such a subject with his wife, and after it to face, and expect her to face, the burden of entertainment on the morrow. He must wait till Dulcie was safe married and away, till Margaret also had taken her departure; wait with a burning from this midnight on the eve of Tuesday, till the day but one after, when they two would be alone. Alone except for May's intrusion; with no witnesses of divis-ion but the watchful, inevitable household, and the innocent presence of their child.

The child Ernest! Again he covered his face, and, alone as he was, his shoulders heaved with the dry rending of a sob. How wisely, how perfectly Annabel was training how perfectly Annabel was training the child, and how sweet and sacred she had seemed to him in her motherhood. How fair had been the outward show, while this canker was growing at the root! If only he might be in time to snatch this brand from the burning, he would endeavor to put up with that odor of singe under his nostrils for all that remained to him of life.

For his own comfort, for his child's sake, lastly for Annabel's salvation; always there will be mix-ed motives behind our actions. Seldom does a good deed, a noble resolve, grow from a root that is, as it were, all in air, and does not somewhere and somehow plunge itself in soil. His life in any case would be a thing of shreds and patches after the agony of this hight; and here was the highest only he might yet be in time; if

So runs the old rhyme, and the ganging agley of John Hungerford's came with that New Year visit when Dulcie and Gower first met, and in the course of which they fell in love. John the parson, in his leisurely wooing, had never reckoned with the evil chance that the bride would be won before he poke. That is a disaster which is apt to befall dilatory wooers. Secure in his own conviction that Dulcie was too young for marriage, it did not occur to him other men might not see the same disability in her childishness. He woke with a start, the words sounding in his ear as if directly spoken. After a while he slept and dreamed again, and diffither's fortune, which was settled on the younger children. Dulcie was perhaps the last girl in the world fitted to be a clergyman's helpmate, but John Hungerford trusted implicitly, as Gower did after him, to the ripening of intel-lect and heart which would pre-sumably follow as she grew out of niture, a table with pen and ink, a book of forms, and beside it an old man who looked like a notary. But it must be right, he thought; for there was Colonel Swayne and his bride in her veil. A ring lay on the table, the ring he had bought for Dulcie, so small in size that it would not pass on to his least fin ger. He took it up to put on the bride's hand, but the measure bride's hand, but the measure ant in the centre of the town was proved to be a mistake, the destined finger was too large, and it stopped at the middle joint. "Never mind," the bride said, "I have a ring already, and I do not want another. Then he was required to sign his name in the register, the bride signing after him, when here again was an error. He looked at the page of the register, and instead of her name of Dulcie she had written Margaret.

There was a third dream before morning, and again he dreamt of marriage. This time there was a church and priest, though not the She had not known! There was a first mistake, complete and signifi-cant. Dulcie was perfectly well aware, even in the schoolgirl stage, before, that his part in them might be familiar. "Those whom God hath joined together," read the parson from his book, "let no man only he might yet be in time; if only his world should not know, and there might to no re-pointing of the finger of scorn. put asunder." There was his bride the face was nearer on a level with his own; Dulcie was only the height of his heart. He turned to the higher ground above the river, and there saw the sun of his wedding morning come up above the horizon, a shield of gold over the white mists of the valley, sending down a ray where Dulcie Swayne still slept behind the lattices of Fortune's Court.

He came back to the open door, and re-ascended the stairs in time a time. It is strange how accidents ap-pear to shape out life for us. # "Dogging" Cows.

As an instance of how necessary it is to be constantly urging better methods of farming and caring for live stock, we we heard of a case the other day, of a farmer who allowed his dog to chase his cows to and from pasture at milking ime, and then complained of the cows hrinking in milk flow. Because of a shortage of pasture, the farmer had his boy herd the cows in the meadow where some other crop was growing. The boy had the dog along, and every time the cows strayed near this crop, "Fido" was alled into requisition and there was a stampede of cows on the run many times a day. There are some steep hills on this farm, and at night-time it is the common practice for the dog to drive the cows, up the hill on the run at milking time. This farmer complains of the dry dry weather and the shortness of pasture resulting in a decrease in milk yield. The pasture may be short, but if it were covered with rich, succulent grass a foot high no cows would do their best under such treatment. The bad effects of dogging cows is an old and hackneyed subject, and one wood hardly expect a farmer who knew the least little bit about the care of cows, allowing it on his farm. Yet it is allowed in the instance given, and there may be other farmers also who do not see the evil of t. All of which goes to show the need of constantly directing attention to these little things and showing how the farmer's pocketbook is affected by their neglect .- Canadian Farm.

(By "Investor") In the first of this series it was shown that "distribution of risk" is an impor-ant principle of investment. It is a very simple one, however, involving no very confused ideas. There is another princi-ple to be borne to mand when insking in-vestments which is of no less importance, bat it is, however, considerably less ob-vious to those whose investment expri-ence is small-and even to many who should understand its actions thoroughry. This is the principle of investment "in accordance with actful requirements." You don't understand the price? Oh, the 10214 means that for every $100 of par value you pay $10225. So that for a $1,000 bond you must pay ten times the price of a $100 bond, or $1,022.50, while for a $50 bond-if such were ever issued-you will pay $51.12. This is the way stocks are quoted too. Bank of Com-merce shares sell at 206, but as they are only $50 par value the actual cost is $104 per share. The price is always given

THE FIRST RINGS.

Signet Ring of the Greeks-Mourning and Thumb Rings.

In the tombs of ancient Egypt the earliest rings known to history are found. The finest and most oostly are of pure gold and of simple de sign, but very massive, while the name of the owner is deeply cut on an oblong gold bezel.

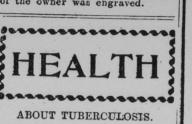

The lower classes had rings of silver, glass, bronze or even clay with a glazed surface, the inscriptions on the last being very often impressed while the clay was still moist. Other rings have been moist. found made of ivory, cornelian and amber. Under the later dynasties a scarab was used in place of the bezel, which was so mounted as to allow it to revolve.

Signet rings were greatly in fa-vor among the Greeks and were set as a rule with engraved gems. In Sparta a curious law was passed which forbade the use of any metal other than iron in their composi-tion, says the London Globe, but

In Rome ambassadors were the first allowed to wear rings of gold, and then they might only be worn on state occasions. Next Sena-tors, Consuls and Equites had the honor conferred upon them, and so on until at length Justinian with-drew in its ontinent the inc avent.

suggestive ring of this type, one time very popular, was form-ed of two skeletons bent along the hoop and holding a cofin on which the name and date was engraved. Thumb rings, which must have been very ungainly and ugly, were worn from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century, and in "Hen-ry IV." Falstaff boasts that in his youth he was slim enough to "creen outh he was slim enough to "creep into any alderman's thumb ring." While it is probable that rings can cure it that does not reach the blood-that salves and outward ap-stage of civilization converted inwere originally worn as mere or plications are worthless and a to articles of use. When few could read and fewer still could write, it was necessary for there to be some

Although there are many things that we do not know about consumption, or tuberculosis, there are some that we do and a few that we are in the act of learning. We do not know, for example, what makes for susceptibility and what for impunity. Strong and robust persons are sometimes stricken down with it; invalids and convalescents from other diseases are no more susceptible to it than are other people, and it is possible to live for an entire lifetime in the condition known as "run-down" or "weak" without becoming tuberculous.

People still speak of consump-tion as "inherited," but it is not inherited. A child may be born with a certain tendency to it, but if proper measures are taken early enough, and kept up steadily and long enough, this tendency can be overcome. A child whose parents before him, and their parents before them, perhaps for generations back, have been poor breathers, will probably inherit a small, meager chest, and will therefore be the natural victim of the consumption germ as soon as it reaches him. That child will have to be taught to breathe. The tendency to a narrow chest developed to nor-mal capacity; but to do this, the child must be kept constantly in good air, and taught how to develop and use the lungs. A pigeon-breasted child who is being brought up on the coddling process-oversheltered, overfed and overclothed -is in as much danger as if he lived from a hair.

Another long-lived fallacy, which is a great pet with many people, is that other diseases "run into" this law applied to Sparta only. There is now in the British Museum an Etrurian ring which is formed of two minutely modelled lions whose bodies make the hoop, their paws holding a scarab engraved with an lion. ith a lion. THE TONIC OF VICTORY.

Army Surgeons Say It Acts Almost as an Anaesthetic.

Bonnette, a French army sur-geon attached to the Thirty-ninth Artillery, writes in the Presse Me-dicale of the extraordinary indifference to the pain of operation manifested by the soldiers of Na-poleon while the great conqueror was sweeping victoriously over Europe. While the defeated soldier is full of imaginary terrors, subject to panic, madness, and treason, the conqueror on the other hand is intoxicated with success, says the Medical Journal. Nothing, not even the morbific microbe, can resist troops who believe themselves to be invincible.

ESTIMATING TIME.

It is not common to find a person who can correctly estimate the lapse of a single second. But in these days of speeding automobiles the exact time when each of two colliding vehicles must have occupied particular spots may be a matter of great importance. In a recent experiment a car took nearly two seconds to stop after brakes were applied and in that time it moved nineteen feet. So even fractions of a second are important. Ond can train himself to estimate even tenths of a second. Try it with a watch and it will be found that it is just possible to count ten in the lapse of a single second. But one must count fast to do it.

Postal inspectors at Southwark, Conn., are searching for the sender of a letter which exploded in the electric vanish. stamping machine of the post office the other day, wrecking the machine, and badly injuring Frederick M. Miller, who and are now camping in the open. Members of the family swear to the truth of the story. Simon Flsher, much older than his wife, died last March, and on his death-bed exacted a promise from her that she would not marry Carnes, whom he hated. In less than a month, the woman married Carnes, and, according to her story, her former husband has "dogged" her ever since. She and Carnes and her three children all declare that the last night they oc cupied the cottage Fisher appeared before them, attired in his grave clothes, pointed his long finger at her, and then seemed to walk right through her and
