POISONED FOR MONEY.

DR. Meyers Career In Many Cities in The States.

DETROIT, July 15 .- Dr. Henry C. W. Meyer and Mrs. Meyer, under arrest here charged with poisoning a number of people in order to defraud insurance companies, will be handed over to the New York police as soon as the officers from that city arrive with the necessary papers. Since her arrest Mrs. Meyer has given

Dr. Meyer has a wonderful career as a criminal according to all reports and facts which are now coming to light.

If only half of the story told by the authorities of this city is true, this man and his wife are the most remarkable poisoners this century has witnessed. They committed their crimes, it is alleged with all the scientific calmness of a Borgia, although inspired only by money-hunger. There was no malice in their murders.

Meyer and his wife, with Baum and a onfederate named Wimmers, went to New York late in January, 1892. According to the police, they had lived for years by poisoning and matrimonial swindling. They were all Germans but Wimmers, who was a Swede. He had served two years in the Illinois State Prison at Joliet for using the mails to scatter fraudulent natrimonial advertisement.

A SPLENDID RECORD.

A Provincial Industry Trebles Its Business in the Last Three Months.

Some three months ago this journal informed its readers that a new previncial industry, that of the Hawker Medicine Company of St. John, had completed its first quarter's business, and that its book showed a developement of trade and a record of sales that was not only gratifying but really astonishing.

Another three months has now elapsed and the company have balanced their accounts for the six months. The results show that in the last three months they have trebled the business of the first three:

they have about doubled their working staff and work has been carried on in the packers room till 11 o'clock every night in order to fill orders promptly. From all parts of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and P. E. Island, from Newfoundland and parts of the United States, the orders have rolled in. William Hawker, the original inventor of the remedies, has been a druggist in St. John for 30 years, and has long proved the value of the different remedies before the present company was rganized. It is with pleasure that this journal records the company's wonderful

ARE HOLSTEINS PROFITABLE. A paper read at the Holstein breeders'

ssociation, by R. S. Stevenson, Ancaster:

The subject which I have been allotted is one of great importance at the present time. As winter dairying is destined to become in a very short time one of the greatest sources of revenue for the Ontaro farmers, it is therefore, of the greatest importance that we should have the best eows for the purpose, as our success in the dairy business depends very largely on having a breed of cattle capable of consuming and turning into milk and butter The earl of Roseberry, secretary of farms. I will endeavor briefly to place lieve the Holstein to be the best breed for the general farmer to keep, who makes breed. The most valuable is the production of milk; for this purpose they have been bred for centuries, and are acknowabout two years old and hold out well milk is not only abundant in quantity, but rich in quality. They are large, harwhen dry, and make a good quality of beef. Many people dispute the idea of a added, to keep disdairying, wants large growthy calves that he certainly cannot get them from the small ill-shaped cattle often seen in dairies, and the value of the little extra feed it takes to maintain the large, thrifty cow, such as the Holstein, is very much overbalanced by the value of the calves and the larger quantity of milk she will give. And when we find a breed of cattle that are capable of consuming and digesting large quantities of food and turning it into milk, and at the same time producing fine, growthy calves, like the Holstein, I claim that it is the most profitable breed for winter dairying.

But is it not a fact that the farmers who reside in York and neighboring counties, those who make this city their market, are loud in their condemnation of the tariff almost as a whole; do not their property, their votes and interests far surpass in value and importance those of the men called to the feast? Is it because there is danger that the farmers will see through the scheme and become violent opponents of the honorable gentleman or because they are not of sufficient importance in the eyes of hon. Mr. Foster that they have not received an invitation to be present? Mr. Foster, coming as the finance minister of the dominion, will be accorded a hearty welcome here whether his views suit the people or not, but this talk of tariff adjustment by himself and his government has become an old chestnut to the intelligent people of York who have read and heard it discussed for the past thirteen years and still find the same old policy of protection existing in full force

BRUTAL MURDER. John Edgar of St. Marys Slaughtered at

A despatch to Hugh Edgar, St. Marys, on Saturday evening last contained the sad intelligence that his brother John was murdered at Danforth, Maine. The news soon spread among the relatives and friends of deceased, but not until Monday THE HERALD PRINTING AND PUBSH'G.CO.L'td could any of the facts connected with the killing be learned. The murder, which was a most brutal one, took place in the stable connected with a hotel owned by William Foss at Danforth, the murderer was Bela Noyes a bar-tender. The following account of the murder we take from the Bangor Commercial: Saturday afternoon about 5 o'clock Danforth, Me., was startled by the report Hon. George Eulas Foster, after mak- that a man had been killed in a row at acts as hostler and runs a bar in some and woods.

Edgar had worked in the woods in this neighborhood for the past year, generally as cook. As soon as he had finished work it had been customary for him to come to town and blow in his earnings. He had the reputation of being a peaceful fellow, except when he was drinking and things did not go to suit him. When he had not, his temper was not slow in rising. He had been around town three or four days drinking quite hard, and Saturday night he was determined to have it out with Noyes, and followed him around all day threatening to pound him. Edgar Demmons says that he was with Edgar nearly all day, and that Noyes sold Edgar liquor in the morning, but after the latter got what Noyes considered enough for him he refused to sell him more. This maddened Edgar, who threatened to lick him. About 5 o'clock Demmons saw Edgar go to the barn. Following him a short time later he Visits New Brunswick and Nova Scotis A violent hail storm visited the California Settlement and Grand Falls portage, Victoria county, on the 12th inst., doing a great deal of damage to crops in that vicinity. The storm lasted forty minutes, the sharp pieces of ice being from the size of a robin's egg to half the size of a hen's egg. The following farmers of the above named places lost all or most of their crops: Charles Shorey, John Hartt, John Wolverton, Chas. Ross, George Parks, Alex. Murchison, Fred Langley, Elijah Wright, Edward Pelchie, Robert Hallet, John Langley, James Dunn, James Barnes. In some places, such as hollows, the hail stones were two feet deep. Trees were stripped of their foliage and left standing without a leaf. Windows were broken, and the hail was so sharp that even the hay was cut clean to the roots. The like of it was never known there before. Fortunately the path of the storm was not more than half a mile in width, and crossed the country in a southeasterly direction, passing over the St. John river at the mouth of Little river, doing considerable damage

Its long awaited improvements, however, gave it a hearty welcome, and to-day its following is world-wide and enthusiastic. Thousands of operators have tried and preferred it, and thousands of others — who lack the congage of their convictions — stick to the old machines from force of habit only — already acknowledge it as THE typewriter. ## THERE'S COMPANY COMING

There's company coming to tea! Oh, what shall we have? let's see, There's sauce and cold meat. And plenty to eat, And custards enough for three.

The cellar you'll have to unlock. The butter is there in the crock. I'll get that myself, And from the swing shelf, Cider and nuts from our stock.

These biscuits are light as can be. Be neat with the table. And spry as you're able,

We will honor our company Come, Liza, set over the tea, Then open this can for me, Get pickles and cheese. And cake if you please.

We'll have a variety. Now run and get on a clean frock 'Tis half after five by the clock. The biscuits are done: I wish they would come,

What's that? Did I hear a knock? Now won't you all walk out to tea. We've little you plainly can see, But I'll tell Lizzie Ann We'll do what we can,

For our company come to tea.

SELECT STORY.

QUEEN OF HIS HEART.

"I shall never trust you again, Captain, I know you did it on purpose." "I give you my most solemn word honor as a gentleman, that—" He stopped short as his eye alighted on the dark haughty looking man who had come forward to greet the widow. "This is an unexpected pleasure," she said. "In fact a pleasant ending to an unpleasant afternoon. Ah! Eve, you were well out of it: two curates and twelve old tabbies, and one would sing. I really could not stand it, so when rumor reached me that a third song was on the tapis, I fled. Have you two ever met in your wanderings? You seem to have been pretty much over the same ground. Captain Gordon-Sir Ralph Tempest." Sir Ralph barely inclined his head, the captain bowed low.

"Delighted to make your acquaintance, I am sure. Well, Miss Evelyn, 'pon my word. I never saw vou."

Sir Ralph winced. Until that afternoon he had never called her anything but 'Miss Palmer.' What right had this words had brought into the other's face, anyhow he shook Evelyn's irresponsive hand with unusual warmth.

"I hope you will not scold me very much," he said impressively, "but I have not been able to procure that puzzle I promised you."

Evelyn was rather taken aback. The day before he had been enlarging on some wonderful American puzzle, and she had said in an unbelieving way that she would like to see one, whereupon he had dotted it down in his note book. She had allowed him, believing that it existed solely in his imagination. Now here he they were the best of friends. Tempest was talking to her mother, but the glimpse she caught of his face made her heart sink; he could look terribly hard when "I had no idea you had promised me anything," she said icily, determined not to be dragged into any false position. "Your memory is an exceedingly short one then," he said affably.

"My memory is an exceedingly good one, Captain Gordon." "Eve, dear girl, fetch those photos that came home to-day; I want to show them."

Mrs. Palmer for once in her life did a kind action—unwittingly of course. Evelyn instantly left the room, only too thankful to escape. She was just returning with some photographs of her mother in fancy dress when the drawingroom bell rang, the door opened and Tempest came out. Cato was at the door, waiting to show him into the street, so it was impossible to say much more than 'good-bye,' but he managed to whisper, "To-morrow afternoon," before he left say good-bye." her in a state of blissful happiness, making her look positively radiant. Captain Gordon noticed the change. Since he had known her, there had always been a pathetic wistfulness about her, but this afternoon a joyous gladness shone in her bright eyes, in her smile, sounded in her voice.

"Have you had good news?" he asked, taking the photos from her. And she answered with a happy little laugh, "Yes-very." "Oh, Eve, what is it?" Mrs. Palmer cried, gleefully. "Have you heard of a positively dying, for a little wholesome

He did not stay very long after the little widow had so graciously consented to become his. Poor Richard Denny disturbed the love making and Captain Gordon departed. "You are just in time for dinner, Dick," Mrs. Palmer said, trying to hide the flutter she was in.

"Thanks, I don't think I will stay," he said, not even taking the chair she motioned him to. As he had come into was speaking of his promise to her as if the room he had seen what first appeared one dark figure at the fire, but which suddenly divided into two upon hearing his voice. It had opened his eyes at last. Poor Dick! For days past the thought of what seemed about to happen had filled him with sickening dread; and now it had happened, for he could have sworn that Mrs. Palmer had been in Captain Gordon's arms. Her voice shook slightly when she spoke, as if she were excited and she noticed it at once. "I can't stay," he said huskily. "I only came to s how you were." "You have neglected me shamefully of late," she said reproachfully. "You never came near me the whole of yesterday, and look in for only two minutes this evening. What is the matter, Dick?" She had that minute parted with one lover, but was quite ready for a scene with another. "What is the matter?" she re-

CHAPTER III.

EARLY the following afternoon Captain Gordon arrived. He did not trouble to knock at the door, but letting himself in, stood at the foot of the stairs and called "Mab," and Mab tripped down all blushes and smiles. Eve standing on the landing above, heard the drawing room door shut and her heart fell. Suppose they stayed in the whole afternoon, how was that meeting with Sir Ralph Tempest to take place? She imagined how he would freeze up in the uncongenial society of the captain; how disgusted he would be at his dreadful familiarity. No, they should not meet. She would tell Cato to show him into the dining room, and yet she was terribly afraid it might appear forward and unmaidenly. Having made nerself very neat and nice to meet her lover, she went slowly and thoughtfully down stairs pondering in her mind what to do; as she did so she met Cato carrying a silver salver with spirts into the drawing room, and she heard her mother say-"I am not at home to anyone this afternoon." When the boy came out Eve stopped him, and trying to appear very unconcerned, but turning red to the tips of her the hall, and the page, unaware of any secrecy, said in a perfectly audible voice-"Yes, miss. In the dining room, miss?" "How do, Evelyn?" the captain said in a condescending tone. "Are you going to congratulate me?" "No, Captain Gordon, I cannot congratulate you upon an event which is most distasteful to us all."

"Draw it mild, my dear girl," he laughed in a sneering way, and going to the hat stand took a large box of bonbons from his pocket. "Your mother so delights in these," he said with another unpleasant smile. But Evelyn neither looked at him nor listened to him; she went up stairs to a large room which was set apart for her brothers and sisters. They were at school now, so she had it to herself, and could pace round and round the room, in restless agitation, waiting for Tempest, while poor Mrs. Palmer was making herself sick with chocolate-nougat. things! How she longed to throw them into the fire; but the captain sat close beside her, with the open box on his knees, and she felt forced to keep up the horrible role of babyism by eating them | you up. in true baby style; terrified all the time lest one of her pearly teeth should break

That was all; her day dream was shattered. After all he did not care; he had been playing with her. Captain Gordon had spoken truly when he said she was a fool to think of him twice. She tore the note into fragments, letting them fall into

"I will never think of you again," she said with a fittle laugh, "never, never again, and when we meet, you shall see now much I care, how heart broken I am." Three days later they did meet: it was Sunday morning after church. Eve, Mrs. Palmer, Captain Gordon and a Mr. Carlyle were walking on the Parade, the engaged couple in front, Eve and Carlyle behind, when in the distance she espied Sir Ralph. He was coming slowly towards them, the best dressed and best looking nan there, but Eve would not see him, and when they passed each other, she was glancing merrily up at her companion, who was bending forward, telling her some amusing tale, which she never heard for the deafening, surging noise in
