire assistance, or

(4) is it the policy of the Government that Canada should in such emergency look to British power or Empire assistance for support?

11. Does the statement made by the Prime Minister at a public meeting in Montreal, on February 19th and reported in the Montreal Gazette of February 20th inst., fully and correctly express the policy of the Government of Canada on this subject? If not, what is the Government's policy in ths regard?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. Between the 15th of October and the 30th of that month, 1899, when the first contingent left the port of Quebec.

2. By authority of the Governor-in-Council of October 14th, 1899.

3. (a) No. The expenditure simply implied the cost of equipping and transporting the men who volunteered their services.

(b) Yes. During the Session of 1900, which was summoned on the 1st day of February, 1900.

4. By authority of Governor-in-Council.

5. 1st of August, 1914.

6. (a) It was summoned on the 4th of August, 1914.

(b) The 18th of August, 1914.

7. Yes, whenever possible.

8. The Cabinet in this, as in all other matters, must exercise its responsibilities in the light of existing circumstances.

9. (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) The Government had no correspondence which the British Cabinet was willing to have made public, and no official correspondence could, in consequence, be communicated to this Chamber. No information in regard to the Near East situation was given this Chamber during the debate on the Address because no request was made upon this subject nor any allusion to it by any member of this House.

10. It is not the intention of the present Government to depart from the traditions of Parliament and to impart its policy on momentous questions by questions and answers.

11. It is impossible to answer a question concerning the correctness of a report in a newspaper without it being contained in the question. The Government's policy on this subject will be found in the speech of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister delivered on the Address on the 1st of February last.

EMPLOYEES IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

UNSATISFACTORIY RETURN

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inform the honourable Senator from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) that I communicated with the Department of the Secretary of State in reference to the partial but unsatisfactory return made to an Order of the Senate, and I have received an answer which contains some information as to the modus operandi of the Department in collecting information. It is as follows:

The particular reference is to a Return of the Department of the Secretary of State, and to the answer to Question 5, which shows an amount of $4.19.

In the first place, I should point out that the question is not at all definite. I assumed, in preparing the Return for this Department, that the question was the amount of the average day's pay for the whole Department on the date indicated. That is what is given, $4.19. I do not know what the honourable Senator really wanted, but it appeared to me that this average day's pay was what he wanted from this Department. It may be that he wants the figure for the whole Service. He is evidently misinformed regarding the method of preparing Returns. The State Department collects Returns from each Department and collates them for presentation. The Department has no right to either compile them so as to present something new, or to change or vary the Returns made by each Department. If the honourable Senator desired a statement of the average daily pay of the whole Service, it is a matter for his own computation from the Returns made by each Department. The State Department is under no obligation to make such a computation. The honourable Senator states that the Return as presented cannot be understood. So far as the statement of the State Department itself is concerned, it is as clear as it could be made in answer to the question.

I give an answer so that we may know the state of mind of the officials of that Department in complying with orders for returns which come from various Departments. As honourable gentlemen will have observed, it is claimed that their obligation is simply to hand over to the two branches of Parliament the returns received from the other Departments, and not to add to them in any way by addition or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would like, then, to ask the leader of the Government how anybody is going to secure a return answering the questions which I put. For instance, I asked for the average day's pay for the Civil Service of Canada. I thought that was a very plain question. It meant: how much does the Civil Service cost per day? If it is left for every Department to answer the questions, how are they going to give me a complete return? Surely it should be the duty of some one Department, after it gets the returns from the other Departments, to compile the information and give me an answer. It is absolutely impossible for each Department to give the answer, and not one of them has attempted to do it.

I also asked what was the total number of employees in the Public Service. Surely some Department should be able to give me that information. It is information which the public ought to have. I contend, honourable gentlemen, that the answer given by the Department of the Secretary of State is very unsatisfactory. This House is entitled to the information for which I have asked, and while the Secretary of State's Department claim that the information is contained in the return, I beg to differ with them. There is more than one Department that is not included in the return at all, and I believe some of the Departments have not included all the Government employees in those Departments. I did not ask for the number of Civil Servants alone: I asked for the number of employees of the Dominion of Canada who were affected by the amendment to the Civil Service Act in reference to holidays. As I understand the matter, nearly every employee of the Government was affected by that Order, and enjoyed the holidays. I understand that there are hundreds of men in the city of Ottawa who are not included in that return.

Entirely aside from that, I think that the Government should be able to compel these Departments, which have apparently become a law unto themselves, to present an intelligent return and one that we could understand, to an order of this House. I would like the honourable gentleman himself to take that return and see whether he could from it give an answer to my questions. I venture to say that he would spend a good many hours over it and then might not be able to do it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I understand that partial reports were made, and that as they came in from the various Departments they were joined together and sent here to show that some attention was being given to the inquiry of my honourable friend. I will inquire of the Secretary of State as to the process of gathering that information, and will endeavor to find out whether there is not some central office or organization that could handle these reports from the various Departments.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I think my honourable friend will admit the fairness of my suggestion that some central Department ought to do this work. These returns from the various Departments were made, I understand, to the Secretary of State's Department, and it was the duty of that Department to see that the information came to the Senate in proper order.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Did the honourable gentleman look into the Auditor General's report? Would not the Auditor General be in a position to say how much the Civil Service cost last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I have not gone into the report, but I have made inquiry from the Auditor General's Department, and was informed that it was absolutely impossible to get the information.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: If he does not know how much we are spending, what is the good of him.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: This country is entitled to know the cost of the Civil Service; but apparently those responsible are not willing to give the information.

DOMINION LANDS (COAL) BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill E2, an Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act respecting the sale or other disposal of coal lands and coal mining rights.

He said: I am ready to proceed with the second reading of this Bill, but if my honourable friend prefers that it should be postponed I am at his disposal. He has been away, and may not have had time to familiarize himself with the answer I gave to the honourable gentleman from Brome (Hon. Mr. Pope).

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I would say, in answer to what my honourable friend has just observed, that I have no objection to his proceeding with the Bill; but I would be disposed to ask that the final disposition of the second reading should stand pending our getting further information as to the legal effect of the rather remarkable situation in which we find this matter. I should like to appreciate to a greater extent than I do the relation between the propsed legislation and the fiat which has already been issued, and the proceedings which are pending in the Exchequer Court. What bearing the one has on the other is a very difficult and complex question to grapple with. Consequently it might assist us in coming to a more satisfactory conclusion if my honourable friend would proceed with the second reading of the Bill, and inform the House as to his view of the legislation. That in itself would be informative, to say the least, and we could then pursue the subject further; but it would be my intention to ask that the second reading should not be finally disposed of until we have further information.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then I will proceed to move the second reading of this Bill. I do not know that I can add very much to the statement I made last week. I explained that last year, when I moved the Bill which is now Chapter 21 of 12-13 George V, the Act Respecting Notices of Cancellation of Leases of Dominion Lands, an amendment was moved in this Chamber to add the following clause:

> Notwithstanding anything in the Dominion Lands Act, Chapter twenty of the Statutes of 1908, and in the amendments thereof, coal mining rights and lands containing coal, if such rights or lands are within or adjoin the coal reservation near the junction of the Muskeg and Smoky Rivers in the province of Alberta, which reservation was established by the Order in Council (P.C. 2044) dated the sixth day of October, 1919, withdrawing from disposal and the provisions of the regulations then in force certain coal mining rights which are the property of the Crown in Townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, Ranges 7, 8 and 9, west of the Sixth initial meridian, shall not be sold, leased or otherwise disposed of except under the authority of and in accordance with the provisions of any Act of the Parliament of Canada hereafter passed and specifically relating to such rights or lands and to the sale, lease or other disposition thereof.

Last year, when this amendment was made, I had to express the dissent of the Department of the Interior, and of the Minister of that Department, who felt that the amendment seemed to imply want of confidence in the Department and perhaps in himself as its head, and the amendment was not entertained. I do not remember now whether it was refused by this House or by the Commons.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, it was passed by this House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was passed by this House, and refused by the Commons on the motion of the Minister of the Interior. To-day the Minister of the Interior, finding that there is some uneasiness about the final disposition of these coal leases, and hearing of rumors, to which my honourable friend from Brome (Hon. Mr. Pope) gave an echo in this Chamber, decided to appropriate for himself, as his policy, the amendment of the honourable gentleman; and I am now moving the second reading of the amendment which was moved last year.

I want to affirm that if this amendment had been adopted last year and had been made part of Chapter 21, 12-13 George V, it would not in the least have prevented the Department of Justice from issuing its fiat on a petition of right presented to-day. This is the one affirmation I make—that this amendment will have an effect much the same as it would have had on the procedure before the courts to-day, if it had been passed last year; because no legislation will prevent any party who feels hurt by such legislation from pressing his rights before the courts, and even testing the constitutionality of the enactment which may have been passed by way of estoppel.

To my mind, this Act puts a bar on any action of the Department of the Interior in dealing with those coal leases which prior to the Act of last year had been withdrawn from the administration of the Department of the Interior by the Order in Council of October, 1919.

The parties who felt aggrieved by the cancellation of those claims have applied to the Department of Justice, as I said last week, for the right to submit their claim to the tribunals of this country. They have been given that right; but that is not under this amendment. If the Department of Justice could have alleged or pleaded any enactment against the claim of those people, it would have been the Act itself which we passed last year, which declared that as to all leases up to the date of the passing of that Act—and everyone admits that it covers the coal leases in question—all defects as to form of cancellation, or notice or service of cancellation, were cured, and could not be raised in any court of justice in order to revive those leases. This Act passed last year is now pleaded by the Department of Justice against the claim which has been presented under the petition of right.

I omitted to emphasize a statement of the honourable gentleman from Brome (Hon. Mr. Pope), but I did not need to do so, since it had already been made; but I desire to recall that while this legislation was proceeding through this Chamber, and perhaps before—I have not the exact data before me—the Department of Justice felt that it should make its position doubly safe, in view of the judgment of the Privy Council, by again serving on the proper parties notice of cancellation of these claims. Hence the claimants to-day before the courts are facing not only the cancellation of 1912, but also a cancellation of last spring, which is anterior to the lodging of their petition for a fiat. Besides those two notices of cancellation, they are faced with the action of Parliament, which declared that no one will be able to plead the technical flaws that the Privy Council found in those thousands of leases which were cancelled by the Department.

I was asked by the honourable gentleman from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) how it was, after the leases of Isenberg, or the estate of Isenberg, had been cancelled in 1912 and replaced by other leases granted to Dr. Shillington and Charles A Barnard of Montreal—which leases had been cancelled upon the action of the Senate—that those last lessees had been refused a fiat on the petition of right that they had presented.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I beg to correct the honourable gentleman. I think he must have mistaken me for someone else. I did not say they had been refused a fiat, because I did not know.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: It was I who asked that question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I sought information on that point, and this is the letter I received from the Deputy Minister of Justice:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Ottawa, 13th March, 1923.

Dear Senator Dandurand:

I find that Charles A. Barnard presented a Petition of Right claiming $250,000 damages for cancellation of eight leases which had been granted to Gouin, Leask, Hauff, Coppock, Weir, McClung, Barnett and Austin, and assigned to Barnard.

These were the parties who had been sent to the west to stake claims.

A fiat was duly granted upon this petition, and it was filed in the Exchequer Court on 17th February, 1920. Subsequently the claim was settled on the footing that Barnard should recover his out of pocket expenses connected with the matter, amounting to $7,050.96, for which he was to give the Crown a release of all damages. Accordingly a consent judgment was entered for the said amount, which was paid, and Barnard executed the release.

Shillington's name does not appear in the petition, and there is no record or knowledge in this Department that Shillington ever presented one. I see, however, by the Order in Council of 1st July, 1919, whereby the leases were cancelled, that Barnard and Shillington are referred to as the assignees of these leases. Perhaps, therefore, Shillington had a joint interest with Barnard in the Petition of Right which was filed notwithstanding that it is alleged by the petition that the leases were assigned to Barnard.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd) E. L. Newcombe.

I have the honour to move the second reading of this Bill, seconded by Hon. Mr. Watson.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to say a few words on this question. It is not by any means a new one in this House. Some years ago there was a Committee of the Senate appointed to investigate the leasing of these very lands, and, as my honourable friend has pointed out, the Senate, on the strength of the findings of that Committee, was successful in securing the cancellation of those leases. The evidence taken before that Committee demonstrated beyond any question the immense value of this coal area. I think that without any doubt it is one of the most valuable coal areas on this continent. I have had the opportunity of going through the private papers of Dr. Hoppe, who was one of the principals in the first leases that were granted, and those papers showed that he had been negotiating with the Rothschilds in London for the sale of this land, and proved to my satisfaction that those coal areas were of immense value. If I would state $100,000,000 I do not think I would be over the mark. Dr. Hoppe and his engineers had made an estimate of the coal. That was submitted with the reports of the engineers to the Rothschild engineers. The Rothschild's engineers made a report; Dr. Hoppe had a copy of it, if I am correctly informed, and I believe I am, unless what I saw with my own eyes was a forgery. The Rothschild engineers practically told Hoppe that he had underestimated the amount of coal in those areas. He had estimated that there were 100,000,000 tons of anthracite coal, equal, if not superior, in heating qualities to the best Pennsylvania coal, and in addition to that about 400,000,000 tons of a first-class bituminous coal.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: What was the thickness of the seam?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I canot tell you just now. I am referring to the engineers' report, which described all the seams and gave all the data that was necessary. I am not in a position to give all these details; I am going over the matter rapidly, because I do not intend to dwell on this phase of the question except to bring to the attention of this House the immense value of these coal areas. Whereas the Hoppe engineers had estimated 400,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, the Rothschild engineers intimated that there might easily be double that amount in those areas. Honourable gentlemen, I am sure it will not be very hard to convince this House that, if there are only 400,000,000 tons of coal there, these are very valuable coal areas and are worthy of some attention by Parliament with a view to protecting them for future generations.

I will not dwell at length on the cause of the cancellation of the leases. It is well known. It has never been suggested that the Interior Department, or the Minister of the Interior, were not at that time well within their rights in cancelling the leases. The Isenberg or Hoppe interests had defaulted in their rent, and according to the contract their lease was subject to cancellation; consequently proceedings were taken for cancellation. These proceedings may have been hurried on account of the notorious fact that both those gentlemen were proven beyond any question to be alien enemies. Without dwelling further on this phase of the question, I may say that the Department was well within its rights under the law in cancelling those leases, and it proceeded in the usual manner, serving notices on those with whom it had been dealing as agents of the Isenberg people. So the leases were cancelled, and the cancellation was not questioned at the time.

It was six months afterwards that the cancellation was questioned. After cancellation the lands were thrown open for settlement; and this is where the Shillington-Barnard syndicate came in. At the time those coal areas were re-staked by the Shillington-Barnard syndicate there was no complaint or suggestion by the Isenberg people that the leases had been wrongfully cancelled or that they had not been notified. In fact, the evidence on record is quite to the contrary, because there were letters from the Hawaiian Trust Company, who represented the Isenberg people, and from Dr. Hoppe himself, pleading for an extension of time that they might be able to pay up the rents. I am stating this fact in order to impress upon the House that the Government had proceeded in perfect order in cancelling the leases.

After the famous decision given by the Privy Council in the Paulsen case, parties here who desired to exploit the Isenberg interests—men who never had one dollar of interest in these properties, but who saw a chance of making some easy money— became interested. They thought they saw a loophole by which to attack the cancellations, and an effort was made to induce the Government to give them an opportunity of securing a fiat and going to court. I am hurrying over these facts, because I do not wish to discuss all the details. However, when this question came up it was, I think, the unanimous opinion of the members of this Chamber that those coal areas should remain the property of the Crown. At the time the Shillington cancellation took place the Government were urged to place those great properties in some way out of the reach of the Department, and a great coal reserve was created. A party of engineers was sent to that country to make a survey and present a recommendation to the Minister. The coal areas embraced a great deal more coal lands than those covered by the Hoppe leases. This reservation was made with a view to conserving the lands to the Crown or preventing their being alienated in the usual way. Unfortunately the Government at that time did not go as far as some of its friends thought it ought to go, and as experience now proves it should have gone. Those lands should have been placed as the Bill which my honourable friend is now introducing purports to aim at placing them, that is, under Parliament, so that they should not be dealt with except by Act of Parliament. If this had been done at the time the leases were cancelled, I feel, with all due deference to my honourable friend, that we might occupy a different position from that which we occupy at the present time. My honourable friend is a good lawyer. He shakes his head. The case is just this. After the late Government had cancelled the leases, and when we were led to believe that the door was practically locked and that there was no danger of either the Isenberg people or their assigns again acquiring any interest in those leases, some gentlemen here in the city of Ottawa organized a syndicate headed by a man who had taken a good deal of interest when the Committee was investigating the Shillington leases—a man named Murdock—

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: Who is that?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I do not know him. I do not know where he comes from. I know that he has been very active in connection with great coal areas. Under this man's direction, I presume, or through his influence, a syndicate of some kind was organized here in the city of Ottawa. There are in it, I understand, several young doctors and two or three young lawyers, and the public is told broadly that there are public men in high places associated with these men.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Name them.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: This last statement, honourable gentlemen, I am not ready to believe, but I want to say it is public property and is heard on the streets, and the rumor has gone to such an extent that something must be done to clear up this question and clear the names of these honourable gentlemen who are to-day resting under a cloud, in the opinion of many men in this city and a number of men in this Chamber.

To my mind, the gentlemen who, as I have already said, have associated themselves together in this syndicate deserve absolutely no sympathy from Parliament. They have in no way contributed to the exploration of those lands. They are simply a number of young men who think they see an opportunity of clearing up a lot of very easy money. One of them told me that they had an assignment from the Isenberg people—that they had absolutely got rid of the Isenberg people by paying them a sum of money. He did not state how much, but I understood it was very small.

Now, honourable gentlemen, this is a serious question, outside of the great value of these coal areas and outside of the fact that this Chamber owes to the country the duty of protecting the domain of Canada from the exploitation of men who are ready to take advantage of circumstances in order to obtain a great deal of very easy money in what appears to me to be in a rather questionable manner.

I desire to refer for only a few moments to what took place last year. This matter was a very live question then. It was under discussion when legislation respecting it was amended in this House. The Bill came over, and an amendment was moved by the honourable member—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, no. The honourable gentleman is in error. I introduced the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I beg the honourable gentleman's pardon. At any rate, it was a Government measure introduced in the Senate by the honourable leader of the Government in this House. It was amended here. It went to the Commons in its amended form, and they refused to accept the amendment. The Bill that my honourable friend has introduced at this time seeks now to include the clause that was then struck out by the House of Commons—by the Government. This was one of the amendments from this side of the House to protect these great coal areas. Why that clause was not accepted has been, I will not say a mystery to me, but very surprising indeed. It is strange that the Minister of a great Department should be so sensitive about his position that he would take the risks, as he appears to have done, of jeopardizing this great coal area rather than allow the passage of that clause, which vested the right in Parliament.

When that measure was under discussion last year we on this side of the House—who had been interesting ourselves in the matter were very much determined that something should be done to protect those lands. There seemed to be something wrong when the Government refused to accept the amendments that were made in this House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There was but one amendment: I think it was this one.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: No, there were three amendments. This was one of the main amendments. We felt that the Government had refused to place these lands in the possession of Parliament and to divest itself of the power of dealing with them. In view of this fact some negotiations took place between the Minister of the Interior and my honourable friend the leader of the Opposition (Hon. Sir James Lougheed). The honourable leader of the Opposition insisted that some assurances should be given whereby he, and others with him, might feel that the Minister of the Interior at least was anxious to carry out the policy of the late Government in protecting these lands. The result of the negotiations was that the Minister of the Interior wrote a letter to the honourable leader of the Opposition (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), and I will read you this letter. I do not see any date on the letter. It is printed in Hansard of the 27th of June, the day before Parliament prorogued. It reads as follows:

In case the explanation which I furnished to the House of Commons on Friday last in connection with Bill No. 153 respecting notices of cancellation of leases of Dominion Lands, was not a sufficiently definite indication of the position which, as Minister of the Interior, I take with respect to the lands formerly comprised within what were known as the Isenberg leases, I wish to state that, while, as Minister of the Department, I am opposed on principle to the reservation of this area by Act of Parliament, I am heartily in sympathy with the action taken by the former Minister of this Department to reserve the area by Order in Council.

It is not my intention to recommend any relaxation in the provisions of this Order in Council (P.C. 2044, dated October 6, 1919), copy of which is annexed here to.

If the Bill is passed by the Senate—

That refers to the Bill that was before the House last year—

If the Bill is passed by the Senate as originally submitted by Senator Dandurand, I will do my best to see that it goes through the House of Commons, without amendment.

I am writing you this letter with the full knowledge and consent of the Prime Minister, the matter having been discussed in Council yesterday.

The letter is signed by Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And the Minister has not gone back on his word.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I am very glad to hear that, because that, unfortunately, is not what the rumor says.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, my honourable friend will have to give a little substance to that rumor.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I may; I may.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because all the actions of the Minister, up to the time of my presenting the present Bill at his request, justifies my affirmation that he has been true to his word.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Taking the honourable gentleman at his own word, I would like to ask him right here, what is the purpose of the Bill that is before this House? What is the intention of it? What will it do in reference to these leases?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Exactly what it would have done if it had been passed last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That, honourable gentlemen, is exactly what is agitating the minds of those who are paying any attention to this question.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) will not contend that if that amendment had been passed last Session, the Department of Justice, in view of an express Act of Parliament, would have issued a fiat for the determination of the case in the Exchequer Court. Surely not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is very powerful where I am much less so. How can I answer what would have been the report of the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Newcombe, to the Minister of Justice? I am not in his shoes, nor within his skin. However, I may say that a fiat and a petition of right could just as well have been applied for and pressed for and a fiat granted if the present proposed amendment had been in the Act of last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Granting all that, honourable gentlemen, the situation before the people of Canada to-day is this. The Government has granted a fiat, and the case is pending. The inference I draw from that is that if the claim under the fiat is successful, then the Bill is absolutely useless. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No more useless than if it had been passed last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That, to my mind, is begging the question.

Hon. M. DANDURAND: I would not like to jeopardize the stand that Parliament may take next year or the year after.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I think my contention is pretty well borne out by the statement of the leader of the Government himself. He admits frankly that the proposed Bill is no stronger than it would have been if it had been passed a year ago. Now, I ask him this question—he is a good lawyer, and I am satisfied that he knows: in view of the fact that the Department of Justice has issued the fiat and that this case is pending, and, in view of the fact that the petitioners claim that they are still the lease-holders of this property; and, in view of the fact that if they are successful in their contention, their rights will practically be sustained by the courts, then why this Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As I have already stated, the Minister of the Interior did not take kindly to the amendment proposed in this House last year, because he felt that it was questioning his action in the future. He felt that he was in the presence of the Order in Council of 1919, which withdrew the leases from his Department, and that he would have to apply to the Governor in Council to recall the Order in Council of 1919. He felt that these coal lands were perfectly safe in his keeping, either with or without the safeguards of the Order in Council, and he was somewhat irritated by the idea that all the Senators and members of the House of Commons had not the same confidence in him. But to-day he hears rumours, starting from I do not know where—rumours which have been repeated here and there; and he says that under the circumstances he will put a stop to the rumours by appropriating the amendment proposed last year by the honourable gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Pope) and putting these coal areas under the safeguard of Parliament. But, my honourable friend says, there is a fiat. I defy my honourable friend to establish in this Chamber that any individual, be he a foreigner or a British citizen, can be denied approach to the tribunals of justice.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Does my honourable friend say that fiats are always granted when they are applied for?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I put the question to the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. E. L. Newcombe, for whose judgment and integrity and reputation I have the greatest admiration and esteem, and he answered me thus: "Senator, a petition must be very frivolous indeed for this Department to refuse it. In some cases I have reasoned with a petitioner, because I felt that he was becoming involved in costs; but when he claimed that he could substantiate his claim, I had to give way."

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Would the honourable gentleman consent to amend the Bill by inserting a provision that it should take effect prior to the time when the fiat was granted?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Make it retroactive.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have stated in this Chamber that in my opinion—and I will ask lawyers of standing to examine into my statement—this amendment is as good and as effective as it would be if it were in the Statutes of last year.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is there any objection to making it retroactive to last session?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: At first sight, I have no particular objection to that. I will submit the suggestion to the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: My honourable friend claims that this Bill is just as effective as if it had been passed a year ago. I am not going to argue that point. The point I want to emphasize is this. If the claim is successful, will this Bill prevent the Isenberg lease being restored to the Isenberg people?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am a little diffident about answering that question, because it seems to me that in the future the Department of Justice should be entitled to take all the advantages that it can honestly and legally take from our legislation. But, if my honourable friend presses me, I may tell him that I am convinced that the petition asking for the restoration of the rights of these parties and for the annulment of all the procedure that has intervened since the notice of cancellation was given, could be granted by the Privy Council, and these people could be declared the rightful lessees as though there had been no cancellation.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Then the honourable gentleman admits that this Bill would have no effect.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the Bill will have no more and no less effect than if it had been on the Statute Book last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It seems that I cannot nail my honourable friend down to an answer to my question. The fact is, honourable gentlemen, that if the petitioners are successful, this Bill will not protect the Canadian people in their holding of these coal areas.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No more than if it had been passed last year.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Not at all. My honourable friend knows that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I take issue with my honourable friend on that point.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Will my honourable friend question the Department of Justice and find out whether he is right or whether I am right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will, and if there is the least possibility of making this Bill retroactive to a year ago, I shall do so with great pleasure.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: If the honourable gentleman finds that this legislation is not sufficient to safeguard those lands in case the claim under the fiat is successful, will he adopt legislation that will withhold these lands for the people of Canada?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Not to rob the rightful owners?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would like to ask my honourable friend who is so much interested in the rightful owners, who they are.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Let us not enter into that. Surely my honourable friend would not argue—and I do not think he will find any support for the proposition that he makes to me—that, after a court of justice had declared that there were certain rights accruing to certain people, we should confiscate those rights.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: In view of what has proceeded in connection with these leases, and the fact that the original holders of the leases are practically out of the question and that they are to-day in the hands of a group who are exploiting them for themselves—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That has nothing to do with the case.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: You will remember that in June of last year, just on the eve of prorogation, the letter which I have read practically assured us that the question was settled, and that the legislation which this House asked for would be passed. In view of the fact that the Premier and the Government were thoroughly aware of that letter, the Government asked for a conference, I think at 9.30 in the evening—at the eleventh hour. At that conference there were present the Premier himself, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Finance—in fact, the whole weight of the Government; and they were to consider two questions. One was the Hoppe leases, and the other was the British Columbia Temperance Act. My honourable friend will remember, I am sure, that the Hoppe leases took a very prominent part in the discussion. It was urged time after time that the Government should accept the amendment of the Senate. What for? So that the door might be locked against any possible fiat being granted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: You cannot do that.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That was urged by myself to the Minister of Justice in the presence of Mr. Fielding and others who were there. I pointed out at that time why I was under the impression that action would be taken on the faulty notice of cancellation that had been used by the Department of the Interior for some 20 years. Some 15,000 or 20,000 leases had been cancelled by that notice. One case, which my honourable friend knows about, was taken to the Privy Council. In reading over the judgment I find that while there was a technical error in the notice, that was not really the basis of judgment. It was, rather, that the Government had compromised—had accepted payment or something. I must say in justice to this House, now that the question is under discussion, that from the very moment we went into the Council Chamber the Premier of this country seemed determined that the door should not be locked, but that a fiat might issue.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: How could anyone do otherwise?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is a question which I do not think my honourable friend is in a position to answer. It is no secret that fiats are often refused; and if there ever was a case under heaven in which refusal could be justified, in my opinion this is the one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the honourable gentleman explain why Parliament, with our co-operation, passed Chapter 21 of last Session, respecting Notices of Cancellation of Leases of Dominion Lands?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Is that the Bill that is under discussion?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, that is the amendment of last year, in which we declared that the flaws or irregularities found by the Privy Council in the form of cancellations, notices and service, could not be set up in any suit taken to annul those cancellations.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I understand that thoroughly. I know exactly what my honourable friend is referring to, and of course the Government was well advised.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Was it not to protect the country against judgments which would be obtained from the courts on similar suits being taken, in which those technicalities would be alleged?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: On the strength of the technicalities, yes; I admit that frankly; but I was saying that when this matter was under discussion, while that was one of the phases that presented itself, the important point in the situation was that those lands were very valuable coal areas which ought to be conserved by the Crown. I submit, in view of what took place at that conference, after our urging from half-past nine until half past-twelve o'clock at night that the door should be locked so that these leases could not by any possibility go back into the possession of the old lease-holders, and in view of the fact that the conference broke up—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Are we to understand that my honourable friend was arguing that the petition of right should not be granted, and that the fiat should not issue?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I thought I had made myself pretty plain. Surely it could not be the Government that was arguing that point, because if it was we would not be in the position we are in to-day. I raised that point, and it was discussed openly. I do not know whether others raised it or not. However, the conference broke up; we could not accept the compromise offered by the Government. Their delegates went away, and we sat for another half-hour, and at midnight a notice came all at once that they had accepted the amendments of the Senate. I had every right, therefore, to suppose, and this side of the House had every right to suppose, that on the acceptance of those amendments the door was locked, and that no fiat would issue. But, behold, it did not turn out that the Hoppe leases were a dead issue, and that the land was perfectly safe. On the contrary, a fiat was granted. In conclusion, let me say that I would not to-day be making this protest if I did not believe—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not protesting against this Bill?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I am not making a protest against this Bill, no, because I want to confess frankly that I do not think the Bill amounts to anything as a protection against these leases. What I am interested in is to protect for future generations, those great coal areas worth $100,000,000 or perhaps $200,000,000. My honourable friend asks, why should they be refused a fiat? I say there has not been a case in my experience in which they would be so thoroughly justified in refusing a fiat as in this case.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Is it because the parties have no case?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: What I am going to say is that, in view of the men who are exploiting the situation to-day, in view of the great number of rumors that are being circulated, this House owes it to itself to appoint a special committee in order to afford an opportunity to clear the names of public men that have been associated with those men on the street. Honourable gentlemen, this has been done openly and brazenly by the men who are exploiting the situation to-day. It is not any political rumor. It is said that those men have the assistance of men in this Chamber and men in the other Chamber. I say, in view of that—

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: I do not think it is fair to speak in a general way of rumors, attacking anybody in this Chamber. It means that we may all be under suspicion.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes; name them.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: I think the honourable gentleman ought to name the people. As far as I am concerned, I entirely protest against speaking in that general way. When the honourable gentleman speaks of rumors about anybody in this Chamber, I think it is an insult to the Chamber.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I don't blame the honourable gentleman a bit.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Whom do you blame?

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I don't blame the honourable gentleman, but I say that the only proper way to bring out the information, without my making a statement, is to ask for a special committee; and the Government can very well do that, and give them an opportunity of proving their case, and of getting all the evidence regarding this situation.

While not opposing the second reading of this Bill, I wish to emphasize this, that if the honourable gentleman is moving the second reading of the Bill with the idea of leading this House to believe that he is in any way safeguarding the best interests of Canada with regard to the Hoppe leases, then he is very much mistaken. I am sure that the general opinion among men who have given any thought to this question is that this Bill is not worth the paper it is written on, as far as conserving these coal areas to Canada is concerned. If the petitioners are successful in the case now pending before the courts. I have asked my honourable friend if the Government is willing to introduce legislation that would protect those areas in case the suit under the fiat is won by the plaintiffs.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman is in a very strange position. He has no confidence in the Government and he has no confidence in the courts. If a certain party asks for a fiat on a petition of right the Government has no discretion in the matter. I can quote a case in which the Government of a certain province positively refused for months to grant a petition of right, and the party went personally to the Lieutenant Governor himself and said: "It is the undeniable right of every British subject to lay his grievance at the foot of the throne"—which he did—and he said further to the Governor: "I don't ask you for an answer; I just want to put my grievance before you." In another case a very distinguished lawyer from Montreal came up here, having been refused several times, and went straight to the Governor General and got his fiat there and then. People do not have to take "no" from a Government; they have a higher authority in the Governor himself; but the honourable gentleman would take away from those parties the right to plead for justice in our own courts.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Might I ask the honourable gentleman what would be the use of asking any Government at all for a fiat, if everybody is entitled to it?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Somebody must issue it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You might as well put words into the act stating that anyone applying by a petition of right can have a fiat. Did the honourable gentleman ever hear of a fiat being granted in a case in which there was an agreement between the Government and the party, and the Government was saying that the party's lease was cancelled?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would ask the honourable gentleman to point out one case.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Paulsen case.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The Paulsen case was on a different footing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not at all. His lease was cancelled, and he obtained a fiat, and he went to the Privy Council, and they restored to him his rights.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: What were the circumstances? The Crown had from time to time extended his period and made new agreements with him, and accepted money. That is a different thing altogether.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, it was a lease that was cancelled.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: When the honourable gentleman who has just sat down talks about a fiat going as a matter of course, I want to tell him he is mistaken, because I know of cases in which they have been refused by the Provincial Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not know whether the remarks of my honourable friend are addressed to myself, but I simply relied on the statement of the Deputy Minister of Justice, which he made to me yesterday and again this morning.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: How does my honourable friend know the Lieutenant Governor had nothing to do with that refusal?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: As far as I understand constitutional law when the Prime Minister and his Cabinet say no I have never known a case in which a Lieutenant Governor could override that decision; because, if he did, we might just as well do away with responsible and representative government, and place the reins in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Give us the case.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It seems to me we attach too much importance to the issue of a fiat, which is merely leave to take an action, but does not give any right if it does not exist. It is merely a right to sue. It is well known that unless the demand is frivolous it is granted. No suit can be taken against the Crown without the permission of the Crown. I would like to ask the honourable member who represents the Government in this House if I understood him to state that the Department of Justice last year renewed the notice of cancellation to these parties?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That is the strongest evidence to my mind of the desire of the Department of Justice, and I suppose of the Government which is represented by that Department, to protect the rights of the Crown in those lands. Honourable gentlemen will possibly remember that last year, when what is now Chapter 21 of the Statutes was passed, I took the ground that the Act was a nullity, because it was dealing with a matter which was in the exclusive jurisdiction of the province, and that the correct course to follow was to give the notice in proper form. Evidently the Department of Justice has acted on that suggestion and given the notice. Therefore I think the country is protected in those lands, not by passing the Act of last year, but by the serving of the proper notice, as was done.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pope, the debate was adjourned.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand the Senate went into Committee on Bill 16, an Act to provide for further advances to the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in the Chair.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On Section 2—the Crown may advance $5,000,000 to Corporation:

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: The honourable leader of the House gave some figures yesterday in connection with the expenditures on the proposed works, but they are not reported in "Hansard."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I was to give a statement of the intended expenditures under this Act. I will give it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can my honourable friend give this information to the House: to what extent will the Government supervise, in something more than a formal way, the expenditure of this money? Inasmuch as it is only a loan, and the payment of the interest must be entirely contingent on the wise administration of the Harbour Board, it seems to me very necessary that the carrying out of these works should be substantially under the supervision of the Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would say, speaking generally, that such work is carried on by Harbour Commissions, and supervised by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the same way all over Canada. Reports are made asking for an expenditure for a certain object, with a detailed estimate, and a memorandum justifying the expenditure. The Department examines into the demand and into the plans, and reports favourably or not. If favourably, the matter is reported to Council, and the amount is put at the disposal of that Harbour Commission for the purpose mentioned.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is the engineer in charge answerable in any way to the Department or to the Government for the manner in which the work is carried out? In what way is it checked over? Is the carrying out of work purely discretionary on the part of the Harbour Commissioners, or is the engineer the representative of the Government in the matter?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The engineer who superintends this work belongs to the Harbour Commission, and is not under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries; but that Department has an inspector who follows the work as it proceeds, and who checks the expenditure and reports to the Department.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is there any good reason why, in a case of this kind, the work should not be carried out under the supervision and on the responsibility of the Government, just as much as any other public work? After all, the Harbour Commission of any port is very largely a fiction: it represents simply in a popular way the public of a particular area. The Government is making the exepnditure here as directly as if a public work were being carried out under the supervision of the Public Works Department. That a largely irresponsible Harbour Commission, whose members are appointed simply because of certain political services they may have rendered the Government, or by reason of, say, political sympathy, should be charged with the responsibility of carrying out an enormous expenditure of this kind, does not appeal to my sense of reason.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend, I know, was overworked when he was a Minister of the Crown, and I would not throw a stone at him for not having grappled with this problem. I realize that the system is one which has prevailed for some years. These Harbour Commissions are but the creations of the central Federal power, which owns the harbours and should exercise a close surveillance over the work of its delegates, the Harbour Commissioners. There is all the more reason for the Federal Government doing so when interest is not paid on the amount it has loaned. Does the Government exercise a close supervision? Has it done so in the past to a satisfactory degree? These are questions on which I should not like to pass judgment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It was in my experience as a Minister that I ascertained the weakness of the system.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I confess that I have not had as close a contact with the administration as my honourable friend, for he has been here in Ottawa administering some of the Departments and has been in closer touch with his colleagues. I will speak my mind frankly. I am at one with my honourable friend in expressing the wish that a closer superintendence might be kept of the expenditures of the various Harbour Commissions, even those that show surpluses.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: "That show surpluses," did the honourable gentleman say?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How many are they? The honourable gentleman might have said, "even if one should show a surplus."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would have to mention a place near my own home, and I do not like to do so.

The Commissioners estimate the requirements for their present purposes in accordance with the following figures, some of which I mentioned yesterday:

Amount required to complete Ballantyne Pier	$1,760,765
Extension to present elevator	400,000
New elevator and site	2,000,000
Log booming ground	171,000
Marine Ferry terminal	155,375
Ballantyne storage yard	76,000
Railway equipment	81,000
Strip of land adjacent present Government elevator	50,000
Lumber assembling wharf	190,000
Granville Island paving	27,000
Overhead approach to Ballantyne Pier	65,000
Contingencies	23,860
Total	$5,000,000

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: What is to be the capacity of the new elevator—the $2,000,000 elevator?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Two million bushels.

Hon. Mr. REID: Honourable gentlemen, I do not rise to oppose the passage of a vote for improvements at Vancouver. I think Vancouver is a port that must be developed as our country grows. So in any remarks I make I do not wish to be understood as opposing votes for the improvement of Vancouver.

However, as to the proposed expenditure on improvements at Vancouver, it is my opinion that while the Government would spend the money, it would be the railway companies who would use the facilities. The railway companies themselves should develop the port. In other words, most, in fact nearly all, of the proposed expenditure is in connection with the Canadian National Railways. These elevators will be on the Canadian National Railway System.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Not at the Ballantyne pier. The C.P.R., and not the Canadian National, are already near the present elevator.

Hon. Mr. REID: I understand the situation in this way. The Canadian Pacific line into Vancouver at the present time, it is true, goes alongside of the present elevator and the Ballantyne pier. The Canadian National Railway, or what was formerly the Canadian Northern, had not developed the terminals at Vancouver. They had no elevators, docks, or facilities of that kind. All they had to do in order to connect with that elevator and the Ballantyne pier was to buy a piece of land, such as is being bought, and extend a short line of railway from their present terminals. That could be done by the Canadian National Railways for a small portion of the amount that it is proposed to expend, and they would then be in exactly the same position as the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Could my honourable friend answer this question? Did the Canadian Pacific Railway build those elevators at the wharves that they are on?

Hon. Mr. REID: No. The Government of Canada built the elevator and owns it.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Yes.

Hon. Mr. REID: The site of what is known as the Ballantyne pier was purchased by the Government of Canada. The pier was being built by the Marine and Fisheries Department, and the elevator on the Ballantyne pier is to be constructed by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: But what I had in mind was this. My honourable friend says that the Government Railway should build any new elevator or any pier that they wanted. That would mean that the Government Railways would have to go to the expense of providing elevators and piers, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway had the advantage of the Government building the piers and elevators.

Hon. Mr. REID: I say that if the Government of Canada are spending this $5,000,000 they could do it through the Canadian National Railway. If the elevators belonged to them, the Canadian National Railway would be in the more advantageous position of controlling and operating them. The result would be, in my opinion, that Vancouver would benefit, because the Canadian Pacific Railway would likewise build elevators for itself. If the Government spent the money through the Canadian National Railway, the Railway would be placed in the position of controlling the wharves and other accommodation at Vancouver.

What will be the harbour situation when the proposed expenditures have been made? So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, it is well situated in Vancouver. It owns its wharves, and has control of the terminals on the wharfage in Vancouver. It has large wharfage terminals. If these terminals were constructed through the Canadian National Railways, they would own them and would be able to go to the wharves, etc., first; but under the present plans the Canadian National Railways at Vancouver will be in this position, that they will have no more right to these terminals than the Canadian Pacific, their great competitor, although the Government of Canada is spending every dollar of the money. That is one reason why I say it would have been better if the Government had constructed these terminals through the Canadian National Railways. In so far as a portion of them is concerned, the Trade and Commerce Department did operate the elevator, and the Marine and Fisheries Department did operate the dock. If the terminals were operated even in that way, instead of being operated by the Harbour Commission, the Canadian National Railways, belonging to the people of Canada, would have the advantage of these terminals, on which the people of Canada were spending money.

There is another reason why I think it would have benefited Vancouver if the terminal facilities were provided through the Canadian National Railways. We all want as much of our traffic as possible to go through Vancouver. The railways themselves are in a position to compete with Seattle or any of the American ports in the way of dues. It is possible that very small dues might be charged at Seattle. It might be possible that the railways there would wipe out their dues. But the Harbour Commission must incur heavy expenditures in maintaining a big staff and in operating railways around the terminals. The work which the Harbour Commission would have to do could be done by the railways at very little cost. Moreover, the Commission has interest to pay and must collect it from the traffic going through. Thus a handicap may be placed upon Vancouver and the terminal facilities there. The situation is much different in other ports of Canada.

With reference to the construction of an elevator, I think it is absolutely necessary, and I shall be surprised if you do not need half-a-dozen elevators in Vancouver; but instead of the people of Canada having to advance enormous sums for the building of all these elevators, which will be as useful and give the same advantage to our competitor as to our own lines, they should be built in each case by the railway company that will use them, or by private individuals, as has been done at Port Arthur and other places.

I therefore make the suggestion that it would be better for us to adopt some other system than that of appropriating each year $5,000,000 for undertakings that, in my judgment, will not be to the advantage of the people of Canada as a whole. Next year, just as surely as we are in this House, we shall be asked to supply another $5,000,000. If this elevator is constructed and the traffic goes through that I and others expect, another elevator will be wanted, and another $2,000,000 will be required for it; and then there will be a demand for larger wharf accommodation. The Ballantyne pier is not sufficient, in fact will be of very little use, for other traffic—that is, for merchandise—for the reason that there is an elevator built on that. That will be the excuse offered next year. If we must build an elevator, the construction should be done through the Canadian National Railways. At least, they should be given the control and operation of it. There will be sufficient elevator capacity for the Canadian National at all events, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is able to do its share just as well as the Canadian National. Bonds could be issued, if necessary, with the endorsation of the Government, and the money could be raised as cheaply in that way as by the method now proposed.

So far as the items are concerned, I am not disagreeing with them at all. I am glad to see that that short connection, which is not a mile altogether, is to be made with the elevator; but I am very sorry indeed that the elevators, wharves and other facilities are taken out of the Canadian National Railway system and that every other railway company is put in the same position as the Canadian National so far as the use of those wharves and elevators is concerned, although the other railways have their own terminals and will have twice as much, or three times as much, as we have when this work is completed. I am satisfied, from what little I know, that when this is all done the Canadian National Railway System will not have half the accommodation that is necessary at Vancouver.

May I ask the honourable leader of the House if the proposed expenditure by the Harbour Commission is the carrying out of the policy as laid down by a commissioner who, as I understand, was sent two or three years ago to Vancouver for the purpose of devising a plan that would develop Vancouver Harbour in such a way as to meet all requirements for many years to come?

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I would hesitate to criticise anything that the honourable Senator has said on this question, because I know that from his experience he is much better informed than I am on the subject. However, I desire merely to call attention to the question whether it is not in the interest of Vancouver, and of the Harbour Commisison, or the Government itself, that the elevator and the approach to it should be constructed and controlled by the Harbour Commission, in order that it may have the patronage not only of the Canadian National Railway, but also of all other railways, including the Canadian Pacific.

Hon. Mr. REID: In answer to the honourable gentleman, I may say that if the elevator at Vancouver were under the control of the Canadian National Railways, there would be at all times agreement or understanding that any other railway might use it, provided it was not filled by the Canadian National Railways' own traffic. If the Canadian National Railways are to take the grain from Alberta or Saskatchewan over their road, there will be only 1,000,000 bushels there. Suppose that the road competing with them were to run in a million bushels of grain and put it in that elevator; there is no way by which the Canadian National Railways could use the elevator at all. Let the other railroad have an opportunity to use the elevator too, and have equal rights, but if it is to be built by the Government it could be built as part of the Canadian National Railway System. If we are going to spend this money now, why should we not do it in such a way as to help our own railway system? The other railways could use the elevator just as well, provided that we were not overcrowded. That is the condition on the Canadian Pacific railway to-day, and there is no trouble at all. The C. P. R. is only too glad to take grain into any of the elevators it owns, provided they are not overcrowded; but it serves itself first, and then assists the others when it is in its power to do so.

Hon. S. J. CROWE: Honourable gentlemen, as a representative from Vancouver I want to say a few words in favour of this Bill.

The citizens of Vancouver will certainly be pleased with the Government for making this expenditure at this time. In 1919, when the first $5,000,000 was asked for from the Government, I advocated the building of an elevator and pier by the Government, as had been done in many of the eastern cities; but the Government then in power, of which my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Reid) was a member, did not see eye to eye with me. In 1913, I think it was, the Government created a Harbour Commission, to administer the port of Vancouver, but the then Minister (Hon. Mr. Reid) could not influence the Government to make the expenditure.

As the building of these wharves was commenced under the jurisdiction of the Harbour Commissioners, I think they should be allowed to continue the work. I endorse every word the honourable gentleman has said with reference to their coming back here in two or three years and asking for more money to develop that port, because during the last year it has developed to a wonderful extent; and, given an equalization of freight rates, east and west, there is no doubt that the port of Vancouver will soon rival the port of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is a twelve months port?

Hon. Mr. CROWE: Yes, it is a twelve months port, and with the increased number of bottoms coming to our city, the freight traffic has increased very largely.

If I may be permitted, I would like to read an interview with the manager of one of the largest milling companies in the prairie provinces. It is as follows:

> Vancouver, February 23.—That within comparatively short time Vancouver will be shipping from 100,000,000 to 150,000,000 bushels of grain annually was the prediction made to-day by Charles Stickle, western manager of the Maple Leaf Milling Company.
> Referring to flour shipments to China and Japan, Mr. Stickle said: "We are hampered by lack of shipping space and for that reason we have to refuse some very large orders for delivery in the Orient within the next few months. We have contracted for cargo space on every boat sailing from Vancouver until May 1.
> "Given fair freight rates and proper grain storage space, Vancouver will attract some of the largest flour mills and it will be only a matter of a few years until such will be located here."

Let me say a word with reference to the remarks of the honourable member from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) as to the Canadian National Railway owning the elevators in Vancouver. As he was Minister of Railways, he ought to know that the Canadian National has not a road of its own into Vancouver at the present time. It has running rights over an American road, the Great Northern, also to the Ballantyne pier. It is the intention of the Harbour Commissioners, I understand, to build what they call a terminal railway connecting the Canadian National with the Ballantyne pier and an elevator built a number of years ago by the Government. As a matter of fact, the Government built the first pier and elevator there, and later turned them over to the Harbour Commissioners.

If an elevator is built at the Ballantyne pier, it will be built at one end of the pier, and, in my opinion—and in the opinion of engineers with whom I have spoken—will not interfere at all with ships coming there for other merchandise. Large fireproof warehouses have been built there, with the very latest facilities for handling freight, and the grain elevator will not interfere at all with the other part of the pier. Several times last year ships had to lie in the stream because of lack of facilities for handling cargoes; but, as the Ballantyne pier will no doubt be finished this year, it will provide increased accommodation for vessels coming to our port.

I am certain that the citizens of Vancouver will appreciate to the very fullest extent the action of the Minister of Marine and of the Government in bringing forward this measure, and I hope Honourable gentlemen in this House will be as unanimous in its favour as were the members of the other House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should like to ask the leader of the House for some information. From the observations of my honourable friend from Vancouver (Hon. Mr. Crowe) and likewise of my honourable friend from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) I am convinced that the latter gentleman's proposal is the sounder one of the two. My honourable friend from Vancouver points out that the port of Vancouver will rival the port of Montreal. He points out likewise that the Canadian National Railways have no terminal facilities in the city of Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: Pardon me. They have terminal facilities near their station.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, but no terminal facilities for the shipment of grain, and so on.

Probably the most energetic and formidable propaganda that has been exerted by the port of Vancouver at any time is now in progress in the province of Alberta, for the purpose of diverting the shipment of grain by way of the port of Vancouver.

The greatest undertaking the Government of Canada has entered on is the operation of the National system of railways, and that we should overlook the necessity of linking up that great system with proper terminal facilities in the port of Vancouver would be one of the grossest omissions of which any Government could be guilty. It seems to me that we should not make this enormous expenditure without consulting the manager of the Canadian National system. There is no distinction between the Government of Canada and the Canadian National Railway System, and that we should enter upon a gigantic undertaking at the port of Vancouver, involving an expenditure, I assume, equal to that made in the port of Montreal, without taking into consideration the interests of the Canadian National Railway system, would be a very serious mistake. Furthermore, if the port of Vancouver is to become the port of shipment for Alberta grain, most of that grain will be carried by the Canadian National System of Railways, because, as we all know, the grades on that system over the Rockies are more favourable than those on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I may further say this. I know of no organization as competent as the railway to carry out economically and wisely, and with such advantageous results to the Government of Canada, great undertakings of this character. The railway has the machinery necessary to carry out great public works such as the one now under consideration to a very much greater extent than any harbour commission or even the Government itself. The harbour commission is simply a channel, a conduit pipe, through which this expenditure goes. The loan is being made by the Government of Canada and the work is being carried out by the Government of Canada. It is precisely the same thing as if the loan were being made to the Canadian National Railway System. It seems to me that if we are going to enter upon a great undertaking of this kind, which necessarily must be germane to the successful administration of that railway system, we should consult that system in regard to it. It looks to me as though we were entering upon the matter regardless of its bearing on the railway. Why, honourable gentlemen, the two things are so closely linked up together that you cannot separate them. They are one and the same undertaking, and to think of spending millions of dollars upon these terminal facilities and handing them over to an organization not calculated to carry them on economically and not associated with the Government of Canada is a mistaken policy. I cannot urge too strongly upon my honourable friend the necessity of bringing down to this Chamber for our information the well-considered opinion of the heads of the Canadian National as to the carrying out of this project. It is not yet too late to retrace our steps. This loan is about to be made, and surely, if it is necessary, in the public interest, a co-operative arrangement can be entered into between the railway and the Harbour Commission by which the work can be carried on as a joint undertaking for the promotion of the interests of the Canadian National System.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I entirely concur in many of the remarks of the honourable gentleman who has just spoken. I take it for granted that if it is better that the Government railroads should be consulted in this matter, it will be done, and that the Government will see that the most economical method is followed. I understand that this is the second loan of $5,000,000 for the development of Vancouver harbour, and I trust that it will not be the last money that will be expended on that account. The better the facilities in the harbour of Vancouver, the greater the use that will be made of the Canadian National line, and the better it will be for every farmer in Alberta, and, to a considerable extent, in the province of Saskatchewan. Last season a considerable amount of our wheat went by the western route. In all probability more and more will go each year, especially if the rates on wheat going West are equalized with the rates going East.

I think the honourable Senator from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) said that the bulk of the wheat would go West by way of the Canadian National. The bulk of the wheat will be grown along the line of the Canadian National, I believe, but at the present time the rate on the Canadian National is practically the same as the rate on the C.P.R., although, because of its grades, it costs the latter about double what it costs the Canadian National to carry it to the coast.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They will scarcely cater for that trade.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I do not think they will. If we get the same rate per mile going West as we have coming East, more and more of the Western wheat will go by way of Vancouver. There are many advantages to the western Canadian farmer in having his wheat shipped to the Old Country via the Pacific. We know, from what has taken place during the past year, that when the wheat goes down to Fort William the biggest part of it is shipped to the Old Country via American ports. We also know that our wheat does not get to Liverpool or to any other city in Great Britain, especially if it goes through American ports, in anything like the condition in which it leaves the West. It is trimmed down and mixed with the softer American wheat so that our grades are practically unknown in the Old Country. This is not true of the wheat that goes via Vancouver. It may be mixed to a certain extent by our own shippers, but it cannot be mixed to the same extent that it is when it goes by Buffalo or other American ports, for the simple reason that we have not soft wheat to mix with it, and because as my honourable friend suggests, we have a much better system of inspection.

This is one of the large sums voted by the Government with which I am in sympathy, because I believe it will benefit a large part of the country. I quite agree with the leader of the Opposition when he states that Vancouver is likely to become a rival of the port of Montreal in the years to come. As that honourable gentleman has said, it has a great advantage in being open the year round. The statement of the number of vessels and the tonnage now coming to that port shows that its trade is increasing very fast, and I am sure that it deserves every consideration from the Government of Canada. From the information brought down as to the revenue that was collected last year, I would judge that after a while that port ought to be on the same footing as Montreal, self-sustaining, and able to pay the Government interest on the money now being advanced as a loan.

In conclusion, I would say to the honourable leader of the Government that I think the suggestions made by my honourable friend from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) and my honourable friend from Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) are well worth considering, namely, to look further into the matter and see if any improvement can be made on the plans now proposed for having this new work done and the new elevators built, and the whole matter so handled and managed that our own Government Railways may get every advantage that can possibly be given.

Hon. Mr. REID: I want to assure the House, and particularly the member for Vancouver (Hon. Mr. Crowe), and I want the people of Vancouver to understand, that there is no opposition in any way to the passing of this Bill, either by myself or I believe by any other gentleman who has been discussing it. It is only a question of the most advantageous way of spending the money.

I would like to correct the honourable member for Vancouver when he states that the Harbour Commission was appointed in 1913, and that the Government of which I had the honour of being a member transferred everything to that Commission. As I remember, the question of constructing an elevator at Vancouver was decided by the Government when I was a member, and the Government, under the Trade and Commerce Department, constructed that elevator; and I am subject to correction if that elevator was not still under that Department when the Government went out of power. So far as my memory goes, it was never transferred to the Harbour Commision while I was a member of that Government; therefore the final decision was not absolutely settled as far as the terminal of the railways was concerned. The National Railways had to have more terminal facilities, and I took that question up with Mr. Hanna and his staff, and discussed it several times. The question at that time was not about the management of the railways, but the advantage it would be to them if they had terminals that they controlled. Their position in Vancouver was that they had a competitor who owned their terminal facilities, and there was nothing to prevent a vessel coming into Vancouver, say from China, and the C.P.R. offering to take the traffic in from the vessel without any charge for unloading, and passing it over to their cars, or indirectly giving some other advantage to that vessel, because of the C. P. R. owning the facilities. On the other hand, everything that passes through those elevators or over those piers for the Canadian National Railways must pay toll to the Harbour Commission, in order to make up the interest, due on the loan, and cover the cost of operation of the Harbour. In that way the Canadian National Railways are at a disadvantage in Vancouver. I have always believed in competition, and if those terminals were developed through the National Railways, which is another name for the Government, I believe that the Canadian Pacific, as a rival corporation, would fall into line, and thus the Harbour would perhaps be developed more quickly than it will be as a Government proposition in the way now proposed. I am only giving my own opinion for what it is worth.

Another thing the Government railways wanted to develop was a large pier and storage at False Creek, they call it, on the Kitsilano Reserve, and those piers and storage would be of great advantage to them. The honourable member from Vancouver and all the people of that city with whom I discussed the matter thought it was a good thing, and in the interests of Vancouver, of the railways and of the public as a whole. Now, the Harbour Commission may decide to spend this additional money at some other place, and the National Railways may be held up.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Can the honourable gentleman tell me what happened to the C. P. R. elevators at Montreal?

Hon. Mr. REID: The C. P. R. elevators at Montreal and the Government elevators all went to the Harbour Commission; that is what I understood. As the honourable gentleman knows, the Government spent a lot of money on elevators; so did the C. P. R., and they went in on equal terms, so that if the National Railways took grain into Montreal before they had their own elevators they could use the Government and the Grand Trunk elevators. In Montreal the railways are on equal terms, but in Vancouver everything is one-sided, for the Government are going to build all those elevators alone, while the C. P. R. will not build any. We have to build them and be taxed for them, and we have to develop them all, while the other railway has its terminals free. That is the point I am making.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The suggestions of my honourable friend have been examined by the railway companies. My honourable friend from Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) seems afraid that the Harbour Commission of Vancouver will not work in harmony with the Canadian National Railways for their mutual interest and advantage. He is expressing fears that are absolutely groundless, for the National Railways are working hand in hand with the Harbour Commission of Vancouver and know its proposals. Sir Henry Thornton has lately expressed the opinion, after visiting Vancouver and examining the situation, that it was for the Harbour Commission and not for the National Railways, to build the proposed elevator, and also the next one and others to come. Sir Henry is perfectly happy at the advantage which the Harbour Commission gives to the Canadian National Railways in the Great Northern spur, because the Commission secured running rights for the use of that Great Northern spur from its main line to the port, and has handed it over to the National Railways for operation. It will build a line to the present elevators, and a side line to the Ballantyne pier, so that the Canadian National Railways will have all the advantages that the C. P. R. possesses to-day. It has not been the policy lately for railways to build elevators. The C. P. R. in Montreal handed its elevators over to the Harbour Commission, and Sir Henry Thornton, on behalf of the Canadian National Railways, has handed over the Grand Trunk elevator in the port of Montreal to the Harbour Commission there.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But the railway companies have considerable elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They were obliged to have them at the time. My honourable friend from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Reid) says that if the elevators are built by the Harbour Commissioners of Vancouver they will collect dues from the Canadian National Railways. Yes, but the railways will be saving the interest on the amount of money that would go to the building of those elevators. As a matter of fact, there is absolute co-operation between the National Railways and the Harbour Board, and these developments will be superintended, as heretofore, by the inspector. I hope that the Marine and Fisheries Department will try to expand its supervision, rather than contract it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would like to ask to what extent the matter was submitted to the National Railway System. I can understand Sir Henry Thornton expressing diplomatic agreement with a scheme that seemed to him inevitable; that is to say, the Government has been inevitably committed to the carrying out of this undertaking of the Harbour Commission. Sir Henry's personal opinion might be entirely different. Did he know that this undertaking could be carried out, or that the Canadian National System might be saddled with the responsibility of carrying it out as part of a terminal scheme of that great railway?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All I know is that I am informed that Sir Henry Thornton publicly expressed his views on this point after having examined the situation in Vancouver, and also that of his own free will he has agreed to transfer the Grand Trunk elevator in Montreal to the Harbour Commission.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Might I ask the honourable gentleman if he has seriously considered that Vancouver is ever going to become a great shipping port for wheat? As I understand the situation, Vancouver can never be a place where there will be a wheat market. I understand that when you ship wheat to Vancouver you cannot sell it; there being no market, there is nobody who can take it off your hands. If you go to Winnipeg you have the biggest wheat market in the world, and you can sell it the next minute after its arrival. While I have no personal knowledge of the matter, I doubt, from the information I have received, if Vancouver will ever be successful along these lines.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of my honourable friend to the statement that I read, and which seemed to be an official statement, that last year 50 per cent of the wheat went to the Orient, and 50 per cent went through the Panama Canal to Liverpool. If that is so, it is a good omen for the future. I hope that we shall cultivate our eastern market, and thus be able to send considerable of our western crop to the East. As to the facility with which shippers can dispose of their wheat when they send it to Vancouver. I read with interest all that was said by the members from Alberta who spoke on this matter in the other Chamber. They seemed quite confident of enjoying the advantage of 8 or 10 cents a bushel, as they did last summer, by sending it through Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Did the honourable gentleman state that one-half of the wheat grown went through Vancouver?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No; of the wheat shipped to the coast 50 per cent went to the Orient and 50 per cent went via the Panama Canal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Fifty per cent of the wheat that passed through Vancouver went to the Orient.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: You have not any information as to how much passed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Some 14,000,000 bushels last year.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Out of how much?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, the child will grow, and I express that hope, although a paper that seemed to be of yellowish colour was sent to me from Vancouver, accusing Montreal interests of conspiring to prevent anything being done for Vancouver port. But I am from Montreal, and I am moving this advance of $5,000,000.

Hon. Mr. CROWE: I would like to inform the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. McMeans) that between January and February this year we have shipped about 12,000,000 bushels out of the port of Vancouver. He talks about a grain market not being in Vancouver. If I understand the handling of grain, the shippers never bring grain to any extent to any port unless they have a market some place else. I would imagine that there are several hundred million bushels of grain in elevators in Montreal and Fort William.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Waiting for a market.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: As a matter of fact, I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government one or two questions. First, has the only elevator that has been built in Vancouver been transferred to the Harbour Commission? If so, at what time, and under what conditions? Was it transferred free, if it has been transferred, or was it for a consideration, as a part of the ultimate vote for the equipment of the harbour? That question remaining for a moment, I think nobody in this Chamber or in the other Chamber has any other idea than that a port on the Pacific shall be developed to the largest extent possible, and nobody is more pleased than myself to hear the statement made of the rapid growth of the transportation of wheat through that port.

I was Minister of Trade and Commerce when the elevator system was devised and carried out, and I know that at that time we were not so hopeful as to what would ultimately go through the western port as we may be now, in view of the progress made since that time. But I always had an abiding faith that there was to be an exit through a western port, and that the facilities of the Panama Canal, outside of what might be advantages for the sale of our surplus product in the far East, gave a prospect of a large and increasing business being done through there.

To my mind the whole crux is this, that in the first place we should be assured that the Board which has been nominated, and which shall have the expenditure of this money, shall be a Board with the experience and business capacity and energy necessary to grapple with a large question of this kind. Have we that kind of men on the Board? If we have, or have not, the responsibility is upon the Government, and they must face that responsibility before the Parliament of Canada. That is the main essential—that there shall be a competent Board to manage this work. It is not simply perfunctory business that they are supposed to carry on. Their duties are such as require large information and excellent business ability. The formation and development of a port on the Pacific coast, such as the port of Vancouver gives promise to be, is something which requires the very best of business ability. We all agree to that.

At the same time, there are other interests concerned. I do not care how able a body of Commissioners you have, there are some other things that should be taken heed to at the same time. The Government of Canada is furnishing money, therefore the Government of Canada should be assured that in the plans that are projected, and in the dispositions that are made for the development of the port and the carrying out of that development progressively, the plans proposed by the Commissioners shall meet with their approval. I thing the Government is not simply to throw the responsibility of the plans upon the Commission and say: "We are not responsible; all we have to do is to furnish the money; these are the men that are looking after the development of the port, and we have nothing to do with the matter." I am not saying that the Government is doing that. If it is doing so, I think it is not doing its full duty. Therefore I think there must be the most careful supervision, in the first place, of the plans which are proposed for the development, as a basis upon which the money is to be spent, and then that the expenditures which are undertaken are carried out by the Commission.

But there is a third party to this. You have not only got the Board of Commissioners—a first class body of business men of wide experience—to carry on that part of it; and you not only have the Government furnishing the money, and as the trustees of the people seeing that it is expended on proper plans; but the third element is equally important, and it has been pressed by honourable gentlemen on this side of the House, and agreed to by all—that after you have your Commissioners, your plans, your paraphernalia in the port, the great livening influence and impetus is in the commercial corporations which use it, and those are the railroad corporations which centre in that place. The Government would not feel very well justified nor satisfied, neither could the Board of Commissioners, though they are not responsible to us, if after they had prepared plans, and after money had been voted and expended in the working out of those, and the sending of the products of Canada by those great railway corporations, the management of the railways came to the Government and said: "These are not proper plans; they are not doing what they were intended to do; therefore the money that you have spent has not gone to the point; we still have disabilities there, because those plans have been insufficient or improper." Therefore there ought to be the closest consultation with the managements of the great railway systems, more especially our own, which we are supporting by the resources of Canada, so that there might be perfect understanding and complete co-operation all the way through between those three elements which enter into this enterprise.

Now, suppose a Board of Commissioners have their engineers, and that those plans depend on their engineers' ability and work; does the Department have a supervision of those plans as well? Does the Department —which is the centre of the engineering ability as far as public works are concerned here in Canada—have part and parcel in this and collaborate in the preparation of those plans? It does or at least it ought to do so If it does the Government is responsible to see that that supervision is ample and that it is applied.

The other question is: have the managements of the great railways—particularly our own, which will largely use these facilities, the other already having terminal facilities of its own—have the managements been consulted, not as a mere matter of saying amen to what the Government has decided to do, but as a matter of careful examination, from the experience that they have had for years, and their knowledge of the traffic that will come or go through that port? Have they carefully examined these plans? Do they think they are sufficient? Are they in accord with them? If these three questions are answered in the affirmative, all we shall have to do is to put our trust in the Government, and hold it to the trust, to see that that correlation is maintained after it has been in the first place applied.

Progress was reported.

EXPORT TRADE OF PRAIRIE PROVINCES

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. DAVID rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will inquire from the Government:—If the greatest part of the export trade of the prairie provinces goes to American seaports of the United States to the detriment of our railways and elevators and does the Government intend to consider and remedy that state of things?

He said: I had intended modifying my question in order that we might have a discussion upon it, but as I am not desirous of speaking now, I put the question as it is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not been able to secure an answer for my honourable friend. A Royal Commission is at present investigating the movement of the grain crops shipped from the West to the head of the lakes, and that Commission will very likely give considerable information to the honourable gentleman and to the country regarding the question he has raised.

EUROPE AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will invite the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegates to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, it may be a far cry for me to invite the attention of the members of the Senate to affairs in Europe, passing thus from the consideration of our own national questions, which are of prime importance to us, so far as we ourselves are concerned, and within our own boundaries. But a moment's reflection in that respect will clear the air.

In the first place, I may remark that the Senate is not so hard pressed for time, in dealing with the public affairs of Canada which come before it, as to make it a matter of consequence that time should be exclusively devoted to these and not even a short period to the question which is contemplated in my inquiry.

In the second place, when we come to consider the matter, it is apparent that Canada has responsibilities, duties and interests which centre in continental Europe, and which are of great, if not of supreme, importance to Canada as a whole, in almost every phase of her work and administration. Whether we like it or not, Canada took part in the Great War, and, as hostages to her faith and her confidence in the purposes of that war, has left thousands of her own flesh and blood on the plains of Europe. Canada also took a part, and not an unimportant part, in the Treaty of Peace which was framed and signed at Versailles, and in that respect has an interest in the fulfilment of the terms and conditions of the Treaty.

In the third place, Canada is a member of the League of Nations, the design of which was to perpetuate the Peace which came from the labours of the representatives of the various powers in Paris, and as a member of that League has a continuing interest in the carrying out of the terms of the Peace Treaty and in their results in Europe and the world.

Outside of that Canada has also an interest, although it is a minor one, in such reparations as may be got from Germany, a portion of which comes to Canada as being part of the British Empire.

Leaving out those, which are important considerations, there is another interest which Canada has, and that is the interest of an exporter, trading in continental Europe as a market for her products—a market which in the past has been an important one, and which in the future, if conditions of peace, security, and prosperity can be gained and maintained, promises to be a very essential one for the most important of all our products, the agricultural products of Canada.

We sometimes forget how much of an interest that is. I suppose nothing has been more striking than what has taken place within the last year in the United States of America in reference to the interest among the farmers of the United States in the European situation. For a long time they were almost oblivious to any interest in continental Europe, but they have now been attracted in that direction by the fact, which is becoming more and more patent to them, that for the agricultural products of the United States continental Europe is a most important market, and that that market cannot be had at its best unless the people of Europe are at peace and as prosperous as it is possible for them to be.

But the United States and the British Empire have another interest in continental Europe—in its pacification, in its re-establishment, and in the speedy regaining of its full capacity for trade and commerce, in order to secure and render profitable the investments that have been made.

It will impress some of us, if we have not paid some attention to it, to look for a moment at the magnitude of these investments. Europe—I mean that part of Europe which was engaged in the Great War—owes to-day to Great Britain $9,000,000,000, and owes to the United States $6,700,000,000. France, Italy and Belgium owe to Great Britain $5,500,000,000, and owe to the United States $5,625,000,000. That is, the three powers which are to-day conducting the military occupation in the Ruhr owe to the British Empire and the United States, in round figures, $11,000,000,000. This total investment of actual moneys which have been employed during the war for food, for supplies to armies, and for the equipment of armies in the defence of France and Belgium would at 4 per cent involve an interest payment of $628,000,000 yearly.

I quote these figures to show the stake that the British Empire and the United States of America have in the rehabilitation of Europe, as being creditors to an enormous amount, and therefore, going upon the principle that the United States goes upon, looking upon these as debts that have been honourably contracted and must be honourably met. That principle is already being carried out in reference to England, which owes $4,600,000,000 to the United States and has just made a funding agreement by which it pays that sum within 62 years, with interest and amortization payments each year during the continuance of the term. It is apparent, then, that more than France, more than Belgium, more than Italy, have a very keen and direct interest in the rehabilitation of Europe, and in the payment of the reparations which have been set by the Treaty, or which may be hereafter agreed upon to be paid. For the above reasons I think I am entirely justified in bringing before the Senate, as an essential part of the Parliament of Canada, these considerations, which appeal to the legislator, to the business man, to every thinking citizen, and to every lover of peace in our country.

So much with reference to that. For a long while the war went on. It so happened that the Great War lasted for four years and three months. The singularity of the coincidence is in this, that since the Armistice was signed until this particular moment a similar term of four years and three months have already passed. The war surprised the world by the length of its continuance, by the slowness with which it was consummated, by the disappointment of all the earlier hopes as to its speedy or immediate finish. The signing of the Armistice ushered in a period when the hopes of the world were again high that the movement would be quick, uniform, and steady towards the pacification and rehabilitation of Europe and of the countries engaged in the war. But just as the progress of the Great War was pathetically slow, tragically slow, horribly slow, with equal truth it may be asserted that pathetically slow and disappointingly slow has been the progress towards the rehabilitation of Europe.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Will the honourable gentleman allow me to put to him a question? Is he not afraid that another war will take place before the end of the negotiations for peace?

Right Hon. SIR GEORGE E. FOSTER: If my honourable friend will allow me, I will touch on that question as I go on. My honourable friend will not think that I am lacking in courtesy if I do not answer the question now, because it will come in the course of the remarks I am to make.

Although that progress has been slow, there is not a shadow of doubt that there has been progress. We cannot thoroughly judge of the operations of four and a quarter years without taking into account the situation as it was faced by Europe upon the signing of the Armistice. You had countries which had passed through all the horrors and burdens and catastrophes of an unexampled war. You had in Europe itself an impoverished set of peoples who had gone to their limit in prosecuting the war. You had a large number of new nationalities just setting up housekeeping, that were laden with debt, without cash and without credit. Each of those had its national boundaries, and contiguous to every boundary there was another nationality, and each was suspicious of the other. There were jealousies, there were boundary disputes to be settled, there were all the difficulties of passports, customs and transport regulations, the absence of all amenities of trade and commerce and communication from nationality to nationality. Guards were upon every boundary line, and soldiers were behind the guards, and what was also quite apparent was that in some of those there were aspirations which were, to say the least, inopportune, and ambitions which were exaggerated and unholy.

We had examples of those in Poland and in Greece. In Poland the union of the old parts of the former empire into a new Poland did not satisfy the Polish people, and war actually broke out between Poland and Russia. The consequences of that war might have been very prejudicial to Poland, and to the peace of Europe. Happily, however, by the co-operation of the French military advisers, the war was soon brought to a close. Greece had ambitions for a time to establish a second Grecian empire in Asia Minor, and pressed her way in that direction. That was an ambition which was far beyond the capacities of Greece, and it ended in disaster to Greece itself and a serious complication in Near Eastern affairs which yet remains unsettled.

All those were conditions and situations faced by the different nationalities in Europe under circumstances which were of the most strenuous kind, and, to my mind, there is little wonder that progress has been so slow in the meantime. But there has been progress. To-day one observes the increasing amenity of trade and communication between those different nationalities, one finds them mildened and softened by mutual agreements, by the growth of greater confidence from year to year between neighbouring nationalities; by agreements and ententes which are negotiated; by the settlement of disputed boundaries, the uncertainty of which caused intense strife and racial hatred. These have been softened. Gradually the amenities have been increased; gradually the difficulties have been done away with, until the whole aspect of European national housekeeping has materially changed, with a good prospect of reaching conclusions which will largely stabilize the new dominions.

Then all of a sudden, one after the other, just as these difficulties were being happily arranged, and prospects of peace and rehabilitation were growing hopeful and optimistic, two things happened. There was the comeback of the Turk, the rout and expulsion of the Greeks from Asia Minor, and the victorious advance of the Turks to the shores of the Bosphorus, bent upon entering Constantinople and Thrace, flushed with their success in Asia Minor. Happily they were prevented from an entrance into Europe at that particular time. Since then negotiations have taken place. What may happen in the end no one knows, but at the present moment it does look as though war may be avoided, and as if a standing-ground of mutual agreement may be had between the Turk and the western powers of Europe.

The other thing that happened was as sudden as the first. It was the occupation, by force, by military power, of the Ruhr by France and Belgium as the culmination of a series of negotiations which resulted at last in a fundamental difference of opinion between the Allies and the action which all of us know, and which many deplore. I will have something more to say on that a little later on.

My conclusion so far is that progress has been made, and that on the whole such progress has been satisfactory, but that at the present moment there are gathering and ominous clouds which need to be dissipated, and that to-day an anxious world is fixing its mind upon Europe, filled with doubt and uncertainty as to the possible outcome. It may turn out that the clouds may pass without a thunderbolt and a crash, but on the other hand the action may result in chaos and disruption to the great detriment of the peace and prosperity not alone of Europe but of the world; and behind all the grim spectre of another war shows in outline.

Leaving that part of my subject, I propose now to bring before the members of the Senate some of those conditions in Europe. I had the opportunity of a couple of months' travel in the different countries of Europe during the last summer and autumn. I do not make any pretension that that qualifies me to form dogmatic conclusions or formulate opinions which cannot be questioned; but what it did was to give me an idea of the atmosphere and of the surrounding circumstances which helps one to correlate his ideas, and to value his information as he could not otherwise do.

The first thing that impresses one in continental Europe to-day is the change as contrasted with ten or fifteen years ago. The man who travelled through Germany and Austria in those days and travels there now is struck with the almost revolutionary nature of the contrast between the two periods. Then you had all the splendour and magnificence of military pomp, backed by autocratic military power. Then you had the mighty empires of Austro-Hungary and of Germany and of Russia. At the present time these have passed away, and in their place there have come up a succession of smaller nationalities. One sees the retrogression of the monarchical and militaristic, and the emergence of the democratic and republican notions of government.

Someone asks me: "What is your impression as to the continuity of progress in that direction? Will the great monarchies come back in Germany, in Austria, and in Russia?" One can only give his impressions. My own opinion is that the Hohenzollern or the system he represented will never come back in Germany, nor the Hapsburg in Austria, nor the Romanoff in Russia—that democratic methods of government in these countries have come to stay. But it comes in slowly, it progresses slowly, it gains strength only by stages, and it would be a strange thing if any other kind of progress could be anticipated. In old Germany there was no democratic or republican sentiment that arrived at the governing stage. The same was practically true in Austro-Hungary. The same was absolutely true in Russia; and it would be a wonderful thing if a new democracy or republicanism which antagonized traditions of ages—of many, many years at least—should suddenly come into full power and dominance. But it is coming. Republican and democratic institutions are on the march, with tottering steps in many cases, but they are still on the march, and are gathering strength from day to day.

Just here let me add this observation. When we make up our judgments as to what we think Austria should have done or Germany should have done in Government policy and administration, we must have some regard to the situation I have just mentioned—the weakness and uncertainty of new incoming governments, based upon hitherto untried principles and the consequent lack of that strength and stability in its initial stages, which may be expected when the new systems have been sanctioned and settled by practical experience.

The next thing that struck me as an observer was the emergence of the peasantry and I think we must give that some thought, for it intimately affects Canada. Before the war, in a large portion of Europe—take Russia, Poland, the northern Baltic States, Rumania, portions of Austria and of Hungary, and what now forms Czecho-Slovakia—there was no extended peasant proprietorship in land. The peasant population in these countries was largely in the majority. It is said to form at least 90 per cent in Russia. It was in a very large majority in the other countries that I have mentioned, but up to that time the peasants were not to any large extent in possession of the lands. There was a fraction which owned their lands in small, sometimes very small, allotments; a very small fraction which had fair holdings of which in some manner or other they had obtained possession; but the great majority of the lands were held by the large landed proprietors, and on those lands the peasants were labourers, not proprietors.

This has all been or is being revolutionized. In Russia the peasants have come into the user of the land. It is true they are not yet yet owners in fee simple, but it is equally true that they have possession and the usuage of those lands, and that possession and usage can never be taken from them; so that the peasantry of Russia is slowly but surely becoming a landed class with smaller or larger holdings which in the course of time will develop them from labourers into effective farmers. If you take Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, all of new Serbia, and Czecho-Slovakia, what I have spoken of is the rule. To-day there is legislation, in hand or in actual effect, which is dividing up all those landed estates, and fixing the maximum which any man may now hold, that maximum running from 500 acres to 1,000 or 1,200. The rest of it is broken up and distributed and sold, or put in one way or another into possession of those who were formerly labourers or very small land holders, and those holdings are parcelled out under a scheme running from a minimum holding of 50 acres each up to 250 in some countries, 300 in other countries, 400 in others, but always keeping in view that it should be well distributed and that the number of farmers that will own it shall be as large as possible.

Now, that is a fact of very great interest to us in this country, as a farming country. What may be deduced from this condition of affairs? In the first place, that your labourer is on the march to landed proprietary. That means a good deal. In the second place, you will have poorer farming for a time. The landed farmer had means, organization, and intelligence, and his farming was a productive operation. The new peasantry that go on the farm will have little organization, little capital, and but a modicum of intelligent knowledge of farming. What will happen then at first will be that there will be a lessened production. That lessened production will extend through a longer or shorter period of time, according to the methods of education and encouragement given to the farmer, his accumulation of experience, and his possession, gradually, by degrees, of some capital and some force to put into his farming. So the first result that will accrue from those two considerations is that the markets which were supplied by the farming class of those countries, will not be supplied with as great a surplus as formerly, and consequently there will be a greater demand, other things being equal, for supplies from overseas. Another effect will be observable along that same line. Your labourer and small holder was ill fed and ill nourished. When he comes into the possession of a sufficient plot of land, he will feed himself more generously. If you apply that procedure to the vast area of the peasantry which is making this revolutionary change, you will find that a larger part of their produce in grain and meats will be consumed by themselves. As a result we have another factor which has to do with the supply that will be required from outside countries, including our own. These are on the economic side of the question; but another thing, which is of still greater importance, is that you are imparting gradually a strength and stability to these countries. A class of peasant farmers who own their land will be conservative in their opinions, and will conduce to the stability of government and the maintenance of order. That class of people will not be inclined to extreme communistic or socialistic adventures, and consequently will make for stable and good and reasonably conservative government.

The next impression a traveller receives is of the insecurity and instability of governments in continental Europe. It arises not only from the influences of the war, but largely from another consideration. Democratic principles are being applied in these new nations upon a basis of practically universal suffrage. They depend, then, in their new government, upon a vote which goes down to the maximum of the people who are governed, but which does not always find a maximum of intelligent and well-formed opinion as to policies and governmental action. Built upon that you have in the elected legislatures groups which are astonishing in their variety and much more astonishing in the views which they hold of the so-called principles upon which they are founded. In Poland they have no less than 18 political groups, and those 18 political groups have a tremendous amount of prejudice and hatreds, creedal, religious, racial and national, and all kinds of ideas as to what should be put into practice to renovate their own condition and make their position stronger.

I wonder what would become of a Government in the city of Ottawa which finds certain inconvenience in carrying on when there are three groups and a fraction to contend with, if they had 18 groups in the House of Commons with about the same feelings animating them that animate the groups, say in Poland or in any other country in continental Europe? There a Government which is formed depends on groups and combinations which are as unstable as water and which may change overnight. Consequently there is an insecurity in Government and an instability and lack of strength which are easily deducible when you come to see the elements upon which it rests. A member of the Austrian Government told me that in Austria, where the people are comparatively of a sweet and amiable disposition, no member of the Government when he left the council room one day could be quite certain that his life would be spared him to go back to the council room the next day. Such is the insecurity of the life of members of an administration. You have only to recall the assassinations that have taken place in the German Government and administration up to the present time, the fate of the last Governor but one of Poland, who was no sooner elected than the assassin's knife found him, sharpened by partisan and race bitterness. There was the case of the Finance Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, who because of his insistence upon sound financial principles in his administration fell to the knife of the assassin. You have to go no farther than Greece, where a cabinet, so to speak, was set up against a wall and shot to pieces as a result of a sudden revolution.

But if you want one example that stands out stronger than all others as to the insecurity of government at this stage, take Italy. What has happened in Italy? For years they had been working out a constitutional form of government, and had at last arrived thereat: a king, a cabinet dependent upon the branches of the legislature, and two branches of the legislature elected by the suffrage of the people—all the forms of constitutional government which we have here. But what happened? Not for a moment going into the causes of what happened, let me state the facts. Of a sudden there appeared in Italy what is called the Fascisti. The Fascisti proved to be a systematized organization that, without authority of government, leave or license, took it into their heads to march into city after city, depose the municipal authorities, turn them out neck and crop, and put their own men in. They took upon themselves under a lawful government, a constitutional government, and without the authority of the government or fear of it, to engage in sanguinary conflicts with the Communists—to fight them, kill them, arrest them, and turn them out from the different industrial operations they were carrying on. One fine morning 40,000 or 50,000 Black Shirts appeared under the leadership of Mussolini on the streets of Rome, marched straight up to the Capitol and demanded of the King that he give them a fiat to form a Government; demanded of the Government that they should get themselves away; demanded of the legislature that they should keep perfectly quiet. And what has happened? Mussolini reigns to-day; but in a constitutionally governed country he has never submitted his cabinet, his policy, or himself to the suffrages of the people. Constitutionalism was trampled under foot, and force—the force of a cabal at first, of a large party at second, and of a government at third —is in power in Italy to-day; and it has passed through a legislature not elected on its own issues, a measure giving it despotic and absolute control, and enabling it to carry on its rule until the end of 1923. It is not constitutionalism which is enthroned in Italy to-day; it is direct force; and the leader of the force is really absolutely despotic and autocratic. Circumstances had been such that the move was rather looked upon with favour by the Italian people, and so up to the present time it has been tolerated if not welcomed. But the question is not settled, and before the people of Italy to-day there is the question of whether they shall be ruled by force or through the procedure of a constitutional government. So much then with reference to the insecurity of government. With governments so insecure as that, dependent as they are on groups, it is impossible for the wisest measures to be carried through for lack of power. Therefore, they have had in the countries of Europe a lack of what we call sound legislation, but, generally, they have gone as far as the weakness and insecurity of tenure would permit them to do.

The next point that comes before the observer is the instability of the currency, and, as a result of that, the confusion of trade and commerce, and of entreprise and productive and distributive energies. We in Canada really have not the slightest idea of that condition because it is so difficult for us to translate ourselves into the position of the continental European. Take my own case. When I left London I fortified myself with some marks, as I was going to Germany, in order to be able to pay my passage until I should make a change of money in Germany itself. For a one pound note I received in London 2,200 marks. Before I left Germany my pound note would have brought me

10,000 marks, and if I had waited a fortnight longer, it would have brought me 238,000 German marks. Upon going from Germany, where the mark at that time yet had the appearance of respectability, without having looked into the Austrian currency, I found myself one evening at the railway station at Vienna. Fortunately I had secured rooms at an hotel, and my first duty was to get a conveyance to take me to it. I negociated with an automobile driver and asked him to take me and my effects to the hotel. It took him 10 minutes to do it; and when I got out from the cab I asked him, as was usual: "what is your fare?" "35,000 crowns." Well, to use a colloquial phrase, I almost fell over backward. 35,000 crowns. I was not sure that I was overfavoured by the Bank of Montreal in Canada, and that my future stay might not be a very short one, in Austria at least. However, I asked the hotel man if that was an extravagant charge. He said: "No, that is about the right charge." Then I said: "Will you pay it?" Next morning I went to the bank and took out from my pocket a drab brown looking one pound sterling note, and the bank manager, without a wink of the eye, handed me over 375,000 crowns. Well, honourable gentlemen, I had 20 of those pound notes in my breast pocket, and I felt I was secure for a time at least. So I went to my hotel and said: "I propose to stay here ten days. What will my room cost me?" "300,000 crowns per night." I had 20 pounds, so at 375,000 crowns to the pound that gave me seven millions and a half crowns; so I said to the hotel keeper: "I will stay for ten days." In those ten days 3,000,000 of my crowns would go for lodging, and outside of that I would have four and a half millions to go upon. Gentlement, none of you will ever know what it is to feel yourself made a multi-millionnaire within the space of half an hour at a bank in a foreign country. Well, to translate it into the Canadian vernacular, imagine what would be the condition of Canada if such was the plight of Canadian currency, and you will be in a better position to see in some measure how it affects the country at large. A tourist who goes to Europe and passes rapidly through finds that his money grows as he sleeps and increases as he travels, without any toiling or spinning on his own part. He goes to the hotels, and visits the theatres, and dines in the restaurants, and walks about the streets. There is an appearance of great activity, and an apearance of very great prosperity. The streets are crowded with well dressed promenaders, the hotels are full, and beer and champagne, for those who like them, can be got at reasonable prices. The theatres are crowded night after night; the restaurants are filled. You can get a good square meal, or could at that time, for 25 cents of Canadian or American money. Your dinners would cost somewhere in the vicinity of a shilling or a shilling and threepence in English money. Naturally the tourist who did not sound the depths, and did not spread himself very widely, would come away with the idea that Austria and Germany and those other countries were in a state of unexampled prosperity. But let him think. The moving panorama visible at the hotels, the restaurants, the theatres, and on the streets, are in the first place but a minute fraction of the total population of the countries visited. In the second place, this panorama is mostly made up of tourists who by hundreds of thousands pass continually through the gateway and out again, of foreign colonizers who more or less temporarily come to sojourn where their stable currencies command fabulous premiums, of speculators who come from every quarter of the globe greedy and barbaric, of bargain hunters in batallions and of the nouveau-riches native and foreigner. These are no sure indicia of the conditions of the masses who form no part of this moving panorama.

You have to look below the surface and try to translate yourself into the position that is made general by this condition of things. In Germany, in Czecho-Slovakia—which, however, has a comparatively stable currency—in Poland, in Austria and in other countries where the currency is very unstable, there are men very like men in Canada in that they have made earnings and have invested them, just as we invest earnings, in various kinds of securities. Now let us take two or three examples. Take Austria for instance. A man in Austria has been in possession of 100,000 Austrian crowns. In 1913 or 1914 he invested that money at 6 per cent. Those 100,000 crowns in 1913 would be worth to him $20,000 of American money. The yearly interest on it as an investment would have been 6,000 crowns, or $1,200 of American money. He made his investment on that basis, and he looked forward to it as a continuing investment, and thought it a good one; and so it was. But he wakes up in 1923 and finds that, while he still has the exact number of crowns he had before, yet that investment represents in American money, only $1.43. He had as income on that investment $1,200 per year. If he chooses to let the crowns remain on investment and asks for his interest, he will get at the end of the year exactly 8½ cents in American money. His investment of $20,000 has shrunken to $1.43, his yearly interest of $1,200 to 8½ cents. Spread that over all the classes of investment among people who invest just as we do here in this country. Translate that to Canada and imagine if you can the condition of a country under those circumstances.

We have pensions in this country. They are a provision against old age. An Austrian came into possession in 1913 of a pension of 6,000 crowns, worth to him at the time $1,200 of American money. To-day he has the pension, but when it is paid to him at the end of the year he does not get his accustomed amount of 6,000 crowns to the value of $1,200, but he gets 8½ cents. I myself saw in Vienna an aged couple who had a pension of 8,000 or 10,000 crowns per year, supposed to be a provision for their declining years, their old age, and who under present circumstances, when that pension is paid to them, receive the enormous sum of 9 to 10 cents in American value.

Go a little farther and take salaries. A salary of 6,000 crowns was sufficient for an officer to live upon to pre-war times. His 6,000 crowns now would be of no more value to him than what I have stated, 8½ cents.

In mortgages the effect is the same. Take municipal stocks, government bonds,—all kinds and forms of investment: the very same thing holds. That gives you the situation in Austria. It is not much better in Germany.

Let me give one example which is pre-eminent, and shows not only the disappearance of the earnings of the mass, but also the possibility of profiteering by certain companies and interests. The other day in New York I saw in the paper the advertisement that on a certain date in April the Hamburg-American and the Nord Deutsche Steamship Companies would pay off their bonds. Their bonds were issued in 1913 for 140,000,000 marks, which at that time represented in good money 32,500,000 American dollars. In April they will pay off every one of those bonds in marks, and they can buy the wherewithal to pay them off for the sum of $3,500. The multitude who thought that a fine investment—and it was at the time— and who put their earnings and savings into it, find themselves to-day bereft, absolutely robbed, of all their investment and reduced to the penury of the few cents that they may get out of the stock at its present redemption. In every kind of investment—mortgages, stocks, government bonds, municipal bonds, loans—the situation in Germany is on a parallel. Life insurance is a tremendous investment in our country. It was equally prevalent in Germany, Austria and other European countries, and millions of their money were invested by people of small means in life insurance, so that when the breadwinner died the family might have something to come and go upon. What happens? A man in 1913 insured his life for 10,000 German marks. At that time this was equivalent to 2,380 American dollars. Yesterday he died, and to-day his wife goes to draw the insurance, and she gets exactly 25 cents! Can you translate that through all the wide area of life insurance in Germany, Austrian and other countries of continental Europe, and can you form even a shadow of an idea of the confusion, the loss, the misery and utter ruin of masses of the people in that respect?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would the honourable gentleman allow me, before he passes to another point, to ask what is the theory as to the whereabouts of the millions of coins, silver and gold, of those countries? Has the honourable gentleman seen any of those coins?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I have not seen one. Gold is a thing that never gladdens your eye in continental Europe. You never see it; neither do you see silver. You have only bills. And when I got my 375,000 crowns I had to bulge every pocket in the clothes I was wearing, in order to carry home the money. On that point the theory is as old as it is well proved, that bad money drives out good money; and bad money has absolutely driven all the good money from circulation in continental Europe.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Having regard to the whole situation, are there not compensation of substantial value involved in this depreciation of currency? Are not private, municipal and other corporations enabled by it to discharge indebtedness which they contracted previously?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, there is a compensation such as I have mentioned in the case of the two steamship lines. That is a compensation which results in what is really an enormous robbery. It takes the small earnings of the mass of people and puts them into the hands of a big corporation or a government. There is no compensation as regards the general mass of the people who are robbed of their investments and impoverished thereby. You may ask, "If the mark goes down, does not the wage earner get a larger number of marks? Is he not compensated in that way?" But what is the fact? That as the mark goes down prices go up. I will read you, just on this point, something which bears out that statement. I read from the Frankfurter Zeitung of December, 1922, comparing 1913 to 1922, that the index of prices in Germany runs in this wise. The par of 100 in the year 1913, in textiles, is raised to 320,623. The par in 100 in minerals is raised to 262,212. The par of 100 in foods is raised to 175,845. The par of 100 in finished goods is raised to 151,193. For all goods the par of 100, the index number of 1913, is raised to 205,417. That shows you that although prices are chased by wages, although it is the rule in Germany, in Austria and in most of the other continental countries that the wage is rated up in proportion to the rise in prices, that is, in the cost of living, yet the wage is always somewhat behind the cost of living, which advances with such astonishing rapidity that compensations to the mass of the people do not exist. For the speculator, for the big company, for the corporation, for a certain kind of organized business which depends largely upon speculation and is fed by it, there is the transferrance of wealth from the mass to themselves; but in the end the corporations themselves feel the effects, and the prosperity which comes to them for a time is not an enduring prosperity.

I think I have elaborated the effect of instability in exchange upon the masses and upon trade and commerce, sufficiently to enable honourable members to apply the information in thinking out the matter for themselves. It is a very abstruse question, and it is difficult to solve the whys and wherefores of all these changes and combinations. But one thing emerges as evident in the light of experience; that they all tend to impoverish the mass of the people and to approach the ultimate state in which chaos and commercial anarchy must prevail. That is the condition in Germany, Austria and many other countries of continental Europe to-day.

Hon Mr. GRIESBACH: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman another question, before he leaves that point.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Was it not within the legislative and financial genius and capacity of the nations to which he has referred to ameliorate their own conditions themselves had they desired to apply themselves to the task?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: If the governments of these nations had commenced with the desire to do so and had actually set themselves to the task, the first difficulty they would have met would have been as to their ability to get legislation to enable them to carry it out. Take the German government itself—a republican government for the first time in the history of Germany; a republican government coming into power after the cataclysm that wiped out the old military and despotic government, and with no credit, with little cash, with domestic burdens on every side, and having to maintain within their own country services which were absolutely indispensable to national existence. Take the same in Austria, and in Poland. Does not the honourable member see the almost if not quite insuperable difficulties involved in getting down to the strict business methods of finance and economic administration? But the point is not so much as to what they might have done, as to what was done and the situation which now confronts the world. There is no salvation in going back to the might have beens of five years ago. There is the one example of Czecho-Slavakia, a much smaller and a much more self-contained country and a country which when it set up housekeeping had the choicest of the dominions that formerly belonged to Austria and to Hungary, and in part of Germany. Dr. Benes and his Government set themselves to work to bring the economic and financial condition in agreement with accepted principles, and the consequence is that Czecho-Slovakia has the best stabilized currency in the newly-established nations. But in working it out her finance minister fell to the assassin's knife.

I now come to the question of reparations, the question which to-day looms largest and compels the most careful thought in Europe and by all who are interested in the future conditions of Europe and their own fortunes as affected thereby. The question of reparations, if followed out carefully and in detail, would take more time than I propose to give it, or than this Chamber would agree to sit and listen to; but I will touch the main points in it.

There were different ideas as to reparations from the time the war ended in the Armistice up to the present time. The idea was early prevalent in France that the Germans should pay all the costs of the war. I am not saying that that was the idea of any one government, but that was the idea which was prevalent—that they should get back from Germany, if they conquered, not simply the damages but the costs of the war. In Great Britain, for various reasons, the idea was encouraged that Germany could pay and should be made to pay the costs of the war; if not all the costs, then every penny that it was possible to be taken from Germany for that purpose. So you had the general opinion in France, and a prevalent opinion in Great Britain, that from the reparations large sums of money would be got, and could be applied to the reparation of the devastations and to the payment of war costs.

Well, the Treaty of Versailles made the first step in that direction. It did not fix the exact amount. That was left to machinery provided by what was called the Reparations Commission. Its duties are set out in the Treaty; in short, it was to receive and collect all the damage claims.

But before I deal with that, the Supreme Council and the Peace Treaty makers, after repeated discussions, came to an agreement as to what should be covered by reparations, and I think I should read that, so that honourable gentlemen may have a clear idea as to how far it goes: The decision was: "That Germany's reparation obligations were to be determined in accordance with a fair construction of the Allies' pre-armistice declaration, and that such construction excluded imposing on Germany the costs of the war, but was limited to what may be called actual damage."

There was a strong demand that Germany should pay more than the actual damage. There was some dispute as to the terms of the Armistice and the terms which afterwards were imposed by the military authorities. After a full discussion of both of those this was the decision: that the costs of the war should be excluded, but that the actual damages should be paid by reparations; and amongst those damages, after debate, pensions and separation allowances were included. The authority which was to decide what those reparations were to be was the Reparations Commission, which was established by the Treaty. They were to collect the damage claims from the different nations; were to examine them; were to take Germany into conference upon those damages, and hear what the Germans had to say; and in the end the Reparations Commission was to decide the full amount of reparations, and the schedule of payments upon which the reparations were to be made.

That was the duty of the Reparations Commission; but, as in many other instances, the Supreme Council dabbled with the duties that belonged to other bodies created by the Treaty itself, and so from the time of the Armistice up to May, 1921, the Supreme Council tried over and over again to settle the total amount of the reparations which were to be demanded. Mr. Poincare was the Chairman of the Reparations Commission. He placed his resignation in the hands of the Supreme Council, because he said: "You are proposing to do what the Reparations Commission was constituted to do, and if you are going to do it there is no use of my wasting my time on the Reparations Commission." And so he resigned his office, and another was appointed in his place.

Four different attempts were made by the Supreme Council between the time of the Armistice and May, 1921, to settle the amount. The amount to be asked ran from 269 billions of German gold marks to 215 billions, and could not be settled amicably by the Supreme Council at those figures. At last they gave over to the Reparations Commission the fixing of the total amount. The Reparations Commission gathered in the claims which in total amounted to 184 billions of gold marks. The Commission examined these claims, cut them down to 132 billions, presented these to the German Government for their remarks and statements, went into the matter with them, and ended by deciding that 132 billions of gold marks should be the amount fixed; and, to make a long story short, the German Government was obliged in the end to agree to that. They did agree to it, and it was passed and approved by their parliament.

There you come, in May, 1921, two and a half years after the Armistice to the first settlement of the amount which was to be paid by reparations. But there were other conditions, and we must in a fair-minded way take all those conditions into account if we are going to reach a reasonable judgment. Not only was this sum of reparations first fixed by the Reparations Commission and afterwards settled at the sum that I have named, to be paid by Germany, but Germany had other penalties, and other obligations imposed as well. Germany was to pay Belgium the amount which Belgium had borrowed from the Allies or elsewhere in order to carry on her war so far as that went; and the amount which was ultimately fixed by the Reparations Commission was 2,500 millions of gold marks. That was over and above the reparation amount, 132 billions of gold marks. Germany also had to give up all her shipping of 1,600 tons and over, which was forfeited and handed over to the Allies. One-half of all Germany's merchant shipping from 1,000 to 1,600 tons was also to be handed over, and was handed over. One-quarter of her trawlers and fishing boats were to be given up, and were given up; and 20 per cent of all her inland river shipping was to be given up as well, and was given up. That is, Germany had to suffer the loss of those instruments of production and of distribution, and that was a very real and very large penalty. She was to deliver to France the Saar Mines in the Saar Basin for the period of 15 years, to be worked absolutely by herself; and the coal that came from those mines was to be the coal of France. The Reparations Commission was to fix ultimately the value of the Saar Mines, and put that to the credit of the general reparation account; but in the meantime that coal that formerly was at the disposal of Germany was to be for 15 years at the absolute disposal of France and Belgium and Italy.

France, outside of that, was to receive from the Ruhr 7,000,000 tons yearly for 15 years, plus the difference between the former output of the French mines before they were devastated and the actual yearly production as they should be gradually brought into operation, to a maximum of 20,000,000 tons for ten years, and after that to 8,000,000 tons, for the succeeding 5 years. Belgium was to get 8,000,000 tons for 10 years. Italy was to get from 4,500,000 to 8,500,000 tons until 1929. Luxembourg was to get her former consumption, whatever that might be. The total amount of coal which was thus to be provided amounted in all to about 510,000,000 tons. That, too, was to be credited to Germany at a valuation fixed by the Reparations Commission.

But we must remember this—that it was no less a burden to the Government which had to pay. The Government owned certain mines, but it had to get the coal from its own mines, to pay all the costs of raising the coal, and of shipping it. If it got it from other mines it had to provide the money to pay the other mines for the coal. It was a burden, continuous and uniform, upon the German government to provide that. Outside of that, France was to get 35,000 tons of benzol, 50,000 tons of coal tar, and 30,000 tons of sulphate of amonia for 3 years; that also to be credited to the reparations account at a fair valuation, but it had to be provided by the German Government.

Then, Germany had other penalties imposed upon her. Alsace and Lorraine were to come back to France, and rightly so—it was a provision of the Treaty—but it was, by that much, a weakening of the resources that Germany had formerly possessed.

Then, again, all her colonies were taken away from Germany, and that meant that Germany's resources for tropical products were entirely taken from her, and she was left to the purchase and importation from countries which possessed those commodities for all time to come.

In addition to that, Upper Silesia, which was a very productive centre of coal and of metallurgical industries, was in the end given to Poland; and that was also a diminution of the power and resources of Germany.

Those are mainly the terms of the Treaty. In addition, Germany was to pay the costs of all occupation of the territory by the Allied governments, all the costs of the reparations Commission and of all the other commissions that were appointed to carry out the different terms of the Treaty. I have put that on record in order that we may see what was the nature and incidence of the penalties and reparations imposed upon Germany. We have to take that into consideration.

Let me now invite the attention of honourable gentlemen for a moment to a comparison. Great Britain owed the United States, as a war debt, $4,600,000,000. After she had made certain payments of interest and certain small payments upon the principal, that is what it came to in the end. A Funding agreement was arrived at by the two governements by which this debt was to be worked out in 62 years. The interest charged was 3 per cent for the first ten years, and 3½ per cent for the remaining 52 years. The first year's payment by Great Britain consists of interest, $138,000,000, and a payment on amortization account of $23,000,000, making in all $161,000,000. Each year the amount of interest paid diminishes according to the amortization payment of the preceding years. Each year the amortization payment increases until in the final year Britain has to pay, on amortization alone, $175,000,000.

Now, honourable gentlemen, please keep that in mind. That is a burden, for the first year, of $161,000,000 upon Great Britain. It is a debatable question in Great Britain yet, in financial circles, whether she will be able to fulfil these payments. For two generations these payments subsist under the conditions fixed, and when the two generations have passed, the total amount which will have to come from Great Britain to the United States will be about $11,000,000,000. Can Great Britain collect that sum in taxes from her people, and in the meantime sustain her credit, her commerce, her trade, her industries? She has determined to do it if possible. She has started out on the path of fulfilling it, and I believe that she will do it; but what I wish to call the attention of honourable members to is that it is a question of financial life and death, almost, for Great Britain to undertake to make that payment. Yet it is only $161,000,000 for the first year.

Now, will you look at the reparations as fixed for Germany? 132 billions of gold marks. That means $32,000,000,000. That sum of $32,000,000,000 bears an interest of 5 per cent and an amortization tax of 1 per cent. That is, the first year of that reparation, if carried out by Germany, would have called for what? It would have called for $1,920,000,000. Take the two figures into account. Great Britain, with her strength, her power, her credit, and her equipment for business, finds that it strains the last tendon to pay $161,000,000 and keep up the payments proportionately afterwards. Yet, the first year's payment on the reparations demanded from Germany would have called for $1,920,000,000. The interest itself for the first year would be $1,600,000,000 and the sinking fund $320,000,000. The two added together give the figure I have mentioned $1,920,000,000. If Great Britain found that it taxed her capacity to the utmost to make a payment of $161,000,000 to the United States on her debt, what is the position of Germany, conquered, dismantled, with her mercantile fleets liquidated to a large extent, with all the impoverishment which came from the war. when she is called upon to pay $1,920,000,000 as the first year's contribution? Is it humanly or physically possible for that to be done?

Hon. Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? I understood quite clearly that on the 5th May, 1921, the total amount of 132 billions of gold marks had been made payable at the rate of two billion gold marks a year.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There were negotiations with the Supreme Council and attempts at fixing the reparations were made by the Supreme Council, which, however, did not culminate in success; and so, on the 5th of May, the reparation amount was fixed and definitely stated to Germany and was accepted by her at 132 billions.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Marks or dollars?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: 132 billions of gold marks, equivalent to $32,000,000,000 of American money. And the schedule of payments settled by the Reparations Commission was $2,000,000,000 gold marks plus 26 per cent of the yearly value of German exports, estimated at 1,000,000,000 gold marks.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The honourable gentleman has stated the amount which the Germans were to pay. It is a very large amount. Will he tell us what they did pay.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes. I have the figures before me and will give them. That reparation amount of 132 billions of gold marks was divided into a series of bonds, A, B, and C. There were A bonds, for 12 billions at 5 per cent and 1 per cent amortization; there were B bonds for 38 billions of gold marks at 5 per cent, with 1 per cent amortization, making the 6 per cent, and there were C bonds for 82 billions of gold marks, which were not issued, but which were to be issued just as soon as the Reparations Commission thought that the payments of the German government was sufficient to make a sinking fund and an interest charge of 1 per cent and 5 per cent. So the calculation I have given is correct in that respect.

Now, if you take 50 billions of gold marks which are already issued in the A and B series of bonds which are now running, and upon which the interest charge is 5 per cent and 1 per cent for sinking fund, it makes an amount of $727,000,000 which is to be paid on those two series alone, leaving the 82 millions of bonds hanging in the future and to be issued whenever the Reparations Commission think they can get sufficient interest and amortization fee to carry them. The amount that was asked from Germany under those conditions was for the first year twelve times the amount Great Britain is paying to the United States; and if you take the lesser computation on the 50 billions already running, the amount is four and one-half times as much as is required from Great Britain for her first year's payment to the United States.

I simply place this before honourable gentlemen because it reveals the situation, and because the question must be answered by each one of us. Do we think it is physically possible for the German Government to make payments of that kind and of that intensity? I have my own opinion. I think it is physically and financially impossible. I not only think that, but I doubt whether there is an intelligent Frenchman in France, who has looked upon both sides of this question, who has not now come to the conclusion that the full amount can never be obtained, while he holds the opinion that every cent that can be obtained must be obtained. With that conclusion I have no fault to find. That is the position taken by the Government of France. We must look at the Government of France sympathetically, but at the same time we must look this question in the face economically. Sympathetically France was led to believe, and it was made as fairly possible and certain as it could be at the Peace Conference, that Great Britain and the United States would guarantee to protect France from the aggression of Germany, and would remove that menace from the German border. But that did not carry. The United States did not approve of the Treaty, and consequently it fell to the ground. So France says, and rightly so: "We signed the Treaty of Peace and went into its terms with that guarantee in view. We did another thing: knowing that reparations were in order and decreed, we went to work and raised money as fast as we could and built up our devastated regions until to-day we have put 90 billions of francs into them. Where did France get that money? Not from England; nor from the United States; not from any other great commercial or financial market of the world. She raised that money from her own peasantry, from her own small investors, and it is that money which has built up the devastated regions in so far as they have been built up."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And France says: "We have been able to do this with ten departments crippled. Why could not Germany do that in our stead?"

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That is very well as a question, but there also is the situation which confronts us to-day. We cannot go back and say: why did not Germany in 1918 and 1919 commence to do what she should have done to carry out her obligations as far as she could? The fact is that she did not, partly because she had not the will or the wish, and partly because the physical and economic circumstances of the country made it impossible to do so. It was a country which had neither credit nor much cash, and which was ostracised by the other nations of the world in so far as trade and commerce was concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But it had the wealth of the industrial class.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, and although they are numerous, they are a small percentage of the vast German population which has been practically impoverished. You may milk them to the extreme. I have no objection to that at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Could the right honourable gentleman inform the Chamber what the 132 billions of gold marks which Germany agreed in 1921 to pay comprised under the head of pensions? The suggestion has often been made that, the load being heavy, the pensions which were added at the last moment of the conference in Versailles or Paris should be deducted. Has the right honourable gentleman any idea of what the total amount of those pensions would represent if deducted.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: No. As my honourable friend has said, the pensions were added afterwards. They were added after a very considerable debate, and after a strong expression of opinion on both sides. I wish the pensions had never been added. I think they should be taken off. But that is not a very large proportion of the total. I cannot give my honourable friend the exact sum.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Is the honourable gentleman in a position to answer the question of my honourable friend from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) as to what the Germans have done?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Up to April, 1922, the latest figures which I have had access to show that Germany had paid in cash and in kind 12,030,255,000 marks, which translated into dollars is about $3,000,000,000. There is the account handed in upon the demand made by the Reparations Commission for the payment of the 20 billions, which was to be made by the first of May, and which was not paid by the Germans, in which they stated that they had paid in kind and in cash 21 millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: That includes the involuntary surrender of ships, and coal and benzol.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That included all the payments in kind and cash.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Can the honourable gentleman say what amount of cash has been raised by way of taxation and so forth.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I have not the separate amount of the cash or the other; I have only the totals of the two.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Would the honourable gentleman say whether that is over and above the upkeep of the allied armies of occupation.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: The 21 millions of dollars includes everything that was paid in kind and in cash for occupation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What did the Reparations Commission admit out of that sum?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: When the 21,000,000,000 gold marks bill was presented by the German Government, the Reparations Commission admitted about 8,000,000,000 and disputed a great deal of the rest. There was included in the bill a certain portion which had not been adjudicated upon, but which would be placed, at a value to be fixed afterwards by the Reparations Commission, to the credit of the German Government. Those are the latest figures I have seen as to the total amount paid. I should imagine that of that amount nearly 2,000,000,000 had been paid in cash, but I am not sure that that may not be overstating it. Besides that Germany has paid a certain proportion of the Belgium indebtedness as it has fallen due, and, I believe, is still carrying on that payment.

I am afraid I have taken a lot of time.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No, no. Go on; it is very interesting.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I am sorry to take up so much time.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: We are not sorry.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: But I desire to place this matter before the House as fully as I can.

The Peace Conference had not completed its work, and certainly had not departed from Paris before doubts were raised as to the reasonableness of the reparations demand made upon Germany and her ability to pay it. It is a long story to follow, but an intensely interesting one, as to the opinions, the negotiations, and the statements that were made pro and con. Almost immediately the Reparations Commission appointed a committee of financial experts, who met in Paris in January, 1920, and these went into the whole matter of the ability of Germany to pay, of what would be the terms of payment and modes of payment, and the possibility of Germany getting a credit in some way or other in order to enable her to pay. The Committee made a report to the Reparations Commission, and that report, with a statement, was submitted to the Brussels Conference, a tremendously important meeting of financial men of thirty-seven nations of the world. The general recommendation of the Committee's report in the first instance, and of the memorandum sent to the Brussels Conference, was adopted by that conference and was sent broadcast to all the nations belonging to the League of Nations. The main points were these,—that in order to rehabilitate Europe there must be co-operation amongst the nations, and that in some way or other credits should be advanced to Germany and to other nations in perilous financial circumstances, for the general benefit of all the war nations and of the world as a whole. The recommendation has gone to the different nationalities and the proposition has been worked out successfully on those principles in some countries of Europe.

But a much more important Committee was that which met in 1922, convened by the Reparations Commission, with the assent of the Supreme Council and the Allied Powers. It was composed of the foremost financial experts in the world. J. Pierpont Morgan was one, from the United States of America. There were seven of them altogether, the best that could be got, and they were instructed by the Reparations Commission to take up this matter, examine into it, deliberate upon it and report to the commission. They took it up. In the instructions from the Reparations Commission it was stated as a condition that this committee should not take into consideration the total amount to be fixed for reparations; that that did not come within their scope. The committee sat, deliberated, examined into the matter, came back to the Reparations Commission and said, in effect: "Unless you can allow us to take into consideration what would be a reasonable amount for Germany to pay, we are helpless in this matter and there is no relief that we can see and recommend." The Reparations Commission took that suggestion into consideration. All the members with the exception of France agreed to give that committee full scope. That would not bind the Governments, and it would not bind the Reparations Commission, but it would give the committee scope to arrange some scheme upon the basis of a reasonable amount which Germany would have the ability to pay. That amount could be fixed and payment could be worked out under proper restraints and proper supervision. France objected to that, and on that objection the committee reported that they were powerless to assist, but that their services were at the command of the Reparations Commission whenever they should see fit to give them permission to consider the amount of the reparations as well as other circumstances and conditions. That permission France did not give and has not since given—to my mind a golden opportunity lost.

Over and over again there have been discussions by the Allies as to this matter. The Entente was to be kept; if by any possible means it could be kept; and it has been kept up to the present time, and it may be kept hereafter. I am not altogther pessimistic in that respect. But there developed two grades of opinion. There was what you may call the Anglo-Saxon opinion, the opinion of the British Government and its experts; the opinion of the United States and its financial experts and business men, so far as it is ascertained, and so far as it is actually concentrated in plans and in suggestions. That was the idea that in order to get out of this mess and to have France and the other Allies obtain the reparations which it was possible to obtain, there must be a moratorium of some length of time, during which Germany should not be called upon to make payments, and that immediately during that moratorium, financial experts, not politicians, should be gathered together and asked to consider Germany's ability to pay, and how credits could be raised, and whatever could be done to make the matter solvable in the end. It was proposed that in connection with that there should be a stabilization of the mark, gradual, but progressive in its nature, and that during that time financial control should be kept over the expenditures of the German Government its taxation, its fees for services and everything of that kind, for the purpose of ascertaining the maximum that Germany would be able to raise, taxation included. If this proposal could be carried out, it was to be a point in the policy of Great Britain, she pledged herself, to stand by it absolutely, even to the application of force, if in the end that became necessary. The British plan was that, once it had been decided what amount Germany had the ability to pay, Germany must pay it. That was discussed between France and Great Britain, and they failed to see alike. The French Government said, "That does not satisfy us."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Did Germany express any opinion as to that financial control that it would have to accept?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Yes, Germany, although wanting to keep its sovereignty and its control, has not expressed its entire disagreement with any sort of financial control. That, however, is a matter of detail, and a committee would be able to decide what should be the control, and the Allies would be able to say that must be the control. It would not be in the power of Germany to minimize that in the least. The conditions must be such as would meet the approval of that committee and of the Allies.

But France says: "No, that is not enough for us. We want productive guarantees. Consequently, if we and you cannot agree, we will take the matter into our own hands and we will settle down in certain districts in the Ruhr and take possession. Thereby we shall have what we call productive guarantees. There is the customs, we will put a customs barrier around certain areas and we will collect customs from the trade. There are the timber dues; we can administer them and take the profits. There are the mines and the factories, and in the end, if it becomes necessary, we can make them work and help to pay us, or we can work them ourselves if the workmen who are at present in them do not do so. Anyway we shall then have a position in the country and shall be in possession of some of their most valuable resources and be able to say, "Here we are. Pay us what you owe. We stay here until you pay, or until we are satisfactorily arranged with for payment, with proper guarantees."

There is the difference between the two, and in the last Paris Conference both sides honestly, and, I belive, properly stated their positions, and they then came to the conclusion: "We cannot agree. Sorry. But if we cannot, we are honest enough to say so to each other. Let us shake hands. We will smile on each other still and we will try not to offend each other's feelings or prejudices." "But we do not believe," say the British, "that yours is the policy that will get you reparations." "And we do not believe", say the French, "that your plan, the British plan, will ever get us where we want to get."

That is the situation to-day And on the failure of Germany to produce the amount of coal she was to send yearly, and the timber that she was to give, default was pronouced, contrary to the opinion and the vote of the British representatives, and France took possession of German territory on the 11th day of January.

So much for British opinion. There is also the opinion of the United States. Secretary Hughes before the final Conference in Paris, made a very important speech, and he gave a copy of that speech to Monsieur Jusserand, who sent it to Paris, and it was in the hands of the French Government while that Conference was going on. And what was the suggestion of Mr. Hughes? In the first place the United States took away their soldiery from France. Britain did not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Why?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: And I believe Britain was right in not taking away her forces. In the second place, in that speech of Mr. Hughes, which embodied the thought of the American Government, the points made were simply, in plain English, these: "We are not in favour of forcible occupation. We are in favour of having experts look into the question of the ability of Germany to pay, and the terms under which she should pay. The United States, as a country, is willing to co-operate and lend the services of its experts for that particular object." And the hope was held that if that were done co-operation might be brought about and a result which they thought would never be attained by force might in the end be accomplished.

That is the Anglo-Saxon opinion as against the French opinion, the Belgian opinion and the Italian. Well, may I be permitted to say, with all proper regard, that I think that was an opinion which should have had very great weight. I look back to the time when the great war commenced and to the long weary years when it was being carried on. I look back to the time when Belgium and France were not oblivious to the opinions or the help of Great Britain and of the United States. I look back to the time when Britain sent her money, shed her blood, and devoted the forces of her whole Empire to defend the sacredness of a treaty and to withstand the aggression of the military autocracy of Germany and of Austria. That expenditure of money, that outpouring of blood and that immeasurable sacrifice make up a credit which entitles the United States and Great Britain to a greater respect for and deference to their opinion in a crisis such as the present than has been given to it. Europe is debtor of Great Britain and the United States to the extent of over $15,600,000,000. France, Belgium and Italy are debtors to Great Britain and the United States to the amount of $11,000,000,000. Does Britain want to get back some of the indebtedness that is there? She has not so far pressed her claim. She has so far had no offer of payment from these debtor powers of interest or principal. For years and at present the British taxpayer is carrying the burden. But the United States has laid it down that she must have her bills paid. Anyway Great Britain has a trust in the reparation and ought to have some say as to how that reparation can best be obtained. The United States and Great Britain together, representing the Anglo-Saxon sentiment, have in Europe a stake of unparalleled magnitude—a stake such as no countries have ever had before—and a greater stake yet in the pacification of Europe and the re-establishment of the economic and commercial status of Europe and the world. The United States looks to continental Europe for a market for her products, without which the avenues to a great amount of her prosperity are closed. Great Britain depends more than we think upon the continental market. It was a great market for her before. It is a small market for her now. Only by pacification and re-establishment can it become a great market for her in the future. In every way, therefore, the Anglo-Saxon world has a stake in Europe, in the reparations and in the re-establishment, which at least entitles its opinion to great weight. That opinion would have said, in brief: "Go slow. We know your patience is tested, but really what you are after is not a slice of German territory, inhabited by German people. You have had experience in that respect with Alsace and Lorraine, and it did not turn out well for Germany, and you know how it went to the very strings of your heart for that long half-century. You do not want to annex millions of German people. You do not want to annex thousand of square miles of German territory. You do not want to go in there and manage Germany—you a country of forty millions, and the Germans a people of sixty millions. What you want are reparations. Will you get them by your policy? Would it not be better to take our policy? Though the time would be long, yet in the end you would get something equivalent to what you want. It is possible that under your policy you may get nothing and that Europe may be plunged into economic chaos."

There were two positions. The question was for France, and France has made her choice; she has gone into the Ruhr. She has been there a little more than two months. In that time she has got no coal, she has got no coke, she has got no reparations in cash or in kind. That is true. She says: "But there is not time enough yet to have solved the problem; let us go on." Nobody is hindering her; Great Britain stands and looks on, although she disapproves.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But Great Britain hopes that France and the Allies will win.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Well, none of us would like to see them end in failure, because that would be a cataclysm for France, for Europe, and almost for the world, and so we must hope even against hope. But she has got no coal; she has got no reparations in kind; she has got no reparations in cash. In the whole of that district every avenue of enterprise and business and transportation is confused, disarranged, becoming stagnant, whereas formerly it was a centre of production and a source of tremendously wide distribution.

Well, but France says: "If we are not getting coal and reparations, the other fellow is feeling uncomfortable." He is; but what happens? It happens that with exports from the Ruhr region prohibited, with an export duty on what is allowed to go, the industries and trade of allied and friendly nations are being affected, those of Germany are feeling the pinch, diminishing, going out of operation, and all the difficulties of non-employment, non-production and what comes therefrom, if this fight continues, is to go on progressively from bad to worse until the final result is attained.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Until Germany knows that she is licked.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: That perhaps would be met with different notions by some. If Germany is rich, then what would be the objection on the part of France to following the advice of Britain and the suggestion of the United States, and having that absolutely determined by independent authority, and yet by authority which would be sympathetic with France?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because France felt that if she gave four years of a moratorium without the guarantees, in four years she would have war.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Well, that is a matter of conjecture. I do not see, nor have I seen, though I have listened and looked very carefuly, anything which to my mind makes that a certainty. But how far short of war is she now and that without the support and sympathy of the Anglo-Saxon world? If, however, she had fallen in with the advice and suggestion of the Anglo-Saxon world, she would have had the influence of the United States and the influence of Great Britain at her back, and no Germany that could be reformed within the next century could stand against those guarantees and that power. But there we are. Opinions differ, and we have each to be guided by our own opinions and come to our own conclusions.

And now I beg the pardon of this Chamber for transgressing on its patience by one further line of thought, which shall be short. That is with reference to Austria, where a different line of conduct was carried out.

Austria after the war was dismembered, and, without going into details, found herself in a perilous financial and commercial condition. In 1921 her position became so perilous that France, Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Italy and Great Britain felt that if Austria collapsed there would be trouble amongst all the surrounding nationalities, and that Europe would be precipitated into a condition of things which would make re-establishment almost impossible. So in 1921 the Supreme Council asked the League of Nations to make an investigation and prepare a scheme for the rehabilitation of Austria financially, and in a trade and administrative way. The Council of the League of Nations took the matter up, put its Commission to work, prepared a scheme, and submitted it to the Supreme Council. That scheme provided for the setting back for 20 years of all the debts that were owing by Austria to the Allied powers. The United States was one of those. It was suggested that a moratorium for 20 years should be granted; that during that moratorium the League should take charge of the financial matters of Austria, subject to the sovereign rights and co-operation of Austria, and should by supervision and by aid in every possible way try to rehabilitate her finances. There were thirteen nations involved as creditors of Austria. Before anything could be done all those had to be communicated with, and it took one whole year to complete negotiations, and the last nation that gave its consent was the United States of America. During that year Austria went from bad to worse. In February 1922 collapse was imminent, and was only averted by an advance of £2,250,000 by four friendly powers. But there was no financial control, the money was spent, and six months thereafter the situation was worse than ever. The Austrian Government then went to the Supreme Council at its meeting in London in August and said: "You made us what we are; it is impossible for us to carry on any longer without help; come to our aid, or we must give up the ship, and collapse will take place in Austria, and you know what that means to the surrounding countries and to Europe." The Supreme Council replied: "We are very sorry we cannot help you; go to the League of Nations." So they went to the League of Nations in August last year, and stated their case. The Council of the League took it up, and put its Commission at work to form a plan. This Commission had twelve different meetings. At the end they agreed upon a plan. That plan was submitted to the Assembly of the League of Nations and was unanimously adopted by the Assembly, which authorized it to be put into operation.

What was that plan? First, that the League of Nations should appoint a commissioner not belonging to any of the great Allied powers, and that that Commissioner with the League's financial experts should go to Vienna and arrange matters in collaboration with Dr. Seipel, the Finance Minister of the Government, and get the necessary conditions consented to. What were those? First, Austria must give to the Council of the League of Nations financial supervision and agree that she will not make expenditures unless those expenditures are countersigned by the Council's representatives. Austria agreed. Secondly, that Austria shall cut down over-employment and useless services, raise rates, of public services such as railways, tramways, and all utilities. Austria must restrict expenses in every possible way, amalgamate necessary offices, abolish unnecessary overheads, conform to stricter and better methods of administration, impose such taxes as are approved by the Commissioner, and in every way lay the foundation to bring about within two years' time the equalization of the budget so that the receipts and expenditures shall balance each other. In the meantime Austria is to stop printing notes, to establish a bank and find money therefor. That bank is to take over the Austro-Hungarian Bank, is to be a bank of issue to be forbidden by its constitution to give money to the Government except on securities which banking men will take to be sufficient. Austria must do more than that—and it is a wonderful thing that they assented to it:she must get the different groups in the legislature together, and they must pass resolutions and an Act by which they bind themselves not to interfere with this program for two years; that is, that they give to the Government and the Advisory Council plenary power for two years to carry out this operation without interference by the legislature and the parties in the legislature. Austrian sovereignty was to be absolutely respected. The League will place in charge Dr. Zimmerman, an ex-burgomaster of Rotterdam, and he will reside in Vienna. If all this be done, then the allied nations will guarantee a loan of £15,000,000, which will carry Austria through until the end of 1924, when she will be on straight rails, with a balanced budget and a stabilized currency.

That was all agreed to. Legislation passed; the bank has been subscribed to, and has been in operation since the first day of January; the crown has been absolutely stabilized since November last; not a single note has been printed on unsecured paper—that has been done away with entirely.

What has happened? That savings are coming back to the savings banks, that business is springing up, that confidence is being inspired, that the loan placed on the London and Paris and Amsterdam and other markets last week for temporary treasury bills, to be paid off when the loan for the £15,000,000 is made, passed triumphantly through the Stock Exchange and is to-day in London operated in at a little above the par of issue.

It is a wonderful thing that an enemy—a down-and-out enemy—once it puts itself in a position of being helped, will get the sympathy of the political and financial world.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER.

The large loan is guaranteed by eleven different nations most of it by Great Britain and France, Czecho-Slovakia and Italy. Next summer this £15,000,000 loan will be made international, and it is believed will be readily taken up. This action has revived the confidence of Austria, it has revivified their fading hopes, and has given them faith in a national future. The whole transaction is a wonderful testimony to what can be done by a non-partizan body acting as the League of Nations acts.

Some such thing as that could have been done—could yet be done—to settle the reparations trouble. It is wonderful how you take the sting out of things when you put into the hands of a representative Council of 52 nations what otherwise would be attempted by two or three or four interested and jealous powers.

If there is one thing that has retarded the settlement of Europe more than another it has been the differences of opinion between the Allies themselves. It has been the counter-ambitions, the petty selfishness here and there displayed, and the lack of real, unselfish unity, that has made things as slow as they have been made. In proportion as you get these out from the Supreme Council and a few nations, and into the hands of the representatives of all the nations of the world, the sooner you will have good results, the sooner you will have peace and ultimate re-establishment.

And so I turn, in my last words, to the League of Nations, which stands like a beacon tower in a lone and weary land; which points the way, and which guides the wayfarer. It is a friend sitting constantly, watchfully, with a heart that feels and a sympathy which acts, and a fairness of judgment which cannot be swayed even by the strongest members that belong to the League of Nations. It is the helpful counsellor that goes to the different nationalities, bruised and bleeding and torn with their credal, racial and national animosities, and says: "Be reasonable men; sit down around a common table; we are your friends; tell us your grievances; let us help you to accommodate them; let us together come to a solution which will be human, and which will be just as well."

And so the League of Nations has averted four wars which were fairly certain if it had not acted. And so to-day we get the news that at last the long contention between Lithuania and Poland has been settled. The Council of the League has kept its hand on it for two years. There have been lines of soldiery drawn up, facing each other; there have been magazines of explosives behind, ready for war; but the League has kept its hand on the shoulders of each, and it has said: "Be reasonable; wait wait," until at last, worn out by friendly sympathy and the offer of aid they said: "Yes; go to it, League of Nations; make the award, and we will stand by it." And to-day we have news that the Supreme Council has affirmed the decision of the League, and that henceforth this trouble is out of the way.

There is a body which I think might well be appealed to in this case. It might be appealed to by the great nations of the world who are interested. It might be appealed to, to take the business point of view absolutely. Difficult? Somewhat difficult; maybe quite difficult; but perhaps it will come to that in the end. Let us hope so.

On motion of Mr. Beaubien, the debate was adjourned until Wednesday next.

At 6 o'clock the Senate took recess.

The Senate resumed at eight o'clock.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee on Bill 16, an Act to provide for further advances to the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in the Chair.

On section 2—the Crown may advance $5,000,000 to Corporation:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: When the Committee rose yesterday I was asked a few questions which I desire to answer. The first question was: have the works or the projected works of the Vancouver harbour been made in virtue of a general plan which has been approved? The Harbour Commission of Vancouver is working upon plans that were either made by or submitted to Mr. Swan, the Engineer, of Montreal, who was specially sent to Vancouver for that purpose. The whole scheme of improvement was prepared or approved by Mr. Swan himself.

As to the extension of the present elevator and the building of another, I may say that one of the best experts in elevator building that the country has produced has been asked to study the situation and prepare plans and make a report. This is Mr. Rolph, President of J. S. Metcalfe and Company.

I have also been asked as to the ability of the Harbour Commission as at present constituted to supervise and carry on that work. I may inform the Chamber that the Chairman of the Commission is Mr. Kirkpatrick, an engineer of repute, who has presided over that Commission for some time. I am quite sure that Mr. Kirkpatrick would not be criticized by any member of this Chamber or by anyone coming from British Columbia. The other two members of the Commission are Mr. R. E. Beatty and Mr. Sam Prenter. They replaced Mr. Sam McClay and Mr. Mackenzie. Comparisons are always odious, but I may say that the gentlemen at present associated with Mr. Kirkpatrick stand as high and have had as much experience in matters pertaining to the financial side of the operations of the Board as their predecessors.

I have been asked whether the improvements in the harbour which will be developed if this $5,000,000 is put at the disposal of the Commission have met with the approval of the railways that are utilizing those terminals. I am informed that the Harbour Commission as well as the Marine and Fisheries Department are working in close co-operation with the railways. If conditions similar to those in the harbour of Montreal prevail on the Pacific Coast we may rest assured that the railways play an important part in the preparation of plans, because they utilize those terminals, and in Montreal they have had a great deal to do with the final preparation of the plans. I am told by the Department of Marine and Fisheries that the C.P.R. authorities, as well as those of the Canadian National Railways, are perfectly satisfied with the work to be done and the improvements made in that harbour.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can my honourable friend say what is the settled policy of the Commission with reference to the building of elevators? Are all Harbour Commissioners hereafter to build the elevators at the ports which they administer? If that is so, I apprehend that it means that the Government decides upon a policy. I presume that a Commission of this character will scarcely enter upon so important a policy as that of building elevators without the approval of the Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Harbour Commission prepares plans with the help of its engineers and obtains estimates of the cost. Those plans are brought to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, where they are studied.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not refer to that so much as to the general question of who will build the elevators. Will it be the railways, organizations in the grain trade, or the Commissions? In the past, I understand, the chief elevators at these ports were built and owned by transportation companies, grain companies, and other organizations.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All I can say is that under the vote which we are examining it is the intention to enlarge the present elevator and to build another one. It is apparently the intention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to permit the Commission to do the building, as we are voting money to be put at their disposal for that purpose. As to the further policy which will develop in regard to the building of other elevators, I am not ready to speak. I heard in another place that there was a possibility of private corporations entering the field later on. But that is indefinite, and I can only speak as to the utilization of the money we are about to vote.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You are establishing a very bad precedent if you expect private corporations to build elevators hereafter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Harbour Commission at Montreal seems to have obtained the consent of the Government during the last ten or fifteen years to the Commission itself doing the building. Further, it has absorbed the Canadian Pacific railway elevator, and is now taking over the only terminal elevator in Montreal which does not belong to the Board, namely, the Grand Trunk elevator.

Section 2 was agreed to.

On section 3—interest on money during construction to be paid out of capital:

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: To whom would the interest be paid? Is it contemplated that these bonds would be sold to private parties?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. The bonds are taken by the Federal Government and the money is advanced upon those bonds.

Section 3 was agreed to.

Sections 4 to 7, inclusive, and the preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES BILL

FURTHER CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

The Senate again went into Committee upon Bill 7, an Act to amend the Northwest Territories Act.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Bradbury in the Chair.

On section 1, new section 59, subsection 1—Jurisdiction and powers of stipendiaries; application of criminal proceedings outside Northwest Territories:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There was some objection to the proviso:

> Provided that a person shall be qualified to serve as a juror although he is not a British subject.

If my honourable friend who leads the forces on the other side, who knows the conditions in the West better than I do, thinks that we can do away with that proviso and take the risk of the administration of justice being hindered because of the shortage of one British juror, I will not insist.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not know that the present Northwest Teritories Act requires a juror in the Northwest Territories to be a British subject. My honourable friend and also the honourable gentleman from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), read from the Act when this Bill was under consideration a day or two ago. It seems to me desirable that this proviso should be amended, as the present Act already fully provides how the jury shall be selected. This proviso would apparently introduce a complex situation and might render the present law difficult to interpret.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Under the circumstances I will move to strike out the proviso.

The amendment of Hon. Mr. Dandurand was agreed to.

Section 1, new section 59 A as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble and the title were agreed to.

The Bill was reported, as amended.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

MARRIAGE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. ARTHUR C. HARDY moved the second reading of Bill V, an Act to make lawful the marriage of a woman to her deceased husband's brother or such brother's son.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is not the first time that the provision contained in this Bill has come before this Chamber. As far back as 1880 it was introduced as a second clause of what is now known as the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. The Bill, after having passed the House of Commons by a large majority, was rejected by a small majority in this House, and chiefly because it contained the provision which I am introducing to-night.

In 1882 the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill was introduced again, this clause having been eliminated, and it passed not only the House of Commons but this Chamber also and became law.

That was exactly 40 years ago, and I may be permitted to say that in the intervening time sufficient progress has been made in the world's affairs for us to consider again this provision, which puts a woman on exactly the same plane as a man, so far as marriage rights are concerned. I do not know whether one would consider the Deceased Wife's Sister Act as raising the plane of woman, nor could I say whether the provisions of the present Bill would raise a woman to the same plane as a man, or whether it would raise a man to the same status and level as a woman. However that may be, we do know that in the last ten or twenty years the rights of women have been recognized more than they had been in perhaps centuries before. In the last few years, partly on account of the war and partly as a result of the struggles of women for equal civil and political rights, we have seen the women of Canada put on an equality with men so far as the suffrage is concerned. I have therefore ventured to introduce this Bill, which would place a widow on exactly the same plane as a man whose wife is dead and who is permitted to marry his deceased wife's sister. This Bill would permit a woman to marry her deceased husband's brother, or such brother's son.

It is not my intention to lay upon this House the burden of the long legal argument which took place in the House of Commons when the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill was introduced. The debate covered a good many days and a vast amount of very abstruse and technical legal argument. I would not be capable of going into it even if I desired, but I think the whole matter is so plain to anyone taking an interest in the affairs of women today as to make it quite unnecessary to do so. We do know this, that the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill and all its consequences have been accepted fully and in the right way with reference to legal status. Whatever may be the objections on the part of some, based on conscientious or religious scruples, they do not come into the question in regard to this particular Bill. I am free to say that it does not affect religious scruples, because it does not compel any woman to marry her brother-in-law. It is simply permissive to any woman who desires to do so, just as a man is permitted to marry his deceased wife's sister, without being compelled to do so.

I would call your attention to the wording of the Bill. It contains only one operative clause, and that is in exactly the same terms as what is known as the Deceased Wife's Sister Act, except of course that the genders are reversed; and on this ground, if on no other, I may base the request for the earnest consideration of this House. Every argument that was brought forward in connection with the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill applies, obversely or reversely to the Bill now before you. On their merits I can see no difference, and I am quite open to conviction if anyone can show me on any physiological or psychological or religious or moral ground, where there can be any difference in the two cases. It is on this similarity, aside from anything else, that I base the justice of the Bill before the House. The relationship in both cases is precisely the same. There is no blood connection in this case any more than in that of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. There can be no claim that the contemplated relations between such a man and such a woman are made immoral by marriage of those two people. Though the old codes, for perhaps as far back as we can go, have forbidden such marriages, nevertheless they have been permitted either by dispensation of the Church authorities or by the ecclesiatical courts; and I think I am on safe ground when I say that those ecclesiastial courts would not grant dispensations for immoral relations between two people. On this ground I feel that I can appeal to those who have some conscientious scruples, whether religious or otherwise, in such a matter.

I may say that the provisions of the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill have been fought for a great many years in practically every country of the Empire; but to-day there is only one small part of the British Empire where marriage with a deceased wife's sister is not permitted, and that is in the Colony of Newfoundland. In 1907 the law authorizing such marriages was made applicable to Great Britain, which I think was really the last section of the British Empire to fall into line with it. Canada, as I have said, adopted it as far back as 1882.

Permission for a woman to marry her deceased husband's brother has not become general through the British Empire as yet, and it is not the law of Canada. While I have no desire to compare our marriage law or divorce law with those of the United States—far from it—nevertheless we are neighbouring countries and their legislation has a relation to this matter, which I will point out later. Of all the states of the American Union, Virginia is the only state where the marriage of a widow with her brother-in-law is not permitted.

Before the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill was passed in England, as almost every member of this House knows English people of the very best class and in the best standing, emigrated to this country in order to take advantage of our law and thus escape the penalty as I might call it, of the position in which they would be placed in England at that time by marrying within the forbidden range. Just so to-day, we find many Canadians, good in every way, and most desirable citizens, the best we have, going to the United States and taking up residence there in order to escape the penalty of whatever obloquy there may be in connection with such a marriage. I say that this is a time when we require every good citizen that we can get in Canada, and this fact must have some bearing on the case. That is why I refer to the almost universal practice in connection with this matter in the various states of the republic to the south.

A short time ago a committee of the National Council of Women of Canada waited upon the Government to urge that such a law be passed. That committee represented over 300,000 Canadian women who are affiliated in the National Council, which has been formed regardless of race, creed or any other distinction. I believe that when such a body, which has for its object the raising of the status not only of women but of life as a whole throughout this country, take such a step, we cannot be far wrong if we adopt the moderate view and ask that this Bill be put on exactly the same plane as the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. I believe we have good grounds for holding that such a provision is desirable and perfectly sound. The Law Committee of the National Council did not undertake that mission to the Government before making very careful inquiries, and the report of the committee states that one of the chief reasons for their advocating this change in the law was that it had been brought to their notice that there were in Canada a large number of women who had gone through the regular form of marriage with a brother of a deceased husband, both parties to the marriage and also the solemnizing clergyman taking it for granted that if it was legal to marry a deceased wife's sister it was of course legal to marry the brother of a deceased husband. Those people are to-day living as man and wife and bringing up their children, all unconscious of any such circumstances as to make their children liable at any time to be branded as illegitimate. It is quite possible that honourable members of this House know of such cases. If I might be permitted to refer to a particular case, I know one of our best and most prominent citizens, holding public office and known to many members of this House, who is just in that position to-day. Whether he contracted that marriage innocently or not I cannot say, but the committee of the National Council found a large number living in precisely the same way.

I need not dwell on such arguments as the fact that there could be no better stepfather to any woman's children than a brother of her deceased husband. We all remember that the same argument was used in connection with the marriage of a deceased wife's sister —that no one was better qualified to look after the children than the dead woman's own sister. Such a marriage brings no new blood into the family, and the connection is a perfectly natural one, and one which I think should appeal to all people.

In the province of Ontario particularly we are in rather a peculiar position. As the law stands to-day, a man and a woman living in Canada who desire to contract such a marriage may go to the United States and be married, and while it may not be an absolutely legal marriage in Canada, there is no court that has power to set it aside or to declare it void in any way. This is partly a matter of the jurisdiction of our Ontario courts, which were not given the powers of the Eccleastial Courts of England when they were established in this Province. For that reason the laws of Ontario in this connection are very different from those in other provinces, where they claim the right to declare such a marriage void and illegal.

I do not think I need say any more, honourable gentlemen, for, while this question has not arisen in this particular connection, it is quite familiar to all of you in regard to the deceased wife's sister, and I believe that the reasons I have advanced are quite sufficient, without going into the various technicalities. I would therefore move the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE AND REPORTED

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hardy, the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Turriff in the Chair.

On section 1—certain marriages not invalid:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I desire to confess that in my youth I was aware of the considerable agitation which took place in and around parliaments and in the press over the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, but the matter never interested me to any extent. The law was altered so as to authorize such marriages, and at this moment I cannot remember the arguments that militated against the converse of the proposition which is now before us. I would not like to stand in judgment against the parliaments that have declared in favour of the deceased wife's sister's right to marry. For this reason I cannot find any objection in my imagination against the present legislation.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is good legislation.

Section 1 was agreed to, the preamble and the title were agreed to, and the Bill was reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. HARDY moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

MIDLAND GRAIN ELEVATORS

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. BENNETT inquired of the Government:

Are the two grain elevators at Midland, Ontario, known as the "Aberdeen" and "The Grand Trunk Elevator," now under the ownership of the Canadian National Railways? If not, does the Canadian National Railways propose to purchase both or either of them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. The Canadian National Railways own two elevators at Midland, which are sometimes referred to by the names mentioned.

2. See answer to No. 1.

OLEOMARGARINE

INQUIRY

Hon. GIDEON D. ROBERTSON rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the importance of extending the periods during which the manufacture in (the importation into, and the sale in) Canada of oleomargarine are permitted by The Oleomargarine Act, 1919, and the amendments thereto; and that he will inquire of the Government whether it intends to introduce any legislation to extend those periods or any of hem.

He said: Honourable gentleman, I desire to call the attention of the House and also the attention of the Government to the fact that the legislation permitting the importation, manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in Canada will expire in August next unless re-enacted. The justification for the continuation of this legislation is ample. The matter ought to receive the earnest consideration of the Government and the necessary legislation introduced at a very early date.

In the year 1918, when the cost of living had so advanced that it was becoming somewhat onerous upon the working people of Canada, the Government of the day, by Order in Council under authority of the War Measures Act, authorized the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine, in order that our people might obtain this wholesome food at a reasonable cost. In 1919, when the War Measures Act ceased to operate, a special Bill was brought in for the same purpose, and each year from 1919 to 1922 a Bill has been passed to extend the legislation for one year.

By way of justification of the continuance of this legislation, I desire to point out that in the year 1918, when it was first adopted, the price of butter was 46 cents a pound, according to the Department of Labour's reports; that in 1922, the last time the measure was re-enacted, the price of dairy butter was 35 cents a pound and of creamery butter 42 cents a pound; and that at present the price of dairy butter is 53 cents a pound, of creamery butter 60 cents, and of oleomargarine 30 cents a pound. These facts indicate clearly, I think, the importance as well as the desirability of having the necessary legislation to permit of this wholesome product being placed at the disposal of our working people at a reasonable cost. Honourable gentlemen will surely appreciate that the workingman, possibly out of employment and with a family dependent upon him, finds it very difficult to provide for them butter at the price of 60 cents a pound, but can get oleomargarine, a very cheap food, at 30 cents.

I desire to call the attention of the Government to these facts and to express the hope that they will without delay bring down the necessary legislation to continue in force the present Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The matter is under consideration. I will draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues to the remarks of my honourable friend.

CENTRE WASHABUCK WHARF

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK inquired of the Government:

1. What was the cost of repair work on the Government wharf at Centre Washabuck, Victoria County, Nova Scotia, in the year 1922?
2. Where tenders asked for this work, and if not, who had charge of this work?
3. And what did he receive for his services?
4. What was the cost of the work (repairs)?
5. Is the Government aware that material used on this work has not been paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1 and 4. $397.33, of which $185.71 was for material.

2. Tenders were not asked for the work. It was carried out by the District Engineer by day labour—foreman, John McNeil.

3. The foreman was paid at the rate of $3.50 a day, and the total amount received for services was $69.12.

5. No, the Department of Public Works, so far as it has knowledge, has paid for all material used in the work as above.

CRIMINAL CODE (SOLICITATION OF STOCK SUBSCRIPTIONS) BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. GEORGE LYNCH-STAUNTON moved the second reading of Bill M2, An Act to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: This is a Bill to amend the Criminal Code so as to make it an indictable offence to personally solicit stock subscriptions. It is provided that it shall not apply to solicitation by advertisement or printed circular, nor when the peddler is authorized by Dominion or Provincial authority.

It is not necessary to call the attention of the House to the great evil which has lately manifested itself in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec from what are now called high-power stock solicitors. Millions of dollars have been taken from the class of people of this country, who, above all others, should be protected, namely, the humble, frugal Canadian citizens—a great number of poor people who are industrious and careful and saving, who have managed to get together a few dollars which they have placed either in Victory Bonds or in the saving bank, but who are quite incapable of protecting themselves against the wily and plausible educated stock solicitor. In my humble opinion it is the duty of Parliament to protect these people. They are the best of our citizens; they are people who, like most of those who are saving, are law-abiding, respectable, unsuspecting, and inexperienced.

It may be contended that it is not wise to prevent the sale of stock in companies which may be organized for the purpose of promoting industry in the country; but to that I reply that under the provisions of this Bill any sound and properly saleable stock may be sold by public advertisement or by circular, or may be authorized by a Dominion or Provincial authority.

In my opinion, there is no real reason why anybody should peddle stocks. Any legitimate enterprise can obtain capital going to servant girls, widows and old people who have their little nest-egg tucked away. Those enterprises could and should obtain their money from other sources. I contend that it is not desirable to ask the poor to invest in new enterprises.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The poor would not have the money.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I contend that it is not wise or proper for a man who has a small savings account to risk it on the hazard of new business. Every lawyer, and everybody else who is experienced, knows the law and the courts have hedged about trust funds in order to prevent trustees or people who have funds of helpless people in their possession from investing those funds in anything except what are called gilt-edged securities. The reason for that is that it is unwise to allow dependents to invest in any hazardous business. I therefore contend that it is imprudent and unwise for us to allow or encourage a man who has no experience and no knowledge to match against the wit of those solicitors, to invest his money in a hazardous business. For that reason alone, even though I believed those solicitors to be honest, I would say that they should not be allowed to approach people of that kind in order to obtain subscriptions for their stock, unless the enterprise had been submitted to the scrutiny of some experienced person to ascertain that it was one in which the poor would be justified in investing.

In the next place, I contend that we should protect those people because the great number of these stock projects, which are peddled among the people from door to door, are not honest.

In the third place, I contend that we should protect them because we have passed legislation in the provinces and in the Dominion which facilitates fraud to a very extreme extent. We have allowed the issue of stock of no par value. We have allowed the issue of stock on such terms that it is not necessary for the money received from its sale to be paid into the enterprise itself. We have allowed the issue of stock at a discount. We have allowed the issue of stock in one dollar shares, or any denomination which the promoters choose. We have done everything to facilitate its sale and to render it tempting to small investors.

I am told by gentlemen, members of this House, that in some of the provinces there are prohibitions against this stock-peddling vice, and that these have worked extremely well; that the province of Saskatchewan has escaped this latest class of swindling by reason of the prudent legislation of that province; that it has been found not to work to the detriment of the public interest but to be a great protection to the people.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Manitoba also.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They did not make it criminal.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I am told there are laws of the same nature in other provinces.

My proposal, then, is that we merely prohibit the personal solicitation of persons to buy stock from agents, and prohibit companies employing agents to sell stock of this kind. If it is considered by this House to be in the public interest, as I believe it is, I trust the Bill will receive favourable consideration. I am not one who believes in grandmotherly legislation; but I am one who firmly believes that those who never will have experience and never can learn, by reason of their position in society, should be protected as far as we find ourselves able to protect them.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I am very much in sympathy with what my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) has said, but I want to ask him a question. I understand that this would eliminate all color of crime.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What is that?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: You simply prohibit anyone and everyone from selling shares.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: By solicitation.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Yes, by solicitation.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Whether the proposition is bona fide or not.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Unless the solicitor gets authority.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I wonder whether the honourable gentleman has considered the question of whether the legislation would be intra vires of this Parliament? On the same principle we could prohibit any merchant selling coffee or tea.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: So we could. I am quite sure this Parliament has jurisdiction to make anything it chooses a crime. It has absolute authority.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It would be the millenium or an ideal state of things, or paradise, if fakers could be stopped from selling stock. But how is it going to be worked? This idea is not new. It has been talked about before. The provincial legislatures could amend the law so as to impose a fine for carrying on these operations, but the Criminal Code is a federal matter, so the two cases would not be on all fours.

Many companies have been formed, absolutely good things, but one would not be governed by a written or printed circular. We all get them by the basketful, but we don't read them: we throw them away. If you want to form a company and sell stock in it, you have to hold personal interviews with people in order to tell them what you have. I myself and many others in Montreal have formed companies in that way to buy properties and for other purposes. That could not be done without personal solicitation.

Another objection to this Bill is that anyone soliciting for stock would have to obtain a license or authority from a provincial or the federal legislature. That would be much worse. A solicitor would say: I have a license from the federal government or the local government to sell you this stock. It would be as though the legislature was behind the stock and endorsed or guaranteed it. I think the idea of my honourable friend is an excellent one; but, like so many good things that are brought before this House from time to time, it is too good to live.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The Bill contains a provision which I think meets the objection raised by the honourable gentlemen. It is provided that this section shall not apply to solicitation authorized in writing by Dominion or Provincial authority. This authority in the province of Ontario, I take it, would be the Municipal Board, as it is in the province of Saskatchewan.

An honourable gentleman has just shown me a paper which contains the following item:

> Little, if any, of the stock in the L. R. Steel Company, now declared bankrupt, is held in Saskatchewan, according to officials of the local Government Board. The company made several applications to the Board for permission to sell stock in this province, and in each instance it was refused. Any stock purchases made by Saskatchewan investors would, therefore, have to be made through agencies in other provinces.

I do not think this is a new principle in legislation. I can remember, 10 or 15 years ago, when this country was swept with the red wheat fraud and the patent rights fraud, that such legislation as this was passed. These frauds are like locusts; they sweep over the country every few years.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Must they have Provincial or Dominion authority for the purpose of advertising?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Why not? There are many people of the very class which the honourable gentleman has mentioned who are not personally solicited at all, but to whom a circular or an advertisement in a reputable newspaper will appeal much more strongly than a personal solicitation.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: They believe what is in the paper.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Yes. I am in sympathy with the honourable gentleman, although I must admit that there are some difficulties to be overcome. For instance, as the honourable gentleman from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) says, suppose I solicit a friend in the most friendly way to buy some stock in a joint stock company, I would be liable. That, I think, is going a good way down the road, although perhaps the evils that would be cured would be greater than any objection I have mentioned. If you want to bring all classes of solicitation, either by advertisement or personally, within the four corners of the amendment, I think you should certainly provide for giving authority for solicitation, either by advertisement or personally.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I was aiming at the cases of personal solicitation; but if the House thinks it better I have no objection to requiring all advertisements to be authorized. My efforts were directed at this back-door peddling of stock from house to house. I am not wedded to the form of this Bill, and if anything can be devised to prevent these humble people being victimized, I will gladly adopt it. I would like to have the Bill considered, and threshed out in Committee, in the hope of arriving at something. I am only offering the Bill in its present form because I feel that we ought to do something, if we possibly can, to prevent a repetition of this awful scandal. A member of the Ontario Government told me of an enterprise which had victimized an old farmer out beyond Hamilton to the extent of $10,000. He got absolutely nothing for his money.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: The honourable gentleman does not need to go further than the Steel company.

Hon. J. A. McDONALD: I suppose, honourable gentleman, the value of one's opinion is measured by his knowledge of the subject under discussion. I think the Senate is going pretty far. Last year there was a strong attempt made to pass legislation stating that no goods could be disposed of by means of certain kinds of advertising. After a struggle I got through an amendment adding the words, "where goods or money pass," and thus protected legitimate advertising. Speaking of high-pressure selling, who is going to be the judge? Some of the biggest failures in Canada have been big enterprises. Great injury has been done by the failure of projects that looked good and were not, while some of our greatest achievements, practically saving civilization, were high-pressure campaigns like, for instance, the sale of Victory bonds. Men, women, and children went out and put the sale through by going into the homes and meeting people and soliciting.

The honourable gentleman says this is to protect the poor people. Why have not the poor people the right to make an investment if they want to? If this is going to apply to stocks, why would it not apply to goods also? Where are we going to draw the distinction? I think the Senate is going pretty far in saying to people: "You shall not invest, you shall not do this and you shall not do that; it is your money, but you are not going to spend it in your own way." Talk about grandmotherly legislation. This beats all. I think we ought to pay more attention to carrying out the laws that we have passed than to matters of this kind. We should go into this question very carefully before we leave it. What kind of proposition is going to be acceptable? What is going to be considered wrong? We should be very careful how we bind people's judgments in investments.

Hon. W. B. WILLOUGHBY: We can all appreciate the beneficent results that the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) had in view in moving this Bill, but it seems to me that we are making a very startling innovation. It strikes me that we should not be too ready to enlarge the bounds of the Criminal Code. I thoroughly sympathize with the honourable gentleman in the motives which actuate him in his desire to protect certain classes of people who speculate—for perhaps it is only speculating—in businesses of the kind which he has in mind. On the other hand, I do not know why we should deal with this as a criminal matter. It is purely a matter of property and civil rights. I do not deny for a moment the competence of this Parliament to say that it shall be a criminal offence, but from the ordinary point of view this certainly would not be a criminal matter.

The honourable genleman has referred to the situation in the province of Saskatchewan. We have there what is commonly known as a blue-sky law. That law has worked well, and has shut off the selling of stock by a very large number of proposed companies in that province. Other provinces that see fit can follow the example of Saskatchewan if they wish. Surely the protection of the citizens of a province against the exploitation of fraudulent companies is a matter that could be left to the competence and judgment of the legislature of that province.

As has been pointed out by the honourable gentleman from Lambton (Hon. Mr. Pardee), advertisements might be equally injurious. An advertisement could be worded in such a way that it might be a trap to the unwary. That is the very thing that prevailed in the United States until a law was passed prohibiting the use of the mails to such advertisements and circulars. An advertisement could very well be framed that would be wholly misleading, and would have the same effect as personal solicitation.

There is another point. There are many companies incorporated, co-operative companies as well as others, which have wholesome and proper objects in view, and which are honestly and properly conducted. This measure would apply to co-operative associations as well as to others. One neighbour could not as an agent for the company say to another: "Are you going to take a share in this butter factory?" without coming under the provisions of this Bill. I for one am very reluctant to add to our Criminal Code any new offences not known to the common law.

Hon. W. H. SHARPE: I just rise to say that, as far as Manitoba is concerned, it has a Utility Commission to which every company that wants to sell stock must submit its proposition before it can advertise in the newspapers or offer stock for sale.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Does that apply to stock in companies incorporated by the Dominion Government?

Hon. Mr. SHARPE: All kinds of stock. I do not think Dominion companies are affected.

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Then it does not cover the ground.

Hon. F. B. BLACK: I cannot speak from the standpoint of the legal fraternity, but as one interested in the business life of the country I want to enter my word of protest. I believe in paternalism to a certain extent, but I believe it can go too far. If any such legislation as this is going to be passed, I think it should be passed at the instance of and by the provinces themselves. Carried a step further, the principle of this measure would interfere with the sale of any article that you might want to put upon the market. You could make it impossible for a salesman to go out from a wholesale house to solicit orders. That is the logical conclusion of the legislation proposed by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton.

So far as solicitation is concerned, we all know that there is scarcely one large business concern in Eastern Canada to-day which has not put its stock on the market by means of the personal solicitation of the stock-broker or the stock-broker's agent. Ninety-nine out of every hundred stock promotions that have been put on the market in Canada have been safe. The one hundredth is like that of the Steel and others of that sort, which have been introduced very largely by outsiders and have caught people napping. There is a crop of suckers born practically every day, and there will be suckers as long as this world continues to exist, just as there have been from time immemorial. You cannot have legislation that will prevent any dishonest person from cheating his neighbour if his neighbour is gullible enough to be cheated. The further this Parliament or any other legislative body goes in endeavouring to cut off this annual crop of innocent victims, the more complicated will the legal machinery of our country become.

In line with the remarks made by other honourable gentlemen, I desire to say that, in my opinion based upon my observation, there have been more bogus schemes floated and imposed upon the public of this country by circular letter, or by advertising in the most reputable newspapers published in Canada, than there have been by any personal visitation by the agent of any concern.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This solicitation is a new scheme.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: No.

Hon. Mr. ROSS.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It has begun to be prevalent only within the last few years.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: As long as I can remember we have had stock-brokers and stock-agents all over Canada, and they have been selling legitimate stock.

To finish my argument with regard to pamphlets. They go into more homes than can be reached otherwise. The farmer and his family read the pamphlet at night and talk it over. The prospectus lays the proposition before them in brilliant, golden colours, and, through a letter, a pamphlet, or something of that description, they will buy stock that they would never think of buying from a skilled salesman after a personal interview.

Again, this class of legislation would hinder companies. I will take one of the largest operating companies in Canada, the Bell Telephone Company, which issues stock whenever there is a large development in rural or city telephones. The Bell Telephone Company, or any concern of that kind, issues stock—

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Will the honourable gentleman permit me a question? Has he ever heard of the Bell Telephone Company peddling their stock?

Hon. Mr. BLACK: Yes, I have.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I have not.

Hon. Mr. BLACK: They have not, I think, in the last 20 years made an issue of stock which has not been peddled or sold either through stock-brokers or their own agents. In the first place, they endeavour to sell to their subscribers and to their employees; and they do sell to their subscribers and to their employees. It is a good thing for both that they do. They go to their subscriber and say: "You have a telephone; you are paying perhaps $30 a year for it; why not take $500 worth of this new issue of telephone stock? It pays 6 per cent (or whatever it does pay—we will say it is 6 per cent). That will yield $30 a year. This little investment of yours, amounting to $500, will give you your telephone free, for the interest on your investment will pay for your telephone." That is a very proper thing from the Company's standpoint, and also from the standpoint of the subscriber. The Company get a new investor, and the user of the telephone becomes interested in the telephone company. That is a perfectly legitimate transaction in the interest of the Company and of the subscriber as well. Why should you prevent that kind of thing? This is one company that does it, and I know of many others. I am myself at the head of a company that has done that repeatedly, and there is no better stock in Canada to-day than its stock. It has always paid its dividends, and I assume it always will. Legislation of this kind is a stumbling block in the way of business.

I have every sympathy with the desire which the honourable gentleman has in his heart to protect the poor man; but I do not believe that the honourable gentleman is going about it in the right way. If the Criminal Code is to be amended, amend it so as to reach the perpetrator of the offence—the man who sells bogus stock, and deter him by example, by imprisonment—life imprisonment, if you like. Make it as severe as you like. You will protect the poor man better by penalizing the man who cheats him. That, in my opinion, is the way to deal with the evil which is aimed at by this proposed legislation.

Hon. D. O. L'ESPERANCE: Honourable gentleman, although I am not a lawyer, I doubt that we can pass legislation that will correct the evil which it is intended to remedy by the Bill now proposed. But I am sure everyone shares my opinion in this, that a good many swindles and robberies are being perpetrated through the issue of bogus stock. Both Houses of this Parliament have tried to correct many abuses, with regard to drinking, gambling, horse-racing, etc. For my part, I have no sympathy with the gambler. He knows very well that he is taking a chance with his money. But I have a good deal of sympathy with the poor, ignorant people who are being caught in those swindles by being induced to invest their hard-earned savings in all kinds of companies, many of which the promoters know well will never make good.

How we can correct the evil I do not know. But I would like to see this Bill go to committee anyway, in order that it may be discussed, and perhaps in the combined wisdom of honourable gentlemen, we may find some way of remedying abuses which have prevailed to such an extent in this country.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I am very much in sympathy with the proposed legislation by my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton). From what has been said by other honourable gentlemen here to-night, I feel, however, that possibly the proposed legislation may be going too far, and I agree with the honourable member who has just spoken that it would be advisable to have the Bill referred to a committee, where the whole matter can be threshed out. If the Bill went no farther than my honourable friend proposes, there is one kind of people whom it would favour to a very large extent. I can remember quite well when, about ten years ago, a loan company or building company in Toronto secured stock subscriptions amounting to many hundreds of thousands of dollars, the great majority of the subscriptions being secured from servant girls. The city of Ottawa, I know, was divided into sections and a woman would be given charge of a certain number of blocks and would canvass every working-girl in her area. I remember very well that the girl who was working for us at the time had put in what she had saved during a period of years—something over $400, and she got back a little over $100—I forget how much.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: She was lucky.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: There was some property of the company in Toronto, and in the course of two or three years the assets increased, and in the liquidation the subscribers got back part of their money.

I do not suppose there would be one in fifty of those subscribers to that stock who would have subscribed through any advertisement in a newspaper, or through any circular they might receive; but clever women agents went to their homes or to the places where they were working, and talked to them. They visited them every month to make collections, and robbed them to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I believe that this proposed legislation would practically put a stop to that particular method of taking money from people who should not be speculating at all. Whether this is the best way to go about the matter or not I do not know. Whether or not better results might be accomplished by a law such as is in force in Saskatchewan I do not know. I am not sure, but am under the impression that there is something of the same kind in Alberta. I remember that during the oil boom that followed the discovery of oil south of Calgary, there was a tremendous rush to buy stock in all sorts of oil propositions, and it runs in my mind—my honourable friend from Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) will no doubt be able to set me right if I am wrong—that after a while action was taken to prevent the selling of those wildcat oil schemes. I know it was just about that time that the province of Manitoba prohibited the sale of that class of stock in the province; and shortly afterwards the province of Saskatchewan took a similar step.

You cannot stop people—or at any rate you cannot stop a great many people—from making fools of themselves in foolish investments. I think most of us have been there at some time or another. I know I have. But we are not the class that are to be pitied so much; it is the poor people who are roped in by the high pressure salesmen at work at the present time.

Furthermore, unless we have a law affording protection along the line proposed, all sorts of organizations are going to come over here from across the line—because, remember, they are shut out of a great many of the States. I do not know how many of the States, nor do I know which ones, but I know that in many of the Western States the high-pressure agents are not allowed to sell stock. Unless we take precautions we shall have other affairs exactly like this L. R. Steel swindle that is taking hundreds of thousands of dollars out of Canada.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Nine millions.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Millions of dollars out of Canada. I think it is our duty as legislators to try to work out some scheme to remedy the evil. Possibly the best plan is not what my honourable friend has proposed; but it would be sensible on our part to let this Bill go to a committee and have it threshed out thoroughly, in order to see if we cannot do something to curtail the evil that undoubtedly exists.

Hon. C. E. TANNER: I think the United States legislation referred to by the honourable gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff) is principally State legislation. While I am in sympathy, as I have said, with many of the views expressed by my honuorable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton), it seems to me that the better way to deal with this matter is by provincial legislation. The legislation in Saskatchewan appears to be effective.

My principal reason in rising now is to state that I am pretty sure we have in Nova Scotia legislation which is very effective. I remember that legislation in this respect was initiated when I had a seat in the Legislature. At that time we were pestered principally by companies, not very solvent, who came down from Toronto. We thought it necessary to protect ourselves against them, and legislation was passed, which I think has proved to be fairly effective in regard to a good many companies of that class. I have a distinct recollection of one company, which I cannot name at the moment, and which sold a good many shares in the province. Under the law to which I refer the shareholders were all protected right up to the handle, because the legislation requires the company to make a deposit sufficient to cover the amount of stock they sell in the province. Now, it appears to me that the province of Ontario, which has been hit very hard by the Steel Company, can protect itself. It also appears to me that we have so many criminal laws now which are not very well obeyed that it is doubtful whether it is desirable to make more crimes. For that reason, while I am content that the Bill should go to Committee, I think that in the end it will be shown that the better way to deal with this matter is through provincial legislation.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD: May I ask the honourable gentleman one question? Which are the more prosperous and successful communities—Saskatchewan and Alberta, where all these kinds of investment are eliminated, or Northern Ontario, which is putting mining stock on the market and is making money out of its mines at such a rate as will in ten years pay the national debt of Canada?

Hon. EDWARD MICHENER: Honourable gentlemen, I am sure we are all in sympathy with the object of the Bill, but it seems to me the place to correct the evil is the provincial legislature. In the province of Alberta, before anyone can sell stock to the public, he must have an incorporated company, and before he can incorporate his company it must be approved by the Public Utilities Commission.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The honourable gentleman is quite wrong in that. Companies can be incorporated in the United States.

Hon. Mr. MICHENER: But they cannot sell their stock in Alberta without charter or license from the Public Utilities Commission. So the people are protected right at the fountain head, in the registration or incorporation of the company.

The opinion has been expressed, and with it I agree, that this matter can be dealt with more effectively by the provinces in connection with the incorporation or registration of companies provincially than it can be by the Dominion. However, I am quite willing to have the Bill referred to a committee and discussed further. I am quite sure that the discussion of this matter will be of benefit.

Hon. R. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I thought, when reading this Bill, that it might as well prohibit outright any personal solicitation, as I could not see how a line could be drawn between those persons who should be authorized and those who should be refused sanction. The task and responsibility devolving upon the authority or commission dealing with this matter would be very great. There seems to be always a considerable risk in sanctioning any solicitation. Such sanction would give the imprimatur of the provincial legislature or the Dominion Parliament to a company thus invested with the right to send out its agents. That was my first objection. The second was that there was as much harm done by printed circulars and by newspaper advertisements as by personal solicitations.

But my objection to allowing this Bill to proceed further is somewhat weakened when I am told that there is in some provinces—not in my own province or in the neighbouring province of Ontario, but in provinces smaller in population—legislation which may have blazed the trail and may indicate to us some modus operandi, of which I was not aware, for curing the great evil of the sale of valueless stock throughout the country. I suppose there is some valuable information to be had from the experience of some of the provinces which have imposed restrictions in this respect, and for that reason I would have no objection personnaly to voting for the second reading of this Bill, on the understanding that it would be debated, not in Committee of the Whole, but in the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: No; in Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Bill 5, an Act respecting certain patents of Charles A. Channell.—Hon. Mr. Belcourt.

Hon. G. V. WHITE: This legislation is to revive certain patents which expired on the 4th of June, 1922. The patents Nos. 150322 and 153141, issued on September 9, 1913, and January 20, 1914, respectively, cover the well-known "O Cedar" mop, which has been made in large quantities in Canada. Over 100,000 per year have been manufactured during the last eight years, and sold for over $600,000. The Canadian company was organized to manufacture these mops, and has been doing so during that period. The applicant in this case applied for the patents through his solicitor, Chas. W. Hill, of Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., but before the expiration of the patents he changed his solicitor to John B. Lawlor, and owing to the said Hill not attending to the renewal, or advising the petitioner of the necessity of a renewal of the petition, it was not attended to, and during this period the original patents were in the hands of the said Hill. Under the amendment to the Patent Act of June 4, 1921, the taxes might have been paid at any time before June 4, 1922, but the petitioner was not informed of the expiration of the said patents until October, 1922. I understand that when this Bill was before the Committee in another place the Commissioner of Patents said there was no objection to this legislation.

Bill 19. An Act respecting certain patents of Albert Manvers.—Hon. Mr. McMeans.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: This relates to patent No. 203,490, for leather manufacture, and 203,491, for vacuum apparatus, both granted on the 31st day of August, 1920. The inventions should have been manufactured in Canada before August 31, 1922. The patents cover a process which can be carried on only in a large plant, and the patent should have been placed under the Compulsory License clause, by which any Canadian manufacurer may obtain a license at a reasonable price. The present bill seeks to place the patents under the Compulsory License clause, Section 44 of the Patent Act, instead of under Section 38, this to be effective from the 31st of August, 1922.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Could the honourable gentleman tell me if those are the patents for manufacturing artificial leather?

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: No, they are not.

Bill 25. An Act respecting a certain patent of Arthur R. Wilfley.—Hon. Mr. McMeans.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: The applicant is a well-known inventor, and the originator of the Wilfley Screen. The patent in question, No. 198,319, issued March 16th, 1920, relates to a new type of sand pump. Since January 10th, 1922, when the period for manufacture as extended by war legislation expired, Mr. Wilfley has been continually in a state of ill-health, and has been obliged, at the direction of his physician, to spend the greater part of his time away from business, and in the state of California. He has been ordered, even at the present time, to avoid discussion of business matters. He has arranged, however, with the Mines Smelter and Supply Co. of Denver, a well-known manufacturing firm, to have the centrifugal pump covered by the patent manufactured in Canada at Peterborough, provided the patent can be reinstated.

DOMINION LANDS (COAL) BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order for resuming, from March 14, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand for the second reading of Bill E2, an Act to amend The Dominion Lands Act respecting the sale or other disposal of coal lands and coal mining rights.— Hon. Mr. Pope.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would like my honourable friend to allow me to give an answer to some honourable gentlemen who have asked me for some information from the Department of Justice. I was asked by some honourable Senators if I could obtain the opinion of the Department of Justice as to the effect of this legislation on a certain case, and, also as to the advisability of amending the Bill. I have interviewed the head and the deputy head of that Department, and after a discussion I have come to the conclusion that in the interests of justice it would be better that, with the consent of this Chamber, we take the second reading of this Bill and send it to Committee, and that in Committee I should move for the appointment of a sub-committee. I will mention the names that I have discussed with my honourable friend the leader opposite. I should move that Hon. Messrs. Sir James Lougheed, Senators Béique, Ross (Middleton), Lynch-Staunton, Pardee, Bradbury, Pope, and the mover be appointed for the purpose of examining into the legal effect of the present Bill upon the title to the said coal areas, the petition of right now pending before the Supreme Court, and the advisability of amending said Bill after consultation with the Department of Justice.

This small committee, which could be made larger, would hear the Department of Justice. I understand that the principal allegation so far has been as to the granting of the fiat. We would have the Department of Justice before that committee to answer all the questions which the committee might be pleased to ask. Then we would report to the general Committee, and we would be better informed as to the reasons why the fiat was granted on a petition of the parties.

I say this because my honourable friend may prefer to postpone his remarks until after he has all the information that may come from the appointment of that sub-committee of the Committee of the Whole; but of course he has liberty now to go on if he desires.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Before my honourable friend rises, I would like to say one word in regard to the Committee. I am sure my honourable friend has no objection to widening the scope of that Committee. In view of what has been stated, and in view of what I have said myself, I think its scope should be broadened so that we might call witnesses if we wanted to, in order to find out who is connected with this Company. There have been very nasty rumors. I do not want to repeat them again, but my honourable friend knows them, and I think, in justice to this House and to the other House, that Committee ought to be broad enough to examine parties.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, my honourable friend realizes, that there are certain rules under which Parliament moves to inquire into certain matters. Rumors must be crystallized into a statement of fact written by a member of the House of Commons or the Senate in order that they may have the backing of a member of Parliament, because no Parliament having any self-respect would start investigating rumors flying about. I may tell my honourable friend that when I came here, and before my honourable friend from Brome (Hon. Mr. Pope) rose to speak, I had not the vaguest idea that there were rumors about Ottawa; but I have nailed one since, and I will give it. Well, if they are all from the same source as the one which I can give now to this Chamber, I am sure no one will think that it would be in accordance with the rules that should govern this Chamber to pay any attention to such idle talk, more especially when the source of the rumor is considered. We must abide by certain rules. Rumors may fly, but they must be given a certain status by a written statement.

Hon. RUFUS H. POPE: Honourable gentlemen of the Senate, as to this legislation, I will refer to it later, and as to the efficiency of this Bill before us for consideration, I will deal with it in a few moments. What I want to point out first is the necessity for relief to those northern settlers in the Peace River district. That relief comes from the development of those coal areas. I feel keenly the urgency of the plea that I make for those thousands of people who have gone into that northern country; and I am more concerned for their welfare than about any legal opinion on the face of God's earth. The Government of Canada called upon the people of the world, by publications and agencies in the United States and other parts of the world, and assumed the responsibility of inducing people to go into that northern country and open up homesteads, assuring them by that very fact alone that transportation on an economic basis would be placed at their disposal, and that it would be made possible for them to be prosperous settlers and Canadians in that northern country. The honourable the leader of this House will realize the situation when I tell him that in 1900 the population was estimated at 30,000, that three years ago it was put at 18,000, and that if there are 10,000 there to-day that figure includes the last soul living in that section of the north country. The bankers of that country, when they make out the renewals of their notes, have to send all over the United States to find the men who formerly lived in that country. When we consider bringing into this country settlers from the old land, and when we appoint agents to bring people here from the United States—and on his way in the new immigrant is met by the old immigrant who having lost his all is going out—I say this question becomes an extremely serious one and is deserving of more consideration and attention than it is receiving at the hands of this Government.

The other day the honourable leader said the time would probably arrive when this road would be built. How long does he think those people are going to wait? How long does he think they are going to starve?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Were they ever promised anything more than the railway as far as Grande Prairie, which they got?

Hon. Mr. POPE: If they were never promised anything more, and never get anything more, they will starve—that is the point I make. I will quote you the freight rates from that country, which show how impossible it is for these people to live. One gentleman told me that they shipped two carloads of poultry to Vancouver. What do you think the freight amounted to on those two carloads? It was $2,600 odd. At that, they might get a little more than the freight out of it. Here are the freight rates per bushel of wheat: for 402 miles from Grand Prairie to Edmonton, 13.8 cents; for 1,290 miles from Edmonton to the head of the Lakes, 15.6 cents. This makes a total of 29.5 cents from Grand Prairie to the head of the Lakes. The average Manitoba rate is 8 cents. The people in this north country cannot live under such rates. These are the rates on the C.P.R., which has leased the line. The leasing of that line to the C.P.R. is nothing to me. Canada was not made for the C.P.R.: the C.P.R. was made for Canada. Its usefulness ends when it fails to serve in bringing about the prosperity of Canada. There is no reason why a through rate should not be given from that country to Fort William to help those people. Through rates are given from other areas.

The honourable gentleman the other day pointed out to us the financial position of Canada, and said that it would not to-day be possible to undertake the construction of the proposed road. Let me tell the honourable gentleman that I have it upon very high authority that the money to build the road and develop that coal area can be found in a very short time without inflicting any very extraordinary demands upon the people of Canada. The Government of the day are fooling with the great issues before them. They have not the courage to come down with a great national policy for the development of Canada and the welfare of her people. The honourable gentleman might do something if he were alone, but he has behind him in another place a group of men who do not agree upon any one point in the councils of the nation—and nobody knows it better than the honourable gentleman. With a little courage we can find money both to build the road and to develop the coal mines. The honourable gentleman the other day recited what was told to him by a Minister of the Crown representing that district, Mr. Stewart.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman will remember that the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) said that we were obliged to pay double wages to the miners of Alberta because they were only working three days a week. So the honourable gentleman will see that we have double the number of miners in Alberta that we need.

Hon. Mr. POPE: All right. I am very glad the honourable gentleman has mentioned that.

I will deal with that in a few moments. The honourable gentleman spoke of the coal deposits and the many mines in that country. A minister in another place only yesterday said in my hearing that we had all the railroads we wanted.

The honourable the leader of the Government in this House said that with $2,000,000 you could develop the Pat Burns anthracite deposit. I do not know whether you can develop it with 2,000,000 dollars or with 2,000,000 cents; even if you can it is not connected with the transcontinental railroads. That property south of Calgary is no such property as I am talking about, and it requires 85 miles of railway to develop it. The property I am speaking of can be developed wih 75 miles of road from Brule, and when it is developed you will have not a coal mine but a coal field.

Hon. Mr. DANDUAND: Semi-anthracite.

Hon. Mr. POPE: It is only a question of transportation. There is no earthly reason why the Canadian National transcontinental lines should burn anything but Canadian coal in the East and in the West; there is no reason why they should not make a four years contract so that the men would know what work they were going to do in a year. But all this has nothing to do with the anthracite or hard coal deposit known as the Hoppe lease. That coal can be brought down here by means of engines and cars that are lying idle all summer long; it is a wonderful quality of coal. It will keep out of doors for more than a year. Some of the veins in the Hoppe field are as pure anthracite as anything that Pennsylvania produces. I do not say it is all anthracite, and I do not think any one would say that everything we get from Pennsylvania is anthracite either, when he considers all the stone he has to pick out of it, and all the waste that he finds behind his house in the spring. Be that as it may, scientists tell us that 30 or 40 years will exhaust the coal supply of the United States so far as their export trade is concerned. I hope Canada is going to last longer than 30 or 40 years. If I were a Yankee, I do not think I would send the last lump of coal even to my neighbours in Canada. I have never yet found the Yankee so infernally generous as that. On the contrary, I have discovered him to be a very shrewd person.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: His coal comes high.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes, his coal comes high. I think it was the Minister of Railways who said we should invest $25,000,000 in cars. We would not require high-class cars. We can bring coal from the West in cars that are lying idle to-day. I want to tell you, honourable gentlemen, that, with modern loading facilities, you can load the coal into box cars nearly as cheaply as into coal cars—we can wait a while before we get the coal cars. The only thing that stands between us and the anthracite that is so necessary to the people of this country is the lack of a railroad. The construction of that road would give the relief required by these people in that northern country. Some honourable gentleman has said that you could have 1,000 mines of soft coal in Alberta if you wanted them. That depends on how many mines you could operate successfully. You speak of Drumheller. I have ridden over it many a time and I know that while the domestic coal it produces is of a fair quality, it does not begin to compare with the Hoppe coal. The soft coal can be mined more and more as the situation intensifies. Why should we continue to send to the United States $100,000,000 of our money to bring in anthracite when we can use our own coal to supply Eastern Canada? Why does the Government hesitate to formulate a policy? Why is the Government in power if it is not to assume responsibility? If the past Governments had been as fearful of responsibility as the present Government, Canada would never be where it is now. If the Government that built the railway across the country when we had four millions of people had been as fearful as honourable gentlemen are to-day, the Dominion of Canada would not now exist. I plead with my honourable friend, not from a partizan point of view but from a broad Canadian point of view, to carry the news to his colleagues and to tell them of this wonderful coal deposit. I know that money can be found to develop it without one dollar of cost to the people of Canada.

Then we have the Eastern coal. It has been said that we can produce in Nova Scotia only a few million tons. Why, the coal fields of Nova Scotia have only been touched on one side. There are many fields that have never been touched. We could get much more coal from Nova Scotia than we ever have got without beginning to exhaust the supply. I do not know what the situation in Montreal is now, but two years ago there were no facilities for handling coal. It was brought up and dumped in a great pile, and when the time came to move it, it was handled with horses and carts and men with shovels—and the men spent most of their spare time leaning on their shovels—and the cost of handling the coal was more than the cost of shipping it to Montreal. We must realize if we can that the warming of the people is an important thing. Are not the people of Canada as great a national asset as the money of the country?

Now I have one or two remarks to make with regard to the northern country. I referred to the fact that the population had decreased from 30,000 to not more than 10,000. I beg to put upon Hansard a letter which is signed by the representatives of the banks in that country. This letter is addressed to the Board of Trade of Grande Prairie, Alberta, and reads as follows:

We understand that a delegation from your body is leaving for Ottawa to present to the Federal Government the claims of this district for a shorter and more direct route to the Pacific Coast. The Banks of Grande Prairie wish you to know that they are wholeheartedly in support of the Board of Trade in this matter and would urge that the delegation use their very best efforts to bring before the Government the conditions here and the extreme urgency of the situation.

As the business transacted by the Banks is dependent upon the prosperity of the community, we are naturally interested in any plans which will make for the betterment of conditions.

We are in support of a line of railway being built from the Grande Prairie district connection with the Canadian National Railways at Brule, as we are convinced that only by the providing of an outlet to the Pacific Coast can the present ruinous transportation problem be overcome.

The gravity of the present situation cannot in our opinion be over-emphasized. Our business brings us into intimate touch with most of the farmers of the district and we are in a position to know their circumstances and to have their difficulties brought home to us. Many of our former customers have left, very many more are preparing to leave and this all represents a loss, in many instances to us and always to the community.

We have found that the great majority of our customers cannot produce at a profit under such a handicap as our present freight rates imposes. The fertility of the soil and the ability of the farmers cannot be questioned, but even these assets do not allow the farmers to overcome the disadvantage arising through the prohibitive cost of marketing their goods.

The loans made by the Banks in this district are large, and we find generally that the customers are unable to pay interest much less liquidate the loans. Every consideration has been extended to those who have shown that they are willing to work and stay on the land and yet conditions are continually growing worse. It has therefore become apparent to us that something must be done if economic disaster to the Grande Prairie district is to be avoided.

The fact that there are five branches of different Banks located in the Town of Grande Prairie indicates that the Banking institutions of Canada have faith in this district. We are here and our interests are those of the people of Grande Prairie. It is therefore fitting that we should join with you in supporting a measure which would mean so very much to the country.

Wishing your delegation all success.

Yours truly,

The Canadian Bank of Commerce, Grande Prairie, Alta.

Honourable gentlemen, that gives you some indication of what those who have made financial investments in that part of the country think of the matter.

Here is a resolution passed by the Edmonton Board of Trade. Some people might say that the building of that proposed line from Brulé across to Grande Prairie would do an injury to Edmonton. Here is the opinion expressed in a resolution of the Council of the Edmonton Board of Trade on the conditions in the Grande Prairie, Spirit River and Peace River districts of the province of Alberta, passed Friday, February 16th, 1923:

The Council of the Edmonton Board of Trade has given close study to the general conditions existing in the Districts of Peace River, Spirit River and Grande Prairie, and have definitely reached the conclusion that if these portions of the Dominion are to be saved to the generation of to-day, it can be done only by the Government of Canada taking immediate steps to relieve the conditions.

Lack of markets at reasonable cost has caused such a condition that settlers are not able to earn a living, and the population is being depleted by migration to the United States, while there is no compensating immigration. The situation is actually desperate and only the most sincere intervention immediately will assist.

Immediate intervention; not action postponed for three or four years, honourable leader of the Government in this House, but immediate relief. Some of these organizations, the Bankers, the Boards of Trade, etc., must know what they are talking about.

Therefore the Council of the Edmonton Board of Trade respectfully urges upon the Government of Canada its immediate consideration of this problem, and urges the immediate appointment of a Commission charged with the presentation of an effective plan to secure some measure of relief to these settlers and permit of their marketing their products at a profit, and thus save them as residents of Canada, and their investments. Unless some immediate relief is assured, immigration to Northern Alberta is hopeless, and migration will continue.

Still, I heard in the gallery of the other Chamber to-day of the wonderful plans for immigration to Canada. I have read the resolution by the Edmonton Board of Trade and the statement from the Bankers' Association, which practically all the bankers in that country have signed. A delegation has been down here interviewing the Government, and has spent at least three weeks attempting to persuade the Government of the necessity for granting relief to the people of those districts. You, honourable leader of the Government in this House, say that it may be granted by and by, some other day; but there is no day more suitable than the present for coming to the relief of those people. Mind you, when they scatter all over the United States of America and visit their friends, the story that they tell of failures in Canada will cost you more money to overcome than all the money you are putting into immigration to-day, and even what it would cost to build this road. They will give Canada a bad reputation which can hardly be lived down in a century. We know what it means to have stories told of the "frozen north." We heard such stories years ago when we were trying to send population into that northern country—not so far north as the districts to which I have referred, but to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. American propaganda was active all over Europe and Canada was referred to as the "frozen north." Honourable gentlemen occupying public places in Canada to-day remember when this country was said to be fit only for Indians and wild beasts. We know what has been the effect of all such statements on the development of our country. They have not yet ceased, and they can be renewed, honourable gentlemen, and may be renewed as a result of the bitter disappointment that will follow if the people of those districts do not receive the relief which could be given to them without any injury to the Dominion of Canada.

I do not wish to detain this House too long, but would like to refer to the legal situation. I have read the statute and have had several other lawyers read it besides myself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend was a law student at one time.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes, and I learned to keep out of law, and that is as far as I got. I have submitted the statute to gentlemen who are as wise, I think, as any in this House. I listened to the speech of the honourable leader of the Government here the other night, and I heard his answer to the honourable member from Manitoba, in which he said that if the Bill would have had any effect last year it has effect now, and if it would not have had effect then, it does not have any effect now. I think the honourable leader of the Government is right. I do not think it would ever have any effect.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of what is my honourable friend speaking?

Hon. Mr. POPE: I am speaking of the legislation that we passed last year, and of the addition of this clause.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend should treat those two questions separately. Is he satisfied that there is no virtue in the Act that we passed last year?

Hon. Mr. POPE: I am going to plead a great deal of ignorance. I shall be about as humble an animal as you ever approached. Permit me to say in the first place that I have consulted lawyers both in and out of this House and I cannot get any agreement that there is any protection in that Act; I cannot get a consensus of opinion to the effect that there is anything in that Act that prevents the disposal of this property.

Hon Mr. DANDURAND: Is my honourable friend speaking of chapter 21 of last year?

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes, I am speaking of chapter 21—the Act of last year—the result of the conference between the two Houses of Parliament at that time. I cannot get any united opinion from the lawyers, either inside or outside of this House, that that law is effectual or would hold that property for Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As far as it goes?

Hon. Mr POPE: But if it does not go far enough to hold the property, it is absolutely worthless. It must save that property to Canada if it is going to be effective in this country. That is the object we desire, is it not? Is not that what it ought to do? Do you not want to save that property for Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Then we agree on one point. That is more than I have got any lawyer to do yet.

What is the effect of these Orders in Council that you have passed? Let me see. Here is one dated the 18th of January. That is subsequent to the passage of the Act, is it not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I need not read it right through, but it concludes in this way:

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, is pleased to order that section 17 of the Coal Mining Regulations, approved by Order in Council, dated the 20th April, 1910 (P.C. 729), above referred to, shall be and the same is hereby amended by adding the following thereto:

"Provided that if at any time after a lease has been cancelled through failure to pay the prescribed rental, the person in whose favour the lease stood recorded on the date of cancellation applies to the mining recorder for the district for reinstatement in the rights which he formerly had to such lease, and tenders the full amount of the rental which should have been paid to maintain the lease in good standing, with interest, such person may be reinstated in the right which he formerly had to the location sought to be reacquired or to any portion thereof, which may still be available."

What is the good of that Act if you can pass such an Order in Council? We were told that this property would be reserved.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is.

Hon. Mr. POPE: This Order in Council says that any man who pays up his arrears and is in good standing can get his property back.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the property is available.

Hon. Mr. POPE: If the property is available.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But it cannot be available in this case, because it has been withdrawn through the action of the Interior Department.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Very well, then. Let us see what was the Order in Council that you passed later, and why you did it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That was withdrawn by a subsequent Order in Council.

Hon. Mr. POPE: An Order in Council dated the 8th of March provides:

Whereas by an Order in Council dated the 6th October, 1919 (P.C. 2044) provision was made that the coal mining rights, the property of the Crown, in townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, in Ranges 7, 8 and 9 west of the 6th Initial Meridian, shall be withdrawn from disposal under the provisions of the Coal Mining Regulations established by Order in Council of the 20th April, 1910, and the amendments thereto, and shall form a coal reservation in the northern portion of the Province of Alberta;

And whereas by an Order in Council dated the 18th January, 1923 (P.C. 91) provision was made that section 17 of the Coal Mining Regulations, above referred to, be amended by adding the following thereto:

And whereas the reservation created by Order in Council dated the 6th October, 1919, was for the public benefit, and should therefore extend as far as possible to all the lands within the townships described in the said Order;

Therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, is pleased to order that the provisions of the Order in Council of the 18th January, 1923 (P.C. 91) above quoted, providing for reinstatement, shall not apply to coal mining leases comprising any portion of townships 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59, in ranges 7, 8 and 9 west of the 6th initial meridian, which have in the past been, or which may in the future be cancelled in the records of the Department of the Interior, owing to failure to comply fully with any of the provisions of the regulations under which such leases may have been granted.

The Order in Council of the 18th January, mind you, "shall not apply." If it did not apply, why was another Order in Council needed to declare that it should not apply? There you are confused again.

Hon. Mr. DANDUAND: No, no. If my honourable friend will allow me, I will answer.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: After that Order in Council of January 18th was passed some busybody interested in that claim—I could name him, he has been named here—thought he had found again—I was going to say, his gold mine—his coal mine. Looking at that Order in Council, he exclaimed, "That is fine," and he went about saying, "I think I have got back my leases." The Minister of the Interior consulted the Department of Justice, who answered: "No, no. The Order of January last does not apply to those properties heretofore covered by the Hoppe or Isenberg lease, because they are not available. They were withdrawn." The Minister of the Interior might have slept in peace after receiving that statement from the Department of Justice; but, in order to make assurance doubly sure, in order that there might be no question about it, he asked that this other Order in Council be passed. So my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Pope) will see the intention of the Minister of the Interior. For his own personal satisfaction, in order that other Orders in Council dealing with leases might not arouse suspicion or raise any question, and in order that he might sleep in peace, he asked me to have these coal areas placed under the guardianship of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. POPE: The honourable gentleman has not yet satisfied me. He will excuse me for being dense or stupid. Stupidity is perhaps an inherited quality.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Oh, no. We knew the father.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Still I fail to understand the matter. What I cannot get into my mind is this. There is the Statute, and here is an Order killing the effect of the Statute. Then the Government, on the 8th of March, try to undo the wrong they have done. I do not wonder that fellow cannot sleep. I do not know whether he is sleeping yet or not. If I were a Minister of the Crown and had at my disposal an asset of the value of these coal areas, and if I thought so little of it as to pass an Order in Council one month providing for one thing and another Order in Council another month providing for the opposite, I think it would be time for me to wake up.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But that is not fair to the Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Not fair to the Minister of the Interior?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is not a fair statement.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Well, is it fair to say he was disturbed? The honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) said he was disturbed mentally.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He saw around him many people who seemed to be disturbed.

Hon. Mr. POPE: He heard rumours on the street. When he heard the stories which were being told throughout the length and breadth of this country, he got nervous, because his name was mixed up with them. The honourable leader of the Government in this House knows that. I do not say that the Minister did anything. I make no charge. I am not in a position to make any charge. If I could, I would not do it. You understand me. But when honourable gentlemen find their names compromised they do wake up occasionally and begin to investigate to see exactly how they will come out. I have no doubt that the honourable gentleman's mind is disturbed and he has made an effort to save the property, after the statute has been passed and proclaimed and the Order in Council has been added to it. At the same time you cannot get three lawyers, or even two lawyers, within this country to agree that the property is safe under the conditions in which it is placed. I cannot get any lawyer to agree that it is safe. If anybody else can, I would like to see him do so. I have submitted the statute to the best talent I know of, both inside this House and outside of it. Some of those to whom I have submitted it are present now and hear what I say. Can we not get some retroactive legislation that would secure that property, one of our great national assets, to the Dominion of Canada beyond any possibility of its being taken away except by Act of Parliament? I know of no other certain way of saving it for Canada.

The honourable gentleman speaks of the Department of Justice. I say nothing against the Department of Justice, or any of the departments; but they are semi-political. They belong to Governments. They are influenced sometimes one way and sometimes another, and they are just as likely to be honestly wrong as they are to be honestly right in their opinions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The judge, of course, has the last word.

Hon. Mr. POPE: The judge has the last word? The people of Canada should be the judge of their own property. We should be the judges of what we own.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Yes; to the last moment we should be the judges of what we own.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Tribunals are appointed to judge for the people.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Tribunals are appointed to settle difficulties between scoundrels; that is what they are for. If we had no scoundrels we would not need any courts. Lawyers would starve.

These coal areas are one of the assets of Canada. Possessing them, Canada has a future such as she could not have without them, and there should be no delicacy about passing legislation just as retroactive as may be necessary. There should be no scruples about placing our possession of these properties beyond any doubt. With regard to the people who discovered that property and who are now represented by the Isenberg stake, the honourable gentleman knows full well that I have never said that no compensation should be given to them, or to any others who have discovered any of our hidden assets, uncovered them and spent money on them, whether in license fees, in labour, or otherwise. They have provided an asset that is valuable to Canada, and Canada wants that asset. I say, then, that Canada should go and take that asset, but pay those people for their trouble and their expenditure. But I cannot agree with the honourable gentleman's statement that some judge upon the bench, some ordinary mortal, of no greater intelligence than other mortals, should have the power to deprive Canada of the assets she requires for the general benefit and development of this country. Canada first, Canada last, and Canada all the time, with regard to the things that belong to Canada—that is my opinion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am glad to learn that my honourable friend is in favour, not of confiscation, but of expropriation.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Expropriation, confiscation, or compensation—I do not much care which word you use.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Confiscation is the method used in Russia to-day.

Hon. Mr. POPE: In Russia they do not pay. I propose that we pay.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes; that is the difference between Canada and Russia, and between expropriation and confiscation.

Hon. Mr. POPE: That is a big difference. Now, I have here an amendment, and, although the Bill is going to a committee, I suppose there is no harm in my suggesting my amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is it an amendment for the committee stage, or is it an amendment on the second reading?

Hon. Mr. POPE: It will be an amendment to the proposal which the honourable gentleman has submitted to us. It is the amendment that I submitted last year, with the addition of a few words.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman must wait until the Bill goes into committee. He cannot move it now.

Hon. Mr. POPE: I cannot move before it goes into Committee?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, not now.

Hon. Mr. POPE: When is this Committee going to sit?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We can take the second reading of this Bill, and it will come into Committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POPE: You will bring it in to-morrow, will you, so that I can submit this amendment to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. POPE: Honourable gentlemen, I am sorry to have detained you so long, but I feel the importance of this question. I think it is away beyond anything that I have been called upon to consider during the many years I have been in Parliament.

Hon. EDWARD MICHENER: Representing the province in which the coal areas that are referred to in the Bill before the House, are situated, I would like to take the liberty of saying something, unless the leader of the House thinks it better to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the House will hear the honourable gentleman now if he does not insist on adjourning.

Hon. Mr. MICHENER: There seems to be a wide difference of opinion as to the efficiency of this enabling legislation. As to that I am willing to leave the matter to the Committee that may be appointed. I wish, however, to deal with a phase of the question which, to my knowledge, has not been touched upon either in this House or the other. That is the question of the conservation and the immediate development of this particular coal area in the interest of the people of Canada.

It is the opinion of the public men, both in the province of Alberta and in this Parliament, that there are already too many areas developed in the province of Alberta. It has been stated that 15 per cent of the coal area of the world is in that province. To make the matter more vivid and realistic to the members of this House on a former occasion, I stated that, taking the geological returns of the Dominion Government, and basing the estimates on those statistics, the coal of Alberta would require 100,000 miners, mining an average of 5 tons a day, for 4,000 years, to exhaust the coal area of that province.

But while the opinion of a number of public men is that too many mines are already operating, in my opinion this particular mine should operate, for obvious reasons. If we are going to make an inroad on the market of the province of Ontario, we must compete with the Pennsylvania anthracite coal. In order to compete with that coal we must have a coal which is as near to that coal as we can get in Canada; and, as far as my information goes, from reading the geological reports, there is no coal area in the Dominion of Canada which would as nearly approach the American anthracite coal as the coal areas of Alberta. It is true that these formations are of a later age than the Pennsylvania coal, although, strange to say, in the geological reports at least two seams of this particular area are considered by geologists of the Dominion Government as purely anthracite coal, and the analysis of the coal of this area compares very favourably with that of anthracite coal.

The analysis of Pennsylvania coal, as given in the United States bluebooks, strikes an average of 75.2 per cent of fixed carbon, whereas the average of the anthracite coal of the Hoppe claims to which this Bill refers, is 79 per cent of fixed carbon; and there are other qualities in this coal that I am told make it even more desirable than the Pennsylvania coal for domestic consumption.

I understand that in Ontario there are furnaces and stoves in domestic use which are specially constructed for hard coal. Therefore in order to compete in the market of the province of Ontario, and as far west as the city of Winnipeg, we must have coal which will burn equally well in those furnaces and stoves. I contend that in order to get the Canadian coal in the market of Eastern Canada, as far west as Winnipeg, we must have the opening up of this anthracite coal area. With the immense reserve of coal in Alberta, I think we can take care of posterity for 4,000 years, and, if so, we will have done pretty well. But, in my opinion, if we do not provide the people of Ontario, and of Canada generally, with cheaper coal, and a more certain supply, we will not have as extensive a posterity to take care of in a generation or two as we would if we provided our own people with fuel from Canada. We are sending from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 of good Canadian money to the United States for coal, half as much for oil, and hundreds of millions for other products, most of which we can find in Canada. So long as we send our millions of money of the Canadian people to the country south of us, so long will some of the brightest minds of Canada follow that money to the large centres of the United States. Until the Government of the day realizes the great importance of keeping Canadian dollars for the Canadian people and for the development of Canadian industry, so long will we have an exodus from this country.

Never since Confederation has Canada been faced with such a crisis as faces her to-day. It has been said by public speakers, that the 19th century was the century of the United States, and that the 20th century would be the century for the development of this great Dominion. If we are to realize that prophecy we must begin not only by the conservation but by the development of our great natural resources in the interests of the people of Canada.

Interrelated with this question of coal supply is the immigration question, the national debt question, and our transportation question; and I believe that if the Government could see their opportunity at the present moment, and undertake in a broad, constructive way, in connection with the National Railways, perhaps through an industrial department of those Railways, the opening up of this great anthracite area for the people of Canada, they would start forces to work which would re-establish confidence in the country and enable the people of Alberta to live and live profitably in that Province. They would also hold the people of the Grand Prairie country, that great empire, of which my honourable friend speaks. At the same time they would create increased population, through immigration, a greater demand for labour, increased railway traffic, and larger production of goods in Eastern Canada to supply the increased population of the West.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Provided you succeeded in finding a market for that coal.

Hon. Mr. MICHENER: Surely. That is the reason why I contend that we must open up this anthracite area, in order to compete successfully in the Ontario market for hard coal. It is true that we have Lignite coal mines opened up in Alberta, but we have no field of anthracite opened up and exporting coal to any great extent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the freight rates would play their role.

Hon. Mr. MICHENER: Yes, I know that. Some years ago I took the liberty of interviewing Mr. Hanna, the ex-President of the Canadian National Railway System, on this question. On the basis of a rate of 3.80 per train mile, I think—the basic rate at which they could operate profitably, or we might better say without a loss on operating expenses—we could import coal from Alberta to Ontario and distribute it for about $7 per ton. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, who spoke on this question (Hon. Mr. Reid) had a better figure than that, and placed it at somewhat less. I think he mentioned $5. But by bringing the coal to Fort William and shipping on the lakes, I believe a dollar could be cut off that $7.

Now, it is true that at the present time coal mining is very expensive in Alberta; it costs over $4 a ton to mine, but the miners are getting $15 a day. Why should they be getting $15 a day when the farmers are working for their board, and some of them not even getting that? I say that if we are going to arrive at a basis of prosperity and development of this country, we must get down to a basis of relative values between the miner, the artisan, the farmer, and the man who lives in the city. We must get down to first principles, and get back to wages that are reasonable. The contention of the miners is that they only work so many days in a week, or so many months out of a year; but if a large coal area were opened up in that country it would demand hundreds of thousands of miners, and there would be work all the year round; consequently their wages could be reduced.

It is confidently estimated that coal in that country could be mined for $2 a ton, almost. I understand the estimate Mr. Hoppe made before the war was that they could mine this coal for 50 cents a ton. But those were pre-war conditions, and mining in that particular area is especially favourable to cheap mining, because it is a gravity system, and it does not require props, the intersections of lime rock between the two sections and the seams doing away with artificial props.

Some honourable gentlemen the other day asked a question as to the seams, and the depth and thickness of seams connected with those tunnels. A coal Company in that country is anxious to have railway transportation, so that they might mine coal more cheaply than they are now doing and thus compete for the steamship business on the Pacific. They could mine bituminous coal with a steam shovel, perhaps, on seams 50 feet in thickness, and successfully compete on the Pacific Coast for Pacific steamship traffic. The seams given in these geological reports are very favourable for mining. The first seam is 8 feet in thickness, the next 19, the next 12, the next 19, and the next is 9.

I believe there are 5 tunnels in 5 seams 100 feet in depth. The lower seams in the coal area are considered real anthracite coal. The other seams are semi-anthracite, or, more correctly speaking bituminous coal of a high grade, which would reasonably take the place of our coal in furnaces and stoves such as burn hard coal in the province of Ontario.

The last speaker on this question referred to the Grande Prairie country, and to the benefit the opening up of those coal mines would be to that country. The Grande Prairie is wonderfully rich. It is an empire in itself. No more beautiful or picturesque or fertile land lies out of doors from the Pacific to the Atlantic, than the Grande Prairie country. I have traversed that whole country, and there are immense stretches of land there yet open for settlement. I believe there is a deputation here at present of three representative men asking the Dominion Government to build a railway line from Brule, 200 miles west of the city of Edmonton, up past those coal areas into Grande Prairie, a distance of about 150 miles. One of those gentlemen told me that they paid 13 cents a bushel for their grain to be shipped to Edmonton en route to Vancouver, and when it got to Edmonton it was 70 miles farther from the point of destination than when it left their home. Now, if a line were built from Grande Prairie down to Brule, on the line of the Canadian National, they would have an outlet to the Pacific, to Edmonton, and to eastern points as well, by direct road. At the present time the route from Vancouver to Edmonton is about 1,000 miles, whereas it would be somewhere between 600 or 700 miles if this line were built down to Brule, and then to Vancouver on the National line.

The honourable gentleman who spoke told of the depletion of population in that country. If the Government of the day would undertake to equip our Canadian National Railways for the carrying of coal, and build a line into that country, thereby tapping those coal areas, it seems to me it would give a new impetus to the development of this country, and largely settle the immigration question, the national debt question, and the increased production and railway questions. This would be an initial step which would re-establish confidence in the development of Western Canada; and if Eastern Canada is to succeed and be prosperous Western Canada must also succeed and prosper.

Back in the days of Confederation we had men of vision, men who saw the needs of this country years ahead, and with that vision they tied together the far-flung parts of this Dominion by the Candaian Pacific railway It seems to me there never was a time when we needed men of vision more than we do to-day, men who know what to do in order to solve the great problems which confront the Dominion of Canada. While we are doing everything in our power to bring immigrants to Canada, we find people are leaving Canada, and many of her best sons are moving away at a greater rate than others are coming into the country. If we are going to keep those people and create conditions by which they can be prosperous, we must keep our own money in our own country for our own people, and for the development of our own resources. It seems to me that this would be an opportunity by which the Government, at comparatively nominal expense, say $4,000,000 for constructing a railway, could do a great deal to develop the country. This work could be done under an industrial department of the Canadian National railways. I would have no objection even to a private operating company, though I think the time has passed for the exploitation of this country. In the construction of our railways we have had exploitation in Western Canada, and our people have been bled white, and we are paying enormous taxes as a result of those ridiculous guarantees which were given to promotion schemes throughout Western Canada. We have had all kinds of exploitation in regard to our timber areas, and I think the time has come when we should call a halt on any further exploitation of the resources of this country, especially as regards the essential necessaries of life such as fuel.

It has been my privilege to live in the city of Toronto, and I can appreciate to a certain extent the viewpoint of the people of this province, the concern they are feeling, and their desire for a positive coal supply for the future. We know that threats have been made. We know also that the time will come when the anthracite reserve will not permit of exporting Pennsylvania anthracite to this country. Now, why not prepare for the emergency, and be in a position to supply our own people with our own coal? Having settled in Toronto somewhat late last fall, I immediately went to the coal dealer nearest to where I lived, and asked him if he could supply me with coal. He said he thought he could, and gave me first a ton of soft coal, which I found required the flues of the furnace to be cleaned every day. Now, the soft coal of the province of Alberta, as my own leader in this House knows, is of very good quality, and its use requires cleaning furnace flues only once in two weeks or once a month. After using this soft coal in Toronto, I succeeded in getting a ton of Pennsylvania anthracite, and when cold weather came I went to the dealer when I had a supply just for one night more and said, "You promised me another load of anthracite coal." He replied: "We cannot give you that; we must take care of our old customers; perhaps we will give you a ton this week, perhaps we won't." I told him I had only enough for one night, and a supply would be no good for my family after they were frozen; so I was successful in getting another ton. But my experience gives an idea of the problem in Ontario. A speaker in the other House stated that many people went cold this winter, and many children and women suffered from cold and sickness, and perhaps met their death, for the lack of a fuel supply throughout the province of Ontario.

In all seriousness, honourable gentlemen, it seems to me that no Government ever had such an oportunity to show that they could do something worth while for this country, and set an example of developing our own resources for our own people, keeping our own money in our own country for our people. That is the way to keep our people here. So long as we send our money out, so long will we send the people out.

A prophet of old said, "Without vision the people perish." We need in Canada men of vision, who will prepare for what is coming, and prepare now, without a year's delay, for a supply of anthracite coal, as far as possible from the Dominion, from this area which is referred to in the Bill before the House. Personally I have no fear but that the Minister of the Interior will do his very best to protect this area of coal for the people of Canada. I sat with him in the provincial House for many years, and I have the utmost confidence in his sincerity and honesty. I sincerely hope that the Government of the day will do something not only to relieve the people of the north country, but to assist in supplying the people of the Dominion with the first essential of life—fuel to keep them warm in the rigorous winters of Canada. In this way they will lay the foundation for new confidence and increased production and further immigration; they will create home markets by means of which Western Canada will become more productive; and this will have a reflex influence which will go far in helping to solve the transportation problem of the country. So I throw out the suggestion that this whole problem can be solved and this area developed in connection with the Canadian National Railways, and that it will not be many years before we are able to supply the coal requirements of our own people from Eastern and Western Canada. We will thus be bringing about a condition which will satisfy the people, will stop the exodus of our citizens, and will induce other people to come here and help us build up our country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Will the honourable gentleman permit me to put a question to him, as he is from Alberta? I have not heard a very clear statement as to how and by whom this area should be developed. I have heard the prayer that it should be conserved for Canada. My honourable friend says: Open it up. Is it to be worked by the Government of Canada, by the Board that has supervision over the National Railways, or by whom?

Hon. Mr. MICHENER: What is wanted to make the Canadian National pay is freight. If the freight does not already exist, let it be created by forming an industrial department which would open this area either directly or under a commission. It seems to me that in connection with the operation of the Canadian National railways an industrial department could be established which could command the services of competent mining experts, and that this area could be opened up in the interest of the people. This, of course, would be under the Department of the Interior of the Government of the day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The honourable gentleman knows that the C.P.R. went into mining, but that it has abandoned the operation of mines.

Hon. Mr. MICHENER: The C.P.R. is not charged with the supervision of fuel for the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They found no profit in opening and operating mines.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

BIENFAIT COAL EXPERIMENT

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the enormous expenditure at Bienfait, Saskatchewan, in experimenting on coal and to ask the Government if they intend to have an examination of these accounts made?

He said: Honourable gentleman, I gave notice a few days ago that I would call the attention of the Senate to this matter. I will say only a few words on the subject.

I had previously made an inquiry and had been told by the Government that over $900,000 had been expended, of which half was paid out by the federal Government, one-quarter by the Government of Manitoba, and one-quarter by the Government of Saskatchewan. I am glad to see that the Manitoba Government paid its share, and the Saskatchewan Government did likewise. It was not like what happened with regard to the bonds that they guaranteed.

It would be of advantage to learn what officials or contractors or other persons connected with this affair were responsible for this enormous expenditure. I take it that the amount of $920,000 mentioned in the answer of the Government covers only the amount actually expended. There are years and years of interest. But even the sum of $900,000 at 5 per cent would be $45,000 a year. There is no use in crying over spilt milk. I dare say the expenditure has been incurred. Still, if those who were in charge of this matter had simply referred to the Canadian Pacific Railway and asked them about it, they would have discovered that 25 years before they ever started the work at Bienfait the C.P.R. had made experiments and found they were not successful. I am informed that a very high official of the C.P.R. even came here and told the Government of those experiments and of their dismal failure. However, here we are to-day with that money spent and nothing to show for it.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER: How many years' work does the experiment take?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It was started in the third or fourth year of the war.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In 1918.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: In 1918, and it is to-day recognized as an absolute failure. During all the time, three or four years, that the experiment has been conducted, at an expenditure of over $900,000, the total output has been only 75 tons of briquettes, of which not one ton has ever been sold. So the undertaking is an absolute loss. Surely we ought to be informed by what mismanagement or what careless administration such a large sum of money has been expended with absolutely nothing to show for it. As the expenses kept on increasing, if there was anybody at all in the Government taking any interest in the financial affairs of this country, he should have asked: " You have spent $100,000; what have you done?"—or, "You have spent $200,000, and what have you done?" And that question should have been asked again when the expenditure was $300,000 or $400,000. Two or three years ago, when I was speaking on this question, the expenditure had amounted to $600,000, I was informed.

Now I am informed also that the undertaking is absolutely abandoned, and, furthermore, those officials who were connected with it would like it to be forgotten altogether. Well, I think we should not forget that we have invested so much money there, and it would be right for us to hold an investigation to ascertain whether the large plant at Bienfait, on which we have expended all this money might be turned to some other purpose. The Government of Manitoba or the Government of Saskatchewan might be able to utilize it. There are, so far as I can see, many processes in connection with this plant. It has all the necessary elements for the making of commercial fertilizer. There is a process which has been used in Germany for years and years; it is the Badische Anilin at Oppau. In Germany a syndicate, or the Government—I do not know which—erected a plant at a cost of $50,000,000, and what is being done in Germany with that huge expenditure might be done on a smaller scale, I believe, at the plant we have on our hands at Bienfait.

On a former occasion, speaking on the subject of national research, I alluded to what has been done in France in this respect, and I do not desire to repeat what I said. In France, at Montereau, on the banks of the Seine river, only a few miles from Paris, Monsieur Georges Claude, who during the war had been working in a shed manufacturing asphyxiating gases, is now utilizing his plant for the manufacture of fertilizer. I will not describe the process, but if any honourable gentleman desires to know how the fertilizer is made, I would refer him to the Senate Hansard of May 18, 1921, in which he will find the full description. Suffice it to say that this fertilizer is composed of just two ingredients—three parts of hydrogen gas and one part of nitrogen gas. Hydrogen gas, as everybody knows, is the product of the coke oven. It is going to waste almost everywhere there are coke ovens. Very few utilize the by-product. But at Bienfait, we are informed, they are carbonizing coal. That is equivalent to making coke out of it. Therefore a large supply of hydrogen could be obtained. Hydrogen, I may tell you, en passant, means just gas that produces water; and, as we all know, water is one of the essentials for a fertilizer. The other element is nitrogen. Well, nitrogen is extracted from the atmosphere. I spoke on this subject in this House about thirteen years ago and have often referred to it since. Nitrogen is simply extracted from the air. That is done extensively in Norway to-day, simply by introducing an electric current in a chamber. On the positive pole comes out nitrogen, and on the negative pole comes out oxygen. That is all there is to it. Both these gases are liquefied and mixed together under tremendous pressure. You may ask how it is that this great pressure is obtained. It is done simply by means of pistons of very small surface, all that is required is simply cheap power. Anyway the coal is there, and it is good enough to generate steam of sufficient power. The enormous pressure attained is 1,000 atmospheres, which is equal to the pressure of gunpowder in the biggest guns that were used in the war.

Now, the Government, or whichever Minister has charge of this matter, should approach the Government of either Manitoba or Saskatchewan, or even private persons, with a view to leasing the plant at a nominal rental, since it is bringing us nothing. It would be preferable to let private interests take it over, if possible. Perhaps the government of either of the provinces I have mentioned might induce some private individuals to take it at a nominal rental. That would be better than to let the plant go to rack and ruin. Remember over $900,000 of Canada's money has been spent there, and it would be very useful if fertilizer could be produced at that plant as it is produced elsewhere. I am told that in many parts of Manitoba and also in the southern parts of Saskatchewan, after raising wheat for many years without putting anything back into the ground, the farmers find that the yield has fallen off and is not nearly as much as it was in the beginning. Not being a farmer, I do not pretend to know about these matters; but in passing through I have seen manure on the fields which must have been put there for the purpose of getting better crops. These chemicals are better than the ordinary animal or vegetable fertilizers. I hope the Government will take kindly to what I have said, because it has been with the very best of intentions as far as I am concerned. Plans and specifications could be forwarded to our Agent General in Paris, the Hon. Philippe Roy, who used to be a member of this House; and surely it would not be too much to ask him to find this gentleman, George Claude—he is well known and could easily be found—to show him what we have here, and to ask him to tell us, even if we had to pay him a fee, whether or not we could make fertilizer with this plant at Bienfait which has been such a dismal failure. In this way the plant might be made of some use to Canada, and we might be able to save some of our money. I hope the Government will communicate with Mr. Roy in Paris and send him the particulars. From what I know about the matter I believe we have all the necessary elements to make chemical fertilizer on a paying basis, more especially as there would be no overhead; and this fertilizer would be a boon to the farmers of the Northwest and would enable them to raise more wheat per acre.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend closes his inquiry by asking whether the Government intends to have an examination made of these accounts. I may inform him that the Orders in Council which were passed permitting the expenditure appointed the Auditor General to examine into the accounts, and that those accounts have been duly verified by the Auditor General. I will make inquiries, and will endeavour to produce the accounts.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is the plant yet in operation?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No. Everything is stopped absolutely and it is an absolute loss.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I doubt the statement that it is not still in operation.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: I think the honourable gentleman who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) has made one statement which is not correct, namely, that the C. P. R. Company, without any expenditure of money on our part, could have given us the information required, as they had already made steps in the carbonizing of coal. But that is not the case. The C. P. R. never made any tests.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: After the sitting or at some other time I will privately give the honourable gentleman my authority for that statement.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: There is no public record of any experimentation on the part of the C.P.R. in the carbonizing of coal. They may have experimented with briquetting; but the first experiment that was made in the carbonizing of coal was made by the Government of Saskatchewan, who erected a small plant in Estevan. My honourable friend the member from Regina (Hon. Mr. Calder) probably could tell about that, as I think he was a minister in the Government at the time. I understand that either $20,000.00 or $40,000.00 was expended.

The object of erecting this plant at Bienfait was to ascertain whether the soft lignite that we have in very large quantities in that part of the country could possibly be made into a more suitable fuel. If that could be done it would be a great advantage to that portion of the country, because that deposit, which amounts to many millions of tons, is only some 275 miles from the city of Winnipeg, something like 125 miles from Moose Jaw, and a somewhat shorter distance from Regina. I am quite prepared to admit that in my opinion the money expended was expended extravagantly. The work was done by a body known as the Scientific Research Council, of which Mr. Ross, of Montreal, a noted engineer, was the Chairman in charge of the work. The first estimate of the cost was, I think, $500,000 or $600,000. That was exceeded. The Governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan each paid their portion of the expenditure, as my honourable friend has stated. About a year ago, when I was in Winnipeg, if I remember correctly, some of the members of the staff working at Bienfait interviewed the Government of Manitoba about the position they were in, stating that they had not been able to complete their investigations, and that a certain further amount of money would be required. The Government of Manitoba agreed to put up its share in order to complete the investigation. Having put in $900,000, it is just a question whether it is worth while for the three Governments—the Dominion Government putting up half and the two Provincial Governments each putting up a quarter—to go on and spend another $120,000, which I think is the amount required to complete the investigation. I know, honourable gentlemen, that the Committee in charge of the work met with many difficulties. They had to experiment with all the machinery which they had made for carrying on this work. First of all, the coal had to be carbonized.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Crushed first.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Then briquetted. The trouble arose, I understand, in the carbonizing of the coal. If this undertaking could be carried to a successful conclusion, it would mean the saving of a great deal of money to the people of Canada, more particularly to those of the West, to have fuel which would be practically equal in heating value to anthracite, which is what the Committee hope to accomplish.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: With the tar in it?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: They have to use a little tar or a little flour or something of that kind for binding the briquettes.

While I have in the past criticized the expenditure of money in that connection, I still think something might be done. The Commission to my mind were extravagant in putting so much money into houses for the officers and the men. There are half-a-dozen coal companies in that vicinity working the year round and employing a lot of men which did not, I suppose, spend one-tenth for housing what this Commission did.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: How much did they spend on housing?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I got a return last year showing the figure, but I do not remember it. However, that is the position to-day. I would not like to say now that the work should be stopped if the men who are in charge of it believe that there is a small likelihood of its becoming a success through the expenditure of a further moderate amount of money.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not mention any names; but I may say that some of the briquettes were brought to a very high official of the C.P.R., who said: "Bring me a bucket of water." When the water was brought to him he put the briquettes into it and left them over night and the next morning there was nothing in the bucket but straw and dirty water.

I.C.R.—EARNINGS OF EASTERN DIVISION

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK inquired of the Government:

What were the earnings of the Eastern Division of the Intercolonial Railway, between New Glasgow and Sydney or between Truro and Sydney for the years 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921 and 1922; giving amounts received in each of those years from freight and passenger traffic?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Railway accounting methods do not provide this information by divisions. Information, therefore, is not available.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS HOTEL SYSTEM

SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the notice of motion:

By the Honourable Mr. McDonald:

That he will move for the appointment of a Special Committee to inquire into and report upon the extension of the hotel system of the Canadian National Railways throughout Canada, and especially in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

Hon. J. A. McDONALD: Honourable gentlemen, the other day I put an inquiry on the Order Paper asking for information in regard to the development of the hotel system of the Canadian National Railways. To-day I met Sir Henry Thornton, who said: "I have been very much interested in the proposition and intend to examine every avenue and investigate the possible development of the national hotel system and its extension to the Maritime Provinces." I will mention one or two places in the Maritime Provinces where I think trade can be stimulated by giving an intelligent application of the same principle that made the tourist traffic so popular in the West. We hear a great deal about the development of the West, and quite properly so. Several authors have written volumes on the making of the West. Did you ever hear of one on the making of the East? There would be more material for such a volume in Eastern Canada if the same energetic stimulation of passenger traffic were undertaken in the East that has been undertaken in the West. The Intercolonial never did anything more than provide the trains; the C.P.R. went a little further and developed passenger traffic by more modern methods. Much has been done but much more might be done. There would be more hunting, salmon fishing, wild fowl, etc, if articles concerning the attractions of New Brunswick appeared in magazines which would interest the traveller.

What has made the great pleasure resorts of the United States such as Atlantic City? The climate and the hotels. The cities and towns of the maritime provinces are admirably situated to become ideal tourist resorts. They are in close connection with the great cities of the New England states, and every year tourists from as far west as Pittsburg find their way to the maritime provinces for rest, recreation and pleasure. I might mention the winter port of Canada, St. John. St. John would certainly be an ideal spot for an all-the-year round hotel. I might also mention the Acadian town of Shediac. I do not think there is a better place on the Atlantic seacoast for a summer hotel or an all-the-year-round hotel than Shediac. Any afternoon in summer you may go there, and see thousands and thousands of bathers taking advantage of the wonderful water and beautiful beach. If we could only attract to that town the attention that has been given to the West, I think it would be justified by the results. But, as I said before, in this place where there are thousands of people in the surf every afternoon, and enjoying the wonderful climate and the splendid white beach which extends for miles, there is absolutely no accommodation.

I am not going to press my motion at this particular time, because I have been assured by the President of the Canadian National Railways that attention is going to be given immediately to this problem.

There is one thing, however, to which I would like to call attention, and that is the hotels scattered throughout Canada. We are very much interested in the traffic situation and the economical operation of the railways. The railways must have traffic, they must have tourists, they must have trade, or they cannot reduce their rates. I am interested in numerous business concerns, many of which are going to be forced to take their travellers off the road because there is no reasonable hotel accommodation for them. The average traveller to-day is paying $300 to $500 per month for his sample room, hotel and travelling expenses. If an aggressive firm is going to put on an active selling campaign, and sends out eight or ten travellers, it must undertake an expenditure of $5,000 a month; and few businesses can stand that.

The people are beginning to look to this Chamber for constructive ideas. The hotel accommodation of Canada is, I believe, a very important thing. We must have places where people can stay at reasonable rates, and hotels to which business houses can send travellers who are selling their goods, as we are going to do unless we are stopped by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton).

Hon. J. D. REID: I would not have made any remarks on this subject had it not been for the reference of the honourable gentleman to the statement made by Sir Henry Thornton. So far as I am concerned, I am absolutely opposed to and would protest against anything being done to further increase deficits in connection with the Canadian National Railways. The honourable gentleman who has just taken his seat has no doubt read the answer given a few days ago to an inquiry—an answer which showed how prosperous the hotels now operated by the Canadian National Railways are. After reading those figures the honourable gentleman would see that though the hotels are now being operated in the best centres of Canada, they showed a deficit of some $700,000 or $800,000. I am very sorry that from his remarks the impression will go forth to the people of Canada, especially to those of the Eastern Provinces, that Sir Henry Thornton has stated that there is a possibility of the Canadian National Railways going into the hotel business still further. I am absolutely opposed to such a step. I believe that the general hotel system throughout the country is not too bad; but if in Shediac or any other place in the lower provinces there is money to be made in the hotel business, surely there are people in those localities enterprising enough to build hotels, instead of asking the people of Canada to saddle themselves with any more debt in connection with the railway system. Though I come from Ontario I am just as anxious as the honourable gentleman to do anything that will make the Maritime Provinces prosperous.

With the recent change in the railway situation conditions will be different from what they were before the Intercolonial Railway became part of the National Railway System. The Intercolonial was built for the purpose of connecting the provinces, not with a view to making money. It has been carried on since Confederation without profit, the deficits being paid from the taxes collected from the people of this country, as no bonds were issued or capital liabilities incurred in connection with it, and there are none at present. The great traffic which goes to the West must go from our Eastern cities and ports. On a carload of freight to the West, whether from the Far East and crossing the continent, or merely for Alberta or Saskatchewan or Ontario, the rates are all the same, be the starting point Montreal, Portland, Halifax, or St. John. The Railway Commission fixes the rates. The rates on the Intercolonial Railway the Railway Commission will raise unless the system is carried on as it was under the agreement since Confederation. Unless this is done, it will be absolutely impossible to carry the traffic from the West to St. John and Halifax. To explain the situation better, let us suppose that a train-load of fifty cars leaves Montreal for ocean terminals after the close of navigation. The management will figure out on that they can take that train to Portland, say 500 miles, for a certain rate. That is the rate that is fixed by the Board of Railway Commissioners, and that Board will fix the same or a larger rate, depending on the mileage, to St. John and Halifax; yet the same train-load will be hauled to St. John, 500 miles, and then the train will double back, making 1,000 miles, as against 500 miles to Portland. To Halifax the distance is 800 miles, or 1,600 doubling back, and the management will have to haul those cars back, for the sake of taking them over a part of their system in Canada, although it could have been hauled only 500 miles to Portland.

What the Maritime provinces should do, instead of trying to build hotels, would be to endeavour to carry out the understanding made with those who formed Confederation; and possibly they could get such a rate that the traffic with other parts of Canada would go to and from Halifax and St. John. Industries in the lower provinces would thus have a fair and just rate compared with what they had been accustomed to since Confederation, and by bringing traffic to and from Canadian ports we would give Canadian citizens employment.

I think the policy of the Government, in relation to those provinces in the extreme east and west, and those great spaces in between that now lack population, should be to do everything in their power to bring them together by the lowest possible freight rates. This would produce greater harmony and make people who live in those provinces better satisfied with our country.

In my judgment this country would be much better off if from this House and from the management of the Railway System there would go out the word: "No more hotels; we are going to run the railway economically in every way, in order to give passengers the best service for the least money, and carry freight traffic at the cheapest possible rate out from and into our Canadian ports, and at the same time reduce the enormous losses on the railway system every year. I think this policy would be much better in the interests of the country than that of building hotels at an enormous cost.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw the attention of His Honour the Speaker to the fact that there is nothing before the Chair. The motion of the honourable gentleman has not been presented.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I do not think that the House has yet consented to the motion being withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was not moved.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I understand that the honourable gentleman moved his motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Hon. Mr. McDonald said he did not intend to press his motion.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The motion is withdrawn. Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I have one or two words to say; I do not intend to detain the House very long.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I intend to ask the permission of the House. It is an unusual thing—

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Do I understand the honourable gentleman is speaking to a motion?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I am speaking to the motion of the honourable member from Shediac, asking leave to withdraw his motion.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: The motion was never put to the House.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: If it is not put I can surely speak to it.

DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from March 15 the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegate to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

Hon. W. A. GRIESBACH: Honourable gentlemen, by the consent of the honourable member from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) and with the consent of the House, with the right of the honourable gentleman to speak later, I will take the liberty of speaking now.

Last Thursday the House was privileged to listen to an address by the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster), and to that address the House listened with great interest and attention. I take it that honourable members of this House will always listen with pleasure and close attention to any speech which the right honourable member from Ottawa may make on any subject upon which he may choose to speak. In learning and eloquence, and in authority to speak he outranks us all. For many years he has sat in the Parliament of Canada, and he has played no minor part. During the time of his service Canada has grown from small beginnings to be great and powerful. In those years of service successive generations of public men have come upon the scene played their parts, and passed on; but the honourable gentleman still carries on. Mellowed by the years, growing in wisdom, his natural force is unabated. Kindly, generous and tolerant, he occupies a place in the public life of this country unequalled by few and surpassed by none. Of him it may be truthfully said that > Age cannot wither, nor custom stale,

> His infinite variety.

Consequently I feel that it may be thought a bit presumptuous on my part to undertake to answer the observations which he offered to the House the other day, called upon, as I am, to differ with him in some of his premises and in most of his conclusions.

His contention, in brief, is that there is in this discussion an Anglo-Saxon opinion, and that that Anglo-Saxon opinion is that those reparations are too high. I would like to draw attention to the idea which is in my mind, at all events, that, while there is an Anglo-Saxon opinion, it is on the one hand official, and on the other hand unofficial. I shall, in the course of my remarks, endeavour to make known just exactly what that distinction is.

The right honourable gentleman harrowed our feelings somewhat by describing at length the unfortunate position which people living in continental Europe occupied in respect to their depreciated currency, particularly in the case of Austria. I should like to take the liberty of harrowing the feelings of the House still further, particularly the feelings of the right honourable gentleman from Ottawa, by giving him this incident. He told us of men who had large investments, and found that those investments had deteriorated almost out of existence. This is a case of an Austrian who died in 1913, and left to each of his two sons 500 crowns. One son was prudent, a careful fellow, and he put his money into state bonds at 3½ per cent. The other was not a prudent man, and he proceeded to drink up his little fortune, and as he finished his bottles he dropped them into the cellar of the ancestral home. Both of those men went to the war, and both came back unhurt. The prudent man found that his investment of 500 crowns was worth about 23 cents. The imprudent fellow went down to the cellar, collected the bottles and sold them for 235,000 crowns. I suggested to my right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) that there were compensations to some people in this depreciation of currency. I suggest that herein lies at least an indication of how some people might profit by the depreciation of currency.

In all human relationships, whether between individuals or between nations, there are three immutable factors: fear, greed, and ambition. These factors are rooted deeply in human nature, and there is no very great evidence of change. Whenever wars take place between nations, except in the case of wars which are brought about by autocratic sovereigns, it will be found that somewhere in the root cause there is fear, or greed, or ambition. If one examines the causes of the late war and of the situation which now results, he will find, as has always been found in the past, that fear, greed and ambition are immutable factors.

With regard to the United States, which forms a part of this Anglo-Saxon opinion to which my right honourable friend has referred, this may be said, that before the war the United States had no fears, and now that the war is over the United States has no fears; and so they look upon the condition of the world from their point of view and make their contribution in that sense to Anglo-Saxon opinion.

Before the war Great Britain had four considerable fears. Her first fear was the German navy; not so much any actual contact with the German navy, but largely because every time the Germans laid down a capital ship the British taxpayer had to pay for two capital ships. In the second place, Great Britain feared the German mercantile marine. She feared also the march of Germany through Austria to the Balkans, into Asia Minor, and on to Egypt and the Suez Canal and India. Fourthly, she feared the systematic scientific intensive development of the German colonies.

Before the Versailles Conference had met at all the fears of Great Britain had been quieted. The German navy was at the bottom of the sea; the German mercantile marine was divided amongst the allies; the march of Germany in Asia Minor had been postponed for fifty years at least; and the German colonies all belonged to Great Britain.

Again I say, fear is a dominant and immutable factor. Anglo-Saxon opinion is not based upon fear. Anglo-Saxon opinion, in this discussion, takes its inspiration and its slant from a basis devoid of fear. If there had been greed or ambition so far as Great Britain was concerned, greed and ambition have been satisfied. I deny that there has been any greed or ambition, but I say if there were, it has been satisfied by the results of the war.

Just at this point I would like to say that as to the division of Anglo-Saxon opinion, official on the one hand and unofficial on the other, I have never met a reputable fighting soldier whose sympathy has not been wholly and entirely with France. It may be that there are some whose sympathy is not with France, but I have never met them. My own opinion is that everywhere in this Empire the men who fought with France during the war are with France now in her struggles to enforce her rights.

So you see that Anglo-Saxon opinion is based on considerations entirely different from the opinion of the French, which I will discuss in a moment. Alliances are brought about by common perils, by common exertions and the desire to attain common objects. When those perils are averted and those objects gained, then it is the rule of history that the alliance falls apart, and shortly afterwards diverse interests appear which force the former alliance still farther apart. It is sad, but it is so. It is the lesson of history. Yet, of all the nations of the world there is perhaps no nation with which this Empire would do better to be closely allied than our former allies, the French.

Now let me turn to French opinion; and with French opinion I link Belgian opinion, because French and Belgian fears are the same. France's fear has been the fear of the Germans; and France has always feared the Germans. In the past thousand years of her history France has feared Germany. Once in every fifty years in these past thousand years that part of Europe which is now called France has been invaded by people from that part of Europe now called Germany. In France at any time there is a generation alive which recalls the previous invasion. I came across a very singular thing the other day. When King William of Prussia was riding into Paris in 1870 at the head of a triumphant German army, he turned to Bismarck and said that this was the third occasion upon which he had entered Paris at the head of triumphant German troops. I have taken the trouble to verify absolutely that statement. Notwithstanding all the progress and development of humanity, and all the progress in the humanities this singular thing stands out that in all German invasions of France right down to the last war the incidents of invasion have remained the same. German ferocity has never changed in all these years, notwithstanding the march of civilization.

Some time before the recent war a book was written by a British officer who analyzed the German war books, analyzed German military philosophy, analyzed German history. This British officer wrote his book to tell how Germany would wage the next war, and in it he prophesied requisitions, fines, the taking of hostages, summary executions, and the liability of inhabitants for damage. It is interesting to see how truly he prognosticated the future.

Then came the outbreak of the war—the assassination of the Austrian Prince in the Danubian provinces, followed by a period of tenseness, followed by the actual outbreak of the war.

Just at this point I should like to mention a fact which is not very well known. In order to avoid any possibilty of a clash, in order to avoid the accusation of being the first to move in the war, the French authorities withdrew all their troops from the German frontiers for a distance of 10 kilometers inland. France was unready and unprepared. It was alleged a few days ago in another place that France was equally responsible with Germany for the outbreak of the war, and that France was equally prepared. France was not equally prepared, and the facts are known to every man who served in France. The French Army had only the boots they stood up in; they had no heavy artillery; they were armed with an antiquated rifle; and the uniforms which they wore were their peace-time uniforms. I happen to know how the horizon blue uniform was selected. The time came when the French army was almost naked, and the horizon blue uniform was selected because a contractor was found who was able to supply a sufficient quantity of this quality of clothing to enable the French army to carry on.

Then came the Germans, and from the first day of their arrival on the frontier they began to carry out the prophesies contained in the book to which I have referred. They began with fines and requisitions. They determined to live upon the country. Contrary to international law and international conventions, they forced the inhabitants to labour for them in military work and in the manufacture of munitions. They deported inhabitants of France to Germany and sent them to industrial slavery. They dismantled the factories and destroyed them. I saw an interesting incident in connection with their destruction of factories. Every man who has ever seen a factory knows that the engines rest upon large concrete beds, and that from out of these beds arise bolts by which the engines are secured. Wherever the engine had been removed, by German thoroughness the bolts had been cut off with hacksaws so as to render the engine bed useless. Their destructions and devastations in France were not accidental, nor were they unofficial. They were in fact premeditated: they were official. They were the acts of the German people operating through the German Government, and the intention was to destroy the land of France and destroy the French people. From that conclusion there can be no escape by any unprejudiced person who reads authoritative documents. They carried out executions of men and women on the flimsiest pretexts or upon no pretext at all. There is in the Library of Parliament, and there has been for some time, a report prepared by Viscount Bryce on alleged German outrages. Lord Bryce is the author of "The American Commonwealth," perhaps the best book on that subject. He has written also a great work on democracy. He was entrusted with the leadership of this inquiry, and the statements contained in the commission's report appear with his imprimatur. In this report you will find innumerable instances of the things which I have described, disclosing absolutely the intention of the Germans to leave such a mark upon France as she should never recover from.

In the first days of the occupation of Brussels, that city was fined 40,000,000 francs, and thereby the people of Brussels were made to contribute to the cost of waging war against themselves. I could give a vast number of instances of this sort, which were partly official and partly carried out by private individuals, that is to say, by officers and soldiers who might not be acting officially. However, I would like to corroborate some of the incidents mentioned in this report, which subsequently came under my own observation.

I am now speaking to the question of French opinion. My right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) has described Anglo-Saxon opinion. Now I want to put before the House the basis upon which French opinion rests.

In the month of June, 1918, there came into our lines two British prisoners who had escaped from the Germans. These men were brought before me. They were clothed in rags and covered with lice. They looked like scarecrows, and they were famished. They said they had been brought to a village called Noyelle, not far from Douai, 400 of them, to work in the German defence zone. They had no blankets nor overcoats, only the clothing in which they stood up. They were in rags. The building in which they lived was a shack, with a leaky roof and broken walls. There was no floor in it. They were fed upon a meal of vegetable soup twice a day, and they laboured from daylight till dark. They were killed or wounded by our own shell fire, and they suffered from our own aerial bombing. They suffered from all manner of diseases. When the men came home at night after their work they buried those who died by day, and some of them got up earlier in the morning and buried those who died during the night.

In October, 1918, we fought our way to the village of Noyelle, and there we found the shed in which the 400 British prisoners of the Germans had lived, and we saw about that shed mounds which marked the graves where those men were buried, and some of them were buried in graves not more than 15 inches deep.

At Jemmapes in November, 1916, I called at the house of a gentleman named Dufresne, a man who had been very well off and who lived in a large house. He had two daughters. He told me—and the incident will be found recorded, not in this report, but in another publication—that one day a body of British soldiers, prisoners to the Germans, were going down the road under German guards, and the daughter of the gardener threw a crust of bread out onto the road, and one of those British prisoners stooped to pick it up and one of the German guards blew his head off. The British soldier lay on the road all that day unburied, and Germans who passed on the road during the day turned the body over with their boots to have a look at it, and not a few of them kicked it. The daughter of this man smuggled food to prisoners who were working there. She was found out and charged with the offence at Mons, was fined 800 marks, and was told that if she did not pay it she would be sent to Berlin and confined in a prison where only prostitutes were kept. She showed us the receipt for her 800 marks, which she paid, containing a brief specification of the offence. The man himself had a large wine cellar, as all the people of those districts had. He decided to conceal a portion of his cellar, and he had 580 bottles of his best wine hidden away. Two years later a servant betrayed him and he was found out. He was taken to Mons, tried for the offence and fined 300 marks, and an additional 5 marks for each bottle. He received a receipt, signed, sealed and executed by the German authorities; and the officer who handed it to him took occasion to point out how methodical and business-like the Germans were, and how thankful he ought to be to get a receipt, because if he were dealing with the French or the Belgians he would not have had a receipt at all.

I could give you innumerable instances to show the attitude and frame of mind of the invaders. It would not be worth doing, because I am sure that every honourable gentleman can visualize what an invasion of a rich country like France means when the invaders are people of the type of the Germans.

Then came victory, the armistice, and the establishment of the bridge-heads. Then, but not until then, France had time to examine her condition. She found that during the four and a quarter years of war she had ten departments of her country devastated. Let me draw attention to the fact that these departments that have been devastated are the most productive areas of France. She had 94 per cent of her wool production destroyed; 90 per cent of her steel output; 70 per cent of her sugar output; 55 per cent of her electrical energy; 33 per cent of her coal production; 400 kilometers of railways; 4,000 villages; 20,000 factories, and 500,000 houses. She found that the Germans had carried off or destroyed 21,000,000,000 francs worth of personal property.

I remember Valenciennes before we drove the enemy out. Valenciennes is a town where the people go in for lace-making as a cottage industry. Every little cottage had its one or two or three lace-making machines. Before we drove them out of that place, the Germans, by order, by authority, officially visited as many of those cottages as they could and smashed those simple little machines with sledge-hammers. Beside barbed wire and trenches, there remains to be removed 42 million cubic feet of rubbish, and the damage is estimated at 102 billion francs. In addition to this, France suffered in killed, which includes some women and children, 1,385,000 persons; and in wounded 2,500,000 persons. Think, then, of the incalculable injuries suffered by the inhabitants of the occupied areas bullied, browbeaten and terrorized; starved in mind and in body; and deported to slavery in Germany. Think also of the brutal or worse than brutal German soldiers, billeted in French houses on defenceless women and children, with all that that implies.

Then, after four and a quarter years of war came victory and the Conference. Perhaps honourable gentlemen will be able to understand the frame of mind in which France came to the Conference, and the difference between her frame of mind and the frame of mind of those who had no fear. The presence or absence of fear, both in war and in conference, must be a dominating factor; it cannot be otherwise; and when President Wilson and Mr. Lloyd George came there they came to represent nations without fear, and had, as has been demonstrated, one eye upon the European situation and the other on elections to come in their own countries. They entertained themselves and the world by their mental gymnastics; but old Clemenceau, representing France, was able to sleep at the head of the table, as he did during a great part of the discussions, because he had only two points to raise: the first being security for France against this fear, and the second being reparation for the damage which had been done. About that there can scarcely be any discussion. The damage was visible to the naked eye.

Now, there could be only two forms of security against this fear. The first form of security would be an actual physical frontier. That frontier happens to exist on the Rhine. The Rhine rises in the Swiss mountains and flows to the North Sea, and is navigable almost from its source, and is fordable nowhere. True, on the left bank of the Rhine there is a territory occupied by the Germans, that one time belonged to France. Could the boundary have been forced up to the Rhine everywhere, it would have constituted an actual frontier, a military obstacle which would have given to France the security which she desired and deserved. But there were difficulties in connection with the annexation of territory, based upon the objection of all Powers at that time influenced by President Wilson. So the French were obliged to recede from a perfectly reasonable demand and to enter into a discussion as to the nature of the security that might be given her by a second means, namely, an alliance of the Great Powers pledging themselves to come to the aid and assistance of France should she again be invaded by Germany.

After interminable discussion the Treaty of Versailles was executed, involving the proposal of the League of Nations, and with special reference to Article X thereof, which provides that should one of the powers signatory to the Treaty be threatened, the remainder will come to her assistance. The French people observed that the United States, unlike the other Powers, was not merely represented by delegates or plenipotentiaries, but was represented by the President, the ruler of that country. The people of France attached tremendous importance to that fact, and when the delegation from the United States, led by President Wilson, put their signatures to the Treaty of Versailles and the League of Nations, which it contained, they believed that in that Treaty they had a security against Germany which removed their fears, and which ensured Peace. What has happened? The President of the United States returned to his own country, and both he and the Treaty were repudiated; and then, of course, the League of Nations, so far as it had teeth, fell to the ground, and France was left without security. Three years or more have passed. The discussion with regard to reparations has gone on, and it now becomes apparent that the payment of these very reparations are in doubt. So France, who helped to win the war, to put it very mildly—who was one of the winners of the war, and the aggrieved party from the beginning—finds herself to-day with this recollection of human loss, with this visible destruction of property, with her ancient fears revived, and reparations unpaid, in such a position that if she would help herself now she must rely upon her own strong right arm. These two things, reparations and security, are vital to France. They are matters of life and death to France. As to their paramount importance there can be no argument. Who will dare to argue with France upon these points?

I should like for one moment to discuss German opinion. We have seen how Germany makes war; we shall now see how she keeps the peace. Someone has said that you should not indict a whole nation, and perhaps one should not; but I have no hesitation in indicting official Germany—the German Government. Officially Germany is dishonest. One can quite understand that after conversation with German officers. We cannot understand the mentality of these Germans. The other day I saw a cartoon in Punch, I think it was, which showed a gathering of Germans around a table drinking beer. One of them was complaining against the action of the French in the Ruhr. He said: "These French behave as though this was Belgium." That gives you an idea of the mentality of the German people. I say Germany is dishonest, and I say Germany will evade the terms of the Treaty if she possibly can. Only the other day someone told me that of all the insurance companies involved in the San Francisco earthquake, the only ones that did not meet or attempt to meet their liabilities were the German companies who in all cases closed their doors and faded away. Germany understands only one argument, and that argument is force. If anyone doubts that, let him read the German philosophers, let him read Treitschke, Von der Goltz, Clausewitz and Von Bernhardi.

According to the Treaty, Germany was to demobilize her army and reduce it to one hundred thousand men. Well, she has done so, but she has done it with system. A regiment now takes the place of an army corps, and the regiments are located in army corps districts. Those regiments are commanded in many cases by the same men who commanded army corps in the war—this information can be had from our own General Staff Branch—and the companies and battalions are now commanded by officers who had higher formations in the war. The capacity to expand, based upon six million trained men, is there. In addition, the German Government has organized what is known as the security police, a force consisting of 150,000 men, nominally organized to support the Republican Government. In addition to that, in the various states of Germany there grew up in 1919, and still exists, a volunteer organization, which is better armed, organized, disciplined, and supplied with munitions than our own Canadian militia. Why is this? It is because, amongst other things, the German army was never demobilized. The men marched home with their equipment intact and have it with them to-day. So Germany has not honestly disarmed herself. The Inter-Allied Commission are constantly finding throughout Germany secret stores of concealed arms, artillery, ammunition, and so forth. Some of the English papers are simply tired of telling the story. I am not sure which paper it is which runs two columns on the subject, and has been doing so for the last three years.

Historically, Germany will desire, under camouflage, to maintain an army. Germany has precedent for that. It was, I think, in 1807, following the battle of Jena, in which the French, under Napoleon, were victorious over the Germans. Napoleon gave them a peace in which he required that they should not have an army of more than 35,000 men. Then it was that Clausewitz and others evolved the system of conscription, national training, and they passed recruits through the army in three months training periods and turned out 140,000 partially trained men each year, so that in the end they came back at Napoleon with a great army which had been trained under his nose. So I say: historically Germany, under camouflage, can and will build up and maintain a great army. The British General Staff know that quite well. From time to time they have issued confidential circulars telling of the growth and development of that army—and the French know it very much better.

According to the treaty, Germany was to punish her war criminals, and some three hundred were named. What has happened? Only a few have been brought to trial; some have been found not guilty, and others have been given some such light punishment as six weeks in a fortress. What were these criminals charged with? They were charged with sinking hospital ships, sinking merchant ships, firing upon unfortunate people in the lifeboats, and one man that I remember in particular, to get some added pleasure, used to bring his submarine up amongst the struggling people and allow them to clamber on top of his boat until he had a nice little party, and then he would submerge the submarine and watch them drown. That man got off on the plea that he was only carrying out the orders of his superiors; and when it was suggested that his superiors be indicted, the answer was that they were not named as war criminals. There were amongst them men who were known to have ill-treated and murdered prisoners. There was one man in particular, who was in charge of a coal mine. One young man, from Edmonton, in my own battalion, was captured. He worked two years in this coal mine, was fed two meals a day, and spent nearly all the time underground. The man in charge of the mine used to go down into the bowels of the earth and give this man a beating every week, and finally he knocked his eye out. That young man is now back in Canada, a man who will never recover. That particular German was indicted, but has never been brought to trial.

Germany has busied herself with intrigues with the Bolshevists and the Turks; she has fished in troubled waters wherever she could to annoy and embarrass the Allies. She has depreciated her currency, and done it unofficially, and with a purpose. It is perhaps a difficult thing to prove, but let me put before you the theory which has been advanced, not once but a dozen times, in a dozen different parts of the world. That theory is that Germany, being dishonest and clever, and confronted as she was with paper currency which she could not redeem or did not care to redeem, adopted this plan. She decided that on a certain day when marks were at a certain price, say two cents, she would sell a vast quantity of these marks in the markets of the world and put the proceeds, in the form of foreign securities, foreign currency and gold, into a fund. Then she continued to depreciate her currency by the issue of paper money, and it will finally reach a point where it has no longer any value. Then she will redeem her currency by means of the funds which she has accumulated in the manner I have described. Someone has said that $16,000,000 would today redeem the whole of the German currency at its present value.

Let me give some of the other suggestions that in my judgment may prove that point. First of all, there is the unparalleled issue of paper money, which indicates a purpose. There was no great need for this money, but the issue of it indicates a purpose. Secondly, there is the confidence with which Stinnes and Thyssen and Krupp-Bohlen and other magnates of Germany—who, by the same token, control the present Government—have carried out great enterprises, greater than we have ever known of in the world before; the confidence with which they have proceeded in commercial undertakings in Germany; a confidence which they never could have had in the future if they did not know beforehand that in some way the question of depreciated currency would be taken care of. Then, thirdly, there is the fact that in 1919 there was a tremendous sale of German marks. The circulars went all over Canada and all over the world advertising German marks and they were bought in millions all over this country, and it is an open secret that in New York, in London, in Amsterdam, in all the great stock exchanges of the world, they are loaded up with marks which they purchased about three years ago, the proceeds of which will never be accounted for. The proceeds exist in foreign bonds, securities in foreign currency, and gold, and it is suggested that the whole scheme was evolved for the purpose of redeeming the currency some day.

Just this very day I received through the mail a report of a speech by Otto H. Kahn, an American banker, vice-president of the American branch of the English-speaking Union, delivered at the monthly luncheon of the British Empire Chamber of Commerce of the United States at the Bankers Club, New York, on Wednesday, January 17, 1923, in which he said:

> Germany has in the coffers of her Reichsbank still approximately $250,000,000 in gold. That is enough to retire the total existing German paper currency about four times over, at the present rate of exchange. The primary though of course not the sole reason why that currency is selling at a valuation of one-fourth of the gold in the hands of the Reichsbank is the world's utter lack of confidence, and, particularly the fact that the German people themselves have no confidence in the token which bears the stamp of their government.

I say that Germany has deliberately depreciated her currency. That currency, on the other hand, has served a useful purpose; it has enabled Germany to carry out important improvements and great works. She has renewed in the past three years almost all of her railways; she has dug new canals and widened and deepened the old ones; her industrial expansion in these past three years exceeds anything that has been in the industrial history of that country; and she has done all that with her depreciated money, which she has depreciated intentionally. She has killed two birds with one stone.

Now, with regard to her industrial expansion, let me read to the House an article appearing in the Montreal Gazette a few days ago, which deals with her expansion in shipbuilding. The Gazette of the 23rd February says:

> Germany as a Sea Power
> Germany has beaten her pre-war shipbuilding record, according to figures which have been published, her output in 1922 being 575,000 tons, as compared with 509,000 tons in 1921, 440,000 tons in 1914 and 465,000 tons in 1913.

In other words, her output in shipbuilding in the past two years exceeds her shipbuilding programme in the two years preceding the war.

> The assumption that Germany would not count as a sea power for a generation or more is therefore disproved by events; and before long she will apparently rank once more among the leading maritime nations of the world, even if she does not, in the course of the next few years, take the honor of being second in mercantile marine strength—a newly-won title held by the United States. A point worth emphasization at this time is the fact that the German shipbuilding industry does not seem to have suffered at all from the general depression reported in some parts of Germany, and owing to the low cost of construction she has become a formidable competitor to this industry in Great Britain.

Then, further on:

Germany is represented as on the outer rim of the outside edge of bankruptcy, with the mark continuing its headlong downward career in consonance with the asseverations of poverty.

Look at that picture—and the other which suggests Germany's prosperity—or its hoped-for future prosperity. German industries are turning out goods in record quantities; her railways and aerial communications have been improved beyond all recognition; the whole Fatherland—bar the Ruhr—is a hive of activity; she had fewer unemployed up till recently than to be found under any other flag; and, most important of all, she is steadily—and quickly—recovering her position on the seas.

Germany has always been dishonest in her dealings with other nations, and she is perpetually whining and bully-ragging, and she has reached the point now in her industrial achievements when the materialization of her plans would appear to be in sight. She plays for time primarily, and secondarily she plays for the growing diversity of interests between the former allies. Her main object is never lost to view, which is, that the terms of this treaty must be voided if they can be.

Another condition of the Treaty was that the taxation of Germany should be equal to the taxation of the Allies. Mr. Holt Schooling, a statistician of repute in England, has prepared this statement. He says that in 1922 British average taxation was 22 pounds per head; the average French taxation was 8 pounds per head; German taxation, 3 pounds per head. In other words, French taxation is almost three times that of Germany. The British debt per head is 197 pounds; French debt per head, 149 pounds; German debt per head, 24 pounds. Both in taxation and in debt the German people are the least of the three.

I have said that the damages in France occasioned by the Germans was 102 billions of francs, and in the past three years France has raised from her own people, from her own resources, and spent in repairing damage done by Germans in France, $7,500,000,000. The war did not cost Germany one inch of soil, one factory damaged, one coal mine destroyed, one sugar beet pulled up, one electric plant broken; and in those three years Germany has paid to France one and a quarter billions of dollars, and that nearly always in kind, and most of it is involuntarily given up, that is, shipping, etc.

France has decided that, in view of the conduct of Germany, in view of the progress and development going on in Germany, and in view of all the situation, she will take some measures herself to secure the carrying out of the treaty. I am not going to discuss the differences of opinion; I am only saying she has decided to do that for herself.

It would be interesting to the House to know exactly what the Ruhr is: Approximate area, 1,234 square miles; approximate population, 4,000,000; labouring population, 1,500,000; coal miners, 500,000; coal production in 1913, 113,000,000 tons; visible black coal reserve, 54,000,000,000 tons; visible brown coal reserve (lignite), 4,000,000,000 tons; estimated unmined coal, 220,000,000,000 tons; pig iron production, 5,000,000 tons; steel production in 1918, 10,000,000 tons; stock companies operating, 887; invested capital, $900,000,000. Other industries: textile mills, iron and steel implements, machinery factories, linen mills, salt works, and coke ovens.

In coal and iron it is one of the richest districts in the world. In the production of salt and textiles it has few rivals in Germany. Before the war its coal fields worked to 40 per cent of their capacity and produced 90,000,000 tons in a year. It is only second in the world to the Pennsylvania field. In corresponding ratio, 5,000,000 tons of pig iron were produced, which was 20 per cent, and Germany's entire output was 10 per cent of the world's supply.

My right honourable friend referred the other day to Anglo-Saxon opinion, and I have drawn your attention to the fact that Anglo-Saxon opinion itself is divided. But there is an official opinion. Let me give you some unofficial opinions in the States as to the propriety of France's action. Dr. Van Dyke is a publicist, an economist, and a writer, and he says this:

France is trying an emergency measure made necessary in part by America's failure to enter the League of Nations. Germany says she cannot pay for the ruin she has wrought; but meantime her profiteers and munition-makers are rolling up their billions. France says, collect from these men. Germany says she can not do it. France says, I will help you. That is what the occupation of the Ruhr Basin means. It is not an invasion of Germany. It is the serving of a writ on Stinnes, Thyssen and Krupp-Bohlen. It is dangerous, but every emergency measure involves danger. America prays for a peaceful result. But what narrow-minded devil has prevented us from working for it?

Mr. Daniels, ex-Secretary of the Navy, gives this contribution to that unofficial American opinion:

Right or wrong, France has had every provocation, and I doubt under the circumstances if any nation would have waited any longer. France has to act now or acquiesce in letting Germany escape payment. France has waited four years, taxing its people four times as much as Germany taxed its people. Germany's default is believed by France to have been deliberate and studied. In this belief France acted.

Now let me read some unofficial Anglo-Saxon opinion from England.

The Saturday Review says:

Great Britain cannot plead that she is not responsible for the present state of Europe. We must share the responsibility, however unpleasant. From the treaties of 1919 we obtained all for which we stipulated, namely, the German colonies, the German fleet and mercantile marine, Irag and Palestine. Some of these may be of doubtful value, and perhaps the fruit of Lloyd George admiring himself in the mirror of Bismark, but they are what we asked for.

The French, on the other hand, have had nothing but disappointments. Legitimate reparations were placed under a vast indemnity to fulfil Lloyd George's election pledges. In Europe the only country that has been restored is East Prussia, and the only country that has obtained security is Great Britain.

If the French were not convinced that Germany was trifling with them they would not have undertaken their difficult enterprise. It is probable the French understand the Teuton better than we do. At all events they have set out in quest of reparations. If they do not find them perhaps they will find security. They are entitled to both.

Now let me read to you a Canadian unofficial opinion from Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, of Toronto, a man whom every one in Canada has heard about. In a letter published in the Mail and Empire of February 21, 1923, he says:

A Bankrupt Government does not Mean a Bankrupt Country

Sir,—I see that various speakers are apparently seeking to create an impression of unanimity in the public mind that the entry by France into the Ruhr is a colossal mistake and may lead to war, and certainly cannot advance the obtaining of reparations justly due from Germany.

I am quite certain that these gentlemen probably are not as well informed as the French authorities, and are taking their cue from Lloyd George. The statements of that gentleman both before the Peace Conference, at the Peace Conference, and since, are not such as to warrant any great confidence in his judgment. I think most people agree that Germany has deliberately made herself bankrupt, so that she can with the gold in her possession discharge all her national obligations apart from reparations and leave her people practically free from the necessity of taxation.

The mistake, I think, that the speakers I refer to make, is in thinking that a bankrupt government means a bankrupt country. No doubt the Government in Germany is bankrupt, but everything points to the conclusion that German factories have not closed; many of them have extended their plants; there is practically no unemployment in Germany; their trade has gone up by leaps and bounds; their steamship companies, manufacturing concerns, etc., have paid off their bonded indebtedness, etc., and the French have apparently come to the conclusion that the country is perfecty able to pay if they realize that they are going to be compelled to pay; and I think I echo the sentiment of most people when I say that I hope that France, who must be thoroughly alive to the pros and cons of the situation, may turn out to be correct, and make the Germans come to the conclusion that they have to settle. I deprecate entirely the continual assertion and suggestion that France is in the wrong. It may be, and again it may not. People out here who know nothing about it should suspend judgment.

Yours, etc.,

(Sgd) Wallace Nesbitt.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH.

With regard to this amount of 32 billions which Germany by treaty is required to pay, and which my right honourable friend the other day said she could not pay, let me suggest two thoughts to the House. First of all, you must get used to big amounts in a discussion of this sort. Who would have thought in 1913 that Canada would raise 590,000 men, and expend in the war $2,000,000,000, and export from Canada $1,000,000,000 worth of war materials? Who would have thought that? Who would have thought that Great Britain herself would spend $25,000,000 a day for four years in the prosecution of the war? Again I say we must get used to big amounts.

People say that Germany cannot pay, and that the amount is too large. What they mean to say is this, that Germany cannot pay by means of the ordinary methods of taxation and finance. But this is an extraordinary case; this is not an ordinary case at all. Germany can pay, and Germany must be made to pay, and Germany must pay if her people sweat blood for the next fifty years in order to pay. That should be the attitude on approaching this question. The fact is that if she does not pay, then our friend and Ally France must sweat blood for the next fifty years. That is the alternative before them.

My honourable friend the other day professed to think—and there is a large school of thought officially of that opinion—that there are grave doubts as to whether Great Britain could pay the United States the $4,600,000,000 which she owes, the payment of which has been spread over a period of sixty-two years, or, as my right honourable friend pointed out, two generations. He expressed great doubt as to whether Great Britain can pay that, and he argues from this that Germany will find it impossible to pay $32,000,000,000. Well, let me say to my right honourable friend and to those who think as he does: Be of good cheer; lift up your hearts. If you seek for encouragement, for hope, or for inspiration in this matter, turn to France. Poor, broken, devastated, bleeding France—who, not in 62 years, not in two generations, but in three years, has from her own people and her own resources secured and paid, to make good the devastations wrought by Germany in France, not $4,600,000,000, but $7,500,000,000 France fights for her life in this matter, for her right to live and to survive. Unless those reparations are paid, the burden of this war will rest on France, who helped to win the war, and who was the aggrieved party from the beginning.

Fear that the Germans will come again must be removed if there is to be peace in Europe. You cannot have peace with nations in fear. Fear makes war. Remove fear, and you ensure peace. The French are our friends and allies. They are linked to us by ties of honour and of interest ,and they are linked by ties of kinship to half the people of this country. They stand and they have stood between civilization and Bolshevism. By their unparalleled sacrifices and extraordinary exertions in the late war they have won our sympathy and our respect, and they are entitled to our loyalty. France to-day is still the France of Verdun and the Marne. Our dead and theirs sleep side by side. Seven hundred thousand white crosses mutely declare to all the world our unselfish devotion to their cause, which was ours. Ours is the friendship of a thousand undying memories of the tragedies and glories of the past.

France to-day fights for her life. Confident in the righteousness and justice of her cause, she moves steadily forward. She has counted the cost; she has made her plans; she will succeed—she cannot help but succeed.

In August of 1918 I had the somewhat unique privilege, as a Canadian officer, to command French troops. A secret relief was taking place, and as my battalions went out French battalions came in, and finally I found myself in command of six French battalions, with artillery and auxiliary services. My subordinate French commanders were aggressive, on the offensive, and the battle continuously raged. It no sooner died out at one place than it broke out in another. Frequently at night I would be awakened by the roar of the French artillery and the rattle of their machine guns, and the night sky would be illuminated by the flashes of the guns and the flares and signal rockets, and I would apprehensively, and nervously, perhaps, call out in soldier French to the French sentry who stood at the door of my shelter. "Planton!" "Mon Général." "Est-ce tranquille sur la ligne?" And my sentry would go up on the parapet, look over the top, survey the situation and make his report: "Très tranquille, mon Général." His answer was always the same, no matter how the battle raged. To him it was always "quiet on the line." I can recall him now as he stood at the door of my shelter in his horizon blue, and steel helmet, with his long rifle and bayonet—very alert, very erect and very serene—typical of the courage, the energy, the determination and the efficiency of his race. And I am wondering how it is with France. A great war is on again, and a great moral battle rages and great political guns are booming, with one eye on Europe and the other on the situation affecting their own political lives in the countries in which they live. An ill-informed press, quibbling lawyers, so-called experts in finance and economics, pacifists, defeatists, socialists, and communists have all joined their simian chatter to the general chorus. I am wondering how it is with France in this time of doubt and perplexity. Are her people torn by party strife? Are her public men divided? Has her incomparable army lost its old-time power? Is her morale endangered? And somehow there comes to me across the leagues that lie between, the answer of this gallant and sorely tried people, and the answer is in the tone and in the language of my French sentry on the plains of Amiens, serenely and proudly confident: "Très tranquille, mon Général."

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien, the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill 26, an Act to amend the Act incorporating "La Société des Artisans Canadiens Francais" (English and French versions).—Hon. Mr. Boyer.

Bill 27, an Act respecting a patent of Hans M. Olsen and Esther Maud Butcher.—Hon. Mr. Macdonnell.

DOMINION LANDS (COAL) BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Dandurand, the Senate went into Committee on Bill E2, an Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act respecting the sale or other disposal of coal lands and coal mining rights.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in the Chair.

On section 1—certain coal mining rights and coal lands in Alberta not to be disposed of without special statutory authority:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I stated yesterday that when this Bill was referred to Committee I would move:

That a sub-committee be appointed composed of Sir James Lougheed, Senators Béique, Ross (Middleton), Lynch-Staunton, Pardee, Bradbury, Pope and the mover, for the purpose of examining into the legal effect of the present Bill upon the title to the said coal areas, the petition of right now pending before the Exchequer Court, and the opportunity of amending the said Bill after consultation with the Department of Justice.

I desire to make that motion, seconded by Hon. Mr. Watson.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I think I should rise to a point of order. If my honourable friend wanted to make that motion it should have been done, I think, when the motion was made for the Senate to go into Committee of the Whole. I did not understand my honourable friend was going to make this motion for a special committe now. The usual procedure, according to May, I understand, is that when a motion for going into Committee of the Whole is read, it can be amended either by a motion to postpone the reference or by a motion for a special committee. This is not the time to do it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My impression is that His Honour the Speaker perhaps misapprehends the object of the committee. This committee I understand to be a sub-committee of the Committee of the Whole. The Bill has been referred to Committee of the Whole, which can now deal with it in whatsoever way it may choose. The committee elects to appoint a sub-committee for the purpose of inquiring into a particular branch of the subject. That sub-committee will report to the Committee of the Whole. So in my judgment the procedure is regular. His Honour the Speaker, I fear, is under the impression that the intention is to supersede the committing of the Bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have not examined the point raised by His Honour the Speaker. What seemed to be more logical was that the sub-committee should be appointed by Committee of the Whole, so that the sub-committee might report to Committee of the Whole. However, it is a question of procedure. I am sure we can always reach the end we have in view, even if we run foul of some rule or precedent.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The objection would be well taken if the motion were to refer the Bill to an independent committee, a special committee of the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or a standing committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Yes. But, as has been pointed out by the honourable gentleman on the other side (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), it is a sub-committee of the present Committee of the Whole; so the Committee of the Whole is still possessed, and will continue to be possessed, of the question, through its sub-commettee.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: Perhaps the House will allow me to read what May says on the matter, at page 363 of the Twelfth Edition:

> On the Order of the Day being read for the Committee, it is moved in the Lords, "That the House do now resolve itself into a Committee upon the Bill," to which an amendment may be moved, that the House be put into Committee on a future day, beyond the probable duration of the Session, or that the Bill be submitted to a selected committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is not by way of an amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: But there is no procedure, that I have been able to find, whereby the Committee of the Whole appoints a sub-committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is not an amendment to the motion. The motion was to refer the Bill to the Committee of the Whole. That has been done. We are now sitting in Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole elects to appoint some of its members to consider a certain phase of the Bill and report to it. When the report is ready the House will be again resolved into Committee of the Whole, the sub-committee will report, and the Committee of the Whole will consider the report.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would like to look into the matter to see where the honourable gentleman gets his authority for such procedure.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would say it is a power inherent in the Committee itself. If an amendment were moved such as His Honour has just referred to, that would be of course an entirely different matter; but my honourable friend who has charge of the Bill (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), instead of moving the adoption of the first clause, has moved that the Committee of the Whole appoint a sub-committee to consider certain phases of the first clause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is still under the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is all committee work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We might proceed on my motion, and if His Honour the Speaker finds that we have erred, while his finding need not have effect upon our procedure of to-day, he may declare what is, in his opinion, the right procedure to be followed in future.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I think it is very desirable that the matter be not deferred, because of the approaching adjournment, which will take place, I presume, on Friday. If we carried the motion for the appointment of a sub-committee to-day, it would permit of its being summoned to-morrow and possibly reporting to-morrow afternoon or on Friday.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Mr. Chairman, I take it that as this is a sitting of the Committee of the Whole, the matter must be decided by the Chairman and not by His Honour the Speaker. The Speaker will decide anything that is referred to him when the Senate is in Session.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK: I would explain to the honourable member that I have brought up this point of order in my position as a member of the Senate, not as the Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Honourable gentlemen, before this sub-committee is appointed I would like to appeal again to the honourable leader of the Government to see if he will not agree to broaden the scope of the committee. Some opportunity should be given in that sub-committee for us to find out who are the assignees of the Isenberg people, what their interests are, and how they acquired these interests. It is surely in the interest of justice and in the interest of the country that people should know whose these assignees are. According to the reference, if I understand it aright, we shall have no opportunity of making inquiries on these questions.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I would draw the attention of my honourable friend to the fact that those inquiries, if pursued, would lead us nowhere in our examination of the proposed legislation. I do not think that they would even have any bearing upon the suit which is now proceeding in court. So I cannot see how we are to couple these two matters.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would point out to the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) that every opportunity will be given hereafter to examine into any phase of this question. Immediately this sub-committee reports to the Committee of the Whole upon the particular question referred, the House will be at liberty to apppoint another Committee to deal with the matter in any other way. I think it would be unfortunate to confuse the functions of this sub-committee with powers which are not sought to be exercised by it. The object of the sub-committee would be to inquire into the facts touching the legislation which has been passed, the fiat which has been issued, and the relation of that fiat to the legislation upon the Statute Book, and to apprise the Committee of the Whole as to the legal situation of the entire question. In my own judgment I would not confuse that with the more extended inquiry which might possibly take place hereafter, and with which we have the right to deal.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Question.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: An easy way out of the difficulty, I think, would be for the Committee to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again, and make the present motion as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I have been trying to understand this question about the lease, and I must say that up to the present time I am a little at sea. There is the question of the legislation before us, the legislation of last year, and the petition of right; and then, of course, there is the substantive question, the subject matter of which is the lease. I am somewhat of the opinion that in the long run perhaps the best thing to do would be to blot out the Act of last year, this Bill, and all the proceedings, and to re-vest that land in the Crown, and then deal directly with the legal rights of the lessees and do them substantial justice by returning the money put up by way of rentals, or improvements. But to clear the way for that I think it is important—and in this I rather sympathize with the honourable gentleman behind me (Hon. Mr. Bradbury)—to find out with whom we are dealing in the Petition of Right. Are we dealing with the representatives of Isenberg, or are they merely nominal petitioners in this Petition of Right? That is something which would affect the position which I would take in regard to the legislation in this House. I would be sorry to see Isenberg treated unjustly or even ungenerously; but I would have no sympathy whatever with speculators who were buying up what is practically a contingency for the purpose of speculation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is not the suggestion of the honourable gentleman somewhat premature? Suppose a tribunal declared that the Isenberg leases had been justly cancelled, would not that end the whole matter?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Not necessarily, because I think you still owe it to Isenberg to give him some compensation. I would try to arrive at that situation without any more ado and without further trouble. If you go to the Exchequer Court you have a long and costly trial, and in the end you only get to the point that I suggest getting to direct, namely, of re-vesting this land in the Crown and giving compensation to Isenberg. If you are going to send this to the sub-committee, I would like to see the words, "and the persons substantially interested therein", added. I would like to know whether the persons substantially interested are Isenberg or John Smith. I am not speaking of the persons technically interested, but those who have a substantial interest. If it is necessary, I will move to that effect.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This inquiry will have no effect upon the legislation which is proposed, and it seems to me that we are complicating matters. All these questions may well arise when we are facing an adverse judgment, which I hope will not be the case, on the petition of right. We shall have plenty of time. First, suppose there is a judgment against the Crown.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: When my honourable friend speaks of an "inquiry" what does he mean?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The proposed amendment of my honourable friend will open the door to an inquiry.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not necessarily. I fancy the Petition of Right will disclose the information.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We have that.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I fancy the officials of the Department of Justice will be able to advise us of that fact.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I cannot see it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me that the inquiry before the sub-committee which we have in contemplation now should have for its object the procuring of sufficient information to enable us, by means of intelligent legislation, to meet the situation that may arise.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It may open a very large field which will demand a great deal of time. Are we not going back very much to the first inquiry that was made to the Committee of the Senate?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. That would be the subject of another inquiry.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is very much the same thing. I am merely suggesting, as the honourable gentleman did a moment ago, that time is of importance in dealing with this matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would it not resolve itself into the one inquiry as to whether the representatives of the Isenberg estate are to be the beneficiaries of this particular action which is now pending in the Exchequer Court, or whether they have assigned to other parties this alleged interest in the property? I do not go so far as to commit myself to the proposition made by the honourable gentleman from Middleton (Hon. W. B. Ross) that we should recognize the principle of giving compensation to Isenberg or anybody else, because the action of the Government in cancelling the claims may have been perfectly regular and justified. I think that is a matter which should remain in abeyance.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: The information I want ought to be obtainable from the representatives of Isenberg in less than five minutes It is going to govern me to a great extent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I draw attention to this situation. There are two matters occupying our minds. I am speaking as the representative of the Government responsible for these lands. Here is this legislation which seeks to limit the power of the Government in dealing with these lands in the future—which obliges it to obtain the sanction of Parliament before any lease is given or any disposal is made of these lands. Suppose the statement made by my honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bradbury) were substantiated, that a syndicate had bought or had an option on the interests of Isenberg in case title to these lands were established, how could it affect the present Bill?

The other question that interests us is the judgment that may follow the examination of the claims of the petitioners. How would such information, even if it were disclosed, reach the court? It could not. The court is seized of the demand of the Hawaiian Trust Company, and whatever disposal the Hawaiian Trust Company may have made of its rights in the future the decision of the court would not be affected by any evidence given before or information obtained in the Committee. I do not see how this inquiry would effect either of those two branches of the case. The present legislation is for the purpose of putting these lands under the guardianship of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. GILLIS: I am inclined to think that this motion is entirely out of order. This Bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the motion that the Speaker do leave the Chair. Under what authority has this Committee power to appoint a sub-committee to deal with the matter? If a sub-committee is necessary at all, why not appoint a special committee in the usual way? I am strongly of the opinion that we are proceeding irregularly.

The Hon. the CHAIRMAN: The honourable member from Kamloops (Hon. Mr. Bostock) takes exception to the motion of the hon. member for DeLorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) that a sub-committee be appointed by the Committee of the Whole. In support of his contention the honourable member for Kamloops quotes from page 408 of May's Parliamentary Procedure:

A Committee can only consider those matters which have been committed to them by the House.

I cannot see in this Bill anything that refers to the appointment of a sub-committee; so, unless it is the wish of the Committee to proceed in violation of that rule, I will have to rule that the motion is not in order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If that is the decision of the Chair, I will move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress was reported.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Honourable gentlemen, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, to whom was referred Bill E2, an Act to Amend the Dominion Lands Act respecting the sale or other disposal of coal lands and coal mining rights, report that they have made some progress, and ask leave to sit again. When shall they have leave to sit again?

Some Hon. SENATORS: To-day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I think the better form will be for me to move that the Bill be again referred to the Committee of the Whole, and my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) will move in amendment that it be referred to a special committee. I move that the Bill be referred again to the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I move in amendment:

That all the words after the first "the" in the amendment be struck out and the following words be substituted therefor: "said Bill be referred to a Special Committee for the purpose of examining into the legal effect of the said Bill upon the title to the said coal areas, the Petition of Right now pending before the Exchequer Court, and the opportunity of amending the said Bill after consultation with the Department of Justice; such Committee to be composed of Hon. Messrs. Bradbury, Dandurand, Sir James Lougheed, Lynch-Staunton, Pardee, Pope, Ross (Middleton), and the mover."

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I move in amendment to the amendment, that after the word, "Court," the following words be inserted: "and the persons substantially interested therein".

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have stated that I did not see where this amendment would lead us. Personally I have no objection to enlarging the inquiry, but I cannot see where it will lead us, or what effect it will have upon this Bill or upon the court action; but if my honourable friend insists upon finding who are the substantial owners of the claim of Isenberg, I have no special objection to it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It may not take five minutes.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

RAILWAYS AND CANADIAN PORTS

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. CHARLES E. TANNER rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call attention to the reports current in the newspaper press to the effect that the Government of Canada is preparing to embark on railroad building in the United States, by constructing projected Southern New England Railroad (an undertaking of the Central Vermont Railway which is a part of the G.T.R. System) and the creation of Providence, R.I., as a terminal port of the Canadian National Railways and will inquire:—

1. If it is the present intention of the Government to proceed with the construction of projected railroad.
2. Whether such projected railroad would mean the establishment in the United States of another terminus of the Canadian National Railways which might become a competitor for Canadian business with Canadian ports.

3. How far the projected railroad would compete, if at all, with St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., for Canadian trade inwards, or outwards. Or in any way divert continental trade from Canadian ports.

4. Whether the projected railroad would only handle trade originating within the United States territory, or to be delivered only in United States territory.

5. What the present policy of the Government is in regard to such projected railroad.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I believe my honourable friend the leader of the House is not prepared wth answers to these questions to-day, but I have a few remarks to make about them, and it may be of assistance to my honourable friends if I make my remarks to-day. The answers or the return could be brought down at a later date.

My attention was drawn to the subject-matter of these inquiries by an article which I read in the Boston Transcript of the 15th of March, the present month, which I am going to take the liberty of reading to the House:

Our Canadian Railroad Builders

Introduction of a bill in the Rhode Island Legislature extending for two years the time allowed for the construction of the Southern New England Railroad is accompanied by the promise that if the bill is passed the road will be constructed as authorized. Mr. John S. Murdock, vice president of the Southern New England, makes the statement that "it has been definitely and finally decided by the management of the Central Vermont and Grand Trunk Railways to proceed at once with the construction of the Southern New England Railroad, and to push the work to completion." If Mr. Murdock is correctly informed, the Canadian Government will, if it is given the authority, embark in railroad building in New England. The projected Southern New England Railroad is an undertaking of the Central Vermont, which is owned by the Grand Trunk, and the Grand Trunk, as part of the Canadian National Railways, has passed into the control of the Dominion. It is, in effect, therefore, the Canadian Government that asks for more time in which to construct this railway in Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Such a venture runs counter to a policy of separation that has been openly advocated in parts of Canada. It is only about three months since Lieutenant Governor William R. Pugsley of New Brunswick urged that the Grand Trunk be made an exclusively Canadian railroad, even if, in order to do so, it must be shorn of its terminals at Portland and Chicago. He deprecated a condition in which roads entirely in Canada were compelled to operate in competition with roads with terminals in the United States. "The only way to solve that problem to the satisfaction of the people of this country," he declared, "is to get rid of that part of our railway which has Chicago as its western terminus and Portland as its eastern terminus."

It is hardly necessary to add that Mr. Pugsley did not ignore the fact that the lopping off of Portland from the Grand Trunk system would result in sending more export and import traffic to St. John and Halifax. But now, instead of a programme of abandonment of tracks in the United States, the Grand Trunk is represented as planning an extension of its New England lines. It would retain its ocean terminal at Portland, and through its ownership of the Central Vermont, establish another at Providence, in addition to the Central Vermont terminus on Long Island Sound at New London. The news is hardly likely to be received with enthusiasm in the Maritime Provinces.

But promises of railroad extensions are, of course, to be received with reservations, even if made in all sincerity. In this case there may be development of hostile sentiment in Canada that would bring the scheme to an end, were there no other obstacles in the way. But whether the Canadian Government builds a road to Providence or not, the request for legislation in Rhode Island may be taken as confirming the common-sense view that the Grand Trunk has no intention of interfering with its own prosperity by listening to the appeal of Lieutenant Governor Pugsley and abandoning its New England holdings, including its ocean terminal at Portland.

Honourable gentlemen, I am not making these inquiries in any spirit of criticism of the Government, but am prompted by a desire to get information. For all I know of the subject, this enterprise spoken of in the Transcript may be a perfectly legitimate enterprise and one to which the people of Canada might properly be committed. I am not saying one thing or the other on that aspect of the matter. I am simply seeking knowledge, and I am seeking it because I have observed that this matter has received very wide consideration in the Maritime Provinces. There has been a good deal of discussion of it in the newspaper press, and it has also been discussed in the Legislature of New Brunswick. There is a desire on the part of everyone to know precisely what the proposition is—how far it will or will not affect the interests of Maritime Province ports particularly, and Canadian ports in general, and how far it will affect, if at all, Canadian trade passing through Canadian channels. It is therefore, as I say, in that spirit that I am submitting the questions, and I have thought it would be desirable that I should make this statement before my honourable friend is supplied with the answers, in order that the Government may know exactly the attitude I am taking in regard to the matter.

I want to say, however, that there is good ground, so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, for being on the alert and for being suspicious in regard to movements which may affect the transportation of freight into and out of Canadian ports. It is a matter of common knowledge that at the present time a large part of the winter freight, grain particularly, goes to Portland instead of to St. John or Halifax. In fact, Halifax receives practically none of that freight. St. John receives a small part, but Portland appears to be the outlet for a very large proportion of Canadian trade.

It occurs to me just here that when, a month or two ago, that remark was made by Hon. Mr. Pugsley, who at that time was Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, comments on his address were made in several New England papers, and the attitude they assumed was certainly not very consoling to Maritime Province people. I distinctly remember that one of those newspapers went on to say that the statement of Hon. Mr. Pugsley was nothing more than political "bunk"; that it was the kind of political "bunk" which had been fed out to the people of Canada for 20 or 25 years in respect to railway extension and the Canadian trade through Canadian ports. It went on to say that, no doubt, after the Lieutenant-Governor's speech had been read and considered for a few weeks, and after there had been perhaps some talk in the Canadian Parliament on the subject, it would be relegated as usual to the dump-heap, and Canadian trade as usual would pass out at United States ports. I say that that attitude was rather provoking to people in the Maritime Provinces.

While dealing with this matter I wish to say that Maritime Province people, in my judgment, have some reason to complain in regard to railway transportation and the export of Canadian produce outward and the receipt of goods for Canada inwards. I desire for a few moments to recall to this House some of the assurances which were given to the Maritime Provinces during that period of time when the Grand Trunk Pacific and National Transcontinental Railway projects were under consideration in this Chamber, as well as in the other. I am going to quote a few extracts from the Senates Debates of 1903. I think it is well that honourable members who are now in this Chamber should be familiar with the inducements that were held out to the Maritime Provinces to support the construction of those lines and the expenditure of enormous sums of money.

Hon. Mr Scott, who was then the leader of the then Government in this Chamber is quoted at page 1363 of the Senate Debates of 1903 as saying:

> Therefore it is to our interest if we are going to develop our maritime ports, if we are going to have that grain go east through Halifax and ports along the St. Lawrence to do something in order to induce it to go there.

A little farther on he said:

> If we are going to sit idly by and see that most important trade, a trade for which we have been straining the financial energies of this country for so many years go from us simply because we are timid about opening up this new country, then we shall have ourselves to blame for it.

A little farther on, the honourable member for De Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), who is still a member of this honourable House, joined in the declaration by saying:

> I believe on the contrary that if there ever was a time, as the honourable Secretary of State has said, when such a road should be built, it is at the present moment, as I will proceed in a few moments to prove.

—which he proved, I need hardly say, at very great length.

Then, I observe, the honourable member from Queens (Hon. Mr. King) vigorously supported the measure on the ground that it was going to carry the trade to Halifax and St. John. The late Hon. Mr. McSweeney, who represented a New Brunswick division, was also of the same mind; and the late Hon. J. D. McGregor, who came from Pictou county, described the road as a necessity. Then, another eminent member, who has passed to his reward, Hon. Mr. Edwards (Rideau), interrupted a speaker to interject the remark, a very potent remark for Maritime people:

> It will be the means of bringing American grain through Canadian channels.

And my honourable friend, the present leader of the House (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), is recorded in Hansard at page 1547 as expressing general principles to which, I am sure, we will all accede:

> I have heard the argument outside of this House and in this House that we are assuming a formidable burden. It is true that we will advance the money and make the outlay, but I contend it represents no burden upon the people outside of the first years during which we will have to pay interest, because we will receive in interest as much as we will pay for the amounts borrowed, and when the fifty years are over we will stand not with a property which will have depreciated, but which will, on the contrary, have doubled in value.

I do not know that my honourable friend would speak in just those terms to-day.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: He was very firm, at any rate, in promoting the passage of the Bill in respect to the undertaking to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have still 30 years to go.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: A few moments later the same honourable gentleman made this remark:

> It is the duty of the Government to provide for the future, and the party in power to-day is willing to be judged by the future as to the wisdom of this important undertaking.

I do not know that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) would like to step on the scales to-day if the Transcontinental project were put on the other side of the scale.

The honourable member from De la Durantaye (Hon Mr. Tessier) made a statement in which he emphasized the Maritime point of view in a few words. He said:

> It seeks to render equal justice to the Maritime Provinces who have had a right to complain in the past, and it assures the construction of a line from the tide waters of the St. Lawrence at Quebec to the Prairies of the Northwest.

The honourable member for De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) took a very important part in the discussion on that occasion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: All guilty.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: And he proved, to his own satisfaction at least, that those would be splendid undertakings for Canada and that the cost would be a mere trifle. He went on to say (page 1650):

I shall have occasion to show that, irrespective of the interests or requirements of the Grand Trunk Railway, the country cannot afford to wait, that it is most urgent to enlist the co-operaion of the Grand Trunk Railway as soon as possible to develop the northern part of Ontario and Quebec, of Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia, and of the Martime Provinces.

And a few moments later he said:

Therefore, I say that the Maritime Provinces have in this Bill the best guarantee that all proper efforts will be made to carry western traffic to their ports.

I am not quoting in full, but honourable members who look at page 1656 will observe that the honourable member for De Salaberry went into an illuminating review of the clauses of the contract to prove that the guarantees of the Grand Trunk would not favour American ports against Canadian ports.

Last of all, I come to the distinguished member from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), who on that occasion had a vision.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: "Without vision the people perish."

Hon. Mr. TANNER: He said:

I trust that in the near future we will see the completion of this road, and we will have, as stated by the honourable gentleman from Lincoln, a Government road from the Atlantic to the Pacific entirely in Canadian territory. It will be the means of opening up and developing large territory to the north. It will double the size of Canada; it will reduce railway rates and give the relief demanded by the people of Canada, and give it at little or no cost to the resources of the Dominion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No wonder the Bill went through.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I thought it might be of interest to give this brief review of those historical remarks. I may add to this evidence on behalf of the Maritime Provinces this further fact, that one of the last acts of the Laurier Administration in 1911 was to constitute the Canadian Northern Railway an ocean-to-ocean system. That work was completed by the enactment of Chapter 6 of the Statutes of 1911, whereby provision was made for a grant to cover the territory between Montreal and Port Arthur, 1,050 miles, the subsidy given being $35,000 per mile.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No, no. It was a guarantee, not a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Well, a guarantee; that is the same thing.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: We had to pay it. But the point I am calling attention to is that this grant of a guarantee was made for the purpose of developing commerce through Canadian ports.

Now, to sum up briefly. The Maritime provinces have for 20 years waited, and are still waiting, for the fulfilment, even in part, of any of those bright promises which were made in 1903. We have the Transcontinental railway to Moncton, and the Grand Trunk extending westerly, and we have the Intercolonial as well, but we see no sign whatever of the Canadian trade coming from the West and passing through the Maritime province ports, as we were given to understand it would. We have to sit by and watch a large part of it going out by Portland, and naturally we are very anxious to know whether in connection with this new project in respect to which I am inquiring there is any intention of establishing a railway which will take still more Canadian business into United States territory and through United States ports.

Not only are we in the Maritime provinces waiting for the fulfilment of some of these assurances, but we are in a worse condition because we find ourselves practically tied up in a knot by the prohibitive railway rates on the Intercolonial railway system. My honourable friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) assured us in 1903 that we would see the country's population doubled and a reduction in railway rates. The Western provinces may be getting that; but I want to point out to the Government that business and industry in the Maritime provinces are stagnated to a large extent simply because the principal purposes and ideas which were behind the construction of the Intercolonial railway have been entirely lost sight of, and that, instead of having reasonable or differential rates which previously existed in respect to that line, we have to-day practically prohibitive rates.

I am not unmindful of some of the remarks that were made on another occasion, when Maritime province people were advised to get busy. I want to say that the Maritime province people have been interesting themselves in this matter, and have been endeavoring to urge upon the Government of the day the great necessity of dealing with this question of transportation, not only with regard to freight rates but with regard to Maritime ports.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the present head of the directors of the Canadian National Railways has expressed very great sympathy with Maritime interests, and we are looking hopefully for sympathetic consideration on his part. We are quite willing to accept him at his word, that he will look carefully into Maritime province conditions, and that whatever is humanly possible he will do in order to afford relief from the present onerous conditions.

But, with regard to the question of freight rates, I apprehend that Sir Henry Thornton or his Board of Directors have really very little to do. I apprehend that this question is right up to the Government of the day. If I am not mistaken, the Railway Board has no jurisdiction over the rates on the Intercolonial railway. In any event, as I see that matter to-day, the question of railway rates from one end of this country to the other is up to the Government and up to this Parliament, for this reason, that last year this Parliament, at the instance of the Government, simply ripped up the statute which created the Board of Railway Commissioners and took out of the hands of that Board the matter of fixing rates, when it enacted the legislation with regard to rates in the Western provinces. If I may use the word, it usurped the jurisdiction of the Railway Board; took back the jurisdiction it gave to that Board in 1902 or thereabouts; and invested itself again with the authority and power to regulate railway rates. So I say that the Maritime province people are looking to the Government of the day, because that Government has assumed jurisdiction in this regard, for relief from the prohibitive railway rates which are practically paralysing trade in the Maritime provinces at the present time. The Government cannot undertake to invade the territory of the Railway Board in the interests of one province, and refuse to stay within that territory, after having invaded it, in the interests of every province. They must treat all alike. If it is right to give the prairie provinces legislation in respect to railway rates, it is only—

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The honourable gentleman has referred to the Crowsnest rates. The Railway Commission never had any power in regard to those rates.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: That makes no difference to me.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: The Railway Board never had any power to regulate the Crowsnest rates. They were only suspended for three years.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: But the Crowsnest rates could have been referred by the Government to the Railway Board, and the Railway Board would have dealt with the whole situation. Then the Eastern provinces would have recived relief as well as the Western provinces. Instead of that, my honurable friends, having legislated for the West, cannot refuse to legislate for the East.

There has been some talk about the interest displayed by Sir Henry Thornton, and I repeat that we are expressing every confidence in him. We are expressing that confidence even in regard to the disputed question of the construction or enlargement of the hotel system of the country. Notwithstanding the remarks of my honourable friend who spoke on another occasion with reference to the hotels (Hon. Mr. Reid), I believe we have some reason to think that Sir Henry Thornton will take a businesslike and fair and equitable view of the situation, and will decide either that the hotels managed by the National Railways are good or are not good. If they are good business ventures, he will continue them, and enlarge them; if they are not, he will close them all up—because I presume he will not expect the country to pay deficits for hotels in one province and deny to another province the privilege of a hotel, and refuse to pay the deficit for that. All we ask for the Maritime provinces is a square deal with regard to hotels, railway freight rates, ports, and Canadian freight going through Canadian ports.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the honourable gentleman tell this House why his own friends, when they were in power for ten years and more, did not do for the Maritime provinces what he is still waiting for?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I could ask my honourable friend many questions like that. I could get up a long list of questions asking why his friends did nothing for the Maritime provinces between 1896 and 1911. Both parties have neglected the Maritime provinces, but the time has now come for looking after those provinces, and I hope I shall have the assistance of my honourable friend in doing so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has travelled pretty far away from the questions which he put on the Order Paper—so far away as to reach the Pacific, and to take us back to the time when the Transcontinental was under discussion in this Chamber. I have only this to say for myself, that I believe I made no promise to the Maritime provinces at that time. My interest was to bring the Transcontinental to a deep-water port, and that was Quebec. I knew that the Maritime provinces would take care of themselves, and try to have the line carried further, which they did as far as Moncton.

My declaration was that within 50 years we would show that our policy was based on sound principle. Let my honourable friend rest assured that, so far as the Transcontinental is concerned, Quebec province will do its part, filling with its own children the whole of the Transcontinental belt from Quebec as far as Ontario, and past it.

Coming back to the questions of my honourable friend, I draw his attention to the fact that the Southern New England Railroad belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway System, which expended considerable money upon construction of this line towards Providence, Rhode Island. Steps must be taken to conserve the interests of Canada, since through the acquisition of the Grand Trunk System we have assumed the enterprise. I know that this matter has seriously engaged the attention of the new Railway Board and of the Government. I am not now in a position to tell my honourable friend the conclusions that have been reached; but let him rest assured that this matter is being looked into with a single eye to the interest and welfare of the finances of Canada.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: While the honourable leader of the Government is making inquiry into that question, may I call his attention to this fact. A number of years ago, when Mr. Charles M. Hays was president of the Grand Trunk Railway, the construction of this road was undertaken, and subsequently abandoned upon the direction of the Board of Directors in England, who came to the conclusion that it was a losing venture, and that they might better throw away the money they had already spent than to carry it to completion. I dare say there is some desire on the part of the State of Rhode Island to make Providence the terminal instead of New London, Connecticut, as is the case at present; but I respectfully suggest to the Government that it is a question that will bear very careful investigation before coming to the conclusion to spend any more money on that property.

FIRST READING

Bill X 2, An Act for the relief of Violet Gardiner. Hon. Mr. McCall.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegates to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

Hon. C. P. BEAUBIEN: Honourable gentlemen, the discussion on this matter has already brought to this House two very valuable contributions. We had yesterday a clear, incisive, moving speech, which to my mind could be delivered by no one better than the honourable member for Alberta (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), who went overseas in fulfilment of his duty toward his country, and has returned with as many decorations as any soldier ever won on the field of battle during the last war.

The mover of this resolution, with his masterful speech, has of course surprised nobody. He has taken us with a stroke of the wing of his marvellous oratorical power to very great heights, and from there has bidden us look down on Europe, broken, shattered, bleeding from the war, and making difficult efforts to regain its feet and continue on its journey.

I have no claim such as the orators who have preceded me. Still it seemed to me, honourable gentlemen, that the picture portrayed to us from the heights to which the member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) attained needed perhaps to be completed by another picture, this time a very different picture—a close-up picture—of certain facts and certain figures which I trust will not be found useless in drawing the proper conclusion from this discussion. In that connection I pray that the House will allow me to cast a close retrospective glance on that broken Europe of which the honourable gentleman from Ottawa has spoken so eloquently. But before we descend from the heights to which he has lifted us by his magic power and while we still look down on broken, shattered, bleeding, desperate Europe, I want to put this simple question: Who is responsible for it?

This question having been put, allow me briefly to tell you, from the economic point of view—because that is what we are specially discussing to-day—what the result of the war has been for France. I will not repeat the loss of men—a million and a half; more than three million wounded. No; but I want to call yeur attention to what that means from the point of view of economics, from the point of view of labour. It means that half the men at the height of their virility have gone—that one of every two men between the ages of 21 and 42 is dead in France. Gentlemen, if that was the case for Canada, how do you think our industries could be carried on? How do you think our fields could be tilled?

What was the position of France from the industrial point of view at the end of the war? Let me put it briefly. Eighty-five per cent of the industrial equipment of France was gone—had been systematically destroyed by the German scientific boards of destruction—when spared by shells or mines. For France as for Belgium, the Germans had boards of destruction who went behind the lines and made sure that France would be made truly the land of the abomination of desolation.

France at the end of the war wanted to protect such blood as was left in her veins. She wanted the left bank of the Rhine; nobody contests that. Did she get it? No. Why did she not get it? Because England and the United States said to her: "Do not exact that." Anglo-Saxon opinion weighed heavily with her because on the one side France saw security for her children, perhaps the only way left to protect the survival of her race, and on the other side were two kindly but strongly restraining powers saying: "Don't; we will come in if necessity ever arises again, and throw in the balance the weight of our swords." But what has come of that? You know: I need not say.

That is not all. France said to the Allies: "Look at my eleven departments, with not a stone left on stone. Look at the three millions of my children—not a roof left over their heads. I do not demand the cost of the war, which you, my friend across the Channel, or you, my friend across the Atlantic, are asking me to pay. I am willing to refund to you the cost of the war, which I do not exact from Germany, but at least I must have reparations. Who is going to rebuild? Who is going to start the machinery of life again? I cannot afford to do it."

And what happens? The reparations, which were fixed at 266 billions of gold marks, were reduced to 132 billions of gold marks. Here may I ask, was Anglo-Saxon opinion treated lightly? Did France say no, or did France say: "Yes, I am willing." And did she stand by what she said?

But let us proceed. France has waited a long time for reparation. What did she get? I will come to the exact figures in a moment; but for the time being let me tell you that France did not get one farthing which was applicable to reparations: all that she has got is the cost of the maintenance of her army on the Rhine, not of her army in the Ruhr. More than that, France has not received one penny of the advances made by her to Germany on coal. But let that go also. France had to rebuild or partially rebuild the devastated regions. Everybody knows that she has spent to date for that purpose roughly 100 billion francs. France has taxed her people roughly 400 per cent more than the Germans have taxed themselves.

Let that go also. But may I ask you to fix your attention on one fact. Do you know that even if Germany pays all that she owes France for reparations, the Frenchman's burden of national debt will still equal that of his German aggressor. And when can France expect the Germans to pay?

In the punishment of criminals has France received satisfaction? In delivery of materials and labour has she received her due? In the matter of disarmament has she received at least a promise of security?

More than four years have gone by. Side by side with this picture let me place another. What do we see in a close-up picture of Germany? We see that when the Germans are taxed one pound the English people are taxed twenty pounds; we see that Germany with such light burden has not one chimney damaged, not one manufactory stopped, while France, with 85 per cent of her industrial life gone, bears four times as heavy a load.

What else do we see? We see that gold from Germany has been given wings to fly across the frontier, and that it has found shelter in the Bank of England, and in the banks of Switzerland, of the United States, of practically the whole world. We find that the iron barons and the coal princes of Germany have depreciated the mark in order to accumulate for themselves vast amounts of money outside of Germany, so that every day as the mark goes down that money thus salted away and protected in the vaults of foreign countries acquires a greater and greater purchasing power in Germany.

What have we seen besides? We have seen that Germany, after sending out of the country all the gold that could be exported, has found another means of putting her assets beyond the reach of the French people. What has she done? She has given the following subsidies: during 1921, to the marine, 11 billion marks; during the same year, to the railways, 16 billion marks; to the construction of canals, 42 billion marks. Honourable gentlemen, can you conceive of a country which lifts her hands up to Heaven and pleads for help and claims that she is a pauper, reduced to bankruptcy—(unfortunately her appeals sometimes find an echo in hearts that may be too soft)—can you conceive of a country in such a plight building a canal 400 miles in length for the purpose of uniting the Rhine with the Danube, and the Danube with Lake Constance, for the purpose of taking boats of no less than 1,500 tons?

No other country in the world has since the war built so many and such costly public works as Germany. Nobody can contest that. And pray remember that every mark that went into those public works, as it became incorporated in them, was freed from French seizure. What can France do with a canal —destroy it? What would its destruction give to French creditors? Nothing.

But that is not all. Some of the German people in humble circumstances saw enormous fortunes being accumulated by Mr. Stinnes and Mr. Thyssen and the like and they complained to the Government. What happened? The Government opened widely the doors of civic employment. How many civil employees did Germany have in 1913? She had 189,918. In 1922, she had 2,300,000.

That is not all. Money easily made is easily spent. The Volksblatt of Wurtemberg published quite recently an article stating that in 1921 the German people had spent no less than fifty billion marks for drink and tobacco alone. Fifty billion marks, honourable gentlemen—enough to build 250,000 houses for the poor people who are now homeless in the devastated regions of France.

Now let me turn to some other things which to my mind are still more indicative, not of Germany's poverty, but of her prosperity. In a report made in 1922 by the Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy at Berlin Mr. Thelwall gives the number of corporations constituted as follows: in 1920 there were 1,500; in 1921, 1,800.

Then take the amount of capital invested in them. In 1920 it was eight billions; in 1921 it was 25 billions. But, you will say, this is due to the fact that the mark has fallen in value. Just wait. Take the building of ships, for instance. In 1913, not including war ships—there are no war ships built in Germany now—Germany built 440,000 tons of shipping; in 1921 she built 550,000 tons. She constructed in 1913, both for war purposes and for the ordinary mercantile marine, only 523,000, while in 1922, according to the honourable gentleman from Alberta (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), she constructed no less than 575,000 tons. But let that go.

Now, shipping is a pretty fair indication of the prosperity of a country. What about Germany's shipping? At the ports of Rotterdam and Hamburg, according to a booklet published by our own Department of Trade and Commerce, and to which I refer honourable gentlemen, shipping has returned to the level of the period of prosperity prior to the war, and in some months of last year even surpassed the figures established during those earlier years. But that is not all. Last year the increase was forty per cent. If that increase continues, what will be the result by the end of this year?

Let me go further. Bankruptcies are a pretty good indication of the poverty of a country. In bad times many weak enterprises, even some that are strong, totter and fall. In 1914 there were 7,739 bankruptcies. In 1921 there were 1,324, and in 1922, 2,975. It may be worth while pondering over these figures.

The objection has been made, honourable gentlemen, and it has some appearance of truth, that although a nation may be composed, at least in part, of prosperous individuals and of private firms which are doing an excellent business, the Government may be in bankruptcy. The condition of the mark is given as an evidence of that. I have taken some little trouble to ascertain to what extent that is true, and would like to direct your attention to what happened on the 8th of February last—which is not very far back—and postdates the occupation of the Ruhr. It so happened that certain industries of medium financial strength were handicapped in their exportations. Of course, I do not refer to the Ruhr barons. These gentlemen had provided for themselves by selling to us and the rest of the world a paper money that they knew would very soon be without value. That was their way of milking the entire world for their own benefit. But the small manufacturer had made no provision outside of Germany, and he had to pay in marks at the prevailing rates. So pressure was brought to bear on the Reich, and the question was asked the German Government: "Are you not going to make some sort of an effort to stabilize the mark?" Then two very important commissions of the Reich, one on economics and the other on finance, suggested, first, that it would be very helpful indeed if speculation on the mark could be repressed; secondly, that income and sale taxes should be diligently collected by the Government; and finally that the Government should redeeem with gold at least a portion of its paper money The Government took the matter up, and what was the result? On the 31st of January last, one dollar was equivalent to 48,077 marks. On the 16th day of February, eight days after the German Government made the first move, the mark had risen to such an extent that $1 was worth only 15,000 marks, and on the 17th, even with the expected reaction, it did not go beyond 19,000 marks. What is the rate to-day? Twenty-five thousand marks instead of 48,000. Is not that an indication of Germany's ability to pay? I submit that it is.

But perhaps you think that Germany made a supreme effort in order to obtain that result. Let me tell you what effect it had on the Reichsbank. Firstly, the gold deposit of the Reichsbank was not diminished by one mark. Secondly, the deposit in gold in the Bank of England remained untouched. Thirdly, the credits of the Reichsbank on the 31st of January, 1923, were 698 billion marks, and on the 17th of February following 901 billion marks. The advances on goods on the 31st of January, 1923, were 95 billion marks, and on the 17th of February, 1923, they were 122 billion marks.

The honourable member from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) mentioned yesterday the statement which Mr. Otto Kahn made in New York only a few days ago, to the effect that one-quarter of the gold reserve held in Germany at present could redeem every mark issued by that country. That authority is, it seems to me, worthy of serious consideration.

The point I desire to make is that Germany is not poor, Firstly because her working classes are not suffering from unemployment. Everybody in Germany is working. Nobody disputes that statement. Secondly, that she exports enormously. Thirdly, that she is spending more on public works than any other country in the world. Fourthly, that if the German Government itself appears to be financially weak, it is extraordinary—it is miraculous—to see how, with a little determination, the Germans can bring back the value of their mark.

Before leaving this phase may I ask you, honourable gentlemen, to consider on the one hand the condition of France? Utterly despoiled, staggering under the load of a tremendous debt, France is faced with bankruptcy, which would mean the repudiation of her debts to the people, from without as well as within her territory, who had trusted her. To those who stretched out a helping hand to France and said, "We trust you and we will lend you our money,—even to her own children, who in many cases gave to her all they had—she would, if bankrupt, be compelled to say: "I am sorry, but I have to repudiate the debt.' That is the position on one side. On the other you have a country rich and prosperous, a country that has been spending freely, a country that can, when it so desires, re-establish its finances on a sound basis. France knows that much better than we do. France has had experience of that for four years. What was France to do? She had to do something. She could not go into bankruptcy. What other alternative was open to France?

In order to corroborate what I have told you of German prosperity, would you allow me to cite to you a statement which Sir William Joynson-Hicks, Secretary for Overseas Trade, made as recently as March 1:

> Sir William hinted that a threat to British shipping was coming from Germany, whose mercantile marine, which had been reduced under the Peace Treaty to 400,000 tons, would total two and a half billion by the end of this year. Many people failed to realize that Germany was not a poor country.

Now, honourable gentlemen, will you allow me to give you briefly the history of the reparations? It can be done in a very few minutes.

At the first meeting of the Allies at which the reparations question was discussed, the opinion prevailed that Germany could pay 15 billion dollars. The proportions in which this amount was to be meted out to the nations who had suffered devastation were as follows: France, 75 per cent., or 11 billion dollars; Great Britain, 8 per cent., or 1 billion dollars; Italy, Belgium and the rest of the nations, 17 per cent., or approximately 3 billion dollars.

Unfortunately this first suggestion was not carried out. Gen. Smuts, at the request of Mr. Lloyd George, introduced a new element, that of pensions and separation allowances. The reparations required of Germany consequently grew from 15 billion dollars to practically 33 billion dollars; but, observe, France's proportion fell from 75 to 52 per cent., while Great Britain's was increased from 8 to 22 per cent., and the proportion of the other countries rose from 17 to 26 per cent., the proportions being 17 billion dollars to France; 7¼ billion to England, and 8¾ billion to the other nations.

Then came the Paris Conference of 1922. What happened at that Conference? Two things happened. First, the suggestion by Mr. Bonar Law that the amount of German reparations be reduced. The amount proposed was 10 to 12 billion dollars, but not one word was said of any variation in the proportions allotted to the different countries. What would be the result for France? Whereas France at first was to have 75 per cent of a certain amount, then 52 per cent of a larger amount, her proportion would still be 52 per cent, but of a much smaller sum. The result was that France would finally get 6¼ billion dollars, faced as she was with a debt to England and the United States of no less than 7 billion dollars, not to mention at all the amount spent or to be spent for reparations. That is one of the reasons why France could not agree. That payment could not save France from bankruptcy and permit of her continuing the restoration of her devastated regions.

There was another proposition discussed, and this concerned the control of German finances. I understand from certain articles and speeches that England said to France: "Why do you not listen to us? We have been friends. We have been through the greatest of calamities together. We are going to give you the best possible advice. Be patient. Go slow. Wait. We shall get reparations sooner by our process than you could ever hope to get them by force. And one of the reasons why we shall succeed is that we are to control German finance."

The French people took up the ultimatum served upon Germany on the 5th of May, 1921, and they said to Mr. Bonar Law: "But you have already created a system of control. What about that Committee of Guarantees, composed of one member from each of the Great Powers and three members selected by the other nations, to which the United States, if they so desired could add their nominee?

What does that document say? It says that the Committee of Guarantees is vested with all the powers necessary to see to it that every source in Germany indicated to be tapped for the payment of reparations is closely controlled by that Committee. But why did it not work? Because the Allies were face to face with a nation of sixty million people all conspiring with their Government, to be dishonest—to get out from under their obligation to pay.

I have here the clauses of the Treaty which gives this Guarantee Committee power to Act. One of the clauses from which they derive their power is, I think, so wide that it relieves me of the necessity of quoting the other. The Committee have to see to it that Article 241 of the Treaty of Versailles is executed:

> Germany undertakes to pass, issue and maintain in force any legislation, orders and decrees that may be necessary to give complete effect to these provisions.

The Treaty of Peace, as everybody knows, stipulated that Germany would be held to the payment of reparations. All laws and decrees of Germany in this respect were placed within the jurisdiction of this committee composed of representatives of practically all the Allies. If that Committee should not function, do you think that the French people, who have had to bleed themselves almost to death, and have waited four long years, beholding always misery on their side, but happiness and prosperity on the other, could derive much comfort from the vague promise that another Committee of Control should be created? If the new committee worked no better than that which already existed, what then? Where could it seek more power? All the nations were represented on the Committee of Guarantees. What would be the source of additional power for this new committee? There would be none. Do you think that the French people had any alternative? Were they not forced to protect what was left of their country's vitality, her wealth and her powers of recuperation? It was with extreme regret that France differed with Great Britain, as was apparent from the last conversation between those two earnest men—one side Poincare, who in his position of trust sought to protect the interests of his country, and on the other side Bonar Law, a man born in this land, who has brought to the Old Country the clear-cut, forceful frankness of speech which, thank goodness, characterizes our people. Those two representatives agreed to disagree. When Mr. Bonar Law shook hands with Mr. Poincare, he did not say to him: "I regret that you do not follow my advice because you do not attach to it the importance you should." No. He said: "I regret my friend, that we cannot see eye to eye, but in the course which your conscience dictates I wish you God speed."

The right honourable gentleman who brought up this subject stated, and rightly, that if France so desired the League of Nations might intervene and lend their good offices. The right honourable gentleman said, and he was right, that what an enemy of a nation could not do might be accomplished by the dispassionate action of an independent party. I agree with the right honourable gentleman in the case which he cited. I regret that I cannot agree with him so far as Germany is concerned. The right honourable gentleman cited the case of Austria. I have been to Austria very lately, at the same time as my right honourable friend, and I witnessed there the conditions which he has so vividly portrayed. They are exact. But when we come to ascertain whether or not Austria is in the same position as Germany, as regards applying the same remedy, it seems to me that it would be easy to show that no parallel could be drawn between the two cases.

Allow me to put before you the situation of Austria, prior to and since the war. In 1900 Austria had a population of 45,000,000 in round figures, and after the treaty in 1920 but a shade over 6,000,000 people. The area of the dual monarchy which before the war exceeded 263,000 square miles, was reduced to 30,000 square miles. Before the war Austria-Hungary produced 52,000,000 tons of coal; now she produces but 6 per cent of her own needs. Before the war she produced all the food that she required; now, by working hard, she can produce only enough food for every other day. She has lost the following territories: Hungary, Galicia, Bohemia, Croatia, Bosnia. What is left of her shipping power? She has lost her seaports, Fiume and Trieste, and must ship by the Danube, the Black Sea and the Bosphorus. Gentlemen, look at that unhappy country now, with only six million population, two and a half million of whom live in Vienna. It is a country with a head shorn of all its members. How can a country in that state be otherwise but helpless? And even those people are described as being sweet-tempered and kindly.

Do I need to make any comparison with Germany, shorn only of Lorraine with its two million people? Not a factory destroyed; not even able to contract debts in foreign countries during the war because she was hemmed in from all sides, with all her reserve power with all her accumulated wealth, with all her pride, with all her spirit of vengeance. Do you think that any committee of the Allies, could replace the Government of Germany? Do you think that the Allies could to-day obtain from Germany that she would step down from her sovereignty, and do as Austria did? In one day Austria passed through both of its legislative Houses a law by which both were deprived of power, which, for two years was transferred to one dictator, Mr. Zimmerman. How long would the poor Frenchman have to wait in order to witness the soul of Germany change to that extent?

Now, gentlemen, I want to submit to you this fact—that the invasion of the Ruhr in itself did not seem objectionable to England. It is the advisability of carrying it out at present which is doubted. It is very important, it seems to me, not to forget that. The process is recognized as perfectly legitimate, but the opportunity of applying the process is disputed. In other words, you have a criminal who fully deserves punishment; but it may perhaps be thought advisable to apply it at a later date. Will you allow me on this point to cite an authority which I trust everybody will accept without challenge? On the 5th of May, 1921, Mr. Lloyd George had to speak to the German nation pretty sharply. In the name of the Allies, and particularly the great powers, he submitted an ultimatum to Germany. Now, this is what Mr. Lloyd George said on that date to the House of Commons in explanation of the action of the Supreme Council in this respect—I quote from the Hansard of the House of Commons 1921, volume 141, page 1280:

> The Prime Minister: This morning at the request of the Supreme Council, I handed to the German Ambassador the demands made on behalf of the Allied Powers. We had considered three questions—first of all, the amount which it was fair to extract from Germany—the capital amount and the annual payment. We considered that carefully and conscientiously, and with a sincere desire not to impose anything which was harsh, brutal or unfair even upon an enemy. I believe we have been fair. I believe we have been just. I believe, on the whole, taking all conditions into account, we have been considerate, because the burden is still a burden for France: it is still a burden for us. The wounds of France are still bleeding the devastated regions are still there, they have still to be rebuilt. The burden of pensions is one which is bearing heavily year by year on us. Therefore, it is not unfair to ask Germany to pay. We are not asking her to pay past debts, we are asking her to pay debts which we have to face year by year in each country. The first question was the capital amount. The second was the method of payment. The third was the guarantee for payment, and the last was the acceptance by Germany of these terms. . . .
> I am very anxious to deal fairly with Germany and with her leaders. Their task is not an easy one. . . .
> Therefore, when we talk about "compelling Germany to pay" and about using coercive measures, it is really compelling the German people to face disagreeable facts, and they will not do that unless the alternative is more disagreeable. You cannot expect them to do it. There are newspapers in Germany. There are newspapers even in Germany which only give one side of the facts. Therefore, you have to bring them face to face with a more disagreeable alternative, and that is why we discussed that question. We realized the difficulties of German statesmen, anxious to deal with these questions, anxious to make proposals. I have no right to say that they were convinced that these proposals ought to be made. I do not think I am far wrong in saying so; but, knowing their position, they could not do so until the Allies said to them, "Unless you do it, this is what will hapen." It is a good thing for the German people themselves to be brought up sharp, and to be told firmly and distinctly that unless they accept this, the Allies must and will take action. I am not talking the language of menace, but only of practical common sense, which is not always the same thing. This is the document—and I think I may read it to the Committee—which I handed this morning on behalf of the Supreme Council to Mr. Sthamer:

"The Allied Powers, taking note of the fact that, in spite of the successive concessions made by the Allies since the signature of the Treaty of Versailles, and in spite of the warnings and sanctions agreed upon at Spa and at Paris, as well as of the sanctions announced in London and since applied, the German Government is still in default in the fulfilment of the obligations incumbent upon it under the terms of the Treaty of Versailles as regards (1) disarmament; (2) the payment due on May 1st, 1921, under Article 235 of the Treaty which the Reparation Commission had already called upon it to make at this date; (3) the trial of the War criminals as further provided for by the Allied Notes of 13th February and 7th May, 1920; and (4) certain other important respects; notably those which arise under Articles 264 to 267, 269, 273, 321, 322 and 327 of the Treaty, decide:

"(a) To proceed forthwith with such preliminary measures as may be required for the occupation of the Ruhr Valley by the Allied Forces on the Rhine in the contingency provided for in paragraph (d) of this Note:

"(d) Failing the fulfilment by the German Government of the above conditions by the 12th May, to proceed to the occupation of the Valley of the Ruhr and to take all other military and naval measures that may be required. Such occupation will continue so long as Germany fails to comply with the conditions summarised in paragraph (c)."

This is the document, signed by the representatives of all the Allied Powers, which I handed this morning to the German Ambassador.

That shows the attitude of the British Government which preceded that of Mr. Bonar Law. It seems to me very clearly shown that all the allied powers, without exception, speaking through the mouth of the representative of Great Britain together pronounced that punishment, and their decision was a just one, and it would be visited on Germany if within eight days she did not comply.

Allow me, honourable gentlemen to pause here just one moment. When Lloyd George so spoke—his voice carried the weight of the decision of all the Allies. But when he said to the German people, "You need to be brought up sharp, and we will act"—do you think his words were empty words? Or were they calling for sincere action from the German Government? Would Mr. Lloyd George have said in the same breath to the German Government: "I hand you this; give us your answer without fail within eight days, but, of course, if you don't carry out your undertaking, we shall not interfere; what we want is your signature; what we want is your promise; if you betray your signature, or if you are false to your promise, we shall not remonstrate." Is that reasonable, or conceivable? No. All the nations there insisted that Germany should be made to bow to the decision of the Allied powers, and not merely act as she so frequently did during the war in the trenches—throw up her hands and say ,'Kamerad!" just for the purpose of obtaining some respite, and then, when opportunity offered pick up her gun and shoot to kill.

Hon Mr. BEAUBIEN.

Therefore, when Germany said she would comply, all the Allies thought, and honestly thought, that she would. But did she? That was on the 5th of May, 1921. Did the French Government for two years take it upon itself to act alone? No. Why? Was not the restraining effect of Great Britain felt with all the weight that it deserved? Could France do more, after seeing those terms violated day after day, month after month, year after year? Still waiting, could she do more? I leave it to you to say.

But has the British Government changed its mind on the subject? Allow me to cite another authority, which I think nobody will contest.

Quite recently, in an address at Canterbury, Mr. Ronald McNeill, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, makes it quite clear that the British Government does not expect to get anything from the Germans that the Germans can get out of giving. It is not a case of misplaced confidence, and the British plan leaves little if anything to that unknown quantity, the good faith of the German Government. That plan, if adopted, would establish Allied supervision of the whole financial administration of Germany—

That is Mr. Bonar Law's plan—

—and would continue such supervision until the restoration of the German credit. That time having arrived, if the Germans still attempted to dodge their obligations, Britain would join with France in such measures as France is now employing. Of the present situation, Mr. McNeill says that "if by any extraordinary chance" the French should succeed, "no one would be more pleased than ourselves"

I think I can rely on those authorities to say that there is nothing illegal, nothing objectionable, in the move which France has taken. On the contrary, that move had been dictated in advance by all the Powers in one document from which they cannot withdraw their signature.

Let me pass to another point. Is it a practical move? I have heard a great deal about the impossibility of France thereby accomplishing anything whatsoever, and time and again we have been served with the good old story of the goose with the golden eggs—"Don't kill the goose that lays the golden eggs". Honourable gentlemen, might I not retort that France has been very considerate of that German goose? France waited for four years for one egg, and did not get it. Is it not time now that France should pen in that goose a bit, or tie a string to its leg? Can it do that? This is what I want to submit to you.

Strange to say, Providence has very deep plans, and sometimes they appear in all their lucidity, to the astonishment of individuals and nations. The Germans did many heinous things in France, but the worst of all was when they went down to the coal mines of France and systematically destroyed them, blew them up, flooded them, so that their power to produce would be stemmed for years and years to come. What can you do without coal? What can you do without motive power? Nothing; so the Germans went along and said: "Not one shovel of coal will you get out of those mines for 10 years." But gentlemen, what do we see now? We see the coal fields of the Ruhr, the richest in the world, except those of Pennsylvania, in the hands of France. What a happy chance, that this little strip of land 15 miles wide by 30 long, bounded by two rivers, abutting upon territory already held by France, should contain coal by the millions and billions of tons, and should be so easily held against aggression. Is not that a fitting compensation by Providence for the utter destruction of the French mines?

Let us see what the Ruhr is. The Ruhr has a population of 4,000,000 people. It has 11 cities of over 100,000 people. Of a total of 191 million tons of coal for all of Germany, in 1913 the Ruhr produced sixty per cent, or 114 million tons. The Ruhr has the greatest gun manufactory in the world. The Ruhr district is the greatest producer of by-products for explosives. It produces potash to the extent of 3,918,000 tons as against a total of 604,000 tons in Alsace-Lorraine, which is considered the richest country in potash. In 1914, the Ruhr turned out 6,610,000 tons of pig iron, and in 1913, 9,000,000 tons. Of steel, it produced in 1914, 8,420,000 tons; and in 1913, 10,000,000 tons. It supplied in 1913, 200,000 tons of ammonia, 500,000 tons of tar and 50,000 tons of benzol. Forty per cent of all the iron and steel used in and exported from Germany comes from the Ruhr. There are no better salt mines in Germany than there are in the Ruhr and there are no better textile industries than can be found in that district. The Ruhr has 887 stock companies all absorbed by 13 trusts, all financed by one consortium, at the head of which are Krupp, Stinnes, Thyssen and the like.

Now, before considering my statements in regard to this marvellously rich country, so exceptionally equipped for industrial or war purposes, and which is, first, the power-house, secondly, the arsenal, and, thirdly, the chief place of business for Germany—before weighing my conclusion that while France has her hand on the Ruhr the Germans have to come to her or face the disagreeable alternative of honestly paying their debts, listen to what Mr. Lloyd George said in the House of Commons in England on the 5th of May, 1921:

> The Committee will allow me to point out exactly what the occupation of the Ruhr means. Before the war, the output of coal in the Ruhr valley was the largest production obtained in any single coal field in the world. It was considerably over one hundred billion tons. It contains every quality of coal for every conceivable purpose for which coal can be used. Two-thirds of the whole of the German iron and steel production is in the Ruhr valley. The importance of the region may be gauged by the fact that, even last year, 25,000 railway trucks, each of fifteen tons, loaded every day in the Ruhr—double the number of goods trucks handled daily by the whole of the Nord railway in the great industrial area of France. During the war the Ruhr valley was Germany's greatest arsenal for guns, for shells, for gas; and the industrial development of south Germany depends almost entirely upon the coal of the Ruhr. With the Ruhr gone, industrial Germany withers; it cannot exist. The Committee, therefore, will realize the alternative which is presented to Germany.

Let me also give you some further evidence which can be accepted at par. Mr. Briand, like his predecessors, had listened very considerately to the advice given by the Allies. One day the whole of France stood on the brink of disaster, and one man said: "We have gone far enough: we cannot go any further." That man was Poincare. Mr. Francois Marsal, who was M. Briand's Minister of Finance and fell from power with the latter when the policy of France was changed, states:

> The entire German industry is dependent on the Ruhr valley for its raw material and equipment in the same manner as German agriculture for its potash and azote fertilizers. Without the Ruhr, the vitality of industrial and agricultural Germany must ebb out. The proprietors of this domain are the masters of Germany. They are now holding the liquid assets of the German republic, which amount to hundreds of billions, and are stored away in gilt-edge securities in London, Amsterdam, New York, Chicago, Copenhagen, etc.

In order to bring my remarks to a practical conclusion, I desire to discuss with you another phase of this question. Even though France is right, even though she has a solid grip on Germany, can Germany possibly pay the amount of reparation claimed from her? In this regard I am afraid I will have to differ with the honourable gentleman who brought this matter before the House, and I do so with all possible respect. It will be for you to say whether I am right or wrong.

What is the reparation debt which Germany has to pay? On the 5th of May, 1921, it was fixed at 132 billion gold marks. But how was it so fixed? There were three series of bonds, the first two amounting to 50 billion gold marks. The third bond, for 82 billion gold marks, is held in reserve. There they are put aside in case Germany in later years should be able to pay. It was right, honourable gentlemen, that Germany should not be judged by her present capacity to pay. The Allies rightly and wisely said to her: "We know how your industry has been developed, we know how your commerce has been spread throughout the world, and we will wait; but when the time comes, we, the victims, will judge you again; and, as you will never be able to pay everything you owe, we will again assess your capacity to pay." For that purpose bonds for 82 million gold marks were placed in escrow.

But what is Germany obliged to pay now—because it is now that she shows her willingness or unwillingness to pay? Germany has to pay six per cent interest on 50 billion gold marks. In 1921, besides that, she was called upon to pay another billion of gold marks; which I believe she did pay. But for this year, and for years to come, what is she obliged to pay? She is obliged to pay, not, $1,920,000,000, but $720,000,000. And how is she to pay? She was told: "You will pay in cash or specie 2 billion marks, and besides that 26 per cent on your exports. But the ultimatum contains a clause—the document was published in the Times of London of May 26th, 1921, and anyone who wishes may see it—in which it is clearly stated that Germany's obligation is limited to the payment of interest and sinking fund on the 50 billion gold marks of outstanding bonds, which does not exceed $720,000,000. I do not want to create any misapprehension in the mind of the Senate by changing from dollars to marks, so I will endeavour to convert the figures into dollars. Germany had therefore a reparation debt of 50 million gold marks, which, roughly speaking, is equivalent to twelve billion dollars; and, in order that her financing should not suffer too much, she was told: "You can pay that two billion gold marks, or $500,000,000 in cash, and the balance at the rate of 26 per cent on your exports. When you have done that, until we ascertain that your power to pay justifies our intervention, we shall ask no more."

As I said a moment ago, I regret that I have to differ with my honourable friend from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) on such an important point, the interpretation of the document itself. But what can I do? I may be in error. If I am, the document is there and the Senate can judge me. Now, what does that document mean? To my mind it is very important that we should know what it means. With his wonderful talent for making things live and move before our eyes, the honourable gentlemen said: "Just look at England: she has to pay from $161,000,000 to $175,000,000 a year to the United States, and that is all she can carry." It seemed to me that the honourable gentleman's magic had imparted a tremendous importance to the sum in question. Then I reflected, and said to myself: "What is the budget of England?" I found that for this year it will total between four and four and a half billion dollars. Then I further reflected—that 160 million dollars equals four per cent of that amount, or even less. Of course, such amounts have only a relative value, and I am trying to make a close-up comparison for you and for myself.

Let us take the case of Canada. We too have been at war. We increased our debt enormously during the war, and a very respectable authority indeed, Mr. Coats, claims that we spent in that respect no less than five billion dollars. It is sufficient for us to know that we have increased our debt to the extent of two billions of dollars. But what is our population compared to that of Germany? Germany has more than seven times the population of Canada; Germany is a country in which there is accumulated wealth and wonderful machinery of all sorts to coin money. At the same time, she has got as large a territory as we have to administer and develop. It costs a tremendous amount of money to govern this country, extending as it does for three thousand miles from one ocean to another. Per capita this additional expense is tremendous. Let me put this one question to you. We, unfortunately, have a terrible deficit on the railways. It reaches $100,000,000 and perhaps more. I am not sure that my honourable friends opposite have given us the worst picture of it. Do we Canadians throw up our hands and weep and tear our hair because we have to pay $100,000,000 a year? Or do we not simply face the situation which we cannot help and try to discharge our obligations? What are 700 million dollars for Germany? Not as much as 100 million to us, honourable gentlemen. That is the real truth; and the Germans squeal and proclaim they are incapable of such an effort.

Since the month of March last year the Reparations Commissions have said to Germany that they will not insist upon collecting the 26 per cent due on their exports. What are the obligations which face the Germans now? Only $500,000,000 a year. Let me tell you what they have paid since the month of March last. Then perhaps you can make up your mind whether they deserve sympathy or not. I quote from the Star of February 24, 1923:

> The French official figures place the total amount paid by Germany at 1,889,000 gold marks in cash and 3,954,000 gold marks for deliveries in kind. The value of the Saar Valley mines, placed at 300,000,000 gold marks, is not included in these figures.
> Of the above amounts, says the statement, France received 1,779,000,000 gold marks in cash and kind, or, with the Saar mines, a total of 2,079,000,000 gold marks.

That means in all four billion gold marks for deliveries in specie, in coal, in lumber, in labour, etc. Germany has found the means of paying practically the same as we do on our railway—a little over 100 million a year.

Permit me now, honourable gentlemen, to quote from one of our most reliable newspapers to show how France has acted. Often the action of France has been described very unfairly. It may not be done intentionally. It is said that France has gone into Germany for the purpose of conquest, and that she has been brutal. No, honourable gentlemen, France has gone in there and established a cordon of customs officers purely and simply for the purpose of collecting the tax that I have mentioned. Part of that tax should have been paid to the German Government, but it was not paid, and the coal barons of the Ruhr were allowed to escape it. Where did the difficulty come in? Will anybody deny that the difficulty was entirely due to the German Government subsidizing the men to throw down their tools or to go slow—to ca' canny. Is it not a fact that the President of the Republic of Germany passed a decree whereby every man helping the French was considered a spy and subject to imprisonment for life? Notwithstanding it all, how did the French people behave? I quote from the Gazette of March 16th, 1923:

> Despite the coercive measures needful and applied by the French occupying forces during the early stages of the operations, no intimidatory acts of violence were committed such as would have characterized the German methods under similar conditions. The Germans know full well why the French have occupied their territory. France wants to be paid, and as the Ruhr district, in which the army of occupation has now a good foothold at Dusseldorf and elsewhere, is the headquarters of ten or twelve industrialists who rule, directly or indirectly, but absolutely, the economic destinies of Germany—that is why France values the occupancy of the Ruhr. Most of the wealth of Germany is held by a small group of men not very heavily taxed who have, till recently, been able to dodge their own government, but now, unluckily for themselves, have fallen into the hands of the French, who are sufficiently wicked to demand reparations from those who can pay them. The French are not hurrying matters in the battle of the Ruhr, matching German stubbornness with French tenacity, and by their patience, moderation and determination, worrying the German mentality.

By way of contrast let me tell you in just a few words what happened in 1870. What were the orders of Bismarck when he invaded half the departments of France and held them under his iron heel until France should pay—in gold, mind you; not in coal, not in lumber, not in labour, but in gold. Why did Bismarck demand payment in gold? Because Bismarck had been told that France could not pay in gold. What were the orders of Bismarck? Here they are:

> In the occupied territories, we will send flying columns towards the localities that do not show themselves submissive, and we will shoot down, hang and burn. A few good gallows would also produce much effect, so would some shelling and the burning of a certain number of houses.

Compare the present treatment of Germany by France with the treatment meted out by Germany to France in 1870. Let me revert to the penalty that Germany imposed upon France at that time. I will not take long. I would ask those who are anxious about Germany's ability to pay, to remember that France, with one-half the population of Germany, paid the indemnity of 1870 with money which was worth at least five times what money is worth to-day. France for three years paid at the rate of 333 million dollars a year; that is to say, she paid a billion dollars in three years. Ignore that. Forget the difference in population and the difference in the value of money, and listen to this. In 1873, when M. Thiers appealed to his countrymen to subscribe 3 billion francs, the amount required to chase the Germans from French soil, how much do you think the French people subscribed? Forty-three billion gold francs, equivalent to 8½ billion gold dollars, an amount which would now suffice to pay everything that Germany is required to pay for some 15 years to come. Is not that an answer to those who say: "Poor Germany! Do not bleed Germany to death. Be careful of the goose that lays the golden egg."

Are there any signs to encourage those who desire France to be successful? As recently as the 16th of this month, according to the Star, Germany applied to England to intervene—for what? For a settlement? Yes, for a settlement. Germany was told to go direct to France. What does that signify? Is the Ruhr remedy working or is it not?

On the 17th of the present month, that is, only last Saturday, what did I see in the Montreal Standard? This telegram from Washington:

> Germany has officially laid her case in the Ruhr crisis before the United States Government, it was learned authoritatively to-day.
> A communication from Berlin, outlining in a general way, how far Germany is willing to go to bring an end to the Ruhr occupation, was placed before Secretary Hughes by the German embassy here to-day.

What does that mean? Is Fritz coming to a better frame of mind or not? Is the occupation of the Ruhr producing results, or is it not? I leave the question to you, honourable gentlemen?

Just one more thought, The opinion has somehow been spread that France has been generally condemned in England and in the States for her action in the Ruhr. Well, honourable gentlemen, will you allow me to quote a few opinions in this respect? I will give you, not my own impression, for, although I may frankly say I have followed this question very carefully, my opinion would not be better than that of any other member of this honourable House. I think it would be difficult to obtain a better or sounder opinion than that which is found in the Star of March 3rd. It is this:

The important statement by Mr. George Mure Ritchie, the great ironmaster and director of collieries and mines—

It is such men who are shipping coal to Germany now and benefiting by the occupation of the Ruhr.

—on the subject of France and the Ruhr and its bearing on British industry, was discussed far and wide in business and industrial circles.

As Mr. Mure Ritchie stated, there is a very general agreement on the main question. Leaders of industry believe that France is taking the only possible step to secure payment by Germany and prevent a worse war, that she is winning, and that it is a misfortune that Britain is not acting with her.

I read Mr. Mure Ritchie's statement with great interest, said Sir Robert Hadfield, the great Sheffield steel manufacturer and inventor. I agree with him that the German magnates are feathering their nest and France had to act. I think it is very unfortunate that we are not acting with her. That would, I believe, have ended the struggle. Germany would have given way.

I think there are few people in England who are better informed than Lord Rothermere. He is a power in the newspaper world of the United Kingdom, a man of undoubted integrity, a man respected by all. What does he say? I quote from an interview given in the Sunday Pictorial and reproduced in the Standard, of Montreal:

In some quarters we are told that France is thrusting a torch into a powder magazine and that the consequence of her action will be an explosion which will convulse all Europe. My view is, that on the contrary, the stern measures now adopted by the French will hasten the conclusion of a stable and lasting European peace.

We should try to put ourselves in the place of France, and to understand the French point of view, never forgetting that the French are pursuing our interests as well as their own.

The British plan, submitted at the recent Conference in London and Paris, was to give Germany almost complete relief from any sort of payment for the next four years, after which the Allies were to trust to German honor to begin paying up.

In effect this plan allowed Germany another four years in which to contrive and plot further schemes for evading any and all payments.

My object is to explain to my countrymen the motives which inspire France at this critical juncture. While our Parliamentarians have paltered with the German problem, and have sought to excuse Germany's most wilful default, France has taken the only logical course to make Germany pay. She has acted with intrepid courage and great circumspection. She has studiously avoided giving needless provocation in the Ruhr. She is furthering our own true cause, and therefore, I may say in all sincerity: "Hats off to France!"

I cannot think that French action will have the alarming results predicted, and prefer to hold, as a business man, that it will expedite the general pacification of Europe, which would never have been hastened if we had all sat down and awaited Germany's mocking pleasure for another four years.

May I quote just one American authority—I think it is worth mentioning. The Outlook, of New York, of January 31, 1923, contains the following in an editorial:

France has much stronger support in American public opinion for her action in seizing the Ruhr Valley in Germany than we supposed she had. When we stated in The Outlook for January 17 that France was both legally and morally justified in taking the action she has taken, practically the only expression of opinion that indicated the general sentiment of the country was the resolution of the Senate urging the withdrawal of the American troops from the Rhine, and that resolution indicated, so far as it indicated anything, that Americans generally did not approve of the French action and perhaps did not understand it. Since then we have telegraphed to every State of the Union seeking from trustworthy sources expressions of opinion upon the seizure of the Ruhr. The replies from our inquiry indicate a very widespread understanding of the situation and a predominant sympathy with the cause for which the chief advocate to-day is France.

May I ask you to accept, as the last authority, one from Germany? This is an opinion given by no small politician; it comes from Mr. Loebe, whom I had the pleasure of meeting in Vienna. He is the Speaker of the Reichstag, a man respected in public life, a man holding a very high position now. This is taken from the Washington Post of February 6th, 1923:

Sees Opposition Hopeless.

The new twist of the thumbscrews adds to the force of President Loebe's recommendations. Loebe, himself, in a speech at Breslau has confirmed publicly his statements on Thursday. He prophesied that practically every German would be convinced before the end of February of the situation's hopelessness with no help obtainable from America, England or neutrals.

Hopes based on Russia, he said, were sure to involve Germany in unsuccessful wars in the east and west. The Cuno cabinet, which adopted the policy of resistance, he said, would have to undertake negotiations to end the conflict which undoubtedly would lead to a capitalistic fusion of the Lorraine iron and the Ruhr coal interests. The socialists' duty was to see that the bill was paid and that pledges for enforcement were supplied by the Westphalian industrial magnates and not by the workmen.

Urges Negotiations.

The Prussian minister of the interior, Herr Severing, who is a socialist, also advocated negotiations. He declared the time was ripe but at the first possible opening negotiations must be seized upon.

Is the remedy of the Ruhr an effective one? I leave it to you, honourable gentlemen. Last autumn I went to Hungary, and also to Austria, and for a whole day I travelled through the southern part of Germany, and I cannot tell you the impression produced on me. It was the most beautiful country, the richest country, that I hope ever to set eyes upon—an immense sweeping valley cultivated as I had never dreamed land could be cultivated; the fields with all the hues of gold falling from the hills all covered with forests. Never have I seen forests like those of Bavaria-Wurtemberg—immense trees all kept in perfect order, untouched for generations; while we, because of our heavy indebtedness, cut our trees at a terrible rate, and nobody dare stop the destructive activity, because we must pay the interest on our debt; because business must go on; because we cannot stop the life of the country. I saw towns by the score, enormous towns, every few miles, with chimneys belching forth clouds of the black smoke—of activity and prosperity. There was construction in every line, everywhere.

Then I journeyed to France, and it so happened that I went to Soissons, to Rheims, and to Verdun, as I do every time I go to France. One afternoon I stood on Fort Douanmond and looked down at Fleury, where 400,000 Frenchmen had died—a town without even the trace of a stone to indicate a foundation. Everything had gone. But that was not what seized me most and impressed me most: it was a humble chapel near by called the ossuary. You know what an ossuary is. When the French pick up scattered bones, and cannot identify them, but only know they are those of French soldiers, they deposit them piously in this ossuary. Those who have lost their sons at Verdun but know not their resting place, go in reverend pilgrimage to the ossuary to pray. I saw old men and old women plodding sadly to the ossuary, heavy with grief and anxiety. As I looked at them I could not help seeing far beyond France's dark horizon the land of the murderer with its golden rays of sunshine, its land rich, its fields beautiful, its forests such as we perhaps never have known in Canada; I saw towns happy and busy; I saw the only people in Europe who seem free from care, prosperous, and happy. Then I truly understood France's point of view.

I trust, honourable gentlemen, that the facts and figures I have given you may to a certain extent at least enable you to understand how it is that the poor old Frenchmen, painfully climbing that hill in a pious pilgrimage, truly represents the entire French nation. He has suffered everything. He has gone through the valley of death and desperation; and, after four years of patient waiting, at last he can no longer endure, and he has started, with little Belgium, to climb the arduous pass leading to the summit where he hopes to find at last a little sunshine of happiness, peace and prosperity for his land.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roche, the debate was adjourned.

PUBLICATION OF DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS

REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED moved the adoption of the 24th Report of the Standing Committee on Divorce, in the matter of the recommendation that Rule 135 of the Senate relating to Divorce be amended.

He said: This report recommends that the rules of the Standing Committee on Divorce be amended to permit of power being given to the Senate to deal with the publication of evidence taken before the Divorce Committee in the case of such being published.

Since Confederation the sittings of the Divorce Committee have been held in camera, and, while the evidence has been published in full for the information of the members, it has always been presumed that this evidence would not be seen by the public, so that it could not appear in the press. Very recently, however, one paper has begun to publish the evidence in extenso. Now, it would be a contradiction to say that the Committee should hold its sittings in camera, and yet that the press should publish the evidence in full; consequently it will be necessary to do one of two things—either to throw the proceedings of the Committee open to the public, or in some way to prevent the publication of the evidence, by the press or otherwise. It has been found, however, that the proposal to amend the rules would not be effective to carry out the purpose we have in view. The Criminal Code, through a rather ample provision, has permitted all the proceedings in either branch of Parliament, or before any Committee, to be published at length. Therefore, it will be necessary, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the Divorce Committee, to amend the Code, rather than the rules of the Committee. A recommendation has been made to the Government that the Code should be amended so as to prevent the publication of evidence taken before the Divorce Committee. That, of course, would not prevent the press from publishing the proceedings of this Chamber with regard to what the Committee may recommend, or what the Senate or the House of Commons may do with reference to any particular Bill. The only object in view is to prevent the publication of the evidence at length. I understand that my honourable friend the leader of the Government has taken the matter into consideration, and that the Government is prepared to make a recommendation to this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The difficulty with which the Committee has met is to be found in section 322 of the Criminal Code, which reads as follows:

No one commits an offence by publishing in good faith, for the information of the public, a fair report of the proceedings of the Senate or House of Commons, or any committee thereof, or of any Council or Assembly aforesaid, or any committee thereof, or of the public proceedings preliminary or final heard before any court exercising judicial authority, nor by publishing, in good faith, any fair comment upon any such proceedings.

It will readily be seen that in provinces where the courts deal with divorce cases, the newspapers, under this clause, can report the evidence. But I think there is a safeguard in the hands of those tribunals, inasmuch as they can, if they so decide, try these cases, or some of them, or parts of them, in camera. As my honourable friend has said, the Senate Committee on Divorce can maintain, and has maintained, the principle of the closed door. But the evidence taken before that committee, unlike the proceedings before the other tribunals, is printed and distributed to the members of this Chamber as well as to the members of the Commons, and it is that printed evidence that has lately found its way into some yellow journal, which, being protected by the clause I have read, has been disseminating it and pandering to the worst side of human nature.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED.

For this reason I will introduce a Bill which will add the following clause to the one I have just read:

Section 322 of the Criminal Code, Chapter 146 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, is hereby amended by adding thereto as subsection 2, the following:

(2) Nothing in this section shall make it lawful to publish a report of any evidence taken or offered in any proceeding heard before the Senate or the House of Commons, or any Committee of the Senate or House of Commons, upon any petition or bill relating to any matter of marriage or divorce, if the report is published without authority from or leave of the House in which the proceeding was heard, or contrary to any rule, order or practice of that House.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: What about a penalty if that provision is not observed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I would rather not answer my honourable friend until the second reading of the Bill. On the second reading of the Bill I will give him the opinion of the Law Clerk on this point.

The motion was agreed to.

TAXATION OF CIVIL SERVANTS

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER inquired of the Government:

Referring to the Income War Tax Act, 1917, as amended in 1919, which provides for the "exemption of any remuneration of a taxpayer retained by his employer, in connection with an employee's superannuation or pension fund or plan."

1. Why, in the face of this provision, are deductions made from the salaries of Civil Servants under the provisions of the Public Service Retirement Act and retained by the Government, taxed as income?

2. Should not the deductions covered by the plan, etc., outlined in the Public Service Retirement Act be exempt from income tax? If not, why not?

3. Upon what grounds or for what reason is the annual interest upon the retirement fund retained by the Government until the retirement of the Official, also taxed as income?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

1. "Income," as defined by section 3, subsection 1; "Annual...gain...as being wages, salary or other fixed amount...directly or indirectly received by a person from any office or employment." See Smyth vs. Stretton (1904) 20 L.T., 756.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN called the attention of the Senate to the practice pursued by the Government when dealing with a Petition of Right, and inquired:

1. How many petitions of right have been presented to the Government during the last twelve years?
2. How many "Fiat justitia" (let justice be done) have been granted during the same time?
3. How many have been refused also during the same time, if any and why?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

3. 24. Fiats were refused in six cases because proceedings were being taken by the Crown by information or reference for determination by the Exchequer Court of the same questions as those raised in the petitions of right, and in eighteen cases because there appeared to be no reasonable ground upon which the fiat could be granted.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It seems to me, if I may point it out to my honourable friend, that the answer is deficient in furnishing information. What became of the other three hundred and some odd applications? The Department, apparently, absolutely ignores them. Surely some attitude or position must have been taken by the Department in reference to those applications. In fact, the essence of the inquiry lies entirely in the question what has been done with those.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: As I read the answer, I myself noticed the discrepancy between the number of petitions presented and the number allowed. If I may, I will leave the question on the Order Paper until to-morrow and ask for further information.

The inquiry stands.

PEAT FUEL

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN inquired of the Government:

1. How much money has been paid out for peat fuel at Alfred, in the County of Prescott, by the Federal Government to the 31st December, 1922?
2. How many tons of the said peat fuel have been manufactured?
3. At what price per ton has this peat fuel been sold, if any?
4. How many B.T.U. does one ton of this fuel contain?
5. How many B.T.U. does a ton of ordinary anthracite contain?
6. Is it the intention of the Government to continue to spend money at Alfred?
7. What returns in money has the country received from this investment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Stand.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I must protest, honourable gentlemen. This question was asked a long while ago—in fact, weeks before the adjournment—and it is a very simple one. To the first inquiry surely the Government ought to be able to give an answer. The money was all paid over three months ago. May I, with the leave of the House, refer to the answer I got with regard to Bienfait, Saskatchewan, where $900,000 has been expended with absolutely no results whatsoever. Everyone travelling between Montreal and Ottawa passes Alfred and sees work going on there. Money is being spent there year in and year out, but without result. We know nothing about it. Surely the Government is not asleep. Surely somebody can answer the simple question as to how many tons of peat fuel have been manufactured. I think that when an honourable member takes the trouble to ask a question, and a very pertinent one, in this House, we are entitled to an answer—not perhaps within a day or two, but certainly within a month. I claim there has been gross negligence.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would suggest to my honourable friend that he should cross the floor of the House.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: May I ask the honourable gentleman (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) if, in stating that $900,000 has been spent without any results he is referring to the briquetting of coal done at Bienfait? If so, I think the honourable gentleman has probably made the statement without being in possession of the latest information. A short time ago I listened to a lecture given by one of the engineers who had the matter in charge, who claimed that they are going to manufacture briquettes successfully at $11 per ton. I would draw the honourable gentleman's attention to that, so that when he makes a statement he may be a little more careful.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: With the leave of the House I will answer the honourable gentleman. I took the trouble to ask how much money had been spent, and I received an official answer from the Government that the amount was some $923,000. How many tons of briquettes have been made? Seventy-five tons. How many tons sold? None. What was the result to the country? Nothing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend has not disclosed by his questions the agency which is spending that money in Alfred. I will try to ascertain from what Department I should obtain the information, but I may have to knock at many doors before I can find the right one.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I may tell my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), if he is the seeker after information and after truth, that the Department of Mines could fully inform him as to the experiments which are being made in the manufacture of peat at Alfred. I may tell him further that the Provincial Government of Ontario is a contributor to the extent of 50 per cent. Furthermore, the operations have been carried on, as I understand, upon the recommendation of the Council of Scientific Research. At least, my recollection is that they recommended that this experiment be entered upon. It is anything but satisfactory, in my judgment, and I fancy that when my honourable friend comes to make inquiry into the financial results, he will find that they somewhat justify the position taken by the honourable gentleman who has asked the question.

The inquiry stands.

THE LATE HON. JOSEPH GODBOUT

TRIBUTES TO HIS MEMORY

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, during the Easter recess the Senate had the misfortune to lose one of its members, Dr. Joseph Godbout, of St. François, Beauce. Dr. Godbout had been among us since 1901. His career was an evenly successful one—that of a good citizen and a public-spirited one. He was Mayor of his town, Governor of the Bureau of Physicians for his Province, honoured by the members of his profession and the citizens among whon he lived. He was elected to the House of Commons when quite young—at thirty-six years of age—and was elected consecutively three times until he was appointed to the Senate.

Senator Godbout was of simple disposition, a man of good-will and of good counsel. His death is a real loss to the community in which he lived, and also to the Senate; and to his family we extend our sincere sympathy.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I join with my honourable friend the leader of the Government in the very fitting remarks which he has made. They are fitting in the sense of the deep regret which the Senate feels at the loss of our late colleague, Senator Godbout. He was a man who enjoyed the friendship, I think, of every member of this Chamber. He was modest and unassuming, courteous and amiable in all his relations with his fellow members. He was a man upon whose judgment in reference to any matter committed to him we relied. True, he was not what might be termed an active member of the Senate in the sense of engaging in many of the activities upon which other members entered; yet it is needless to say that in the function of the Senate the exercise of good judgment on the part of many of its less active members is equally valuable. Senator Godbout enjoyed a reputation for good judgment and for maintaining pleasant relations with all those who were associated with him. One of the highest tributes that can be paid to a man who has departed from us is the tribute of the public in the locality in which he has lived. Senator Godbout was actively identified with the local interests of his constituency. He had the confidence of his fellows; he was, as my honourable friend has remarked, mayor of the city in which he resided; he fought successfully four general elections, and represented his constituency in the Dominion Parliament during four parliamentary terms; he has been an esteemed member of this Chamber for the last twenty years, and we who have been here during that time have very pleasant memories of our associations with him. I am sure every member of the Senate deeply regrets the decease of our late colleague.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 103, an Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending 31st March, 1924.

He said; Honourable gentlemen, the purpose of this Bill is to allow of the needs of the public service being met while the whole Supply Bill is being examined in detail in the other House. This Bill covers one-sixth of the total Estimates for the year 1923-24, and consequently covers April and May of the present year. It includes all the items of the Supply which have been discussed and voted in the other Chamber, but excludes a part of Resolution No. 141, regarding a sum of $500,000 for a new departmental building in Ottawa.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

Certain rules having been suspended:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE) BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill Y2, an Act to amend the Criminal Code with respect to Publication of Evidence in Marriage or Divorce Proceedings.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, when I introduced this measure I gave a full explanation of the reason for so doing. I will recall to the Senate the fact that the Standing Committee on Divorce reported on the 1st of March the following recommendation:

The Committee recommend that Rule 135 of the Rules of the Senate relating to Divorce be amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"2. The printing of any evidence taken before the Committee except as authorized by this Rule, or otherwise by Order or leave of the Senate, is a breach of the Parliamentary privileges of the Senate. Any person committing or accessory to such breach is liable to punishment therefor, upon Order of the Senate, by fine, or imprisonment, or both."

This report was adopted on the 22nd of March. The Senators will have to be specially called to adopt the new rule, and I suppose that will be done during the present Session.

The purpose of the present Bill is to make it clear that the privileges of the Parliament of Canada have not been abridged by section 322 of the Revised Statutes of 1906, chapter 146. The sections beginning at section 317 come under the heading of "Defamatory Libel." Section 317 states:

A defamatory libel is matter published, without legal justification or excuse, likely to injure the reputation of any person by exposing him to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or designed to insult the person of or concerning whom it is published.

Such matter may be expressed either in words legibly marked upon any substance whatever, or by any object signifying such matter otherwise than by words, and may be expressed either directly or by insinuation or irony.

Clause 318 defines the publishing of a libel. Then, 319 deals with "publishing upon invitation":

No one commits an offence by publishing defamatory matter upon the invitation or challenge of the person defamed thereby. . . .

Section 320 deals with the publishing of proceedings of Courts of Justice. Section 321 says:

No one commits an offence by publishing to either the Senate, or House of Commons, or to any Legislative Council, Legislative Assembly or House of Assembly, defamatory matter contained in a petition to the Senate, or House of Commons, or to any such Council or Assembly, or by publishing by order or under the authority of the Senate, or House of Commons, or any such Council or Assembly, any paper containing defamatory matter or by publishing, in good faith and without ill-will to the person defamed, any extract from or abstract of any such paper.

The clause that interests us specially at this moment is 322, which reads as follows:

No one commits an offence by publishing in good faith, for the information of the public, a fair report of the proceedings of the Senate, or House of Commons, or any committee thereof, or of any Council or Assembly aforesaid, or any committee thereof, or of the public proceedings preliminary or final heard before any court exercising judicial authority, nor by publishing, in good faith, any fair comment upon any such proceedings.

Anyone brought before either Chamber of Parliament accused of violating a rule of the Commons or the Senate could perhaps plead the exception contained in clause 322. It is a question whether or not this clause abridges the privileges of the Commons and the Senate with regard to such a violation. In order to make it clear that the privileges of either House are not abridged, it is sought by this Bill to amend section 322 in the following terms:

Nothing in this section shall make it lawful to publish a report of any evidence taken or offered in any proceeding had before the Senate or the House of Commons, or any committee of the Senate or the House of Commons, upon any petition or bill relating to any matter of marriage or divorce, if the report is published without authority from or leave of the House in which the proceeding was had, or contrary to any rule, order or practice of that House.

This will make it clear that the House of Commons and the Senate can maintain respect for their rules, and anyone infringing upon them will be debarred from pleading the exception contained in clause 322.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from March 22 the adjourned debate upon the inquiry of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegates to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

Hon. WILLIAM ROCHE: Honourable gentlemen, thinking as I do that the important nature of the inquiry made by my right honourable friend deserves some further expansion, and, after hearing the elegant rhetorical address of the honourable member, I purpose to carry out that obligation this afternoon, and to thrust myself upon the indulgence of the House to aid me in doing so. Before I proceed any further, permit me to say that the sustained rhetorical address of my right honourable friend renewed the sentiment of pleasure with which I heard him address an audience in a distant city more than fifty years ago, on which occasion he displayed those qualities of oratorical eloquence which since, by study and practice, he has developed and improved until now his reputation for pre-eminence in oratory has extended over two hemispheres.

We are fortunate, honourable gentlemen, in having present with us three gentlemen who were eye-witnesses, and who can describe the scenes which they observed with accuracy and reliability; because a great deal of the information given to us on public events comes through channels which perhaps are not censored, but which seem to be directed along one line and to one purpose. Occasionally we hear of some revelation made in the Senate of the United States, or the Italians blurt out some information on current events which entirely reverses our opinion of those events, and produces a widespread sentiment that there are important facts concealed which, if revealed, might totally reverse our judgment and cause us to take other lines of action.

The plea of my right honourable friend was for the League of Nations—for its existence, its utility, its continuance,—and, as a consequence, that we should continue our subscriptions to its support. The League of Nations is a pretentions framework. It has a great aristocratic and costly Secretariat; it has an army of officials; it has all the accessories of clerks and subordinates; but it has neither physical nor pecuniary nor moral force. It has no physical force, because it has no army or navy to enforce its decrees; it has no pecuniary force, because it has no amassed treasure and exists only upon the subscriptions of the nations which belong to it; it has no moral force, although it may cajole or threaten inferior nations, because of the more important nations each seeks its own aggrandizement, and wants to seize upon any territories weakly defended, and there is no regard for the rights or interests of any other power.

The right honourable gentleman, though deploring the want of success on the part of the League of Nations and the relaxation of its activities, based his claim for its value upon the settlement of two questions on which there were disputes between nations. First of all, he declares, and probably truly, that it was the influence of the League of Nations that settled the dispute about the Aland Islands; and then he said it was the influence of the League of Nations which settled the dispute between Lithuania and Poland and the adjacent nations. I do not know what means the League employed, whether persuasion or a threat of force on the part of the great nations. But it was a very singular settlement. Russia claims that she settled the dispute. It was the policy of Empress Catharine II of Russia, when any of the smaller nations had a dispute about territory, to step in and calmly annex the territory and say to the disputants: "Now, what are you going to do about it?" The nations knew what the policy of Catharine II was, and they saw rising in the heavens the great bear, glittering as she ascended, and you know what the course of the disputing nations was. They feared her great claw would come down on the disputed territory, and they composed their differences and abstained from the arbitrament of war.

Following upon that was the Conference at Constantinople and at Smyrna, because the Turks had pushed the Greeks back from the seacoast, and there was a British cordon, with British territory marked off, and there were the various Allied lodgments, and so on. The representatives of the great nations were assembled at Constantinople and at Smyrna. They presented proposals and the Turks presented counter proposals; the Allies presented modified propositions, and the Turks presented more modified propositions; and finally the Allies presented ultimatums and the Turks presented ultimata. The dispute grew so imminent, it verged so closely on war, that the British Government forwarded regiments to Constantinople to maintain order. The British fleet was summoned from Malta; the guns of the fleet were trained on the Turkish batteries and places of lodgment. A frantic call went out from some of the newspapers that the Government should conscript a contingent and send it on a thirteenth crusade—it might be to another Gallipoli—to fight the Turks. At this juncture Italy put in its claim to Smyrna, saying that it was promised Smyrna as an inducement and consideration for entering into the Great War. And here our friends the Russians came into the controversy and settled the question for the time. They said: "If Turkey is attacked, Russia will be at the back of Turkey." The British Government saw that there were in India two hundred million sympathisers with the Turks full of disquiet and unrest. They knew the consequences of Turkey and Russia uniting. They feared for India and India was more valuable to the British Government than the oil wells at Mosul or the control of the waters of the Dardanelles. So the Conference at Constantinople broke up. The representatives packed their trunks and went home. And the convocation at Lausanne broke up also as abruptly as did the Congress of Vienna, when Castlereagh and Matternich and others met to carve up France and alter the map of Europe: it was broken up by news that came upon them like a bombshell that Napoleon had left Elba, had landed at Cannes and was on the road to Paris.

While listening to my right honourable friend's description of the humble, curtailed and abject condition of Austria, I remembered an incident that occurred at the time of the Hungarian revolution. Louis Kossuth, the President, after the battle of Temesvar, and the defection of Georgei, escaped to Turkey, and thence went to the United States. Being a very eloquent and powerful speaker, he addressed public audiences in the cities of the United States and created a sentiment that the United States, being the guardian and exponent of liberty, should interfere in the affairs of Austria and reinstate the Hungarian republic. Also, the fame of his eloquence reached Washington, and it was thought there might be a movement in the Congress of the United States tending to support the claim of Hungary. At that juncture the Charge d'Affaires of Austria at Washington intimated to the State Department that they should banish Louis Kossuth from the United States and refrain from any propaganda of liberty in Hungary and Austria, and threatened them, if they would not do so, with the displeasure of the Emperor of Austria. Millard Fillmore was President of the United States at that time, and Daniel Webster was Secretary of State, when he sent that celebrated letter to Chevalier de Huselman, the Charge d'Affaires of Austria, saying that the Empire of Austria was only a patch on the United States, that the United States could manage its own affairs, that it was the guardian of liberty in the western world, and that it would extend its influence for the support of liberty wherever it thought it was the obligation or the duty of the United States to do so, undeterred by the displeasure of the Emperor of Austria. The present condition of Austria is as described in the graphic language of my right honourable friend, and the United States is now among the very first, if not the very first, nation of the earth.

My right honourable friend went on to say that there were thirty-one nations that supported the League. There are thirty-one nations, but they are all impecunious. They wanted money from the League of Nations; they thought that the League had a great treasury, and that all they had to do was to apply and they would get it. But the League had nothing in its purse to give them. Then they applied to the great powers severally, but not one of them had either the will or the money to bestow on those impecunious powers. As a last resort they turned their despairing glances to the United States and said: "We owe you money already, it is quite true, but we want to borrow from you more money, in order that we may extend our industries, cultivate our commerce, and earn money; then we will pay you back what you lend us now, and, later on, pay you what we owe you." But the United States said: "You owe us money; you have paid neither the principal nor the interest, and you want from us more money to pay us back what we have loaned you; how do we know and what security have we that you will not take away the money now given you, and pay your soldiers, buy munitions, and go on in your old game of war aggrandizement?"

Suddenly a trumpet was blown in the streets, there was a sound of battle in the land, and we heard the commanding voice of my honourable friend from Alberta (Hon. Mr. Griesbach). After paying a deserved compliment to the speech of the right honourable gentleman who made the motion, he went on with an analytical inquiry as to the causes of war which he ascribed to fear, greed, and ambition. There is another cause, which perhaps might be included in his first category. It is this: that to all autocratic and imperial governments, there is pronounced opposition; the antagonism is great; the people are jealous of their rights; they are averse to the restrictions imposed upon them by the military establishment, and averse to paying the cost of them. These imperial monarchs must have a standing army. They have officers, generals, and others around them who receive large emoluments and honour and glory from their presence in the army and their commands. Monarchs want to use this army to keep down the opposition of socialists, republicans, democrats, and those who are averse to military power. They know that if a war is declared the people will be on their side. That is, when a nation is at war all citizens are concentrated to overcome the adverse nation. They pay no attention to political or social circumstances. All their interests are bound up in the fact that the nation must conquer or die. So wars are projected simply because the governments want to suppress the opposition at home. It was so under the revolution in France; it was so under the first Napoleon; it was so under the third Napoleon, when socialistic influences drove the French into war. One of the ministers of France in the old Directory, Carnot, said: "We have 300,000 men under arms, and we must send them as far away as we can and as fast as we can lest they return and cut all our throats."

War is no pastime. War is not an occasion for the exchange of amenities or courtesies. Soldiers are animated by the worst passions that can afflict the human race. They are bent on destroying as many of the opposing soldiers as possible. They wish to destroy property—to sink, burn and destroy. They wish to bring the war to a close by the destruction of those opposed to them, and they use the most improved and most destructive weapons of war to carry out their purpose. Is it not a disgrace to our civilization, and a blot upon it, that perhaps some of the best inquiring and inventive minds are engaged in devising and employing implements of the most violent and dangerous kind, which will destroy their fellow beings with the utmost rapidity, and most effectively, and yet that those men are highly rewarded by Christian nations?—that even the churches invoke the Divine protection over the forces of the earth, the sea, and the air, knowing that perhaps those forces of the air are carrying their destructive bombs hundreds or thousands of miles away from the scene of conflict to throw them down upon harmless citizens inhabiting towns and villages and hamlets, destroying the innocent, and expecting that God will bestow His blessing upon those who murder and destroy His creatures.

The honourable gentleman, I regret to say, departed from his inquiry, and did not inform us in the slightest degree as to the causes of peace, which he might observe and co-ordinate, but went into a recitation of the cruelties and enormities which had been inflicted on the Allied troops by the Germans in the war. Why reiterate these enormities? Why repeat and treasure up the cruelties of soldiers? Why recount the outrages that have been inflicted? It will serve no good purpose. It only minister to the worst passions of mankind—to savagery, to cruelty, to retaliation, to revenge. Why record and perpetuate these? Why convey intelligence of them to the people at large, and reproduce results of such forces and evils? Better far to cast the mantle of oblivion over all those outrages, over all those cruelties, over all those offences, and pray that the Angel of Peace may descend, lighten the earth with his glory, and lay hold on that old demon of war and bind him with chains of darkness for a thousand years.

Honourable gentlemen, there are ruffians in every army. There are men who vent their spite in vindictiveness on the defenceless and the weak. Perhaps there may not be many Bayards or many Sidneys amongst the armies of the present day; yet there are, even amongst the humble soldiers, men whose names ought to be written on the bright rolls of fame. Take, for instance, Michael O'Leary, that gallant Irishman. He marched up alone to a dugout where there were fifteen Germans, and summoned them in such a terrible voice in Irish that they thought there was a detachment behind him, and they came out, escaping from their misery and starvation. O'Leary surrounded them and marched them down as prisoners below the British lines, where they could get a square meal three times a day, and witness the recreations which took place in the interval between combats in the trenches.

Midway between Loos and Armentières there were four British observation balloons suspended in the air and attached to the earth by cables. One morning a German airplane was seen coming towards them. The occupants of the three balloons put out their parachutes and descended safely to the earth. The inmates of the fourth balloon became entangled in their parachute and could not descend. The airplane went away in the distance, circled around, and came back again. The inmates were still entangled in that balloon. The airplane rose above them and went away in the distance, and came back again. In the meantime the men in the balloon got out their parachute and descended to the earth. The German got out his machine gun. Seeing that the inmates were saved, he fired a shot, and a great explosion took place.

In the British lines not very far distant from the German trenches there was a young officer lately appointed in command of the soldiers there. Like a great many young officers, he imagined that his predecessors did not know very much about the art of war, and he thought that they had become indolent; they did not adventure upon the enemy, did not conduct any midnight raids through the barbed wire, and so on. So in the interval between the sniping he would lift up his head above the parapet and survey the trenches. He did that with impunity. One morning there was a longer lull than usual, and he put up his head to take a more deliberate survey. He might have continued for a longer time, but above the opposite trench up went a board on which was written in good English with chalk: "If you don't take down that head, it will be my duty to fire at it."

Now I turn and respond to the request of my honourable friend from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien). He invited us to discuss with him certain points, and before I do discuss them I bear testimony to the eloquent, impassioned, and dramatic address which he delivered in defence of the position which he took. I go with my gentle guide. First of all, we go to the Disarmament Conference at Washington. The British representatives were there, the Canadian representatives were there, the representatives of Japan were there, and the representatives from France were there. They agreed generally that there should be disarmament, and that the nations should commence disarmament. The British agreed that they would disband their army that they had aleady commenced to disband; they agreed that they would scrap their ships, and in conformity with that agreement they scrapped 32 of their battle cruisers and other ships. The Americans agreed that they would diminish their troops, and disband them, and that they would also scrap their navies. The Japanese agreed that they would diminish their navy; the Italians did the same; and all agreed that they would abstain from the use of submarines. But when it came to the turn of France, France refused to diminish her great army of 750,000 men and refused to abstain from the use of submarines. Mr. Aristide Briand, the French representative, returned to Paris. His conduct was approved by the Chamber of Deputies and by the President of France.

And now France has retained its vast army; it has augmented its flotilla of aircraft until they are the most formidable in Europe, and lately it has issued a program for the building of ships—six capital cruisers, 24 destroyers, 24 torpedo boats, and 50 first-class submarines. That is the design. Will my honourable guide conduct me to the city of Valenciennes? There is a sound of martial music in the air; what are the inhabitants on tiptoe there to observe? Coming up the main street there is the splendid cavalry of France. Then come the general officers; then the band playing the "Ça-ira" and the "Marseillaise" to inflame the ardour of the soldiers. Then there comes the splendid infantry of France from the line and from the war, with their military overcoats and their helmets on, their long rifles and their glittering bayonets. After that the sullen faces of the Senegal troops marching in good state and even line. Then come the men with the machine guns on their shoulders, and after that the great parks of artillery. Lumbering after them come the armoured cars. Then come the airplanes overhead. Where are they going, my honourable friend? What is this force? That is the army of occupation. They are going first into the Rhineland, and afterwards they will be transported into the Ruhr. What means this, my honourable friend? What is wanting in that tide of living valour rolling on the foe? What you miss is that cordon of custom-house officers. They are not there.

I will put one plain and practical question to my honourable friend and guide. He has described in graphic language the condition of Germany, its prosperity, the industry of its people, and their efforts to compensate for the injuries that war had inflicted upon them. Which is the most likely to pay that indemnity—a prosperous, industrious, semi-wealthy Germany, or a fretful, poverty-stricken, poor, frightened Germany? Will the last one be likely to pay the indemnity so quickly as the other?

Now I put another question. My honourable friend has told us, and others have said, that 67 per cent of the produce of Germany out of which this war indemnity is to be paid comes from the Ruhr valley. How can Germany pay that money if the French have taken possession of that which produces the 67 per cent?—67 per cent of the motive power in coal, of the produce of the iron and steel works, the chemical works, the dye works, of the woolen and cotton fabrics. How, when France has put a strangle-hold around the sources of produce for payment of that indemnity, and says, "We will hold them until you pay it"—knowing that they cannot pay, and yet they hold possession—"What we have we will hold, and we will extend our possession of territory"?

Germany has given up her battleships; she has handed over her splendid passenger ships; she has handed over her coal, steel and iron, also chemicals, dyestuffs, woollen and cotton goods, and a thousand million in gold marks. My friend says France did not get them. Who got them? Germany has certainly lost them. The Germans have not asked for total remission of their indemnity, but only for a postponement of the payment of the instalment. England asked the United States for an extension of sixty-two years, and it was granted her.

I come now to a part in which my honourable friend was more pathetic and tragic perhaps than before, and that was the desolation and ruin of France He said that the towns and villages and property of France were destroyed—that the abomination of desolation reigned in the land. Over how much of the land? Would that my honourable friend, with his powers of description, had extended his travels into southern France, into the regions south of Paris or to the west, along the ocean ,and contrasted the prosperity of that rich and fertile country with the prosperity and the richness and cultivation of Germany. How much of the destruction affected those parts of France, I would ask my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: I suppose we have to thank Germany for that.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The main part of the destruction of towns and villages in France was done by the Allies in trying to drive out the Germans. Take one battery of our Canadian artillery—say six guns—and there were hundreds of guns. They discharged 1,000 great shells from their six-inch howitzers in 24 hours, raining shot upon the towns and villages and houses and every other place that could lodge a German, and they beat down the city of Lens, Ancre, Souchy, Mont St. Eloi, and all those other towns and villages behind them. There were 9.2 batteries discharging 400-pound shells on every point where it was considered that the Germans would find a lodgment. More than half of the devastation wrought in France was wrought by the Allies. And does my honourable friend say the poor inhabitants of Germany, who were averse to the war and averse to that military establishment, should be compelled to pay for that devastation which was wrought by the Government they have overthrown and by the Allies who were endeavouring to drive out the soldiers of that Government?

Now I will refer briefly—and I hope my honourable friends will bear with me—to the special privations of the people. A great French soldier, the Emperor Napoleon, said that an army travelled on its stomach. Let us compare the diet of the French soldiers with the diet of the German soldiers. What had the French? The French had plenty of meat for their soup, plenty of vegetables, plenty of salads. They had good bread, because France is great wheat-producing country, and they had flour from America, and they had all that the villages could supply. In addition to that they had two litres of wine to each soldier every day. What had the poor German?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Outside of beer.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: He had vegetable soup.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Too good for him.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: He had a little horse-meat. He had a little black bread.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC: Too good for him.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: And he had coffee made out of burnt rye. Now, if my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), abstemious as he is, had been an officer in command of a battalion or brigade and had found in one of those houses 500 bottles of Vieux Cliquot or Pomard or any of those wines, I think he would have commandeered them and drunk them, receipt or no receipt.

Now let us contrast the privations of the people of France with those of the people of Germany. What had the French people? They had all the resources of that splendid land of France untouched. The whole seaboard was open to them. They could get supplies of meat from South America, and from the United States, and flour and all the canned goods and luxuries. They enjoyed them, and they enjoyed the money that was paid by the Allied troops and their own troops, because they were all paid in francs. The villagers could bring their supplies to the troops and get high prices for them all. What did the Germans have? Meat was too scarce and too dear to get any of it. What they had was some black bread, mingled with bark of trees and grass roots, and a little coffee made out of burnt rye. What nation suffered the most privation? Where was the most devastation? Who suffered most by the calamity of war?

My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) went on to cite the authorities which justified the ocupation of the Ruhr Valley. He cited first of all two ironmasters in England. I dare say those ironmasters would rejoice at anything which would remove the German competition and allow them to sell their iron and their steel to any nation that wished it. That accounts for their approval.

And there was our friend Lord Rothermere. I pass over him, because he has had a domestic calamity: his mother is newly married, and there is a dipute about the will—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: His sister-in-law.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: And probably the fifty millions which his father acquired by honest toil during the war may be divided up among the lawyers. We pass over him.

Then there was a German-American banker, Kuhn, who approved of the occupation of the Ruhr. I think it very probable that he would like to lend some money at a good rate of interest and on good security. That would account for him.

Then there was Mr. Daniels, ex-Secretary of the Navy of the United States; and I think that his occupation was to secure good material for the next presidential election.

Next I come to home sources, namely, those good moderate Conservative papers, the Montreal Gazette and the Montreal Star. The editorial writers of those two papers are very clever writers indeed. They are quite alive to the signs of the times. But they are no prophets. They live in the midst of a French atmosphere, and they must colour their editorials by the prevalent public opinion. They have their advertisements to get in and they have their papers to sell, and that may account for some of their approval of the expedition to the Ruhr and the occupation thereof.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: That is a great compliment.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: But I come to what my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Beaubien) considered was a clincher, and that was the opinion of Lloyd George, who threatened some of the reprisals and some of the actions which the French alone have since undertaken to perform. He threatened that the Allies might take possession of the Ruhr and execute punishment upon the Germans. Did Lloyd George say that France should go alone? Did he say that France should be the claimant and judge and executioner? Did he say that France should take possession of the territory, overturn the general and municipal governments, execute martial law and shoot the inhabitants who resisted? No. He said the Allies might do those things. And have the Allies done them? The United States had a contingent on the Rhine, and they withdrew it. The Italians warned France that it was a dangerous step. England used its influence to remonstrate with France, and holds its contingent on the Rhine only, because they say they do not wish to disrupt the alliance with France.

There is no precedent for the seizure and occupation of territory in time of peace. There was no precedent when the French invaded Prussia during the Seven Years War and were turned back at the battle of Rossbach. Louis XIV was considered unfortunate because he had no good pretext for his wars.

There was no precedent when the Duke of Brunswick passed into Belgium on his road to Paris in his effort to restore the Bourbons, but was checked by the French at the Battles of Valmy, Fleurus and Jemappes. There was no precedent when Napoleon invaded Prussia, when he confiscated property, put garrisons in the towns and levied contributions upon the inhabitants, because it was in the course of war and it was after Jena and Aurstadt in 1806. There was no precedent when the Germans invaded France and captured Paris in 1870, because they had fought battles, the warfare was continuous, they were in the course of the active operations of war when they made the demand. There is no precedent for the occupation of territory after there has been an armistice and after peace has been declared and agreed upon.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: What about the invasion of Belgium?

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: My honourable friend wants to hear about the invasion of Belgium, and I will tell him. The army of France was drawn up. The Germans knew that there was an alliance between France and Russia. The Chancellor, Von Bethman Hollweg, offered to England a defensive and offensive alliance. Germany had the power in its army to withstand France and stave off Russia The Germans knew that the Allies had made their alliance and were ready. England sent nine millions of pounds and munitions of war to Russia to commence hostilities. They chose between Germany and Russia, and they declared war upon Germany. There is an answer to my honourable friend. It was only a question of hours whether France would invade Germany or whether the Germans would invade France, and the Germans were wise that they staved off the opposing forces from their own territory and carried the war into Africa.

Now, honourable gentlemen, the French are occupying the Ruhr Valley and the towns, and they have performed the military acts that I have described. Let them beware. The civil population is already resisting them. The French cannot be content with the operations that they have begun and with the seizures they have made of the towns: they must go on and extend their military operations.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: To Berlin.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: The spirit of the Germans will be roused. They are a proud, patriotic, and devoted people. Sentiment will spread all over the land, and it will be the general watchword: "It never shall be France's, the fair, the German Rhine." The people will take the matter in hand. They will hear that the nations had gathered around the Fatherland like wolves around the protecting fires of the travellers. They will hear about the confiscations and contributions that Napoleon imposed upon the towns and villages of Germany when he occupied it. They know of the two millions of the sons of Germany who will never come back, whose bones lie mingled with the soil of the marshes in Russia, on the plains of Austria, in the valleys of Italy, and in those long barrows in France. They look upon the emaciated forms of those four millions of wounded men that subsist on charity in their towns and villages. The whole spirit of the nation will be roused. There may be another Ernst Moritz Ardt; there may be another Tugendbund, another General Deyork, and later on perhaps another Leipsic.

This precedent of being claimant, judge and executioner may be a very bad precedent for England. Russia has a demand on England for reparations. The Russians allege that England engineered and supported Wrangel's attack on Southern Russia, which was very difficult for the present government to put down; that the British carried away the general in a battleship and landed him at Varna. They have presented a claim for remuneration to the British Government and been refused. They may say now "It is a policy of the nation. A precedent has been established. We have demanded reparation and we have not received it. We will take the law into our own hands. We will march an expedition into Asia Minor, we will take the Mosul oil wells and hand them over to our allies the Turks. We have already a suzerainty over half of Persia. We will take suzerainty over the other half, that Britain has." The Russians fairly and firmly established in Persia, the road to India is open.

To sum up the whole matter and bring it to a conclusion, what ought to be our policy?

Hon. Mr. GORDON: France.

Hon. Mr. ROCHE: To refrain from European entanglements, abstain from European intrigues and aggressions, turn our eyes homeward. We are already overburdened with the weight of debt from the former war. Let us have peace. Let us cultivate our fields, extend our manufactures and industries, dig our mines, plow the seas, perfect our transportation, extend our commerce to every nation of the earth that will receive our commodities, and take their goods in exchange. Then, with prudence and patience, and hope and courage, and firm reliance upon Divine guidance, let us work out our own destiny in the western world.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, it is not my purpose to detain the House at any great length in contributing to this debate introduced by the right honourable member from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster); but I do feel constrained to make a few observations in order to bring to the attention of the House the views expressed by a large class of people in Europe, confined to no particular country, but spread over many, concerning this very important and vital question.

The right honourable gentleman who introduced this subject in the Senate fascinated all his hearers in that memorable three-hour speech which he made. He built up a case which was at the time the admiration, I am sure, of every honourable gentleman who heard it.

Not long afterwards the honourable member from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) made a valuable and forceful contribution to the debate. He spoke from a rather different standpoint—from the standpoint of one who had participated in the great struggle, who had seen the sufferings and sacrifices on the field, who felt that the French people were justified in the course they were pursuing

Then followed the eloquent address of the honourable member from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien), full of patriotism and enthusiasm for and on behalf of the French Government. Every one of the honourable gentlement offering contributions to this debate, viewing the question from a different standpoint, has been equally earnest and honest in the opinion and conviction which he expressed. I wonder, however, if we have not thus far overlooked a very important factor and feature, namely, that wars are not conducted for commercial purposes, or at least ought not to be? Listening to the remarks of some of the honourable gentlemen who have spoken, one rather wonders whether or not the collection of reparations, the satisfying of a spirit of vengeance in forcing the repayment of a debt incurred, or the risk and possible necessity of the further shedding of human blood to accomplish those tasks, should be our first consideration.

All over the continent of Europe there are many millions of men who contributed a great deal to the sacrifice that was made during the war, and dependent on them are many millions more of helpless women and children in humble life upon whom the burden fell even more seriously and heavily than upon those who were more fortunately situated so far as position and the comforts of this world are concerned. I think this country should listen with some attention to the voice of that vast multitude as it speaks through organized channels. In Great Britain—England, Scotland and Wales alone—there are approximately 7,145,000 organized workers in all classes of activity. They have given expression to an official view on this question, which was expressed very clearly in a publication issued by the International Federation of Trade Unions at Amsterdam on January 26th last. The view expressed is not confined to British trade unions, but is that of the International Federation of Trade Unions, which covers almost all the countries on the continent of Europe. That organization, representing several millions of workers, referred to this question in the following words:

Prolonged and thorough consideration was then given to the precarious international situation that has arisen as a result of the military occupation of the Ruhr district. All possible avenues of action were explored when ultimately it was decided:

1. To enter a most emphatic protest against the adoption of the policy of force;

2. To insist on a settlement of the whole question by arbitration;

3. To instruct delegates to get into touch immediately with their members in the various countries, so that full information can be at the disposal at the Bureau in order that a definite decision, that shall be in accordance with the resolutions passed at the London, Rome and Hague conference, may be taken.

Such, briefly, was the view expressed by those who are responsible to the International Trade Unions of Europe.

I desire to make it clear that the views of the British trade unions, or the federation of unions, are not the views of radical labour men, commonly known as socialists or communists, but are the views expressed by the British labour movement, which has a membership of 7,145,000, and which includes all of the organized workmen in England, of whatever sort they may be, and represents the views of conservative labour men as well as those of the radicals. There are more forcible expressions of opinion by more radical organizations, such as the socialist organization in France itself, but the quotations which I shall give to the House are from the standard, conservative, reasonable, thinking labour elements of Europe, and not from those who may be regarded as radical. The National Joint Council of British Trade Unions in Congress in January last gave expression to the following views:

The National Joint Council of the Trades Union Congress General Council, the Executive Committee of the Labour Party and the Parliamentary Labour Party repudiates in the most formal manner all responsibility for approving, directly or indirectly the policy now being pursued by the French Government towards Germany.

It regards this policy as an invasion of a neighbouring State in time of peace, without any justification, either under the Treaty of Versailles, or any principle of international law, and consequently as an act of war.

This invasion constitutes an attack on the self-determination of the German people, as well as an attack on the rights of the working class, who are treated as mere pawns or chattels.

It threatens all Europe, not only with further economic disintegration, but with widespread anarchy and the renewal of actual war.

This policy is calculated to cripple Germany, destroy her credit, and automatically diminish her capacity to make reparation payments.

This policy is destined also to have the most disastrous effect upon the working class of Great Britain, where unemployment and its attendant evils, resulting in large measure from the collapse of Germany's purchasing power, will now be intensified.

It demands of the British Government that it shall:

(a) Refrain from all measure of support or co-operation with the French troops in their present action, as, for example, by allowing such troops to pass through British occupied territory, or allowing this territoy to be used by them for any military operation.

(b) Disassociate itself by a formal declaration from all complicity with the present policy of the French Government.

(c) Refuse to take advantage in any way of the French Government's action, whether by sharing in cash payments, coal, or deliveries in kind, which may be obtained as a result of such action.

(d) Take all possible steps to secure the withdrawal of all the armies of occupation.

(e) Support the United States Government in securing the submission of the present dispute to an impartial body.

(f) Make a formal proposition for the reference of the whole reparation problem (including the present action of the French Government) to the League of Nations.

Such is the official view of over seven million organized men in Great Britain. The Labour party in the British Parliament has, as honourable gentlemen know, very largely sympathized with the action of the Government itself on this particular question. The only criticism they have is that they think the British Government has not advanced far enough in its efforts to pursue and force its demands for arbitration rather than force.

I think, honourable gentlemen, without quoting expressions of opinion of a similar nature that come from Czecho-Slovakia, Spain, Italy, Belgium and Germany, that it would be interesting to the House, and I hope convincing, to know what are the views of the organized labour movement in France itself. Labour in France is organized in two different ways. There is the political organization known as the Socialist branch in the French Parliament. The views of that organization are voiced independently of the organized trade union movement in France. The opinion of the French Socialists is contained in this same document that I hold in my hand; I am not going to burden the record or the House with it, but shall quote the officially expressed view of the saner, more conservative, solid trade union movement of the Republic of France as expressed in this same report issued in Amsterdam. The French General Confederation of Labour issued the following appeal on the 14th of January this year:

Within the past few days the Government and Parliament of our country by means of the sword and arbitrary arrest, have defeated the ends of justice and common sense. Beyond our frontiers they have carried to a culminating point a policy of force and mad adventure, while at the same time, within our frontiers, by making use of the Nationalist majority in the Chamber, they are applying brutal reactionary measures denying the right of free speech and Parliamentary control, in the interests of Government dictatorship.

The General Confederation of Labour regards these reactionary measures—arrest and arbitrary house searching—as time worn trickery intended to mask the actions of the Government which are as questionable as they are baneful. The General Confederation of Labour protests against these violations of individual liberty and the right of free speech.

It repeats that the military occupation of the Ruhr district is a dangerous mistake and an infamy.

A mistake, because the burden of making reparation payments is increased by the heavy cost of maintaining the military forces in the occupied area, and by the cost of maintaining and feeding a densely populated area, while no indication can be given that this occupation will yield any advantageous result.

A mistake, because the President of the Council himself has said that "England may be right when she says that a policy of pledges will produce nothing." The workers of France are already beginning to pay for this mistake by a 20 per cent increase in taxation.

The military occupation of the Ruhr is an infamy because it will only revive hatred and sow the seeds of fresh conflicts between nations which are seeking reconciliation and peace; an infamy because it is an affirmation of the principle "might is right" which condemns a section of the proletariat to slavery, and regards human nature as an article of commerce.

The General Confederation of Labour, in virtue of its past history; proud of the fact that is has always given full attention to the question of reparation and asserting that the French proletariat have defended the interests of the sufferers of the devastated areas by proposing the reconstruction of these areas by pacific methods, condemns this policy of violence abroad and reaction at home.

It appeals to the workers of France not to allow themselves to be used as accomplices in this double crime. It says to the French workers:

Range yourselves on the side of the General Confederation of Labour; protest against the monstrous errors which are being committed, ostensibly in your name. Do not forget that the military occupation of the Ruhr may have fatal consequences, and may lead to fresh bloody conflicts.

Demand that the reparation question be submitted immediately to a court of arbitration. We must appeal to the League of Nations to settle this economic difficulty, removing it from the sphere of political rivalry, military ambition and financial and capitalist intrigue.

Let us win over to our side the public opinion of our land and let us make preparations to put into practice, if necessary, the resolutions of the Hague World Peace Congress.

There follows in the same paper an even more forcibly expressed opinion from an organization known as the Committee of Action for the Rehabilitation of the Devastated Areas, a body which is made up exclusively of people who had their homes and property utterly destroyed, and many of their relatives killed. In the face of all this experience and sacrifice, these people are now of the opinion that the military occupation of the Ruhr at the present time is a mistake. I express no personal opinion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Where is the evidence that the people in the devastated regions are against the occupation of the Ruhr?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: My honourable friend desires some evidence of that. At the risk of delaying the House a moment further I will read it:

The Committee of Action of the Devastated Areas, an organization representing the war victims in the devastated areas of France, has passed a resolution referring to the occupation of the Ruhr district. It will be remembered that this Committee of Action drew up an agreement in Berlin on October 24th last with the German Union of Social Building Corporations; an agreement which guaranteed the collaboration of the building workers of Germany in the matter of supply of labour and materials for the reconstruction of the devastated areas. Insasmuch as the war victims in the devastated areas are deeply interested in the question of reparations, their moderate and common-sense attitude is not lacking in interest. The resolution is as follows:

"This Committee of Action of the Devastated Areas representing the opinion of the majority of the war victims in the devastated areas of France; meeting at the time when French troops are carrying out the occupation of the Ruhr district; and passing this resolution proposed by the Secretary M. Doucedame, General Councillor of the Aisne Department; recalls the efforts which it has made during the past two years to make general reconstruction possible, in collaboration with the workers of Germany, and with the aid of German materials and labour; regrets that its programme, which has been recommended since April 1921, which paved the way for the Wiesbaden agreement, and which led to the Berlin agreements of October 24th, 1922, with the German Union of Social Building Corporations, has not been accepted.

"For these reasons, this Committee of Action calls upon the Government to endeavour to solve the problem of reparations by methods which will serve general interests and develop friendship between the nations, inasmuch as such are the only methods which can assure a safe and lasting peace based on the triumph of the spirit of democracy."

I have presumed to take up a little of the time of this House to lay before honourable gentlemen, not my views, but the official views of the millions of workingmen who represent such a large proportion of the population of France, England, Germany, and other countries concerned. I think it is only fair, when considering this question from all angles, that the views and feelings of such large portions of the people should not be lost sight of by honourable gentlemen in coming to a conclusion as to where Canada's duty and obligations lie in this matter. For my own part, I feel that Canada, like every other nation of the world, at the present time abhors and will endeavour to evade war, if at all possible. In my opinion very serious provocation will be required before there will be any response from the men of Canada to an invitation to participate in another war; but all this foolish talk, as I deem it to be, that there will be no more war, may just as well be dismissed and forgotten at once, because we can look back over history as far as it is revealed to us, and see how century after century, and frequently more often, just as soon as one generation passes away another takes its place, the determination of the one is forgotten in the next, and the same old feuds arise and the same old medicines are administered, and the casualties go on. If this world is ever to reach that desired state when wars will permanently be a thing of the past it can obviously only be through the instrumentality of such an organization as the League of Nations; and it does seem to me that France, while perhaps having a perfect right to exercise her own judgment and act in her own way, might well have given more serious attention and greater weight to the views expressed by Great Britain, the United States and Italy, all of whom were allies, and useful allies, when the struggle itself was on. I can only express the hope that no great evil may result from what I regard as hasty, if not unwise, action on the part of that great nation.

It seems to me that all men in public life might with profit to themselves and to the state which they serve, give more attention to the value of human life and happiness, and to its maintenance and preservation, rather than to its destruction. That, in my opinion, is the underlying feature in this all-important question of war and peace. War debases men. Peace ought not to have that effect. Should we not bend our energies in that direction, rather than take chances of pursuing policies and encouraging governments along lines that are apt to bring to us a repetition of the disasters and sacrifices and suffering that we have so latedly experienced by reason of war?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Chapais, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

KENT NORTHERN RAILWAY

DISCUSSION—MOTION WITHDRAWN

On the notice of motion:

By the Hon. Mr. Bourque:

That an Order of the Senate do issue for a Return to include all correspondence since 1921, relating to the acquisition by the Government of the Kent Northern Railway, located in New Brunswick.

Hon. T. J. BOURQUE: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to make a few remarks in connection with this motion, because the subject is a very important one to that part of the country from which I come. If I have already placed on the Order Paper a couple of notices of inquiries in connection with the Kent Northern Railway, it is because the conditions in that section of the country have become more or less unbearable on account of the service that we are getting there.

I might say at the outset that the Kent Northern Railway, in the Province of New Brunswick, is the only railway which has not been taken over by the Canadian National Railways. Had the original plans been carried out when the I.C.R. was built, I think the I.C.R. would have run along the shore line, that is, possibly from Chatham to Shediac or Moncton, and then it would not have been necessary to build in the county of Kent two branch lines, one of them called the Moncton and Buctouche Railway, and the other the Kent Northern Railway. So, about forty years ago, the Kent Northern Railway was built, touching the I.C.R. about 45 miles north of Moncton, and running to the town of Richibucto, the shire town of the county of Kent. This railway was built with a subsidy from the Federal Government and one from the Provincial Government of New Brunswick. Brown Brothers, of Charlotte county, if my memory serves me correctly, were the builders, and they operated this road for a number of years. Eventually, about twenty years ago, or a little more, a local company was formed in the county of Kent, composed mostly of men from the towns of Richibucto and Rexton, and they bought over this Kent Northern Railway and operated it for quite a number of years. Later it was bought by an estate or a party from the province of Ontario, and it is now controlled by the National Trust Company. You can see that there are reasons for thinking that the Kent Northern Railway is possibly a paying proposition, as it has already changed hands three times. But the time has come when the service on the branch lines is possibly not what it should be, and unfortunately, during the past winter, which was one of the hardest winters we have had for many years, that section of the country has suffered severely. There was no communication between the main line and Richibucto from the 3rd of March to the 3rd of April, and I may add that from the 1st of January to the 3rd of April there have been only about eighteen or twenty trips. It may be said that other roads were also blocked; but they were not to any extent compared with this one. The reasons are very plain to see. The Kent Northern has not adequate equipment to work with. There is not on that road an efficient snow-plow. There are three engines, which are practically out of date. I might mention, by the way, that on the 29th of January I spent almost a whole night in going about 10 miles from the town of Richibucto, where they were trying to get through to Kent Junction.

The press has on several occasions called attention to the condition of affairs. I have here a short item from one of our local papers.

> Travellers report that the Kent Northern has been blocked by snow since March 8 and that Richibucto has been isolated at various other times during the winter, greatly to the inconvenience of shippers merchants and the public in general. The railway is a privately owned one, running from the shire town of Kent Co. to Kent Junction on the main northern line of the Canadian National Railways. The equipment, like that of many branch lines is inadequate to cope with the abnormal snow-fall of the winter and unlike other country lines has not the assistance of heavy engines and plows from Moncton.

My remarks will not be lengthy, but may I add that the attention of the Premier of New Brunswick, Hon. Pierre J. Veniot, was called to this condition of affairs, and I see by this newspaper report that he had an interview with the manager of the road, Mr. Clark, of the National Trust Company, and that he has notified the Company that unless traffic is resumed in a very short time steps would be taken whereby the road would be taken over at once. Furthermore, the members from the county of Kent supporting the Provincial Government had before the Legislature in Fredericton yesterday a motion which reads as follows:

> A resolution most important to Kent county was moved last evening by Mr. Bordage, of Kent county in re the transfer of the Kent Northern Railway as follows:
> Notice of Motion for Thursday, April 12th, 1923.
>
> By Mr. Bordage, seconded by Mr. Melanson.
> Whereas, the Minister of Railways and Canals of the Dominion of Canada by authority of Parliament, has adopted the policy of acquiring the branch lines tributary to the Intercolonial and other parts of the Canada National Railway system; and
> Whereas, pursuant to said authority, the Moncton and Buctouche Railway and other privately owned branch lines in the Province of New Brunswick were taken over and are now owned and operated as a part of the Canadian National Railway system thereby giving to the people served by said branch lines much improved and continued service; and
> Whereas, the Kent Northern Railway, a privately owned branch line in Kent County, New Brunswick, being the only branch line in the Province not taken over by the Dominion Government, links up the prosperous and thriving towns of Richibucto, Rexton and other growing settlements along its route, with the said Intercolonial Railway at Kent Junction, thereby serving approximately twenty thousand people in the County of Kent; and

Whereas, owing presumably to a want of efficient rolling stock, coupled with the "Laissez-faire" attitude on the part of the management, there has been no service whatever on said Railway between the third day of March and the third day of April last; that since January first to April third, inclusive service was maintained for twenty days only, resulting in the dislocation of business and untold hardship to the people generally.

Therefore be it Resolved, that in the opinion of this House it is expedient that the Federal Government, in continuance of its branch policy, be earnestly urged to take over and operate the said Kent Northern Railway as part of the Canadian National Railway system, at the earliest possible moment.

I will add only this, that the part of the country served by the Kent Northern Railway is one of the most important business centres in the Province of New Brunswick and is also a farming, fishing, and lumbering district. It includes, outside of the two towns of Rexton and Richibucto, many villages of great importance, such as St. Charles, St. Ignace, Richibucto, and Richibucto Village, and also the Richibucto River.

The people of the West complain about high freight rates, but were they living in my part of the country they would realize that it costs as much to get freight from Kent Junction to Ricibucto, only 27 miles, as it does from the city of Quebec to Kent Junction.

I place these facts before the House and the Government, not by any means for the purpose of criticism. We have on frequent occasions attempted to get other Governments to take this line over, but we have never succeeded in getting the company to accept a reasonable price for the line. It seems to me that, if the company is not prepared to act fairly as to the price, it is the duty of the Government of Canada to take over the line and operate it for the good of that section of the country. There is in the Maritime Provinces at the present time more or less unrest, and this is an opportunity whereby, if we have proper railway service, we shall be in a position to keep our young men at home instead of having them cross the line to the United States.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is not moving the motion, and I suggest that he do not, as I am imformed that no correspondence has been exchanged since 1921 with the owners of the Kent Northern Railway, or with any other parties, relating to the acquisition of that line by the Government. However, I will make it my duty to transmit the remarks of my honourable friend to the President of the Canadian National Railways, who has under his supervison the Intercolonial as well, in order that he may look into the matter and see what relief may be afforded at the least possible expense to the people in that part of New Brunswick.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Does the honourable gentleman wish to withdraw the motion?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He has not moved it.

The motion was withdrawn.

IMPERIAL OIL COMPANY

MOTION FOR RETURN

Hon. G. V. WHITE (for Hon. Mr. McLennan) moved:

(a) The authority granted to the Imperial Oil Company to lay a pipe line from the wharf of the Government Railway to their tanks at Barrack Point, Sydney, Nova Scotia, over land belonging to His Majesty.

(b) The amount charged for this privilege and for wharfage on a cargo or cargoes discharged there last autumn.

(c) For how long this charge is established.

(d) All correspondence between the Canadian National Railways or any department of the Government with the Imperial Oil Company or its representatives, and documents relating to this matter.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MOTION FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. TURGEON moved:

That an Order of the Senate do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters and telegrams between the Boards of Trade and Municipal Councils of the cities of Quebec, St. John, Moncton and Halifax, and the Government of Canada, the Canadian Railway Commission and the Directors of the Canadian National Railways since the 1st of July, 1922, to this date in reference to the utilization of the Transcontinental line to Quebec, St. John and Halifax.

The motion was agreed to.

COST OF THE CIVIL SERVICE

MOTION FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY moved:

That an order of the Senate do issue for a return showing the total cost of the Civil Service for the year ending March 31st, 1919, and for the year ending March 31st, 1922.

By the Civil Service is meant all the Government employees affected by the provisions of the Civil Service Act, 1919, and its amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADA'S TRADE

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government in this House in reference to some questions I placed on the Order Paper about six weeks ago, and which were changed to a motion for a return. I would like very much to have the return if possible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Can the honourable gentleman give me the date of the motion?

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I cannot give the exact date. It was in reference to the exportation of wheat and flour from Canada to the Orient and also to the countries of Europe.

GOVERNMENTAL PRIVATE CARS AND MOTOR CARS

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, I wish to call the attention of the honourable leader of the Government in this House to a series of questions which I put on the Order Paper, and which, by the request of the Minister, were changed to a motion for a return, which motion was passed some time ago. My questions related to the number of private cars or official cars on the Canadian National Railway System and also to the number of motor cars kept for the use of the gentlemen of the military department of the Government. There are an enormous number of them, but it does seem to me that with the staff which is at the disposal of the Government of this country it would be possible, in the length of time that has elapsed since that motion was passed, for some return to be made. I would not like to insinuate that there is any desire of concealment on the part of the Government, but it does seem passing strange to me that that return has not come down, and I would like to ask the honourable leader why it has not come down.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may inform my honourable friend that I received an answer which related simply to the Militia Department, and, as I felt that it did not cover all the ground covered by the motion of my honourable friend, I returned it for a complete statement. I will make inquiry in this respect, if my honourable friend wants a complete statement covering not only the Militia Department but all other Departments.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, and also the official cars on the Canadian National road. That question was included in the motion. I hope you will chase them up.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

HIS EXCELLENCY'S REPLY TO THE ADDRESS

The Hon. the SPEAKER presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

House further having declined during the present Session to approve a modification of such views.

COAL FOR NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISALLOWANCE OF NOVA SCOTIA STATUTES

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to direct the attention of the Leader of the House to an Order for a Return which was passed on the 6th of February, in relation to correspondence in regard to the disallowance of Nova Scotia statutes in 1922. I do not think the correspondence can be very lengthy. If my honourable friend could arrange to have it laid on the Table of the House, I would be much obliged.

The Senate resumed from April 12 the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegates to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

Hon. THOMAS CHAPAIS: Honourable gentlemen, like all my colleagues in this House, I have listened with deep interest to the very eloquent speech delivered by the right honourable member for the city of Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George Foster) on the European situation. Very seldom has the right honourable gentleman displayed more brilliantly his wonderful power of thought and mastery of language. Is it not to be regretted that some parts of that piece of oratory may have been deemed not altogether unfavourable to the stand taken by unrepentant Germany? I feel bound to state, as briefly as possible, on what points I disagree with my right honourable friend.

But before doing this I would like to say a few words in connection with the speech made at the last sitting of this House by the honourable member for the city of Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche). It was a fine speech, and in the meantime a most extraordinary one, at least in some parts. It sounded the note of charity, of good-will, of oblivion towards past deeds and struggles. In themselves such feelings are surely praiseworthy; but they should not be allowed to supersede the rights of justice. Where justice remains in abeyance, charity and oblivion may stand suspended. Guilt and wrong, responsibility and moral obligation to repair, are not to be expunged by merely appealing to good-will and conciliation. The Franco-German situation now under debate in this House involves a paramount question of justice. Justice claims reparation, and justice commands enforcement, if good-will fails to comply.

The honourable member wants to know which is the most likely to pay the stipulated indemnity—a prosperous, industrious, semi-wealthy Germany or a fretful, poverty-stricken, poor, frightened Germany? Will the one be likely to pay the indemnity as quickly as the other? The answer seems obvious. It is from the prosperous, industrious, semi-wealthy Germany that reparation is asked, according to conditions thoroughly debated and finally accepted; and it is the fear of losing that wealth and prosperity that is now used as a weapon to induce reluctant Germany to fulfil her obligations.

The honourable member said in his speech:

> The Germans have not asked for total remission of their indemnity, but only for a postponement of the payment of the instalment. England asked the United States for an extension of sixty-two years, and it was granted her.

Germany has been granted many postponements and deductions, and at last the Allies have agreed to give her an extension of over forty-two years to pay her instalments. Besides, it must not be forgotten that her case is quite dissimilar from that of England. The British government had to provide for the repayment of a loan. The German government is bound urgently to pay for the wanton destruction perpetrated by her armies in Belgium and France.

In connection with those ruthless deeds, the honourable member for Halifax has deemed it fitting to file a truly remarkable plea of attenuation. According to that piece of special pleading, the Germans would be responsible only for part of the destruction, because the Allies, in their strenuous efforts to repel the invaders, had to discharge thousands of shells on the towns and villages occupied by the enemy. Here is indeed a queer theory. If it were accepted, I should be held responsible for the damage that I am obliged to inflict on part of my own property in the act of repelling the ruffian who attempts to take it from me; and in that way the despoiler and the despoiled would be co-partners in the loss. I do not believe that such a theory has any chance of being incorporated in any code of civil or international law.

Now, I shall attempt to deal with the main question to which the attention of this House has been called. It seems to me that in discussing the Franco-German situation we should examine with an open mind the two sides of the controversy. We have been told by newspapers, statesmen, and public writers that Germany was poor, economically crippled,financially maimed, politically unbalanced, and that she was utterly unable to bear the crushing burden inflicted on her depleted resources and accepted by her under duress. Let us see whether this pessimistic picture has not been overdarkened.

Germany has gone out of the war beaten, but not disabled. Her territory had been unviolated. Not one inch of her soil had been invaded and trampled upon. Not one city, not one hamlet of her component states had been devasted. Not one of her thriving centres of production had been ruthlessly dealt with by barabarous invaders. Not one of her splendidly equipped manufactories had been destroyed. Not one bolt nor one shaft of her unequalled industrial machinery had been tampered with. In November, 1918, Germany was emerging from war, shaken, but unbroken; humiliated, but unsubdued; weakened, but full of recuperative power. Since that date she has gone, it is true, through more than one internal crisis, but none of these have prevented her traders from trading, her manufacturers from manufacturing, her producers in every field from producing increasingly, and from shipping their products to foreign ports.

Two years ago a member of the British House of Commons, after a prolonged visit to Germany, published a report in which he stated that the recovery of the German nation was astounding. Everywhere one could see the signs of industrial activity. Work was abundant. Economic life was throbbing. The scars of the cruel conflict were apparent nowhere. When France and Belgium had inexpressibly suffered, Germany was seemingly unwounded. One could think that her commerce and her trade had suffered no check. Of course, German lives had paid a dreadful tribute, but the great institutions, the big organizations which the whole world admired and envied, had begun again their normal functions just as soon as the guns had ceased their roaring and thundering. The ink on the treaty sheets was hardly dry when the German nation had already sought for and found outlets for her trade. A new lease of life and prosperity was taken.

And what was the result? After all the figures that have been given to this House I would not like to tread at any length on that well-known ground. I shall quote only a few facts. When the peace treaty was signed the tonnage of the German merchant marine was down to 419,000 tons. In 1921 it had risen to 1,563,800 tons. In 1922 another 575,000 tons were added. At the present moment the tonnage of the German merchant marine can be reckoned at about 2,138,000 tons. A writer in the Montreal Gazette could well assert, the other day, that:

> The assumption that Germany would not count as a sea power for a generation or more is therefore disproved by events.

and that:

> Owing to the low cost of construction she has become a formidable competitor to the industry of shipbuilding in Great Britain.

A contributor to the North American Review wrote in April, 1921:

> I have before me the balance sheets of twenty-four of the industrial and commercial German companies, which rank amongst the most important. In all the countries of the world, the best barometer of an industrial concern is the dividend which it pays to its shareholders. When a company pays a large dividend, it means that its business is in a flourishing condition. Now, what do we see in the balance sheets of the twenty-four companies I mention? We see that every one of them, without exception distributed in 1920 dividends running from 15 per cent minimum to 25 per cent even 30 per cent.
> More especially interesting is the balance sheet of the famous Krupp Company. For the first time in its existence, the Krupp Company has not manufactured war material but has given itself up entirely to peace-time manufactures—ships, agricultural machines, automobile motors, etc.,—and it does not appear to have suffered from this at all, since its balance sheet for 1920 shows a net profit of 78,500,000 marks. The preceding fiscal year had left a loss of 36,000,000 marks. Well, for a ruined country, a country that claims to be in poverty, this appears to us to be an industry which is not doing badly. Seventy-eight and a half million marks of net profit—that is something! Could not one say to these industries: "Since you realize such high profits, you shall hand over a part of them to pay the creditors of Germany. Seven or 8 per cent is quite sufficient for your shareholders. The difference shall be paid in to the till of reparations due to the victims of the war."

A study of the German budget may also shed some light on that subject. In 1914 there were 5,500 employees in the Imperial service. In 1921 there were 80,000, not including the railways and the industrial undertakings of the State, where the increase was from 168,000 to 420,000. A glance at the budget of the Labour Department gives us a piece of information highly interesting. It contains an item of one billion of marks for bonusing the construction of new houses. Please remember that war did not pull down one cottage, did not damage one roof in Germany. Would it not be well to tell the German government: "Pardon me, but if you are so intent on the building of houses, should you not direct first your constructing energies towards the re-edification of those thousands and thousands of French dwellings that your ruffian generals and ruthless soldiers burnt to ashes or levelled to the ground during the war?"

Furthermore, the army and navy budget provided for an expenditure of 4,324,000,000 marks, with an additional six hundred millions for militia purposes; that is to say, a total of five billions. Was it not an extravagant figure for a country pledged to a small army of 100,000 men only?

Leaving aside the budget, let me quote a piece of statistics full of the most extraordinary meaning. During the year 1920 the consumption of champagne wine in Germany had risen from 6,000,000 bottles in 1914 to 10,000,000 bottles, which, through the heavy fall of the mark, would represent over one billion marks! At the same time on the race tracks of Berlin, the betting had swallowed in 113 days 500,000,000 or half a billion of marks!

Some German sympathizers may perhaps say: "Granted, but all the same is it not true that the finances of Germany are in a desperate situation, that her deficit is enormous, and that the German Government is on the verge of bankruptcy?" In answer to such statements, made for the purpose of demonstrating Germany's insolvency and, as a natural consequence, Germany's incapacity to pay her debts, let us quote the following rejoinder made by the French Prime Minister on the 9th of January, 1922. M. Poincaré said:

> Germany asserts that she is insolvent, and indeed she is wasting systematically her resources. She is less taxed than France, and yet she does not collect regularly her taxes. She indulges in extravagant expenses and in the issuing of paper currency which, whilst it depreciates her mark, favours her exportations. She leaves her great industrial magnates free to invest their foreign securities in foreign undertakings. But whilst she builds up in such a way her sham poverty her firms pay enormous dividends, her manufacturers work day and night, her economic strength grows continuously, and if the German State gets ruined, the German nation accumulates wealth. Now it is the whole nation who, with her capital and revenues, is security for the State's debt, and it is in the name of the nation that the treaty of Versailles has been assented to as well as the schedule of payments prepared by the Reparation Commission and the conditions determined in May, 1921 by the collective note of the Allies.

The real state of the case could not be more clearly stated.

And now, after all these facts and figures, to the question, "Can Germany pay?" may we not answer: "Yes, Germany can pay." Germany can pay provided the camouflage of her budget be prevented. Germany can pay provided she does not spend four billions on her army and navy; provided she does not multiply by two the number of her postal and railway employees, and by ten the number of her civil servants; provided she is not allowed to appropriate one billion for the building of new houses; provided she does not give to her domestic creditors an undue precedence over her foreign creditors, whom she has robbed, despoiled, ruined, squeezed to death. Germany can pay provided the Krupp mills allot a just share of their scandalous profits to the victims of the war; provided that the Teutons drink less champagne, squander less millions on the turf, and work a little more. Yes, Germany can pay if she is made to pay.

Let us now turn to the French situation. France has come out of the war victorious but exhausted. She had lost one million and a half of her young men—leaving aside the three million wounded. Ten of her wealthiest departments had been invaded, devastated, trampled upon during four years, drenched with blood, rent and furrowed with trenches, sowed with montrous seeds of steel and iron, of shrapnel and shells. Those departments represented one-fifth of the total capital of the nation. They paid for their share alone, before 1914, one billion francs out of the five billions contributed by the French taxpayers. The collieries of the North representing immense mineral welath, had been systematically impaired by the German. Two hundred coal pits had been flooded. The Lens mines, for instance, could not be operated again before 1930. All this had been done by the German deliberately, not merely to strike a war blow, but rather to destroy France's future wealth and future power of restoration.

France's situation at the close of the war was dreadfully distressing. She had "a war debt of 257 billion francs, a budget which in 1914 was 5 billions, and which in 1920 was between 25 and 30 billions; six departments almost completely destroyed; the loss or the temporary privation of 94 per cent of her wool production; 90 per cent of her iron ore, 70 per cent of her sugar, 60 per cent of her cotton supply, 50 per cent of her electric energy, the loss of a third of her merchant fleet, 600 kilometers of railroad or other road to be rebuilt, 57 per cent of the men between 19 and 37 left on the field of battle." This gives us a general view of the situation. For those who would like to have a few more specific details, let us add that France had to face the following results of German systematic destruction work: Houses destroyed, 289,147; houses damaged, 422,736; roads in need of repair, 53,830 kilometers; industrial establishments destroyed, 4,084; navigable routes destroyed, 1,112 kilometers; farm land destroyed, 3,000,000 hectares; railroads destroyed, 4,630 kilometers. Such was the mournful situation of France when the armistice was signed in November, 1918.

How was she to deal with it? On interest alone she had to pay annually thirteen billions of francs, leaving aside the huge sums she would have to pay in the near future to Great Britain and the United States. And she had to find and to spend billions for the urgent work of reconstruction and restoration of her devasted areas. Let us see immediately what she has done in this last respect. On January 1st, 1922, the work of restoration showed the following figures: Population returned, 3,985,-913; houses repaired and new buildings, 355,-479; roads repaired, 31,965 kilometers; industrial establishments reopened, 5,860; navigable routes repaired, 1,027 kilometers; works of art restored, such as cathedrals, 3,986; farm lands restored for cultivation, 1,500,000 hectares; railroads rebuilt, 2,215 kilometers. On this work of reconstruction the French government has spent 93,000,000,000 francs, and of course it is not finished. How could she do it? To quote the words of the right honourable senator for the city of Ottawa; "Where did France get that money? Not from England; nor from the United States; not from any other great commercial or financial market of the world. She raised that money from her own peasantry, from her own small investors, and it is that money which has built up the devasted regions in so far as they have been built up." In the meantime France had to maintain the efficiency of her administration, to maintain her army and navy, to meet the necessary requirements of the postal, telegraph and telephone service, of her public transportation, of the administration of justice, of her colonial establishments, of her Foreign Office, of her commercial organization; in a word, of all the departments of state. When you take all that into account you need not be surprised to find that in 1920, France's budget stood at 30,732,000,000 francs.

Let us here point to the difference between the governments of France and of Germany. Whilst the latter has showed a reckless spirit of lavishness and extravagance, as we have seen previously, the former has made the most energetic efforts to reduce expenses and realize economy. In 1918 the French budget had reached the tremendous figure of 48,584,-000,000 francs. In 1920 it had been reduced to 30,732,000,000. In 1912 it stood at 24,680,-000,000, which meant a reduction of about 50 per cent in four years. For 1923 the French Minister of Finance, M. de Lasteyrie, announces a further reduction, bringing the budget down to 23,180,000,000 francs. Remember that out of that total, thirteen billion francs are to be paid for interest only. These drastic reductions have unfortunately impaired, to some extent, the public service. We shall quote here the statement made in the North American Review, by Mr. Lawrence Adler, after a residence of sixteen months in France:

This condition of affairs is self-evident to these who have traveled extensively in France since the war. The railways are undermanned, the companies are unable to supply badly needed improvements and new installations, and there is no immediate remedy in sight. The public highways, especially the routes nationales ,have suffered through the wear and tear of the war and the government cannot afford to spend the money necessary to bring them back to the state of perfection which made them famous in former years as the best roads of the world. The same is true of canals, public buildings, works of art, and many other items that might be mentioned.

In pursuing that retrenchment policy the French government has been obliged to make extereme reductions in the number of public offices. During 1922 they have dispensed with 42,000 state functions, and during the present year 50,000 more are to be dismissed. What a striking contrast with the scandalous increase noted in Germany!

It is stated sometimes that France has not reduced to a sufficient extent her military expenses. The official figures utterly disprove that assertion. In 1913 the military and naval budget of France cost her one-third of her income; it costs her now only one-fifth. In 1918 her army necessitated an outlay of 36,120,000,000 francs. In 1923 it has been reduced to 4,910,000,000. Before the war the French army stood at 873,000 men. In 1923 it can be reckoned at 670,000, of which, 230,000 are colonials. It has been established recently by an American writer that on naval and military expenses combined France is spending now but one-half of England's and two-thirds of America's expenditure.

With all these reductions, and strict economy, and drastic retrenchment, what is the present situation of the finances of France? By means of increasing the old rates of taxation and of levying new taxes, the French government has been enabled to raise a revenue of 25,000,000,000 francs ($5,000,000,000). The budget of ordinary expenditure of every kind stands at about the same sum. Thus France's ordinary budget has been balanced. But there is the war budget! What is meant by the war budget of France at the present moment? It is composed of two sets of expenditure. The first one for reparation, reconstruction, restoration of the devastated areas. The second one for war pensions in favour of relatives of the dead, and in favour of the wounded and permanently disabled. These expenditures should not be paid, cannot be paid, and are not to be paid by the French, under the stipulations of the treaty of Versailles. Germany should pay them, Germany is bound to pay them, Germany has agreed to pay them. And Germany does not pay them. Germany says she is unable to pay them. Germany is unwilling to pay them. And thus, for four years, the French government is obliged to pay, the French tiller of the soil, the French wage earner, the French trader, the French manufacturer, the French toiler with the tools of labour or with the creative work of the brain, are constrained to exert their activities and energies to the breaking point in order to meet a sacred debt due by the German people, and to shield the German people from the paramount duty of repairing their crimes. Such a situation has been properly called by a French writer the "tragedy of victory"—"la tragédie de la victoire."

It is that situation that has compelled France to adopt stringent measures, under the sanction of the Treaty of Versailles, in order to coerce Germany into the fulfilment of her pledge. Germany alone is responsible for these measures and has to blame herself for having made them necessary. By the Treaty of Versailles she had acknowledged her guilt and bound herself to repair the wanton destruction made by her barbarous hordes in Belgium and France. Mind you, it was not the cost of the war whose bill she had to shoulder. France had to pay that cost after her defeat in 1871. Germany exacted from her a war indemnity of 5,000,000,000 francs. There were then no reparations to be made, because Germany had not been invaded. It was purely the military expenses incurred by the Germans to invade France and to crush her down that France had to pay and did pay two years before the stipulated term. In 1918 nobody thought, nobody spoke of exacting from the defeated empire such a war indemnity. But the reparation of damage done, of systematic destruction was a just claim, a just condition of peace. Germany agreed to that. Of course, she fought desperately to reduce the amount which she should pay. The sad and wearisome story of all the conferences, and confabulations, and interviews, and fluctuations, and modifications, and concessions, and regresses that took place during four years has been laid before this House. It is enough to say that in the month of May, 1921, it was finally decided, at a meeting of the Reparation Commission held in London, that Germany would have to pay 132,000,000,000 gold marks. The instalments and mode of payment, were stipulated. After first having refused to acquiesce in those conditions, Germany seemed to make up her mind, and the following document was delivered to the Allies' Government through the German ambassadors:

In conformity with the instructions just received, I am commanded by my government, according to the decision of the Reichstag, and in relation with the resolutions of the Allies dated the 5th May, 1921, to declare the following in the name of the German Government:

The German Government is absolutely determined: First, to execute unreservedly and unconditionally its obligations as those have been set down by the Reparation Commission; secondly, to accept and make good unreservedly and unconditionally the security respecting the bonds decreed by the Reparations Commission.

That document was dated the 11th May, 1921, and it had been backed the day before by a vote in the Reichstag of 221 against 175. At that moment it could be safely believed that the period of procrastination, and dallying, and shifting, and whining, was over. But what have we seen? Two years have elapsed since the spring of 1921, and Germany has not been true to her solemn and repeated pledge. She has had recourse to every subterfuge, to every dodge, to every dishonest trick that could help her evade her indisputable obligations; and it is stated now, that out of the 67,347,000,000 gold marks she owes France she has paid her to the present moment, only 1,777,423,000.

And now what position does she take? She asks for more delay, for a moratorium of four years, during which she will pay nothing, and she has to give only her discredited, worn out pledge that she will honour her obligations at last after that period of unburdened years. Who shall believe her? Who shall take her word again? Who shall give here a chance to accumulate and dissimulate wealth, to build up and abscond hundreds of billions, with risk of receiving from her, after four years, the defiant ultimatum: "We owe you nothing; our signed pledges have been extorted; we will not pay; and if you try to enforce payment, we shall fight with our strength renewed and our might restored." Who shall believe Germany? Who shall take her word? Not France! She has suffered too much, she has been too ill-treated, and she has paid too dear a price for the intimate knowledge of the unscrupulous government with whom she has to deal.

Moreover, France cannot wait. She is faced with bankruptcy if Germany is allowed to elude her obligations. Her ordinary budget may be balanced, but her "war budget," that is to say, the seven or eight billions of francs that she has paid yearly in Germany's stead, that she has, as it were, advanced to guilty and defaulting Germany—that war budget which bears this significant title in the French statute: "Budget of Recoverable Expenses," that extraordinary and overwhelming budget —how shall France meet its inexorable requirements? Please listen to the declaration made by the French Minister of Finance in a written statement addressed to the Budgetary Commission of the Chamber of Deputies:

The system of loans and advances has its limits; there can be no question of facing again, next year, the possibility of obtaining by means of advances and loans the necessary total of seven billion francs which constitutes the budget of recoverable expenses for reparation and pensions. This sum of seven billion francs must be found first in the annuity that Germany must let us have next year, and again in discounting a part of the securities she will give us.

In the face of subsequent events those earnest words really sound ironical. Germany has given no annuity, Germany has provided for no security, and the budget of recoverable expenses stands unrecovered. What shall devastated, impoverished, bleeding France do? She cannot wait, she must be paid; and whilst she has strength enough she must enforce payment. That is the situation.

Can it be said that the French have been too impatient, too unbending, too unyielding, too exacting? That cannot be sustained when one goes through the long chapter of disappointments, of adjourned settlement, of frustrated hopes, of endless quibbling, of repeated deception, that France has been made to read during four years. That cannot be sustained in face of the successive recessions, of the numerous concessions, of the ever-recurring compromises that were the unfailing outcome of the numberless conferences held over the question of Germany's reparation. Notwithstanding her critical situation and the evidence of her right, France has repeatedly given way. She has given way on the lump amount to be paid; she has given way on the proportion she was to receive; she has given way on the delay granted; she has given way on the mode and terms of payment. The successive French cabinets have given way to such an extent that a feeling of bitterness, of fretfulness, of sad discontent has grown up amongst the French people and has been voiced loudly through the tribune and the press. On every side in France you may hear these words: "We have won the war, but we have lost the peace." I am sure that the Anglo-Saxon opinion, spoken of the other day by my right honourable friend, can appreciate and understand that feeling. There is one man, a most brilliant and powerful man, who tries at the present moment to manipulate that opinion and to turn it against the French policy. But Mr. Lloyd George himself has not always felt and spoken as he now does. During the general election of 1918, in a speech delivered at Bristol on the 11th December, he said:

Let me summarize the situation. First, as far as justice is concerned, we have an absolute right to demand the whole cost of the war from Germany. The second point is that we propose to demand the whole cost of the war (cheers). The third point is that when you come to the exacting of it you must exact it in such a way that it does not do more harm to the country that receives it than to the country which is paying it. The fourth point is that the committee appointed by the British Cabinet believe that it can be done. The fifth point is that the Allies, who are in exactly the same boat as we are, because they have also got a claim to great indemnities, are examining the proposal in conjunction with us. When the report comes it will be presented to the Peace Conference which will put our demands together, and, whatever they are, they must come in front of the German war debt (cheers). You may depend upon it that the first consideration in the minds of the Allies will be the interest of the people upon whom Germany has made war, and not the interests of the German people who have been guilty of this crime against humanity.

That determination to treat Germany with stern justice was not peculiar to Mr. Lloyd George. At Nottingham, on December 10th, Mr. Asquith said:

I am in favour of exacting from the wrongdoer the uttermust farthing.

And at Cambridge, in the Guild Hall, Sir Eric Geddes uttered these very energetic words:

We will get out of Germany all you can get out of a lemon, and a bit more. For my part I will squeeze her until the pips squeak.

Of course, those speeches were made during a general election, and it could be said that they should not be considered as a sober expression of opinion. Well, two years later, in May, 1921, there was no general election, and a man who was Prime Minister of England made a speech in the House of Commons on the subject of German reparations. The Supreme Council of the Allies had just handed down to the German delegates a last and decisive ultimatum in which it was declared that Germany should comply with the decisions of the Commission—the yearly payment of two billions of gold marks, the issuing of obligations properly guaranteed by the Reichstag, etc., and that if she did not acquiesce, the Allies were to proceed to the occupation of the Ruhr valley, which would continue as long as the German government failed to comply. My honourable friend the senator for Montarville (Hon Mr. Beaubien) has quoted one part of that speech. Allow me to quote another part of that important pronouncement. After having explained the situation and read the ultimatum, Mr. Lloyd George went on:

There are those who think that we may have gone too far. I do not think so. We have taken into account all the difficulties; we have taken into account the capacity of Germany to pay.

It is no use being impatient with the French attitude towards this problem. Their position is not ours. We have a tempestuous sea between us and Germany with the best of the German fleet at the bottom of it. The French position is not that of Italy. Italy has the Alps between herself and Germany, and her capital is hundreds of miles away from any part of it. But France has the memory, the living memory, of two invasions, with her capital occupied in one of them, and very nearly in the other. The other day I was looking on the map of the German advance, and I should like anybody who criticizes to have a copy of that map, with the numbers of the German divisions, all pointed towards Paris. Not merely could you hear the sound of the guns, but the shells of the German guns reached Paris. That was only two years ago. And there are the fairest provinces devastated, and devastated now; and it will take ten years to repair. We must not forget that. One must not forget that when one reads debates in the French Parliament, and when one sees impatient criticism, even of British statesmen, who preach a little more consideration and a little more delay. This is much easier for us to do than for them. One must bear those things in mind. But the concern of France is the concern of Britain. We want to see fair play for France. She did not provoke the war; she was never less inclined to go to war; and she is the victim to-day of that war. We are entitled to demand that the nation which wrought all that devastation should do her utmost, should do her last, to repair it.

That speech was delivered on the 5th May, 1921. These eloquent and sympathetic utterances, this ultimatum to Germany, the notice duly given for the occupation of the Ruhr, are the best justification of the present action of France. What was right then, what was just, what was feasible and opportune, cannot be wrong, cannot be unjust, cannot be useless and inopportune, to-day, after two years more of quibble and evasion.

Let us go a step further. Not only has the use of coercion been sanctioned beforehand, and been announced to Germany as the necessary consequence of her stubbornness, but I shall now prove that coercion and occupation of German territory have been at one moment actually resorted to with the co-operation of all the Allies. In March, 1921, there was a meeting of the Supreme Council in London. German delegates were received for the purpose of submitting these new propositions made by their government. Those propositions were a masterpiece of impudence and audacity. Dr. Simons and his colleagues were instructed to offer as a fair amount of reparation 30,000,000,000 gold marks, or about $7,500,000,000, when the estimate of damage done had been reckoned at 226,000,000,000 gold marks. That outrageous proposition was received by the Council with indignation. Mr. Lloyd George was the Allies' spokesman, and he told the German delegates in plain language that they had outdone it, and that their proposal was an insult. In a written statement he said:

The German counter proposals have convinced the Allies that the Berlin government does not intend to fulfil her treaty obligations. . . . If on Monday we are not informed that Germany is ready to accept the Paris decisions or something equivalent, we shall take the following steps in conformity with the treaty of Versailles: first, occupation of Duisburg, Dusseldorf and Ruhrrort by the Allies' soldiers.

That statement was delivered to the German delegates on the 2nd March, 1921. And on the 8th, Germany, having failed to make acceptable propositions, an army composed of English, French, and Belgian regiments invaded the German territory and took possession of Duisburg, Dusseldorf and Ruhrort, three cities commanding the lower Ruhr valley. This was undoubtedly coercive occupation. And this coercive occupation, made under the auspices, and with the active cooperation of Mr. Lloyd George, constitutes a first-class precedent for the present one. The desired object was attained. After two months Germany yielded, and gave the pledge that we have quoted before. Now, that pledge having remained unfulfilled, a new coercive occupation is taking place in order to ensure fulfilment. And I ask again, why should that move be deemed more dangerous, more inefficient, more unwise, more damnable, than the exactly similar one which was made, and approved, and co-operated in two years ago? Surely France is entitled to appeal from a discontented and ill-advised Mr. Lloyd George to a Mr. Lloyd George speaking and acting under a better and higher inspiration

To sum up the situation, the Treaty of Versailles has been for victorious and exhausted France a bitter disappointment. It has left her unprotected owing to the failure of the English and American defensive treaties. The subsequent conferences and settlements have decreased instead of supplementing the compensations she could hope to receive. With the flower of her youth mowed down through the deadly harvest of war, with her wealthiest provinces reduced to a heap of ruins, with her towns devastated, her industries mangled, her credit overstrained, she has to face a situation perhaps more ominous and perilous than fifty years ago when she stood defeated and subdued. Yet she is not despondent nor despairing. She wants to survive and to live. But she sees clearly that salvation and life can be secured only through prompt and decisive action. It is an impelling necessity that has made her march her battalions to Bochum and Essen. And she says to the world: "Is it not already too much of a mutilated victory? The treaty does not give us all that we wanted. Let us at least, strong in our right and just in our force, know how to get, finally, all that the treaty gives us." Shall we say to France, our tried friend and ally, shall we tell bleeding and panting France: "We don't side with you. We don't side with you whose noble blood has been mingled with ours on a hundred battlefields for the defence of freedom and humanity; we don't side with you, the heroine of the Marne, of the Somme, of Verdun; we don't side with you, the trusted companion with whom we fought shoulder to shoulder through four dreary, murderous years. We side with Germany the assailant, with Germany the invader, with Germany the destroyer, with Germany the despoiler, with Germany the pledge-breaker, with Germany the disloyal and unwilling debtor who tries desperately to evade justice and escape reparation." Shall we say that? For my part I won't do it. As in the days of bloody trial and of uncertain victory, I stand by France against Germany. And if one nation must collapse I earnestly say: Let Germany collapse and may France survive! The world needs France, civilization needs France, and if the national ship of France were to founder in the after-war abyss, it would be indeed a rueful day for all mankind.

There is another thing that the world needs. It is the continuance and preservation of the Anglo-French alliance and friendly understanding. Let me quote the words of a prominent French statesman, Mr. Barthou, the president of the Reparations Commission. In the course of a conference held lately in Paris, he said:

> What Frenchman will forget what England did in 1914 and through the war? She has been at our side, during the war, faithful and heroic. Passing differences of opinion should not take away the hope for the moment, which is perhaps at hand, when the two countries will again tread the same road together. The attitude, which is so correct and so loyal, of the Prime Minister of England, of Mr. Bonar Law, this great and honest man, ought to inspire us with confidence.

I echo that noble declaration. And I pray to God that for years to come France and England, leaving aside minor interests and stemming the tide of prejudice and divergency, may succeed through mutual forbearance in keeping united their aims and policies and thus ensure the blessings of lasting peace and progress for the whole civilized world.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Béique, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Casgrain, the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

He said: This is an Act to validate an agreement made between two corporations.

The agreement is set forth in the Bill. It has received the sanction of the Treasury Board, but it was thought desirable to have the agreement validated, and representatives of the Corporation will be here to present all the evidence in the case.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE PORT OF SYDNEY, N.S.

SALE OF LAND TO IMPERIAL OIL COMPANY—DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. J. S. McLENNAN rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to a sale of land at Sydney, N.S., to the Imperial Oil Co., and will ask the Government what action it will take in the matter?

He said: Honourable gentlemen, when I asked for a return on this subject I thought that the matter was one of local interest only and that the facts disclosed therein would not justify my occupying the time of the House with the questions of which they treated. I find, however, that the facts revealed in the return are of such importance as to justify me in asking the attention of members of this honourable House from all parts of the country. They show a method of carrying on business which, I think, must have been hurtful in the past, and which fortunately has now ended, unless the new administration of the National railroads carried on as their predecessors in 1921 and 1922. This we hope is not the case.

This is perhaps an unusual matter to bring up in the Senate—the question of the method by which a department of the Government, or the Canadian National Railways, carry on business; but certain events occuring in the early part of December, 1921, have prevented the question being raised by a representative of Nova Scotia in another place.

I bring up this matter in no partisan way. for both Governments were involved, or at all events the officials of the Canadian National Railways and of the Department of Railways were under Ministers of different parties, who had to be responsible for acts of which, I think, in many cases they did not grasp the significance.

Nor have I any animus against any individuals connected with the railroads. The only one of them whom I know at all or have ever met is Mr. Hanna, and my relations with him were entirely pleasant. I do, however, admit to a feeling of irritation, which I think is shared by everybody who lives in the eastern part of Nova Scotia, at the way in which the development of that part of the country has been stifled, thwarted, and hampered by traffic arrangements on the railroad, which seem to be almost beyond belief, so very bad, and have shown but little vision and little capacity for the handling of the traffic of a growing country—a country which would have grown much faster had the railways given it a better chance.

First of all, I would call the attention of the honourable leader of the Government to the extraordinary imperfection of these returns. I made my motion just as wide as I possibly could—for all correspondence, telegrams, petitions, and documents, with instructions to and reports of any engineers or other officials of the Department of Railways, the Department of Public Works, or the Canadian National Railways, dealing with this matter; and (c) a plan showing the relation of the land in question to the city of Sydney, the terminals of the Canadian National Railways, and Sydney Harbour. That subsection (c) is the only one which has been at all adequately answered, and that referred only to the production of the blueprint of a map.

There is this difficulty about the imperfection of the returns. In the course of what I say I may do injustice to some of the officials. There may be another side of the case. There may be a defence against the charges which I allege. But it is the fault of the C.N.R. organization if documents asked for, which would have presented that other side, are not given in the return.

To give you a thread through these documents, I assert that a clandestine arrangement was entered into by some of the heads of the Canadian National Railways and the Imperial Oil Company to sell land at Sydney to the latter corporation. Secondly, I charge that the price was ridiculous, even if the land is not required for railway purposes. I assert with the utmost confidence that those lands were, and are, and will be required for railway purposes. I assert that the lands were not valued except formally, and I believe that the Right of Way Engineer of the Canadian National Railways who made the valuation was instructed from higher quarters what price to put on this property. I assert that the head office of the Canadian National Railways, instead of acting for the railroad and for its interest, were anxious only to please the Imperial Oil Company. I again assert that this transaction, on its face, shows that they were sacrificing—and, it appears to me, sacrificing wantonly—the traffic which they already had on the road, without any commensurate advantage. I assert also—and the documents, when I come to them later, will prove it—that the higher officials of the Department of Railways and Canals, or of the Canadian National Railways, betrayed the city of Sydney in a matter which was confided to their care. I assert that they, without proper authority, gave possession of Government property to the Imperial Oil Company. I assert also that these documents show that their method of carrying on business was slack and slovenly to an extraordinary degree. I find, in going through these documents, and I think honourable gentlemen will agree with me, that there is only the most fitful evidence of any kind of independence on the part of these officials. Subordinates gave the kind of reports that they were asked, or apparently asked, to give, if one may judge by the divergency between the report which they give at one time and the report which they give at another; and that various statements absolutely inaccurate in certain points were handed on to the Minister for action, without comment or criticism.

Before dealing with the reports, I would like to take a little of the time of the House in describing the place and the conditions. Sydney is the eastern terminus of the whole system of railways belonging to the Government. You know something of what it is as a producer of coal, of manufactured products, and of steel. At the last census it had a population of 22,545; at the census before, 17,000; at the 1901 census, 9,900; and in 1891 something between 3,000 and 4,000. Its growth has certainly been much greater, I think, than that of most places in the eastern part of the Dominion.

It is surrounded by the towns of Glace Bay with over 17,000, North Sydney with 6,600, Sydney Mines with 8,300 and New Waterford with 5,600. These towns as the adjoining smaller places within a radius of 15 miles contain a population which in primary production excels the population of any similar district, I think, east of Montreal.

This population is on or near a harbour which, for shelter, size, freedom from obstruction and certainty of approach, is among the best in the world. In it during the war convoys were handled as large as those which set out from any port on this side of the Atlantic and were handled without accident and with the greatest ease. These ports are nearer the best fishing grounds of the North Atlantic than any ports in Nova Scotia or Newfoundland.

The quality of the lobsters and fish, especially mackerel, caught in the adjoining waters is unsurpassed. There are in Cape Breton Island twenty-nine fish curing plants with a capital of $1,400,000. Their production in 1922 was valued at $1,133,000. Cape Breton mackerel makes a premium of $5 per barrel over any other mackerel which goes into the markets of the United States, either from Europe or North America.

Sydney Harbour is the gateway to Newfoundland with a population of one-quarter million; a population, too, with whom it is most desirable to encourage trade and intercourse. Great industrial developments are taking place on the western shore of Newfoundland within from 100 to 200 miles of Sydney; and the development of those Labrador gold fields should lead to the establishment of an industry on the coast of Labrador. Sydney ought to be the source of supply for it because it is but half the distance of the next nearest city of any size, namely, Quebec. Sydney has that advantage as a source of supply.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: What about Charlottetown?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Splendid, particularly in winter.

Sydney is already a distribution centre. There are twenty-seven wholesale houses in Sydney, and eleven of the greatest distribution houses of the Dominion have resident representatives there. Two and a half million registered tons of shipping called at Sydney Harbour in 1921; and that quantity of shipping is not very far short of what the shipping of Montreal was, in not distant years.

The population is an active one. The four greatest Canadian banks have not less than nineteen offices in this population. There are nineteen telegraph offices. The post offices in 1921 did a money order business of not less than $1,700,000. Local enterprise has supplied coastal steamers and is ready to keep in advance of requirements.

Sydney is a strategic port for foreign trade. It is the nearest Canadian port for any traffic beyond the Straits of Gibraltar on the one hand and the eastern ports of Brazil on the other. By it should be gathered all traffic for the many steamers which sail from the St. Lawrence to these ports, and they are numbered by the scores, call there and collect any exports which are produced nearer Sydney than Montreal. The present course is for these goods except those of the Steel Company to go up to Montreal and then return within a few miles of Sydney or as often happens on a steamer which calls at Sydney for bunker coal. It is important for Canada to do as much as possible for the trade of Newfoundland and Sydney is its proper gateway. Moreover, the time is bound to come when mail steamers, or at least some of them, between the United Kingdom and the St. Lawrence must call at Sydney in order to make the quickest handling of the mails.

This is no surmise. It has been tried and proved that it can be done, but the unwilling management of the Allan line at that time and the indifference of the people of the Maritime Provinces have prevented it being made a regular practice, but there is no development along these lines or any others in Sydney, which will not benefit by the Canadian National Railways; they are its one connection with the rest of this continent. It is to their interest to do as much business at the Sydneys on Sydney Harbour as possible because it is the most eastern point on their lines, and instead of the trade being developed by them it has been throttled.

The first inward transfer was made from the Virginian at North Sydney, July 13th, 1905. The run by the I.C.R. to Montreal was made in 22 hours, 38 minutes. The mails were distributed in Montreal at ten o'clock Friday morning, the 14th, in time for the western train. The mails were distributed a day sooner in Montreal than if they had come by the White Star liner Celtic which sailed for New York a day earlier than the Virginian. The mails reached Halifax Thursday, the 13th. The following telegram, which was received from Halifax at the time, speaks for itself:

Halifax, July 14, 1905.—Earliest previous receipt of Rimouski mail at Halifax Post Office three o'clock, Friday afternoon. The ordinary time depends on the route whether via Cape Race or Belle Isle Strait, the latter say from 4 p.m. Friday till Saturday noon.

St. John received its British mail early in the morning. The post office there sent the following telegram:

St. John, July 14th, 1905.—The earliest mail delivered heretofore was 1 p.m. on Friday by the record-breaking trip of the Virginian—June 16th last. Ordinarily the delivery would be 1 p.m.

Thus by North Sydney the people of Halifax received their mail Friday morning, as did also the merchants of St. John and Charlottetown. Such time had never been previously made. The time-saving change had been effected without delay or inconvenience to the people of the West and passengers for the Maritime Provinces reached their destinations on Thursday instead of being carried up the St. Lawrence and landed at Rimouski, whence they would not have reached the same points earlier than Saturday night, or Sunday morning.

Two more trial trips were made with inward transfer at North Sydney in 1907. The first of these was on the 13th day of June. The mails and fourteen passengers were landed at North Sydney. The mails reached Halifax 25 hours 30 minutes ahead of the previous record. The run from North Sydney to Montreal was made in 26 hours 20 minutes. The western mail caught the Soo express and gained a day.

The second inward transfer at North Sydney was made on the 21st June. The train making connection with the boat made the run from North Sydney to Montreal in 25 hours, with the result that the British mails were in Toronto 12 hours ahead of the previous record. Deputy Postmaster Gabouri of Montreal, speaking on the exceptionally good time made, told the Post correspondent that the record made by the mail special was remarkably fast, that the mails were in the post office in splendid time, and that the result was a great convenience to the public, as it enabled people to procure their mail earlier than would otherwise be possible. On June 27th the Virginian did not call at North Sydney. As a consequence the mails did not arrive in Montreal in time to make connection for the west. Had the mails been landed in North Sydney on this occasion they would have gained a day in the western transit.

So much for the possibilities of trade—possibilities which I can assure this honourable House have been hampered for the lack of facilities given by the railroads, over which must pass everything that comes into Sydney. Therefore it is to their advantage to promote trade there, and the means of developing trade outside of Sydney along the coast and with Newfoundland. This no railway management has ever done.

Now, coming to the chief question, there is outside a map which shows, perhaps better than I can express it, the coal situation. Sydney resembles New York in this, that it is on a tongue of land the end of which has been once Government and military property; and, not the extreme end, but one side of it, facing the harbour, has been given to the public for a park. The other side of it belongs to the railway people. Part of it goes down to a narrow stretch about 140 feet and terminates in a piece of land which contains 7.7 acres, and there once was a wharf there, which was destroyed by fire many years ago and has never been rebuilt. In other words, the great system of railways of this country ends in practically nothing, and the people of Sydney have been asking for years that that wharf should be built. On March 31st, 1921, a sum of money was put in the Estimates to begin that construction.

As to what happened in this particular transaction, I will run over the correspondence, or such of it as may be necessary, and make comment as I go along, rather than attempt to pick it out as establishing each of the assertions and charges that I make.

The first thing that was sent down in the return was a memorandum of the 21st February, 1921, from Mr. Mitchell, Vice-President of the Canadian railroads, to Mr. Brady, who was assistant to the Executive:

> Referring to your memorandum of this date, and returning herewith communication dated 17th inst., from Imperial Oil Company re the site at Sydney:
> I have discussed this with the President (Mr. Hanna), and he approves the following routine with respect to sale of property on Canadian Government Railway:
> First, a certificate from Mr. Hungerford that the property is not required for railway purposes; 2nd, the valuation by the Right-of-way and Property Commissioner (R. H. Fraser deals with valuation east of Montreal); 3rd, if traffic conditions involved, approval should also be obtained from Mr. Hays; 4th, a resume of matter should be sent to President for his approval; and, 5th, application for approval of Minister of Railways and Order in Council authorizing sale.

And it goes on to say that as he is familiar with the Government Railway property—more familiar than anyone else, that is, presumably in Toronto—

> The President would be glad if you would deal with all such matters on above lines.

Now, let me call the attention of the House to the fact that in this return there is no certificate from Mr. Hungerford. The valuation was farcical. Mr. Hays, although there is certainly a prima face case against him, has not spoken as to the question of traffic. There is no resume of the matter sent to the President for his approval; and I wish to show you that an application for an Order in Council was pushed through finally in indecent haste. There is no certificate from Mr. Hungerford; as I said, there is nothing from Mr. Hays; but Mr. Shatford, the local agent in the East of the Oil Company, was given a letter from Mr. Hungerford, which he showed to the Sydney Town Council, and he also says that he produced a telegram from Mr. Hays. These documents should certainly be in any return which is approximately complete of such a transaction as this.

I spoke of the valuation as being farcical. On the 10th of March the following telegram from Mr. Brady was sent through Mr. Isbester, of the Right-of-way Department, to Mr. Fraser, referred to in a previous letter, who was at that moment in Halifax. That telegram, from the Assistant to the Executive, begins:

> Your letter of the 24th February—

That letter is not here—

> re land Sydney wanted by Imperial Oil, did you get plan from Moncton and can you let me have an early reply as to valuation?

Again part of the farce. Mr. Fraser replies promptly on the next day:

> Your telegram re Sydney; notify Brady that $3,000 per acre is reasonable price if decided to sell. Am advised that land will be required for future development and better be held, also that City Council would not allow Oil Company to locate tanks so near hospital.

Now, you notice there that this gentleman says $3,000 an acre. I have here a letter from a man who is opposed to placing at this point all these tanks, and did all he could to prevent it, but nevertheless he is an honourable man for whose credibility I would absolutely vouch. He says:

I would say that a town lot 40 x 100 in the residential district of the north part of the city, near Victoria Park, would be worth from $800 to $2,000 according to locality. I have known lots in this district to sell at both the figures mentioned. The city assessment, which is supposed to run about two-thirds the real value of land, is $700 and $800 on lots on North George Street.

—which is in the vicinity of this property—

An acre could be divided up into from 8 to 10 town lots, allowing for streets. I would point out, however, that the Barracks Point site is very much more valuable than an equal area of residential lots, because it is the best located shipping site on Sydney harbour, etc., etc.

He says that, if they had imagined for a moment that this property would have been sold, local people would have bid for it. So much for the valuation.

That telegram was sent in reply by Mr. Fraser, and the Assistant to the Executive writes to Mr. Fraser as follows—and please note the tone; please remember, also, that Mr. Fraser suggested, and underscored, that the property would be required for Government purposes, etc.:

Would you kindly inform me what you think the property will be required for in the future, and also where you got your information that the City Council of Sydney would not allow the Oil Company to locate tanks so near the hospital.

That from the Head Office. That was on March 23rd. On the 24th Mr. Fraser, to whom this pleasant letter was addressed, replies as follows:

I have yours of March 23rd. As I was not posted on this property in Sydney myself, on my way to Halifax I inquired first of L. S. Brown, in Montreal, and then later on of other officials in Moncton, and I think they all agreed that there was some intention of the Public Works department, or some other department, of replacing the old I. C. R. pier at Battery Point, Sydney, with a new structure, and that all the lands of the railway in that vicinity would be required if this was carried out.

When the gentleman stated that he was not posted on this property—of which previously he decided the value at $3,000 an acre—I think I am perfectly justified in describing that valuation as farcical, and in saying that the words were put in his mouth by some superior officer in Toronto. He goes on to speak of other matters about which I need not occupy time. Then the City Council passed the following resolution on the 14th of April:

Resolved, that this Council grant a permit to the Imperial Oil Company, Limited, to construct an oil storage plant at Battery Point, providing the Department of Railways, the Department of (Public) Works at Ottawa, and the Executive of the Canadian National Railway System assure this council that the location of this oil storage plant on the proposed site will not in any way interfere with the construction of the projected ocean and railway terminals, and will on the contrary, prove an adjunct and complement to such terminals; and also that a right-of-way extending from the north end of George Street be reserved through the said plant; also providing that the Imperial Oil Company expend an equal amount annually on improving this site with the amount spent annually by this city on Victoria Park, up to $1,000.

I spoke of the representative of the Oil Company having various documents. This to the Hon. Mr. McCurdy, then Minister of Public Works:

All this is agreed to by telegram from Mr. Hays to the Secretary of the Sydney Improvement League—

—that telegram is not here—

—and by Mr. S. J. Hungerford, Vice-President of the Canadian National Railways, to the writer.

That communication is not here.

This information was placed before the Sydney City Council, but they asked that this information come from the heads of the Department at Ottawa, and Mr. Shatford is asking for it from Mr. McCurdy. It would have been well if the City Council of Sydney had continued to be as wary as they were at this particular time. But when he writes to Mr. Reid he says that advice was given by Mr. Hanna to a private citizen of Sydney to the same effect.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: Who is this man who is writing?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: That is Mr. Shatford, the local agent of the Imperial Oil Company, with his headquarters, I believe, at Halifax.

Now, we come next to one of the extraordinary letters of this whole extraordinary correspondence. This is a letter from Mr. D. B. Hanna, then President of the Canadian National Railways, to Major Bell, then Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What date?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: April 21st, 1921:

The Imperial Oil Company, Limited, desire to purchase from these railways a parcel of land in Sydney upon which to erect oil tanks and warehouse to handle oil that will arrive at that point in oil tankers.

That is, steamers carrying oil. Mr. Hanna then mentions that the City Council of Sydney had passed the resolution I have just read to you, and then continues:

The Sydney Post, a local paper, has started a crusade to oppose the erection and am informed that the editor is on his way to Ottawa to induce the Government not to give the city council the assurance they ask. To put you in a position to meet the objectors, I desire to advise you that these railways are willing to sell or lease the land to the oil company, as was done at Point Levis, under similar circumstances, some two or three years ago, also that the disposition of the land will not interfere with any railway development contemplated.

That was written on the 21st of April. On the 31st of March a vote was passed, as I said, looking to the commencement of that railway wharf—a railway wharf which would take steamers, possibly ocean steamers, which would require warehouses; and yet the President of the railway says that this property, which took a third of the available space, already too small, would not interfere with any development contemplated. No examination into the thing; nothing given here; nothing on record which showed that they proposed to do anything; nothing but an eagerness which they all seemed to display to act as brokers for the Imperial Oil Company, and to push this thing through. Mr. Hanna has, I understand, been a railroad man for a long time, and I wonder if he could mention any place on the continent of North America which had grown as Sydney has in the last 20 years, where there was not a necessity for a constant increase of building, of sidings, of the various materials that a railway takes on. I think all of us who have been in Europe were struck over and over again, as we travelled, not only through England, but through France, through Holland, and through Belgium as it was, to find how continuous is the extension of railway work, and the extension of facilities that they require constantly. And yet Mr. Hanna says it will not interfere with anything contemplated.

Then Mr. Fraser is asked for a memorandum by Mr. Bell, the Deputy Minister, and he says again at the end of April that the price will be $3,000, and shelters himself under Mr. Hanna's letter of April 21st, which advises that the sale or lease of this land to the Oil Company will not interfere with any railway development.

The gentleman, who lately adorned the position of Minister of Railways, and whom we now have the honour to have as a colleague (Hon. Mr. Reid), seems to me to rather sidestep this situation. He begs to say to Mr. Curry, the town clerk of Sydney:

> That I am advised by the management of the Canadian National Railways that there is no objection to the land in question being sold or leased to the Oil Company, and that such distribution of the land will not interfere with any railway development contemplated.
> J. D. Reid.

The next letter is on May 10th. It is to Mr. Brady, from the Deputy Minister, Mr. Bell:

> The right of way and lease agent of the Department advises that the price of the land should be fixed at $3,000 an acre, and if a lease is granted the conditions referred to by the City Clerk of Sydney should be incorporated in the said lease as an obligation of the Company.

I would ask honourable gentlemen to note that phraseology.

On the 3rd of June there comes this letter to Mr. Kingsland, who was then General Manager at Montreal, from the Assistant to the Executive:

> Toronto, 3rd June.
> It has now been decided to sell the piece of land at Sydney to the Imperial Oil Company, and I enclose you herewith five copies of the plan and description. Will you please arrange for an Order in Council and for the issuing of the patent by the Government for the land, the price to be seven cents per foot.

They were in such a hurry they were not even accurate about the price.

> Quick action will be appreciated.

Here is a memorandum from the Imperial Oil Company. It is not dated, but, from internal evidence, it appears that it was on December 15th, 1921. It says:

> In March, 1921, we made an application to the Sydney Town Council, after having obtained assurances from the railway people in Toronto that the said property was available for our purposes.

And you will find there is extraordinary discrepancies as to when this was taken up—by whom, what the price was, what the size was, and every other possible discrepancy. That was the 3rd of June.

> Quick action will be appreciated.

But between the dark and the dawning "the native hue of resolution" was "sicklied o'er" by something. There is nothing to show that it was by any regard for the public interest. Mr. Brady telegraphed on the next day:

> Referring to my letter of yesterday re sale Sydney lands to Imperial Oil. Hold matter in abeyance until further advised.

That is Mr. Brady, who had previously written: "Quick action will be appreciated"—at seven cents a foot. Guess at the number of feet.

What happened we can only guess. But on the 6th—this was on the 4th—Mr. Fraser, the right-of-way engineer, wired the local member, J. C. Douglas, that Dr. Reid was sending him down. He went down, and he made the following report, of which I will read the essential parts. He names the various people he saw, and says:

> It seems that many of the citizens claim the permit granted by the City Council was done without any notice to the public and did not receive the unanimous consent of the Council and that as soon as the public was aware of it numerous and very strong protests were made particularly to the Department of Public Works.

My opinion is, and I expressed it to the citizens objecting, that no further action should be taken by the Department to dispose of these lands until as the result of a public hearing, at which the Imperial Oil Company should be represented, the Council should be unanimous in granting a permit for the erection of the oil tanks as proposed on Barrack Point.

In looking over the whole situation in Sydney I am of the opinion that the oil company are anxious to secure a site on the water front so that they may unload directly oil from tankers and then be in a position to supply the oil burning ships in the future. This, however, would not provide freight of any kind to the railways.

This is the railroad, which Mr. Brady represented, which Mr. Kingsland represented, which Mr. Hanna represented.

Looking it all over, I am of the opinion that their chief object in locating on Barrack Point is to secure water front that does not seem to be available at any other point around the harbour, for the purpose of supplying ships with fuel oil that has been brought by these tanks to water, and will not add to traffic for the railways.

Then there are representations from aldermen, and so on, and on the 13th of July the Imperial Oil Company write through Mr. Shatford:

I found that Mr. Fraser had visited Sydney from your Department and seems to have agreed with the handful of opponents to our application, as they were strongly of the opinion that the Sydney City Council would not again support our application for the installation of tanks.

Then he yaps at Mr. Fraser. Then, there is a telegram from Mr. Brady, the Assistant to the Executive, to Major Bell:

Your letter of the 17th re Imperial Oil, Sydney. Informed Minister of Public Works passed whole matter over to your Department. Is it now in order to let the Imperial Oil Company have the land they are ready to purchase, as outlined in previous communication? If so, will send you plans and descriptions.

Major Bell was not active in this matter. I suppose he and some others possibly did not like having the whip cracked over their heads, and he lagged, and it is quite a time before you find any reply from him. But we come now to a letter which I think everybody, however they may feel about this matter, will think a most extraordinary one to find in the files of a department of the Canadian National Railways. It is from the Imperial Oil Company, Halifax, Nova Scotia, addressed to G. W. Mayer, Vice-President, Imperial Oil Company, Toronto. It encloses an editorial from the Sydney Post. It says:

The main point in this editorial is his reference to Fraser. I did not know of this man's visit. While in Sydney he called——And so on.

Perhaps Mr. Lown could investigate this gentleman's visit to Sydney, and, if there is anything we can do to offset his recommendations, we will be glad to do it.

Mr. Lown is another official of the Imperial Oil Company. Evidently the letter was sent to the Head Office of the Canadian National Railways—at least it looks like it—to take action with Fraser for making such a report.

On July 18th, the Assistant to the Executive writes again to the Deputy Minister. He is as complaining as he dares to be to his superior officer. He says:

I wired you on the 13th instant, and have received no reply.

That is as vigorous a protest as he could make to his superior.

We are satisfied that the railway will never require this property for railway purposes, and can never make any particular use of it and consider that we should let the Oil Company have it.

That is signed by Mr. Brady, who is the Pooh-Bah for Mr. Hanna and the Chief Executive.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: The late F. P. Brady.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Yes. Mr. Brady, I have not the slightest doubt, did what he was told, and I make no accusation against him. He simply did what he was told to do by his superior officers. What I would ask gentlemen to note is that "we will never require this property"—property within four hundred feet of where a wharf was actually in contemplation, which would leave them only five acres to make any development which might be necessary. "Never" is a perfectly ridiculous, improper, inaccurate and absurd word to use in this connection. It reminds me of the time when, about 1890, Mr. Collingwood Schreiber had charge of the Government railways and I had charge of a very little road, but just as broad as any other, down in Cape Breton. The Government railways had opened a big ballast pit, and we were in need of ballast of which there was none along our line. When I was in Ottawa I asked Mr. Schreiber if they would not sell us a certain amount of ballast—it was not a large amount, because our whole line was only about fifteen miles long—and Mr. Schreiber said: "No, it is quite impossible. A railroad keeps on forever, and no man in charge of it should ever alienate any part of the property, because he can never tell when it may become necessary." Apparently time had not improved the outlook of the various people at the head of our railroads under the late regime, as compared with nearly forty years ago.

Mr. Fraser then makes a defence as to whom he saw at Sydney, and so on. Then, there is another letter from the Assistant to the Executive to Major Bell. That letter is apparently a very important one, but it is not included here:

So far as this railway losing business is concerned, that was the first subject considered when this proposition was put up to us by the Imperial Oil Company, and it was agreed by Mr. Hayes himself that there were no objections from a traffic point of view to letting the Imperial Oil Company have the site.

Then a little further on:

You are aware, of course, that the Imperial Oil Company are very friendly to these railways and pay us an enormous amount of money in the course of a year, and we are desirous of retaining their goodwill to as great an extent as possible.

Certainly everybody likes to be on good terms with a customer; but I take it that the Imperial Oil Company got good service for the good money they paid to the Canadian National Railways. The nearest analogy I can think of to this kind of thing is a shop-boy stealing from the till in order to give the money to someone else, to retain business for his master.

This matter has been dragging along since September last.

The first communication we have is on February 21st, so there must have been something before that which ought to have been included in this return.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: What has happened the letters off the file?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: That is what I do not know, or whether they were ever put on the file.

That ends the matter to that time. It had been turned over to the Canadian National Railways, and Mr. McCurdy, who was Minister of Public Works, had not given the certificates which were demanded by the City Council. There is no more correspondence of any moment on the file until the 22nd of December, when Mr. Hungerford, the Vice-President, writes to Major Bell and says:

The Imperial Oil Company are anxious to have the matter settled at the earliest possible date, and on account of the friendly relations which exist between them and the railway, we will be glad to see them accommodated in this way. I would appreciate a memo from you giving the present status, and advise if the sale can be concluded now.

Then, apparently in the usual course, the Deputy Minister gets a memorandum from somebody else, so there is something which he can justify himself by. It is of no great consequence, but I call attention to the fact that Mr. Fraser still speaks of "the land applied for either by lease or sale." As a matter of fact, there never was any intention to do anything with it except by sale, and it is pure camouflage to keep on talking about "lease or sale."

I may say here that one of the most extraordinary things in connection with the whole matter is the action of the Railway Department. If they wished to give the use of this property to the Imperial Oil Company, every purpose could have been served for the benefit of the Company and the benefit of the railways, if there was any benefit in it to the railways, by giving a lease of the property in the ordinary form. All such leases, as far as my knowledge goes, say that should this property be required at any time for public purposes it can be resumed by the Crown upon six months' notice. That, I think, is the formal stereotyped way of dealing with the matter; and yet this absolute sale to the Company is pushed through.

Subsequently the matter is again brought up in the City Council, where the proposal was carried again by a vote of six for and four against, which is not an overwhelming majority. Then Mr. Fraser on January 9th writes:

I see no reason why the application should not be granted, and the transfer of the land shows on the accompanying plan granted to the Company.

They also speak of the size of the tract as being 2.24 acres, which please note.

Then Major Bell writes to Mr. Hungerford:

The proposed conveyance to be subject to the condition that the location of any buildings or tanks on the area in question shall be subject to the approval of the Department of Railways and Canals, so that there may be no interference with any proposed works of any Department of the Crown.

An Order in Council was passed on the 26th of January, 1922. Things went along in the ordinary way, but in February the Solicitor General, Mr. D. D. McKenzie, wrote to Hon. J. H. King, Minister of Public Works, congratulating him on his appointment, and saying:

I am to-day in receipt of a letter from the city of Sydney protesting very strongly against the granting of permission to the Imperial Oil Company to locate certain tanks upon Victoria Park in that city.

There is a slight inaccuracy there. It was not on Victoria Park, but in immediate proximity to it.

If there is anything your Department can do to prevent the locating of oil tanks on this park, it should be done.

To this Mr. King replied, telling him something of the circumstances. The matter comes back into the arena again.

Mr. Fraser, who, you will remember, in his first report referred to the loss of traffic to the railways, etc., writes a memorandum stating:

This Department had no interest in the matter beyond assisting the Imperial Oil Company, which is a very large shipper over the Railways in Canada, to improve their facilities for handling more traffic over the Railways at that point, but in view of these further objections the matter had better remain open.

He is obviously under dictation, but whenever he gets a chance he puts in a little word to delay the thing. One can congratulate him on his courage. Apparently it is extremely difficult for a man in a Department to show any courage in opposing the views of his superior, but he can at all events show the situation in a proper way.

But Mr. Fraser's memory is at fault. On the 20th of February, 1922, he sent this telegram to Mr. Hungerford at Toronto:

Imperial Oil Company, Sydney.
Major Bell says verbal instructions to you stand. Order in Council passed authorizing sale gave amount as three thousand dollars per acre instead of three thousand for whole area of two point two four acres. Better notify Imperial Oil not advisable to re-open this matter as whole sale might be blocked. Please advise me their decision and letters patent will be issued at once.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: From whom is that?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: That is from Mr. Fraser.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Fraser again. To whom?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Mr. Hungerford, Vice-President of the Canadian National Railways, Toronto.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Three thousand dollars for the whole area?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Three thousand dollars for the whole area. Fraser evidently got panicky; he had a brain-storm. Mr. Hungerford promptly—and his promptitude shows that he has a kind heart, if a poor head, about property belonging to the railway—sent a telegram in reply:

Major Bell's letter of May ninth, nineteen twenty-one, stated price would be three thousand dollars per acre. This price was quoted to Imperial Oil Co. and they are prepared to pay it.

Then on the 25th of February there is a letter from Moncton from J. S. O'Dwyer, the Engineer of Right of Way:

In reference to proposed Letters Patent to the Imperial Oil Limited., as indicated on Plan No. 10261-1—

Which is on the table—

Further to your letter of the 1st inst., on the above and my reply of the 11th inst., the General Superintendent has forwarded me copy of his telegram of the 18th inst.—

That is the 18th of February, 1922—

—to Superintendent Fitzmaurice at New Glasgow, reading as follows:—"Re sale certain piece land Battery Point Sydney to Imperial Oil Ltd. General Manager advises they may be given permission begin work on this property.

Note the date—the 18th of February. I have made special inquiries, and am informed that they entered on this property and commenced excavation in the last week of December, 1921. They discontinued work in the middle of January, 1922. They began again in May, 1922.

It seems to me extraordinary that the General Superintendent of a railroad can give anyone who has no right or title, no lease or possession, authority to enter on the property of the King and begin to build foundations, etc.

Then there were further protests. You may think I am reading as much as possible, honourable gentlemen, but I assure you I am reading as little as possible. On June 12 there was a great discovery made. The Order in Council had been passed, with the plan attached, which is on the table, giving this land as 2.24 acres. After the plans had been drawn and the Order in Council passed it was discovered that there was a mistake. Whether or not it was a mistake of the Engineers, or how it occurred, I do not know. There is also, apparently, a third plan, which shows the area as 2.89 acres. Seven copies of the revised plan and description of the land were sent back, and attention was called to the Order in Council granting authority to the Department to dispose of 2.243 acres of the land when, as a matter of fact, the land was actually 2.720 acres. Then they went to work and easily enough they got an amended Order in Council, changing the price from $6,729 to $8,160—which is still about one-third of what it ought to be. This correction was made on the 29th of June.

I belong to Sydney. I am interested in Sydney and its development. I may be considered a prejudiced witness, but I bring forth evidence from the other side of the Dominion —from the province of British Columbia, with reference to this transaction; it is the evidence of Dr. King, the present Minister of Public Works. He proved himself honest and intelligent in this matter. He saw the situation as it was. I will read, not all his letter, because it contains an unimportant reference to the park. This letter is addressed to his colleague, the Minister of Railways:

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, 15th August, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

When I was recently in Sydney, N.S., my attention was called to the placing in Battery Point Park of some oil tanks by the Imperial Oil Company, and there would seem to be a strong feeling on the part of the residents of the City that this should not be allowed. It appears, that the privilege was granted to the Company by the City Council.

He had looked it up. But the thing that is of importance is this:

The area in question is a very restricted one and if the new Terminal wharf is constructed there, as has been suggested, it seems to me there is no question but that all the space will be required for sidings and warehouse purposes.

This is the result of my personal observation and at the time I was there there did not seem to be any work going on in connection with the tanks, though some preliminary work had been done in starting the foundations.

So far as I can see, it is not too late yet to stop the matter and I would suggest to you the advisability of looking into it as soon as possible with a view to taking that action if you can see your way to do so.

Your faithfully,
(Sgd) J. H. King.

The amended Order in Council had been passed less than a month before. Then there is a memorandum, and it seems a pitiful thing if you remember the first report of Mr. Fraser. This is a memorandum for the Deputy Minister:

The application of the Imperial Oil Company for increased area to carry on their business, beyond what they had under lease from the Railways,—

They had been working at the upper end of the town on a property leased also to the Railways—

—was brought to the attention of this Department by the Traffic Officer in May, 1921,—

The whole thing was arranged, one man says, in September before, and we have evidence here that it was under consideration and Fraser had to do with it in March, and he went down later, when he made this extraordinary valuation.

—and, as it seemed to be an ordinary matter of an industrial location for the purpose of erecting an oil warehouse and also some storage tanks, there was not objection made providing the Company had a permit from the City.

He made an objection himself. He said it would take away traffic.

I visited the location in June, 1921, and had all these objections before me but decided that such were not practical and it would be an interference in the traffic handled by this Company if their application was not granted.

It appears that this matter was for the benefit of the railway traffic and the objections to it had no foundation beyond the fact that a few did not consider the business side of the transaction.

Mr. Bell writes to Dr. King telling him this same thing, which, if he had looked over it and checked it, he would know was absolutely inaccurate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do I understand that it was Major Bell who answered the letter of the Minister of Public Works?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Yes; he answered the Minister of Public Works almost word for word in the same language as I have read:

The application of the Imperial Oil Company for increased area to carry on their business, beyond what they had under lease from the Railways, was brought to the attention of this Department by the Traffic Officer in May, 1921, and as it seemed to be an ordinary matter of an industrial location for the purpose of erecting an oil warehouse and also some storage tanks there was no objection made providing the Company had a permit from the City. This had been granted on April 14th, 1921.

Afterwards there was considerable objection raised by some of the residents to this privilege being given the Oil Company, but all opposition was discounted upon investigation of the matter.

That is the case. Letters Patent were finally issued, but, though they seemed to be an important element, they were not included in this return. I had to get them, and I got them from the Under-Secretary of State. I find they are in the ordinary form:

Whereas the lands hereinafter described were acquired by us for the purposes of a public work within the meaning of the Expropriation Act and are no longer required for such purposes—

Although they are within 400 feet of the place where a wharf is to be built——and Our Governor in Council has duly authorized the sale thereof.

And it goes on to deal with the sale, and gives the description:

To have and to hold . . . . the free uses, passage and enjoyment of, in, over and upon all navigable waters that are now or may hereafter be found on or under or flowing through or upon any part of the said land.

Povided always. . . . that the permises shall be used by the grantee for the purpose of erecting, maintaining and using thereon oil tanks, warehouses and other structures required for or in connection with the oil business at present carried on by the grantee, for no other purpose and that no such oil tank, warehouse, building or other structure shall be erected, placed or moved upon or to the premises or any part thereof. . . . unless and until the location of such oil tank building or other structure shall have been approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals.

These are the Letters Patent that are granted. But there were reservations made by the City of Sydney. Major Bell, I think, signs this somewhere or other. It was provided that if a lease be granted these should form a part of it. I have read them, and will not bother to look them up again. However, those reservations are not included. Were the public humbugged by being told that if a lease should be granted these conditions would be included, or was the omission of them purely an oversight? I cannot tell. But the City of Sydney was betrayed. We may free the Government. Major Bell has a great deal to do, and may have overlooked it. And we have seen where Mr. Fraser's memory was at fault. But those Letters Patent, the correspondence shows, were sent to the Imperial Oil Company before execution, and they approved of them. They knew about them. Mr. Shatford must have been cognizant of the transaction and of their offer to give this right of way through the property, and it seems to me that he has placed himself, and everybody connected with the Imperial Oil Company has placed himself, very much in the position of a man who has been given two ten-dollar bills stuck together instead of one ten-dollar bill, to pay an account of nine dollars, and who takes advantage of the oversight. It is, it seems to me, an extraordinary thing for a great corporation not to have called attention to the fact and said: "We agreed to give a right of way through this place. We agreed to spend a certain amount of money on it." Those conditions are not incorporated. Therefore, the city of Sydney, which is hoping that its development will be extended—and I am sure it will be if proper wharfage facilities are provided there—finds itself actually with no right of way to that wharf, because it was not reserved, as the Government should have reserved it. The transfer being a sale instead of a lease does not alter the fact that they undertook to reserve that property. The whole thing is so extraordinary that I feel there must be some other explanation than that which appears on the surface. It is hard to believe that such a thing could happen.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does this proposed wharf lie in front of the property alienated?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: Yes; and then the base of it would be about 400 feet, as nearly as I can measure by the map. There is a map outside, and it will explain.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Cannot the oil burners be carried on as they are?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: I do not know that the National Railways are going into it. What actually has happened, and what will be further referred to in the way of loss of traffic, is that all the oil that now comes into Sydney comes in over the Intercolonial Railway; and they began last autumn to fill these tanks by a tank steamer, actually taking business away from the C.N.R.. They might say: "We will still supply Sydney; we will still supply these 60,000 people, who use per capita as much oil and gasoline as anybody else, but we will supply them in the old way by the C.N.R." So they had them filled up in the late autumn, as they thought there would be no oil-burning steamers coming in before May—and if this kind of weather keeps on we do not know when they will come in. But, as far as one can see on the surface, the Canadian National Railways gave this property to the Imperial Oil Company to cut their own throat as far as any traffic in oil and in gasoline is concerned.

Now, it seems to me that I have justified the statements and charges and assertions that I made when I began, and now I inquire what is to be done about it.

The happiest solution would be this. If there should prove to be at the head of the Imperial Oil Company or on its directorate some official higher in station and with a broader outlook than their representatives who have appeared in this transaction—who realizes that company and its affiliations control what is a necessity of modern life over the whole of this continent as they have a practical monopoly—if such an official exists who is big enough, he might say: "My subordinates have been over-zealous; they hypnotized the former management of the C.N.R.; they have taken advantage of a gross error, or they have been guilty of malpractice in relation to the city of Sydney; they have obtained advantages which are unjust. This is a poor foundation for a business which we hope to make as permanent as we have made it prosperous. This company does not endorse their action, so we will give back this property and make a new deal open and aboveboard, which will satisfy every reasonable person interested."

If they do not do this, they have done a grievous injury to all large organizations, for no red anarchist can do the injury to capital that sharp practice, unjust dealing, and the exercise of improper influence by representatives of capital can inflict on the great power which is represented and controlled by the officials of great companies.

Failing the existence of such a man or men—and with all earnestness, I hope this appeal to them will not fail. It is the duty of the Government, as I see it, to cancel a grant which should never have been issued. The city of Sydney is justified in withdrawing a permit on the ground that that grant should never have been made, as it is not in accord, as I have shown, with the permission they gave. Moreover, the Government has no right to give them further powers to carry their pipe-lines over Government property and to use their wharf. If such powers have been given, the documents establishing them should have been included in this return. If the Government finds itself tied up, it had better expropriate now rather than leave it to the time when they must expropriate, on account of the growing development of the trade which will surely come to the city of Sydney.

There has been a change in the management of the C.N.R. Sir Henry Thornton has come to its presidency with a high reputation which he will enhance or destroy by the way he manages the road. I draw his attention to the manner in which even the most important of his staff have dealt in this instance with the property and the interests of the railroad.

Then there is another thing. We all hope that the northwest part of Canada is going to be one of the great oil reserves of this country and the world. When this Government or its successors come to deal with the question of leasing its oil, it will be well for them to remember what answer the Imperial Oil Company makes to my suggestion as to the revision of this deal, and also remember the control that in this case the officials of that company have held over the officials of the Government. The Government should be very wary in their dealing with them.

I think, also, I may venture to recommend to the Government a revision of the whole system by which the property of the Crown is given away by Order in Council. Certainly such property as is connected with any of its public works should not be alienated under any circumstances without ample notice to all concerned; without laying on the table a full statement of the reasons for proposing the particular transaction, with proof of the soundness of such reasons, with a chance for all the people interested to be heard. I believe it would be of distinct advantage if a procedure were established by which all such transactions should be submitted, say to the Exchequer Court. I speak as a layman, but, as I understand it, that Court has jurisdiction on valuations and expropriations. Why should it not deal with necessary valuations of what the Government alienates, as well as what the Government acquires? Such a course would be a safeguard for the people of Canada. It would be a safeguard for Ministers against illegitimate pressure from outside and against such a deplorable lack of vigilance on the part of their subordinates as I have established in this case.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Tanner, the debate was adjourned.

RESTRICTION OF SUPREME COURT APPEALS

MOTION WITHDRAWN

On the notice of motion by Hon. Mr. David:

That appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada from judgments rendered by the Provincial courts should be restricted to cases where the matter in controversy on the appeal involves the validity of a Dominion or of a Provincial statute, or is a matter within the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, or where, by reason of the importance of any question of law or fact, the highest court of final resort in the province has given leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DAVID: Honourable gentlemen, after having consulted certain members of this House, eminent lawyers, who represent the English provinces particularly, I have come to the conclusion that my motion, although a good one, would not be here supported by those honourable gentlemen; so I intend to modify it and to bring it back if I can obtain the support of honourable gentlemen of the legal profession to the motion as modified.

Before asking leave to withdraw my motion I wish to say only this. I was induced to present the motion by the complaint which I had heard for the last ten years against the multiplicity of appeals, particularly to the Supreme Court. No doubt there are more appeals than are in the interest of the public, and this condition is a cause of mischief, of serious grievance, and very often of a denial of justice. I know people who, after having obtained judgment before a superior court, were obliged to reduce their claim to a great extent in order to avoid an appeal, because they were not able to bear the cost of such appeal.

Those who are obliged to have recourse to our courts of justice have a right to ask for the abolition of appeals to the Supreme Court in all cases which are governed by our provincial laws and by our French code. The other provinces, the English provinces, I admit, have not the same interest as we have in this respect. There are undoubtedly cases in which people have a right to complain. I know of instances in which people, after having obtained judgment from three, four, or six judges, have seen the judgment reversed by a majority of the judges of the Supreme Court—by three judges who naturally could not have the same knowledge of our laws as have our own judges. I need not state what those people think and say of the administration of justice in such circumstances. Honourable gentlemen, if there is an institution which we must preserve, it is the administration of justice. Recognizing that fact, we ought to do something to remove those grievances.

However, I do not intend to speak longer. I may have occasion to speak at greater length if I bring back the motion when it has been modified. For the present I ask to be allowed to withdraw my motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

Bill 37, an Act to incorporate Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Company.—Hon. Mr. Pardee.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, I think that the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs, and Harbours should give careful consideration to the question of the advisability or propriety of members of Parliament, either provincial or federal, being directors of a company with power to distribute its assets, and at the same time to solicit gifts, loans, or substantial aid from the public treasury of either the province or the Dominion while acting in the capacity of directors and members of Parliament at the same time. I think there is a principle involved there to which the Committee should give special attention.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Surely no one would insist that a member of Parliament, either in this House or the other, could not be a director of such a company as is being incorporated here. Of course, I object very much to the principle of buying a franchise and giving stock for it, because that is one way of giving stock for nothing, and I think it would be well if the Bill contained a clause that when the Company buys a franchise it should pay for it in money. That would be perfectly regular. But, as to members of Parliament not being directors, if the honourable gentlemen will look back he will find that nearly all the railway enterprises were started with the help of local or federal members of Parliament, whether on one side of politics or the other. They are the people to whom promotors go for this sort of thing.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: That may be, but I would say that those directors were not members of Parliament seeking aid for the railways at the hands of the people. There are many substantial business men in that locality who could be secured to serve in the capacity of directors of that bridge company. It is not necessary to include gentlemen whose have responsibilities and duties as representatives of the people in the federal and provincial parliaments, but who, under this Bill, if passed would be required to go before the Legislature at Toronto and the Parliament at Ottawa seeking financial aid at the expense of the country, in order to advance the interests and increase the value of the assets of the corporation of which they are directors.

Hon. Mr. MURPHY: Could they not, as dummies, be just as effective as the men who stood behind them?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: If they did that they would not have the responsibility.

The Bill was read the second time.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have been asked by some of my colleagues whether any important business is shortly to come before the Senate. If not, they desired that we should extend the week-end adjournment from to-morrow to next Wednesday evening. I have been pressing to have legislation brought before us, but, as I expect very little to come to-morrow or Tuesday, I have no objection to giving notice now:

That when the Senate adjourns to-morrow it do stand adjourned until Wednesday evening next at eight o'clock.

This will come up as a notice of motion to-morrow, when, if it meets with approval we shall adjourn to Wednesday evening.

THE PORT OF SYDNEY, N.S.

The Senate resumed from April 18 the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Hon. J. S. McLennan:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to a sale of land at Sydney, N.S., to the Imperial Oil Co., and will ask the Government what action it will take in the matter?

Hon. CHARLES E. TANNER: Honourable gentlemen, having some personal knowledge of the locality referred to by the honourable member of the Senate who introduced this subject yesterday, and some acquaintance with the people and conditions there, I feel that the matter is of sufficient importance to call for a few observations. It is not necessary that I should review the ground which my honourable friend went over so thoroughly yesterday, nor have I any intention of doing more than making a few comments on some of the salient points in the matter as they appear to me.

I have had the opportunity of perusing the correspondence to which my honourable friend referred to copiously yesterday, and as I read it this matter appears to divide itself into three phases. One begins either in the autumn of 1920 or early in 1921, and extends until the latter part of July or some time in August. During that phase there is apparent what my honourable friend referred to—a very determined effort on the part of the railway executive to get rid of this land. It would appear that in the latter part of July or in August the matter was halted, and thereupon the second phase, which is a hiatus, occurs. I would judge from the correspondence that the fact that Federal elections were probably in sight had some influence, inasmuch as the third phase, as I see it, did not open until after the Dominion elections of December, 1921, and all that occurred then appears to have been considerably hurried, and the affair was closed satisfactorily to the Imperial Oil Company.

I think my honourable friend very clearly depicted to the House the state of affairs in the City of Sydney and the county of Cape Breton. There we have one of the most important business and industrial centers in the Maritime Provinces. We have a city whose population has increased since 1901 from 9,000 to 22,000, and a county whose population has increased in the same period from 49,000 to 86,000—eclipsing, as I believe, any other part of the Maritime Provinces. There we have the great coal mining industry and the great steel industry, and allied industries. We have subsidiary industrial plants, with great wholesale and distributing houses, as my honourable friend pointed out. The city and county are situated in the center of a great fishing industry, and if there is any hope for growth and development in the Maritime Provinces it surely must be expected to take place within the borders of the county of Cape Breton, if not indeed upon the whole island of Cape Breton. It is not necessary, after my honourable friend's extended remarks, to enlarge upon the situation, but I would like in a general way to impress the facts just mentioned on the minds of honourable gentlemen.

The Canadian National Railway is presumably expected to aid in the development of this country. That is one of its duties, I would presume. It has its terminus down near the property referred to, practically within a few hundred yards of it. A terminal wharf at the ocean extremity of these seven acres of land is projected, and, no doubt will be constructed some time—I hope, in the near future. This railway has great business connections in the county of Cape Breton. It has a large connection with all those great industries to which I have referred, and I would suppose that in the ordinary course the railway would be looking forward to extensions and enlargements of its plant. I do not need to comment upon the aspect referred to by my honourable friend, namely, that anyone who has had the opportunity of observing the life of the Intercolonial railway, or any other part of the Canadian National system, must be aware that as business develops the railway needs more and more property for siding and for terminal facilities. Seven acres are but a small area. The land being strategically situated, on deep water, close by the present terminals of the Canadian National Railways, to part with any portion of it is an action which cannot be too strongly condemned. I agree with every word which my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. McLennan) said in regard to the suicidal policy of the Canadian National Railway executive.

That, in brief, is the situation. I want to be very brief, and to avoid reiteration. I have described the position of the city and the county, and the position of the railway in regard to them.

What is the attitude of the railway in regard to this land? We are told in the correspondence that there is no likelihood of any development, and no likelihood of any part of this land being required. I want to join with my honourable friend in saying that no member of a railway executive, especially a nationally-owned railway executive, should undertake to lay down such a proposition in regard to a location like that of Sydney harbour. In truth, I think it is fair and right not to consent to any such proposition in regard to any part of the railway property of this country. In order to justify the view of the railway executive we must conclude that there is no expectation or hope of development on the harbour of Cape Breton. I am sure no honourable member of this House nor any intelligent citizen in the province of Nova Scotia would assent to such a doctrine. Therefore, as I see the matter, the attitude of the railway in considering that land worthless, as if it were mere wilderness out in the far north, is absolutely wrong. I join with my honourable friend in saying that the executive of the railway were entirely unjustified in coming to such a conclusion.

Against the attitude of the railway I want to put the view of the public as represented by the people of the city of Sydney. First of all, objections were made to the placing of an oil plant on this land because of its contiguity to a public hospital. The federal Department of Public Health was for a while interested in that aspect, and so were many citizens of Sydney who made a protest.

Another ground of objection, and a very reasonable and proper one in my judgment, is that this oil plant is to be placed very near to an important residential district of the city of Sydney. Down George Street, in the vicinity of the Park, within a few hundred yards of this projected oil plant, is one of the best residential districts of the city, where real estate is valuable and residences of a class which would be a credit to any community are being erected. Very properly, I think, the people of the residential district protested against the establishment of an oil plant there, when, as I am informed, there are other locations on the harbour of Sydney where the Imperial Oil Company could be well accommodated.

Not only on general principles did the residents of that district object. They objected on the ground that they would be confronted with a real fire menace, because the proximity of great quantities of oil must be recognized as a real danger in respect of fire. One has only to remember that, in the month of September, at the very time these matters were being pushed through by the railway executive, a tremendous explosion occurred across the harbour of Halifax, on the Dartmouth side, where the central plant is located. Six retorts exploded. Fortunately the plant is segregated from any settlement; but no argument is necessary, honourable gentlemen, to show how great is the menace to a residential district in having an oil plant located near it.

Another instance occurred in the city of Halifax in the same year. An oil tanker was discharging oil alongside one of the docks. She had met with some accident and was leaking, and the oil flowed out over the surface of the harbour. Suddenly, from some cause or another, that oil was set on fire, and at once the whole waterfront of the city of Halifax was in danger. The newspaper reports, which I will not read, state that practically every wharf along the waterfront was burned to some extent, several of the smaller craft were destroyed, and if there had been much shipping in the locality at the time there would have been a great disaster.

I mention these incidents merely in corroboration and support of the objection raised by residentials of Sydney on the ground of the danger in the oil plant being located contiguously to a residential district.

The fourth and principal ground of objection on the part of the people of Sydney was one to which I have already referred, namely, the public interest. The people of Sydney realize that their community has made great progress during the last twenty years. They are ambitious. They are looking to the development of their trade—of the fishing industry as well as the industries they have now. They anticipate that the great ocean liners and other large ships will make Sydney a regular port of call, and they are expecting, and with reason, that in the near future there will be ample terminals, constructed by the Canadian National Railways or by some Department of the Government of Canada, to accommodate the growing trade. Therefore, they say, the executive of a national railway should have some vision and some faith in the future, and should not cripple themselves and the community by disposing of one-third of the comparatively small bit of land at their disposal in that city; for that is the only piece of land available for the further development of the Canadian National Railways without very great expense to the public.

These are the principal grounds—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would the honourable gentleman allow me? He speaks of the people of Sydney, particularly of that residential district. What surprised me when listening yesterday to the statement of my honourable friend from Sydney (Hon. Mr. McLennan) was that those very people of Sydney approved of the grant made through their City Council.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I am coming to that right now. I am simply explaining the situation as I see it and pointing out the principal grounds upon which objection has been made to this disposal of the land, and I was about to deal with the action of the City Council, to which my honourable friend is probably alluding.

It is quite true that the City Council on two occasions, by majority votes, passed resolutions favoring the establishment of an oil plant on the land in question, subject to certain conditions. On one occasion the vote was seven for and five against; on the other occasion the vote was six in favor and four against. Now, I am not going to say anything against the City Council of Sydney; it is unnecessary for me to do so; but anyone who is familiar, as most of us are, with the transactions of municipal, city and town councils, is quite well aware that if a powerful corporation like the Imperial Oil Company undertakes to get a resolution through such a council it is not always very difficult for them to succeed. We know, moreover, that city councils—and I say this with all due respect to the Council of Sydney—are not always to be depended upon to look very far into the future. They may be carried away by arguments which would destroy hopes of the future. They may look only to present advantages. At any rate, as I see this matter, I do not place a great deal of stress upon the fact that seven out of twelve and six out of ten city aldermen voted for the establishment of these oil plants on the site in question. I venture to say—and I will submit reasons why—that action on the part of the City Council is not to be accepted as a judgment in favour of the Canadian National Railway executive.

In the first place, we have the aldermen who voted against the proposition protesting vigorously on more than one occasion to the several departments of the Government. They did not accept the decision of the City Council, and the mere fact that they persisted in their opposition is, to my mind, some evidence that public opinion was supporting the views which they advocated.

Furthermore, we find references to petitions by a large number of citizens coming up to the several departments. Now, I have some knowledge of the citizens of Sydney and I am not prepared to believe, as is suggested in some parts of that correspondence, that the citizens who sent up these petitions were not concerned about the matter. From my knowledge I would conclude that the citizens who were protesting were in deadly earnest, and, as I think, they had good reason for being in deadly earnest on the subject.

Then we have the protests from the residential district. There was Mr. Mullins, a gentleman with whom I have personal acquaintance, whom I know to be a prominent, highly respected and responsible citizen of Sydney; a man who at present occupies the position of representative of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the Island of Cape Breton; a man whose word I would take at any moment. He protested vigorously more than once against the disposal of this land, and voiced on some of these occasions the protests of the residents of the residential district near the proposed plant. Mr. Mullins and the people for whom he was speaking considered they had a just grievance, and I believe they had a just grievance in this regard.

Then there is the newspaper press. It is quite true that in part of this correspondence the influence of the press is belittled; but the press represents public opinion—a forcible and intelligent public opinion, and no leading daily newspaper of Nova Scotia or any other province can afford to fly in the face of sound and just public opinion; nor do they usually undertake to do so. When you find a reputable and well established newspaper, one of the most ably conducted in the whole of Canada, protesting vigorously and continuing to protest against the sale of this property, there must be some reason for the protest.

In order to show that the voice of the majority of the City Council was not the voice of the leading citizens of the city, I want to refer again to the statement of the honourable gentleman who recently laid down the office of Solicitor General. He is a public man of long experience; a man who, I presume, is able to read public opinion and to understand when public opinion is going this way and when public opinion is going the other way. Hon. D. D. McKenzie comes from that very part of the country. What do we find him saying? We find him writing, as my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. McLennan) has pointed out, to the Minister of Public Works, advising him not to let this matter go through. The Hon. Mr. McKenzie would not write a letter of that character unless he felt that there was a strong public opinion against the sale of this land. I think there is reason to believe that when Mr. McKenzie wrote that letter he was convinced, and I am prepared to believe that he had reasons for being convinced, that the judgment of the City Council was not the true judgment, but that he was sending to the Minister of Public Works in his letter the true judgment of the public opinion in that city.

Added to that, we have the evidence of the Minister of Public Works himself. I need only refer to that. The Minister goes to Sydney, he meets the people of Sydney—no doubt he met all the leading citizens—and goes over the ground. And what does he say? It is unnecessary for me to read the letter: it is to be found in the speech of my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. McLennan). Are we to presume that the City Council was right and that the Minister of Public Works and the honourable Solicitor General were both wrong in reading public opinion? I am prepared to believe, from what I know of the locality and from what I know of the people there, that the judgment of the Minister and the Solicitor General was right, and therefore, summing up the facts I have just mentioned —the protesting aldermen, the protesting citizens, the protesting Navy League, the protesting Solicitor General, the protesting Minister of Public Works—that all the evidence combined inevitably weighs against any credit we may be prepared to give to the judgment of the City Council on this aspect of the matter. I hope I have convinced my honourable friend that the City Council is not to be accepted as the final arbiter in this matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am not accepting it as the final arbiter. I am only saying I think it is unfortunate.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: If anything further were necessary to establish the fact that intelligent public opinion in the city of Sydney was not in favour of the sale and disposal of this land, I would like to suggest to honourable members the fact that although the railway executive was vigorously pushing this matter, calling out for quick action, castigating the men down below, directing them what to say and what to do, demanding that they should get into line so that this matter might be put through—notwithstanding that, notwithstanding that on the 23rd day of June, I think, the assistant to the Chief Executive said, "We must have this put through at once," the next day, as my honourable friend pointed out, he sent a wire countermanding, and saying "Stop." Why did he stop, honourable gentlemen? Was it because public opinion in Sydney, public opinion everywhere, believed that this was not only a legitimate, but a wise and businesslike transaction? Why did he stop? As I read the correspondence, he stopped because the protests of the opposition to it among the business men and the residents of the city of Sydney had culminated in a demand that it should be stopped; and thereupon there was some further investigation, but from the date of that letter and telegram in June, 1921, the matter practically died.

Then came in the hiatus that I refer to. The hiatus, to my mind, is a further proof that public opinion was against the project. Month after month went by; nothing was done—no attempt made to push this matter forward; why? There must have been in the minds of the Executive a fear of public opinion. Probably they saw that an election was coming. That is another reason upon which I base my judgment—because no government, no executive wants to fly in the face of public opinion; and somebody realizing that there would probably be an election in the near future, and realizing that this was a proposition that could not be publicly defended, simply allowed it to smoulder until the months slipped by, the elections were held, and the new Government were seated in their places in Parliament. I say that is further proof to me that it was an indefensible transaction.

Just one other item in support of that view. After the matter had gone into February 1922, that little question rose about whether the price should be $3,000 for the whole lot or $3,000 an acre. Now, was it a proper transaction to put through? Did the people ever want it? What said Mr. Fraser? "Don't open the matter: if you do open it, the whole thing may be blocked." Does that sound like a transaction that is popular and businesslike and acceptable to the people of Sydney? Doesn't it sound like a transaction shady all through, a transaction that it is dangerous to open up again? Fraser says: "Don't open it as you value your lives because if you do you may lose the whole pudding." That is the situation as I see it, honourable gentlemen, and I don't think it is necessary to elaborate any further on that aspect.

There is just one other aspect upon which I want to say a few words. My honourable friend proved, I think conclusively, that the railway executive made up its mind either in the fall of 1920 or in the early part of 1921 that this land was to be given over to the Imperial Oil Company. It is not necessary for me to criticize the Imperial Oil Company: it was their business to get the land if they could get it. But it was the business of the Executive of the Canadian National Railways to protect the public interests, and not give away and sacrifice the property of the people of this country.

Now, what do we observe? We observe Mr. Fraser, the valuator, saying that this land is worth so much, but that it is needed, and should be reserved for future development. Down comes the mallet of one of the chief executives of the railway. He says: "What do you know about this thing? Who told you the City Council was not in favour of it? How do you know the railway wants it? We say the railway doesn't want it." And Mr. Fraser was drilled into his position so that he would follow immediately after the gentlemen who had made up their minds to dispose of these lands.

Mr. Vincent Mullins, the gentleman to whom I referred, the agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department on the Island, wrote to the City Council telling them that there were objections by the Public Health Department to the placing of this oil plant on the land in question. What happened to him? The ink on his letter was scarcely dry when he received a peremptory communication from the Deputy Minister of Marine at Ottawa, telling him that it was none of his business, and to keep his hands off the transaction. And, very considerately indeed, by the same mail went out a letter from the Deputy Minister to the Imperial Oil Company, assuring the Company that Mr. Vincent Mullins had been put in his place.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Was that correspondence read to the House yesterday?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: It is on file.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: It is in the record. I did not read it.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Then the Department of Public Health had some correspondence about the matter, but it is interesting to note that they did not get very far. There were some communications, some inquiries; but some significant influence put a clamp on the Department of Public Health, and they saw new light—I don't know whether it was an oil light or an electric light, or what it was, but they saw some kind of light—and came to the conclusion that it would be all right to have the plant placed on this land.

The Public Works Department also was interested. It was expected that they would put a terminal wharf there. But by some mysterious power they were not permitted to get very far. They got out of the matter by explaining, as the correspondence shows, that the construction of an oil plant on this piece of land would not in any way interfere with navigation. I do not know just what was meant; at any rate they do not appear very long in the matter; they are removed, if they ever were an obstruction.

Then the Department of Marine had some little interest—because, as I said a few moments ago, their objection also was overruled by someone. Towards the later stage the Department of Militia and Defence intervened, setting up some claim to the property; but their standing did not last much longer than the standing of the other people. There seemed to be some power or influence at work which quickly removed all the obstacles that would stand in the way of the railway executive disposing of this property.

My honourable friend yesterday made reference to a letter at the beginning of the correspondence in which Mr. Mitchell, I think, required different things to be done, among others the making of a resumé of the whole situation, after traffic and other matters had been investigated, to be placed before the President of the System for his decision. My honourable friend remarked upon the very astonishing fact that none of these things appear in the correspondence submitted to this House. Now, while there do not appear to be official reports of the character referred to by my honourable friend, I observe that there are other reports, and I am going to give one or two illustrations of the class of report upon which the railway executive appear to have acted. I think it would be reasonable to expect that the instructions contained in the letter to which I have referred would be carried out, and that there would be a traffic report, a valuation report, and a report upon the other aspects of this matter, and that all of them would go before the President. The correspondence shows nothing of that kind; but it does show a letter written by the Imperial Oil Company. Honourable gentlemen will find the Oil Company writing that an editor had started a crusade against this proposition. That is all right; there can be no objection to the Oil Company writing that; but strangely enough we find the executives of the railway, in their letters from one to the other, repeating the very words of the Imperial Oil Company's communication, and pointing out, the superior to the inferior, that a crusade is being started by a newspaper editor, and warning the subordinates to be prepared for this newspaper editor. Then we find the Oil Company again in another letter saying that only a handful of misinformed people, led by an editor, are objecting to this proposition; and, strangely enough, we find that statement again incorporated in the official correspondence from some of the heads of the railway executive, placed on the Table of the House. So, as I see it, the executive, instead of taking reports from their own officials, have been taking reports from the Imperial Oil Company, and have been sending these down through the several grades for the instruction and the improvement, at times, of the gentlemen who are supposed to carry out the orders of the higher officers.

Then I find a further statement. In the correspondence there is a resumé dated July 13th, 1921, made by Mr. Shatford, the gentleman referred to by my honourable friend, in which Mr. Shatford in writing to his superior in the city of Toronto categorically states the whole situation. Mr. Shatford, of course, had a perfect right to make that statement. But what do we find? On the 21st day of July Mr. Brady accepts that statement of Mr. Shatford to Mr. Mayer as the official statement of the executive of the railway, and he sends it down to Major Bell as the official judgment of the executive of the railway. He says: "We think this; we find that." I want to say, honourable gentlemen, that does not indicate that the railway executive was acting upon the information and the judgment of its own officials, but that it was accepting without question the statements of the Imperial Oil Company, and without knowing, as we are bound to believe, whether those statements were or were not wholly true. In any event, to my mind, it is an astonishing thing to find any departmental or railway official making the statement of a company seeking a favour the official statement of the Department.

I am not going to detain the House at any great length, honourable gentlemen. I think it is absolutely clear, on the correspondence and the statements made yesterday by my honourable friend, that the railway executive deliberately and in cold blood made up their minds that they were going to hand this property over to the Imperial Oil Company.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Why so?

Hon. Mr. TANNER: That is more than I can say. They do say that the Imperial Oil Company is a good customer, but I presume that when that company pays any money to the National Railways, it takes good care to get service in return. As my honourable friend has pointed out, the Canadian National Railway is the only one that serves the Maritime Provinces, and it does not seem like a very strong argument to say that because the company is a good customer, therefore the interests of the city of Sydney and of eastern Nova Scotia should be sacrificed, and that this land should be given away, particularly since there was other land on the harbour which, as I understand it, would be just as useful for the Oil Company's business.

I think my honourable friend has made out a powerful case against the railway executive in this regard—that they deliberately entered upon that policy; that they brushed aside all opposition, all argument and all reason; that they refused to listen to advice, and simply went down there and took out of those 7 acres of land nearly one-third of it, which in my judgment leaves practically nothing of value for the railway business. Anyone who looks at the map will see that the land is so cut that if there were any extensions or developments in that part of the province the remainder of it is so left that in coming to it you have to pass through a narow gusset, and it would be of practically no value to the railway. If the development which is expected should occur, this country will be put to great expense in reinstating its title to this land, and securing an addition to that portion.

I think my honourable friend has clearly shown that the railway executive exercised no vision whatever. That part of Canada is either going to develop or to fall behind. The people believe it is going forward, and in that view I think they are right, and whatever can be done I think should be done to protect the people in that event. I do not profess to say whether these lands can be taken back or not, but it is lamentable that the railway management has been so lacking in ability to look into the future that they were unable to see any probability of business developing in that part of the province.

Whether redress can be obtained or not, I look upon this discussion as being of great value, and I hope that nothing like this will ever occur again. I think that, if possible, some steps should be taken and some safeguards provided to prevent the country from being similarly divested of valuable terminal property by any railway executive that may be in charge of the Canadian roads:

Hon. W. B. ROSS: Honourable gentlemen, I have very few remarks to make on this subject. I do not intend to go over the evidence again, as two members of the House have already done that in very great detail. I wish to say, however, that if the railway authorities base their action, and seek justification for what I think is a very extraordinary transaction, upon the vote of the City Council of Sydney, there is not very much excuse for what they have done. Apart altogether from the fact that there was a very large minority in the City Council upon both occasions—the first vote being 7 to 5 and the second 6 to 4—there was a very strong expression of opinion from outside in support of the view of the minority, and this should have given pause to the railway people in what they were doing.

But if the railway authorities choose to confine themselves entirely to the vote, and ignore entirely the expression of outside opinion, they must explain why the transfer was made from the Crown to the Oil Company without compliance with the two conditions which were attached to the vote. One of them was that an important street, George street, which is now a cul-de-sac, should be extended through the land that was being conveyed. thus giving the town access to the portion that was left, and to the portion of the land which is really the Government terminal of the railway at the eastern end. Another condition—which can be readily appreciated when we understand the value that towns, cities, and villages attach to their public squares and parks, which are used as free recreation grounds for women and children, and people generally—was that an expenditure not to exceed $1,000 should be made by the Oil Company, which of course would be supplemented by what the city itself was spending on ground immediately adjoining. Both of those conditions were ignored in the grant, and when the railway authorities say they were simply carrying out what the City Council agreed to, their statement is a misrepresentation and a mistake, for they did nothing of the kind.

I think the grant might very well be recalled, but if it is not, some steps should be taken by the Government to compel the Oil Company to make good those two conditions that were imposed upon them by the vote of the City Council. There was a staunch expression of opinion from the citizens of the town, from members of the Cabinet, and even from officers within the Railway Department itself; so that I do not think the Railway authorities were justified in pressing this matter, even though they had a small majority in the City Council.

When we remember that this property is practically the terminus of our National system of railways on the Atlantic coast that the whole area is seven acres across and a fraction, and that the railway people conveyed away about two and three-quarter acres, it will be seen that the conveyance was an improvident thing. They must have been acting on the assumption that there would be no extension of business in Sydney, and that any business which is there now would dry up, because seven acres is a very small piece of land for the terminal of even a small railway, much less a transcontinental system. This land is needed for the business of Sydney, a very fair-sized city, to say nothing of the trade of a number of towns and villages, the names and population of which were laid before the House, and the very susbtantial trade with Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, and all the ports on the north of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that have been referred to. I think the railway authorities have a good deal to explain as to why they gave away any part of that property. The correspondence is conclusive that, instead of getting $8,000 on the ground that it was not wanted and never would be wanted, the property should have been sold at public auction. It is perfectly certain that if that had been done, instead of bringing $8,000, the land would have brought from $40,000 to $50,000, and probably more, from this Oil Company itself, because, looking at it from their point of view, it is practically an ideal situation. Further than that, the citizens of Sydney, rather than let the property go to the Oil Company, would have given a very much larger sum, and taken their chances of re-selling the property in private lots, as there is evidence in the correspondence that it would have brought a very much larger sum in view of the prices at which lots were selling in that vicinity.

From the point of view of the Railway I think this deal was very improvident. They have let that land go for $8,000, yet probably inside of 10 or 15 years they will be buying it back at a cost of $150,000 or $200,000. That will probably be the history of this piece of land. The sale was not only improvident, but it was unjust toward the city of Sydney, and unfair to make the grant and ignoring the conditions which the City Council attached to their consent. It is unfair also to those citizens who made their protest against having this Oil Company right alongside their Park, their public amusement ground, and the residental district.

I would like to see either one of two things done—either the grant recalled altogether, on the ground, which I think is sufficiently shown in the correspondence, that the Crown was misled, misinformed and deceived about the value of the land and also about the consent of the City Council of Sydney. Failing the recall of the grant, I think the least thing the Crown can do is to see that the two conditions stipulated for by the City Council of Sydney are annexed to the grant.

This whole transaction points to the necessity of legislation somewhat on the lines which have been suggested, arising out of another transaction—that in sales of property belonging to the people, standing in the name of the Crown, when it is of greater value than say $500 or $1,000, instead of such sales being completed by the Department—though perhaps necessarily the negotiations must be conducted by the Department—the final conveyance should be made only by Parliament, instead of being left in the hands of the Minister of the Crown. It strikes me that matters are coming to such a pass that, by combination and pressure, the stress and strain on Ministers of the Crown is becoming too great for them to resist, and that the best thing for them to do would be to agree willingly to a proposition that anything in excess of $1,000 in the shape of Crown property, instead of being conveyed away by the Department, should be finally parted with only when sanctioned by an Act of Parliament.

I would simply say, in conclusion, that this is one of the worst transactions I have seen for a long time.

Hon. JOHN McCORMICK: I do not intend to detain the House for any length of time, as the matter has been so lucidly dealt with; but perhaps it is necessary to give some explanation as to why there has not been a more pronounced protest from the people of Sydney. The one reason for that, in my judgment, is this. It would not require any great knowledge of business or of the requirements for terminals for a man of ordinary judgment who went down and saw this property, to decide against its sale, as the Minister of Public Works did; and I want to compliment that Minister on having some respect for an obligation that seems to have been overlooked by some important members of the administration of the railway. There is a width of only 140 feet of land owned by the railway, leading down to Barrack Point and down the shore of the harbour for a considerable distance; and the only possible means for trackage and for sheds in connection with the terminal is on that piece of land containing seven acres and a fraction. If the people of Sydney had any thought that the sale would have been made, I believe there would have been a most pronounced protest. I have no hesitation in saying that if a plebiscite of property-owners in Sydney had been taken, at least 7 or 8 out of every 10 would have objected. The town and district of Sydney have been patiently waiting. They are very short of wharfage facilities, and if it were not that the Dominion Steel Company and the Dominion Coal Company have wharves for the handling of their products, the surrounding country as well as Sydney would be at a great disadvantage. The piece of land owned by the railway was small enough, even if they had retained it all; and now that this matter has been placed before the House so clearly, I would say, without being too hard on anyone connected with the matter, that there is no reasonable doubt in my mind that the railway officials were altogether negligent of their duties in regard to it.

If it is possible for the Government of the country to take any action at this time to reclaim that property, that action should be taken in the interest of the trade, industry and development of the town of Sydney. You have there, to mention only the consumption of raw materials inside the Steel Company's yards, a consumption of coal amounting to over 100,000 tons a month. Nearly a million and a quarter tons of coal are used there annually. The coal and steel industries are the principal sources of employment for the people of the town of Sydney, and they have been patiently waiting for wharf accommodation to give them access to the sea for the exportation of the products of those industries. Now they are faced with the fact that the terminals that will be placed there will be altogether inadequate. There is no doubt in the mind of anyone who understands the situation and makes only a moderate estimate of the expansion that will take place within the next five or six years, that the Railway Department will be obliged to buy this land back again. Therefore, I repeat, if it is possible, by any means within the power of this Parliament, to do anything to prevent this outrage on the industries and the people of that community, it should be done, and done quickly.

To show the necessity for wharf accommodation let me mention that, in the month of December last, I think, some thoroughbred cattle were shipped down there from Ontario, and there were no terminal facilities at Sydney for the handling of them. It was only through the kindness of the Dominion Steel Company in permitting the steamer, with a partial cargo of their products, to sail down to their wharf that it was possible to handle the cattle. That goes to show the dire necessity for terminal facilities. Yet one-third or 2.7 out of 7.5 or 7.7 acres of the land needed for a terminal for the town of Sydney has been disposed of. The industries in the town itself, the tremendous mining industry outside, the increase of population that has been taking place in the past eight or ten years, and the certain prospect of greater increase in the near future, require that something be done to permit of the products of that district having access to the sea.

I do not think that anything further need be said. My remarks are not made in any carping spirit or any fault-finding way. In fact, I desire to compliment the honourable the Minister of Public Works for the interest he as a public man has displayed in this matter. He is the only person connected with any of the departments here, or the railway organization, who seems to realize the importance of that piece of property. Let the Government send down to Sydney some confidential man who would be able to form an estimate of the requirements for railway purposes. If that is done, I have no doubt he will come back with a recommendation that the land in question should if possible be reclaimed.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: Honourable gentlemen, it is my unfortunate lot to have to say a word on behalf of the under-dog in most of the affairs that come before this House, and it would seem that in the present case, so far as this debate has proceeded, the Canadian National Railway executive, or the late executive, are occupying the position of the under-dog.

Having an intimate knowledge of Sydney harbour, the railway business that is done there, and the fact that the business that develops there is local produce from the mines and the steel plant, I know that there is not an extensive export business from Sydney, and in my opinion there never will be. These things were undoubtedly taken into consideration by the gentlemen who made the recommendation. The fact has been established by the statements made yesterday and to-day, that the City Council itself, after due deliberation, approved of this project. Then apparently some objection was raised by property-owners in the city, and more time was taken for further investigation and consideration of the whole matter. Finally the City Council reiterated its action, and the Canadian National Railways officials or executive made a recommendation to the Government. Please keep in mind that the Canadian National Railways did not transfer this property without the consent and authority of the Crown itself. If anything improper has been done, I hold that the responsibility does not rest wholly or ultimately upon the officials of the railway, who themselves had only to go upon the advice of those whom they sent to make an investigation and inspection; and that if the people of the city of Sydney considered that property which should not be alienated from the possession of the Crown was likely to be, then the matter should have been the subject of direct negotiation between the people of that locality and the Government itself. It is but fair and just to the gentlemen who had the responsibility of making the recommendation to observe these facts. While it may be unfortunate that the recommendation was acted upon, nevertheless the final responsibility cannot be said to have been theirs.

Hon. G. W. FOWLER: Honourable gentlemen, I did not intend to intervene in this debate, but, coming from the Maritime Provinces and being greatly interested in them, I feel it incumbent upon me to show that I am with those people who are making this protest.

I do not see why my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Robertson) who represents Labour in this House should be so sensitive on the subject. I do not know that the Railway Department was particularly attacked. If it was, the attack was based upon documentary evidence which came from itself—evidence produced here in correspondence that passed between the railway executive and their subordinate officers. The documents certainly did disclose a most astounding state of affairs. It is astonishing that a man who was at the head of a great railway system should have had so little vision as to the future of Canada. The only justification for the existence of that railway system was that there was going to be great growth in this country; otherwise a very large portion of that railroad should be scrapped. And let me tell you that the West cannot prosper unless the East prospers with it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Halifax and St. John, yes; Sydney never, so far as export business is concerned.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Sydney, yes, as far as export is concerned.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No, sir.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Sydney is the jumping-off place for Newfoundland and the trade between Canada and Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Local trade.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Local trade? That is not a local trade. It is not by any means a local trade. How far does trade have to be carried before it ceases to be local?

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK: That is foreign trade.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, it is as much foreign trade as trade to Great Britain. It is not foreign trade in a sense, because we all belong to the same confederacy, but it certainly would not be called local trade, the trade with a country over which we have no control, although she is a sister nation with us in the Empire. So I say it is not local trade, and there can be no question that there will be a very great advance in Sydney in the future. But there, where the railways have only a restricted area to start with, they sell off practically their whole waterfront.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, practically their whole waterfront.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: No, no.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, one-third of the waterfront—the part of that waterfront that would be contiguous to the wharf—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: A little piece of it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: —and without reserving or taking into consideration what the town council considered necessary. That town council certainly was not very much alive to the rights of the public and to its duty as representative of the city of Sydney, but even that slack council considered it necessary to incorporate in the deed the right of way to the proposed wharf. That is eliminated entirely. Another consideration was omitted, namely, that in addition to the purchase price of the property the sum of $1,000 per annum was to be paid towards improvements in Victoria Park. If I were living in the neighboudhood of that park or in the habit of walking in it to enjoy the air and surroundings, I would not care to have oil tanks stuck up under my nose. The odor from those tanks is not particularly grateful, at any rate, to the nostrils of people who have not been bred beside them.

Hon. Mr. McLEAN: They are not like flower beds.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No. There is a difference between them and the perfumes of Araby. So I say that for many reasons it is not desirable to erect oil tanks in that particular place. They would be a menace to the public health and the public safety. And by selling this property to the Imperial Oil Company the Railway Department was depriving itself of property which it would know, if it had any common sense at all, any vision of the future, or any thought of what was best for the road, ought to be retained by the Crown.

When the Minister of Public Works—the first man who combined intelligence with probity—went down there to view the premises, what did he say? He wrote at once and said, "This deal should not go through." Of course, we could not expect him to act otherwise than justly, because originally he comes from the province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: He is innocent.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But it is unfortunate that some of those other gentlemen who were closely connected with this transaction had not been raised in similar surroundings, and did not protect the interests of the railway for which they were acting, and were paid to act. The whole transaction has a most suspicious appearance. I have been in Parliament for a great many years and have known of some transactions that were slightly suspicious and unsavory, but this, thought not a large transaction, is certainly the rankest that ever I have known. There must have been considerable oil transferred one way or another before this thing was accomplished.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I ask my honourable friend, is he referring to a transaction between the Imperial Oil Company and the Canadian National Railways? The transaction, obviously, must be between the Imperial Oil Company and the Crown.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Of course it is.

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK: It was recommended by the Railways.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But it was recommended by the Railways and the Crown were only acting on the advice of the Railways.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Quite so.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Yes, on their suggestion and at their request.

See how the question of the election governed this thing—how it was held in abeyance while the election was pending, for fear it might have some effect or influence in the election. The matter was dropped, and everybody thought that the whole thing was over —that there was going to be nothing more about it. But as soon as the election is decided, then the machinations are resumed, with the result that the new Government—acting, I suppose, on the report and recommendation of the railway authorities—the new Government is induced to put the deal through.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Quite right.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And they muss up and mess up the thing so that they do not know the exact acreage, and they have to put through a second Order in Council before they can get the acreage right.

So it seems to me, now that this matter has been brought before Parliament, it is the plain duty of the Government to recall that grant. If it has to be done by expropriation, let it be done by expropriation. Whatever may be the cost, let this wrong be righted. Let not the inhabitants of that growing, enterprising, thriving town of Sydney be deprived of their rights in this matter, and let nothing be thrown in the way of the advancement and the increased prosperity of Sydney. It seems to me that the duty of the Government is very plain and simple.

I would like to have heard from the responsible Minister in this House some declaration on his part that would be encouraging and comforting to the people of Sydney.

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK: With the permission of the House I would like to refer to the statement of my honourable friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Robertson), that there is no prospect of any large export from Sydney. Where did he get that information? Is the honourable gentleman not aware that we are shipping abroad from Sydney thousands of tons of steel rods and other steel products which are made there? I think that if the necessary facilities are provided there is very little ground for refusing to believe that within a very short time other industries will come there and there will be a large export trade from Sydney. In view of the important position the honourable gentleman holds and has held as an authority on labour questions, and for fear that any misstatement of that kind would have a bad effect on the minds of people outside, I desire to challenge his assertion. I believe that not only will Sydney increase its production in the line in which it is now engaged, but it will attract other industries for the re-manufacture of the goods that are now being made there.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I crave permission of the House to reply to my honourable friend. I specifically pointed out that there was an export business, a large export business, from the local industries.

Hon. Mr. McCORMICK: They are not only local.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I desire to point out also that those local industries have large docks and wharves, sufficient many times over to meet their present requirements. And during the war scores and scores of ships, almost every week, were calling there and taking on bunker coal, because the harbour has splendid facilities for that. But I say again. there never will be a large export business originating in Canada west of Truro and going to Sydney. There will not be any great quantity of such exports from Sydney for the very good reason that Halifax harbour is already equipped and is available, the rail haul to Halifax is shorter, and the water transportation to that port cheaper, and it is an all-the-year-round port. Sydney will have the export business that originates at Sydney, but I would point out that the necessary facilities are there, owned by the owners of the industries, and the the Canadian National Railways or the Government have never up to the present found it necessary to build extensive dock facilities at Sydney.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: May I ask the indulgence of the House and the honourable gentleman to say a word or two? I would like to have the honourable gentleman's opinion as to whether there is no possibility of a mail steamer a week, or all the mail steamers calling at Sydney. I pointed out the great advantage which actually accrued in the years to which I made reference. The mail steamers would require docks. More than that, I think the honourable gentleman quite overlooks the fact, which I touched on only slightly yesterday, that during the year there comes to the St. Lawrence, and always will come, the bulk of the ocean-borne traffis, because the bulk of our business lies in Quebec and Montreal and west. But the point I made was that all these steamers pass within a few miles of Sydney when going to their destination in the Mediterranean or elsewhere, except to England. They do not go to Halifax or St. John except in the winter. My honourable friend spoke of the shipment of cattle. Cattle from Ontario were sent to Sydney and went on board there, and last autumn automobiles were shipped down to Sydney. It will always be more economical to send some products of the East the short distance to Sydney than to send them to Montreal and have them loaded there and then come back past Sydney.

I would like my honourable friend to say whether the calling of mail steamers at Sydney, a thing which was unquestionably proved, would not be of advantage.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I quite agree with the honourable member from Sydney that it was proven possible to save a little time in handling the mail. I think it was also proved that it was not desirable as an economical arrangement. Some time it may be. I also believe that there are at the present time ample facilities in Sydney. I am not trying to justify this particular transaction, but what I have tried to point out to the House is that the railway officials have undoubtedly believed that the property was not required for railway purposes, and never would be, and that, with the twice obtained consent of the Town Council, the Crown, not the railway officials, made the grant. I think it might also be borne in mind that, with the establishment of an industry such as the Imperial Oil Company, probably more ships will visit Halifax harbour to discharge oil and take on bunker oil for fuel than would ever see Sydney.

Hon. F. F. PARDEE: After listening to what has been said this afternoon, and after hearing the repeated demands that this property should be re-surrendered to the Crown or the railway company, it appears to me that some of the honourable gentlemen who have spoken have come to a somewhat hasty conclusion. They will agree with me that the history of railways has been that no matter how much or how little land they may own, it is only with the greatest possible difficulty that you can ever get them to give up one foot unless you convince them in every possible human way that the land will be of no use whatever to them. We have an example of that in my own city, where the railways have a large area. It is almost an absolute impossibility to get them to give up one foot of the ground for the establishment of industries until they are convinced that it will ensure to the benefit of the railways.

As my honourable friend said a moment ago, complaint is made here to-day because of the fact that one-third of the land that comprises this portion around the harbour of Sydney has been given to the Imperial Oil Company. I hold no brief for the Imperial Oil Company, although their original refinery in Canada was established in my own city; but I may say that the Imperial Oil Company has been perhaps one of the greatest factors in the prosperity of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Oh.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: My honourable friend says "Oh." He speaks without the book, and he cannot refute that statement. The Imperial Oil Company have a chain of refineries extending from Vancouver to Halifax; they have expended millions of dollars, and employ thousands of men; and they are to-day the only company that is exploring for oil in the Northwest Territories, where we hope oil will be found. We know as a matter of economic progress that once we establish to the world that Canada has sufficient oil for her own consumption and her own needs it will be one of the greatest possible factors in the prosperity of Canada. Last year that Company spent $1,000,000 exploring for oil in the Northwest Territories; and they are prepared to do so again. The honourable gentleman says Sydney is being deprived of an export trade by reason of these lands being taken. All I have to say is this—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is unfair.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: All I ask the honourable gentleman to do is to let me complete my statement.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE. My honourable friend stated that the only company operating in the North was the Imperial Oil Company. Does my honourable friend not know that the Anglo-Persian Company desired to get an opportunity to work up north and were beaten out by the Imperial Oil Company?

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: I really do not know.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, I know it.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: My honourable friend is quite welcome to his information. That does not alter my statement.

As I was proceeding to say, does it not strike honourable gentlemen that as the Company have established a tremendous industry at Halifax, and now seem to be prepared to establish somewhat of an industry at Sydney, the people of Sydney, or the Town Council, might well believe that with the land in the hands of the Imperial Oil Company, and with that industry coming there, they would be just as well off, and perhaps far better off than if the land were left to be built up by the trade that is to come through the railway?

Reverting to what I have already stated, that railways seldom give up land unless it can be proved to them that it will be more beneficial for them to do so and to have industries established on it, may I mention the fact that the previous Government seemed to have the greatest faith in D. B. Hanna—and in that I agree with them. Mr. Hanna was undoubtedly a first-class railway man. Mr. Hanna seems to have been concerned in the giving up of this land. I do not know that anything derogatory should be said of Mr. Hanna by reason of his having done this, until it is fully proved. We have heard the statement made here that the Minister of Public Works and the Hon. D. D. McKenzie both thought it should not have been done; but I take it that as against the opinions of those two honourable gentlemen, perhaps the opinion and the theory of policy of an experienced railway man might well be brought into play. Before we make an absolute demand that this land shall be re-surrendered, it might be well to consult the present head of the Canadian National Railways to go over the ground with him, and point out all the facts to him. When we got his opinion, it might be that the members of this House would be better able to judge whether the land has been wrongly given up, and whether it should be re-surrendered.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I do not intend to answer the inquiry which is on the Order Paper at this moment, because I have not gone through the record; and even if I went through it, I might not do full justice to the persons who were instrumental in having the Crown dispossess itself of that piece of land. The statements made by the honourable gentleman from Sydney (Hon. Mr. McLennan) and some of his colleagues in this Chamber will be brought to the attention of the Railway Department, and I will obtain within a reasonable time a statement explaining the conclusions that were come to, and embodied in an Order in Council.

I quite see the point that my honourable friend the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson) is trying to make, that, whatever the advice and whoever furnished it, in the last analysis the Government that passed the Order in Council is to be held responsible. That is what was in the mind of the honourable gentleman, although he did not say it in so many words. He spoke of the Crown. I draw the honourable gentleman's attention to the fact, with which he is familiar, having sat in Council, that 15 or 16 gentlemen sitting around the Council Board receive reports and recommendations from the various departments. They have to be guided by the reports put before them. In this instance it was undoubtedly the report of the railway officials. That report comes to the Deputy Minister of Railways, from him to the Minister of Railways, and from the Minister of Railways to the Council Chamber. In this instance the Cabinet had before it a statement of facts which seemed to cover completely the question which had to be elucidated. "What were the people of that city thinking?" There was the report from the City Council. "Did the report show the vote that was taken?" Very likely it simply indicated the fact that the City Council had voted approval. There was a report from the railway officials that the Canadian National Railways did not need the land, and there was the valuation of the property at so much.

It seems to be admitted on all sides that, if the Imperial Oil Company needed some land in that part of the country on which to put oil tanks and reservoirs, a way should be found to accommodate them. So the question resolves itself into this: Was that location the proper one; were the railway authorities justified in declaring that they did not need the land; and were the necessary precautions taken to ensure the conditions which the Council had embodied in its resolution favouring the sale of the land? These are questions which I shall be in a better position to discuss when I get a report from the Railway Department. I will draw the attention of Council to the representations made that even if the railway did not need the land, the interests of the city of Sydney would be better served by arranging with the Imperial Oil Company to locate elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Can my honourable friend inform the House whether or not the Government received any protest or objection from the city of Sydney prior to the time the Order in Council approving the sale was passed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will make inquiry. I may say that personally I knew nothing of the transaction until it was brought up in this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: I think there were representations made to the Minister—certainly to the local Minister, Mr. McCurdy.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: What year would that be in?

Hon. Mr. McLENNAN: 1921.

On motion of Mr. Dandurand, the debate was adjourned until Thursday next.

EXPLOSIVES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. B. ROSS moved the second reading of Bill D, an Act to amend the Explosives Act.—Hon. Mr. Boyer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will read a statement from the Chief Inspector of Explosives Lieutenant Colonel Ogilvie, in regard to this Bill. It may help the Committee, if this Bill goes to Committee, in dealing with it:

Ottawa, 7th March, 1923.

The Deputy Minister,
Department of Mines,

Reference Bill amending Explosives Act

Dear Sir,—We understand that the Bill introduced by Senator Boyer last session has been re-introduced, and that he proposes that it shall apply exclusively to factories engaged in the manufacture of explosives. We beg to refer you to our communication of the 26th May, 1922, and supplement it with the following observations.

1. In issuing licenses to factories manufacturing explosives, the table of distances, which is in effect in the United Kingdom and other British Dominions, is employed. The conditions therein applied are similar to those employed by all the European nations, and also more stringent than those in use in U.S.A. The intra-factory distances for buildings and quantities is that applied in the United Kingdom and other British Dominions. Copies of these tables are enclosed.

2. It will be observed that in all cases, where artificial or natural protection is at hand, the distances are reduced. This is a universal practice in all countries.

3. The quantities of explosive, in the majority of the buildings in explosive factories, is much less than that stored in magazines of merchants, miners, etc. The largest manufacturing building of any explosive factory in Canada will contain less than five (5) tons, while the contents of many magazines, used by dealers and miners, exceed twenty (20) tons.

As a general rule the factory buildings contain less than half a ton. Therefore the danger to the public, arising from the possible explosion of a factory building, is much less than that due to the explosion of an ordinary storage magazine containing much larger quantities.

4. The fixed distance of two miles from any other building is excessive, as it would abnormally penalize the establishment of any prospective factory by compelling the purchase of a large tract of land exceeding twelve (12) square miles, the greater portion of which could not be utilized for any useful purpose and thus incur heavy outlay of capital, which would increase the cost of production, from a monetary standpoint.

(b) Heavy expenditures for sidings and roads for transportation of raw materials, fuel, finished products, etc. and the keeping of these in proper condition and removal of snow, etc.

(c) The dwelling places of the employees and workers in the factory would be so far removed that they could not conveniently travel to and from work without loss of considerable time, and in winter season the difficulty would be increased.

5. The features under No. 4 would not only greatly increase initial expenditure, but recurring increase of costs due to unnecessary charges to capital and manufacturing expenses caused by the restrictions set forth in the proposed amendment to the Act.

6. The proposed amendment would practically give the present established factories a monopoly of the manufacture of explosives, and prevent the further development of the explosive industry in Canada.

7. The miners, quarrymen and others of Canada have been complaining of the high price of explosive in this country, and, only recently, a number of these have combined to build a factory with the result that competition has been introduced and a reduction in price has already resulted.

8. Explosives are absolutely essential for the development of the resources of this country—such as mining, railway and canal construction, buildings, farms, etc., and any increase in cost of them means a tax upon the producers of Canada, and enhances cost of production.

9. The danger to the public, from explosive factories, is much less than that arising from the transportation of explosives, where carloads containing 15,000 lbs. and more, are passing through populous centres every day.

10. Fireworks factories are explosive factories under the Act. It would be absurd to compel such plants to acquire such extensive terrains, and especially where the quantities of explosive involved amounts generally to a few pounds.

11. The whole question of the location and distance of an explosive factory, from any dwelling or other building, is amply provided for in the regulations under the Act and by the adoption of the procedure and practice which has been found to be satisfactory in Great Britain and other countries.

In closing, would respectfully urge that the adoption of the proposed amendment would prevent the establishment of new explosive factories by the introduction of such restrictive measures as would increase initial outlay for land, construction etc., and also, in addition, cause increase cost of production by the location, at such great distances from terminal transportation points, workmen dwellings, etc. It is in the interest of mining and other industries that competition in the manufacture of explosives should exist, whereas the proposed amendment would give the present factories an unfair advantage over prospective competitors, and have a general tendency to throttle competition.

Yours truly,

G. Ogilvie, Lieut.-Colonel,
Chief Inspector of Explosives.
Per Alfred E. Macintyre.

I will hold for the Committee stage the table of intra-factory distances, and others which are in my hand, for the Committee to examine.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

EXPRESS, RAILWAY AND TELEGRAPH EXPENDITURES

MOTION FOR RETURN

On the notice of inquiry:

By Hon. Mr. McDonald:

That he will inquire:

What sums of money have been paid by the various departments of the Government for express charges, railway fares, and telegraph tolls, between January 1st, 1922, and December 31st, 1922, and to what railway, express and telegraph companies respectively were such sums paid?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am advised that the honourable gentleman should change his inquiry into a motion for a return. If the honourable gentleman did so, it might save him time.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: The honourable gentleman from Shediac (Hon. Mr. McDonald) asked me to have the inquiry stand, as he would be unavoidably absent for the space of an hour or two. But I am quite willing to accept the suggestion on his behalf.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: From the Secretary of State I have received a letter stating that every branch of the Service has been circularized, but that, as the information is voluminous, the inquiry should be changed to a motion for a return.

The inquiry, as a motion for return, was agreed to.

THE MOST FAVOURED NATION CLAUSE

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. C. P. BEAUBIEN rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Nations enjoying the benefit of the most favored Nation clause, without any adequate compensation for Canada, and will ask the Government whether it intends to obtain the denunciation of the treaties granting such unilateral advantages.

He said: The subject-matter of this inquiry is, in my judgment, of material importance to the country. It is, however, almost self-evident and does not require to be laboured. I will therefore claim your attention for a few moments only.

For a time we were faced with one great problem, that of the National Railways. We find now that a second one has arisen of equal if not of greater magnitude, that of our population.

The Canadian people represent a very small household about to settle in an immense domain with, proportionately, heavy expense of maintenance and development. Taking its entire superficies, Canada has less than 3 inhabitants per square mile. Considering its arable lands only, Canada has less than 9 inhabitants to the square mile. Compare these figures with the following:

France has 184 inhabitants to the square mile.

Germany has 318 inhabitants to the square mile.

Belgium has 670 inhabitants to the square mile.

It is therefore obvious that we need to import bone and sinew to build up the Dominion; but it is also evident that we want the right kind—that only which constitutes an asset to a nation. Above all, we want immigrants that will become bona fide settlers, and not merely transients imported at our expense—but for the benefit of our neighbour. Before we turn on the flow of incomers, we must see to it with determination that the receptacle is free from leakages and not merely a funnel through which throngs will pour across the border?

From 1911 to 1921 our population has received the following increments:

By immigration	1,975,393
By births	1,836,407
	3,811,800

From the above we have lost the appalling number of 2,248,949 which means that our entire increase by immigration with, in addition 273,566 of our natural increment have been lost to us. It is natural, therefore, that public opinion should be focused with anxiety on this new menace—little to be expected in a land which from 1901 to 1911 held the record of the world for increased population.

Many causes have been pointed out and many remedies suggested in another place and throughout the land in relation to this disquieting problem. I venture to make my contribution to it, trusting that it may be of some use.

Our most sacred duty and our greatest interest lie in the keeping of our own people within our own country. Then, we should select, call in and retain desirable settlers.

I suggest that one of the best means to accomplish this double purpose is the intensive development of our foreign trade. Many incomers destined to farm lands revert to the city sooner or later. The increased number of unemployed drives organized labour to oppose immigration through their political influence. If industrial employment could be found for these immigrants, and also for our countrymen who drift to the city from the country, this most serious problem would have almost found a satisfactory solution.

Many industries cannot establish in our midst because our home consumption is too limited. Many others, over-extended during or even prior to the war, since normal conditions have returned, are working half-time or less.

The expansion of foreign trade has become much more difficult since the war. Foreign trade, in the same ratio as wealth, has been reduced throughout the world, and every country feels more keenly the necessity of preserving its own market. Within the last three years no less than 16 nations have increased their tariff duties. Great Britain now raises $700,000,000 yearly from her customs collections.

The emergency tariff of the United States from May 1921 to May 1922 has reduced our exports to that country on 15 commodities from 172 million dollars to 42 million dollars. The depreciation of foreign currencies has reduced our exportations to certain European countries to the following extent, in dollars: Canadian exports to—

To Belgium	40	millions,	1921
	12	"	1922
To France	27	"	1921
	8	"	1922
To Greece.	20	"	1921
	5	"	1922
To Italy	57	"	1921
	15	"	1922
To Roumania . ..	3	"	1921
	5	"	1922

We must, therefore, use every possible means to stimulate our foreign trade. The most efficient method is of course the negotiation of commercial treaties. Our neighbour to the south is making very effective use of it. In fact, in the House of Commons in England, on the 19th June last, Sir Robert Horne stated:

> The notorious manner in which the United States was biulding up trade on a basis of preferences was becoming a serious menace to British industries.

To this testimony I think I may be permitted to add another, closer still to us, and which speaks strikingly of the result of treaty-making in connection with one of the greatest industries in Western Canada. I refer to a letter written by the President of the British Columbia Canning Association, Mr. F. E. Burke:

Vancouver, B.C., March 25th, 1922.

Hon. Charles Philippe Beaubien,
50 Notre Dame West,
Montreal, Canada.

My dear Senator:

Referring to our conversation when I was recently in Ottawa concerning the export of salmon to France, and how valuable the Preferential Treaty was to us in the salmon industry, would say that the facts in the case are as follows:

The salmon industry, the same as almost all other industries, suffered a very severe depression in the fall of 1920. There had been very large productions of salmon both in Alaska and other parts of the United States, and as these territories produce about six times as much as British Columbia produces, they were offering it everywhere at prices brought about by stringent financial conditions in the United States, that almost prohibited the sale of Canadian goods.

The very grade of fish that constitutes the largest proportion of the Canadian pack, namely Pinks and Chums, were the grades that were in the greatest abundance everywhere, and which we could not sell here in Canada. There was between six and seven hundred thousand cases of this product on hand in British Columbia at the beginning of 1921 with no prospects apparently in sight at that time to move them.

The result was that everybody's operations for the year of 1921 were curtailed almost to the stopping point of the entire industry, with the consequent industrial depression here in B.C.

During the war the American Government had shipped over in the stores for their Army enormous supplies of canned salmon in these grades, and at the close of the war these were thrown on the French market, at whatever price could be realized for them. The result was that everybody in France commenced to use canned salmon, and it became almost a standard article of food. These enormous army supplies that had been left in France and dumped on the market had all gone into consumption by the Spring of 1921, and the demand for it had become so strong that the French buyers immediately commenced to look around for the filling of this demand. They naturally applied to the three sources of production: the United States, Japan and British Columbia.

To a certain extent France had taken, prior to the war, some British Columbia Salmon, and most of the producers in Canada had acquired the habit of stamping the word Canada on the top of their cans so that on any purchase that went to France they could comply with the French law in that respect, rather than put a sticker on each can.

When the French buyers commenced to feel out the market, they of course found that the United States market and the Japanese market were lower than Canadian prices because of the cheap means of fishing that are allowed in the United States and are not allowed in Canada, and because of the larger production per unit. However, this was overcome entirely by the Preferential Treaty that we had with France, which gave us 25 francs per 100 kilos preference. The result was that not only this large surplus pack that we had on hand went into consumption very rapidly in France, but also we were able to pack considerable more of this grade of fish in 1921 and dispose of that also. As a result we are almost entirely cleaned up of this grade of fish at the present time, the industry starts out next year on a legitimate basis, and we are assured of a steady demand in France for the Canadian product.

The Frenchmen have reached the point where they also ask for a can of salmon with the word "Canada" stamped on the can, and the American buyers themselves when they receive orders from their French connections have to purchase these goods in Canada and ship them from a Canadian port to be in a position to compete with the Canadian exporters. The business is of much more value to British Columbia than a domestic market would be, as it brings in entirely new money in exchange for one of our natural products, and it has been a life-saver for an industry that would have been in quite bad shape except for this Preferential Treaty.

I sincerely hope that something can be done in this line with Australia so as to assure us a market which is now dominated by the American salmon and which really should come to Canada. We want no particular advantages in world wide markets; all we want is an even break and this preferential gives us an even break because it overcomes a distinct advantage that the laws of these other countries allow in the taking of their fish by means which are not allowed in this country, and by overcoming the decreased cost by a larger output.

Trusting that I am not asking too much in asking for your support that may aid in an Australian Preferential on salmon. With kindest personal regards, believe me,

Sincerely yours,
F. E. Burke.

The importation of Canada per head of population is four times greater than that of the United States. To foreign producers we are worth a nation of over 30 million people. Concessions, therefore, assuring privileged access to our market are of great value, and should not be extended without due compensation. Strange to say, we are throwing them away now on no less than eight nations who without any return to us, enjoy the benefit of what is commonly known as the "most-favoured-nation clause."

In the days of good old Queen Anne—or, to point with precision to a date venerable with age—on the 9th December, 1713, Great Britain renewed with Spain the Treaty entered into by the Crowns of these nations on the 23rd May, 1667. The 1713 Treaty contains the following clause:

(Extract from Handbook of Treaties relating to Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Foreign Powers—page 831).

Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Spain signed at Utrecht, December 9, 1713.

Article II

Commerce and Navigation—Most Favoured Nation Treatment

The Subjects of Their Majesties, trading respectively in the Dominions of Their said Majesties, shall not be bound to pay greater Duties, or other Imposts whatsoever, for their Imports or Exports than shall be exacted of and paid by the Subjects of the most favoured Nation; and if it shall happen in time to come, that any diminutions of Duties or other advantages shall be granted by either side, to any Foreign Nation, the Subjects of each Crown shall reciprocally and fully enjoy the same. And as it has been agreed, as is above mentioned, concerning the rates of Duties, so it is ordained as a general rule between Their Majesties, that all and every one of their Subjects, shall in all lands and places subject to the command of Their Respective Majesties, use and enjoy at least the same privileges, liberties, and immunities concerning all Imposts or Duties whatsoever which relate to Persons, wares, merchandise, Ships, freighting, Mariners, navigation and commerce, and enjoy the same favour in all things (as well in the Courts of Justice, as in all those things whcih relate to trade, or any other right whatsoever), as the most favoured Nation uses and enjoys, or may use and enjoy for the future, as is explained more at large in the XXXVIIIth Article of the Treaty of 1667, which is specially inserted in the foregoing Article.

This treaty was concluded practically one half-century before Canada became a British colony. It is still in existence and operation and adamant to evolutions of time, the growth of Canada, the loud clamour of our autonomony.

Subsequently, but before Confederation, other treaties imposing similar obligations on us were concluded without our consent and mayhap without our knowledge, and they too are in force and ruling us to-day, notwithstanding our proud claim of self-control and self-determination, at least in respect to commercial matters. These treaties are the following:

Argentine—February 2, 1825.
Columbia—February 16, 1866.
Norway—March 18, 1826.
Russia—January 12, 1859.
Sweden—March 18, 1826.
Switzerland—September 6, 1855.
Venezuela—November 7, 1825.

The effect of the treaties is to greatly diminish the value of any concession made by us to any foreign country, since automatically the same concession must be extended to all nations enjoying the most-favoured-nation clause. I have inquired several times, but in vain, to ascertain what advantages Canada could draw from any such treaties. On the other hand, the disadvantages are strikingly apparent.

In our exchange of commodities with Spain, from 1912 to 1922, both inclusive, ten times out of eleven our imports have surpassed our exports. In the nine months ending December, 31, 1922, our imports have exceeded by 200 per cent our exports to that country.

In the same period of 11 years—from 1912 to 1922, both inclusive—we imported from Switzerland over 60 million dollars' worth and exported to that country less than 4½ million dollars. Whenever Switzerland bought $1 worth of goods from us, we purchased $15 worth of merchandise from her. During practically all this time Switzerland was a free-trade country and we could hope for no valuable tariff concessions from her. Lately Switzerland has adopted a policy of moderate protection, and we might perchance obtain from her useful tariff privileges. She imports nearly 250 million dollars' worth of products which we can furnish, amongst them cereals, prepared foodstuffs, live stock, leather, furs, asbestos, mica, iron and steel sheets and tubes, agricultural implements and machinery, small hardware and tools, stationary and portable engines, varnishes, lumber, wood-pulp, paper, boots and shoes, cotton goods and tobacco. On the other hand, our clientele, which is of great value to Switzerland could be easily shifted by tariff rearrangements to France. In 1921 we imported from Switzerland a total of $8,671,608 out of which textiles and fibres amounted together to $7,266,353, all of which, textiles and fibres could have been purchased in France.

I will not inflict upon this House a careful scrutiny of our commercial exchanges with the other nations to whom we are bound hand and foot by this nefarious clause. Some are without importance. Others result in a favourable balance to Canada, which comes to us without effort or even thought, and shows plainly what could be accomplished by treaties negotiated with care. Hence my question to the Government. Are they content to witness our trade parade through the world in swaddling clothes restraining and binding it at every turn? Are they satisfied now and then with a display of certain treaty negotiations where the value of the Canadian market or Canadian clientele is bargained for with due care when it is at the very same moment thrown unconsciously to the winds to the four corners of the earth?

Perhaps the Government may labour under the impression that the revocation of these treaties might entail strenuous discussion with the Home Government. This, however, is not likely to be the case, as the British Government for years has forseen the advisability of some of her Dominions withdrawing from these treaties. On the 20th of June, 1894, Sir Drummond Wolfe special British delegate to Spain, wrote to the Spanish Minister, Senor Moret:

(Extract from Handbook of Treaties relating to Commerce and Navigation between Great Britain and Foreign Powers—page 876.)

Protocol between Great Britain and Spain providing for cancellation of Treaty in reference to British Colonies.

Sir H. Drummond Wolff to Senor Moret

Madrid, June 20, 1894.

M. le Ministre,

The negotiations for a Commercial Treaty have now reached a stage where, before further progress can be made, they must be submitted to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

There are some points still only partially discussed, and on these important questions of detail will have to be carefully elaborated and worked out, the more so as some of them are without precedent in any of the Treaties negotiated by Spain with other countries. It is proposed, therefore, that the two British Delegates should at once proceed to London to render an account of the work already achieved, and it is believed that a suspension of the discussions until a later period of the year will also prove acceptable to the negotiators on behalf of the Spanish Government.

Under these circumstances, and pending the negotiations, goods arriving from Spain and her Colonies will continue to receive the most-favoured-nation treatment in the custom-houses of Great Britain, her Colonies, and foreign possessions. Her Majesty's Government understand that until the discussions are terminated by the conclusion of a permanent Treaty, or a rupture of negotiations goods arriving from Great Britain, her Colonies, and foreign possessions, will be guaranteed against differential treatment in the custom-houses of Spain, her Colonies, and foreign possessions.

It is further agreed that it shall be open to any British Colony to withdraw from the present Agreement on notice to this effect being given by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Madrid to the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs within six months after the date of its signature.

I avail, etc.,

(Signed) H. Drummond Wolff.

Much more recently, on the 30th March, 1914, a special treaty, with no other purpose than to liberate the Dominions in this respect was concluded between Great Britain and Switzerland. This treaty, signed by Sir Edward Grey for England and by G. Carlin, Minister Plenipotentiary for Switzerland, contains but one material clause. It reads as follows:

Article I

Whereas the commercial relations of the British Empire and the Swiss Confederation are at present regulated by the Treaty of the 6th September, 1855, and whereas it is desirable to make further provision with regard to the application to certain parts of His Britannic Majesty's Dominions, viz., the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, and Newfoundland, of certain stipulations of the said Treaty relating to the treatment of goods the growth, produce, of manufacture of the territories of the High Contracting Party in the territories of the other.

The High Contracting Parties hereby agree that either of them shall have the right at any time to terminate Articles IX and X of the said Treaty with respect to any or all of the above-mentioned Dominions on giving twelve months' notice to that effect.

It is further agreed that should the said articles of the said Treaty cease, in pursuance of the present Convention, to be applicable to the Commonwealth of Australia, they shall also cease to be applicable to Papua and Norfold Island, if so desired by either of the High Contracting Parties.

Two other Treaties were also passed specially for this purpose by Great Britain—one with Columbia on August 20th, 1912, the other with Sweden on November 27th, 1911,

Great Britain has in this respect opened widely the road to the action of our Government—nay, it has clearly suggested its opportunity. Will it permit this state of things to continue? I submit that I have shown on the one hand that it should act without delay and on the other that it can act without difficulty. Will it pursue the old policy of giving away lavishly the entry to the Canadian market and its most valuable clientele, or will it stop this free admission and exchange for good and sufficient consideration the purchasing asset of our country? Will it specially exempt from taxes certain foreign countries without receiving reciprocal advantage, and thereby impose such taxes on the Canadian people already so heavily burdened? In brief, will it let the ship drift as of old, or will it sweep off these medieval barnacles and set it spick and span through the channels of foreign trade with every inch of canvas strained to the wind?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If no honourable gentleman desires to express an opinion on this most interesting subject, which has been so brilliantly put before us by the honourable gentleman from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien), it will be my duty to submit the question and the honourable gentleman's speech to the Minister.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Would my honourable friend allow me a moment before he concludes? In a short time we are to have before us the treaties which have been negotiated between Canada and France and Italy, which have a direct reference to the question which has been so ably entered upon by my honourable friend who has just spoken. I think it would probably be well for us to reserve this question on the Order paper until those treaties come before us. Whether or not I shall speak upon this matter, I would ask that I be allowed to adjourn the debate and so keep it before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It could be put down for Thursday. I think by the end of next week we shall have the French and Italian treaties before us.

On motion of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster, the debate was adjourned.

OIL SHALES, FUEL AND IRON DEPOSITS

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Hon Mr. FOWLER moved:

That the following Senators, to wit: The Honourable Messieurs Donnelly, Farrell, Girroir, McLean, McMeans, Ratz, Schaffner, Tessier, Thibaudeau, Turgeon, Turriff, Willoughby and the Mover, be appointed a Special Committee for the following purposes:—

1. To further inquire and report from time to time upon the desirability of the further development of the oil shares, iron ore, coal and fuel deposits of Canada.

2. Whether or not further and better facilities might be placed at the disposal of the Department of Mines for the investigation of the above subjects.

And further that the Committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and, subject to the approval of the Senate, to employ such clerical aid as may be necessary to properly carry on the Committee's investigation.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE

MOTION

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adojurned until Wednesday next, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

TAXATION OF CIVIL SERVANTS

UNSATISFACTORY ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Honourable gentlemen, I should like to direct the attention of my honourable friend the leader of the House to a question and answer which appeared in the record of the 23rd of March. The inquiry was in regard to income tax on certain deductions made and retained by the Government from the salaries of civil servants under the provisions of the Public Service Retirement Act, and also referred to the interest which is credited on those deductions. I asked why those deductions and the interest were not relieved from income tax; and my honourable friend gave the answer of the Department, which I may read:

1. "Income," as defined by section 3, subsection 1: "Annual—gain—as being wages, salary or other fixed amount—directly or indirectly received by a person from any office or employment." See Smyth vs. Stretton (1904) 20 L.T., 756.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

I wish to direct my honourable friend's attention to the fact that this subject is governed by the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, Chapter 17, volume 1, page 245; and subsection 7 of section 2 of the Income War Tax Act, 1919, page 367. Under the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act a fund is provided, to be called the "Retirement Fund," which is:

—maintained for the retirement, subject to conditions hereinafter contained, of the persons to whom this part applies, which fund shall be constituted and made up as follows:

(a) By the reservation out of the salary of each such person of five per centum of his salary;

(b) In the case of any person in the Civil Service previous to the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, to whom this Part applies, by the transfer in addition and placing to his credit in the fund of a sum equal to the amount of all deductions previously made from the salary of such person under the Authority of the Civil Service Superannuation Act with interest thereon compounded half yearly, at the rate of four per centum per annum.

Under further provisions and amendments to that Act it is provided:

The semi-annual interest shall be credited to the fund and shall form part thereof.

Then, in a further provision, section 28, chapter 17, it is provided:

No person shall, during his continuance in office, have any claim or right to any part of the Retirement Fund.

I want further to direct attention to the fact that this case of Smyth versus Stretton which was decided in 1904, related to a provident fund created in respect to a college in the Old Country, whereby certain moneys were to be provided for the masters, as they are called. A question arose as to meaning of that statute and whether these accumulations were taxable for income, and I would like to read one paragraph of the decision of the court. Mr. Justice Channell was in some doubt, but he went on to say:

This case was argued before me yesterday, and I think it better for me to give judgment in it whilst the matter is fresh in my mind, though I cannot say that I am altogether satisfied with the decision that I am about to come to. It seems to me to depend upon this. There is a scheme established by the Governors of Dulwich College, and the question is whether the true effect of that scheme is to increase the salaries of the assistant masters, imposing at the same time an obligation upon them to deal with a portion of the increased salaries in a certain way, or whether the true effect of the scheme, when you look at the substance of it, is not really to increase the salaries, but to give to the masters upon their ceasing to hold the position of assistant masters gratuities or allowances. I do not use the word "gratuities" in the sense that there is no consideration for it, because the services of the masters during the time that they serve, after the arrangement is made, are no doubt consideration for it, but retiring bonuses, or something of that kind, when they cease. If that is the true effect of the scheme, then I do not think it becomes salary for the purposes of taxation.

I have read that in order to point out that the only question which the court in this case decided was whether or not these amounts were to be considered as remuneration or salary to the masters, and in the end, although he came to the decision with doubt, the judge decided that they were salary and therefore subject to income tax.

I wish my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) to submit to the Department this fact, that that decision has no relation whatever to the case in point, for the reason that in subsection 7 of section 2 of the amending Income War Tax Act of 1919, our Act, the kind of salary or remuneration referred to is exempted from income tax. I will read for my honourable friend the clause, subsection 7:

> Any part of the remuneration of a taxpayer retained by his employer in connection with an employee's superannuation or pension fund or plan shall be allowed as an exemption or deduction from the income of the taxpayer for income tax purposes, and any payment to an employee out of such fund or plan shall be included as taxable income of the employee.

So, as I see the matter, until the time comes when the employee is paid this money, he has under this Act of 1919 a right to have the Retirement Fund payments treated as deductions and is not liable to income tax upon them. That is the whole point of the matter as I see it, and I would like my honourable friend to call it to the attention of the Department, because, as I understand, the person who wrote the answer to my inquiry disregarded the fact that this statute of 1919 comes in and Parliament says: "True, the court decided that the salary was taxable, but we in our Act of 1919 stated that it shall not be taxable." Therefore the English decision can have no reference to or no effect upon the law in this country.

I will send over to my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) a copy of the memorandum which I have.

Hon. Mr. TANNER.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will transmit that memorandum, as well as a copy of the remarks of my honourable friend, to the Department.

GOVERNMENTAL PRIVATE CARS AND MOTOR CARS

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to call the honourable leader's attention to a question, or series of questions, which I put on the Order Paper on the first day of this Session, and which were afterwards turned into a motion for a return. The motion was passed about two months ago.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: February 27th.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And we are now pretty well along in the Session.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To what does the motion relate?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It asks for a return as to the official and private cars in connection with the Canadian National Railways, and the motor vehicles in connection with the various departments of the Government —what are their cost, upkeep, etc. I spoke of this matter a short while ago.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I had in hand yesterday all that part of the answer which covers the private railway cars, also a part of the return concerning the motor cars in use in the various Departments, but there was no answer to the query as to their initial cost; so I asked the secretary to send back all those reports and get the initial cost of all the cars, which were at first used mostly in the Militia Department and have since been distributed among various departments. The answers were incomplete, but I can furnish at the next sitting of the House, if not the entire return, at all events the first part, concerning the railway cars.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: This is the second time that an incomplete return has been given you.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is due to the fact that there is as yet no official whose duty it is to co-ordinate all the answers from the various departments. The Secretary of State has an official who claims that his whole duty is simply to receive the answers from the departments and transmit them to me. When I look at those returns I may find that they do not cover the same ground, or in certain cases they are insufficient. This week I asked that someone be appointed to co-ordinate answers and make a proper return to this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is unfortunate that the Civil Service has nobody available to do that. I did not know that it was so short-handed. I thought all the trouble was from the opposite cause.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is what they claim.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: With regard to the obtaining of information, I should regret the necessity of appointing a special officer to co-ordinate returns.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There are plenty to do it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I think it is the obligation of each department of the Government to transmit to the Secretary of State any information asked for by an honourable member, so far as it relates to that particular department. If the departments had done so in this instance, the complete information would have been in the hands of the leader of the Government in this House, and there would be no necessity for considering the appointment of a special officer to gather it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My impression is that inquiries and orders for returns go to a certain official in each department, who prepares the information and sends it back without submitting it to the Minister, or to his Deputy. Therefore we have an answer to an inquiry or order as construed by the departmental official, and when the return reaches us we may find that he has totally misunderstood the import of the inquiry, or the purpose in view.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Then what has my honourable friend done about it? He has just now acknowledged that he knows that the officers in the different departments to whom these inquiries or orders are given, and whose duty it is to see that the questions are answered and the answers forwarded, have not done so, and have repeatedly failed to do so. The only thing my honourable friend appears to have done is to have made a recommendation that an extra job be arranged for an extra person to co-ordinate the returns. He ought to get by the hair of the head those officers who refuse to answer the questions, and he ought to give them a real wooling and see that they do their duty, or have their Ministers see to it. It is simply folly for us to ask for information if the officers in the different departments take no pains at all to answer the questions, and just throw in a paper at their own good will and pleasure. Surely the Government is big enough, and my honourable friend ought to be strong enough, to see that those officers do their duty, or to know the reason why.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I did use rather strong language, and the Secretary of State agreed with me that it should be the duty of the head of each department to verify the work of the subordinate who is charged with the preparation of returns to Parliament.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: One of my honourable friends has suggested that if we are driven to it the Senate might strike at some time. What would happen then?

CANADA'S TRADE

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Honourable gentlemen, I asked some questions about the last of February in reference to the exportation of wheat and flour to the Orient and to different countries of Europe. My inquiry was on March 2 changed to a motion for a return. My motion is very unlike that of my honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Hon. Mr. Fowler), for all the information I require can be obtained from the Department of Trade and Commerce—just one department. I have been anxious to get it, and, as the motion was made six or seven weeks ago, I would be very glad if the honourable leader of the House would try to get me that information as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have already sought that information. I will seek it again.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: You are a poor seeker.

PETITIONS OF RIGHT

ANSWER TO INQUIRY

On the inquiry:

By Honourable Mr. Casgrain:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the practice pursued by the Government when dealing with a Petition of Right and inquire:

1. How many petitions of right have been presented to the Government during the last twelve years.
2. How many fiat justitia (let justice be done) have been granted during the same time.
3. How many have been refused also during the same time, if any, and why.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have received from the Department of Justice under the signature of W. Stuart Edwards, Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice, the following memorandum in answer to the questions of my honourable friend:

Referring to the answer submitted to the Hon. Mr. Casgrain's questions relating to the granting of fiats upon petitions of right, I have, pursuant to your request, had the departmental records examined with a view to ascertaining what became of the considerable number of petitions of right filed during the period in question, in connection with which fiats were neither granted nor refused, and I regret to state that in checking the figures with this object in view it was discovered that, owing to confusion having occurred in the addition of certain columns of figures, some of the columns were included more than once, with the result that the figures submitted in answer to Mr. Casgrain's questions were erroneous. The following are the correct figures:

Number of petitions of right presented since 1st January, 1911..	515
Number of such petitions upon which fiats were granted..	315
Number of such petitions upon which fiats were refused..	26

Of the balance, 94 were settled, 11 withdrawn, 43 were not proceeded with, and 26 are under consideration. Of the 43 not proceeded with there are none in which the delay is due to any indisposition on the part of the Government to deal with the question of a fiat, but is due to causes under the control of the petitioners. It not infrequently happens that when a petition of right is presented it is found to be based upon erroneous grounds, and upon this being pointed out to the petitioner he decides not to press for a fiat. In other cases communications are sent to the petitioners asking for additional information to which no answer is received.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER.

TAXATION OF CIVIL SERVANTS

ANSWER TO INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I beg leave to present a supplementary answer to the inquiry of the honourable gentleman from New Glasgow (Hon. Mr. Tanner) concerning the Income War Tax Act of 1917, and the Civil Service Superannuation Retirement Act. It is as follows:

With reference to the memorandum submitted by the Hon. Mr. Tanner and to his remarks in the Senate regarding the exemption from taxation under the Income War Tax Act, 1917, of amounts deducted from the salaries of civil servants pursuant to Part II of the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act, the Department does not regard the Retirement Fund provided for by Part II of the Civil Service Superannuation and Retirement Act as an employee's Superannuation or Pension Fund or Plan within the meaning of subsection seven of section three of The Income War Tax Act, 1917. That being so, the British case referred to is in point.

The question, involving as it does the correct interpretation of said subsection seven of section three of The Income War Tax Act, 1917, is a legal one which can only be finally settled by the Courts. The Department believes its present practice to be in accordance with the law.

R. W. Breadner.
Commissioner of Taxation.

EUROPE AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from April 17 the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations, and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegates to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

Hon. J. P. B. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, I have to crave the indulgence of this House, because we have already had six excellent speeches on this inquiry. The mover, the right honourable member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster), who is always very eloquent, made a good case from his point of view. Then we had a remarkable speech by the member from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), who certainly created a strong and lasting impression on this House. After him we heard the member from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Beaubien), who spoke as usual with great eloquence and warmth and patriotism for France. The senior member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) followed, and after him we heard the ex-Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Robertson), who delivered a speech which gave food for thought to most of those who read or listened to it. Then we had the member for Granville (Hon. Mr. Chapais), who also made a very good exposé of the situation.

The reason why I am on my feet at this moment is because, perhaps in a rash moment, I thought I would like to answer the senior member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche), who seemed to have so much pity for those poor Germans who were fed with only vegetable soup, while the Allies had all the delicacies of the world at their disposal. Some of the Allies had no less than two litres of wine every day, according to my honourable friend. Well, two litres of wine is a very large quantity, and if they had that much they would do very little fighting. I may say that his story about the two litres of wine reminds me very much of what Mark Twain said of the report of his death—that it was very much exaggerated.

To what the honourable Senator from Halifax said about the League of Nations I cannot take any exception, and I agree with a great deal of it. We all believe that he is absolutely right when he says it has no army, no navy, no treasury; but we also believe that, without money and without might it is very difficult for any human organization to enforce its judgment or decisions.

It was my good fortune the other day, and also my duty as Chairman of the Empire Parliamentary Association for Canada, to meet Sir Robert Cecil at the station in Montreal, and I heard the right honourable gentleman twice during that day, and saw a great deal of him, as I took him to various places. As you all know, he was here to advocate the League of Nations, and tell how good it was. He emphasized the fact that before any nation could declare war it would have to give three months' notice to the League of Nations, in order to allow them to arbitrate on the matter; and after those 90 days they could not commence hostilities for six months, thus making a period of 9 months in all. Well, every one knows that if a country wanted to go to war it would never give its opponents 9 months' notice. It would be as though I should have a scrap with my friend from Portage La Prarie (Hon. Mr. Watson), and I would say, "In about 15 minutes I am going to strike you." It is not very likely I would do that. It seems to me that that provision is beyond anything we know of humanity, when we remember that all the wars have taken place on a mere proclamation of war. When Cavour wanted Napoleon III to declare war on Austria, and thus free some of the Italian provinces of its yoke, he sent an emissary to Paris, and Cavour, who was a very great genius, thought he had invented good reasons for declaring war; but when the envoy stated the reasons, Napoleon replied that they were no good. After all the reasons had been exhausted, the emissary had to return to Italy, Napoleon the Third himself telling him: "Go back and tell Cavour to write a stiff, not to say impertinent, note to Austria; then they will answer in the same tone, and that will be a reason for going to war."

The League of Nations is not a new thing, as I have said before in this House many times. There have been many Leagues of Nations. For instance, L'Abbé St. Pere in 1716 wrote no less than twenty volumes on that subject, but, as very few people would want to read so much, he wrote, twenty years afterwards, in 1736, a small book giving a sort of synopsis of the twenty volumes, and that is the one that I read. There was the Holy Alliance immediately after the fall of Napoleon; and when Napoleon was in Elba, in 1814 I think it was, Castlereagh and Metternich were in Vienna, planning to carve up France. When Talleyrand went there he was not given a vote, and was not even allowed to speak in that great conclave, that was discussing the affairs of his own country; so he simply remonstrated and said, "If you are going to carve up my country, at least let me listen to what you are going to do." While he was listening to that, the news came that the small man who had been proscribed, and who had been exiled, had left Elba with a small band and landed at Grace. When he landed there, only with the prestige of a name, those who were assembled included the King of Prussia, the Czar of Russia and all the crowned heads of Europe. They were living there very well at the expense of the Emperor of Austria, who thought the affair was rather costly, and was hoping that it would soon be at an end. However, Napoleon helped him out in paying the board bill, and the crowned heads scampered away to the four corners of Europe, as we all know. Then followed what is called the Hundred Days, and then came Waterloo, and after Waterloo all those same kings, at that time with a large majority of France, were all of one mind. They made a League, and they signed a treaty, and so on; but what did it amount to? Wars have gone on just the same. When those monarchs became frightened at Napoleon returning from Elba, they might have known it was not the same Napoleon, for, as Lord Rosebery shows in that wonderful book, "The Last Phase," Napoleon was not himself when he came back, because disease of every kind had undermined his constitution and his mind.

A great point, made especially by my right honourable friend from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George Foster), was that 52 nations had joined the League. Well, 52 nations is a great number, but of the real nations of this world there are only eight that are worth anything; the others exist through the courtesy of their neighbours, the big ones; and in those eight nations I count China. But three of those eight, namely, the United States, Russia and Germany, have not joined, and those three great nations have an immense influence.

When I went to hear Lord Robert Cecil I tried to be convinced, because I admit that a vast majority of people think the League of Nations is a great thing, although my poor old departed leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, had no confidence in it, and when I advocated it as a great thing he used to say: "It is a beautiful dream, but it will never come to anything." Well, his words are being realized this very day. What are the plenipotentiaries doing at Lausanne to-day? Why is the League of Nations not busy attending to what is passing at Lausanne and settling that affair? That is one of the things that should pertain specially to the League of Nations. It seems to me this is one thing the League of Nations could have done: they could have got busy before the occupation of the Ruhr. The country that is occupying the Ruhr to-day is a member of the League of Nations. So let us say no more about the League of Nations at present. I heard Admiral Sims say it would be a great moral force, but that it was to have an international army. The best judge in the world might give his judgment, but if he has no power to execute it, he might just as well be singing as giving judgment, for nobody would listen to him.

I may say at once that the special object of my speech to-night is to try to prove to this House that Germany is far from being a poor country; but before doing that I would like to call attention to what is taking place there at the present time. In Germany to-day they are building ships very cheaply, but I have been told by an expert within the past 48 hours that the cost of the ships is not the main thing: it is the operation of them that is important. To-day the German people pay their sailors and all the officers in marks, and those new ships were built when ships were being sacrificed—for the Germans found it better to build new ships with all modern appliances, coal-saving devices, etc. According to what I am told by this expert—for I am not an expert in that matter—those new ships are being operated to-day at one-quarter the cost of operation of ships in the rest of the world. More than that, my informant, who is an agent for large lines, says that ship-owners in England are to-day actually thinking of putting their ships under the German flag in order to operate them economically, and also that this very summer German ships will come to Montreal and carry goods across the ocean cheaper than any others. To-day German ships are outbidding all others in offering contracts for ocean freight, and the shippers always come up and say: "The Germans will do it for so much, and we are willing to give you as much or perhaps a shade more, but this is the price we are offered."

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Will the honourable gentleman allow me a question?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I think that after a statement of that kind you should give the name of the expert who gave that information.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: I have no objection to give the name. I have no authority to give it, but I am willing to give the name: it is Mr. Harling, who is very well known in Montreal, and has been a very large shipping agent for years there. He is the one who told me. I don't know whether his name should go into Hansard without his permission, but personally I have no objection to giving his name.

A great deal has been said also about the way in which France is trying to collect the money. Well, two years ago, in a great conference, Marshall Foch said: "You will get nothing from Germany except what you go there and take yourself." I am afraid perhaps it is too late to do that. It might have been better to have done as the Germans themselves thought would be done—as Bismarck did in 1871. He went to France and dictated his terms. He said: "We will not stay here all the time; we will stay here until we are paid, and if you do not come and pay pretty soon we will start another war, which will be much more severe than the one we have just been through." Surely it is not for Germany to find fault if the methods that they themselves adopted are followed.

Before referring to the German waterways and the map which I have here, I want to mention one further point. The intensive industrial development of Germany was going on for many years before the war. I was advised to go to the Parliamentary Library and get books on that question, and I have read many such books. It is simply marvellous to think that one man, whose name we often hear mentioned now, Mr. Thyssen, mined out of his own properties more coal than the annual output of the whole province of Nova Scotia, and used every ton of it in his own works. And he was not as important a man as Krupp.

However, the greatest commercial traveller of the British Empire, according to Sir William Van Horne, was the Kaiser himself. Sir William Van Horne used to like to tell that when he went to the United States he was often taken for a German, on account of the "Van" before his name, which many took for "Von," and because in his personal appearance he looked very much like a German. He was on many boards on which a number of Germans were directors, some of whom were also directors of companies in Germany, and some of whom had personal intercourse with the Kaiser. Before venturing into a new enterprise at the instance of the German Government, or the Kaiser himself, they would always say: "But we do not want to invest all this money. You are organizing a great army and a great navy; there may be war at any time; we do not want to risk our money when war is coming on." And the Kaiser would give them all sorts of guarantees that there would be no war. He would say: "Never mind: I will bluff to the limit, but I will never, never make war." So these people invested their money in those various enterprises. Meanwhile the scientific people of Germany were going all over the world. It may be surprising to some members of this honourable House to know that Sir William Van Horne himself, the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, learned from a report of the German Consul in Vancouver that there were lead mines along that railway; and it was in conversation with those German directors on various boards that he became aware that the Kaiser had decided to invade South America with German rails. Just at that time there was a very great expansion of railway building in South America. At the same time Sir William Van Horne was building his road in Cuba. He inquired in the United States, and particularly from the United States Steel Corporation, at what price he could get rails delivered in Cuba. He got a price which he considered very low, but the Emperor of Germany was bound to get that trade and introduce German rails. The Emperor could not call on Krupp any more, because he had worked Krupp for all he could; so he sent word to some other ironmongers or to their companies, asking them to quote a price, no matter how low, which would compete with the United States in South America. The answer came back that it was absolutely impossible. The Emperor was piqued, and immediately asked for the names of all those directors, and had invitations sent to every one of them, and to their wives, their sons and daughters, their daughters-in-law, sons-in-law, etc., and had a gathering of about fifty in the Royal Palace. He gave plenty of time for preparation, so that those German ladies might get the proper gowns made to appear in his august presence. On that occasion, after the German wine had had its effect on everybody, he brought up the question and said to them that, as patriots, as lovers of the Fatherland, they should help the Fatherland by making an invasion of South America with German rails, stamped with the Imperial seal; for, honourable gentlemen, every rail manufactured in Germany at that time was tested by a Government engineer in every possible way. According to Sir William Van Horne the Germans were making a very good rail. It was perhaps not better than some made in the United States, but there was none better: it was as good as any. The Emperor said: "Now, where is the director who is opposed to this? Who will thwart my will? Who will prevent me from invading South America with these German rails?" Naturally no one spoke. Then he proposed a toast to the invasion of South America with German products, and added that for those who would do this for the Empire, and decorations, any position, any reward within the gift of the Emperor or the Government, would be at their disposal. The consequence was that they did invade South America, and I believe that to-day the greater part of the railways in South America are using German rails.

In this wonderful industrial development Germany was invading with her goods even England itself. Illustrated papers would show British Government offices, with the label "Made in Germany" on the inkstands, the pencils, the paper—on this, that and the other thing. When I had the pleasure, with the honourable member for Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), the honourable member for Calgary (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), and the honourable member for St. John (Hon. Mr. Daniel), to visit Newcastle-on-Tyne, we saw the famous shipyards of Harland and Wolfe, where the Mauretania was being constructed, and where we saw an immense floating drydock capable of taking in a dreadnaught of 32,000 tons, the biggest at that time. What did they show us that was most amazing? It was a crane that operated beautifully and could lift a very great weight—if I remember rightly, 140 tons. It was operated electrically. When we got near it, what did we see on it? "Made in Germany." Honourable gentlemen may remember that when it was my turn to speak that night at the banquet we had in Newcastle-on-Tyne, I said: "God forbid that I should interfere in your politics, but it does seem to me as a protectionist that there might be less unemployment here if that crane had been manufactured in England."

To-day manufacturing is proceeding throughout Germany. The Germans are not manufacturing so much for the outside world, but they are storing up all the goods they possibly can, and the time will come when they will throw off their masks and admit that they are wealthy. They want to control the commerce of the world again, and those goods will come out. In the meantime they are stocking up their own country.

Now I come to this waterways scheme, and I have here a map that I have taken the trouble to prepare, on which I have shown the 18 canals that are being built to-day. The work on some of them was inaugurated during the war. It was the Kaiser's great plan. The Mittel Europa Canal, the plan of which has since been only slightly altered, was to traverse Europe from west to east by means of German waterways which would unite the outlet of the Rhine and the Scheldt, as well as Pas-de-Calais, with the Adriatic by way of Trieste, with the Aegean Sea through Salonika, and with the Black Sea through Constantza. According to this plan, the canal was to go up the Rhine some 600 miles, and then down the Danube for 1,300 miles. According to this plan, Hamburg German, Rotterdam a vassal, Antwerp Germanized, Dunkirk subjected by means that have not explained, would have become powerful intakes of North American trade, which would thus be attracted towards Central Europe. The Rhine and the Danube, amply prepared for commercial navigation, would constitute the central part of this system, which would take in the Elbe, the Main and the Neckar. Strassburg, with its port, would become a sort of gigantic "turntable," to use a vivid expression, of the Mittel Europa. Furthermore, Trieste, Austrian and consequently German, Salonika Greek and therefore Germanized through the family compact, Constantza Rumanian, but, having become a vassal, would all be connected with the North Sea ports.

That was the dream of the Kaiser. Thus, with the assistance of the Young Turk party, who were his allies, he would get Constantinople to watch the Straits, and he would have control of the Aegean Sea and Salonika for his family relations. Salonika was then in the hands of Greece. He would have control of the Pireus, through Queen Sophia, his own sister, and he himself, with his own personal property and Corfu, would have control of the Adriatic. Trieste, being Austrian, was naturally German also. So he would have control of the Adriatic in two places, and if he had had his way, he would have transformed the Mediterranean Sea into a German lake. Then, from Hamburg and the outlet of the Rhine, the route down to the Persian Gulf and then on towards India would be under German influence and controlled by German money, and there was the railway through Bagdad and through the Taurus Mountains, of which we have heard so much. But, unfortunately for Germany, luckily for the Allies, that Bagdad railway has changed hands and is now under the control of Great Britain. But in order that the Kaiser's scheme might materialize there was needed a victorious war. To understand properly the scheme of the Kaiser one must be familiar with the map of Germany. The Kaiser wanted to go from west to east, but all the great rivers of Germany—the Rhine, the Weser, the Elbe, the Oder—practically all run north and south; therefore it was necessary—and this is what is being done to-day—to cross from one valley into another and to ascend tremendous divides. The plan bewildered the engineers. I have shown this to some engineers, and they think it is impossible to go over such heights as I shall mention. I will not weary the House with full details, but will simply mention the means of the various canals that are to be built. For instance, there is a canal along the Neckar river, to join with the Danube. It is no mean canal. Its locks are from 600 feet to over 900 feet in length, and they rise with that canal to an altitude of 1,850 feet above sea level. No country has ever before attempted to carry on such a work. Continuing towards Ulm, on the Danube, the canal is to come down some 344 feet, by four successive locks, on each one of which there is a drop of 86½ feet, the gates being over 90 feet. Fancy a height of 90 feet. The gates would be one and a half times higher than this room. In the Panama Canal there is only one set of gates at either end, but in this instance there would be several, each having a lift of 86 feet. Such locks are unparalleled.

The Republic of Germany is still continuing these works, but the municipalities are being asked to subscribe, as are also the various provincial institutions, for they have provincial governments, although they are called by another name. Everybody who owed anything in Germany has been absolved of all mortgages. The right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) cited the instance of a couple who had invested 100,000 marks at 6 per cent to provide for their old age, and he stated that those poor people expected to have 6,000 gold marks, equivalent to about $1,500, on which they could live quite comfortably, but now they have lost everything. But the person who borrowed those 100,000 marks could pay them back with $1.43, and the interest would be 8½ cents. That is very pitiful. It is very bad for those people who invested their money, and in order to make a telling point and show how hard up they were, it was right for the right honourable gentleman to cite that case; but he did not say anything about the fellow who borrowed the money and who got off free. He did not tell us that that man was in that amount of money. That man may have built a fine house, or warehouse, or store with the money and may be enjoying the profits. However, human nature will be human nature, and when you are making a point you generally give one side, and though you do not do so intentionally, you forget about the other side. It is the same with all corporations, and all cities, towns, and villages. They are starting now with all debts wiped out and with a clean sheet. Fancy the German farmers free of debt. Any one of them who had a mortgage on his farm could pay it off with three or four dollars, at the price of the mark to-day. They are much better off than our farmers. I see here the honourable member for Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Turriff). Would not the farmers in the Northwest be happy to be in a position like that of the German farmers, having all their mortgages wiped out?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: No; they would be a great deal worse off than they are to-day. And if Germany is so great, how is it that her money is worth nothing?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Why is her money worth nothing? I am very glad that question is brought up. This is just the whole scheme. I charge Germany with having wilfully committed the greatest international swindle that has ever been perpetrated since history was written. Germany knew from the very start that that money would not be redeemed. It was a frame-up from the start. The Germans went into the United States and sold marks all the way from 7 cents, 6 cents, 5 cents, down to 2 cents and 1½ cents. And what a sum of money was pulled out by that German paper, not only from the United States, but from Canada too, There are in Canada, and not far away from me. either, some people who bought marks. That was the greatest swindle ever perpetrated.

Now, coming again to the question of those canals, I will simply read the names. It will take but a few minutes.

1. Canal along Neckar from Mannheim to Plochingen, 130 miles in length, for barges of 1,200 tons. There are 27 locks, and these are partly built.

2. The Neckar-Danube canal. That is the one where the great feat is being accomplished. That is only 40 miles in length. It crosses the divide at an altitude of 1,850 feet. The actual figure—I have the specifications here—is 568 metres, and anyone can reduce that to feet. I may say I have taken the trouble to convert all these sums from gold marks into dollars, and all distances from metres to English feet, so that the figures may be better understood. I have in my hand all the details and specifications of this wonderful construction. It goes up from Plochingen for 845 feet, and down to Ulm on the Danube 344 feet. That is where those locks are, each with a drop of 86½ feet, and with those wonderful gates 90 feet high. That is the summit between the North sea and the Black sea. The original intention was to go by the Rhine, but since the war, Strassburg having passed over to France, they leave the Rhine at Mainz. That is on account of their not having won the war.

The third canal is from the Danube at Ulm to Lake Constance. That is to get the trade of Switzerland, and part of Bavaria. This goes up to a divide of 1,774 feet in height. Think of those heights—1,850 feet and 1,774 feet. Why would people spend their money like this unless they were anxious to spend it so someone else could not get it? That is the only reason why money would be squandered like that. When the Kaiser started to build this waterway he thought he would be victorious in the war, and that the indemnities he would get from the countries he conquered would pay for it. They are spending money now that does not belong to them. They should pay their debts first. This canal will carry ships of 1,900 tons into Switzerland. It is 67 miles in length, and will cost twenty-three millions of dollars. There is a drop of 330 feet down to lake Constance.

The fourth canal is the Rhine-Danube canal. It starts from the Rhine at a place called Mainz, and rises some 250 feet to Bamberg, and thence to Kelheim, which is on the Danube, and then by the Danube it goes down as far as the old limits between Austria and Germany, at a place called Passau. From Mayence to Passau there is a clear water course going over summit after summit of 526 miles in length. The divide there is 1,200 feet above sea level, and there are thirty-three power houses generating 244,000 horse power on that particular branch. I forgot to tell you, honourable gentlemen, that at every one of these locks there is a power-house, so that when there is water to spare, or during the winter months when there is no navigation—because in that country it freezes up just like it does here—the water can be used for industrial purposes. You may say: "In those great altitudes where do they get the water?" Those who had anything to do with the Georgian Bay canal will remember that, although there was only a divide of 122 feet still the cost of getting water to feed the canal at the top was some two or three million dollars. At these great altitudes immense reservoirs are being built from which water will be brought to feed these canals, and at the same time to increase the quantity of water in the rivers. There is a canal 60 miles in length to bring water from Meitingen to Forcheim. This is costing one hundred and forty millions of dollars. It begins between Ratisbonne and Passau.

The canal along the Mainz to Aschaftenburg, to carry barges of 1,500 tons, was inaugurated in 1921. The locks are of great length, and take three barges and the tug at the same time so that there may be no time wasted. This canal was opened amidst great enthusiasm. The $140,000,000 which it was to cost was subscribed twice over by the people near where the enterprise was undertaken.

The fifth canal, from Ulm to Kelheim, follows the bed of the Danube for only some 12 miles; for the rest of the distance, like our canals on the St. Lawrence, it is now on one side of the river and now on the other. On that canal they are developing power to the tune of 250,000 horse-power. The cost of that part of the work is fifty-four millions of dollars. Besides that branch there is a special canal which will connect Augsburg and Munich, which will accommodate barges up to 1,200 tons, but there is provision to increase that capacity to 1,500 tons.

Number six is the Weser-Main canal. The Weser is a river which runs almost parallel with the Rhine, and is the first river east of the Rhine. Why are they using the Weser? It is because the Rhine has been internationalized, but the Weser is all German. They are drawing the traffic over the divide and are pouring it into the Weser so as to bring it to Bremen or Hamburg or Lubeck. The great thing to be accomplished by not using the Rhine is to cut out Rotterdam. By the Weser-Main canal they ascend 250 feet to an altitude of 1,000 feet above sea level, then they go down the Weser river. That canal will carry barges of 1,000 tons, and is costing, at pre-war prices, fifty-five millions of dollars, and to feed the Weser river nine large reservoirs are being built.

Canal No. 7 is the Rhine-Weser-Elbe canal, which was partly opened on July 17th, 1914. The section between Bevergen and Minden was opened in 1915, during the war, and the section from Minden to Hanover, in the fall of 1916. Another section, from Hanover to Magdeburg, a distance of over 100 miles, was begun in 1920. The work is progressing very rapidly. The locks are 730 feet in length, and will accommodate three barges and a tug at the same time. There are 130 miles of branch canals from Magdeburg to various other places, one particular branch to the potash mines, the whole costing eighty-five millions of dollars.

The eighth canal connects the Ems river and the Weser. This canal is also to cut out Rotterdam. It is also connected with Hamburg and Lebeck, which is on the Baltic. It is 60 miles in length and will carry 1,000-ton boats.

The ninth canal is called the Hansa canal, and takes the place of the old Mittel-land Kanal, and extends from Achim to Osterholz. It is 130 miles in length, and will carry 1,000-ton barges.

Number ten is the canal from Hamburg to Lubeck. It is some 90 miles in length and will accommodate barges of 1,000 tons. The peculiarity of this canal is the elevators, which are something like the lift-locks that we have on the Trent canal. The first lift is 109 feet in height, and the second 79 feet. That canal is costing twenty-three millions of dollars.

Number eleven is a canal from Leipzig to Torgau and Berlin. It is for 600-ton boats.

The twelfth canal is in the mining basin of Neiderlausitz, to the Elbe on one side, and to Berlin on the other.

Number thirteen is a second canal from the Neiderlausitz basin, leaving near Muhlberg on the Elbe, to the Oder, which is the last big river in eastern Germany. It is 160 miles in length, and is costing thirty-one millions of dollars.

Number fourteen is a canal to the Masuric lake. It is to serve eastern Prussia and to penetrate into Russia. It is a small canal, and at present is used only for the power which can be developed—not for navigation.

Number fifteen is in the Ruhr, and is a big canal—from Mulheim, near Colonge, to Hagen. It is 42 miles in length, will accommodate barges of 1,700 tons, and will develop 10,000 horse-power.

Number sixteen is a canal along the Lippe from Hamm to Wesel. This is a large canal, and will carry vessels of 1,700 tons.

Number seventeen also will carry vessels of 1,700 tons. This canal completes the circuit, joining with the Rhine—Horne canal, the Dortmund canal, and the Ems canal—all in the Ruhr. In the case of this canal, they could not possibly go over the top of the height of land, so between Horde and Schawerte they had to make a tunnel two miles in length for the canal to pass through. The honourable gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Roche) will surely not say that Germany is poor when she can build canals in tunnels.

The eighteenth canal is on the Main, extending from Weser-Main to Kassel, so that they have a string of waterways uniting the Elbe to the Oder, Tergau with Leipzic, the Elster with the Saale, and the Weser with the Saale, cutting Germany crosswise and lengthwise with a second lot of waterways. All these works would cost at pre-war prices five hundred millions of dollars.

I thank you, honourable gentlemen, for having listened so patiently and kindly to all these dry facts, many of which I have had to read. Remember that Germany is to-day starting with a clean sheet. The people have no bonds and no mortgages to pay; they have all been wiped out by the mark swindle. Germany to-day has a merchant marine which is causing great anxiety to England, and, according to an expert I saw in Montreal the other day, she is outbidding British commerce throughout the world. Germany is storing her goods, and making local sales; her taxes are only one-third of those of England or France, but she is pleading poverty until she becomes strong enough to fight again, when she will say; "Now, we have the money; come and take it if you can."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If no other honourable gentleman cares to express any opinion on this matter, I will move the adjournment of the debate until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

EXPLOSIVES BILL

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Committee of the Whole House on Bill D, an Act to amend the Explosives Act.—Hon. Mr. Boyer.

Hon. Mr. BOYER: I thank my honourable colleague (Hon. W. B. Ross) for moving the second reading of this Bill, and I ask you, honourable gentlemen, instead of referring it to the Committee of the Whole House, to refer it to a special committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The suggestion of the honourable member is that this Bill, instead of being referred to Committee of the Whole, be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and I must say that I join in the request that is made. I think it would be but proper to hear some officials of the Department concerned in this matter, and possibly other parties interested, and I would support the motion that the Bill be first referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I understand that the honourable member moves that this Order be discharged, and that the Bill be referred to that Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

EUROPE AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the inquiry of Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to conditions in Europe and the work of the League of Nations and will ask the Government if it will lay on the Table the Report of the Canadian delegates to the third Assembly of the League of Nations.

Hon. F. L. BEIQUE: Honourable gentlemen, with the permission of the honourable leader of the Government, and with the leave of the House, I would like, for the information of this honourable House, to read part of an editorial article which appeared on Monday last in the New York Times. I am sure we are all anxious to understand as fully as possible the difference of opinion between Mr. Bonar Law, as representing the British Government, and Mr. Poincaré, the head of the French Government, on the proposition which was made by Mr. Bonar Law at the Conference on the 2nd of January last. I think this article is a very good appreciation of the proposition as laid before the Conference by Mr. Bonar Law. I will content myself with reading the article without any comment:

The British Payment Plan

What was the British reparations plan? Briefly, it provides for scaling down the paper figure of Germany's reparations payments from 132 billion gold marks to a paper total of 67 billions, which, under the advantages placed at Germany's disposal, can be scaled down to an actual payment of only about 27 billions, of which not more than 20 billions is reparations, the remainder going for occupation costs and all other charges arising out of the treaty fulfillment. More specifically speaking, the Bonar Law proposal provides for the cancellation of the "C" bonds of Germany, amounting to 82 billion gold marks. As the actual value of these is probably hardly 10 per cent, of this paper value, the loss is not so great as it would seem. For the remaining 50 billions, provided for in the Class "A" and "B" bonds, it is proposed to issue a new series, known as "Bonds of the First Issue," to the amount of 50 billion gold marks. These are to bear no interest for the first four years, and for the next four years 4 per cent, and thereafter 5 per cent until maturity in 1953. The unpaid interest under this scheme is to be funded and new bonds to the total amount of this interest compounded may be issued in 1933. As this sum comes to about 17 billion gold marks, it brings the total paper value to 67 billions.

Here, however, as Premier Poincare pointed out when Mr. Bonar Law first submitted his proposal, there arises a serious difficulty. These "first series" bonds may be redeemed by Germany at the end of the year at 50, and thereafter at an increased cost each year. If, therefore, Germany avails herself of this redemption privilege, she may be quit of the "first series" bonds for 25 instead of for 50 billion gold marks. The second series of bonds could be redeemed for about two billions.

Inasmuch as the British proposal provides that only 80 per cent of the "first series" shall go to the reparations account, it means that Germany's total reparations payments would come to only 20 billion gold marks, or about $5,000,000,000. Of this France would get 51 per cent. Practically all of the cash realized on the second series would have to go for treaty charges and for the redemption of Belgian debt. This would mean that France would receive only about $2,600,000,000 with which to pay for damage in the devastated regions, estimated at between $8,000,000,000 and $11,000,000,000. Clearly, this is unacceptable to France.

The wisdom of Mr. Poincare's refusal to accept Bonar Law's plan is, from the French point of view, already being shown by the increasing sums which responsible German spokesmen are now suggesting as within Germany's paying capacity. The 20 billion gold marks mentioned by Rosenberg has been raised to 35, and there is every likelihood that when the actual negotiations are made Germany will agree to at least 50 billions. This sum is not beyond her capacity to pay, according to students of Germany's condition, provided she is willing to make an earnest effort to repair the wrongs committed by her.

The only word I desire to add is this, that I would have liked, if time had permitted me, to prepare some remarks which I would have been pleased to offer to this House in support of the League of Nations. I must say that I am a strong believer in the League, as is the right honourable member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster); and I am convinced that, whatever form it may ultimately take, it is a necessity if civilization is to be preserved. I hold, also, that it must not be judged by what it has accomplished up to this day, for it has been in existence only three years, and its record is a very valuable one.

I would have liked to deal, not with the economic side of the question, as the right honourable member has done, but with its political and moral phases, which are things quite different. I would have attempted to show that the interests of France and those of England are perfectly identical, and I am convinced that, if Mr. Bonar Law had had his way of thinking and of dealing with the matter, it would have meant the dismemberment of France within four years, and within twelve months thereafter the dismemberment of England also.

But these points have been made by members of this House, and I have no doubt will be made by the honourable leader of the House in a few moments in a much better way than I could do. Anyway, I had not time to prepare an address which would have been fair to both the members of this honourable House and to myself.

Hon. RAOUL DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, we must all be thankful to the right honourable gentleman, the junior member for Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster), for giving us the opportunity of expressing our views on international questions which affect this country of ours to a lesser degree than the countries of Europe, but to a sufficient degree to allow us to raise our voice occasionally so that it may be heard in the imperial hall in London, where most of these problems are discussed and settled.

This debate has been a very interesting one indeed. It bears on perhaps the most momentous event which has occurred since Armistice Day—the occupation of the Ruhr. Yet when examined in the abstract it can be reduced to this simple proposition: shall delay be granted to a defaulting debtor, with or without further security?

The Allies in the Treaty of Versailles exacted some security, and they took the left bank of the Rhine. But it has appeared, in the working out, that that security was insufficient to assure payment. I am somewhat astonished at the surprise expressed at the decision of the Allies to go into the Ruhr and take further security. The honourable gentleman from Granville (Hon. Mr. Chapais) has reminded us that already some further security was taken with the joint consent of all the Allies, namely, Dusseldorf, Duisburg and Ruhrort; and he added that the Ruhr entry had been foreseen and was threatened by the Allies jointly more than once within 24 months.

What surprises me is that some emotion should be created after four years since the Armistice. If that degree of emotion has appeared on the surface, I beg the honourable gentlemen to ask themselves what the emotion would be four years hence. How far already are we not—we members of this Senate—from the day when we passed unanimously a Bill which was moved by the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) in May, 1918, which had for its object the denunciation of any Canadian trader who would henceforth deal in German goods! I have before me that little Bill, which had its third reading and was sent to the House of Commons, reading as follows:

> Every person who deals in goods, ware or merchandise which are, in whole or in part, the growth, product or manufacture of Germany or Austria, shall keep posted in letters easily legible over every outside entrance to his premises the words "Dealer in German Goods," and shall print the said words prominently in all his advertisements and stationery.

There are other clauses, but this gives the purport of the Bill. Yet there are people moving about the world who claim that the entry into the Ruhr will diminish their chances of trading with Germany.

Now I put this question: if that further guarantee had been included in the Treaty of Versailles, would there have been any special emotion created outside of Germany? The Allies take it now, after four years of sterile discussions, conferences, and protocols. Three of the four Allies insist upon it—why? Well, for two reasons: the first is a question of confidence, or lack of confidence, and the second is one of necessity.

France, Italy, and Belgium are convinced that Germany is a fraudulent bankrupt. If Germany was not acting in bad faith, would it not be her primary duty to offer that security, like any other debtor who seeks further delay? She has the security. She has not suffered—she admits it—by the presence of the Allies on the left side of the Rhine. She has not been hampered. The administration of her laws has continued. If she had been honestly disposed, what objection was there to her offering the Allies the River Ruhr valley in order to appease their suspicions? If she had done that, all the Allies would have gone in, and there would have been no suspicion of ulterior motives on the part of those who did go in. One must not forget that those three Allies urged, are still urging, and have been most anxious, to have Great Britain enter. Does not that dispel the idea of any hidden thought or ulterior motive?

My right honourable friend from Ottawa has suggested that the Anglo-Saxon world was opposed to further security being taken. I am not disposed to accept that statement of my right honourable friend. I believe, on the contrary, that a large part of the Anglo-Saxon world holds the same view as do Italy, France and Belgium. I will not ask my right honourable friend to travel very far; I will only ask him to look among his own friends and he will find that opinion reflected by his own party press. I have not personally gone to the reading room to ascertain the state of mind of all the press of Canada; I have simply taken the papers that came under my hand. I have seen the Montreal Gazette, the Mail and Empire, the Ottawa Journal, the Toronto Evening Telegram, the Montreal Standard, even the Orange Sentinel, standing firmly by the policy which the Allies decided upon on the 2nd of January last.

Now, I will give only two clippings out of very many that I have had from Canadian papers. The Montreal Gazette of January 11th said:

> Distrust of Germany is general; almost equally general is the sympathy which is felt for France. The weight of the German onslaught fell upon France, which paid a monstrous price in manhood and in property and industries destroyed. It was part of the German plan to cripple France economically, and the work was thoroughly done. Germany has shown no real disposition to undo that work. In these circumstances the determination of France to exact reparations to the limit of Germany's capacity is understandable, more than that, it is justified.

The Ottawa Journal of the 12th of January said:

> French Steel encircling the Ruhr may shock economists and pacifists; it excites nothing but sympathy and satisfaction in the breasts of allied millions. Germany, so far as all visible evidence goes, is an unregenerated, impenitent criminal.

I have not had opportunity of seeing many papers from England, but I have read the London Morning Post and the Daily Mail. The Morning Post said:

> We are willing to waive the prosperity conferred upon this country by the success of German Iron and Steel if thereby a little justice might be done to France.

The Daily Mail has had column upon column of letters under the heading, "In Honour Hand-in-Hand with France," and it has stood solidly from day to day in favour of the policy of the three Allies.

On the 11th February, as reported in the London Daily Mail, Lord Hardinge, of Penshurst, formerly Viceroy of India, and recently Ambassador to Paris, said:

> There is a very close connection between the question of the Ruhr and that of our National Debt of £8,000,000,000, for which Germany must and can only be held responsible—that Germany, which, by a process of fraud, has extinguished her own internal debt, and will make the commercial future of our country very difficult by successful competition, which she will be able to carry on with our trade unless a due amount of reparations is forcibly extracted from her.

May I read also the opinion of Rudyard Kipling, which appeared in the Montreal Standard of Saturday last? He said:

> This is the situation as I see it. The overwhelming majority of our people do not understand, and understand less as time goes on, why Germany, who prepared and launched the war, should not pay for it. Nor do they believe in the wonderful schemes put forward from time to time, whereby Germany is to be carefully nursed back to wealth and power, in the hope that when she is strong she may be moved to pay some part of her obligations.
> We have not had your experiences of the German, but we are not altogether imbecile. We observe also that these schemes are, for the most part, advocated by two types of mind—those which were most misguided before, during, and after the war, as to the nature and psychology of the Germans; and those who now openly or academically sympathize with every attack on such civilization as the war has left. From these observations we draw our own conclusions.
> We do not at all believe that Germany is disarmed, or that she will ever be disarmed without supervision infinitely more drastic than that which has been exercised in the past. We hold that it would have been better for the future if Britain had gone in side by side with France and Belgium to obtain the fullest reparation and security that was possible.

I said that besides the question of faith there was the question of necessity. Great Britain has its own home problems, and they are serious; her export trade has been curtailed, and she has her unemployed; she is yearning for stability and peace, but she has obtained her main objects, the foremost of which is security. Great Britain feels that she can carry on even if the Allies postpone their payments to her. France knows that she cannot carry on. With her it is a question of life and death: she is facing bankruptcy. With her it is the first law of nature, the law of self-preservation. Why has France acted? France has acted because her ordinary budget, which is composed of ordinary expenditures, and which is met by heavy taxation, still shows quite a large deficit. It is her extraordinary budget that frightens her. And that extraordinary budget is made of the advances on Germany's account. These advances are made to rehabilitate devastated regions. These devastated regions were the common battleground of the Allies, who met there to defend, not France, but themselves. These territories were devastated by the Allies as well as by Germany, while British and American territory and towns have remained free from injury.

Ninety-five billions of francs have been borrowed from the French people by the French Government. That represents a fraction over six billions of interest yearly, and only half of the repair of the damage has been effected. France is to-day considering limiting her efforts to rebuilding industrial plants. She fears the effect on her credit and monetary system if she continues to borrow on account of Germany, with a date of payment which never materializes. Ninety-five billion francs have been borrowed by France from her own people, but that is not the whole story. The borrowing has had the effect of depreciating her currency to such an extent that it is equivalent to the confiscation of a large part of her national wealth.

I have stated that the battle-ground was not in England nor in the United States. Neither is the occupied territory. Let us see what that means and has meant to France. We may perhaps draw from it lessons and examples to hold up to Germany: it will make interesting reading to-day when we hear the wails of President Ebert because of incidents which have occurred in the Ruhr. As an illustration, I will cite but one Department, that of the Nord, with Lille as its principal centre. I think that the facts which I shall lay before this Chamber have never before been mentioned—that the methods by which payments were exacted by Germany, and the screws which were put upon the people who were held prisoners in the occupied territory, have never yet been held up to the gaze of the Canadian people.

The Hague Agreement of 1907, to which Germany was an assenting party, contained the following enactments:

> Article 46, paragraph 2: Private property cannot be confiscated.
> Article 47: Pillage is formally interdicted, etc.

From the beginning, Germany sets all legal restrictions aside and states in its proclamations that:

> To-day and henceforth there exists no prefecture nor French Government. There is but one will: it is that of Germany.
> You rely upon the Hague Convention. This is a matter for diplomats to discuss after the war. To-day the military authority has the first and the last word. You shall obey or your city will perish.

We shall see the German Commander in action at Lille, which had already considerably suffered when it opened its doors to the enemy. By the first of November Lille had been called upon to pay 1,300,000 francs. On that date, Governor General Von Heinrich asks a contribution of 8,000,000 francs in gold and silver, or Bank of France notes. The city makes a pressing appeal to the citizens to bring in their holdings and to accept in exchange municipal paper money, because the Germans threaten to take private property.

On the 10th of December, the surrounding municipalities—"les communes"—32 in number, are ordered to pay heavy contributions. They answer that the farmers have lost their all through the passing of the invading armies, and that the industries are closed for lack of raw materials. Von Heinrich answers as follows:

> You claim to have no money. All the same payment must be made. It will be forthcoming if you use your credit. One municipality may be unable, but you must unite and form a syndicate to raise a loan. If some municipality refuses to join, it will be impossible to deliver them provisions and coal.

The 32 mayors meet at Lille and refuse, on legal grounds, to form the suggested consortium. On the 23rd of January, Von Heinrich writes the mayor of St. André:

> You state that your people cannot do more—that the rich have fled.

Listen to the phrases that follow:

> The latter must have bank deposits: it is for your town to seize them. Nothing prevents you selling works of art and other stocks and valuables to redeem this war contribution in case you cannot find enough cash.

Then other threats follow. Many municipalities being in default are refused coal in midwinter; but this cruel act does not bring forth money where there is none.

Von Heinrich then turns again upon Lille. That city is asked to pay 1,500,000 francs per month, payable 300,000 francs every five days. If it defaults no coal or food will reach it. Lille has a population of 225,000.

How will Lille pay? Lille is not allowed to pay by issuing short notes or bonds; it must gather all that is to be found in French and German gold and silver, besides notes of La Banque de France to the extent of 50 per cent of the levy. The German authorities' edict states that the municipal notes and bonds are only accepted on account, and according to their par value with the German mark.

In less than six months Lille has been made to pay 17 millions in contributions, although partly in ruins and constantly bombarded. This means 100 francs per head of population, and besides she has answered requisitions for more than 200 millions.

In June, 1915, the Mayor informs Von Heinrich that no more specie can be found in the city. What answer does he receive? Listen:

> Nothing is changed as to your obligation. I will hold you and your population responsible if you default. It is for you to find the way to obey my command. One of the modes you can adopt is to get specie, through the intermediary of the German administration, from the banks in neutral countries.

On the 15th of July the Communes near Lille owe 20,000,000 francs, and the army, for its maintainance, asks 11,000,000 more. The high command decrees that the whole population of the district will be jointly responsible. As a consequence orders are given for affixing seals upon all safes, vaults, and chests, of banks and trust companies. At the same time, the banks are asked to furnish a list of all their specie—gold, silver, and paper—their credits abroad, the detached bond coupons, and the next one undetached belonging to clients. By this procedure the individuals become responsible jointly and severally to the full extent of their holdings, real and moveable. Threatened with the opening of vaults and safes, and the total paralysis of all business transactions, the mayors of Lille, Roubaix, Tourcoing, Douai Valenciennes and Cambrai agree to guarantee all advances to be made by the banks to the Communes of the region.

In order to free themselves from the seizure, with seals affixed to all their assets, the banks succeed in negotiating a loan of 16,000,000 francs on the 19th of September, 1915, from la Société Générale de Belgique to pay the arrears due by the Communes or rural municipalities.

Ten days later, the 29th of September, Lille's monthly contribution is increased from 1,500,000 francs to 1,800,000, with this proviso:

> If payment is not made in the equivalent value of the mark a 5 per cent discount will be charged.

The municipal notes are thus officially depreciated.

On the 11th of September, at a time when citizens are imprisoned and carried in concentration camps, the Mayor of Lille is ordered to repair the theatre and to receive at his cost the German actors.

To meet German demands Lille, up to June, 1917, had obtained loans from its people of 300 millions of francs through the issue of municipal paper money. After 20 months of occupation Lille had suffered hundreds of millions of devastation through bombardment and the explosion of the powder magazine. She had been emptied of all her stocks through incessant requisitions. All her industries were stopped, and commerce as well. Four-fifths of the population become a charge upon the municipality, which is wholly dependent upon the enemy for its revictualling, and the contributions exacted are five times the total municipal budget.

In April, 1917, the Germans make a demand upon Lille of 24,500,000 francs, half of which are to be paid without any delay, a penalty of 400,000 francs being added for each day's delay, and the city being furthermore responsible for the communes in the Lille zone. Three months later, 33 millions are exacted to cover the maintainance of the army of occupation, payable within two months, with ten per cent added as a penalty for each day's delay. The Mayor answers that this last demand violates the convention of the Hague as well as the principles laid down by the German High Command, and all the laws of humanity; but, isolated from the exterior world and under the heel of the enemy, she will pay with the knife at her throat.

On the 1st of January, 1918, Lille is assessed for itself and the neighboring region 94 millions of francs, with a penalty of 10 per cent per day in case of delay, and is warned that if she again improperly criticizes this forced levy, or by fraud allows her protest to reach the outside world, the city will be deemed to have committed an act of hostility towards the power in authority, and will be punished with all the rigour of war.

The penalties, impositions, and contributions levied upon the occupied regions totalled over two billions and a half of francs, by the setting aside of all international laws. In violation of Article 53 of the Hague Convention, which states formally that only the specie belonging to the state can be seized, the Germans placed in every bank and trust corporation sequestrators who assumed full authority, their fees to be paid by the victims. Their attention was directed to buying foreign securities with the money of the depositors in order to create foreign credit for the German treasury. These credits, which enabled the enemy to prolong its resistance, cost Germany nothing, since it made repayment with the municipal "bons" or notes which it exacted as war contributions. And when they had drained all that they thought to be of value, down to the blankets and mattresses of the poor, they requisitioned the labor of human beings by carrying 10,000 old men, women, and girls over to Germany, as one would take so many head of cattle to market, under the pretext that the British fleet was blockading their ports and more farm labor was needed.

This is a very pale history of the Germans in occupied territory—in one city only. And, honourable gentleman, that money, stolen by the Germans, has not yet been reimbursed.

Lest we forget: allow me to read the following statement recently made by Premier Theunis of Belgium:

> We have gone into the Ruhr because our enemy left us no other alternative. We have gone there to obtain reparation and justice. Germany will only be reasonable when she recognizes that she is vanquished, definitely vanquished. This is the sentiment of the Belgian nation. Our troops will not falter. They remember the atrocities of the Germans. They have not shaken off the nightmare which the numberless horrors and crimes of the Boche keep vividly before their eyes.

Here are official figures which will edify you. We have to take care of 17,016 war orphans. Of that figure 9,700 only are children of fallen soldiers at the front while 8,900 are those of fathers who were civilians shot down by the enemy.

The detailed record speaks as follows: At Dinant, on the 23rd of August 1914, the Germans shoot down in one afternoon 700 people, among whom are 73 women and 39 children; at Tamines, the next day, 600 are slain; at Andenne-sur-Meuse 300 victims; at Louvain, on the 23rd of August, 213 victims; at Aerschot, 150. In the small villages of the province of Luxembourg, near the French frontier, the slaughter increases in intensity: at Ethe, 350 people are shot, with 30 mothers and 20 children; at Tintignies, 128 victims; at Rossignol, 112. In these villages the people who are assassinated represent more than one-tenth of the population.

This is the action of a nation that had given its pledge to protect its peaceful and harmless little neighbor against agression!

What punishment can fit that crime?

The argument may be advanced that this was war time. Yes, war carried on by barbarians. Let us see what is the German demeanor in peace time. It is most interesting to read the Treaty of Bucharest, imposed by Germany in May, 1918. It is a very lengthy document, but I will summarize it concisely.

The Treaty of Bucharest, of course, tore from Rumania a province which had always been Rumanian territory, that of Dobrudja, and deprived that country of its only seaport, Constanza. The Treaty of Bucharest stipulated that the German armies would occupy Rumania until such time as Germany would be pleased to determine later. During the whole period of occupation, Germany would have a representative in each and every Department of the Rumanian Government, said representative being entitled to assume full control. As regards civil and military matters, the German jurisdiction would be the only one to obtain during the entire period of occupation—all costs to be borne by the Rumanian people and the right of requisitioning to be fully recognized. The Treaty of Bucharest forbade Rumania to keep under arms more than 32,000 men, and, moreover, laid down that all the male population of that country between the ages of 14 and 60 years could be compelled to do manual labour for the benefit of the occupants. Finally, according to the Treaty, the right to develop all the oil fields of Rumania would, for a period of 30 years, be vested solely in a German company, with the further right of making whatever use it wished of highways, stores, railways, postal and telegraph facilities. At the expiration of the thirty year period, the German company could extend such privileges for two further periods of thirty years each. All disputes would be laid before a tribunal, whose chief arbitrator would be appointed by the President of the Leipzig Court.

After this monstrous treaty had been drafted and only required to be signed, one of the Rumanian delegates, Mr. Pierre Missir, his strength and patience failing him, burst into tears.

"What ails you?" inquired one of the German plenipotentiaries.

"Why", answered Mr. Pierre Missir, "you want to reduce my country to slavery."

"Not at all, not at all," protested the German. "The peace that we offer you is a peace as betweeen friends. You will realize it some day."

"When?"

"Wait," said the German, "until you see the Treaty we are preparing for France and Great Britain: there will be nothing friendly about it."

"After we had signed the treaty," said Mr. Jean Bratiano, "we witnessed the methodical removal of the belongings of a whole nation. They applied the vacuum process scientifically on the whole surface of the kingdom. Wheat, petroleum, furniture, coal, rails, cars, cattle, agricultural instruments, telegraph wires, lumber, trees from the forests—they took everything. When they had stripped my rural property of the whole crop and of all the cattle and rolling stock it contained, they presented a claim for 60,000 francs to my farm manager because, according to the book records of the farm, in the good years the crop was worth that much more."

This is how the Germans understood a friendly peace. They went in and helped themselves and took everything.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: And asked for more.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And asked for more. It is quite evident that Germany will not pay voluntarily. I claim that not only was it necessary for the Allies to exercise pressure and take effective security, but that policy is the only means of re-establishing peace in Europe.

The last four years show clearly Germany's design. Mr. Frank H. Simonds, in the Review of Reviews of the present month, states the case admirably. I extract from his article the following points:

The purpose of the German attack upon France was to destroy the French nation, which was to be crushed by a single blow. Then Belgium and a large area of France was to be annexed. This plan failed owing to the defeat at the Marne. Germany then changed her methods, while pursuing the same objective. She set out systematically to wreck all the industrial establishments of France.

She had lost the war in July, 1918, in so far as the war was a military affair. She had lost it absolutely so far as the United States and Great Britain were concerned. She could no longer close the seas to our ships, and she had to surrender her war fleet and her merchant marine, which had constituted a double challenge to the British. She had to abandon her colonies and to evacuate Belgium—the last menace to Great Britain.

But, with respect of France and Belgium, Germany had not lost the war in any but the military sense. She was still the victor, unless by the treaty of peace she was obliged to restore the industries which she had wrecked.

In the pursuit of her objective, Germany made herself officially bankrupt. She inflated her currency, she turned vast sums into domestic improvements, she permitted her industrialists to export a vast amount of capital. Finally, in the first days of the present year, a situation developed in which Germany was no longer able to pay. She was bankrupt fiscally, although none of her sources of wealth, none of her means of production, were in the slightest degree impaired.

At this moment she reached the decisive point. If she could obtain a long moratorium, during which no payment could be demanded —and she had made no contribution to French reconstruction up to that moment—no substantial contribution—then her strategy was successful. She had won the second phase of the war: she was in reality victorious, so far as France and Belgium were concerned. They were ruined, and behind her cover of a moratorium Germany could mobilize for the resumption of her war upon France.

Now, what was the German policy to be? If she restored what she had destroyed, she surrendered the victory she had achieved over France and Belgium by her policy of destruction. She could preserve that victory by evading payments in so far as she was able. If Germany chose the latter alternative—as she in fact did—what she really undertook was to continue the war by merely changing her methods. If she refused to heal the wounds she had inflicted upon France and Belgium, she kept them in such an enfeebled state that they would be unable to resist her when a favourable moment for a fresh attack arrived. From Armistice Day to the moment of the occupation of the Ruhr, Germany has waged war upon France and Belgium. She calculated that France would be crippled permanently if she were condemned to rebuild her own ruins.

The question then raised was whether France would accept defeat or resort to force ....Instead of bowing to German strategy, Poincaré followed the example of Joffre at the first battle of the Marne. At the moment when the German victory seemed beyond dispute, he counter-attacked. That counter-attack transformed the whole situation and opened a new form of warfare, just as the Marne riposte did.

This is not, honourable gentlemen, a thesis drawn from imagination. The facts are but too true. The Berlin Government has deliberately made itself bankrupt. It was all for profit: They were able to pay their debts by means of the printing press. They could even create credits abroad by selling to the innocent and the speculator their valueless paper. It might serve Germany well, and it had this supreme advantage, that it could not serve the enemy. Germany wanted a moratorium without further security. If granted it, what then? What would have been Germany's immediate policy? Was it not to Germany's interest to carry on along the same lines? Would she attempt to stabilize the mark at its present value, which is next to nothing? Where would that lead her? Could she hope to enhance it? Would it not have been a vain effort? Her paper money clearly was issued without any intention of redemption at par. In a single week in March 757 billions were issued.

Under those conditions how could Germany expect help from outside? This chaotic condition would have continued indefinitely if France had not pierced the abscess.

The London Daily Mail of the 4th of January said:

> If a moratorum is granted we are left without any guarantee whatever that Germany will meet its obligations in four years. The Germans have bluffed us in the past, They will do the same thing in the future. France wants guarantees. France is in the right.

My right honourable friend who initiated this debate (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) answered my query as to Germany's consent to allow financial control, that it did not express its entire disagreement.

What was Prime Minister Cuno's views on that question? His speech at Hamburg on the 31st of December was undoubtedly addressed to the Allies, who were to meet on the 2nd. of January, two days later. Here are his words:

> The final solution must give to the German people economic freedom and equality of treatment, and there must be an end of military occupation. Dusseldorf, Duisburg, Rhurort must be evacuated. There must be an abandonment of policies of sanctions, reprisals, and all coercive measures.

Who speaks thus—the victor? No, the vanquished; why? Because he believes the Allies are divided. If the Allies were united he would give in. The reason is obvious: because it would mean might. That is the only law he understands.

Austria is being rehabilitated—why? Because it has recognized its utter helplessness and thrown itself upon the goodwill and mercy of the Allies. Not so with Germany. Insincere and arrogant, it has remained, since Armistice Day, to such a degree that everybody regretted at a certain juncture, and regrets to-day, that before the 11th of November a knockout blow was not delivered that would have brought her down to her knees, penitent or impenitent.

Germany must be compelled to admit that she lost the war. Only then will she begin to work out her salvation on orthodox lines. When she is brought to the same mood as Austria, she will likewise allow complete financial control. Only then will she be trusted by the outside world.

Her first step will be to recall and annul the trillions of marks issued at such an infinitesimal fraction of a centime that it is difficult to reckon it. A few millions of gold dollars would redeem them all at their market value. Only speculators would suffer. We are not interested in them. They are all over the world, I am told. Let us pass them by. When Germany has recalled all that nearly valueless paper, either by buying it at its present price, which is next to nothing, or by cancelling it, she will then start afresh with a new currency, backed by gold borrowed abroad. But no country in the world will advance gold to Germany without guarantees—and I believe nobody will advance gold to Germany without military guarantees. By military guarantees I mean guarantees like those we put into the hands of a bailiff when he goes to seize a person's goods. During the French Revolution we had the experience of assignats and mandats. They were not printed to as considerable an extent as we have seen in very many countries, yet they were sufficient to drive out of circulation in France all gold and silver. As my right. honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E Foster) has well said, bad money chases away good money. But when they became practically valueless, first the assignats were withdrawn and replaced by the mandats at one-quarter of their face value, and then the mandats started to slump, and when they had become nearly valueless, they too were withdrawn. What occurred next day? Silver and gold reappeared throughout France, as if by magic.

It has been urged that Germany will be unable to pay 132 billion gold marks assessed against her. At present that is doubtless true. But out of the three series of bonds—A, B, and C—only the two first have been issued, representing 50 billion gold marks, payable in annuities of 3 billion gold marks, equal to $707,000,000, or £145,607,000. Is that an amount which Germany is unable to meet? Great Britain's interest and sinking fund on its debt of £7,800,000,000 is more than double that figure. It is over £350,000,000. What is being asked of Germany is £145,607,000, or three billion gold marks a year, just about the sum voted by the German Reich for the Army and Navy in 1913 and in 1914 in its special and extraordinary budget. So I have read recently in an important review. Germany can pay, and will pay when she must.

The right honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) recognized that what was uppermost in the minds of the peace delegates at Paris was the reparation of material damage done by the enemy, and that it was Mr. Lloyd George who succeeded in adding the pensions. It was the latter claim that had enabled many economists and financiers to say that the amount asked of Germany was too large. It is agreed on all hands that if any deductions are ever judged necessary they will bear on the pension item, which took second place in the estimation of the negotiators.

The reparations for damages wrought on the battlefields and in the occupied territory were to be made primarily in any case. These reparations were markedly unequal among the Allies. Once they were met, all the Allies came in under an even rule for the pensions to be paid. How came it that, when the Allies fixed the ratios to which they would be respectively entitled in the distribution of the instalments to be paid by the Germans, a preference was not naturally and logically allowed for these material damages, according to the ratio of damage suffered under that head?

The Dominion of Canada will surely be surprised to learn that it played a principal part in that decision, although not present at that conference. When the French Prime Minister, Mr. Millerand, who is now President of the Republic, returned to Paris and gave out to Parliament the conclusions arrived at, he was asked by a member of the Lower House why a preference had not been obtained for the rebuilding of the devastated regions, and the Prime Minister answered that Mr. Lloyd George had refused it because the Dominions insisted upon receiving at once their share of the German payments. I do not know what justification Mr. Lloyd George had for that statement. I have searched in vain for such a mandate from Canada. Neither the Department of External Affairs nor the Right Honourable Sir Robert Borden nor his principal colleagues would stand sponsors for it.

Mr. Lloyd George seems to have shifted upon our shoulders the odium attaching to his own act—at all events, as far as Canada is concerned.

It has often been said that Canada should stand as an interpreter between Great Britain and the United States. Why not also between Great Britain and France?

It was Woodrow Wilson who said at Glasgow: "By coming together we saved the world. By keeping together, can we not ensure the peace of the world?" The United States could have been the cement which would have kept the Allies together. Europe needed a disinterested umpire. The great American republic could have insured the peace of the world. It had the unique opportunity in the course of time to render that unexampled service to humanity. That privilege and that duty were lost sight of in the turmoil of a party wrangle. If the United States had joined the Allies, and remained with them, the Greeks and Turks would have agreed to a compromise, which would have brought about peace in the Near East, and Germany would have been cowed into submission.

The absence of the American influence was most probably the reason or excuse for a reversion to the old policy of equilibrium called the balance of power. Great Britain, whose diplomacy has led the world successfully through so many crises, had the misfortune of lacking a seasoned statesman to help to guide Europe after the war. Mr. Bonar Law said of Mr. Lloyd George that he had been during the war a useful drummer, who had enthused the soldier and the civilian, but that the drummer was not good in a hospital. We all know how sick is Europe. The fundamental reason for Mr. Lloyd George's rejection, added Mr. Bonar Law, was that the people everywhere felt and said that under his rule, "we don't know where we are to-day, and cannot tell where we will be to-morrow." I believe that history will be more generous towards Mr. Lloyd George, and will grant him a higher place than that of a simple drummer. He will remain one of the outstanding figures in this gigantic drama. Unfortunately for him, his dictatorship did not end with the war. It soon became apparent that he had neither the training nor the instinct of the diplomat, nor according to many home critics, the character. What was the result of his leadership in peace time? Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., though a friend, and up to recently a follower of Mr. Lloyd George, gave the answer when, speaking on the 2nd of March last before the Empire Club at Toronto, he made the affirmation that "after the war, Lloyd George alienated every country in Europe." I will not dilate upon his disastrous failure in his Near East policy. As far back as May 18, 1921, the London Morning Post, in a thoughtful article, raised the cry of alarm against the personal foreign policy of Mr. Lloyd George, on the occasion of the Upper Silesia crisis. I have tried in vain to summarize it: I must read it all:

France or Germany—Which?

For the sake of truth and plain dealing let us brush away all the nonsense which is being talked about the French "misunderstanding" in the Prime Minister's speech. The French are not fools, and there is no misunderstanding: they gathered from the speech what we gathered from it. And what we gathered from it was nothing less than this: That the Prime Minister is preparing to throw over the Entente with France and to sacrifice Poland to Germany. The Prime Minister deliberately used language about Poland which could not be interpreted in any other sense, and through Poland he struck no less deliberately at France. The crudeness and brutality of the speech left no room for misunderstanding. Not even a German could misunderstand it, and the Germans understand it in the same sense as the French. Therefore let us have no more hypocrisy in the matter, but discuss in plain language what the Prime Minister is doing. Let us begin by saying that there are only three courses open to this country in its foreign policy: (1) Isolation; (2) an entente or alliance with France; (3) an entente or alliance with Germany. As to the first course, it was possible when England after the victory of Waterloo had no serious rival in Europe; it became impossible with the growth of a German Empire which plainly threatened England. When it became impossible our statesmen made certain desperate and ignominious attempts to come to terms with Germany. These failing, they were forced to turn to France, and friendship with France implied friendship with Russia. It can hardly be said that the defeat of Germany makes isolation possible once more, because in the first place Germany was never thoroughly defeated; and, in the second place, Russia has fallen out of the European scheme. Germany is, at present, potentially and essentially, the greatest Power in Europe—by reason of her population, her great industrial system, and her position and means to exploit Russia. Therefore we have again to make the choice of only two alternatives—whether to make friends with Germany or keep friends with France.

Our policy, hitherto, as we need hardly explain, has been friendship with France. And friendship with France implied general support of French policy in Europe. France, we may say, is like a warrior who has crawled off a battlefield victorious, but desperately wounded, leaving an enemy defeated but still strong and dangerous. And France, moreover, has left dead upon the battlefield—her best friend, Russia, whose weapons as she knows will be seized by her enemy. Therefore what France has done is to make of Poland an independent nation, which to some extent at least may take the place of Russia. France calculated that with the friendship of England and the support of Poland, she might be able to hold her own in the future, but certainly no more than hold her own. Such was her policy, a policy as well calculated to protect England as to defend France. A strong independent Poland is obviously a British interest as long as we take the side of France in the European concert. For Poland is a check on Prussian power in the East, and also Bolshevist power in Russia, and prevents these two coming together. It also opens an area for British trade which we could not hope to find in a German Poland. Therefore it was in the British interest to support France in her attempts to make of Poland a strong, independent Power. And such was the official British policy—accepted as everybody thought by Lord Curzon as Foreign Minister, and by the Coalition. Yet Mr. Lloyd George has from the very beginning openly and secretly worked against this policy, and has used every opportunity to weaken Poland, and thus defeat the policy of France. The case of Danzig, the historic port of Poland, which our Prime Minister insisted should go to the Germans, made the position clear even at the Paris Conference, and now his Whitsuntide speech leaves no shadow of doubt.

That being so, any person of intelligence—and the French are intelligent—must conclude that our Prime Minister's policy is to desert France and form an entente or alliance with Germany—a return, in fact, to the Haldane policy. And that is exactly our view of what Mr. Lloyd George is doing: he is throwing over France and he is taking up with Germany. There is no advantage in mincing words about it. Let us rather fairly consider whether it is a possible policy for England to pursue. And it seems to us, if we may say so, that it presents several insuperable difficulties. The first is that Germany is our chief industrial and commercial rival. She is at the present moment destroying British industry by an organised invasion of dumped goods. It is difficult to be friendly with a Power which is engaged in destroying our industries. In the second place, Germany is strongly suspected of using her hirelings, the Russian-Jewish Communists and their propaganda, for the continual disturbance of our industrial peace so as to make it impossible for us to recover from the effects of the war. In the third place, there is no doubt at all that Germany hates England. When the mask of peace was thrown aside the Germans, with their customary brutality, expressed their true feelings about us. They sang their Hymn of Hate. They vowed to destroy us utterly; they carried the war against us far beyond the field of battle into every sphere of life and into every part of the world, and it was then apparent to every intelligent man that these sentiments were their true sentiments, and that their plans for our destruction had been prepared long prior to the war. All these things being so makes an alliance with Germany very difficult. But there is one small circumstance—and Mr. Lloyd George may have forgotten it—which makes it impossible. And that is that the English people will have none of it. Lta Mr. Lloyd eorge frankly avow his purpose of an entente with Germany either in the House of Commons or on a public platform and he will soon see that we are right. Not even his popularity would survive a week.

I hold Mr. Lloyd George in a large measure responsible for Germany's attitude. She has felt all along that she had a friend at Court.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

His speeches were placarded throughout Germany, and German workmen read the substance of them from the bill-boards in the public streets. And what do we behold since he has left office? In his articles to Mr. Hearst's yellow press, he reveals an extraordinary state of mind. The entry of the French in the Ruhr has stirred his soul to a greater depth than did the firing squad which shattered the noble breast of Edith Cavell and the torpedoes which sunk the Lusitania and the hospital ship the Llandovery Castle, with our nurses. Here are his words taken from the Montreal Star of January 20:

> France has once more jumped on the postrate form of Germany, and the sabots have come down with a thud that will sicken the heart of multitudes on both sides of the Altantic whose friendship for France stood the losses and griefs of a four years' war.

It is such language that has sickened the heart of all right-minded men throughout the world. Is it to be wondered at that the friends and Allies—Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania, Jugo-Slavia, Italy, France, and Belgium—who are keeping an anxious eye, by day and by night, upon an untamed enemy —Germany—and a fuming volcano—Russia —ceased looking towards London for direction and protection, and turned towards Paris? And, to add a ludicrous note to this tragedy, it was Mr. Lloyd George himself who was bitterly complaining, recently, that Great Britain was playing too meagre a roll in European affairs.

My right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) closed his eloquent oration with a suggestion that this question of reparation be left to the League of Nations for solution. It is a very easy matter to suggest this, but we would be moving in a vicious circle. The League of Nations can be seized of this matter if Germany will qualify to enter that League. But Germany is not a member of the League; and why is she not a member? Because she will not conform to the prescriptions of the first Article of the Covenant, which reads as follows:

> Any fully self-governing State, Dominion, or Colony not named in the Annex may become a member of the League if its admission is agreed to by two-thirds of the Assembly, provided that it shall give effective guarantees of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations, and shall accept such regulations as may be prescribed by the League, in regard to its military, naval and air forces and armaments.

Until Germany gives proof of a change of heart and mind, France, Belgium, and most of the Allies will justly refuse to sit in the League of Nations with their fraudulent and defaulting debtor.

Since Canada has entered world-politics by joining the League of Nations, and since London diplomacy will react on this country, it is our right and duty to express our opinion on matters which vitally interest us, and to state with emphasis that it is our ardent hope that Great Britain and France, the two countries from which we spring, will go forth, hand in hand, towards that goal which we hope to be in sight—Peace based on Justice.

These views I believe to be those of a large majority in Canada.

The only official statement I bring to this House is that the papers asked for by the right honourable gentleman were laid on the Table of the Senate on the 1st of February last.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

POSITION OF WALTER DUNCAN

UNSATISFACTORY ANSWER

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: A few days ago I put several questions on the Order Paper and yesterday I received a reply. What I complain about is the nature of the reply, which does not at all answer two of the questions. My first question was:

Is one Walter Duncan in the employ of the Postmaster General of Canada or in the employ of the Minister of Justice, and if so in what capacity?

The answer given is:

Walter Duncan is employed as a special investigation officer under the direction of the Department of Finance.

In my question I asked simply for yes or no. If there are qualifying observations that the Government cares to offer, they might follow, but I must ask for an answer to my question.

In regard to the second question:

Is the said Walter Duncan entitled to describe himself as Chief Federal Police Investigator and Special Representative of the Postmaster General of Canada, or by either of these designations?

The answer given is:

His services were loaned for a period to the Post Office Department for special investigation work.

Again I say I should have an answer—yes or no. If there are any qualifying observations, they might follow.

So I now give notice that I will repeat these two questions:

1. Is one Walter Duncan in the employ of the Postmaster General of Canada or in the employ of the Minister of Justice, and if so in what capacity?
2. Is the said Walter Duncan entitled to describe himself as Chief Federal Police Investigator and Special Representative of the Postmaster General of Canada, or by either of these designations?

The hon. the SPEAKER: I have not had time to look up the rule, but I would point out to the honourable gentleman that he has to accept the answer made by the Minister.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Without comment.

The Hon. THE SPEAKER: If the honourable gentleman is not satisfied, there is nothing he can do. The answer having already been given, I do not think this notice can be placed on the Order Paper.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, with all due deference to what His Honour the Speaker has just observed, while there is a rule to that effect, yet there must be an answer to the questions. That is to say, the member asking a question must accept the answer of the Government, provided it is an answer to the question he has asked; but where there is an evasion of the question by the answer given, it is quite clear that it does not come within the rule. Members of this House are entitled to inquire of the Government respecting any subject that may come within the purview of the administration of government, and the object of well-established parliamentary practice would be defeated if the Government could escape responsibility by an evasive answer. Now, my honourable friend from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) has submitted two questions which can be answered simply by yes or no, and he is entitled to that answer. If the Government says yes, though the proper answer would be no, the honourable gentleman must accept the reply. But the Government cannot evade or shift responsibility by dealing with some other subject or dealing with some other Department than that concerned in the question which has been asked. I think that members of this Chamber should insist upon parliamentary practice being observed, because it is quite manifest that the business of Parliament cannot be transacted unless proper information is given to members of Parliament who ask questions upon public subjects, to which they are entitled to a satisfactory answer.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Honourable gentlemen, I thought the honourable leader of the Opposition, in making his criticism, would give the solution. It is a very simple solution. If the honourable member from Edmonton is not satisfied with the answer, all he has to do is to give notice that he will call attention to the unsatisfactory answer given on a certain date by the Government. Then the matter will come up for discussion, and he may say all he likes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What about the Government, may I ask my honourable friend? That does not secure the answer.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: When the discussion takes place the Government will have to answer.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Honourable gentlemen, I confess that, as I had not the questions and answers before me when the honourable member from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), rose to express dissatisfaction with the answers, I could not well challenge his statement. The impression I gathered was that the answer was not an absolutely clear answer to the question, except by implication. The honourable gentleman asked whether Walter Duncan is in the employ of the Postmaster General of Canada or in the employ of the Minister of Justice. The answer is that he is in the employ of the Finance Department. Well, I think that is a complete answer to that first question.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No. The honourable gentleman asks if Duncan is in the employ of the Post Office Department.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The answer is that he is employed by the Finance Department, but that his services have been loaned to the Post Office Department.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then he is not in the employ. My honourable friend will pardon me if I illustrate the situation in this way. An officer of the Government represents to the public that he occupies a particular office. Then, surely it is the right of a member of Parliament to ask the Government if that officer occupies the particular position which he represents himself as filling. If he is not filling that particular position, but is in some other, why should not the Government say that he does not occupy a position in the Department mentioned, but he does in another Department. There should be no distinction between the clarity of an answer given by the Government to a question by a member of Parliament and the clarity of an answer given in the witness box by a witness under examination for the purpose of securing evidence of facts. The cases are clearly parallel, and the same rule that is observed in a judicial tribunal, it seems to me, should be observed in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I simply want to show on the face of the answer that there was no deliberate evasion of the question. Before stressing that point I may say that I inquired two or three times why an answer was not forthcoming. It was one of those questions that affected more than one Department; so the Departments had to be circularized. It was not a question that was to be addressed simply to the Postmaster General. It went to the Department of Justice, and apparently also to the Finance Department. Now, what is the question?

Is one Walter Duncan in the employ of the Postmaster General of Canada or in the employ of the Minister of Justice, and if so in what capacity?

The answer, it seems to me, should fully satisfy the honourable Senator who put the question. He was wrong as to the Department in which Duncan was employed, because the answer is:

Walter Duncan is employed as a special investigation officer under the direction of the Department of Finance.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, that is not an answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What is the second question?

Is the said Walter Duncan entitled to describe himself as Chief Federal Police Investigator and Special Representative of the Postmaster General of Canada, or by either of these designations?

The answer is:

His services were loaned for a period to the Post Office Department for special investigation work.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is not an answer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Apparently this answer came from the Finance Department, the Department that has that gentleman under its charge. Of course, I recognize that the particular question, "Is he entitled to describe himself as Chief Federal Police Investigator and Special Representative of the Postmaster General of Canada," is one which would have to be dealt with by the Postmaster General, the Acting Postmaster General, the Deputy Postmaster General or the Acting Deputy Postmaster General, who would tell us what kind of credentials were given to that investigator when he went to the places which my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) represents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They can surely say yes or no to that question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But apparently the question was answered by the Finance Department, and all that the Finance Department could say was that the title of that person in that Department was "Special Investigation Officer," and that it had lent that Special Investigation Officer to the Postmaster General. Did the Postmaster General give him a higher title? I do not know.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is what we want to find out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is for me to ascertain.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: That is all I want to know. If the honourable gentleman does not know, notwithstanding that the question is fully answered, then he will understand my unfortunate position, because I do not know. And that is what I want to know.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So that we need not discuss the point taken by His Honour the Speaker. I will endeavour to obtain the real high-sounding title given to that gentleman when he left the Post Office Department.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I am more particularly interested in the high-sounding title he gives himself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Where did he give it?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: In certain proceedings in court.

THE SHAUGHNESSY BUILDING, MONTREAL

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. BLAIN inquired of the Government:

1. Has the Government entered into negotiations for the purchase of the Shaughnessy Building, Montreal?
2. If so, at what stage do the negotiations now stand?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: To the first question, the answer is no. An offer has been received in the Department for the sale of the building, but no action has been taken upon the offer.

GOVERNMENTAL PRIVATE CARS AND MOTOR CARS

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government how he is making out with the return in answer to my motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I inquired personally of the Secretary of State in regard to this matter, and he informed me that he had quite a number of answers from various departments, and that he was hoping to get the balance of them shortly. I asked him to kindly press the delinquents.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why not take it in instalments?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No, I want it all together.

COST OF THE CIVIL SERVICE

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I desire to call the attention of the leader of the House to the fact that on the 13th of April a motion was passed for a return showing:

The total cost of the Civil Service for the year ending March 1st, 1919, and for the year ending March 31st, 1922. By the Civil Service is meant all the Government employees affected by the provisions of the Civil Service Act, 1919, and its amendments.

This motion was made because it seemed impossible to get a proper answer to an inquiry which I had previously put on the Order Paper. I would like to ask the leader of the Government if there is any possibility of getting this information and getting it correctly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will inquire, press, and pray.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: I would recommend the honourable gentleman to do considerable praying, because I think it is necessary.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 72, an Act to prohibit the Improper Use of Opium and other Drugs.

He said: The purpose of this Bill is principally to consolidate previous legislation for the suppression of the traffic in narcotic drugs. Legislation was first enacted in 1908, and subsequent legislation was enacted in 1911, 1919, 1920, 1921 and 1922. At present the legislation is somewhat confusing, and the purpose of this legislation is to make the interpretation of these different statutes clearer and easier for those charged with the administration of this law.

I may say that Section 24 gave us considerable trouble last Session. Although it was passed by the other House, it was eliminated in this House. The Minister thinks it is important that he should again test the opinion of Parliament, more especially of this Chamber, and we shall have to discuss the question seriously and thoroughly when the Bill comes before us in Committee.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman if he can explain section 24 of the Bill. It is a very peculiar section. The Act provides two different tribunals before which offences can be tried. If a man is tried before a judge, he is liable to seven years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, but if he is tried before a magistrate, the greatest penalty he can get is eighteen months and a fine of $1,000. Vice versa, if he is tried before a judge he may be sentenced to only one day in jail, but if he is tried before a summary court, he cannot get less than six months' imprisonment and a fine of $200.

I desire to draw the attention of the leader of the Government to this section, and to ask him whether he would not consider it better to re-draft it. It is contradictory, and does not seem to be reasonable.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I might say that the only attention I gave to this Act was as to the modifications suggested to the existing Acts, but I will examine into the questions which my honourable friend raises in order to be able to answer him when we go into Committee.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I would like to draw the attention of the leader of the Government to the question of taking away the right of appeal. In my opinion, the appeal should not be limited. When the question came up in this House last Session it was very fully and thoroughly argued that it was dangerous to take from any British subject the right of appeal, especially when the penalties are so extremely severe as they are in this Act. When anyone is accused of an offence under this Act, he is presumed to be guilty unless he can prove himself innocent, the onus being on the accused. It may be that the offence of carrying drugs is so serious that it may be right to make such a provision, but I hold that it is dangerous to take away the right of appeal. It is even more so since the Privy Council, in a recent case, decided that a writ of certiorari shall not lie in any case by way of appeal, if the magistrate or the convicting inferior judge has any jurisdiction whatsoever. All that needs to be done is to show that the inferior court has jurisdiction, and there cannot be any appeal under any circumstances.

To illustrate what I mean, let me give an instance that happened a short time ago. A man bought a farm in a wooded portion of the province of Manitoba, and took possession of it. In a very short time he was visited by revenue officers of the Dominion, who searched the place and found in an old stable a portion of a still. The man was immediately brought before a magistrate. He had no counsel, not thinking there was any necessity for one, and he was fined $700. Half of the fine went to the informer, who turned out to be the man who had sold him the farm, and knew where the old still was. The accused in that case had no remedy whatever; the magistrate had jurisdiction, and there was no appeal, and the accused had to pay the fine of $700, half of which went to the informer. I think the right of appeal is a very important matter.

Section 24 of this Bill provides that an appeal shall lie where the case is tried by two justices. As none of these cases are tried by two justices, this is simply a way of getting around the question. The principal thing is the trial, and it is a summary matter. I would also point out that if the accused is tried by a judge of a superior court he can have a case reserved for the Court of Appeal and thus obtain the benefit of an appeal, but if he is tried by a magistrate, who is an inferior judge, there is no appeal. Now I think the reverse of that should be the law—that if you are going to take away the right of appeal at all, it should be in cases where the accused is tried by a judge who knows something about these matters. But when he is tried in an inferior court by a magistrate, who probably is not at all versed in matters of law, you take away his right of appeal. That is absurd; I cannot understand why it should be done. I have explained once or twice before that the magistrates throughout Western Canada are appointed by the local Government and hold their positions at the will of the Government, and, being very often inexperienced, they do as they are told by the Crown prosecutor. Another point is that those magistrates get no fees unless there is a conviction. Now, that is not the kind of court in which to try a man accused of a crime which has very serious consequences attached to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Do I understand that the magistrate only gets a fee if there is a conviction?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I am speaking of the magistrates outside of cities and towns. In the larger courts they get a salary but in most cases in rural districts I think they are paid entirely by fees, and I am quite sure that if they do not make a conviction they do not get the fee.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is true.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: So my honourable friend will see the seriousness of taking away the right of appeal. Where a competent judge tries the case there is an appeal, but where an incompetent judge tries it you take away the right to appeal. Of course, I am speaking in a limited sense as to incompetence.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would like to ask the honourable leader of the Government if, before this comes up in Committee of the Whole, he would consider taking out section 24, and in place of it inserting what is now the side-note to that section. That side-note is perfectly intelligible, and an ordinary man on reading it can see what it means. I think it is very much simpler and better than section 24 itself, which is a sort of omnibus section, and it would take a lawyer of ten years standing to understand just what it means. It is better to make the side-note the section.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And make the other the marginal note?

Hon. Mr. ROSS: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that I will move an amendment to section 14. I will ask to strike out the words in line 3 after the word "establish", and make it read in this way:

> Where a charge is laid under either paragraphs (a), (b), (d) or (e) of section four of this Act, the onus shall be upon the accused to establish that he had lawful authority to commit the act complained of, or that he had a license from the Minister authorizing such act.

I think that the clause as it stands is too much of a wrench of the principle that the accused is to be held innocent until he is found guilty.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend in his statement mentioned that the different statutes which are now being consolidated were those of 1911, 1919, 1920, 1921 and 1922; but 1919 is not mentioned in section 27 providing for the repeal. What is the reason that one is left out?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will ascertain why the statute of 1919 has been left out.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I should like to ask my honourable friend what his views are on the abolition of appeal. It is a very drastic step to wipe out at one fell swoop a remedy of this kind, which is accorded practically throughout the whole of our jurisprudence. We should have some pronouncement upon that subject before the vote is taken upon the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That question does not affect the principle of the revision. We are revising the whole of the Act, and there is no objection to that. When we go into Committee, we may decide to strike out the clause.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: But is not section 24 new?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is a new section, and designed, in the view of the Department, to limit the right of appeal to a stated case on a point of law with respect to offences under paragraphs (a), (b) and (e) of section 4 of the Act, which deals with persons importing, having in possession without license, or selling to a minor (drug smugglers or pedlars), except where the case is tried before two justices of the peace. So that it will be seen that the appeal is done away with in special cases only. The effect of this section is to prevent an appeal on the facts. A similar provision exists in the Criminal Code with regard to disorderly houses. This section is made necessary through the fact that the right of appeal is being greatly abused, as it is the common practice of these drug peddlers to serve notice of appeal, as a matter of course, in the hope that Crown witnesses may disappear or that some technicality may be found in the wording of the charge, etc. A similar section was incorporated in the Act at the last Session, and was passed by the House of Commons, but struck out by the Senate.

I did not discuss this feature of the Act with the Minister who has presented this Bill, but it was stated that the drug traffic seemed to be concentrated in two large cities. Montreal was mentioned, but I do not know whether Toronto is the other one.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then it would be Montreal and Vancouver. The trouble is that vendors in those two centers are arrested in considerable numbers, but they do not seem to be deterred by the penalties imposed, and the importation continues.

It was the Minister or some member of the House of Commons who said that, inasmuch as this traffic was concentrated in those two cities, it was hardly likely that the point raised by my honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. McMeans), that some magistrate might err on the facts, would arise, in view of the fact that these cases are tried by magistrates of standing who have had a number of years' experience at the Bar, who rank fairly high in their profession, and who know the law and can appreciate the facts. I saw that argument put up in favour of this amendment. Of course, I realize that the Senate will have to alter its opinion, as registered last year, in order to accept this clause, and I know in advance that strong reasons will have to be given to the Senate to induce it to do so.

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I would suggest to the honourable gentleman whether it would not be wise for him to consider an alternative to abolishing the appeal. To abolish appeals would mean that we are not living in a really free country. There are courts here, for the purpose of hearing grievances, and if a man thinks he has a grievance it is a very high-handed proceeding to take away from him the right of appeal. I can understand, on the other hand, that a certain class of people might abuse the privilege. The way to deal with that is to leave the right of appeal, but to attach conditions to it, as is done in civil cases. The right used to be abused, and then the civil laws provided that if a man was going to take an appeal, he must give security in order to get a stay of proceedings. In this peculiar class of cases, dealing with drugs, it might be provided that in order to get his appeal the accused should pay the amount of his fine into court, or something of that kind. I think it would be wise for the Government to have some alternative to submit to us in substitution for the abolition of the right to appeal.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In reply to what my honourable friend has said, the difficulty I see is that an appeal will be allowed upon a stated case upon a question of law. This would not meet the difficulty which will confront the public in the administration of this Act. In most cases the question will centre upon the possession of the drug in question, and we very well know that numbers of persons will be haled before the courts under this Act for knowingly having possession of the drug. Then the question will arise as to whether they knowingly had possession. Devices will be resorted to, as they are to-day, for the purpose of placing drugs of this kind in the possession of innocent holders. Under an appeal dealing simply with a question of law, or upon a stated case, the facts involved would not be presented in court; consequently the accused would have no redress, although he might be perfectly innocent of wrongful possession.

It seems to me that what the Government should work out is an accelerated form of appeal, by which the appeal would have to be brought within a stipulated time, and by which provision would also be made that the court should hear and dispose of the appeal. The difficulty can easily be overcome in that way. The objection in the past has been that appeals have been delayed to such an extent as to impede the course of justice. That would be easily overcome by prescribing that the appeal should be brought within a specified time, and that the judge or court or tribunal to which the appeal is made should be required to hear and dispose of it.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think that the person applying for an appeal should give security not only for the costs of the application, and the appeal, but also for the fine, so that he could not slide out in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: How would it be if the sentence covered both fine and imprisonment? How would you work that out?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Hold the accused in custody until the appeal is settled.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: We all recognize what it means to appeal, and to be held on appeal. I rise mainly in reference to the instructions that have been given to the leader of the Government to the effect that these offences are mainly committed in cities such as Montreal, Vancouver, and Toronto. That may be true, but I know there are a great many prosecutions in small places in the West for offences under this Act. I personally know of one case in which a plant was put upon a Chinaman, with the alleged connivance of the police of that particular place. The right of appeal existed and it was proven that the Chinaman in whose possession the opium was found had not wrongfully brought it there but it had been planted there for the purpose of trapping him. That man was absolutely hopelessly convicted, and would have remained so but for the right of appeal. I do not know whether opium circulates in the East so much as in the West near the Pacific coast, but I know that trials for offences against the Opium Act are quite common throughout the West. Perhaps we do not hear so much about them because we do not always succeed in getting convictions, but they are not confined to the larger cities in which magistrates preside who have had long experience in conducting cases. If that were so, perhaps there would be no great abuse. The other objection pointed out by the honourable gentleman from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. McMeans), that under the decision of the Privy Council questions of fact cannot be investigated on a certiorari proceeding, makes it all the more important that the liberty of everybody, including that of the Chinaman, who is the usual trafficker in these drugs, should be protected.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 82, an Act to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act.

He said: This Bill amends the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, and describes anew a certain number of forest reserves. The statement which is made by the Department will explain the reason for this redescription of those forest reserves. In the schedule a new description of each of the 39 reserves is included, although there is no change proposed in the areas comprising many of those reserves. The rewriting of the schedule was approved owing to the fact that the original description in the 1911 Act was made by the metes and bounds system, which is a very cumbersome and complicated method, and also in view of the fact that in the numerous amendments of the original Act the lands added or withdrawn have been described by section, township, and range. The result is that it is a very difficult matter for anyone not familiar with the Act and all its amendments to determine the lands which are included in forest reserves. In the schedule which accompanies this Bill, each reserve has been described by section, township, and range, all previous withdrawals or additions having been taken into consideration and provision having been made for such alterations as are proposed in the present Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 84, an Act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, one of the objects of this Bill is to facilitate the application of employers or employees for a Board of Investigation. Heretofore it has been difficult to affirm that negotiations had taken place and that all efforts to effect a settlement by negotiation had failed. For instance, a demand would be made by a committee of employees for an increase of wages, or for some other object, and there would be no answer. Under the present amendment the necessary declaration can be made by stating that it has been impossible to secure a conference or enter into negotiations.

Clause 2 has for its purpose to make clearer the object of section 57 of the Act. It determines upon whom rests the responsibility for making the application for a board of conciliation and investigation. The responsibility must rest somewhere. It also maintains the principle that the situation as between employer and employees shall not be changed before the dispute has been finally dealt with by the board. The party responsible for a proposed change, if opposed, is under obligation to ask for a board.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Honourable gentlemen, just one word before the Bill is read the second time. Take section 2, for instance. It is a very blind piece of work to find out what is meant by that.

Here you are amending "section 57 of the Act, as amended by section 5 of Chapter 29 of the Statutes of 1910, and as further amended by section 5 of Chapter 29 of the Statutes of 1920." After all this, you go on to say that it is further amended by sticking in a phrase here, a phrase there, and a phrase in another place. No Philadelphia lawyer that I know of could make himself equal to this thing. Why is it that when we are amending a statute we do not simply put in black and white before the Chamber what the law will be when the statute is amended?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We have a rule on that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend will find just what he asks for on the accompanying page.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: There is no accompanying page with this.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In my copy of the Bill the extra page is blank.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Nothing in mine.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My right honourable friend has before him the Bill as it passed the House of Commons. I happen to have the Bill as it was introduced for first reading, and printed with it is section 57, showing the additions in italics.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Have we not the Belcourt regulation in force?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We could perhaps insist upon it, but if my honourable friends will look into their files of Bills as introduced, they will see section 57 reproduced, with the intended changes shown in italics.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There must have been two or three different printings of this Bill. Section 57 is not given in my copy.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The copy my honourable friend has is very likely the Bill as passed by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I frequently took occasion, when my honourable friend opposite (Hon. Sir James Lougheed) was leading the House, to find serious fault that something of that sort had not been done.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: And you remedied the shortcoming very effectively.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The result was that we adopted a rule.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It has worked very satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It has done exactly what my right honourable friend (Right Hon. Sir George E. Foster) asks. Now that there has been a change and the responsibility has shifted, I intend to carry on, and I ask that my honourable friend who now has the responsibility of leading this House will see to it that the rule is observed. In the case of every Bill that comes up to this House, if the regulation is not complied with I am going to ask that the Bill be not considered.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I knew that it had been complied with to some extent, when I had the Bill in my hands. My honourable friend has the Bill as passed by the House of Commons, and I have it as introduced there.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I know, but the rule we made was not for the House of Commons, but for this House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Furthermore, the law as it stands should be shown with the Bill in the form in which it receives its third reading, because on the first or the second reading in the House of Commons the Bill might be very materially changed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There might be amendments.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Besides, my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) is rather pledged. This same matter was considered last year, and the honourable leader on the Government side pledged himself, I think, to see to it that the rule was observed. That was my understanding. I am going to stand behind my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) who has just affirmed his determination to see that the rule of the Senate is carried out, because it is in the interest of good legislation. I am not a lawyer, and it is a sort of dunderhead piece of work for me to get into my head what is meant by all these things. So I think the Government, in bringing in measures, should make it as easy as possible for a man who is not a lawyer to understand what he is being asked to support.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The responsibility is on some officer of this House who has not observed the rule, and I think it is about time that we should know just who it is that is not willing to have this rule observed.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: I think it is only right that I should point out to honourable gentlemen that in the case of Bills coming from the House of Commons, unless we have them reprinted, we have no control over the form in which they are presented to us. We canot insist that the House of Commons shall have them printed in a certain way. We might have them reprinted for our special benefit. Otherwise I do not know exactly how we are going to control the matter.

Right Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I remember now that the hnourable leader of the House promised that at the beginning of this Session he would arrange for a committee of the Senate and a committee of the House of Commons, who, by agreement with each other, would have the Bills sent up to us from the House of Commons in the proper form. Then we would not need a double printing, and we would be saved all this altercation. My honourable friend has not carried out that intention.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: If we are going to have the rule apply only to those Bills which are introduced in this House, we might just as well dispense with the rule now, because the Bills introduced here first are only one in a hundred. If the other House does not carry out the rule there, it is futile. I say it should be carried out. No Bill should be introduced into this House unless it complies with our rules.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If we went to the source of the trouble we would start by amending the form of the Bills that come from the other House. If honourable gentlemen will look at this Bill, for instance, they will see the second clause to read thus:

Section fifty-seven of the said Act, as amended by Section five of Chapter twenty-nine of the Statutes of 1910, and as further amended by Section five of Chapter twenty-nine of the Statutes of 1920, is further amended by inserting after the word "intended"—

Well, we would have to strike out that clause entirely and follow a practice which would be much better, by stating: "Section fifty-seven is repealed and the following is substituted therefor."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, the law as proposed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, that would not give us complete satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That would not be observing the rule.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because it would have to be indicated in italics or in some way what were the changes that we were introducing in section 57.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend has forgotten the rule. The rule required, if I am right, that the section or sections of the Act to be amended or repealed should be printed in full on the page opposite. That is my recollection of the rule.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then the Minister of Labour, in the other Chamber, was not so far off our rule when he introduced the Bill in the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: However, we did not receive the Bill in the same form when it came from the House of Commons after its third reading there. The correct form was followed in printing the Bill as read the first time, but of course that is not satisfactory, because we do not know to what extent the Bill may have been amended in Committee. Annotations should have been printed on the side.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The form now before us necessarily had to be struck off for distribution in the Senate, after the Bill had passed the House of Commons. Consequently the Printing Bureau had the other page, showing the present law, and all they had to do was to include it with the form in which the Bill passed the third reading.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The rule seems to have been complied with in the other House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: The Printing Bureau simply neglected to print it. That is all.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I suppose that the fault lies at the Printing Bureau.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Before the Bill is read the second time, can my honourable friend say, how long, under section 2, shall the employer have to continue, for instance, the existing wages before he is permitted to depart therefrom? As I understand, the purpose of the new provision is that an employer shall not be permitted to put into force reduced rates of wages after an application for a concilliation board is made. How long shall the matter remain in suspense? It seems to me that is an important point. Apparently all control of his employees, is under the Bill, taken out of the hands of the employer until the award is made.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is it possible to make any hard and fast rule? Will not the case depend very much upon the local conditions, etc.? I do not see how you could very well fix a definite period of time. I do not think you could have a general rule.

Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it is imperative, apparently, that the employer shall not put in force a lower rate of wages than obtained at the time the application was made. Now, there must be some limitation based on that; otherwise the proceedings might drag on for an unlimited time, during which the employer has no control over his employees so far as payment of wages is concerned.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My objection is to the fixing of a uniform period of time during which the existing rate of wages cannot be changed. I do not see how it would be possible to make one rule for all.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But should not the period of time be limited?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Possibly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The change is not a considerable one, as my honourable friend will see if he reads section 57 of the present Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But I have not that section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Would he not find it in his file?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will read it, and we shall see what are the changes. I shall indicate them as I proceed.

Section 57. Employers and employees shall give at least thirty days' notice of an intended—

The amendment inserts the words "or desired"

—change affecting conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours; and in the event of such intended—

And there are inserted the words "or desired"—

—change resulting in a dispute—

The new words are: "it shall be unlawful for the employer to make effective a proposed change in wages or hours or for the employees to go on strike"—

—until the dispute has been finally dealt with by a Board, and a copy of its report has been delivered through the Registrar to both the parties affected;

The new words are: "the application for the appointment of a Board shall be made by the employers or employees proposing the change in wages or hours." Now, the old Act continues:

Neither of those parties shall alter the conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours, or on account of the dispute do or be concerned in doing, directly or indirectly, anything in the nature of a lockout or strike, or a suspension or discontinuance of employment or work, but the relationship of employer and employee shall continue uninterrupted by the dispute, or anything arising out of the dispute; but if, in the opinion of the Board, either party uses this or any other provision of this Act for the purpose of unjustly maintaining a given condition of affairs through delay, and the Board so reports to the Minister, such party shall be guilty of an offence, and liable to the same penalties as are imposed for a violation of the next preceding section.

So that the only change is the addition of the words "or desired," and the words: "it shall be unlawful for the employer to make effective a proposed change in wages or hours or for the employees to go on strike."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That is new, is it not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is new. But, as the honourable gentleman will notice, the rest of the section shows that the status quo shall be maintained.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: So this amendment simply makes it clearer that it shall be unlawful to alter the situation.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That does not affect the point raised by the honourable leader of the Opposition, that there should be a specified time for the determination of the question before the Board, and the matter should not be allowed to drift. There should be specified a certain number of days or weeks or months, as I understand from my honourable friend (Hon. Sir James Lougheed), so that the static position may not be allowed to remain too long.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That point seems to have been taken into consideration in the last proviso of the old Act, which is not being altered, but which may be considered when we go into Committee:

But if, in the opinion of the Board, either party uses this or any other provision of this Act for the purpose of unjustly maintining a given condition of affairs through delay, and the Board so reports to the Minister, such party shall be guilty of an offence, and liable to the same penalties as are imposed for a violation of the next preceding section.

This may be insufficient.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me it is an inefficient provision.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not see how price fixing or tendering or anything of that kind can be done in the meantime, unless the employer knows when the present rate of wage is to expire. For instance, it seems to me that it would be impossible for a manufacturer to assume that he would be justified in fixing a lower price for his product, because with a vague provision of that kind hanging over his head he would be unable to arrive at a definite conclusion that a reduced wage would come into effect at a definite time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the employer desires to fix a price for his goods on a given wage, and if he intends within a certain time to reduce the wage, undoubtedly he had better settle that point first and give notice that he intends to reduce on a certain date.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Apparently he cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He will give notice. But if it is resisted, he has to ask for a Board and has to await the decision of the Board. Of course, when the decision takes place, he is free to proceed and disregard the order.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It may tie him up for a year or more.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It says the Board may make representations to the Minister. There does not seem to be any difficulty in providing for that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We may discuss that when we go into Committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PENNY BANK BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 104, an Act to change the name of the Penny Bank of Toronto.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, that is the only change there is in the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is a small change act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill read the second time.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 115, an Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, last year we altered the scale of compensation to be given for a certain class of animals. This year the Minister of Agriculture suggests that the animals—

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER:— are not worth so much, and that he will pay less.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, for pure-bred animals.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Is that the only change?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Last year we dealt with the other class.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: This is an example of the incurable disease of our legislatures of manufacturing legislation by the barrel. We changed the Act last year; we change it this year; I supose we will change it next year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The value of the animals was raised because of the prices that prevailed during the war. Since the war, prices have gradually gone down. Last year we reduced the compensation to be given for a certain class of animals, but we left the pure-bred animals aside. This year the Minister suggests that the compensation for pure-bred animals be reduced from $200 to $150. Furthermore, when the Act came into force, the owners of animals that had been ordered killed on the basis of the preceding scale, presented themselves for payment, and were offered the amount that had come into effect in the last days of June. There are not many such cases, but the Minister provides for the situation, and asks leave to pay them the amount which had been agreed upon between them and the Department when the animals were ordered slaughtered.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is only a maximum, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is the maximum and the minimum as well.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does not an inquiry and valuation take place?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Not at all. The owner is paid according to the statute, so much for a grade animal and so much for a pure-bred.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Many of these animals are not worth that amount.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: By reason of the conduct of the veterinaries in charge, a great deal of hardship is worked upon the farming community who are engaged in producing milk and butter. The amount which may be paid for pure-breds is sufficient, but the amount paid for grade cattle is not sufficient and does not begin to remunerate the man who, unfortunately, has had his cattle slaughtered. I think it would be well for the gentlemen who are promoting this kind of legislation to go into the country and make a more particular study of conditions. Men engaged in the production of milk and butter are engaged in an arduous occupation which requires time and constant attention, because a cow has to be milked twice a day, Sundays as well as week days. That is the reason why mixed farming or dairy farming is not as popular as it otherwise would be. Many of these veterinaries go onto a man's farm, clothed with a little brief authority, and, to show their authority, they make it extremely awkward and nasty for the owner.

The farmers recognize that it is necessary to protect public health. They do not want to have cattle that are diseased, and they do not want the disease spread, through the use of milk, to human beings. Everything depends on the way in which an Act of this sort is administered.

I protest against cutting down the price of the animal. Here is a farmer with a herd of perhaps twenty cows; he is supplying milk to some town; a veterinary comes along and condemns half of his herd. The result is that this man is put to very great inconvenience and loss, because he has to replace his herd in order to keep his trade; and, by the conditions imposed, before he can use in his herd an animal that he has purchased, that animal must be examined and passed by a veterinary. Furthermore, he cannot introduce that animal into his herd until two months have passed, during which it must be kept segregated from the herd, and during those two months he cannot sell the product of that animal. At the end of the two months there is a fresh examination, and the animal has to pass another test before she can be taken into the herd. The result is that while the amount granted might be sufficient compensation for the individual animal that is slaughtered, yet when you come to consider the tremendous expense and inconvenience put upon the dairyman by reason of one or two animals being taken from his herd, the compensation is not sufficient. I think the amount allowed for grade animals is $40—I am not quite certain as to that. While $40 might, under certain circumstances, replace an animal, yet, in view of the tests that have to be passed at the beginning of the two months, and at the end of the period, and in view of the fact that the person from whom the animal is purchased will not agree to sell the animal except at a high price if he has to take the risk of it being found diseased and killed, I do not think it is sufficient.

These are conditions which bear heavily on the farmer, particularly the dairy farmer. I speak with knowledge of the facts, because I come from a dairying county. I say it is ill-advised on the part of the Government to cut down these prices.

So far as the distinction between pure-bred and grade animals is concerned, it may be that the amount of $150 is sufficient, because there is not as great a difference between a pure-bred animals and a grade animal as there used to be: grade animals have come up in quality and fineness of breeding. I trust the Government will restore the amount for the grade animals to what it was.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think my honourable friend is right in some respects, but he should not forget that this is a law of exception, a law of derogation: the farmer is the only individual who is paid for the loss of something which turns bad on his hands. If my honourable friend or myself engaged in any sort of business and something of that kind happened to us, we would get no compensation. That, surely must be taken into consideration when fixing the compensation to the farmer. I do think that in this respect the farmer is getting an advantage that nobody else gets.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And is placed under a handicap which nobody else is placed under.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is why he is treated somewhat paternally.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Treat him to the full.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Here is the Act which is being amended:

> The Minister may order a compensation to be paid to the owners of animals slaughtered under the provisions of this Act; and in all cases the value of the animal for which compensation is ordered shall be determined by the Minister or by some person appointed by him but, except as hereafter provided, such value shall not exceed, in the case of grade animals, one hundred and fifty dollars for each horse, sixty dollars for each head of cattle, and fifteen dollars for each pig or sheep—

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Sixty dollars has been reduced.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Those figures were reduced last year.

> —and in the case of pure-bred animals, three hundred dollars for each horse, two hundred dollars for each head of cattle, and fifty dollars for each pig or sheep.

We are reducing the figure from $200 to $150.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That is the maximum, is it not?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Before the Bill has its second reading, I want to object to the way it has been proceeded with. We have just had an example of what happens from not complying with the rule. My honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) had to send out for the statute. I think some of us should rise on every occasion and protest.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: My honourable friend has given the impression that the amount paid for a grade cow is now sixty dollars. It is not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have just read the Act of last year. This Bill simply deals with section 1 of Chapter 7 of the Statutes of 1922. It says:

Section 1 of Chapter 7 of the Statutes of 1922, an Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, is amended by striking out the words "two hundred dollars for each head of cattle," in the eighteenth line thereof, and substituting therefor the words, "one hundred and fifty dollars for each head of cattle."

This concerns only the pure-bred cattle.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understood it was $40 now. Sixty dollars would be good compensation for the ordinary cow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If it is the pleasure of the Senate, we will now take the second reading of the Bill, and we will see that it is reprinted, with the clauses of the Act to be amended.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 116, an Act respecting the Canadian National Railways.

He said: Honourable gentlemen are doubtless aware that the present administration of the National Railways has decided to insure the properties of the railways itself. In order to do so, and conform with the clauses of the deeds of trust made for the protection of the bondholders, this Act is introduced so as to allow the new system to operate, and to replace the obligations under which those various railways were of insuring their properties to the full value. I move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It means that the Government is to become the insurer, not the railways—that is to say, the Government becomes the guarantor and takes the place of the insurance company, not the railway?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am very much in favour of this proceeding and this Bill. I think that, having so tremendous an amount of property, the Canadian National Railways ought to be their own insurers. But I want to express the hope that this will not mean the addition of a large staff of employees, because in my opinion there are now altogether too many connected with the Canadian National Railways System. I trust that the present employees will be able to carry on the business of insurance without making great additions to the staff.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: May I ask the honourable gentleman how many men he thinks are over-employed at the present time?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Well, I should think about a third more than there ought to be.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I am informed that it is more than 50 per cent.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am always conservative in my statements.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have no official data, but I would surmise that in the amalgamation of those two large systems the new head must have had very much difficulty in reducing the staff to the orthodox figure.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Considerable difficulty? They increased it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That I do not know.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Those are the facts.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I would surmise that quite a number of the old servants of those railways are being carried for a number of years without having to give a full day's work. If the service is overmanned I think it is a timely suggestion to make that, if a new department is created, even the present number of men will be found sufficient to meet the exigencies of the service.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why should my honourable friend say, if a new department is organized or established? This change should result in a manifest reduction of staff. There must be a very large staff to-day looking after the insurance on the property of the two systems, or of the one system as now consolidated. It seems to me that if the Government becomes the insurer, it is going to do away entirely with all the routine of insurance policies, and all that kind of thing, which necessarily would attach to the present system. I do not apprehend that under this system the Government will issue a policy such as is issued by the different companies. It seems to me that immediately this new plan is adopted it should result very largely in wiping out the present staff.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I am glad that my honourable friend is so confiding in his nature. Why, this will be made the excuse for at least two vice-presidents—two more. There must be a regiment of them now. I should expect two more at least.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: Am I correct in understanding that the Intercolonial Railway carries its own insurance?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Under this.

Hon. Mr. TANNER: I thought my honourable friend was under the impression that the Intercolonial carried its own.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: I think you are quite right.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Perhaps, when the Bill goes before the Committee, my honourable friend can give us some further information as to the system that will be adopted in carrying out this new policy.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will furnish any information.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I would like information in this regard: if loss is incurred, will that loss be paid by the Government, or by the National system of railways? It will be observed that the Government is the insurer. By parity of reasoning the Government would pay the loss. Is any premium to be exacted from the railways, in view of the Government being the guarantor, and making good the loss, as premiums are paid to-day by the railway companies?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I do not understand the scheme to be as explained by my honourable friend. The Governor in Council will give the necessary guarantee to the Trust companies who have the trust deeds, but in looking after those trust deeds, I take it for granted that the railway company itself—that is to say, the National Railways—will see to setting aside out of their receipts a certain amount yearly.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: There is nothing to indicate that, and this is going to make a manifest difference in the net results of the operation of the railways. To-day they are of course paying very substantial premiums upon all policies carried. Do they propose to carry similar amounts to an insurance fund, or are they simply going to rely upon the Government to pay the loss?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I take it for granted that they will create an insurance fund of their own.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We should like to have that information.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The Government will pay the premiums on the insurance which has been assigned to the holders of the bonds.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, they will not pay the premiums; they will pay the loss if any should occur. The Bill is entirely silent as to premiums and as to establishing a fund for the purpose of meeting any losses.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Will the Bill be applicable also to the vessels held by the Government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It semes to me the Bill only covers the Canadian National Railways. I am not ready to say that within those expressions are included the steamers that are being operated by the Canadian National Board.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I would not favour at all the idea that the Government should be its own insurer in regard to the steamers. I think they had better insure with the insurance companies.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Why?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is safer.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

MILITIA PENSION BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order for the second reading of Bill 118, an Act to amend the Militia Pension Act:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have asked the honourable gentleman from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach) to kindly take charge of this Bill and explain it, and carry it through this Chamber, and he has very agreeably consented, so that I will have him move the second reading.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Has he joined the Government lately?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I have informed my honourable friend who sits opposite that I may ask him in his turn to handle some of the Bills with which he is more familiar than I am.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You will have to be very discriminating as to the Bills you give me.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH, in moving the second reading of the Bill, said: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is to amend the Militia Pension Act, so that a non-commissioned officer or a man having been pensioned out of service as an officer may enter the public service of Canada and receive for his services such salary as he may receive, together with his full pension. At present the Act simply provides that an officer pensioned under the Militia Pension Act shall, if he enters the public service, relinquish his pension during the time that he is in the public service.

It is discovered that as a result of the war certain non-commissioned officers and men have risen from the ranks of lieutenant, captain, major, and so on, and have been pensioned from the service as officers, with the result that if they enter the public service they must relinquish their pension. Their position then is that, having been pensioned as officers, they are worse off, than would have been if pensioned as non-commissioned officers. If they had refused to accept promotion in the field, if offered to them, or if they had been pensioned as non-commissioned officers, their position would have been very much better than it was as pensioned offiecrs.

The amendment now proposed is that any non-commissioned officer or man pensioned under this Act, as an officer, who served in the late war outside of Canada or the United States—that is, overseas—shall, while in the public service, receive such salary as he may receive, plus such portion of his pension as will be necessary to make up the amount of pay and allowances upon which he was pensioned. That is, if he was allowed certain pay and allowances at the time he was pensioned, he may receive that portion of his pension which will make up his salary from the public service to the amount for which he was pensioned. In other words, the Act seeks to put officers who have risen from the ranks, notably in the course of war, upon the same terms as non-commissioned officers and men pensioned under the Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Honourable gentlemen, I should like to make a few observations on this Bill, inasmuch as I have on other occasions taken exception to the invidious privileges which are extended to certain officers under the Pension Act. The assumption is that when a man is pensioned the Government has given him full recognition for all the services which he has rendered. That is practically a matter of contract between himself and the state, as evidenced by the Act of which he takes advantage. The Government having thus satisfied the demands which he is entitled to make upon the state, he thereupon seeks further to improve his position by entering the public service and accepting whatever salary may be attached to that civilian position. Now, if he desires to change his position from that of a pensioner, and is fortunate enough to get a civilian position with a substantial salary attached to it, he should be called upon to elect whether he will remain a pensioner or become a salaried officer of the Government. The principle is well recognized under the Superannuation Act, and under the Pension Act as it is to-day, that if a man accepts a civil position he forgoes his pension. For instance, if any officer of a department of the public service who is to-day superannuated should accept a position in the public service, he cannot draw his superannuation and his salary: he must do the one or the other.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I think my honourable friend is wrong about the pension. I know the Collector of Customs in Brockville draws his pension as well as his salary.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, he is not an officer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He was an officer in the Air Force.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Does my honourable friend not see the difference between the military service and the civil service in this respect—that from the beginning of his service to the end, a man in military service is required to measure up to a certain standard of physical fitness, but at no time in his civil service is he required to measure up to such a standard? Now, are you going to bar him from civil service because he is not fit for military service?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: He has already been dealt with by receiving the recognition to which he is entitled, and he is then given the additional advantage of occupying the position of a civilian, which position should be filled, under ordinary circumstances, by another. so that he has two advantages given to him. I understand the purpose of this Bill to be that if the civil salary does not reach that which he enjoyed in the field at the time he was pensioned, he shall draw his pension up to the extent of the full allowance which he would enjoy if on active service.

I have taken the position for some years that the principle that enters into the Militia Act is entirely different from that which enters into the Civil Service Act. We have appointed a Civil Service Commission that pronounces upon salaries. Unfortunately, it seems to me, in behalf of harmony in the public service, and to avoid the jealousy which exists between different departments, the Civil Service Commission has nothing to do with regulating the salary of an employee of the Militia Department, although he is apparently of the Civil Service. If it is desirable to increase his salary he is given an increase in rank, and the pay of his rank at once places him in a superior position.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I ask my honourable friend if that applies also to the payment of a pension in the Militia Department?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes, in contemplation of the pension being paid to him at a particular time, his efforts are directed along the line of attaining as high a rank as he can, or receiving as high rank as possible from those who control the distinctions of rank in that Department.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: What I meant was, if they have in the Militia Department an Act applicable to providing pensions in that Department different from the one outside?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: They have an Act which is applicable alone to the Militia Department, and naturally the object of the beneficiaries of that Act is to attain the highest rank possible, which is given them upon the discretion of their officers.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I must correct the honourable gentleman, because he is making a statement which does not hold water. The rank of an officer in any employment at Ottawa has nothing at all to do with his pay. It makes no difference what rank the man has: it is the appointment that he holds that determines the pay he receives. So far as units of the permanent force, which are away from headquarters, are concerned, they are based on establishment, which calls for one lieutenant colonel, so many majors, so many captains, etc., and that number cannot be exceeded: you cannot have more of those people in any one unit than the establishment calls for.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it will be manifest that the officers dealt with in this Bill and under the Pension Act, when in the field, sought increased rank for the purpose of increased pay, and according to that increased rank which they received they would receive increased pension.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: How can any individual seek increased rank in the field?—because there again you have establishment. Does the honourable gentleman suggest that a man should not have ambition for increased rank, or that by some skullduggery he should receive increased rank?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I mean neither of those things. It is commendable for a man to seek the highest rank he can attain, but the fact is that as he reaches higher rank he secures a higher pension.

There is another feature of the Pension Act which differs entirely from the principle which we apply to civilians, and that is the section dealing with allowances. I would defy any honourable gentlemen here, except perhaps my honourable friend from Edmonton (Hon. Mr. Griesbach), who is familiar with all the allowances under the military system, to say what a man is entitled to.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I could tell you right now. That is a very interesting point. It is very simple. Any officer who has pay attaching to his appointment has a consolidated amount, without any allowance at all. That is the case in all staff employment from coast to coast. Take the appointment of General Officer commanding a district, such as we have at Winnipeg, Calgary, Victoria, etc. Such officers draw $6,000, no more and no less. There are no allowances of any sort for them. The only allowances that are drawn are allowances within units, which involve questions of housing, light, fuel, and rations. Where those things can be provided by the Government, they are provided in kind. Where they cannot be provided, for various reasons, the Government pays a specified sum. Instead of rations, for instance, they pay 80 cents a day or thereabouts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Does that apply only to men who were in France, or does it apply to all the Militia?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I am talking about home service.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I understand what you are saying now, but does this Bill apply only to men who served in France?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The Bill really applies, I think, almost exclusively to men who at the outbreak of the war were non-commissioned officers or men in the permanent force, and who went to France, and were pensioned under a military pension on their return. This is not the general pension legislation of the Government. This is the old Military Pension Act of 1907, or 1908, or thereabouts, and it is designed to deal with persons who were non-commissioned officers or men prior to the war, but who during the war were commisisoned, having gained their commissions for efficiency in the field, and were pensioned on their return to Canada in the rank of officers. They find that had they been pensioned as they were before the war they would have been better off. That is to say, if they were pensioned as non-commissioned officers or men they would not have their pensions stopped during public service, but now they find as officers that their pensions are stopped. The number of such officers cannot be considerable; only a very small number of men are involved. I think it was stated in another place that the number was four.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Is my honourable friend accurate in saying that? I know he intends to be, but does he not observe that it is proposed to repeal subsection 11 of section 4 of Chapter 42 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, as amended by Chapter 28 of the Statutes of 1907? The Act must therefore be fairly sweeping in its application. Furthermore, it does not apply exclusively to those who obtained their commissions on the field. It deals with all officers who served.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Yes, but the only persons who can qualify for a pension under this Militia Pension Act were necessarily officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the permanent force. Now the officers of the permanent force are pensioned on reaching the age of 60 or thereabouts—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can my honourable friend state the number of men who are occupying civilian positions?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: I cannot.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: If the limitation is of the character mentioned, I would raise no objection to it, but if the amendment is to apply to the large class of men who would come under the law since 1906, then it would be very much more sweeping than is indicated by my honourable friend. It seems to me that when this matter goes to Committee we should have information as to the number of men of whom it does apply: we should have the information as to the number of those men who occupy civilian positions, and the salaries attached to these positions, and the differenec which it would make in the payments.

Then, there is another feature of the Bill, covering those persons who have received a pension in anticipation of the passing of this measure, which must have been discussed for some years past. Pensions have apparently been paid to the beneficiaries on this basis, and it is provided that where the amounts have been paid, the Government should not look for reimbursement. That is one provision.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then we should have before us information as to the extent to which that overpayment has been made, because otherwise one cannot form any conception as to whether it is little or much. If it is a very substantial sum, I doubt the desirability of legislation of this kind, because the principle is always recognized in every other branch of the Public Service that if an overpayment has been made to a public servant he should reimburse the Government. Here it is proposed to forego that right, and before doing so we should have some very fair idea as to the amount we are going to to sacrifice.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If this Bill applies only to men who saw service in France—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER:—I would be in favour of it; but if it applies to men who sat in their offices here in Ottawa during the war, I would not.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: It specifically applies to men who served in France.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That is all right.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: And the Bill is intended to give relief. I can give you the case of a man in this building who was in the permanent force of Canada as a private prior to the war. He went to the war and rose by successive steps to the rank of captain. He was wounded and discharged from service. He got his pension in the rank of captain. He is now employed in the other House, but he finds, after having been there for some time, that his pension ceases at once.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How would his pension compare with his present salary?

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: The pension was $40 a month. He is now employed as secretary or doorkeeper to the Speaker of the Commons. I do not know what his salary is. He retired with the rank of Captain, and his pension is stopped because he is an officer. Another man, employed at another job, was pensioned off the permanent force at the end of the war, on account of having reached the age limit for non-commissioned officers. He receives his pension and his pay as well. These two men were comrades prior to the war. One distinguished himself rather more than the other, but pays for the distinction which he gained by losing his pension. The other man, who has kept the same rank all the way through, enjoys his pension and also his pay. Now, the purpose of this Bill is to put two such men on the same footing as civilians, and it can apply only to men of this type.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does that apply likewise to some of the disabled men? I may say to my honourable friend that if the Bill is limited to that class, I have no objection to it; but if it applies to the general staff of officers in the Militia, I do object to it.

Hon. Mr. GRIESBACH: If the honourable gentleman will read the Bill he will see the application of it; and if he will add to the reading of it what knowledge he may have of the organization of our military forces, he will see how it affects them. It is rather difficult to explain precisely its effect; but I would say that an officer who has been pensioned at the expiration of his term of service is not likely to be employed by the Government, because he is 60 or 65 years of age. I know of a very few. Young fellows who entered the permanent force at the age of 18 say, 20 or 25 years ago, are now about 40 or 45. They have earned their pension, and have also earned their officers' rank, and they find themselves labouring under certain disadvantages as compared with the other men. One has only to discuss the matter with such officers to see how unjust is the situation. The purpose of this Bill is to put them all on the same footing. I think it will apply to a comparatively limited class of men who served in France, and who gained their rank on active service.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PRIVATE BILL

THIRD READING

Bill 46, An Act respecting The Community General Hospital, Alms House and Seminary of Learning of the Sisters of Charity at Ottawa. —Hon. Mr. McCoig.

COLD STORAGE BILL

SECOND READING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 9, an Act to amend the Cold Storage Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is a very short Bill, which does not need any lengthy explanation:

Section 2 of the Cold Storage Act, Chapter 6 of the Statutes of 1907, as amended by Chapter 8 of the Statutes of 1909, is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

Here is the clause as it stands in the Statute of 1907 as amended by the Statute of 1909, the amendment changing only three words in a short section:

The Governor in Council may enter into contracts with any persons for the construction, equipment and maintenance in good and efficient working order, of public cold storage warehouses equipped with mechanical refrigeration, in Canada, and suitable for the preservation of any food products.

The Act as it stood in 1907 said: "for the preservation of all food products." The three words, "all food products," were replaced in 1909 by the words, "any food products." The form of the 1907 clause had been interpreted as necessitating the opening of a cold storage for all food products, whereas some cold storages were being built specially for certain food products—fish, for instance. Therefore the word "all" was eliminated and replaced by "any."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How about the persons? With whom may the contract be made?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am simply stating the Statute which is being amended. This section 2 of Chapter 6 of 1907 is sought to be replaced by the following provision:

The Governor in Council may enter into contracts with properly constituted co-operative societies, or associations, for the construction, equipment, and maintenance, in good and efficient working order, of public cold storage warehouses equipped with mechanical refrigeration, in Canada, and suitable for the preservation of any food product.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: You have omitted "municipalities."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am sorry. I was looking at the Bill as read the first time in the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will you again read the present Act, as to the parties with whom the Government may contract? As I understand, the present Act is limited to persons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: "Any persons."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Yes. The question is as to what interpretation is going to be given to "persons."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say, honourable gentlemen, that I called in the official who is specially charged with the administration of this Act, Mr. Ruddick, and we discussed the Bill as introduced in the House of Commons. I find, however, that it has been amended in the Commons. Therefore I will not move the second reading of the Bill, but will examine it in the light of the amendment which has been made to it.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: May I be permitted to point out again an omission? This has been so often repeated that I am almost ashamed to direct the attention of the Senate to it. I was waiting for my honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) to rise in his place and call attention to the herculean efforts he has made from time to time to have the law as it obtains at present printed upon the opposite page. In looking over many of the Bills that have come down to the Senate within the last few days, I have observed that there are several important Bills —consolidations or amendments—and the Senate is placed in a very embarrassed position in not knowing what the changes in the law are to be. I have not examined the matter sufficiently well to say whether the Commons have had the existing Statute printed on the opposite page with the form of the Bill for first and second readings. Does my honourable friend the leader of the House know whether that is the case or not? My honourable friend directed attention the other day to the fact that in the form for first reading the law at present in force is printed upon the opposite page, the proposed amendments being thus shown.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is, in the Commons?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: In the Commons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That was done in one instance, but I am not sure that it was done in very many.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But in none of the third reading forms that have come to the Senate does that appear. It seems to me that if the Commons have adopted the practice of showing the existing law in the forms for first and second readings, it would be very easy to do likewise in the third-reading form. Manifestly it is of no advantage to the Senate until the Bill comes down to us as read finally in the Commons. In order to give proper consideration to the many amendments which are made to legislation, and particularly where there is a consolidation of important Acts, it is very desirable that the fullest information should be given to the Senate, and in the most convenient form. Only in this way, in my judgment, can it be done satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was done in that way in the case of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Bill, under the special superintendence of the Minister of Labour. I do not find that it has been done in the case of other Bills introduced in the House of Commons. I intend trying to obtain in the present week an agreement with the House of Commons for the appointment of a joint-committee to examine into this question, as well as to consider the better distribution of work between the two Chambers, and some other matters of interest to both.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, there are seven or eight Bills on the Order Paper for second reading, and it seems to me that if the second reading of these Bills were postponed no time would be lost. I think we should lose more time at present groping in the dark than we should if we waited until the rule is complied with. I suggest to my honourable friend the leader of the House that perhaps we had better defer the second reading of these Bills until we have before us the necessary material to enable us to see what are the proposed changes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: These Bills come from the Commons. We must deal with our own Bills ourselves and see to the application of our own rule. If we insist that these Bills shall conform to the rule that we passed, and which only applies to legislation initiated in this Chamber, we shall necessarily have delays when these Bills come to our officers, in seeing that the existing Act in each instance is printed on the opposite page.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I point out to my honourable friend that the House of Commons has adopted the principle?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In one Bill only.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We had a Bill the other day in which our rule was observed by the Commons. Evidently they are disposed to adopt our rule and act on it; why not in all cases? I think more time will be lost in endeavouring to find out just what is proposed to be amended or repealed than if we postponed the second readings of these Bills until they were in such form that we could at once see what the meaning of each Bill was.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that a Bill of some importance, the Patent Bill, is on the Orders of the Day for this evening, and the Deputy Minister who has charge of the Bill has had printed for the members of the Senate a memorandum giving an explanation of the changes in the various clauses as they appear. As to the resolution of the Senate, it is in the form of a report from a Special Committee appointed to consider and report upon a method of printing Senate Bills. That Committee reported as follows:

The Special Committee appointed to consider and report upon the method of printing Senate Bills, beg leave to make their First Report as follows:

Your Committee recommend that all Bills which propose to amend or repeal any existing Statute shall when first printed, have in parallel columns the sections of the Act proposed to be repealed or amended, and the sections as it is proposed to amend them, showing in brackets the words to be deleted in the existing Act, and showing in brackets the words to be added by said amendmnt.

All of which is rspectfully submitted.

N. A. Belcourt, Chairman.

That report was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And generally acted upon.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It must be acted upon for Bills initiated in this Chamber, but not for those that come from the other Chamber.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The report does not say so. It was not intended to be limited only to this Chamber, and does not say so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Well, of course the Bills from the House of Commons that do not conform to our rule would have to be suspended for a time in order that our officers should make them conform to the regulation.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What is the objection to having a memorandum prepared by our law officer for each Bill, so that we may know what we are doing?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is none There will be some difficulty in the last days of the Session, that is all.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: We have plenty of time here.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I understand that when a Bill passes the House of Commons it is again sent to the Printing Bureau and is reprinted as passed by the House of Commons. Now, why at that moment our rule should not be observed I cannot understand. The rule was not limited to Bills originating in this House: it applied to every Bill that came before us, and there is no reason why, when a Bill is passed by the Commons and sent to the Bureau for reprinting, our rule should not be complied with.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: My honourable friend will observe at the same time that the form that comes to us has been especially printed for the Senate. For instance, take this Bill 9, an Act to amend the Cold Storage Act. This form was printed specially for the Senate. It had never been distributed in the House of Commons, and therefore when the third-reading form from the Commons goes to the Printing Bureau, that is the time to print on the opposite page the law at it is at present.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: What is the objection to our officer asking at the House of Commons that all Bills which are to be sent to the Printing Bureau should be first sent to him, and should be by him transmitted to the Bureau? Then he could have printed any parts that we desired.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I believe that if the officer of the Senate would meet with the officer of the Commons our rule could very well be accepted by the Commons, as it would help the Ministers in promoting their own legislation in the other Chamber. It is simply a question of an order going out from the Commons to the same effect as the report which I have just read.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Why not direct our officer to do so?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think that the suggestion of the honourable leader of the Government is very proper. Our rule, as it was read by the honourable gentleman, concerns only the Senate:

Your Committee recommend that all Bills which propose to amend or repeal existing statutes shall, when first printed, etc.

This is a rule only for this House. We cannot make any rule for the Commons.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: We do not want to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: The proper way is, as suggested by the honourable leader, to have a joint committee, and try to get the Commons to agree with us that Bills shall be printed in such a way as to give the desired information. If that cannot be done, of course this House will be at liberty to ask that a memorandum be printed or that the Bill be reprinted.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is what we did.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But I would point out to my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) that the Commons is not, in my judgment, interested in the regulation or resolution of the Senate, because immediately the third reading is given to the Bill in the Commons they are through with it, and it goes to the Printing Bureau for the purpose of being printed for the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No, I think the honourable gentleman is mistaken. This Bill, for instance, was not printed for this House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Certainly. If my honourable friend will look at the back of the Bill he will observe that it is endorsed: "As passed by the House of Commons, 28th April, 1923." Now, it is manifest that this form of printing never appeared before the Commons, but was put on by the Bureau for distribution in the Senate in order to show that the Bill had passed its third reading in the Commons. When a Bill goes to the Printing Bureau for the purpose of being printed for distribution in the Senate, that is the time to print on the opposite page the law as it is in force.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: We have been trying to have this done ever since I have been in the Senate, and I think the only way to bring it about is for us to refuse to consider a Bill on the second reading until this rule is complied with.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: It is true, as the honourable gentleman has stated, that this Bill was printed as amended. But there are a number of Bills that have not been amended: they are passed by the Commons as printed originally, and sent over here in that original form. But whether they are sent as originally printed, or reprinted for the Senate, it is done by the House of Commons and their officers, and not by any officers of this honourable House.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Well, our officers can intervene at that point and have this done.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: As Chairman of the Committee which adopted that resolution, I have a very distinct recollection that it was the unanimous opinion of that Special Committee that all Bills when introduced into this House, whether originating here or coming to us from the House of Commons, should comply with that resolution.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That was the intention.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not see why the resolution cannot be complied with. When a Bill passes the House of Commons why is it not sent here before being sent to the Bureau, in order that our officers may see to the fulfilment of the resolution of this House? I see no reason why that is not done, and if the House of Commons does not choose to follow the example and adopt a rule similar to ours, are we going to abandon the rule?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is what it means. I have been trying for six years at every Session to have this thing done, and I have failed entirely.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Cannot my honourable friend the leader of the House take it up with the Government?

Hon. W. B. ROSS: I do not see why the leader of the House should take this matter up with the other House. This is a legislative assembly, it is independent, and it has its own rules, and we say there are certain things that must be done about Bills. If that is not done, why should we consider them?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move that this Order be discharged, and placed on the Order Paper for tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to.

FRUIT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 11, an Act to regulate the Sale and Inspection of Fruit and Fruit Containers.

He said: This Bill has for its object the consolidation of the legislation which has been made since 1901, when the Fruit Marks Act was passed. Amendments were made in 1907, 1908, 1913, 1918, and 1920. These amendments are included in this revision, but there are also a number of amendments made which are not indicated on the face of the Bill. I would like to have the opinion of the honourable senior member for Ottawa as to whether this Bill as now presented conforms to his rule,

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It cannot because it does not show the changes in the law.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I do not know just exactly what my honourable friend means. This is a new Act altogether.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is a consolidation of an Act passed in 1901 and amended five or six times since then; and there are other amendments which we shall find as we go along.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend has got hold of an extreme case, and it is perhape one in which it is difficult to carry out the rule in its entirety. If we had printed on the opposite page everything contained in those different Acts which is now being repealed or replaced by this one, there would be no difficulty.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let us deal with this as with a new Act entirely.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: This is an exceptional case altogether, and I do not think it is a reason for giving up the rule or questioning the plausibilty or usefulness of the rule which we adopted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Then I will proceed. This legislation was asked for last year by the various fruit growers' organizations throughout Canada, and agreed to by the different interests involved, including the growers and packers of fruit, the wholesale dealers, and all parties directly concerned in the fruit industry.

The principal changes deal with the size of the container. Our berry containers are only about four-fifths of the size of the American containers, and our exports to the United States have to be presented on that market in smaller containers than the United States containers, and are at a disadvanage. A request was also made for a package of apples containing one-half of a barrel. Those in the trade said that many sales could be made of half a barrel when a full barrel could not be sold. It is therefore proposed to make provision for a container equal to the contents of half a barrel. None of these changes will take place arbitrarily until 1924. All material now cut awaiting manufacture into containers of the present size may be used in the meantime if so desired.

The Bill will provide for a new grading of apples.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: While my honourable friend is dealing with containers, can he say what is the container for half a barrel? Is that known as a box of apples?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend in Committee will strike the clause which describes and defines it.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does my honourable friend intend to have this Bill referred to a special Committee, or to have it dealt with here?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It will go to the Committee of the Whole if no special reason is shown for different treatment.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You do not intend to hear evidence?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. Our apple growers have found that apples graded as No. 1 and No. 2 are regarded as inferior when competing with fruit labelled "fancy" and "extra fancy," as it is styled in the United States. Accordingly, it is proposed to make a new grade for some of our fruits, particularly apples, and also to have new-sized containers so that they will compete favourably on the American market when any of our apples are shipped over there.

The new provisions of the Bill were agreed to by a conference that met in Ottawa last February.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government whether it is the intention to change the size of containers, that is to say, berry boxes, so that every box of strawberries or other small fruits purchased will contain a less quantity than heretofore?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, in some cases.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I understand the American conainer is larger than the Canadian.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: These questions will come up as we go through the Bill in Committee.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: It would seem to me that that is a matter of principle, as to whether or not this Parliament is going to enact legislation whereby the consuming public will be called upon to pay probably the same price for a smaller quantity of food. That is not a matter of detail, but rather should be dealt with as a matter of principle.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Did not my honourable friend say the American container of berries was larger than the Canadian container, and that this Bill had for its purpose the bringing of the Canadian container up to the American size?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, in some cases.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: That has been one of the great drawbacks in the city of Ottawa, and it has affected every city in the Dominion. The American container is nearly one-third larger than the Canadian, and the consequence is that merchants get these American boxes in here, and if there are dishonest dealers, as perhaps there are, they empty the fruit into the Canadian boxes, and thus Canadians are forced to pay the same price for the small or medium box that they would pay for a larger box. So I hope that this Bill will make provision that the Canadian box will be the same size as the American box.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PATENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 20, an Act to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to Patents of Invention.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, this is an Act which consolidates the Acts relating to patents of invention, and makes some material changes in those acts. There has been no revision, and, apart from certain amendments made necessary by circumstances arising out of the late war, no substantial amendment of the Patent Law for about twenty years. In the administration of the law during that period the Patent Office has found that certain amendments are desirable, and there has been an insistent and general demand that they should be made. The most important of these amendments which are set forth in the present Bill are in connection with the provisions relating to the manufacture and importation of the patented invention—clauses 40 and 41.

It is thought that these proposed amendments will improve the present law in this regard, and will enable Canada to carry out her intention of adhering to the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property by removing some slight repugnancy between our law and the Articles of the Convention which has been a bar to our adherence. In many of the principal countries of the world which have adhered to this Convention, Canadians are under great disability in comparison with the citizens or subjects of these countries in obtaining patents and registering trade marks and industrial designs. On adhering to the Convention, in all these countries, Canadians will be on an equal footing with their citizens or subjects.

Some new provisions will be submitted which, if enacted, will transfer to the Patent Office the right to revive lapsed patents, which right heretofore has been exercised only by Parliament. The few remaining amendments deal principally with the practice or procedure of the Patent Office They are not of general interest, but are considered necessary by patent practitioners and officials of the Patent Office. Sections 38, 39, 40 and 44 of the Act are repealed, and replaced by clauses 40 and 41.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Can my honourable friend say what they deal with?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Clause 38 of the Act requires the patentee, on pain of nullity of his patent, to manufacture within two years of the granting of the patent, and to manufacture continuously, whether there be a demand or not; and it prohibits the importation of the invention after the expiration of one year from the granting of the patent. Under sections 39 and 40 of the Act, the Commissioner may grant a limited extension for importation and manufacture. Section 44 was introduced in 1903 to dispense with the obligation of manufacturing in special cases, and to force the patentee to give to anyone applying a license to manufacture for his own use or to offer for sale.

New clause 40 is on the lines of old clause 44; but in certain cases the patentee may be ordered to supply the article himself on pain of forfeiture of the patent.

Clause 41 is so drafted as to remove the objection to our adhering to the International Congress for the Protection of Industrial Property. Under section 38 of the Act we prohibited importation after one year on pain of forfeiture. Clause 41 of the Bill provides that if the patentee supplies mainly by bringing an article from abroad, after three years, on complaint of any interested party, the patent can be revoked.

There is quite a difference. This measure is far less stringent than the old Act. When we go more fully into it there will be a memorandum distributed to the members of the Senate showing the changes that are being made.

Hon. Mr. REID: There are two other changes which the leader of the Government has not mentioned, and which I think are important. I would like honourable gentlemen to consider them so that when the Bill again comes before the Senate they will be able to say whether there is anything in my contention.

Under the Act of 1906, a patent, having expired by reason of the non-payment of the fee, for instance, became void, and the public had the right to use the patented article thereafter unless the patentee came to Paliament and obtained an extension. If he came to Parliament for an extension, then, of course, he had to submit evidence to show that no one in the meantime had used the patent—and Parliament renewed patents many times under such circumstances. But there has been a change made, which I think is important. Here is the new law:

> Where any patent has become void under the terms of the Patent Act, Chapter 69, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, in consequence of the non-payment of fees or failure to construct or manufacture, or because of the importation of the patented invention—

Here is the change:

> —the patentee may within two years from the date of such voidance apply to the Commissioner for an order for the restoration and revival of the patent.
> (2) The Commissioner, after hearing the patentee and any other interested parties on such application, of which hearing due notice shall be given by publication in the Canada Gazette and the Canadian Patent Office Record or any other official publication of the Patent Office, and after considering all the circumstances of the case, may make an order either restoring and reviving the patent or dismissing the application.

That means that the patentee can come forward to the Commissioner two years after the patent has expired for any of the different reasons mentioned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Within two years.

Hon. Mr. REID: The only possible notice that any individual or corporation using the patent would have that an application was being made to have it revived, would be this publication in the Canada Gazette and the Canadian Patent Office Record. Very few people see the Canada Gazette, and, so far as I remember at the moment, I never saw the Canadian Patent Office Record. It does seem to me that it would be much better to leave the law as it is. Vested rights may be involved: some person may believe that the patent has expired, and may start manufacturing.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That is provided for in subsection 5.

Hon. Mr. REID: Subsection 5 to a certain extent covers the objection; but it does strike me that two years is a very long time within which a person may renew his patent. Patentees usually come to Parliament at the first Session after the expiration of the patent; and we are taking out of the hands of Parliament for two years the power to restore it.

There is another clause of the Bill which, although not so vital, is worthy of consideration. In the Act of 1906 power was given to the Commissioner to administer the Act. Clause 5 of this Bill says:

> The Commissioner shall exercise the powers conferred and perform the duties imposed upon him by this Act subjetct to the Minister.

As I understand the old Act, the Commissioner was the official who had charge of the Patent Act, and he was the mediator, as it were, between the applicant and the Government. As I understand this Bill, the Minister is really the Commissioner. Perhaps I am wrong. I merely mention this matter along with the other, so that both may be further considered.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: There is no change there.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I should perhaps tell my honourable friend that the change which is effected by this Act is made principally because of the repeated requests of the Senate. The Senate thought that the Bills which have been coming before it from year to year could be dealt with more intelligently by the Commissioner himself, because he could go more deeply into the matter. I think this is in compliance with the wishes of the Committee of the Senate which has had charge of these Bills in the past.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Will my honourable friend be good enough to say from whence he got the impression that the Senate was desirous of abdicating its authority, so to speak, or its functions in this matter, and having them exercised by a commissioner? I have followed with considerable interest all applications for renewals of patents that have come before the Senate from Session to Session, and I have never heard the opinion expressed that the functions of Parliament should be exercised by a commissioner, and the authority vested in a departmental officer. I think good sound public policy would be violated in permitting a patentee, after he had allowed his patent to lapse through negligence on his part, to treat the matter so lightly as to think that he had the opportunity of foregoing the making of an application to Parliament, and making it a departmental matter. I am very much opposed to a provision of that kind in the Act.

My honourable friend pointed out in his preliminary explanation that it is proposed to put Canadians on a parity with other nationalities in regard to the benefits of patents, but he omitted to say whether it was the patentee or the public who was to receive the benefits. My honourable friend must not overlook the fact that the policy of the law has been to grant extraordinary rights to patentees; but the public have to be considered as well as patentees, and it seems to me that it is the public that should be protected in all legislation dealing with patents. The extraordinary rights given to a patentee should be regarded by him with every appreciation; consequently he should safeguard them in every possible way and not permit his rights to fall into default. We have to watch the interests of the public; we can trust a patentee, it seems to me, to protect his own rights and to safeguard his patent; but while that is being done, the interest of the public should not be overlooked, and they should not be saddled with the extraordinary charges and costs which are very frequently—in fact, almost invariably—extracted by the patentee for the use of the article which he may produce from time to time.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: For myself, I cannot quote anyone as saying at any time that Parliament should get rid of this function and hand it over to the Department; but on frequent occasions, in the Committee especially, I have heard members say that these patent Bills were gone through in a very perfunctory way, and that after all they were more a departmental matter than a legislative one. I think my honourable friend will agree that the Commissioner of Patents, who is always present when these Bills are discussed in Committee, is invariably called upon, and that his decision invariably goes with the Committee.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Or the Committee goes with his decision.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: He is asked what he thinks, and what he thinks the Committee does. So, after all, we are only providing here for doing what many members say might just as well be done by the Commissioner.

Hon. Mr. REID: I cannot see yet that subsection 5 of section 47 fully clears away the objection which I raised. For instance, some person might commence the manufacture of an article, and the patentee, seeing that it was likely to be a success, but not being willing to go into the manufacture himself, could hold up the party manufacturing after a lot of money had been expended. I remember that when these patent Bills came before the Committee of the other House, great care was taken to see that all interested parties were there and evidence was taken, and the application was not granted unless it was made within a very short time after the patent had expired, and a good case was made out. Perhaps the payment of the fees had been overlooked for a week or ten days, or the person holding the patent had died. But under this Bill any patentee can let the matter run on for two years and can then cause a great deal of trouble. We are delegating our powers to a Commissioner for two years. Surely we have time in Parliament to protect the public interest in cases in which patents have ceased to exist and application has been made to have them renewed.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is surprised at my statement that the Senate has often expressed the opinion that this matter should be delegated to the Department. I know that such an opinion has been voiced in this Chamber half-a-dozen times, and I think that if it were worth while I could lay my hand upon such statements, which have hardly ever been contradicted. I do not say for I do not remember, that the Standing Committee in charge of these matters has ever made a special recommendation but the Commissioner charged with the administration of the Patent Act, who has frequently been at meetings of that Committee, has become convinced that it is simply an imposition upon this Chamber and upon the Committee to bring before them Bills such as we have constantly been asked to pass. And what has been the reason alleged in nine cases out of ten? That the patentee was sick; that he was away; that his agent had died; that his agent in Ottawa had been entrusted with the duty of handing in the renewal fee and the letter had been mislaid. Any kind of reason to justify or excuse non-payment of the renewal fee has been invariably accepted by this Chamber. I cannot remember a case within the last 25 years in which the Senate has refused an extension to the patentee. It became quite clear in the minds of those having to do with the administration of this Act, and the exercise of certain power by Parliament in connection with it, that the matter could be as well attended to by the Department. My honourable friend says that this proposed measure would abridge our power. If my honourable friend wants to continue in the old groove he is welcome to do so. To many of us it seemed an imposition upon patentees to oblige them to spend a few hundred dollars in coming to Parliament when a trip to Ottawa and an interview with the Commissioner to explain the situation would settle the matter.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it was their own fault.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But apparently it was not a fault which entailed a very heavy punishment, since the Bills were allowed to pass both Chambers. Why put those persons to all that trouble? There are protective clauses, which will be administered as carefully by the Department as they have been by us. I have often wondered why Parliament concerned itself unnecessarily with details when the Department was there to attend to such matters. The question is one upon which there may be two opinions, and it is of no particular consequence, but it seems to me a move in the right direction to entrust to a high official the duty of attending to details.

My honourable friend has said that in bringing Canada under the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Properties we seem to be thinking of the patentee rather than of Canada. Of course, my honourable friend has no responsibility for the Bill which is before this Chamber; but with his permission I will read a statement which will show him that there is some advantage to Canada in joining in the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Properties:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

This Convention was created in Paris in 1883 by a number of the leading countries. Great Britain and the United States were not among the original members but joined a few years later, and to-day with the exception of Canada, Russia, China and some of the South American republics, all of the countries of the world of any importance belong.

The spirit of the Convention is shown in Article 2 thereof which provides that: "The subjects or citizens of each of the contracting countries shall in all the other countries of the Union, as regards patents, utility models, industrial designs or models, trade-marks and trade names, indications of origin, and the suppression of unfair competition, enjoy the advantages that their respective laws now grant, or may hereafter grant, to their own subjects or citizens."

According to the terms of the Convention, Canada can adhere only by having her adhesion signified by Great Britain to the Swiss Government which is the channel of communication for all the contracting countries.

In 1900 on the Report of the Minister of Agriculture, a Minute of Council was approved requesting Her Majesty to signify Canada's adherence. The reasons therefore were fully set forth in the Minute of Council—

—a copy of which can be laid before this Chamber.

In addition to these reasons which still exist, there is now the further and almost imperative reason that a number of the principal countries of the world, namely: Japan, Belgium, some Scandinavian countries, Brazil, Germany and Cuba are absolutely refusing to register Canadian trade marks to the very great detriment of Canadian trade in these countries the ground of the refusal being that Canada does not belong to the Union.

A copy of the Minute of Council of 1900 having been transmitted to the Colonial Office, a reply was received therefrom to the effect that before Canada would be in a position to comply with some of the Articles of the Convention, a number of amendments would have to be made in her laws. With one exception the amendments presented no difficulty and would have been made at once and Canada's adhesion would then have been effected. The exception was in regard to the importation provision of the Canadian Patent Act, Section 38, paragraph (b), which prohibits importation of the patented invention after one year from the grant of the patent on pain of nullity of the patent. Article 5 of the Convention provides that the introduction by the patentee into the country where the patent has been granted of objects manufactured in any of the countries of the Union shall not entail forfeiture.

There is consequently a direct conflict which must be removed by amendment of our Act to enable us to comply with the Convention.

The reason for our strict provision is that as roughly 75 per cent of our patents are granted to U. S. citizens, it was feared that without such provision these patentees would flood our country with the inventions manufactured at their home plants to the injury of our manufacturing interests.

While the manufacturers were extremely anxious to get the benefit of the Convention, they considered the necessary modification of the importation provision of our Act would be too dear a price to pay and at their request the matter was dropped.

In 1920 a Bill was drafted by the undersigned—

That is to say, by Mr. O'Halloran—

—for the general revision of the Patent Act which had not been revised since 1903 and as there appeared to be a general desire for adherence to the Union a clause was inserted to be substituted for our importation provision which had stood in the way of our adherence for twenty years. The substituted clause while not so stringent as our present provision was considered to be a sufficient safeguard of our manufacturing interests. It was taken from the British Patent Act, and provided that if the Canadian demand for the invention was at any time supplied by manufacture exclusively or mainly outside of Canada, the patent might be revoked.

As Great Britain is in the Union, there was no question about the substituted clause being in harmony with the Convention.

This Bill, after being approved by the law officers of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and by the representatives of other interests generally affected, was introduced in 1920; but, owing to more pressing matters taking up the time of Parliament, it did not get beyond first reading.

The Bill was introduced again in 1921 after being again considered and approved by the law officers of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and others, but, before it was given second reading, one or two sections of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and a few individual manufacturers expressed to the Government a doubt as to the effect of the substituted importation clause on their interests and asked that the Bill be postponed until the following Session. The Bill was withdrawn, and no further action has been taken.

The Trade Mark and Design Act requires amendment also to be consistent with the Convention as the Act at present permits only resident Canadians to register industrial designs. Foreigners have the same rights as resident Canadians in obtaining patents and registering trade marks and there is no reason why they should not have the same rights as to industrial designs. A Bill amending the Trade Mark and Design Act in this direction was also introduced in 1921, but was withdrawn with the Patent Bill.

So my honourable friend apparently at one time stood jointly responsible with his colleagues for introducing this very Bill.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: We did not put it through, though.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was advanced one step. The present Bill has passed the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: You killed it with faint praise.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

The Government has passed a Minute of Council again requesting the British authorities to signify Canada's adherence to the Convention, and is submitting the two Bills substantially in the form in which they were introduced in 1920-21 for the approval of Parliament in order to remove the obstacle to our adherence hereinbefore referred to and make the same effective.

The clauses inserted in the Patent Bill for this purpose are 40 and 41.

The principal advantages to be derived from joining the Union are briefly as follows—

And I would draw my honourable friend's attention to these reasons which must have found favour with him a couple of years ago.

A Canadian will have in filing an application for a patent in other Union countries after filing and application at home for the same invention, a right of priority for the period of twelve months.

This means that a foreign application filed at any time within twelve months from the Canadian application will be given the date of filing of the Canadian application and will have the same force and effect as if filed on that date. Consequently nothing done in the meantime such as publication or public use or sale of the invention will prevent the grant of the patent.

At present a Canadian patent is published in the Canadian Patent Office Record simultaneously with its grant. Such publication, before the filing of an application in most foreign countries, is an absolute bar to the grant of the patent.

In regard to trade marks and industrial designs, there will be similar right of priority for the period of four months.

In most of the foreign countries at present the Canadian applicant for a patent is at a great disadvantage if his application is found to be in conflict with a co-pending application for the same invention. In the United States, for instance, in such a case the Canadian is not permitted to offer evidence of the date of the invention prior to the date of his disclosure of the invention within the United States, while the U. S. applicant, in order to show priority of invention, may go back without limitation to the date of the conception of the idea. This means that the U. S. applicant wins out in practically every case. On joining the Union the Canadian would be on the same footing as the U. S. applicant.

Provided they comply with local laws regarding the working of their patents, Canadians would have the right of exporting to all Union countries their inventions manufactured at home without invalidating their patents. Canadians would have the same rights as citizens or subjects in obtaining patents and registering trade marks and designs in all Union countries.

The International Office of the Union is at Berne, and is superintended by the Swiss Government. The Canadian contribution towards its maintenance would be between five and seven hundred dollars annually.

The net annual revenue of the Canadian Patent Office to-day is about quarter of a million dollars.

When we go into Committee, we may cover further ground.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

IRRIGATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill 112, An Act to amend the Irrigation Act.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I have here a memorandum signed by Mr. H. H. Rowatt:

Section 7 of the Irrigation Act provides that no grant shall be made by the Crown in such terms as to vest in the grantee any exclusive or other property or interest in or any exclusive right or privilege with respect to any river, stream, watercourse, lake, creek, spring, ravine, canyon, lagoon, swamp, marsh or other body of water, or any exclusive or perpetual property, interest or privilege in the land forming the bed or shore thereof.

Under Section 37 of the Dominion Lands Act regulations have been established for the leasing of mining rights, and the Deputy Minister of Justice holds that such leases are grants of land, and that the issue of a mining lease comprising a submerged area is a violation of the provisions of Section 7 of the Irrigation Act.

As mining locations leased under the provisions of the regulations frequently comprise an area of 1,920 acres it is practically certain that almost every location so leased includes within its boundaries water areas as defined by Section 7 of the Irrigation Act.

It was suggested that legislation be introduced which would admit of lands defined as water areas in the said Act being leased for mining purposes, and made retroactive, and Mr. Chisholm of the Department of Justice, after consultation with his Deputy Minister has submitted the attached draft amendment to Section 7 of the Irrigation Act, designed to overcome this violation.

I will read the Act, which is very simple.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED:: We have it before us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that there is no controversy or claim in the Department with regard to the Act.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Why is the Bill made retroactive?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The proposed clause says:

and this proviso shall be deemed to have come into operation on the twenty-third day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-four.

I would surmise—it is simply an inference I draw—that the purpose is to cover such leases of submerged areas in connection with mining rights as would seem to run counter to the prohibition which it is sought to raise.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I understood my honourable friend to state that no such leases had been issued.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; I said that there is at present no controversy with the Department, or no special case which the Department has in view. No trouble has arisen.

Hon. Mr. REID: Honourable gentlemen, this Bill is introduced for the purpose of legalizing some lease or leases. Perhaps the honourable leader of the Government would give us, when we go into Committee on this Bill, a list of leases that have been issued since 1894. There must have been a good many leases granted in the last 27 or 28 years. The purpose of introducing this Bill must be to legalize some particular mining lease or leases. I should think that if we are going to legalize some lease or leases that have been given we should at all events be provided with a list of them before we pass this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend may have noticed this part of my statement:

As mining locations leased under the provisions of the regulations frequently comprise an area of 1,920 acres it is practically certain that almost every location so leased includes within its boundaries water areas as defined by section 7 of the Irrigation Act.

So that undoubtedly the reason for making the legislation retroactive was to make certain that all those leases would be regularized. As to obtaining a lease, it may suffice to inform this Chamber that there is no complaint from any quarter, no claim in the Department, and no controversy at the present time.

Hon. Mr. REID: Do I understand the honourable leader of the Government to say that they are bringing in a Bill to legalize leases that have been issued, and that no question of their legality has been raised in any shape or form?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: During the last 27 years. That is the information I have from the Department.

Hon. Mr. REID: Well, it does seem strange to me that after 27 years, without anyone raising the question, the Department of Justice should bring this question forward now. Has the Department raised the question?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Their attention may not have been directed to it. This evidently has been the practice since 1894, and it is only recently that their attention has been drawn to the infirmity in the lease.

Hon. Mr. REID: I would like to be informed of the reason why the Department of Justice has taken this matter up and asked for a Bill of this kind. It strikes me that someone owning a lease must have made an application to the Department. Therefore I would like to have the matter explained when the Bill comes before the Committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will have a statement from the Department as to the number of leases that this will cover.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PRIVATE BILL

SECOND READING

Bill I4, an Act to incorporate Continental Assurance Company of North America.—Hon Mr. Crowe.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION BILL

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the House go into Committee on Bill 84, an Act to amend The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: This is a very important Bill, and when we had it up the other day we asked for the printing of the sections which are being repealed. For my part, I do not understand the meaning of the Bill at all, unless I have before me the old sections, and it seems to me that no time is to be gained by attempting to go on with it in its present shape.

While I am on my feet may I revert to the question of the resolution adopted by this house in regard to the printing, along with the Bill, of the old provisions which are being repealed? I have received, as I am sure other members have, a pamphlet issued by someone, I do not know whom, called "Consolidation of Naturalization Acts, 1914 and 1920, including provisions of Bill 85." In this pamphlet the rule which was adopted by this Senate has been fully carried out, the measure as now proposed being printed in different type from sections which are being repealed or amended. Anyone examining this will see how much more convenient it would be to follow the discussion with this memorandum. Somebody else evidently thinks exactly as we do, and has supplied the House with the means of intelligently following that Bill. Why it has not been carried out in our Bills I cannot see.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: I agree with the honourable member for Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt), that we should have the original Bill printed before we go into Committee of the the Whole. This is a very important matter, and one in which I am specially interested, and I will say that this Bill in its present form is Greek to me, and unless we can have the other to show what these changes mean, we are simply working in the dark.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: I see no objection to the matter standing in order that the Act may be reprinted as suggested; but I would point out that this Bill is now before this House without any amendment introduced in the House of Commons, and that with the first reading of the Bill it was printed with the amendments and changes in italics, and that is before us, if you refer to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: And distributed in this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: Yes.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not on my file: I have been looking for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that up to a certain time, which I cannot exactly give, we had a special file of the Bills that were introduced in the Commons, but that practice was discontinued, and the Commons Bills were simply put into our postal boxes for us, and received and examined. It was felt that some confusion resulted from maintaining one file with Bills as introduced in the Commons, and another with Bills as passed through the Commons; yet we are still receiving those Bills as introduced in the Commons, and last week, when moving the second reading, I happened to have the Bill as introduced in the Commons and on the opposite page was printed the clause of the present Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It is not on our files, though.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is not on our files, but it is distributed to us, and we could retain these Bills as they originated in the Commons. I admit that very often they are of very little importance, because the Bills may be changed in Committee in the Commons, but in this instance there has been no change, and the old Act which it is sought to amend is to be found on the next page.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: A copy of that Bill has just been handed to me by my honourable friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), with a copy of the old Act printed on the opposite page.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: There are several copies which could be distributed, and they would answer the purpose.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am ready to proceed with the Bill. It is not very late. I fully explained the Bill on the second reading. The Deputy Minister is here to give through me, any explanation that may be required.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Let it stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will move that the Order be discharged, and placed on the Order Paper for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

FRENCH CONVENTION BILL

FIRST READING

Bill 23, an Act respecting a certain Convention of Commerce between His Majesty and the President of the French Republic.—Hon. Mr. Dandurand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Bill be placed on the Order Paper for second reading on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: May I ask a question of my honourable friend? The second reading has been set for Tuesday next. Shall we be under the impression that the Bill will really be taken up on that day? I think it is important that we should know, because some of us have possible engagements, and, as this is a very important Bill, I am prepared, so far as I am concerned, to be present on that day and go on with it. But can my honourable friend give us an assurance that it will really be taken up then, or will it be boosted to some future time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That inquiry raises the question as to what decision we may have to make to-morrow regarding the adjournment of the Senate. There occurs next week a holiday which cuts the week in two. On Thursday, the 10th, I am officially informed, the Commons will not sit. I have therefore been asked if we could not adjourn to the Monday following, and sit then for a full week, or until we have cleared the Order Paper. I understand the Budget is not to be delivered before next week, and, as that holiday intervenes which will break the week in two, I shall leave it to the Senate to consider the question until to-morrow and to decide then as to adjournment. Of course, if we come back on Tuesday of next week, I see nothing to prevent this Treaty being taken up.

C.N.R. LINES IN UNITED STATES

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN inquired of the Government:

1. What are the lines, operated by the Canadian National Railways, in the United States of America, that have shown a deficit, if any, during the last year?
2. If deficits, what were the amounts for each line approximately, during the same time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND:

Grand Trunk western lines.. ..	$1,175,341 83
Grand Trunk New England lines.	1,398,600 35
Duluth, Winnipeg, and Pacific Railway..	332,871 39
	$2,906,813 57

Although the American Lines show a deficit, the Management point out that the Canadian National—Canadian lines receive from and deliver to the American lines heavy through traffic, which results in considerable earnings to the Canadian lines, as follows:

Canadian lines—Earnings on traffic interchanged—

	G.T. New England lines	G.T. Western lines
From above lines	$ 1,185,157 00	$ 8,547,335 00
To above lines.	3,192,216 00	4,230,660 00
	$ 4,377,373 00	$12,777,995 00

Total interchange, excluding Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway, figures for which are not yet available.. .. .. $17,155,368 00

C.N.R. TICKET OFFICE IN TORONTO

DISCUSSION AND INQUIRY

Hon. GEORGE LYNCH-STAUNTON rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate and enquire of the Government:

Has the Canadian National Railways offered one million dollars or any other sum (and if so, what is the other sum?) for the northwest corner of Yonge and King streets, Toronto, and have they taken or do they propose to take proceedings to expropriate said land for a site for a ticket office, and if so, what is the estimated cost of the land and building to be erected thereon?

He said: Honourable gentlemen, I placed this notice on the Order Paper not so much to gain the information, for I think I have most of it at present, but to draw to the attention of the Senate what, in my humble judgment is a very important matter. Rumour has it, and the answer given yesterday to the question of the honourable gentleman from Peel (Hon. Mr. Blain) proves, that the Canadian National Railways have purchased the northwest corner of King and Yonge streets in the city of Toronto for a ticket office: and, as I read that answer, it is not intended to use that property for any other purpose than the selling of tickets. The purchase price, I am informed, is $1,100,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But the honourable gentleman is informed also that there is no fixed figure, because the matter is referred to the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I understand that the railway company offered a million dollars for this property and that the Imperial Bank, the owner, declined to sell at that price, disputing the right of the railway company to expropriate this land, and that the question has been referred to the Exchequer Court. But I am informed that the railway company have since increased their offer to $1,100,000.

On this property there is a small building of about four stories in height. Four years ago the Imperial Bank paid $700,000 for the property; so that at $1,100,000 there is a neat profit to the Bank of $400,000. A few days ago I sent a letter to the Toronto Globe protesting against this purchase, and, in a full column editorial as to why it should be purchased, the only reason given was that the Canadian National Railways could not afford to have the Canadian Pacific Railways occupying an office on the best corner in Toronto without themselves having an office on the other corner. In other words, it is vital to the Canadian National Railways to "keep up with the Joneses."

I do not think it is vital to the Canadian National Railways to keep up with the Joneses, and any person who knows Toronto, knows that the centre of trade is very rapidly shifting north on Yonge street from the corner of King street, and that King street from Yonge to Bay is becoming a financial centre and trade is disappearing from that locality. Furthermore, the Canadian National Railways have a large property which was formerly owned by the Canadian Northern Railway, just opposite the King Edward Hotel, the principal hotel of Toronto, and only two blocks distant from the proposed ticket office. I may say in passing that for some years the Grand Trunk Railway had its ticket office in the building which it is now proposed to purchase.

Assuming for the moment, which I do not grant, that it is desirable to have a ticket office in that locality, there is another reason why this property should not be purchased. This morning when I opened my mail I found in it a letter which I think will be interesting to the Senate, if I may be permitted to read it. It is as follows:

> Dear Senator,—With reference to the Globe's answer to your letter criticising the C.N.R. for paying over $1,100,000 for a site at the corner of Yonge and King Streets, Toronto. It says they could not let the C.P.R. have the strategic advantage of location in a city where so much of their traffic starts. Why did the C.N.R. not buy the old Traders' Bank Building now known as the Bank of Hamilton, instead? It is right in the heart of the city, on Yonge Street immediately beside the C.P.R. Building. It is plenty big enough to house all the C.N.R. groups in Toronto, and then leave some space to rent. It contains over 77,000 square feet, is 14 stories high, well built, and has the best battery of elevators in Toronto. It has been in the market for some years, and the Royal Bank, although looking for $1,000,000 for it and the Nordheimer Building (6 stories) annex on Colborne Street, which goes with it to preserve its light, would doubtless take less. Think of it: the C.N.R. pays $1,100,000 for a small site on which they will have to spend another $1,000,000 to put a tall building, when they could buy a beautiful office building all complete, with a 6 storey annex, right alongside the C.P.R., for less than $1,000,000. Why was this overlooked?

Then the writer makes some remarks which are perhaps a little derogatory to the management, and which I will not read. The building which he pictures was the show building of Toronto until the Canadian Pacific Railway built one two or three stories higher. That building is within eighty feet of the corner of King Street, and is absolutely up-to-date in construction and equipment, and has the handsomest interior of any office building in the city. Around the corner of Colborne street is the Nordheimer Annex. Not only could the Canadian National Railways put their ticket office in this building, but they could house all their offices, for which I am told they have a very large rent roll in Toronto. They could buy that property, with a frontage of 80 feet on Yonge street by a depth of 100 feet on Colborne, including the Annex, for less money than they have offered for the corner of King and Yonge. When I protested against the purchase I was not aware of these facts, which I have heard from this gentleman only this morning. It seems to me that this trying to keep up with the Joneses is going to be quite too expensive for this country. The Grand Trunk Railway Company, which was managed by a board of directors in England, undertook a few years ago to imitate the Canadian Pacific: they put up a series of hotels throughout this country which cost us now in deficits $750,000 a year; they undertook to build the most expensively-built railroad on this continent in order that they might keep up with the Joneses: the result was that they put their company into bankruptcy.

Now I come to the policy of building ticket offices, as if they were grocery stores, to catch the passing trade on the street. The American railways have given over that kind of extravagance; they are consolidating the ticket offices of the rival roads in one building wherever they can possibly do it; they are placing their uptown offices on cheap properties in obscure streets. They know that the worst paying part of the business of a railway campany is the ticket business, and that the overhead on that part of the business should be kept as low as possible. The New York Central Railway is taking its ticket office out of the Central Station and is placing it elsewhere, because it can get a good rental for the property. If I were czar of this country I would make the railroads sell their tickets at the terminal stations in each city, and nowhere else. I think that a man who will stand for a ground rent of $60,000 or $70,000 a year for a ticket office for the catch business which he will get should be in some other business than railroading.

There is another point of view. I am interested in this question simply and solely as a Canadian citizen. I have no interest in any railway in Canada, directly or indirectly, except the Canadian Nationals, in which I am interested as a citizen, and I think that the public interest of Canada should be most carefully considered. The transportation systems of Canada are its lifeblood, and it is only by reducing expenses as far as we possibly can, by practising the strictest economy, that we can ever hope to give the people of this country reasonable freight rates for the transportation of their products from one end of Canada to the other. The Canadian National Railways ought to be considered quite apart from any question of sentiment; they should be considered entirely from a business point of view, especially by the Management. We have a billion dollars of debt hanging over these railroads, and we are adding to that debt every year at the rate of from sixty to seventy millions.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Of deficit?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Of a deficit. In ten years we shall have another billion dollars of debt on those roads, and only by a miracle can that catastrophe be prevented. The Management of these roads should consider day and night wherein they can reduce expenditures rather than increase them.

Friends of public ownership are always on the lookout for signs of hostility on the part of those who are not advocates of that policy. As for me, I am not an enemy of public ownership. I am not a convert to public ownership, but I voted tremblingly for the acquisition of these roads by this country, and as a citizen of this country I know that it is the most vital and important project that we have on hand if we desire the development and prosperity of Canada. The greatest enemy that this railroad has is not the man who is opposed to public ownership: it is the public ownership partisan and advocate—and why? Beacuse public ownership advocates are like politicians: politicians will always support their own party, right or wrong. That is a general statement, and there are exceptions to every rule; but if you look in the press you will never see any criticism whatever by public ownership advocates of those who have charge of our public utilities. As I said in my letter to the Globe, the managers of our public utilities can commit murder and get away with it so far as the advocates of public ownership are concerned. If public ownership is to succeed, its friends should always be on the lookout to see that no mistakes which can be avoided are committed, and not all the time be patting their managers on the back and defending everything they do—good, bad, and indifferent—as they are doing.

The taxation through which this railway is supported is on all the people of this country. A great many of those public-ownership people seem to think that the taxation is only on the rich; but, as I heard a big corporation lawyer once say in New York, "When they tax us, we always manage to put the taxation where it belongs, that is to say, on the people who use the utility."

Look at our taxation to-day. We have the province of Manitoba introducing a Bill for an income tax under which a man who has $13,000 a year must pay 7 or 8 per cent. What does all this mean? It just means that those people who have large sums of money, who are not already tax-dodgers, are going to become such: they are going to be driven to it. I know that there are millions of dollars now being placed outside of this country for the purpose of escaping the taxation which we now have; and they are escaping, and will escape. Men with large fortunes can escape, but the poor never can escape.

Now, if you add to the debt of this country millions and millions and millions, year after year, and if you get to about two billions of debt through this railway, you will have to increase the taxation, and lower the exemptions every year, and after you have lowered the exemptions to what they are in England, the population will sit up and take notice. No government can retain power in Canada by any policy once all the people are paying direct taxation.

This is to me a very serious matter. How can we hope to get our western country settled if we have to charge people rates on freight which prevent them getting any profit from their produce? How can we expect to bring people into Canada and retain them here if we make it the dearest country in the world to live in?—and it is rapidly becoming such, if it is not so already. The great cause of the increase in taxation is the expenditure on our railways. Instead of cutting to the very bone every possible expenditure, this Management is going, with a gay heart, to increase it wherever they have an opportunity, if the action in Toronto, and what I hear rumoured of action in Montreal, is an indication of their policy.

I could perhaps say more, but to such a body of men as compose the Senate I do not think it is necessary or perhaps useful to add anything. I only hope that the Government of Canada will bring the Board of this corporation on the carpet, and give them to understand that they are not to spend money of this country for their own glorification, in order that they may walk in and out of great buildings, but that they are there to manage this property as the servants of this country, without putting unnecessary burdens on it. I have a great regard for Hon. Mr. Graham, and I hope he will see that there is a change in the policy of this Railway Board. I have not looked into the matter, but I am told that the Government has absolutely no control over the railway. If that is so it is time they had. Formerly I believed in the management of these affairs by Commissions, but my experience and observation in the last few years leads me to the conclusion that Commissions are a dangerous experiment, and that it would be much better for the Government of this country to take the control of this railroad, as they must take the responsibility. The Government must see to it that the railway is run in the public interest. These railway gentlemen have no interest in this matter except their salaries. They have no vision to see what a tremendously important matter they have in hand, and what a great chance there is for them to be benefactors of Canada; but the Government of Canada must not forget that the administration of this railway is committed to them, and that they are responsible for its management.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government if the question asked by my honourable friend was replied to in the affirmative? I did not hear him when he replied to it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, I have not yet answered the honourable gentleman; but I expect that the men of standing in the Senate, who to a large extent represent, I believe, the shareholders in this large corporation called the National Railways, will express their opinions, which may help the Board to appreciate the views expressed by the parliamentarians of Canada, and thus help to direct their action.

Hon. Mr. GORDON: Are we to take it from that remark, that negotiations are going on for this building?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: It is before the Exchequer Court now.

Hon. J. D. REID: I do not rise to criticize or find fault with the remarks made by the honourable Senator from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton). I think he has made a very able and fair speech, but he has raised a question far greater than that of the Toronto site. I agree with him absolutely when he states that the strictest economy should be practised so far as the National Railways are concerned; but I go farther, and say that if it is possible for parliament to make both railways economize more than they are now doing they would be able to reduce freight rates and passenger rates, and that is what we need in Canada to make it a greater country than we now have.

When the honourable gentleman complained of the expense, and asked that it be reduced, his remarks applied to ticket offices where rentals would be less than at present. But is it not the fact that all over Canada, not only in cities, but in small towns and large towns, we have two ticket offices? In my own little town, with a population of about 3,000, we have both Grand Trunk and Canadian National Railway ticket offices, and I believe the same thing applies in every town in Ontario and throughout the Dominion where these two railways run. These ticket offices must be an enormous expense on the railways throughout Canada, not only for rents, but for ticket agents. Why should we have two ticket offices in my small town? If I want to travel I know which road I am going on, and so does every other person in a small town. Why could not the tickets be sold at the railway station just as well as in the town? In my judgment Parliament should legislate, if it could be done, so that neither of these railways—for there are now only two railways in Canada—should have any ticket offices except at their own stations. That would mean a large saving to both railways, and the saving would be important when we remember that for a two-cent postage stamp the railways have to carry a ton of freight one mile. I venture to say that the closing of the ticket offices and paying for two ticket agents in a small town like mine would almost pay the profits of the railways for the shipping that is done at such a town. I believe it is possible in every place in Canada, even in Toronto, to have tickets sold at the railway stations, and there alone. That, in my judgment, would be fair to both railways.

The honourable gentleman has stated that the New York Central Railway has done away with its city ticket office in New York. I believe that all the railways in New York have now a central office where anyone can buy a ticket on any railway, and this has certainly reduced the expense to a minimum, when divided up among the various railways. That is getting pretty near to the suggestion I have made.

In regard to the site in Toronto, every person has his own opinion. The Grand Trunk office has been on that corner for a great many years. The late Government intended, if they had taken over that railway during their time, to put the telegraph office there, and thus have a central office that would be more than a ticket office. At present the Canadian National Telegraph office in Toronto is pretty hard to find, as it is off on a side street, while the C.P.R. have their ticket and telegraph office centralized at their particular corner. I suppose they arranged to place their ticket office there on account of the Grand Trunk being on the opposite corner for so many years before. Rightly or wrongly, they thought that was what should be done.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Wrongly.

Hon. Mr. REID: Perhaps it was: I am not expressing an opinion; but that is why they put it there. When I was Minister of Railways I understood we were paying $32,500 a year for half the lower floor of that building where the Grand Trunk ticket office now is. The total rentals that the Imperial Bank was getting for that building were $72,700. If the ticket office were taken away from that corner I suppose we would save on the $32,000. We would save the whole sum if all the tickets were sold at the station; but of course the telegraph office could not be placed away down at the station. If the office were removed to another corner, perhaps $15,000 a year could be saved, but I take it that is the most that could be done.

I have only seen the press reports in regard to the suggestion of a large office building on that corner, but I would censure the Government if they would touch such a proposition at all so long as the National Railways are making such deficits as they are at present. Until the railway is free from the losses they are now making the matter should be left in the condition it is in now. If the Government had to assume the purchase of that building on a valuation as decided by the Exchequer Court, it would be around a million dollars, if reports are true, and then we would continue to pay about $32,500 a year, or perhaps a little more. I would hesitate to move until there was a decision as to a general policy to abolish all the ticket offices, endeavor to make both railways economize, and put Parliament in a position to make the railways reduce their freight rates. But so long as we allow either one or both to continue the expenditure for duplicate ticket offices. freight offices, and so on, just so long will freight rates be kept up.

I agree with my honourable friend that no more buildings should be constructed, but I would hesitate to do away with the ticket offices in the meantime, and put them on a side street in Toronto. I think it would be better to wait until some general policy has been adopted by which we can put both railways on an equality for securing freight and passenger business in any part of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: May I ask the honourable gentleman if he is unmindful of the fact that they now have a ticket office on King Street within two blocks of the C.P.R., right opposite the main hotel of the city of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. REID: The Canadian Northern Railway had a property a little east of the King Edward Hotel, on a corner, in which they had their ticket office and their offices as well. My opinion, whatever it is worth, is that the corner of Yonge and King Streets is much more advantageous than that corner would be. That corner would probably be worth about half as much, and therefore to abandon the Grank Trunk corner and move to the other offices would mean a saving of perhaps one-half. The honourable gentleman may be right and I may be wrong, but for the difference I do not think we should make a change. Besides, if we put the telegraph office on that corner, it would mean a saving and would also help the telegraph company. My opinion may not be worth anything, but I mention that as my reason. However, my main purpose in rising was to suggest that all these ticket offices should be done away with.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: The honourable gentleman has not made his position clear.

Hon. Mr. REID: I am sorry if I did not make myself plain. I said that I would be sorry to see the ticket office moved from where it is now; and I do not believe that, even if it is taken over, that would mean any increase in expenditure.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: What about the Bank of Hamilton building?

Hon. Mr. REID: I am opposed to taking over the Bank of Hamilton building for this reason. The Royal Bank owns that building. When the Royal Bank took over the Traders' Bank it was in another part of the city. If the location of the Traders' Bank had been as good as the corner of Yonge and King Streets, why did not the Royal Bank move into it?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The Royal Bank did not want it.

Hon. Mr. REID: What the Royal Bank did the honourable gentleman of course knows. It abandoned the Traders' Bank building and bought the corner right opposite the Grand Trunk, and erected a building there. So they must have thought that was the better site. I think the Grank Trunk corner is the very best in the city of Toronto, and I am in favour of the Canadian National Railway keeping that site in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? He said, if I heard him aright, that that building was bringing in $72,000 a year in rental. That would be gross rental.

Hon. Mr. REID: Yes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Well, if they were getting 50 per cent, they would be doing very well. That would bring it down to $36,000.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The taxes in Toronto are 36 mills.

Hon. W. H. BENNETT: As the honourable leader of the House has asked for an expression of opinion as to matters generally with reference to the Canadian National Railway, I intend to offer a few remarks. There are matters in Canada which are to-day of much greater importance than the purchase of this corner building in the city of Toronto. There is the action of the Government in many respects as to the trade and commerce of the country, and more particularly the western part of Canada and the transportation of grain from that section. I agree with my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) that it is simply absurd for this Government to be spending a million dollars on that corner building in Toronto when they have, only a short distance away, the Canadian Northern building and when, as has been stated, only one corner in Toronto should be owned by the Dominion for the purpose of ticket offices. At the western corner of the next block, opposite the Prince George hotel, as one may see in the public press, a very large office building is being erected. The question is where the trade in the city of Toronto is going to centre and where it is not. People of means are backing their opinions by spending their money in different directions. I am not going to complain of this particular expenditure alone, but I do complain of all the wild expenditures which the Canadian National Railways are contemplating. We read in the Montreal press of what is intended to be done in Montreal. The expenditure of a million dollars for another National Railway building there is contemplated, although the country owns to-day a large office building—that of the Grand Trunk. Adjoining it is a foundation on property owned by the Government of Canada, upon which a building could be constructed. Some impulse is driving this Government to buy a building in the city of Montreal known as the Shaughnessy Building at the figure of $800,000, and, if you read the press of Montreal—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, the honourable gentleman is in error. The Canadian National Railways do not contemplate buying that building.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Thank God for that! Public discussion is having some effect on this Government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No; my honourable friend is wrong. I have had an answer to this effect for the last two or three days, but the question asked related, not to the Canadian National Railways, but to the Government: "Was the Government negotiating for the purchase of the Shaughnessy Building?" The Railway Department thought that the question applied to them, and they sent me an answer, which was in the negative. So that purchase was not contemplated by the Railways. The answer I gave was that the Government was not negotiating for the purchase of the building.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Then neither the Railways nor the Government were in negotiation for the Shaughnessy Building?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No. I may say that in my opinion the matter will have to be settled after the general policy has been discussed and decided upon. For instance, there are numerous buildings for which the Government is paying an immense amount of rental in Ottawa, and which are used by various departments. Buildings are probably required also in large cities like Montreal. To a business man the question would present itself: is it not advantageous for the Government to borrow money at 5 per cent and provide for the housing of all its servants in the city of Ottawa, diminishing the annual rentals by making that capital expenditure? This is a large question, which has not yet been decided. It will have to be decided in Montreal as well as in Ottawa before any negotiations are entered into for the purchase of one building or another.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Honourable gentlemen, according to what the Minister has said, I think the betting is that the Shaughnessy building is going to be purchased by either this Government or the Railways, and the cost is to be added to the public debt of this country and to the large deficit of the Canadian National Railways. Sir Henry Thornton goes about the country imploring the people to give their opinion. He speaks about the future success of the railways. I will use his own words. Yesterday, addressing a meeting at London, Ontario, he said:

> This year will be the test year for the Canadian National Railway, and, if a reasonable financial showing is made, the battle to place the system upon a sound basis will be won.

If we are going to have all this outgoing of money, we certainly must have some income, and the Government has announced its intention of disposing of some 27 vessels belonging to what is known as the national fleet. I want to ask the Government why they desire to sell these boats at this particular time. Last fall they placed 10 of them on the Upper Lakes. What was the result? They went into the service to relieve the congestion of grain on the Lakes. True, they did not keep down the rates, as they might have done, because they were rented. But is the Government going to sell those vessels when to-day the shipping combination is threatening to throttle the farmer of the West with 6 cents lake freight per bushel on his grain coming from Port Arthur, whereas two years ago it was only 3 cents for the first of the season? Is it not correct that this Government is going to sell the vessels that might keep down the rate? If that is not correct, then the Minister has made an irregular reply. Hon. Mr. Graham stated the other day in the House that up to date, so far as he knew, no offer had been made for the ships. He doubted whether in any case they would be suitable for the trade that Mr. MacLaren, the member from St. John, had in mind. However, there are to be 27 of those vessels sold.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Is the honourable gentleman aware of the deficit on the administration of those vessels last year? Does he not know that it is over $9,000,000?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but not on the vessels that were on the Lakes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: On the total.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Because it is the complaint, and it was the complaint then, that certain friends of—

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: May I interrupt to ask my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) if the statement is correct that there was a deficit of $9,000,000? Is not that the deficit on the investment? Was not the operating deficit less than two millions?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, that is the deficit on the whole investment.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: That includes between two and three millions for depreciation.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Without depreciation.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: It was complained last year that the Government, when they permitted their vessels on the Upper Lakes, some 10 in number, to go into the grain trade, did not invite tenders or offers for those vessels at all, but gave them to their party friends to handle, and those friends made a princely profit out of them.

What are you going to do with those vessels? Are you going to offer them for sale at this time? What is going on in the world at present, with regard to the selling of ships? In the town where I live I can see in the yards 8 or 10 engines out of American boats, which were bought for a mere bagatelle. In the daily press I read such items as this, that the United States Government is now considering the sale of three vessels for $100,000 apiece, which are capable of carrying about half a million bushels each. Yet the Government, at a time when the market is glutted with boats for sale, is trying to drive those 10 vessels out of the trade. Why drive them out of the trade and place them on the market? Have they friends waiting to buy them? Are they afraid these boats will enter into competition?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Those friends could go to the United States and buy boats cheap, as my honourable friend says.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Let me tell the honourable gentleman that they cannot do so, for this reason. By legislation in the United States any vessel that is bought to-day from the Government, or from any person in the United States, is restricted as to the style of trading that she shall do on the Upper Lakes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: She cannot leave the American trade.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: She cannot leave the American trade.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But such boats could be used between Buffalo and Montreal.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I doubt that they could, under that ruling. However, there is a restriction that hampers the sale of those boats.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The restriction is that they must remain under American register.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: That is right.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Then they would be hampered by the fact that they could not trade between two Canadian ports; so there would be only one chance with boats of that class.

Now the Ministers tell us that these boats are not fitted for the trade. The Government have to-day on the Upper Lakes four vessels that are lake freighters in every sense of the word. They are in the docks alongside the ordinary grain traders. You have the vessel called Kearsarge, you have one called the Arthur Orr, you have one called the Drummond, and one called the McKee. Yet two of these vessels are listed among those that are to be sold by the Government.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Are they twin decks?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say whether they are twin decks or not. I know this, that they are carrying grain every season. Then, why does not the Government put these four vessels of the class that I have mentioned, and the other ten vessels of the other class that are on the Upper Lakes, in the business of carrying grain? Last year they were eagerly sought for by the friends of honourable gentlemen opposite, when they were put in the trade. If all those 14 vessels on the Lakes were carrying grain, they could carry over 1½ million bushels on a single trip. What would be the result? The freight rates would be hammered down on their friends, who have the pull at court. Their rate, which is 6 cents now, would come tumbling down—just the very thing this Government apparently does not wish.

It is of no use to tell me or any other person that these vessels, which were constructed by the Government during the war, and 10 of which are, as I say, on the Upper Lakes to-day, and were eagerly sought for last year, cannot carry grain to advantage. It is true that in their make-up they differ a little as to the manner of handling them and in the taking out of the grain; but they can be used, and used to advantage. But there is the terrible prospect for the friends of the Government that if those vessels go into the trade they will pull down the rates, at the very time when the vessel men are making their last killing on the Lakes, or what they anticipate will be their last killing, before a certain Commission makes its report, which will militate against their efforts to make money out of the public at the rate they have done before.

Let there be no question about these rates. The rate that prevailed before this season was 3 cents a bushel. I am reading now from a report known as the Report of the Federal Trade Commission on Methods and Operations of Grain Exporters in the United States, dated May 16, 1922. On page 37 of that Report appears a letter written by the agent of an owner in the United States, who says that, as to lake freights, a contract was made on December 9, 1921, for the first boats in the year 1922, at 3 cents a bushel. There is no question as to what the rates were, and the rates at the first of the season have been much lower than even that. The trouble with the whole situation is that, as certain gentlemen have apparently a pull with the Government, the Government wants to remove carrying competition by the sale of these 27 boats. I suppose that ordinarily these vessels would sell at from $100,000 to $125,000 each. Do the Government imagine that they can get that price? They know they cannot profess to get it.

Let us see what these vessel-owners have been doing in the past. I have read in the press something of the profits that have been made by some companies. The earnings of the Great Lakes Transportation Company last year showed 73 per cent profit, and those of the Matthews Company showed, I think, 43 per cent. These are the gentlemen who are to be protected to-day by the removal of those 27 Government vessels, so that they may not enter into competition. I will not deal with this point further, because a report will be made soon, and we shall hear all about it.

Look at the position of this country. The trains are filled with young men leaving Canada. Here is a means of employment for young men in Canada, sailors on vessels, who are going over to the United States and here are vessels tied up at the docks while the Government will not hold their hand to send them out to gather up freight. Remember the position of the Canadian vessel-owner to-day, with his low-grade wages. Perhaps at this point I had better read a letter which appeared recently in the Toronto Globe. It says:

Why Canadians Leave Home

To the Editor of The Globe: I have noticed in your paper of late the question of why young men are going to the U.S.A. in such large numbers.

In our business (sailing) it is quite easy to figure out. The American boats pay from 30 to 35 dollars more per month than Canadian boats, and carry more crew making shorter hours.

This year they are paying $60 a month for firemen on the Canadian side against $95 on the American. Is it any wonder that nine-tenths of the captains on American boats are of Canadian birth or were Canadian citizens? It is a wonder to me that any young man stays in this country.

It puzzles me to know why American boats can pay more money than Canadian boats. They just get the same or less for carrying grain, and have just as long a haul.

Something is wrong somewhere, and Canada is the loser in the long run.

This man is wrong about the wages. Instead of men of this class being paid $95 in the United States they are paid $105.

Let me call attention to another thing. Under the law of the United States, the American vessel-owner has to have three crews on every vessel. In other words, the Canadian sailor has to work for twelve hours a day, but the American sailor works for only eight hours—and still there is that great disparity in their wages. This matter interests not only the farmer in the West, but Canada as a whole and the Canadian railways.

There was last year, and there will be again this year, a concentrated effort made by Canadian vessel-owners to drive every bushel of grain from the Canadian elevators to Buffalo. That is a sweeping statement to make, but I will prove it. The evidence given before the Grain Inquiry bears that out, and when the evidence comes before the House that statement can be backed up. There are about a half-a-dozen vessel companies in Canada to-day doing business on the Great Lakes; there are very few individual owners. If they have twelve vessels there may be two or three of them with a capacity of 300,000 bushels or upwards, but the majority of their vessels are small vessels carrying 100,000 bushels or less. The policy in the spring and the fall during the grain movement was: "Drive all the Canadian vessels you can to Buffalo, so that with the American vessels from Duluth they will cause a congestion at Buffalo, and when that reaches such proportions that the grain cannot be handled by way of New York, smaller vessels can carry the grain down to the city of Montreal." See the effects of that. A few of the large vessels will be kept fairly well employed on the Upper Lakes, and will have little or no detention but their smaller vessels will get this employment from Port Colborne to Montreal. Because the grain handled in the smaller vessels to Montreal from Buffalo was Canadian as well as American, there was no competition, and rates were boosted to such an extent that these enormous profits were made. These companies were charging a higher rate to the Georgian Bay ports to which they could make three trips than to Buffalo, to which they could make only two.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Is it true that there were demurrage charges paid to Buffalo and none to Georgian Bay points?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I think they were paid to both points. There is one element in this matter that is militating against the Canadian National Railways, and that is the fact that the grain dealers are desirous of shipping by way of Buffalo rather than by way of Georgian Bay ports, although the Government has a railway line from Collingwood to Montreal, a line from Midland to Montreal, and one from Parry Sound to Montreal, with elevators at all three ports. It was stated by Mr. Richardson, in evidence given before a committee of the House a few years ago, that the price of Canadian grain was higher because there is no admixture of inferior grades with the Canadian grain. The report that I quoted shows that while there were 412,793,000 bushels shipped through Buffalo, 134,304,000 bushels were mixed grain and in the letter of February 21 referred to accompanying the advice as to the shipment of the grain, appears this statement:

We found, when it came to actual shipping of No. 1 Dark Northern, we had to make a mixture of 35 per cent of dollar wheat and 65 per cent of three dollar wheat, instead of 25 per cent and 75 per cent as originally advised. We could also probably make Dark No. 1 Northern out of half and half of No. 2 Northern and No. 3 Northern.

We have these lines of railway from the Upper Lakes all ready to do business; we have the new manager of the Canadian National Railways, Sir Henry Thornton; he has taken over the staff of the old Grand Trunk; he has the highest paid men of the Grand Trunk still in his employ. Surely these high-priced officials could point out to Sir Henry Thornton what should be done under the circumstances. I want to know who is recommending the sale of these vessels. Is it the Government, or is it Sir Henry Thornton? If it is Sir Henry Thornton, from whom is he taking his advice? Is it from these high-priced officials who are on the pay-roll of this country? To look at it, one would imagine that it was from someone who had stock in some of these steamboat companies, and it would not be the first time that Grand Trunk officials held stock under the names of clerks, in companies whose interests were not those of the Grand Trunk.

I am going to ask the Minister for permission to read from the daily press of the province of Ontario, and to listen to the views of some of his friends. I have two letters in my hand from the Mail and Empire, and will read parts of each. These are written by a gentleman well known to the Minister. He once occupied a seat on the Liberal side of the House of Commons for the riding of Wentworth: I refer to Mr. W. O. Sealey, of Hamilton. He says:

In view of the interim newspaper report of the lake rates inquiry commission, isn't it surprising to note that the recommendation to sell twenty-seven of the smaller lake boats of the sixty-four Government Merchant Marine has been adopted, apparently thereby removing what little chance of opposition there is left to the combinster lake rates, and dispensing with all future Government Merchant Marine competition? This would leave the Government's billion dollar railway system and many millions of dollars of ocean merchant marine at the mercy of the little lake link transportation association to sap all the virtue and profit out of the whole investment. Is this the way the one stockholder (the people of Canada) is going to allow its enormous investment to be administered?

Then he goes on to speak about the ocean rates and the combine which the Dominion Government, through the Canadian National steamships, has entered into to keep up rates on the ocean. He says:

And then the Canadian National Railways—leaving Canada to struggle with the enormous national debt their cost built up, with little or no receipts for their sale. Now that public ownership and operation of transportation facilities are established as a beneficial principle, why not support instead of strangle it?

I join in that opinion. If my honourable friend wants more advice from the public, let him take the advice of the Winnipeg Free Press, a paper which has not been altogether hostile to his Government. He will not get much consolation out of the Toronto Globe, because when the Edmonton Bulletin, Hon. Frank Oliver's newspaper, in speaking of these companies, said:

That they exploited the grain growers in a highly efficient manner seems to be established, whether by combine methods or individual action. But it was hardly reasonable to suppose that their legal pilots had not shown them how to do it without getting stranded on the clauses of the anti-trust law. If the Commission finds out how the law will have to be amended to prevent them doing it again without incurring penalties, that will perhaps be as much as can be looked for. The Commission is likely to be useful as a preventive, rather than as a punitive, instrument.

The Toronto Globe's comment, with smug-faced hyprocisy, was as follows:

There are other ways of breaking up the combination besides invoking the criminal law. Railway rates are regulated without criminal prosecution, and there is no reason why shipping rates should not be kept within bounds by the exercise of Governmental authority, and if necessary by the Government itself entering the field and carrying grain at reasonable rates. The possibility of such action should at least always be held in reserve as a means of enforcing fair play on the part of private vessel-owners.

Whether some person closely connected with the Globe is interested in the preservation of rates and saying that these parties should not be criminally prosecuted, I know not and care not. Many courses have been advocated; meanwhile we await the report of the Commission. What the Commission will recommend I do not know; but I hope they will not recommend the abrogation of the coasting laws, and, if they do, I hope the Government will not act upon the recommendation. We have not as many vessels on the lakes as the Americans, and the abrogation of the coasting laws would mean very bad business for owners of Canadian vessels, and it would follow that the allegiance of all the men employed on Canadian vessels would have to be transferred to the United States if Canadian vessels were transferred to the United States register. What the Government might do is to take to themselves the right to exercise at any time the power of abrogating the coasting laws, which would be a safeguard against high rates.

In the Globe of last Friday there is a page devoted to the interests of the town of Midland, and among other things there is an advertisement, if you may so term it, of the Great Lakes Company. It says that they carry 200,000 tons of coal per season to Midland for the Canadian National railways; and there is another port called Key Harbour, to which a large amount of coal is carried for the same railways. Why not put these Canadian National boats into that trade? Although the Great Lakes Company had that contract, and were fulfilling it by delivering the coal to Midland, in many instances they had to secure American boats to carry the coal, while these Canadian Government vessels were tied up at the docks. This is a matter which primarily interests my home town and the surrounding country; but when it comes to driving the grain trade to Buffalo, it interferes not only with the business of the Canadian National railways, but also with the business of the Canadian Pacific railway, which last year handled over 40,000,000 bushels of grain at Fort McNichol. My advice to the Government is to get busy and go to work and put these fifteen vessels on the Lakes at the very earliest moment possible, as soon as the ice is off—put them all into commission and put probably 400 men on them and pay them decent wages; cut down the rates and give the farmer the benefit whether it hurts party friends or not. I hope and trust the Government will do that, pending the report from this Commission.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The honourable gentleman said those ships last year were given to friends of the Government. I thought this Government had no friends. Will he tell us who they are?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I will read this statement from the public press.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Never mind the public press; name them.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: It goes on to refer to the Company known as the Great Lakes Company, in which parties in Midland and Richardson Brothers of Kingston are interested.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: We would like to have the Richardsons for our friends, but they never were.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: It says:

> This fleet carried 26,000,000 bushels to Canadian ports during the season of 1922, and some 4,000,000 were carried in the Canadian Merchant Marine boats.

Now, as a matter of fact, I understood those boats were in some way working under the Great Lakes Company.

> There was considerable said about the manner in which these government boats had been chartered, more than one witness claiming that they had endeavoured to charter them early in the season and had been told they would not be chartered, and that later they had been chartered without being advertised as available to shippers generally. As government boats the feeling, from the statements made, was that every shipper and every vessel agent should have had an equal chance to secure this tonnage at a time when tonnage was scarce.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: What are the names of the friends?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Why, the Great Lakes Company.

Now, that is all I have to say about this matter, and I hope and trust the Minister will use his good influence with the Government, and that next week we shall hear the announcement that these 15 odd vessels on the Upper Lakes are not put under the hammer and sold to the highest bidder, but will be put in commission and into service on the Upper Lakes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON: I would like to ask my honourable friend if it is the Government who controls the Merchant Marine?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: If this Government has no influence with Sir Henry Thornton, then let us know it. If Sir Henry Thornton has the privilege of saying, "The Government be d—d," let us know that. But Sir Henry Thornton is not going to turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of this Government that the farmer of the West should have a fair chance.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Was not the honourable gentleman desirous that Sir Henry Thornton should have a free hand in the administration of the railways and the Merchant Marine?

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I am quite willing that Sir Henry Thornton should have a free hand; but when he goes around the country making these pathetic pleadings that for Heaven's sake every employee should see how he can earn five cents more for the company, and about Canada being so thoughtful of the West, then I think Sir Henry Thornton, if he has advisers among the Grand Trunk employees, should investigate whether some of those employees hold stock in some of the rival companies, and whether they have been acquiring stock on those vessels that are going to ply from Port Colborne to Montreal. I want to call the attention of the First Minister to this, that when the grant of money was made to those gentlemen of the Grand Trunk for retiring allowances, Sir Henry Thornton wrote his letter, which he will well remember, stating that they were going to refund the money, but he said it would not be convenient for them to refund it at the present time. I do not know whether they have been investing it in boat stock, or whether they have not, but perhaps he might look into that and find out.

Hon. LORNE C. WEBSTER: In fairness to the Management of the Canadian Merchant Marine Line, I think I should say that it is understood that the boats to which the honourable gentleman from Midland (Hon. Mr. Bennett) has referred will be chartered this year for the purpose of bringing down grain from Fort William either to Midland or to Port Colborne. I understand that it is the intention of the Management that those boats shall be employed on the Lakes for the grain trade during this coming season, and in the event of their securing a satisfactory offer for the purchase of one or more of those boats, they would feel disposed to sell. But in the meantime I think we will find that the boats will be employed in the grain trade on the Lakes as soon as navigation opens.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: They will have to be in competition with other boats on the Lakes?

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: Yes.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: I would like to ask the honourable gentleman how it is that he has this inside information. If it is inside information, it conflicts with the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals the other day that they were going to be sold.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: I have the information by reason of knowing that some of the milling interests in Montreal have been desirous of chartering those boats, but they found that other arrangements had been made for their use this year.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I understood my honourable friend to say that those boats would be in competition with the other Lake boats. That has not occurred so far. The information we get is that the Merchant Marine boats are in the same combination with the other boats in carrying grain on the Great Lakes.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: On the ocean, not on the lakes.

Hon. Mr. BRADBURY: It might easily be on the lakes, too.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: It might easily be anywhere, but it does not say so.

Hon. G. D. ROBERTSON: I would like to make an observation or two on the subject introduced by the honourable member from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton). I propose to refer to two points that may be worthy of consideration by the House and by the Government, which I think were not emphasized. Honourable gentlemen who are familiar with the city of Toronto know that from the King Edward Hotel to the present Union Station involves a walk of about seven minutes. The Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National ticket offices are located between these two points, at perhaps one minute's walk from the hotel. A new Union Station has been erected in Toronto at a cost of some millions of dollars, and that station is almost half way from the present station to the corner of King and Yonge Streets, where these ticket offices are located. I respectfully present the view that if any change is to be made at all in the location of ticket offices or in other arrangements, when the new Union Station is occupied, which is sure to be before very long, the ticket offices will undoubtedly be removed farther up Yonge Street, probably to Queen or Shuter, or even farther north. I think that is a point that might be taken into consideration by the Government and the Railway company in the opening of the new Union Station.

The other point I desire to refer to is this. My limited experience in connection with such matters has taught me to believe that when capital is required for a purchase, or when a structure is to be erected, the Management of the Railway Company owned by the people has been in the habit of coming to the Minister of Railways with its recommendation which that Minister submits, with his comments, to Council. Then the Government brings the Estimates to Parliament, and when these have been approved, the Railway Company is authorized to make the purchase. I happen to know of a case in which a very small expenditure of money was desired in connection with a railway station agent's residence along the railway line in the northern part of the province of Quebec. Notwithstanding the fact that the agent pays rental for a dwelling attached to the station, and provided by the railway company, at a certain point a married man who was the agent could not obtain living quarters in the locality, and there was no residence connected with the station. The National Railway Company was asked to add to the station building humble living quarters for the agent, and he was prepared to pay the rental that was agreed upon between himself and the railway company for such accommodation; but the railway company replied that it was impossible for them to provide that accommodation, because their general manager would have first to put the amount in his recommendation for appropriations for the next year, and the management in turn would have to pass that on to the Minister of Railways, and the Minister to the Government, and the Government to Parliament, and so on; and after it had gone through that routine and the money had been voted by Parliament they would be able to make this little addition to the station. That routine hardly seems to coincide with the facts as they appear in this case, where the Canadian National Railways can go ahead on their own responsibility and spend $1,100,000 in the purchase of a building about 50 by 75 feet at the corner of King and Yonge streets in Toronto without consulting anybody. I submit, honourable gentlemen, that there has been no change in the governmental responsibility in these matters, and that the present Government cannot divest itself of responsibility for the action of the railway company in matters of that sort.

Hon. Mr. REID: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government if the Government are not really responsible for this expenditure? That is, did not the Management come to the Government and get them to pass an Order in Council authorizing this expropriation? If they did, why did they authorize it before parliament passed the vote?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I cannot answer my honourable friend as to the form in which the proposition came to the Council, and the responsibility or the part of responsibility which the Government must carry; but I will inquire into the procedure which has been followed, and give a satisfactory answer on that point to my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. REID: The reason I ask that is that I notice that in another House the question was asked, and the Minister stated that the Government authorized it or agreed to it. So, if there are any objections, while the management were primarily responsible, yet the Government were also responsible, and I think they must assume that responsibility. I agree with the honourable gentleman who stated that before any property is purchased the money should be voted by Parliament; in fact, I think that clause is in the Canadian National Railway Bill.

Hon. N. A. BELCOURT: Honourable gentlemen, if I venture to say a few words on the subject which my honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) has brought up, it is not because I am in a position to add any information which will help the House in coming to a conclusion. While I can and do wish to emphasize what my honourable friend said in regard to the absolute necessity for economy in the administration of those railways, I hope I may be pardoned if I take this opportunity of expressing my views on the general question of the government operation of railways.

I will preface my remarks by saying that I do not indulge for one moment in the delusion that I am going to change anybody's mind with regard to the advisability of having these railways managed by the state. I am afraid it is preaching in the desert, or a case of mustard after dinner; but I want to be allowed for a few moments to speak for the acquittal of my own conscience, even at the risk of being thought egotistical.

The subject of government operation of railways has been discused in this House many times, and I have listened to such discussions, feeling all the time that the arguments used and the conclusions arrived at were very much against my views and opinions, and yet I have sat silent. Now, with the permission of the House, I wish again to place myself on record with regard to the whole business.

To my mind, the most unfortunate thing that ever happened to Canada since Confederation was that these railways were taken over to be administered by the Government and the mistake seems to me to be without remedy except the drastic one which has been suggested in another place—that these railways be handed over as soon as possible to somebody who will undertake to operate them. I had thought that my honourable friend from Hamilton would have crossed the threshold at which he arrived. I suppose what prevented him from doing so was the feeling that it was useless to make the proposition; but I take it that if my honourable friend had expressed his whole view, it would have been that which I am going to express for myself. Anyway, he left me under the impression that that was on his mind.

I say that we have ample evidence to-day to warrant the inevitable conclusion that the government operation of these railways is going to result in an annual deficit in perpetuity. Any man of business who has ever considered this problem properly will admit that there is no hope left that we shall be able to operate these railways on a paying basis, to say nothing of making a profit. I do not propose to go over the whole argument, which has been repeated over and over again. There is one argument, however, which I have not heard anyone make, and have not seen anywhere: the evidence is that every railway in the world under state operation has resulted in a deficit. It is true that in one or two instances, such as Prussia, it has been declared that the operation had resulted in some profit; but that statement was always without investigation, and profits in such cases were always found to be the result of cooking the accounts or charging expenditure to capital account. So that no state operation the world over has ever resulted in anything but a deficit. If that is the case in countries like Prussia, France, England, Belgium, and other European countries, how in the name of common sense can it be held that we can make a success of it in Canada?

Let us look for a moment at the comparison. In Belgium you have a density of population equal to 660 to the square mile; in Prussia it is 400 or 500—I have forgotten the figures, for I am speaking without any preparation at all, as I did not know that this matter was coming up. In England and France the density is about the same, between 400 and 500.

Now, what are these railways in Europe engaged in doing? They have very short distances to travel. What do they carry? Almost altogether manufactured products, upon which the rate of freight is the highest possible, with climatic conditions just about as good as are to be found anywhere in the world; yet they have been operated always at a loss.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: On account of short hauls.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: No, notwithstanding short hauls; not on account, but nothwithstanding.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON: On account of short hauls.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend has his own view, but to my view it is notwithstanding the short haul.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: They are not very short in France or in the United States.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We know what the United States has done in regard to railways. Now, what is the comparison? What are the Canadian railways engaged in carrying? Almost exclusively raw material—very largely, at all events: it is ore, it is lumber, grain, minerals, and so on—for immense distances, and under climatic conditions which are at times very trying. I repeat that if, under conditions which I have described in Europe, loss has occurred, how can it be hoped that we can in this country do better under conditions which are infinitely worse? To me it is a delusion—it is madness of the worst kind —to think that the Government of Canada can operate these railways at any time with profit.

I cannot help repeating what I have said on previous occasions, that this business of government operation, of municipal operation, is utterly un-British: it is against the whole record of British commercial success the world over. It is said that Englishmen and Scotchmen hav taken possession of the world in regard to business. If so, it is because they have cultivated the very opposite of this practice. They have not depended on paternalism. The men who went to Australia and South Africa did not count on paternalism for their success: they counted on themselves—on their individuality, their self-reliance, their courage, their spirit of adventure. That is what has made the British world, commercially, what it is to-day. This business of government operation and municipal operation is nothing but a return to serfdom: it is going back to the Middle Ages, to the time of the guilds and the common mill, etc., which, after all, were not different from these state or municipal organizations.

I have the courage of my opinions. I know there are thousands of business men in this country who think as I do, who know, who feel in their bones that it is a grave mistake to go on year after year attempting to manage and operate these railways; and yet they will not say it. I know of many men who are engaged in public affairs, probably a majority of this House, who share these views, but for some reason or other they will not express them. Is it not about time that the men of business, the men who have inquired into these things, and who know, and are able to come to a reasonable conclusion, should assert themselves, and not simply follow the crowd, which is unreasoning, unthinking, and ignorant, which cries for government operation just as the Romans at the time of the decadence of the Roman Empire cried for bread and circusses. I have always felt that it was the duty of the state to direct public opinion into the proper channels, and not simply follow behind the crowd, which, as I say, is unreasonable and misinformed.

I want to take this opportunity of again putting myself on record; and, if my views have any weight at all I invite those who are willing to think, who are willing to sift evidence, who are willing to make comparisons and find out—I invite them to join with those who have settled and determined opinions on this subject, and see if it is wise to go on day after day, year after year, trying to accomplish the impossible, trying to make a profit out of this business when everybody realizes it cannot be made.

I do not know what success a private company would have to-day if it took over these railways and managed them. Of course, the country has a very great interest in seeing that these railways are operated properly, whether by the Government or privately. But, let me repeat, what is the good of playing the ostrich trick—burying one's head in the sand to let the storm blow over? The storm is raging, and will continue for an indefinite period. After all, the Government is responsible and I would like to see the Government of the day make immediate inquiry to ascertain what remedy, if any, is to be had for the present situation, instead of continuing to allow this Commission under Sir Henry Thornton to administer the railways and indefinitely pile up deficits. Let us get down to business and see if something cannot be done to prevent them. Are we going to tolerate indefinitely an annual deficit of $75,000,000? This country cannot afford to do so. It is nothing but national bankruptcy to go on. This may seem strong language, but I appeal to everybody in this House, is not that the case? How long can this country go on paying these annual deficits? Somebody in another place suggested that the railways should be handed over for fifty cents.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: One dollar.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Nobody would take them at one dollar.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Would not that be far better than for us to continue paying deficits? If any one of us were engaged in any sort of business, mercantile, financial or otherwise, on which there was invariably an annual deficit, we would put a match to it or close it up as soon as possible. Why should we ignore the situation confronting us to-day? Why not get down to business at once and see if something cannot be done to remedy a condition of affairs which threatens the future of this country?

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I understand the honourable gentleman to argue on the premises that the Government own the railways at present, and to contend that they ought to get rid of them. In his opinion, did the Government do right or did they do wrong in taking over the Canadian Northern and in uniting that with the Grand Trunk? If the Government did wrong, what does the honourable gentleman suggest they should have done under the circumstances? Does the honourable gentleman understand what I mean?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: My honourable friend means that I should explain my opinion with regard to the action of the Government in taking over these railways.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Yes, that is one point.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I had the honour of a seat in this House at the time, and I expressed myself in language about as strong, or even violent, as I have used to-day, against the acquisition of the railway or any portion of it. I remember quite well saying that if any private corporation, however important it might be to the commercial life of Canada, were to get into such a position as these railways had got into, I did not think it would occur to anyone that it should be pulled out by having its debts paid. I am quite sure that if my honourable friend were engaged in any kind of business at all and failed, he would not have the gall to come to the Government, either Dominion or Provincial, and ask them to pay his debts and take his property, when the property was really worth absolutely nothing. That is the position I took. There was in my opinion at that time only one thing to do, and that was to let those railways be sold under the hammer, just in the same way as every bankrupt concern is disposed of in this country and every other. That is the solution that should have been adopted at the time.

Hon. W. B. WILLOUGHBY: Honourable gentlemen, I want to discuss for a minute or two the remarks addressed to the House by the honourable member from East Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett). A Commission is now sitting for the purpose of investigating the alleged combine in connection with shipping on the Lakes. Pending the report of that Commission, which is sub judice, I do not desire to enter upon a discussion of the subject at large, and perhaps it would not be quite proper to do so; but there is one measure that I think the Government should take now, or should have taken long ago: it should have the absolute right at any time by Order in Council to abrogate the navigation laws.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Or suspend them?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Perhaps it would be more accurate to say the coasting laws. It is necessary for the Government to vest itself with absolute power to abrogate the coasting laws instantaneously at any time when there is an undue enhancement of rates by a combine. As I understand, without having looked into the question, the Government is not clearly in possession of that right at the present time. I make that statement only hypothetically, for, as I say, I have not examined the question myself.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Does the honourable member think that any shipbuilding industry could prosper in this country if such a permission were granted?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: You would have no ship at all.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Yes, I do; because I believe that any Government in power should recognize its responsibility to all the people and to the larger interests of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Not only those of the shipbuilders.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Who would build ships?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Under provocation, or at any time when rates became excessively high, the coasting laws should be repealed. I would want that power, held by the Government, to be exercised only when the rates became abnormally high. I do question, as the honourable member from East Simcoe did, the propriety of selling those boats at the present time. I do not profess to be an expert on the question, but I think that the loss entailed this year in connection with the Mercantile Marine was not on operation alone, but on the whole upkeep of the Merchant Marine—interest, etc. I think that the loss on operation was only about two or three million dollars. I do not think the Canadian Mercantile Marine should be an ocean combine or a lake combine, whether by a gentleman's agreement or not. When the report of the Commission on lake freights is received, as I hope it will be before Parliament prorogues, it will be my privilege to make some extended remarks on the subject of the grain trade. But I do think that, no matter what may be the recommendations of the Commission, or whether or not there is any recommendation in connection with coasting laws, an Act should be passed before the end of the present Session whereby this country should take power to suspend the operation of the coasting laws at any time when it is in the public interest to do so.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Is the honourable gentleman aware that they were suspended last fall?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: No, I am not.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: Only at the end of the season.

Hon. Mr. BENNETT: On the last trip, when it was useless.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Where did they get the power?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I want the Government to have the unqualified right to do it at any time, and I am quite willing to trust any Government in power not to do injustice to the shipping interests of Canada. I think they have a right to protection and to a reasonable profit.

Hon. L. C. WEBSTER: Why not let the shipbuilders have some protection, like other industries?

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: I think they should have.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: They would not have it if the coasting laws could be repealed. That is a matter entirely different from the question of freight rates.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: They have protection.

Hon. Mr. WEBSTER: They would not have if the coasting laws could be abrogated at any given moment.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: Answering the honourable gentleman, I do not think they require any special protection. It is my idea, however, that reciprocity cannot be one-handed, but must be two-handed, and I am not willing generally to extend to the people of the United States privileges that they will not concede to us. I would answer in that way. We do now enjoy the benefit that accrued to the people of the West—and it was a very large and very material benefit—by the Crowsnest Agreement, and by its extension again last year, but a great deal of the profit that was to inure to the farmers of the West by that new agreement, or the renewal of the old arrangement, was lost by the increase of rates for the transport of grain during the past season.

Hon. J. G. TURRIFF: Honourable gentlemen, I notice that honourable members, in referring to government ownership and operation of railways, place the matter in a very unfair position by saying practically that all trouble that has come to the railways of Canada is due to government ownership and operation, forgetting all the time that every bit of the trouble in connection with Canada's railways has come through the ownership of the railways by private companies, who have built and operated them.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: They did it with Government money.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I have never been a believer in government ownership and operation of railways, but the time came when something had to be done, and it was the general impression that the best thing that could be done was to take over the railroads, and that there would thus be on the whole less loss in the future than would otherwise occur. My honourable friend the senior Senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Belcourt) said it would be better to give them away to anybody who would take them.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Nobody will.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: That would be all very well if you could get anybody to take them, but we have had only one offer: that was from the C.P.R., and it would have been far worse to accept it than to keep the railways. The proposal was to take over the railroads free of their liabilities, and also, coupled with that—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Pay the C.P.R. 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF—to take over the C.P.R. and guarantee—

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: The interest.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: —seven per cent dividends on the common stock, as well as all the interest on all the bonds and preferred stock that had been issued. Under that proposal the C.P.R. would keep all or most of their profitable parts, and the Dominion of Canada would have to pay, not only interest on the debts of the present Government railroads, but also dividends on the C.P.R. I have no doubt those dividends would be earned, for a time at all events. That was the only offer received. I do not think that any country in its senses could ever accept such an offer as that. I heard a member in another House say, "Give them over for one dollar." Yes, I would say, give them over for one dollar if the purchaser will accept all the liabilities and relieve us of a debt of over a billion dollars. But if in giving them away we retain this debt that is hanging over us, we shall have to pay interest on that billion dollars, which would probably mean our paying out more each year than we have to pay on the deficit. So it is just a question of how best we can manage to save something. The loss has been made: there is no question about that. Now, how are we going to get out of the difficulty?

My honourable friend from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) brought forward to-day an interesting matter. If, as he states, it is proposed that the Government pay $1,100,000 for a site for a ticket office in Toronto, when a building eminently suitable can be bought for less money, then I say that the Government will be very much to blame if they allow any board of directors or anybody else to saddle this country with that much further debt which is absolutely unnecessary.

Unless a system of rigid economy is adopted in connection with these railways we shall go from bad to worse. With the interest piling up each year, as stated by my honourable friend from East Simcoe (Hon. Mr. Bennett), it will double in the course of ten years. There is no doubt whatever in my mind that the Government must assume full responsibility for all the expenditures made in connection with Government railroads by the Board of Directors. The Government cannot evade that responsibility, and in assuming it they ought to have the final say as to whether a million dollars shall or shall not be expended on a site for a building, when something better can be done.

Reference has been made to the freight rates on the Lakes. That is one matter in which to my mind, the people of the West have good grounds for complaint against the Government. They have a grievance in regard to the rates on grain, not only on the Lakes but on the ocean as well. Canada built a merchant marine costing $70,000,000. As we understood at the time, the purpose was to enable Canada to send her exports to the Old Country. And what has been the result? After we have spent those 70 millions and when we are facing a loss of almost $10,000,000 a year on that merchant marine, they are put into a combine to force up the freight rates on every single thing that we in Canada have to export to the Old Country. How the Government can square themselves on that I do not know. The reports are not in yet, but the evidence has been published broadcast, and it is absolutely clear that our Canadian ships stood in with the North American combine for the purpose of raising freights, and our own men, representing the Canadian Merchant Marine, were holding meetings in New York to fix freights and keep them high on produce going out of Canada. If anybody thinks our Canadian railways or our merchant ships can be run in that way, they will get a rude awakening when the people realize what is being done. As I pointed out to-day, the farmers of the West were hoping to save several millions of dollars last year by the Crowsnest agreement; but, according to the evidence given on oath before this Commission, every dollar of that saving has been swiped by a couple of Americans—taken right out of the pockets of the farmers, because, as one man stated in evidence, the grain exporter did not bother his head very much with what the rates were: whatever they might be, they were charged back to the farmer. So last year the farmers of the three prairie provinces lost an amount which was just about equal to what was saved by the Crowsnest rates. There must be some way in which the Government can control the freight rates and insurance on the Great Lakes so that two or three Americans cannot sit in New York or Chicago and fix the rates governing the transport of the principal product of this country. The railroads make more money out of hauling wheat than anything else.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: No.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: My honourable friend does not need to say no. The sworn evidence given by the C.PR. officials shows that the months when wheat is being shipped are the months in which the railroads make their big net profit.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: Twelve months.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Will my honourable friend keep quiet for a minute? He does not like that, because he is interested in the transportation of the wheat and does not want to see anything done to interfere with fat dividends.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: We don't get any dividends.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Well, then, they are taken out in other ways. There are lots of ways of killing a cat.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Big salaries.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: Yes, big salaries. I saw by the evidence that Wolvin and Norcross had a meeting together and voted themselves fat salaries for doing nothing. That is the state of affairs to-day. What I am complaining of is not that they are doing that, but that the Government is allowing them to do it.

However, it has been brought to the attention of the Government that the Canadian people are being absolutely robbed on the lakes and on the ocean, and there has got to be a remedy. Now, what is the remedy? That is for the Government to find out, and then apply. Conditions as they exist at present and as they existed last year cannot be allowed to continue, because if they are allowed to continue, nonourable gentlemen, it means to a large extent the depopulation of the West. We cannot live under such conditions, and if the West ever comes to the conclusion that there is no possibility of redress from one Government or another down here, then, I may tell you, there will be a strong secession movement: there is a lot of talk about it now; I hope it will never come to anything; but that is the feeling in the West. So, I say it behooves the Government, now that they have the sworn evidence taken during the last few months of the condition existing to-day, to see that something is done to prevent a continuation of that condition.

Ocean rates have gone up 300 per cent: rates on cattle, for instance, are 300 per cent higher than they were before the war, and the price of beef in the old country has increased not 300, not 200, not 100 per cent, but 66 per cent. Can that condition be allowed to continue? I say it cannot.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask my honourable friend one question—surely he will not say I am concerned in rates on the ocean: are there any ocean ships making money just now, even at those rates?

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: If they are not, it is their own fault; that is what is the matter. They may not be making money on something else, but they are making money on these rates.

My object in making these few remarks is to impress upon the Government the absolute necessity of settling these rates once for all. If we cannot settle them in any other way, it will have to be done by a change in the coasting laws to allow American vessels to come in. Unless something is done there will be worse difficulties and more poverty and more people going out of the country in the immediate years to come than there have been during the past year, which has been very bad indeed.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: We hear so often of the grievances of the West, that I would invite the honourable gentleman to ask for the formation of a committee charged with inquiring as to whether the West has grievances under Confederation, and what they are. In that way we could come to some concrete conclusion in regard to these grievances that we hear of all the time.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: That is easy.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: I can partially answer the honourable gentleman right now. The people of the West have a grievance, for instance, in that the freight on their commodities has ben doubled and trebled. Is that not a grievance? They have a further grievance in that the duties on everything that goes to produce the wheat and cattle are so high that they make it very difficult for the people to get along. The duties have not been reduced. If at the last election, a year and a half ago, the present Prime Minister and Finance Minister had stated to the people: "If we come into power we will take off a total of $1,000,000 of duties, but will so arrange the tariff that the duties will be higher than they were before," or if they had said: "We will not practise any economy, but every department of the Government except one or two will increase their expenditures," does anyone for a moment believe the Government would have been returned to power? Those are the grievances that the people of the West have.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: That they think they have.

Hon. Mr. TURRIFF: They say they have, and I may say to my honourable friend that they are telling the truth. They are grievances that you cannot get over; and, unless something is done to reduce those grievances, there will always be complaints from the West, and justly so.

Hon. GEORGE GORDON: Honourable gentlemen, this debate has developed into a double-barrelled one, although, so far as I can see, it started out single-barrelled. I understand the debate originated with the inquiry of the honourable gentleman from Hamilton (Hon. Mr. Lynch-Staunton) in regard to the proposed purchase of a building by the Canadian National Railways. In that connection let me say that, owing to the present financial condition of the Canadian National Railways, I cannot conceive of any sane Management considering for a moment any such proposition. Suppose the property is acquired at the price mentioned, of $1,100,000, that means a further expenditure of $1,000,000 for the erection of a building. You start out, then, with an annual cost per year to the railway of probably nearly $100,000. What is this for? At the present time the building is being used for selling tickets, and for no other purpose whatever. Why should it ever be used for any other purpose? Before very long the railway will be going into the new Union Station. What does an expenditure of $75,000 or $100,000 a year mean? It means that that amount of money has got to come out of the pockets of the people for transportation. In the interest of the country, would it not be as well if this proposed purchase were not made, and if the railway companies were forced, as one honourable gentleman suggested, to have their ticket-selling offices in their stations?

When the question was asked of the leader of the Government, I did not think for a moment that the answer would be anything but a negative one, because I did not believe that any management of a railway could so utterly disregard their duty as to think of purchasing a property of that kind under such circumstances. But even supposing the railway were a paying proposition, what then? I believe, with the ex-Minister of Railways, that action should be taken by the Government to compel the railways to establish their ticket offices in their stations. I believe that is a right and proper thing to do, and that it will in time tend to reduce railway costs. Even if the reduction were only $75,000 or $100,000 a year, if it were used for the purpose of reducing fares, it would amount to something. Therefore, I regard that as a very proper suggestion, and one which I think should receive the best consideration of the Government.

From the time of the change of management of this railroad, and even up to now, I have been under the impression that we had at the head of the railway, in Sir Henry Thornton, a man who was capable of handling that road; but if this proposition should be carried out, I am sorry to say that my opinion, whatever it is worth, would be materially changed and changed at once. Toronto has been waiting for I don't know how many years to get the new Union Station into operation. Just what the reasons are that that station is not being used for the purposes for which it was built, I do not know; there is some trouble in connection with the subways; but I have always been under the impression that the railways were not prepared at the time or did not want to spend the money which they would be called upon to expend in order to put the station in operation. If that had anything at all to do with it, it seems absurd for one of the parties to the agreement, the Canadian National Railways, to think of investing $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 in something which can be dispensed with entirely. A ticket office is not like a grocery store, a hardware store, or even a bank. When people go into a ticket office they go there to purchase something about which they made up their minds yesterday or the day before, or perhaps two weeks ago. There are no bargains offered; the prices of the tickets have been fixed weeks, months, perhaps years in advance, and people do not go into a particular office just because it happens to be on a prominent corner. Therefore I would ask the leader of the Government to bring this matter to the attention of the Government. We hear a great deal about the inadvisability of the Government interfering with a Board of the nature of the one operating this railway, but I think if there ever was a time when the Government might interfere, it would be on an occasion of this kind. I therefore ask my honourable friend to do what he can to prevent such a deal going through.

Hon. F. L. SCHAFFNER: We have listened to a very interesting, very useful, and very necessary discussion here to-day. Personally I am very much pleased and I would like to see many more such discussions, because I believe we have plenty of time and plenty of ability to discuss many matters the discussion of which would be of some benefit to the country.

I rise to ask permission to adjourn the debate, as I have a few things I would like to say.

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Honourable gentlemen, I would like to point out to the House that this whole discussion has been very irregular. Of course, it was done on the request of the leader of the Government, and nobody raised objection. The question is on the expropriation. If the honourable gentleman wishes to discuss this question it is in order for him to move the adjournment of the debate, but I think it would be more regular for him to make a distinct motion of his own.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I would not ask to have it stand, Mr. Speaker, unless I intended to discuss the question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: His Honour the Speaker reminds the House that the inquiry is as to the purchase of a piece of land at Toronto. The discussion has taken a much wider range, and His Honour draws attention to the fact that the question is limited to that point.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I think that very many of the honourable Senators present recognize that we have not been in order. We have been out of order most of the afternoon; but since we have been so long out of order, personally I do not think it would be any great crime to be out of order a little while longer.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Do you say that as a medical man?

On motion of Hon. Mr. Schaffner, the debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

MOTION

Hon. G. H. BARNARD moved:

That at least two of the vessels now owned by the Government be placed on service between British Columbia in the west and Quebec ports during summer months and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick ports in the winter months, for the purpose of assisting in the development of our Natural Resources, and to increase the interprovincial trade between Eastern Canada and Western Canada, and that such service shall be increased as business demands.

He said: In presenting this motion I think it is somewhat fortunate that we have had such an extended discussion this afternoon on the question of the Canadian Merchant Marine, because the facts which have been stated by several gentlemen will be fresh in our memories.

In presenting this resolution I do so with the desire of calling the attention of the House to what I consider a grave mistake in policy on the part of the Government: that is, the policy of endeavouring to force the flow of trade in the country through unnatural channels rather than through the natural and easier channels. I think I can demonstrate to the House that the effect of that policy is not to increase the amount of freight which is carried by the railways, or to augment their revenue, but rather that it has the effect of diverting a very considerable amount of freight from this country altogether, and causing the purchase in Great Britain or the United States of a large quantity of merchandise which in the ordinary course of events, were the freight allowed to go by sea carriage rather than by rail, would be bought in Canada.

Honourable gentlemen must recognize what a tremendous effect upon the trade of this country the Panama Canal has had since it was opened. Owing to the war, the effect of that new route was not felt on the Pacific coast for some years; but the increase in shipping at all ports of the Pacific coast during the past year or two has been most marked. I do not intend to labour this question, but in this connection would simply quote some figures which were given to the House of Commons in a resolution which was moved there the other day by the member for Burrard.

In 1913 the number of sea-going vessels which entered the port of Vancouver was 132; in 1920 it was 333; in 1921 it was 496; and in 1922 it was 717. The imports into Canada via the Panama Canal in 1921 amounted to 20,416 tons; in 1922, 149,553 tons, or a gain of about 700 per cent in 12 months.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: Are those the imports into British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. BARNARD: Into British Columbia, via the Panama Canal. Now, there has been an agitation for some years past by the merchants of the Pacific coast that the Dominion Government should appoint a Customs Officer at New York. The object in asking for that appointment is that on certain classes of merchandise which can be carried very much cheaper by water than by rail, if they were purchased in Eastern Canada and shipped to New York, and thence by sea through the Panama Canal, those goods, coming into Canada again, would have to pay the same duty as if they had been purchased in the United States; whereas if a Customs Officer had been appointed and resided in New York, the goods could cross to New York in bond, and no duty would be payable at the other end. The Government—both the late Government and the present one, I am informed—has consistently refused to make any such appointment, the object being to endeavour to force freight across the continent by rail. Now, as to the effect of that, I cannot give you a better concrete instance than one that I see quoted in a letter which I noticed in the Mail and Empire of Saturday, the 28th ultimo signed "J. P. McConnell." Who that gentleman is I am not aware, but his letter is so germane to the subject, and he puts the argument so well, that I have not the slightest hesitation in adopting his argument as my own. His letter reads as follows:

Appoint a Customs Agent at New York

To the Editor of The Mail and Empire:

Sir,—In the last sentence of your editorial on "The Vancouver Grain Route," you put your finger on a point which is rapidly assuming important proportions in the problems of transportation and trade between Eastern and Western Canada.

You say: "The customs ruling that Canadian products shipped by the canal from Nova Scotia or Montreal to Vancouver must pay duty because they touch a foreign port will not last long if the trade necessities of the Western half of the Dominion drive them to purchase water-borne goods form the United States instead of from Eastern Canada."

May I point out that western buyers are to-day being forced into the United States markets because duty has to be paid to United States Customs on goods originating in Eastern Canada for Western Canadian consumption, and vice versa.

Quite recently the Premier Mine in B.C. was about to place an order in Owen Sound for twelve tons of grinding balls but found that the United States tariff interposed a trade barrier between Eastern and Western Canada. The cost of over-land freight made it impossible for the Owen Sound producer to compete with western foundries in the United States. Conversely, British Columbia salmon shipped to Halifax via the Panama Canal must pay duty to the United States. During the past two years many instances of lost trade between Eastern and Western Canada could be cited.

The reason for this situation is that Canada has no Customs agent in New York. With a Canadian customs agent to look after Canadian interests, no duties would have to be paid on goods shipped either east or west via the Panama Canal.

That Canadian shippers labor under the present handicap is not the fault or blame of the United States Government. The remedy lies in the hands of the Canadian Government and it can be quickly and easily effected by the appointment of a Canadian Customs agent in New York.

It may be argued that the diversion of eastbound or westbound Canadian trade through the canal will be inimical to the interests of the Canadian railways.

But is it? In the case of the Owen Sound order, both the Eastern manufacturer and the Canadian railways lost the business and this is happening every day. In any event, it will be useless to penalize Canadian producers, east or west, in order to protect the railways because in the end such penalties will only react against both the railways and shippers by the loss of business to the United States. Canadian railways will have to adjust themselves to the changed conditions wrought by the building of the canal, just as United States railways have had to do. In the case of the Canadian railways, this adjustment up to the present has not been pressing because of the protecting barrier of the United States tariff at New York, due to the fact that Canada has no customs agent at that point.

Nevertheless, the time is at hand when Canadian railways must establish new traffic zones to conform to the competitive water-borne rates of east and westbound Canadian traffic through the canal.

Already we see a west-bound grain zone via Vancouver and other year or two will see the boundary line of grain traffic between Vancouver and Fort William definitely drawn.

The Panama Canal as a factor in Canadian trade must be recognized just as it has been recognized by United States railways and in the grain trade of Western Canada. No fortuitous handicap on shippers created by the neglect of the Government in appointing the necessary official in New York can be longer tolerated. Canadian shippers must enjoy the benefits of the canal equally with those of the United States, and Canadian railways can and will adjust their traffic zones to meet the new conditions just as United States railways have done.

Yours, etc,

J. P. McConnell.

I have also a letter, written to myself by a gentleman in Victoria who has given this question a great deal of attention. He quotes certain facts and figures which I think it very important to lay before the House. He states:

I believe that the question of cheap water transportation from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast is the outstanding Commercial problem of British Columbia to-day. The securing of cheap water transportation would not alone place a large additional volume of business with the Eastern Canadian manufacturers that is now going to foreign countries, but would in addition put materials in the hands of the consumers of British Columbia at such greatly reduced figures as would curtail the cost of supplies to an extent that would materially reduce the operating expenses of mines, mills, smelters, logging camps and the general consumer as well.

The Dominion Sheet Metal Works at Hamilton produce a high grade of galvanized sheet, yet 98 per cent of the garvanized sheets imported into British Columbia come from the United States or Great Britain. The Steel Company of Canada and the Dominion Iron and Steel Company do not sell 20 per cent of the bars consumed in British Columbia, thousands of tons are coming in every year by water from Belgium, England, and the United States. I could give you examples ad infinitum.

The Railway Companies, under the pretense of meeting this water competition, have made some reduction on staple goods, reducing the rate on bar iron to 65 cents, and on nails and wire to 75 cents, and on pipe to $1.00 per 100 lbs. These rates will not compete with the rate of 30 cents from Liverpool to here, or a rate of 30 cents or less if necessary, made by the U. S. Steel Corporation from New York to Victoria and Vancouver by their own steamers.

My correspondent encloses a letter which he wrote some time ago to Mr. R. H. McMaster, general manager of the Steel Company of Canada, which reads as follows:

Referring to our conversation together on Friday, in reference to the question of water competition from New York and Canadian Transcontinental freight rates in general, I am, as requested by you, writing herewith in reference to the subject.

There has, during the last few months, been an enormous reduction in freight rates from New York via the Panama Canal, to Pacific Coast points. This reduction in many cases amounts to as much as 75 per cent. Until recently, American freight rates by water were either in carload or less than carload lots 60 per cent of the Transcontinental rail rate, and even at these rates it was difficult in many cases for Canadian manufacturers to compete; but, with the recent reductions that have been put into effect, we do not see how it is going to be possible for the Canadian manufacturer to market his goods on this Coast in competition with the United States; and further, we do not see how it is possible for the Canadian railways to reduce their rates to a point that will enable them to compete with the water transportation.

This position has been realized by the American railways, who are making no effort to meet the competition, and 90 per cent of iron, steel, and light and heavy hardware is to-day moving from the Atlantic to the Pacific by water, and there is no difference between the rates, either in carload or less than carload lots.

Then follows a list of different articles, showing the rates from New York to Vancouver or Victoria to be something like one-half or less than one-half by sea as compared with the rates by rail for carload lots, and very much less for less than carload lots. For instance, the rate on chain by sea for a carload or less than carload is 30 cents per 100 pounds, while for a carload by rail it is $1.54 and for less than carload lots, $2.76. The whole schedule is full of contrasts just as marked as that. He then goes on to say:

You must remember that the United States Steel Corporation operate their own line of steamers from New York to Victoria and Vancouver and they are in a position to practically name any freight rate which they might find necessary to enable them to secure a share of the business.

The statement by the Canadian Railways that they have coped with the situation in every case that has been brought up, is absolutely incorrect. They put in a rate on bar iron of 60 cents with a three months' limit. At the expiration of three months they raised this rate to 75 cents. At the 60 cent rate iron could be laid down from Montreal and Hamilton for $2.55 when the rate went up the cost was $2.70. We showed the C.P.R. officials that English iron could be laid down for $2.45, and told them that if they would keep the 60 cent rate in force, we would give our Canadian mills the preference of $2.00 per ton, but that if the advanced rate was instituted, we simply could not pay a price of $2.70. We know of several orders aggregating hundreds of tons that were held over, pending the decision of the C.P.R. and when they refused to continue the rate, the business went to Great Britain.

A considerable quantity of iron pipe has been brought in from the United States to Coast points, because the Canadian rate is $1.00 per 100 pounds, and the Steel Corporation are making a rate from Pittsburgh via New York to here of 62 cents per hundred pounds, namely 38 cents from Pittsburgh to New York and 24 cents from New York to here.

The Dominion Sheet Metal Works are producing galvanized sheets in Hamilton and the rate in force is $1 per 100 pounds. The entire sheet iron business of this Coast is being supplied from Great Britain at a rate of 25 shillings, or from the United States Steel Corporation at a rate of 40 cents from New York to here.

We recently had an order placed for 35 tons of shafting, and we showed the C.P.R. that we could get a rate from New York of 40 cents per 100 pounds against a Canadian rate of $1.54 per 100 pounds. We asked for a reduction to $1 per 100 pounds and showed the C.P.R. that even paying charge for boxing and casing on the American article, we could, on account of the difference in rates, lay the American material down for nearly 10 per cent less than the Canadian article. At their request we held our order back a week, and were then advised that they could make no alteration in the rate.

We are distributors for British Columbia for the Banwell Hoxie Company, and do a considerable business for them. We are obliged to pay a rate on all their products of $1.54 per 100 pounds as against a rate from New York of 40 cents per 100 pounds, and we could bring in the American material in lawn fencing and gates at very much lower than their costs laid down.

There is a ship running from New York to Vancouver and Victoria every month of the year, loaded down with steel products, a large portion of which is destined for this province, and tens of thousands of tons a year are being brought in by these boats and by the ships that are coming in from Great Britain and Antwerp every week or two.

The situation is still more difficult on light hardwares, where it is impossible to ship in carload lots from eastern Canada, and where the rate is from six to ten times as great as the American cost. It not alone makes it impossible for the Canadian manufacturers to get this market, but it makes it exceedingly difficult for the jobbers out here to compete with Seattle, where their entire product is being moved from the east at rates ranging from 30 to 75 cents per 100 pounds.

Dealing with the solution of this problem, the quickest and most simple solvent is a Customs Officer in New York. The view taken by the railways and the Government that this would deflect freight from the railways, is inoorrect, because they are not getting the business at the present time so that traffic will not be taken away from them, and it would at least by the solution suggested, bring a vast increase of business to the Canadian manufacturers, and would give our Canadian Railways at least additional haul in raw material to the manufacturers and a big tonnage moving towards the port of New York.

He also encloses resolutions of the Board of Trade as follows:

Whereas the Pacific Coast of British Columbia is able to import material and supplies from Great Britain and the continent of Europe at a water freight rate of approximately Thirty Shillings per ton, and

Whereas regular steamers are operating from New York via the Panama Canal at rates varying from 30 cents to 40 cents per 100 pounds, and

Whereas the Panama Canal route offers the opportunity of water transportation between the manufacturing centres of Eastern Canada and the Pacific Coast of British Columbia on a competitive basis with the aforementioned, and

Whereas the Transcontinental Railway haul cannot be competitive with the aforesaid foreign competition, and

Whereas a large tonnage and value of merchandise is brought in from such foreign competition which should rightfully belong to the industries of the Dominion,

Be it therefore resolved that the Dominion Government be requested to utilize a portion of its Canadian Merchant Marine to supply regular sailings from Montreal and Halifax to Pacific Coast ports, with the object of developing and building up the manufacturing industries of this Dominion which at present are being sacrified by the lack of adequate water transportation.

To show that the gentleman who wrote that letter is not exaggerating the situation, I got some figures from the Customs Department here, and find that for the fiscal year ending 31st March there were imported into the ports of Victoria and Vancouver from Great Britain and the United States, roughly, $1,500,000 worth of heavy iron and steel, all of which should and could have been bought in Eastern Canada.

Now, while, as I have said, the Government have refused heretofore to appoint a Customs officer in New York, the late Government—or rather the Minister of Railways in the late Government, who now occupies a seat in this House—did promise that he would use some ships of the Canadian Merchant Marine, and put them on the route between Montreal and Vancouver in summer and between Maritime Province ports and Vancouver in the winter months. That is the promise we are now asking the Government to implement.

Surely there must be a very large Canadian coasting trade to be done with the countries between the Atlantic coast and Vancouver. I find that in Cuba, Panama, Nicaragua, Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras there is a population of some 8,000,000, with a total trade of $1,500,000 a year. Surely there is coasting trade to be picked up there by our ships.

In writing to the Department of Railways on this subject, I have received a letter written to Mr. Yates by the President of the Canadian National Railways, discussing this question, in which he states:

The position of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine is as follows:

(1) Present conditions do not warrant the operation of Canadian Government Merchant Marine vessels between ports in British Columbia and Quebec in the summer and the Maritime Provinces in the winter, as, while the ships would likely secure full cargoes of lumber from Pacific to Atlantic ports, very little general traffic would be handled between such ports. On the return journey, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there are no prospects of business, so that the trade would be practically a one-way arrangement, and, as freight rates would not be equal on the one-way cargo to meet the ships' expenses, a serious loss would be bound to occur.

(2) To obtain the best possible results, even under the conditions of a one-way proposition, ships of the type of 8,100 tons would require to be placed in service. All such ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine are already engaged in trades from which they cannot be withdrawn without disruption of services and loss of advantages already gained.

In regard to that, I say there is in the first place an admission on the part of the Management of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine that full cargoes could be had by going from west to east. It would be interesting to know what attempt has been made to ascertain what cargoes could be obtained from the East and the West. Certainly the figures that I have quoted with regard to the imports of heavy iron and steel would show that there is a considerable amount of business in that direction, and, as I say, considering the wealth and prosperity of the Central American Republics, Cuba, and the West Indies, there must be a large amount of coasting trade to be picked up.

In December I made the trip myself from San Francisco to Baltimore in one of the ships of the line operated by the Pacific Coast Mail Steamship Company. Not only did we have a full passenger list, but we were loading and discharging cargo at every one of the eight ports of call on the way round. If the American lines can do that, there is no reason in the world why the Canadian Government Marine cannot do likewise.

Another objection that was raised was that it would require ships of the type of 8,000 tons. The only answer I can make to that is that the ship that I came in was one of three operated by the same company, and not one of them was over 3,500 tons, and they were able to make the business pay. I submit that, considering that the Government have ships for which they apparently have no use and which they want to sell, they would certainly be doing something in the direction of developing trade between Eastern and Western Canada by putting ships on this route, and at any rate feeling it out for a year or two to see what could be done in the premises.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, the debate was adjourned.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Senate go into Committee on Bill 72, an Act to Prohibit the Improper Use of Opium and other Drugs.

He said: Honourable gentlemen, before we go into Committee on this Bill, I beg to give notice that on Tuesday next I will move:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that they will concur in the appointment of a joint-committee, to be composed of an equal number of members not exceeding five of each House to consider the following matters:

1. The form of Bills and the best means of affording information and assistance in the consideration thereof at all stages of legislation in both Houses of Parliament.

2. The better distribution of the work of legislation between the two Houses.

3. The practical operation of the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, Chapter 10, respecting the attendance of Senators and Members of the House of Commons, and the expediency of making any alterations in those provisions.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Has the honourable leader of the Government looked into section 4 of this Bill? In moving the second reading he stated that he would look into it to see if a change was not desirable.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Should not that be dealt with in Committee?

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I want the information from the honourable gentleman himself, as to whether he has considered the point and intends offering any amendment of that section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We shall deal with each section in turn, and we can discuss that point when section 4 is under consideration.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I would like to ask—

The Hon. the SPEAKER: Would it not be better to go into Committee, honourable gentlemen?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This is a very important Bill. Are we going to have before us something that will show what are the proposed changes, especially in the sections beginning at 14.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But I intend to move an amendment. When we come to clause 14 in Committee we can discuss it and amend it in accordance with the wish of the majority.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: But we are going into Committee without the proper information.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We shall proceed from one clause to another, and we shall discuss each of them.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Is it not a violation of our rules not to have this properly printed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I realize that there are before us a certain number of Bills which do not conform with the recommendation which was adopted by the Senate. That recommendation was not converted into a rule of the House. We can postpone consideration of those Bills for a certain number of days, and ask that in the meantime the various departments concerned prepare memoranda. On the other hand, we might take up the work before us, trusting that the joint committee for which I have moved may improve the situation by applying a rule equally to both branches of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: This is a matter which I think the Senate should not consider blindly. Very important principles of law are involved in these sections, and it is altogether impossible for us, without having the sections before us, to know what we are doing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I will answer my honourable friend as to section 14, so that he may see that the situation will be considerably clarified. I intend moving to strike out the letter (b) in the second line. Then I move to strike out "that he did not commit the offence nor," and that would make the clause read:

The onus shall be upon the accused to establish that he had lawful authority to commit the act complained of—

So if he relies upon a permit that he has, he will have to produce the permit. The onus will be upon him to prove the exemption which he will plead.

—or that he had a license from the Minister authorizing such act.

This provision was in the Act of 1921, but last year, I am informed, it was dropped in error.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The honourable leader will understand that from a lawyer's point of view that is utterly unnecessary, because once you establish that a man has done an act you have made a prima facie case; then the onus is on him to exculpate himself by producing evidence. Why should we put into the statute provisions that make it a laughing-stock?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But why does my honourable friend insist on discussing this point, which is a clear one, on a motion to go into Committee. It is in Committee that we should discuss any question relating to section 14.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The only reason I am raising the question is that, for myself—and I think there are others here of the same opinion—I want to be in such a position that when we are asked to pass a Bill containing clauses which are absolutely contradictory to British jurisprudence, I shall know exactly what we are doing. I think it is only proper that members of the Senate who are opposed to such clauses should have before them the law as it stands, in order that they may present an intelligible argument against these proposed sections.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Does the honourable gentleman ask that we postpone consideration of this Bill in Committee and obtain a memorandum explaining the amendment?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I have no objection to the consideration of the Bill, excepting that portion from clause 14 onward.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Those sections may be reserved.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If the honourable leader will say that those clauses will not be considered until we have a memorandum, I am quite content that we should go into Committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: I think that question should be considered when the Committee of the Whole is dealing with the Bill. If the honourable member shows good reason for it, there is no doubt that the House will allow the section to stand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, we may suspend consideration of them.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Very well.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate went into Committee on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Donnelly in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that the Department can give us a number of copies of a memorandum bearing on this Act and the amendments that are proposed. I shall have those copies in a few moments. My honourable friend can have this one.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Thank you.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Would my honourable friend point out, as we proceed with the sections, the changes proposed in the present law?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Certainly.

Section 1 was agreed to.

On section 2—interpretation:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I move to amend subsection (c) of the interpretation clause by adding the word "opium" after the word "prepared."

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How about paragraphs (a) and (b)? Are those the law as it stands?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes. There is no change in (a).

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Why do you want to add the word "opium" after "prepared."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: If the word "opium" is added after the word "prepared," subsection (c) will read:

"Prepared opium or smoking opium" means the product of raw opium, obtained by a series of special operations...

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: There are two different substances, known as prepared opium and smoking opium?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes. This amendment is proposed in order to bring Canada into line with the terms of the International Opium Convention. We are forbidding the import or export of prepared or smoking opium. Article 7 of the International Opium Convention says:

The contracting powers shall prohibit the import and export of prepared opium. Those powers, however, which are not yet ready to prohibit immediately the export of prepared opium shall prohibit it as soon as possible.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does that section deal with smoking opium? You mention only prepared opium.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, altogether.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: As I understand, there is a distinction between the two, and clause 7 refers only to prepared opium?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Prepared opium and smoking opium are the same thing.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I understood they were different things.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: If they are the same, why do you add the word "opium?"

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Does the International Convention deal with both prepared and smoking opium? Are they distinct or are they practically the same?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Prepared opium is smoking opium.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Then why add the words "prepared opium?"

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Why use the two terms?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It is simply to make it clear.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Clear? Clear as mud.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: According to the definition, "prepared opium" means:

The product of raw opium, obtained by a series of special operations, especially by dissolving, boiling, roasting and fermentation, designed to transform it into an extract suitable for consumption. "Prepared opium" includes dross and all other residues remaining when opium has been smoked.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then what is smoking opium?"

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Apparently the smoking opium must be a prepared opium.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then why use the two terms?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Because the two are used in the traffic.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Then why not state that the terms are synonymous if they are?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: They are not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: We are now defining "prepared opium or smoking opium" to mean the product of raw opium. So the definition covers both expressions.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: It strikes me that the meaning is this: prepared opium includes the residue of smoking opium, but the smoking opium does not include the residue. That is probably the reason for the two definitions.

Hon. Mr. CURRY: The last line of subsection (c) plainly states that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that "prepared" opium is the expression used in Europe, whereas in Canada the expression popularly used is "smoking opium," but they are the same thing.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: But what seems to me inconsistent is that in subsection (b) you have in the definition "opium prepared for smoking," and then in (c) you have "prepared or smoking opium" as meaning something else.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Both are included.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: That is done in order to conform to the International Convention.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I do not think you have conformed to it. What about (c)?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No change. And there is no change in (d). Subsection (g) is new:

"Minister" means the Minister presiding over the Department of Health for the time being,

This term is used in the Bill in order to shorten the designation of the Minister.

"Dominion Analyst" was not defined before. The purpose of subsection (h) is to define him.

Subsection (i) is to define "Provincial analyst," inasmuch as the Department intends to employ, and does employ, the Provincial analyst. The Department has only five laboratories, and this will enable the Provincial analyst to analyze wherever it is deemed opportune for him to do so. That will save time and expense.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: On account of the very general interpretation placed on that term, I would ask if an analyst is capable of analyzing all subsances? Can there not be a Provincial analyst who would be incapable of analyzing drugs, etc.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: All drugs under this act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But it does not necessarily follow that the analyst is capable of analyzing this particular class of drugs. If you place an interpretation on a provincial analyst you should define him as an analyst capable of doing this particular work. He might be a mineralogist, or something of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is meant to cover places where the Dominion has no laboratory, and considerable expense and time are saved by engaging the provincial analyst, who is supposed to have the necessary qualifications to deal with substances under this Act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: He should have.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: It should not be supposed at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am informed that they have.

Section 2, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 3—Minister may issue licenses, make regulations therefore and prescribe fees:

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is new. Wherein are the changes to be found in this section?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: In the first part there is no change; the change is in the second part.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I notice that you do not distinguish smoking opium in that section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I am now just about to do it. I move to amend this subsection by adding after the words "prepared opium," in line 25, the words "smoking opium."

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Has the ordinary retail druggist to obtain a license?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: How does he get it?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: He has to obtain the license to import, but not to handle these goods in Canada.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I think the ordinary retail druggist does not, as a rule, import.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No: he buys from the wholesale druggist.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: Is the retail druggist required to pay a license?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, unless he manufactures.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: Who may import?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The prohibition is absolute

Section 3, as amended, was agreed to.

On section 4—Offences and penalties:

Paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) were agreed to.

On paragraph (e)—sale, etc., to minor:

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: To my mind that is a very peculiar provision, for it says that any person who "unlawfully sells, gives away or distributes any drug to any minor"— shall be guilty of a criminal offence, and shall be liable upon indictment to imprisonment for any term not exceeding seven years, or upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and costs and not less than two hundred dollars and costs, and to imprisonment for any term not exceeding eighteen months and not less than six months; provided that notwithstanding the provisions of section ten hundred and twenty-eight of the Criminal Code, or of any other statute or law, the Court shall have no power to impose less than the minimum penalties.

The logical conclusion of that is that if a man is tried by a judge he may get 7 years in penitentiary, or he may get one day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, my honourable friend is in error. There is a proviso that states:

Provided that notwithstanding the provisions of section 1028 of the Criminal Code, or of any other statute or law, the Court shall have no power to impose less than the minimum penalties herein prescribed, and shall, in all cases of conviction, impose both fine and imprisonment; provided further that any person who commits an offence under paragraph (e) of this section shall be proceeded against by indictment, and not summarily, and shall, at the discretion of the Judge, be liable to whipping in addition to the penalties hereinbefore provided.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: That is where the trial is before a magistrate; but where it is before a judge he is liable to seven years. Then it goes on to say that upon summary conviction he may not get less than the minimum penalty. Why do you make that distinction, if the crime is one that should be punished by seven years imprisonment? So it all depends on who tries the case. If the accused is tried before a magistrate he cannot get more than 18 months, but if tried before a judge he may get seven years imprisonment.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The amendment to the section is that if the Crown wishes to proceed against him for the seven years they must indict him, but if not, they can bring him up before a magistrate. The difficulty I see is this: has the accused a right to elect?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Then the Crown may choose whether they will proceed against him summarily or by indictment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Then, if the Crown considers the crime sufficiently grave, they may indict him, but if they consider it less grave they may bring him up for summary conviction.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: If my honourable friend's contention is correct, the Act says that the judge can give him seven years, but if a police magistrate tries him summarily he cannot give him less than the minimum sentence, which is six months and a fine.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: The point is that the Crown may prosecute a wholesale opium bootlegger, and may want to give him seven years, and therefore may think that a magistrate should not try such a man on such a serious offence.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: But your argument falls to the ground, because the judge must not give him seven years, but may give him one day. The judge has discretion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: No, the judge cannot give him less than the minimum.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: Are you quite sure of that? I do not read it that way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The word "court" is defined in the interpretation section.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: I do not read it that way; but why should there be any difference in the sentence for the crime simply because the accused is tried before one man or the other? I called the attention of the leader of the Government to this section on the second reading of the Bill, and he promised to look into it and if necessary propose an amendment. I suggest that this clause be amended to say that the accused shall be liable to seven years in the penitentiary, whoever tries him.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I think the honourable gentleman is quite right, but it seems to me that either the summary conviction should be changed, or this clause should be changed to make it a minimum.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no change in the Act. The minimum is six months imprisonment and a fine of $200.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It is not by that section. There is no minimum at all.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Is not the meaning of the first part of this section that in every case, whether the case is tried under indictment or upon summary conviction, the penalty shall not be less than what is respectively fixed for the indictment or the summary conviction? That is the way I read it.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Read it again.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It reads thus:

Shall be guilty of a criminal offence, and shall be liable upon indictment to imprisonment for any term not exceeding seven years, or upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and costs and not less than two hundred dollars and costs, and to imprisonment for any term not exceeding eighteen months and not less than six months.

In the case of an indictment the penalty is seven years.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Not exceeding seven years. It might be one day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes, but there is a proviso.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: The proviso in reference to that is:

Provided that notwithstanding the provisions of section 1028 of the Criminal Code—

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: What are those?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: That proviso applies only to the second part of the section, the conviction.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Does the court there mean either the judge who is trying under summary conviction or the court under indictment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Yes.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: That is, notwithstanding the Criminal Code; but that does not qualify the first part of this section.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: It is comprehensive in this sense, that it includes both courts.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: No.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I think so. The Interpretation Act would bear that out.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: There is no minimum term prescribed. It is a very easy matter to fix this. I suggest that you say, "Not exceeding seven years and not less than two years."

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: That might fix it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is no objection, but the Department of Justice is of opinion that the word "minimum" covers the two instances.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: With all due deference to the Department of Justice, I do not think any court would so consider it.

Hon. Mr. McMEANS: It says that he shall be liable on indictment up to seven years. Supposing the judge who tries the man thinks he ought to go to penitentiary for five years, and gives him five years, does he also impose a fine? Has he power to impose a fine? Or does he follow the Act where it says there shall be in addition to imprisonment the imposition of a fine? I understood the imposing of the fine was within the jurisdiction of the police magistrate, and not that of the judge. In the case of the judge the penalty is fixed at seven years, and it does not say a fine shall be added to that. In the case of the magistrate, it says that a fine shall be imposed as well as imprisonment. You give the judge no authority to impose the fine.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me very important that we should not pass a Bill here that would be ridiculous if it came before a court. It is absolutely clear that this section provides only for a penalty not exceeding seven years—which means that it may be only one or two years, or one hour. Why not state the minimum, and say not exceeding seven years, or two years, or one year?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The Department has no objection to that suggestion.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: Then my honourable friend will suggest also, I suppose, in order to make it logical, that the imprisonment in every case be accompanied by the fine? Let us look at the last part of this section:

> The Court shall have no power to impose less than the minimum penalties herein prescribed.

Hon. Mr. WILLOUGHBY: What is the minimum penalty on an indictment?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: We have not got it, but my honourable friend suggests that it be put in, and I agree with that, but should it not also provide for the fine? It says that the court shall not have power to impose less than the minimum penalty herein prescribed—that is, in every case—and shall in all cases of conviction impose both fine and imprisonment. That implies that the punishment under indictment is both a fine and imprisonment.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I suggest that the Department divide this section into two paragraphs, so that it cannot be bedevilled by the way it is drawn. Let them make clear what they mean.

Hon. Mr. PARDEE: Better let this clause stand.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say that the Department of Justice was consulted yesterday on the very point raised by my honourable friend from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. McMeans), and that they were of opinion that the section as now framed was workable, but there is no objection to suspending paragraph e for redrafting after consultation with the Department.

Paragraph (e) stands.

Sections 5, 6 and 7 were agreed to.

On section 8—not keeping record:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There are a few words added to this clause which are of no special importance. They are the words:

> Or to furnish to the Department of Health any information required by that Department.

Section 8, as amended, was agreed to.

Section 9 was agreed to.

On section 10—possession of opium pipes, opium lamps, or other device, without permit, forbidden:

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I would like to draw attention to a curious case which may arise under this section. Many people have in their possesion Chinese curios, and if they have a pipe, whether for smoking or not, they are liable to be sent to jail for having it in their possession.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: One may have a permit.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: People buy these things as curiosities and put them in a glass case. It does not matter whether or not they ever saw any opium, the mere fact of possession will send them to the penitentiary.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I am interested in this, because I brought home some Chinese curios in 1921, and I want to know whether the honourable gentleman from Hamilton is correct.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: This is a clause which we passed last year with the consent of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: We should not have passed it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I understand that it is very necessary.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Any spiteful person might bring up anybody who has these things merely as curios. There should be something to show that the possession of them is for a purpose.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: They are imported for the purpose of smoking opium.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SCHAFFNER: I did not import it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: But there are very few visitors to China who do not import these things as curios. If they do, they will have to conform to this Act.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: But you propose striking out the appeal.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: It seems to me a very reasonable provision that a man should get a permit if he chooses to keep a curio of that kind; otherwise it would be an excuse for a man having a pipe in his possession and using it for the purpose of smoking opium. It is a very simple matter for the honourable member from Boissevain (Hon. Mr. Schaffner) to get a permit.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I understand there is no charge for it.

Section 10 was agreed to.

On section 11—smoking opium:

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is a change there in regard to the fine, the words being:

To a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs.

That is altered from fifty dollars in order to conform to section 12.

Section 11 was agreed to.

On section 12—being in opium resort:

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: How are you going to distinguish a place that may be used as an opium resort at certain times, but not, as a matter of fact, always, or one that is used only for that purpose? If a person should be in such a place quite innocently, under this section he would, presumably, be fined and imprisoned.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Suppose persons are going on what they call slumming visits to Chinese quarters in any town—simply going in to look and satisfy their curiousity—would that be considered a reasonable and lawful excuse?

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: I think it is a very proper clause. If my honourable friend goes there he should be fined.

Hon. Mr. DANIEL: I do not think "opuim resort" appears in the interpretation clause at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: There is a definition of "opium resort" in the Criminal Code, but we shall have a Bill before us seeking to strike that out, because it has been found impossible to establish the existence of an opium resort. The Act now leaves it open to the Crown to indict—

Every person who, without lawful and reasonable excuse, is found in any house, room or place to which persons resort for the purpose of smoking or inhaling opium.

That has been the law since 1911.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE: Would it not be better to use the word "resorting"? I am afraid that under the wording of clause 12 it will be necessary to establish that an opium resort is a place to which persons are resorting to smoke opium, whereas it should not be limited to that.

Section 10 was agreed to.

Sections 11, 12, and 13 were agreed to.

On section 14—onus of proof on charge of importing, exporting, etc., without license:

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: This section says:

The onus shall be upon the accused to establish that he did not commit the offence.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: I may say to my honourable friend that the Bill was not brought to the House of Commons in that form: it was amended in Committee by adding what I will move to strike out. I do not know whether the Commons will accept our rejection of their amendment, but I will move:

That section 14 be amended by striking out the letter (b) from the second line, and by striking out the words "that he did not commit the offence or."

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE E. FOSTER: What are the reasons?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: I do not see any necessity for that section at all: practice provides for that. If a man is charged, and a prima facie case is made out, it is up to him to prove that he did not commit the offence or that he had lawful authority. It seems to me that this would make us the laughing-stock of the courts.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend was a party to the adoption of Chapter 42, 11 and 12 George V, which contained this same clause. When a charge is laid under either paragraph (d) or paragraph (e), the onus shall be on the accused to establish that he had lawful authority.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Has not the onus always been upon him to do that? If a charge is laid and the offence is proved prima facie against him, does not the burden of proof shift to him, and must not he prove that he had lawful authority for his act, or that he did not commit it at all?

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: This is a different case. This contemplates that immediately the information is laid against him he must proceed to establish his innocence. Immediately the charge is laid, the onus is shifted to him.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: All the more reason why the section should be struck out: it is against British justice; it is against every decent kind of justice.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: If there is no evidence at all against him, he is guilty. I move that clause 14 be struck out. I quite understand that what the Crown wants to guard against is the possibility of a man being able to set up a lot of trivial technicalities and thereby escaping, as he probably would, if great care were not taken; but surely a man cannot be convicted unless some kind of a prima facie case is made out against him, especially in cases in which he would go before a jury and could be sent to the penitentiary for seven years.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: And no appeal

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: All they would have to do would be to read the charge. He may be a foreigner who does not understand English at all, and they would say: "Seven years for you, sir."

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: The accusation would be that he had in his possession drugs without lawful authority.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: But there would be no proof that he had them.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: No drugs produced—nothing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: Of course, the Crown must establish that he has the drug in his possesion.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: No, not under the wording of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: My honourable friend is in error. I have moved to strike out the words: "that he did not commit the offence or;" so all that remains of the section is:

Where a charge is laid under either paragraph (a), (d) or (e) of section 4 of this Act, the onus shall be on the accused to establish that he had lawful authority to commit the act complained of, or that he had a license from the Minister authorizing such act.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Would not that be his defence anyway? Is he not obliged by law to make that defence? But, as the honourable gentleman from Calgary (Hon. Sir. James Lougheed) has said, it is against all reason and common justice to provide that all you have to do is to hale a man before the court and state that he committed this offence, without any proof that he had the drug in his possession. If he had the drug in his possession, that would be prima facie proof, and he would be put upon his defence.

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: May I ask whether the elimination of the words, "that he did not commit the offence," relieves the Crown of the necessity of establishing the offence.

Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED: I take it that the word "laid" constitutes the offence. Where a charge is laid, the onus is upon the accused, and he must answer that charge. Is not that the interpretation of the section?

Hon. Mr. BELCOURT: I would think so. I do not think the elimination of the words mentioned alter the situation at all.

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: And there is no necessity for the section, if the Crown is going to get proof; and if they are not going to get proof, it is a damnable thing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: It was not by voluntary act of Parliament that the clause was dropped last year.

Hon. Mr. LYNCH-STAUNTON: Oh, yes. We would not have it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND: What will remain of the clause?

Hon. Mr. FOWLER: Nothing should remain.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND (reading):

Where a charge is laid under either paragraphs (a), (d) or (e)—
