REUBEN E. TRUAX

SAYS:

I have been for about ten years very much troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia, have tried a great many different kinds of patent medicines, and have been treated by a number of physicians and found no benefit from them. I was recommended to try SOUTH AMERICAN NERVE TONIC, obtained a bottle, and I must say I have found very great relief, and have been able to take two more bottles and now feel that I am entirely free from indigestion and would strongly recommend all my fellow sufferers from the disease, to give SOUTH AMERICAN NERVE TONIC an immediate trial. I will cure you.

She—You say you love me, but I doubt it. What you take for love is merely a disease.

WHY MEDICINE DOES NO GOOD.
There are scores of persons—aye, thousands of them—who by careless and irregular habits of eating, drinking, sleeping, and other things, bring upon themselves a disease which they try to remedy by the use of medicine. But medicine does no good because the disease does not happen, and their health comes back to them. The very worst case of dyspepsia can be cured by Hawker's Hair Vigor several times and Hawker's Hair Vigor, it is the same time sound judgment as to diet, exercise and general regularity of habits.

Youths Corner.
BOBBY'S BLESSINGS.
Bobby was spending a few days with his Uncle John.

The high swing Uncle John had put up for him at the end of the garden was his unfailing delight; but to-day was wet. Bobby could not swing, therefore Bobby thought it only right to make himself as disagreeable as possible, sulking and frowning, and kicking his heels against the legs of the chair.

Why don't you go and play with your doll, or shuttlecock, in the hall? asked Uncle John, who vainly tried to read his newspaper.

I don't want to play in the hall, I want to go out and swing, growled Bobby.

I have told you that you can't go out and swing in the rain. Go and play about the house.

I don't want to play, growled Bobby again, kicking his heels.

Uncle John rose and took a string from his pocket.

Come here, Bobby, lie down on the sofa; since you don't care to use your legs to run about the house we may as well tie them up.

And in a moment Bobby's legs were tied fast at knee and ankle.

'Now you can amuse yourself with this lot of soldiers since you don't want to play about,' said Uncle John, taking up his newspaper again.

In less than five minutes came a whimper from the sofa.

'Uncle John, I want my legs untied.'

'What for? You said you didn't want to run about, you can use your hands—play with your soldiers.'

'I don't want them, I want to get up.'

'Not yet awhile,' said Uncle John, 'you can't have changed your mind in such a hurry. Give me your hands!' And before he had time to think Bobby found his hands tied together as tight as his legs, the lot of soldiers put away, and a large new picture book laid on the table beside him.

'Now,' said Uncle John cheerfully, sitting down, 'here are some very funny pictures. As you can't move your hands I'll turn the pages for you.'

'You are not looking at this picture,' said Uncle John.

'I don't want to look at them,' mumbled Bobby.

'You don't, really? Oh, very well,' Uncle John closed the book and taking his silk handkerchief bound it over Bobby's eyes, saying, 'Since you don't care to see the pictures you can do without your eyes.'

For an instant there was silence as Uncle John sat down again. Then a choking sob came from the sofa where, blind and helpless, lay poor Bobby.

'Well,' said Uncle John, 'what do you want most?'
The thing off my eyes, sobbed Bobby.

Off came the handkerchief.

Now what next I asked Uncle John.

Let my hands go, please Uncle John.

'Well, now, they are free, what more?'
My legs, I want to get up.

Uncle John's penknife cut the cords, Bobby rolled off the sofa and stood upright once more. Uncle John caught him and held him straight before him.

'There are many poor little boys, he said, who are blind, and can never see anything. Many who are lame, and can never run about. Many who have no use of their hands, or perhaps no hands at all. Never let me hear you grumble again because you can't do some one particular thing you may want to do, so long as God in His goodness to you leaves you the great blessings of the full use of your eyes, your hands, and your feet.'

'Well, there were five children of us in my father's family. All except your Aunt Hester were boys. And though she was very strong and kind-hearted, we did not like to have her following us about too much.

'Our parents went away visiting one day and left my brother Ned, your Auntie and myself, to keep house until they came back. 'Be sure and take good care of Hester,' was the last word that dear mother said to Ned and me.

'And my father spoke the message he had given us half a dozen times before. 'Remember, you have to cut that wood by the door, and pile it up in the shed.'

'Guess he thinks that will keep us tied up at home,' I whispered to Ned, while Hester was waving 'Good-bye' to the folks.

Ned nodded his head as he answered, 'We'll rush through with the wood, and then we'll be her up where she can't tag after us.'

'Why, papa, what were you going to do?' asked Milly, peering closely into her father's face.

'We wanted to have a good play with some boys on the next farm. We knew we could do that if we hurried with the wood. So when Hester came asking why we cut the sticks so fast, we told her to carry in the wood for us and we would give her some of our maple sugar.'

She went back and forth to the wood-shed as fast as her little feet could carry her. But her little eyes twinkled so that we knew she had guessed that we had some piece of mischief planned out. So when we gave her the sugar, we tied her fast to grandmother's old loom so that she could not see where we went.

'Why, Auntie, weren't you dreadfully afraid?' asked Milly. 'And it was that loom up in the attic, there was no hope of your pulling it away.'

'That was the very loom,' said Aunt Hester with a smile. 'And I must confess that I did not feel very happy to be left in that way. But I ate my maple sugar and tried to make the best of my lot. I felt sure that the boys wouldn't have so good a time as they thought wherever they might be going.'

'And that was a fine guess,' smiled papa. 'Before we could whistle softly for the neighbor's boys to come out in the woods and play with us, their mother saw us in some way. She walked right up to us before we could run away, too, and said she knew we were into some mischief. She wasn't satisfied with that, but, in spite of all we could say, she went back home with us, and found how we had left Hester. Of course she told mother all about it, and we got well punished for our selfish way of treating our sister.'

'But, papa,' said Milly, 'there's a real bright twinkle in the corners of your eyes, as if you and Auntie knew something more to the story.'

'Well, we did see something which made us think of what mother said to me and my brother that day when she whipped us all soundly and sent us to bed.' She said that I would often meet things in life which would bring up what I had done, just as if it had only happened yesterday.

'Why, papa, you must have been looking down from the attic window when I wanted to play alone, and asked Nelly Brown to go home and borrow me some thread, so that I could mend my doll's dress. Yes, I know you saw it, and thought it was as bad as tying Auntie to the loom; for I knew Nelly's mother would have some work for her to do as soon as she got home, so that she couldn't get back to play with me again.'

'It did make me think how I was told that perhaps my own children would have the same spirit I had shown towards my sister.'

That was papa's answer. But there was no severe look on his face. It was full of smiles, and he took his girl in his arms and
