A Child of Sorrow.

CHAPTER XVI.

"Well enough, I hope, to call me Byrne or Heroncourt without my title," said Heroncourt, quietly.

Mr. Carrington coloured with pride and pleasure.

"Thank you, Heroncourt," he said, faltering a little over the novel familiarity. "I'll communicate with my lawyer at once—it's Mr. Spinner, as of course you know. And now, I daresay you're anxious to get back to Maida. I needn't say that from this moment you're free of the house, as they say; just treat it as your own, and come and go as you please. And look here, my lord—I mean Heroncourt—I daresay you find me rather rough and ready, just a little what you might call free. I'm a city man, and we're not much at manners round about Coleman Street—my old office. I keep it for auld lang syne, though, mind you, I might have the swaggiest office in the city if I liked; but I mean well. And don't you class me with my gels, especially Maida, who's a lady every inch of her, and equal to the highest of them."

"There is nothing the matter with your manners," said Heroncourt, concealing his pain at the elder man's disparagement of himself. "They're a great deal better than those of the men of my set—I mean the men I know. And as to Maida—ah, well!"

He got outside—Mr. Carrington laid a benedictory hand on his shoulder and gently pushed him—But Carrie had carried Maida off to her own room, and only Ricky was left on the terrace staring rather moodily at the view. Heroncourt went up to him and held out a hand.

"I want to introduce myself," he said. "My name's Heroncourt."

"Ah, yes, I know. I've seen you at the office, Lord Heroncourt," said Ricky, already beginning to melt under Heroncourt's frank manner and pleasant smile.

"And you are Mr. Clark—the Ricky of whom I've heard so much," said Heroncourt. "I'm awfully glad to make your acquaintance; and I hope you've got your congratulations ready, Clark."

Ricky, who was more than half-inclined to be jealous of this titled prospective member of the family which he had grown to regard his own, melted completely.

"Yes, I do congratulate you, Lord Heroncourt," he said. "Maida is—but I daresay you know what she is a great deal better than I do. But she's—they're both the best girls the sun ever shone on. I've known them for years; and Carrie—well, Carrie has been a mother to the rest of the family—"

Heroncourt glanced at him shrewdly, and Ricky coloured painfully.

"—And Maida—why, if you were a king you'd need congratulating, and might be proud of winning her."

Heroncourt linked his arm in the lad's and led him down the steps.

"You couldn't have put it better—if you tried," he said. "You and I are going to be great friends, Clark—that is, if you'll let me. Now talk to me about Carrie. Have a cigar; I want one myself badly. You're an old friend? By Jove! I envy you. I've known—Carrie such a little while."

Ricky blushed and laughed, and the two wandered across the lawn watched by Carrie and Maida from the window of Maida's room.

"Now, tell me all about it!" she had exclaimed, as she forced Maida into a chair and stood over her with loving threatening. "To think of it! To think of it! You awful creature, to deceive us all—even me—with those quiet, mousey ways of yours. Mousey! Why, you're a perfect cat, a Persian, with your soft deceitfulness. Don't you think I'm going to let you off, to throw my arms round you again and kiss you congratulations, till you've told me everything—"

"Not everything, Carrie!" pleaded Maida, meekly.

"Well, not everything, perhaps," yielded Carrie. "I suppose you couldn't. But to think of your accepting him, when all the while you have been treating him so coldly; keeping him at arm's length as if you didn't like him rather than otherwise. And to accept him at once, and all in five minutes!"

"Oh, but I didn't," said Maida, piteously. "I—I refused him—"

"Refused him!" echoed Carrie, with a little shriek.

"At first," faltered Maida, with downcast eyes. "I—I didn't know whether—whether I loved—liked him or not at first. And then in saving me—"

"That's the second time he has saved you. They say it is unlucky to save people—oh, forgive me, Maida!" Carrie broke off, remorsefully.

"He had been wounded by a branch, and—and he would not take my handkerchief, and—and I asked him to let me wipe away the blood from his face—and I was so near to him, and he looked into my eyes, and then— Oh, I can't tell you any more. I dare not! It is too sacred," she hid her eyes in her hands for a moment. "But I knew then. It all flashed upon me, seemed to spring up in my heart, here"—she put her hand to her bosom—"and I knew that I loved him."

"Of course you did. How could you have helped yourself. Why, no woman could. I'd defy her, if Lord Heroncourt looked at her with eyes of love, and spoke to her as—as I can imagine he spoke to you. Oh, Maida, you lucky, lucky girl! Aren't you happy!"

"Happy!" Over Maida's face spread a light which seemed like that of the morning sun shining upon a lake. "I am so happy that I am—almost afraid!" Her voice fell to a whisper. "Afraid lest it should be all untrue, just a dream; or lest the gods should be envious of my happiness and take it away from me. Do you think they will, Carrie?"

"Not they; they know their business better," assented Carrie, confidently. "They like to see the good happy, and you're the goodest of the good. To think of it! You will be Lady Heroncourt, the Countess of Heroncourt!"

"Yes," assented Maida, absently.

She was not elated by the prospect of her future rank; did not think of it. "But that's of secondary consideration: what comes first is that he is so—so splendid; so altogether noble and great. Oh, you happy, lucky girl! There is no one like him!"

"Not even Ricky?" murmured Maida, with sweet mischievousness.

H.P. SAUCE

Made in England every drop, and enjoyed all over the world.

One Quality One Size One Price

Grocers keep H.P. on their handiest shelf, it sells so freely.

"Are you alluding to Richard Clark?" demanded Carrie, with an air of mingled surprise and indifference. "I fail to see where he comes in; besides, comparisons are odious, as the copy-book says. Oh, Ricky is all right, or will be, if he won't be an idiot and prance round us on his new hobby-horse—pride— But how pale you look! And I'm keeping you from going to him. He's there on the lawn with Ricky, and though he's talking away as though he'd nothing on his mind—nobody, I mean—he keeps glancing up at the window—"

"I—I don't think I'll go down," said Maida, with newborn shyness. "I—oh, Carrie, dear! I want to be alone to think, to try and realise that—that he loves me—me!"

Carrie's own eyes were moist as she knelt beside her and kissed away the tears of overbrimming joy.

"I'll go and tell him and send him away. And oh, Maida! I'll ask him to come to dinner and bring the Glassburys with him; there's plenty of time. I'll make the dinner half-past eight. Oh, I shall break down myself presently, I know I shall. I hope Ricky will let me get up a quarrel with him; it would just relieve me and save me from making a fool of myself."

"Not coming down!" Heroncourt's face fell, but it brightened again as Carrie added the invitation to dinner.

"That's good and nice of you, Carrie," he said, taking her hand. "That's one of the privileges I've secured, Clark—I can call her 'Carrie,' without the Miss; and I believe I've got another one—haven't I, Carrie?"

He drew her towards him and bent to kiss her cheek; and Carrie, drawing back at first, leant forward and suffered the kiss, with a demure glance at Ricky from the tail of her eye.

"Yes, but only twice," she said. "Once upon the engagement, and once at—the wedding. Ricky, you might have turned your head away, I think! But boys never have any sense of decency. Dinner at half-past eight, Lord Heroncourt! Oh!" as he walked away on air, "isn't he delightful?—and so big and handsome! I do admire him altogether."

"So do I—especially his cheek," commented Ricky, looking wistfully at hers.

Heroncourt could scarcely think as he went his way to the Court. Reflection is not for such a moment: it was simply, "She is mine, mine, mine!" running like quicksilver through his heart and brain.

"Is Lady Glassbury in the house?" he asked of the butler.

"In the kitchen, my lord."

"The kitchen!" echoed Heroncourt.

"Yes, my lord. Lord Glassbury has caught a trout—"

Heroncourt laughed—he only needed a very small joke to make him laugh at that moment—and went to the kitchen. Lord Glassbury was standing in his shirt-sleeves, as if he were a fishmonger, anxiously superintending the weighing of a trout which must have at least reached half a pound, while Lady Glassbury, whom he had captured, stood by with the tolerant patience and resignation of the good wife.

"Sure it isn't more: sure you've got the right weight? That's a pound."

"N-o, half a pound, my lord," said the chef, reluctantly. "I shall cook it a la Provençal—he will go farther, I think, my lord."

"Hallo, Byrne! Hi! Look here! I've caught the chap! Beauty, isn't it? And I lost one ever so much bigger—must have been a couple of pounds. Just feel him; splendid condition, isn't it? Pity I lost the other," etc.

Lady Glassbury had looked at Heroncourt's face, as he entered, and had drawn back a little from the light of the window.

"Splendid!" said Heroncourt. "But say, look sharp and dress. We're all to go over to the Towers to dinner. You will, won't you?" he turned to Lady Glassbury.

"Right ho!" responded Lord Glassbury. "Always ready for a dinner at the Towers; jolliest little girl I know—Carrie! I've got a good mind to take her my trout—"

"Oh, no, my lord! In the Provençal fashion he will be—superb; you will see," put in the chef. "Do not take him."

"All right, Saunders," said his lordship, much gratified.

Heroncourt followed Lady Glassbury to the drawing-room, and she turned and looked at him.

"Well?" she said.

He did not affect to misunderstand her.

"Yes; I have asked her. She has promised to be my wife," he said, his face flushing.

But her eyes were downcast.

"Every woman can understand why her face was pale and her lips quivered. She was a good wife, a pure and honest woman, but— Is it possible to love two men at the same time? This man, who stood before her with his happiness radiating from him, had been loved by her since his boyhood, had loved her in a fashion; and though she had urged him to do what he had done, the loss of him cost her— Can any but a woman guess how much?"

"I—I am glad!" she said. "Glad! glad! Byrne, you have made me very happy!"

And no doubt it was because she was happy that, when she had got to her room, she fell across her bed in a torrent of tears and choking sobs.

Household Notes.

Place screw-eyes in the tops of mops and other cleaning utensils—then they can be hung neatly on hooks.

Always scald out your flour bin before putting in a fresh supply; it will save the new flour from becoming musty.

The advantage of having a baby sleep in a hammock is that you can wrap him as much or as little as is necessary.

People are beginning to discover that the pods of young peas and the tops of carrots are not merely edible, but palatable.

Nerves Weak Head Hysterics

Orilla Lady Tells of Her Pitiable Condition When the Nerves Gave Way and She Became Sleepless, Irritable and Excited.

Orilla, Ont., July 3rd.—There is an abundance of proof found right here in Orilla that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is unrivalled as a means of forming new, rich blood and building up the exhausted nervous system.

At this season almost everybody feels the need of restorative, tonic treatment to keep up vitality and ward off the tired, languid feelings. This letter will give you some idea of the splendid results to be obtained by using this great food cure:—

Mrs. Percy Moulding, 28 West street, Orilla, Ont., writes:—

"Some years ago my nerves got the better of me. I became so bad that on one occasion, during a thunder-storm, I had a severe attack of hysterics. Then I became anxious about my condition. It was sleeplessness and nervous debility that were my trouble. Some nights it would be 1 o'clock before I could get to sleep. Knowing the good results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I commenced a treatment. I took about seven boxes, and gradually I could feel my nerves becoming steady and my appetite returning. I could sleep well, and stay alone without any difficulty. Some little time ago I commenced losing in weight, and I began using the Nerve Food again as a tonic. I used only two boxes, and recovered the weight I had lost. I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and when I see anyone looking ill or nervous I say, 'Get busy and use some Nerve Food.'"

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint. 1

Your Boys and Girls.

Has the birth of your baby been registered? If not, you should see to it that this duty is performed without delay. It may some time be of great importance to your child that there be in existence an accurate legal record of his birth, date, place and parentage.

Such a record serves to establish his age beyond question, and through this his right to the legal period of schooling and freedom from labor. It may also serve to establish his disputed inheritance and to establish for him various property or legal rights which may be in dispute. There are numerous instances where the lack of this sort of record has been the cause of serious losses of inheritance and of educational and other rights.

It is, in most States, required by law that the doctor, or other attendant at birth shall report to the registrar of births, but as this duty is not infrequently neglected, parents should investigate to see whether it has been done properly in the case of their children.

The complete registration of all births is indispensable, not only to the individual, but to the State and Nation.

Household Notes.

Cream pie is greatly improved by putting marshmallows on top of the cooked filling just before spreading on the meringue.

Delicious muffins or gems are made by stirring into the batter made for ordinary gems a cupful of raisins, currants or chopped figs.

Prunes washed, steamed and stoned, then filled with sweetened whipped cream and crushed macaroons make a novel dessert.

Turkish pilaf can be made with one cup of rice boiled and mixed with two cups of hot stewed tomatoes, and served with salt and pepper.

Butter and cream sauces for vegetables can often be dispensed with. Properly cooked and seasoned with salt and butter, most vegetables are best served in their own juices.

Any good cold fish can be used for salad if flaked, seasoned with pepper and lemon juice, and served with young radishes and French dressing.

To make coffee butter icing, stir six ounces of butter with fourteen ounces of fine icing sugar until it is the consistency of cream; add by degrees strong coffee to taste; spread between cakes like jam.

Closing the North Sea.

A Curtain of Bombs.

We have worked out in the accom-panying drawings a system which is not only comparatively cheap to construct but (what is more important in this emergency) one which could be very rapidly put through. Considered as a feat of engineering and seamanship, it would be perfectly feasible to build and maintain a bomb-curtain to a depth of 200 feet throughout the whole stretch of water between Scotland and Norway—a distance of about 250 miles.

Since the province of this net is to act merely as a carrier for a vertical minefield, it could be built of commercial one-half inch steel rod. The mesh would be ten feet and the connection at the alternate intersections would consist of a buoyant spherical bomb, containing 20 pounds of trinitrotoluol. The bombs would be built in two hemispherical halves, with holes formed in the flanges for the attachment of the lengths of wire rods. The ends of the rods would be attached to the bomb by merely threading them through the flanged holes and twisting three or four turns of the rod snugly upon itself. Since the bombs would be spaced 20 feet apart and staggered, it is certain that at least one and probably three or four bombs would come in contact with a submarine that attempted to drive through. At the intersections, alternate with the bombs, connection would be made by a ring of the same steel rod.

Just here, we may mention that the bombs would have a sufficient positive buoyancy to carry their own load and a part of the load of the net itself, thereby making it possible to use floatation buoys of moderate size 20 feet below the surface. The net would be anchored by steel wire rope extending from each side of the net and secured to heavy flushroom anchors.

The fact that soundings of from 800 to 1,000 feet, presents no serious difficulty; it would simply necessitate the provisions of a greater length of mooring cable.

Protecting the Barrier.

Inevitably, the Germans, on finding themselves utterly cut off from the Atlantic, would make desperate efforts to break through by sending a heavy force of ships to rush the net at high speed and carry it away. To prevent this, about a mile inside of the net there would be strung across the North Sea from coast to coast and parallel with the net, a continuous line of surface mines of the largest size, connected by cable and so adjusted that there would be two miles of this cable to a mile of linear distance, the cable being anchored at considerable intervals to keep it approximately in place. This would allow sufficient slack in the cable to insure that any surface ship charging at it would carry the cable with it and cause several of the bombs to swing into contact against its side.

Patrolling the Barrier.

Inasmuch as the construction of a continuous wall of high explosives across the North Sea would mean the absolute defeat at a single stroke of the whole German dream of winning the war by submarine piracy, we may be certain that desperation would drive them to employ every conceivable form of attack against the barrier. Therefore, to make assurance doubly sure, it would be well to establish, a mile or so within the last-mentioned string of floating mines, a thoroughly organized system of patrol by aeroplane, destroyer and motor boat. The function of this patrol would be not only to detect, and as far as possible, prevent the approach of submarines to the net, but also to maintain the net itself, making good immediately any damage or displacement which it might sustain as a result of the enemy's attack, or the stresses of wind and weather. The basic element in this patrol would consist of half-dozen mother ships moored in line from coast to coast at intervals of from forty to fifty miles. These would form the supply depots from which the surface craft and aircraft would operate. The mother ships would consist of old tramp steamers (a suggestion of Mr. Chas. G. Curtis) which would be anchored securely by the head, heavy anchors and cables at great length being used, so that the ships would rise easily in the heaviest weather. For protection against torpedo attack, each ship would be surrounded by a double line of extra-heavy torpedo netting, maintained in place by unusually heavy booms and guy ropes. At the stern of each ship, sections of the net would be arranged so that they could be lowered to admit the destroyers and motor boats when they came alongside for repairs and the replenishment of fuel and supplies. In preparing these ships as starting and landing platforms for the aeroplanes, they would be swept clear of all upper works, smoke-stacks, masts, rigging, etc., and landing platforms would be built throughout their entire length, the platforms extending out twenty to thirty feet on each side so as to provide smooth runways, say 100 feet wide by some 400 feet in length.

The patrol would be in three zones—the inner one extending between the mother ships would be covered by the flotillas of motor boats; the intermediate zone, from twenty-five to thirty miles in width would be covered by the destroyers, and the outer zone, reaching one hundred miles or more into the North Sea, would be under the watchful eye at all times of the aeroplanes.

Bomb-Curtain Versus Wire Netting.
The advantages of such a bomb curtain over a steel-wire net of sufficient strength to stop a 2,000-ton submarine are:

1. That because of its simple construction and the speed with which the wire rods could be turned out at the mills, it could be built in far less time.
2. That whatever the size and speed of the submarine or the character of its net-cutting devices, contact with the bomb curtain would mean certain destruction, or at least disablement.

In this matter of defeating the submarine, time is the very essence of the contract, and although a curtain 200 feet deep and 250 miles in length is a colossal undertaking, it could be built for a reasonable cost and within reasonable time.

Half-inch steel rods weigh about two-thirds of a pound per foot, and they could be delivered, cut to length at an English port for about $150 per ton. Such is the capacity of our mills that the whole amount of 18,000 tons could be turned out in a couple of weeks' time. The cost of the rods, anchors and cables would be about $4,800,000. The bomb containing 20 pounds of trinitrotoluol would be sufficiently powerful to cut a hole through the interior hull of a submarine or badly wreck its outer hull, rendering it unmanageable. The bomb would be made in two halves, and with its flanges could be stamped out of three-sixteenth plate. Manufactured on a basis of quantity-production, the bombs could be produced complete with contact points and firing mechanism for about $35 apiece, which would represent a total cost for the bombs of about $645,000,000. Adding the cost of materials for the net and anchorages, $4,800,000, we arrive at a total cost for materials of the whole net of about $65,000,000, which is less than the total value of ships and cargoes sunk by the submarines in a single week of the present campaign.

The firing mechanism of the bombs would have to be of special design, to prevent the whole net from being set off by sympathetic shock when one of the bombs was detonated. We understand that a firing mechanism can be produced, which will resist the sudden shock from a nearby explosion, and can be operated only by a blow or push of comparatively low velocity, such as would be applied if the firing pin were struck by a submarine moving at a rate of eight or ten knots. To render the bombs safe for handling by the seamen as they build them into the net, the firing pin would be locked by a cement which would be soluble in water, thereby insuring that the bombs would become alive only after they had been in water for ten or fifteen minutes.

If the approaches to the North Sea were protected by successive lines of aeroplanes, scouts, destroyers and patrol boats, and finally by an impassable wall of bombs, it is safe to say that the Atlantic route would be rid, once and for all, of the submarine pest, and America would be free to send over food, munitions and troops without fear of molestation.

A similar net at Gibraltar and at the Straits of Otranto (the mouth of the Adriatic), would effectively block the submarine bases of Germany's allies.

CARING FOR THE HAIR.

It is a mistake to suppose that the hair is annually shed as birds molt their plumage and some animals change their coats. Human hair is perennial, and if its owner escapes illness and takes proper care of her "crown of glory" it will retain its vigor until late in life.

Winter is hard on the hair as it is on the complexion, and while the hair grows at the rate of five or six inches a year, this growth is mostly in the summer.

While the condition of the hair is largely a matter of physical health, yet certain characteristics result from fastidious care. Unkempt, rough, lustreless, split hair is always the death knell to its attractiveness. The hair should be carefully brushed every night. Brilliantness and modern preparations for causing the hair to curl, should be avoided as much as possible.

By keeping up a good health standard, the general splendor of the hair will be improved. Good blood is the best asset toward lustrous tresses.

Summer School
for Teachers.

The Superintendents of Education (Doctors Curtis, Burke and Blackall) have organized a Summer School for Teachers to be held from July 9th to August 3rd. The objects are:

- (1) To provide a professional course of training for those who hope to enter upon their work as teachers in September or who wish to improve their professional status;
- (2) To furnish courses of lectures and instruction in modern methods of teaching suitable for graded teachers;
- (3) To give to teachers practical instruction in such subjects as nature study, physical culture, art, etc.;
- (4) To afford to teachers individual instruction in subjects in which they feel that they need assistance.

In a word, it is planned to supply to the teachers an opportunity of better fitting themselves generally for their important work in education.

Dr. Barnes will be the Principal and will be assisted by Dr. Howard Brunt and Fred G. Morehouse, Esq., B.Sc., from Canada, as well as by certain of our own teachers, whose names will be announced later.

It is expected that not less than two hundred and fifty of the teachers will attend the school, and the Superintendents, who are the General Directors of the school and are working with the sanction and good wishes of the denominational authorities, are confident that much good will result from the institution.

This Summer School has been made possible by the kindness of certain friends of education who do not wish their names to be mentioned.

The Russian Victory.

Yesterday we pronounced ourselves a little sceptical of the German claim to have repulsed the Russian attacks. We now learn that the repulse consisted in abandoning an outpost on the way to Lemberg and some ten thousand men. May all attacks be repulsed in the same manner? The news is by long odds the best that has been received since the German retreat on the Somme. It is plain that it announces but a beginning. While the fighting has been spread over a large front, the actual victory has been won in the very important region west of Tarnopol, covering Lemberg. The prisoners include not merely Austrians but Germans and Turks, an illuminating fact. It shows that Austria cannot be depended upon to defend her own frontiers; she is deficient in morale and efficiency and probably also in numbers. As a consequence we may look for a reaction of the battle on the Italian front, where its effect is certain to be felt. We cannot overestimate the importance of this last development, for we cannot too often insist that, given a sustained effort by the Russian armies, of which this initial success is a good promise, we shall have a condition of things that has never heretofore been achieved—effective pressure on all three of the enemy fronts, with every possibility of the fourth (Macedonian) front being added very soon. Hitherto the attacks of the Allies, however tremendous, have lacked their full force because they have been delivered more or less separately and in succession. There will be an end now of the continual shifting to and fro of enemy troops to the point attacked, and the greater part of his advantage in the interior position will be gone.

Great part of the credit of the Russian victory must be given not only to the personal stimulus, but to the personal example of M. Kerenski, the youthful Minister of War. Every day adds to his greatness and enhances his reputation. It is not impossible that we shall see him soon the actual Commander-in-Chief in the field. He must be acclaimed one of the very greatest figures of the day. Every insignificant device of Germany has been foreseen and countered by him. He has fitted exactly into the one position in the domestic politics of Russia that required him: always a champion of the people, he has identified himself easily with the revolutionary cause and even some of the extreme revolutionary aspirations, but he has at the same time seen their relation to world events and used his influence to give them their proper direction. He will soon be the most hated man in Germany, than which none could ask a higher tribute.

It is a formidable catalogue of disasters that Germany has to contend plate-to-day. Virtual failure of her submarine campaign, acknowledged by Germans themselves; the downfall of Constantine and the return of Venizelos; the arrival of the vanguard of the American army in France; the Stockholm conference almost a success; British victories in Flanders, threatening to culminate at any moment in the loss of Lens; hope of separate peace with Russia gone; and now Russia once again in the field claiming victories reminiscent of those which took such toll from Austria last year. No wonder Hindenburg casts round in desperation for a point at which to make a spectacular coup which can be magnified throughout the fatherland into a great victory and provide a palliative of so much disappointment. But there is no antidote. Germany has to take her medicine and a bitter, bitter dose it is going to be.

And Other Verses from the Trenches." By Jack Turner. (On sale at all Bookstores.)

It is not often that we have the pleasure of reviewing a book of any description from the pen of a native author. On the rare occasions that do present themselves the reviewer inclines himself instinctively to appreciation rather than criticism. Here is one author, at any rate, that need ask no such indulgence. From cover to cover of the modest little volume we are forced to appreciate and have an agreeable difficulty in finding anything to criticize. Where we succeed (according to our own opinion) it is mostly because we apply a standard which the writer never intended or attempted to satisfy. For though he has only offered a few slight verses he has allowed a lot of poetry to creep into them, and poetry, too, of a quality which leads us, unreasonably enough, to demand it everywhere. If his next production—and we hope to see many of them—does not show the versifier grown into a poet, we hope to have the pleasure of tearing it to shreds for disappointing us.

Jack Turner has already introduced himself to a Newfoundland public. The present volume is a small one, containing seven pieces in all. The most obvious observation they elicit is whether it be criticism or not, is their suggestion of Robert W. Service. This is inevitable from the subjects and treatment, the diction and even the metres which the author has chosen. It is enhanced by the fact that he writes, as might have been expected, as a "Canuck"; we cannot help thinking that the book would have gained doubly by it if he could have cast in his lot with his own countrymen and spoken for them as expressively as he has for his comrade Canadians. But if there is some conscious or unconscious imitation of Service, there is no plagiarism. The imitation is purely superficial, with a distinct originality underlying it. From much that is excellent we take the following couplet of verses out of "The Aeroplane" as typical of the book:

There's death and doom in that soaring speck,
Yes, doom and death are a-floating there,
For the great guns swing to the call
Of the men who traverse the upper air,
And that soaring speck is the great gun's eye,
(For the great guns, left to themselves are blind),
So the plane that scours the empty skies,
Is brain and eyes of the guns behind.

The white puffs blossom and bloom and grow,
And death lies hid in their fleecy hearts,
Whirling, whirling, now high, now low,
With the wild birds' wiles and the air-man's arts,
The plane "escapes death by a scanty yard."
For the ether guns, they are out to blind
(And they're shooting steady and strong and hard)
The eyes of the mightier guns behind.
If we quoted all that makes enjoyable reading we would be cheating the author and bookellers. Those who want to find it will do justice to both by ordering a copy. Every home in the island should have one. For our own part, we express the hope that, when we come to the "finish, to the close of the Hun's great Day,"
When we've smashed the Hun on the Western Line,
When our shells are screaming across the Rhine,
And we "find the old Rag-time Army at work in its own old way,"
This gifted member of it will go on with his art and fulfill some of the promise which the first product of it contains.

Suggestion to Umpire Chesman.
Many of the fans complain loudly of the slowness of the batters at the opening game in taking their place at the plate. As a great deal of the interest in the game depends on quick action, it is to be hoped that the Umpire-in-Chief will resort to his old method of calling strikes on batters who amble along. Make them stir their stumps, ump, and earn the fans undying gratitude.

A large congregation assembled at Cochrane Street Church last night to witness the setting apart of three young men to the work of the Christian Ministry. The officiating were: Samuel Baggs, George Patten, of Mount Allison University, Sackville, N.B., and Stephen Pike, of Wesleyan Theological College, Montreal. These men, having served a probationary period of five years or more, and having proved to the Church their fitness for the sacred office, were received into full connection and ordained.

The service began with the singing of hymn 678, after which prayer was offered by Rev. T. B. Darby, M.A. An anthem "Angels of Jesus" was then rendered by the choir. Scripture was read and the candidates for ordination were presented by Rev. C. A. Whitmarsh.

Each candidate gave a brief review of the experience and event which led him to offer for the work of the Church. The ordination ceremony we hope to see many of them—does not show the versifier grown into a poet, we hope to have the pleasure of tearing it to shreds for disappointing us.

Jack Turner has already introduced himself to a Newfoundland public. The present volume is a small one, containing seven pieces in all. The most obvious observation they elicit is whether it be criticism or not, is their suggestion of Robert W. Service. This is inevitable from the subjects and treatment, the diction and even the metres which the author has chosen. It is enhanced by the fact that he writes, as might have been expected, as a "Canuck"; we cannot help thinking that the book would have gained doubly by it if he could have cast in his lot with his own countrymen and spoken for them as expressively as he has for his comrade Canadians. But if there is some conscious or unconscious imitation of Service, there is no plagiarism. The imitation is purely superficial, with a distinct originality underlying it. From much that is excellent we take the following couplet of verses out of "The Aeroplane" as typical of the book:

There's death and doom in that soaring speck,
Yes, doom and death are a-floating there,
For the great guns swing to the call
Of the men who traverse the upper air,
And that soaring speck is the great gun's eye,
(For the great guns, left to themselves are blind),
So the plane that scours the empty skies,
Is brain and eyes of the guns behind.

The white puffs blossom and bloom and grow,
And death lies hid in their fleecy hearts,
Whirling, whirling, now high, now low,
With the wild birds' wiles and the air-man's arts,
The plane "escapes death by a scanty yard."
For the ether guns, they are out to blind
(And they're shooting steady and strong and hard)
The eyes of the mightier guns behind.
If we quoted all that makes enjoyable reading we would be cheating the author and bookellers. Those who want to find it will do justice to both by ordering a copy. Every home in the island should have one. For our own part, we express the hope that, when we come to the "finish, to the close of the Hun's great Day,"
When we've smashed the Hun on the Western Line,
When our shells are screaming across the Rhine,
And we "find the old Rag-time Army at work in its own old way,"
This gifted member of it will go on with his art and fulfill some of the promise which the first product of it contains.

The Ministry of God should believe the Bible from cover to cover. Believe that it is God's message to the world and by the word as well as by history and nature God reveals himself to the sons of men.

Kings are falling, the powers of nations are waning, but the Kingdom of Jesus is forever and ever.

KEEPING TRIM.

Though subjects great engross my mind, when I'm not at my daily grind, I don't forget the simple chores which lend a charm to out-of-doors. I gather can and demijohn and other rubbish from the lawn. I paint the pump and sweep the drive, and show the neighbors I'm alive. When wild excitement fills the air, and men are talking everywhere of Mars and his famed wrinkled front, we oft neglect the useful stunt. We are too prone to stand around, before the jail or village pound, and tell the captives and the kings how they should run the war, by jings. We cannot govern war's events, by piffing talk, worth twenty cents. So when at divers times I feel inclined to make impassioned spiel, I check myself before I start, and keep the discourse in my heart. I'll let the captains run the scrap—they're better qualified, mayhap. My spuds are needing Paris green; punk worms attack the pea and bean; and better service I will do by killing off the noxious crew, than if I stood around all day and sprung hot air about the fray.

CONFEDERATION JUBILEE CELE-BRATION IN LONDON.

LONDON, To-Day.
The Confederation Jubilee Celebration passed off to-day with wonderful success, and the people of London as well as other centres where Canadians are located seemed to vie with each other in entering into the spirit of the day. For the greater part of the forenoon traffic was held up in Westminster and work was at a standstill while crowds gathered to cheer the King and Queen and Queen Alexandra on entering and leaving the Abbey. The service at the Abbey was appropriate. It was especially fitting that just across the road is the building which was until recently the Westminster Palace Hotel, where the fathers of Confederation drew up the Dominion's Constitution. It was equally fitting that the National Liberal Club, which now tenants the building, should show hospitality towards Canadian war widows by giving them seats to witness the Royal procession to the Abbey. The service was brief but profoundly impressive and effective, the most stirring moment being that when Bishop Ryle pointed to the Wolfe monument, on which the colors of many fighting battalions were folded, as a symbol of Canadiana liberty. Outside the Abbey was a composite battalion representing every Canadian camp in England. These men, together with a guard of honor and cadets, were inspected by the King.

ROUSING RUSSIA.

PETROGRAD, To-Day.
The commander of the armies on the western front has issued an order of the day, reading, "Our army on the southwestern front has vanquished the enemy and broken his lines. A decisive battle is begun on which depends the fate of the liberty of the Russian people. Our brothers on the southwestern front are advancing victoriously. They expect assistance from us. We shall not be traitors; the enemy shall hear the thunder of our guns."

CELEBRATION AT OTTAWA.

OTTAWA, To-Day.
Half a century of progress, growth and development under the aegis of Canadian Confederation was commemorated with a simple but appropriate ceremony on Parliament Hill to-day. Simultaneously, and as a befitting accompaniment of the historic occasion, the new and stately pile of the Parliament Buildings now in course of erection was formally dedicated as a memorial to the Confederation Fathers and to the valor of the Canadians at the front. There were speeches by the Duke of Devonshire, Governor General; Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfred Laurier.

THE RACE TROUBLES IN ST.
LOUIS.

NEW YORK, To-Day.
Despatches to the Associated Press
at midnight indicates that the estimates of loss in the race riots in East St. Louis, Ill., were somewhat exaggerated. The death list, however, may reach 75, according to the latest estimates, and the property loss, it is believed, will reach $3,000,000. The torch has been applied to four negro settlements in the city and the glare of the flame illuminates the city and surrounding districts. The rioting is a recrudescence of the trouble that occurred a month ago, following the importation of a large number of negro laborers from the South to work in local packing houses. Tonight's rioting had begun after a white man had been shot by a band of negroes. The mob which quickly gathered applied a torch to rows of negro dwellings, the flames quickly spreading to the edge of the business district of the city. Attacks on negroes quickly followed and fatalities began rapidly to multiply.

SERIOUS SITUATION IN SPAIN.

PARIS, To-Day.
The situation in Spain, so far from improving, appears to be going from bad to worse. The gravity of the crisis is confirmed amply by such news as reaches Paris. The Madrid correspondent of the Petit Parisien, telegraphing on Sunday, says that the suspension of the constitutional guarantees by the Government has not removed the unrest in Spain. The fact that the heavily censored Spanish press publishes nothing concerning the internal situation seems to indicate that conditions are far from normal.
Great importance is attached in political circles to two facts, first that the King and Queen cancelled an engagement to attend a polo game; second, that a special Cabinet meeting was held at the conclusion of which Premier Dato went to the Palace and had a long conference with the King. These circumstances have given rise to all sorts of comment, many persons seeing in them proof that the Government had received serious news, but nothing so far as has confirmed this view. Foristo Satmeron Y Garcia,
President of the short-lived Spanish Republic, who has just arrived from Spain, also takes a serious view of the situation there. In a statement published in the Petit Parisien he says he is convinced that Spain is on the eve of important events.

Personal.

One of our Jubilee scholars, Miss Eleanor Mews, has lately returned to the city, having completed her three years' course at Toronto University.
Her subjects were Honours English and French, Harmony and Counterpoint with Mr. Healey Willan. Singing with Miss Shepherd of the Conservatory of Music, and Folk Songs and Folk Dancing under Mr. Cecil Sharp, the well-known English expert. Those who attended the Ordination Service at Cochrane St. Centennial Church last evening had the privilege of hearing Miss Mews sing
"Prepare ye the way of the Lord," and her interpretation of the words and music left nothing to be desired. We trust we may have the privilege of hearing her sweet tones many times in the future.

FOR BOSTON.—Mr. J. K. Joyce, of Chicago, and Miss Eleanor Smith, of Petrograd, a Russian teacher, both of whom arrived in the city from Russia yesterday, left for Boston by to-day's express.

The Gas Range!

The Gas Range means comfort for the housewife; shorter kitchen hours for her, and a cleaner kitchen. It is a great mistake to think that cooking with gas is expensive.
Whenever a woman becomes used to gas for cooking, thoughts of a coal or wood stove fill her with gloom. A Gas Range is so much easier to operate, so efficient for all kinds of cooking, and so much cleaner, that the idea of going back to the old style methods is decidedly unpleasant. Yet in winter many housewives think they must use a coal or wood stove, because there is no other way of heating the kitchen. THERE IS ANOTHER WAY AND IT IS FAR BETTER THAN THE OLD. THE CLOW GAS
STEAM RADIATOR WAY. may23,17

THE OYSTER.

The oyster is a small, meaty object which is born on the bed of the Atlantic Ocean and dies in the same spot with its boots on. An oyster never gets too old to kill or to serve at a supper for the benefit of the pipe organ fund, hence it is almost as popular as that other household delicacy, corned beef, which can be made up in to hash and croquettes for nine days hasn't running.

Oysters are harvested every fall in trick clusters and served by the short ton to people who are not interested in anything else on the table except the salt, pepper and vinegar. A raw oyster is served in the same suit it wore on leaving home, but few guests eat the shell more than once, as it is difficult to digest with ease. Some people refuse to eat oysters on the half shell under any circumstances, for fear of splintering a new set of teeth, but greater chances are taken with the brittle pork chop which has been sprayed with small fragments of bone by an impatient butcher.

The raw oyster is served in the same suit it wore on leaving home.

The oyster stew is an invigorating beverage which is produced by scalping a large, unresisting oyster and surrounding it with skim milk. This results in a rich mixture which will not be complained of for several hours after it is eaten. When enjoyed in company with two pounds of square crackers and a pint of dill pickles, the oyster stew will satisfy any appetite that has not been paralyzed by the boarding-house doughnut.
The oyster cocktail is the first ar-

Yesterday afternoon two lads, who sundry other articles that they could were caught by the captain of the vessel "gloriously" drunk and handed over to the police. Both appeared be-

Freezing Process
A Great Success.

Several car loads of caplin and about one hundred quintals of codfish have passed through the freezing process at the new fresh fish plant yesterday and to-day. Everything was going like clock work at the plant this morning. From the manager down to the laborer, all were busy arranging the delicate cod in the proper receptacles prior to placing them in the freezing room. At the dock wharf, just below the Long Bridge, the company's big floating stage was made fast, and surrounded by a dozen fishing boats, whose owners were removing their morning's catch to specially prepared fish pounds on the stage. This was the means of attracting a large crowd of citizens. The head and entrails of the fish are removed by the fishermen themselves on board the company's stage; the sound bone, however, is not removed. The fish are then weighed and the fisherman given a receipt for his fish, on presenting which at the company's office he receives payment
at the rate of two and one half cents a pound.

Prosperity Haters.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"What ever did make Robert Bartlett act so grouchy?" asked someone the other night, "he hardly said a word."
We had been to a housewarming. Some young people who have had a pretty hard time of it have finally fought their way through to comparative prosperity and have just bought a dinky little house.

Robert Bartlett (which is not his name) was one of the guests at the housewarming.

"My dear," explained some one else, "I see you don't know Robert very well. He never can stand seeing people prosperous. It always gives him a grouch."

One Must Discount Her Opinion.

The woman who spoke does not like Mr. Bartlett so the value of her opinion must be discounted by that dislike. Nevertheless, judging from past experience with the gentleman, I think there is a good deal of truth in what she says.

There are some people who do not like their friends when they are not prosperous. You know them. They approve of you when you are well dressed and up to date, when you can talk of the latest play and dance the latest dance, but the minute you fall out of the vanguard of the procession, get a bit shabby, and out of touch with things, their manner changes. You feel a hardness under the bright surface of their former friendliness.

Other People's Successes Sour Them.

And conversely, there are these people who like you better when you are not prosperous. These people can be sympathetic with other folks over their disappointments and hardships, but they can't seem to hear of their successes without getting sour. They make sarcastic comments on how "nothing is good enough for Mrs. So-and-so since her husband got that job," and how "Mrs. Someone Else throws money around since she inherited that money."

They Bring Up The One All Important Subject.

These are the people who could always spend other people's money more efficiently; the people who try to turn the conversation to other subjects (particularly the supremely interesting and important subject) when someone tells of a neighbour's good fortune or possessions.

It isn't pleasant or easy, I grant you, when one's own fortunes are at a low ebb, to be continually congratulating other people, and admiring their possessions.

It isn't pleasant nor easy, no, but it's something far better than that, it's brave and fine to be able to do it cheerfully and cordially, and if possible sincerely.

Dear Sirs,—This fall I got thrown on a fence and hurt my chest very bad, so I could not work and it hurt me to breathe. I tried all kinds of Liniments and they did me no good.

One bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, warmed on fannel and applied on my breast, cured me completely.

THE RUSSIAN OFFENSIVE.

PETROGRAD, July 2.

The Russian official announcement to-day says that the Russians have advanced to Konluchy stream and also have captured seven heavy guns. Teuton prisoners continue to be brought in. The official statement reads as follows: On the western Russian front in the direction of Kovel Volhynia, in the region of Rudkavichskaya, our scouts under command of four officers, after destroying wire entanglements by mines penetrated the enemy's trenches, killed some of their occupants and captured a number of prisoners. According to the testimony of the prisoners the Austrians knew of our attack from two deserters, senior commissioned officer Karsokin and private Kolotainoy. An investigation is being made by the authorities of the Governments to which the soldiers named belonged. In the direction of Zlochoff, after two days' artillery preparation our troops attacked the Austro-German positions on the Konluchy-Ihki front. After a severe engagement they occupied three lines of trenches and the fortified village of Konluchy, and advanced to the Konluchy stream to the south of the village of the same name. As a result of the engagement on Sunday, 164 officers and 8,400 soldiers have been counted so far as prisoners. We also took seven guns and seven machine-guns. Prisoners continue to come in. Southwest of Brzezany, after artillery padation, our troops attacked the strongly fortified positions of the enemy. After stubborn fighting they occupied them at places. The Germans and Turks made counter-attacks, and the formidable positions changed hands constantly. On Sunday we captured on this front nine officers and 1,700 Germans, Austrians and Turks. Some of our detachments sustained severe losses, especially in officers. Altogether on Sunday we took 173 officers and more than 10,000 soldiers.

LONDON.—The resumption of the Russian offensive with the capture of the town of Konluchy and more than 10,000 prisoners, is the most cheerful news the British have had for some weeks. References in recent German official statements to the activity of the Russians have given hope that something really serious was about to occur, but the public was hardly prepared for such immediate and successful results, as it was thought it would take a few days for the artillery to destroy the Austro-German defences which were under construction for so many months. The scene of the Russian success is between the Stripa and Zlota-Lipa Rivers and was the battle ground of such heavy fighting after General Brussloff's offensive of a year ago, Konluchy being on the latter river. This, like other demonstrations, is in the direction of Lemberg, the capture of which could be of greatest strategic and political importance. General Brussloff apparently has resumed his concentric manoeuvres which were interrupted by the advent of winter and then by the revolution.

Petrograd.—The brilliant Russian advance, the news of which has sent a wave of rejoicing through the entire country, was led by War Minister Kerensky in person. For the last 4 days the War Minister has been continuously at the front spending every effort to urge the Russian troops to advance. He finally rode to the front line trenches, and placing himself at the head of the troops, gave the order to advance. The spectacle of the popular War Minister on the firing line accomplished what oratory had failed to do, and the Russian line swept forward into the German trenches.

GERMANS OCCUPY FRENCH FRONT LINE TRENCHES.

On the French Front in France, Sunday (by the Associated Press).—The Germans succeeded in occupying to-day the French front line trenches a third of a mile in length east of Cerny, north of the Chemin-des-Dames. This local success, worthless from a military viewpoint, followed by terrific artillery bombardment, at the beginning of which the French abandoned this line of trenches, which were flattened out. This forward step leaves the Germans still without their coveted observation posts. Apparently there was little backbone in the attack, as the success was not followed up. The same lack of push characterized all the German attacks recently along the line stretching from the eastward of Soissons to Verdun. Evidently the enemy, after his recent defeat in the Champagne, feels the need of local successes to encourage his men, who, according to prisoners, are greatly depressed. It is comparatively easy for them to concentrate many heavy guns at any given point and thus drive the French out of small sectors. Hitherto, however, whenever the Germans attacked with their specially selected troops, they did not penetrate to any depth, all their attempts to do something with energetic resistance usually being followed by French counter-attacks. The German occupants of the demolished positions sustained great losses.

ADVANCE OF CANADIANS.

Canadian Headquarters in France, July 2 (by Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of the Canadian Press).—On the sector of the front to the west and south of Mericourt our outposts have been advanced almost a thousand yards along a front of over a mile and a half. There has been on this part of the plain a wide stretch of "No Man's Land" between the trench systems of the armies. Encounters between patrols occasionally have taken place, but the territory was not effectively occupied either by the enemy or ourselves. To the west of Lens in the sector north of the river Souchez, where there has been an almost continuous artillery duel since Thursday, varied by infantry thrusts, affairs have settled down a bit this afternoon. In a former despatch I spoke of the splendid valor of the British troops. They have enhanced their already high reputation.

KERENSKY'S APPEAL.

PETROGRAD, July 2.

War Minister Kerensky has issued an appeal to the Russian Armies to take the offensive. He says Austria and Germany have replied to Russia's appeal to all democracies in favor of peace by a dishonorable proposal that Russia should conclude a separate peace which would enable them to crush Russia's Western Allies. On Russia's rejection of the proposal the enemy, says the Minister, threatened an offensive against Russia, and the freedom of the country and the revolution itself were in danger. The appeal concludes: Every day's delay strengthens the enemy. That is why we appeal to our armies to take the offensive. Let all the world know that it was not from weakness that liberty increases our military strength. All Russia will bless your exploits in behalf of liberty, your country's future and an honorable and lasting peace.

ADVANCED POSTS DRIVEN BACK.

LONDON, July 2.

As a result of hard fighting west of Lens yesterday and to-day, our advanced posts have been driven back a short distance, says the official report from the British headquarters in France, issued to-night. There is nothing further to report, except considerable artillery activity by both sides at numerous points along the front.

SERIOUS RACE RIOTS.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., July 2.
Race riots to-night resulted in great loss of life. It was estimated at midnight as probably 250, virtually all negroes. A torch was applied to the negro settlement and the district is in flames.

EVENT OF FIRST IMPORTANCE.

LONDON, July 2.

Lord Derby, Secretary for War, in a statement to the Associated Press to-day, said the arrival in France of the troops of the United States to take their place by the side of the French, Belgian and British troops is an event of first importance. The moral effect of this reinforcement will be far-reaching. As the accession of a great army of which this is the vanguard, enthusiastic for the restoration of peace and liberty throughout the world, it will be welcome to all fighting for a sacred cause on the French and Belgian soil. The promptitude with which our kinsmen across the Atlantic have given effect to their pledges of co-operation is no surprise to us who know their energy and resourcefulness, but is an earnest of their determination to hasten victory, which will reward our united efforts, and therefore moves us deeply.

CONGRATULATORY MESSAGES.

OTTAWA, July 2.

The following message of congratulation on the event of the Jubilee of Confederation, has been received from Premier Lloyd George on behalf of Canada by the Governor-General: "Fifty years ago the statesmen of the Provinces of Canada gathered in convention in Quebec to work out a basis of federal union, and from that act of statesmanship the Dominion of Canada was born. Confederation has done much for Canada. It has enabled the Canadian people to have internal unity and self-government and to achieve a beneficent development of the resources of their country. It has done no less for the Empire. It has made Canada the pioneer of that autonomous nationhood which is unique and characteristic of our Commonwealth of nations. It has had its logical outcome in the imperishable record which the army of Canada has made on the battlefields of Flanders in the cause of human freedom. The history of the past fifty years is indeed certain proof of the part which Canada is destined to play in concert with her sister nations in promoting the peace and unity of the world after the victory has been won."

The following is from Rt. Hon. Walter Long: "Please convey to your Government and the people of Canada my heartfelt congratulations on the fiftieth anniversary of the Dominion of Canada since the revolution in the evidence of the wisdom and foresight of the statesmen who brought the dominion into being, and justifies the most sanguine hopes for its future prosperity and greatness."

ENGLISH ACTOR DEAD.

WASHINGTON, July 2.

Twenty-five million dollars were placed to the credit of Great Britain to-day by Secretary McAdoo, bringing the total loans to that nation up to $655,000,000, and total loaned to all the Allies to $1,043,000,000.

OFFENSIVE CONTINUED.

PETROGRAD, July 2.

Russia's first offensive under the new regime was continued vigorously to-day. Artillery fire of great intensity was reported in the official war office statement, in the direction of Zolotchow and Brezezany, in Galicia.

Prunes should be "cooked down" in the water in which they have stood, no sugar being used. Prepared this way, they are far more delicious and more wholesome.

Soldier Attacked by Dog

Yesterday afternoon, while a Franco veteran was passing down Colonial Street, he was attacked by a vicious dog and bitten in the left leg near the knee. The young man became greatly incensed and in typical soldier fashion chased the enemy and with the aid of his walking stick gave the mongrel a sound trimming. There is general complaint all over the city about the savage dogs at large and it is time that the authorities made an effort to exterminate them.

A good dish mop is made if a spring clothes-pin spliced to one side. Remove the dish cloth (by means of the spring) after each using and wash it.

A good dish mop is made if a spring clothes-pin spliced to one side. Remove the dish cloth (by means of the spring) after each using and wash it.

You Can Make Excellent Cake With Fewer Eggs

Just use an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

This applies equally well to nearly all baked foods. Try the following recipe according to the new way:

CREAM LAYER CAKE
Old Way	New Way
1 cup sugar	1 cup sugar
1/2 cup milk	1/2 cup milk
2 cups flour	2 cups flour
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder	4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
3 EGGS	2 EGGS
1/2 cup shortening	2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon flavoring	1 teaspoon flavoring

Makes 1 Large 2-Layer Cake

DIRECTIONS—Cream the sugar and shortening together, then mix in the egg. After sifting the flour and Royal Baking Powder together, two or three times, add it all to the mixture. Gradually add the milk and beat with spoon until you have a smooth pour batter. Add the flavoring. Pour into greased layers in a tin and bake in a moderately hot oven for twenty minutes. This cake is best baked in two layers. Put together with cream filling and spread with white icing.

Correspondence on Municipal Bill.

(To the Editor.)

Dear Sir,—By direction of the Citizens' Committee, I forwarded to the Secretary of the Legislative Joint Commission (Mr. Higgins) a copy of the Committee's Report, together with interleaved copy of the "Charter," containing the desired amendments in detail. To the Premier and the Colonial Secretary I sent the Report, together with typewritten copies of the notes on the interleaved copy. The Committee instructs me to forward you copy of the interleaved notes, not necessarily for publication, as it would be difficult to understand all of them without having the Charter at hand to refer to. You have already published the General Report. The Committee directs me to thank you for so doing, and also for many favors during the past fifteen months.

The Committee is desirous that the replies of the above-mentioned gentlemen should be published for the information of the public. They are all addressed to me as Secretary of the Citizens' Committee on the Municipal Bill.

Yours truly,
WARWICK SMITH, Secy.
