OFFICIAL REPORT

The house met at three o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I desire to lay upon the table of the house orders in council passed pursuant to the Relief Act.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

APPEAL TO PRIVY COUNCIL IN CRIMINAL CASES—LEGISLATIVE POWER UNDER STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 57 to amend the Criminal Code (Appeals to privy council).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Subsection 4, of section 1024, of the criminal code, formerly section 1025, abolishes appeals to the privy council in criminal matters. This section is still in the statutes and has been the law of Canada for the last four or five years. In 1926 a case known as the Nadan case originated in Alberta and upon its being brought to the privy council this particular section of the Criminal code was declared ultra vires of the Canadian parliament because it came in conflict with an old Imperial statute which granted leave to the subjects of His Majesty to appeal to the privy council. Under the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 that law of the dominion parliament was declared ultra vires and also because of the fact that this parliament did not possess the right to give extraterritorial jurisdiction to its legislation. Under the Westminster statute these two legal incapacities were removed but the removal applied only to future legislation of the Dominion parliament. In order to give force and effect to this provision of our law it is necessary to re-enact it and declare that it has full force and effect. This is the purpose of the bill.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question of the rights and powers of this parliament under the statute of Westminster which was adopted at the last session is now under consideration by the law officers of the Department of Justice with a view to introducing into this house at this session a bill which will deal with all questions that arise under the new authority given to this parliament by the statute of Westminster. This new legislation will cover not only the particular section of the criminal code mentioned by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) but also the extraterritorial effect to be given to all laws of the Dominion of Canada. It is hoped that a bill will be introduced during the present session to deal with all these matters rather than dealing with one at a time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am pleased that my hon. friend has made this statement. Perhaps he will allow the bill to be read a first time and remain upon the order paper until this legislation is brought down.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Certainly.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CONSERVATION OF HERRING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. PETER J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I should like to inquire of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) if any new regulations have been formulated in connection with the conservation of herring, and processes of salting, canning, etc. He may not have the information at hand at the moment, but perhaps he can obtain it for me.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I shall take this as a notice of question, and shall answer it to-morrow.

FRUIT MARKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he contemplates introducing legislation this session for the revision of the act relating to fruit marking.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): The matter is under consideration.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, another year in the fiscal history of this country has come and gone, and perhaps what is even more important is that another year of this period of intense economic and commercial depression is past and gone. As we look back over the past year and, indeed, over the past three or four years, many of us are willing to admit that we are much wiser to-day than we were three or four years ago. Many proposals made with great confidence that some suggestion, if accepted, would cure all the ills from which we were suffering, we now realize were mistaken ideas.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friends opposite seem to think that the monopoly of that rests with this side of the house, but I have very definitely in mind innumerable weird suggestions that have come from the other side.

The year, however, has passed. Under our constitutional form of government, we are once again confronted with the responsibility on the part of the administration of accounting for the year's stewardship and of intimating to the house provision for the future. This was done by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) in the admirable and well presented speech which he delivered the other day. Our picture at this time may not be particularly rosy, but as a people, one nation among many, I think we as Canadians can claim the right of looking back over the past year with at least some degree of satisfaction, even if it be grim, and of looking to the future with a great deal of confidence.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) who, I regret very much to note, is not in his seat, because I purpose dealing and necessarily must deal with much of what he said the other day, definitely represented the official opposition and the Liberal party as a whole. I believe his utterances were fully endorsed and unreservedly accepted by them. Therefore I feel at liberty to say that his views represent those of the Liberal party, the official opposition in this house. The hon. gentleman in his references to the government was certainly not very complimentary. In one breath he described the government as being weak and without self-reliance and a moment or two later, when it suited his argument, he said that this was a domineering government. Then he said that it was a static and fear-stricken government. A little later he said that it was an arrogant government. So we have this weak, domineering, fear-stricken, arrogant government accounting to the house for the last year's affairs. But there was no word of encouragement from the hon. gentleman from one end of his speech to the other; there was no recognition of world difficulties and perplexities; there was no offer of cooperation, only bitter denunciation, a deliberate disregard of obvious difficulties and, I believe, as I shall show in a moment, a gross misinterpretation of public statistics.

I propose to demonstrate to the house that his picture of Canadian trade is a false one and that his analysis of our debt and proposed new taxes is a distortion of easily understandable and readily knowable facts. First, I shall take his reference to the public debt. He said that the increase in the public debt was $455,000,000. In making that statement he ignores the transfer from current to funded debt of $33,293,000 of school land funds. This leaves the increase in the debt at about $421,000,000. This is his first error. The matter, however, of interest is not an error of a few millions here and there, but whether the items entering into this increase justify it, having in mind of course the conditions under which this country in common with all others is labouring. I stated that the increase in the funded debt was $421,869,000. The net debt has increased by almost precisely the same figure, the one in large measure simply representing the other, or $421,325,000. I propose to lay before the house reasons and justifications for this increase. The items are as follows

Deficit on ordinary account..$139,273,000

I shall analyse that a little further in a moment:

Capital expenditures, Hudson Bay railway and Welland canal completion..	54,325,000
Loans and advances, non-active.	10,559,000
Special expenditures on unemployment relief, $78,000,000 and wheat bonus, $12,00,000, less some small credits.. ..	88,026,000
Active assets written down:
30 per cent reduction on soldiers' loans.. .. ..$	8,599,000
Canadian National Railway loan..	41,121,000
Harbour commission loans retired from active to non-active..	26,000,000
	75,720,000
Canadian National deficit of last year..	53,422,000

These are the items which go to make up the $421,000,000 increase in debt.

As regards the first item on which the house might properly ask a few questions, that is the deficit of $139,000,000 on ordinary account, one can account for $77,000,000 of that in the following way: first, increases in ordinary expenditures in part due to actions before this government took office, and the outworking of certain measures adopted by parliament. In saying that, I am merely stating the fact without reflecting upon hon. gentlemen opposite.

Increase in Ordinary Expenditures in Past Three Years, Over 1929-30, Which Have Contributed to the Deficit on Ordinary Account

Excess of payments in each of past three years over amount required in 1929-30

Interest on public debt..	$13,000,000
Subsidies to provinces..	7,300,000
Old age pensions..	22,600,000
Coal movements..	2,300,000
Pensions and ex-soldiers' care.. ..	24,500,000
Maritime freight rates..	8,000,000

Those are all increases due to action by parliament but increases which certainly are not under the control of this government, and that total forms a substantial part of the $139,000,000 to which I have referred.

As to the capital expenditures increase to which I referred, I think it will be generally admitted that the Hudson Bay railway and the Welland canal were undertakings authorized by parliament which necessarily had to be carried to completion. I shall not refer further to unemployment relief and the other items which I have mentioned. These are items which we offer as a justification for the increase in the net debt of this country in the light of the very difficult financial circumstances through which we are passing.

It was rather amusing when the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth was speaking the other day that he should taunt the right hon. the Prime Minister with not having set up a sinking fund. He said that the right hon. gentleman a few years ago when he was leader of the opposition declared that it was a very sound principle to have a sinking fund for the retirement of the public debt, and he taunted the Prime Minister with not having brought a sinking fund into being within the past three years. But was that a fair criticism? During the nine years of bounding revenues when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office not one cent was set aside for the erection of a sinking fund. Those undoubtedly were the times when a sinking fund ought to have been set up, but in these days when we are in the greatest depression and economic chaos the world has ever seen, we are taunted with not having set up a sinking fund.

Then my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth turned to the trade question, and I invite the house to observe some of his statements in that regard. I thought he was particularly unhappy in his treatment of the trade question in this country.

He says that our total trade is down fifty per cent from 1931. He says, further, that our tariffs were put up in May, 1931, and then down went imports and down went customs revenue. Our trade, he says has dwindled to pitiful proportions, and in the amendment it is declared that our policies have been proven to have diminished trade.

I ask hon. members to note well those observations by the hon. gentleman. Our trade, he says, is down fifty per cent. What do we mean by trade? He of course measured our trade entirely by the dollar yardstick, by its value, but is that a fair yardstick?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is.

Mr. STEVENS: I think it is not. If we are sending out to the markets of the world a quantity of Canadian products reasonably commensurate in volume with what we were sending before, then I think we can claim that our trade is not in a bad state. Of course, the question of value enters into it; no one denies that. But it is obvious that we could not export from this country in times of depression two or three times the volume of goods that we exported before in order to equalize the value of our exports due to the fall in prices. I submit this to the house, that if it can be shown that the volume of our trade is being reasonably well maintained during this period of difficulty, the hon. gentleman's argument falls to the ground; and secondly, that if it can be demonstrated that prices have fallen in a corresponding ratio to the drop in revenues, there is nothing left to his case.

In the first place I shall deal with our trade, giving a few very striking illustrations. The year 1932 has been declared one of the worst years in our history both as regards trade and economic conditions throughout the world generally. I now give to the house the following increases in the value of our exports to some ten different countries, among them being many of our chief customers, and all these are increases on the basis by which my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth measures trade; that is dollar increases, an actual increase in the dollar value of the goods exported, and therefore the volume of the trade itself must also have been greatly increased:

Exports

1932 increase in value over 1931

United Kingdom	$6,637,000
Netherlands	3,334,000
Belgium	561,000
Australia	2,368,000
Peru	89,000
Norway	324,000
Sweden	846,000
Spain	1,497,000
Russia	1,677,000
Ceylon	5,000

That makes a total of $17,300,000 of an increase in the value of our exports to those countries. Consequently my hon. friend cannot claim that we are closing those markets to the Canadian producer.

Now I turn to our trade with the United Kingdom, and I will give to Hansard a statement which I shall read. I have included wheat in the list for purposes of information not that I claim any trade significance in regard to it because wheat is something that is exported in very large quantities in all years:

The reading of these items may be a little wearisome, but the point I wish to make is that the hon. member who criticized the government so bitterly made the claim that our trade was diminishing. Undoubtedly the trade of Canada is diminishing, in common with that of the world, brought about by the calamitous fall in the price levels. But if it can be shown that Canada is maintaining in some measure the volume of its business, the export of its goods in weights and measurements, then we have reason for encouragement and hope. That is the point I am bringing out.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the minister if he has corresponding tables on exports and imports with respect to world trade?

Mr. STEVENS: I shall come to that in a minute. Although I shall not read it in detail because it would be too wearisome, I shall give to the house briefly a résumé of new business that has been secured by the various commercial trade agencies of the government in all parts of the world. This deals with the increase in the value of business, or the new business secured in the agencies established at the following places: Athens, Batavia, London, Bristol, Liverpool, Glasgow, Dublin, Oslo, Brussels, Hamburg, Milan, Paris, Rotterdam, Melbourne, Auckland, Calcutta, Port of Spain (Trinidad), Kingston (Jamaica), Rio de Janeiro, Havana (Cuba), Panama City, Lima (Peru), Mexico City, Buenos Aires, New York, Shanghai, Hongkong, Tokyo, Kobe, Cape Town and Cairo. In all these places substantial new business has been obtained by the trade agencies of the government, and it shows for the year in the 603 established agencies new business valued at $11,000,000. All this indicates the efforts being put forth by the government and its officials abroad, and the results being achieved.

Now coming to the question the right hon. gentleman asked a minute ago. He asked if we had any evidence to show that there is a general increase in business. I do not say that there is an actual increase in all our business, or in all our exports. But I have here a calculation made for me by the Bureau of Statistics which indicates that the fall in the volume of our trade as compared with 1930, is only five per cent. I refer to the total exports to all parts of the world. This, I think, is a creditable showing. The calculation is based upon this premise: I include in the statement, in both instances exports only, that is in the 1930 price and in the 1932 price. We take the volume of business in 1932, and measure it by the price level of 1930, or apply to the volume of business in 1932, the price of 1930. Revaluing the 1932 exports at the 1930 price we have this result:

Exports

Or a decline of $44,000,000 or about five per cent. That, I think, is substantial evidence of the extent to which we are maintaining the volume of our trade abroad.

The other day the hon. gentleman had another criticism when he said that the shrinkage in customs revenue was due to tariffs. Or, to use his own words, he said that our tariffs went on in May and then down went the imports, down went customs revenue with the result that our customs revenue in 1931 was $145,000,000 and in 1932, $69,000,000. In order to support his argument he gives a table of percentages. He shows in this table that in 1926 the percentage of customs revenue to the total revenue was 42, and it has fallen in 1933 to 28 per cent. I ask the house to examine these figures. In the first place the hon. gentleman seeks to prove that because there was a fall in customs revenue in relation to total revenue, to 28 as compared with 42 per cent,—a fall it will be noted of 33⅓ per cent,—that was entirely due to the imposition of restrictive tariff duties. I wish the house to follow me in a recital of price indices for Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom. We have the following rather interesting result. Taking 1926, which was the year he used in his calculations, as 100, we have this result; the Canadian price index, 100 in 1926, was 63·6 in February, 1933, or a drop of 36·4 per cent. Irving Fisher's index, 100 in 1926 was 55·3 in February, 1933, a drop of 44·7 per cent. The Bureau of Labour figure in the United States, 100 in 1926, was 62·6 in 1933, a drop of 37·4 per cent. The Economist index in the United Kingdom, 100 for 1927, was 61·2 in January, 1933, a drop of 38·8 per cent. In every instance, in Great Britain, in the United States, in Canada, you have a drop in prices of 36 to 44 per cent. Consequently there was bound to be a corresponding drop in the revenue collected from ad valorem taxes. So while there was a drop in the proportion of customs revenue of some 33⅓ per cent it is only reasonable to assume that it was in large measure accounted for by the drop in the price level of goods in that period of time.

Then I take another test of the fairness of my hon. friend's argument. I remind the house that the charge is that the rates of duty have been boosted unduly and unwarrantably. He says, "Up went the duties and down went revenue." Let us take the average duty on goods imported from the United Kingdom, other than alcoholic liquors, for the term in which my hon. friends opposite were in office. You have an average rate of 17·9 per cent. In 1932, under the present government's increased tariffs condemned so much by my hon. friends, we have a rate of only 18·62, about ¾ of 1 per cent increase on the average on dutiable goods imported from the United Kingdom. If we turn to the United States we find this figure. During the Liberal term of office the average rate of duty was 23·9 per cent and under the present government in 1932 it was 27·45 per cent, in other words an increase there of about 3½ per cent.

Mr. EULER: Does that include the specific duties?

Mr. STEVENS: It includes all duties as far as I know. It is calculated in the regular way by the Bureau of Statistics and carried through in both instances on the same basis.

I wish also to give at this time an indication of the trend in Canada's trade, the proportions of Canada's imports from and exports to empire and foreign countries. In 1929 our imports from empire countries were 19·8 per cent of our trade, in 1932 this had increased to to 28·3 per cent. Our exports to empire countries, 33·4 per cent in 1929, had increased to 44 per cent in 1932. Then for foreign countries we find the reverse situation. It will be noted that there was an increase of about 10 per cent in the proportion of trade with empire countries in the last four years, and we find a decrease in our trade with foreign countries, from 80 per cent in 1929 to 71 per cent in 1932, for imports; and from 66 per cent to 56 per cent for exports. Taking the United Kingdom figures, we have 15 per cent of our imports coming from the United Kingdom in 1929, and 20 per cent in 1932; and our exports to the United Kingdom increased from 24 per cent in 1929 to 36 per cent in 1932. This will indicate the trend of Canadian trade. Unquestionably we are gradually seeing the result of the Imperial economic conference proposals and agreements of last summer.

My hon. friend, the critic of the opposition, denounced the government tax proposals very bitterly. His speech was designed, I think, to attract the support of every tax-dodger in Canada. He found fault with every form of taxation, every impost, that the Minister of Finance found it necessary to make. And he used this old hackneyed phrase; the taxation proposed, he said, will fall upon those least able to bear it.

An hon. MEMBER: He was right.

Mr. STEVENS: An hon. gentleman says he was right. Let him look for a moment at these facts. Here is the record from the public accounts, page 52. Taxes paid by banks, average for the years 1922 to 1930, $1,240,000. The average for the years 1931 to 1933 was $1,390,000. In other words there was an increasce of taxation of banks during the term that we have been in office as compared with the time when my hon. friends were in office. Then let us take income tax; the average amount of income tax during the 1922-30 period when my hon. friends were in office was $57,000,000 annually. In the last three years, 1931-33, the average is $65,000,000, and that with the falling off in earnings and diminution of revenue upon which this tax could be imposed. So we see that in income tax and the tax on banks we have a larger imposition under this government than under my hon. friends opposite. Take sales tax. This is the tax, mark you, which comes under the category of the hon. member's description, taxation which will fall upon those least able to bear it. It is the tax he referred to the other day as the one that would be the poor man's tax. From 1922 to 1930 the average was $94,000,000. And in case my hon. friends say, Oh but there was a lot of business, let me remind them that for a very substantial portion of that time they had a 6 per cent sales tax, just what it is to-day. And for a very substantial portion of that time they had a smaller exempt list than we have to-day. In other words there was a heavier weight of sales tax during the term of office of my hon. friends than there is at the present time.

Mr. MALCOLM: But values are lower now.

Mr. STEVENS: During the years 1931-33 the average has been $59,000,000, as against $94,000,000 in the previous period. When my hon. friends go, as they will, with the speech of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), before this country and argue that this government is imposing taxes upon people who are least able to bear them, let them bear in mind where that weight of taxes rested during the nine years that they were in office.

Now the hon. member sneered at the agricultural stabilization plan. He said it was a very unsound principle. He said, in principle I am opposed, have always been opposed, to this sort of thing. Now the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth spoke for the Liberal party. He is opposed to this thing. Absolutely opposed to it. Then he turned around and said the main thing that was wrong with it was that it was not extended to all kinds of products. He says it is unsound and uneconomic, but the chief thing wrong is that it is not extended to manufactured products. Not satisfied with that he says, "Why, you are only extending it to goods sent to the United Kingdom. You ought to apply it to goods going to all parts of the empire." Then, carried away with that, he said it should be extended to goods sent to the United States. He wanted to apply this form of stabilizing exchange to goods sent to the United States, whose money is at a premium in this country; that was his proposal. Let us examine his position.

Mr. MALCOLM: Would the minister indicate in Hansard where the financial critic said he wanted the stabilization fund to apply to goods sent to the United States?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, gladly.

Mr. MALCOLM: He said if it was sound why not apply it.

Mr. STEVENS: It does not sound very well, I will admit. The hon. gentleman said:

Now, no one can tell how it is going to work out until he sees the result next year.

That is what we call, in slang, a wise crack. He is pretty safe there.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is logical.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend says that is logical. If a government should confine itself to the imposition of taxes and similar matters in connection with which the full result could be seen a year before the imposition was made, I do not think we would impose very many taxes in this house. Then the hon. gentleman went on:

I said the same thing about the wheat bonus and I repeat it now in regard to this matter. In principle I am opposed to this sort of legislation, because I do not believe it is sound, but if bonuses are going—

Mr. HANBURY: If.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is not improving his standing here by interjecting that sort of thing.

—if bonuses are going they ought to extend to every natural product and, as someone suggests, factory products as well. I cannot see how you can pick out some part of the community shipping to Great Britain and say to that class that they will have a certain amount made up on what they lose in shipping to Great Britain, while other exporters are given no such consideration. Take for instance the fresh fish producers. According to this they will get a bonus, but the preserved fish man does not.

Then the hon. gentleman went on to a discussion of other items such as canned and salt fish and lumber. A little later he said:

One could name numbers of natural products that fall into the same category. After all, Mr. Speaker, I ask you: Is there any guarantee, except what the Prime Minister said last evening to the effect that the government were considering the matter of machinery, that the man who actually produces the goods will get the benefit of this bonus? The exporter is the one who will get it, according to the budget speech.

And so on.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: What is the matter? I do not want to read the whole of the hon. gentleman's speech, but hon. members might listen to this:

I say to my hon. friend that he will not get very far in assisting the fishermen of the east in shipping fresh fish to England. I believe there was about $300,000 worth of fresh fish shipped last year to England whereas the shipments to the United States amounted to something like $6,000,000. If this provision is intended to assist the producer of fish, why does he not get the bonus for the fish he ships to the United States as well as to Great Britain?

So the hon. gentleman proposes to apply this exchange stabilization scheme to goods shipped to the United States, whose money is at a premium.

Mr. BAKER: I rise to a point of order. It is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not being given fair play by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. STEVENS: They do not worry me at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not notice any improper interjections, but the minister should be accorded perfect silence while he is speaking.

Mr. STEVENS: In the remarks I have just read the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth says there is no advantage to the fishermen in this scheme. I want to ask him this question: Is it of no interest to those who last year exported $1,500,000 worth of canned lobster to the United Kingdom that each pound sterling they receive should be worth $4.60 to them instead of $3.90 or $4.10? I ask him if it is of no interest to those who exported $3,500,000 worth of canned salmon to the United Kingdom that their pound should be worth $4.60 instead of $3.90 or $4.10? Is it of no interest to the fishermen that these two items alone, totalling over $5,000,000, should bring to Canada a larger return in terms of dollars and cents than would be possible under the existing rate of exchange? Is it of no advantage to the fishermen to obtain that increase? I have worked it out here and on these two items alone it would mean to the fishing industry an enhancement of their returns by over $750,000.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member turned to the Minister of Finance; with a very solemn look on his face he leaned towards the minister and said: "If the minister wants to help the fishermen of the maritimes why does he not deny licences to trawlers?" That seemed to be a very solemn and a very important matter in the estimation of the hon. gentleman. I took the trouble to look up the facts, and I find a very interesting record in this regard. I say to the hon. member, and in his absence I say it to his leader who was then leader of the government, why when they were in office and when this matter came before them did they not give the relief which they now very seriously tell the Minister of Finance ought to be given the shore fishermen? What are the facts? "Save the shore fishermen," says the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, "by refusing licences to the trawlers." In 1927, at his instigation, a royal commission was appointed headed by Hon. A. K. Maclean, now of the exchequer court. In 1928 that commission reported; four of the members were against issuing licences to trawlers, with the chairman dissenting. No action was taken. Where was the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth and where was the government of the day at that time? They appointed a royal commission which presented a majority report, but they took no action whatever. Now they come forward and say this government is derelict in its duty in not refusing to grant those licences.

Furthermore the hon. gentleman, who is an able lawyer, drafted order in council P.C. 2196, dated November 2, 1929, which provided for the collection of one cent per pound for fish caught by trawlers in the maritimes. They were allowed to go on and no attempt was made to collect this fee until this government came into office in September, 1930, when the case was taken to the exchequer court. In that court the validity of the order in council was called into question and was thrown out as far as that tax was concerned. It was found to be ultra vires of this parliament. The hon. member who was chiefly responsible for drawing it up claims to be an able constitutional lawyer and when he drew it up he must have known that the order in council was not valid. My hon. friend, his leader and his colleagues in the previous government simply kidded the shore fishermen of the maritimes. There is an old saying in the law fraternity that when a man comes into court he must come with clean hands, and it ill behooves the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth to twit the Minister of Finance upon the question of trawlers. The record is there to be seen by anyone who wishes to read.

I come now to a very important question to which I intend to give the closest attention. The hon. member criticized the government very bitterly for the assistance given in the stabilizing of the wheat market. When he referred to this matter the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) turned around and said that it was not hedging, it was gambling which the government had indulged in. This is too serious a matter to pass over lightly and I think the house ought to give it very careful consideration as it affects the life and welfare of the three western provinces.

This government has been faced with very serious problems in western Canada, one of them being that in connection with a drought which affected seventy municipalities and which lasted for three years. Large sections of the western provinces were affected. Another serious question which the government had to face was the collapse in wheat prices. Had it not been for the action taken by the government, of which I shall give a full explanation in a moment, the wheat market would have collapsed much more and prices would, I believe, have fallen to around the thirty cent level on the Winnipeg market. When we consider the problem of wheat prices we must remember that Winnipeg has become the most important price fixing centre in the world for wheat. The great Liverpool market is a buyers' market, but Winnipeg is the great world market for wheat. Chicago is no longer a world market; it is a great market as it handles the wheat for 120,000,000 people, but it is not a world market in the same sense as Winnipeg. The Winnipeg market is open and free for trading throughout the whole world.

When the hon. member declared that the action of the government was gambling and not hedging obviously he did not understand the action taken or the practice followed in connection with hedging on a market. The daily practice is that a purchaser, say the pools, a milling company, an exporting house or others, purchases a quantity of wheat, for instance, 1,000,000 bushels at the prevailing market price. The grain thus purchased goes forward to a central elevator at the head of the lakes or at Vancouver or to one of the storage elevators in the interior. If the transaction ended at that point the purchaser of the grain would be carrying all the risks of a possible fall in the market and to obviate or minimize that risk, the purchaser sells grain for future delivery. That is, he will contract to deliver wheat at some future time, usually three, six or nine months hence. Such sale is usually made at a price slightly in advance of the purchase price, plus storage charges, insurance, handling charges, et cetera. This is called hedging, or, in other words, insuring one's self against undue risk. It is not gambling but is the most conservative form of doing business. If such a practice is to be carried on there must of necessity be willing buyers. If the hedging process is to be successful there must be willing buyers on the market to contract to buy grain for future delivery. In normal times there are many people willing to take the risk; they purchase these futures, or, in other words, enter into a contract to receive delivery of wheat at some future date for which they pay a margin down as an earnest of good faith. These contracts for future delivery are negotiable and may be passed from one person to another. The price paid is based upon calculations as to the likely price of wheat at a future date, such as May, July, October or December, the usual dates fixed for settlement of such contracts. These calculations are supported by the most minute information collected through various agencies as to the condition of crops all over the world, the amount of wheat available in exporting countries and the condition of supplies in importing countries. The most noted of these avenues of information are the International Agricultural Bureau at Rome, the American government agricultural department crop bulletins, Broomhalls, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, crop reports as well as a large number of other agencies that gather information and supply it to the public. Up to this point it may be said that the practice is a normal one.

Mr. CASGRAIN: From what communication is my hon. friend reading?

Mr. STEVENS: I anticipated that some hon. member would be small enough to ask that question. For the information of my hon. friend I say that every word which I am reading was dictated by me merely for the purpose of accuracy and because of its importance.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I thought the minister was reading from a statement.

Mr. STEVENS: Other than one or two minor changes made in the text, not one word has been changed since I dictated this. I dictated this simply for my own protection and I am not leaning on anyone else.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I just asked if the minister was reading from a statement.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is not going to get away with it in that way. His suggestion was that I was incompetent to prepare this document.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Not at all. Generally the minister does not read from anything and I was asking what he was reading from.

Mr. STEVENS: It is my own.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am glad it is his own.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: Up to this point it may be considered that the practice followed was a normal one. Now the Dominion government's stabilization plan comes into the picture. Two or three years ago it was discovered that due to the collapse of world commodity prices and stock market operations generally, the buying of grain for future delivery had virtually ceased upon the Winnipeg grain exchange. In other words, the public was not in the market. This condition presented at once a very serious problem because the pools were bound to buy and take physical possession of the wheat of their members. This entailed very heavy responsibility and the financing was carried on by the banks advancing large amounts of credit to the pools. As the market was obviously a falling market, there were no contract buyers available and it became clear that unless some agency would carry the contract risks, the market would utterly collapse and the price of wheat would fall much below the level which it did reach. Recognizing this fact and appreciating the serious loss which would be entailed, particularly to the producer, the government authorized Mr. John I. McFarland, the head of the pools sales agency, to purchase grain for future delivery when it was necessary to do so in order to hold the market steady. This was done and the whole transaction was successful in preventing a further serious reduction in the world price of wheat, as Winnipeg has been the pivotal point of wheat marketing, influencing the price of wheat in the world markets. The result of this movement has been to hold the market steady and prevent the dumping of unusual quantities of cash wheat upon the market. It also distributed the marketing of wheat over a longer period of time. There are strong evidences that by holding the market reasonably steady for the past two years, this movement will prove to have been successful in itself, because it has given time together with natural processes, for the absorption of the tremendous overhang of 350,000,000 to 400,000,000 bushels in the hands of the United States.

During the past two months, the wheat market has been very steady, showing an inclination for slow but sure advancement.

The Dominion government, through this action, is not faced with any immediate loss, as we are able to carry forward these contracts and liquidate them only as market conditions warrant.

Up to the present it has not cost a cent to do so, and the possibility of liquidating the whole situation without a dollar of loss is not an unreasonable expectation.

Let me again assure my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) I had this written out merely for the purpose of accuracy owing to the importance of the subject and my desire to get before the house as clear a statement as I could give it on this very important matter. But I pause now to emphasize this, and I ask my hon. friends, particularly those from western Canada, to accord to a government at least some measure of cooperation and support when we make an effort of this kind, obviously taking some risks in judgment, for the purpose of holding steady the great wheat market of Canada which is one of the most important things affecting our economic life.

My hon. friend opposed the budget proposals. He opposed the reduction of the pound for duty purposes from $4.40 to $4.25. He opposed the exchange stablization scheme. He opposed reductions in tariff on some thirty items.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: He opposed increase in the excise on perfumeries, the increase in the income tax. He opposed the adjustment of the sales tax. He opposed the revenue tax on sugar and he opposed and denounced the tax on bonds held outside Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where does the hon. member find justification for saying that the hon. gentleman opposed reductions in tariff?

Mr. STEVENS: I find it in the amendment to the budget, where he says:

> They imply a continuance of fiscal and other policies which have not only signally failed to afford any solution of our national problems, but have been proven to have the effect of diminishing trade. . . .
> The increases in taxation proposed in the budget resolutions will fall most heavily on those least able to bear the burden thereof.

Then he winds up his amendment by saying:

> For these and other reasons, this house is of opinion that the present government no longer possesses the confidence of the country.

The right hon. gentleman rises in his place and asks: Where do you find any justification for saying that we oppose these? The right hon. gentleman does not like to see these items brought out individually.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said justification for the statement that he was opposing reductions in tariff.

Mr. STEVENS: So he did.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, he did not.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, in this resolution, cheered and supported by the ex-Prime Minister and all his followers, condemned everything that was in the budget. The right hon. gentleman will not find in that speech of March 24, 1933, a single word approving of anything the government has done or proposes to do.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. STEVENS: Hon. gentlemen opposite agree. They say: "Hear, hear." The situation, however, is this, that in the proposals in the budget there are some points which we certainly realize will be distasteful to some of the taxpayers. That is debatable ground; it is ground on which one might expect divergent opinion. But there are in the budget some things which my hon. friends opposite dare not oppose and then face their constituents. They will express a wholesale condemnation of the government instead of indicating that so far as the effort of the government is concerned, in certain respects they give it their endorsation.

The reduction of the pound for duty purposes from $4.40 to $4.25, is it good or is it not? Is it in the interest of Canada and her relations with the British Empire or not? Which is it? My hon. friends dare not oppose that individually, but they condemn the government and all its works as a whole and would vote it out of office. Is the exchange stabilization capable of support? Will my hon. friends from western Canada whom I see over there, my hon. friends from the rural districts of Ontario, from the rural districts of Quebec, support this or will they not?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. STEVENS: They will not. That is their own lookout. As far as we are concerned, we believe it is in the interest of the primary producers. Will they support the increase in the income tax? They will not discuss it, but they will condemn the government that undertakes it. They will twit the government on being the friend of the big interests, although we are increasing the corporation tax from 11 to 12½ per cent. In their resolution they condemn us for doing this. The other day the hon. member condemned us in so many words for imposing the five per cent tax on earnings from bonds held outside Canada. He stood in his place, with the right hon. gentleman behind him, and said to the Minister of Finance that he warned him that this was not a very promising source of revenue and something that might result in serious trouble for him. Perhaps I am a little mean in saying this, but my hon. friends have rather provoked it. I wonder: When the hon. gentleman made that utterance, was he speaking as a legal man from the great city of Montreal or as a friend of the poor taxpayer of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He was speaking as a member of parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, on that occasion he was not speaking very wisely as a member of parliament.

Then the hon. gentleman, in order to cap the whole business, not only condemned the government for all these proposed taxes and its efforts in financing the affairs of this country, but he said: Let me remind the minister that the people of the United States only a few weeks ago turned the key in every bank from the forty-ninth parallel to the gulf of Mexico and from San Francisco to New York. What did he mean by that? Was he advising the government to turn the keys in the banks of Canada? He did not explain the statement, but he said: Here is courage for you; those people had the courage of their convictions, and he invited the government to exercise courage in this country. No other deduction can be made from the utterance, or its presence in his speech at all is inexcusable, than that he suggested that we should take our courage in our hands and turn the keys in the doors of the banks of Canada. Let me say to the hon. gentleman and his associates that no more calamitous thing has happened to the United States than the turning of the keys in the doors of the banks of that great country. As yet only a small number of those banks is open; many cities the size of Ottawa have only one bank operating.

Mr. EULER: They are nearly all open.

Mr. STEVENS: No, they are not; the hon. member is entirely wrong. State banks are not open at all; many of the national banks are not open and many of the federal banks are not open. But the point of the matter is this: not only was it calamitous for the interests of that country, but it has precipitated there a financial crisis which has already drawn into the maelstrom of ruin several of the great insurance companies. That brings me to the point referred to last night by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who said: Why is this government interested in insurance companies? Why does the goverment, he asks, safeguard insurance companies when the people of this country are out of work? I wish the hon. member were in his seat because I should like to talk perhaps more plainly than I care to in his absence. But I would say this, that that is the utterance of a demagogue. It is a suggestion, and I put this to my hon. friends in the corner angularly opposite, that the actions taken by the government in the last year or two years, have been for the purpose of saving rich companies, and that on the other hand we are disregarding the welfare of the people.

Now what are the facts? In these insurance companies there are seven billions of dollars of insurance in force in Canada, including life insurance, health insurance, accident insurance, and all other classes of insurance, and included in the ambit of that enormous sum are hundreds of thousands, if not over a million, people insured. It represents the savings of hundreds of thousands of our people. It is their hope for the future should the head of the family be disabled or die, as the case may be. It is the economic lifeblood, shall I say, of hundreds of thousands of people in this country, and yet some of my hon. friends, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) and some others advocate the disregard of our obligations in regard to bond interest and in regard to the payment of bonds, provincial and municipal, and yet, Mr. Speaker, those are the assets behind this seven billions of dollars of insurance in force in this country. This is the class of securities into which is poured the millions of dollars of premiums of the people of this country. They have twitted the Prime Minister over constantly talking about the credit of Canada, but if the Prime Minister was to listen to some of the arguments put to him in the past year in this house and disregard the credit of Canada it would mean the ruination, not simply of half a dozen or a dozen insurance companies, but of countless hundreds of thousands of poor people in this country whose savings are in the form of insurance premiums. These are things that it is well to keep in mind. If the credit of this country should collapse it would largely destroy the savings of these people to whom I have referred.

My hon. friend the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) had a few words to say the other night, and I wish to say to him that with much that he has to say I do not find particular fault, but his chief demand was for a central bank. He wants a central bank, and he described that as a national bank owned one hundred per cent by the state. That is what he wants—a central bank owned by the state. What is to be the policy of such a bank? He says that its policy must be laid down in black and white. What is it? The policy of such a bank would be that it should maintain price levels, he says. Let us look at that for a moment.

It sounds very simple and very attractive. My hon. friend says he wants a central bank owned by the state to maintain price levels. If one does not analyze the proposal very closely, there is an attraction about it because one of the things we want to achieve above everything else is the restoration of price levels for commodities in this country and throughout the world; there is no question about that. We want the staple commodities of the world to rise in price. I pause here to interject that there are really only two main schools of thought on the economic situation. One holds that the process of deflation must be continued until interest, wages, service charges, and rents are brought down to the low level of any and all the staple commodities. On the other hand, there are those, and I think in this school the government and those on this side of the house largely stand, who hope that there will be found, and that we can find, a method for restoring price levels and obviating the necessity of dragging down all these other things to the lowest possible level. On the one hand you have complete liquidation; on the other hand you have a restoration of credit, and when I say credit I do not mean some nebulous thing that is handed out without anything behind it. Credit is a tangible thing. It exists in two or three things—commodities, land, real estate and character, because character is very often used as credit. But there must be something tangible before any bank or institution will extend what is commonly called credit. Credit is not something that is available without anything behind it. So I say there are those two schools of thought.

My hon. friend from Macleod says, knowing that the proposal is attractive and appeals to the people, that the price levels should be raised. He says let us have a central bank. But it does not follow that a central bank would raise price levels. I have given the matter a tremendous amount of thought, so far as I am capable of doing it, and I confess that I do not see that a central bank would or could affect price levels to any extent. I do not. I say this—I said it in 1923 when the Bank Act was up for revision, I have said it many times since, and I say it again now—that we now have machinery under the Finance Act almost if not quite as flexible and effective as that of a central bank. But I do wish to point out that a central bank cannot fix prices; there is no doubt about that. Nor can it maintain price levels, because price levels are the result of world conditions.

Idealistic theories are pleasant things to trifle and play with, but some of us are more anxious to find out how to apply those theories. What we are anxious about is to find the mechanics—shall I say?—of many of these proposals.

I have spoken longer, Mr. Speaker, than I intended but I should like, if I might be permitted, to turn away for a moment from the realm of controversy. The opposition in a debate of this kind have certain duties to perform. They criticize the government, and I have no quarrel with them. I have duties to perform as well, and my duty as far as I am able is to present views representing a defence of the government's course and a justification for the action it has taken. Obviously our views will clash from time to time, but may I crave the indulgence of the house for a few moments while I say a few words of a non-controversial character?

I have attempted as far as I was able to defend the government this afternoon. I feel that in doing so I have been doing but justice to my colleagues, many of whom are carrying loads which I think few in this house realize. For a moment I refer to the Prime Minister, who is perhaps the pivotal point of a great deal of abuse from various parts of the country because he is not able to come forward with complete solutions not only for public problems but for problems almost of a private character. There seems to be a tendency these days to lean upon governments, and to expect from them a solution of even local or private problems. The Prime Minister is condemned for trying to maintain the country's credit. He is attacked for this and for that, and yet from day to day, without any sparing of his time or his energy, what he is seeking to do is to guide this country through perhaps one of the most perplexing times in our history, and doing it I believe from one motive only, and that is a high sense of public duty.

My colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), and I know this from my contacts with him, is daily confronted with demands from provinces and from every part of the country for financial assistance to overcome difficulties which are entirely foreign to the duty and the constituted power of this government or of this parliament.

My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), to whom I want to pay a tribute in his absence, attacked the railway problem in this country two and a half or three years ago in a most intelligent and vigorous way, and it is very largely as a result of his efforts that the improvements which have taken place in regard to expenditures have been achieved.

Then we have the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). Who would envy him his task in meeting the problem of unemployment, a task which it is impossible for one properly to describe. I say the government have endeavoured, as far as we can from day to day, to meet the problems of the day as they present themselves to us.

May I say this: Canada is a democracy, is still a democracy and I hope will remain a democracy. But the success of a democracy depends upon the extent to which each individual unit which goes to make up that democracy discharges his or her obligation as a citizen of the country. I fear that in these days there is a tendency on the part of many citizens to lean too much on governments, whether they be municipal, provincial or federal, and to look for help and assistance where very often they could fend for themselves. Unless we can imbue the mass of the people with a sense of responsibility, then there is not much hope for this Canadian democracy.

But, sir, I have hope for it. I have confidence in it. I believe our Canadian democracy will overcome the difficulties with which we are confronted. Not perhaps to-day or to-morrow but as the days go by and as the people once more become fully seized of their duty and their sense of responsibility, these difficulties will be overcome. All we can do as a government is to confront our task each day, and to endeavour to the best of our ability to discharge our duties. All we can ask of hon. members opposite, all we can ask of provincial governments and others holding public positions in Canada is that they shall attempt to do the same. We do say to hon. members opposite —not that we are asking any consideration for our actions—that we do feel that there are tasks in which all of us can join in an effort to solve the problems with which Canada is confronted.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, let me at the outset congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the very acceptable manner—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the house will just keep quiet I think I can get up steam soon enough. Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin over again, but as what I have said would come out of my forty minutes I do not think I shall. However, before the interruption I was congratulating the Minister of Finance upon the very acceptable manner in which he performed his somewhat difficult duty. We realize he had not a very rosy picture to present, but he did it well enough. Then, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) certainly displayed an ability to criticize the shortcomings of the budget. He levelled a devastating and withering criticism against the government, which the hon. member who has just taken his seat has not been able to break down.

My good friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) is recognized as one of the best parliamentary debaters, and for that reason he need not apologize for his inability to do anything. We never dreamed of casting any reflection upon his ability. When the whip of the Liberal party asked concerning the book from which he was reading, we were not casting any reflection.

I shall spend only a very few moments discussing some of the matters with which he has dealt. I shall not cover all of them because were I to do so my whole forty minutes would have expired. He indicated, first, that he hoped we were all wiser than we were last year at this time. There is not much evidence of increased wisdom as a result of experience either in the wide-world without or in the government of Canada, within. Certainly, that is so if we are to judge the government by its present policies. My good friend compares two years of trade—both of them Tory years. That is not a very effective comparison. Because one Tory year happens to be better or worse than another Tory year does not assist us in arriving at any intelligent conclusion. In order to make a somewhat better showing my good friend, the minister, adopts a new system of comparison altogether. Apparently, now, when values are down, comparison of values is not the right way. How does the business man value his returns at the end of the year? How does the farmer value his returns? Does he figure out the number of carloads of wheat he grows, or the number of dollars he handles? We heard so much of that kind of comparison last year that we are simply fed up on it. There is not one word by Tory writers about the small amount we are getting in return. In order to make it look better he transfers our trade figures from values to volume, and in that transfer shows evidence that, on that basis, we import more castor oil, more bologna and more nuts, than formerly. Then he complains that as the values are low, inevitably our revenues must be low.

He is trying to do the impossible when he attempts to convince this house and country that prohibitive duties produce revenue. At every convenient opportunity the government used the services of the Minister of National Revenue to jack up the pound to the necessary level for the purpose of making a higher price for duty purposes. They pegged the pound, increased values for duty purposes and then complain that they had not enough revenue or had not enough opportunities to impose higher duties and then wonder why our revenues are down. Their memories are very short indeed, Mr. Speaker. I would not have much trouble with even all the lesser points raised by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat as his futile efforts were quite laboured, but I shall have to turn to a discussion of other matters.

I shall speak first about the five or six good provisions in the budget. There are not many such, but there are a few. If I may, I shall also make one or two recommendations. Although my good friend does not speak in complimentary terms of our former recommendations, at all events I shall take my chance. In my view the appointment of a commission to investigate the monetary situation is good business. I have always taken the ground that the public have no right to expect any government to be a body of experts capable of dealing with every question arising. I am willing to concede all due credit to the minister, but I am suggesting that surely the government must have realized years ago that they did not know much about practical monetary problems and should have appointed this monetary commission two years ago. They may have had the theoretical knowledge, but they did not apparently know how to apply it. Yesterday the Prime Minister delivered a stirring address on currency, exchange, and so on, but how much of what he said does he carry out in the government of Canada, except what he should not, such as making the Canadian dollar hug the American dollar rather than the British pound.

Then there is the permanent elimination of the everlasting doubt about the duty on repairs to farm implements which is all to the good. The government jiggled that around, through the same Minister of National Revenue, to a point where the duty was as high as 25 per cent. However, it is now down to the old Liberal level of six per cent. If the repairs to an implement are only charged six per cent, what about the implement itself being reduced that low tariff rate? Some day this government perhaps will attain sanity and not be taxing the farmers to the hilt on the implements of production and losing much needed revenue at the same time. I venture that hope, but I am afraid their term of office will not be long enough to get around to it.

Then we have certain bearer bonds being taxed very properly under this budget. I am surprised that was not done long ago. And Canadian bonds bearing interest that is payable in New York funds has also been made to contribute five per cent to the treasury which is also looking for needed revenue where it can be found. You cannot take blood out of a stone or take the breeks off a Hielan'man. Then again we have in this budget the reduction of the pound from $4.40 to $4.25 for dumping duty purposes. I cannot enumerate all the little tariff changes. We will do that in the resolution stage. There are four or five little items concerning which I will say the government did fairly well, but they are eclipsed by the bad things in this budget As to the very thing that is apparently intended to be the best, the stabilization fund, when I come to that there will be a question mark, how it is going to work out, and why it was not extended to all the exports to Britain. We have no opportunity at this stage of discussing as we would like to this question of adjusting adverse exchange with the old country by means of a stabilization fund, or of bringing witnesses to find out who inspired this happy thought. If it came from the regular source, the advisers of the government, why did they not think of it long years ago instead of waiting until farmers and others were bled white by the adverse exchange, and at this late moment dealing with it through the questionable medium of the exporter. I think we should have the matter referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization, where we can call witnesses and find out why the list of articles is so circumscribed, and why the provisions are not extended to other commodities of much greater national importance than honey or maple products, although they are both delightful foods. Then if it cannot be shown before the committee that the government is justified in circumscribing the number of articles that come within the intended benefits of this fund, it should apply to all our exportable commodities. Although it is the same pound, the same reduced pound, that is used in every case, and consequently all suffer adverse exchange alike, all are not treated alike in having it adjusted. Of course it goes without saying that we will support any reduced duties, —I do not think they are very important or they would have been read. But the bad things are so overwhelmingly greater than the goods things that when the vote comes we will certainly know which way to vote.

In order to get the proper setting for this blundering budget I will have to take the house back for a year or two. It is admitted that the government has made many heroic if futile attempts to aid agriculture. They have been both persistent and heroic but in large measure quite unsuccessful. I am going to recite some of these major blunders that have been made from time to time. I am not going to commend the government because they merely made the attempt to assist agriculture; the attempt to be any good must be successful and most of these heroics were foredoomed to failure from the very outset.

In the budget of June, 1931, the Prime Minister outlined some assistance that was going to be given to the wheat farmers by the railways absorbing five cents per bushel of the freight charges on Canadian wheat. That proposal was temporarily abandoned in favour of payment of this five-cent bonus to the exporter on all exported wheat. For two solid months less two days this Liberal opposition from early morning until dewy eve asked that this sum be given direct to the farmer rather than through the questionable medium of the exporter. It took us that length of time to convert the government to our view of the little likelihood of it never finding its way back to the producer, but finally the Prime Minister became converted and adopted our suggestion. Yet in the face of that conversion he now establishes a new fund all of which goes through the same exporter avenue that they themselves virtually condemned and departed from two years ago. And they ask us now to throw up our sweaty caps and cheer for an institution of that kind—last year's caps too, by the way, because we cannot afford a new one this year. But even after adopting the giving the five-cents bonus direct to the farmer, the government gave it to the farmer who needs it least, a Christmas box sometimes running up to $1,000 per grower and aggregating over $12,000,000, and then open a loan and collection department to deal with the poor fellow who had no crop; an order given and a note signed before they get enough to put in their eye and see any the worse for it. That is the kind of treatment the no-crop or little-crop farmers of Saskatchewan get, with respect to which the Prime Minister spoke with such eloquence on the first of July, 1931. A national calamity had struck western Canada, he declared. We were enthralled by his eloquence and humanity and what he was going to do for this calamity-stricken portion of Saskatchewan. But the Prime Minister is frequently great on profession and light on performance. He gave generously, to those who needed it least, and those who needed it most he treated in the way I have described and absolutely refused to distribute any bonus on an acreage basis so that it would reach those who had the misfortune to have no crop.

So we condemn the government on these counts; first, that the payment was first to be through the exporter; second, that when they did adopt the proper method they gave the money to those who needed it least and withheld it from those who needed it most, but gave them a loan and then within six months insisted on having half of it paid, although it was only contracted the previous six months. To-day those farmers, or many of them, are stripped barer than the day they were born because they were pressed to pay through the Saskatchewan relief commission on behalf of this federal government those loans and seed grain advances that they needed themselves to live on through this hard winter. The next blunder was the Stamp commission. I am in favour of commissions, but there are commissions and commissions. This was a good commission too, but before the report got through this house word went out that there was an appendix that should be taken out. Instead of using the proper surgical appliances to do it, instead of having a clever surgical operation, they asked us to tear it out ruthlessly with our bare fists. And it was torn out. Mine is in yet, because I want it to use before my audiences—I mean the appendix in my copy of the report, not in myself. Then we had the inquiry before the agriculture committee with respect to Garnet wheat. I do not know what possessed the government to take the attitude they did against one of the best wheats we ever developed. Our export trade shows to-day, and our customers on the other side say that there never was a time in the history of Canada when our wheat was more acceptable than it is at this moment. Yet we have 35,000,000 bushels of Garnet wheat, most of which goes to the Pacific as two Northern and No. 2 Pacific is one of the best selling wheats both in Europe and Great Britain to-day. However, I can congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce upon having seemingly receded from that untenable position, and having regard to that I will not press the point further.

Then as to the world grain conference and exhibition. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) appeared rather to disadvantage in connection with this matter, but I do not blame him. No doubt he was speaking for the Minister of Finance; that was easy to see, but in spite of their fumbling and backing and filling with this great enterprise I believe it is yet going to be one of the greatest events of its kind ever staged in the world.

Now we come to the Mr. John I. McFarland episode. We have been lectured on more than one occasion by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to the proprieties we should observe in the house; we have been told that we should have more consideration and less curiosity as to Mr. McFarland's activities on the grain exchange. Well, Mr. Speaker, when the government appoints a gentleman who has the backing of the banks and of this dominion I think we have a right to know what is being done. Did you ever hear of the federal farm board in the United States doing business by the surreptitious, hole in the corner, star chamber methods which have been adopted by this government with regard to this wheat transaction originally taken over on behalf of the wheat Producers, Limited, the pool? In the United States, where a federal board was set up, everything was done in the light of day; everyone knew what was going on and everyone was glad when it was all over. The speculative wheat activities of the American farm board and the stabilization committees appointed under it, contributed I believe very materially to the defeat of the Hoover government. But we have been censured on more than one occasion because we wanted to know a little about what was being done by this autocratic government under the unemployment relief measure which was financed with money raised by Canadian taxpayers and we surely should know. Last April, almost a year ago, one or two hon. members from the west suspected for over a year and were pretty sure that Mr. McFarland was in the wheat future business with a line of credit and government guarantees, yet it was not until a year had elapsed that the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) and the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) made certain inquiries as to just how the matter stood. I have not time to quote many of these inquiries, but I will read the question asked by the hon. member for Weyburn and the reply given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I need only refer to the admission later made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I quote from page 2084 of Hansard for last year:

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I have not the reference before me, but speaking from memory, and of course subject to correction, may I say that in the Financial Post of last week the statement appeared that when Mr. McFarland undertook to sell the 1930-31 crop he at the same time bought futures against it, and that as a result of his activities the government to-day is holding millions of bushels of future wheat which it cannot get rid of, except at a loss, until the price goes up.

This was not a direct statement; it was simply an interrogation in order that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might say what he thought of that rumour. Here is what he said:

Mr. Stevens: I do not know of a bushel of wheat held by the government, either directly or indirectly.

That was a year ago, yet last November the Prime Minister admitted from his place in this house that the government through Mr. McFarland had been in the wheat business for more than two years. I do not know how to reconcile these two diametrically opposite statements, nor am I going to attempt to do so; these two hon. gentlemen, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce can settle it between themselves. They cannot both be true, however, and we believe we know which is the correct statement and that it is the Prime Minister's. We know that the government is not only in the wheat business to the extent of the wheat taken from the pool but that they have bought practically the same amount of wheat in order to stabilize the market and protect their own investment. Why conceal it longer? These facts are known. I was disposed to be lenient with the Minister of Trade and Commerce when I dealt with this question last fall; I took the ground that possibly he thought it better not to admit publicly what had been done for state reasons. In other words it was a little diplomatic tarrydiddler rather than a straight out and out whopper. Now we want to know when they are telling whoppers and when they are telling tarrydiddlers. From now on we will not know, so I think it would be well if the two ministers should settle it between them, so that we may know which is telling the facts and which the fancies.

What has been the reason for this secrecy? The government will get nowhere by trying to do a wheat future business in a backdoor fashion. No wonder wheat went down. People in other countries, sensing what was going on in Winnipeg, threw their wheat on that market and jammed down the price. That is why the wheat-marketing policy of the government only succeeded in driving the little fellow off the market and forcing wheat to the lowest point it has reached in three hundred years. Great is Diana of the Ephesians; great are our political Dianas over there in the matter of holding up the price of wheat, not only in Canada but evidently all over the world. If this later stabilization proposition in this budget works out in the same way the minister will wish he had never introduced the proposal as the government is now heartsick of their wheat stunt. However, I will come to that in a moment. I will hurry along with this recital; it is not very pleasant but it is necessary in order to get the setting for the last step in the present budget in this ghastly array of blunders.

The next major blunder I have is the Ottawa economic conference. I think we heard of that in the early part of this session; there was some discussion of the so-called but delusive six per cent preference on wheat and the preferences on butter, apples, and other commodities. Why are these things passed up and disregarded, and excluded from the intended benefits of this stabilization fund? Is it because the government thinks some good has been done by Mr. McFarland, who tried to hold up the market but failed? Is it because they think the preference of six cents has put any lining in our pockets? They have not said so but they must think so or they would not dare pass by such important commodities as lumber, apples and all cereals. That is one reason why I want this matter referred to the agricultural committee. I think this is more important than the piffling milk investigation in which we are now engaged. We are getting a good deal of interesting information but we have no power to act, in my estimation; this is largely if not entirely a municipal matter, and in dealing with it federally we are just meddling in other people's business. So I hope the agricultural committee will try to redeem itself by considering a proposition like the proposed stabilization fund that is worthy of the ability that can be found among its members.

We had a number of other proposals to assist agriculture among them the Serkau proposition, that famous cattle deal with Russia. The government tried to put the opposition in the position of being in favour of Mr. Serkau's proposal. Certainly we were in favour of trying to sell cattle or anything else to any country under the sun that would pay proper prices. Of course many of Serkau's proposals were absurd, though I suppose they were made as feelers, just as dickerers often make propositions to feel out the prospective customer. I think the Minister of Agriculture came out at the big end of the horn; so far as he was concerned as he showed that he wanted to make a bargain and trade our cattle for Russian oil and other products, and for that he is to be commended. But his lord and master came along from mid ocean on his way home and snuffed out that proposition like a candle, after which the minister had to get into line. Why is it that we cannot deal or barter with Russia? When the Liberal government was in power we were jeered at for selling five or six thousand horses which were running about our prairies eating up good grass, and which had no particular economic value to us. That was a much more difficult time to deal with Russia. Why cannot hon. gentlemen opposite with all their financial ability do the same? So far they have failed to do so when our western and eastern farmers have large herds of cattle, both dairy and beef, ready to be sold. Russia is hungry for these cattle but the government will not permit the two parties to get together to make a bargain. Is it any wonder the government is going down in public estimation? Every day the sun rises and sets this government is going lower in the estimation of a vast body of the people of this country. It has got to such a point that the electors are rearin' to go and get at the ballot boxes. Nothing in the world will save their political necks, not even their confrères in the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation corner to my left.

The estimates also for agriculture, the first industry in Canada, were slaughtered this session in a manner which seemed to give some hon. members opposite a great deal of delight. The preceding government had pulled them up—it took some pulling—to where they totalled ten or eleven million dollars, but down they went with a slam to three and a quarter millions less. Public sentiment was so enraged that the government restored about three quarters of a million, leaving a net loss of two and a half million. This vote has been banged down again this year by another $400,000 drop. We are told further that $14,000,000 is going to be cut off all the estimates in order to make the budget not balance next year and doubtless this will mean a further pro rata cut for agriculture.

Having got over that phase, we come now to this precious budget itself. This country has seen a succession of blunders which cannot be paralleled in any other country having responsible government. As I have often pointed out, the Minister of Agriculture has no chance to make good. If he was the angel Gabriel and had all the agricultural knowledge in the world, without more support than he is getting from his colleagues he could not make a showing for agriculture in Canada. I do not mean to say that he has no shortcomings himself, but I make that statement in justice to him.

I come now to the preferred products in the matter of exchange adjustments. I do not want anyone to think that I have anything against the tiny bee. I did a whole lot of work in my time to develop the bee industry. There is no more healthful and profitable way in which anyone can take the necessary saccharine requirements than through honey. This is more especially so since the price of sugar has been raised so greatly by this budget.

The next preferred item to which I shall refer is maple products. I think hon. members from Quebec will agree that the last government was the first one to give an official status to these products. About the last thing I had the privilege of doing when I was a minister in times gone by was to put these products upon an official graded basis. This action was met with the jeers of hon. gentlemen opposite. This statement will be confirmed by a reference to Hansard of 1929. The present government now seems to consider that these products should be put in the preferred list and others much more important left off. I intend to show the inconsistencies and the unaccountable way in which this government selected the list of thirteen preferred commodities. According to the official statistics, the average total export of honey to Great Britain during the last two years was about $180,000 and the average total export of maple products was $16,000. It must not be forgotten that these items are exported elsewhere than to Great Britain. Yet wheat and lumber, the exports of which are valued in millions and tens of millions, do not appear in this list. How are we to account for that? Our good friends on the other side have been scratching their heads and bringing themselves near to a nervous breakdown in an effort to find something agriculturally which will be acceptable to the people of this country and which will "show us the way out." Apparently someone came along to the government at the last moment with the bright idea of this stabilization fund. Such a scheme is not new. I have before me an article by Doctor C. J. Robertson of the international institute at Rome which appeared in Saturday Night, of March 25. This article shows that all the ventures including this stabilization fund scheme have been tried before and in other countries but have failed in their purpose. I have not the time to read this article, but that is its purport.

Why is butter excluded from the intended benefits of this stabilization scheme? I asked this question of the Prime Minister but all the answer I received was that we were not upon an export basis and our butter was selling at a higher price than it was in Great Britain. He stated that as none was being exported, there would be no exchange charges to pay. Does he mean that this government intends to keep our butter upon a domestic basis all summer? Is that the hopeless program which the government has for the dairying industry? I do not think there have been more than three and at the most no more than five years during the first half century when we were not upon an export basis in the summer. If we are to attach any value to the Prime Minister's excuse—that is all it was—as to why butter was not included in this preferred list, it must be that he does not expect that we will be exporting butter this coming year. That is a damaging admission; that is the way this government is going to develop dairying.

There are some novices in this country who believe that we should produce only enough butter and other commodities to meet the needs of our own country. Let us carry that contention to its logical conclusion. It is contended by some that we should produce only enough butter for our own needs and never go upon the export market, because of the fact that when we do we have to take about six cents per pound less than the present prices. Of course a few boatloads of butter would be permitted to come in from New Zealand in order to make sure of having sufficient. If that is sound reasoning why not apply the same kind of foolish reasoning to eggs, to bacon, to wheat, to lumber, to apples, and to everything else that we produce? If we grew just enough wheat for ourselves then we would not be bothered by this pestiferous exchange question. That would not be a very ambitious program for a young producing country like Canada, but the statement of the Prime Minister leaves no other conclusion to be drawn. Last year we went upon the export butter market about July 1 and I cannot understand why provision has not been made for similar action this year, the same as it was made in connection with cheese. That is my question and there is no answer. I will sit down and take the time out of my forty minutes if any hon. gentleman opposite has any reasonable answer to make. No, they have not an answer, because there is none.

Mr. BOYES: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. BOYES: Does the hon. member not know that cheese produced in Canada and shipped to the old country has a premium over cheese produced in any other country and that it will be better that the bonus be allowed on cheese so that we may produce more and in that way have our butter kept in our domestic trade?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is splendid; it is an heroic attempt to do what none of the rest of the government benchers would dare to attempt, but my hon. friend has failed in it. I know our cheese has a premium of two cents and I know the reason. It has had that ever since the Liberal government adopted the grading system for it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that is the situation. Since 1928, in fact, since 1927, after the grading system was adopted three or four years, Canadian cheese had a premium in the British market over any cheese that came from other countries. What is more, from that time on the buyers in Great Britain would buy our cheese on the certificate, without even seeing the cheese, the same as was done with our wheat. I am not deriding my young friend; he has Tory nostrums from his older brothers. If what I say is correct—and it is—is not cheese the one best able to carry the load? It has a premium now of two cents a pound over any other cheese.

Mr. MALCOLM: The premium is being bonused.

Mr. BOYES: May I ask a question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, I have given the hon. member one chance and he has failed. I am not complaining about cheese being included; I am complaining about butter being left out, and according to my hon. friend's statement, butter is the weaker sister of the two and therefore should not be penalized.

Mr. BOYES: If butter were being shipped to the old country, what price would it command?

Mr. MALCOLM: The hon. member should make his own speech.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Less of course and that is the reason it should be in the preferred list. So much for those two articles. We have canned vegetables, canned fruits; tobacco, meats, animals. I wonder how long it will take at this rate to include all the exportable commodities we export.

Mr. MULLINS: Let me tell the hon. member—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If I had time enough I would let my hon. friends talk until midnight, because the more they talk, the more they put their foot in it.

Mr. SPEAKER: An hon. member may, by resuming his seat, allow an interruption, but no one has any right to interrupt him without his permission.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know where I was, with all these interruptions. Oh yes; I think our tariff schedules will show that we have nearly 1,300 commodities capable of being exported, so at the rate of thirteen commodities a year it would take just one hundred years to reach the full fruition of the policy of this government in respect to this stabilization fund. If I have exaggerated the number of these commodities by putting them at 1,300, let us put them at one-half of that, or 650. In that case it would take fifty years to consummate that sort of progressive program to help agriculture in Canada. If that is too much, let us cut it in half again and it would take twenty-five years to cover the preferred list. But twenty-five years is too long to wait for this bewildered government to institute agricultural reform, that is not the way in which things are being done on the other side of the line. The Prime Minister is casting sheep's-eyes over there now himself in connection with the possible and, in fact, the sure advantage of reciprocity, so he should not object very much to my referring to it.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member (Mr. Motherwell) who has just taken his seat, will pardon me if I do not make any effort to follow him in the interesting remarks he has just delivered to the house.

I wish at the outset to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the very able manner in which he presented his budget and the courageous budget that he did present under the most difficult conditions that have ever faced any minister of finance in this country.

I do not intend to follow anything that has been said on the budget. I do not purpose dealing materially with the budget as such;

I desire merely to present one aspect of what I conceive to be the financial and economic condition with which this country is faced and to suggest a line which I think we might follow in an effort to get ourselves and the world out of the difficulties in which we now find ourselves. I wish to refer to only one matter that has been spoken of, and that was by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) when he ridiculed the Minister of Finance, who, after stating clearly and definitely that it was the business of each country to do everything it could to maintain its own position, said that nevertheless the situation was now worldwide and not restricted to any individual country. I would rather take the position of the hon. member for North Bruce, the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), when he made this statement in the house a short time ago:

> In 1933, we are facing difficulties which have arisen, not through any action of hon. gentlemen at present, not through the action of the people of Canada but through the breakdown of the economic system of the world.

In its essential elements the crisis with which Canada in common with the rest of the world is faced is international, and it is only by international action that a remedy can be found. It is only by international action, if such may become possible, that civilization as we understand it is going to be saved. We are facing a problem, the climax of the period from 1914 to 1930, that can be solved only by sane, international action along sound economic lines. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, speaking a short time ago at a meeting in London, made the statement that what was necessary in order to start the nations back towards recovery was a rise in world commodity prices, the freeing of world trade and the settlement of war debts and reparations, intimating by the third item that the problem was financial. I am not going to set my opinion against that of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, but it is my opinion that before commodity prices can rise, before trade can be released, the financial problem must be dealt with. It seems to me that it would be impossible to suggest anything else when we compare the position the world is in to-day with that just prior to the war. The six nations now included in war debts and reparations—the United States, France, the United Kingdom, Germany, Italy and Belgium—expended during the war almost $85,000,000,000 in destroying the things which mankind had been creating for centuries previous to that time. Then, following the war, particularly from 1920 to 1929, the peoples of the world in all parts of it engaged in an orgy of extravagance unparalleled in history, and the same six nations added to their national and international burdens an additional $80,000,000,000, making a total of almost $165,000,000,000 added to their national and international obligations without taking into consideration their obligations, municipal, provincial, state and so forth, all over the world. To expect that that could happen without a situation ensuing such as that with which we are now faced, to my mind is to expect the impossible. It would be like saying to a man who has laboured all his life on the best farm you can find in this country: "You gather up all your machinery, all your furniture, all the equipment and everything you have accumulated during your life, and set fire to it, and then expect you are going to be just as well off as you were before." The thing to me is so utterly impossible that it is amazing for anyone to expect it.

Many remedies have been suggested. I shall touch on only one or two, and that very briefly. It has been suggested that we can get out of this difficulty by an inflation of currency, by something in the nature of a managed currency, by internal and external currency. But each of these remedies in my view is so honeycombed with difficulties and is so unsound that I do not intend to dwell on them. I shall deal with only one for a moment or two, and that is inflation.

What is it that has created our difficulties to-day? It is that we are living in the greatest period of inflation that the world has ever seen. The disease is inflation. In that connection I might quote a word or two which seems to me to touch the point very accurately. It is from the editor of The Annalist:

> How much is enough? That is the question which the inflationists have never been able to answer and never will be. Once started on its insane course, inflation becomes a wild monster, powerful enough to wreck the best monetary system ever devised by man, driving all kinds of business enterprise to destruction and business men to despair.

That has been the result of the inflation of the last nineteen years, from 1914 until to-day, and the inflation is just a photograph of the world's debts which I indicated a moment ago, obligations which it is impossible to meet unless some entirely new plan is evolved, something that we have not yet seen put into effect in any country that I know of.

But there is another way. Sir Basil Blackett, in one of the Halley Stewart lectures, made this statement, that every period of deflation followed a corresponding period of inflation. The usual method by which the world has got itself out of these periods of inflation has been by the hard toil of individual men and women all over the world working back to the place from which they had slipped because of the inflation. I submit that the higher the inflation the deeper the deflation will carry you unless some means can be found by which it can be checked, and that, as my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) said in his speech this afternoon, is what the countries of the world are trying to find, namely, some way by which this downward slide of deflation can be checked and mankind can get back to a stable basis without the tortuous toil and suffering that will inevitably follow if we go to the full depths of deflation.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Exactly; I agree.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, we are gradually deflating, but the inflation of credit, the inflation of debts, individual, national, international, of every character, has been of such magnitude that if the world has got to work itself out by the old fashioned plan through its own efforts, then I shudder for future generations perhaps yet unborn. But is that necessary? I submit this—and I do it with some humility, because I am not the author, and I say so frankly—that I have on my desk here a book written by a Canadian business man presenting a plan and a formula for putting that plan into effect. some will say that because he is not a world-known author or economist, his plan essentially cannot have any value. Nevertheless I am going to put it to the house as nearly as I can in order that it may be considered, and perhaps the government may think it wise to put it into the hands of expert financiers and economists, with the aim of presenting it to the world economic conference which we hope is to meet early this summer.

May I say in passing, that notwithstanding all the slurs and gibes that have been thrown at economic conferences, the League of Nations and other international gatherings of the world's statesmen in an honest effort to get us through our present difficulties, I do not know where the world might have landed but for their efforts. They have not yet been finally successful, but just in the last ten days an effort has been put forward which is showing some signs at least of preventing another outbreak of war, which perhaps would be the last war.

The plan I have to submit to the house is the Revaluation of Gold. It is contained in a book written by Peter L. Robertson, and I want to give Mr. Robertson the whole credit for everything that I have been able to gather in this regard. His plan is not the revaluation of gold such as was suggested, for instance, by Professor Stephen Leacock, the mere adding of thirty per cent or some other percentage to the currency value of gold. His plan is a revaluation and a redistribution of the world's monetary gold on a basis which in my opinion will provide the means whereby there will be some hope of the world getting out of its difficulties. In this connection I put the question of war debts and reparations and international long term and short term debts ahead of any other problem which the world has to face before it can attempt to adjust international tariffs, if you will, or provide some means for a central bank, if you will. So long as that nightmare of war debts and reparations hangs over the European world it seems to me to be utterly hopeless to attempt to get those people to sit around a table and try to work out other problems with which, to say the least, they are not relatively concerned. Let me give only one instance. I believe that the world's war debts and reparations, the national and international long term and short term debts, can in reality all be placed at the door of one country, Germany. In toto they now amount, scaled down as they have been through the Dawes plan and the Young plan, to a total of $31,000,000,000, a sum which anyone who looks at the pages of history must realize is an impossible burden to place upon the German people. Until that is removed, stability in Europe cannot be hoped for. The reason I pin my faith on the Robertson plan, if I may so term it, is because it does provide for a way in which Germany can be relieved of this impossible obligation.

In order that I may be accurate I shall quote what Robertson states:

> The object to be aimed at by the revaluation and redistribution of gold—

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Did I understand the hon. member to say that under the present rearrangement Germany was asked to pay thirty-one billion dollars?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, thirty-one billion —thirty-one thousand million spread over a period of sixty years.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I think the hon. member is mistaken.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Perhaps I am; I give the figures subject to correction, but they are the latest figures I could secure.

Mr. McGIBBON: Were they not wiped out at the Lausanne conference?

Mr. NICHOLSON: But the Lausanne conference has not relieved European nations of meeting their obligations to the United States. In my opinion it is unreasonable to expect them to meet those obligations.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the hon. member not confusing war debts with reparations?

Mr. NICHOLSON: May I ask the hon. member this question: Unless they can collect from Germany, how are other nations to meet their war debts and reparations? Under the Young plan Germany was expected to pay twenty-seven billion dollars in sixty years. I may perhaps be a few million dollars out, but when it comes to the sum of thirty-one billion dollars, a million here or there on one side or the other does not amount to much.

However, in the revaluation of gold the objects to be aimed at are these: (1) Immediate liquidation of Germany's reparations' debts. If I have time I shall attempt to indicate the method proposed. (2) Liquidation of the allied nations' war debts to one another, and particularly to the United States. (3) Provision for the full gold covering of all currencies, inclusive of coins as well as notes. (4) Creation of an international gold coinage, which will terminate the exchange racket which makes international trade virtually impossible. (5) The removal of grounds for misunderstandings from economic causes. (6) The extension of similar advantages to all nations at the conclusion of the currency treaty between the original six nations.

I add the last object because in the plan put forward it is suggested that it be applied primarily to the six nations involved in war debts and reparations. I do not for one moment suggest that in every detail the Robertson plan is absolutely correct. I do say, however, that when it is submitted, as I hope it will be, to those who handle the details, the plan may be applied to all the rest of the gold standard nations, in the first instance. But if it cannot the methods proposed, I am satisfied, will carry it through. However, I must hurry on.

Any plan for the reorganization of world currency on a gold standard basis, and the wiping out of war debts and reparations must be simple, direct and easily understood during the period of negotiations, as well as during the period of its application. It must offer benefits to all the treaty nations in equal proportions and with hardships to none. May I pause to interrupt at this point by stating that many suggestions have been put forward to the effect that the way of escape, if I may use the phrase, is by redistribution of the present monetary world supply of gold. The plain fact is, however, that there is not a country in the world with sufficient monetary gold to cover the currency necessary to carry on its own business. There is not one country in that position. Many of them have such a small amount of gold, that it is but a mere fraction in comparison with the amount they should have. Any plan for the reorganization of world currency on a gold standard basis must recognize the principle that gold is the universal medium. It must reconstruct on a great international basis the very foundations of currency, of resources and credit, and banish the baffling intricacies of exchange between nations. It must embrace the immediate liquidation of war debts and reparations. It must be non-political, and must not include any contentious tariff considerations. The consummation of the plan must not be imperilled during the formative period or otherwise, by including a discussion on disarmament.

What does the plan involve? It is not, as I said, a mere fraction of increase in the gold coverage for the world's currency. It is a genuine revaluation. Is there any justification for that? Why should we revalue gold more than any other commodity in the world? In the first place it has taken the world at least from the time of King Solomon up to the present day to accumulate its present supply of monetary gold, plus that which has been used for industrial and ornamental work. I have a note, which I shall quote from memory, to the effect that since Columbus discovered America the total production of gold in the world for all purposes has been just about $20,000,000,000.

One other point. In relation to any other commodity you wish to name, what does the production of gold mean? If, for example, it were essential for the people of Canada in 1934 to double their production of wheat, live stock, iron, lumber, timber or any other commodity you like to name, it would be physically possible to do it. All we would have to do would be to make the necessary adjustments in labour, and we could double or treble the output of any single commodity, if it were nationally advantageous so to do. But what about gold? I know the suggestion has been made in this House of Commons that the government should employ a large number of unemployed men so that we might double or treble the output of our mines in northern Ontario. How long would it take to double the output of the Lake Shore mine, for example, and what would we do if we did double the output? All we would do would be to produce gold on an absolutely uneconomical basis, and work the mine out in half or quarter the time.

What is required to bring a gold mine into operation? For every producing gold mine in the world there are hundreds and hundreds of splendid looking prospects which have never amounted to anything, and into which millions of dollars have been put, and no return made. The bringing into production of a gold mine is something about which very few people who discuss monetary matters have any understanding. There is no single commodity of which I can think which is so stable in its annual production, or has followed as steady development for so long a period, as has gold. In the last fifteen years, for example, the world production has varied from $385,000,000 to $415,000,000. In five of these years the production was over $400,000,000 and in ten it was below that figure. True, we have had evidence in Canada of increased production of gold, but it is equally true that there has been decreased production in other countries.

One other point: If we take the world's present volume of monetary gold we will find that it was produced on a wage level not one-sixth of the wage level prevailing in the gold mines of Canada to-day. Consequently, on the basis of its economic value measured in terms of the amount of labour which men must put into the earth to get the gold out, it is due to be revalued, just the same as any other commodity would be under similar conditions.

Now may I come to the formula? The plan is to revalue and redistribute gold. It is to be carried out on a basis that will be fair or as nearly fair as is possible to the countries that have a large amount of gold compared with those who have a small amount. With that in mind it is not possible to do it in one stage, because if you simply doubled the value of gold all over the world you would simply increase the discrepancy that at present prevails in the distribution of the commodity that stands behind the world's currency. If we are ever going to get back on a sound basis of international trade, we must find a yardstick that will be understood in every country in the world and will be the same in every country in the world. The Prime Minister, speaking here yesterday afternoon, indicated clearly some of the difficulties through which we have passed not only during this period but for a generation back; notwithstanding the fact that a large number of countries were ostensibly on the gold standard, strictly speaking they were not on the gold standard. The plan and formula suggested here is to have one hundred cents on the dollar in gold behind the currency that is issued. That will take care of world trade on the revalued basis.

But to come to the formula. The things to be taken into consideration in order that it shall be fair to all countries are: first, the present position; and second, economic needs.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: May I ask a question? What is the ratio of revaluation?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I will come to that in a moment. Take the United States as an example, having regard to present position and economic needs. The following will indicate the theoretical estimate of the gold required by the United States to carry on her trade:

Actual gold in reserve.. ..	$ 4,364,000,000
Annual national income, $70,000,000,000, divided by 12, equals..	5,833,333,333
Combined export and import trade, yearly average over a five-year period, $8,629,000,000, divided by 4, equals..	2,157,250,000
Moneys not in use, population 122,775,000 at $30 each, equals..	3,683,252,850
Total..	$ 16,037,836,183

The present position is that if the United States carried on her trade on the basis of her currency it would be necessary to turn over her currency nearly 250 times in the year, or about once every one and a half days.

The plan under this formula is, first to have these six nations set up such machinery as they desire, and take over the monetary gold of the six nations on the basis of $40 an ounce. They will then redistribute it in this way: to the countries that contributed more gold in proportion than others a credit would be issued on the basis of $20.67 an ounce; a debit would be applied against the other countries, and the total would be reached in that manner. Without going into the minute details, because every member of this house either has or did have one of these books and can go through the formula for himself—I merely want to give an outline—at that point the gold would be revalued and distributed on the basis of 5 to 1. Lest anyone suggests that this is multiplying the world's currency by five times, bear this in mind; the world's currency in gold countries now is recognized as being on the basis of about forty per cent gold, forty cents worth of gold for each dollar issued, using the dollar as an indicator. Under the new scheme suggested the plan is to have a dollar's worth of gold behind every dollar's worth of currency, consequently instead of five times all you really have is twice the amount of currency available, you are really doubling the currency of the six nations involved.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Would not that be a measure of inflation?

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, just the reverse. Inflation is to issue currency in excess of the gold basis—that is our present position. The whole world's currency is in the shape of an inverted pyramid. This proposal is to provide an international basis, and then all currency issued would be on that basis. It would be understood by all nations.

The next point I wish to touch upon is the means by which the world's war debts and reparations and long and short term obligations can be met by this plan. I will just give a very brief summary of the final situation, for my time is short. The war debts and reparations have been arrived at on the basis of compound interest. After gold has been revalued and redistributed and the new basis for world currency provided, what may happen is, either the debtor nations may say to the creditor nations: Will you accept cash for these debts on the basis of compound discount? or perhaps more probably the creditor nations would go to the debtor nations and say: We will clean up these obligations now outstanding on the basis of compound discount. Then what would the situation be? First perhaps I can take time to illustrate what the position would be before the payment of war debts. The United States would have in gold $19,000,000,000, France $8,000,000,000, Great Britain, $5,000,000,000, Germany nearly $4,000,000,000, Italy $2,000,000,000, Belgium $1,500,000,000. I omit odd millions; the figures are all available for any one who wishes to see them. Assuming the proposal were accepted that the creditor nations would receive the debts in cash on a basis of 2½ per cent compound discount, what would the situation be? The United States would have $19,379,000,000 in gold, less a loan that they might well make to the debtor countries of $9,000,000,000. But they would have also receipts from war debts and reparations and the long and short term loans due them from Germany. I will take Germany's position to illustrate the final outcome. To-day Germany stands with world obligations of $31,000,000,000, a sum absolutely impossible to pay, and all she has behind her currency is $300,000,000 in gold. If this plan were put into effect, if the nations can be got together to work this thing out—and I believe it can be worked out; I do not think it is in the slightest degree fantastic; it is absolutely sound on the basis of the commodity that the world has recognized as its basis for currency—then assuming that the nations accept these proposals, she would have $2,263,000,000 in gold behind her currency, and she would have one single long term commercial loan, or preferably a loan divided between the three countries with the largest amount of currency, namely the United States, France and Great Britain, of $9,000,000,000, something that, when she has been placed in that financial position, would be perfectly easy for her to carry and liquidate. This would relieve the whole world of this pressing nightmare of national and international debts and would lead the way to a new start in trying to find some plan by which we can get back trade and raise price levels, for we will never raise price levels until we put the people of the world in a position to buy. So long as we remain in this cramped, restricted position we will continue to go down the slide. In one quotation I have here from the editor of The Annalist that is put very well. We are acting as a man might act in the summer towards a small boy who complains of stomach trouble; the man simply says, "Eat another half dozen green apples and see how you feel."

I have tried to outline, Mr. Speaker, as well as I could the plan that has been suggested and the formula for working it out. I have studied this plan for twelve months; I see nothing in it that is not perfectly sound, and I submit it to the house now in the hope that the government may appoint a committee of the house to join with experts in considering the matter or that the government itself, before going to the economic conference or submitting any proposals there, may arrange for some group to study this problem and present a finding, in the hope that out of it something may come which will bring the whole world back to a sound basis and save humanity what it is very likely to suffer if we continue going down the decline.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Casgrain for the second reading of Bill No. 46, to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries).

Motion negatived, on division.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Friday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reid for the second reading of Bill No. 50, to amend the Railway Act (rate structure).

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I support this bill and shall take this opportunity of answering some of the objections which have been raised to it. The argument of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) is so untenable that it hardly warrants a reply. It is easy to build up an argument based upon premises made to fit the argument rather than upon premises based upon fact, and that is what the hon. member did. He built up his argument upon the supposition that this bill would compel the railway board to cancel rates. We have no reason to believe that the Board of Railway Commissioners is composed of either fools or knaves or will be so composed in the future. The hon. member's minor argument was that the bill would compel a reduction of rates which would prove to be unprofitable to our railways already in the red financially. There is a wide difference between cancelling rates and asking that rates for the same commodity should be equalized for the same distance. It is extra discrimination when a low rate applies on a valuable product and a high rate applies on a low priced article. The rate for domestic wheat is considerably more than double the rate for export wheat, and by far the greater bulk of the wheat going to British Columbia is for export. The railways compete for this export trade, therefore it must be assumed that the railway heads, being business men, consider that this business pays. If the low rate business pays, surely the railways will not be ruined by handling more business at the same rate. As an illustration, let us assume that a trainload consisting of thirty cars of wheat is being shipped from the prairies to British Columbia. Twenty-nine cars are loaded with export wheat at the low rate. This business must be profitable because the railways compete for it, yet they say that they cannot carry the thirtieth car loaded with domestic grain except at a rate more than double what they are willing to accept for the bulk of the trade. That does not seem to be a logical argument. The hon. member argued that it would be disastrous to reduce rates but he should not forget that the railways themselves reduced the rates on export wheat.

The remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) consisted mostly of a political attack upon the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) who introduced this bill. I think such an attack was entirely out of place inasmuch as the hon. member for New Westminster did not give a political slant to his remarks. However, the hon. member for New Westminster is quite capable of taking care of that himself.

Now let us analyze and define the situation to see if there is any need for this bill. That is the manner in which we should approach a matter of this kind. A long time ago the rate on export wheat to British Columbia was much higher than it is at the present time, but it was still lower than the domestic rate. Representations were made and the export rate was cut down substantially but the domestic rate was not reduced at all. The spread was made still greater. That happened on at least one more occasion, and I am not quite sure whether or not there was a third deduction. The differential is now very great, being more than double. If it were right to have the differential as it was in the original schedule, it cannot be right to have that differential increased to the extent to which it is at the present moment.

From time to time the governments of British Columbia protested against this differential, but their protests were more or less in vain. This action was taken by governments consisting of different parties. In contesting these applications for reduced rates, I think the railways broke a very important law, that known as the law of diminishing returns. This law works as inevitably as the law of supply and demand. To put it another way, you cannot charge more than the traffic will bear. That is a well known axiom in railway or other lines of business. The result was that they killed the goose that lays the golden egg or, in this case, the hen that laid the golden eggs.

I have before me a communication from a well known businessman in the district I represent. This was written a few days ago and he states that a great many of the remaining flocks of poultry have been shipped out and he believes that not more than fifteen per cent are left. That is to say, there has been a falling off in the poultry flocks in that district amounting to eighty-five per cent. I can corroborate that statement from my own knowledge. I remember people who used to have two, three or four thousand birds but who at the present time have not a single bird. They have been cleaned out and absolutely ruined. This man says that eighty-five per cent have been cleaned out, and I believe he is correct. The railways have lost not only the shipping of feed which these poultrymen would need, but also the shipping of supplies and other accessories. There is also the very profitable shipment of eggs back to Montreal. They have charged more than the traffic will bear and they have lost the business.

British Columbia appealed to the Board of Railway Commissioners on several occasions and, failing to obtain redress there because of reasons into which I will go later on, they took their appeal on more than one occasion to the Dominion government. I do not intend to throw stones at either the Conservative or the Liberal administrations, because they both seem to be guilty of having stalled things off. In 1931 a debate took place upon this matter, and the Prime Minister is on record on page 1794 of Hansard of that year. The Prime Minister stated that the Board of Railway Commissioners was a court and that he would hesitate to advise the cabinet to override or even investigate a decision made by that court. He stated that the law was such as to permit an appeal to be made to the cabinet but he used the expression that the cabinet were partisan and he did not think it a good thing to have an appeal taken from what was practically a court and put into the hands of partisan judges. Of course, a partisan judge is an anomaly in itself. I agreed with the Prime Minister upon that occasion and am so on record. In my opinion, such appeals should go to the supreme court rather than to the cabinet. As I say, the Prime Minister said that he believed the experts on the Board of Railway Commissioners were well qualified to deal with such a matter. I quite agree with him in that, but those men should at least be competent to deal with it. Perhaps I am using the wrong word; I do not mean that the members of the railway board are incompetent, but I think the legal expression is that they are not seized with the proper jurisdiction and therefore they cannot give a just decision. They have not the authority to do so, and that is what the bill proposes to give them. I am very sure, although if I were put to it, I could not prove it, that a former member of the Board of Railway Commissioners told me that we would not get justice in British Columbia in regard to that matter until the act was changed because it did not give the board authority to deal with the question. We also heard the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), when he was speaking on this subject, quoting very freely from the report of the Duncan commission which was composed of able men. Not only did they say that this action should be taken, but they actually used the very language which the hon. member has largely introduced into his bill.

The Duncan report was considered to be and I suppose still is a valuable document. It was called the magna charta of the maritimes. I well remember the emphasis with which the opposition of those days insisted that it should be put into effect, and I think it was to a large extent put into force by the government of that day with, I believe, satisfactory results to the provinces concerned. If those men were wise and capable and their recommendations carried weight as they apparently did, why stop at the maritimes? Why, when they came to recommend something of material advantage to British Columbia, was it ignored? There is no question as to their view, because the hon. member for New Westminster put it on Hansard the other night. This bill gives the railway board the power which the Duncan report says they ought to have, and that is all it does, that power which a former member of the board said they lacked and which the Duncan report said in set terms, giving the exact language, they ought to have.

I do not think anyone has really tried to justify these rates; they have not done so openly at any rate, although they may have done so in a covert sort of way. These rates are too unjust for anyone to attempt to justify them. At this point might I mention a danger that has not been put forward before in connection with this legislation. On page 20 of the report of the last imperial conference will be found the resolutions of a general character adopted by that conference as distinct from the specific agreements. The first resolution they passed—at least it is placed first in the summary—is one regretting and deploring any system past, present or future, that the participating dominions might put into effect in the way of a bonus on their exported goods. They deprecated such action. I have in mind the Patterson scheme of bonusing in Australia and other plans of that kind. They pledged themselves at the earliest opportunity to do away with any system of bonusing of that nature. The spirit of that resolution would certainly be entirely antagonistic to imposing any more bonuses. Our present system of railway rates in British Columbia is a clear and definite case of bonusing exported wheat at the cost of domestic wheat. That conclusion cannot be got away from when you charge twice as high a rate for the one as for the other. That regulation is working a wrong in Canada to British Columbia, but it is also liable to cause very serious troubles in Britain itself because the people there are touchy; they are already asking that a duty be put upon Canadian products and this is an argument ready to their hand.

So we have the situation over a number of years as I have briefly outlined it. The appeal of the British Columbia government and the various farmer bodies who appealed, finally reached the governor general in council in Ottawa, I think two and a half years ago. The government could have done several things: they could have granted the appeal; they could have refused it; they could have referred it back to the Board of Railway Commissioners, which course the Prime Minister hinted would be the one they would take if they did anything at all, or they could have continued doing nothing as they did for quite a period. But they did none of these things. There was a suggestion by somebody in the cabinet, and I more than suspect it came from the Prime Minister, because it was something that would suggest itself to his alert mind. I do not think it was the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), because I do not believe he would have thought of it. Someone suggested that instead of litigation, so to speak, the railways and the consumers should get together. This was not a bad idea at all, because, when you are in any way approaching litigation, it is always wise to compromise with justice to both sides. The only trouble was the method by which this was carried out. We often hear in the house charges thrown at the Prime Minister of being a dictator. Sometimes a dictator is a good thing; I only wish in this case the dictator had himself handled his original suggestions, but unfortunately he turned it over to the Minister of Railways, and the latter and the head of the Canadian Pacific, Mr. Beatty, sat in a poker game with British Columbia interests as the stakes and it was just too bad for British Columbia interests. Had the Prime Minister sat in at that game, I do not think we would have had Mr. Beatty walking off with the hair, hide, flesh and tail of the animal and leaving us with—well, what was left. To change the metaphor to that of the race track, the horse carrying Mr. Beatty's colours came in first and the British Columbia horse was not even in sight when the race was over.

Let me consider for a moment what Mr. Beatty got out of the deal. I could discuss first what British Columbia got out of it, but that could be put on the back of a postage stamp and still leave room for a gerrymandering redistribution map. It is more important to consider what Mr. Beatty got out of it. The first thing he got was the dismissal of the appeal. This was a fatal error for the government to make and a most unfair deal for British Columbia. Mr. Beatty stipulated and demanded—and he got away with it—that the appeal should be dismissed, not left as a protection for us in the future, not left even only as a means of enforcing the agreement which was merely a gentleman's one and not binding in law. The appeal should have been left at least as a club to guarantee the carrying out of the agreement, but the minister gave way and I think he made a fatal mistake. I shall give him full credit for one thing he did, because Mr. Beatty, a smart, capable, able man, was out to get one hundred per cent and a little bit more; he also demanded that this arrangement should be a final ending of British Columbia's claim, but the minister to his credit stood out and said that we must leave the door open. It will be open for British Columbia to start the case again, but we realize the enormous delay and expense that would be. It would take years—and that is not a figure of speech—and great expense to fight the case before the railway board, have it come here and then be stood over for a year or two before it was dealt with.

The second thing Mr. Beatty got away with was this: It is said that he met us half way; that he gave up half the differential. The answer to that is no, and again no, and a thousand times no; he did not do anything like that at all. He met us half way on grain alone. Our claim was for two classes: grain and mill feeds. Mill feeds consist of bran, shorts and middlings and they constitute by far the larger amount of the traffic involved. Let me explain. A hen eats wheat, shorts, bran and, to some extent, middlings. A cow does not eat wheat; it eats bran and shorts, and a hog eats shorts and middlings and does not eat wheat. The consequence is that the quantity of bran, shorts and middlings, that is of mill feeds, carried in relation to the quantity of wheat, will be in somewhat the same proportion as the size of the hen compared with that of the cow. That is not perhaps exact, but there is a far greater amount of mill feeds carried than of grain alone.

I see the word "screenings" was put in, and hence we have to raise up our hands and sing psalms and give glorification for being able to get screenings from the prairies at a reduced rate. Every British Columbia man knows that we do not import screenings from the prairies. We can get screenings at a very low price right out of the elevators at New Westminster and Vancouver. That is just a bit of window dressing.

It was right to cut the difference in rates in half. I think it should have been cut out altogether; that is the differential. Why is it not right to do it on mill feeds? There is no answer to that. The Minister of Railways pleads ignorance and says that he did not know that it was of so much importance. I am sorry that he is not in his seat, but he cannot get away with that. I have a letter here showing that a large feed company in British Columbia wired him on February 24 urging him to put mill feeds into the agreement, and he replied that it was too late, that the deal had been consummated by order in council the day before the wire arrived. That is a mistake. The order in council was passed, as he says, on February 25, but it was not the order in council that implemented the bargain at all. The order in council simply dismissed the appeal. It may have been in consequence of the bargain, but the bargain itself is not expressed in that order in council. It is expressed in a letter signed by the two railway heads and addressed to the minister. Anyhow I have a copy of a letter in front of me which I wrote to the Minister of Railways dated February 2, urging the inclusion of mill feeds, and the order in council was not passed until February 25. The agreement was changed in another respect on February 15, thirteen days after the date of my letter. The minister told us in the house the other day that the agreement did not go into effect until March 10, so there was ample time to have adjusted the matter and to have included mill feeds as well as wheat because, as I say, on February 15 a change was made in the agreement.

I said that there was no excuse for such action, but that is going too far. I should have said no justification. There is an excuse and it was put forward by the Minister of Railways and by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber). They said, and I presume they are correct, although we have not the correspondence, that the British Columbia government accepted this transaction, gave it their imprimatur, O.K.'d it as being satisfactory; but I ask these two gentlemen who say that the British Columbia government accepted that deal, did British Columbia itself accept the acceptance of its government? I do not think so. Did they consult anybody? There is no record. Did they consult the dairy or poultry interests? There is no record. An election is coming on very shortly in British Columbia, and the government will have many things to answer for, for many of which they are not to blame, but it will have a hard job explaining its action in giving consent to such a onesided agreement as that.

But it was not the only blunder which the British Columbia government made. As I said before, Mr. Beatty is a very astute man. He was out apparently to get everything he could out of the innocence of the Minister of Railways. He arranged the deal in the first place—the evidence is before me; I have the letters—that the agreement was to apply only to wheat of No. 6 grade and lower, and to barley of equivalent grades. I have been in the feed business for seventeen years myself, and I have very seldom used No. 6 for chicken feed at all. It is almost invariably No. 5 or No. 4. The quantity of No. 6 that I would buy in a year would not amount to much. Well, we were going to have this brilliant arrangement put through, confined to No. 6 wheat and lower grades, and it would not have been worth a snap of the fingers; and British Columbia government, so we are told, agreed to it. But thank heaven, apparently, there was somebody with more intelligence. Hon. Mr. Hoadley, a minister in the Alberta government, interposed and said: No; it is nonsense to make it No. 6 grade, it should be No. 4; and it was so arranged. Unfortunately the Hon. Mr. Hoadley, apparently representing largely the farmers, did not take the trouble to look into the feed question, or I suppose we should have got redress on that also; but we did not.

The next trick that Mr. Beatty took—he took twelve out of thirteen—was to arrange that the agreement would be in force for one year only, and then we have to go back to the old rate. True, the minister provided, and I thank him for it, that then we could begin all over again and go over the long and extensive route of going to the Board of Railway Commissioners and appealing to the government again, at the end of one short year. But the rate was to exist for one year only, and then we could reappeal and go over the whole ground again.

The next trick that Mr. Beatty won was a somewhat similar one. He arranged that the rate was not to come under the railway board, that it was not to be authorized by that board as all other rates have to be. No, this rate was put in a little division by itself subject to nothing except the railway's own good will or to a gentleman's understanding. Had it been arranged that the rate was to be authorized by the railway board, then at the end of a year the railways would have had to give reasons for changing it, but now they do not. The rate drops automatically, and then it is up to us to go through the whole performance again right from the beginning. I would almost call that a trick and a half to the credit of Mr. Beatty. There is no method of appealing against this thing. If we find that the rate is not being put into effect or that modifications are being introduced of their own conception, we cannot go to the railway board, nor can we go to the government, because the government would say: We do not know what the interpretation was.

Last of all they arranged that nothing was to be any good, so to speak, unless there was a certificate. Just picture to yourself this situation. This is the way it reads:

> Agents will not apply these rates unless a certificate in duplicate signed by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the province of British Columbia is surrendered by consignee.

Remember this, that before he can give this rate the station agent in Saskatchewan has to have a certificate signed by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture of British Columbia certifying that the wheat or grain is to be used only for feeding stock or poultry or both. That certificate has to be produced in the railway station in Saskatchewan. That is where the rate is to be applied, at the point of origin. It is a silly regulation anyhow. What are you going to use No. 6 or No. 5 wheat for? To feed a Ford car, or to feed people, or to feed stock? The certificate is not necessary, and it hampers business. When I was in the business—I am not now—I very seldom bought carloads of grain by letter. I almost always ordered them over long distance or by telegraph. But now a man wiring to the agent in Vancouver to send a carload from Calgary or Medicine Hat would first have to write to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture in Victoria, go through a certain form of red tapeism, get the certificate, and send it on to the little station in Saskatchewan, and then get his goods shipped. Look at the delay and the annoyance, and what good would it be to anybody when they did it? I have a facsimile of the certificate here, and it says distinctly that it must be stated that the stuff is to be shipped by so and so at so and so, showing that it has to be filled out and produced to the railway station agent before the rate is put on at the point of origin. By the way it also says, and I must hand it to Mr. Beatty for this—I have one or two shares in his company and now I have more confidence in it when I see how able the man at the head of that company is—it says:

> No milling-in-transit, stop-off, or reassembling privileges will be permitted.

It is permitted in the case of every other kind of grain, flour and merchandise coming from the prairie. These stopovers are a regular thing; I have taken advantage of them myself. Many small dealers cannot afford to buy a whole carload from the prairies in one shipment, as their requirements do not justify it, and so they buy it in mixed cars in Vancouver, and in that case I doubt if there would be any benefit in this at all.

Here is another doubtful thing in this gentleman's agreement which might be interpreted in different ways. I am doubtful if it would be of any use at all unless the importer was the man who actually fed the stuff to his own stock. The certificate must state that the material is for feeding live stock. I am somewhat doubtful whether that would apply in the case of a creamery company, or other dealer reselling. I think it might be narrowed down to poultrymen, and only poultrymen having a sufficiently large number of birds to buy a whole carload of wheat at once. I do not suppose there is a man in British Columbia who would be able or willing to do that.

These are only some of the difficulties I see. The Minister of Railways has unloaded this baby upon our hands. We are supposed to dangle it on our knees and look pleased. But the more I look at the baby the less I like it. I am doubtful about its parentage, and every time I look at it it has darkened in colour. I believe it will turn out to be a nigger before we are finished with it—a nigger in the woodpile. In view of all these things, which are capable of being checked and verified; in view of the fact that we have lost our appeal, and it will take two or three years to get it back; in view of the Prime Minister's definite statement to the effect that these matters were not for decision by the cabinet, and that if ever they reached the cabinet they would be sent back to the Board of Railway Commissioners; in view of the Duncan report, which says that the principle contained in the bill is necessary—in view of all these things it will be only justice to pass the bill.

In it the Board of Railway Commissioners are not compelled or given power to do anything wrong; they are only given power to do what one of them said was necessary. They are given power to do what the much-heralded Duncan report said was essential and right. That is all that is contained in the bill. If it passed nobody would be robbed or injured; the Board of Railway Commissioners are reputable men who would not lose their character or reputation over night. The board will take care of railway interests, as they have done in the past. Nobody would be hurt by the passing the bill.

I should like to see reconsideration by the government, so that the bill might at least reach committee. If there is anything wrong with the details of it, corrections could be made in committee. I am convinced the spirit behind it is right. We need it; for many years in British Columbia we have waited for it. We have found out what is necessary, and we will not be satisfied until we get justice.

Mr. W. J. LOUCKS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, I notice that on March 7, 1932, there was a discussion concerning domestic freight rates on grain and grain products, and on that occasion I spoke. I believe I said something to this effect, that I wished the bill then before us had gone farther and taken in gasoline, and some other commodities I mentioned. I was referring more particularly to the commodities entering our province from Alberta. Upon that occasion I quoted rates to Delisle. I do not wish to criticize the previous speaker, but it seems to me he has been very critical of the concessions which have already been given. Probably those concessions have been obtained through the efforts of hon. members on this side of the house, along with those of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) who took a very active part in the debate. Upon that occasion I did support the hon. member, and intimated that I was not satisfied with it because it helped only the province of British Columbia. So far as we were concerned, there was nothing coming back. After the explanation given by the Minister of Railways and the fact that the representatives of the four western provinces met in Ottawa during the recess, I cannot help but think that the provinces were intelligently represented. I take it that they came to a satisfactory understanding, and so far as grains coming into British Columbia from the prairie provinces are concerned I believe a fair and reasonable adjustment was made.

The hon. member who has just spoken has mentioned a very excessive rate. I am not saying he is not right. But on the other hand I am convinced more firmly than I was a year ago that our export rate is probably the lowest in the world. I know whereof I speak when I say that our rates are lower than those of the country to the south of us. When in Montana some time ago I had an opportunity to check up, I found that the rate from Big Sandy to Minneapolis, a distance of about 1,000 miles, was 41 cents a hundredweight, whereas the rate from Delisle to Fort William, a similar distance, was only 22 cents, or only about half.

My impression is that if we press too far in the matter of domestic freight rates in times like these, when we are facing large deficits, there is only one alternative open to the managers of the railroad. If we insist upon a further reduction in domestic rates, they will increase the export rates. I think people in Saskatchewan and hon. members from that province in the house would rather leave the export rate alone than have it suffer for the benefit of the domestic rate. If we press unduly at this time that is probably what would occur. I wish to assure the hon. member for New Westminster that at a later date he will have my support, at a time when the management of the roads can show us that they have eliminated the deficits. We might take further action when the time comes—and I believe it will come—when these deficits shall have been eliminated.

One further observation: I notice that in the bill there is an intimation that power will be taken from the government. The hon. member who has just taken his seat referred to the opportunity we have of appealing through the Minister of Railways. If I interpret the bill correctly, upon its passage that opportunity will be eliminated. At the present time it is not. We can discuss it in the house; we have a say in it; influence can be brought to bear upon the management of the road. But in the measure before us that influence will be eliminated. I cannot quite understand the hon. member, because when the railroad measure was up only a short time ago he opposed it because it was taking control away from the government. To my mind that is the very thing he is doing in this bill—taking control away from the government. So far as British Columbia is concerned, I believe they should be satisfied with the adjustment that has been made. If there is any grievance it should come from the prairie provinces.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken on the bill; he cannot speak twice.

Mr. LOUCKS: I am sorry if I am out of order. I might say, however, I was on my feet when the hon. member got up.

Mr. NEILL: No; I waited for the hon. member.

Mr. LOUCKS: I got up, but you did not see me. However I am satisfied to take my seat.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it may be that I shall be called upon to vote on this bill, and before doing so I should like to say a few words. I have always been in sympathy with the removal of the differential on grain or other products moving westward. However this bill goes much farther than I think we ought to go in conferring power and responsibilities upon the Board of Railway Commissioners. Take section 2:

> The board may consider the question of what should be reasonable compensation under the circumstances, and may establish a rate structure in the interests of trade development and public policy, though such experimental rates may not at the time or of themselves give reasonable compensation to the railway companies.

Surely this parliament cannot hand over to a board of five members, which is really a subdepartment of the Department of Railways, the right to establish a rate structure in the interests of trade development and public policy. The words are very indefinite, and capable of wide interpretation. Such matters can only be dealt with by parliament itself. For instance we might have the Board of Railway Commissioners deciding to establish a rate to develop a certain industry in a certain locality. But we might have a tariff policy, or a financial policy, of an entirely opposite effect. Only that body which has the power of coordinating and weighing these various questions can properly determine and lay down policies in the interests of trade development.

Another reason why I am opposed to this bill is that if we were imposing on the railways of Canada, the privately owned as well as the publicly controlled railway, rates that of themselves admittedly were not paying rates, how long would it be before the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would be coming here and saying: Pay us our deficit? I do not think we could avoid that. While I do not agree that there is real justice as between domestic and export rates going westward from the prairie provinces to Vancouver, and while I have spoken in this house against that disparity, though I was not here to vote on the other bill—I think I was ill when it came up,—I cannot vote to confer upon the Board of Railway Commissioners such powers as are proposed to be given them by this bill.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks in view of what has been said by some previous speakers who have taken part in this debate. Dealing with the remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber), I am sorry that he substituted personal innuendo for argument. I hope it is not merely to cover the fact that he will not support this bill just because it is introduced by me. After such an action I can now understand why British Columbia has long been left out in the cold, especially if that has been the past policy of many of its members.

[iMr. D. M. Kennedy.]

Mr. BARBER: You have been appointed spokesman for British Columbia, have you?

Mr. REID: Such expressions, in my opinion, lend strength to the cry of the people to-day who say: Away with all parties. That is somewhat to be expected, especially when hon. members instead of reasoned argument will indulge only in personal innuendos. I have been careful to avoid personalities; even to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) I was fairly mild, although in a previous speech he had attacked me. In almost every speech that the hon. member for Fraser Valley has made since I came to this house he has introduced the personal element particularly against myself.

Mr. BARBER: I have only spoken once this session.

Mr. REID: Last session he did just the same thing. But I do not intend to imitate such tactics. I would have been very glad to support any bill on behalf of the people of British Columbia had he seen fit to introduce such a measure. It is regrettable that the hon. member cannot get away from that old political stuff and give fair consideration to a matter that is so vital to the province of British Columbia. I am not interested in the question of who gets the credit. He was so anxious to claim credit for his friends that I wonder why he left out his friend Leon Ladner who has been engaged by the province of British Columbia and paid by them. He was no doubt anxious that both the Minister of Railways and Mr. Leon Ladner get something, the one credit and the other the cash.

Mr. BARBER: What about your friend, Jerry McGeer, who got $60,000?

Mr. REID: He blames me for looking after the votes of the farmers. Last year he blamed me for looking for the votes of the labour men. I suppose that is his idea of a member who works solely in the interests of his constituency. At any rate I do not know how he gets the votes. Service, Mr. Speaker, should be the only thing that keeps men in public life. I resent very much, however, these personal attacks; they do not add anything to the dignity of the house. I have put forward this bill as well as the bill on freight rates in a straightforward manner and without personalities.

My hon. friend blames me now for changing my attitude. This bill I might say, was introduced after the other one was turned down —that was the bill I introduced asking parliament to grant to British Columbia the same freight rates it had granted first in 1897 and again in 1925 on grain and grain products leaving Calgary or Edmonton for points east. That was turned down at the beginning of this session. That being turned down, I then endeavoured to follow the matter up by asking that further powers be granted to the Board of Railway Commissioners, to permit of further appeals to them. It is well known to every hon. member of this house, and particularly to those from British Columbia, that British Columbia has spent thousands of dollars in appeals before the Board of Railway Commissioners. The case has also been before the governor in council not only during the term of office of this government but during the time the Liberal party was in power. Every hon. member knows that British Columbia has failed in those appeals, and we have been told by the board that we cannot hope to succeed by simply quoting the Crowsnest pass rates. It is futile for us to go before that board unless some further powers are granted to it. I was sorry the freight rate bill was turned down, and now it appears this bill is going to be turned down—at least they are blocking its going to committee where it could be properly discussed. I was not making a wild guess at something when I introduced this bill. This is the recommendation embodied in the report of the Duncan commission, which made a thorough investigation into the powers of the Board of Railroad Commissioners and who put it on record that that board had not the power to grant in the national interest any reduction in freight rates, but that it was desirable that they should have that power. That was the recommendation of that commission; it did not emanate from myself.

I notice that the hon. Minister of Railways in his remarks paid particular attention to the second paragraph but ignored the first paragraph entirely. It seems strange that he left that alone; it looks as if there must be some good in that section. He should at least have allowed it to go to committee. But he said that this bill might interfere with the present railway bill. That is one of the things I fear. I fear that when the present railway bill relating to the Canadian Pacific-Canadian National goes into effect, freight rates may be one of the matters to be controlled by the tribunal which is to be set up, and if so the matter will be very serious indeed.

Regarding the arguments made by the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson), they were so childish and simple that I hate to take up the time of the house discussing them. He said this bill was designed to take the control of freight rates away from the Board of Railway Commissioners. What nonsense, Mr. Speaker! Surely no one would advance that argument in all seriousness. It is plain that the hon. member does not know as much about the Board of Railway Commissioners as he does about timber and timber leases.

I should like to see this bill go to the committee, Mr. Speaker, where it could be amended if that was thought necessary. The principle and the details of the bill were recommended by the Duncan commission, who went fully into the whole matter of the powers of the Board of Railway Commissioners. They recommended that such powers be granted to that board. The bill is not mandatory; the board would have all the data before it. No one could go before the board and hope to have an appeal granted because of the fact that he lived in some remote district, and so pleaded for low freight rates.

I should like to have gone more extensively into this question, but it is almost nine o'clock so I will conclude by asking the government even now to allow this measure to get second reading and go to the committee for further discussion and, if necessary, amendment.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston.

Mr. J. L. ILSLEY (Hants-Kings): Mr. Speaker, there are a few observations which I should like to make upon the budget. First of all let me say that of the seven budgets which I have had the privilege of listening to since I became a member of this house, the present one is the most disappointing, the most disheartening and the most depressing. I suppose many hon. members who came into this house for the first time after the elections of 1930 think it a usual thing for budgets to be brought down from year to year which disclose huge deficits, huge additions to the public debt, and huge increases in taxation. To those of us who sat in the last parliament and listened to the budgets presented by the late Mr. Robb and by Mr. Dunning, budgets which year after year disclosed large surpluses, large decreases in the public debt, and large reductions in taxation, the three budgets which have been presented by this administration since the elections of 1930 are nothing more or less than fiscal nightmares.

It is impossible within the forty minutes at one's disposal to deal with all the features of the budget, but I would not attempt to do so even if I had the time. This ground has been covered far better than I could do it by my esteemed colleague, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). The speech which that hon. member delivered on Friday last was a magnificent effort; I think it the ablest speech of his distinguished career. Able though he is, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) could not succeed this afternoon in touching the salient points put forward by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The poorest speech in his career.

Mr. ILSLEY: Before I deal with the few features of the budget which I think deserve some comment, I should like to say that we seem to be getting into the habit of regarding budgets not as financial statements of the government's intentions but as preliminary drafts only. In 1931 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was Minister of Finance he introduced a budget which later on was very materially altered. The same was true of the budget of 1932 and it will no doubt be true of the budget of 1933. I have no objection to changes being made—the changes which have been made in the past have been good ones—but I do think it unfortunate that ministers of finance should get into the habit of simply getting up something and bringing it into the house by way of a preliminary draft and then having us go through the discussion in committee of ways and means with the idea of getting something out at the end of the session which may perhaps meet the requirements of the case. Such action misleads the business interests of the country because one does not know until the discussion has ended just what the budget actually will be.

I think this is all a vindication of the position taken by the opposition during the past two years that we in this House of Commons or in this parliament should not delegate legislative functions to the governor in council. Large powers are now vested in the governor in council under the various relief acts. These powers are such that the governor in council can deal with intricate and difficult matters, and if the manner in which the government will deal with them in council is exemplified by the manner in which they prepare their budgets, this House of Commons could certainly do a better job with the legislation of the country than could the governor in council.

There are a few and only a few provisions of the budget with which I wish to deal. The first is that relating to ex-service men. I want to read the part of the budget that deals with pensions. On page 3223 of Hansard of March 21, 1933, the Minister of Finance is reported as follows:

> In this connection, I may say that with respect to pensioners who are in the employ of the government and who are paid the salary of the position, action will be taken whereby the payment of pension will be suspended during the period of such employment. Where the full salary of the position is not paid, the pension payment may not exceed the amount of the difference between salary received and the established salary of the position. If the pension is greater than the salary, the employee shall elect either to be paid the pension and relinquish the position, or to retain the position and have the pension withheld during the period of such employment. This will be made applicable not only to the government service but also to boards or commissions whose activities are financed from the Dominion treasury.

The Minister of Finance, in a statement which he made last Friday, indicated that another statement might be made in regard to the government's intentions with respect to pensions, and from the newspapers I gather the impression that those intentions may be substantially modified. But we do not know that; no such statement has yet been made. Therefore I feel I would be derelict in my duty if I did not take the statement literally as set forth in the budget and submit to the house a few of the consequences that will follow if it is applied as it now stands.

There is, in the towns and villages of this country, a large class of disabled men, in receipt of disability pensions, who, encouraged by a provision that has been in the Civil Service Act since 1918 to apply for public positions, have done so and are now in charge of post offices and the like, in positions which give them a small return. A very common class in the villages and towns in the country is that of which the type is a pensioner who has lost an arm or a leg or has some other disability; he is getting a small pension and a salary of a few hundred dollars, and by uniting the pension and the salary he is able to support his wife and family. If the passage that I have read from the budget speech means what it appears to mean, that pensioner is to be put to a choice; he must choose between continuing to take the pension and continuing to take the salary, and if the salary is larger than the pension, this means, despite the statement of the Minister of Finance that the government has no intention of interfering with the sanctity of pension contracts, that this man will be deprived of his pension. It is not, I think, necessary to argue to the house the injustice of such a course. It is completely subversive of the whole principle underlying the pension legislation, and without labouring the matter any further, I feel sure that will be one of the budget provisions which will be changed. It will have to be changed if the justice of the case is to be met and if the obligations of the country to ex-service men are to be carried out.

Another provision of the budget about which I should like to speak for a few minutes, which will not be changed, and which I should not like to see changed, is the proposal of the government to appoint a royal commission—

To study the organization and working of our entire banking and monetary system, to consider the arguments for and against a central banking institution and to make recommendations for reviving or supplementing our existing banking and monetary legislation.

My only comment is that that intention has been announced very late in the day. Had the government appointed a royal commission eighteen or even twelve months ago, I feel sure this country would be better off than it is to-day. In September, 1931, Great Britain went off the gold standard. At that time our currency went down in terms of United States funds. The British pound went down to a very marked degree and immediately currency became, if it was not at that time—and I think it was then—one of the burning questions before the people of the Dominion of Canada. Great Britain, realizing the importance of the question, had, before that, appointed the Macmillan commission, which had made its report on currency and monetary matters in the old country. Canada should have taken a similar course, or at least she should not have pursued the policy of laissez-faire.

I want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance the importance of the question from a practical standpoint. In the constituency that I have the honour to represent in this house, currency, the value of the pound sterling, is a matter of everyday conversation. As hon. members know, the largest single industry in my riding is apple growing and exporting, and when the pound sterling went down, as it did within the last shipping season, to between $3.55 and $3.60 in terms of Canadian money, our apple exporters suffered a terrible blow so far as their purchasing power was concerned. Consequently they have begun to ask and have been asking questions, and they have been taking a tremendously deep, not academic, but practical interest in this subject of currency. They had been brought up on the idea, I think, that gold should be the standard and that we should remain on the gold standard in this country. But when they saw that Great Britain went off the gold standard with results which apparently were not unfavourable; when they saw that the Scandinavian countries, Denmark, Sweden and Norway followed Great Britain off the gold standard; when they saw the Dominion of New Zealand and the Commonwealth of Australia taking steps to lower the value of their currency, and, finally, when they saw South Africa, the greatest gold producing country in the world, deliberately link its pound with the pound sterling, they began to wonder whether a policy of laissez-faire in currency matters was the proper one for this dominion. They saw that when our dollar went down in the United States, instead of this hurting them, it helped them, because the pound sterling went up in the Annapolis valley; they got greater returns for their apples. They wanted authentic information as to what this country should do; they desired to know whether it was just that debts—and the majority of them are loaded down with indebtedness to banks, mortgage companies and private lenders on mortgages—which were contracted when money was not worth very much, should be paid off in full in money which is worth a great deal more than when the debts were contracted. They realized that if our dollar became depreciated it would mean that municipalities and provinces, the dominion itself, and certain corporations in this country would have a greater burden of debt if they had to meet their debts in American funds, but they wondered whether that disadvantage would not be overcome by the corresponding advantage of an awakened business activity through inflation. It will be recalled that in 1925 in Great Britain the bankers, almost unanimously I think, were of the opinion that Great Britain, for the same reasons that the Prime Minister and the bankers of this dominion advocate what is called sound money to-day, should be brought back to the gold standard on a parity with the United States dollar. They did that against the advice of some economists who were regarded as radical and unsound at the time, but who since have been proved by universal consent to have been right. No one to-day contends that Great Britain was wise in going back in 1925 to the gold standard on a parity with the American dollar. It is a question in the minds of economists whether the policy outlined by the Prime Minister yesterday, and stated by him and the Minister of Finance in public addresses throughout this country and in this house, of what has come to be known as "sound money", is really a sound policy. But to these questions there has been no authentic answer, and I say that this government has pursued a wrong policy in keeping the question shelved. At the beginning of this session the Bank Act should have gone before the banking and commerce committee for revision in the usual way. The appointment of a royal commission at this late date will mean delay in the solution of this problem, and the postponement of any action whatever on this important question for another year at least. The commission should have been appointed a year or eighteen months ago. I support the appointment of the royal commission, yes, but I say that the government is to be censured for not having taken long before this some step in relation to currency and banking and monetary problems.

I want to refer for a few minutes to the taxation provisions of the budget. Before I do so, let me say that the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) this afternoon to the effect that the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and every member of His Majesty's opposition are opposing every provision of this budget by supporting the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is not a correct statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is nonsense.

Mr. ILSLEY: Moreover, there was a misstatement of fact by the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon which I should like to draw to his attention. He stated that the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth approved of nothing in the budget, and in particular he mentioned that he was opposed to a reduction of the valuation of the pound sterling from $4.40 to $4.25. Now the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth very distinctly stated in express terms that he approved of that. At page 3379 of Hansard of March 24, 1933, which contains the speech of the hon. member, he said this:

> I am glad indeed that the Minister of Finance has seen fit to alter the rate of exchange and at least to make the fixed rate at $4.25 instead of $4.40. That indicates two things, that he is recognizing, I think, the representations which have been made in this country, and also the representations which have been made from Great Britain; but I say to him that I do not think there is anything more fundamentally wrong than that exchange dumping duty which he and the government of which he is a member pledged themselves to remove as soon as possible after the Imperial conference.

There are provisions in the budget, of course of which we on this side of the house approve. There are provisions in every budget of which we approve. If I were asked to criticize the provisions of the budget which ensure that the holders of bearer bonds will pay income tax, I could not criticize that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The suggestion came from this side of the house.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. Nor could I effectively criticize the provisions of the budget relating to the taxation of foreign investors, although there may be some objection to that of which I do not know. Indeed, if it is necessary to raise immense sums of money by way of taxation, we all realize that taxes must be imposed. I just have this to say about the general principles of taxation. The imposition of the sugar tax meant the imposition of a terrific burden, a forty or fifty per cent tax upon a necessity in daily use by the poor people of this country. It was the sort of tax that should not have been resorted to except in case of great extremity. What occurs to me is this, that perhaps that extreme tax should not have been resorted to until something more was done in the way of taxing more heavily the higher incomes. I realize that many of the higher incomes in this country are pretty heavily taxed at the present time, but the old argument that you must not take all of a man's income over a certain amount because that would deprive him of his initiative is now passe. The country is in such a condition to-day that I personally do not see any objection to taking the whole income above a certain ample exemption figure, and the government should have gone very far toward doing that before they had recourse to a terrifically heavy tax, forty or fifty per cent, on a necessity such as sugar.

Certain circumstances in connection with the imposition of that tax have embittered the people. A tremendous amount of profiteering is taking place in sugar from one end of the country to the other. I am in touch with the province of Nova Scotia, and the complaint is universal that in some way or other dealers laid in stocks to take advantage of the tax at once, and are profiteering on sugar to a tremendous extent, making large profits on the stock they laid in. That, sir, is all I have to say with regard to taxation.

I pass now to what I should like to speak about for the remainder of the time I propose to take, and that is the feature of the budget which is called by the Minister of Finance the agricultural stabilization fund. What is this agricultural stabilization fund? It is a high sounding term, but all it means is that an export bonus is to be paid to the exporters of certain commodities, thirteen in all, which go to the United Kingdom market. In order that the record may be complete let me read them:

> Animals, meats (including bacon and hams), poultry, fresh fish, canned fish, tobacco, cheese, milk products, canned fruits, canned vegetables, maple products, eggs and honey.

The exporter is to be paid the difference between the value of the pound sterling at the time of shipment or at the time of remittance and $4.60. If the pound sterling, for instance, is at $4.10, he is to get 50 cents on every pound. That is to be done by order in council, not by legislation. The order in council is to be passed under the Relief Act, which had its third reading yesterday. The door is not closed, the Prime Minister says, to the admission of other commodities to the charmed circle. Persons who consider that they have a right to the same treatment for other commodities may come to the government and present their arguments for the passing of numerous other orders in council throughout the year admitting to the list of commodities which will share in the benefits from this fund the products in which they are interested. The position I take in this regard is the position which the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon endeavoured to ridicule, namely that taken by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. I believe the house will agree that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce read the remarks of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth they did not appear as he said they would; they did not sound ridiculous at all, but on the contrary sounded quite reasonable. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth said that the principle of bonusing industries and exporters is unsound, but if applied it must be applied equitably, fairly and equally. Surely that is an intelligible position. It is the position I have taken since 1930. If the Minister of Finance is sufficiently interested —and I do not know why he should be— he could look up the speech I made in September, 1930, in reference to the high duties being imposed by this administration. He will find that I said something to the effect that this country must be careful not to do as Australia did, that she must not protect and bonus herself into bankruptcy. I said that in 1930. At the same time I said, probably with the use of a slang expression, that if there was to be a handout it should be an all-round handout. I do not think that position can be successfully or reasonably assailed.

There is only one principle which can be applied to the bonusing of industries, and that is the principle of equality. Ever since this government has come into power, importers of farm machinery in my riding have been burdened with heavy taxes and heavy tariffs and have found it impossible to import machinery without paying vexatious dumping duties. The increase in tariffs was not as troublesome as the imposition of dumping duties. They found it impossible to take advantage of favourable terms offered them by American exporters. Manufacturers of spraying materials in the United States offered to take their pay in Canadian funds, but importers were not able to import because of the dumping duties imposed by this administration. About the same condition obtained in regard to fertilizers. I have watched the people in my district get poorer and poorer, their debts become greater and greater. I have watched the value of their produce go down and down until at the present time they are in very sad and distressed circumstances indeed.

Last fall when the Imperial economic conference agreements were laid before this House of Commons, promising advantages to the primary producers, and particularly to the apple growers, I felt constrained, due to the distress of my people, to support the agreements. However I want to say, and to say with sincere regret, that so far as the apple growing industry of Nova Scotia is concerned, and the apple growing industry in Canada as a whole, the promised advantages have not materialized.

I notice the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short), the constituency adjoining the one from which I come, is in his seat. I remember that in an aside in the debate which took place he said that it would be worth a million dollars to the Annapolis valley. Probably the hon. member will remember making that statement; I am sure he would not make it to-day. It may work out that way in another year, but I am not sure about it—I hope it will. During the year which has passed, however, as indicating the results the figures are eloquent.

Mr. SHORT: The hon. member has just made reference to a remark I made. He certainly must agree that the apple exporters of the Annapolis valley are receiving a preference of more than a dollar a barrel on the 730,000 barrels which they have already shipped this year. The trade agreement has brought them in an extra dollar a barrel, has it not?

Mr. ILSLEY: I am tremendously surprised to hear my hon. friend make that statement, because the figures show that that is not the case at all. The effectiveness of the preference in the British market depends upon the extent to which American apples are kept off the market. Let me give to the committee a few figures to indicate the extent to which they have been kept off. The exports of United States apples to the United Kingdom for the season up to March 11, 1933, show a decrease of 43 per cent on barrels and 25 per cent on boxes. But the crop in the United States during the past year has been much below normal. The crop for the 1932 season was about 85,000,000 bushels, while the crop for the 1931 season was 103,000,000 bushels. In 1930 it amounted to 101,000,000 bushels. Not since 1929 do we get a comparable crop figure. In that year the crop of the United States was 86,500,000 bushels, of which were exported to the United Kingdom 953,000 barrels. The export this year was practically the same, or 983,140 barrels up to March 4, 1933. The box shipments were somewhat less. The figures show for the present season that box shipments from the United States total 1,929,326 boxes, whereas in 1929 they were 2,654,000. So that the shipment to the United Kingdom market has been about normal during the last year

With regard to price I happen to have under my hand a report from J. Forsyth Smith, Canadian Fruit Trade Commissioner, in which the statement is made:

> Actually there was no shortage of supplies and no rise in wholesale prices, which continued to be lower than normal. As far as retail prices were concerned, the effect observed was the reverse of what the fruiterers' organizations had anticipated and the great mass of medium class fruiterers found it necessary to stimulate trade under generally depressing conditions by shading their profit. Whereas, therefore, one had been in the habit of expecting six pence per pound, to be about the minimum for boxed apples. This was no longer the case and prices of four pence and five pence per pound were by no means uncommon.

It has been the experience of apple growers in the Annapolis valley, from which I come, that the amount received during the past season for their apples has not been sufficient to meet the cost of production.

Mr. SHORT: They got four shillings sixpence per barrel more than the Americans did.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, it would take too long to refute that statement with mathematical certainty, but all I can say is that it simply is not in accordance with the facts. Everybody in the Annapolis valley, and I think the hon. member himself knows it. In the selection of the thirteen commodities, why has the government not included apples, one of the commodities we would expect to find near the top of the list? We are told that we are getting four and a half shillings per hundred pounds in increased price on the British market. As a matter of fact we are getting nothing of the kind, because the operation of supply and demand, in the absence of an effective prevention of American competition, has brought the price down on the British market. Now, sir, I have turned over in my mind as carefully as possible the principles which may have guided the government in the selection of the commodities to be included in this list, and I am at a complete loss to find evidence of any definite or consistent principle. In my humble opinion the list constitutes discrimination of the rankest kind. Looking at it on the basis of volume, it might be said: "Oh well, we have selected this list to encourage shipments that actually go; we have left off commodities that are not exported to the British market in any volume." Indeed that is what the Prime Minister said yesterday in regard to butter. But I find maple products on the list, the exports of which last year amounted to only $5,333; eggs, the exports of which amounted to only $3,972; honey, exports of which amounted to only $184,341, and other commodities not much greater in quantity of export. So the basis of the list cannot have been volume. It has been suggested that certain articles, apples for instance, were not included because they already enjoy a substantial preference. But I find on this list other commodities which enjoy a substantial preference, notably tobacco. Why should tobacco be on the list and apples be left off? It may be said that the list was selected with a view to helping the primary producers. But persons who should know inform me that there are on the list a number of processed products as to which the manufacturer or processor will get the benefit of the bonus while the persons who supply the products will not. The most notable instance of that, I am told, is bacon, and second to that I should say canned apples. Why are canned apples bonused, and evaporated apples and cider and concentrated cider and green apples left off? What is the basis of selection? I have made inquiry and I am told that the bulk of the fruits that are canned in this country come in from the United States; the canner sends the canned fruit to Great Britain and gets the bonus. About seventy carloads of pears were exported from Canada to Great Britain last season, while pears come from the United States to be canned. The pears that are shipped by the primary producers will not get the bonus, but the canners of American pears will get it, because canned fruits are on this list and fruits in their natural state are left off.

Then it may be argued that this is a relief measure; in fact the other night the Prime Minister said so. If it is a relief measure I can tell the Minister of Finance of a great many industries producing natural products other than those covered by this list which are in a condition requiring relief. Or it may be said that this list is selected to give general benefits from one part of Canada to the other, well spread over the dominion. But that again is not correct. Coming from the maritime provinces, I have scanned this list to find what maritime province products are bonused. What are they? Nothing in any substantial quantity at all. So if the principle is geographic, the maritime provinces are left out of the distribution of benefits.

So I say the government cannot, in justice, leave this list of bonused products in its present shape. There is only one principle to apply, that is the principle suggested by the ex-Minister of Trade of Commerce, the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm), the other night: if you are going to give a bonus to any exporters to the British market you must give a bonus to all exporters; you must apply it across the board, all along the line. When I was in Nova Scotia about a week ago I was going over the condition of the apple industry with some of my friends. We were naming the fruit growers one by one; we knew their financial standing pretty well. This man, they agreed, could not come out, he was too deeply in debt; this one we thought might possibly pull out; the next we thought was good and would probably be good for some time to come. Some of my friends said: What could the government reasonably be asked to do to assist the apple growing industry of Nova Scotia? One gentleman suggested that the government might be asked to make up the difference between the present price of the pound sterling and par. But as soon as he suggested it he said he realized that that would be an unreasonable request, because if it were done for the apple exporters the government would have to do it for all exporters. To our simple old-fashioned intelligence it appeared elementary that you could not pick and choose and give a bonus to some and deny it to others, yet that is what the minister is doing. I say to the Minister of Finance as forcibly as I am able that the apple industry of Nova Scotia, and I think of all Canada, will resent the discrimination shown in the compilation of that list of products to be bonused under the proposed agricultural stabilization fund, and the government will incur tremendous unpopularity—I do not say that as a threat; it is simply a statement of fact—for they cannot justify that unjust discrimination in favour of certain exporters and against certain exporters, to the British market.

Mr. W. D. COWAN (Long Lake): Mr. Speaker, the outstanding feature of Canadian life during the past few years has been the splendid coolness which has characterized our people. We know full well, all of us on both sides of the house, including those in the broadcasting corner, that times have been exceedingly hard. We know full well that the whole world has suffered, and we know that the Canadian people have suffered with the others. We have had hard times, we have had privation, we have it yet; we are not yet quite out of the woods, although we are getting there at a lively rate thanks to the Imperial economic conference agreements and other measures of this government. Our people have behaved splendidly; there is absolute calmness everywhere. There has been no rioting, no revolution, no panics such as have characterized other places. Even a great nation of 120,000,000 people, supposedly the wealthiest in the world, has recently had banking panics. None of these have we had. As far as I know in Canada we have had only one stampede, namely the Calgary stampede; and the Prime Minister was there in charge of that so that everything was run on a sound money basis.

The coolness of the Canadian people under all these trying circumstances proves conclusively that they have great confidence in the powers that be. We find the people standing by constituted authority, believing as they do that those in charge in the various parts of the dominion will be true to their duty and that as a result we shall come through this depression quicker than any other nation and as satisfactorily as may be possible in the circumstances. And that is exactly what has happened. The people have confidence in their leadership. It is quite true that the Supreme Being is over us all, but when we come down to mere man we find right in this house a leader of the government who commands the admiration and confidence of the entire people, even though they do not always agree with him. Hon. gentlemen opposite know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is the best man in Canada for that position; they will not admit it, but they know it. That is all I ask, and they can keep their knowledge to themselves if they wish.

It is true that we have this fine government, which has been of great benefit to Canada, but it is also true that some hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly those from Saskatchewan sitting in the third row, always make the most extraordinary demands. Those demands can be reduced to one word: money, money, money. You may call it assistance, relief, grants or what you will; when you come right down to it it is money, money, money, and help, help, help. The difference between hon. gentlemen opposite and hon. gentlemen on this side of the house is that they are always asking for it and we are always handing it out as far as the treasury of the country will permit. We are doing; they are talking, and I would much rather be a doer than a talker

When we get down to that broadcasting corner, hon. members there are worse than the hon. members from Saskatchewan. They demand just as much money, but they want 27 per cent compound interest and they want it with arrears upon arrears. There is no limit to the amount they want. I wish Canada could meet all these demands, but I should like to remind hon. gentlemen opposite and particularly those in the corner that they have not submitted a single proposal designed to place a dollar in the federal treasury. My mother was a good old Scotch lassie; she used to say, "I will spend all the siller you give me but I want you to get the money first," and that is a mighty good principle. We must get the money in our treasury before we can pay it out.

Mr. YOUNG: Tell that to the Prime Minister.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Let me say to my hon. friend that we have not much time to waste here, he and I. Three years ago I thought the hon. gentleman was the worst man in the house, but he has improved wonderfully. You know the old rule: The older you get the more experience you acquire; the more experience you acquire the wiser you become, and the wiser you become the more of a Conservative you are.

I feel sure, and I know what I am talking about, that Canada has handled this distressing situation better than it has been handled in any other country in the world. It may be that to-day the United Kingdom is leading the world; it may be that France is able to keep all her people employed. She has a great many men in her army, which may account for it. I do not know whom they are going to lick next, but in any case, apart from those two countries Canada has beaten the world. The relief situation in the United States has not been handled as it has here. I lived over there for some years; I know something about that country and I have many correspondents there. All I have to say is this, and if it is out of order I hope the Speaker will check me up: Thank God I am a Canadian. If that is not in order I am sorry.

Mr. YOUNG: Withdraw.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): I know hon. gentlemen opposite say that their general policy is to reduce tariffs and so increase trade. Oh, what an easy thing to say! We can reduce our own tariff; we can wipe out every factory in Canada; we can have every blessed thing manufactured in Christendom dumped into Canada if we wish. That is our privilege, but I should like to know what hon. gentleman opposite controls the United States. Does anyone? Can hon. gentlemen opposite tell me how we are going to make the United States reduce its tariffs? There is Mussolini; go to Italy and order him to reduce tariffs in order to permit the entry of Canadian goods. There is Hitler; go to Germany and tell him to let Canadian goods enter. How can we export goods against these tariffs? Until hon. gentlemen opposite can show me some method by which we can get something in return for all we give I say their policy must be an absolute failure. The only tariff policy that could have succeeded under existing conditions was the policy enunciated by the Prime Minister, that of blasting our way into the markets of the world. We raised our tariff until now we have blasted our way into those markets. What has happened? We have blasted an unfavourable trade balance clear out of existence; to-day we have a favourable balance of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. Now I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will get up and say that since we have that favourable balance we should give it back. Is that their policy? How is that to be done, and to whom is that to be given? I should like to get some of that money myself. Hon. gentlemen opposite know their policy is absolutely foolish; they really do not believe what they say.

I am glad to see that my hon friend from North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) is here. We all remember how in 1931 he moaned and groaned about the terrible conditions that existed in Saskatchwan. I called a boy and asked for a mop; I wanted to mop up the tears the hon. gentleman shed, but the boy did not know where they were kept. At any rate the hon. member groaned about distress and misery, but what happened? Shortly afterwards the hon. gentleman went back to Regina and attended a meeting of the rural newspaper association. In Regina we have a leading organ of the Liberal party, and my hon. friend could not refrain from letting the people know he was there. He gave an interview which appeared in that newspaper on October 10, and here is what he said:

> People have had a good crop, will have plenty of grain to sell, and also have stock on which to rely. Mixed farming, he says, is growing apace in the Battlefords and people appear to be happy and contented.

I would like the hon. member for North Battleford to tell me how a man can be both happy and miserable and how a woman can be both contented and discontented.

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. member ought to know himself.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Canada and the United Kingdom are both away to the good. I like the old motherland, the mother of parliaments. As Britain prospers so prospers the world. Get her going and the rest of us will follow. We will do very well to walk along side by side with the old motherland. The British business man is the best on earth, bar none. Other business men have more conceit, but when it comes down to the real thing, the British business man gets the business. That country is carrying on and is succeeding. Since the session resumed in January, not one word has been said about the economic agreements. Why? Because they are successful. I know it is unparliamentary to refer to previous debates, but if these agreements had failed in their purpose, hon. gentlemen opposite would have found five hundred ways of getting the matter into the house.

Mr. YOUNG: They have failed; they do not amount to a hill of beans.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): I will not pay any attention to the hon. member because no one ever does.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for Weyburn knows they have been successful.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): The following is an article which appeared in the Commercial Intelligence Journal:

> In agreement with the arrangements concluded at the Imperial conference at Ottawa, the "Importation of Canadian Cattle Order of 1933" was passed and became operative on January 17 last. Under its provisions the trade in Canadian cattle is made easier; certain unnecessary costs are eliminated, and restrictions on their landing and movement to markets, etc., that were not applicable to other cattle, have been removed. In consequence there has been established a more favourable opportunity for their delivery and sale in the United Kingdom.

That article was written by Mr. W. A. Wilson, Agricultural Products Trade Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain. Who is he? He used to be the dairy commissioner and at one time lived in Regina. He and I know each other mighty well. He is the rankest, most ripsnorting Grit that I ever met in all my life. He is a big sixfooter and he used to go around with a companion just as big as himself. They objected to the Tory doctrines which I was advocating and one day when it was thirty below zero they picked me up bodily, put me under the town tank and turned on the hose. I never was so cold in all my life; it was the worst dose I ever got. This just shows the type of man we have over there. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite will accept the opinion of a member of their own party who is right in the centre of things.

There is one thing I would like to say to whomever is leading the government. If we ever have a condition such as we had four or five years ago when a dozen so-called independents were able to take the government of the day by the throat and compel them to acknowledge them as masters, I am going to say to my leader—I would not care whether or not he liked it—that I would rather vote Liberal than put up with such a condition. I do not believe in that kind of government. I, for one, object to these independents getting us by the throat. A short time ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) spoke in Saskatchewan and he is reported as follows in one of the Saskatoon papers:

> Success of the Independent Farmer-Labour movement depended on Saskatchewan, said Mr. Woodsworth. It was the key province and must swing into line.

When he comes out with his "must" he is going to find me on the other side. The people of Saskatchewan are not going to be driven in any such way. Apparently this new group has selected Saskatchewan as its centre, but they will never succeed. Why? The combination of labour and farmer is an absolutely impossible one. They say that the combination is possible because the farmer employs labour, but I do not agree with that statement. What price are they going to exact from the farmers of Long Lake? They might as well tell me now because they will have to tell it on every platform in that constituency. Here is what the president of the Trades and Labour Congress said when speaking in Calgary:

> It is a disgrace for any municipality to offer to keep the wives and children of workers, while at the same time forcing the men, their lawful bread-winners, to work for farmers at slave wages.

He is suggesting that the farmers of Saskatchewan and Alberta are slave drivers. I represent a constituency of farmers—thank heaven there is not a single civil servant in the whole constituency—and I know them pretty well. I want to say that the farmers of that section of the country are prepared to pay a reasonable wage to their employees at any time, but they are not going to be held up as they have been. They have been bled right and left. Not long ago a taxi man who brought me to this building told me that he wanted to get back to Regina. I said: "Why do you want to go back there?" He said: "I want to get back to work on a farm". I asked him where he had worked, and he gave the name of the farmer. I said: "Why do you want to go back?" He said: "Because I get such good wages; I get $12 a day". I said: "What were you doing?" He replied: "I was running a tractor". He did this all summer until freeze-up. No farmer in Saskatchewan can afford to pay $12 a day, and yet a certain type of labour, represented by such people, come in there; they wait until they see a field of, say 3,000 acres of wheat all ready to cut, when the farmer has to hire help immediately or the crop will be lost, and they demand an exorbitant wage which the farmer has to pay. That is one reason our farmers are broke as they are to-day. That sort of thing must stop.

I do not believe the leader of the Labour party ever did a day's work in his life. I have; I served my time and worked and I can do it now. When I was in Philadelphia I was one of the officers of the Knights of Labour, which was then a powerful labour organization in the United States, and I believe I still have somewhere my card of membership. Therefore I know something about hard work. Some people will say that it is beneath the dignity of a member of parliament to admit that he has ever worked. The calluses are still on my hands from the cooper's adze and the carpenter's hammer. I will tell the house bluntly and plainly that I would rather have calluses on my hands and corns on my feet than bunions on my brain as some people have. I am opposed to that combination of farmer and labour, because they are out to exploit labour; they are out to exploit the farmer and they are going to do this if they can, but they will never get away with it in our province. They may get away with a certain amount of it, with the rag-tag and bob-tail, but the sane part of the population, the sane Liberals and sane Conservatives, will not stand for that kind of thing, and they form the great bulk of our population.

I see the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) is not in his seat, but he will probably read my remarks in Hansard. I want to pay him a compliment in regard to that series of questions which he put the other day; they entitle him to my gratitude and, I think, that of the whole of Canada. He asked hon. members in the far corner opposite about 200 questions which they cannot answer to save their necks. They may reply to two or three of them and by doing so they consider that they have answered them all. The hon. member twitted me with belonging to the Ku Klux Klan. I do not care if he did. Out of gratitude to the hon. member for the splendid series of questions which he asked in opposition to that broadcasting corner group, I will tell him what I am going to do. I am going to send to Louisiana for the whole Ku Klux Klan outfit, if the Minister of National Revenue will allow me to import it free of duty; I am going to have it embalmed with me; when the hon. member reaches the pearly gates, he will find me waiting there and I will pull him in through the pearly gates, I do not care whether I get him in head first or feet first.

I want to ask a few more questions of the Farmer-Labour party. Let me read a letter from a man who is a farmer in a big way because he occasionally markets 30,000 bushels of wheat. He writes this letter which appears in the Liberal paper in the district of Long Lake, the Craik Weekly News. He addresses it to the provincial leader of the Farmer-Labour party. This is the letter:

> As Mr. M. J. Coldwell, leader of the Farmer-Labour party is to speak in Craik next Saturday, all who can possibly do so should attend, as he is an able speaker and has given much time to the study of socialism. And if socialism has something definite and practical to remedy the condition we are in, then that is what we want.
> So if Mr. Coldwell has the time to spare I would like him to explain the following things:
> The Canadian national railroad is owned and controlled by the people of Canada (socialistic), yet since taking over through slackness in operating it has cost the taxpayers of Canada 446 millions of dollars.
> The Saskatchewan wheat pool, owned and controlled by the people of Saskatchewan (socialistic) through lack of ability and business experience has cost the province $13,500,000.
> The Saskatchewan Cooperative Creameries—
> Started by the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell).
> —also owned by the people, through poor judgment and slack operating management have cost the province over $1,500,000.
> The Registered Seed Pool has cost the government several hundred thousands of dollars.
> The U.F.C. head office owes the banks around $60,000.
> These concerns are all managed along the lines of socialism; how is it they are all in debt and but for the assistance of capitalism would be out of business?
> How would socialism handle the Calgary exchange difficulty?
> When the socialists were in power in Great Britain with an able leader and a large majority, why was not national banking and national currency put into operation?

I want my friends in the far corner opposite and also those immediately opposite to note this final question. They are always talking about Russia and bartering with her:

Why is socialistic Russia, after being in operation for fifteen years, trying to buy cattle from the farmers of western Canada on credit?

That "on credit" settles the matter. This is an ordinary, everyday farmer; he is a good farmer, I admit, and he is a level headed man, but he is not the only level headed man we have in Saskatchewan. I wish I had time to go into the situation. The farmers out there are as level headed and as well informed as any you can meet anywhere. There are no better informed people in this country, and, as you can quite appreciate, they are not standing for any nonsense of this kind. A number of them in the Long Lake district have been deprived of their land by mortgage and investment and insurance companies. To-day Saskatchewan is taking drastic action. These investment companies have brought their own troubles on their heads; the position they are in is due entirely to themselves. In Saskatchewan to-day we have thousands and thousands of acres which have been taken away from the farmers by these companies, and what are they going to do with them? I would point out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) that these thousands and thousands of acres ought not be allowed to stand idle. They should be cultivated, otherwise they will be nothing but hotbeds for noxious weeds and all kinds of pests and insects. I would rigidly enforce the act relating to noxious weeds so as to compel the cultivation of every quarter-section of these lands, no matter what it costs the company.

But what are the conditions to-day? As I said to this house the other day, and I want to drive it home again now, in 1931 there were thirty-three states in the republic to the south of us which were absolutely drought stricken. The great American desert came into its own for a year. In those states that were stricken by drought there lived thirty millions of people, and they had made it a good country to live in, just as we have made Saskatchewan a good place to live in. But the drought swept over that country, and coming up to western Canada from Arkansas, Montana, Dakota and Idaho, it caught us. We could not stop those winds. But they have passed, and we may never have them again in our lifetime. Why should we be blamed, as we are being blamed, for a condition which is only temporary? To-day we have all kinds of snow out there, which we have not had for years, and it is quite evident to me that we are again back on the path to old-time prosperity, and upon that I am going to build.

Take this editorial from the Ottawa Journal —and it makes me sick. The editorial is headed: "Now We Can Believe Anything," and reads in part:

Out in Saskatchewan—of all places—the municipality of Harris not only is collecting no taxes this year but actually is paying to its ratepayers a dividend of two mills out of an accumulated surplus.

That is not unusual. The municipality of Pense, in the constituency of Long Lake, has no debt either. It was drought stricken for four years and it has got millions of dollars' worth of acres. A financier who has invested out there, referring to these conditions, says that something is wrong. He is not a socialist; he is far from being an extremist; he is a great financier. He says:

We seem to have reached the last line of defence in Saskatchewan, for when a farmer will come in with from four to eight clear titles for quarter-sections—

That would be from 640 to 1,280 acres of land:

—which he operates and which so far have never carried an encumbrance of any kind, these men are now offering part or all of these titles for sufficient advance to see them through their operating expenses for 1933, and find that neither the banks nor mortgage companies are disposed to entertain their agreement, then I think you will agree with me that matters have reached a very serious condition indeed.

A man would go out there and buy a quarter-section of land, and out of that make a farm, and when he was doing well he would buy another section, until perhaps he had four or eight quarter-sections all free of encumbrances, and with a good home, good buildings and everything he wants. But to-day when such a man in that area that was stricken by drought wants a few dollars he cannot get a cent from any of the banks or mortgage companies, and I say that something is lacking. We want somebody who will come between the banks and mortgage companies and the people, to enable our farmers to carry on.

I think my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has two more minutes.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Then in those two minutes I will speak of the Prime Minister. I am sorry he is not here to-night. I met him the other day and he said, "I am sorry I do not see you very much." The way I like to discharge my parliamentary duties, Mr. Speaker, is not to go near the ministers.

I would rather go to the men below, and discuss matters with them, and then when everything is completed I can get it across to the minister. I have known the Prime Minister for very long, for thirty-five years anyway. He and I drove a rig together in that western country, and we had a mighty good time together.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): There was no "time" when R. B. Bennett was speaking. I shall never forget the first speech I heard him make in the legislative assembly in denunciation of the government of the day. As he made his points, time after time he would bring his fists down on the desk until you would think it would break, as he cried, "Make things happen, make things happen, make things happen." That has been his principle all his life, and the man who cannot make things happen for himself is a mighty poor scrub.

Mr. W. H. GOLDING (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make my first speech in this house I have that sense of embarrassment which I presume every new member has experienced; but there is an old saying that misery likes company, and there is some satisfaction in knowing that others have passed through the same ordeal.

At the outset I should like to say that I hope the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan), who has just taken his seat, will not think me discourteous if I do not follow him in his remarks. As a matter of fact, I would not care to follow anybody in a debate who had made some of the remarks made by the hon. member.

I have heard it said, Mr. Speaker, that this House of Commons is a strange and difficult place in which to speak. I believe I can say I fully realize the truth of the statements I have heard to that effect. Many hon. members who now sit in this chamber have been highly honoured by their constituents by the fact that time after time they have been elected to parliament, with the result that they have spent many years in this House of Commons. Those hon. members in their extensive parliamentary experience have listened to the addresses of many other hon. members, and have heard many new members make their first speeches in the house. I appreciate the fact that those hon. members, with the experience of years behind them, are well acquainted with parliamentary procedure and with the many views which have been expressed on political problems. With those advantages they are therefore in a position to detect an error in a speech, whether it be simply grammatical or on a matter of policy. In view of these facts I appeal to hon. members not to be too harsh in their criticisms of what I may have to say.

The house is aware that as a result of the by-election held in South Huron on October 3, I came to this House of Commons. I am sure all hon. members regret exceedingly the circumstances which brought about that by-election. I refer of course to the unfortunate death of our honoured friend, the late Mr. McMillan. He was a man who to a marked degree had the confidence and respect of the electors of his constituency. Indeed, in making a personal canvass I was more than pleased to hear so many complimentary remarks concerning our late friend, remarks which came from people entertaining all shades of political thought. While all did not agree with his political views, yet they realized that his opinions were honest and sincere. From early manhood he had made a study of agricultural and political problems; indeed even at the early age of eighteen years I am told he was speaking from public platforms concerning these matters. For over fifty years he had taken a leading part in the public discussion of political problems. As the representative of the constituency which repeatedly honoured our late friend by electing him as its representative to the House of Commons, I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere thanks to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), to my honoured leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), to the leader of the group to my left (Mr. Gardiner) and to all hon. members in the house for their kindly references at the opening of the session to the passing of our friend. I thank them, further, for their message of sympathy which was unanimously extended to his bereaved daughter, Miss Margaret. Let me assure the house that these kindly acts were appreciated, and I feel I should be remiss in my duty were I not to offer to all hon. members the grateful thanks of our people.

In regard to the budget which was so ably presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), and which is now the subject of debate, I must say that one cannot but view with alarm the financial situation of our country which in the speech was so plainly indicated. Someone has been unkind enough to say that we listened to a typical Tory budget, and that the outstanding features were taxation, tariffs and deficits, with the emphasis on the deficits. I submit that it is hardly possible to discuss the budget and our financial situation without at least in a measure referring to our position before this government assumed the control of affairs. Every hon. member will recall that in 1929 certain events took place which seriously affected business conditions. In the western provinces there was a partial crop failure; there was a market crash in the United States, and the depression which had existed in many countries was gradually creeping into our own. In 1930 these disturbing factors were still being felt, creating of course a certain amount of anxiety and unrest.

Our Conservative friends, then in opposition, were quick to note these conditions, and, regardless of the effect it would have upon the country, felt the time opportune for an appeal to the people. With that in mind they began clamouring for an election. On the other hand the Liberal party felt that the Dunning budget had been designed to cope with existing difficulties, and, believing in the efficacy of their policy as outlined in the budget, believing also that the Canadian people would appreciate the splendid legislation brought down by the Liberal administration, and the outstanding results which had been attained between the years 1922 and 1930, accepted the challenge, and the country was plunged into a general election.

The outstanding incidents of that election are still fresh in our minds. Practically every Conservative speaker traced the depression, only in its infancy so far as Canada was concerned, to the policy and legislation of the Liberal government. They condemned the government in every way, shape and form for not finding more markets and getting higher prices for agricultural products. They denounced the government in every manner, in spite of the fact, mark you, that this country had just passed through an era of unprecedented prosperity. The expansion of trade in Canada had been perhaps greater per capita than that of any other country in the world. Our Conservative friends, however, appealed to the people for the control of affairs. In order to obtain support they broadcast some of the most extravagant promises that were ever heard in any political campaign. I have no desire unfairly to criticize the Prime Minister or any other hon. member, I believe there is such a thing as fair criticism and I shall endeavour to keep within that limit.

I was deeply interested in and somewhat surprised at the remarks to-day of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). I have not been a member of parliament very long, but for many years I have read Hansard, and I was just wondering, when he was complaining about criticisms which had been made, if he was the same hon. member who sat on the opposition benches and criticized so severely the late Liberal government. Was he the same hon. gentleman who during the election campaign criticized the Liberal government so severely? I have pointed out that immediately before the election this country was beginning to feel the effects of the world depression, and the number of unemployed was increasing. Every effort was made to make political capital out of the very undesirable situation which was developing. At every Conservative meeting the unemployment problem was particularly featured, and the responsibility therefor was charged directly to Liberal legislation. The Prime Minister made some definite statements concerning unemployment. I have no doubt they have been quoted many times; in fact since coming to this house I have heard them read, but I take the liberty of making further reference to them. Speaking at Moncton, New Brunswick he is reported as follows:

> The Conservative party is going to find work for all who are willing to work, or perish in the attempt; it is going to call parliament together at the earliest possible date after July 28, to take such steps as will end this tragic condition of unemployment and bring prosperity to our country as a whole.

He went on to say that Mr. King promised consideration of the problem of unemployment, and then made the amazing statement: "But I promise to end unemployment." And he asked the question: Which policy do you like best? Speaking at other places he ridiculed the suggestion of the Liberal leader that a conference be called to consider all features of this problem. Speaking at Sarnia he is reported as having used these words:

> Someone is responsible for unemployment, not individuals but governments.

I want to emphasize that—"not individuals but governments." Governments are responsible for the enacting of all legislation. Of course at that time there was a Liberal government in power, but I think every fair-minded person will agree that if that statement was true then it is equally true at the present time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: More so to-day.

Mr. GOLDING: If it was true then, this government stands convicted by the statement of its leader of being responsible for all the unemployment which we have from one end of the country to the other, and all the misery and distress and tragedy connected with it.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, anything is gained by being unfair, and let me say I did not think that was a fair statement to make at the time it was made, neither do I think it would be fair to say now that this government is wholly and entirely responsible for the condition of unemployment that now prevails. But I do submit that the high tariff policy which has been adopted by practically all countries as well as by this government has contributed more to bringing about the chaotic condition which exists in the world to-day than any other one thing. In my opinion it has added enormously to the number of unemployed. And having adopted that policy this government is to that extent at any rate responsible for the situation that confronts us at the present time. It is a well known fact that after the war this policy of high tariffs began to operate in practically every country. In Canada its operation was delayed by a low tariff government, but since 1930 it has been in full effect, and we have certainly felt its evil results.

In regard to the promise to end unemployment, it was most unfortunate that in order to obtain votes promises of that kind were made with little or no hope of their being fulfilled. These promises had a demoralizing effect upon the workers of Canada. It is well known that every industrial worker, indeed every one no matter what his vocation in life may be, must make his individual effort to provide for himself and his family. But when this assurance was given that everyone who wanted work would be provided with work, that no one would be permitted to go hungry or cold, the very thing happened which anyone who had made any study of psychology would expect to happen—the workers of our country in ever increasing numbers began to look to the government, and rightly so, to see that these election promises were carried out. I have noted since that election that members of the cabinet in making public addresses have endeavoured to point out that there is not the individual effort that there should be, that there is a tendency to depend too much on the government for the provision of all needs. This is especially true in regard to the addresses given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Railways and Canals. One cannot sow the wind without reaping the whirlwind. We are reaping the harvest to-day from a seed which was thoughtlessly sown during the campaign of 1930. As an industrial worker myself I know that there was need of help being given in many cases, but I also know that the picture presented to the unemployed of our country during that campaign was so impossible of fulfilment that one cannot but regret that such statements were broadcast throughout our land. I am satisfied that this promise to end unemployment secured for the government thousands upon thousands of votes, and in my opinion contributed more to their success at the polls than any other one thing. Now after almost three years in office what has been done by the government to implement this promise? I submit that nothing whatever has been done to end unemployment. It is true that money has been spent like water on unemployment relief, but no legislation has been passed which any reasonable person can claim to have ended unemployment. A survey was made after the last election to ascertain the number of the unemployed in Canada, and the returns indicated that about 117,000 were out of work. At the present time it is estimated that practically 800,000 are unemployed. The figures speak for themselves; I quote them only to show how completely the government has failed to fulfil this promise, a promise which never should have been given.

To emphasize their failure more clearly one need only refer to the recent conference between the provincial and federal governments to endeavour to find a solution of this very difficult problem. It is worthy of note that after nearly three years in office the government, partly, at any rate, adopted the very suggestion made by my honoured leader during the 1930 compaign, namely the calling of a conference to explore the whole situation, which suggestion was ridiculed and made light of both by the present Prime Minister and by Hon. Mr. Ferguson, who took such an active part in that campaign.

Many promises, sir, were made in addition to those which we have been discussing. Many promises were made to agriculturists and great hopes were held out to them in all parts of the dominion. Speaking at Winnipeg Mr. Bennett is quoted as having used these words:

> Listen, you agriculturists in the west, and all other parts of Canada, you have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade, tell me when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers, I will make them fight for you as well, I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

At Victoria he said:

> It is true we must have foreign markets, and as I said the other evening, we will blast a way to those markets on a world wide basis with any exportable surpluses; we do not have to worry about that.

We are all familiar with the many promises that were made regarding the prices that were to be received by the dairy industries, the prices of wheat and cereals and live stock.

Indeed the picture presented to the agriculturists was as beautiful as the one for the unemployed, and I need hardly add that both classes were equally disappointed. As a result of the present high tariff policy, with its restrictive and strangling effects on trade, the prices of agricultural products are sinking to depths hitherto unknown, while the prices of commodities that the agriculturist must purchase are through the same tariffs kept at heights out of all proportion to the prices that the farmer receives.

Having in mind the Prime Minister's promise that he would blast a way into the markets of the world for all agricultural products, I confess that I was amazed to hear such statements in reference to the empire treaties as that they were designed to shut out the foreigner, and that all nations outside of the empire would be asked to pay tribute for the privilege of dealing with the empire. These are damaging statements so far as any effort to secure foreign trade is concerned, and are sure to have their reaction; undoubtedly they will make it more difficult to secure the markets that Canada must have if we ever hope to regain prosperity or restore our country to the position it held during the regime of the late Liberal government. Instead of blasting a way into the markets of the world for the farmer, the farmers' market is paralyzed. Canadian farmers were never in a worse financial position than that in which they find themselves to-day.

We are all willing to admit that these are not normal times. We are willing to admit that no matter who had been selected to govern this country we would have had unemployment. But while admitting that, I am satisfied that the policy adopted by this government has aggravated the whole situation and made matters infinitely worse than ordinarily they would have been. I am confident that even if conditions had been normal, the policy of this government would have brought about a serious situation in our country. I have heard hon. members opposite claim that had the Liberal party remained in power conditions would have been worse than they are at the present time. I would suggest that those hon. members study the records of the two parties in regard to the securing of markets and, the reduction in taxation and in the national debt, and I am satisfied that they will be convinced as to which party has the better record. Time does not permit me to go into details as I should like, but I want to put some figures on Hansard in order to show how disastrously the present policy has affected the basic producer in regard to the commodities he has to purchase. I have here a table of comparative prices under five different tariff programs. These rates are applied to imports from Great Britain; they were taken from invoices received not so long ago, though I appreciate that they will be lower under the new valuation for the pound.

The rates are as follows:

	Borden	Meighen	King	Bennett	Preference
	%	%	%	%	%
Cotton printed piece goods	25	25	18	61	58.5
White cotton flannelette	17½	17½	15	55	52
Wool piece goods	30	30	24¾	68	64
Wool overcoating	30	30	24¾	100	93
High grading suiting	30	30	24¾	72	68
Wool hosiery	25	25	20¼	92	82
Blankets	22½	25	20¼	106	80

I should like to place on Hansard also the tariff increases on farm implements under this government:

	Old rate Liberals	New rate Conservatives	Percentage increase
Binders	6	25	300
Seed drills	7½	25	233
Manure spreaders	7½	25	233
Cultivators	7½	25	233
Milking machines	10	25	150
Hay loaders	10	25	150
Incubators	10	25	150
Ensilage cutters	10	25	150
Barbed wire	Free	10	—
Cream separators	Free	25	—

Before leaving this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that these tariffs constitute a real hardship on the basic producer. In my experience as an industrial worker for over thirty years I have found that with increased duties we have had less employment. We had that experience after the election of 1911; we had it again during the régime of Mr. Meighen and certainly we have it now. I remember very well reading in the Toronto Globe in September, 1921, that there were thirty thousand men out of work in that city. I think we should get it into our minds that anything that interferes with or hinders the progress of the basic producer is bound to have its reaction in regard to the purchase of manufactured products.

During the 1930 campaign the promise was made that our debt would be reduced, but now we find that instead our debts are increasing to an alarming extent. During the régime of the late Liberal government we had a steady reduction in the national debt. I am not going to trouble the house with extended references to the debt reductions made during those years except to say that they totalled $257,866,932. Now, however, we are about $445,000,000 worse off than we were before. The debt increase for one year is more than double the debt reduction made in any year since confederation. In the period from 1930 to 1932 this administration added $202,000,000 to the national debt, while in the two previous years under the Liberal government the debt was reduced by $119,000,000. In the first two years of this administration expenditures were higher by $107,000,000 than in the last two years of the Liberal régime. During the years from 1923 to 1930 the reduction in taxation amounted to approximately $116,000,000, but now we have increased taxation on almost every conceivable article, and at the same time our public debt is mounting by millions of dollars each year. We were promised that expenditures would be reduced, but what has happened? As compared with previous governments our expenditures are mounting by millions, while at the same time our exports have been cut in two. In 1930 our exports amounted to $1,145,000,000; in 1932 they amounted to only $587,000,000. In 1930 our expenditures totalled $398,000,000, while in 1932 they amounted to $448,000,000, an increase of almost $50,000,000. This year they are estimated at $417,000,000, an increase of $19,000,000 over those of 1930, while our exports will be approximately $651,000,000 less than they were in that year.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke in my home town during the by-election, and the Conservative paper there quoted him as follows:

> Referring to the financial record of the government, Mr. Stevens told of the success of loans secured in recent years, which indicated, of course, the faith the people had in the integrity of the Prime Minister and his government.

I submit, sir, that conditions are serious when, after two years in power, in regard to our financial position this government can only boast of the loans they have put over.

With regard to the increase in expenditure as compared with our exports I should like to place on Hansard our exports, our expenditures and the percentage of expenditures to export. I submit that this represents a serious situation. The Minister of Trade and Commerce quoted volume; I propose to quote value, because we must remember that the government was elected to raise the price of commodities. The statement is as follows:

Year—	Exports in millions of dollars	Expenditures in millions	Per cent expenditure to total exports
1926	$1,328	$355	26.7
1927	1,267	358	28.2
1928	1,250	378	30.2
1929	1,389	378	27.2
1930	1,145	398	34.7
1931	817	440	53.9
1932	587	448	76.4
1933 (estimated)	494	417	84

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

1. As to dam 4 (now dam 23): No; this is a new concrete dam completed in 1927. As to dam 5 (now dam 22): Yes.

2. The successful tenderer for dam 5 (now dam 22) was Mr. W. J. Kitts, Toronto.

3. Construction of dam 5 (now dam 22) will be proceeded with under Mr. W. J. Kitts' contract this year.

*HYDRO POWER EXPORT

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. Has the government been advised of the introduction of a bill providing for the export of hydro power to the United States in the Legislative Assembly of the province of Quebec?

2. If so, does the Dominion government propose to take any action in connection with this matter?

Mr. BENNETT: The first part of this question, if answered with a written answer, might be open to a wrong construction. As is known, the governments of the several provinces forward to departments of the federal government copies of bills as introduced, but no formal intimation has been given by the government of Quebec of the introduction into the legislature of that province of any bill dealing with the matter mentioned in the question.

The second part of the question as to what action the Dominion government might take in the premises, is answered by the statement that nothing which the province could legally do would divest the federal government of its jurisdiction under the appropriate statute, in this case, the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. DUFF:

1. What punishment was given constables Humphrey, Spencer, and Sennia, of the R.C.M.P., by the police officials for the offences of which they were convicted on the 15th day of March, 1933, by Stipendiary Barnhill of Halifax?

2. How many cases have arisen since the organization of the R.C.M.P. in Nova Scotia where the constables of the force have been fined or punished by their superior officers?

3. What are the names of the constables so punished?

4. What was the nature of the offences for which they were punished in each case?

5. What was the penalty imposed in each case?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. Constables Humphrey, Spencer and Sinnema were found guilty of being found in a boarding house where liquor was said to be for sale at Halifax and were fined $5 each by Superintendent C. D. LaNauze on March 3, 1933.

2, 3, 4 and 5. It is not deemed to be in the public interest to furnish the details in the internal discipline of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

MR. NEREE PERRON

Mr. RHEAUME:

1. Has Mr. Neree Perron, postmaster of St-Felicien, county of Lake St-John, been dismissed?
2. If so, for what reason?
3. If any complaint was lodged against him (a) what was the nature of such complaint; (b) who lodged same?
4. Did one Joseph Gilbert, of Dolbeau, lodge a complaint?
5. If so, what was the nature of such complaint?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Dismissal authorized by order in council, but not yet effected.

2. Postmaster found guilty of active political partisanship by commissioner.

3. Request was transferred to the department by Mr. Duguay, M.P.

4. No.

5. See answer to No. 4.

OROMOCTO, N.B., RURAL ROUTE NO. 3

Mr. BRADETTE:

What is the yearly amount paid for the carrying of mail at Oromocto, rural route No. 3, New Brunswick?

Mr. SAUVE: $921 per annum.

WOOL PRODUCTION, CONSUMPTION AND EXPORTS

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. What quantity of wool was produced in Canada in the years 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, in pounds, as purchased from the producer?
2. What quantity was (a) consumed in Canada; (b) exported to other countries?

Mr. STEVENS:

The wool clip was as follows: 1929, 20,283,000 pounds; 1930, 21,016,000 pounds; 1931, 20,365,000 pounds; 1932, 20,518,000 pounds.

No statistics are available showing the amount purchased from the producer.

(a) Estimated consumption: 1929, 14,193,175 pounds; 1930, 16,634,246 pounds; 1931, 15,595,426 pounds; 1932, 16,805,531 pounds.

(b) Exported to other countries: (calendar years) 1929, 6,089,825 pounds; 1930, 4,381,754 pounds; 1931, 4,769,574 pounds; 1932, 3,712,469 pounds.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF ACT—PER CAPITA PAID EACH PROVINCE

Mr. MacLEAN:

What is the per capita amount paid to each province under the Unemployment Relief Act on the basis of population in each province for the past three years or since the short session of 1930, as follows (a) direct relief; (b) public works; (c) loans to farmers; (d) loans to provinces; (e) loans to corporations; (f) total for all purposes in percentage of population in each province?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MATCH FACTORY FIRE REGULATIONS

Mr. FONTAINE (for Mr. Fournier) moved:

For a copy of all regulations laid down by the Dominion Fire Commissioner's office respecting match factories; also copy of all documents, communications, telegrams and letters addressed by the Dominion Fire Commissioner's office to match manufacturers requesting compliance with said regulations and any reply made by said manufacturers to such request.

Mr. BENNETT: No period of time is specified. I suppose the hon. member means within a reasonable time, I presume the last two years.

Mr. SPEAKER: As the hon. member who sponsors the motion is not present, it had better stand.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Two years.

Mr. BENNETT: The leader of the opposition suggests that two years is ample. With that understanding, the motion might pass.

Motion agreed to.

VETERAN'S UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all correspondence, documents and resolutions, emanating from ex-service men's associations throughout Canada dealing with veterans' unemployment relief, and received by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Pensions and National Health or the Department of Pensions and National Health, from October 1, 1932, to date.

NEWPORT POINT, QUE., POST OFFICE

Mr. BRASSET:

STE-ANGELIQUE, QUEBEC POST OFFICE

Mr. DESROCHERS:

CORRECTION—MR. ILSLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. ILSLEY (Hants-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a correction in part of the speech I made last night on the budget. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) interjected the remark, at page 3497 of Hansard:

They got four shillings sixpence per barrel more than the Americans did.

I understood him to say not that, but that they got four shillings and sixpence per barrel more than they otherwise would have, and I replied accordingly. My reply to the interjection would have been different but for that misunderstanding.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED FIVE PER CENT TAX ON INTEREST AND DIVIDEND PAYMENTS TO NON-RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the introduction of any new tax there is bound at its inception to be some confusion, if only in getting the mechanics into proper and smooth operation. That difficulty is accentuated in the case of bearer bonds which are held in varying amounts by large numbers of people throughout the world. Having that in mind the commissioner of income tax on March 23 prepared a document entitled "A brief interim summary of the budget proposals with respect to ownership certificates and deduction of the five per cent tax at the source." Several hundreds of these have been circulated to the Canadian banks and to certain financial and trust companies in Canada. They have also been forwarded in ample time to New York, and to-day they arrive in the city of London, England, with instructions that they be reprinted there in French for circulation in France. One paragraph only of this document I desire to read:

There is no deduction in respect of interest paid on bonds of Dominion of Canada issued free of income tax or upon interest on bonds paid by the Canadian National Railways wherein the Canadian National Railways or any of its subsidiaries undertakes to pay any tax imposed upon the holder thereof, these payments requiring no covering ownership certificates, either forms 600 or 601.

I desire in addition to make it very clear that it is not intended that the five per cent tax shall apply in the case of a foreign holder of a bond of the Dominion of Canada which in terms provides that the dominion shall pay an amount certain; also in the case of British or foreign non-resident holders of bearer coupons and share warrants, unless the holder requests an ownership certificate, such coupon and share warrants may be cashed without the necessity of ownership certificates being attached. It is understood, however, that the five per cent tax must be withheld by the paying agent.

Of necessity these documents had to be printed somewhat hurriedly, and as a sufficient number is not available at the moment for every hon. member of the house, I desire to lay on the table two copies in English, stating at the same time that as soon as possible a larger number will be available both in English and French. I desire also for the information of the house to lay on the table in English and French specimen copies of the ownership certificates which will be required to be attached to these documents.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the Prime Minister if he or the government has been made aware of a proposed financial reorganization of Beauharnois, and if so has the government or the Prime Minister approved of the same?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The $30,000,000, bondholders of Beauharnois Power Corporation, after default in the payment of interest, met together and, as is usual in such cases, and in accordance with the provisions of the trust deed, appointed a committee to deal with the situation that arose because of the default in payment of such interest. The committee has fixed upon a plan which will be submitted to the bondholders for their approval. The government does not conceive it to be its duty to undertake to determine what the bondholders must determine for themselves, but the government has discharged the duty which it undertook to discharge, namely, to protect the debenture holders or the collateral trust gold bondholders, as they were called, to the extent of enabling them to make their own arrangements with respect to their own property. I could have amplified this statement, but the hon. gentleman did not give me any notice of his question, and I am speaking entirely from memory with respect to the matter, but I think I have correctly indicated the position.

SOLDIERS' PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the hon. Minister of Finance. On Friday, March 24, the minister, in answer to a question by the hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) relating to the announcement in the budget regarding veterans' pensions, said that he would have a statement to make to parliament dealing with same. Seeing that a further conference has taken place between the associated veterans and the government concerning the cut in disability pensions, may I ask the minister if he has anything conclusive to tell the house and country as to what the intentions of the government are on this very important matter?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend is wrong in his statement of facts. The further conference with the heads of the veteran organizations which met the government has not yet taken place. After it does take place, the house will be advised in due course and in conformity with the statement I made to my hon. friend the senior member for Ottawa.

CENTRAL GOLD RESERVE TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) asked who were the trustees of the central gold reserve. I indicated that I was not then in a position to answer him with accuracy, but I find that the trustees are the Royal Trust Company, the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Bank of Canada. Each of these organizations delegates one of its officers to act as its representative in connection with the central gold reserve. The Deputy Minister of Finance whom I mentioned in that regard is responsible only for audit and checking, and not as a trustee.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Yesterday the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) made inquiries as to regulations concerning the conservation of herring and processes of salting, canning, and so forth. He wanted to know if new regulations had been adopted since, I presume, the amendments which were made last session to the Fish Inspection Act. The answer is that by order in council of November 7 last, the regulations have been amended in order to conform with the amendments made to the act. I have in my hand a memorandum giving the different changes which I shall be glad to forward to my hon. friend or to lay on the table of the house.

Mr. VENIOT: Please forward it.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION FOR FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): May I ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if he will kindly tell me in a word what arrangement has been arrived at in the province of Quebec regarding technical education for fishermen at Gaspé and other ports of the province?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): On Monday a conference took place between the Minister of Fisheries of the province of Quebec with his officials and the Acting Minister of Fisheries at Ottawa with his officials. We have discussed at length the question of giving to the French element not only of the province of Quebec but also of New Brunswick and the Magdalen islands the opportunity to get proper instructions as to curing fish. Though we have not come to a definite conclusion our discussions were very cordial, and I believe will lead to reasonable arrangements in that direction.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, in that connection I should like to ask another question. In a dispatch appearing in a newspaper which I saw yesterday it is stated that there has been a decisior to open and maintain a biological station at Gaspé, and that that was one of the conclusions arrived at when the conference took place. Is that so?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Speaker, no definite arrangement was made. The suggestions, which appear to be satisfactory to our department in Ottawa, were that a couple of French Canadians would be sent to the school at Halifax, there to receive training during the year. Afterwards the biological board would open a branch at Gaspe at which those two French Canadians would be teachers of the inspectors and fishermen speaking the French language. I hope a definite arrangement will be concluded to that effect, because I understand it would involve a very small expense, perhaps only $8,000 or $10,000 a year. In that event the province would supply the school building.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask the minister if Conservatives will be appointed?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh. oh.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

CARRYING PISTOL, REVOLVER OR OTHER OFFENSIVE WEAPON WITHOUT PERMIT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minster of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 53, to amend the criminal code (offensive weapons).

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 1—Offensive weapons.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask the minister whether this bill is the same that was passed by the Senate on two or three occasions in recent years?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. I believe this bill has originated in the Department of Justice in response to many requests which have come from municipal bodies, boards of trade and various other societies throughout Canada, asking that more drastic legislation be passed in regard to the use or carrying of pistols and revolvers. Requests which from time to time have come in have been very sweeping, and the penalties which we have been requested to impose have been very severe. However, after consultation with the law officers of the Department of Justice, with representatives of the various police associations and with the officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police it has been decided to introduce the present measure, particularly directed against pistols and revolvers on the one hand and offensive weapons on the other. In the bill there is a distinction between pistols and revolvers and what are known as offensive weapons. The term "offensive weapon" is defined in the criminal code as follows:

> "Offensive weapon" or "weapon" includes any gun or other fire arm, or air-gun, or any part thereof, or any sword, sword blade, bayonet, pike, pike-head, spear, spear-head, dirk, dagger, knife, or other instrument intended for cutting or stabbing, or any metal knuckles, or other deadly or dangerous weapon, and any instrument or thing intended to be used as a weapon, and all ammunition which may be used with or for any weapon.

We are maintaining the clauses against the use of offensive weapons, but are presenting new clauses in regard to pistols and revolvers as distinct from other offensive weapons. One request which has come from all quarters of Canada is that we should pass an enactment in the House of Commons to prevent the importation, manufacture and sale of pistols and revolvers. As the house will readily understand, if we were to attempt legislation of that kind we should immediately be confronted with constitutional difficulties. However it is perhaps some satisfaction to know that the question of the importation of such weapons is at the present time subject to permit; such weapons cannot be imported into Canada to-day without a permit issued by the Department of National Revenue. On the other hand it must give some satisfaction to know that to-day there is no manufacture whatever of pistols or revolvers in the Dominion of Canada. So that at the present time we are relieved from any difficulty on that score.

The other matter is one of sale, namely whether or not we have the power to prevent sale within the provinces. That is a nice question. In this bill we have sought to regulate the sale, without actually prohibiting it, and we believe that in the regulations proposed in the bill we are within our constitutional rights. There are some amendments which will have to be offered as the bill proceeds, and I think as we have now reached the first section we might mention the first amendment which presents itself.

The penalty imposed by the first section for the carrying of a pistol or revolver is a term of imprisonment of five years. I think the house will agree that the penalty is rather severe. Five years or more was the penalty suggested by the petitioners, but on this section I propose to ask that it be amended by fixing the term at from one to not more than five years, thereby giving the court or judge some discretion in the matter.

Mr. EULER: Is it within the discretion of the magistrate or the court to impose a sentence of less than a year, or can he pass a suspended sentence, or anything of that sort?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Of course a judge has power to suspend sentence, unless we take away that power. But the idea was that a man who is carrying concealed weapons should be subject to a term of one year for the offence but not more than five. I am sorry to say that according to the reports from the police associations of various cities in Canada the number of persons found carrying pistols and revolvers has in recent years very largely increased. It is the commonest thing now when a man is arrested for crime, upon searching him in the police court, to discover that he has in his possession a pistol or revolver. He may be a man with a long criminal record. The present penalties for carrying such a weapon are not considered very severe. It is felt that if restrictions are placed upon the sale, and greater penalties are imposed for the offence of carrying, the traffic in these weapons will at least be considerably diminished.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Section 1 replaces eleven sections of the criminal code by new sections. I suggest that we should take every section individually.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It does not replace them all by new sections. Many are just repetitions of the old.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But it is better to adopt each one separately.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understand this action is being taken largely on the recommendation of the various police associations?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; I did not intend to convey that idea. I consulted some police associations, but the action is taken on the representation of city councils, boards of trade and other organizations of the kind throughout Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have no objection whatever to making the law as stringent as may be necessary, with regard to the carrying of arms. But there is one point I should like to raise, and it is this: What sort of regulation is there with regard to the carrying of revolvers and pistols by the police themselves? In the old country, as a good many know, the ordinary police constables do not carry revolvers. They have batons merely. A few days ago in the city of Montreal there was brought to our notice an outrageous case of a man being shot during the course of an eviction. I understand he was shot in the back by a police constable named Zappa. According to the press it seems there was a man there who had got behind in his rent owing to the compensation board not being prompt in paying him, and he was being evicted. A boarder went to the house to rescue some of his own personal belongings. Just what took place is not clear; according to the police he resisted; according to bystanders he had nothing whatever in his hand, and made no resistance. However, the fact is he was shot. Later there was a most disgraceful scene: It seems to be established by the reports of nearly all the papers in Montreal that at the time of the funeral, when some of the friends and sympathizers of the man who had thus been shot were proceeding with the cortege, the police intervened and broke up the funeral procession, using extreme violence, women and children being brutally knocked down. There was said by the papers to be no riot whatever and nothing in the way of disorder in the procession until the police intervened. That particular incident, to which a great deal of publicity was given in all the Montreal papers, both English and French, seems to point to the need of some supervision of the police themselves. If we are going to insist, as I think we should, that ordinary civilians do not go around armed with revolvers, I do not think it is fair that the police should be armed without having definite restrictions placed upon them. As I said a while ago, we talk about British traditions; police constables in England are not armed, they are in the United States, and apparently we are introducing that kind of thing here. I submit that one of the reasons we have armed criminals in this country is that they know they have to deal with constables who are armed with lethal weapons. I would like to see the government hold the police responsible.

Mr. HANBURY: May it be the reverse, that the police are armed because so many people are armed?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I do not want to be misunderstood—I hope this measure passes. At the same time I think there ought to be very much more definite control of the police themselves. That one instance of a man shot in the back without any clear evidence that he was resisting arrest is sufficient, I think, to make any one who has any idea of British traditions rebel against the idea of the police being given such a free hand. This policeman, according to his own statement, became angry and shot the man. We have courts to decide whether or not a man is guilty, and we have certain officers charged with executing judgment, but certainly the task of the police is not that of judge and executioner. If a man is to be killed let him be executed after his case has gone through the regular judicial process.

An hon. MEMBER: After he has been shot.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, not after he is shot. Of course the police ought to be protected and to have a fair break, but I submit that in the drafting of this legislation there should be some provision by which guns should not be permitted even to the police except under strict supervision, the police being made definitely responsible for their use. I would say that the policeman who shoots a man in the back, I do not care if he is an officer, is cowardly, and you are not going to get respect for the law as long as the police are allowed liberty of that kind.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the question was addressed to me, I may say that the control of provincial police and municipal police is strictly within the powers of the various provincial governments. The provisions of this bill as it is drafted apply to all persons, but there is a provision therein that permits for the carrying of revolvers for the protection of life and property may be granted by the attorneys general of the various provinces, and if in the judgment of the provincial authorities police forces should not be armed they will not be armed. On the other hand if the various provincial authorities think their police forces should be armed they can grant the necessary permits. But that is hardly a matter that concerns this federal parliament. We have not sought in any way to interfere with the jurisdiction either of the municipalities or of the provinces in respect to police matters.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But I think that hardly answers my point. This is general legislation applying to every citizen, every individual in this country. We have here still another example of division of jurisdiction. This is federal legislation, yet when it comes to dealing with the particular class that we call police constables we are told that it is entirely a provincial matter. I think the body that legislates on behalf of the great mass of the people should also provide adequate restrictions for the granting of permits even to police officers.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister's remarks regarding provincial authority over their own police may be quite in order. Yet we have at this time a decided growth in the duties and work of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which is taking over police jurisdiction in various localities. I believe that every one in this house is thoroughly in accord with any legislation designed to prohibit the carrying of concealed weapons. It is an evil which we have acquired from our neighbours to the south. None of us believes in it in any way, shape or form. Only a very few decades ago you would not find a policeman on the streets of any American or Canadian city with the two gun holsters exposed. The whole business of gun carrying has been much increased simply by the ostentatious display of weapons by the police. Of late years the Ontario provincial police have gone to an absolutely absurd length in this regard. In small towns and country districts all through Ontario, for the first time in history we now see provincial police going around with a holster and two exposed guns. The thing is absurd from any angle. There are no dangerous criminals in the rural districts of Ontario, and the duties of our police do not demand the carrying of either concealed or exposed weapons. The idea of using guns in dealing with thugs and gunmen in some of the large cities may be quite justified, but the work performed by the provincial police of Ontario does not demand the use of weapons.

I thoroughly agree with the general remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the carrying of revolvers by police, which is an American system absolutely opposed to the whole idea of police methods in Great Britain, has induced the use of revolvers by a great many people who have no need of them. I do submit to the Minister of Justice that the department of police over which he has jurisdiction, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, have erred very little in the display of revolvers, and I hope the minister will see that they continue this practice. It does seem to me, however, that when the mounted police can do their work without the use of firearms the minister would be quite justified in asking the provincial governments to pass concurrent legislation to prevent their police forces from making such a display of firearms as we see throughout the country today.

Mr. MARCIL: In justice to the government of Quebec which is charged with the maintenance of law and order in that province I should like to say that yesterday in the legislature the premier, referring to the case to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has alluded, declared that the matter had been fully investigated by a judge of the sessions in Montreal as well as by a coroner's jury, and that in both cases this policeman had been exonerated from any blame in the matter. I do not know anything of the matter more than that. It was also stated yesterday, and endorsed by the leader of the opposition in the legislature, that the laws for the maintenance of order in the province of Quebec would be revised in order to give some protection to the citizens of that province against the actions of the foreign element which has come to Quebec in the last few years. This brings the matter to a head. Our province has had the reputation of being very peaceful and law-abiding; everyone wants it to remain so, but those who read the Montreal papers no doubt are aware that there is a very strong communistic element now established in that city, and certain things which have occurred lately have brought this matter to the attention of the government, who intend to deal with it.

With regard to the carrying of firearms, as the Minister of Justice properly said, there is a question of jurisdiction. The province of Quebec has its own police force; the Dominion government has its police force. If the Dominion government wishes to authorize its men to carry firearms it has full power to do so, and the province may do the same thing. The cities, if they wish their police to be armed, must obtain the authority of the legislatures of the provinces. This is a complicated question, but I have lived in the city of Montreal for many years, and I have often wondered why the windows of the pawnshops and second hand stores were permitted to be filled with cast off revolvers selling for a dollar, a dollar and a half or two dollars. Who should control this? I have no doubt this matter has been inquired into by the Minister of Justice, but that is where the cheap revolver is obtained which is used by the man committing a crime. If a way could be found to curtail the sale of firearms except by properly authorized and responsible persons I think a great forward step would be taken.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is provided for in this bill.

Mr. MARCIL: The ex-Minister of Justice tells me that this is dealt with in the bill now before us, and I am glad to hear it. With the recent fires and other occurrences in Montreal the people have come to realize that something must be done to maintain the reputation of Canada and her citizens, and I am glad that this matter is being taken up now.

Mr. REID: I am afraid that I must differ with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for North Bruce. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was not quite correct when he told the house that the policemen in England are not armed. It is true that for generations the members of the police forces of the old country were not allowed to carry arms, but a wave of crime has swept the old country, with bandits going around with guns, and to-day many of the metropolitan cities are arming their policemen with guns in order to combat this wave of crime. I have in my hand some statistics with regard to Vancouver, and I believe this house will be startled to learn that in the first eleven months of 1932 there were 411 armed holdups in that city. Out there life and limb are not safe. Some of the bandits are so cruel that if they hold up a man who has no money they beat him almost to death with their guns. They leave the cities in fast motor cars and go to peaceful settlements where, at the point of the gun, they hold up storekeepers and beat them up if they have not enough money to satisfy the bandits. I think it would be a dastardly crime to leave our local policemen without some means of protection against these bandits.

Personally, Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in support of this bill, and I should have liked to see it go even further. In connection with these holdup men I believe most of those who are caught are hardened criminals. I have a reference before me to the case of one man who admitted that he had been in one hundred holdups. How are we to deal with that sort of people if we have not some protection? I believe in drastic measures if we are to have any protection at all against these thugs and bandits, and certainly I believe in arming local policemen.

Mr. HANBURY: I think all members of this house hope the time will come when our policemen will not need to be armed, but when we have so many men going around the country carrying arms I think it would be a shame and a disgrace to take from our policemen their means of protecting the lives of our citizens. The hon. member for New Westminster has just referred to the holdups that took place in Vancouver during the first eleven months of 1932. These figures were furnished to me, and I believe to other members of the house, by Mr. Charles Delbridge, who was police commissioner of that city for the year 1932. Of the 411 holdups 324 were carried out with arms, and there were 23 attempted armed holdups. There we have over eighty per cent of the total holdups in Vancouver during that period carried out with the use of arms. Then there were twenty cases in which it was doubtful whether or not arms were used; the attempt was made to convince the victim that the holdup man was armed.

I think this all goes to prove the necessity for some legislation such as we have before us to-day. Perhaps in Vancouver our population is a little more cosmopolitan than it is in some other centres, but certainly there we have been victims of the holdup artists.

Mr. MARCIL: The same thing applies to Montreal.

Mr. HANBURY: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre inquired from the minister whether this legislation was advocated and supported by police boards in various parts of Canada. I should say that perhaps it is, but in addition to that, it is being supported by members of the council and, on my part, by one member of this House of Commons, and I think it is legislation that we should have. The city council of Vancouver has on several occasions advocated legislation along this line and, like the hon. member for New Westminster, I do not think we can make the law in this regard too drastic. The minister is suggesting an amendment whereby he is going to fix the gaol term from one to five years. It is conceivable that a man might inadvertently be carrying a weapon with him and in that case perhaps it might work an injustice to put him in gaol for a period of five years. On the other hand, the man who is carrying an offensive weapon should show good cause for having it in his possession, and if he has it for offensive purposes, against the peace of the people of this country, I do not think five years is too long. Indeed, if I had my way, I would put him in gaol for the rest of his life. The man who goes around with an offensive weapon is a potential murderer; I do not look upon him in any other way. I hope the minister will keep this legislation as drastic as possible.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree with the provisions of this bill, and more particularly with the provision that the attorney general of the province should have the right to issue permits either to the police or to other persons carrying offensive weapons.

[Mr. Hanbury.]

Mr. MITCHELL: In my opinion there is absolutely no reason why any civilian should carry arms. I have never owned a weapon in my life and I do not believe there is any reason for anyone to own firearms. The man who carries around a firearm is a moral coward. My hon. friend from one of the British Columbia constituencies spoke of people who might carry arms inadvertently. It seems to me that if we leave that loophole in the legislation to take care of such cases everyone who is arrested under this law will endeavour to get from under by invoking that amendment. What I want to point out in connection with the Montreal case however is that this man had no opportunity to defend himself. It cannot be said that he carried arms. He was absolutely unarmed and was shot in the back.

Mr. JEAN: That is not correct.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is.

Mr. JEAN: No. The case was heard before Magistrate Cusson who heard twenty witnesses and offered to hear as many more as might come forward, and he absolutely justified Constable Zappa in the action he had taken.

Mr. MITCHELL: This man was unarmed.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): He had picked up an iron bar.

Mr. MITCHELL: I still maintain that he was unarmed. I absolutely agree with the contention that it is unnecessary for the police force of the country to walk around armed like soldiers in the midst of a war. It may be necessary under certain circumstances for them to carry arms, and I am not one of those who would suggest that the police force should not sometimes be armed. I should like to know however what proportion of the men who took part in holdups in Vancouver district were natives of this country.

Mr. HANBURY: That does not alter the position.

Mr. MITCHELL: The responsibility rests with the police forces of the country to see to it that there is no unnecessary display of arms on their part. Any such display is in my opinion utterly wrong. I do not think it is a good thing to display arms to boys who, particularly at this time, have very little to do. In my opinion this legislation should if possible have some stipulations along that line.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for East Hamilton have not stated correctly the facts in connection with this case as they are known in Montreal, when they say that the matter was not thoroughly investigated, and that the action of the constable was not justified. As the hon. member for Bonaventure said, after this unfortunate incident occurred the matter was taken to a judge of the sessions and some twenty witnesses were heard in regard to the warrant that was applied for by some of the friends of the man who had been killed. They wished to charge the constable with manslaughter. The result of the investigation thoroughly justified the action of the constable. This man had been visited on three occasions because he was behind in his rent and on the third occasion such action was taken as the law required. On his eviction, this disorderly crowd in Montreal—and as the hon. member for Bonaventure says, it is growing in numbers—decided to take the law into its own hands. Now, we pride ourselves in Montreal on our police force, which has properly maintained law and order and, I hope, will continue to do so. The constable in question resorted to the only means open to him when someone in the crowd picked up an iron bar to strike down his fellow constable. When they applied for a warrant charging the accused constable with manslaughter, the facts were thoroughly reviewed and it was found that he had merely attempted to protect one of his own fellow constables from being murdered by one of the crowd who had picked up this iron bar, or at any rate from sustaining severe bodily injury. He took his revolver and threatened the crowd in order to keep them back; otherwise he would shoot. They came on despite the warning, and in order to save his comrade he was obliged to shoot this man. That is the whole case, and when hon. members try to leave the impression with the house that the police in Montreal are overstepping their bounds and that murder is being committed by members of the force, I, as a member from Montreal, would ask hon. gentlemen to state all the facts and not half of them.

Mr. YOUNG: How did the policeman shoot this man in the back if the man was coming on?

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): I was not present, but if the hon. member knows more about the judiciary of Montreal than I do I would ask him to get the facts. I am not a judge.

Mr. YOUNG: I simply ask my hon. friend to explain how the man happened to be shot in the back if he was coming on.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): If the hon. gentleman wishes to get the evidence I shall be glad to send it to him. Do I understand that he also agrees with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. YOUNG: That is not an answer to my question. I simply want to know how the man was shot in the back if he was coming on.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): How do you know?

An hon. MEMBER: Was he shot in the back?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am absolutely in favour of the principle of this bill. The only fault I would find with it would be in regard to the undue burden that may be placed upon those whose business it is to sell these various weapons. I do believe the time has come when those whose duty it is to protect the lives and property of our citizens should themselves be safeguarded. The whole discussion with regard to the unfortunate incident that has occurred is altogether beside the question. I think that those who are charged with the enforcement of the law have heretofore shown good judgment in the discharge of their duties. Sometimes when the circumstances are such that it may be extremely difficult to determine just what line of action they ought to take, they may have to act rather quickly, but I would very much prefer quick action on the part of an officer of the law in the discharge of his duty to the quick drawing of a revolver by a thug. For that reason I will support this measure.

Mr. MacINNIS: To the general tenor of this bill I do not believe there can be any serious opposition. We all agree, I believe, it is unnecessary for the ordinary civilian to have firearms in his possession or that such firearms should be bought and sold for the purpose of carrying them around for one's own protection or for use for other purposes. But if we take the view that merely passing legislation of this kind will prevent holdups and holdups with violence, we are very much mistaken, because such holdups will take place, not because those who are staging them wish to do so, but becauses the pressure of circumstances drives them to that extreme.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. MacINNIS: Just a moment. Anyone who does not agree with this point of view need not accept it; but let me point out present conditions in this country. The fact that the number of inmates in our penitentiaries and gaols is increasing by leaps and bounds is due, not to badness of heart, if you like, or to criminal tendencies on the part of our people, but to the economic position in which our people find themselves.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MacINNIS: Of course it is. As a matter of fact, any one who knows anything at all knows it to be the case. If we believe this legislation will prevent that sort of thing, it undoubtedly will not do anything of the kind. The hon. member for New Westminster mentioned that bandits in British Columbia not only held up people at the point of a gun, but if they found those people did not have any money, beat them up. The bandits, in doing that, are only taking a leaf out of the book of the state. The state deprives a man of the means of livelihood and then, when it finds him walking the street, it arrests him and sentences him for vagrancy.

A few years ago when I was on the Vancouver city council, I remember a young man of twenty being brought into court because he had been sleeping in a Canadian Pacific Railway freight car. When he was asked why he slept in a freight car, he said: "I had no money to buy a bed; I had no other place to sleep and I had to sleep somewhere." Despite that fact, the magistrate who, I believe, had no alternative, sentenced him to two or three months in gaol. These are the conditions we make and we shall not do away with them simply by passing legislation of this kind. I do not wish it to be understood that I am opposed to the general tenor of this measure, but I am opposed to an attempt to do by legislation something which can be done only by improving the conditions of the people.

Mr. BAKER: Does the hon. member claim that holdups and murder are justified because of poverty?

Mr. MacINNIS: Decidedly not.

Mr. BAKER: That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not saying anything of the kind. I say that people act according to the conditions in which they find themselves. If we want to make people good, we must improve conditions. That is what I say and what any person who has any understanding of psychology says.

Mr. BROWN: I am heartily in accord with the general principle of the bill, but I should like to know, if the minister can tell us, precisely the position people will find themselves in under section 118. Perhaps some of us might have to interpret the law to some of our friends. Section 118 reads:

> Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for not less than five years who, not having a permit in form 76, has upon his person elsewhere than in his own dwelling house, shop, warehouse, counting house, or premises—

That provision might be interpreted as indicating that he might have one in his own dwelling house or upon his own premises.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: It is not an unknown thing for a man on a farm to have a revolver in his house. Would he be allowed to carry it on his own farm?

Mr. GUTHRIE: On his own premises.

Mr. BROWN: Suppose a farmer owns two or three quarter sections of land and has occasion to cross the road allowance or to go some distance from one to another, he would be liable, I presume, as long as he was not actually on his own premises?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am heartily in accord with the provisions of this measure. As a matter of fact, I may be extreme, but I am not particularly in favour of the reduction of the penalty suggested by the minister. That, however, may be by the way. I think the minister might go a step further and have permits issued for those weapons, no matter where they are. I do not think the mere fact that an individual is allowed to have them in his house or place of business without a permit is sufficient. That provides a place for the weapon to be stored and this may be a convenience to an individual who does not want it altogether for his own protection. I should like the minister to go a step further and provide that no individual under any circumstances should be in possession of one of these weapons except under a permit.

Mr. McGIBBON: I should like to oppose that because it might mean a great deal of hardship. Nearly all returned soldiers have souvenirs, such as revolvers, of which there are probably four or five thousand in this country. To make all those people take out permits for weapons they never use, that are simply stuck away in a closet as souvenirs, is heartless.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot see that it is any hardship upon a person who desires to have on his premises a weapon, that that fact should be known by reason of his holding a permit, the authorities thus being made aware of the fact. The difficulty is that if this bill goes through in its present form, persons who frequently use these weapons for purposes which sometimes end in murder, will keep them in their residences and take them out when they wish to use them. I do not agree with my hon. friend that it would be any terrible hardship on anyone to have to secure a permit if he wants to keep a weapon on his premises.

Mr. McGIBBON: The law is no good unless it has a penalty attached. People will forget to get a permit, and the first thing they know they will find themselves in the police court and a fine will be imposed. I do not think that is fair because these weapons are practically useless from a defensive standpoint. They are kept largely as souvenirs, and are probably rusty and incapable of being used.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winipeg South Centre): I am very much interested in the point just raised by the hon. member for West Edmonton and under discussion by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. I think it would be a mistake to make it a crime to have a revolver on your premises or in your home. The hon. member for West Edmonton is quite logical when he says that if that were made a crime those who now have revolvers could take out permits, but the fact is, from a practical point of view, if you make it a crime it will not come to the attention of the great majority of these people who now have them.

The point raised by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is a very, very practical one. It is quite true that all over this country there are revolvers in homes, particularly in those of the men who served in the Canadian forces overseas, and they are being kept there not with any criminal intent or for any specific purpose, but as souvenirs. I know that one, of the best souvenirs a service man returning from the front could bring home, one that was coveted by them and is in the homes of many who served, is a revolver, particularly a revolver taken from the enemy. They are in the homes of nearly all the ex-service men. They are in the haversacks of the soldiers in garrets. Now if you make it a crime for them to have a revolver in their homes, unwittingly they will become criminals and be subject to the penalty. I think, therefore, it should not be made an offence to have them in a man's home. To do so would be an injustice; you would be legislating into the criminal class thousands upon thousands of innocent citizens of Canada who are guilty of no offence whatever. I strongly oppose any such amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Edmonton I may say that his proposal was pretty well considered. Originally it was provided that a man might have a pistol in his home, on the theory I suppose that a Canadian's home is his castle, just like an Englishman's, and that he has the right to have anything in it and to act as he likes in his home. Certainly his first duty is to defend his own home.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He cannot have a still in his home.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the consideration that weighed in discussing this matter was the one raised by my hon. friend from Muskoka-Ontario. It was estimated by men who may know that there are probably a quarter of a million homes in this country where there are souvenir revolvers of the great war. One suggestion which was made by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was that all such weapons should be registered, that the number and the make of the particular pistol or revolver should be reported to the police and registered at some central office so that if it ever became necessary its ownership could be traced. However, it was considered that that involved a great deal of work, and probably of unnecessary work. After considering the matter from every angle we decided that pistols in houses and warehouses and private premises should be permitted to remain there. So long as they stay there, they are no menace to the public.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no question about it that pistols in private houses or in warehouses or in any other place, so long as they remain there and are not used, are probably no menace, as the minister says, but the point that was raised by the hon. member for West Edmonton is one that had occurred to me.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I forgot to say that certain of our provinces provide that you must have a permit to have such a weapon in your home; Alberta, for instance.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is just the point. The danger from these revolvers, of course, is not when they are remaining unused in the home or in the warehouse, but when they are used. They can be so easily obtained and used, and then they become a danger.

Mr. POULIOT: The danger is when they are loaded.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Even then the danger is not so great unless the trigger is drawn, and the pistol used. I see that one of the places where revolvers are frequently found is not mentioned in the act at all; that is, if a man has a revolver in a motor car. That would not be on his person because I take it from the description of the revolver on the person that it means in a pocket or concealed somewhere in the clothing of the person, but frequently those who are travelling in motor cars and tenting out at night find it advisable to carry a revolver with them. Is it necessary that a permit should be obtained for a revolver so carried in a motor car? That would not be covered by any of the places mentioned in the bill. The revolver would be in a vehicle in which revolvers are, unfortunately, frequently considered to be required at the present time. It would not be in the residence. Has the minister considered that phase?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That point is perhaps worth considering. My hon. friend from East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) who sits behind me has just suggested a few words that might cure that trouble. We might say, "has upon his person or in his possession elsewhere than in his dwelling-house." It might be in a sleigh or cutter or something of that kind.

Mr. GIROUARD: Are those who take a revolver when they go hunting required to have a permit?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If they carry a pistol, yes.

Mr. ROSS: The object in most of this kind of legislation is to deter crime. I would ask the minister if before this bill was drawn up he considered an enactment such as they have in England where, when a man commits a crime and has upon his person a pistol or revolver or other weapon, five years is added to his sentence, the object being to act as a deterrent?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is in this bill; we provide for adding two years.

Mr. ROSS: In the old country they add five years to the sentence, if the man is carrying a pistol or revolver.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will game wardens on private property who have already been appointed with the consent of the provincial government have to secure a special permit?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They will have to get a permit either from the attorney general of the province or someone designated by him or from the mounted police.

Mr. REID: Has the minister considered including a weapon known as a sawed-off shotgun? Many bandits carry them around. It can be easily concealed under the coat, and is a very powerful weapon, more powerful than a revolver.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was not specially considered except that it comes under the general clause referring to offensive weapons. That is the clause I read when the bill was first spoken to.

Mr. REID: The new clause 1 says, "has upon his person....or is carrying concealed a pistol or revolver."

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is framed to meet requests which came largely from the western provinces in regard to weapons, pistols and revolvers. We have made very drastic provisions in that respect. Then, the provision in respect of offensive weapons covers "any gun or other fire arm, or air gun, or any part thereof, or any sword, sword blade, bayonet" and so on, down a long list. A sawed-off shotgun would be certainly included in that list. I did not know they were actually concealed on the person.

Mr. REID: Yes; there have been many cases where men have brought them in, and then drew them out. They can hold them in one hand, just like revolvers, and they should be included along with pistols and revolvers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have never heard a request to that effect.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: One of the clauses deals with the sale of weapons, and the wording is "pistol, revolver, or other offensive weapon that may be concealed upon the person." That wording would be sufficient.

Mr. REID: I think it should be included.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I was going to amend that section, I may tell my hon. friend.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I believe it will be sufficient to use the same expression as is contained in the clause to which I have referred.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot help but think the minister will not accomplish his purpose, which is undoubtedly that of preventing the carrying of these weapons, if the person with criminal intent is permitted without registration to keep weapons in his house. Under the provisions of the act, that is possible. He could simply take those weapons out when he intended to use them, night or day. The whole purpose of the enactment would be thwarted. What is to prevent a man in any city from keeping a weapon in his house at all times, and simply taking it out at any moment he wishes to use it? He can carry it, without any evidence of his doing so, upon his person. The damage which we are seeking to prevent could quite easily be done. For a long time I have felt that there should be very strict regulations with respect not only to the carrying but the possession of weapons. As to the hardships enumerated by gentlemen who have spoken on behalf of the returned men, no magistrate would put a returned man in gaol for the simple reason that he might have neglected to obtain a permit for a weapon which he has brought back from overseas, which he has never used and may never intend to use. I am convinced however that full advantage will be taken of this omission by any person who desires to use weapons for unlawful purposes.

Mr. REID: I have a case in mind, where four men entered a bank in Vancouver, three of whom had sawed-off shotguns with which they threatened the manager and clerks in the bank. The carrying of sawed-off shotguns is prevalent throughout the west. I would urge upon the minister the necessity of inserting a clause taking care of them, because they are very destructive and dangerous.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a clause which would include them, but the penalty is not as severe as the clause pertaining to pistols and revolvers. Section 119 states that:

> Everyone is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs or to imprisonment for three months or to both fine and costs and imprisonment who,—
> (a) not having a permit in form 76a, has upon his person elsewhere than in his own dwelling house, shop, warehouse, counting house or premises, or is carrying concealed any offensive weapon that may be concealed upon the person other than a pistol or revolver.

That section would include the sawed-off shotgun, but the penalty is only three months and a fine.

Mr. REID: I have noticed that.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: A blackjack, or something like that—

Mr. YOUNG: Order; the member for New Westminster has the floor.

Mr. REID: I still think that the sawed-off shotgun should be taken care of either in section 119 or section 118.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How do you describe it? What is the technical description?

Mr. HOWDEN: That is what they call it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the length of a sawed-off shotgun? I have had shotguns sawed off an inch and a half.

Mr. HOWDEN: They saw most of the stock away, and all but two or three inches of the barrel, making a weapon more devastating and dangerous than a pistol.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I know what it is, but how should it be described?

Mr. MALCOLM: A clause could be inserted prohibiting the use of these articles by making it an offence to have one either in the house or upon the person. The weapon described by the hon. member for New Westminster is well known. It has been discussed in police circles for some time, and is more dangerous than the revolver. Its existence cannot be justified on any ground. A clause might be inserted providing a severe penalty against a person, who has either in a dwelling or upon his person such a weapon.

Mr. HANBURY: It might be covered, possibly, by the fact that it is concealed on the person. The ordinary sporting rifle or shotgun could not be so concealed. This weapon, however, can be concealed upon the person.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I had an idea that one clause might be so worded as to refer to any revolver, pistol or other firearm capable of being concealed on the person, and then the other clause might be altered so as to include any weapon other than a firearm.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I may be absolutely wrong, but I understand the section refers only to those offensive weapons, including pistols and revolvers, which may be concealed upon the person. If that is so, I do not think it refers to the ordinary stock rifle or a gun.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Only to pistols or revolvers.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Is it correct to say that it applies only to firearms such as pistols or revolvers, or such other weapons as may be concealed upon the person?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This section is confined exclusively to pistols or revolvers and is distinct from the next section. I think perhaps there is something in the suggestion that sawed-off shotguns should be included.

Mr. HANBURY: "Or other firearms," because they are concealed on the person.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That does not answer my question.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The wording suggested is "pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed on the person."

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is it.

Mr. MALCOLM: That would cover it, but it does not cover cases where these weapons are in dwelling houses. They have no right to be anywhere. They are weapons intended to be used for criminal purposes. One may judge that the man in whose premises they are found is not holding them for any good purposes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I must correct that. I know some very wealthy men who have sawed-off firearms in their houses for their own protection. I know that to be a fact.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Suppose I had in my house a collection of revolvers some of which had been given to me as souvenirs of the great war, others belonging to myself and used on hunting expeditions, and suppose I want to take them out of the province, what would I have to do? If I live in Ontario and want to hunt in the province of Quebec, making use of these firearms, I am quite satisfied to obtain a licence or permit in this province, but what will happen if I carry those firearms into another province? Shall I have to obtain another licence?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If there is another provincial law you will have to submit to the law.

Mr. HANBURY: I do not notice anything in the bill about ammunition.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, it is covered.

Mr. HANBURY: Then another point: Are members of the militia and the permanent force carrying revolvers covered?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They will get permits.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Wait until we see what we are carrying. I think there is a good deal of force in the suggestion that we cover the sawed-off shotgun. I will move in the first place:

That section 118, line 9, be amended by inserting after the word "than" the following words: "one year nor more than."

That would make it read:

Everyone is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years. . . .

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then I also move:

That section 118 be amended by striking out the word "or" in the last line and inserting after the word "revolver" the following words:—

"or other firearm capable of being concealed on the person."

Mr. YOUNG: That would apply to a .22 rifle, would it not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Can you conceal that on the person?

Mr. YOUNG: You can conceal it under your overcoat.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then it would leave one liable if he concealed it. I think we had better not pick too many holes if we want to get the bill through.

Mr. HOWDEN: If I may make a suggestion, I am inclined to think that the sawed-off shotgun should be dealt with very severely. As suggested by the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) and others, it is possible to go hunting and take a revolver along with the most innocent intent, but anyone who has a sawed-off shotgun under his coat means business. He is a criminal. A bird of that kind should certainly have a special penalty.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He can get up to five years.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I agree with the principle of this bill, but if this disarmament policy is to be carried out efficiently I wonder if we should not start from the nursery. If the children are educated in carrying firearms, later on we must not be surprised if we find they have developed a taste. I do not know if it would be within the scope of this bill to do something to prevent the carrying of toy pistols, which often look exactly like the real thing. This is a complex world, and I wonder sometimes when a criminal is at the bar if humanity itself is not at the bar. Children are getting educated from boyhood to carry arms, I know they are just toys; later on they go to moving pictures and see firearms and pistols displayed, and they copy it in their play. Then later in life the boy having developed the habit of having toy arms will come under the jurisdiction of this bill if he carries a real arm. Sometimes these toys are not easily distinguished from the real thing, and there might be some mistake. I would ask the minister if something could be done.

The CHAIRMAN: Unless the hon. member has an amendment I am afraid he is out of order.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I am just asking the minister if something could be done within the scope of this bill to take care of such cases. I think it is a serious matter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I had not considered going as far as to prohibit children's toys. It is not the first time I have heard the suggestion, I have received letters on the same subject, but I did not think it was a practical idea.

Mr. MALCOLM: Regardless of what the minister says, I do not think that sawed-off shotguns are used by people in their homes as defensive weapons. I do not think there is any justification for a mutilated shotgun or rifle being in existence, either on a man's person or in his home. I think it is an offensive weapon, and the man who has it is a criminal. The gun was shortened for just one purpose, that is to enable it to be concealed on that man's person. I submit that to this section 118 there should be an amendment. This may be badly drafted and may be subject to correction, but I suggest the following:

> Has in his possession, either on his person, or in his dwelling or place of business, any rifle or shotgun which has been shortened from its original length to a length which would permit it being readily concealed on his person.

I do not think that type of weapon should be in existence at all.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot accept that.

Mr. MALCOLM: Then I will not even submit it.

The CHAIRMAN: Did the hon. member move an amendment?

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister said he would not accept such an amendment, I merely offered it as a suggestion. If the minister does not care to accept it I will not present it.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. RALSTON: May I suggest that you leave out the words "capable of being concealed on the person," and say "who is carrying concealed a pistol, revolver, or other firearm." If it is actually being carried concealed it is capable of being concealed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would that be any improvement on the language we are using?

Mr. RALSTON: I think we are using more language than is necessary. If we say "carrying concealed a pistol, revolver or other firearm" does that not cover it? It is no use to say "carrying concealed something capable of being concealed" because surely if you are carrying it concealed it is capable of being concealed.

Mr. BURY: It might not be concealed when the arrest was made.

Mr. RALSTON: It is not a matter of arrest; it is a matter of offence. My suggestion is that the words "capable of being concealed" contained in the amendment are liable to misinterpretation and that the real offence that is being aimed at is carrying concealed a pistol, revolver or other firearm. I submit that it does not add anything if we say "other firearm capable of being concealed" because how could you carry it concealed and be guilty of the offence of carrying it concealed unless it was capable of being concealed?

Mr. BURY: The hon. member is not covering the point; he is making one of the conditions for a breach of the provision the fact that the weapon actually must be concealed.

Mr. RALSTON: That is one of the conditions.

Mr. BURY: No; he must be carrying it.

Mr. RALSTON: He must be carrying it concealed.

Mr. BURY: It was suggested by one hon. member opposite that the section should cover a revolver or pistol carried in a motor car or a sleigh. The words suggested by the hon. member would not cover such cases.

Mr. RALSTON: I am only dealing with the section as it is proposed to amend it, according to the way the chairman read it.

Mr. BOTHWELL: In order to carry out that suggestion I think you would have to add the words "or is carrying concealed a pistol, revolver or other firearm."

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid that if this amendment passes you will have to arrest every duck hunter in the province of Quebec. Every time you go duck hunting in a driving rain you put your shotgun under your overcoat, and if you did that you would be subject to arrest. I do not think that should be so, especially in Rimouski where we have so many mounted police particularly during the hunting season. The game laws in Quebec are very stringent now, and I am afraid that if this amendment goes through half our population will be liable to arrest.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I prefer the language I first submitted. The offence is concealing the weapon on the person. I quite understand that a weapon may be concealed by being carried in a valise or trunk, but if we describe it as a firearm capable of being concealed on the person I think all cases would be covered.

Sir EUGENE FISET: When you carry a gun hunting you often have it under your coat.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Do not conceal it; carry it outside.

Mr. RALSTON: I think this is limiting it too much.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The only purpose of the amendment is to cover sawed-off shotguns and similar weapons.

Mr. RALSTON: I would stop at "carrying concealed any pistol, revolver or other firearm." That would include a sawed-off shotgun. You do not want to restrict it to small arms.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think all other arms that can be well imagined are dealt with in the next section, which has to do with offensive weapons.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 119—Dangerous weapons.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think at the end of subsection (a) we might strike out the word "or" between the words "pistol or revolver" and insert the words "or other firearm." This will make it conform to the previous section.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there any difference between these two sections?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Merely that the words "which may be concealed upon the person" are included here.

Mr. RALSTON: Are not the sections exactly the same?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have been trying to make them the same. This section excludes the weapons dealt with in the previous section.

Mr. RALSTON: In section 118 I think we have included all firearms that may be concealed upon the person. This section does no more than that; it includes all firearms other than pistols or revolvers which may be concealed upon the person.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What is the purpose behind this section?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are trying to include sawed-off shotguns or other firearms that may be concealed upon the person. This section is not designed to apply to pistols, revolvers or firearms; it applies to other offensive weapons.

Mr. BURY: I take it that this excludes all the weapons covered by section 118, and therefore it has to follow that section.

Mr. HOWDEN: Does this clause include only those weapons which are not firearms?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: Revolvers and air guns are included. I read the definition from the criminal code.

Mr. POWER: Is there any special provision with regard to the carrying of a pistol or a revolver in an automobile?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. POWER: So that anyone carrying a pistol in an automobile would be obliged to obtain a permit.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That question was raised by an hon. member opposite. I will give it consideration before we are out of committee. It is not provided for in the bill.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

Subsection (b) agreed to.

On subsection (c)—Selling or offering for sale.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not see any great objection to this, but I do not think that any undue burden should be placed on those who deal in firearms, which is an old calling. Is there any fee provided for in connection with this subsection?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, there is no fee.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection (d)—Selling or lending.

Mr. POWER: What would be considered lawful excuse under this subsection? Would it be a matter of personal friendship—a friend lending someone a revolver to go hunting?

Mr. GUTHRIE: A man might have an excuse which was genuinely lawful. I am not particularly wedded to the words, but I would not make the provision too drastic.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is drastic enough.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been in the law for a long time. I have an amendment to propose. I move that the words "or other offensive weapon" in line 29 be struck out and the words "or other firearm" be substituted therefor.

Mr. POWER: You are restricting the clause. The penalty is for giving away or selling an offensive weapon. There is no necessity for the distinction.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This applies only to pistols and revolvers. This is proposed by the expert of the department. Offensive weapons are provided for in the next subsection.

Mr. POWER: The next subsection deals only with keeping a record.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will let subsection (d) stand.

Mr. HANBURY: Before we do so, I would suggest that some attention be paid to the words in the last two lines, "anyone not being the holder of a permit." What is "a permit"? What is referred to? I think the minister should look into that. It should be defined more clearly.

Subsection stands.

Subsections (e), (f) and (g) agreed to.

On section 120, subsection 1—Persons who may issue permits. Pistol or revolver permits.

Mr. HANBURY: In connection with subsection 1, I would refer the minister to the practice of members of the militia and permanent forces. They are not necessarily carrying firearms for the protection of life and property.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the army regulations provide for that.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On section 120, subsection 2—Other permits.

Mr. ROSS: Could a person get a permit from a chief of police?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Anybody authorized by the attorney general of the province.

Mr. ROSS: How would one know where to get a permit? How do we know who will have power to issue permits?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I presume the attorney general will give public notice of those to whom application should be made. The law has been the same for a long time.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was going to ask a question on the same point. There seems to be a division of authority. The subsection refers to the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the attorney general of any province. Supposing a person wanting a permit makes application to the commissioner of the mounted police and is refused a permit. The same person might make application to the attorney general and receive one.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he is a reputable person, I presume he will have no trouble; he will get the permit.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not concerned about that, but there seems to be a division of authority in granting the permit. Perhaps it is an overlapping of authority.

Mr. GUTHRIE: When two or more receive authority to perform an act, there is always an overlapping, if one may call it such, but this has been the law for a long time and there has never been any trouble about it.

Subsection agreed to.

Section 120, subsections (3) and (4) agreed to.

Section agreed to.

On section 121—Powers of governor in council.

Mr. HANBURY: As regards paragraph (a) is this legislation in effect now or is it new?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is in effect now.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As regards paragraph (b), I may be wrong in my interpretation, but does this mean that when exceptional conditions arise the proclamation may be issued which in effect tightens up the law and limits the holders of guns to such persons as may be exempted in the proclamation? After the proclamation is issued, those who have these weapons in their possession are liable to a certain penalty. Supposing the law has been running along for some time and a number of persons, acting under the law, obtain permits for firearms: then the proclamation is issued and these people find themselves illegally in possession of these firearms. Will they have to turn them in?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; if they will just leave them in their places of abode, no trouble will come to such persons.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: They could not carry them? This provision would not affect their possession?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. This is the law now.

Section agreed to.

On section 122—Having pistol or revolver while committing offence.

Mr. ROSS: This is the clause to which I referred some time ago. In Great Britain I believe the term of imprisonment is five years in addition to the ordinary sentence and it is certainly working there with great benefit. A man who acts unlawfully, if he is without a gun, receives an ordinary sentence; but if he has a gun he gets five years additional.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The section formerly provided for a fine of $50 and three months' imprisonment. We have increased this to two years and we thought we were stepping it up pretty well.

Mr. REID: But in British Columbia there were many comments and criticisms regarding this, because men escaped as it could not be proven that they had criminal intent although they had guns in their possession. I know the provision in the old country was brought up. I understand under section 115 criminal intent has to be proven, but this is not the case under section 118, so these people were tried under section 118 because it could not be proven that there was criminal intent simply because a gun was carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In section 118 there is no provision with regard to criminal intent. The fact that a person was carrying a gun constitutes the offence.

Mr. HANBURY: I think this section should also be amended to include the carrying of shotguns.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If that is the sense of the committee, I have no objection.

Mr. HANBURY: This is the important place; it is where you get the worst criminal, the man who is holding up a bank. This is the man we want to send to gaol and keep there as long as we can.

Mr. MALCOLM: Make the same amendment as before.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In this particular case where a man is engaged in a criminal action, the carrying of almost any firearm would be sufficient under the circumstances.

Mr. BROWN: I think in this clause we might very well insert the words "or any firearm."

Mr. GUTHRIE: We had better put it in the words we have used before, and I would move to amend section 122, line 10, by striking out the first word "or" and adding after the word "revolver."

or other firearm capable of being concealed on the person.

Mr. BROWN: Does that strengthen the clause in any way?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It brings in only the sawed-off shotgun.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In that particular clause which applies only to persons who have been convicted of a criminal offence, I do not think it would be too wide if it applied to the possession of any firearm at the time. That would not be a general clause. It would apply only to those convicted of a criminal offence, and the offence would be just as much an offence whether you were carrying a rifle or a sawed-off shotgun.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: The rifle or shotgun is not a concealed weapon, and this is supposed to be a clause in respect of concealed weapons.

Mr. BURY: Besides, a man might be convicted of an offence that had no connection with the gun at all when he was carrying an ordinary shotgun.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Yes, it might be too wide.

Mr. BROWN: But it says a criminal offence.

Mr. BURY: Even so, a man might be convicted of a criminal offence with which the possession of a shotgun had no connection.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 123.

Mr. HANBURY: This clause does not cover firearms?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It covers rifles and shotguns.

Section agreed to.

Section 124 agreed to.

On section 125—Selling pistol or airgun to minor.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that after the word "who" in line 30, the words "sells any firearm or gives or sells any pistol or airgun, or any ammunition therefor," be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "sells or gives any firearm, pistol, revolver or airgun, or any ammunition therefor." The drafting is better than in the section as it stands, they tell me.

Mr. HANBURY: Do I understand from section 125 that it is an offence to give an air rifle or the ammunition for an air rifle to a person under sixteen years of age?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, unless it is established "to the satisfaction of the justice before whom he is charged that he used reasonable diligence in endeavouring to ascertain the age of the minor before making such sale or gift and that he had good reason to believe that such minor was not under the age of sixteen years."

Mr. HANBURY: That does not answer my question. My question is, is it unlawful for a child under sixteen years of age to possess an air rifle, and is it unlawful for a person to give such a child an air rifle or ammunition therefor?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, it is.

Mr. HANBURY: It is unlawful for a father to give his child who is under sixteen an air gun?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. HANBURY: Then I do not think that that law is generally understood in Canada.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been the law for ten years.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is more honoured in the breach.

Mr. HANBURY: I think this may be the best opportunity we may have for some time to amend the law, if that is the law. It is a ridiculous law which says that a child shall not have an air rifle until he is sixteen. I know as a matter of fact that my child had one for years before he was sixteen, and I did not know that it was against the law. I do not think it is generally known to be against the law. It is not a question of age, but of teaching young children how to handle arms, what to do and what not to do. A boy is not interested in an air rifle after sixteen. After that age he wants a ·22 or something larger, and if air rifles are permitted at all the law should be amended to make the age limit much less than sixteen.

Mr. POWER: In support of what my hon. friend says, may I point this out, which I think will serve to show that this bill goes too far? Under section 125 any person who gives to a minor under sixteen years of age an air gun or the ammunition therefor is guilty of an offence. Take the case of any member of parliament here giving his child under sixteen years of age a ·22 and the ammunition to go with it, to shoot partridge. He would be guilty of an offence, and under section 122 which we have just passed, if this father happened to have a revolver upon him he would have committed a criminal offence and then the law is that he "shall" receive a sentence of two years. So you would be guilty of the offence of having permitted your child to use a ·22, and because you have a revolver along with you on this shooting expedition you have to go to gaol for two years. It would be a pretty dear expedition.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been the law a long time.

Mr. POWER: I do not think the law read just quite the same way.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The penalty was not as severe.

Mr. POWER: And I do not know that the word "shall" was in it before. The magistrate has no discretion; that is the worst feature of this bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The answer to that is, do not become convicted of a criminal offence.

Mr. POWER: The best answer would be, do not become a father. We have made a criminal offence of something very trivial, and then—

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the suggestion in regard to the age limit in section 125? That is the crux of the question, I suppose. In the statute now, and for the last ten years, it has been sixteen years of ago. Would it be safe to reduce it?

Mr. HANBURY: Make it ten.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What does the committee think? I have no particular views on the subject.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Have there been any complaints against the law as it was?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not until to-day.

Mr. HANBURY: Because no one understood that there was such a law. I think the consensus of opinion of the members here is that the responsibility in connection with air rifles is on the father, not on the boy. It is the father's responsibility to teach his boy how to handle the air rifle. I have two boys; from nine years of age they have had air rifles, but they have been taught not to point them at anyone or at anything except when shooting at a target. I think it is up to the parent. Ten years is certainly the limit that should be set, not more than that. I would point out that this bill deals with offensive weapons, not sporting weapons, and it is a question in my mind whether you could consider an air rifle an offensive weapon.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The air rifle is mentioned in the criminal code.

Mr. GEARY: Is it not obvious under section 125 that you can give a firearm to a child, but you cannot give a pistol or an air gun?

Mr. HANBURY: No.

Mr. GEARY: Why not? The wording is "who sells any firearm."

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is changed to "who sells or gives."

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment is, "Who sells or gives any firearm, pistol, revolver or air gun, or any ammunition therefor."

Mr. HOWDEN: This matter ought to receive serious consideration. I have a boy who has been going duck hunting with me for a good many years, and who has been a first class wing shot since he was twelve years old. He is as good as I am.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Better.

Mr. HOWDEN: All right, better. But I do not see why a boy with ordinary gumption and common sense could not be allowed to take a shotgun and go hunting with his elders.

Mr. BURY: The section does not say anything about elders.

Mr. HOWDEN: He is not to be given a gun of any kind if he is under sixteen years.

Mr. BURY: The hon. member said he had to be with elders.

Mr. HOWDEN: According to the law it does not matter whether he is with elders or not.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The idea is not to protect the ducks or the boy, but to protect the public.

Mr. HOWDEN: Is it the considered opinion of the committee that a boy is not capable of intelligently handling a firearm until he is sixteen years old?

Mr. MANION: Some boys.

Mr. HOWDEN: We ought to consider that matter.

Mr. BURY: Hon. members who have spoken about their sons having airguns, and the responsibility being upon the parents, must remember that if through the use of the airgun any accident happens, no matter what the parents may say about the responsibility, they will not be responsible.

Mr. ROWE: They will be.

Mr. BURY: No; the child will be responsible, unless you can prove that the parent had committed some breach of ordinary reasonable care. If you are not going to retain this provision in the criminal code, and prohibit a child under sixteen using an airgun, you cannot hold the parents responsible. If the child's airgun shoots out somebody's eye, he cannot get damages against the parents; every lawyer in the house knows that. You can get damages against the child, whatever good that may be.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: The question is: what is the safe age?

Mr. BURY: I was going to suggest that a child might get a permit where he could show that he was responsible. Under such circumstances a permit could be issued to a child under sixteen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is nothing in the act which says that a child under sixteen may have a permit if someone states that he is worthy of having one. What about the cadets? Can they possess guns or firearms?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where is Miss Macphail?

Mr. CHEVRIER: What about the Boy Scouts? It seems to me that we are going a long way; I did not know that the provision was so drastic. One of my daughters is a very good shot with a twenty-two rifle, and she is not yet sixteen years old. If we put the measure through in its present form I believe we are going a long way.

Mr. BURY: I did not suggest there was anything in the criminal code requiring permits for children, but what I am suggesting is that if we are going to change this clause, provision ought to be made that before a child under sixteen years is allowed to have a gun he should have a permit. We should not swing a door wide open for any child of any age to carry an airgun about the country. It is all very well to say that children of members of parliament are reasonable, and can shoot straight, and that they will not do damage. But the proposal is made to give broad leeway and to remove every prohibition and restriction from the issue of airguns to children under sixteen years of age. I say that is a dangerous course to take. If we are going to make any modification of the restriction we should do so either by slightly modifying the age limit, or by providing that airguns may be given to children under sixteen only if they have obtained permits.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The penalty under section 125 is not upon the child, but upon the parent, or the person who sells or gives the pistol, air gun or ammunition to a minor under the age of sixteen.

Mr. BURY: I was not talking about the criminal liability.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The daughter of the hon. member for Ottawa is not guilty of an offence; the hon. member himself is the guilty party. I believe the situation will be remedied by changing the age limit; I think it should not be above twelve years.

Mr. ROWE: It seems to me that this is a section which very few hon. members have appreciated. To my mind it is ridiculous to think that a child is not capable of handling an air rifle until he is sixteen years of age. Surely in this discussion we are magnifying the power of an air gun. I doubt if any hon. member has ever heard of a child doing any serious damage with one.

Mr. BURY: I have.

Mr. ROWE: I handled one when I was ten years old. It seems to me that if a child is not capable of handling an air rifle until he is sixteen years old, we had better prohibit the use of more powerful firearms until men have reached fifty years of age. To-day at sixteen years a child is a pretty capable citizen. I believe that the clause should be amended so that the child would not be breaking the law if he used an air rifle before reaching the age of sixteen years. I know of many children who are out hunting rabbits with .22 rifles before they are sixteen years of age. I am not suggesting the section should be left wide open, but it seems to me unreasonable to make it unlawful for a child to play with an air rifle until he is sixteen years old. Such a provision is in my view an extreme safety measure. I would suggest a change be made so that the guardian might have some responsibility in the matter, and the child would not be charged with carrying an article which is more or less in the nature of a toy.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I take it that the minister is agreeable to reducing the age limit from sixteen to ten.

Mr. ROWE: To twelve.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think it is possible for a boy who has never handled a gun until his sixteenth year to become a crack shot, or as good as the representatives at the Bisley meet. A boy cannot become a good shot starting at the age of seventeen. Take the boys who go to a camp, or the cadets; if it were suggested to them that we are seriously considering not allowing any boy to take a gun in his hand until after he attains the age of sixteen they would think this house had become bereft of its reason.

An hon. MEMBER: That has been suggested.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, can we not settle on something?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree we should settle on something.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What would you suggest.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will move that the age be fourteen.

Mr. MALCOLM: A rifle and an air gun should not be permissible at the same age.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not in favour of such a radical reduction as from sixteen to ten, but if you put it at fourteen it would seem more reasonable. I would be prepared to accept something like this, as suggested by an hon. member a few moments ago, that a person might sell or give to a child under sixteen firearms as described in this section under a permit. It would be a hardship to say that a man cannot go out in the bush with his son or a young boy and enjoy a little hunting.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I doubt whether there is any law more honoured in the breach than this. I know in my country a boy of sixteen is looked upon as being pretty nearly a man.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well, he can get a permit.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I do not understand that he is allowed to have a permit now. I know that the great majority of boys in my county are using ·22 rifles for shooting small game. Could the parents or guardians of children of that age not be given the right to provide them with these arms and the parents assume the responsibility under the act?

An hon. MEMBER: What age?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I would say anywhere about ten, eleven, or twelve. Where it was given by the parent or guardian, the parent or guardian assuming the responsibility, that law would not apply. I am quite certain that the majority of boys in my county between the ages of twelve and sixteen own and carry ·22 rifles and shoot small game, gophers, rabbits and so on. This law is completely ignored at present.

Mr. HANBURY: This section 125 deals only with the giving or selling to children under sixteen. There must be a law that prohibits a child of sixteen or under possessing or using such firearms.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is not.

Mr. ROSS: Before setting any age, this question might well be considered with the Department of National Defence in connection with cadet shoots and imperial competitions. Any age we might set might interfere with the training of the cadets. I suggest that the question of age be considered with the Department of National Defence and the commissioner of the mounted police.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We can always protect ourselves in that regard by permits. I will move by way of suggestion that the age be fourteen.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Say twelve.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I happen to know a young man, I am almost certain was under fourteen, who won a medal as a cadet.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are not interfering with them; they will all be provided for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No one could give him a gun.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. We have military regulations too.

Mr. YOUNG: If I understand the situation aright, and the explanation the minister gave, as the law reads now and will read as amended, a man who gives or lends a rifle to his boy or permits his boy to take one out and use it commits an offence, while if he leaves the rifle around and the boy takes it and shoots, nothing can be done.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is right. That has been our law for ten years. As to the question of the age, I am willing to agree to any age that suits the committee.

Mr. POWER: My objection is not so much to the age limit. Section 122 imposes the very drastic penalty of two years on anyone who under certain circumstances permits a child under sixteen years of age to shoot. I think the amendment should be to section 122.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is a different section altogether. It deals with a man who has been convicted of an offence.

Mr. POWER: Section 125 creates a criminal offence, punishable by a fine. But if the firearm was on the person under the circumstances laid down in section 122 the magistrate has no discretion but must sentence him to two years. So in a large number of cases where this offence under 125 is committed the offender would be sentenced to two years. I think that is going too far.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does my hon. friend consider that the imposition of a fine indicates a criminal offence?

Mr. POWER: I think so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I doubt it.

Mr. POWER: "Every one is guilty of an offence." This is the criminal law.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But a criminal offence and an offence for which a fine can be imposed are very different things.

[Mr. Ross.]

Mr. BURY: I think my hon. friend is mistaken. Section 122 says that:

> Every one who has upon his person a pistol or revolver while committing any criminal offence—

The case my hon. friend refers to is where a father gives or sells a shotgun—

Mr. POWER: Or ammunition.

Mr. BURY:—or any firearm to a boy under sixteen. The offence there has already been committed. If he was caught out shooting with his son with the firearm he would not be arrested while committing the offence. The offence mentioned in section 122 is a prior act. If the father were arrested afterwards for giving or selling the firearm to the boy that would not be the offence dealt with in section 122.

Mr. ROSS: For the sake of information I should like to ask what military regulations permit a minor to be in possession of a rifle. I know of none.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This law has been on the statute book for at least ten years.

Mr. ROSS: I may be wrong, but I do not know of any military regulation that permits a minor to be in charge of a rifle if the law says he shall not have one, unless it is on a campus with his cadet corps. I suppose these cadets in the schools might be out shooting somewhere with their instructor, and a policeman might come along and demand to see their permit, but I do not know of any military regulation that permits a minor to have a rifle.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The military regulations do provide for equipment, and I assume that ammunition and rifles form part of the equipment of a soldier. Military laws are recognized in the criminal code; they include the king's orders and regulations for the army, and so on, and any act of the United Kingdom applying to His Majesty's troops in Canada, and all other orders, rules, regulations of whatever nature or kind applying to His Majesty's troops in Canada.

Mr. ROSS: Do the cadet companies come under the military regulations?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have always so understood.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I suggest that we have spent enough time on this section. Though I favour the age limit being placed at fourteen it seems to be the opinion of the majority of the committee that it should be twelve, so let us make it twelve and pass the section.

Mr. GERSHAW: The first day of the hunting season is always a busy one for doctors because of the accidents which occur, and I would leave the section as it is.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by Mr. Manion that section 125 be amended by inserting the word "twelve" instead of the word "sixteen" in lines 32 and 36.

Amendment agreed to on division.

On section 127—Refusing to deliver offensive weapon.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It has been pointed out that the words "of the peace" should be added in lines 3 and 5, after the word "justice" to make it read "justice of the peace."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I move that subsection 2 of this section be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 129—Immigration officers added to those who may carry weapons.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I hope this applies to military reserves.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is the old section; there is no change.

Mr. HANBURY: This section provides that certain officers can purchase weapons which need not be registered. I think they should be registered.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not see anything here about the purchase of weapons. There is no change in this or in the next two sections.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Permits cancelled.

Mr. ELLIOTT: By whom are these permits issued?

Mr. GUTHRIE: By the commissioner of the mounted police or such persons as he may designate, and by the attorneys general of the provinces and such officers as they may designate.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will there be any charge for these permits?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I should like to return to section 123. My hon. friend the senior member for Ottawa has pointed out that we should add the words "of the peace" after the word "justices" in line 17, to make it read "justices of the peace."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The same amendment will apply to section 124. You have the same thing there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes. As my hon. friend observes, also in line 24, section 124, it should be "two justices of the peace."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister, speaking about section 118, thought that possibly an amendment might be suggested with regard to firearms in motor vehicles.

The CHAIRMAN: I would remind the committee that subsection (d) of section 119 has not passed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would ask that that be allowed to stand.

Subsection stands.

Progress reported.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Toronto-Scarborough) presented the first report of the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, as follows:

Your committee has considered Bill No. 41, an act to incorporate The Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company, and has agreed to report it with amendments.

With regard to the said Bill No. 41, the proposed capital stock is 100,000 shares of no par value. As no provision exists in standing order 93 (3) for a charge being made when the capital stock has no par value, your committee recommends that, for taxing purposes, the capital stock be considered as worth $5 per share, and that, therefore, a capital stock fee of $200 be charged.

Your committee has ordered that Bill No. 41 be reprinted, as amended.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. HARRIS moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGE STUBBS

PETITION ASKING THAT HE BE RETAINED IN OFFICE

Mr. W. W. KENNEDY (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I desire to present to the house a petition largely signed by citizens of the city of Winnipeg and its suburbs, to the extent of over fifty thousand names, and largely signed also by other citizens of Canada outside of Winnipeg. It relates to a certain inquiry recently conducted into the conduct and capacity of His Honour Lewis St. George Stubbs, senior judge of the county court of Winnipeg. The purport of this prayer is—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member can present the petition and it will be received by the clerk and referred to the proper authority, but it is not competent for the hon. member to make a speech in connection with it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): I do not propose to, Mr. Speaker, but under the rules I am permitted to state the purport of the petition.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member to have already stated the purport of the petition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. BROWN: Is the petition addressed to the house or to the government?

Mr. KENNEDY: To the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: That remains to be seen. It will be dealt with by the proper authority. It may or may not be in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Let us hear it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): May I speak to the point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Under rule 731.

> Every member offering to present a petition to the house, not being a petition for a private bill, or relating to a private bill before the house, shall confine himself to a statement of the parties from whom it comes, of the number of signatures attached to it, and of the material allegations contained in it,— and, Mr. Speaker:

—to the reading of the prayer of such petition.

[Mr. Harris.]

I ask leave merely to state the nature of the prayer without reading the petition.

Mr. SPEAKER: Did I understand the hon. member to quote what he called a rule?

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Yes, Mr. Speaker, rule 731 of Beauchesnes's Parliamentary Rules and Forms.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is not a rule. It is merely the number of a paragraph in a book.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Am I to understand, Mr. Speaker, that it has no force in this house. I wish merely to state that the purport of the petition is that His Honour Judge Stubbs be left secure in his office.

Mr. SPEAKER: Very well.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

Mr. T. H. STINSON (Victoria, Ontario) moved concurrence in the recommendation contained in the third report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, respecting Bill No. 51, to incorporate the Devonshire Jockey Club.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVANTS—PENSIONS

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on February 20, a question was passed as an order for return on the motion of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Girouard) asking how many persons employed by the government of Canada receive a pension from the pension board, in addition to their salary. The hon. member has inquired why this return has not been brought down. The reason is that it requires reference to persons employed by the government throughout Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific and involves making hundreds, perhaps thousands of inquiries. I am informed by the various departments that it is impossible to prepare this return from departmental records, and that if the inquiry is to be proceeded with several weeks may elapse before it is finished.

QUESTIONS

*VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION—DISMISSALS

Mr. BENNETT: That question, in the nature of things would be very difficult, in fact impossible for the government to answer. We will have to communicate with the officials. A number of the questions I am informed are not questions that the officials are in a position to answer without making definite inquiry, because they are not questions they ask employees as they are employed.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I asked similar questions last year, and received quite satisfactory answers.

Mr. BENNETT: It took a long time to get them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Three or four weeks.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION—DISMISSALS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. Were the following recently dismissed by the Vancouver board of harbour commissioners: W. D. N. Eckringill, D. McIntyre, E. J. Dougherty, W. McCullough, T. Payne, W. Wright?
2. In each case (a) how long had he served at the Ballantyne pier, Vancouver; (b) what was the length of his overseas service; (c) what was the reason for dismissal; (d) was his place filled by another appointee; (e) did such appointee have overseas service?

CANADA SHIPPING BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine if he has received a communication from the Canadian Merchant Service Guild of Vancouver representing shipping interests urging him that the bill respecting the Canada Shipping Act be not put through this house this session, in order that they may have an opportunity of looking into it. What is the minister's attitude in that regard?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, from memory I cannot answer my hon. friend as to whether or not the body to which he has referred has sent representations to my department. We have received some representations urging the passage of the bill, and others urging delay. However, I think the public interest would be best served if we proceeded at this session. I am told proceedings are going on fairly well in the Senate and I hope we will be able to proceed at this session in this chamber.

Mr. NEILL: We will be here until September, then.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine if the evidence before the Senate committee taken on the shipping bill will be printed?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that up until this date the sittings of the committee have not been reported.

Mr. GRAY: Will they be?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot speak for the Senate, but it may be that when hearings begin next week the testimony will be reported. I am not sure.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

CARRYING PISTOL, REVOLVER OR OTHER OFFENSIVE WEAPON WITHOUT PERMIT

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 29, consideration in committee of Bill No. 53, to amend the criminal code (offensive weapons)—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cowan, Port Arthur): How far had we gone?

Mr. GUTHRIE: When section 118 was under discussion yesterday it was permitted to stand in order that some amendment might be drafted to cover the case of concealed pistols and revolvers and other weapons in motor cars or other vehicles. After consultation with officials of the department I submit the following amendment:

That section 118 be amended by adding after the word "concealed" in the 12th line the words:—

"upon his person or in any vehicle under his control or of which he is an occupant."

Mr. CASGRAIN: What about an airplane?

Mr. HANBURY: I think the word vehicle should be defined.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does it include a boat or airplane?

Mr. GUTHRIE: "Vehicle" is a comprehensive word, including all land transport on our highways.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That would not cover an airplane.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not see any objection to covering an airplane.

Mr. HANBURY: Would that also cover the case of a person who happened to be in an automobile where a concealed weapon was, whether he knew it or not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would apply to the man who had knowledge of it or who was concealing it.

Mr. BROWN: Might not that phrase "of which he is an occupant" make it apply to an innocent man?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. The word "occupant" is to distinguish from the man who is in control. The occupant may be the man who conceals it; without this wording he might get out by saying, "I am not the man in control of the car."

[Mr. Geary.]

Mr. BROWN: But if it is concealed in the car without his knowledge?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he did not do it he is not liable.

Mr. HANBURY: Does this also cover the sawed-off shotgun of which we spoke yesterday?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: Will you read the whole section as amended?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cowan, Port Arthur): Section 118 will read as follows:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for not less than one year and not more than five years who, not having a permit in form 76, has upon his person elsewhere than in his own dwelling house, shop, warehouse, counting house, or premises, or is carrying concealed upon his person or in any vehicle under his control or of which he is an occupant, a pistol or revolver—

Mr. YOUNG: That does not cover the sawed-off shotgun.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is another amendment. I think I can read it as amended:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than five years who, not having a permit in form 76, has upon his person elsewhere than in his own dwelling house, shop, warehouse, counting house, or premises, or is carrying concealed a pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person, or in any vehicle under his control or of which he is an occupant.

Mr. MARCIL: Supposing a taxi-driver has a pistol, the mere fact of being a passenger might make one liable.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Unless the taxi man conceals a weapon he is not liable, and unless the occupant conceals it he is not liable.

Section as amended agreed to.

On sections 123, 124 and 127.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then there was an amendment which we made yesterday which is unnecessary. I overlooked the Interpretation Act, which defines the word justice. We added the words, "of the peace" in four instances yesterday, but under the Interpretation Act "justice" means "justice of the peace" or two "justices of the peace," so it is unnecessary to use anything more than the word "justice." So in those four cases where we put in yesterday the words "of the peace" they can be struck out. I move that they be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. CHEVRIER: At the risk of asking an unnecessary question I wish to ask this, because I have had a number of inquiries, so I hope the minister will forgive me asking the question in order that it may be clear on the record.

As I understand it, this act is directed only towards such weapons as pistols, revolvers and other offensive weapons that may be concealed on the person. The question I have been asked repeatedly is, What about a man who leaves his home with a rifle or shotgun and takes the train for a hunting expedition? Is there any formality incumbent upon this person in order to be protected? If the minister would say as to that it would remove a lot of difficulty.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, a man who is carrying a shotgun or rifle going shooting is not involved in this in any way at all.

On section 119 (d).

Mr. GUTHRIE: Subsection (d) of section 119 was not passed because it was said that there might be an amendment. I have decided not to offer any amendment, to allow it to go as it is printed.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PAYMENTS BY PROVINCES—DISPOSITION OF EXTRA EARNINGS—PENSIONS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act to provide that money paid by the provinces for services of the force may be utilized for its maintenance; and for the disposition of moneys earned by any member of the force over and above his regular salary, pay and allowances; and to authorize the governor in council to determine by regulation the amount of allowance for pension purposes; and to make further provision respecting the counting of service in South Africa by officers and constables for the purposes of pension.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the minister a question with respect to the clause in the resolution which sets forth that money paid by the provinces for services of the force may be utilized for its maintenance. Does that mean that the moneys that are paid by the provinces for the services of the force will not go into the consolidated revenue fund but will be available immediately for the purpose of paying the force? If such is the case it might create confusion and misunderstanding in the accounts of the force as to the total amount paid out; in other words, the cost of the force to the country.

Mr. GUTHRIE: At present agreements have been made with six of the provinces of Canada whereby the provincial police forces which formerly existed have been merged with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force. Under these formal agreements, which were authorized by a statute of this parliament, there is payable to the consolidated revenue fund annually the following amounts:

Alberta	$225,000
Saskatchewan	175,000
Manitoba	125,000
Nova Scotia	150,000
New Brunswick	100,000
Prince Edward Island	15,000

Out of these moneys the mounted police maintain an establishment in each of these provinces for the enforcement of law, doing the work formerly done by provincial police. Heretofore these moneys have been paid into the consolidated revenue fund and have stayed there, and this is to make these moneys available as they are paid—I believe they are paid half yearly—to carry on the work of the mounted police. The proposal in the bill which I will submit if this resolution is passed is to this effect:

Notwithstanding the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act 1931, the governor in council may, whenever in his discretion he deems it necessary or advisable so to do, direct that moneys payable by the provinces under the provisions of subsection 2 of this section, be utilized for the maintenance of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

During the present session, as the house is aware, it has been necessary to utilize about $350,000 of this money in order to carry on the work in these provinces, and about two weeks ago a supplementary estimate was authorized by this house to enable us to get that money from the consolidated revenue fund. As in the past the money will be paid into that fund, but it will be paid out on order of the governor in council if it is found necessary that this should be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the minister if the effect of this method will not be to conceal from parliament the real or total expense of the force as a whole. If the money for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is appropriated in full in the regular manner this house and the country will know exactly what the force is costing, but if moneys are paid in to some fund by the provinces, and then made available for use at the discretion of the minister in order to meet part of the expenses of the force, that cost will hardly be apparent. It may be covered up altogether.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But the money cannot be paid out except for purposes authorized in the vote of parliament. Here we authorize the expenditure of sufficient money to carry on the work of the force, but of that money there is some $819,000 which comes to us from the various provinces. No money can be paid unless it is first authorized by a vote of parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I fail to get the drift of the minister's remarks. He says the money will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund as usual and that it will be paid out of that fund by order in council. Is it not available while it is in that fund for the expenses of the police force or for any other purpose?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The difficulty seems to be to get it out of the fund. During this past year, for instance, we were short $350,000 by reason of the fact that we could not get it out of the fund. This is money paid by the provinces into that fund; I suppose the agreement might have provided that the money should be paid to the mounted police, but that was not done.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I fail to understand the difficulty. The money is in the consolidated revenue fund and is available for payment; it is not tied up there so that you cannot use it. You can pay it out from time to time, from month to month if necessary; you must be drawing upon it now for the support of the force. Surely the minister does not suggest that because it goes into the consolidated revenue fund it must remain there for any definite length of time. It belongs to the revenue fund of Canada, in common with every other payment that is made.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Then I can see no objection to the money being paid out by order in council as it may be required.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is this money transferred into a separate fund for the particular purpose of taking care of the mounted police?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is what we want to do with it. We want to take that money as it comes in and apply it to the expenses of the mounted police in carrying on the work in those provinces.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: Was the money paid by those six provinces last year sufficient to meet the expenditures made in those provinces?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, it covered all the extra work we did in those provinces. Of course before the agreements were signed at all we carried on work in the western provinces which is still being carried on, but in all the provinces the amount paid in has been sufficient to meet the extra expense necessary to carry on the work.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the minister explain what is meant by these words in the resolution:

—and for the disposition of moneys earned by any member of the force over and above his regular salary, pay and allowances;

What does that mean?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are various commissions, payments and rewards which come into the hands of constables in the performance of their duties, such as seizures for the customs department and so on. The idea is to create a central fund, a trust fund, into which all these moneys shall be paid. The officers, non-commissioned officers or constables are not to be allowed to use those moneys for their own purposes. There has been such a fund established for some time, and it is only proposed now to vary the conditions which apply to such moneys. That fund has been established under section 21 of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act; under that act it is provided that the moneys in the fund shall be paid to the minister and shall be paid out by him as follows:

(a) for the benefit of members of the force and their families and the families of deceased members of the force; or

(b) to such benefit fund established or as may hereafter be established in the interests of the members of the force or their dependents.

It is proposed to amend that section as follows:

Notwithstanding the provisions of any act inconsistent herewith, all fines and the proceeds of all forfeitures and seizures and all portions of any fine and of any forfeiture or seizure that may be awarded or adjudged to any member of the force in connection with the performance of his duties shall be paid to the minister.

There is no change in that. Here is where the change takes place:

All fees or costs which are ordinarily paid to any member of the force and any remuneration granted to or awarded him by way of salary, commission or fee for duties performed for any department of the federal, provincial or territorial governments or any other organization, or any money whatsoever earned, awarded or granted to him in connection with the performance of his duties over and above his regular salary or pay and allowances as a member of the force, shall be paid to the minister, except cases in which the minister may from time to time otherwise direct, and this subsection shall be deemed to have come into operation on the 1st day of June, 1932.

The change in this section is set out in the explanation submitted by the commissioner of the force and printed with the bill. It reads:

It will be observed from the above quoted section that there is no provision making it obligatory that all amounts of remuneration, commissions or fees such as those granted in the enforcement of provincial or territorial game laws, salaries or commissions to members of the force acting as collectors of customs at remote points and similar moneys granted to other members of the force, such as costs and so forth, shall be paid to the minister for deposit to the benefit trust fund.

It is now considered that all moneys, fees, costs and any remuneration or commission granted to members of the force of whatever nature, over and above their regular salaries or pay and allowances as members of the force should be paid to the minister for deposit to the benefit trust fund and the new section 21 is intended to accomplish this.

The new section is intended to accomplish this.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the present practice with respect to fixing the amount for pension? Is it not done by parliament?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, to some extent. The question of allowances is one that has caused some difficulty. Allowances include house rent where an officer or non-commissioned officer is not living in barracks, and the difference in the value of house rent and barrack accommodation has given rise to considerable confusion and a good many inequalities. The old section 44 provided that an officer who is retired compulsorily for any cause other than misconduct or inefficiency, after ten years' service, shall be entitled to a pension for life not exceeding one-fiftieth of the pay and allowances of his rank or permanent appointment at the time of his retirement for each completed year of service. It may so happen that on account of the exigencies of service two officers of equal rank may be receiving different values in connection with allowances. For example, one officer may be living in government quarters in barracks, rent free, and another in a rented house outside barracks and the value of the accommodation may be entirely different. Again, rations for one officer living in a remote region are naturally more costly than those of an officer living in a comparatively thickly populated section. Under these circumstances, ever since officers of the force were granted the privilege of pensions in 1902, it has been customary for the governor in council to determine from time to time what amounts shall be authorized for allowances. Notwithstanding this, the question recently arose as to whether the police act permitted such a procedure, and the intention of the proposed amendment is to legalize past practice and to remove any doubt in regard to the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In view of what the minister says, it seems that the clause as drafted is misleading. Reading it, one would assume that the governor in council hereafter was to fix the pensions for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The resolution authorizes the governor in council "to determine by regulation the amount of allowance for pension purposes." I understand from the minister now that this is intended to relate only to the matter of allowances apart from or in relation to or in addition to pensions. In other words, it remains with parliament to determine pensions, but the governor in council may determine the allowance in relation to pensions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the meaning?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are some other pension clauses in the bill to which perhaps it has reference. There is provision respecting the counting of service in South Africa by officers and constables for the purposes of pension. That may be what it has reference to.

Mr. VENIOT: I would direct to the attention of the minister the agreement entered into between the provinces and the federal government with respect to the administration of provincial laws by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In a case where the provincial government decides to hand over the administration of the Game Act to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police instead of to the game wardens, the expenses incurred in serving summonses and in connection with travelling will go into the federal fund that is to be established. Under the agreement with the provinces I understand that such amounts go into the provincial and not into the federal fund. If that is the case, this act contravenes the agreement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think it contravenes the agreement in any respect; I cannot see how it does. If the moneys are not payable to the police then the police will not get the gratuities or rewards or whatever they may be; if they are payable, they will get them and the moneys will go into the trust fund. But there are certain classes of cases where I know that the fines do go to the provinces, and over that we have no control.

Mr. VENIOT: I am not talking about fines, but about the expense involved in the service of summonses and in travelling expenses to serve the documents. Under this agreement, instead of going to the official himself it will go into the fund. But under the agreement with the provinces I contend that the money should go to the provinces and not into this fund.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I should not care to decide the matter inasmuch as I have not the agreement before me, but I understand that this has been drawn with strict regard to the agreements.

Mr. MacLEAN: What is the number of men on the force in each of the six provinces?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am sorry I have the figures only for New Brunswick. The question was asked the other day. However, the agreement fixes it in each case and I can get the information for the hon. member when the bill comes down.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister spoke about the difficulty of getting moneys out of the consolidated revenue fund for purposes of the police force. What are these difficulties, and how do other departments obtain revenue for their purposes?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This revenue comes in at certain fixed periods but the expense goes on all the time, and it is very convenient when you need money for upkeep to have it there. Under existing circumstances, it seems that we are not entitled to get it out, just as the other day we had to come for a supplementary amount of $350,000 which had been paid into the consolidated revenue fund. It is all subject to order of the governor in council and cannot be got out otherwise. The expenditure is all accounted for and appears in the Auditor General's report just the same as any other account. It is purely a matter of convenience in financing.

Mr. JACOBS: Is there any arrangement whereby the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police receive part of their salary in the way of informers' fees?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; if they get anything in that respect it goes into the benefit fund. No man is allowed to accept money for his own use. There are, however, certain cases, such as custom's seizures and liquor infractions, where there are payments in the way of rewards, and all such money received by any member of the force must go into the fund.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the member of the force credited in some cases with part of the informer's fees?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He cannot keep it for himself but must transfer it to the fund.

Mr. JACOBS: Then he gets no fees?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No fees himself.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister gave us the amount of money being paid in the different provinces. He mentioned $225,000 in the case of Alberta and $175,000 in Saskatchewan. What are the reasons for the $50,000 extra for Alberta?

Mr. GUTHRIE: In Saskatchewan there is an additional payment of $64,000 for the cost of escort and maintenance of prisoners. The amount paid is $175,000, and for the cost of escort and maintenance of prisoners, $64,181.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Will the minister explain the purpose of the last part of the resolution which makes provision respecting the counting of service in South Africa by officers and constables for the purposes of pension? I should think this would come more properly as an amendment to the Pension Act rather than as part of the provisions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. The first clause of the resolution provides for the transfer of money from the consolidated revenue fund and the second part deals with fees. The last part seems to me an extraordinary provision to incorporate in a bill of this kind.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The clause is quite simple. A certain number of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police did serve in South Africa and the provision now is that if a man served there a year or two, that time should be counted as service in the police force for purposes of pension.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I quite understand that, but I do not see why that is not introduced as an amendment to the Pension Act instead of being embodied in this resolution. When this matter came up in connection with the Militia Act and it was intended that service in South Africa should be counted in computing pensions, this was provided for by an amendment to the Militia Pension Act. I believe the same thing was done as far as the police were concerned. It would be rather awkward to find different provisions in different acts.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is not under the Militia Act or the Militia Pension Act, it is under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. The provision is that a police officer or police constable who served in South Africa may count such service when applying for pension under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Would it not be better to have it as an amendment to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is what it is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the total amount paid by the provinces as their contributions?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I gave the figures by provinces, but I have not the total figure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Could I have an approximate figure?

Mr. GUTHRIE: About $790,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: According to the Minister of Finance as set forth in his budget speech of some days ago, the cost of the mounted police force is going up very rapidly. The yearly costs as given by the minister have been as follows:

1928-29	$2,800,000
1929-30	3,100,000
1930-31	3,192,000
1931-32	3,444,000
1932-33 (estimated)	6,245,000

The last figure is almost double the figure of any previous year. Assuming that the provinces contribute about one million dollars, that contribution would not, if I understand the proposal aright, appear in the estimates presented to the house; all the house would be asked to vote would be an appropriation of $5,000,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We would ask for the full amount which would have to be spent. There is no doubt that the cost of the force has been increasing but the greatest source of increase has been the fact that we have taken over the preventive service of the customs department. Previously the cost of this service was included in the vote for the customs department. We are doing all that work as well as other work under the Migratory Birds Convention Act. The total strength is ninety-eight officers and 2,402 of other ranks, making a total of exactly 2,500. In former years the total strength was between 1,400 and 1,500. The per capita charge this year for all estimates is $2,250 per man. A marine service is carried on in connection with the preventive work, in which are engaged 192 special constables who were taken over from the customs department. Vessels are maintained in this service which were not maintained previously. There are a total of 101 vessels, both sea going and for inland waters. The number of motor cars has been increased to 359, the number of motorcycles to 27, the number of trucks to 13, the number of dogs to 445 while the number of horses is only 256. There are 13 officers and 337 of other ranks engaged in preventive work which with the 192 special constables taken over in the marine section, make a total of 542 men engaged in this service. The total cost of this particular branch of the service is $1,504,104 which should be taken off the total which my right hon. friend quoted.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I understood the minister to say that the estimates provide for the full maintenance of the force including pay and allowances, and everything else. If that is so, what is the use of asking parliament to enact legislation whereby the money paid by the provinces into consolidated revenue shall be made available for the estimates for the police. The minister is asking parliament to authorize him to take out of consolidated revenue whatever sums of money may be paid in by the provinces over and above the ordinary departmental estimates.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But not in addition; it will be part of the money as voted by parliament.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I asked if the full expenses of the force including pay and allowances, maintenance and everything else were provided for by parliament.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are not getting it both ways. It will form part of the money voted by parliament. It is purely a matter of convenience in book-keeping and is not intended to increase the amount in any way.

Mr. MARCIL: Are the mounted police in Quebec engaged solely in the enforcement of federal laws or is there some arrangement with the provincial government?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Solely in the enforcement of federal laws unless their services are requested by the provincial government or any municipal authority.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When voting money for the Canadian National Railways, parliament votes only what is required in addition to what the railways have derived from their own revenues. Is it intended that this shall be a similar course of action, namely. that parliament will be asked to vote a certain amount for the mounted police but that anything which may come in from the provinces will be available in addition?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not in addition; the whole amount required will be submitted to parliament in the estimates.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does the minister propose that he will not draw upon the whole amount voted by parliament if the payments by the provinces make it unnecessary for him to do so?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I propose that the amount submitted in the estimates will be the total of everything that will be spent.

Mr. MALCOLM: But that amount would not be used if there were sufficient payments by the provinces?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I will not use it if I can get it out of consolidated revenue or from any other source. No expenditure will be made which has not been authorized by parliament. It has been represented to me, both by officers in my department and in the Department of Finance, that this is the best way to arrange matters.

Sir EUGENE FISET: When the minister prepares his estimates for the mounted police he must take into consideration the amount of money paid into consolidated revenue by the provinces. He would not be providing for the total amount to be expended for the mounted police. If he should provide for the total amount necessary for the administration of the mounted police he will also be entitled to draw by order in council out of consolidated revenue whatever sums mays have been paid in by the provinces. I assume that if the minister when preparing his estimates takes into consideration the money paid by the provinces, he obtains this from consolidated revenue and then deducts it from the total amount to be provided for in the estimates. He has double authority.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But it does not increase the amount.

Sir EUGENE FISET: If you provide in the estimates for the full amount necessary for the administration of the mounted police, you have that money available for expenditure during the fiscal year, and then, by this act, you have over and above that the authority to draw from consolidated revenue the amount paid to any province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That may be correct. It was not my view, but I shall have to make inquiries and find out if it is so.

Mr. MALCOLM: I would submit that the circumstances are somewhat comparable to those concerning the vote for the Board of Grain Commissioners. The house votes the total requirements for the board, and then the board collects in the form of fees practically all the money voted, and at the end of the year, if they have a surplus, it is returned to the Receiver General. If the minister has available the total requirements for the force, if he has available $6,000,000 and also $2,000,000 paid by the provinces, he would have to return to the Receiver General at the end of the year the amount he received from the provinces. I can see no other conclusion if the legislation is as represented by the minister.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It may be that I was in error in the way I put it; in fact, my hon. friend from Argenteuil says he thinks I was too. The amount of $5,615,000 in the estimates does not include the amount that we are to receive from the provinces.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is different.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But in order to make certain I shall make inquiry.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the intention is not to bring before parliament the total appropriation necessary for the mounted police, I think it would be a mistake to have the resolution carry, but if the minister's view as stated at the outset is correct, then in this particular the matter is merely a matter of bookkeeping or convenience in some direction and exception need not necessarily be taken. But it is important, so far as the mounted police force is concerned, that parliament should have disclosed to it very clearly and fully in discussing matters pertaining to the force and especially proposed appropriations, the full amount that is necessary to be expended. Perhaps we can get these details after the bill is introduced?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, I can give any details on section 1 of the bill when it is under consideration.

Mr. YOUNG: Why is a South African veteran on the mounted police force entitled to a pension for his South African service, while a South African veteran who has not secured a position on the force is not entitled to such a pension? I do not see the justice in it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: One man is continued in the service and the other is not; that is the only difference.

Mr. McINTOSH: The latter part of the resolution is not very clear to me. It says:

—and to make further provision respecting the counting of service in South Africa by officers and constables for the purposes of pension.

May I ask the minister if this provision which is to be applicable in future with respect to calculating the pension of officers and constables who served in the South African war was ever applicable before, or is this something entirely new in the way of pension legislation for South African veterans who now are serving or have served on the mounted police force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is new so far as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are concerned, but the same provision was adopted in regard to the pensions of the permanent force in Canada some years ago, by chapter 133 of the revised statutes.

Mr. McINTOSH: Take the case of a Royal Canadian Mounted policeman who has spent his life in the service, and has been retired on a small pension. Will this clause apply to him so that his pension will be increased?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, we have not decided to do that yet. There is an application before us from the veterans of the mounted police force in which they make some four requests. These are all being considered, but up to the present time it has not been decided to include them. They have many requests to make in respect of pensions. We have changed the rate of pension once or twice in the last ten years, and each time it has been changed they say that they have an equitable claim for increased pensions though they are retired from the force, but up to the present time it has not been found possible to meet their demands in that respect. However, as recently as last week a committee was sitting to consider that question. These men are out of the force and they have received their pension according to the scale to which they were entitled at the time they retired. Now they claim that they should have the benefit of all subsequent amending legislation, but up to the present time that view has not prevailed.

Mr. McINTOSH: Are there not many cases where service in South Africa has not been included at all in calculating the pension of those who have retired from the mounted police force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, there would be very few such cases.

Mr. McINTOSH: I have in mind one or two examples in my own riding where this question has been a live one for many years, and one of my purposes in taking part in this debate is to impress upon the minister the importance of considering these cases. The question has been brought up many times, but no action has been taken by the government.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In their most recent memorial I do not see any reference to South African service. They do refer to service in the civil service which they say should be counted in calculating pension, and they refer to a number of other matters. There may be a few such cases as the hon. member mentions, but I think the number would be very small.

Mr. McINTOSH: Will the minister give consideration to those few cases?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The matter is being considered now by a special committee.

Mr. MALCOLM: What relation is there between the benefit fund and the pension fund?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The benefit fund is a trust fund purely for the relief of those who need relief, and it is so distributed. At Christmas time payments are made from it to the various detachments. Widows are sometimes granted an allowance, and children likewise. The fund is managed by the mounted police force itself, but payments are subject to the approval of the minister before being made.

Mr. MALCOLM: The money is not used to supplement the pension fund?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister said that there would have to be some $64,000 added with respect to the expenditure in Saskatchewan. Does the $225,000 paid by Alberta cover all the charges there?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Guthrie thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 58 to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIALS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Penitentiary Act to provide that the governor in council may appoint a superintendent of penitentiaries; and may appoint such inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and other administrative or executive officers as may be required, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council; and that the superintendent, upon the recommendation of the warden, may appoint such guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers and employees as are necessary, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council; and to make further provisions in respect to gratuities paid to officers on retirement and the widows or dependents of officers who die in the service.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this resolution involves the introduction of a bill which means a departure from the merit system and a return to the discredited patronage system with respect to appointments in connection with the penitentiaries of our country. In a word, it will make political machines out of the penitentiaries, and I want therefore to take very strong exception, at the very outset, to the passage of this resolution.

To begin with it will have an unsettling effect upon the whole civil service of Canada. If this important branch of the civil service is to be withdrawn from the operation of the Civil Service Act, and the control of the Civil Service Commission, it will be but the thin edge of the wedge, the introduction, in other words, of a policy on the part of the administration to withdraw other services from the control of the Civil Service Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite were in office, I believe, at the time provisions of the Civil Service Act were extended to cover some of the outside services, and they will recollect the difficulty there was in getting the measure through the house and the necessity of backing up their efforts by strong public opinion throughout Canada. However, when the act was extended, it was proclaimed as being a distinct reform and very much in the public interest. Although there are certain distinct limitations with respect to the manner in which the Civil Service Commission has operated, nevertheless if we weigh the advantages against the disadvantages, particularly in regard to the great majority of appointments, the argument would be wholly in favour of retaining the merit system and promotion under it, rather than returning to the old system of patronage.

I am informed that if this measure carries it will affect about a thousand individuals in the public service in Canada connected with the penitentiaries. I imagine the number is larger than that, but at least a thousand will be affected. The expenditure in salaries for these individuals runs considerably over a million dollars, according to figures already given to the house. It would be a grave misfortune if we were to permit this retrograde step, especially in the form suggested in the resolution. In the first place, not only does the Civil Service Commission lose control, but to a very considerable extent the government loses control over appointments. As I read the resolution, the superintendent of penitentiaries, upon recommendation of the wardens, makes appointments of guards and other officers, without the government having anything to do with it. There is nothing to prevent a warden bringing all his poor relations to the penitentiary and making them guards under his control. No one knows better than the Minister of Justice that when it comes to matters of patronage it is not so much the minister as the patronage committee in the locality which determines the persons who are to be appointed.

Then there is a very special and strong reason why this departure from the control of the Civil Service Commission should not take place with regard to penitentiaries. The reason is that the penitentiaries themselves are institutions existing for the purpose of reform, and the introduction of a patronage system in regard to appointments generally would be certain to have a very serious effect upon discipline and reforms in the penitentiaries.

With respect to one or two of the senior appointments, for example the appointment of a superintendent or wardens, I believe there may be some good reason why the government itself should take the responsibility for such appointments. I do not believe the Civil Service Commission, operating the way in which our commission has operated in the past with respect to the appointment of some wardens, are doing the work as efficiently as it would be done by the minister himself. I said that before, some time ago, and what has happened since bears out the truth of my statement. That a group of gentlemen, none of whom has any special training or the expert knowledge required in determining the qualifications of a warden of a penitentiary, should undertake such appointments, is a course of procedure certainly open to question. All things considered I believe that concerning important technical positions requiring certain special personal and other qualifications, the minister himself is perhaps better able than the commission to make appointments. But when it comes to the appointment of clerks and guards and other administrative and executive officers as well as those filling minor positions in a penitentiary, I cannot see how the warden is any better qualified than the Civil Service Commission. I should think he might well and should advise the commission with regard to the qualifications of the men under his authority but to leave the making of appointments in his hands is, I believe, a mistake.

I just wish to stress at the outset what has been recognized by the press of all political parties since the resolution appeared on the order paper to be a distinct step backwards and a great misfortune. I was hoping the minister was going to allow the resolution to remain on the order paper until the close of the session, since it had been there already for so long a time. I thought he was paying attention to what seems to be the universal voice of the press with respect to this particular measure. Before we proceed much farther I hope he will be able to give us some reason why he has introduced it at all, let alone why he wishes it to go to the length to which it would appear to go.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I can assure the house that this measure has been brought forward only after very serious consideration not only on the part of myself and officers in my department, but on the part of my colleagues and the senior officers of the penitentiary staff. I am not opposed to the merit system which is recognized under the Civil Service Act of Canada. I supported that measure when it was brought into the house, and I am still prepared to support it. But in my view, and with my perhaps limited experience in penitentiary management I have come to the conclusion that the penitentiary staff is not a civil service staff at all. It is no more a civil service staff than is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the militia force of Canada. Ninety per cent of the penitentiary staff should be considered as a semi-military or semi-police staff, and not a civil service staff at all.

In his remarks my right hon. friend has intimated that he would not be greatly opposed to, or perhaps would approve of, the appointment of the higher officials on the penitentiary staff, notably the superintendent and wardens, by the minister or by His Excellency the Governor General in council. I am glad he made that statement. But from information I have been able to gather, and experience I have had, and advice that has been given to me, it is far more important in regard to the administration of penitentiaries that the guards and minor officials, who have actual contact all the time with the prisoners, should be selected by some authority other than the Civil Service Commission under which they are now appointed. These men, guards in particular, not only have the actual contact with the prisoners, but they are there for the protection of life, not only their own lives and the lives of the staff but the lives of the prisoners as well, and far greater care should be taken in the selection of guards in our penitentiaries than has been exercised under the system that has been in vogue for the past ten or fifteen years. I have been informed that in Great Britain guards are specially selected by a prison commission, not the Civil Service Commission, a prison commission, operating under the Department of Home Affairs I believe. In England they are for the most part military men or men of military experience. Great care is taken in their selection, and they are given a course of training of about six months before they are trusted in penitentiaries with the full status of guards.

In this country under the Civil Service Commission the system which has been adopted in regard to the appointment of guards is entirely different. Application is made to the warden of the penitentiary by any man who desires to become a guard. If the warden is in need of new guards or is likely to be, he can send application forms to the man and notify him to appear before him at the penitentiary, and if the man is able to measure up to the physical requirements as to health, physique and the like, and has a reasonable amount of education, his name is then submitted to the Civil Service Commission in Ottawa. I presume they go over the particulars in the application as they receive it. They never see the applicant, they are never in contact with the applicant at all, but if on the written application he appears to be all right they simply place his name upon an eligible list, saying John Brown stands 92, John Smith 88, someone else 85 and so on according to merit as the Civil Service Commission view it, having never seen the man. That list is returned to the warden, and as vacancies arise on the staff of guards he picks the names according to the rating on the eligible list by the Civil Service Commission.

Now the warden does not feel very much concerned in the original selection. He is not the one who makes the appointment, and he knows it. He simply submits names to the Civil Service Commission. They, without much information other than the written statements on their blanks, make the eligible list and submit it to the warden with instructions to take men as the names appear on that list. I do not exactly understand how these eligible lists are prepared, or how long they are supposed to be in force, but I am told that as many as fifteen or twenty eligible lists have been in force in some of the penitentiaries. The result is that while you may pick two or three from the top of the first list you have to go on down to the inferiors before you can start on the second.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is it not a fact that the eligible list only stands for one year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I thought that, but I found it is not so. At least it does not obtain in all the penitentiaries.

Mr. BOTHWELL: There is a statement on the forms to that effect.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Unless it is renewed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There seems to be some power of renewal, because I know of more than that in existence to-day. However, what I complain of is that there is no proper scrutiny or examination of guards who are appointed and have been appointed to positions in our penitentiaries for many years back. I am inclined to think that a guard should be more than an ordinary caretaker or anything in that line. In the first place he must have the necessary physique, must be a strong, robust man. He must be a man of some education. We have some guards whose education is so slight that I believe all they can do is sign their own name. He must be a man of intelligence and discretion. He must be a man of courage, that is very essential, because he has to deal with many very daring, reckless prisoners. There is a large proportion of very daring prisoners in our institutions at this time. Above all a guard should be a man possessed of an average amount of human sympathy. I do not mean maudlin sentimentality, but human sympathy and discretion. Another thing that I think a man should have to be a good guard is some idea of military training or military discipline. The experience in England has been that the best penitentiary guards are intelligent men who have had military experience. I do not say they are all good, even at that, because they are not.

It has been represented to me in very definite form by the superintendent that the present system of appointment is not satisfactory, and he does not think it can be made satisfactory. He is very insistent that some new method be adopted. In order to avoid the charge that I was returning to political patronage by suggesting such a thing, I framed this resolution in a way that would give the responsibility for appointment to the two men most concerned, that is the warden, who has to look out for the safety of the institution, and above him the superintendent who has to supervise and inspect that institution. Let me give what I think is a parallel case, I refer to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Nominally I am at the head of the administration of that force. Only nominally, for the purpose of bringing measures to parliament, arranging the finances and the like. I never interfere in any way with appointments to the force, with promotions in the force, with the interior working of the force. I have never interfered in any way in the two and a half or three years that I have been in charge of it. I believe that is an ideal system. The officers at the head of that force absolutely control it in every respect so far as appointments, promotions and the like are concerned. And I would like the same system to prevail in regard to the guards and minor officials in the penitentiaries. I think that all instructors, keepers and attendants, as well as guards, should be appointed directly on the recommendation of the warden, approved by the superintendent. The warden then is responsible for his selections. He knows that his own safety, his own life, may some day depend on the courage and discretion of that man whom he is selecting. Within at the most two months that man will also be inspected by the superintendent. But he does not have to wait two months, under the scheme which the superintendent has laid before me. He says, "If the warden certifies that he has examined the man and he is satisfied, then I will let him remain there temporarily until I have a chance of interviewing him myself, which would be on my first visit to the institution in question." Between the two I believe they would select satisfactory men. I think, of course, the inclination would be to carry out the Civil Service Act in regard to returned men, because I know that the superintendent has the view, and I would have the view myself, that returned men who are now entitled to preference, will probably in most cases make the most satisfactory guards and attendants in our penitentiaries.

Having asked in this resolution and in the bill which will be presented to this house that the immediate staffs in the peniteniaries be appointed by the warden or superintendent without let, hindrance or approval from myself or anyone else, I think we will establish a far better system, will obtain far more efficient and trustworthy guards and will meet any criticism that might be offered with regard to political partisanship, and we will adopt in every essential the merit system. We will only take men who are capable of fulfilling all the requirements I have mentioned, and their promotion will depend upon their own efforts.

In regard to the higher appointments, the inspectors and the superintendent, I agree with my right hon. friend; I believe that I or my successor would be just as well qualified to appoint a superintendent, after having looked over the field, as would the Civil Service Commission. I do not feel so much concerned about those appointments as I do about the guards and minor members of the staff, but I agree with my right hon. friend that the minister in charge can make just as good a selection of the higher officials as can the Civil Service Commission. One great difficulty which I think every department experiences in regard to civil service appointments is the delay, the correspondence, and what some people describe as the red tape. It takes months to get a position filled. The advertisement must be current for four or five weeks; then a committee is appointed to examine the applicants. They meet and adjourn, meet and adjourn, meet and adjourn; it becomes intolerable. It is true that in the Penitentiary Act there is a provision for emergency appointments for thirty days when an emergency arises, and acting under that provision last fall the superintendent appointed a temporary warden at Kingston penitentiary. That position since has been made permanent by the Civil Service Commission. Then it became important to appoint two inspectors to take the places of inspectors who had been retired for the improvement of the service; perhaps one appointment has been made, but up to the present time the other certainly has not been filled. The advertisements have been current; the examinations have been held; the committee of examiners has been appointed. They have met and adjourned, met and adjourned, and this morning I was told they had made selections.

This is all very inconvenient in connection with penitentiaries and in dealing with the class of people confined therein. I believe my right hon. friend was quite correct when he stated that in his opinion the higher positions might be filled on the recommendation of the minister, or by his excellency the governor general in council. However, I do feel that the pronouncements of the wardens and of the superintendent are so definite in regard to the question of guards that hereafter the guards should be appointed in the manner set forth in this resolution. I do not ask for any power in this matter for myself or my department, but I do ask that the power be conferred upon the superintendent and the wardens of the various institutions, and that is practically all that is contained in this resolution.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): I will reserve any extended remarks until the bill is introduced, so that we may know exactly what is before us, but let me say at the outset that I am absolutely and irrevocably opposed to any resolution or any bill that may be based thereon.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just on a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I thought I closed the debate, though perhaps I did not.

Mr. SPEAKER: The minister did not speak on the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I thank the hon. minister for his courtesy in not pressing his point as I said, Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely opposed to any departure from the merit system. The minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) may not feel that this is such a departure, but I feel very strongly that it is. The minister says this resolution is introduced after having been given very serious consideration by the officials of the penitentiaries branch and of the Department of Justice. That may be so, but the minister proceeded to say that the penitentiaries staff is not a civil service staff but is of a quasi-military nature. Well, what about the militia department and the naval department? We might go into some other lines of activity in the various departments that are of a similar character. For instance, if the wardens protect life and the property of the government what about the life guards, who also protect life on our coasts? For such a difficult position as a life guard or a lightkeeper the Civil Service Commission still has jurisdiction, and I think quite properly so.

I have stated in this house time and again, that the blame for the administration of the law is not to be placed on the commissioners; the blame must be placed upon the members of this house for having framed a civil service law that is far from adapted to the ends it was designed to serve, and the absolute reluctance of this and former houses to amend that law in accordance with prevailing conditions.

Every time some of us have stood up and advocated amendments to the civil service law in order to make it more pliable, better to meet the exigencies of the situation we have been accused of wanting to return to patronage. As the minister has said, there have been delays, but after all those who are charged with the administration of a law can only discharge their duties according to the terms of that law. If we give to the civil service commissioners, whoever they may be, a proper law, then if they do not administer it to our satisfaction we can blame them.

It may be quite true that the selection of wardens and guards is carried on to-day in a very cumbersome manner, but let me point out some of the difficulties under which the commission must labour. I have before me this joke book, the classification of 1919, under which most of the appointments complained of by the minister were made. Let us see what are the qualifications set out for the superintendent of penitentiaries, and let me remind the house that the Civil Service Commission cannot appoint anyone to that position unless he possesses the qualifications here contained, which are as follows:

Superintendent of penitentiaries; qualifications: Education equivalent to graduation from a university of recognized standing; several years of administrative experience in reformatory work—

You would think the superintendent of a penitentiary would have to have been a convict at one time.

—thorough familiarity with criminology and the administration of penal institutions; executive ability.

Where will the minister or the Civil Service Commission find a suitable man while they are bound by these qualifications? I think it was silly to include qualifications of this kind, but the minister and this parliament only have to change these qualifications and say what they think should be the type of man appointed to this position. Then the Civil Service Commission can find such a man. What are the qualifications of wardens? The Civil Service Commission cannot appoint anyone unless he has the qualifications set out here, and he would probably be worthless as a warden if appointed under these conditions. But do not blame the commission for trying to find men who have these qualifications. Let me quote the qualifications:

Education equivalent to high school graduation and preferably university training.

University training! If the best qualified man happened to appear before the board as constituted by the Civil Service Commission under the regulations and he did not have university training or high school education, though he might be the best warden in the world, they would not appoint him. In addition to that, it is provided that he shall have:

Five years of prison experience—

Fortunately they add these words:

—in a supervisory capacity or experience of similar character and standard; familiarity with criminology and prison problems; administrative ability.

You cannot blame the Civil Service Commission for appointing men who may not be fitted for their position if you insist upon their demanding these qualifications, and tell them that this is the yardstick by which applicants must be measured, the rule by which they shall be appointed. I think it is unfair to say that the commission is unable to make proper appointments so long as we do not provide them with the means whereby to make the best selections. Such criticism cannot be justified. I shall not read the whole of the qualifications for the various kinds of guards, but they are all set out, beginning at page 394 of this joke book for which the Civil Service Commission itself is not at all responsible, because the responsiblity lies with the Griffenhagens and their satellites. This book was forced upon the civil service in 1919 by hon. gentlemen opposite. The act was passed in 1918 to abolish patronage and in 1919, after the Griffenhagens had compiled this joke book, these classifications came into force—classifications absolutely unnatural and not adapted to the civil service.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who were the Griffenhagens?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Ask the civil servants who they were. They were American experts, so-called, who at that time ruined the civil service. May I say in passing, that if there are so many difficulties to-day in connection with the civil service in the way of classification it is because the whole system of classifying the service was placed at the outset on a most unnatural basis by men who should never have been called in. The whole trouble to-day with the classification of the civil service lies in the fact that it was placed on that false basis, and government after government has been endeavouring to offset the harm done. The whole thing having been placed on an utterly improper basis, however, it is fearfully difficult to remedy the situation.

What do we find so far as guards are concerned? Let us take the industrial guard-baker. These are his qualifications:

Primary school education; at least two years of experience as a baker and ability to instruct others in bakery work;

Two years of experience as a baker—that is probably the best qualification set out in the whole book. The other qualifications are these:

ability to understand and manage prisoners; strength and agility; honesty and sobriety.

You have the same sort of qualifications all through in the case of each of these positions: Industrial guard-blacksmith; industrial guard-brickmaker; industrial guard-carpenter; industrial guard-cook; industrial guard-farmer; industrial guard-housekeeper (female); industrial guard (mail bag repairs); industrial guard-mason; industrial guard-miner; industrial guard-plumber, and so on.

Is it to be wondered that there may have been appointed, as no doubt there were, men who have not given satisfaction in the discharge of their duties? But again I say, you must not blame the Civil Service Commission. An hon. gentleman says that it might be well for the superintendent and warden to be appointed by the minister himself. There is a good deal in that, and I have very often given matters of this kind serious consideration. But if it applies to a high officer, the superintendent of penitentiaries, and to wardens, why not apply it also to all other departments in the case of technical men? That question is as old as the Civil Service Act itself—the suggestion that the minister or deputy minister should have discretion in the appointment of technical men. With that I have not very much quarrel; indeed, I have a good deal of sympathy with that proposition. At the same time however I do think that the best method is to give the Civil Service Commission the power of selecting these men and to give them working capacity. If the commission were granted these powers they could fill such positions just as well as the minister himself.

There is another feature of this resolution which I do not like:

. . . may appoint such guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers and employees as are necessary, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council.

That is not a fair proposition, that the governor in council should determine the rates of pay, because they might discriminate here and there, whereas under the Civil Service Act the rates are uniform and everyone knows exactly how much he is going to get, so that there is no favouritism. But here is another objectionable proposal:

And to make further provisions in respect to gratuities paid to officers on retirement and the widows or dependents of officers who die in the service.

After long years of toil we have been able to insert in the statute books of this country an excellent superannuation law for the civil service, a law which is not yet perfect but which has been of great benefit to civil servants. With a few more modifications it will be probably one of the best superannuation laws in the world. Why not bring these officers under that superannuation law? Let them be civil servants within the terms of the Civil Service Act and let the civil service law apply to them.

When the bill comes up for second reading and when it is in committee of the whole, I shall have a few more observations to make on the subject.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to oppose the passing of the resolution. I suggest that though the Minister of Justice made an excellent and plausible speech on introducing it, he has not yet shown the house full justification for this measure rather than for an intelligent and rational amendment of the Civil Service Act and the appointment of a strong and effective commission. The minister closed his speech on a note of petulance with regard to the alleged delays of the commission in making appointments. They met, he said, and adjourned, and met and adjourned, and the country waited. I submit to him that this government is emulating only too well this dilatory characteristic of the Civil Service Commission. It would, I think, have been proper for the administration to appoint a new commission long before this late date. If the commission itself be at fault from the point of view of delays, this government is certainly setting it no good example.

I regret the introduction of this resolution because it is just one more of the many steps that I have seen governments of both parties take since I have come to parliament. Sometimes it is in the form of estimates and at other times it is in the form of legislation. Now it is a direct amendment of the Civil Service Act, still further emasculating the act, vitiating it, and destroying its influence in the country. It is not good enough for the minister to tell the house that he is in favour of the merit principle. That does not justify the resolution which is the opposite to the merit principle in so far as the civil service is concerned. There is no question in my mind that the passing of this resolution will lead to an amendment which will result in the restoration of the old type of patronage in penitentiaries. Nay, it will go even further than that; as has been pointed out already this afternoon, it will place the power of appointment in the hands of the warden or the superintendent. Step by step we see the Civil Service Act being destroyed. I wonder how many more governments there will have to be before it finally passes upon its sad way.

Mr. McGIBBON: It should have passed long ago.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Both parties are to blame, for in both parties, as in the case of the hon. gentleman who has just interjected, there are those who have never believed in the Civil Service Act or in the merit principle as applied to political appointments. There has always been the frank philosophy that to the victor belongs the spoils.

In 1919 this country definitely changed that principle when it placed upon the statute books what I regard as perhaps one of the greatest contributing and constructive efforts ever made by any Conservative government, but this year, as well as last year, the present government is attempting to destroy the effectiveness of the Civil Service Act. It may be true that the act itself has not been wholly successful, but that is due largely to the fact that the administration of the act has not received at the hands of succeeding governments the full understanding and support of the principles upon which the act is supposed to be based. The minister who introduced this resolution has given to the house a general statement of the objections which have been raised to the methods of appointment. This is the first time I knew that the character of the men nominated under the present method has not been up to the mark. Warden Ponsford of Kingston penitentiary has remarked that the substitution of the merit for the patronage system in penitentiary appointments has been the great single step yet taken to effect improvements in the present system in Canada. If improvements are necessary, they should be made but they should not be made by destroying the machinery which a previous parliament has set up and which requires only the necessary enlargement or modification to make it work adequately. The fault in the administration of the act lies not in the principle underlying the act but in the way in which that principle has been modified, qualified, submerged and crushed out of existence by the politicians of both parties. I do not place the blame in this regard upon any one party. I have mentioned Warden Ponsford but I wonder if the minister has studied the evidence given by General Hughes before a civil service committee of this house. In reply to a query by a then cabinet minister as to whether he would prefer to select men for prison guard work or have the selection made by the Civil Service Commission, General Hughes said, "I would prefer they would do it, very much". The evidence continues:

Q. Why?

A. Under the system in which they appoint them it gives our warden practically full control over them, because it gives our warden an opportunity to see whether they are satisfactory to him or not, and if they are not he has only to let them go. Under the old system if we were saddled with a bad man, we would have to keep him.

General Hughes stated that if they were saddled with a bad man, they had to keep him because otherwise they would offend the committees of political patronagemongers who were involved in the appointment. The evidence continues?

Q. Under the system none of the officials of the government has power to dismiss him?

A. I would not say that.

Q. What would you say?

A. You could not dismiss a man unless you had something on him.

And again:

Q. Is it the policy and the purpose that men shall join the penitentiary service at the bottom and that thereafter as far as possible all higher positions shall be filled from the men in the penitentiary service?

A. That is the only sensible policy.

Q. Do you support it?

A. Yes, and we are able to pretty well work that out in so far as our discipline of the staff is concerned under the Civil Service Commission, but we never were before. May I tell you something? Some years ago we had a deputy wardenship vacant in one penitentiary.

Q. Where?

A. Please don't ask me where. And the Minister of Justice who was then in charge, is now dead. He sent for me to ask me something or another about the duties of the position. I was taken here to his red room in the Senate where I had an hour or so private conversation with him, and he said to me: "They ask me for a commission to make some vacancies in order to give them an opportunity to let some of their political followers get a job. They got a commission and they made eleven (if I think correctly) vacancies, and the first thing the executive, the political executive of the town in which the penitentiary was situated, did was to recommend me a greengrocer for the position of deputy warden."

Q. A grocer in the business of selling vegetables?

A. I am repeating exactly as he made the statement to me.

That is the kind of thing which happened under the old patronage system but no complaint of a similar character has been lodged since the enactment of the Civil Service Act. At the present time I think there are six penitentiaries in Canada with about 965 employed. At the time General Hughes was giving evidence there were seven penitentiaries with 416 employees. Those employees took care of 2,340 inmates while the present 965 employees take care of 4,164 inmates. The type of guard employed should be of the highest possible quality and this resolution proposes that the superintendent upon the recommendation of the warden shall have the appointment of guards and those to fill other minor positions. At the present time the warden recommends the appointment of a guard in which the Civil Service Commission concurs. We are simply supplanting the Civil Service Commission with a politically appointed superintendent.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not right.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Any appointment made by a government is a political appointment.

Mr. SPENCE: Try and get one in somewhere.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The present superintendent was appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not talking about the present superintendent, I am talking about what is going to happen if this resolution should pass. We will have a politically appointed superintendent passing upon recommendations for appointment made by the wardens. The thing is perfectly absurd. I believe the minister is sincerely interested in the merit principle but I appeal to him to offset any complaints made as to the administration of the act by the strengthening of the act and by placing upon the commission those men who are best qualified to fill the position.

The records of this house show that in the past we have not been wise in these appointments. We are inclined to blame any maladjustments or misfits in the service on the Civil Service Commission and on the Civil Service Act itself, when we should really blame it on the personnel of the commission. In closing these brief remarks at this stage of the discussion I would draw to the minister's attention the words of his own leader the Prime Minister of Canada, then in opposition, speaking on September 30, 1930.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIALS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Mr. Guthrie that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Penitentiary Act to provide that the governor in council may appoint a superintendent of penitentiaries; and may appoint such inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and other administrative or executive officers as may be required, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council; and that the superintendent, upon the recommendation of the warden, may appoint such guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers and employees as are necessary, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council; and to make further provisions in respect to gratuities paid to officers on retirement and the widows or dependents of officers who die in the service.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when I was so rudely interrupted by representatives of another place I was just about to quote the words of the Prime Minister. In respect of civil service matters he is reported as having said:

> By personal investigation I have come to the conclusion that the fair way to deal with the civil service is, first, to appoint to the Civil Service Commission a member of the civil service;

Well, he has had two whole years to do it —he has really had three, but certainly he has had two since the house decided it was time to get rid of the old commission. Then, to continue the report:

> Second, to maintain the merit system and rigidly adhere to it, something the present administration has not done.

I most assuredly say that this bill, and the action of the committee on civil service matters of last year would indicate that the Prime Minister and the government is not at all averse to further despoiling the Civil Service Act and disregarding the merit system in regard to civil service appointments.

I most earnestly urge upon the minister that he reconsider the whole matter and not press the resolution to a vote, much less introduce a bill this year.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am rising at this time to oppose the passage of the measure. I certainly am opposed to any departure from the merit system. No matter what fault may be found with it, or no matter what fault the minister may see in it it is still the better system. I maintain if there are any defects in the present civil service appointments, they should be remedied. To leave appointments entirely in the hands of one man would be a retrograde step. I am not sure whether the minister is perfectly correct when he says that in the past the warden had no say regarding appointments. The minister told the house that the list was first selected by the Civil Service Commission, and that from the list, according as the men were rated, appointments were made. I think that is hardly correct, because I know of men who did apply, and although they had the necessary civil service requirements, it had been found by the warden that there was something against them or that they were not suitable. I know that on the advice of the warden those men did not receive appointments. Speaking particularly for British Columbia, I believe the wardens have had a keen eye on the appointments made by the Civil Service Commission. I doubt very much if men were given appointments just because they were the proper height and had the necessary educational qualifications. My information is that the warden sizes up the men, and that he has been in the habit of sending recommendations along with the list, stating that Jim Jones would be eligible, but that Sam Hill would not and so on. It is easy to see what may happen if the proposed legislation becomes effective. I do not believe for a moment that it is the intention of the present minister that this should take place, but it could very well be that a warden could dismiss half or the whole of the men there and then hire others. It may well be that the warden himself could lose his position and a military man be put there, and that he could or would employ all military men. Complete new staffs could be appointed if this resolution went through as proposed by the minister. There might be also wholesale dismissals. Then another point; if there were wholesale dismissals, what about those men who have been paying to the superannuation fund less than ten years? There would be difficulty and hardship regarding that. It might be possible that military organizations could be put in charge of a penitentiary, and the procedure might even go to the extent of appointing visiting commonwealth forces to take charge. And further, say, a military man was given an appointment in a penitentiary, he might deem it advisable, if one of the commonwealth forces were in this country, to have the force for the time being in charge of the penitentiary. That is a possibility. Anything could happen. There is no restriction of any kind as long as it meets with the approval of the minister or of the warden.

Then the minister spoke about the course of training, and mentioned the old country. I think training is very desirable. But the course of training would not amount to much if a new warden were appointed and wanted to dismiss most of the men in the organization. The fact that they had experience would not count for much if they did not meet with the approval of the warden who had been appointed.

There are other requisites besides courage. Courage I know is very important, especially during these times when we are dealing with a class of prisoner which is inclined to be revolutionary, if one should use that expression. But something more than punishment should be kept in view in confining men in penitentiaries. There is also the matter of endeavouring to fit them for reestablishment in civil life. A guard or instructor may have courage, he may have military training, but that would not mean that he would have any kindliness towards the prisoner. At this stage I do not intend to say any more but I am certainly going to oppose this bill because I think it is a retrograde step. Many hon. members on the other side when they were in opposition voiced their objection to anything tending to a return to patronage, but now it seems, according to their "hear, hear's," that it would be all right. I do not understand how they can reconcile the two positions.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): I rise to say a few words in opposition to this resolution, because it is another step towards taking away from the returned soldiers the preference provided for them in the Civil Service Act. They have had this preference for a number of years, and certainly there is no one who has complained of it. We had evidence a few days ago that this government is prepared to go a long way in cutting down the privileges of returned men, when, in introducing the budget, it announced that those in the civil service drawing pensions would have their pensions stopped. In this resolution we find it carried another stage, the government will be able to appoint whom they will without regard to the preference provided in the Civil Service Act for returned men. It is within my recollection that last year or the year before when certain postmasters were allowed to be appointed outside of the Civil Service Act we retained the preference to returned men. So may I urge upon the minister that when he introduces this bill he insert a clause giving to the returned men the preference provided in the Civil Service Act. I think that is fair and will meet with the approval of this house and the country generally. I urge that upon the favourable consideration of the minister.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish also to protest against the passing of this resolution and the bill that will be based upon it. There are two methods by which appointments to the civil service of this country can be made, one the patronage system, which we had prior to the appointment of the Civil Service Commission, the other appointment by merit, which has been more or less in effect since the setting up of the commission in 1919. However, every year since that time various groups have been taken from under the control of the Civil Service Commission, and this is an attempt to take yet another group away.

We can well understand the position that the Minister of Justice finds himself in at the present time; owing to the difficulties of the times a great strain is being put upon the penitentiaries and those who conduct them. There is no doubt about that. Possibly they find the situation difficult to cope with. But it does not at all follow that the method of appointment of the staff is the cause of the difficulty, and it does not at all follow that if the appointments are made in some other way the difficulties will be removed. I maintain that if appointments made at the present time are not satisfactory the wardens are to blame, and that the situation will not be improved if more power of selection is put in the hands of the wardens.

When applications are received by the commission they are considered by an advisory board, on which the penitentiary branch is represented. Obviously unqualified applicants are eliminated, and those whom the board recommends as apparently suitable are called up for oral examination, at which examination the warden of the penitentiary concerned is in attendance. The board recommend the candidates whom they find qualified. Up to this time the warden has in every instance concurred in the findings of the oral examination board, which consists of himself, a representative of the Civil Service Commission, and, in cases where the applicant or any of them are veterans, a representative of the Canadian Legion. So that if the guards or any of the employees engaged have not been of a sufficiently high standard it is due to the wardens themselves certifying as suitable men who are unfit. Besides, there is another safeguarding clause, that the person selected may be dismissed any time within six months of his appointment; so the superintendent may have opportunity of ascertaining the fitness or otherwise of the person so taken on before his appointment becomes permanent. I believe that gives all the opportunity possible for the selection of properly qualified guards in the penitentiaries. However, I should like to point out that if the commission does not function as it should, or as we think it should, I believe the commission could be improved. Last year I had the honour to be a member of a special committee of this house that investigated the Civil Service Commission and, as has been said already, recommendations were made by that committee suggesting the retirement of that commission and the appointment of new members. Up to the present time this has not taken place.

There is another point to which I should like to direct attention, and I believe this is one of the most serious matters facing the people of this country. I refer to the statement of the minister that the staffs of the penitentiaries should be considered as semi-military. My understanding is that penitentiaries are places where men who have been tried by civil courts, under civil procedure, are placed for safe keeping or correction. The extension of militarism in this country is going on apace. One day we have the appointment of mounted police as truant officers; then we have their appointment as game wardens, and now we are to have our penitentiaries militarized. Soon I am afraid the civil courts may be abolished and we will have military court martials instead of the ordinary civil procedure if this government remains in power much longer.

I protest against this move, because I do not think it is necessary. I believe the Civil Service Commission is the body best qualified to make appointments to any part of the civil service.

Mr. JEAN: I should like to ask the minister a question before making up my mind in connection with this resolution. Will the act provide for a bilingual superintendent and bilingual officers so far as the province of Quebec is concerned?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I should say yes.

Mr. JEAN: Even with regard to the superintendent?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. ARTHUH DENIS (St. Denis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the resolution under consideration is certainly worthy of our attention, and had it to a greater extent pledged the responsibility of the government, I would have been disposed to congratulate them. I think that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) should have assumed the responsibility of appointing not only the superintendent of penitentiaries, the inspectors, wardens and deputy wardens, but also the guards and other employees.

According to the views expressed in this respect, some members are under the impression that the hon. Minister of Justice, by this resolution, wishes to set aside the system of appointing officers according to their qualifications. I think that the merit system in respect to guards can be applied just as well by an official of the department as by outside officials who are not connected with that department. It behooves ministers to assume full responsibility for such appointments. Reference is made to favouritism, it still exists under the Civil Service Commission, however, it is concealed. The time has come when all such hidden practice should disappear in the administration of public affairs, we should proceed openly. Ministers of the crown should assume the responsibility of appointing the officials of their department, and later on when called upon, give an account to the people of such appointments.

As far as I am concerned, I would approve of this resolution, if its powers were more extensive, and I trust that when the bill comes before the committee, certain amendments will be introduced in order to allow the minister to assume the responsibilities which are incumbent to his office and later on give an account of it to the people.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I should like to ask the minister if he has received the commendation of the civil service federation in connection with this measure.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Am I at this stage entitled to speak again?

Mr. SPEAKER: The house is not now in committee. Hon. members speaking to the resolution may do so once only.

Mr. McINTOSH: Then may I say that so far as I am concerned I have learned of a good deal of opposition to the move the minister is contemplating, and that opposition comes from practically every civil servant in the riding of North Battleford. These civil service locals have asked me to make the minister aware of this fact. I am doing so to-day; I am giving that echo of opposition to the minister in the hope that he may decide to change the bill even at this late date.

So far as this measure is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I believe it will be detrimental to the civil service in general. We have no national civil service council; no constitution for such a body has been worked out or put into effect. So, while this action will meet with much opposition, that opposition will not be so strong as it would have been if this national council had been in existence. Therefore, in opposing the move of the government, I am expressing the opposition of civil service locals in the federal riding of North Battleford.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): I should like to read one or two opinions into the record in connection with the resolution now before the house. I am not convinced that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) made out a case for the transfer of the responsibility for these appointments from the Civil Service Commission to the superintendent and the wardens of the penitentiaries. I have before me a report in connection with the recent disturbances in the Kingston penitentiary. In the conclusions drawn in that report there is no recommendation of any kind that might lead the government to adopt this policy.

The minister said that these guards should be considered as a semi-military body. We must appreciate this fact, that the discipline of a military body has been built up with hundreds of years of back-ground. I am not convinced that, should this policy be adopted, we shall not very soon have once more the old state of political patronage. I have here a statement made by the superintendent of penitentiaries for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1926. At page 15 he has this to say:

The greatest drawback to our Canadian penitentiaries in past years, before the Civil Service Commission made appointments, was by the appointment of wardens and other administrative officers, without any experience or training in penitentiaries or knowledge of the criminal and his methods. . . . All that was necessary was that they required the position and it suited those in power to appoint them.

With further reference to the question of political pressure in connection with the appointment of officers to the penitentiaries, I would read part of an interview which appeared in Collier's Weekly, as copied in the Ottawa Citizen of February 23, 1927. Mr. William G. Shepherd, a special representative of that American magazine, interviewed the superintendent of Kingston penitentiary for the purpose of comparing American and Canadian prison methods. After outlining the state of affairs in the country to the south of us, where politics rather than merit predominated in the appointment of officials to the penitentiaries, he asked the question, "Are affairs like that in Canada?" The interview goes on:

"I'm glad you asked me that," said the Canadian superintendent. "There was a time here when wardens had to accept the guards who were sent to them. Politicians picked the guards."

"I remember, years ago, a guard who was put into a penitentiary position by a powerful politician. He was an ex-inmate, with a long, bad record. But the politician insisted, and a certain warden had to make a place for him. As was anticipated, within a few months the ex-inmate yielded to the temptation to handle money for prisoners."

"I saw that, no matter how good our plans might be for turning our penitentiaries into factories where we could turn out good men as well as good factory products, we would have to have honest guards, under the absolute rule of honest wardens."

"To-day our officers are selected by the Civil Service Commission. Their standard is high."

I verified this at Kingston penitentiary. I have never seen, in any American prison, such clean-cut young men in the corridors as I saw about the Kingston institution.

I have been in American prisons where wardens did not dare to discipline certain of their own guards who were special pets of powerful politicians. No wonder they were failing in the effort to run their prisons in orderly fashion and to discipline prisoners when necessary.

In Kingston penitentiary, under the superintendent's direction, which extends to all penitentiaries in Canada, Warden Ponsford exerts, it seemed to me, even more discipline over the guards than he does over the prisoners themselves.

"If you ask me," explained the superintendent, "to say what is the greatest boon toward advancement that has taken place in connection with the management of Canadian penitentiaries, I would have to say: The change in the method of appointment of officers: in other words, the taking of the authority to appoint out of the hands of the local politicians and placing it under the control of the Civil Service Commission."—William G. Shepherd in Collier's Weekly.

I think that substantiates the statements of hon. members who have spoken in opposition to the principle of this measure. Last year we saw that nearly four thosuand men who had previously been under the jurisdiction of the commission were placed within the purview of party patronage, and I am not so sure that the policy which the government contemplates will not work in an entirely opposite direction to that which the minister anticipates. I am absolutely opposed to the proposed change in policy.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On division.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee on the resolution, Mr. Smoke in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can the minister give an estimate of the number of officials who are likely to be affected?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know that anyone can estimate how many are to be affected, nor do I know that any retirements are contemplated. I know that within the past three months a number of inefficient officials have been retired for the greater efficiency of the service. I do not think that at the present time there is any particular case in contemplation at all. Permit me to say that I think the suggestions which have been made in regard to retirements have been rather extravagant.

It has been suggested that if this bill is passed as drawn it will be within the power of the superintendent and the wardens practically to retire the whole staff and appoint a new one. To my mind that is an unreasonable suggestion. This proposal gives power to the superintendent and the warden to appoint all the minor officials, the administrative officials in the penitentiary itself. I submit that this is an endorsation of the merit and not at all of the political system. The warden will be the man at first responsible for applications and passing on the applicant, and if the applicant passes muster with him he will be put on for temporary appointment only until he has been tried out and approved by the superintendent.

The proposal of the superintendent in regard to guards is as follows. When a man has been accepted he shall undergo a course of training, that training to take place during his employment in the penitentiary establishment. It will last from three to six months before he is considered a fully equipped guard. That I believe is the term of instruction in Great Britain. It is also suggested that for the purpose of giving these guards training the wardens shall hold classes in the institution at the outset. One of the greatest deficiencies in the present guards is their lack of familiarity with the ordinary rules and regulations of the institutions. Many of them who have been there for a considerable time are not yet fully up on their own regulations. Another thing which in the opinion of the superintendent is very important is the lack of any training in the use of firearms. The superintendent, who of course has been trained in military work, has told me that on visiting various institutions he found that very few guards had any knowledge whatever of firearms. He said it was dangerous to be with them when they tried to explain an ordinary rifle or to load it. Many do not know how to load a rifle. We have had one or two accidents in the penitentiaries—I do not mean in the riots—in connection with the use of firearms by guards. They are almost totally inefficient in that respect. Firearms are dangerous things and some training in their use is necessary. It is anticipated that the Department of National Defence will be in a position to let us have the loan for a limited time of certain instructors to instruct the guards in the various penitentiaries at least in the elementary principles of the use of firearms. The wardens themselves will conduct classes with regard to prison regulations and special guards will be appointed to see that new guards are properly instructed in the handling of prisoners. After a probationary term of from three to six months it can be decided whether or not the proposed guard measures up to the requirements.

It was rather a surprise to me to find out that both the wardens and the superintendent placed considerable emphasis upon the guards and other minor officials in the prison establishments. It was found during the recent riots in Montreal, in Kingston and in New Brunswick that many of the guards were quite unable to cope with the situation confronting them. They did not know what to do. A fire took place at St. Vincent de Paul and it was found that there had been little or no fire drill in that institution. There had been practically none at Kingston but fortunately no fire occurred there. These are matters to which the superintendent attaches great importance.

Apart from all this, there is the safety of the prisoners themselves. A reckless or careless guard may do things in a moment of excitement which he would not do otherwise. As I say, there have been one or two instances where lives have been sacrificed by the careless use of weapons by guards. It is felt by the higher officials that the best system is that proposed by this measure. I expected that the charge would be levelled that patronage was breaking into this matter, but I think I am within the mark when I say that there is absolutely no patronage in the case of the mounted police. If we can have an establishment in our penitentiaries comparable to the mounted police, to my mind we would have almost an ideal system. It has been suggested that under the present system the wardens select the guards. That is not so. The wardens know that they have not that power and in most cases their examination of the prospective guards is rather perfunctory and not as complete as it should be. It was discovered recently that we had taken on two active communists as guards in one of our penitentiaries.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Were they appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They were placed upon the eligible list by the commission. Of course, they were immediately released. I do not say that the same thing will not happen in exceptional cases under the system now proposed, but the object of this measure is to improve the morale, the discipline and the welfare of the prisoners, as well as the prisons themselves. It is intended to do this with a merit system entirely divorced from political patronage. That is the reason why this rather exceptional power is to be given to the wardens and the superintendent instead of to the governor in council.

A moment ago my hon. friend from North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) asked whether the Amalgamated Association of Civil Servants supported this measure. I received a communication from a Mr. Knowles—I believe he is the secretary of the association—protesting against this measure. Through the efforts of Mr. Knowles I received similar protests shortly afterwards from civil servants in almost every quarter of Canada. They seem to imagine that they are a law unto themselves and that the Civil Service Commission is their sheet anchor. They seem to think that no one can offer an amendment to the present system without their consent. I do not agree with that. The penitentiary officials are not members of the Amalgamated Association of Civil Servants; they have never been admitted to and have never desired to join with that association. Practically all the resolutions which I received were the same and probably they were drawn up in Ottawa and sent out through the country. I have great respect for the civil service of Canada but I do not think that they should dominate the judgment or will of this parliament. I take them for what they are worth, as representatives of an interested body, but if I feel that I can improve the system, I am quite willing to do so even at the risk of offending the Amalgamated Association of Civil Servants.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister will admit that the representatives of the civil servants have a perfect right to protest to the department in connection with a policy of this kind?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I certainly do, and I have acknowledged receipt of their protests. There are many positions in the governmental service which are not under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. The late government, I think with the assistance of my vote, appointed a large number of preventive officers. I think there were some six or seven hundred such officers, three hundred and fifty of which are now in the mounted police. None of these men come under the Civil Service Commission. In the Department of National Revenue there is a large staff of appraisers who are not appointed by the commission. There are a large number of employees in the Department of Finance in a similar position. The employees of the Soldier Settlement Board and of the department presided over by my hon. friend the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) are not subject at all to the Civil Service Commission. The members of the military forces and the mounted police, the employees of the tariff board, the radio commission and the research council also do not come under the commission. There is no new departure suggested by this measure. This organization is more a police than a civil organization and there is every reason why some latitude should be given to these prison officials. For these reasons I think I can fairly ask that this measure be passed by the committee.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

53719—225½

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CHEVRIER: When the committee took recess the hon. Minister of Justice had given further explanations about this resolution, and among other things he said that the reason why this resolution was introduced upon which later legislation may be based was that it had been found with regard to the penitentiary guards that there was a lack of knowledge of the rules of the penitentiary, a lack of knowledge of firearms, and a lack of knowledge of the care of prisoners. That may all be true, and with that I have no quarrel, although it would be unfortunate if it were so. But I say that the responsibility for that condition is misplaced. As I pointed out this afternoon, these appointments were made by the Civil Service Commission, and they made the appointments under the conditions I pointed out. The Civil Service Commission measured the qualifications of these men by a measure which had been given them, over which they had no control, and if that measure was defective in producing the type of man required it was no fault of the Civil Service Commission. This resolution is introduced, the minister says, for the purpose of appointing men of certain qualifications. These men will be appointed, he says, and thereafter the warden will give them lectures on the observance of rules; they will be trained in the use of firearms, and given certain information about the care of prisoners. But all that could be done now. All that needs to be done now is to say to the Civil Service Commission, "The rules under which you have been operating have been found wanting. Those rules have been defective. Hereafter we want you to appoint men of a certain calibre, and here is the standard by which you will have to measure these men." So I say let us change the rules under which these men are appointed, and let the Civil Service Commission continue to appoint them according to the new standard. All that need be done hereafter could be done right now in that way. The minister will understand, I trust, that I am not saying this in any offensive way because I think he knows the esteem I have for him, but he will have to use more convincing logic if he wants even to attempt to convince me that the step he is now taking is in the right direction.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Guthrie thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 59, to amend the Penitentiary Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Penitentiaries—amount required for cost of administration, construction, purchase of land, supplies and equipment, maintenance and discharge of inmates at Kingston, St. Vincent de Paul, Dorchester, Manitoba, British Columbia, Piers Island, Saskatchewan and Collins Bay penitentiaries, $2,941,400.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister explain the decrease in this item?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have, as is known, a very large increase in our penitentiary population, but by cutting down our expenditure program in the way of buildings we are able to show a decrease in the vote this year. I suppose it is well known that in regard to construction in the penitentiaries a very large part of the work is done by prison labour. One difficulty is to find enough suitable work for prisoners to do. The work is not in all cases what you might call skilled labour, and therefore it is done more slowly perhaps than if it were done by contract in the ordinary way. We purpose curtailing building operations to some extent, in order to lessen our expenditures during the present year.

Mr. LUCAS: What part of this vote is for administration purposes?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can give the figures for last year; the figures for this year will be about the same. The number of prisoners last year was 4,164, but on account of the Doukhobors the number has been increased to above 5,000. There were 740 employees on the staff, now increased to about 900. The total expenditures last year for administration, salaries and the like amounted to $93,-634; the figure this year will be slightly increased, although I have not the figure before me.

Mr. HEAPS: What damage was done during the recent riots?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If the minister will permit me, I should like to say that there are many hon. members who want to speak on the penitentiaries item. I believe this is the only place in the estimates where such a discussion could take place and—

Mr. GUTHRIE: As a matter of fact I had not intended calling this item.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I ask the minister to let the item stand.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: I intended to call the civil government item, but someone called for item 43.

Item stands.

Justice — salaries, $208,998; contingencies, including the Solicitor General's office, $40,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: According to the press, a report has been furnished the government concerning the case of Judge Stubbs. I should like to know if the Minister of Justice is prepared to make any statement in that connection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would not be prepared to make any statement at the present time. The report on the evidence has been received and referred to the Department of Justice. There are four very large volumes of evidence and a whole mass of exhibits that were filed at the hearing. To do justice to the quantity of material in hand would take some time; we have but begun. I fancy I am correct in stating there are probably 2,000 pages of typewritten evidence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister cannot tell us when a decision will be made in regard to the case?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; as soon as we can carefully deal with the matter I shall bring it to the attention of the house, but I cannot say when that will be.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suppose until that is done we cannot do any anything. However I should like to say a word with regard to the case. Without discussing its merits, may I say that a large number of citizens in the city of Winnipeg are deeply interested in the case, and large numbers are very sympathetic towards Judge Stubbs. As a matter of fact a petition has been prepared and along with several other members I was asked some weeks ago to present it. I am told by one of my colleagues that it was presented this afternoon, and I am glad to hear it. Before the report had been made I felt that I could not present the petition, and I think that attitude was taken by some other members. Yet I should like to express my own very great sympathy with those who are presenting the petition. A great many of them of course will have no opportunity of going into the legal side of the case or viewing the evidence closely. On the other hand I think the idea behind all of it is that Judge Stubbs himself has been very—

Mr. McGIBBON: I rise to a point of order; this whole discussion is out of place. This matter is sub judice and the hon. member's remarks are nothing but publicity and advertising for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wish to speak to the point of order. There are two things I resent in the statement which has been made. First of all, this is not being brought forward for the purpose of advertising for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The second point is that the case is not sub judice; the report has already been presented. Some of us have been very careful indeed to make no statement at all until the report had been presented.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Well then, wait until it has been presented.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are getting it in, anyway.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I say the report has already been presented. Some of us were very careful to say nothing until the evidence had been brought in and the report presented.

Mr. McGIBBON: I rise again to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: The point raised by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is well taken, because the subject about which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is speaking is not now before the committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, there is no point of order. The only point of order stated is that this case is sub judice, which is not correct.

Mr. McGIBBON: The discussion is out of order until the judgment is made known.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; I am not a lawyer, nor is the member for Muskoka-Ontario, but I know that much about the law.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is only common sense.

The CHAIRMAN: My opinion is—and I may be wrong—that the subject is still sub judice, because the report has not been made, and consequently it could not come under the item we are discussing.

Mr. NEILL: Where would it come, then?

The CHAIRMAN: I said the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WOODDSWORTH: Well—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am speaking to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I have given my decision on the point of order. The only remedy left to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is to appeal my decision.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do appeal then, against your decision.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are alone. Did you appeal?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; I cannot see, when the evidence is all in—

The CHAIRMAN: Order; the hon. member has appealed and cannot speak any further. I am making my report to the Speaker.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I say we are dealing with the civil government item?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: On the item, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McINTOSH: Where do we go from here?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: When the Minister of Finance brought down his budget—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to know where we are on this matter.

Mr. McINTOSH: He is getting his decision written down.

And Mr. Speaker having resumed the chair:

Mr. SPEAKER: The chairman having ruled that discussion of the report on the investigation concerning His Honour, Judge Stubbs, is not a proper subject of discussion while considering the item of supply before the committee, Mr. Woodsworth appeals from that decision. Is it the pleasure of the house that the chairman's decision be confirmed? All those in favour will say "aye".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will say nay. In my opinion the ayes have it.

The ruling of the chairman was confirmed, and the house resumed in committee of supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask the Minister of Justice a question? I notice in the details of civil government, Department of Justice, that the minister, who really controls the department, is head of the department, has one assistant private secretary at $2,400. But the Solicitor General has a private secretary at $4,120 and a joint private secretary at $3,000. Could the Minister of Justice explain how it is that he has only an assistant private secretary, and the Solicitor General, who I do not suppose has the same responsibility as the Minister of Justice, has two private secretaries?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot explain any more than to say that I find I can get on very well with one assistant private secretary. I have never filled the position of private secretary since I was appointed, and we have made a very large saving in that respect. I think my predecessor had two private secretaries and one assistant.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, one private secretary and one assistant.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The work in the Solicitor General's office has been enormously increased since the administration of the Ticket of Leave Act was placed in his department. I know he has quite a large staff who do nothing else; in fact I was told to-day that the correspondance of that department now amounts to 40,000 letters a year. There is this other feature: the Solicitor General is the representative in the cabinet of the whole of the eastern part of the province of Quebec, and I believe he has a very large correspondance in that connection. I have made inquiry of the deputy minister, and discussed the matter, and from all the information I have been able to gain I believe the staff there is constantly employed and is not in any sense larger than is needed. But I am glad to say that the estimates of the department show a reduction.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: When the Minister of Finance brought down the budget proposals he indicated that, in addition to the saving in expenditure as shown in the estimates as they now appear before us, there would be another saving, a reduction of approximately ten per cent—not necessarily in each department, but an average of ten per cent in all departments. Might I ask the Minister of Justice whether than ten per cent reduction will be taken from this item? Will his department share in it? If so, from what part of his estimates will it be taken?

Mr. GUTHRIE: These salaries are all subject to the ten per cent reduction, that is the reduction which we had last year and which is to be in force again this year. There is a reduction of $11,000 in the clerical staff alone, but I am not aware of any further reduction than the ten per cent authorized under the Salary Deduction Act.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As I understood the Minister of Finance he said that in addition to some $4,000,000 of reduction shown in the estimates as they appear, a further general reduction averaging ten per cent but varying in the different departments would be made in the interests of economy. I knew it could not be applied to salaries; I was wondering to what part of the estimates of the Minister of Justice it would be applied.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If there is to be a general reduction of ten per cent it is a matter, I suppose, that will have to be taken up by the treasury board, and the Department of Justice will submit to the reduction if called upon. But there is no provision in these estimates for that ten per cent further reduction.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As I understand it, we simply vote the estimates as they stand and the government will assume the responsibility of expending only ninety per cent of the estimates voted?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not spending the money.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I notice there are three messengers and five confidential messengers. Has the minister five confidential messengers in addition to the three ordinary messengers?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I think there is only one in my branch, and one in the deputy minister's branch. There will be one in the remission branch in the western block, and at least one, perhaps two, in the Solicitor General's office.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There is another matter about which I should like to speak—and I do not think it is sub judice; up to perhaps a day or two ago that excuse might have been given, but I cannot see how it can be given to-day. I refer to the question of the attempted deportation of Peter Verigin. That comes under the Department of Justice—

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, it does not; it comes under the Department of Immigration. My hon. friend can discuss it to his heart's content when the immigration estimates are up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I may discuss some aspects of the question when we come to the Department of Immigration, but there is a phase that directly relates to the Solicitor General's office, namely, the parole. The parole was given to Peter Verigin through the Department of Justice. This I believe is a copy of the document:

Remission Register No. R-48200.

Ottawa, January 20, 1933.

Convict—Peter P. Verigin, No. N-552, Prince Albert Gaol.
Crime—Perjury.
Sentence—18 months.
Date of Sentence—From May 6, 1932.
Age—51 years.
Previous convictions—Nil.

This inmate has now satisfied one-half of his sentence.

He is to be deported to Russia when released from custody, but the passport issued in his favour is only available until the end of March, and if he is not within the Russian border by that date it is doubtful whether it will be possible to obtain any extension of time.

The undersigned has the honour to advise that Peter P. Verigin be released for the purpose of sending him back to Russia, and further, has the honour to advise that the warden of the gaol be instructed not to release him until the necessary arrangements have been made for deportation, and that he be instructed to deliver the prisoner into the custody of the officer appointed by the deputy Minister of Immigration to see to his deportation.

(Signed) Bessborough.

From my standpoint this is a most extraordinary document. We have been told that the granting of parole was one of the last prerogatives remaining to the crown. I have never been able to see that this matter should be a royal prerogative in the sense that no one has any right to interfere or that no information can be given about it. On several previous occasions questions of this kind have been raised, and we have been told that since the granting of pardons is a royal prerogative there must be no information whatever given with respect to such matters. It seems to me that gradually the so-called royal prerogative has been done away with and that nearly all these matters are now matters of executive action. I think we all know that in practice paroles are given by the remissions branch, and it seems to me that there is no particular reason why parliament should not become acquainted with the reasons for the giving of a parole.

In this particular case, Mr. Chairman, the reasons are given with altogether too much particularity for us to let the matter pass without some definite inquiry addressed to the minister. In the very first place there was considerable discussion as to whether or not this man could be deported; the matter went back and forth between the department here and various outside officials. I know, for example, that there was correspondence in which it was urged upon the acting Minister of Immigration that Peter Verigin should be sent to Mexico instead of to Russia. To be fair to the acting Minister of Immigration, there is nothing in the correspondence laid upon the table to indicate that he yielded to these importunities, but pressure was brought to bear in a letter signed by P. H. Gordon, who apparently was acting for a real estate firm who were interested in seeing that Peter Verigin went to Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member can discuss this case in connection with the immigration estimates, but I do not think it comes under this item.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am discussing it directly under this item, and I want to read one paragraph from this letter which was sent to the Minister of Immigration:

If there is any possibility of the government allowing Verigin to go to Mexico rather than deport him, I should be very glad if you would write and let me know. Mr. Hackney has advanced large sums of money in cash to Verigin and to the various directors of the community to enable them to personally inspect the land in Mexico and it will give him an opportunity of recouping himself. In my opinion, if Verigin is deported, we shall have more difficulty than ever with Doukobors and the easiest way out of the difficulty is to get the Sons of Freedom to go with Verigin.

Whether or not there was direct communication between the acting Minister of Immigration and the Department of Justice I have no documentary evidence, but the so called pardon would seem to indicate something of this kind. Verigin was to be deported to Russia when released from custody, and the passport issued in his favour was available only until the end of March. If he was not within the Russian border by that date it was doubtful whether it would be possible to obtain an extension of time, so evidently there was some negotiation as to when he was to be released. It seems to me that the royal prerogative is being brought down very nearly to a matter of departmental exigency. I will not go so far as to say that this in turn has been determined more or less by other and outside influences.

Mr. McGIBBON: What would you suggest should be done with him?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not suggesting anything; I say that we are degrading the royal prerogative.

Mr. McGIBBON: You should have some solution.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are not discussing the question of Peter Verigin; we are discussing the issue of this paper which purports to be a parole or pardon. Mr. Gallagher, acting for Mr. Dupré, says:

The undersigned has the honour to advise that Peter Verigin be released for the purpose—

This is the purpose:

—of sending him back to Russia.

That is not a pardon.

—and further has the honour to advise that the warden of the gaol be instructed not to release him until the necessary arrangements have been made for deportation—

That is, the whole thing is being very carefully arranged, and the pardon is being granted contingent upon these arrangements. It would seem that the position I am taking is endorsed by Mr. Justice Mellish of the Nova Scotia Supreme court. I should like to read a paragraph or two from his decision.

Mr. McGIBBON: That may be repealed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not repealed. Neither my hon. friend nor myself is a lawyer, but I think I know that much about law. I will read a few paragraphs from the latter part of the decision:

Section 43 of the Immigration Act, which has already been several times referred to, is as follows:

"43. Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen, or a person having Canadian domicile, has become an inmate of a penitentiary, gaol, reformatory or prison, the Minister of Justice may, upon the request of the Minister of Immigration and Colonization, issue an order to the warden or governor of such penitentiary, gaol, reformatory or prison, which order may be in the form F in the schedule to this act, commanding him after the sentence or term of imprisonment of such person has expired to detain such person for, and deliver him to, the officer named in the warrant issued by the deputy minister, which warrant may be in the form G in the schedule to this act, with a view to the deportation of such person."

If there is no authority in law for deporting the prisoner he must be discharged. If he is lawfully held for deportation the application for his release must be refused.

At the outset I was and still am of the opinion that the prisoner cannot be deported or held imprisoned for deportation for what I think is a rather obvious reason, viz: that his "sentence or term of imprisonment" has not "expired" within the meaning of the above section. Nothing that has happened for the purpose of accelerating his removal from the country can in my opinion have that effect. On this ground alone I think the prisoner is entitled to be discharged. However, the reasons upon which it is contended that the deportation is authorized by the act under the sign manual of His Excellency the Governor General will be given a fuller consideration. In determining the interpretation to be given to that document, it need hardly be said that the policy of the government as expressed therein in relation to the prisoner is immaterial except in so far as such policy can be legally implemented.

It is contended that the document is a conditional pardon. The right of the crown to grant a pardon subject to conditions is undoubted, but they must be lawful conditions and not repugnant to the pardon itself.

There is nothing on the face of the document I think to show that the prisoner's release is subject to any condition. It shows I think the purpose or motive of the release, and the legal consequences expected to follow therefrom, by those on whose advice his excellency acted. But there is no question of a condition. The prisoner was to be released and nolens volens forthwith deported.

A word as to the powers of the crown in this connection is I think in order.

As I understand the law, a prisoner's sentence cannot be commuted, i.e., altered, except under the authority of an act of parliament; and this as I understand arises from the fundamental reason that sentences or terms of imprisonment are fixed by the courts in accordance with the law which is binding on the crown as well as the subject. In respect to sentence of death parliament has authorized such commutation. But such is not the sentence here. The "term of the imprisonment" referred to in section 43 means I think the term fixed by law for its duration and cannot in my opinion be altered at least against the will of the prisoner, for the purpose of accelerating his deportation. He has a right if he choose to take the limit of time allowed him before deportation. The crown in extending the royal mercy does not I think alter the law or the sentence or term of imprisonment fixed by law. In exercising this mercy by means of a pardon, the punishment is remitted but the sentence and period or term fixed for the punishment remain. If the prisoner is pardoned conditionally he has I think the right to refuse the pardon if he is unwilling to accept the conditions. If the prisoner has been pardoned (and I do not think he could be discharged from prison except in exercise of the power of pardon) he cannot in my opinion be deported. Freedom from deportation is incident to the pardon, because deportation was incident to the imprisonment. In any view the prisoner is I think unlawfully detained for deportation and must be discharged.

Mr. McGIBBON: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: From the decision of Mr. Justice Mellish, published in the Halifax Chronicle of Monday, March 27, 1933. It seems to me that there are two points to be considered here. The first is that the so-called royal prerogative is being degraded. We have here a conditional pardon, a so-called pardon the outcome of which would be that the prisoner would receive a more severe punishment than that to which he had been originally sentenced. My next point is that if we are to maintain the dignity of the crown and all that goes with it we cannot allow matters of this kind to pass unnoticed. Further than that, it seems to me that the decision of Mr. Justice Mellish is a direct reflection on the Department of Justice. He says:

The right of the crown to grant a pardon subject to conditions is undoubted. But they must be lawful conditions and not repugnant to the pardon itself.

That is an implication that the conditions are unlawful, and under the circumstances I think the Minister of Justice should explain to this committee how his action was determined in this case and if possible give some justification for what seems to have been an illegal act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not propose to answer my hon. friend at any length except to say that he has based his whole statement practically on the fact, which he has repeated on more than one occasion, that Peter Verigin was granted a parole or pardon. He was granted neither a parole nor a pardon. Paroles are granted only under the Ticket of Leave Act upon conditions endorsed upon the ticket of leave. The Ticket of Leave Act is never used when deportation proceedings are in view. There is nothing about a pardon in the whole proceedings. What there was was a release for deportation under the provisions of the Immigration Act, and the judgment which the hon. member has just read to the committee in regard to the Peter Verigin application for habeas corpus was yesterday virtually overruled by unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not think I need go further; I have the judgment in my hand and it is unanimous.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May we have it on the record?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It establishes the right of his excellency under the royal prerogative to release for deportation, and it forms a complete answer to the argument now submitted to the committee by my hon. friend.

Mr. SANDERSON: There are five confidential messengers provided for in this department. Will the minister give us some information in regard to this. My mind goes back to 1928 when the present Minister of Justice was leader of the opposition in the House of Commons—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not in 1928.

Mr. SANDERSON: In 1927. Although I have not Hansard here to quote from, my recollection of the debate that took place then is that the then leader of the opposition made a very bitter comment on the fact that there was one confidential messenger in the Department of Justice, and wanted to know what was the difference between a confidential and an ordinary messenger. Now we have five confidential and three ordinary messengers being provided for in the Department of Justice. What is the reason for the increase in the number of confidential messengers and what explanation has the minister to offer with regard to the salary that goes with the position? I would point out to him, what is obvious to everyone, that conditions in this country in 1927 were very different from what they are now and if ever there was a time when there should be a curtailment in the number of civil servants rather than an increase it is now.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Without having the estimates for 1927 before me, I will guarantee that as between the estimates of that year and the present estimates there is a substantial decrease. I will also inform my hon. friend that the work of the Department of Justice has enormously increased, owing probably to the situation that exists throughout the country. In litigation there has been a very marked increase in the number of cases; our present prison population is up to 12,000, including penitentiaries and prisons; the number of opinions asked of the department are greater than ever before; and there is a very considerable increase in work and a very slight increase in staff. In the principal offices there has been a decrease. As regards the increase in messenger staff, that arises in part from the fact that the remission branch had to be moved from the east to the west block. I think one messenger is used between the penitentiary branch, which is in the Confederation block, and the east block. I think there are only two in that section of the Department of Justice over which I preside, one or two in the remission branch, and one or two, I am not sure which, in the Solicitor General's office. These are increases in minor offices and the salaries are set out at page 80, but there is generally a substantial decrease as between the estimates in the years 1927, 1928 and 1929 and the estimates now before the house.

Mr. SANDERSON: Apparently the Minister of Justice thinks differently to-day from what he did in 1927, because in that year when he was leader of the opposition and the estimates of the Department of Justice were being considered—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not recall the incident.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have a very clear recollection of it. The estimates contained a vote for one confidential messenger, and the then leader of the opposition, the present Minister of Justice, talked for about three quarters of an hour and wanted to know why the government—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I never do that.

Mr. SANDERSON: He wanted to know the difference between an ordinary and a confidential messenger. He said that as far as he could see, a messenger who was a civil servant was a confidential servant of the government, and there could be no difference between an ordinary and a confidential messenger. The minister must have had a change of heart since that time, because he now offers estimates containing votes for five confidential messengers for the Department of Justice. It appears to me that there should be a curtailment of the number of employees in this department. If in 1927 the minister thought that one confidential messenger was useless and should not be employed, he should not come to the committee in 1933 with estimates for five confidential messengers. Is the business of government more confidential to-day than it was in 1927?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does my hon. friend say that there was only one messenger in the Department of Justice in 1927?

Mr. SANDERSON: One confidential messenger.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Has the hon. member the estimates?

Mr. SANDERSON: I am trusting to my memory, and I think it is just as good as the minister's.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have entirely forgotten it, so I hope the hon. member's memory is better.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have not forgotten. I remember well the discussion that took place at that time in the committee of the whole. There are one or two other observations I should like to make upon this vote. In 1927 when the minister was leader of the opposition, the Minister of Justice of that day had a private secretary. To-day the Minister of Justice has not only a private secretary but an assistant private secretary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no private secretary; I save $4,200 there.

Mr. SANDERSON: If I am in error I am sorry.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friends had better not laugh too soon. In 1927 the Solicitor General had a private secretary but in 1933 the present Solicitor General has a private secretary as well as an assistant private secretary.

Mr. VENIOT: And he has two additional ones down home.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not know about that, I am referring only to what appears in the estimates. Does the minister think it correct that the Solicitor General, who has always been considered a kind of fifth wheel to the coach, should have a private secretary and an assistant private secretary? Are his duties such that he has to add to the civil service of this country? I am sorry the Solicitor General is not in his place but can the Minister of Justice defend this vote?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Before my hon. friend came into the chamber his leader raised this question and I explained it very fully. I have made inquiries with regard to the staff of the Solicitor General and I find that they are continually employed. The work in this department has more than doubled in the last three years. The Solicitor General is the only representative in the government from eastern Quebec and his correspondence is enormous. This matter was brought to my attention by the deputy minister and I have satisfied myself that the department is not overstaffed. I might give another instance in connection with the Department of Justice. At one time five lawyers were employed on the Soldier Settlement Board; these men have all been let out and the work is being carried on by the Department of Justice without any increase in staff.

Mr. SANDERSON: I take it that the minister defends the increase from one to five in the number of confidential messengers, and defends also the Solicitor General having a private secretary and an assistant private secretary.

Mr. VENIOT: Do the estimates allow for the payment of salaries to private secretaries at the Soliticor General's home?

Mr. GUTHRIE: None that I know of; I think they are all here.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the minister aware that the Solicitor General has two private secretaries at his service outside of the department?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member means not in Ottawa?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, I was not aware of that. In answer to the statement made by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) that I had spoken for three-quarters of an hour on a previous occasion, I should like to quote from page 107 of Hansard of 1926-27 as follows:

"Justice—salaries—to provide for salary of a confidential messenger, $1,200."

Mr. Guthrie: I remember when I was the occupant of the office of Solicitor General, we had a very excellent messenger, but he was not described as a confidential messenger. I think he is still there, and my recollection is that in that office we did not have a very great deal for a messenger to do. May I ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General whether he is asking for an additional messenger, described here as a confidential messenger, or is there to be only one messenger in connection with that office?

Mr. Cannon: Only one.

Mr. Guthrie: The word "confidential" means nothing, I presume?

Mr. Cannon: I am not responsible for the adjective.

Mr. Guthrie: Is there any distinction in salary between the position of messenger and confidential messenger?

Mr. Dunning: Yes.

Mr. Guthrie: The other one was just an ordinary messenger. Might I ask if it is the same man?

Mr. Cannon: Yes.

Item agreed to.

That is the whole discussion, and that is the tirade I raised against the confidential messenger of the Solicitor General! I did not even object.

Mr. SANDERSON: That does not make any difference.

Mr. SPENCE: You said he talked three quarters of an hour.

Mr. COTNAM: And that you had a distinct memory of it.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister said a few minutes ago that he had not a private secretary. Am I right in understanding that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: But the minister has an assistant private secretary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: I would like to know how one can have an assistant private secretary and no private secretary.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Simply because I have never filled the senior position. It was impressed on me that I should cut down in every way, and by doing considerable hard work myself I have managed so far to get on without the private secretary. I may have to have one later, but so far I have managed without one.

Item agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Immigration and Colonization—Immigration salaries and contingencies, $1,417,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister has been emphasizing in the last few days that the immigration work has dwindled down to next to nothing, that he is keeping out immigrants and not encouraging any to come in. I ask him how, in those circumstances, does he justify asking for $1,417,000 for immigration salaries and contingencies outside of Ottawa, and outside of Canada altogether, I presume.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I do not think the right hon. gentleman is quite fair when he says that I have been stating time and again, or words to that effect, that no immigration is allowed to enter this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, boasting that it had been reduced to very little.

Mr. GORDON: Yes, I think that is a fairer way of putting it. The type of immigration that my right hon. friend and his government permitted I have stopped, and I propose to keep on stopping it. Immigration that is now coming to Canada I trust is of a different calibre from a great number of those who were permitted to enter this country before 1930.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They will all be aristocrats, perhaps.

Mr. GORDON: No, hardly that. The outside service is mainly engaged in the patrol of the border and inspection at ocean ports. There is also a comparatively small expenditure in keeping open certain offices in the United Kingdom. I am told by the departmental officials that the boundary inspection work is now greater and more onerous than it has ever been in the history of the department. I am also told that on the United States side of the line, with the supervision of a population only as large as Canada's, the United States employ twice as many officers as Canada, doing the same sort of work. Each succeeding year new highways crossing the international boundary are coming into being. The tunnel and the new bridge at Windsor have also added slightly to the cost, although the committee will see that there is a decrease in the total vote. I am also told by the departmental officials that the reports and accompanying correspondence and also the general correspondence have very largely increased. I would point out to hon. members that it is very much easier to permit anybody to come into Canada than it is to select those whom you would like to have in this country, because there always arises the human equation in these matters, with pressure brought to bear on the minister and the government to depart from the rule in individual cases, and make departures sometimes from principles and policies as laid down. Those who have occupied the position of Minister of Immigration heretofore are well acquainted, I am sure, with the difficulties that are constantly arising in that connection.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): How many offices in the United States has the minister closed?

Mr. GORDON: All of them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): How many have been closed in England?

Mr. GORDON: There are just six offices open in England, three of them on part time, merely to keep the structure together and keep the contact alive, so that when we continue the work we shall not have lost the benefit of the organization that has been set up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it still necessary to maintain officers on the continent? Do they do any examining there?

Mr. GORDON: Yes. The situation that developed when the regulations were changed in 1930 was this, and it still prevails. Under the regulations as they then were and still are, the heads of families who preceded the family into Canada—I do not think it is possible to give the exact figures but they number very many scores of thousands—were permitted to have their wives and children follow them to this country, and that right of the head of the family in Canada was preserved in subsequent regulations. It is of course necessary to maintain the inspectional service, although that staff has been greatly cut down. For instance, there is not now an inspection service on the Baltic whereas formerly we had one at Danzig, but that has been closed. There is on the Atlantic coast and at Paris. In order to examine the wives and children and heads of families at present here, that service of necessity has to be continued, although with a reduced staff.

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I ask the minister if he is still keeping one of those immigration officers at Father Point?

Mr. GORDON: So far as I am aware there never has been an immigration officer at Father Point.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is there a medical examiner there?

Mr. GORDON: The practice of the department has been to send an officer from Quebec to Father Point to board some of the larger steamers, in order to make civil and sometimes medical inspections.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But there is not a station at Father Point?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Most of the continental examinations are made in Paris, are they not?

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. GORDON: I think the major portion of it is done in Paris.

Mr. GARDINER: Where are the chief immigration officers located in Great Britain?

Mr. GORDON: London, Liverpool and Glasgow.

Mr. GARDINER: Have you a full staff at those points?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, at those points.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the Belfast office closed?

Mr. GORDON: Belfast is open.

Mr. COOTE: May I bring to the attention of the minister the case of an immigrant named J. E. Flower who was brought to Alberta some years ago. I discussed this case with the minister last year. This man, with his family, wife and three children, was anxious to be sent back to the old country because he was not able to get any work in Canada which he could do. A year ago I took the matter up with the minister and, if I remember rightly, he informed me that if the province of Alberta could furnish railway transportation for the family to Montreal, it was just possible he might be able to have them returned to the old country. After the province agreed to furnish transportation to Montreal the minister said that before he could furnish ocean transportation somebody in the old country would have to signify his willingness to look after the man and family upon their return. Flower was unable to get anyone to guarantee to look after him. Finally, the provincial authorities, having grown tired of keeping the man and his family, advanced the necessary money to return them to the old country.

I have the following letter from the supervisor of charity and relief. Dated at Edmonton, September 3, 1932, it is as follows:

> I am pleased to report to you that I have despatched this man and his family to the old country. The cost to the province, which was paid from public funds, was $492, and I would appreciate it very much if you would use your influence with the federal government to have this province reimbursed for fifty per cent of the expenditure.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COOTE: I say to hon. members that there is a very good reason why the federal government should assist in this case. The letter continues:

> I have no record showing whether this man obtained an assisted passage, but from his statement on file he was unemployed in the old country and his father purchased transportation for himself and family to Canada, and since his arrival here he has been a public charge. The province has already expended the sum of $2,381.50 for their maintenance.

Hoping that I may have a favourable report from your effort, for which I wish to thank you in anticipation.

Yours truly,

A. A. Mackenzie,

Supervisor of Charity and Relief.

I wish to draw to the attention of the committee and the minister that this man and his family cost the province of Alberta a total of $2,873.50. That province had nothing to do with bringing him to Canada. At that time hon. members in this corner of the house were protesting against the government's immigration policy. The man in question had no employment in the old country, but his father paid for passages for Flower and his family to Canada. Alberta has spent, up to the present time, $2,381.50 for their maintenance, and is now paying $492 to ship them back to the old country, because it appears that they would be a charge upon the province as long as they remained in Canada. I admit the minister had nothing to do with bringing them to Canada, but the federal government has a responsibility. It seems to me unfair that the province of Alberta should have to pay $2,873.50 for one family.

Mr. REID: How many years did that cover?

Mr. COOTE: I think they came out in 1924. The circumstances I have outlined indicate the expense some of the western provinces have had to bear because of the immigration policy of the Ottawa government.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Address your remark to the hon. member for West Edmonton.

Mr. COOTE: I am addressing my remarks to the Acting Minister of Immigration. I think in all fairness the government should share the expense of returning this family to the old country; that is ths least we could ask the government to do. I do not ask the minister to give me a statement offhand; I think he will remember our discussion of the matter last year. I hope at least he will promise to give the matter some consideration, and that the province of Alberta may hope to be reimbursed in part for the expense to which they have been put. It is most unfortunate that some of the provinces have to incur such heavy expenses because of an immigration policy carried out by a government at Ottawa. At the time this family entered the country I believe the province of Alberta was not in favour of the immigration policy of the Ottawa government.

Mr. GORDON: I have not a clear recollection of the case to which the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) has referred. Of course hon. members are well aware of the situation with regard to that and similar cases. Apparently the man and his family made legal landing in Canada, and complied with our laws as they then existed. I do not know whether they received any assistance from the British government when they came. But under the provisions of our law a person who resides legally in Canada for five years or more acquire domicile. Even if the Dominion government cared to invoke the provisions of the law with respect to deportation, we would be precluded from doing it by reason of his having acquired domiciliary rights. As to whether the policy of bringing immigrants into the western provinces has been beneficial, I have not much to say. I think the results were beneficial to the extent that desirable people were attracted to those provinces. Very great benefits resulted to the western provinces through the efforts of the Dominion government to procure desirable people for colonization within provincial boundaries. Our immigration law precludes the Dominion government from deporting—because that is really what it means—people who have legally landed in this country and resided here for five years. The five year period was thought by parliament to be long enough to indicate whether a person coming from other lands was a desirable citizen of this country or otherwise; I assume that is the reason the five year term was decided upon.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That places the British subject on the same footing as the foreigner, who could become naturalized in five years?

Mr. GORDON: Yes. I had no authority under the Immigration Act either to order a family deported on complaint of the municipality or province, or to pay anything with respect to the return passage. If the law were changed to cover cases of that kind I am afraid it would impose a very great burden on the treasury. I will admit that with respect to immigration we must of necessity take some chances; that is inevitable in the movement of people from the land of their origin to a country of adoption. I cannot but think that the western provinces have greatly benefited by the colonization of desirable people from other lands. There must be hundreds of thousands of that class. Of course there is a percentage of failures. It is a question whether the benefits should be set up against the disadvantages and the balance shouldered by the federal state. I do not think I would care to embark on any such bookkeeping; it would be hopeless.

Mr. COOTE: Perhaps I should have said, if I did not, that this man had asked repeatedly for deportation. He wrote to me personally after he failed to interest the department. It was only because he wanted to be deported that I interested myself in the case. I would not ask that the man be deported if he did not himself desire it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask the hon. member what was the matter with the family?

Mr. COOTE: The man was unable to get work for a long period. Since he had been in the country, the province of Alberta had spent on relief for him and his family $2,381. It appeared that they would have to keep him and his family outright, for a good many years at any rate, and they paid $492 to send them back to the old country.

Mr. GORDON: When did the province start to pay direct relief for this man?

Mr. COOTE: I am sorry I have not got that here, but I have read the letter from the officer in charge of relief at Edmonton giving the amount that the province had expended up to that time. The province thought it was much cheaper for the authorities to buy this man's passage back to the old country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was he physically unfit?

Mr. COOTE: He was a miner and his eyesight was not good enough for him to get work in the mines. That is the only report I could get from the mounted police. He was located in a mining district and apparently there was nothing else for him to do. I want to urge this on the minister: He says we were taking chances on these immigrants. I think it is the province that took all the chance; the dominion did not take much. In this case the province had to take it all. If the man was on relief he would have to be kept jointly by the two governments, as I understand, because he was in unorganized territory outside a municipality and the Dominion government is just as much advantaged by this man being sent back to the old country as is the provincial government. If he were still here, if the province had refused to send him back, the province would have had to keep him and his family, and the Dominion government would have had to share in the cost. If it was good business for the province to buy his passage back to the old country to save that unemployment relief cost for the next few years, surely it would be good business for the Dominion government to share in that expense. It seems to me unfair that the province should have to bear the whole cost. Under the circumstances I think it would be quite proper for the dominion to share in the cost of his transportation back.

Mr. GORDON: And apply the rule generally?

Mr. COOTE: Well, I think so—apply the rule generally. I see nothing unfair to the dominion in that, but it is very unfair to the province as it stands at the present time.

Mr. GORDON: There has been some criticism in connection with a class of people against whom the municipalities and the provinces have made complaints and caused their return to their country of origin. I think perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has been the most outspoken in that regard, with the possible exception of a newspaper or two. I put this to the members of the committee. If the suggestion of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) were adopted it would mean that people who have been in Canada for the time specified by the act for acquiring domiciliary rights, namely five years, or no matter how long ago they came to Canada say from Great Britain, should be deported, if through misadventure or through their own shiftlessness or through any other cause they are unable to support themselves in this country. Would it be fair to the United Kingdom that in those cases, after people had lived in Canada for perhaps ten or fifteen years, having made a legal landing in this country under our laws, the burden should be shifted back to the United Kingdom? My own view is that it would not be fair or just. There are cases like the one mentioned by the hon. member for Macleod which would seem to give some basis for action that might be taken jointly by the province and the dominion, but those cases are not very general, and I would not care to embark on the idea of making the general law conform to the particular case.

Mr. COOTE: Whether it is made general or not, I feel that in this case, where the man asked to be deported—

Mr. GORDON: But we could not deport him.

Mr. COOTE: He asked to be sent back; what harm is there in advancing him the money and letting him go back? I think it would not be unfair to say that Great Britain has been relieved of his maintenance for possibly eight or nine years while he was in this country, so they would not object very seriously to having him back now. At any rate the province of Alberta thought it good business to pay his passage back rather than have him permanently on relief. They have thus relieved the dominion of a considerable burden of unemployment relief; why should not the dominion share in the expense of his passage to the old country where he wishes to go?

Mr. DUPUIS: I think the hon. minister means that if he paid the fare to return this immigrant it would be a precedent. I think he is right. I just want to ask a question: Is there any change in the Montreal office staff as compared with last year?

Mr. GORDON: No, there has been no change in the staff with the exception of temporary officials such as deportation officers and other minor officials who have been appointed for short periods. They are constantly changing.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is there the same number of regular officials as last year?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, I think practically the same number. There may be some reduction, but I would not care to say.

Mr. DUPUIS: Who has taken the place of Mr. Moquin, who was formerly head clerk?

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Moquin was retired some time ago. Mr. Langlois is there now.

Mr. DUPUIS: What was his salary?

Mr. GORDON: I have not under my hand the exact amount, but it is approximately $2,400 a year.

Mr. DUPUIS: The salary Mr. Moquin used to receive?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: I was not in the house the other evening when the minister's estimates were up. Did he place on Hansard the number of immigrants entering Canada last year?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Empire settlement scheme, including grants authorized by the governor general in council, $15,000.

Mr. NEILL: I presume this is the three thousand family scheme. Would the minister let us know how many families are still on the land and what proportion, if any, are not in arrears—though I anticipate that most of them will be in arrears. Would the minister also indicate the nature of the grants authorized by the governor general in council?

Mr. GORDON: That does not arise under this vote. This is a vote of $15,000 to take care of the contributions made to the women's hostels at Montreal, Toronto, Calgary and Winnipeg. This also includes the sum of $4,000 which is placed in the estimates for the purpose of making a loan, which was to amount to $1,000 from the Canadian government and $1,200 from the British government, to British boys who had earned and were in possession of $500. That was under an agreement. Up to the present time we have not had to supplement the $500 in any single instance, but in order to fortify our department against any breach of that agreement we have carried forward the sum of $4,000 in this vote.

Mr. NEILL: May I ask how many of these boys were brought cut? And do I understand that in not a single instance has a boy been successful enough to call upon the government for its share?

Mr. GORDON: That is scarcely the right way to put it. The scheme did not work out at all for this reason, that the boy who was able to save $500 very sensibly did not go on and borrow the balance. Many of them saved the money but did not apply for the loan or advance.

Mr. NEILL: I did not just understand that statement. If I saved $500 and could get a grant of $500 in addition it would seem the part of wisdom to apply for it. The $500 given by the government was a grant, was it not?

Mr. GORDON: No, it was a loan. If it had not been a loan I am sure we would have had many applications.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES

Salaries and contingencies, $543,242.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the minister indicate the total amount of the premium paid to gold producers in Canada last year?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Mines): That is peculiarly and particularly under the Department of Finance; the Department of Mines has nothing to do with it, but speaking quite offhand I would say the exchange paid on the gold production for the last twelve months would be in the neighbourhood of $6,000,000. I am not sure, but I could easily procure the exact figure.

Mr. NEILL: Is this the item under which we can discuss the coal bounties?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. NEILL: I do not mean the actual bounties so much as the consideration of the importation of British coal into British Columbia. I imagine that might come under this vote.

Mr. GORDON: There is another item which deals with that subject.

Mr. NEILL: It would hardly deal with the importation of British coal into British Columbia, because that is not subsidized, but if the minister will allow that matter to be debated under the other item it will be quite all right.

Mr. GORDON: Certainly.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I notice that in the Department of Mines there is a gentleman known as an artist in vertebrate palaeontology. I would like to know what he does.

Mr. GORDON: He is a scientist whose time is engaged in the investigation of spineless creatures throughout Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is his attention confined to Tories?

Mr. GORDON: No, I believe there are cases in Quebec and around the foothills as well.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then I see there is an assistant invertebrate palaeontologist. Would the minister tell us the difference between these two gentlemen?

Mr. GORDON: This gentleman assists the chief in that work.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But one is vertebrate and the other invertebrate.

Mr. GORDON: One has a spine and the other has not, and I think the right hon. gentleman probably will be able to identify the one without a spine.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In view of what the Prime Minister said the other day in regard to the tremendous importance of improving gold mining in Canada as a means of meeting the present crisis, does the department intend to assist prospectors in Ontario and northern Manitoba and British Columbia by airplane transportation and in other ways in order to open up new gold fields for production?

Mr. GORDON: The question of government assistance to prospectors in Canada has been raised in a number of quarters at various times. I am sure my hon. friend is acquainted in some measure with the difficulties that beset us in turning the attention of people unacquainted with prospecting into that line of activity by reason of the very work in which they would have to be engaged. Prospecting for precious metals is a vocation that lends itself to but a very small percentage of our population. To be a prospector a man must have certain traits of character in perfect combination — characteristics that are not found in people generally. He has to be fearless, with abundance of courage; he must have patience; he must be a canoe man, a bush man, an axe man, a cook, and he must know how to travel with confidence in all sorts of country.

Sir EUGENE FISET: A jack of all trades.

Mr. GORDON: Much more than that. He has to know something about geology. Altogether, if there is one vocation in Canada, or for that matter anywhere in the world, that calls for a combination of faculties that are keenly alive, it is the game of prospecting. You cannot allow your courage to ooze out in that game or you will get nowhere. I quite appreciate that since the beginning of time great difficulties have faced every prospector —and I mean the good prospector, not the arm chair fellow—in even getting grubstaked to go out and investigate possibilities. That is one of the discouragements associated with the effort, and even after he discovers some favourable ground that gives indications of valuable ore deposits he has only begun to meet the discouragements that are ahead of him, because he must be able to attract money in order to explore what he has found. There are so few who are able to measure up to the task that confronts the prospector that I greatly fear there would not be many who would be successful. Then there is the question of dealing with prospectors by way of assistance. I have thought it over a good deal and my own view is that the state had better keep out of that activity. I know the prospector about as well as anyone in this house and I know that he is a man who takes care of himself pretty well. He is not given to grumbling, and if the galleries in this chamber were full of prospectors I fancy there might be some rather salty comments made upon some of the observations which we members of parliament utter at times. My own opinion now is, although I would not hesitate to give the matter further consideration, that this is an avenue which the state had better keep out of. If the state-aided prospector did find a gold mine or what afterwards developed into a mine, or if he found one of those rich little pockets where with a minimum of effort he captured from the ground say half a million dollars, how would you divide it? I think we should have a difficult time getting even the advance back. There are many barriers in the way of state-aided prospecting, and at the moment I would not favour it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I agree in part with the minister, but I certainly must take exception to some of his remarks. In the first place, the government is aiding gold producers in Canada at the present time.

Mr. GORDON: In what way?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): By paying a premium in exchange to gold producers.

Mr. GORDON: I disagree with the hon. member.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There are two arguments to be advanced. In the first place, if gold production is to be of fundamental importance in meeting our national crisis, then it should be encouraged in Canada. According to the Prime Minister's speech two or three days ago, the products of our gold fields were of great importance last year in helping to meet the situation, our gold production for that year having amounted to $63,000,000. My suggestion is this—and I am not putting it forward in any partisan sense but rather with the idea of being constructive. If gold is to remain the basis of our currency in Canada, although personally I am strongly of the other view, I would point out that the gold committee of the League of Nations at the Genoa conference in 1920 predicted a decline in gold production in 1934 in the world stocks of gold, and if gold is going to remain as the basis of our currency I suggest that instead of the various forms of relief which the government is supporting at the present time the state should lend some assistance to the producers in proven gold fields. I think it would be a wonderful thing to assist the prospectors who to-day are unemployed in Vancouver and other cities, of whom there are hundreds, not amateurs but tried prospectors. They could be sent out with help from the dominion; the government might provide them with four or five or six assistants and with a government engineer, if the department thought fit, so that they might go prospecting—that is, if the administration really believes that the accentuating of gold production values will be of benefit. Of course, if the administration does not believe in that, then my argument falls flat. At any rate, in the coming summer there is going to be a scurry in British Columbia to the gold mining prospects in the Cariboo and Bridge River country, and encouragement from the Department of Mines would be of great assistance to these men.

Mr. GORDON: Monetary assistance?

Sir EUGENE FISET: There is some wonderful nomenclature in these estimates; for instance, I see here an assistant invertebrate palaeontologist and there is also a process worker. What is that?

Mr. GORDON: That is in the photograph department.

Mr. REID: There is an item in connection with metallurgy. Is anything being done in regard to finding out the various grades of iron ore that are being produced?

Mr. GORDON: For many years the department has devoted a good deal of time to the investigation not only of various types of iron ore but of various processes by which it is said our low grade ores could be mined at a profit. It is only recently that an effort has been made to prove or disprove an invention which it is said can produce iron at a profit from such ores. Unfortunately the hopes of those who own the process were not borne out by investigations made by the Mines department. The government is always alive to the possibility of iron ores being found in Canada which can be converted by proper processes to the industrial uses for which they are intended, and in so far as finances will permit, the department will always be ready to make investigations with respect to such ores as may seem desirable in the premises.

Item agreed to.

Mines and geological survey—for administration of the Explosives Act (chapter 62, r.s. 1927), $10,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. GORDON: This item, which rarely changes from year to year, is to provide for the administration of the Explosives Act; under which the government is required to regulate the manufacture, sale and to some extent the carriage of explosives, so that injury to the public or to those using them will not result.

Mr. REID: Were the three inspectors mentioned in the last vote connected with this item?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has this anything to do with the government's policy of blasting?

Item agreed to.

Mines Branch—for investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories, investigations by Dominion Fuel Board, including salaries and all other expenses, $215,000; for publications, English and French, purchase of books, instruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $35,000.

Mr. NEILL: This vote is to cover research and investigations by the Dominion Fuel Board and so on. Could the minister give the committee any information as to the activities of this board in developing new uses for coal? I may be doing the board an injustice, but I do not think its efforts have been outstanding in this connection. I would draw the attention of the minister to a statement which has appeared in certain British papers to the effect that a new colloidal fuel has been developed. This fuel is a mixture of approximately sixty per cent coal and forty per cent oil. It was thought that it would be of great value to Canada because it would provide a cheaper fuel than oil and could be produced from Canadian coal. The inventor predicts its use in power plants requiring an intense heat with the flexibility of oil fuel. There are a number of plants in this country that require an intense heat which does not go up and down such as coal heat. I would like to know if the fuel board has taken any notice of this development either by way of investigations of its own or in disseminating to the coal operators the results of the researches by the British and other governments and various universities. While I am on my feet I will ask the minister if his department is in possession of any information in connection with the use of oil developed entirely from coal. I notice that the British Admiralty has signed a contract with a company known as the Low Temperature Carbonization Limited, having factories in London and Yorkshire. It appears that the first bulk supply of this fuel is to be delivered to the destroyer Westminster and it is expected that the ordinary cruising range of this ship with ordinary petroleum will be increased by the use of the new fuel without any adjustment of the standard equipment. The coal industry in the west, and possibly also in the east, is in a desperate condition and it would appear to be the duty of the fuel board to investigate any developments along these lines. Any information I have in this regard has been derived from sources outside of Canada and I would like to know what the fuel board has been doing in connection with the two items I mentioned.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. GORDON: The Dominion Fuel Board would have no connection with the matter to which the hon. member has referred. That board is purely administrative; its main work is in connection with the coal subventions, the determining of freight differentials and the allotment of competitive areas throughout Canada. The fuel testing division under the mines branch is constantly working on matters such as those mentioned by the hon. member. I have heard from the departmental officers of the fuel developed by a combination of oil and very fine coal, and I understand that British chemists have made considerable advances with this fuel. Of course we have the benefit of what they are doing, just as they have the benefit of our investigations. I am sure the hon. member would not suggest that there should be a duplication of effort along these lines. This division has many activities. It has to do with the testing of fuel from every standpoint. It has been able to convince some of the large coking plants in Canada that they could use Canadian coal in their coking processes, the result being an increase in the use of Canadian coal.

Mr. NEILL: The item reads:

For investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories.

The minister now tells us that the main purpose of the fuel board is to cover the handling of the coal subventions.

Mr. GORDON: I am afraid the hon. member was not listening to me. I said that there is a fuel testing division, but that is only one of many divisions, and their activities are devoted to the research work to which I have made reference.

Mr. NEILL: I certainly understood the minister to say that the Dominion Fuel Board was mainly used for the purpose of carrying out the coal subventions.

Mr. GORDON: I said that the Dominion Fuel Board was concerned with the coal subventions in a purely administrative way, but the fuel testing division is a division under the mines branch.

Mr. NEILL: I would respectfully suggest that the work of administering the coal subventions could be better done by the Finance department if the work is so purely financial, if it is simply a matter of adjusting payments made under the subventions.

Mr. GORDON: It is not merely that.

Mr. NEILL: I am taking the minister's own word for it. However, we will let that go. In connection with the remarks I made a moment ago, I notice that a prominent engineer in Ottawa made a comment on this new colloidal oil development in Great Britain, so it would be possible to get some first hand information from a well known local engineer if the board was interested in the matter. It is not only necessary for the board or for the branch to inform itself on these matters, but the information should be given out to the coal operators or to the press, because information stored solely in the records of the department is not very valuable. I suggest that it should not be left to individuals or the press to make these things known; the board, and in a broad sense the department itself, should be the leader in giving out this information.

Mr. GORDON: As it is.

Mr. NEILL: Well, I took this information from the columns of the press. It was not put out by the department. Has the department any bulletin dealing with the subject of this new colloidal fuel or the development of the low temperature carbonization system?

Mr. GORDON: Obviously the hon. member has not read the annual report of the mines branch, which deals at great length with the subject to which he has made reference, including the advances which are being made in fuel oil and coal. The suggestion that we should set our course by some advice from an engineer who is in Ottawa is one to which I do not think I would care to subscribe. We get all the information concerning advances made by the British chemists through official, dependable channels, through the British Fuel Research Board, whose reports come in at regular intervals, and the information contained in them together with a fund of other information is included in the annual report of the Mines department. Wherever it seems that it would be helpful to our coal operators to receive such information, together with the results of our own investigations, that information is sent out.

Mr. NEILL: Would the minister be good enough to include my name on the mailing list so that I might be informed also?

Mr. GORDON: Certainly.

Item agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

For explorations, surveys and investigations, wages of explorers, topographers and others, $127,500.

For publication of English and French editions of reports, maps, illustrations, etc., $50,000.

For maintenance of offices and museum, expenses of special exhibitions pertaining to natural resources, purchase of instruments, chemicals, books of reference, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $42,500.

For museum equipment, $8,000.

For purchase of specimens, $1,000—Total, $229,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would the minister explain the increase of $3,780?

Mr. GORDON: The increase is in the item for publications. It was found that too great a reduction was made in this item last year, and that geological publications could not be printed with the amount provided. Hence the increase this year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the number of survey parties going out this year being reduced?

Mr. GORDON: I think the number of parties going out this year will be about thirty-four, a decrease of eight or ten from last year.

Item agreed to.

To provide for payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council and for the cost of administration thereof, $2,000,000.

Mr. NEILL: This is the vote to which the minister referred a moment ago. I understood that it was provided under a former vote that the grant to the coal mines in British Columbia would be continued for another fiscal year. Is that correct?

Mr. GORDON: The order in council under which the subventions were established has not yet expired, but it is proposed to continue the subventions for another year if this vote passes the committee.

Mr. NEILL: That leads me to a discussion of the importations of coal into British Columbia from Great Britain. I regret that the departmental records do not seem to agree with each other. I have in my hand a letter from the minister's department saying that the importation of coal for the month of February was so much, but the figure does not agree with the records I get from the Department of National Revenue, and I take it that the Department of National Revenue is more likely to be correct because they actually collect the duty. The same thing occurred last year. I made a very definite statement as to the importations, and the minister contradicted my figures. He was perfectly sincere, but when we came down to analyze the thing we found that he was getting his figures from the Dominion Fuel Board and I was getting mine from the Department of National Revenue. They ought to agree, but they do not. It shows a little sloppy bookkeeping, that is all. However I want to deal with the importations of British bituminous coal into British Columbia. In the month of February last the imports were 2,244 tons, and in January 7,393 tons, making a total of 9,637 tons in two months. In previous years importations have been very small. In 1931 there were no importations and in 1932 only 1,100 tons. So it would appear that these importations are going up in a very marked degree, and it seems unfortunate when British Columbia coal production is going down.

I hold in my hand a record of production for the past month of February. The total production for Vancouver island in February of this year was 58,833 tons, against 75,787 for February 1932. That is a substantial reduction, running into nearly thirty per cent. The importation of British coal for the two months is equivalent to sixteen per cent of the production on Vancouver island for one month. We do not want to have our coal production cut down sixteen per cent, if we can possibly avoid it. I have no doubt the minister is familiar with the situation. I imagine it is the currency situation which enables coal to be brought out from England at practically ballast prices, and also in consideration of the British preferential arrangements which were made last summer.

Mr. GORDON: No, that is not the major feature. The major feature is the operation of the Coal Mines Act in Great Britain, and the low ocean freight rates through the Panama canal to Vancouver. Of course the factors the hon. member has mentioned are contributory.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. NEILL: Does Britain subsidize her coal mining?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Well then, that is unfair importation; what about our dumping duty? In January the minister said: "I cannot say for the moment just what steps may be contemplated to deal with the situation". But I suggest it is time some steps were taken. We cannot live in hopes of what is going to be done. I am not making my statement from a political standpoint at all. The minister may have observed that other hon. members from British Columbia and I have asked questions recently as to whether the Canadian National Railways purposed selling a large wharf they own in Vancouver harbour. It is well known that the suggestion is to sell it at a very low price. These are times when one can buy anything at a very small proportion of its cost. The suggestion is that a large importing company is going to buy the wharf with the buildings thereon for the purpose of establishing importations of British coal. The time to do anything towards checking such procedure is before an enormous investment is made, because if action is not taken immediately you are confronted with the necessity of dealing with vested interests. When we allow a trade to be built up, it is unfair to take steps to stop it after establishment. The time to act is before it reaches the stage of operation. When we are receiving 9,000 or 10,000 tons of coal in two months surely it is time for us to become alarmed, and especially when these importations are accompanied by heavy reductions in native coal production. I had hoped that the minister would take somewhat more drastic steps than simply to say the matter is before him. The matter may be before him two years from now.

While I am on my feet I should like to speak concerning another matter. In this connection I am not blaming his department. I notice that the importation of bituminous coal from the United States has increased enormously. In 1931 there were only 8,000 tons imported, in 1932, 5,000 tons, but in the month of February last alone, there were 2,413 tons. I cannot understand how it can be coming in in such increased volume, because we know the exchange situation makes it difficult for us to buy in the United States. If we are buying coal there, and they are competing with locally produced coal—

Mr. GORDON: Is that on the Pacific coast?

Mr. NEILL: Yes, into British Columbia. It is remarkable that the amount should be increasing in such large proportions. I cannot understand it, in view of the fact that exchange is decidely against such a trade. However, that is only a matter of comment. I should like the minister to assure us that he is taking some definite step, and that he is not only voicing an expression of good will in dealing with the importation of British coal. The other day the government promised immediately to put into effect the provisions of section 4 of the New Zealand treaty, which promptly put a check upon the importation of large quantities of New Zealand butter. Now is the time for us to take steps, before our local trade is ruined—it is badly handicapped now—and by the application of dumping duties, or some other means, apply a remedy.

The minister has advised us that the coal comes through the Panama canal bearing practically no freight charges at all, or only those charges which would apply to ballast. Then, apparently under the British Coal Mines Act the British industry is subsidized by the government. I suggest some very active steps be taken in the immediate future. I should like to hear from the minister.

Mr. GORDON: Of course the importations from the United States to British Columbia are steadily reducing.

Mr. NEILL: On the Pacific coast?

Mr. GORDON: Yes; the figures before me would indicate that. In 1929, 30,535 tons were imported.

Mr. NEILL: Bituminous?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, lignite and bituminous.

Mr. NEILL: Ah.

Mr. GORDON: In 1930 there were 26,819 tons; in 1931, 8,685 tons; in 1932, 5,208 tons. I understand the coal is used as far north as Anyox and some in Vancouver. A small amount of British bituminous coal has been landed in Vancouver by way of the Panama canal. Up to December 31, 1932, there were 1,154 tons. During the last two months an additional amount has come in to the Pacific coast from Great Britain.

Mr. NEILL: How much was there in 1932?

Mr. GORDON: There were 1,154 tons. The matter of the importation of British bituminous coal has been before me, and I have been acting jointly and in cooperation with the coal operators on the St. Lawrence and on the western coast ever since the possibility of the importation of British bituminous in any large amounts became a threat to the future markets for the Nova Scotia and the far western coal mines. It is a subject that the coal operators themselves, who are closely in touch with the situation, recognize as presenting difficulties. Only yesterday I spent a couple of hours with the heads of mining companies both east and west looking into the whole situation, in the hope that we could find a solution which on the one hand would give the Canadian coal operators the home market, to which they think they are entitled,—and I do not disagree with them—and on the other hand refrain from placing on the consumer a burden which might in whole or in part be avoided. The question has not been so lightly regarded by me as the observations of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) would seem to indicate. I am not unacquainted with the difficulties that confront Canadian coal operators both in the east and in the west. There has been a very commendable disposition on the part of coal consumers to go a considerable way in using Canadian fuels even if they cost more than foreign fuels. There is a zone in Canada which I think the coal producers both east and west recognize that they cannot hope to invade with any degree of success. With respect to other sections of the country, we are making gradual but sure progress in the displacement of foreign fuels by Canadian coals. There has been the growing competition of oil, which tends to reduce the production of coal. That is a question that the producers are alive to, and we have discussed it with reference to the amount and the nature of assistance that the government may be able to extend to coal operators. I can only say what I have said before, that we are making headway. If the consumption had not fallen off, the provision that the coal miners themselves made by reducing overhead and increasing efficiency, combined with the assistance the government gave them, would have taken care of their requirements two years ago. But the mild winter of the year before last, and other factors, reduced the consumption, and we were again confronted with the difficulty of keeping our coal miners at work. Foreign fuels are a constant threat to the Canadian market. Hon. members of the committee are aware of the steps that the government has taken in an endeavour to conserve that market for our own producers as far as we economically can. Those efforts we shall continue to make, working in harmony with the coal producers. There is no movement of fuels into Canada that does not come under my review and is not discussed from time to time with the coal producers with the object of endeavouring to maintain those markets for Canadian producers. I am sure the hon. member must realize that the problem is a difficult and complex one. We have immense bodies of coal, but they are so located geographically that it is impossible to transport them economically in any considerable quantities into certain highly industrialized areas. There are markets that are available by reason of their geographical position, and in those markets, I am told by the coal producers, by the producers' own efforts and the assistance the department and this government can give them, we are displacing foreign fuels. The Winnipeg market is a striking instance, although foreign fuel has not been entirely supplanted there, and I doubt if it ever will be, having regard to various factors that enter into the question. At any rate I can assure the hon. member that the department has not overlooked any phase of this most complex question, and is working with the producers, endeavouring to lend such assistance as is justifiable.

Mr. NEILL: With one exception the figures the hon. minister has quoted do not agree with those I got over his own signature from the Mines department. However, the differences are not very great, so I will not go into it. But I must certainly take exception to his statement that the importations into British Columbia of bituminous coal from the United States are steadily decreasing. He surely did not get the proper figures.

Mr. GORDON: Bituminous and lignite—that is how we have them classified.

Mr. NEILL: Only 800 tons of lignite came in in 1933. The bituminous that came in 1932 was 5,176 tons in twelve months, and in the month of February last there were 2,413 tons. That is, almost half as much came in one month this year as in the whole of 1932.

Mr. GORDON: I was giving the years from 1929 to 1932.

Mr. NEILL: I have no figures prior to 1931. There is certainly a very disappointing increase in the present year. I do not know why the amount from Washington has increased and I do not think the minister is in any way to blame in that regard. But turning to the British coal, I must expect him to take full responsibility. I quite admit that the subject is difficult and complex, but it is not to be solved with sympathy, it is not to be solved by discussion, it has to be solved by action, definite action.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. GORDON: What sort of action?

Mr. NEILL: Put the dumping duty on. Do what you would do if the Toronto manufacturers came crying to you—get some action. The minister said that only a small amount of British bituminous coal had come in. Of course the word small is comparative, but it is not a fair word under the circumstances. The amount that came in in 1932 was 1,154 tons—that is his own figure—and the amount that came in in the first two months of this year was practically 10,000 tons. I think those figures are occasion for some alarm—I got them from his own department. It is not a small amount when it is sixteen per cent of the output of the Vancouver mines for one month.

The minister told us he was glad to find that there was a disposition among coal consumers to pay more for the local product. But especially in these hard times—or in fact at any time—it is idle to appeal to the consumer on patriotic grounds to pay more than the market price. If he can buy cheaper somewhere else, especially in these hard times, when money is so scarce and every dollar has to be spread out to the utmost, he is not going to be willing to pay more than he has to. Any pressure of that kind has to be put on by the government in the way of taxation or bonus or dumping duty. He told us he was making progress with this problem. Yes, Mr. Chairman, we are making progress, but backward.

Mr. GORDON: The producers do not think so.

Mr. NEILL: It is not a matter of opinion. I would be quite willing to subordinate my judgment to that of the minister in a matter of opinion, but these are matters of cold, hard facts.

Mr. GORDON: I will leave it to the producers.

Mr. NEILL: The minister told us that the importation of bituminous coal from Great Britain in the year 1932 amounted to 1,154 tons, and he says that we are making progress now when we are importing almost 10,000 tons in two months. I do not know what kind of progress that is; it seems a retrograde movement to me, making haste backwards.

Then the minister introduced a feature that I had not commented upon; he said the consumption of coal, because of the hard times, was getting less. That makes the situation all the more acute, because I was not talking about the consumption but about the importation of coal. So if the importations are so much greater and the consumption is so much less, it makes the situation even more acute than it was before. I suggest that it is about time we got away from expressions of sympathy, and saying, "We will have a conference about this." The law is there, and goodness knows we pay enough for the privilege of having it there. These dumping duties were imposed in 1930; they were going to protect the primary producer first, last and all the time, or at least that is what they were supposed to do. Now I am only asking that the law be invoked. I want some definite action; we should not wait until the house is burned down before considering what should be done about repairing the chimney in order to prevent a fire. Let us get some action before a trade is built up with a large vested interest which could not be thrown into the discard at a moment's notice without gross injustice. Do not let the Britisher get a footing in that market if you are not going to allow him to have it permanently. That is not just to him, and it will only interfere with our relations under these conference agreements, which are putting us in rather a ticklish situation in some respects. We do not want friction in the future with Great Britain; let us take action now. We can take action against New Zealand; we could take action against Great Britain if it were a question of shirts or something like that. Let us take action now, when it is a question of the livelihood of the coal miners of British Columbia.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like the minister to explain the increase of $250,000 in this item.

Mr. NEILL: They are having sympathetic meetings.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni says we are having sympathetic meetings. Last year the hon. member adopted the same paternal attitude with respect to the coal producers on the west coast. Apparently his observations were noted by the producers of western Canada, and I received a communication from the largest producer out there saying in substance that he was very sorry that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was interesting himself in this subject, and that he would get along a good deal better without the help of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. NEILL: Would the minister mention the name?

Mr. GORDON: It was Colonel Villiers. He is in the city now, and the hon. gentleman can interview him and verify what I say. I am sorry I have not the correspondence before me. The increase to which the hon. member for South Perth made reference has come about by reason of the increased movement under what are known as the coal subventions, and in large part by reason of the increase in the subventions themselves.

Mr. SANDERSON: Just for my own information could the minister give me the amount of anthracite coal imported from the United States into Ontario last year and this year?

Mr. GORDON: I am afraid that from the way these figures are tabulated I cannot give the complete picture. I can give the coal imported into what is known as the eastern zone. Apparently the trade has adopted certain zones for purposes of statistics; that is, they depend upon the laid down cost of the coal within a certain area.

Mr. SANDERSON: What comprises the eastern zone?

Mr. GORDON: It comprises that part of Ontario east of a line drawn between North Bay and Kingston. The importations of anthracite into that zone for the past four years were as follows:

	Tons
1929	303,132
1930	254,324
1931	187,210
1932	161,915

Mr. SANDERSON: Does that include the whole of Ontario?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not want to delay the committee. If the minister has not the figures would he be good enough to obtain them for me?

Mr. GORDON: I should be glad to do so. The table is quite long and it would take some time to read it into the record, but I shall be glad to furnish the hon. member with a complete table showing the importations.

Mr. SANDERSON: That will be quite satisfactory.

Mr. MITCHELL: Some months ago an investigation was started into the importation of anthracite coal from Great Britain. I should like to ask the minister when we may expect to receive that report, and whether we will get it in time to discuss it on the floor of the house if that should be necessary.

Mr. GORDON: I believe that investigation will be concluded very shortly. It was not a simple matter, because I am beginning to learn that the coal business has many angles, and

I can easily understand that those conducting the inquiry had to go carefully into all the phases of the coal trade in eastern Canada. I hope, however, that the report will be ready perhaps within a week.

Mr. RALSTON: I would not want the coal producers and miners or the place which this great resource holds in our national life injured by my intervention in this debate, as the minister said was the case with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. Surely a member is entitled to express his opinion without having it suggested that his intervention is going to be injurious to the cause he is upholding. I do not think the minister does himself justice; perhaps he did not quite intend to say what he did. Certainly it does not give one a very good impression to have it indicated that a man who consistently advocates assistance to this industry is doing it harm. One can only think that the people who come to the government must be extremely careful of the company they keep, otherwise they will probably have a deaf ear turned to them. In spite of that I want to suggest one or two things with regard to what the minister has said. He made one of his usual extremely unctuous speeches, if I may say so without being offensive. He used the most general language possible, and if "apple sauce" is a permissible parliamentary expression it may be used to characterize the hon. gentleman's remarks. Some of his expressions were that people had shown a "commendable disposition" towards the use of Canadian coal; that he is "not unacquainted" with the difficulties of the industry; that he is "not overlooking" this great industry; that the government is endeavouring to give such assistance as would be justifiable", and so on. Now that does not sound very much like the member of a government led by a gentleman who gave the undertakings which his leader did to the coal industry in 1930. All over the province of Nova Scotia and particularly in the coal districts we were told definitely that there would be a national fuel policy, and nothing comes of it but a statement in 1933 that the hon. gentleman is not overlooking the situation. I suggest that it is time for the minister either to, fish or to cut bait, to tell us either that he has a fuel policy or that he has not. In season and out of season I have done my best and stood abuse from this side of the house when I sat on the opposite side and was told that nothing was being done. I made no rash promises with regard to a national fuel policy, but endeavoured to do what seemed practicable and reasonable in connection with the industry; but this government came along with an entirely new proposition, namely, that the coal and steel industry should be benefited to the extent of the $55,000,000 that was going to the United States instead of going to the benefit of the people of Cape Breton—money that should be kept on this side of the line; but what they were led to expect has not materialized.

With regard to the dumping duties to which the minister has referred to-night, and which I have no doubt have been discussed with him in the lobbies of the house and in his office in the last day or two, the exchange dumping duty, as I understand it, is applied to coal at a low invoice price. The exchange dumping duty is being figured on so many shillings per ton, so that the fewer the shillings the less the duty and the less the assistance to the Canadian coal industry. I should think that the minister would be able to indicate to us whether it is intended to change that. God knows I am not in favour of this sort of duties, but if that is to be the policy let us have it all round and not some half hearted administration of it. If you are going to have a duty on everything else, if you are going to have irritating restrictions everywhere and a barbed wire on top of the fence, let us have it in connection with coal also and when the invoice value on everything else is raised do not let coal come in at nine shillings and sixpence when it is costing fifteen shillings at the port in England, and only charge the exchange dumping duty on that lower price.

With regard to other methods of assistance, I say to the minister frankly that I conratulate him on the addition made to the maximum in connection with the freight subvention given to forwarding water-borne coal the year before last. But that does not appear to be producing the results which we were led to anticipate from all this talk about the national fuel policy. After so much talk about that policy my hon. friend should be able by this time, having been two years in power, to inform us either that he has some policy or that he has not.

Everyone knows that the coal situation is a difficult one; if it were not the coal industry would be in better shape to-day than it is. But it is because of these difficulties which my hon. friends opposite thought that they could solve that the industry is in such straits at the present time, and we feel that they should do something about it. If nothing can be done, then let the minister confess his inability in the matter.

I would ask the minister to go into some detail with respect to the assistance furnished the industry, particularly in the east. May I put to him these five questions: 1. How much coal was carried by freight subvention from Nova Scotia to Montreal, all rail, last year? 2. How much coal was forwarded by rail, after it had come by water to Montreal? 3. How much coal was forwarded by water from Montreal to Toronto? 4. Is any extension of the fuel subvention area contemplated by the government this year? 5. Has the minister any additional proposals whereby he will promote assistance to the coal industry, particularly so far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned?

These are things which the committee should know, and I submit that we should get along much better if the minister would tell us precisely what he intends to do to assist the industry. I do protest that it is scarcely the right thing for him to say that he is "aware of the difficulties," that he is "not overlooking" the industry, and that sort of thing. Instead of generalities, will the minister give us some definite information with regard to the eastern Canadian coal industry. Will he tell us what has been done during the last year and compare that with the year before.

Mr. GORDON: The total movement of coal from Nova Scotia last year was 711,589 tons, under the various subvention rates.

Mr. RALSTON: I should be glad if the minister would separate them.

Mr. GORDON: I will endeavour to do so, although the figures are not compiled in that way. The all-rail rate in 1932, under order in council P.C. 1048, covered a movement of 15,854 tons. Under order in council P.C. 539, which covers rail and water rate, the movement totalled 59,667 tons. Under order in council P.C. 1300, rail and water rate, there were 214,085 tons.

Mr. RALSTON: Is that coal coming by water to Montreal and then forwarded inland?

Mr. GORDON: That is the rail and water rate. Under order in council P.C. 1048, for 1932, there were 39,847 tons.

Mr. RALSTON: What is that?

Mr. GORDON: That is rail and water again.

Mr. RALSTON: We have to know the destination.

Mr. GORDON: That is to Montreal.

Mr. RALSTON: 39,000 tons rail and water under P.C.1048—there must be a mistake when the minister says that is to Montreal.

Mr. GORDON: That is water to Montreal and then rail—

Mr. RALSTON: Inland?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: What is P.C. 1300—the same thing?

Mr. GORDON: P.C. 1300 preceded P.C. 1048.

Mr. RALSTON: It covers the same thing?

Mr. GORDON: The same thing. There were 74,196 tons under section 5 of P.C. 1048. Under section 6, there were 7,898 tons waterborne into Ontario through the canal system and then by rail to destination.

Mr. RALSTON: What is section 5?

Mr. GORDON: I believe section 5 is waterborne west of Montreal; some of that coal would reach as far as Toronto.

Mr. RALSTON: P.C. 1300 and P.C. 1048 seem to be the same thing.

Mr. GORDON: P.C. 1300 preceded P.C. 1048. Under section 7 of P.C. 1048 there were 93,135 tons. Under order in council P.C. 944, there were 152,074 tons.

Mr. RALSTON: What is that?

Mr. GORDON: That is coal for the Lasalle coking plant. If the hon. member desires, I will have a statement prepared covering all coal subventions.

Mr. RALSTON: What was the total for 1931?

Mr. GORDON: 349,767 tons.

Mr. RALSTON: How much coal subject to the subvention did the Canadian National Railways get?

Mr. GORDON: That would be under order in council P.C. 1048. No coal was purchased by the Canadian National with the exception of about 10,000 tons at Taschereau and Cochrane.

Mr. RALSTON: How much of the coal bought by the Canadian National Railways was subject to the subvention?

Mr. GORDON: 7,562 tons.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has stated that approximately 711,000 tons have been moved through these subventions. This was the total movement after the minister's announcement in the house last year that he hoped to promote the movement of an additional million tons of coal. That was broadcast all over Nova Scotia and when I asked the minister about it, he used the same figure in the house. That statement was advertised very broadly in the government newspapers and when we are all through we find that not only has there not been an additional million tons of coal moved but the total movement under the subventions is approximately seven hundred thousand tons. I think I was right when I suggested that the minister has not shown in practice any benefits to be derived from the national fuel policy.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order

DUMPING DUTY ON TIMOTHY SEED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, I received a letter this morning from a western farmer inquiring if it is a fact that a recent order in council has been passed applying a dumping duty to the importation of timothy seed.

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, a special value for duty was, at the request of the seed branch of the Department of Agriculture and supported by the deputy minister of that department, placed upon timothy seed. It was represented that a large amount of timothy seed was to be shipped into Canada. For those reasons the value for the duty was fixed. Upon further inquiry by the Department of Agriculture it was found that the situation was not as grave as was apprehended, and in those circumstances, having in the first place relied upon the Department of Agriculture, I relied in the second place upon that department, with the result that the fixation was removed.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED FIVE PER CENT TAX ON INTEREST AND DIVIDEND PAYMENTS TO NON-RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with respect to certain phases of taxation proposals contained in the budget, there has arisen some misunderstanding.

I thought I had made it abundantly clear in the statement which I made in the house on the 29th instant, that it was not intended to tax interest on Dominion of Canada or Canadian National Railway guaranteed bonds paid to non-residents.

This exemption was granted because, while there is no doubt of the power of parliament to impose such a tax, as is done in the case of other countries, nevertheless misunderstanding might arise in the mind of the non-resident investor who had purchased dominion securities issued in his own country and payable in his own currency.

In view of the fact that other public bodies and many private corporations have issued and sold abroad securities payable in an external currency with either the implied or stated obligation to pay without deduction, it has now been decided to extend this exemption to all interest payable by any Canadian debtor to non-residents on obligations which by their terms are payable in a currency other than Canadian.

To summarize briefly in order that absolutely no misunderstanding may exist:

(1) The five per cent tax on non-residents does not apply to interest on any Dominion of Canada bonds or bonds guaranteed by the dominion.

(2) The five per cent tax on non-residents does not apply to interest on the obligation of any provincial, municipal, corporation or other debtor payable in a currency other than Canadian.

(3) The five per cent tax on non-residents does apply in the case of interest payable by Canadian debtors (other than the dominion) in Canadian funds and to all dividends.

(4) In the case of residents of Canada the tax of five per cent applies on interest or dividends paid by Canadian debtors and cashed in a currency at a premium over par of Canadian funds.

With respect to the requirement that all Canadian residents shall, on and after April 1, file ownership certificates when cashing coupons, I desire to say that suggestions of evasions have given the government some concern and I wish to announce that a special measure will be introduced immediately which will require that all taxpayers shall make a statutory declaration when filing their returns that all such interest has been included.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (North Bruce): May I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) apropos of the remarks he has just made, what the situation will be when an American holding company, the stock of which is largely owned in Canada, receives its dividends on Canadian securities.

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry, I was interrupted and did not hear the first part of the question.

Mr. MALCOLM: I was asking the Minister of Finance how he was going to treat an American holding company which had among its securities large blocks of Canadian government bonds, when the stock of the holding company is owned by Canadians.

Mr. RHODES: I think the statement which I gave covers the question submitted by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) but if not, I will take it as a notice of question and give a succinct answer on Monday.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would it be the intention of the government to go after persons who have not made in their returns a statement of the bonds they hold?

Mr. RHODES: Very much so. That is not only the object of the announcement made in the budget, and the provision now before the house for consideration in committee of ways and means, but also of the further announcement I made a moment ago with respect to amendment of the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the government go after these people for the years in which they had not declared these bonds

Mr. RHODES: If they did not pay,—yes.

JUDGE RUTHERFORD

BAN PLACED BY RADIO COMMISSION ON SPEECHES THROUGH CANADIAN STATIONS

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). I have received a number of letters protesting against the action of the Radio Commission in banning Judge Rutherford's lectures. I may say most of the letters have been sympathetic towards Judge Rutherford, but to-day I received one from a friend who is not an admirer of Judge Rutherford's lectures, but who has frequently asked just what the situation is. I should like to know, myself, just what measure of responsibility, if any, the government has in the matter. I should like to know further, if in the event of placing a motion for the production of papers on the order paper, any documents could be had? Perhaps the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) would make a brief statement as to what the exact situation is.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to state exactly what the position is, since the ruling of the Radio Commission about Judge Rutherford's speeches. I will take this question as a notice and will give a more definite statement on Monday.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY

EARLY OPENING OF ROUTE TO FACILITATE SHIPMENT OF CATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): I have under my hand a letter and also some newspaper editorial comments relating to the opening up in the coming summer of the Hudson bay route. These articles point out that there is prospect of a large number of cattle being shipped out by that route in the spring, and that ordinarily the N. B. McLean would go through to Churchill somewhere around the first of July, arriving about the 10th. The suggestion is made that if this boat could go in earlier and open up the route, a larger number of these cattle could go out. I wonder if the minister is in a position to state that he will look into the matter and if possible have the route opened up earlier and made available for the shipment of cattle.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): In regard to opening the route earlier I am afraid that nature is in control. Last year there was an opportunity to ship out cattle, we were bombarded with requests to put up pens and so on, which we did, but there were no cattle shipped. Every reasonable step will be taken by the government, in fact has been taken, to give opportunity for shipping out cattle, and I am sure that if the western people wish to ship them they will not find any particular obstacle.

TRAWLER LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): May I ask the hon. acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) whether he is prepared to make an announcement of the government's policy with reference to licensing steam trawlers for the coming year?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): I hope Mr. Speaker, that I shall be in a position to make a statement on Monday.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 28, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston.

Mr. W. H. GOLDING (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, just before the house closed on Tuesday evening I was going to point out that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) in his speech had rather dared the members from the rural constituencies to vote against this budget. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not approve of that line of debate, because I think we should all use our judgment on matters of this kind without any intimidation or coercion. In regard to the budget itself, certainly there are some things in it which are acceptable, and there are some which are in my view objectionable, and I would not think for a moment of swallowing it holus-bolus. I want to refer in a few words to our recent by-election held in South Huron.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh forget it!

Mr. GOLDING: During that campaign we had some rather peculiar appeals made by our Conservative friends. We had in the constituency five cabinet ministers. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) told our people that this was no ordinary by-election, indeed he is quoted as having said that it was rather a plebiscite or referendum, and that the eyes of the whole world were on South Huron—

An hon. MEMBER: It sounds familiar.

Mr. GOLDING: —and that for the time being we were to forget politics and vote our approval of the empire treaties. I might say his audience was just a little curious to know how they were to forget politics, but the minister cleared that up by asking them to vote for the government candidate. The good old Tory way of forgetting politics—vote for the Tory candidate!

Mr. CASGRAIN: Tories are strong on that.

Mr. GOLDING: Then we had in addition to the Minister of Railways and Canals, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland). I want to say this, that they created a splendid impression in my constituency, they endeavoured to put their case fairly before our people from their point of view, they endeavoured to keep the debate on a high plane, and if they failed to secure the necessary votes to elect their candidate it was not due to any shortcoming on their part. I admire the debating abilities of these hon. gentlemen, and although we engaged in that contest there is no reason why we should not be the best of friends, and I want to tell them that I have every respect for them. However, we Liberals felt that if the government wanted to submit a plebiscite or referendum on this question that was quite all right, but we believed they were using the treaties as a screen to cover up the record of the government, and for that reason, as far as we were concerned, the fight was on. And by the way, I want to pay tribute here to my opponent in that campaign, who certainly conducted a good, clean fight.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce speaking in my home town made the statement that the greatest problem confronting the government at that time was the agricultural problem, and he endeavoured to point out that for that reason the house needed representatives who would be in a position to give expert advice. Now, sir, we absolutely agreed with the minister, that this government did need someone to give expert advice with regard to agriculture. But while we agreed to that we felt at the same time that it was rather a reflection on our late member who, while he sat in this house, had endeavoured time after time to give expert advice, though needless to say that advice did not receive any consideration.

During that by-election every Conservative speaker endeavoured to paint glowing pictures of the benefits that would be derived from the empire treaties. A manifesto was issued by the Conservatve candidate setting forth how important these treaties were to our constituency but, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives failed to tell our people that in order to secure the privileges of the British market the duties against foreign goods would be raised, and that the duties and taxes on even British goods would still prohibit those goods from entering Canada. I need hardly say that our people resent in no uncertain way the tariffs imposed by this government, which they feel are strangling trade and making it increasingly difficult for the basic producer even to exist. It is clear to all that we must have revenue, Mr. Speaker, and if tariffs are prohibitive that revenue must come from taxation, which adds to the cost of manufactured goods and of necessity adds to the price paid by the consumer.

Let me point out as emphatically as I can that the farmer is being absolutely crushed by the burden he is being called upon to bear. The manifesto to which I have already referred endeavoured to show how, as a result of these treaties, commodity prices had begun to soar, and at that time prices were a little higher; of course the treaties were given all the credit. But the electors refused to believe any new batch of promises. It was impossible to look into the faces of the electors of South Huron without realizing that they were in earnest and that they were in no mood to further entertain the glorious promises of things that were to be attained by high tariffs.

At the close of that campaign word went out, I do not know why, that a very light vote had been polled. The press was not responsible for that because I have personal knowledge that the newspaper men did their best to get the correct figures but were unable to do so. The statement was made that only about ten thousand votes were polled, and I want to give the figures to show how erroneous that statement was. In recent years the votes polled in that riding have been as follows:

	Progressives	Liberals	Conservatives	Total
1921	4,105	4,061	3,965	12,131
1925	1,680	4,947	4,694	11,321
1926	....	6,370	5,217	11,587
1930	....	6,176	5,827	12,003
1932	....	7,046	5,057	12,149

The vote during the by-election of 1932 was the largest vote polled in recent years. I submit these figures, Mr. Speaker, to show the interest taken in that by-election and also to show that our people desired to protest against the high tariff policy of this government. Since I have been in this house I have listened very closely to the discussions of the problems confronting the government.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly be accused of having trespassed very much on the time of this house, but I should like to make a few observations with respect to the budget, dealing more particularly of course with those items having to do with agriculture.

First I should like to express my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the splendid way in which he presented the budget. Certainly it was a timely and very concise review of the whole financial situation of Canada as well as of the record of the government during the past year. I should hesitate to participate in the debate at this time, Mr. Speaker, if it were not for the fact that I represent an agricultural constituency in the province of Saskatchewan, and I consider it my duty to express to the government the appreciation and satisfaction with which the budget will be received in the constituency of Qu'Appelle.

I realize that it would be almost impossible to get unanimous agreement in this house on any matter of policy, but I think there are two or three points on which all hon. members should agree. When we consider the general situation to-day surely no one would expect the Minister of Finance to bring down a balanced budget. With existing world conditions, the uncertainty of trade, fluctuating prices, ever decreasing revenues and our fixed and uncontrollable expenditures, how could we have a balanced budget? In the next place I think no government since confederation has been faced with a situation more difficult or critical than that which has faced the present government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his colleagues have had to make serious decisions, not after days of deliberation but on the spur of the moment, many of them affecting not only our national credit but the very life blood of our country. A wrong decision or a wrong step might easily have spelled disaster, but we on this side of the house believe the government have met every reasonable demand that has been made.

We expect reasonable and constructive criticism, Mr. Speaker, but beyond that I think we have a right to expect fairness and co-operation in dealing with a difficult situation. The depression has been world wide, but I think in some respects we can charge the late Liberal administration with some knowledge that the depression was coming on and with a failure to take any action to meet it. In proof of that I need only refer to the statement made by the late Sir Henry Thornton before the railway committee, I think in 1931. He said that as early as 1928 he had warned the government of the disaster that was coming, and he justified that statement by showing that the railway revenues were falling rapidly. That was in 1928. Then in 1929 we had what was known as the pork barrel year for the Canadian National Railways. In that connection I need only refer to the speech that was made by the present leader of the opposition in that year, in his famous five cents speech. What was that a reply to if it was not to a request for help from the western provinces to relieve the unemployment situation? I might also refer to the statement made by the Hon. Charles Dunning, in his final message to the Canadian people when he was leaving office. He said that it was their duty, realizing that the incoming government would have to deal with very serious problems in the most critical period in our history, to give the government their moral support. But what kind of support have we had, Mr. Speaker? We have had nothing but adverse criticism from the opposition, and the serious and critical situation in this country has been capitalized to destroy the morale of the Canadian people and their confidence in this government.

I wish now briefly to review some of the things which this government has done particularly for agriculture since taking office. In the first short session in 1930 two measures were introduced, the first granting $20,000,000 for unemployment relief, and the other dealing with some two hundred odd items in the tariff, being those items which the Prime Minister and his government believed would do most to correct the adverse trade balance at that time. I may say that that increase in the tariff had the desired result.

Then in 1931 we had a complete revision of the tariff, and after that revision the average percentage of increase in the whole tariff was only slightly more than under the regime of the Liberal party. True, there were many items in the tariff which received a considerable increase but, in the words of the Prime Minister at the time, this raising of the tariff was used as an instrument in the hands of the government to correct the unfavourable trade balance, and, Mr. Speaker, it had the desired result. Up to that time we had an unfavourable trade balance of $103,000,000, and I was pleased the other day, as I am sure were all hon. members of the house, to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and also the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) say that this year we shall have a favourable trade balance of some $70,000,000. What has that meant? It has meant that an unfavourable trade balance of $103,000,000 has been changed to a favourable trade balance of $70,000,000, or a change for the better of $173,000,000 odd. It has meant the difference between solvency and bankruptcy for this dominion.

In the budget brought down by the Prime Minister, then acting as Minister of Finance, in the session of 1931, the bonus of five cents a bushel for wheat was granted to the western farmer. I am particularly interested in that bonus as I was the first member of this house to move on the floor of this chamber for such a bonus to agriculture. I did so on April 13, previous to the bringing-down of that budget. When that proposal was brought down in the budget hon. members of the opposition, particularly those from the west, opposed it strenuously. But under that bonus, Mr. Speaker, the government has paid out some $12,000,000 to the people of the western provinces, and I would ask, when has any other government done such a splendid thing for agriculture in this country? The hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), speaking a day or two ago said that during that session the Liberals for two months less two days opposed the granting of that bonus, trying to show that it would go to the exporter or to the railway companies, and not to the farmer. That is not a correct statement, because it will be well within the memory of hon. members who were in the house at that time that after the Minister of Finance had brought down his budget, some two weeks later he made it clear to the house and the country that the bonus would go direct to the farmer by a separate cheque.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Quote your authority.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle)): My authority is the Hansard of that year.

Mr. VALLANCE: Read it.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): The hon. member for Melville also stated that they had opposed the bonus strenuously. In that connection I should like to quote from the report of a speech made by the hon. member in Saskatoon on November 25, 1931. He is reported as follows:

> The five cent bonus on wheat was held by the speaker of no use to the farmer. Continuing, the hon. member recounted the fight put by the western members in the opposition to the five cent bonus on wheat, and added that they had had a hard time to convince the government that the bonus would not go to the exporter.

There never was any intention of the bonus going to the exporter or to the railway companies or to anyone but the western farmers, and at the very time my hon. friend was speaking he knew that the bonus had been paid for two and a half months to the farmers by separate cheque.

I would further remind the house of the guarantee which this government made to the wheat pool in Saskatchewan. This government guaranteed the sum of $15,000,000 to that great cooperative organization in Saskatchewan, and that sum has not yet been repaid, but it saved the organization from insolvency, and saved also the farmers of western Canada. The credit can go to no one but the Prime Minister and the government of Canada. That guarantee to the pool has saved the investment of thousands and thousands of farmers in the province of Saskatchewan who have an investment, small in some cases, it is true, but considerable in others, in each one of the twelve hundred elevators in the province.

It is also within the memory of this house what a strenuous time we had in the session of 1932 getting the relief measure through the house to grant seed to the farmers of Saskatchewan. That measure was held up for six long weeks and not until seeding time was upon us and the farmers required the seed was the government able, by the application of closure, to get the measure through this house in order to make the distribution of seed possible. That is something which the western farmers will never forget. They will never forget the obstruction of the opposition in this house to that measure.

Then again last fall we had this government coming forward and doing something for agriculture by supporting the wheat market. The grain trade and the western farmers in the fall of 1932 were faced with a very serious situation owing to the fall in the price of wheat, and the government, after consulting with all the interests concerned, the grain trade, the wheat pool and the banks and the premiers of the three prairie provinces, decided that the best thing to do was for this government to support the market. What has this meant? I need only refer hon. members to the statement made by Professor Swanston of Saskatchewan university. He is one of the leading economists and he stated that this action by the government averted a national calamity and saved the farmers of western Canada many millions of dollars. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) chooses to call it gambling, but call it what you will, it was the right thing for the government to do. In the very near future when this plan shows a handsome profit, hon. members opposite no doubt will want to know what we are going to do with the profits.

I come now to the Imperial economic conference agreements passed last October. What has been the result of these agreements? There has been a surprising increase in our export trade, so much so that Canada has attained fourth position in trade with Great Britain. During the first six months of the crop year 1931-32 our exports of wheat to Great Britain amounted to 66,705,000 bushels while for the same period in the crop year 1932-33, they amounted to 112,529,000, an increase of one hundred per cent. The increase in our exports of flour to Great Britain for the same period amounted to twenty per cent, while the increase in bran and shorts amounted to 645 per cent. Our exports of oats during the same period of 1931-32 totalled 5,153,000 bushels and in 1932-33 they had increased to 7,500,000 bushels, an increase of forty-five per cent. The increase in the exports of barley was from 68,000 bushels to 190,900 bushels, an increase of three hundred per cent. The exports of bacon for the first two months of 1931 amounted to only 120,000 pounds; for the first two months of 1933 they had increased to 4,264,624 pounds, an increase of some 3,450 per cent. Canada can increase her exports of bacon to the United Kingdom thirteen times before she reaches the limit of her quota.

The increase in the export of ham was 158 per cent. Because of the trade agreements the embargoes which previously existed against our cattle entering Great Britain have been removed. The result has been a revival in the exporting of cattle and it is quite possible that this year we will export 100,000 head of cattle. Such a movement would relieve the domestic market to a great extent.

I come now to another item in which I am particularly interested as it affects the province of Saskatchewan—poultry. The records show that for the last ten months of 1931 our exports of poultry amounted to 56,175 pounds while for the same period in 1932 they had increased to 1,203,000 pounds. A trial shipment of 800,000 pounds of dressed turkeys was made last December as an experiment under the new agreement. These turkeys were dressed by the individual farmers in Saskatchewan to government standards; each bird was tagged separately and they all graded very high. The farmer received an advance of eight cents per pound and those birds sold on the British market at the top price of thirty cents per pound. Under the adverse exchange of twenty-five per cent they netted the farmer nineteen cents per pound, but under the present rate of exchange and with the help of the agricultural stabilization plan a similar price would net the farmer twenty-four cents per pound. These birds were superior to the home grown British bird and sold at a premium sufficient to overcome the adverse exchange. In 1932 Great Britain imported 74,000,000 pounds of dressed turkeys, fifty per cent having come from Russia. The parties who went over in charge of this shipment returned with an order for 2,000,000 pounds of turkeys. The whole shipment came from Saskatchewan. While it has been known for many years that we produce the best wheat in the world, we now have the record for producing the best poultry. I hope that the report on this trial shipment will be distributed among the farmers of western Canada so that advantage may be taken this fall of similar shipments.

Mr. SPENCER: Alberta has taken more prizes in wheat than has Saskatchewan.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): They may have taken more, but Saskatchewan always takes the first.

I could refer to other primary products such as cheese, eggs, tobacco, apples and so on; I could refer also to the increase which has taken place in our export trade to countries other than Great Britain, but I have not the time available. Not only has the volume of exports increased but the value has increased even in the face of adverse exchange rates.

We come now to the budget. I was very much interested in hearing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) announce the setting up of an agricultural stabilization fund. Such a fund will materially add to our advantages in the British market. In the case of a steer weighing 1,200 pounds it will mean practically another $10; it will mean two cents on every pound of bacon; it will mean eleven cents for every hundred pounds of milk used in the manufacture of cheese and it will mean three cents per pound on our poultry. The total results will mean a possible distribution this year of $10,000,000. For the information of the house, I would say that since the announcement of the budget the price of hogs on the Winnipeg market has increased very materially. Not only will we have the benefits from a possible distribution of $10,000,000 but there will be an added stabilization and support of the domestic market. Upon all occasions the opposition has opposed bonusing of any kind, but what do we find now? They are opposing this splendid arrangement because it is not applied to the export of all primary products. They know that that would be impossible as it would take $100,000,000. Where would the money come from? However, it would seem that at last they have been converted to the principle of bonusing. When we have this splendid arrangement, why do they not come forward and support it as they should. I challenge hon. members opposite from Saskatchewan to go back to their respective constituencies and explain why they oppose this budget.

Mr. VALLANCE: The trouble is that most of us, under the new redistribution, will not have constituencies to which to return.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): While the hon. member has one now, he would not have one anyway after the next election.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am willing to take a chance on that.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): They know wheat is enjoying, under the agreement, a preference of six cents in a sheltered market where it is agreed to take 150,000,000 bushels more, and it would be impossible to bonus wheat in a market where there is such a surplus.

Let me now deal with the subject of butter. True, it is not bonused, but the reason is that our production of it is not on an export basis, and I am surprised to hear the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) even mention the word "butter," that cheap spread, as I think he called it in his speech; I think that was the term he used. He knows the government have had many decisions to make and have been confronted with many difficulties in prohibiting the importation of butter in order to preserve the home market for our producers. I have been reviewing Hansard and I find that during 1923, when the hon. member was Minister of Agriculture, he introduced an amendment to the Dairy Industry Act, as reported on page 4251 of Hansard of that year, to provide for the importation of renovated butter. Now, everyone knows what renovated butter is—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I never did.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): It is butter that is tainted, mouldy and not eatable. After it goes through a certain process by the use of chemicals, it is called "renovated," and the hon. member wanted that to be permitted to be imported to compete against butter produced by our own dairymen. What a wonderful gesture in favour of agriculture!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Better than oleomargarine.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): We all remember how for six weeks during last October and November hon. gentlemen opposite wailed about the adverse exchange; they admitted that the agreements were all right, but, oh, they would be nullified by the exchange! Well, we see the effect of the agreements in the increase in our trade, and now when the government has made provision for correcting the exchange, why do hon. gentlemen opposite not support it?

This budget will do much for agriculture. It certainly will encourage the farmers of Saskatchewan and of western Canada generally to change their system from simply grain growing to more diversified farming. This will mean that millions of acres fewer will be seeded to wheat; it will help in the disposition of our surplus and it will, as I say, encourage our farmers to go into a better system of farming. For the information of hon. members I might say that Saskatchewan's capacity to multiply her production and to produce new wealth is practically unlimited. In view of the fact that in western Canada in ten years we produced $6,000,000,000 of new wealth, I venture to say that if we have normal climatic conditions—and that is all we need—we can repeat the production. That time will come and we shall be on the spot to take advantage of it. The government expects, and reasonably so, and I believe the people of Canada expect, that our business men and agriculturists will develop our export trade. Under these favourable treaties we have made, we have an opportunity such as we never had before. Increased export trade, to my mind—and I think I reason correctly—means an increased domestic market, and an increased export price means an increase in the price of commodities for domestic consumption. As I understand the matter, this is the purpose of the establishment of a fund to stabilize the exchange in connection with the export of our primary products. This was the purpose announced by the Prime Miinster (Mr. Bennett) a short time ago and I know the government will see to it that the benefit will accrue to the farmer. That is what they did with respect to the five cent bonus on wheat and they will see to it that the same thing occurs in this instance.

I wish to refer briefly to the speech of the Prime Minister on reciprocity or, rather, on the resolution of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). Our leader gave a splendid and timely review of the whole situation in Canada, going back to before confederation, and discussing the policies of the different parties in regard to reciprocity. I was pleased to note that the great Conservative party had stood foursquare on the question ever since that time. I was also particularly pleased and the people of the dominion were pleased, if I may judge from the many favourable resolutions and comments I have received from my constituents in regard to that speech, to hear the Prime Minister announce that he and his government are prepared at any time to receive any reasonable, fair, equitable proposition from the United States. When the time comes that the president of that great republic makes a gesture toward Canada in the way of a trade agreement, the people of Saskatchewan, yes, of Canada, I think, want our leader (Mr. Bennett) to be the man to negotiate that treaty. I am sure they will not want the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) with his policy of fear, trembling and conciliatory approach. I could quote from his budget speech as reported on page 1403 of Hansard of 1929, when he made a statement to the effect that they would not increase the tariff against the United States for fear of retaliation and would not dare to increase the British preference for fear such action might be misunderstood. That was certainly the philosophy of the do-nothing politician. I have under my hand the report of a speech made a few days ago by a leading statesman in the United States when he was speaking with respect to trade with Canada. He said that the United States could no longer treat Canada as a bully treats a small boy; that Canada now had as prime minister, a businessman, a man of ability, and one who had the courage of his convictions. They respected our Prime Minister.

I want to refer briefly to a very important announcement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to the effect that the government proposes to appoint a royal commission to investigate the whole question of our banking and monetary system. That is a timely announcement by the government and I trust the Prime Minister will be as fortunate in choosing the members of that commission as he has been in laying his hands on the right men for the other commissions that have been appointed.

During the summer there is no doubt that the world monetary conference will be held. I trust our prime minister will be able to attend it and that there some international standard of exchange may be set up, because that is what we need. I hope also at that conference the delegates may have occasion to discuss the question of the revaluation of gold, because in that way something might be accomplished to help materially to solve our financial problem. I am sorry my time is so limited that I cannot speak with respect to the inflation policy about which we have heard so much from the C.C.F. corner of the house. It certainly is not sound, and all I can propose to do is to consider it from a standpoint of what has happened in those countries which have tried it, namely Germany, Russia and some others.

Australia is practically the only country to which hon. members opposite now wish to refer, and I say that in some of their comparisons they are very unfair. I find on looking up trade statistics and comparing Australia and Canada that under the two systems obtaining in these countries during the past six months Canada sold 55 per cent more wheat while Australia, during the same period, sold 32 per cent less wheat. Comparing the prices obtaining in the two countries we find that on March 14 this year sixty pounds of wheat at the Australian seaboard was worth only 32 or 33 cents, while Canadian farmers were receiving net at Fort William 35 cents. So, while prices are very low, I admit, I do suggest that we are in the more favourable position.

I contend the Minister of Trade and Commerce so completely answered the argument of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth that it is hardly necessary for me to proceed further in that connection. I think we will agree the budget gives a complete statement of revenues and expenditures. It sets out the many fixed charges we cannot get away from, and deals particularly with railway deficits. At this session the railway problem is certainly being grappled with by the House of Commons and the government. And at this point I should like to mention the matter of freight rates, and to express my appreciation of the splendid support the Minister of Railways and Canals is giving us, and of the fact that he made it possible this year to have a reduction of some fifty per cent in the differential as between domestic and export rates in western Canada. Ever since coming to this house I have been associated with that problem, and on every occasion I have endeavoured to support a reduction in the rates. Having due regard to the difficult situation in which railway companies find themselves to-day I say the reduction is a grand gesture on their part.

In the budget address the Minister of Finance spoke concerning certain public economies. There are many ways in which we can economize, and in connection with which preparations are being made for economies. However, I say that this action should have been taken between the years 1926 and 1930. That was the time when our public accounts, public expenditures and public debt increased by leaps and bounds. That was the year when public economies should have been put into effect. Of course under present conditions it is necessary to increase our taxes in order to provide funds with which to carry on. There have been many increases but I believe hon. members will agree that in nearly every instance the tax has been imposed against those people best able to bear it. There are certain nuisance taxes, such as those on stamps, and postal notes, which are employed at all times by any and all governments facing emergencies.

In conclusion I wish to protest against certain attacks which have been made upon the province of Saskatchewan, and upon this government for the assistance it has given to that province. I refer particularly to the attack made by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). I think his attack was certainly uncalled for, but the hon. member is noted for making similar attacks. When he speaks, as we know he does, for an important wing of the Liberal party, his statements will not soon be forgotten in the province of Saskatchewan. I admit that province has had difficult and trying times, but with the experience of the past five years and the indomitable courage of our ancestors, we will pull through. I venture to say that under normal circumstances, and normal climatic conditions, within the next ten years Saskatchewan will make an even greater contribution to the export trade of Canada and to the earnings of our railway companies than any other province in the dominion.

These are critical days for governments and nations. Giants of industry and of finance, along with great statesmen, have broken under the load. And when the history of this period of our national life is written, the members of this government will rank high and the name of the Prime Minister will be recorded as that of the greatest statesman of his time within the empire.

Mr. J. R. HURTUBISE (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I do not purpose to go into a discussion of the financial situation of our country, because I do not pretend to be a financial critic. However after following the debates in the house and considering the downward trend of our financial situation I feel it my duty to make a few observations and express my sincere opinion. I hope no hon. member will suggest that my statements will be prejudiced or biased in any way.

At the outset may I follow the example of hon. members who have preceded me and congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the able manner in which he delivered his budget speech. I fully appreciate the work and worry it involved. May I also congratulate the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) upon the masterly way in which he replied to the budget speech. My further congratulations would be extended to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Golding) who in his maiden speech acquitted himself so well. Even with my years of experience I do not believe I could hope to do as well.

My remarks may appear obvious, but sometimes in life we do not see the things that are staring at us and within our grasp because of the allurement of distant attractions or because of our entanglement with matters foreign to our needs and ideals. Economically our country is in the most critical situation of its history. The situation is such that no time should be lost in arguing utopian theories which have been offered to the world, put into practice from time to time in different countries and discarded as inefficient. To-day we have reached the point where privileges to special interests should be set aside and forgotten. Let us turn our minds to governmental measures and regulations which will ensure to our country liberty, security and progress.

I hope those who have satisfied themselves as to the impracticability of their doctrines and policies will prove their good statesmanship by discarding those policies and adopting radical measures which will be for the good of the country as a whole. To accomplish anything we have to be broad enough to admit our mistakes. Much has been said about capitalism. My submission is that the capitalistic system has given a great impetus to modern progress. However it has brought with it great abuses which are the cause of our being on the verge of a catastrophe. Our aim should be not to do away with such a system, but to correct its defects and avoid future disasters.

Our main duty should be to face our obligations and to honour them. But to-day we are working under a great handicap. The world is so fettered with war debts that its capacity to pay is crippled. The productive capacity of nations and individuals has been overtaxed, and unless some concession is made we are close to a general breakdown the effect of which cannot be imagined. I hope that at the world economic conference to be held in London there will be enough men of courage and Christian spirit to bring about an economic disarmament which will release international trade, promote sympathy and co-operation between the nations, and rid the world of this exclusive and bigoted nationalism. In our country we have come to the time when we cannot borrow any more money, and we wonder if we will be able to pay our interest and amortize our debt as it stands. For some years past, for each $100 we spent we had to borrow $34 and add it to our debt. This cannot continue. Great Britain was faced with the same situation but she took means to get out of the impasse and to-day she is in a very satisfactory condition compared to other nations of the world.

I do not believe that all the schemes advocated lately will cure our present financial difficulties; neither inflation, reflation, technocracy, socialization, confiscation of capital, nor "cooptisation," will replace a well balanced and controlled capitalistic system. I am convinced that the state can and should prevent the concentration of wealth and potential wealth in the hands of a few, and thereby control the sources of credit of the country. We should never have permitted the creation of fictitious capital and the watering of stocks with the support of the banks. It has drained the savings of the public, who have been fooled under the paternal eye of the state, and to-day when the state wants to float a loan it finds the "bas de laine" empty, and instead of being helped out of the crisis by its citizens it is faced with the obligation of helping those same citizens on whom it had relied. I hope the lesson will make the state wiser in the future. We have come to a point where the positions of the different governments, federal, provincial or municipal, should be well-defined. The present government, which did not want to meddle with provincial or municipal affairs, has so meddled with them, has promised so many things before, during and after election, that we have a situation now where everybody is leaning on it for support. The federal government should keep out of purely provincial and municipal matters, withdraw from business enterprises, and adhere to functions of purely legislative and regulatory nature. If the provinces want to go into public ownership, old age pensions, mothers' allowances, accident insurance and highway construction, let them do so, but the federal government should be wise enough to keep to its constitutional functions.

I listened with great interest to the debate on the resolution of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) to renew the Relief Act of 1932 as amended. I have much sympathy with the minister in his task of dealing with unemployment. The other evening when he and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) were pleading for cooperation and sympathy I could have told them they already had mine, because I believe that with the methods employed to-day, that is since 1930, they have only been experimenting, and instead of making progress they have become engulfed. They have been marking time, not adopting any measure of a national, practical or curative nature. They have only used palliative measures. In their ambition to implement their promises to end unemployment, "in giving work instead of conferences," they have forgotten that the situation is national in character, that the machine will never be able to reabsorb the hands which it has discarded, that this situation is likely to last for a longer period than might be expected, that some national policy such as suggested by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) will have to be adopted. There is still time to adopt such a measure, to call to the help of the government the best and most competent minds of the provinces and the dominion, and to make a classification of the unemployed as suggested by my hon. friend the member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), that is of common labourers, technical workers, farm hands, trades and professions. Then the government could prepare a proper program; and not deal with the matter in a haphazard way, giving to provinces and municipalities money over which it has no control, and which often is unwisely spent and sometimes misappropriated. Up to now we have spent $123,000,000 for which we have to be taxed, and which has not ameliorated the general condition one iota.

The only part in the Minister of Labour's program which I believe is sound and national in character is the back to the land movement, to which he has given special attention and upon which I sincerely congratulate him. In that I am with him 100 per cent. For two years I have cooperated with the municipal and provincial representatives, and I am glad to say that in my district we have succeeded very well. As long as it is handled by people who have at heart the success of the plan, and who are not primarily interested in keeping an easy job, it will be a success, and will be a great help to redistribute our population on its normal basis.

Some may say: What is the use of putting people on farms when so many are now being dispossessed by foreclosures caused by the heavy burden of taxation and the lack of protection by legislation? This brings me to the farming situation. I believe agriculture is our main industry. I repeat what I said last year; a country with a prosperous agricultural population is a prosperous country. But what chance has the farmer had in recent years? He has been one of those who suffered most from the application of the Conservative policies these last three years. By reason of a narrow national and imperial trade policy the doors of the markets of the world have been slammed in his face, and to-day he can only dispose of a small portion of his products, for which nevertheless this government takes great credit.

Seeing the great malaise in the agricultural community the government has proposed a stabilization fund. Already the press has proclaimed the great benefits that will accrue to the farmer. But wait for the boomerang from this legislation as a result of its discriminatory character.

An hon. MEMBER: It has started already.

Mr. HURTUBISE: Yes. I do not believe in bonusing any particular class of products. There will be criticism and demands from those whose special products are omitted, and retaliation from nations exporting those bonused products. This will not cure the agricultural situation; what we need is a change in our fiscal and trade policies. In the meantime, before we have a change of government and before the farmers all become bankrupt, why not give the farmer the same guarantee against bankruptcy that has been given all other large financial institutions? We have seen the government taking great care to protect Canadian National bondholders and making loans to the Canadian Pacific Railway; in 1930, 1931 and 1932, guarantees were given the wheat pool, and there have been guarantees given with regard to the Manitoba savings bank, the Beauharnois project and the government of Newfoundland. These make up the huge total of $3,714,663,000. What has the farmer and small urban proprietor received by way of protection? They have been given nothing, though they are the people who will have to pay a great part of these taxes.

How long are we to have this class legislation? How long will the farmer and small proprietor be burdened with taxes which are more than they can bear? This budget is a discrimination against those least able to pay. The exemptions under the income tax are reduced from $2,400 to $2,000, and from $1,200 to $1,000, while the exemption for a dependent child is reduced from $500 to $400. Incomes of $2,500 will pay $15 instead of $2, which is an increase of 650 per cent; incomes of $50,000 will pay $10,069 instead of $8,962.80, which is an increase of only 14 per cent. This is the way in which those least able to pay are affected.

How are the veterans affected by this budget? During the course of his speech the Minister of Finance said:

> —pensioners who are in the employ of the government and who are paid the salary of the position, action will be taken whereby the payment of pension will be suspended during the period of such employment.

The next day I received telegrams of protest from the various veterans' organizations in my district, and the newspapers throughout Canada reported similar protests from all over the country. I hope the government will reconsider this action, which is a breach of contract. Many veterans are holding their jobs because they are partially disabled; they would not be there if they could do a normal man's work. I believe that already the veteran has made a great contribution to our country, and if we cannot compensate him for his sacrifice at least he should not be further taxed.

Now what about excise taxes, Mr. Speaker? Refined sugar is taxed 2 cents a pound or $2 per hundred pounds; unfermented wort is taxed 25 cents a gallon, malt syrup to 50 cents a pound, malt powder 50 cents a pound; all cheques, bank receipts, money orders, travellers cheques and post office money orders to an amount of less than $5, with the exception of creamery cheques, which formerly were exempt, are now taxed; on postal notes we must pay 3 cents instead of one cent, and on matches in small packages there is a tax of three-twentieths of a cent. The sales tax, which in 1930 was one per cent, was increased to six per cent in 1932 and remains at that figure. In this way those least able to pay are affected.

What about the customs tariff? I do not want to say very much on this subject, because there will be other occasions to discuss the items affected by the Imperial conference and the new schedule. Let me say, however, that considering the downward trend of our financial situation I believe the time has come when this government should stop and start again on fundamental, national and constructive policies. They should not keep coaxing the people of Canada to wait in the hope that matters will adjust themselves. In 1930 we were told to wait until the government machine got working, and we waited though we were promised during the election campaign that we would have better times in a few days. In 1930 we were told also to wait until after the Imperial conference, and we waited. In 1931 we were told to wait for the revision of the tariff, and we waited. In 1932 we were told to wait for the effects of the Ottawa conference, and we waited. Now in 1933 we are told to wait for the world economic conference, and we are waiting. I wonder, however, if the people of Canada will wait indefinitely; I am afraid they will not.

Mr. POULIOT: We do not need waiters; we need statesmen.

Mr. HURTUBISE: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that we are told to have patience and courage, and I believe the people of Canada should be congratulated on their manifestation of both during the last few years. They are still patient and courageous, not because they still hope for the success of the present administration but because they have a great and resourceful country, and because soon they will be given a chance to put in an administration which will change this policy of blocking and stifling trade and give us another era of prosperity through Liberal administration and freedom of trade.

Mr. ERRICK F. WILLIS (Souris): Mr. Speaker (Mr. Stewart, Lethbridge), may I compliment you personally upon your recent elevation to your present position.

General depression has always been the greatest election general of opposition forces. It rides upon the worries of the people and creates a condition in which few arguments are necessary in order to show the superiority of those in opposition over those on the government benches. General depression has conquered practically all of the governments of the world; his four horsemen, hysteria, anxiety, worry and gloom, ride fearlessly throughout the country, complete masters of public opinion.

In the province of Manitoba those who are opposed to the present government have built up a body of public opinion which is quite ready to blame the present administration for the lack of rain from the skies, for grasshoppers on the face of the earth and for the lack of moisture beneath the earth. Matters which five years ago would not have been considered by the most vivid imagination, in its most fertile moments, to be connected with the federal administration even by radio, now are said to come under its control and mismanagement. But to those fair minded individuals who are still willing to listen, to read and to judge by the facts I desire to address myself.

It will not be sufficient for my present purpose to indicate that the party which is now seeking power is the party that in 1929 and 1930, facing a rising depression, was unwilling or unable to do anything to save the country from the throes of distress. Neither will it be sufficient for my purpose to indicate that this country of ours has weathered the storm better than any country in the world, according to the admission of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). Rather will it be my purpose to indicate the efforts which have been made by this administration for the purpose of alleviating the distress of agriculture. I should like to refer firstly to those measures which have been taken to aid the wheat growers of this country.

First, there have been sent out to the different trade centres throughout the world trade commissioners and assistant trade commissioners in order to help sell our wheat.

Secondly, it may be pointed out that for the ten months ending January 31, 1933, we have sold 34,000,000 more bushels of wheat than we did in the same ten months ending January 31, 1932.

Thirdly, it may also be of interest to note that for the first time in the history of this country we have had a government which recognized the difficulties of the western farmer by making an adjustment as between east and west whereby the western farmer got a bonus of five cents a bushel on his wheat, which has meant the payment to the farmers of western Canada of a sum of $12,706,000. This has been the first government to recognize that necessity. May I say to those farmers who happened not to have any crop that whether they receive part of this money or not, the benefit was felt throughout western Canada.

Fourthly, I should like to refer to the question of freight rates because I recall that in my campaign of 1930 I lost literally hundreds of votes because those opposed to me at that time declared that if the Conservatives were elected to power there would never be Crowsnest rates allowed on the Hudson Bay railway. But one of the first things which this government did on coming to power was to give us the Crowsnest rates on that route.

Fifthly, I should refer to the fact that under the Imperial conference agreements we receive a six cents a bushel preference on our wheat, due to the imposition of a duty of six cents a bushel on wheat entering Great Britain from other countries. Of course, we have to sell our wheat at the world price. The benefit of this preference was brought vividly to my attention when I happened not very long ago to be in Fort William, where I saw beside an elevator the grain vessel, Le Moyne, with a capacity of 600,000 bushels of grain. If that grain vessel had been from Russia, before it could have been unloaded in Great Britain it would have had to pay a duty of $36,000, but if it were loaded with grain from Canada it would have to pay nothing at all.

Sixthly, I should refer to those measures which this government has taken to support the wheat pools of western Canada, and thereby support the general price, and lastly, I should refer to the measures which have been taken to support the market itself.

Contrasted with those policies let me indicate what was the policy of the previous administration as we have it from the lips of the then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), who at page 948 of Hansard of March 14, 1929, said:

> The Department of Trade and Commerce is not exercised over the sale of such commodities as wheat, because those commodities find their own markets, but we are interested in assisting the sale of manufactured products.

And that from the party which is being painted in western Canada as being the only one to help agriculture, and as not being tied up with the moneyed interests.

I should also like to quote what the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) said when he was speaking at a meeting in Quebec, as reported in Le Soleil of August 8, 1931. The translation is as follows:

> What can be said of those who have just voted $15,000,000 to give a wheat bonus to western farmers, whilst they did not give anything to our farmers, who cannot sell their butter? Is this not sectional politics?
> Yet our Quebec (Conservative) representatives have swallowed these insults. It is what they deserve to punish them for all they have said against us.

Let me quote also the words of another member of the government of that time, the ex-Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin), who, with the ex-Minister of Justice and the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce can be counted upon, I think, as being certain cabinet members of any government of the Liberal party which may come into force in this country. As reported in the Montreal Gazette of June 18, 1932, he said, in part, as follows:

> What is happening to-day as regards Port Churchill? We have Hon. Dr. Manion acting like a beggar in the street, begging people to ship some grain over the Hudson Bay railway to Port Churchill. So eager is he to get some grain there that he is offering free elevators, a cut in railway rates, and also a bonus to compensate for the higher insurance rates out of Port Churchill. That is what the Bennett government is ready to do. Sane merchants doing a regular, reasonable business in grain do not want to send their grain through Port Churchill at the present time, and Dr. Manion is running around begging them to do so, and saying that the government will pay. That means that we will all be taxed to meet the promises of partisans who have involved themselves in a chimerical project.

May I indicate the situation in which we were placed by the previous administration in regard to tariffs, and this I think will prove conclusively that at the time we took office the markets of the world had already been closed to our wheat. The duties placed against our wheat as of August 1, 1930, when the Mackenzie King government was still in power, by some of the countries of the world were, to mention but a few:

	Cents per bushel
Italy	86
France	85
Germany	97
Greece	56
United States	42
Japan	34

Those were the tariffs placed against our grain and the then government did nothing.

Let me turn now to the question of live stock in this country and indicate what the policies of this government have been. First, there was the sire policy, which has meant the improvement of live stock throughout this country. Then there were trial shipments sent to the old country in order that they might see the quality of our Canadian live stock. We had also feeding experiments carried on by the Department of Agriculture which demonstrated that you could then market home grain by feeding it to live stock at an increase in price of some 36 cents a bushel.

Then under the Imperial conference agreements we received concessions in regard to live stock which we had not enjoyed for some thirty-seven years previously. Canadian cattle exporters are placed on an equal footing with their competitors in the British market for the first time in thirty-seven years. The segregation of store cattle from fat cattle moving on export is no longer required, and fattened store cattle are allowed to move freely to inland points in Great Britain. The old policy of branding the cattle on the cheek on arrival is no longer required, nor is it now necessary for a veterinary officer to accompany the cattle on the ocean voyage. The period of quarantine has also been reduced to one clear day.

Again, in the budget which has just been brought down we have the stabilization proposal which has been made by the Minister of Finance. May I quote his exact words on that subject, which will be found at page 3226 of Hansard:

> It is proposed to establish a fund to be known as the agricultural stabilization fund.
> From it there will be paid to exporters to the British market the difference between the price actually received and the pound sterling valued at $4.60. In other words, to the extent that the pound sterling falls below $4.60 the difference will be made good from this fund.
> This will apply to the following commodities: animals, meats (including bacon and hams), poultry, fresh fish, canned fish, tobacco, cheese, milk products, canned fruits, canned vegetables, maple products, eggs and honey.

It is calculated that that will mean a bonus of some twelve per cent for our exporters of these commodities to the British market. In addition, it will mean an increased price for these products in the home market. This proposal must be regarded, as indeed it is by every minister of agriculture in the provinces of this country, as a tremendous step in assisting those who are raising live stock. Contrasted with that, when the Mackenzie King government was in power, the markets to the south were closed to us, and they continued closed up to the time this government came into power. I should like to indicate the American duties on a few items; first, under the tariff as it was in 1920; second, under the Fordney-McCumber tariff of 1922 and, third, under the Hawley-Smoot tariff of 1930. The items and rates of duty are as follows:

	Tariff 1920	Tariff Sept. 21, 1922	Tariff June 17, 1930
Cattle..ad valorem	Free	1½c. per pound if less than 1,050 pounds; heavier 2c. per pound	2½c. per pound if less than 7,001 pounds; heavier 3c. per pound
Live hogs..per pound	Free	½c.	2c.
Sheep and lambs..per head	Free	$2	$3
Live poultry; chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys, and guineas..per pound	1c.	3c.	8c.
Beef and veal..per pound	Free	3c.	6c.
Mutton..per pound	Free	2½c.	5c.
Lamb..per pound	Free	4c.	7c.
Pork..per pound	Free	¾c.	2½c.
Poultry, dressed or undressed..per pound	2c.	6c.	10c.
Eggs in the shell..per dozen	Free	8c.	10c.
Wheat..per bushel	Free	30c. (increased to 42c. on April 8, 1924)	42c.
Oats..per bushel of 32 pounds	6c.	15c.	16c.
Barley..per bushel of 48 pounds	15c.	20c.	20c.
Wheat flour..per 100 pounds	Free	78c. (increased to $1.04 on April 8, 1924)	$1.05

That is what was done under the regime of the administration that took the attitude that we must not provoke the United States. The result was that that market was completely lost.

I come now to the question of hogs. Under this government we have the brood sow policy carried out by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). We next have the quota established by the conference agreements. This will permit the export of 280,000,000 pounds of hams and bacon, a total which far exceeds any possible production in this country. Then we have the boys' and girls' swine clubs which are carrying on a very useful work.

I should like to refer again to barley. Manitoba produces more barley than any other province in Canada. This government put on a duty of twenty-five cents per bushel against corn coming into the country. The result has been an increase in production of 13,000,000 bushels in 1932 over the production of 1931. Imports of corn from the United States have deceassed by twenty-five per cent or some 3,000,000 bushels, thereby providing an additional market in this country for barley. The home consumption of barley has increased and we find that the amount in storage is much less than previously, it being 6,000,000 bushels in 1932 as compared with 11,000,000 bushels in the previous year. A new market has thus been provided for our barley.

Butter has been discussed in this house upon many occasions. The policy of this government has been to decrease the importations of butter from abroad. The result has been an increased production with an expected depressed price. However, the price of butter in this country is the highest upon the whole continent. The production has been increased from 258,000,000 pounds in 1929 to 330,000,000 pounds in 1932 while imports have been decreased from 36,000,000 pounds in 1929 to 238,000 pounds in 1932. Exports have increased from 1,400,000 pounds in 1929 to 3,500,000 pounds in 1932. This increase has been largely due to the concessions obtained at the recent conference whereby a duty of fifteen shillings per hundredweight was placed against foreign butter by the United Kingdom. Action has recently been taken in order to impound butter which has come in from New Zealand. It will be seen that the new New Zealand treaty is of some use. There was also the action taken by the Minister of Agriculture in stopping butter coming into the country from Australia before the treaty was completed. In addition to and tied up with the same matter we have the inquiry now going on before the agriculture committee into the price of milk and as to whether or not the consumer gets a fair share of that price. I ask the house to contrast this present situation with that which obtained under the old New Zealand treaty where that country shipped into this country some 36,000,000 pounds of butter per year. That was a tragic mistake which probably cost the then existing government its power. I have never been able to understand the attitude taken at that time, nor have I been able to understand the attitude taken since. If the New Zealand treaty was right, why was it abrogated? If it was wrong, why is it now defended.?

Because of the grading policies of this government the per capita consumption of eggs in this country is the highest in all the world, it being thirty-one dozen per person. Our markets have been increased and this government is responsible for the fact that we sold 100,000 pounds of poultry to the old country just at Christmas time. This was largely due to the Imperial conference agreement and the ten per cent preference given to Canadian poultry. The quality of our poultry has been improved through the inspection and certification of flocks. This government has been interested in the creation of new grasses, notably the crested wheat grass created by Doctor Kirk. The work of the publications branch of the department is being carried on and any farmer can obtain the information he desires upon a particular subject by simply writing to the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

The question of markets must always enter into any discussion regarding agriculture. We have already upon Hansard the results of the various tariff measures of the United States and it will be noticed that that market was closed to us before this government came into power. A great opportunity is open to this country, of which the Prime Minister is fully aware, in the possibility of a reciprocity treaty with the United States. Such a trade treaty has many possibilities, particularly with regard to live stock. I would not favour a treaty which might exist to-day and be cut off to-morrow but a treaty similar to those which we have with other parts of the British Empire and which run for a period of years would be of inestimable value to Canada. President Roosevelt appears to be anxious to enter into such a treaty.

As I have indicated already, the other markets of the world had been closed to us and last year the only market that remained as a possibility was the British Empire. To those who claim that the Imperial conference agreements have been of no use, may I say that in the ten months ended January 31 last we have increased our exports of wheat, oats, flour, beef, bacon, hams, pork, canned meats, poultry and milk by $15,826,000. We now occupy fourth place in the British market and fifth place in the markets of the world. And it must be remembered that we have only some 10,000,000 people. As far as markets are concerned for our size we are enjoying larger markets than those enjoyed by any other country in the world.

I should like to refer to the tariff situation as it has existed under the different parties. I intend to quote from the government publication Trade in Canada published by the Bureau of Statistics. I desire to show the average rates of duty on dutiable imports and also on all imports for a number of years, as follows:

	Average Rates of Duty on Dutiable imports	All imports
1917	23.8	13.0
1918	21.5	12.1
1919	21.5	12.3
1920	22.5	14.7
1921	20.6	14.1
Average for 5 years, Conservatives	21.9	13.2
1922	24.5	16.2
1923	24.9	16.7
1924	22.9	15.1
1925	23.3	15.1
1926	24.7	15.5
Average for 5 years, Liberals	24.0	15.7

	Average Rates of Duty on Dutiable imports	All imports
1927	24.1	15.4
1928	24.2	15.5
1929	24.4	15.8
Average for 8 years, Liberals, 1922-1929	24.1	15.6
1930	24.3	15.9
1931	26.0	16.4
1932	29.3	19.7
Average for 3 years, Conservatives	25.1	17.3

Increase in average Mackenzie King tariff, 1922 to 1929, over previous Conservatives tariff, 1917-1921 on dutiable imports 2.2 per cent.

Increase in average Bennett tariff, 1930-32, over previous average Mackenzie King tariff on dutiable imports 2 per cent.

In their first full calendar year in office the Mackenzie King government increased the average tariff by 4.3 per cent, and similarly in the first full calendar year the Bennett government increased the average tariff by 1.6 per cent.

That is somewhat important in my opinion in view of the way in which elections are conducted in western Canada. We were told in the west in 1930 that we must vote for the low tariff party. Had the people done so at that time, they would all have voted Conservative, but they did not. As usual, Mr. Barnum was right; the people like to be fooled. That is why those who believe in low tariffs did not vote Conservative at that time and that is why my hon. friends to the extreme left of the Speaker are smiling now; they realize the truth of that. The Progressive farmer group at that time took the stand that they would not join with the Liberal party, because they in fact were a higher tariff party than were the Conservatives.

Let me now deal with other matters which I desire to discuss. It is always recognized, I think, that the price of wheat in Canada is the life blood of the country. In the district from which I come we have had a series of crop failures for some three years. The situation there has now got beyond the municipalities; they have no more money and no more credit left. It may be truthfully said that if an accurate survey were made of Manitoba, it would be found that all those municipalities where there is actual distress are within my constituency. On the other hand, the moneys of the province and of this dominion have been scattered all over the municipalities of Manitoba; they have not been given out on the basis of need, for if they had been given out on that basis, ninety-five per cent of them would have gone to the constituency of Souris.

In that constituency what is needed at the present time is action. Each day I receive petitions, from the municipalities of Edward, Arthur, and Brenda in particular, and other municipalities within that area urging that action be taken. I received to-day a resolution from the Melita board of trade asking that action be taken at once. They point out that if action is not taken, the people themselves will be on relief and will be thrown upon the public treasury. The cost of such action is small, providing it is measured by need and applied under proper supervision. There is only a small territory there in distress, but that territory needs action at the present time. Due to the difficulties that have recently existed in Manitoba, there does not seem to be any coordination to bring about the desired result.

I could cite the action taken by this government in regard to relief and it appears to me that the government has placed in that province sufficient moneys if they were properly given to the people in need. For instance, from January 1, 1932, to March 16, 1933, we find there has been a total advance to Manitoba of $15,432,496.59, on which has been credited as having been paid back, $2,916,434.85. On direct relief there has been paid to that province $1,839,717.73; public works amounting to $2,542,821.47 have been undertaken and paid for and there have been advances and loans amounting to $10,910,629.45. Those are moneys which have been advanced by the Dominion government to the province of Manitoba.

Due to the crop failure, debts in that particular locality are beyond payment. The mortgage companies have been acting very well inasmuch as they have not forced foreclosures. But what the mortgage companies seem to have overlooked is the absolute incapacity on the part of the farmers to pay off those mortgages, due to interest accumulation. If the mortgage companies would carry on an investigation at this time, they would find that it would pay them to write down those mortgages, lest they kill the bird that is laying the golden eggs. Interest rates are high and I am glad to note that the government is to offer a new loan at four per cent, because this will have the effect of setting interest rates in this country on a lower scale, as where the people can buy high rate government bonds, they will invest in nothing else.

As regards farm implements, I am of opinion that at the present time they are at a price at which they cannot be bought. It is said by the machinery companies that they are paying a great deal for advertising and a great deal in order to collect payments. But I would point out that in the district from which I come there is at this time practically no advertising at all; there is no credit and therefore there is no reason why the price of these machines should not be cut down at least one-third. If the machinery companies find that they cannot operate on that basis, then they should not give us such luxurious machines as we have had in the past; they should cut out the fads and give us implements like the ones we had twenty or twenty-five years ago; that is the only way out. Unless they decrease prices, sales will not be made.

I am hopeful that at the world economic conference which is to convene shortly, something will be done about trade restrictions. Like many on this side of the house, I am of the opinion that world tariffs in general are too high; I am also of the opinion that an individual country cannot lower its tariffs unless all other countries do likewise at the same time. But there is at the economic conference a great opportunity, particularly for Canada and the United States in the way of decreasing tariffs instead of operating as we have done in the past on the basis of narrow nationalism.

It is important, I think, to note where there are possibilities of increased purchasing power. If there were increased purchasing power in Europe at this time, we could sell everything we grow in this country. It may be of passing interest to say that in 1930 there were spent in national defence in the world $4,126.000,000. War dets in 1920 amounted to $125,000,000,000. The war debt to the United States as November 15, 1932, amounted to $10,598,000,000. There is owing to the United States for 1933 alone $288,000,000. If some agreement can be made for the cancellation of war debts in general in both the United States and in Europe, and some arrangement can be made to cut down in regard to national defence, there will be left open for the purchasing of goods throughout the world such large amounts of money as will take us out of the present depression and create a demand for everything we have to sell.

I have tried to show in the time at my disposal the condition of agriculture, as it was during the term of the previous administration, and the treatment given it by the administration now in power. It is true that due to lack of purchasing power prices have not increased, and prices cannot greatly increase until we have that increased purchasing power. In the summary I have made I have tried to show precisely the efforts made on behalf of Canadian agriculturists. I have also indicated the public attitude to-day in regard to governments. May I issue the warning to our people that before they change they should stop, look, listen, read, and compare the record of the past administration with that of the present.

May I close with a little story which I believe aptly suits present conditions, a story of King Charles as he was riding alone in the forest. While riding he met James, who desired to succeed him, surrounded by a cavalcade of horsemen, James stopped Charles and reprimanded him in these words, "You, the King of England, should not ride alone." Charles turned to him and said, "James, brigands do not live in England who would kill me to make you king." Similarly, there are not sufficient political brigands in Canada who would place the present right hon. leader of the opposition in the position of the present Prime Minister.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Wait until the next election.

Mr. ELIE O. BERTRAND (Prescott) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, in rising to comment upon the budget, I do so fully aware of the difficult period through which the country is passing; may I, therefore, assure you that I shall be as impartial as it is possible in reviewing our economic and social situation.

Previous to broaching the subject matter of this debate, I beg of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) not to be offended if I do not wholly reply to his statement on the budget. During thirty minutes he lauded the policy of the government since its advent to power and endeavoured to pick out flaws in the late Liberal administration. He closed his remarks by stating: After three years of this excellent administration the farmers of this country are at bay; I must request the government to see that the manufacturers of farm implements reduce their prices; I further request the government to create the means by which the farming classes may earn a livelihood and to also help them in every possible way, because the people I represent are in the greatest distress.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): It is, sir, quite easy to establish comparisons in a partial way and then draw conclusions apparently favourable. When the hon. member for Souris next meets his constituents, might I suggest to him that he ascertain their views on the conditions that prevailed between 1922 and 1930, in contrast with those existing between 1930, and 1933.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): A marked difference!

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): Previous to the remarks I intend to make on the budget, I wish to sincerely congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), not so much for his speech itself, but for his clear and frank statement of our economic situation. According to his budget statement, our liabilities are increasing by leaps and bounds and all classes of society are suffering from the present economic crisis. A superhuman effort must be made to safeguard our national credit, and this, by increasing certain imposts and creating new taxes.

I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) on his masterly description of our economic situation. The hon. Minister of Finance alluding to our financial situation, but especially to our national liabilities and obligations, outlined the difficulties through which our country was passing.

I shall quote a few figures which will show our total indebtedness, the main cause of our economic depression.

The school, municipal, provincial and federal indebtedness amounts to $4,600,000,000; the total debt of all railways in Canada to the enormous sum of $3,500,000,000. I also wish to point out that bank loans to private individuals and business concerns, in order to foster trade and industry, have reached the fabulous amount of $2,500,000,000. I further wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that there exist other liabilities of which we could only get accurate statistics recently, such as mortgages on farm lands which amount to $700,000,000 through the country. These figures furnished by the Bureau of Statistics, do not include mortgages on city properties and accounts due to merchants, doctors, blacksmiths—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): To lawyers!

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): It would be better to dispense with their services.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): At times, they do render services.

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): Not always! The known liabilities of the people in Canada have now reached the fabulous amount of $12,000,000,000. If our debt, sir, has reached that unheard of figure, it does seem extraordinary and very irrational that the rates of interest should vary from 4, 4½, 5, 5½, 6 and 7 per cent to 8 per cent in Eastern Canada; while in the West we find that the rates of interest on loans are as high as 10 and 12 per cent.

It is, therefore, very hard, I think, to establish the average rate of interest that the people must pay on these various liabilities, but we can safely state that this average is about 6 per cent, yearly, forming an amount paid in interest by Canadians of approximately $732,000,000. Therefore, if the interest of our national liabilities amount to the enormous sum of $732,000,000 and must be paid by Canadians, and our population is about 10,000,000, let us divide this yearly interest by the latter figures, the result is $73.20 per capita. Taking the case of an ordinary family usually comprsing five persons, by multiplying $73.20 by 5, we find that the head of a family, therefore, is forced to pay either directly or indirectly the amount of $366 per year, and this, as interest only. I wonder, sir, how are the Canadian people going to bear up with such a burden.

Then to these interest charges, we must add the liabilities incurred for local improvement, municipal and county taxes and the outlay necessary to carry on the administration of the various provinces, all of these greatly increase the burden already too heavy which the people must shoulder. I, therefore, really think that some relief must be given, in the very near future, to our people. On whom does the burden of these taxes fall most heavily at present? Not long ago, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), stated that 1,300,000 people were receiving direct assistance from our various governments. We cannot, therefore, ask these people to pay their quota of these imports, since they depend solely on the relief contributed by the state government, their province and municipality or these three organizations combined. The burden must therefore fall on the rest of the population.

The other class to which I want to refer are the farmers who comprise more than 45 per cent of our population. If there are 1,300,000 unemployed, comprising over one-tenth of our population, the farming community which cannot be placed among the unemployed and being the majority of our employed population, must naturally be called upon to bear a heavier burden than all other classes of society.

It might perhaps be interesting to examine more closely the situation and find out what are the conditions at present prevailing among our farming class. I have obtained statistics which prove in what state agriculture has been left in, and, so as not to repeat the arguments previously set forth, I shall endeavour to bring out new proofs. I shall quote our total farm exports, for each fiscal year, to all foreign countries and the British Empire:

All countries	$368,792,277	$269,858,864	$198,476,699
British Empire	199,604,065	149,468,827	110,159,169

These figures, therefore, show an extraordinary decrease in farm returns. After all, the latter must necessarily depend on these returns to meet the taxes of the state, the provinces, and municipalities, as well as other charges with which it is burdened.

Let us now examine the farm exports, of field crops, for the twelve months ending in October of each year:

1929	$524,828,419
1930	336,362,550
1932	211,176,931

It is therefore not astonishing as the member for Souris, himself mentioned a few moments ago, that the farmers of his constituency are in a different situation. The same applies to all farmers throughout the country and it is caused by the lack of farm returns or a great decrease in such returns, while fixed charges remain unchanged.

I shall now quote figures with reference to exports in live stocks and their by-products, for the twelve months ending in October of each year:

1929	$146,629,066
1930	100,288,057
1931	73,752,819
1932	58,290,769

The decrease of more than 60 per cent in these exports certainly adds to the depression in agriculture.

The prices of farm products have decreased in the proportion just mentioned. I must also add that in Ontario, where I reside, taxes have risen more than in other sections of the country, and are extraordinarily high. To such an extent that a committee representing 31 municipalities of this province stated only recently, after having made an absolutely accurate calculation of their taxes, from 1904 to 1932, that the increase amounted to 2,800 per cent since 1904. This statement was recently forwarded to the government of Ontario and the information was given out by Mr. F. D. Tolchard, secretary of the association. Therefore, these figures cannot be contradicted.

This has placed us, in Ontario, in such a plight, that excellent families of farmers, who settled here, a number of years ago, and established their children on the land find themselves to-day, unable to continue farming. In my constituency, taxes are our greatest burden. At one time money lenders endeavoured to collect the payment of money due to them, so as to naturally protect their own interests; however, to-day, they are less exacting than they were heretofore. The rates in interest have been lowered in many instances and, in numerous cases, new mortgage deeds have been agreed upon for an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the original debt. However, this is not sufficient, if we wish to keep the farmer on the Canadian soil, especially in the county I represent. Those that are desirable on the farm are forced to leave owing to the burden of taxes which weighs so heavily on them. Municipalities to meet their liabilities are forced to find the money somewhere and they have reached the stage where they must necessarily collect the taxes, and in many cases, by means of seizure. They must auction off all seizable chattels allowing the farmers to stay on their land with two hundred dollars' worth of implements, live stock and poultry which cannot be seized according to law, and which are not sufficient to permit them to continue their operations. Under such circumstances, we are wondering how the farmer will till his land and how we shall safeguard agriculture which, after all, is the fundamental industry on which has rested for a long time past, the whole economic structure of our country.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): By allowing this situation to become worse, not only will the farming class suffer, but all classes of our population will necessarily feel the effects. The evil is far greater than one imagines. Certainly special consideration, at this session, should be shown to this class of people,

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) brought down the budget, I heard with great satisfaction his statement that a conversion loan would be effected at an opportune time in order to lower the rate of interest on our national debt. Rest assured, sir, that this measure will receive our full support. I would request the hon. Minister of Finance to go one step further; first, to reduce the rates of interest on our national debts in order to alleviate the burden of taxation to our people, particularly from the viewpoint of safeguarding agriculture; furthermore, I would request him to fix a very low rate of interest not only on our national debt, but also on all liabilities contracted by the people of Canada. That might immediately result in preventing large financiers from drawing so large incomes, but in the long run it would tend to place on a same level the various classes of society. This would be quite a progressive step to relieve the burden which bears directly or indirectly on our farming community.

Over a year ago, I had the opportunity of referring to the same subject and also requesting the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to lower, to 2 per cent, the rate of interest on our national debt. I do not wish to convey that he accepted my suggestion, however, I am pleased and take pride in noting that events have proved that I was right. I, therefore, request that the national debt be converted to one bearing interest at 2 per cent, and if this conversion is not accepted with good grace, then it should be made obligatory. This would be a kind of communism of the mildest type as a sop to the distress actually prevailing in all classes of our society. This rate of 2 per cent interest should also apply to all liabilities which I mentioned a moment ago.

Now, sir, I shall endeavour, in a few words, to show the fallacy of the argument set forth by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who tried to prove that the volume of our trade had not decreased since 1930. In support of his argument, the hon. minister pointed out the fact that, in 1930, our exports amounted to $895,000,000 and that, in 1932, if our products had been estimated on the price obtained in 1930, our volume of exports would have amounted to $840,000,000; there was, therefore, only about 5 per cent decrease. That may be so as far as the volume of our exports is concerned, however, let us face the facts as they are; is the heavy burden of our liabilities not greater than in 1930 or 1928? There is no question that our liabilities and taxes have greatly increased since 1928. I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce —let him reply later—how will the farmer be able, when his farm returns decrease in the proportion which I shall establish in a few moments, to meet heavier liabilities than in 1930 and especially than those of 1928.

In 1928, the value of Canadian field crops amounted to $1,053,817,000; while in 1932, they had dropped to $416,586,000. Therefore, if we follow the same line of argument, as did the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, it would mean a loss to the farmers of $637,231,000 or 60 per cent of the value of their crops. Their live stock in 1928 was estimated at $197,880,000 and, in 1932, at $70,-211,000, consequently, there was a loss, for the farmers of this country, amounting to $127,-669,000 or 65 per cent. Further poultry and eggs were estimated at $106,653,000 in 1928, and in 1932, at $54,490,000, again there was a loss of $52,163,000. How will the farmer be able to carry on with increased taxation placed upon his shoulders, when he has to put up with such reduction of the value of its products on domestic or foreign markets. Certainly, the farming community is the most affected throughout the present depression.

Other classes of society do not feel the pinch of the crisis as much, may I mention, for instance, money lenders who benefit by high rates of interest, large business undertakings, financiers and banking institutions—if the latter can be classed with the others. In 1928, an amount of $184,079,154 was distributed in dividends and, in 1932, $164,962,592; therefore, only a 10 per cent decrease in their revenues. These profits taken on the public of Canada necessarily reduced the purchasing power of our people. That is certainly an obstacle which disturbs the monetary equilibrium of this country.

This evil must be remedied. These large financial organizations and industries are protected while other classes of society do not enjoy the same privileges. Bondholders are thus highly favoured. In 1928, the dividends paid on bonds amounted to $335,000,000, while in 1932 they amounted to $400,000,000, namely, an increase of $65,000,000.

If the situation is actually as I have described it, I really think that the minister will not hesitate to do his utmost to reduce the rates of interest to the lowest mark possible—if it cannot be done willingly let it be compulsory—to reestablish the economic equilibrium of all classes of society.

In support of my contentions, I wish to quote an excerpt from an article which I recently read, and which expresses entirely my views. I shall read it in English. The article bears the heading:

Capital is not sacred.

This is from a broadcast address by Archbishop John T. McNicholas, O.P., over the Columbia system (Catholic Northwest Progress).

There is nothing sacred about capitalism; yet it need not be abolished, provided its flagrant abuses be corrected. If they be not corrected, there is serious reason to fear its violent overthrow. There must be in the future a fairer distribution of profits in the economic world. The accumulation of the fabulous fortunes of recent years must be rendered impossible, as contrary to commutative, legal, or social justice by the force of public opinion, through legislation.

I really think that this excerpt gives a fair description of the changes that should take place in improving our capitalist system and of what I have in mind.

Since, sir, financial questions have been broached, may I refer briefly to the Canadian National Railways? I am aware that certain measures have been submitted to the house, I shall, therefore, only briefly refer to the subject. The liabilities contracted by the Canadian National Railways have reached, at present, more than $2,300,000,000 and, of this amount, the sum of $974,481,382.28 is guaranteed by the Dominion government. Notwithstanding this fact, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), when making a statement recently on our railway situation, emphasized the fact that the Canadian National Railways were the property of the bondholders. If such be the case, sir, the situation is very serious. Would it not be more simple, instead of planning a forced merger or system of cooperation on our railways, to oblige the bondholders or proprietors of the Canadian National Railways to take back their property and thus lighten our national debt. I realize that from the government's viewpoint, this would amount to a breach of contract. However, I do not hesitate in suggesting such means, and I am fully conscious of the responsibility I take in advocating this policy.

The capital invested by the bondholders of the Canadian National Railways cannot be regarded as a sacred thing. If the economic situation has actually become so serious that it threatens the credit of this country, a measure of the nature suggested above should be enacted to force the bondholders to take back their property and then apply the amounts thus saved to relieve the present plight of our people.

When speaking on last fiscal year of Canada, we were informed recently that the deficit of the said year had simply been added to the national debt. The impression created was that we would not hear any more about it and that the national debt would be increased to $2,599,089,000 for 1933. One must bear in mind that our debt has been greatly increased since the advent to power of the present administration, because in 1930 our debt amounted to $2,177,763,959. Therefore, it has increased to the extent of $421,375,041 since that period. This increase only refers to the national debt. It was stated and repeated in the house, that our liabilities abroad should be paid by our exports and by the various services which we might render to countries to which we were indebted; that gold was not the only commodity which could be exported from one country to another, but it was simply a help to trade from an international viewpoint.

Let us, sir, examine the reason of the constant increase of our national debt and liabilities abroad, as well as the effect of such an increase on our people, as a whole.

Canadian exports at the end of October, 1929, amounted to $1,280,684,667; in 1930, to $945,614,514; in 1931, to $634,564,116; in 1932, to $516,098,451. Should our exports continue to decrease yearly, it will become most difficult to make both ends meet. While our national debt has increased over $421,000,000, the means to refund this debt decreases. Moreover, the revenue derived from our exports, acccording to the latest statistics I was able to obtain, has decreased from $1,280,000,000 in 1929; to $516,000,000 in 1932. It is absolutely necessary that our exports should increase, if we wish to relieve the present situation and foster the interests of Canada.

I note that my time is almost up; I regret so, because I still have many arguments in support of my contentions. However, I should not like to close my remarks on the budget without alluding to the new taxes which will be levied. I had the opportunity, over the week end, to meet a great number of my constituents, and to explain to them what would be the new burden of taxation that they would have to shoulder. I must draw the attention of the government to a remark made, not by one or two people, but by hundreds of my constituents. They were, indeed, ready to make all possible sacrifices to help our country, because they have faith in the future of Canada, their fatherland, which they helped to settle, where they have toiled and where they wish their children to carry on and transmit an heritage which is particularly theirs, as French Canadians. However, they were shocked to find that the government decreased the duties on cigarettes and spirits not so long ago while increasing the duties on commodities such as sugar and other articles of first necessity—indispensable to our families who have little means—such as molasses, rice, tapioca, sago, corn syrup, which are indispensable and very difficult to raise in this country.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): Such measures are absolutely inconceivable and I have no hesitation in stating that my constituents are greatly shocked at the fact that the government has reduced the duty on cigarettes and spirits while increasing the duty on first necessities of life.

I wish to be candid and avoid all partisanship, as I stated at the outset of my remarks. But the people say that by this duty reduction, the government meet the wishes of large tobacco companies, protect them and allow them to realize as large profits as before and this is due to reduction of duties. As to the large financial interests which control the sale of spirits in this country, the government—although business is continuously decreasing—find it possible to help their trade and assure them of substantial returns by the reduction of duties on liquor causing necessity to add new taxes on necessities of life of the people of this country upon whom fall the new taxes. I deemed it my duty to openly make this statement, in the house, on behalf of my constituents, and to be bold enough to state exactly how conditions are.

In closing my remarks, sir, I wish to state that so far as our financial situation and the difficulties encountered in the administration of the country, at present, the hon. Minister of Finance and the government have certainly our best wishes. At times, they ask us to cooperate, we can extend to them our best wishes, however, when it is a question of cooperation, how can we cooperate with them in applying a policy which tends, as we can prove, to protect the interests of great financiers, while the less privileged classes of society are ignored and are not treated as they should be according to the measures enacted by the government. I state that we must absolutely oppose these measures which are detrimental to the large majority of our people, and that it is our duty to do so, because, we, the Liberal party, wish to see that our legislation tends to distribute the burden of taxation among all classes of society. We want the burden to weigh more heavily on those who can afford to pay, and infinitely less on the shoulders of those who are unable to bear the burden.

[Mr. Bertrand.]

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. BERTRAND (Translation): This, we want for the greatest welfare of our people, so that peace may reign among all classes of society, that all races in this country may be on the best of terms, that all classes be placed on an equal footing and, finally, that Canada may become greater, more united and prosperous.

On motion of Mr. Simpson (Algoma) the debate was adjourned.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Miscellaneous services, including salaries and expenses of experts employed temporarily, $50,900.

Mr. POULIOT: Who are these experts?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): This item provides the continuance of the annual vote formerly provided under the title of surveys and inspections. It is provided in order that funds may be available for any special services, investigations or examinations that may be required in connection with railway matters or matters in relation thereto and to pay the salaries of official car porters and other salaries and incidental expenses for the maintenance of the official cars under the jurisdiction of the department, including governor general's cars. The services of experts have to do with such matters as the St. Lawrence canalization scheme, or similar matters, and the men in the department, who are regular employees of the department, receive extra compensation for that work.

Mr. SANDERSON: There is an increase of $8,900; what is that for?

Mr. MANION: When this item was up previously the hon. gentleman asked me with reference to this increase and I gave the wrong information, because unfortunately I could not put my hand on the details. I gave some figures then which were a little out, but I will give the actual figures now. This item is made up as follows: administration of the department, $3,822; government official cars, salaries of porters, $10,638; repairs and maintenance, $15,000; governor general's cars, $7,000. This next item is where I fell down previously; I forgot it for the moment: Beauharnois surveys and investigations, $14,000, and unforeseen expenses, $440. The reason for the increase, which I gave incorrectly the other evening, is the Beauharnois surveys and investigations, the point being that until very recently the Beauharnois works, so far as the government was concerned, were carried on by the Department of Public Works. That work was transferred to this department and at present we have, as we had during the construction work, two engineers who were taken over from the Department of Public Works, whose business it has been to check up the work being done to see that the company kept within the agreement with the government. This $14,000 is an increase, but there have been decreases in other items amounting to about $5,000, so that the total increase is only about $9,000.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask if the porters are classified as experts, and if so as what?

Mr. MANION: They are expert porters but are not classified as such.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand that they are both porters and butlers at the same time.

Mr. MANION: The porters on the cars, so far as I know, are exactly the same men who have been on the cars for some years. I do not think there have been any changes. They are called porters and do that work and also what might be called butlering, if you will, and cooking.

Mr. POULIOT: How many of them are there?

Mr. MANION: Two for each car.

Mr. POULIOT: And how many cars?

Mr. MANION: Three.

Mr. POULIOT: Including the governor general's?

Mr. MANION: No, that comes under a separate item.

Mr. POULIOT: I have no objection to the governor general and the government having special cars, especially when there are only three. On the other hand, I have always spoken strongly in this house against private cars for the superintendents of the railway, but I do not know when I shall have another opportunity to speak on this question, so I wish to take advantage of this opportunity. I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy when I mentioned the matter to him. The questions I wished to ask unfortunately were disposed of by another member of the cabinet than the minister himself when they came up in the house. I want to protest as vigorously as I can against all sorts of foolish expenditures that are being made by the superintendents of both railways. They should not be entitled to a private car. It is all right for the governor general and the Prime Minister and other members of the government to have a private car when they go on a long trip. I am not narrowminded enough to criticize that and I never have, provided the expenses are reasonable. On the other hand, I think it is foolish to allow the superintendents to travel around in luxurious private cars, with butlers and expensive food and all the glory of the Queen of Sheba, and I think a stop should be put to it, especially when the common necessities of life like sugar are being heavily taxed. The Prime Minister says that we have lots of unavoidable expenditure in connection with the railways, but this is foolish expenditure, insane expenditure, which cannot possibly be justified, particularly when we see engineers of the railway going about from station to station on an ordinary handcar to make their inspections. The superintendents travel about in their special cars on important trips, presumably. They sit in their private car and say they are there to work, but if they want to work while on the train they can just as easily do it in a stateroom in a Pullman car. Very often I have met ministers of the crown travelling around as ordinary mortals in Pullman cars, and they arrive at their destination just as safely as the superintendents travelling around in their gorgeous private cars. We must come down to earth and realize that that kind of foolish expenditure must be put a stop to right now. I am sure that the Minister of Railways is all right in this matter, and I do not put the blame on him at all, but rather on those who refuse to answer members of the House of Commons when they ask the government for legitimate information. I am here to look after the interests of the country as a whole, and I am prepared to do it, and I shall bring these facts before the house at every opportunity. At the present time when more than half the railway men of this country are out of work, we see a man in Quebec who is not qualified, who was recommended by Lord Shaughnessy, but who did not appoint him to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but recommended him to the Canadian National Railways, and he is now the fifth or seventh wheel of the coach. The only thing he does is to look at himself in the looking glass. There are four special cars for the superintendents around Quebec and Levis, which is one more than there are for all the members of the cabinet. I have nothing against these people personally, but we must be sensible in our expenditures and in times like these when there is so much suffering we must take from those who have too much to help feed those who have not enough. That seems to me only common sense. I know that the minister understands me and I hope that he will tell the members of the cabinet who do not understand common sense that they must come back to it before they can be called supermen.

Mr. BRADETTE: Has the minister the amount spent on surveys separate from investigations?

Mr. MANION: I explained that to the committee when the hon. gentleman was out. There are two engineers, Mr. Lazier and Mr. Hand. Mr. Hand has been taken over from the Public Works department by the Department of Railways and Canals because it must be remembered that under the late government and under this government until recently the Beauharnois project was handled through the Public Works department, but a few months ago it was transferred to the Department of Railways and Canals. The duties of these two engineers are to see that the Beauharnois Power Company remain within their agreement with the government of Canada in the construction work. Their whole purpose in these surveys is to see that the company does not do anything contrary to its agreement.

Mr. GARDINER: Why was the change made from the Department of Public Works to the Department of Railways and Canals?

Mr. MANION: Offhand I could not say definitely except that canals are generally under the Department of Railways and Canals. I think that is the whole purpose in making the change. Probably it never should have been at first under the Department of Public Works, but it may have been put there for good reasons which I do not know about.

Item agreed to.

Canals—staff and repairs, $2,738,720.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask if the government has reached a decision with regard to the St. Lawrence waterway and if the question will come before the house this session?

Mr. MANION: The matter is still in the position in which it was when I answered a similar question some time ago. In all probability the matter will not come up this session unless the treaty is ratified by the United States congress.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask what estimates will be taken up this evening?

Mr. MANION: It is private bills for the first hour, and the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. POULIOT: Any other departments?

Mr. MANION: I think not. Agriculture will probably take the whole two hours.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 47, respecting The Canadian Anthracite Coal Company, Limited—Mr. Stanley.

DEVONSHIRE JOCKEY CLUB

Hon. R. D. MORAND (East Essex) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 51, to incorporate Devonshire Jockey Club.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur) in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. HEAPS: Could we have an explanation?

Mr. MORAND: This is a bill to convey to the creditors of the old Devonshire race track the rights which they enjoyed under the original charter. It became necessary for the creditors to put this race track into bankruptcy and it was found that the courts were unable to transfer any rights other than the physical rights. No new race track is contemplated; it is intended only to permit the creditors to enjoy the benefit of the assets of the present race track.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NIPISSING CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. D. J. COWAN (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay, for Mr. Casselman) moved the second reading of Bill No. 56, respecting the Nipissing Central Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

SARNIA-PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 41 to incorporate the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company.—Mr. Gray—Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur) in the chair.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Bury in the chair.

Agriculture — for experiments in fruit products, $10,000.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): The last time we were in committee there were two questions asked to which I promised to give answers. The first was in connection with the grant to the Canadian Horticultural Council. That was under the heading of Canadian Horticultural Council under supplementary estimates, 1932-33, vote No. 333, $5,000.

The second question was with reference to the contribution of the United States to the International Agricultural Institute. The contribution passed March 13, 1933, was $48,500.

Mr. BROWN: What are these experiments that are being carried on? We have been experimenting for a long time.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The purpose of these experiments is to see whether some value can be obtained from fruits, in particular apples of a low grade, by making juices to replace some of the common soft drinks now in use like coca cola and so forth. Experiments are being carried on at Middleton and Kentville, Nova Scotia, the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and Summerland, British Columbia. This sum of $10,000 has chiefly to do with apparatus, salaries and equipment necessary for this work.

Mr. DUFF: I notice the minister said that experiments were being carried on at Middleton, Nova Scotia. Will he be good enough to explain what the experiments are, how much the government is expending and why it is carrying on experiments at that particular place. Who is getting the benefits of this?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have a laboratory at the Scotia Gold Products plant at Middleton, the purpose being to test out ciders made from different kinds of apples in various states of ripeness, making special experiments in these juices, following the principle used in the old country of making a cider without the use of pasteurization.

Mr. DUFF: How long has this experiment been going on and how much has it cost the country so far?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Two years, and I believe at Middleton, Nova Scotia, the cost was a little over $2,000 last year.

Mr. DUFF: Why should it take two years and $2,000 to conduct this particular experiment? Surely scientists or whoever are in charge of this should not take two years to find the value of this experiment.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This amount, of course, is mainly to purchase equipment, and some applies on salary. The work is of a very technical nature. We think the results so far are satisfactory. Similar experiments are being and have been carried on in England for quite a number of years. If we succeed in making a satisfactory product from these lower grade apples available in Nova Scotia, as the low grade apples in the culls run around 60 per cent, this will mean a very much enhanced price for this class of fruit to the Nova Scotia fruit farmer and relieve the fresh fruit market of this load of low grade product.

Mr. DUFF: This does not seem to be a very satisfactory answer. I can understand the department spending three or perhaps six months in an experiment of this kind, but I gather from the minister's statement that they have put scientists or officials of the department into a private enterprise at Middleton, Scotia Gold Products, which manufactures cider and other things. I cannot understand the necessity of having one or more men there for two years. Surely if the men are capable, it should not take two years to find out whether they can do anything with this product. The apple is a very simple product of the farm. It should not be very difficult for these officials to discover whether a particular grade of cider or something else can be made from this fruit. Is it not a fact that these men are in this factory, and that really, while the government is paying the money, they are doing work for this particular organization?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The only wage we are paying at this plant is that of one scientist. We have the services of the best scientist we could get for this work. The process, as I said before, is complicated, and whether or not the hon. member is disappointed with the results this man has obtained so far, we feel he is the best we can secure for the work.

Mr. DUFF: I am not disappointed; I am not paying this scientist's wages. The government is paying him and the government and the minister should be disappointed. It seems to me there should be no necessity for this scientist to be in this plant for two years. Surely, if he knows his business, as I presume he does, there is no reason for his being in the plant for two years endeavouring to find out whether apples can be made into some liquid. Why is this man there all this time? The government should know now whether he has been able to discover something which will be a benefit either to the government or to the department, and if he is not able to carry out some particular investigation, it is time for the government to bring him back to Ottawa and put him to work on something else.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not know of any question that has been asked.

Mr. DUFF: I asked why the government is keeping this man at this private plant. It is a private corporation and the government is paying this man's salary. The minister also said that this scientist was sent there to make a certain test as to what could be done with apples. After two years the government should be able to decide whether this man has made the proper investigation and the result of it. I have asked a question—and the minister should be able to answer it—as to what value this man is to the country in the capacity of an official connected with this plant.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One of the results of his experimental work is a development of fruit concentrates. Last year in this connection there were exported, I believe, 35,000 gallons. The results of these experiments have been made known to all cider plants in the dominion. Many different problems presented themselves along this line of the study of fruit juices for cider and other beverages. In England, the best men they can get have been working along similar lines for years. We sent Mr. Davis, one of our men, over there three years ago to make a special study. He remained a year in the old country gathering all the information he could and then returned to Canada. We received the benefit of that and he is continuing with this investigation. One of the results has been the development of fruit concentrates. What they are trying to do, as I said at the outset, is to find the best combination of fruit that can be used and under the best conditions it can be used to produce the best product without pasteurization.

Mr. DUFF: The result of having this man at the Middleton plant is that he is making money for a private corporation. If he has been there two years, surely there is no necessity for keeping him there any longer. If I understand correctly he is there looking after the private interests of a private corporation. A minute ago the minister said the man in question made certain juices from fruit. What part of the fruit juice is being exported from the plant as a result of this scientist's investigation?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The man is at a private plant because by having him there we save the government the expense of building a plant to carry on experiments. One result of his work has been that the plant exported 35,000 gallons of fruit concentrate. It is much cheaper to have a man work in a plant already erected than to erect a laboratory for the purpose. The knowledge obtained is not the special property of the plant in which he is working, but is spread throughout the country.

Mr. DUFF: What does the minister mean when he states that 35,000 gallons of concentrates were exported? Are these concentrates just the ordinary cider in bottles that the company sends all over the country?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Or is there something in it?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, or is there something in it? The Minister of National Revenue is interested in that phase of the matter. I may say, for the information of the Minister of National Revenue, that I have heard there is more than two per cent alcoholic content in these concentrates. Perhaps the minister had better investigate.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that there is no alcohol in the concentrates.

Mr. DUFF: Evidently the Minister of National Revenue is suspicious. I suggest he get in touch with the Minister of Agriculture and have the official send him samples. I am sure the Minister of National Revenue would be able to tell whether the alcoholic content was more than two per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Why would the minister know?

Mr. DUFF: Because he is a good judge. There is a good deal of complaint in Nova Scotia about the federal government spending all this money, and having an official at a private plant for over two years. I could understand an official being sent to experiment for three months, but surely there is no reason for having him there so long. The minister should give a better explanation than he has given so far why this man is paid a salary for two years, a man who is really an official of a private plant, and doing work for that plant instead of for the government.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): He is not doing work for the private corporation, but for the government, and the entire industry in Canada. Any discoveries made as a result of his research are immediately available to all similar plants throughout Canada.

Mr. DUFF: That does not seem a reasonable explanation. What experiments could he make? What results would it take two years to obtain when only the simple process of making cider from apples is involved? That is all that is being done in the plant. They take apples, grind them up and put them into bottles in cider form. Surely there is no necessity to keep an official at that plant for two years. I want to tell the minister this is nothing more or less than a case of the government keeping an official who, if withdrawn to-morrow, would be replaced by that private corporation. And in that event the private concern would have to pay his salary.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Shall the item carry?

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. DONNELLY: This is an item for $10,000. The minister has told us that $2,000 is used at Middleton for experiments on cider. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough seems to think that the official does nothing but drink cider. Probably that is true, but the other $8,000 must be spent somewhere. We should like to know at what other points experiments are being carried on, and we want an explanation of the different plants and the work being done in them.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): As I said at the outset there is the plant at the central experimental farm in Ottawa and the plants at Kentville and Summerland. In Ottawa, $3,000 is spent, $4,000 at Summerland and the remainder at Kentville.

Mr. DUFF: At Middleton, not Kentville.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes, at Kentville.

Mr. DONNELLY: What work is done at these other places?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Work of a similar nature, but with different fruits. At the Summerland station they are carrying on experimental work in connection with dehydrating apricots, prunes and so on.

Mr. DONNELLY: What are they doing at Kentville?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): At Kentville the work is chiefly that of the dehydration of fruits, together with some canning experiments.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the work done at the Ottawa experimental station?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Work in connection with fruit juices and canning.

Mr. REID: In the event of a discovery made by a man stationed by the government in any of these plants, could a patent be taken out, or is his discovery general knowledge?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The knowledge is general.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is it at Kentville, Nova Scotia, you have the dehydrating plant, or at Kemptville, just outside of Ottawa?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Kentville, Nova Scotia.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the use of having two stations side by side?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They do different work.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the difference?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One works on the concentration of juices and the other upon the dehydration of apples, and fruit canning.

Mr. BROWN: Ever since I have been in the house we have been voting moneys for experiments in the dehydration of fruits. It has occurred to me that the time for experimentation has long since passed.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think the hon. member knows as well as anybody in the house that there is practically no limit to the carrying on of experiments.

Mr. BROWN: I thought perhaps it had reached a stage where the experiments would have been concluded.

Mr. DUFF: The minister states that there is one scientist at Middleton and another about thirty miles away, at Kentville. The roads between Kentville and Middleton are good. Any man with good, long legs could walk there in a day. Yet we are told there are two scientists doing work for the government, one at Middleton doing certain work and the other at Kentville doing other work. It seems to me one man would be sufficient and I strongly recommend to the minister that he look into the matter. There should not be a man at each point. I would ask the minister to investigate and see that the man at the Middleton station be withdrawn, because I understand the Kentville station is in the nature of an experimental farm. Am I right in that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is, yes.

Mr. DUFF: I would not object to having a scientist at Kentville experimental farm. The official at the farm could do any work required by the privately owned bottling works at Middleton. Surely in this time of stress and strain, when we are trying to save all the money we can, there is no need after two years to have a scientist working for a private corporation at Middleton. I strongly recommend that the minister have this man withdrawn from that plant and save that money.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask the minister, would it be possible carry on these two experiments at the one place?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, the experiments are different. If we did all the work at Kentville it would mean the purchase of laboratory equipment that costs a good deal; it would also mean the use of fruit, bottles and so on that the private plant supplies at Middleton. The scientist at Kentville devotes only part of his time to that, and the rest to fruit breeding.

Mr. DUFF: But the minister must admit that any investigation which is carried on at the Middleton plant of the private corporation is principally for the benefit of the private corporation.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not at all.

Mr. DUFF: And if there is a laboratory there it would be interesting to know who paid for it. If he looked it up I think the minister would find that the government paid. But whether the government or the private corporation paid for it there is no reason why there should be two scientists. The man at Kentville could go to Middleton once or twice a week or oftener if necessary and make any experiments or investigation required. There is no need to have a man situated at the Middleton plant all the time.

Mr. VALLANCE: How many such investigations as that at Middleton are conducted throughout Canada? I mean, is the information gained at Middleton given to all other plants of a like nature, and how many are there in Canada?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that there is only this one, and as soon as the information is obtained it is distributed to all plants for their use.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was wondering if the old committee that used to have charge of this work is still in existence; I think it was called the dehydrating committee. Is that still in existence?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who are the members?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Dr. Archibald, chairman and Messrs. McIntosh, Macoun, Shutt, Lochhead and McGillivray in charge of canning.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Are all these experiments made on the recommendation of the committee?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: None of these experiments is going on now without their O.K.?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That is my information.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it would be helpful to the committee if the minister would have samples of the cider and these dehydrated fruits. I used to have them in my office out there on the ground floor, and it was quite a popular resort as long as I had the cider and dehydrated fruit. The proof of the pudding is in the eating and I think they would talk much more eloquently than any of us. Joking aside, they are really helpful.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have stock samples at the experimental farm here. They are limited, but we shall be glad to show them to anyone who goes out there.

Mr. DONNELLY: I would like to know what salary this man at Middleton gets, what his qualifications are, and where he worked before he went there. He is said to be a scientist, but he gets less than $2,000 a year; he cannot be much of a scientist.

An hon. MEMBER: Do you want to pay him more?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): His salary is a little over $1,700. He received his training in England. He is English born, I believe; he came to Canada, operated a small plant, then went back to England and made further studies and investigations, and came back to undertake this work for us.

Mr. DONNELLY: What were his qualifications? Is he a B. Sc.?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Did the Civil Service Commission appoint him?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): He did take a science course in England, but I cannot say what degree he obtained. It is a civil service appointment, and they no doubt looked into his qualifications.

Mr. DUFF: When was he appointed by the Civil Service Commission, and who recommended him to the department and the commission?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): An open advertisement, I believe, in the regular form, two years ago. I cannot give any information about who recommended him.

Mr. DUFF: He was not connected with the department before two years ago?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. DUFF: Who recommended him to the department, and why did they get the Civil Service Commission to call for applications?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Because the dehydration committee recommended that the work be undertaken. This was the cheapest way to undertake it, and on their application the Civil Service Commission filled the position.

Mr. VALLANCE: Who are the dehydration committee?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I named them a moment ago.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms, $1,642,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Has my hon. friend anything new to relate to the committee in regard to the work on the experimental farms? Are there any more than last year, or any less? Has any special work been undertaken, and have there been any changes?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The number of farms is the same as it was a year ago. There are very many different projects, some that have been continued for some time, and there are always new problems and projects arising.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What about the Rosthern farm?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is still in operation. The work and the staff were curtailed a good deal, because we felt that we were there duplicating work done at the university of Saskatchewan. The work carried on at Rosthern was chiefly in connection with live stock, the dairy herd, pigs and poultry, and some horticulture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The farm is not really closed yet?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You are sort of half on and half off; is that the way?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The same as last year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it is a little different. I believe the superintendent is gone now.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): He went last year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a feeling in that community that Mr. Munro, the former superintendent, was let out rather summarily. Has my hon. friend any explanation to make? Mr. Munro was there, I understand, for about twenty-five years, and then suddenly he was dropped like a hot potato. It is rather serious under these conditions to drop a good servant without using every endeavour to place him elsewhere.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was for no criticism of Mr. Munro's work. It was felt that work was being duplicated at Rosthern experimental farm that was being done at Scott on the one side and at the university on the other, and we felt that with the reduced staff we could carry on all the work there that was not being done at Scott or at the university. But there is no suggestion of criticism of any kind of Mr. Munro's work, and as soon as opportunity arises, if another farm is opened or a vacancy occurs for which it is felt he would be particularly suited, he will get every preference.

An hon. MEMBER: Where is he?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe in Prince Albert.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am very glad to hear what the minister has just said, because Mr. Munro was a very faithful servant, and it is rather like getting the cold shoulder to be dropped as quickly as he was. I might point out that my hon. friend cannot reduce his estimates by $3,000,000 or more and still contend that there is no material reduction in the work carried on. There must be a very material reduction in the work; that is unavoidable. I am not criticizing that at the moment, but you cannot reduce the estimates and continue to give the same service; I know that, and I think the minister knows it also. Of course it is his business to see that the neglect of the work is as little as possible, but I say it cannot be done. I should be very glad to hear of Mr. Munro being appointed, because good superintendents, while they are not as scarce as hen's teeth, are a joy to find, and it is a sad thing to lose one under any circumstances.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I see an increase of $100,000 in this item. For the last few years the matter has been before the department, and on several occasions I have discussed it verbally with the minister of the establishment of an experimental farm for central and northern British Columbia. As the minister knows this was recommended by his predecessor, the hon. member for Melville, and also by Hon. Mr. Tolmie when he was Minister of Agriculture. Last year I understood the minister to say that the department was contemplating closing one experimental farm in British Columbia, I think he said the Windermere farm, and that part of the money saved would be applied to that settled part of British Columbia to which I refer. I know that last summer, when the associated boards of trade held their meeting at which I was present, a resolution was sent to the minister asking for the establishment of such a farm. Since then I have been asked on several occasions what has been done. I wrote the minister, but he replied that he had no intention of doing anything this year. It seems to me that with an increase of $100,000 in this item and the closing of the Windermere farm something should be done. I should like to have the minister explain why no consideration has been given these requests.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is really no increase in the item. There has been a change in administration; the revenue known as returnable revenue, which comes from the eggs gathered at egg laying contests and from the sale of some animals and so on, in place of being used by the experimental farms for their own purposes must be turned in to the Receiver General. In addition there has been a ruling that the travelling expenses of the headquarters staff, amounting to $40,000 or $50,000 annually, must be absorbed by each branch. These two items really make up the apparent increase of $100,000, which really is no increase at all.

I might say that we have in contemplation the establishment of a sub-range station in the ranching district of British Columbia, which we think will serve the purpose almost as well as an expensive experimental farm. It will be under the supervision of Mr. Thomson of the Manyberries experimental station, which now has to do with ranching, and I think everyone will agree that he is one of the best authorities we could obtain.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is that to be somewhere along the line of the Canadian National?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It will be in the ranching area. The exact spot has not been decided upon.

Mr. COTNAM: I have spoken to the minister on more than one occasion about a matter which I should like to bring up at this time. In this country there are one or two sections greatly interested in sheep raising, and in my part of the country we have quite a number of farmers intensely interested in that industry. A few years ago they found that nice lambs weighing about 125, 130 or 140 pounds commanded the best price in the market, but last fall when our lambs were ready and the drovers went out to buy, the packers restricted them by saying that the minimum weight per lamb should be seventy pounds and the maximum weight one hundred pounds. The drovers in that locality refused to buy lambs unless the maximum was raised to at least 110 pounds. There was a fixed price for these lambs; those weighing less than 70 pounds were cut to half price, while lambs weighing over 110 pounds were paid for on the basis of half price for everything over that weight. In some instances the packers would not allow anything at all for anything over 110 pounds.

Our people would like to find out where these minimum and maximum weight lambs went. When the ordinary housewife goes to the butcher shops she buys lamb, and it is all the same price. There is no distinction made; she is not told that this cut was taken from a lamb weighing less than 70 pounds while that cut was taken from a lamb weighing more than 110 pounds. She pays the same price for all the lamb she buys. There is a feeling abroad in this country that the Canada Packers and Swift's have a strangle hold on the primary producers; people believe the packers and the stock yards are operating under an overhead that is altogether unfair to the primary producers, and the farmers in Canada would like to know exactly why there should be this discrimination in the price of lamb though there is no distinction made when that lamb is sold in the butcher shops.

Mr. BROWN: I am glad to say that for once I can agree with the hon. member for North Renfrew. There is no question but that this is a serious grievance on the part of the producer. Indeed I was told the other day that a man who had shipped lambs under the regulation weight to the Winnipeg market had left only 14 cents per lamb after paying the freight; that is, he received 70 cents for five lambs. There is no doubt that in regard to lambs and hogs under and over weight the producer is heavily discriminated against, and if anything can be done to correct that situation undoubtedly it will be to the benefit of the producer.

Mr. GERSHAW: I should like to ask the minister if the Manyberries experimental range station comes under this item and, if so, whether he could tell me the cost of conducting that station. I should like to know also if there are other stations in Canada doing similar work.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That is the only station of its kind in Canada, and the cost is approximately $18,000.

Mr. GERSHAW: Then I should like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that a very special work is being done there in connection with the re-grassing of abandoned range land both with regard to winter and summer pasturage; in connection with how cattle gain under certain conditions, and particularly with regard to general range practice. In view of the fact that no other station in Canada is doing similar work I should like to ask the minister if these reports could be published separately rather than mixed up with the general reports of the department.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They were published separately the last time.

Mr. COTNAM: Before leaving the question I brought up I should like to get some assurance from the minister that before the season for marketing lambs comes next fall some action will be taken by the government to see that the primary producer gets fair play. If the position as I have stated it is not correct, if the farmer is getting all that is legitimately coming to him, I think that that should be known and the reasons for it be made plain to the farmers of this country, but if the packers are taking advantage of the farmers, that also should be made known. If the packers, on the other hand, are acting in good faith and everything is perfectly honest, legitimate and aboveboard, then in order to protect them from a feeling that is prevalent throughout the country, the whole situation should be cleared up. The primary producers would then feel that they were not being treated unfairly and that there was no occasion for any resentment against the packing industries of this country. But I repeat that there is a feeling throughout Canada and has been for many years amongst the farming community that the packing industries of this country have a stranglehold upon the farmers and have them at their mercy, and many believe that it is about time that that stranglehold was loosened.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like, Mr. Chairman, to follow up what my hon. friend has said if it is in order to discuss it on the vote for experimental farms, but personally I think it would properly come under the live stock vote. However, if we are to have a general discussion of the live stock industry upon the vote for experimental farms, I wish to follow up what my hon. friends from North Renfrew and Lisgar have said.

Mr. VALLANCE: How do you propose to deal with the matter, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I think the discussion would be more relevant under the live stock vote.

Mr. COTNAM: The matter needs to be fully discussed and I do not see any reason why it should not be discussed on this item as well as on any other.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): But if it is discussed under this item it may be discussed all over again under the live stock item.

Mr. VALLANCE: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is a question of marketing, not the live stock industry itself; I think it would be in order for us to discuss the matter on this item if we are to discuss marketing at all, for there is no item on which marketing could be discussed by itself. Like the hon. member for Melville I have something to say on the subject when we get your ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I was not asked for a ruling, but my ruling would be that the discussion would be more relevant under the item for live stock. However, if the committee wishes to discuss it under this item it should be done with the understanding that the discussion will not be revived when the live stock item is reached.

Mr. MacLEAN: Has any additional ground been taken in this year for the experimental farm station at Summerside, Prince Edward Island? Has any additional expenditure been made, or is it in contemplation?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There has been no additional enlargement this year and none is contemplated.

Mr. MacLEAN: Has any request been made by the superintendent of the Summerside station to increase the number of foxes kept?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am informed that no such request has been made.

Mr. MacLEAN: Has no request been made to increase the number of foxes kept, with a view to making the station self-sustaining?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is quite evident that it would be very difficult, impossible, I think, to put the station on a paying or self-sustaining basis so long as we are endeavouring to carry on the experimental work we are doing.

Mr. MacLEAN: What was the cost of the operations last year as compared with other years?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The cost last year was $13,000, which was $3,000 less than the year before.

Mr. MacLEAN: In connection with the experimental work that was being carried on at the Summerside station, has some of it been transferred to the experimental plant at Hull, Quebec, or elsewhere?

[Mr. Cotnam.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think the hon. member has reference to the work that has been carried on at the Hull institute. That is a new kind of work with special reference to the disease of distemper.

Mr. MacLEAN: That work is being carried on at Hull now?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes, it was never done at Summerside.

Mr. MacLEAN: Who are the men engaged in that work at Hull?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is under Doctor Watson.

Mr. MacLEAN: Any assistants?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): He is assisted by Dr. Percy J. G. Plummer and Dr. J. R. West.

Mr. MacLEAN: Is any contact being maintained with the Welcome laboratories in England in connection with this work?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): There has been a very insistent demand for an experimental farm somewhere in the Peace River country. Has any headway been made in connection with that proposed project?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): As the hon. member knows, there is a substation at Beaver Lodge which is doing very excellent work. I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend that when times are a little more propitious and money is a little more plentiful that work should be extended.

Mr. BRADETTE: It came to my notice a few weeks ago that the experimental farm has issued circular letters to the farmers in my riding, and I think throughout northern Ontario, asking them what advantages they have found from the demonstration farm, and there is a fear on the part of the farmers that the demonstration farm may be closed. I should like to get the assurance from the minister that no such step will be taken, because such farms as the demonstration farm in the clay belt of northern Ontario at Kapuskasing, which is one of the best, are of great advantage to the farmers. On account of the long distances it is almost impossible for a good many of the settlers to visit the experimental farm at Ottawa, but they do visit the demonstration farm during the summer months at least. I attended a meeting in northern Ontario at which lectures were given by agronomists and which was attended by from two hundred to three hundred people at one time. It would be false economy to discontinue these demonstration stations which I believe are being maintained at very little cost to the department and the country as a whole.

There is another matter which I want to bring to the minister's attention. It was understood that two years ago a poultry promoter was to be appointed for northern Ontario and North Timiskaming, and I believe that applications were received for the position. I do not believe that the appointment has yet been made, or at all events no such poultry promoter has ever functioned in northern Ontario. In Quebec they have such a man and he is doing wonderful work. One can readily realize what it means to our settlers, many of whom have graduated to the farming class, and to the industry of agriculture generally when I say that a carload of eggs is brought into the town of Timmins practically every week from outside of our section of the country, whereas under proper direction our own section of the country could supply that demand. We should encourage the settlers and farmers in this section of the country. I am surprised that this official has not been doing anything for the last two years. I understand the appointment has been sanctioned but the position has not been filled. We hear of people being settled in this section of the country and they should be given as much assistance as possible. Could the minister answer the two questions I have answered?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member's first question was in connection with the illustration stations. I agree with the hon. member that these stations are very important, and there is no intention to curtail their numbers in any way. I am sure he will agree with me when I say that with so many of these stations distributed throughout the country it is necessary that a close check be kept in order to see just what stations are giving value for the money expended. The hon. member's other question would come under the item dealing with live stock, and I shall be glad to look into the matter. I thought there was a possibility it might be a provincial rather than a federal promoter. However, I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. BRADETTE: The Ontario government closed the demonstration farm at Hearst. There was located at that farm one of the ablest officials in the country. This gentleman is now working at the Kapuskasing experimental farm. I should like to know if he is in the employ of the federal government.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): When the provincial government decided to close the farm at Hearst we made an arrangement whereby the gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers would still continue to carry on extension work for the provincial government with his headquarters at the federal experimental farm at Kapuskasing. He is not an employee of the federal government; he is still with the provincial government but has his headquarters at the farm.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I should like to say a few words in connection with the illustration stations. For the past two or three sessions I have spoken favourably of the work done by these stations. We have two in my constituency one near the town of Kindersley and the other near the village of Loverna. There is a capable man in charge of the Kindersley station and I have always been able to speak very highly of the work accomplished. I do not think I need review at this session the splendid results obtained. I was not able to speak with any authority last year of the work done at Loverna but since last session I have made it my business to get first hand information in connection with that station. I am now able to report to the minister that it is doing splendid work, possibly better than the work done at Kindersley. This station is in charge of a very competent operator Mr. Robert Brumwell. He has been experimenting with brome, western rye and alfalfa grasses, as well as with different crop rotations. Perhaps the most important work carried on by Mr. Brumwell is in connection with soil drifting. He lives in that section of the province which is subject to considerable soil drifting, and he is carrying on his experiments without any financial assistance from the government. I understand he has a fifty-eight acre plot of ground which he uses for experimental purposes, and, if I am not mistaken, the regular rate paid by the government is $5 per acre. The soil drifting work is something which he is throwing in free of charge. In spite of the very dry weather which has prevailed in the country with accompanying soil drifting, Mr. Brumwell has produced an average of twenty bushels of wheat per acre over a five year period. He has also accomplished considerable in the growing of grasses in soils usually not suitable for this growth. Another important function of this station is the distributing of seed to the people of the district. Last year Mr. Brumwell had a large quantity of 10-B marquis wheat which he distributed to the settlers. I have a couple of snapshots of this station which I shall send over to the minister. These show the shelter belt and the fruit trees which have been developed as an example to the people of the community. These snaps were taken during the field day held on July 27 of last year, and they give an idea of the interest the people take in that particular station. A few years ago the experimental farm at Scott supplied this supervisor with twenty turkey eggs. From that small beginning he has been able to raise the standard of the turkeys in that district with the result that in 1931 a carload shipped from Loverna weighed two pounds per turkey over the average for the province. The turkeys from the illustration station itself weighed two pounds per turkey higher than the rest of the shipment. The influence of this station upon the turkey business in that district is very remarkable. The field day last July was attended by upwards of 350 persons. According to the reports which appeared in the local paper as well as the report of the man in charge of the illustration station, these people spent a very profitable day inspecting the field plots, viewing the farm exhibit which had been sent down from Scott and listening to addresses dealing with gardening, soil drifting, weed control, the raising of turkeys and such like. Mr. Brumwell concludes his report of the work done by the station by saying:

> In my opinion the illustration station is the best method brought forward to date to help solve farm problems and bring reliable first hand information to the farmer.

Those words summarize the lengthy report made by Mr. Brumwell. I hope the minister will continue the illustration stations wherever good work is being done. As far as the two in my own district are concerned, I can speak most highly of what has been accomplished there.

Mr. McINTOSH: Do I understand that the total cost of all illustration stations in Canada is included in this item of $1,642,000?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: What is the total cost of operating the illustration stations in the dominion?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): $80,000 for 209 stations.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister promised to establish a station at Hafford in my constituency; has this matter been settled as yet?

[Mr. Carmichael.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that it has been.

Mr. McINTOSH: What is the difference between the work done by an illustration station and that done by an experimental farm?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They are entirely different. The value of the work accomplished by an illustration station depends largely if not entirely upon the work of the experimental farms. The purpose of an illustration station is to illustrate to the people the results which have been obtained at the experimental farms.

Mr. McINTOSH: For instance in northwestern Saskatchewan or, for that matter, in northern Saskatchewan, we have an experimental farm at Rosthern.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): And at Scott.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is pretty well south; I do not know whether you would include Scott in northern Saskatchewan. But there is a tremendous area northward that is developing very quickly, running from the North Saskatchewan river northward and westward, I understand that two years ago there was quite a demand for another experimental station north of the North Saskatchewan river and the opinion departmentally was voiced that in all likelihood that area would never get an experimental farm. What is the opinion of the minister as to that? That information came from some of the heads of the department.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am sorry I did not catch what the hon. member said.

Mr. McINTOSH: In the part of Saskatchewan known as the northwestern part of the province we have illustration stations, I understand, at Spruce lake—that has not been closed—at Meota, a splendid illustration station under the guidance of Mr. Walter Tait, one of the best farmers in that part of the province; one at Glenbush under Mr. Grant, and another at Meadow Lake. Will there be any opportunity in the future development of that great part of the province, the most productive and coming part of it, for an experimental farm? Must that part of the province always put up with a small number of illustration stations, and is the statement made by departmental officials that the day will never come when there will be an experimental farm in that part of Canada, true?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think any departmental official would be warranted in making such a statement.

Mr. McINTOSH: I believe the statement was made, but if the minister thinks it should not have been, I shall leave the matter at that. If it ever was made, I am here to refute it, I do not care who made it, because the day will come when that part of western Canada should have an experimental farm. It is the park area of northern Saskatchewan and it is quite possible to have there an experimental farm devoted to problems entirely different from those dealt with by a farm established in a differently constituted and differently cultivated area. The question ought to be an open one. I do not think all the evidence is in yet to justify anyone making a ridiculous statement of that kind; but if it actually was made, I shall take the answer of the minister to the effect that it did not mean anything. As I say, the question is an open one and we shall be looking forward at some time in the future to having —as we should—an experimental farm in that part of western Canada.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Some time last year the herd of cattle which the department had at Swift Current was removed to a farm in Alberta. I should like to know from the minister the reason for that removal and whether it is the intention to establish another herd at the Swift Current experimental farm.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Only part of the herd was removed from the Swift Current station. The work thus lost, if one considers it such, has been made up by feeding experiments that are being carried on there this year. Any results of experimental work that are obtained with reference to live stock in any of the experimental farms are, of course, made available to the Swift Current farm and from there, through the illustration stations surrounding it, to the farmers in that area. But we are carrying out there feeding experiments in connection with young lightweight cattle.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I understand the minister has received many protests from people in that area in connection with the removal of that herd. He says that only part of it was removed. My information was that practically the whole herd was removed. I appreciate the fact that the feeding experiments which have been carried on are valuable, but this government and, I believe, the Saskatchewan government as well, for some time have been trying to encourage diversified farming. When that herd was established at the Swift Current station, other experimental stations could get the benefit of the experiments carried on there. I should like to know the reason for removing that herd of cattle. On whose recommendation was it transferred? After the department has finished the feeding experiments, is it the intention to build up that herd again?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): As regards the question of diversified farming, there are more cattle there now under experimentation than there were this time last year. We considered it advisable—and that was the recommendation made to me by my officials—that live stock breeding experiments should be more concentrated.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Did the recommendation for the removal of that herd come from the experimental station in Swift Current or from officials of the department at Ottawa or from officials of the station in Alberta to which the herd was transferred?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No request came from Lacombe. The recommendation came from the department at Ottawa.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Was there any recommendation from the experimental station at Swift Current?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I could not say.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Was the initial recommendation made from the experimental station at Swift Current?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The whole live stock policy on experimental farms is directed by the Dominion Animal Husbandman. He visits the farms in the different provinces, discusses with the men there questions of animal husbandry, returns to Ottawa and sits in with the director and other heads of branches. At that meeting the policy for the next year is evolved. In that way it was decided that the change should be made with reference to the herd at Swift Current.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I want to clear this matter up if I can. There has been a reoprt that the officials at the experimental farm at Swift Current were desirous of having those cattle removed. I do not believe that is the fact and I should like to get the minister's assurance to that effect, so that we may have it as a matter of record.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I would say without hesitation that is not the fact.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): May I ask the minister what work the Dominion government is doing in the way of experimentation in the control of grasshoppers with respect to both their active control and poisoning?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That comes not under the vote under discussion but under the entomology vote passed the last night we were in committee. Continuous studies are being made of the habits of various insects and it is only by such study that means of combating their spread and preventing constant damage can be evolved. There were men in the field practically all last summer, or at least during the period it was necessary for them to be there studying the life habits of those insects. From their observation and the knowledge gained, invaluable information will be given to the provincial authorities who, under the direction to a certain extent of our entomological specialists, will take all steps to avoid the damage which is anticipated this year.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): I realize that the item for the Destructive Insect and Pest Act was passed the other night, but this is really experimental work. Since that vote was passed, I have noticed a dispatch sent out from Ottawa with respect to the grasshopper situation in Manitoba. I have had two or three questions asked me by people in my constituency regarding this matter. The article before me is dated at Ottawa, and I suppose it came from the Department of Agriculture. It is as follows:

Ottawa, Feb. 28.—The prairie provinces are facing invasion. In Manitoba, particularly, will the brunt of battle be felt this summer. The enemy forces in that province alone will number at least 4,356,000,000,000. To combat that force "munition factories" in Manitoba are working day and night and a conference between provincial and federal strategists will be held in Winnipeg, on March 2, when the most intensive plan of campaign ever drawn up in Canada will be decided, it was announced by the Department of Agriculture Monday.

The enemy? Just the humble but destructive grasshopper. The munitions? Technically they are known as "bait," a combination of "half and half" sawdust, bran and sodium arsenite. The conference? Leading entomologists headed by Norman Criddle.

The war will be waged against a new army but it really is but a continuance of battles which have been carried on for some years against the pest. Last year the invaders claimed 20,000 acres of grain crops but the defenders protected and saved 1,000,000 acres through their preventive measures.

This year Manitoba is preparing for one of its worst invasions in certain areas. It will cost the province in the neighbourhood of $150,000 to wage a battle in an infested area estimated at 1,000,000 acres.

Incidentally the introduction of sawdust in the bait is a Canadian discovery which saved $40,000 last year and which is now accepted in all parts of the continent.

A word about the enemy. One grasshopper lays about 200 eggs at a time, repeating the process four or five times during the season. The eggs are sheltered in "pockets" which contain from 20 to 65 eggs each and it is estimated that from 100 to 100,000 eggs per square foot will be found over the infested area. It takes a grasshopper about 40 days to mature during which time it changes its coat five times before sprouting wings. Another month or two completes its life span unless it falls prey to the bait. Last year 140 bushels of grasshoppers were killed by this bait to one acre.

To provide the bait, 70 machines are in operation in Manitoba which turn out 100 pounds of bait every five minutes. Some are in operation day and night.

This report comes from Ottawa. I know that the province of Manitoba is expecting to spend $150,000, and local people are working day and night on their machines to save their crops. The question I should like to ask is: How much does the Dominion government pay towards such a campaign?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Nothing, so far as the material is concerned.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): What does the Dominion government really contribute? I think the minister must realize that the grasshopper invasion is really a calamity to the area affected, and my submission is that the dominion should come in and play a greater part than they do at the present time. This year I am afraid it will be far beyond the ability of the province or the municipalities to deal with the area which will be affected.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think the hon. member will agree, that when he suggests the dominion is not making a contribution he has lost sight of the fact that it is perhaps making the greatest contribution, because were it not for the specialists from the entomological branch who have made such a thorough study in the laboratories and fields and are able beforehand to advise provincial government authorities of the danger, the location of it, when to expect it and its extent, those provincial authorities would be powerless. The policy which has been adopted for some time, and which in my view is a fair one, is that that is our contribution, but that the responsibility of supplying material and the necessary workers to do the actual labour is that of the province and the municipalities.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): I appreciate what the minister has said. I know of the very good work that Norman Criddle of Treesbank, Manitoba, is doing, because that gentleman happens to be in my constituency. I know he is cooperating with the provincial Department of Agriculture. Probably the minister can defend his position by saying that the dominion department is attempting to do scientific work. I submit, however, that when the people see a statement such as I have read coming from Ottawa they have no appreciation of the Dominion government's share in the matter. I think the minister would be acting for the good of his department were he to emphasize to a greater extent the very valuable work Mr. Criddle has been doing in the province of Manitoba.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Shall the item carry?

Mr. McINTOSH: No. There are two more points I should like to clear up before leaving this item. I refer, first, to the intended illustration station at Hafford. The minister said it was practically in the same position as it was a year or so ago. May I ask him what his intentions are in regard to that station? I should like to say the minister very kindly investigated the possibility of an investigation station at Hafford, or had his department do so, and after investigation gave his word that there would be an illustration station at that point. When the minister has given his word to that effect I know it will be kept. I am asking him, however, if he has any further definite information on the point so that the Hafford district will know its position in that connection without delay.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The illustration station has already been established for this year on the farm of Mr. Hudek.

Mr. McINTOSH: Before the election of 1930, if I remember correctly, and my memory is fairly good, the previous government investigated the area westward from Meadow Lake towards the Alberta boundary line, and the area of country northwest of North Battleford, with a view to establishing an illustration station that would help farmers farm more successfully. There is an illustration station at Spruce Lake and one at Meadow Lake. West of Meadow Lake and north of Spruce Lake and North Battleford, there is an immense area of country, new productive agricultural land the importance of which, I believe, I called to the attention of the minister since his government took office. I am of the opinion he said he would investigate matters some time in the future. I am not sure whether any investigation has taken place or not, but I should like to know to-night whether the government has any intention of looking into that new area with a view to the establishment of an illustration station there in the near future.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Is Piapot in that district?

Mr. McINTOSH: No; I think the minister knows the area in question.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I know the district. There is another illustration station somewhere in that northwest area, and I was wondering if that was the one. However, I shall look into the matter and let the hon. member know.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I was not satisfied with the answer I received about the experimental farm in north British Columbia. Are there any experimental plots along the Canadian National railway between Yellowhead pass and Prince Rupert? If so, where are they?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Is the hon. member referring to an experimental farm or an illustration station?

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Illustration stations. It would be in the Cariboo and Skeena electoral ridings.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The following illustration stations are on the main line; McBride, Prince George—there are two in the vicinity of Prince George—Telkwa and Vanderhoof.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I notice in Hansard for 1928 at page 575 Mr. Motherwell who was then Minister of Agriculture made a strong plea that something should be done in that part of the country. Also at page 577 Mr. Tolmie strongly advocated that something be done in that territory, which covers several thousand square miles. I may say that lately they have built at least one country elevator in there, and if given a little encouragement it will be a great country for home builders, which after all is what we are trying to induce people to become. I strongly urge the minister to give the matter his personal consideration. I know he has not been out there himself, but both his predecessors have been there and looked into it and I hope the present minister will do the same.

Mr. LUCAS: Some time ago information was given that a new grass was introduced that gives special promise for certain sections of western Canada, I think it was called crested wheat grass. Can the minister say what progress has been made with that, and if it is fulfilling its promise?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The results obtained from the grass known as crested wheat grass are very satisfactory. Pure line strains have been developed, and every possible means is being employed to propagate them and increase them as quickly as possible. As soon as we have a quantity available it is distributed to three selected or recommended farmers in each of several municipalities on the understanding that they will either pay for it in two payments or else return to the department the same amount of seed, which in turn is distributed. That policy has been carried out on the recommendation of a committee consisting of members of the provincial and federal departments of agriculture. It is being propagated and increased very rapidly.

Mr. LUCAS: It is not open for distribution to individual farmers?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Oh, yes.

Mr. LUCAS: From the experimental farms?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): One farmer in the southern part of Alberta—I do not recall his name—had a considerable quantity to sell this year, up in the thousands of pounds, of very high class crested wheat grass.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give any information as to the value of this grass in comparison with others?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In nutritive value I understand that it ranks very high, if not at the top—that is in grasses as distinct from clovers. Not only that, but it is very palatable; horses and cattle prefer it, even when allowed to get quite ripe, to some of the other grasses like western rye grass. It also has the peculiar quality of being able to withstand drought even better than the rye grasses and brome. It becomes dormant during the long drought, and then responds very quickly to the least moisture.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Some of the experimental farms have been doing considerable work in connection with the testing and demonstration of machinery, how best to handle it, how best to hitch it up, and I think something in connection with the use of tractors. However, the fall in prices has put an end to the tractor business, we are back in the horse-power age. I have often thought that one of the things that disgusts a great many people in working horses is that they do not know how to handle them. Horses require to have their feet trimmed, and some of them get bad habits, and while there are well known and effective methods of dealing with horses that are what is usually called "mean," the knowledge is not generally distributed. I wonder if it would not be a good thing if some branch of the Department of Agriculture would undertake to collect in a bulletin and distribute to the farmers of Canada information as to how to trim horses' feet, how to make them lift their feet, and how to deal with horses that are hard to handle, kickers and so on. I believe it would be of very great help, because some people have literally been driven off the farm on account of their being utterly unable to handle horses.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe much information of that nature has been sent out. The hon. member, himself a farmer, will realize that in perhaps the majority of cases, at any rate in a great many, the trouble starts with the man who is handling the horse. However, it is a very good suggestion and we will look into it.

Mr. GERSHAW: To come back to the crested wheat grass, Mr. W. H. Moore of Bindloss sold some seed to the department, but his trouble was that he was left with a lot of seed that he could not sell. Can the minister tell me where he might find a market for it?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We shall be glad to look into that. I might say I helped him out myself to the extent of about one thousand pounds. That is the name I could not think of before. Professor Kirk I know has his name on his list, and I think the last time I spoke to him he thought he would be able to help him dispose of it all. But I shall be glad to refer it to him again.

Mr. TAYLOR: I would like to ask what is included in this vote for carrying out the work at the experimental farm at Harrow, Ontario, and what work is carried on at Harrow?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the neighbourhood of $40,000. The chief work carried on there is in connection with tobacco, and also a great deal of work in connection with soybeans.

Mr. TAYLOR: At the time the station at Harrow was first established I believe that section of Ontario was perhaps the only part growing tobacco. Since then the Norfolk-Elgin-Oxford district has developed tobacco growing to a much greater extent, and in that section they are now producing almost all the tobacco grown in Ontario. There is a request from the growers of that section and from the board of trade of Delhi that the department establish a station at Delhi for experimental work. The soil and climate being different from those at Harrow, they feel it is very important on account of the large production of tobacco there that the department carry on some experimental work in that county. I know that the minister has had a request for the establishment of a station at Delhi, and has had considerable time to think it over. I was wondering if he could tell us now his decision in the matter.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have under consideration the establishment of a substation at Delhi. The district has been surveyed with the hope of obtaining a lease. It will be under the supervision of the man in charge at Harrow. It is very difficult to get men sufficiently well trained to undertake this work, and we feel that it is better when we have a man sufficiently well trained, to extend his usefulness as much as possible rather than to establish a new experimental farm.

Mr. TAYLOR: Who is the man in charge at Harrow now?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Mr. Murwin.

Mr. VALLANCE: Before this item passes, Mr. Chairman, following your decision that we should discuss marketing at this time I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct that the stockyards throughout Canada are under the control of the federal government and the Department of Agriculture. If that is so, as I think it is, I should like to direct the minister's attention to a condition which I pointed out to him some three or four months ago. Are the fees charged for the use of the stockyards the same in all cases regardless of who brings in the stock and in what manner it is delivered?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I thought the chairman ruled that these questions should be discussed under the live stock vote, which is where I think they should be brought up. However, I may say that we have made a very careful study of the whole stockyard situation during the past year. We feel that there is much that is not to be desired in connection with the way the charges are set out, but according to our information only two stockyards in the dominion are paying dividends. We sent out a letter asking the various stockyards to report as to whether or not they would make a voluntary reduction of ten per cent in certain charges, and in that letter it was intimated that if this was not done a further investigation would have to be carried out. To make it short, however, the point is this: I feel that the charges are too high, but my information does not put me in a position to take the responsibility of saying that they must materially reduce their charges, lest by doing so we might put some of them out of business. Until we get further information with regard to their finances I do not feel like taking that responsibility, but with that exception I have no doubt a reduction could be made.

Mr. VALLANCE: There is one point I should like to draw to the attention of the minister, and no doubt it has been mentioned previously. Let us take for example the stock yards of Saskatoon or Moose Jaw. To-day a farmer delivering a truckload of hogs to either of those stockyards is penalized, while a railway carload of hogs receives a certain consideration. As the minister knows, farmers living even some considerable distance from those two stockyards are trucking their hogs, and I should like to know whether the minister is aware of the fact that the farmer who delivers his hogs by truck is being penalized to the extent of one dollar per head. If the minister is aware of that fact could he say why that is being done?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I must say that I did not know of this practice. Does my hon. friend say that if a farmer delivers a truckload of hogs to the stockyards he is liable to that charge?

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes. Could the minister give the reason why that is so?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Is that where no service is given?

Mr. VALLANCE: Is this really a penalty imposed on the farmer; is it to prevent the farmer from delivering his hogs by truck or is it to encourage shipment over the railroads? In my humble opinion, Mr. Chairman, whether a farmer delivers his hogs by driving them ahead of him, as is done in Ireland, or by a truck or by the railway, there should be no discrimination. If this has not been drawn to the attention of the minister I think it should be looked into right away.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I appreciate having this drawn to my question. I cannot possibly see how it could be true that there is this discrimination, but I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. VALLANCE: I can assure the minister that this practice was in vogue as recently as last summer, at all events. We are shipping hogs by truck from in and around the Luseland district, and the farmers are being penalized to the extent of one dollar per head because of that fact.

Mr. BRADETTE: Would the minister advise the committee how the vote for the Kapuskasing experimental farm this year compares with the vote last year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is practically the same amount, $40,000 to $41,000.

Mr. BRADETTE: I am quite free to criticize the parsimony of this government in that regard because when I sat on the government side I found it necessary to criticize the former government for not devoting a larger amount of money to that farm. We in northern Ontario received no benefit from the wheat bonus scheme because we cannot produce wheat, and the stabilization fund created under this budget in order to aid the exporter of farm products will not help us either. The only compensation we have in our part of the country is the Kapuskasing experimental farm, which formerly sold the settlers pedigreed stock and poultry, as well as the produce of the farm, practically at cost prices. Ever since I have been in this house I have had to criticize the Department of Agriculture for not giving that farm the amount of money it should receive, having regard to the large territory it serves and the great benefit it is to the people there.

The manager of that farm is well known to every settler in northern Ontario; I believe he is a personal friend of the Minister of Labour, and there is no doubt that he is the proper man in the proper place. I know he has always found it difficult to make both ends meet. When the big power plant and the Spruce Falls paper plant were being constructed some settlers resented the fact that the horses from the experimental farm were used in competition with the horses of the settlers, but on making inquiry I found that the management of the farm had to find some employment for those horses in order to balance the yearly budget. I maintain that this is not the way to deal with an institution of that kind. Having in mind the work that is being done in placing a large number of families back on the land in our section of the country; having in mind also the fact that most of our settlers find it impossible to go a long distance in order to obtain pedigreed stock, I believe the government should continue the practice of raising cattle on the Kapuskasing experimental farm. I understand that two years ago those in charge of the work of that farm had to curtail that work through lack of funds, and I plead with the Minister of Agriculture to have it undertaken again. Surely the federal treasury should find it possible to look after the requirements of our fine agricultural population in northern Ontario.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, the legislation that has been brought forward in this parliament during the last three years may have proved beneficial to other parts of the country. We do not quarrel with that; we are satisfied that $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 should be given the wheat growers of the west, and we are satisfied that the primary producers of eastern Canada as well as of the prairie provinces should benefit to the extent of millions of dollars under this stabilization scheme. But I could easily prove that that will not be worth anything to us, because we are not on an export basis. Surely the Department of Agriculture could find it possible not only to maintain the present activities of the Kapuskasing experimental farm but to enlarge them considerably. It would be money well spent. Most of our settlers are not yet farmers and they need pedigreed stock to start new herds, but they cannot afford to come down here and bring them back and pay travelling expenses. In the past, and I give the government credit for this, the experimental farm at Kapuskasing has found it possible to sell at cost price poultry, chickens and hogs, and that has been very beneficial to our section of the country, but under this vote that farm will find it absolutely impossible to continue those activities. I hope the minister will take my plea into serious consideration and find it possible to increase the vote on account of the situation with which we are faced in that part of the country.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): With reference to the hiring of horses in the lumber camps, that has not been done in the last two years. So far as reducing the herd of cattle is concerned, as the pure bred stock increased in numbers the grade cattle were disposed of. We are in a position so far as live stock is concerned to give the same service as we have given in the past. I am sure that those in charge of the experimental farm will appreciate this commendation of the work they are doing, especially of the distribution of the best blood lines of live stock to the settlers at cost price.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I remind the minister of two angles of the problem which he said he would try to work out in the area of country which I described lying west of Meadow lake and northwest of the end of steel between North Battleford and Edmonton. The minister was kind enough to say that he would investigate the possibilities of that area to see whether it merited the establishment of an illustration station. The two angles of that question which I would like to bring to the minister's attention are these. First, before the minister makes his investigation, when he goes to his department and digs up the report made in 1930, may I impress upon him the importance of putting aside the idea of political bias found or intimated therein. I understand the statement has been made that because an election was coming on in 1930 a political investigation was asked. I refute that statement. There was nothing political about it. The investigation was made because that area of country was developing and I thought the investigation should be made as a consequence. I hope therefore that the minister will pay no attention to that report when he lookes it up, if he does, before he makes his investigation. Secondly, when his investigator goes into that area he will find sixty-nine miles of railway grade which has been graded for the last two years and which has not one foot of steel on it yet. He will see the ties rotting by the wayside and the grade itself crumbling to pieces. But I would ask the minister to impress upon his investigator that he should not get frightened by those facts, should not allow them to colour his report, but should send in a straightforward report of his investigation of the agricultural possibilities of that part of the country, its farming potentialities, and what it merits as compared with other parts of the province.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How much was spent last year by the experimental farm at Lacombe, Alberta, and how much is it proposed to spend this year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Last year $42,500, and this year approximately the same.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am glad that the amount is not going to be reduced. Indeed, I hope the time will come when the expenditure may be increased. That farm is no longer in my riding and therefore I cannot speak for it as its representative, but it is within twenty miles of my own home and I continue my practice of visiting it two or three times a year and going over the place in a businesslike way to find out how much money is being spent, whether it is being spent to the best advantage, and where money might be saved.

There are two or three lines of work being carried on there which are very beneficial. First I would mention the number of meetings which are addressed by the superintendent and his staff. They are almost as much embarrassed in that respect as members of parliament, although I believe they are even more popular than many members of parliament. It is a great tribute to their work that they should be asked every year to address an increasing number of meetings. When you add to that the fact that their correspondence is equal almost to that of a department of government and is extending over wider and wider areas, I think that may be taken as a fairly good criterion of the value which the people of that district attach to the work that is being done. One particular piece of work is carried on there in cooperation with the elevator companies—I do not know whether it is done in other parts of Canada—which to my mind is a very splendid piece of work. Different elevators are cooperating with the farm and taking from each farmer's wheat as it is hauled in a fair-sized sample of the typical wheat that that farmer sells, and asking him whether he intends to sow that again next year. Then these different samples are sown in small plots on the farm—the farmers whose samples are planted are not known to the superintendent by name at all, each farmer being given a number. When the farmer goes to the station in the fall he can see there his own sample growing alongside samples that have been sent in by other farmers, and when the big field day comes, much interest is taken by hundreds of farmers who come to see the results in their plots, and compare them with that of their neighbours. They can see whether they are getting a mixed grade, or whether their grain is dirty or weedy. To my mind that is one of the most useful pieces of work that can be done, and it certainly is resulting in a great many of the farmers discarding their own seed and getting better seed.

I have always been a very strong supporter of the experimental farms even in times of economic stress, because I realize, as most farmers do, that no matter what the economic conditions may be and no matter what the market price, the basis of a good price, the foundation of success, must commence with good seed grown under proper conditions and in a proper way. I just wanted to add my tribute of praise to the work which the experimental farms are doing. We on this side usually criticize the government because that is the duty of members on the opposition side, but I have kept very close watch on the work that this particular farm has been doing for a good many years now, both under the present minister and the former minister. I cannot say that the work is improving particularly because it was always good under both ministers, but the work is certainly being increasingly appreciated by the farmers, and in spite of the hard times I am sure that the expenditure there is as popular an expenditure, even with the farmers, as could possibly be made by the minister.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think my hon. friend from South Battleford a few moments ago said that the penalty was one dollar per hog.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that at one time there was a charge of one dollar per truck, which would work out to five cents a hog, because the stockyards felt that there was more work in handling hogs unloaded from trucks. I could not say whether or not that is still in vogue, but I shall investigate to make sure.

Mr. VALLANCE: The itemized particulars were handed to me just before I left last fall and I really left the chamber to get them. However, I was not able to locate the information.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is one more question I would like to ask in connection with live stock.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): We have two items covering live stock and unless it is intended to exhaust this whole matter at this time, I would suggest to the committee that further discussion upon live stock be postponed until we reach those items.

Mr. McINTOSH: Very well.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: A very promising rust resistant wheat was developed at the rust laboratory at Winnipeg and I was wondering if any further progress has been made. It would mean a lot to the farmers if a good rust resistant wheat with sufficient quality of grain and straw were discovered. Is this rust laboratory still under the Department of Agriculture, or has it been changed over to the National Research Council? I frequently see items in the press, especially the Winnipeg press, giving interviews with Doctor Tory after he has made a visit to this laboratory, which leads one to believe that this rust research work is under his charge. Has there been any change in the administration of this laboratory?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Excellent progress has been made in the development of a rust resistant wheat. Six strains have been developed which are not only rust resistant but which have been found to be quite high in yield, and baking quality. These strains are being increased this year under close supervision and it is hoped that some will be available for distribution next year. As the hon. member knows, the greatest precaution must be taken with these wheats. Publicity cannot be given to their development, lest people try to get a few odd heads and try to multiply them without knowing just exactly what they are. As far as the supervision and administration of the rust laboratory is concerned, the building was built by the Department of Agriculture and I understand that every official is paid from the vote of the department. I do not know of any contribution received from outside the department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is happening in connection with the poultry disease known as pullorum? We do not hear so much about this work these days. This is a very malignant and contagious disease and I should like to know if its spread has been limited to such a point that no further attention need be given to it; or has this work been taken over by the provincial departments of agriculture?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): At the conference in Toronto and at later discussions a definite policy was discussed with the various provinces. They have practically all agreed in principle to cooperate with the federal government in order to carry on this work at the minimum cost.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) has pleaded long and earnestly, as did his predecessor, for an experimental farm along the old Grand Trunk, as it is called, east of Prince Rupert. My predecessor and the minister's predecessor both gave some assurance to the people out there that the next experimental farm would be located in that territory. That may not have been a wise promise to make but in any event the next farm has not materialized. It is something like to-morrow which never comes. In view of the shrinkage in finances, I would make the suggestion that log cottages and barns be erected in this territory which could be used as pioneer buildings for a future experimental farm layout. There is plenty of timber suitable for construction purposes and the minister and his staff could lay out a farm at very small expense. These would be only log buildings but the times through which we are passing make me think that perhaps we will have to go back somewhat to pioneer days. All that would be necessary would be two or three good axemen and some loggers to get out the timber. Not only a house but a barn could be erected to act as an example to the community. I do not insist that the minister make a reply just now, but I leave this suggestion with him. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael), the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) and others, speak so highly of the work of the illustration stations. What was the maximum number of these stations?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There were 241 at one time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How many are there now?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are 209.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not getting more fast. I have no doubt that it has been found that some of these stations were not very active. The value of the work performed is dependent largely upon the character and the ambition and resourcefulness of the man in charge, and no doubt certain stations have to be dropped from time to time. The total number of these stations should be kept up however and not to do so is just another illustration of the penny wise and pound foolish policy of the government in cutting the agriculture estimates. As I have said before, this cannot be done without great sacrifice to agriculture. I do not altogether blame the minister because I know what it is to be in a cabinet of sixteen or seventeen. Every minister wants to get his arm into the bag up to his shoulder, and the other sixteen see to it good and plenty that the seventeenth does not get in too far. I urge that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture be spared. A number of instances have been cited to-night where important services have suffered because of this foolish and unwise policy of saving a few pennies and losing many pounds. I draw this matter to the attention of the three or four colleagues of the minister who are present to-night. I know they all think that they have to rustle for their own but they should remember that agriculture supports and employs nearly half the people of Canada, and feeds them all. That department should not be niggered down the way it has been during the last two years.

Now, a word more cheerful than that. Our interest in Reward wheat has not slackened because of the other rust resistant one that is being developed at Winnipeg. Reward wheat has itself a substantial amount of rust resistance. I think I could ask, without fear of causing too much of a rush: Is this strain sufficiently multiplied to let it out to individual farmers?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Next year we hope it will be.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I wish to say one more thing I had in mind with respect to the Lacombe farm, and what I say as to it will apply to others, but I speak with greater knowledge of it. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance as to the ten per cent cut to be made on these estimates when they come to be spent, may I ask the minister to take this farm into special consideration when the question of cutting the vote for experimental farms by ten per cent comes up. There are some—and no doubt the minister knows of them—where expenditures could be cut without impairing the service, but I can give it as my definite opinion, for what it is worth, that to make a cut on this farm, with which I am more familiar, would mean reducing efficiency and service, because I believe the men on it are now giving every dollar of value and every hour of service they can. To make in this case the ten per cent cut threatened would simply mean reducing the efficiency of the service by at least ten per cent, and in these days when farms should be run better than usual and not worse, we cannot afford any reduction in efficiency.

Item agreed to.

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and the Meat and Canned Foods Act, $1,817,991.

Mr. BROWN: The minister of course is aware that many rumours have been circulated as to the way in which this health of animals branch is to be treated. Is he aware of the rumour that it was to be joined up with the live stock branch Would he allay the fears of the people of Canada by making a definite statement of his policy in regard to the matter? We only hope the reported statement is not true.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not know to what particular rumour the hon. member refers, any more than that there was an indefinite statement that the health of animals branch was in some way to be allied with the live stock branch.

Mr. BROWN: That is the statement.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not know the details of the rumour. I saw in one of the western papers a report in which it would take a great deal of painstaking investigation to discover any item of truth, it was so absurd. Perhaps there are things that might be much more unnatural than the closer association of those two branches, even making into one branch, because work in connection with health of animals has to do almost entirely with the question of live stock. It was stated, for instance, in one of the reports, that it would be a mistake to put the health of animals branch under a layman. As a matter of fact it has been under one layman or two laymen for quite a number of years. It is under the deputy minister, who is a layman, and it is also under the Minister of Agriculture. Surely no one would object if it were decided to put it under the live stock commissioner; it would not lose anything in that connection, especially if it retained the same specialists as it has at present in charge of it. A good deal of thought has been given by the heads of both branches as to how they could amalgamate some of the services, for instance, in the city of Moose Jaw, the hog graders and the stockyard agents who are under the live stock branch and the stock car inspectors and some other officials who are under the health of animals branch. But I can assure hon. gentlemen that no one in the house is more anxious than I am, for the sake of the live stock industry, to retain to the full the efficiency of the health of animals branch and in any way that we can to increase that efficiency. Practically my whole stake in agriculture is in live stock, and perahps it is because of the work I have been carrying on in that connection, the consideration and investigation of the whole problem, that some of these unwarranted rumours have arisen by people being overanxious to criticize, regardless of the false statements they may make through the press, upsetting the public. So far as I am concerned, in connection with the health of animals branch or the live stock branch, nothing will be done that will in any way lower the efficiency of those connected with the live stock industry.

There are, however, problems with which we are confronted. As the health of animals branch extends its scope and therefore is forced to take on additional staff and to undertake work that previously had been done by private practitioners, the tendency is to drive the private practitioners out of business. The most important thing, perhaps as important as the health of animals branch, is that we should retain and encourage in all parts of the dominion where live stock are found, the highly efficient services of private practitioners. That has been the chief line along which our investigation has taken us. We think now we have reached a conclusion as to a method by which some of the work of the health of animals branch can be done by private practitioners as cheaply as, if perhaps not more cheaply than, it is being done at the present time. In this way we shall safeguard the work by having private practitioners, who wish to avail themselves of this work and the remuneration in connection with it, pass examinations set by the veterinary director general and his staff. Their work will be carried on, as it is at present, under the veterinary director general. Our veterinary colleges are now being attended by too few men and the brightest young men who attend those colleges are, because they are bright, absorbed by the health of animals branch as soon as they graduate. They might have a great future if they went into private practice, but we hope to make the remuneration better for them. As I say, because they are bright, we take them into the health of animals branch in various capacities, and their work there, although of importance, is to a great extent routine. Therefore they are not developing their abilities and their value to a large degree is lost to the live stock industry of the country. That perhaps is the most important statement I would have to make in regard to some reorganization that may take place.

Second, it is felt that we can combine under a common head some of the work that is being done. For instance, in British Columbia or Saskatchewan or Alberta there is a district inspector who is in charge only of men doing field work, that is veterinaries who are situated at boundary points or are doing work such as tuberculosis testing or other work. Besides that there is under the health of animals branch another group of men such as meat inspectors, stock car inspectors and so on. They are not in any way subject to the man who is in charge of the field men, but have another head. After full discussion we have felt it is only logical that the one man should be sufficiently qualified to look after both branches because in the province of Saskatchewan I believe there are at present eighteen field men, four of whom are boundary point men. So that there are really only fourteen field men left, and to supervise those fourteen there is another man whose work is not to go into the field and do actual field work but to administer the office, with the assistance of a clerk and a stenographer. We think he should do that work well and in addition supervise the other work, which would make the health of animals work in the province just as efficient, and probably more so in that it would be under one head.

It would also make it better for people making inquiries because they would know where to go. Sometimes serious mistakes are made, not particularly in this connection but in the various branches of agriculture, because information has been received from the wrong person. For instance, we have located in Vancouver various offices for the different branches of agriculture. One man told me it would take him a full day to visit all those offices if it were necessary for him to do so, because they are in different parts of the city. A man who wanted information regarding the importation of wheat went to the health of animals office and asked with what conditions he had to comply before importing. The answer was that as long as it came in new sacks it would be allowed in. The result was that a very considerable shipment of wheat was made, complying with this provision for new sacks, but when it arrived at Vancouver it could not be unloaded, because in the first instance the man had not gone also to the entomological branch. He should have gone there also and inquired what regulations they had governing importations. These provided that it was necessary to have a certificate from the Australian authorities to the effect that the shipment was free from flax smut.

That is the general line along which we are working in connection with the reorganization of the health of animals branch and live stock branch. The one guiding principle is that there shall be full discussion of every related question, and only after that shall we do what we decide is in the best interests of the live stock industry without lowering its efficiency.

Mr. BROWN: I am glad the minister has announced his policy of giving consideration to local practitioners. It is a matter of serious concern in farming communities today that under present conditions we are threatened with losing the services of our skilled veterinary surgeons. The increasing use of the automobile and the prevailing hard times have made it very difficult for local veterinary surgeons to live decently, and I believe it would be in the interests of the department as well as of the rural communities that the services of these men should be utilized as far as possible in doing departmental work. I believe the work could be done as efficiently by these men as by any others, and we would be assured that rural communities would not be deprived of a very necessary service. I know veterinary surgeons have felt the matter very keenly. I have had representations from a number of them asking that the testing of cattle for the establishment of restricted areas might be committed to their care. If a man kept himself abreast of the times, there is no reason why he should not be able to perform the work as efficiently as the men sent out by the department.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Like the hon. member for Lisgar, I heard the report that there was to be a merger between the health of animals and the live stock branch. I am pleased to hear the minister's explanation. What I am about to say I do not think I need direct particularly to the minister, because I know he is very much interested in the live stock industry. I wish merely to draw attention to the importance of the health of animals branch. This is a branch which after a great many years has been built up. It was begun by Doctor Rutherford a number of years ago, and through his efforts an efficient staff and organization has been created. I believe if there is any change in or interference with the work of the health of animals branch it will be resented throughout the country.

A moment ago the minister said he had had representations stating that laymen should not be placed in charge. I realize that that is so, and that only the most qualified veterinary surgeons should do the work of the health of animals branch, or be at the head of it. I should like to turn to the report of the Minister of Agriculture for last year. At page 87, with reference to the foot and mouth disease, he states the following:

> Foot and mouth disease continues to be prevalent on the continent of Europe and in many other parts of the world, and the insidious nature of this infection makes it necessary to take the strictest precautions to exclude it from Canada.

Foot and mouth disease has never prevailed in Canada. There have been many outbreaks in the United States at various times, but it has never been allowed to come into Canada. Hon. members who have the report of the minister may read at page 88 some of the precautions taken during the last outbreak to prevent the germ entering Canada. I do not believe the precautions were unnecessary, by any means, because this is a most virulent disease. I attended a veterinary college and graduated about thirty years ago, and I want to say to the minister that I do not agree with him when he states that young men should be encouraged to go into the rural districts and try to make a living from a veterinary practice, because the ones who are in practice are finding it very difficult to exist under present conditions. Twenty-five or thirty years ago in the part of the country in which I was practising it was quite common for me to run into a case of glanders. I have known twenty or thirty horses to be killed by that disease in a small district inside of one year. Around about 1906, 1907 or 1908 the compensation paid for glanders alone was about $40,000 or $60,000 each year. The minister's latest report, which I have before me, shows that last year in all of Canada only one animal was killed. Just think what that means! It means that glanders has been practically exterminated from Canada.

Mange is another disease with which we have to contend. It was quite prevalent in western Canada, and although not as fatal as glanders among horses and cattle, still it caused a great deal of loss. From the report before me I find that to-day there is very little mange among horses and cattle in Canada. This is important not only from the standpoint of a reduced loss of stock; we must think of the serious results that would follow if the foot and mouth disease became prevalent among sheep and cattle in Canada. It would mean not only the loss of animals but the loss of markets, because probably for a long while we would be excluded from the markets of the world. If there is any curtailment of the work of the health of animals branch I am afraid that when there is another outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the United States—because they seem to come quite frequently—it will come in this country as well. The value of live stock in Canada in 1929 was something between $800,000,000 and $900,000,000; to-day it is probably not more than half of that. The compensation being paid to-day is low compared with that of a few years ago, largely due to the activities of the health of animals branch. It is a very efficient department, and I hope that members of this house will not be carried away with the idea that there is any advantage in curtailing its support. It would be a disaster to Canada not to continue to guard against diseases of animals as we have in the past.

Mr. REID: I wonder if the minister has any information regarding research in the Fraser valley in connection with a disease peculiar to cows there, how far it has progressed and what has been done.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It has been demonstrated that it is not contagious. We have not been able to decide yet whether or not it is due to a deficiency in the food in certain areas.

Mr. REID: Then I want to refer to a disease of poultry that I believe should be investigated by the Department of Agriculture. As the minister well knows, British Columbia is peculiarly adapted for poultry raising. It is the only province, I believe, that has gone in for poultry in a specialized way. In other provinces poultry is a side line, but on the Pacific coast it is a highly specialized industry, particularly in the Fraser valley and on Vancouver island. We have been baffled there by a disease known as poultry paralysis, and it seems to me that the research work in that connection should be handled by the Department of Agriculture. In the past a little help in the way of money was given by the National Research Council to British Columbia university, and some work was done there in an attempt to find out more about this disease. No one knows its origin; they do not know whether or not it is contagious, but when it strikes a flock hundreds of fowls will die in a night. We heard in the early part of the evening discussions of a grant of $10,000 and of inspectors and professors being sent to various parts of the country conducting investigations about apples. But here is something affecting an industry in which thousands are engaged, hundreds in the Fraser valley alone, and we believe this should be under the Department of Agriculture and that an appropriation should be given to carry on this research work until the cause and cure of this disease are discovered. At present we have to go to the Department of Trade and Commerce and ask them to be good enough to put through a vote from the research council. I plead very seriously with the Minister of Agriculture to help this work, because it is very, very important to the poultry producers of British Columbia.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Some five or six years ago the British Columbia government through the university asked that the National Research Council undertake the investigation of this disease. Wishing to avoid duplication, our health of animals branch has not undertaken it. But I will take into consideration what the hon. member has said, although I do not yet very well see how we could interfere in work that they have specifically asked another organization to undertake.

Mr. REID: The reason I ask is that I believe for two years some financial help was given through the research council to the university, but it was stopped last fall. It was said that retrenchment was necessary and they felt they could not carry on any further. They also said that the research work had been carried out but no information had been obtained. I believe that is a very poor excuse, that just because no results had accrued they were stopping the work. I maintain that this work should be carried on by the health of animals branch. Surely there can be no conflict of jurisdiction in the matter of diseases of animals.

Mr. RHEAUME: Why has the minister reduced by $255,000 the estimate for health of animals?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was felt that there was sufficient to keep the staff occupied in such work as retests. It is the conduct of initial tests that really takes the money.

Mr. RHEAUME: Tests were made in 1930 in St. Johns-Iberville and in the constituency of Laprairie-Napierville and neighbouring districts. Why have no tests been made since 1930?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The size of staff has been the chief reason why we have not got at it. We are going at it this year, and also in other areas, especially where the first test had been very heavy. In one district, for example, the first test showed around forty per cent reactors, indicating that the disease was very prevalent, and we feel that that territory should be checked very closely. There are other territories where the initial tests showed a very small prevalence of the disease. That is the general policy of the branch as to the order in which they do these tests. But I am informed that St. Johns-Iberville is to be one of the first areas to be retested this year.

Mr. RHEAUME: I know there is a lot in Chambly-Vercheres, Laprairie-Napierville and Brome-Missisquoi. I do not know why the government spent so much money in 1928-30 and did not go round each year following. I think it is best to watch that test to get good results.

Mr. BRADETTE: Speaking of the tuberculin tests in northern Ontario for the last three years, the municipalities getting the milk from the farmers have been asking for the test, and as we do not belong to any federal zone it means that the tests are sometimes not very satisfactory to the settlers on account of the fact that the veterinarians are not under the jurisdiction of the federal government. It is true that the stock which is rejected could be sold to some packing house in Toronto, but I remember the case of my own brother who sent twelve head of cattle and received a cheque for fifty cents each, showing that it is an absolute loss to the settlers in our section. Of course the municipalities have a perfect right to a supply of milk free from tuberculosis, but the federal government, considering that they are not creating any new zones, should find it possible to have at least proper inspection. I refer to the fact that we have a certain doubt of the ability and capacity of some of the veterinarians coming out there. Some of them will say it is a simple test, but that does not satisfy the settlers unless they know he is a man officially appointed by the federal government. I believe this anomaly should be corrected now. If it is not possible for the government to establish these tuberculin zones, which I believe to be the solution of the problem, at least they should have one or two well qualified veterinaries who could be given certificates from the federal government conferring the right and power to make these tests. There is one man whose name I cannot remember at the moment who said he was fully qualified to do this work. I do not doubt his qualifications but his tests were not satisfactory to the people because he did not have a certificate from the federal government.

This is a very important matter to our section of the country. I know of one man who lost seventeen out of twenty-two animals in one examination, and that shows how far tuberculosis has spread in northern Ontario. When one remembers that the original settlers had to buy scrub stock from the older part of Ontario it will be seen why this is so, and this means so much to our settlers and to the milk supply of the centres of population such as Timmins, Kapuskasing, Cochrane, Kirkland Lake and so on, that I believe the federal government should take a hand. I repeat that I think the best solution would be the establishment of a zone embracing the whole of northern Ontario, but if that is not possible then it is the duty of the federal government to see that proper inspections are made.

Another anomaly, due to the fact that we are not in a tuberculin zone, is that the people who do not supply milk to the different centres of population need not have that inspection; it is optional. A herd which has been duly tested and weeded out may be contaminated by a neighbouring herd, so that it will be polluted again in a year or two; this has happened in several instances. It is the duty of the federal government to see that our section of the country, which is still in the pioneer stage as far as agriculture is concerned, gets proper inspection and that good herds are maintained. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will find it possible to say that this situation will be remedied as soon as possible.

Mr. WEIR Melfort): There is one step that can be taken other than the municipal testing plan; that is, if the municipalities would insist on receiving milk only from tested herds. I refer to the supervised herd plan. If the municipality passes a by-law insisting that only milk from tested herds will be accepted, any farmer wishing to supply milk can make application to the health of animals branch to have his herd tested under the supervised herd plan. At the present time that service is given free, and at the same time the farmer agrees to keep his herd from contact with other herds in order to prevent the spread of the disease.

Mr. BRADETTE: The minister knows it is absolutely impossible to prevent that contact during the summer months when the herds are in pasture.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In common pasture?

Mr. BRADETTE: We have no common pasture, but I believe the zone should be established because of that very fact. I might have my herd tested; if my neighbour does not have his herd tested there is bound to be contact during the summer months and probably I will sustain a heavy loss in a short period. That is why I believe it should be a general rule. The minister can readily understand that the by-laws of a municipality apply only within that municipality. If some municipality obtains its milk from surrounding townships, as is the case in Cochrane, they may get polluted milk under present conditions. I believe it is within the power of the federal government to create a general zone, at least as far as inspection is concerned, so that the people who have gone to the sacrifice and expense of weeding out their herds may have their stock protected to that extent.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like to revert to the question raised by the hon. member for Lisgar, the answer to which I did not interpret quite as he did. The minister was very explicit in denying certain alleged statements which appeared in the western press, but he was not so specific in assuring us that after all there was not something in this proposed merger of the live stock and health of animals branches. I felt that I could detect some reservation in his statement.

I was not quite satisfied with the answer given by the minister. We all know that the paper referred to was the Winnipeg Free Press and that the reporter and editor was Miss Cora Hind. These are two quite responsible authorities, especially the latter, on live stock and field agriculture. I am not so sure that it is enough merely to denounce the rumours and reports which appeared in that newspaper, without some further assurance than the minister has yet given. The minister said that possibly a closer cooperation between those two branches might be encouraged to advantage. At one time they were together, but in practice it was found that while both have to do with live stock they view that question from entirely different angles. From the standpoint of the live stock commissioner live stock has to do with the breed and breeding, the marketing, the conformation and so on, while from the standpoint of the veterinary director general live stock has to do with the health of animals, the wiping out and exclusion of contagious diseases and kindred problems. The veriest scrub animal, so long as it has horns, hoofs and tail, can carry disease just as easily as a good animal, and so I think these two branches are sufficiently dissimilar to be kept quite distinctively apart.

Perhaps I am a little suspicious in this matter; I have no occasion to feel that way as yet, because the minister has left the department pretty much as he found it. I have great respect for those who preceded me in the department, particularly the late Doctor Rutherford, who was regarded by all as an authority on live stock and who was a prominent veterinarian both nationally and internationally. But it does not follow that some of us may not be able to improve even on his administration. First, however, I want to understand just what is to be done by way of suggested improvement before I agree that there will be any improvement on Doctor Rutherford's work, and I have not seen that yet. Doctor Rutherford took the ground that these two branches should be kept apart. There is even a certain amount of friction between them, not of an unfriendly character, but for the very reason, as already intimated, that their points of view are entirely different. I have known them to take absolutely different views on a given case though they were not at all unfriendly to each other.

If the question of animal health or disease should be determined finally by the live stock commissioner, how would such a certificate be looked upon in other countries or even by live stock men of our own? The live stock commissioner is not a veterinary practitioner and does not pretend to be, although a good live stock man. He may be a first class man in other respects, but if he is to be the predominant figure in these two branches I say that we shall lose the standing which the health of animals branch now enjoys under the veterinary director general of Canada. The minister will possibly agree with that.

May I also say a word relative to what my hon. friend from Assiniboia mentioned about private practitioners. Why should the minister be so anxious about that? It would be nice to have a lot of private practitioners, but just now most farmers would take a chance doctoring their own animals rather than hunting up a veterinary and have him treat them and have to pay him. To employ a veterinary is undoubtedly the best practice as a general rule, but the thing is to pay for his services But that is not the point I wanted to discuss. How in the world is the federal department going to have control over private practitioners? It is sometimes hard enough now to discipline the men in the department, but how can you control private practitioners whom you are going to employ to do this, that and the other thing? That question has always been up. It is not a question of to-day or a question of yesterday; it has been a question ever since there was a branch, and the position always taken was that the only way we can control practitioners in the health of animals branch is to have them right in the employ of the department, giving their services to the state, and being amenable to discipline. After all, private practitioners are outside the purview and prerogative of the dominion. It is entirely a provincial matter. The practitioners get their certificates and degrees from the university of the province or from the organization to which they belong. In Saskatchewan it is the university that gives the degree, and the practitioner usually, but not always, practises in the province where he got his degree. It is purely a provincial matter, and while we are all interested in it as citizens of Canada, we have no particular need to worry about it when we are discussing these federal estimates. As a matter of fact, it has always been a great incentive to private practitioners so to perfect themselves in their own business that they may qualify themselves to graduate into the federal arena and into federal employment. It is a prospect to which nearly all of them look forward, just as the average lawyer looks forward some day, as I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, to gracing the woolsack, and in the process he becomes a better lawyer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was pretty nearly through, but I want to hear more from the minister. It is almost eleven o'clock and perhaps he prefers to defer his answer to another time. With regard to his policy, he is on safe ground if he leaves it just the way it is.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I doubt if I can make it any clearer than I did. One hon. gentleman opposite has made it very clear that the work of the health of animals branch is perfect now and that it could not be improved by any change.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Which one was that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because he misunderstood the minister.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, he made that definite statement regarding the health of animals branch, and the hon. member for Melville, if I remember correctly, stated that there should be some improvement along with the general advance upon scientific lines.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I agree with that.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The statement I made I think was perfectly clear, that the heads of the two branches, together with the deputy and their assistants and myself, have gone into this thing very fully with a view to seeing in what respect we can amalgamate certain branches of the work without any loss of efficiency, and whatever steps are taken will be taken with this thought in mind, not in any way to decrease the value of the health of animals branch, but if possible to make it even more efficient by an amalgamation of the services and by frank discussions between the heads of branches.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If there is going to be any form of amalgamation it will decrease the efficiency, because the health of animals branch enjoys in a peculiar degree not only the confidence of our own people but of other countries as well. It is internationally known, and if you merge it with something else presided over by a layman it is going to lose its present standing in other countries.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): There seems to be a slight misunderstanding between some of my colleagues and myself with regard to just what the minister did say in his first statement, and he has not clarified it in the statement he has just made, particularly when he said that the health of animals branch was now under the control of a layman. Has the government in its mind the idea of putting a layman at the head of the health of animals branch? That is what we would like to know. If such is the case, I do not believe the people of western Canada will stand for it.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I made it as clear as I possibly could, so far as my command of simple English goes, that the report which I read in one of the western papers—I am not sure whether it was the Winnipeg Free Press or not—stated that the specialists at the head of the divisions of the branch and the head of the branch itself were to be replaced by laymen. Nothing could be more ridiculous than such a statement, so far as any of the work or plans of the Department of Agriculture are concerned. What I did say was this, that the health of animals branch has been under a layman in the person of the deputy minister and the minister for ten or twelve years, and that the veterinary director general never had a free hand without the direction of the minister as to what work he should undertake. But no person ever considered having a layman do the work of a scientific man.

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, Le Journal of Quebec, on March 31, 1933, published the following article:

Mr. Bennett disapproves of all attacks on priests.

The extreme liberalism of Mr. Pouliot does not meet with the approval of the Prime Minister—a typical incident.

Ottawa, March 31.—(From the correspondent of Le Journal).—Mr. Bennett does not intend to allow Catholic priests to be attacked with impunity in the house. Mr. J. F. Pouliot, Liberal member for Témiscouata, was made aware of this fact at Monday's sitting, March 20.

Mr. Pouliot was criticizing, unreservedly, colonization in Quebec. He was speaking French and was unaware that the Prime Minister, Mr. Bennett was closely following his remarks.

In his attack against the Rev. Mr. G. M. Bilodeau, missionary agent of colonization, Mr. Pouliot went so far as to state: "I sent him something small so that it would be on a level with him."

[Mr. R. McKenzie.]

Mr. Bennett who until then had been following Mr. Pouliot's remarks, without interrupting him, could not help interjecting: "That is Liberalism at its best."

It is the first time, we think, that a Catholic member has thus attacked a priest, in the house. Therefore the hon. Mr. Bennett who was able to follow the whole of Mr. Pouliot's French speech . . .

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the hon. member to cease reading a long article. If he has a point to make let him state it to the house.

Mr. POULIOT: There are two or three more lines, and it must be quoted in full. I do not wish to impose on the house but it is essential that I read all that is said.

(Translation):

Therefore the hon. Mr. Bennett who was able to follow the whole of Mr. Pouliot's French speech did not miss the opportunity of pointing out to him that by thus attacking priests he was acting as a true Liberal.

Then follows a Hansard quotation.

And Mr. Pouliot, after this rebuff, continued his speech on a more respectful tone.

I have written what I have to say because I do not wish to overstep the limit.

If the correspondent of Le Journal had been fairminded enough not to detach an excerpt of Hansard of March 20, and separate it from the context, giving it a wrong meaning, the subscribers to that newspaper would have seen that I established an essential and very clear distinction, often repeated, between missionaries, properly speaking, and employees, and, it is simply of the employee to whom reference is made.

God forbid that anybody should attack, in the house, the sacred character of the priest . . .

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a sentence or two.

God forbid...

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the open defiance of the chair by the hon. gentleman it seems to me is something that should not be tolerated by this chamber. He was called to order, he said he had a few more lines to read, he has been reading several paragraphs, he is now called to order again and he repeats it. I thought it was a well understood rule in this house that articles in newspapers were not to be read unless they reflected on the conduct of the member in respect to particular legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It did.

Mr. BENNETT: I followed it.

Mr. POULIOT: I have been dirtily attacked. Would I have no right of defence?

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member to take exception to an article in regard to his own action in the house. But having done that, he is now reading his own explanation. I ask him to make it as brief as possible.

Mr. POULIOT: (Translation): God forbid that anybody should attack, in the house, the sacred character of the priest; should unfortunately the thing happen, I shall be the first to espouse his cause, as I have already proven it.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. GORDON: I desire to lay upon the table of the house orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGES IN PERSONNEL OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Young be substituted for that of Mr. Butcher on the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and that the name of Mr. Butcher be substituted for that of Mr. Young on the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

Motion agreed to.

CHIGNECTO CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion). Last session I placed a question on the order paper with regard to the report of the commission investigating the possibilities of the Chignecto canal. I should like to ask the minister if this report has been received and whether it will be tabled during this session.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The report has not been received.

TRAWLER LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): On Friday last my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) asked whether I was prepared to make an announcement of the government policy with regard to the licensing of steam trawlers for the coming fiscal year, and my answer was that I hoped to be in a position to make a statement to-day. That statement was prepared, but at the last minute new facts came to the attention of the government with respect to existing contracts which the trawler companies must fill for the supply of fish during the lenten season, so I must postpone my statement until to-morrow.

JUDGE RUTHERFORD

BAN PLACED BY RADIO COMMISSION ON SPEECHES THROUGH CANADIAN STATIONS

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): On Friday last the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) asked a question with regard to the measure of responsibility the government must assume in connection with the ruling of the radio broadcasting commission concerning Judge Rutherford's speeches. I have received a statement from the radio commission in this connection which reads as follows:

Many complaints were received by the radio broadcasting commission regarding the abusive and mischievous character of the speeches of Judge Rutherford being broadcast in Canada, but the commission took no action until it had obtained a copy of advertising literature issued by Rutherford's organization in Canada, The Watch Tower, 40 Irwin Avenue, Toronto, containing quotations from these speeches. With this evidence before it the commission, on January 18th, instructed Canadian broadcasting stations that the Rutherford speeches must not be broadcast until the continuity of records of the same had been submitted to the commission for approval. The commission learned that the Rutherford broadcasts were in the form of gramophone records manufactured in the United States, and that time for their use on the air had been purchased from twenty-five Canadian stations by the organization representing Rutherford in Canada. As Rutherford lived in the United States and did not deliver his speeches in person in Canada he could not be made amenable to Canadian laws, and the only control that could be exercised in this country was in regard to the broadcasting of his gramophone records.

Anxious that it should be clear there was no intention of interfering with the legitimate exercise of free speech the commission requested the representative of the International Bible Students, the organization sponsoring Rutherford in Canada, to submit the records of the Rutherford speeches, together with the texts on which they were based. This request was not complied with, and the only response was the wide distribution of printed literature in Canada attacking the commission and religious institutions and clergy, in which the chairman of the commission was described as liar, theif, Judas and polecat, and therefore fit to associate only with the clergy.

In order not to interfere with the legitimate operations of the International Bible Students the commission authorized the broadcasting stations to allow that organization to substitute its own speakers in Canada for the gramophone records of Rutherford's speeches.

Letters have been received by the commission from clergy of the majority of religious denominations in Canada commending its course in the Rutherford matter. Owing to popular indignation in the United States at the nature of his speeches, Rutherford has been denied the use of the great networks of the large broadcasting organizations in that country.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the measure of responsibility assumed by the government in this matter, parliament gave full authority and responsibility to the radio broadcasting commission. I would refer my hon. friend to the bill adopted last session, which is chapter 51 of the statutes of 1932.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I thank the minister for this statement; I think it will go a long way in giving the people of Canada a better understanding of the actual situation.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROSS W. GRAY (West Lambton): I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) whether or not the special committee on railways and shipping will sit this session.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I have not given the matter very serious consideration up to the moment, but I think the special committee will have to sit to deal with the estimates of the Canadian National Railways. The point I made some time ago was that in all probability, since we are carrying out the recommendations contained in the Duff report, we would not call the officers of the railway before that committee but that we might call some of the directors instead. That was the recommendation of the commission. I think the committee will sit in the near future.

SARNIA-PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

The house resumed from Friday, March 31, consideration of Bill No. 41, to incorporate the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company—Mr. Gray—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 2—Declaratory.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the government has some responsibility with regard to all legislation introduced and passed in the house. I am having a report prepared with respect to this bill, and until that report is completed I think the bill should stand.

I wonder if the members of the committee have looked at the bill; I wonder if they have examined it and really understand what it means. If the congress of the United States approves, this bill can become operative. Perhaps this is out of order, the principle of the bill having been dealt with on the second reading, but the congress of the United States must approve before it becomes operative. The sum of $25,000 is to be lodged with the government. There are no par value shares. The shares may be issued for such compensation as the directors by bylaw may fix, and they are authorized to issue bonds for $5,000,000.

We have already had one experience in Canada with respect to bonds issued by one such venture, and we know with what sad result to the investors. Having any responsibility at all for the investing public, I cannot observe the passage of a bill such as this without taking some steps to afford some protection to those who may be induced to put their money into the venture, and under the circumstances, until I obtain a report from the law officers, I would ask that further consideration of the bill be deferred, rather than move that the committee rise. I merely move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. GRAY: While I am agreeable to what the Prime Minister has said, to let the bill stand, can he give me any definite time as to when it can come up again—to-morrow night when private bills are under consideration?

Mr. BENNETT: This bill is of such far-reaching consequences, and its provisions are so extraordinary when applied to present day conditions, in view of what we know has happened in connection with two ventures incorporated by this parliament, that I should not think those who are preparing the report in the department will have completed their work by to-morrow night. On Friday night, however, there is no reason why it should not be considered. Both the Department of Justice and the Department of External Affairs will consider the bill in view of its international character and the fact that the construction of the works authorized is entirely dependent upon action that may be taken by congress. That is the purely external side of the matter, but the financial side is quite serious. The construction of the works does not depend merely upon action that may be taken by this parliament; it may depend upon action taken by the congress of the United States. By section 14:

The company shall not commence the actual construction of the said subways or tunnels until permitted by the congress of the United States of America. . . .

It is rather odd that the commencement of a tunnel on Canadian territory should be made subject to the permission of the congress of the United States.

Mr. GRAY: I will speak of that.

Mr. BENNETT: However, that is a matter to be dealt with by the Department of External Affairs. The legal phase of the bill and the financial structure will be dealt with by other departments, and by Friday next, when private bills are reached, I am quite certain that the report will be completed.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CALL LOANS AND COMMERCIAL LOANS

Mr. GIROUARD:

What was the amount of call loans and commercial loans made outside of Canada by the chartered banks of Canada in 1932?

Mr. RHODES: The monthly return of the chartered banks as of December 31, 1932, gives the following totals of loans and deposits outside of Canada: call and short (not exceeding thirty days) loans elsewhere than in Canada on stocks, debentures, bonds, and other securities of a sufficient marketable value to cover, $91,491,603; other current loans and discounts elsewhere than in Canada after making full provision for bad and doubtful debts, $151,661,262; deposits elsewhere than in Canada, $328,725,094.

SMELT FISHING

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Did the Department of Fisheries receive a complaint about the alleged illegal smelt fishing on the Quebec side of the Restigouche river in 1933?
2. If so, who made the complaint and what were the allegations?
3. Did the Department of Fisheries send a telegram to J. E. Johnson, fishery officer at Campbellton, New Brunswick, instructing him to stop Quebec fishermen from shipping smelts from New Brunswick points, unless they had a permit from the fishery officer in Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1 and 2. The department was informed by W. S. Montgomery, of Dalhousie, N.B., that it was reported that there was an extension of the season on the Quebec side and that the fish were being marketed through Campbellton.

3. A telegram was sent to Inspector J. E. Fournier, of Campbellton, informing him of the above and instructing him to see that no illegal fish were disposed of in his district.

WAR PENSION EXPENDITURE

Mr. SPEAKMAN:

By what sum would our war pension expenditure have been reduced for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932, had all war disability pensions been paid at the same rating as that applied in the case of privates, non-commissioned officers, warrant officers and lieutenants?

Mr. MacLAREN:

Estimated amount $125,000.

CIVIL SERVICE PERMANENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. MacLEAN:

1. How many persons permanently employed in the civil service of Canada are sixty-five years of age and over?
2. What was the total salary of such employees for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1933?
3. How many of said employees are paying into any one of the several superannuation funds?
4. How many pay into the retirement fund?
5. How many permanent civil servants are sixty years of age but not over sixty-five?
6. What was the total salary of said employees for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1933?
7. How many between the ages of sixty and sixty-five are paying into any one of the several superannuation funds?
8. How many pay into the retirement fund?

Mr. BENNETT: It will require months to prepare the answer to this question. I cannot think that the hon. gentleman realizes the full significance of checking over the age of every employee of the Dominion of Canada. It is a question that will involve the services of many people for months. If it is a matter of aiding unemployment that the hon. gentleman has in mind, it may accomplish something, but the question should stand for the moment until he has had an opportunity of looking into it further.

Mr. MacLEAN: I thought that these tables were all on hand in the department.

Mr. BENNETT: No, they are not all on hand in the department.

Question stands.

For a copy of the reports furnished by the persons who inspected the dredging work done at Deschaillons during the months of August and September, 1932.

PUBLIC WORKS PAY LISTS

Mr. BRASSET:

For a copy of Department of Public Works pay lists respecting works carried out by the said department at Grande Entree, Magdalen islands, since August 1, 1930.

PETITE RIVIÈRE AU RENARD PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. BRASSET:

PROPOSED STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

For a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, telegrams and other documents received by the government or any officers thereof, with respect to the establishment of the stabilization fund announced by the Minister of Finance in his recent budget.

Mr. RHODES: If this motion were taken literally it would involve a tremendous amount of work; it would involve the conning of correspondence in the office of every minister of the crown. Has the hon. member in mind a request for every letter, telegram and communication received and being received from day to day?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will indicate what I have in mind and if my present motion is not proper, I shall be glad to amend it. My motion reads:

For a copy of all correspondence, memoranda, telegrams and other documents received by the government or any officers thereof, with respect to the establishment of the stabilization fund announced by the Minister of Finance in his recent budget.

This would be correspondence received prior to the establishment of the fund, and I would amend my motion by adding after the word "received" the words "prior to Tuesday, March 21, 1933." I could either drop my motion and redraft it or the government could accept my interpretation.

Mr. RHODES: It would be agreeable if the motion were amended as suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure my hon. friend realizes that the difficulty is that since September, 1931, every minister has been receiving correspondence with respect to the effect upon business of a depreciated exchange. This action is the result of the accumulative effect of all that correspondence. In my office alone there must be thousands of letters and it would be most difficult to trace them. If the correspondence being asked for is that relating to the fund as such, then there could be no objection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I want to be accommodating and not cause unnecessary work and perhaps the better way would be to withdraw my motion.

Motion withdrawn.

TIMOTHY SEED—VALUATION FOR DUTY

Mr. BRASSET (for Mr. Rhéaume):

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams, and other documents in possession of the government with reference to order in council (P.C. 420) passed under section 43 of the Customs Act, in which the value for duty purposes of Timothy seed was fixed at a minimum value of 6 cents per pound in Canadian funds, together with a copy of said order in council and all rules and regulations and instructions issued thereunder and the correspondence if any received by the government since the adoption of the said order in council.

Mr. RYCKMAN: There is no objection to this motion if it is accepted with the usual reservation as to confidential correspondence.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTATIONS OF FUEL OIL AND COAL

Mr. NEILL:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, orders in council and other documents exchanged between any member of the government, or departmental official, and any other individual, corporation or association, since September 1, 1930, relating to the following subjects: (a) duty on fuel oil imported into Canada; (b) bonus, subsidy or subvention on the production of coal from the coal mines of Vancouver island, British Columbia; (c) importation of British coal into British Columbia, and steps to deal with the situation thereby created; (d) proposed sale or leasing of the Canadian National railway docks at Vancouver.

Mr. RYCKMAN: So far as this motion relates to the Department of National Revenue, there is no objection provided it is accepted with the usual reservation as to confidential correspondence.

Mr. BENNETT: I would direct attention to the fact that a compliance literally with this motion would impose upon the clerical staffs responsible for the production of documents a burden which cannot be overstated in words. It would necessitate the searching of the files in all departments for the purpose of obtaining letters relating to the duty on fuel oil imported into Canada, the prevention of British coal coming into British Columbia, and other matters. This would impose an almost intolerable burden upon the staffs and the return could not be completed for weeks or months.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps the first part of the motion could be amended by substituting the words "British Columbia" for the word "Canada." That would narrow down immensely that part of the motion. It will be noted that the other questions are limited to British Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT: The work will be the same.

Mr. NEILL: I move that the word "Canada" in the fifth line be struck out and the words "British Columbia" substituted therefor.

Motion as amended agreed to.

EASTER RECESS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Thursday, the 13th of April, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 18th of April, 1933.

He said: I may say that in preparing this motion the government was acting upon the apparent general approval of the house which was voiced the other day. The government has no hard and fast idea in proposing this motion and I should be glad to have any suggestions the house desires to make as to whether or not these dates should be adhered to.

Mr. MARCIL: Quite often the house has adjourned at six o'clock on Wednesday evening in holy week.

Mr. BENNETT: I made inquiries with respect to that and I was told that Thursday was a day upon which we might work, that it was not a day of obligation. I am entirely in the hands of the house with respect to the matter.

Mr. MARCIL: It is not a day of obligation.

Mr. DUFF: I would not mind if the house sat on Sunday.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PAYMENTS BY PROVINCES—DISPOSITION OF EXTRA EARNINGS—PENSIONS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 58, to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I find that I was in error in making a statement during the discussion of the resolution upon which this bill was founded. This statement was in connection with the estimates for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and after going over the matter with the commissioner of the force I find that while the item on page 49 of the estimates of $5,615,595.75 represents as far as it is possible to estimate what will be actually expended upon the force during the current year, there is a clause in the bill which provides that the payments made into the consolidated revenue fund by the provinces may be utilized from time to time by the police force as they may be required. This is intended more as an emergency provision than otherwise. Last year the vote fell short of meeting the needs of the force because of the fact that some three hundred additional recruits had to be taken on last autumn. Consequently, in the supplementary estimates we asked for an allowance of the money which had been paid into the consolidated revenue fund by the provinces, and this was granted. The explanatory note to section 1 reads:

The purpose of the amendment is to empower the governor in council, in case of emergency or other special circumstances, to authorize the utilization of the moneys in question for the use of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

It is hoped that the vote asked for in the present estimates will be sufficient for all purposes, but without desiring to be an alarmist, I must inform the house that in the opinion of the commissioner, the situation existing at the moment in various parts of Canada with regard to communistic activities is not at all satisfactory. These activities have not been lessened during recent months. I regret to say that we have information that the communist party in all its ramifications in various parts of Canada is perhaps more active and dangerous to-day than it has been at any time in recent years. Developments have taken place in the far west on the Pacific coast, throughout the prairie provinces, in Ontario, and very recently in Quebec, which may call for some further increase in the force in case anything like an actual outbreak occurs. As I say, I do not wish to be an alarmist in regard to such matters, but it is always well to be prepared and the officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have informed me that they have made certain preparations to deal with situations that may arise. It is true that in British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force can act only when its services are requested by the municipal police or by the authorities of a province, but it is at all times in the closest cooperation with the municipal and provincial police forces and ready to offer its services should they be required. Should an increase become necessary on account of any conditions which may arise in any part of Canada during the next twelve months, there would not be enough money in the present vote to meet any emergent situation. It is for that reason power is asked in clause one of this bill to give to his excellency the governor in council authority to advance such sums as may be necessary out of the moneys paid for police services by the six provinces which have entered into agreements with the Dominion government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the money be in the consolidated revenue fund?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The money when paid by the provinces goes into the consolidated revenue fund. The commissioner is still hopeful and I am hopeful too that it will not be necessary to ask for further grants, but we cannot tell from week to week or perhaps from day to day what may arise. Threats of a very serious nature come to us. To-day some very serious ones came to hand and it might become necessary to increase the force temporarily. For that reason this special power is asked to utilize moneys that come into the treasury in payment of the services of the mounted police in the six provinces.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has just said might have a little more force were it not for the fact that only a few days ago the government obtained from this house authority, under a clause relating to peace, order and good government, to take any measures that they deemed necessary, and were provided with all the funds required by having voted a blank cheque from which they could draw for that purpose. Surely there must be some place at which the line is to be drawn. As long as under existing legislation the government has power sufficient to enable it to get additional moneys to meet any situation at a time when there may be reason for action of the kind, we certainly, if that power exists, should not grant in reference to this particular force, further power that will extend for all time. The minister might well at all events, so far as this year is concerned, so long as the government has the general powers to which I have referred, refrain from asking parliament to give it further power for meeting emergent conditions.

May I also say to the Minister of Justice that it is really important at times like this that we should have before us as complete a statement as is possible of the expenses of a force like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which is a semi-military force, and that those expenses should be provided for in exactly the same manner as is the case with all other expenses of the services of Canada. The government can ask for whatever sums it feels are necessary and that amount can be voted out of the consolidated revenue fund in the regular way. I do not think any exception will be taken to the amount the government may regard as necessary to meet conditions as they exist, but it would be a misfortune if, in addition to what is voted by parliament for the mounted police in the regular way, there should be in concealment somewhere, because that is what it will be, an additional fund which the police themselves, without any prior knowledge on the part of parliament, can draw upon for purposes they may deem necessary. As the minister has just said, the moneys from the provinces go into the consolidated revenue fund in any case and it is out of this fund that parliament gives the government authority to draw whatever sum is necessary. Therefore, unless there is some desire to conceal part of the expenditure of the force, I cannot see that this part of the bill is needed at all. I must say I was glad that the minister mentioned at the outset that he was mistaken last week, because at that time even he, when we were discussing this matter, expressed surprise at the representation that these moneys were desired as being in addition to sums which would already have been voted by parliament under the specific appropriation for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. For this year at all events and, indeed, for all time, we ought to avoid this method of procedure which is a departure from the general principle of appropriating public moneys and of giving parliament the control which should be exercised by it over such expenditures. The course proposed will cause confusion in appropriations, and it will be a handicap in auditing. Certainly in regard to any force that is in the nature of a quasi-military one, there is a double reason why parliamentary control should be as complete and authoritative as possible.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support what my leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) has just said. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has given as a justification for this part of the bill the statement that there is an emergency.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No; that there may be.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why should we have permanent legislation to deal with what is an abnormal situation while the government has already all the power necessary to deal with that emergency? The emergency will disappear, as we all hope, and then there will be left on the statute books this permanent legislation which is absolutely not in conformity with the usual rules of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) mentioned conditions in certain parts of the dominion as a reason for giving the government the power necessary to deal with the situation. During the last three years we have been pointing out to the house that these conditions would arise and suggesting that something should be done to meet them. I am convinced that we cannot meet this situation simply by increasing the military or police force of the country. A few days ago, in connection with the Unemployment and Farm Relief Bill, the direct relief, which is the only way in which the government intends to deal with that situation, was limited to a certain sum. Now we have a bill giving the government unlimited powers in regard to repressive measures that may be taken in meeting any situation that may arise on account of the difficulties in which the people find themselves. The house should insist that the government take some other means of dealing with economic conditions in this country than by increasing the military and police forces. This is no way to handle the situation which is confronting us and, if we continue it, the result will be disaster.

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski): Over and above what my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) have said, I wonder if the minister has given any thought to the fact that this legislation is creating a precedent for all departments because it is of a permanent nature. I well remember that in days past numerous deputations were received by deputy ministers and ministers of the crown trying to persuade the government to allow different departments to take out of consolidated revenue fund whatever moneys might have been credited by that department to the credit of the receiver general. Here we are creating a precedent for which I think there is no real reason. I think the minister and the government have sufficient power now under the relief bill to do all that they intend to do for the present year by this act, and I think that the minister and the government should pause before giving such extraordinary power to one department in a situation which is of a temporary character.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, on division, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay) in the chair.

On section 1—Arrangements with local governments for the use of the force.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have listened with great interest to the criticism offered by my right hon. friend and the member for Quebec East in regard to this section. When this bill was drafted, the peace, order and good government clause in the relief bill had not been proposed to the house. Now that it has been drawn to my attention that that clause does exist in the relief bill which has now been passed, I think perhaps that does obviate the necessity for this particular clause being put in this bill. The objection that this would be a permanent clause I think is a substantial one, but I should like clause 1 to stand for a short time until I have had an opportunity of consulting with one or two of my friends. My present view, however, is that under the circumstances it might be dropped.

Section 1 stands.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Punishment of offences by non-commissioned officers and constables.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The former law by subsection 2 of section 31 provided for the reduction in rank of a non-commissioned officer who had been guilty of some offence, but it did not apply to constables. I am informed that we have three grades of constables, grade A, B and C, and the commissioner desires to make this clause apply to constables so that if a constable of grade A, for instance, has been found guilty of some offence he may be reduced. As the law now stands he could not be reduced. That is the only change.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Time served in South Africa may be included.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): If the government should find it necessary to increase the force, is there any body of men from which additional members could be recruited?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The officers are not recruited; they are promoted after they have been trained in the service. The recruiting of the force is done in the various district headquarters on application of the individual concerned to the officer in command at the nearest headquarters. The applicant is there examined, the examination being a severe one, and if the applicant proves suitable he is accepted for a period of training, the training taking place at Regina.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the age limit?

Mr. GUTHRIE: From 22 up to 28 years of age.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Suppose a few hundred more men were required at a moment's notice, how would they be recruited?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have at the present time a very long list of accepted applicants, some three or four hundred, and the recruits would be taken in the first instance from those already accepted.

Mr. MARCIL: I think it is only right that I should call to the minister's attention that in my view the constables on duty in the province of Quebec should be bilingual. Some of them operate in purely French districts, and it would be advisable to have them speak both languages.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Some time ago I submitted a list which appears on Hansard of the members of the force who are stationed in Quebec, and with one or two exceptions they are all French-Canadians. If they are not French-Canadians they are bilingual.

Mr. McINTOSH: Suppose you wanted a certain number of men in a particular province; would the applications from that particular province receive the preference?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would depend on how quickly we wanted the men. We would take them from the nearest point I would assume, but in every province and district there is a long waiting list so it would not be very difficult to secure men.

Mr. McINTOSH: Subsection 7 of section 6 provides that time served in South Africa may be included. Does that refer to both active and non-active members of the force, or only to the active members?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Just to the active members. I am told it applies to only a very few men.

Mr. McINTOSH: It rules out those who served in South Africa and who are not now members of the force?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Those who have retired on pension and are already out of the force would be ruled out.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Time served in South Africa may be included.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the total number of the members of the force at the present time?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can give the figures as of the first of October last, and I do not think it has varied much since then. On the first of October last the number was 2,348, which includes the preventive service.

Mr. HEAPS: What number of preventive service men?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The number of the preventive service men that we took over at the time of the amalgamation was 350. I think the number has increased a little since then.

Mr. EULER: Are they maintained as a distinct body, that is distinct from the rest of the mounted police?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are members of the police force, in every way subject to the discipline of the force, but they are employed on that preventive service work to a very large extent. Some have been transferred to other places, but I think ninety per cent of them are still engaged in that work either on land or sea.

Mr. EULER: Are they in any way under the control of the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, they are entirely under the officers of the police.

Mr. McINTOSH: Could the minister give the percentage of increase in the force during the past year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think I can give the actual figures of increase. The actual increase including the customs service last year was 979 men. That includes the men taken on the forces of the various provinces.

Mr. POWER: What is the total now?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is 2,348.

Mr. POWER: Could the minister tell the number of men in the force in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932?

Mr. GUTHRIE: In 1930 it was 1,245; in 1931, 1,351; and in 1932, 2,348.

The following were the increases:

Engaged constables on the five year term (western territory, formerly provincial)	294
Alberta provincial police, three year term.	135
Alberta provincial police, one year term.	15
Manitoba provincial police, five year term	5
Manitoba provincial police, three year term	55
Manitoba provincial police, one year term	11
New Brunswick provincial police, three year term	32
New Brunswick provincial police, one year term	18
New Brunswick provincial police, six months	1
Nova Scotia provincial police, three year term	52
Nova Scotia provincial police, one year term	38
Prince Edward Island provincial police.	8
Preventive service, one year term	147
Preventive service, six months	28
Reengaged after leaving	58
Rejoined after desertion	2
Engaged special constables	277
	1,176
Discharged through death or expiration of service	197
Net total	979

That is found at page seven of the commissioner's report.

Mr. POWER: Is there a system of yearly re-engagement for those employed in the provincial service? Are they re-attested so to speak at the end of every year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, they are engaged for definite periods, three and five years.

Mr. POWER: In the preventive service also?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Do the constables serving in the province of Quebec remain under the control of the department as well?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Nominally they are under the control of the Department of Justice, but actually under control of the officers of the force.

Mr. MARCIL: Are there any under the control of the Department of Inland Revenue?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, none at all.

Mr. MARCIL: They are doing preventive work for that department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are doing it for that department but under control of the mounted police.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister gave the total as 2,348 but I find that on the 30th of March when the resolution was being discussed in committee the number was given as 2,402 of other ranks and 98 officers, making exactly 2,500.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The figures I give this afternoon are up to date.

Mr. EULER: Is that portion of the preventive service that serves on the water, say in the gulf of St. Lawrence, also under the mounted police?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, that is under the mounted police also. We have 101 vessels of various kinds including power boats, seagoing and inland. These are manned by men under the mounted police.

Mr. HEAPS: Can the minister give us the cost of the mounted police service for the last fiscal year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The cost per man over all, that is including all branches of the service, officers and constables, is $2,250 each, that is the average. In the Hansard report of my remarks last week they had it as $2,500, or the newspapers had.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Hansard has it correctly, at page 3541.

Mr. HEAPS: What was the total spent in the fiscal year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think we spent all of last year's estimate, which was $5,569,819 and an additional supplementary vote which was passed last month, I think $375 or $350.

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I ask the minister if the men belonging to the customs service have been taken on on probation for six months or a year and if they are going to be re-engaged for the full period of time covered by the regulation?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, some men have been taken on practically on trial. There were some 600 or 700 men in the preventive service in the customs, a selection was made according to merit, I understand, by the officers of the customs department, and from the lists supplied 350 were permanently taken on. A small number I think were taken on on probation for short terms.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to say a word on this question. It appears that we are spending about $5,500,000 in providing a police force for the Dominion of Canada on account of the economic conditions that prevail at the present time in many parts of the dominion. Of this $5,500,000 the major part is spent on that part of the force which is engaged, not in what you might call customs preventive work but in maintaining what is commonly termed law and order. The Minister of Justice in his remarks on the second reading spoke of danger from the activities of the communist party in Canada. I am inclined to think that we overdo this alleged danger. We find at the present time throughout Canada a great amount of dissatisfaction and unrest, not on account of the communist party but on account of the vast amount of unemployment that prevails in the dominion. I am quite satisfied that if we had not so much unemployment there would be no need for the increase in police and this large expenditure for that purpose. Instead of spending about $5,500,000 for the mounted police force to preserve law and order in this country I wish we would spend even a small part of that money in trying to find ways to eliminate unemployment in our midst. If we did we could very well save a large part of this expenditure. I am quite satisfied that there is not much spread of what you might call communism in the dominion. But in any industrial centre in Canada you find great numbers of people unemployed. Where you have vast numbers of men and women out of work you are bound to have dissatisfaction. There are at the present time about 1,000,000 people out of work. When you have one-third of the employable population unemployed you naturally have dissatisfaction. So while I presume the government think this sum is necessary to take care of the situation, for my own part I wish they would try to deal with unemployment in a more fundamental way than they are doing at present. If they did there would be no need to spend these very great sums of money.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is this to be pointed out—perhaps it has not come to the attention of my hon. friend—that we have now in the customs branch of the mounted police a total of 542 men. On land we employ 350 and on the sea 192. The cost of that branch of the service is $1,504,104. That money was formerly expended, and a considerable sum more, by the customs department. Now it has been taken over by the mounted police and has increased the mounted police vote by that amount. It must also be remembered that we now have taken over the police work of six of the provinces. They pay us about $800,000 for that service and we pay the rest ourselves. That is an addition to the mounted police vote which did not exist in previous years. It is not fair to charge this all to mounted police work. That work has been done for the last thirty years by the provincial governments, who maintained provincial police forces. Now we have taken over that work, and as a result we have had to increase the mounted police vote and the personnel of the force very greatly.

Mr. HEAPS: Could the minister give the committee the net increase in the force so far as the Dominion government is concerned?

Mr. GUTHRIE: About 300.

Section agreed to.

On section 1—Arrangement with local governments.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is the only section remaining, and I am going to move that it be struck out. I believe I will do better to adopt the principle laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite and, instead of having a continuous measure, take advantage of the section in the relief bill which provides for peace, order and good government, should the occasion arise. Therefore I move that section 1 be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIALS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 59, to amend the Penitentiary Act.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I did not take part in the debate on the resolution which preceded this bill, Mr. Speaker, because I am largely in sympathy with the object which it seeks to attain. There are one or two clauses in the bill, however, to which I think I must register my dissent, and of course I could not foresee those when the resolution was before the house.

With regard to the appointment of wardens, deputy wardens and guards, I must confess that I have always held the opinion that such appointments should not be made by the Civil Service Commission. Speaking in this house in 1925, as will be found at page 1284 of Hansard for that year, I said:

> I am responsible for what happens in the penitentiaries of Canada at the present time. I am responsible if there are evasions; I am responsible if there is a rebellion in a penitentiary anywhere; and I think it is not fair that the wardens and the deputy wardens, the main officers, and even the guards in the penitentiaries, should be selected under a system of competitive examination. It is absurd. I think that penitentiary work should be compared with the work of the mounted police or even of the militia. In the penitentiary the work that is to be done by the guards, and very often their lives are in jeopardy, depends for its success more on the character and the temperament of the man than on what they may happen to know about geography or arithmetic or anything else. This conviction I have formed during the year and a half in which I have been at the head of the administration of the Department of Justice. I believe in control by the Civil Service Commission when it is a case of appointments in connection with ordinary departmental work, but I do not think they are qualified to select the men to conduct the penitentiaries.

I am still of this opinion, and I am quite willing to support that part of the bill which gives to the governor in council or to the minister the responsibility for the appointment of the wardens and guards for the reasons I expressed at that time. This bill, however, goes much further; under section 2 even the clerks and employees in the penitentiaries branch of the department will be removed from the control of the Civil Service Commission. They are to be appointed and their salaries are to be fixed by the governor in council, without regard to the classification of the Civil Service Commission, to which the civil servants in all the other departments are subject. I do not see any reason why the stenographers, clerks or other employees in the department here in Ottawa should be considered in the same category as wardens or guards who have to deal with the inmates of the penitentiaries. This is removing from the operation of the Civil Service Act a class of employees who certainly should remain under it.

When we were considering amendments to the Civil Service Act last year I remember that the report of the committee contained a recommendation to the effect that there should be a standing parliamentary committee on civil service, to deal with all civil service matters and with such changes as are suggested by the present bill. I do not understand why this recommendation has not been acted upon and why this proposal was not submitted to such a committee before being submitted to the house. I would ask my hon. friend not to persist in his intention to take away from the control of the Civil Service Act the ordinary employees of the penitentiaries branch. So far as the rest of the bill is concerned I am quite ready to support him.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): In connection with this bill I pointed out a year ago, and I also sent to the committee considering the matter a communication to the effect, that these appointments were not being made by the Civil Service Commission. The names of fifty per cent of the guards at Portsmouth penitentiary have never been submitted to the Civil Service Commission, and those that have been submitted have always been on the recommendation of the warden. No matter what objection is made to my statement, I know what I am talking about, and I know that these guards had to see the warden to have his approval, they had to have their examination, and then they were submitted by the warden to the superintendent. I will admit that many of them were pigeonholed at the time and never reached the Civil Service Commission, but those who were recommended did go forward with the approval of the warden.

I contend that last year the only function the commission performed in connection with these cases was this. When these names were submitted as those of men eligible to the civil service, the commission questioned the preference, first as to whether they were returned men and secondly whether they had disability. I understand that the preference is to continue and in that case there is a difficulty now. In what way will the warden, at the time he recommends a guard, know what his preference is or whether he has had a disability? It will not do merely to state it on his application. It must be obtained in some way, and that was the only function the Civil Service Commission ever discharged in regard to the appointment of these guards and officers.

Last year I opposed this procedure because we were sailing under false colours at the time, believing that the commission made these appointments, whereas they only put their stamp upon them after a certain investigation on the part of the Department of Pensions and National Health. At present there are sixty guards in Portsmouth penitentiary. The names of these men have never been submitted to the commission, unless it be within the last two weeks, and I cannot see that we are getting very much further with this bill. I am certainly in sympathy with it; I certainly believe that the warden should select his men and that that recommendation should go. I am very much afraid however, that with the superintendent we have to-day some names will never reach the top. A man who can write what he did about returned men will not, in my opinion, have any sympathy with them. I shall have more to say in this regard in committee.

I am not very much concerned as to who appoints the guards. I believe that in the past we have made an excellent selection of guards and the country would have known of very few of them having failed if we had not had the report just submitted. Do not let us think that this is the first investigation we have had in connection with penitentiaries. In 1919-20 a new superintendent came in and we were told then that the whole thing was wrong; everything was inefficient, everything had to be upset, and the disturbance was just as great as it is to-day. We were told then that the selections that were being made would have an exemplary effect; we were going to have excellent guards and a system never before seen in our penitentiaries. But a new superintendent comes in to-day and he says, "They are useless; they are no good." Thirty or forty of them have been dismissed and he is waiting for a number of them now to give their evidence in connection with the trial of these prisoners before he boots them out. He is holding them until their evidence is in. As I say, I am not so much concerned as to the appointments; that is something which I believe will come out all right. I believe that some of the best men that have ever served in a penitentiary have been dismissed, and that by an inexperienced superintendent who never knew anything about a penitentiary. It looks to me as if the only thing he knows about it, the only thing he is interested in, is a rifle; but the rifle is the smallest part of the administration of a penitentiary. What I am more interested in is the dismissal of guards, and for twenty-five or thirty years I have been fighting this question in regard to the dismissal of guards.

I want to give the house an illustration of the way in which these men are treated on dismissal. Here is what one guard received:

> This is to advise you that your services as temporary guard at this institution will terminate at the close of the prison year, September 30, 1931.
> The above action is taken owing to the fact that you have failed to show the necessary initiative and interest in the duties assigned to you. For the past five months you have been given every opportunity to make good, but notwithstanding the warnings and advice you have received from the deputy warden and chief keeper, you have failed to show any improvement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Who signed that?

Mr. ROSS: E. R. Jackson. I am going to give a number of these cases. Now, this man never was instructed; he never had a word from the deputy warden, never a word from the chief keeper except "good morning." That was the only instruction he had, and he is thrown out. What is the result? It is not merely the fact that he is thrown out of employment, but he is blacklisted, so that he cannot get a job in any department. He is simply blacklisted, and that is allowed to go without investigation. The man has no chance to defend himself.

Here is another case. Here is a man who made a complaint in the present minister's time. He was charged with the loss of gasoline—the matter was looked into by some official. The question whether the gasoline had really disappeared or how it had disappeared was never investigated but the man was dismissed because he went downtown and asked whether a certain guard had received gasoline at that station. The finding is there. This man never had a chance, although he is one of the best appointments; he held a high position in the city of Toronto. I may say that he is not in my constituency. The question as to where the gasoline went was never investigated.

We see a man being dismissed on account of a little scrap of paper. This man was a fireman, and the strange thing is that this piece of paper cannot be located to-day. Fourteen years after his dismissal the blacklist is counted against him and he cannot get a job. To-day there are twenty or thirty guards who are going, and this is the manner in which they are being dismissed:

> Acting under instructions received from Ottawa—

Now note this:

> —I have to advise you that you will be retired from the staff of this institution to promote efficiency.

Is there no such thing as British justice, even though you are employed in a department of government? Cannot a man go and ask, "Why am I dismissed?" The question is important to the man because he cannot get a job in any other department. He is blacklisted and cannot even establish his defence. Statements are made in the report of the present superintendent which are absolutely false. I challenge him, this government and this House of Commons, to give these men a hearing. I know they will be able to prove that the charges are absolutely false. I am of the opinion that the warden should appoint his own guards, that he should be able to see them before they are taken on but I am also of the opinion that British justice should be shown to the men employed in the department and that they should be given a reason for their dismissal.

A keeper was suspended on November 29. The superintendent gave him to understand that he would be reinstated but he remained suspended until last Monday when he was paid off up to November 29. The matter for which he was suspended was one not under his jurisdiction according to the regulations of the penitentiary. The superintendent being new on the job and not knowing the regulations laid a charge and the keeper was suspended. I have been fighting for twenty-five years to have these men given the opportunity of a hearing. Has a man in this country no right to know why he is dismissed? Is he to be told: "There is your notice, get out." If there are communists and reds in this country, more have been made during the last four or five months by such actions as these than could be made by ten Woodsworths, fifty Heaps or one hundred Irvines. If a man has any red blood in him, he wants to fight for himself.

Mr. McINTOSH: A Ross generally has.

Mr. ROSS: A Ross does not have to have questions asked for him; he can state his own case and ask his own questions.

A deputy warden who had been twenty-eight years in the service of this institution was dismissed. The charge made against him in the report was absolutely false. This man has had no chance to defend himself against the position in which he was put in the report. Will this country stand for a man having such an arbitrary power that he can dismiss another man who has had twenty-eight years of service? Should not sympathy be shown for a man who has had twenty-eight years of service without one black mark? I know of another case not many years ago where a deputy warden and another official who had been twenty-six years in the service were dismissed from Portsmouth penitentiary because of a charge laid by one of the lowest pieces of humanity that could come out of the slums of Montreal. These men were dismissed upon the word of a convict.

The report states that in certain cases the men resigned, but if they did so, they resigned with a pistol at their head. They were told to sign their resignations or their gratuities would be lost. There should be an open hearing of these cases and I offer to resign my seat if they cannot be proved. I have that much courage anyway. These men are Liberals as well as Conservatives, so I am not talking from the political point of view. I have never yet canvassed civil servants during any of the elections because I feel that they should be independent. I am not interested in the appointment of guards but I am interested in these dismissals. Unless something is done I intend to fight just as long as I am a member of parliament. I shall deal with other sections of the report when the opportunity presents itself later on.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) may I say on behalf of most of the hon. members on this side that his strictures on the Department of Justice would, we believe, apply equally to most other departments. Many arbitrary dismissals and dismissals without investigation have been made since this government came into power. May I offer him in this instance, and in others if he so desires, our assistance in order to bring before this house the injustice of many of these dismissals. I feel it is my duty to bring before the house certain portions of the report of D. M. Ormond in connection with the Kingston penitentiary disturbances. This report is addressed to the Minister of Justice and has a bearing upon the matter now before the house in that he criticizes very severely the system of appointment of guards, wardens and other employees of the penitentiaries. The following appears at the bottom of page 8 of the report, under the heading Training of Guards:

> Shortly after the end of the late war, a fair sprinkling of guards were brought into the service who had had military training of some type or other. These, however, were not closely scrutinized, and at the present time there are many guards who had little or no service that would recomend them to be penitentiary or prison guards, mostly having terminated from three to five years' service with the rank of private, which would indicate that they had reached their limit in military advancement, and could not be expected to show a higher standard in civil life.

I have never posed in this house as the friend of the soldier, in fact I have opposed a great many of the things which the soldiers wished to have put into force. I have never been a consistent upholder of the preference for returned soldiers, but I do think that any one of us who has had experience with private soldiers during the war would be false to the friends he made during that time if he allowed an insult of this kind to pass unchallenged in a public document. I had the honour and privilege of serving as a private soldier for a considerable period during the war. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) served as a private soldier during the whole war, and I say without any fear of contradiction that I am prepared to take his judgment against that of Brigadier General Ormond at any time.

I do not wish to say anything disagreeable about Brigadier General Ormond, because he is not in the house, but I think it should be said of him that if anyone has shown his lack of capacity for the position which he occupies, it is General Ormond. What business had he to say that because a man had not had an opportunity of achieving promotion during the three or five years or, as a matter of fact, any period he spent in the army during the war, he was debarred from civil occupation as a gaol guard, when we have in the house men who represent constituencies and when we have throughout the length and breadth of the land men holding the highest positions in civilian life who were soldiers in the war? If only Brigadier General Ormond had been able to enter into the feelings of many of the soldiers during the war he would have known well the expression often used in the trenches when speaking of the Germans: "If they would trade red hats with us, we would be in Berlin before Christmas." In no way has this expression been more strikingly illustrated than by this report. Brigadier General Ormond should know, if he does not, that it was not the fault of many of those soldiers that they were not promoted. Many who achieved commissions did so by influence; many others did so because they went over early in the war, and he should know that in the last two years of the war there came over from Canada battalion after battalion fully staffed with officers and with not enough men. Place had to be found for those who had obtained commissions before leaving Canada and this was done to the detriment of those who had given the best service at the front. When the history of the war comes to be written, it will be found that the backbone of the British as well as of the Canadian army was the buck private in the rear rank; he showed courage, initiative and qualities that went to make the Canadian expeditionary force what it was. This house would be false to its trust to those soldiers unless many members register their protest against this report.

I do not see in his seat the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), but I know if he were here, he who devoted a great deal of his time gallantly and nobly to the effort of saving those men by giving them the best attention of his healing art, would take the same attitude as do many of us. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) during the war achieved honour, but he did so—and he will be the first to admit this—because the private soldiers in his battalion backed him to the limit. I do not need to speak for the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross). He has expressed his views on this matter on many occasions. Almost every member, whether on this side or on the other, should feel it his duty to tell General Ormond that he is not qualified for the position to which he has been appointed, the reason being, first, on account of the absolutely false statement which he made in the report and, second, if for no other reason, that he showed a remarkable lack of tact in making such a statement.

May I quote the minister himself as to the qualifications of a gaol guard? Surely if a gaol guard should have all these qualifications, the man who superintends him should have many more. I am not going to read them all, but some of them are as follows:

> In the first place he must have the necessary physique, must be a strong, robust man. He must be a man of some education.

I suppose General Ormond believes there was nobody with any education in the ranks of the private soldiers. There are throughout Canada at least as many lawyers, doctors and other professional men who served as private soldiers as served with commissions.

> He must be a man of intelligence and discretion. He must be a man of courage, that is very essential, because he has to deal with many very daring, reckless prisoners.

I suppose the man who dealt with many daring, reckless Germans, is not qualified.

> There is a large proportion of very daring prisoners in our institutions at this time. Above all a guard should be a man possessed of an average amount of human sympathy.

I ask the minister whether General Ormond showed any human sympathy for those 600,000 returned soldiers throughout Canada when he said that because they were private soldiers they were not qualified to be good guards.

> Above all a guard should be a man possessed of an average amount of human sympathy. I do not mean maudlin sentimentality, but human sympathy and discretion.

As regards discretion, I would say that General Ormond has signally failed.

I have under my hand the following resolution:

> That the Kingston branch No. 9 Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, have read with regret the insulting and ill founded remarks of Superintendent of Penitentiaries, D. M. Ormond, as reported in the Kingston Whig Standard on February 7, on page 10, which reads as follows:

Then they proceed to quote the section of General Ormond's report which I have read to the house. They continue:

> That the Kingston branch of the Canadian Legion is able to give the names of doctors, lawyers, merchants, secretaries, bankers, members of parliament and men prominent in all walks of civil life to-day who served in the front line trenches of France and Flanders and other forward positions during the war who had the honour and distinction of the rank of private, gunner or sapper.

That some of the highest medals awarded by the British Empire were given to the private soldier who lived, ate and slept in the mud because he believed in his country and the best principles of freedom and did not enter the war in comfort and high military rank.

That the Kingston branch of the Canadian Legion No. 9 feel that the slur on the private soldiers whose names are carved in bronze and marble in our memorial hall and city monuments, who paid the supreme sacrifice in the great war should not be belittled or made cheap because some, who failed to respect the law of the country and probably did not serve overseas, find themselves in Portsmouth penitentiary and who got temporarily out of hand for a day or two.

That the raids on the German trenches for prisoners and the patrolling of no-man's land at night, was done by what rank of soldier—the private.

That the Kingston branch No. 9 Canadian Legion feel that Superintendent D.M. Ormond should make a public apology to relieve the feelings of the widows and mothers who lost husbands and sons serving in the great war with the rank of private.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to Doctor A. E. Ross; the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett; the Hon. Hugh Guthrie; the Hon. R. J. Manion; the Hon. Hugh Stewart—

And so forth.

In conclusion, I would like to make this observation, that I do not believe there is any possibility of the returned soldier's preference being applied in any satisfactory manner if the application thereof is to be left to the discretion of a man like D. M. Ormond. I do not wish to oppose the bill for that reason, but I would very seriously suggest to the minister that before giving Ormond the power of a dictator in matters of this kind, he should see to it that in some way his power of either expelling or appointing private soldiers should be controlled and restricted.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) who has just resumed his seat and the hon. and gallant gentleman (Mr. Ross) who preceded him, will pardon me if I do not follow them in all the intricacies that are involved in the appointment of inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and so on. With what my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat has said with reference to the most unwarranted charge that has been made against the returned men now in the employ of the penitentiaries branch as orderlies, I fully agree. I do think it was a most unwarranted statement on the part of one placed in an important position to say what General Ormond said, and so far as I am concerned I am quite prepared to say to him that he ought to be censured as strongly as possible.

With what my hon., and, as I like to call him, my gallant friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) has said, I am in agreement. The returned soldier's preference under this new scheme will be absolutely forgotten, or at least there is nothing in the bill that I can see anywhere that will safeguard that preference, yet the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has said that one of the primary qualifications for the position of superintendent, warden and guard should be that the appointees be quasi-military men. With that I do not quite agree, but if the qualifications are to be such, then I doubt very much in view of certain appointments which have recently been made by the government whether that will be the consideration that will be uppermost in the minds of those charged with making these appointments. The Minister of Justice the other day when he introduced the resolution said, at page 3545 of Hansard of March 30:

> This measure has been brought forward only after very serious consideration not only on the part of myself and officers in my department, but on the part of my colleagues and the senior officers of the penitentiary staff.

That may be, but the hon. gentleman knows that there is on the statute books of Canada a law that is called the Civil Service Act, and I for one believe that as long as that law is there, it is incumbent on those whose duty it is to prepare laws, and to see to their functioning, to be the first ones to observe the law.

I contributed in no small degree, and with the greatest satisfaction possible to the fabrication of the reports of the committee under the chairmanship of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm), of March and June, 1923, on the administration of the Civil Service Act, when the Civil Service Commission was under review at that time, and one of the recommendations of that report was this:

> Your committee is of the opinion that the two fundamental principles of the Civil Service Act are the merit system and the system of appointment by competitive examination, and that both these principles must be preserved.

Sir, as long as it is my great honour and privilege to be a member of this house, and as long as this law is on the statute books, it is my duty to see that it is observed, and for its maintenance I shall continue to fight. But having subscribed to it, I must of necessity oppose any departure from it.

But the Minister of Justice is not satisfied with bringing in a new measure to take away from the Civil Service Commission something of its jurisdiction. It was in 1918 that the hon. gentleman was one of those who in a moment of high sentiment formed the idea of abolishing patronage. It was in 1919 that the Civil Service Act was so amended as to allow of the bringing down of the classification, but it was in 1921 that the hon. gentleman and those associated with him tried by means of the Spinney bill to ruin the act, and had it not been for those who sat in opposition at that time the Civil Service Act would have been ruined. Unfortunately there was maintained in the act one section which permitted the Civil Service Commission to do certain things in the way of releasing positions. The Minister of Justice the other day said, at page 3557 of Hansard—and this is no excuse why the thing should be repeated:

The late government, I think with the assistance of my vote—

It was well that he said that because otherwise it would have been put up to him:

—appointed a large number of preventive officers. I think there were some six or seven hundred such officers, three hundred and fifty of which are now in the mounted police. None of these men come under the Civil Service Commission. In the Department of National Revenue there is a large staff of appraisers who are not appointed by the commission. There are a large number of employees in the Department of Finance in a similar position. The employees of the Soldier Settlement Board and of the department presided over by my hon. friend the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) are not subject at all to the Civil Service Commission. The members of the military forces and the mounted police, the employees of the tariff board, the radio commission—

And any other commission that may subsequently be appointed by this administration will, of course, be in the same category:

—and the research council also do not come under the commission. There is no new departure suggested by this measure.

But neither is there any closure on this sort of thing; there is no end to it. Just because that has been done in the past is no reason why a measure should now be introduced into this house which will release from the operation of this act some thousand or more employees. There is no reason why that should be done. At least the hon. gentleman who is in charge of this bill, if he had wanted to follow the law, could have found that relic which is to be found in the act after they had laid their unholy hands upon it, and which is known as section 59. The hon. gentleman has said that he has had conferences with the officers of the penitentiaries branch. Of course, they would be the first ones to ask for a release of these people from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. The hon. gentleman also says that he has asked to have a conference with the members of his own department. It would have been extraordinary if these people, knowing what was in the mind of the hon. gentleman, had not acceded to his wish. The Civil Service Commission charged with the administration of the Civil Service Act, if the qualifications set for the employees of the penitentiary were not satisfactory, could still have made the appointments on qualifications which were considered satisfactory. The minister could have asked the Civil Service Commission to appoint men under new regulations. Did he? The law was in the hands of the hon. gentleman, and why was there any necessity to amend the Penitentiary Act? Why did he not take advantage of the Civil Service Act, section 59 of which reads:

In any case where the commission decides that it is not practicable—

If the hon. gentleman thinks it is not practicable in this case he could have submitted it to the Civil Service Commission:

—nor in the public interest to apply this act to any position or positions, the commission may, with the approval of the governor in council, exclude such position or positions in whole or in part from the operation of the act, and make such regulations as are deemed advisable prescribing how such position or positions are to be dealt with.

I say that if there is any sincerity of purpose in this measure now before the house, the hon. gentleman and his administration should proceed under the terms of the law that is now on the statute books, that very same law which was placed on the statute books at the instigation and on the demand of the hon. gentleman who is now charged with this bill. Why do they not ask the Civil Service Commission to say whether it is practicable or in the public interest that these men should continue to be appointed in the manner in which they have been appointed? If the qualifications are not satisfactory they should be changed. But the merit system should be followed in the matter of appointments and in the matter of promotions.

But there is more than that, and more will be said when the bill is in committee. So far as I can see from the spirit of this bill the whole administration will be left in the hands of the superintendent, subject of course —and that is a very wide condition—to the governor in council. The range of salaries, promotion, superannuation, deductions, will all be subject to the recommendation of the superintendent. This is one of the worst measures to be introduced and one that departs to the greatest extent from sound principles of administration. I wonder how the minister can expect to inspire confidence in the minds of those charged with the protection of life and the safety of property when they feel they are at the mercy, in regard to advancement or discharge, "of recommendations from Ottawa," as used by the hon. member for Kingston in explaining certain dismissals. The hon. member for Kingston has said that men who have given years of service are discharged on recommendation from Ottawa and nothing more said. The Civil Service Act provides in section 55 as to political partisanship, and section 52 governs dismissals, but once these men are placed under the jurisdiction of the superintendent there will be wholesale dismissals, with the same answer, "You are discharged upon recommendation from Ottawa."

What is required is tightening up of the Civil Service Act, not nibbling away from it. And may I say to my hon. friend, if the government have decided to take these men from under the operation of the Civil Service Act, let them not appoint any more commissioners because before the commissioners are appointed the Civil Service Commission will have become useless.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I was particularly pleased when the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) brought up the matter of dismissals, because we are even more concerned about dismissals than appointments. At various times I have been in consultation with the Minister of Justice in connection with dismissals that occurred at the New Westminster penitentiary. One feature that I think he should take particular notice of is that guards can actually be "framed" by convicts in the prison. I have a case before me in which a convict after his discharge swore in evidence before a special constable that he had framed a certain guard in the penitentiary. I brought that to the attention of the minister, but it seems that the report of the warden had to be accepted. I do not know of any other department concerned with the administration of justice in which the word of a prisoner is taken against that of an officer. In this case the guard had been attending to his duties in the usual way, and this was resented by this particular prisoner, who was a rather dangerous character, and he made the statement that he would frame this guard. And he did. He placed cigarette papers—which are contraband in the penitentiary—in a certain place, and then notified the warden that they were there. On investigation they were found, and on that and that alone this guard was dismissed. I think this matter of dismissals should be given very serious attention, because if that procedure is carried on and the word of a convict is taken in preference to that of a guard it is very serious indeed, especially when by this bill power is vested in such a man as General Ormond.

The minister also spoke about the matter of instruction, that under the new act instruction would be given to the guards. My information is that there is now no provision for instruction of guards. They are handed a copy I believe of the regulations to look at, that copy must be handed back, and kept in the head office; how can the guard become acquainted with the regulations if he is not provided with a copy? Then only those guards who are on duty as guards with rifles are allowed to carry or handle rifles. It does not require an act like this to make it possible to instruct a man in the use of a rifle; all that is needed is a provision in the regulations that he be given say half an hour rifle drill every day. Under the present system a guard has no chance to become proficient in the penitentiary regulations unless he takes time to go to the head office and study them.

But the most serious thing brought out was the disclosure by the hon. member for Kingston, in the matter of dismissals. I think that the whole situation should be looked into, because there have been many dismissals of guards, who have afterwards been blacklisted, so to speak, and will be all the days of their lives as far as obtaining a permanent job in the government service is concerned.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Speaking to the resolution last Thursday afternoon, while opposing it in toto, I did suggest to the minister that when the bill came before the house he make certain that a clause was included providing that the act should not take away from the returned men the preference given them under the Civil Service Act. I mentioned at that time that in 1932 when certain revenue post offices were taken from under the operation of the Civil Service Act there was included in the amendment a section retaining the preference to returned soldiers. That is found in the statutes of Canada, 1932, chapter 40, section 57A, which reads as follows:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to the position of postmaster of any revenue post office the revenue of which does not exceed three thousand dollars per annum; but the preference provided by section twenty-nine of this act, in favour of the persons mentioned therein, shall be applied in respect of appointments to such positions.

I felt then that the minister would give serious consideration to that subject matter, and that when this bill was brought into the house we would find in it a similar provision. But I have looked for it in vain, there is no such provision. I again urge upon the minister that he include in this bill such a provision. At the same time, after the statement of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and after reading what the superintendent of penitentiaries thinks of private soldiers, one wonders whether there is any great value in retaining the preference in the act. I hope however, that this house and public opinion generally will be so unanimous in condemning what the hon. member for Quebec South so rightly characterized as an insult to the private soldiers of this country that General Ormond will not repeat the remarks he has made. I have no great hope, however, that he will prove a success in the position to which he has been appointed; my information is that he has not been successful in any of the other ventures over which he has had command. One has only to look back at the history of Rhyl at the close of the war to learn something of the capabilities of this gentleman. I consider that the remarks made by Brigadier-General Ormond are an example—

An hon. MEMBER: That statement about General Ormond is not correct.

Mr. GRAY: Then my hon. friend can get up and refute it. I consider these remarks to be an example of red tape snobbishness and brass hat unctuousness. Fortunately there were not many men of this calibre holding high commands, but I consider that as a private soldier I would be derelict to my duty if I did not stand in my place here and hurl back in his face the insult he has written into the records of this house. I say that when we have a report made not only to the minister but to the country in which words of this sort are used we can expect little from the superintendent of penitentiaries.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, I am one who served in the ranks during the war; I spent four years and seven months there leaving, as I entered, the equivalent to a private. I say that without shame; I am proud of it. I do not believe that even generals have a first mortgage on all the brains and intellect in the country, and I regard this statement as an insult to the men who served during the war. After all is said and done it takes some courage to be at the front—at the front, and not at the rear. I believe this is also an insult to the intelligence of this House of Commons.

This report is a contradiction in itself, Mr. Speaker; it finds fault with the conditions under which the men were appointed, and says the rules of the Civil Service Commission were not followed. The whole report is in conflict with the spirit of this bill. Frankly I believe the government followed an absolutely wrong policy in connection with the riots at Kingston and the other penitentiaries. A royal commission should have been appointed to investigate the question, because many rumours have been broadcast throughout the country. I have one in mind; it was said that the wife of one of the brokers serving his sentence at Kingston visited one of the officials, and that during her visit her husband was sent to the house as a janitor. Statements have appeared in various newspapers throughout the country; at the moment I am only going to quote from the Conservative press. First I will refer to the Financial Post; I do not think any criticism can be made with regard to an opinion expressed by that publication. Referring to the article which appeared in the Financial Post, The Toronto Globe said:

> On the other hand, the charges of the Financial Post regarding Collins Bay reflect a degree of public uneasiness that requires another sort of inquiry, one wholly removed from any aspect of parliamentary or political control. Yet the slogan, "Steal a million and see Collins Bay," recorded as having winged its way through Portsmouth, implies that much of the trouble, if not all, has been due to the incarceration of stock brokers in the "preferred class" institution.

Here is another statement from the same publication:

> "On more than one occasion the Financial Post has said that back of some of the financial crooks who have been sent to various penitentiaries were bigger and more influential people whose names were never dragged through the newspaper headlines. Scapegoats, tools, chestnut-pulling monkeys served terms to pay for the illicit gains of financial ones in society." An inquiry into penitentiary administration will not be sufficient unless it brings out the complete story of the brokers.

Then we have the Toronto Telegram, which I would call friendly to the present administration. It contained this headline:

> Closed Inquiry into Penal Conditions will not Satisfy Public Demand

The article following contained these words:

It would be the part of wisdom for Hon. Hugh Guthrie to listen to the demand for a public inquiry, if only to demonstrate that he has nothing to hide.

Then I have the Hamilton Spectator, another recognized Conservative journal, which says:

With such stories going the rounds and being elaborated upon in the telling, it will not suffice for the government to make a secret, internal inquiry and present a statement of the findings to the people, whose taxes support Portsmouth penitentiary. There will be a suspicion that the reason for the secret inquiry was that the department had something to hide. The searchlight should be played on every nook and cranny of Portsmouth and the public made acquainted with both sides of the story, and this form of probe, we think, will be insisted upon.

I still believe that would have been the proper policy in connection with those troubles. I am not unmindful of the inquiries that might be carried on by men who have such a background of training as that possessed by the gentleman referred to, but I am not very much impressed with the efficiency of military men in positions of this nature. We have seen an example in connection with certain police forces in this country, and here instead of having promotion within the department, gentlemen have been taken from outside, though they absolutely lack experience and knowledge of the practical problems which present themselves in connection with the administration of such institutions. Frankly I think the gentleman in question exhibited a degree of crust, to say the least, when one remembers that he lacked the necessary experience to carry out an investigation of this kind. I felt it my duty to make these observations and reflect what I believe is the considered view of the people of this country. I firmly believe that the policy which should have been pursued in connection with this investigation was the appointment of a commission of some sort before which those men referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) would have had the right to give their evidence, and possibly to be represented by counsel. I think that should have been done instead of the star chamber methods which were adopted.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Oh.

Mr. McINTOSH: Is my hon. friend from Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) really awake? Before this bill is given second reading I should like to put myself on record as opposing it. I did so last Thursday, when the resolution was under discussion, and I wish to do so again to-day. I should like to read a telegram which I received from the secretary of the Civil Service local of North Battleford in regard to this legislation. It is as follows:

The civil servants of North Battleford are strongly opposed to the removal of the penitentiaries staffs from the Civil Service Act and respectfully solicit your opposition in this matter.

(Signed) V. J. Rogers,
Secretary.

Another telegram came to me from Saskatoon, dated March 3:

The Saskatoon members of the amalgamated civil servants of Canada respectfully protest against proposal to take the staffs of the penitentiaries away from the Civil Service Act.

Eggleston,
Secretary.

Further, I have a letter from Mr. Knowles, who is national secretary of the amalgamated civil servants of Canada. This is a national organization and I believe that two or three of the ideas put forward in this communication are well worthy of being placed on the records of the house. The minister the other night seemed to intimate that perhaps the civil servants of the country were taking too much upon themselves in opposing legislation of this kind, but in my view it is a very important thing to have a national organization which will indicate to the goverment in power precisely where it stands on any piece of legislation. I believe it is a help to the government, and any communications submitted to the government ought to be read with special interest. Mr. Knowles, in his statement, dated March 6, asks: What is the proposal? And he proceeds to say that the proposal means the removal of the entire penitentiary service, over nine hundred in number, guards, wardens, inspectors, superintendents, clerks, stenographers, bookkeepers, nurses and so on, from the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Now may I ask, what does this mean? It means that we are splitting the Civil Service Act into fragments, and by dividing it we intend to destroy it. That is the meaning of it. In other words, it is the thin end of the wedge, and if that course is persisted in there is no doubt as to what the result will be. The second question Mr. Knowles asks is this: What does this departure mean? He explains this departure means the appointment of all penitentiary officials by political patronage, as is the rule in the United States, where the penitentiary administration is admittedly much more corrupt and inefficient than it is in Canada. Do we want our penitentiary administration to become more corrupt in Canada than it is in the United States? Do we want it to become more inefficient? If we do, says the national secretary of this organization, then all we have to do is to adopt this legislation. Thirdly, Mr. Knowles asks what the results will be. He says the results will be that prison guards will be chosen as a reward for political services by those locally in charge of patronage, and that guards so chosen, owing to graft and inefficiency, weakness and loss of morale, will become a burden to the penitentiaries rather than a help; moreover, there will be wholesale dismissals on every change of government, and the extravagance and added cost will be paid by the people of Canada. Surely if these statements are sound we do not want to add to the cost of government in this country to any greater degree.

May I before closing put before the house the point of view of General Hughes, at one time superintendent of penitentiaries. General Hughes was a witness before the Spinney committee in 1921, and at page 234 of the report of that committee it is stated that he emphatically opposed the suggestion. At page 243 he is reported as having said:

> We have got away from political appointments, thank goodness, and we are getting into our service men who in years to come will be a credit to the institution.

General Hughes, then, is of the opinion apparently that if we take the course we are about to adopt to-day we are doing something that will not be creditable to the country. Then the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), the leader of the government of which my hon. friend opposite is a responsible minister, has something to say on this question. What does the right hon. gentleman say? On May 8, 1928, as reported at page 2775 of Hansard, speaking against a measure of this character, he said:

> It means the recurrence of the patronage system, which should not be tolerated in this country. It is not conducive to good service, or to the public weal. While there have been many defects in connection with the administration of the civil service, the fact is that it is a great advance over anything we have heretofore had in this country. We protest against any effort being made to return to the old condition of patronage.

That is the point of view of the present Prime Minister, and we have also the opinion of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) as reported in Hansard of May 15, 1928, at page 3017-18:

> Undoubtedly the patronage system had more evil attached to it than merit. Appointments under the patronage system are made for the purpose—I think I can put it simply and plainly—of giving jobs to those who are in favour with the ministry of the day, whatever ministry it is. . . . I am opposed to this bill to the extent that it departs from the principle of appointment by the Civil Service Commission.

Lastly, may I put on record the opinion of the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie King), who now leads His Majesty's loyal opposition in this House of Commons. On May 2, 1921, speaking against the Spinney bill, which aimed at exempting a portion of the outside service from the provisions of the Civil Service Act, the right hon. gentleman said:

> It is a step entirely in the wrong direction.

Well, if the Spinney bill of twelve years ago was then a step in the wrong direction the principle of this bill is equally so to-day. We have the views of these leaders of public opinion which I have quoted, and I think it would be well for us to take their advice. If we followed their opinions we would scrap this piece of legislation now before the house and see to it that the appointments I have mentioned should come under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, thereby insuring to this country, so far as our penitentiaries are concerned, men who will know their duty and and do it in a way that will be a credit to the dominion.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): May I say to my hon. friend from North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) and to my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) that there is no intention whatever of returning to the system of political patronage in a general way. This government is just as much in favour of appointments being made through the Civil Service Commission on merit as my hon. friends opposite can possibly be, but this is a peculiar situation. All that the Minister of Justice is asking the house to agree to is that the appointment of guards and officers of our penitentiaries shall be made practically in the same way as is the selection of constables for the mounted police force.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is going away beyond that.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That is the intent of this act, and the Minister of Justice might repeat to my hon. friend from North Battleford the opinion which he has already given on this subject. The selection of guards for the penitentiaries under the Civil Service Commission has not been a success. In my opinion, they should be selected as the constables are selected for the mounted police force. There is no political patronage in connection with the choice of constables for that force, and I think every hon. member will agree with that statement. If I know of a man who in my opinion would make a good constable in the mounted police force, I would simply tell him to go to the office of the commissioner on Rideau street and be examined. The examination is very careful both as to the physical condition and mental capacity of the applicant. Appointments are made entirely upon merit and there is no political patronage whatever. There will be no political patronage in the appointment of officers and guards of the penitentiaries as provided for by this bill. The hon. member for Ottawa has the civil service particularly under his care, and has to get up and object to this bill on general principles.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Not particularly.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As to the wisdom of the Civil Service Act, I am entirely in accord with my hon. friend.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I may be the minister representing the civil service.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Perhaps when my hon. friend's party gets into power he may be a new minister of civil service.

Mr. McINTOSH: Do you think he has a good reputation?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There are a great many hon. members on the other side who are particularly careful about the civil service now that they are in opposition.

What we are asking is that the guards and officers in the penitentiary force shall be chosen on merit. The Civil Service Commission does not have an opportunity of inspecting applicants and making their personal acquaintance as could be done by the superintendent or whoever is given authority by him to select these men. The penitentiary guards are really a quasi-military force, somewhat similar to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I do not consider that the altering of the present system of appointing these guards and other officers can be considered as an attack upon the merit system. With appointments being made to this very important service in the manner provided for by this bill there would be more surety of obtaining those qualified for the positions. The appointments would be made without political partisanship of any kind.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): The speech just made by my right hon. friend, the hon. minister who is member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) is very similar to the one made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) during the debate upon the resolution. At that time there were some hon. members on this side who were inclined to support the minister in what he was proposing as far as the appointment of guards, wardens and superintendent of the penitentiaries was concerned. If the bill did not go any further than that—

Mr. GUTHRIE: If we could get the bill into committee we could discuss the details.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to finish first what I have to say. If the bill did not go any further than that I imagine many hon. members on this side would, in view of the special circumstances mentioned by the minister, be agreeable to the government having the special powers which it is asking for in this bill. The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) has however pointed out that while this bill seeks to remove the superintendent, the wardens, the deputy wardens and guards from the control of the civil service, it seeks also to take out from that control practically the entire staff of the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice. One section of the bill provides that the governor in council may appoint inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and other officers and in addition, such officers, clerks and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice. These last mentioned employees are not upon the staffs of the penitentiaries; they are in the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice. Unless the minister has his bill amended in these particulars, all these clerks and officials, including a purchasing agent, will be taken out from under the control of the commission. The bill provides also that the governor in council shall approve the salaries to be paid to these different officials. These clerks and officials are similar to the clerks and officials in other departments of the public service, and there is no more reason why they should be taken out from under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, upon special or other grounds, than there is for taking out from under the provisions of that act the officials of the Department of National Defence, the Department of Railways and Canals, the Department of Trade and Commerce or any other department of the public service. If my right hon. friend has been speaking on behalf of the ministry of which he is a member, I suppose we can assume that the Minister of Justice intends to amend the bill.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No. I am simply supporting my colleague the Minister of Justice in connection with this very necessary legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Apparently the government hoped to get this bill through second reading without opposition by giving us the tender assurance that such was all that was being asked for. We find now that the government is asking for something more; it is seeking to take out from under the provisions of the Civil Service Act large numbers of clerks, officials and others who are not connected in any way with the actual administration and management of the penitentiaries. If such is the view, we will find it necessary to continue to oppose this measure as strongly as possible on its second reading.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton) Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that I do not agree with either my leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) or the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe); as far as I am concerned, I am opposed to the whole bill and intend to vote against it. I may have some doubts as to the superintendent, but I have no doubts as to the other officials. I look upon this bill as an attempt on the part of the government to take a large number of officers out from under the control of the Civil Service Act. I have not heard one single word in explanation of why these officials should be removed. The statement has been made that a better class of civil servant could be employed if the appointments were taken away from the Civil Service Commission, but I cannot understand why the Civil Service Commission should not be efficient in one department when it is efficient in others. A great majority of the selections made to-day are made upon the recommendations of the officers in charge or of the men under whom the appointees would work, and until further reasons are given as to why a change should be made in this method, I propose to vote against the bill.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are just one or two remarks I wish to make, particularly with regard to the superintendent. A rather embittered censure has been made of this official by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross), the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray). Replying to these hon. gentlemen, I might say that this official is an appointee of the Civil Service Commission. I knew of General Ormond by name and reputation but I never had the pleasure of meeting him personally until after he was appointed last August. The Civil Service Commission proceeded by way of advertisement and examination of applicants and recommended the appointment of General Ormond. I have no reason to regret his appointment. From all I can gather, in the eight or nine months he has been acting as superintendent of penitentiaries, he has done excellent work; he has devoted himself at the rate of probably eighteen hours a day to the work of those institutions and has produced a tremendous improvement throughout all the penitentiary systems in Canada. An exaggerated idea was, I think, conveyed by the three hon. members who discussed that clause in the superintendent's report in reference to returned soldiers. I see no object in exaggerating matters of that kind as has been done to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The statement speaks for itself.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It might have been well had that not been in the report; but it is there and everybody concerned has read it. I see no reason, however, for the use of such language as has been used in the house to-day in regard to that particular statement.

Regarding the statement of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) about returned soldiers, as I intimated when I moved this resolution, a large number of returned soldiers will certainly be employed, but it will be very difficult to apply to guards and other officials in penitentiaries the particular section of the Civil Service Act which gives preference to returned soldiers. The preference includes disabled men, and the greater the disability, the greater the preference. That would hardly apply to the class of men we desire to secure in our penitentiaries.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is true within reason.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the language of the act, but I am in favour, so far as we can do so, of employing practically all returned men. We cannot, however, employ pensioners who have been disabled—that, I think, goes without any further argument—for positions of the kind to which I have referred, such as wardens, keepers and guards in our penitentiaries.

The other point with which I wish to deal is that the officials regarding whom I feel chiefly concerned, and perhaps the only ones, are those who are in actual control in the penitentiaries. There is a very limited staff outside the penitentiary walls; there is a headquarters branch where there is a purchasing agent and one or two clerks, and then there is the general headquarters branch where there are some stenographers, bookkeepers, auditors and the like. I am not going to press that these be taken from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. The only ones that I have any desire to remove from its jurisdiction are those actually in the penitentiaries in administrative positions and the superintendent and inspectors who are called upon to visit the penitentiaries and to work in connection with those staffs.

I was glad indeed to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) in regard to those particular appointments. He feels, as I do, that those men occupy positions of great risk and danger and when anything happens such as did happen in Kingston last fall or in St. Vincent de Paul, naturally, the blame rests upon the shoulders of the head of the department or the minister. The minister at the same time is not permitted to make the appointment of the officials who are to use their efforts to secure the safety of those institutions. I would not have the slightest objection to the bill being amended so as to confine it to persons actually engaged in the penitentiaries, excluding the branch at Ottawa. The important part is the institution and not the branch. I thought the bill would get a second reading without division, but we are prepared to rest on the bill as it is presented and do any amending in committee.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 1—Governor in council to appoint inspectors, wardens, officiers and clerks.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In concluding the debate on the second reading of the bill, the minister referred to certain exaggerations by three hon. members regarding the report made by the superintedent re Kingston penitentiary disturbances, 1932. The language of the report speaks vividly and lucidly for itself, and I am sure the Minister of Justice could not accuse any hon. member, on whichever side of the house he might be, of indulging in exaggeration in regard to the conduct of an official of the government and of parliament and of the people of Canada who would use the language quoted by the hon. member for Quebec South. Let me quote only two lines of it as follows:

> Having terminated from three to five years' service with the rank of private, which would indicate that they had reached their limit in military advancement, and could not be expected to show a higher standard in civil life.

I am sure the minister does not agree with that statement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would not have used that language.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Neither would any other minister have used it, and I maintain that a superintendent of penitentiaries who would use such language as that in a government report should be dismissed from his position, because it shows a bad example to the people of Canada. This is not a partisan question. I am sure any hon. gentleman opposite would agree with me that this language should not find its way into a government report, and therefore I was surprised to hear the Minister of Justice suggest that those who spoke from this side this afternoon had been indulging in exaggeration. I do not think the English language contains words sufficiently strong to condemn the attitude and language of General Ormond as evidenced by the statement that I have read to the committee. He has been condemned by the country, condemned by the house, and he should be removed from his position immediately.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Now that the governor in council may appoint a superintendent of penitentiaries, perhaps the minister will say upon whose recommendation and in what manner he will be appointed. Is it intended to follow the regulations laid down by the Civil Service Commission as to the qualifications of a superintendent of penitentiaries, the lines of promotion, compensation, and the manner in which the appointment shall be made?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It will be taken from the Civil Service Act and follow the Penitentiary Act. It will be done on the recommendation of the minister of justice for the time being, whoever he may be.

Mr. CHEVRIER: So that there will be no regard for the present qualifications?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not the qualifications under the Civil Service Act. Such qualifications would not be binding because they do not apply.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Will the minister say what will happen in the case of superannuation? If the minister says that superannuation will go with the position, then the superintendent, being outside the superannuation law, cannot get superannuation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We may have to amend the Superannuation Act.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Is that conducive to uniformity of law in the service?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think it will hurt it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I might ask the same question as to the other officials.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think they will all have to come in.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Then the whole Civil Service Superannuation Act will have to be jamboreed again to meet this particular purpose.

Mr. STANLEY: I wish to say a word in regard to General Ormond. I have no particular brief for him. I knew him in my political life in Alberta many years ago when he was a very strong opponent of the side to which I belonged; he took an active part in politics and was always on the opposing side. During the election of 1930 he had the pleasure of voting against me. Politically speaking, therefore, I have no axe to grind in saying a word on his behalf. I would not want it to be understood that in voting against me in 1930 he used his position in any offensive way. Certainly no accusation of partisanship can be levelled against him. A bitter personal attack has been made on General Ormond in this house to-day. It has always seemed to me that it is not a proper practice to attack a member of the public service in this house where he has no opportunity to speak for himself, particularly when it is a matter of extracting a few words out of a report and giving them an interpretation to suit the convenience of the occasion without the man accused having the opportunity to defend himself.

When General Ormond was attached to the militia department he was highly respected by the individual private soldiers. I am speaking from what I know in the city of Calgary when General Ormond was officer commanding military district No. 13. Although we have had a number of distinguished soldiers in charge of that military district I am safe in saying that no other man who occupied that position held the respect of the individual soldiers and of the militia in Calgary and district to a higher degree than did General Ormond. As I said, I have no political axe to grind on his behalf. How he got his appointment is nothing to me, but certainly he did not get it because he belonged to the political party to which I belong. I presume his appointment came through the Civil Service Commission, as it should, because of his merit. But this I do wish to say, that the bitter attack that has been made on him here to-day is not justified by his record in connection with the soldiers of Canada during his term of office in Calgary.

Mr. POWER: I have never suggested that any attack which I made on General Ormond was justified by anything other than the statements he made in his official capacity in the report submitted to parliament. As to General Ormond's conduct before he was appointed to his present position I know nothing, but I am informed that he was a good officer and that he served his country faithfully and well during the war. Now I am informed that he is a Liberal. It is too bad that he allowed his principles to go astray when he joined the government service, but apparently that is what he did, judging by the observations which he makes in this report. My opposition to General Ormond is based purely on the report which appears as a public document. I entirely agree with the hon. member for East Calgary that it is most unfair to attack a public official who cannot defend himself, but General Ormond took it upon himself to lay this statement before the public of Canada and to cast a slur on about six hundred thousand men who cannot defend themselves either. He used his position to cast a slur, and whatever interpretation my hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) or the Minister of Justice can give other than it was a slur on these men I am unable to understand.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) said that the thing was exaggerated. I said nothing other than was stated in the report itself. It is an official report. The Minister of Justice himself saw this report before it was presented to parliament, and I would have thought that the minister would reprimand his official for having made any such slurs in a document to be presented to the Canadian people. This is more important than perhaps it would appear. We are now placing in an official document, which is going to remain in the archives of this house and in the archives of this country, a deliberate insult on six hundred thousand of the finest flower of our manhood who went overseas. It is bad enough, heaven knows, that this session will be marked in the minds of the returned soldiers in Canada as the blackest session since the war. It is bad enough to take away their preference. It is bad enough to repudiate the most sacred of national obligations by taking away pensions from some of them, without our permitting the grossest and most exaggerated statements, statements that are false, to be made against the troops, insulting the men who served their country overseas. I should think it would make every soldier on the other side rise up and defend his comrades.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I think I can safely say that since the war I have been busier looking after my own reputation and character so far as my soldier life was concerned than I have been in condemning the action and reputation of any other man serving in France. I believe it is my privilege to have known General Ormond longer than any other member in this house—some twenty-two odd years. I knew him when he was a young officer; I knew him when he served as major and adjutant of his battalion, and I also had some relationships with him when he was in command of the Ninth Infantry brigade. So I think I can speak from experience in regard to some of the things that have been said this afternoon, because I carried a rifle as a private soldier longer I believe than any other member of this house, and any remarks which might be made against the reputation of the private soldier would necessarily affect one like myself who had had some experience as a private.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was pointing out that it has been my privilege to have some experience as a private soldier and also to serve in other situations in the army, and as a result of such experience, I will say that a man who is a private in the army needs to have just as much initiative as, and possibly should be able to act more quickly than, a man who has heavier responsibility. If ever a man should feel entitled to hold up his head and stick out his chest, as it were, it is after he has fulfilled his duties as a private in the ranks. Having said that, I think I may safely add that no man who occupies a responsible position in the army could properly carry out any of the objects or duties assigned to him unless he had the support and cooperation of those who were serving with him as privates, gunners and drivers.

Having been an active member of two returned soldier organizations since the war, and having spent considerable time in their club rooms, visiting them quite frequently, as a member both of the legion and of the Army and Navy Veterans, I regard it as a peculiar thing that not one word of protest has reached me regarding the statements made in the penitentiary report by General Ormond. Consequently I am forced to the conclusion that the returned soldiers do not place upon that report the interpretation placed upon it by some hon. members this afternoon.

Mr. GRAY: You have a good imagination.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): It may be imagination, but I tell my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Gray) that I am as closely in touch with the private soldier as he is, and not one man in the province of Alberta has sent a protest to me concerning this report.

I have known General Ormond for a great many years. He used to live in the adjacent constituency, and one thing that the Conservatives could always rely upon was that he would lead the Liberal forces against us. Consequently, as far as this appointment is concerned, I think I am safe in saying that it was made strictly by the Civil Service Commission. General Ormond has always been a close friend of mine, and I think he carried out his duties as a junior officer just as efficiently as he did those of a senior officer. In regard to the statement of the hon. member for West Lambton—I am glad to see that he is present this evening—I am sure that with his customary fairness not only to members of this house but to a comrade, a returned soldier, he will not take it amiss from me if I correct the statement he made this afternoon with reference to General Ormond. It happens that General Ormond and myself were in the same division; we were moving over from France at the time. When the trouble was on at Rhyl, General Ormond was in command at Ripon, and in order to make some headway towards overcoming the trouble at Rhyl, General Ormond was sent there in command to see if he could do something to set matters right.

Mr. GRAY: He was there while the riot was on.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): He arrived there when the riot was at its height, but he was sent for from Ripon to Rhyl; consequently I think it was a great commendation of his ability as a leader.

Mr. GRAY: I was going to qualify my remark and to say that there were some riots he missed—there were several he was in—but now I do not think I will qualify it.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I wish to treat the hon. gentleman's statement with all fairness—

Mr. GRAY: I am certainly not reflecting on the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I think in all fairness to the returned soldiers that the situation with regard to Rhyl should be explained.

Mr. GRAY: I will take it under consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I will have to leave the hon. gentleman to follow his own course and the dictates of his own conscience. The action of the returned soldiers clearly shows that they do not place the same interpretation upon the report as that given by my hon. friend.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I wish to join with the speaker who has just taken his seat (Mr. Stewart (Lethbridge). I happen to know Brigadier General Ormond. I went through Rhyl, arriving there I think the day after the riot. The riot of course was due to a misunderstanding which circulated about Rhyl that British bottoms were being used to carry American troops home while the Canadian troops were left lying around the base. I well remember when General Ormond came there, I think by airplane, and he did not take long to get the situation straightened out. I have always known him as a very fine type of citizen and a good officer, but I certainly agree, with what hon. members on the other side of the house have said in regard to that statement as to the private soldier not being qualified to hold a position as prison guard. I take that stand as one who enlisted as a private soldier and spent some two years as such in France. The point I would like cleared up by the minister is whether or not we are to take it from that statement that no man who has served in the army as a private soldier is to be considered for a position as prison guard. That is the only logical inference I can draw from the statement; if I am wrong, I hope someone will put me right. If it is a proper inference, it would put me in a very difficult position in voting on this bill, so I hope the minister will clear it up.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I might clear that up at once, Mr. Chairman. The expression which has been referred to was unfortunate, but it was used inadvertently. There is no doubt it had application to certain men on the staff of the Kingston penitentiary, and had not and was not intended to have any general application.

Mr. GRAY: There was no qualification.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the hon. member pardon me until I give my interpretation? It was not intended to have any general application to the men who served this country at the front. I can assure my hon. friend it will have no application in the future.

Mr. MITCHELL: In view of the apology that has been made for the writer of this report, I think he should be asked to withdraw that statement. I believe this House of Commons should insist that that be done, that in doing so it would reflect the view of the people of this country. Because after all it is not like some observations made by members here this afternoon—it was not extempore, it was studied. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice has said, it reflects the studied opinion of a military officer in charge of our penitentiaries as to the inferiority of the private soldier and his unfitness to hold a position in a penitentiary. It is not merely an offhand expression of opinion; it is in a report. It has been said that there has been no objection from the returned soldiers. That can be readily understood as due to the fact that this report has not received as wide circulation as it might have. I know something of the temper and outlook of the average man who served in the forces, and had this report received the publicity it should have, in view of the statement contained therein, the government and the minister in charge of this department would have received plenty of criticism from the returned soldiers' organizations.

Mr. ROSS: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be pardoned for referring for a few moments to the report with regard to what the superintendent calls the riots in the Kingston penitentiary. First I should like to direct attention to the fact that there is no institution known as the Kingston penitentiary; it is the Portsmouth penitentiary, but perhaps we can pardon inexperience in that regard.

My good friend who sits behind me said we were talking about a man who has no chance to reply. I am not going to attack any military man on his service; God knows we had enough to do to hold our own, and we did the best we could. But I am going to attack a man who makes a report on penitentiary riots, and I am ignoring the fact that he is a returned man. If it is not fair to criticize him in this house what recourse have those men who have been dismissed without a hearing? What can a guard do who has been dismissed by the superintendent and put on a black list so that he cannot be employed in any other department for fourteen years? What can a deputy warden do, though he gave twenty-eight years service in this institution and had not a mark against him? He is written up in this report; he has had no chance to defend himself or even have a public hearing where he could say that the charges made against him, to which I am going to refer, are false? If it is unfair to attack this gentleman certainly it is unfair to these people to be dismissed without a hearing and without an opportunity to defend themselves.

In this report the superintendent of penitentiaries even went into past complaints, things that did not affect him at all, and men were dismissed for those reasons without a chance to defend themselves. They discharged a messenger who had given eight years service, a man who simply went where the warden sent him. His father had been in that institution for fifty-two years; his uncle had been there for forty-three years. His grandfather had seen twenty-seven years service: that makes a total of one hundred and thirty years of service given by this family, but this man was discharged, and the reason given was that his education was deficient. What is the history of the case? The history, which is a proud one, shows that this charge is puerile. Two of the boys were educated as doctors; one was educated as a priest and the only girl in the family is the bursar of the Hotel Dieu, which is one of the largest institutions of its kind in our city. This boy went through public school; for eleven years he worked for the largest departmental institutions in Kingston, but now he is put out because of deficient education.

These poor fellows had no chance to defend themselves; they were given their papers and let go. This gentleman threatened them with instant dismissal if they dared go near a member of parliament with their complaints. When a man is dismissed from a public institution—and there have been forty or fifty in the last three or four months—where is he to go for redress if not to his member of parliament? Who else can take up these cases? For the last twenty years these men have been told that if they dared go near a member of parliament they would be dismissed instantly; that is the sort of thing that has been going on. I have no criticism of this man as a soldier; his record is good, but as the writer of reports on penitentiary riots certainly he has fallen down.

I had hoped that this gentleman would be fair. He knows the treatment given even a private in the army when he is charged with some misdemeanour. You cannot punish any private in the army unless you bring him before a court martial, where he can defend himself and where he will be represented by counsel. This man, however, refuses even a hearing to his discharged employees. I thought the last administration was pretty bad in its treatment of the guards, but under this gentleman this administration is even worse. After hearing about 650 convicts without being able to locate the two or three leaders in the riot, this man called in the guards and swore them to secrecy so that they would not dare tell what he questioned them about. Can any fairminded man, any British citizen in this country, imagine that sort of treatment, under which a guard is taken in and sworn to secrecy and then, three or four days later, is discharged? This is the treatment that has been given, and that is why I am protesting to-night.

This is a onesided report; it is misleading; it misrepresents and distorts the facts, and it is brutal and unfair in its treatment of these people. I am going to prove those statements. I know if the Minister of Justice or the ex-Minister of Justice had the facts before them something would be done, but as they say they must stand behind their officials. At the same time there should be some investigation if they are getting untrue reports. In this connection I might refer to a report filed here a year ago with regard to these brokers. They were supposed to be working, mixing cement, digging roads and ditches, and so on, but they did that work only after the question was asked in this house. I have a sworn statement here, which I should like to read:

> When the brokers came to Collins Bay they were put on duty as waiters in the officers' mess—

I hope neither the Minister of Justice nor the ex-Minister of Justice will take this as personal; I hope they will understand that it is the truth, which was not stated in the reports furnished them.

> —causing the former waiters, who were perfectly satisfactory, to lose their jobs, and as a result they were put in the "bull gangs," digging and excavating. Stobie—

I hope I will be forgiven for mentioning names, but it must come out.

> —was put in the officers' mess. Forlong was made secretary to the deputy warden, Young was made secretary to the chief trade instructor while Bill Smart was secretary to the chief engineer. Shutt was found a position in the general offices. Campbell was appointed librarian to look after the library, which consisted of about twelve books, his duty being to take in and give out the said books.

Now I am going to refer to the report in general, and first I will have a word to say as to the general conclusions. As a report this is not worth the paper on which it is written. After spending three or four months hearing the stories of 650 convicts and swearing the guards to secrecy, what were the conclusions arrived at by this gentleman? These are the conclusions:

1. Insufficient supervision covering a period of not less than ten years.

Must I defend my good friend the present Minister of Justice and my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Justice on this charge?

2. Insufficient and inefficient inspection covering not less than a period of ten years.

This young gallant from the west, riding through, certainly has some idea of himself.

Mr. DUFF: Young Lochinvar has come out of the west.

Mr. ROSS: Why should guards be dismissed on this account?

3. Inefficient officers being retained on the staff of Kingston penitentiary.

I do not agree with that. Some may be pretty old, and this minister has dismissed some, as did also the late minister.

4. Lack of knowledge of, and familiarity with, penitentiary rules and regulations.

I do not suppose he knew what they were when he wrote this.

5. The desire on the part of certain long term convicts to have less rigorous rules and regulations enforced within the penitentiary.

This is a peach. If any of us were in there would he not endorse that? Just imagine!

6. A plot or scheme on the part of certain convicts to escape from the penitentiary.

Well, I have never known a year when there was not a plot or something of that kind among inmates to escape from this penitentiary.

7. Admission in the Kingston penitentiary during the month of February, 1932, of certain convicts who were especially adept in organizing and inciting disturbances against constituted authority.

Where else would you send such people?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They are bad boys.

Mr. ROSS: The next is:

8. Deprivation of convicts of cigarette papers and fine cut tobacco, pipe tobacco being an authorized issue.
9. The large number of young and irresponsible convicts who are now confined in Kingston penitentiary, many of whom have had experience in reformatories in Canada and elsewhere.

If this is correct, it is one of the most damning things in the whole service, that boys who have been in reformatories have so soon gone to penitentiaries.

10. The monotony of penitentiary confinement.
11. I am also of the opinion that two or three convicts, whose identity has not been disclosed up to the present time, are the principal organizers of the outbreak.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He does not know who they are.

Mr. ROSS: No. If he had gone to any six guards, to any one guard in the penitentiary, he would have been told who the ringleaders were, without having to spend all this money and take up so much time. Now let us see what the complaints are which were received from these 650 convicts. Here they are:

1. Deprivation of cigarette papers.

If that is one of the causes of the riot, they have been given this article and therefore they were not justified. He refused it and now endeavours to excuse himself by saying that one warden did not agree with that.

2. Close-cropping of hair.
3. Lack of recreation and amusement.

He declares that when he went there he noticed that these convicts were washed out, but he was not there very long before he found that there was more life in them than anyone could imagine.

4. Insufficient open air exercise.
5. Lack of newspapers and magazines.

These fellows did not only want the Globe and the Mail; they wanted their own home papers supplied them.

6. Insufficient lighting in cells.
7. Harsh treatment by officers.
8. Compulsory church attendance.

That must be true, because since the riot there has never been a church parade.

9. Insufficient medical treatment.
10. Insufficient dental treatment.

Who was to blame? He was going to fire both the doctor and the dentist but he found that headquarters had something to do with it.

11. Lack of toilet articles, combs and mirrors—

And cosmetics too, I suppose.

12. Punishments improperly awarded for breach of rules.
13. More frequent letters to and from convicts.
14. Increased number of visits to convicts.
15. Lack of paroles.
16. Objection to steam-cooked food and monotony of prison diet.

Now these things have all been given them, and yet these complaints are set down as leading up to the trouble. Let me now refer to something else. As hon. members know, there is a female prison up there which cost $750,000. There is a high wall around it, as high as the wall around the other prison, and outside of that there is a formidable wire fence. I said to the architect one day, "What is the idea of this fence? Are the women better climbers?" He said, "No; that is to keep those outside from coming in. There is too much of a demand to get into the penitentiary to-day." And why not? Think of the treatment the prisoners get at Christmas. During the Christmas season, when there were so many hungry people in this country, and many of those who were doing their best to obey the law were without food and clothing, these fellows had a magnificent Christmas dinner and after that dinner each one was given his little Christmas stocking containing a pound of mixed candy, a pound of chocolate, a pound of mixed nuts, a pound of grapes and oranges, bananas and so forth. These fellows who had no regard for law received this treatment; and more than that to each one was sent a Christmas card, wishing him a merry Christmas and a happy new year.

Now we are told that we must not say anything about this man who cannot answer; yet in that report, I say, there is an attack on Inspector Smith which is most brutal and un-British. Nothing can surpass it except the treatment which the Iroquois gave their victims, when they could pour boiling water over them. Nothing, I say, could surpass the treatment this man has given Inspector Smith. Remember, he is only an inspector, acting warden, and not at all responsible; yet this is the way he is treated; the knife is thrust in and turned round and round so as to kill him. The idea is to destroy him for good. What did Smith do? This report states that Smith put himself in the hands of the convicts. He followed the procedure laid down by the regulations. These troubles have always been treated by either the deputy warden or the warden going down and talking to the convicts. According to the report, Smith was a terrible coward and did many things he should not have done. I do not know Inspector Smith because I never had more than a couple of dozen words with him, but I like to see British fair play. He was doing just what had always been done; he went down to meet these fellows after having been sent for by the deputy warden. What happened when he talked to these men? They went back to their cells. Has similar action been taken in other cases? I should like to quote from Recollections of a Prison Governor by Lieutenant Colonel C. E. F. Rich, as follows:

> It was at this stage of the affair that I, trembling in every limb with blue funk, sailed into the middle of a seething and blasphemous mass of convicts armed with sticks and stones, all only waiting for one of their number to throw a brick or strike a blow, when the fat would immediately have been in the fire. However, I managed somehow to conceal the fear I felt, and, with a flow of language which I flatter myself was equal to anything that even my practised charges could muster, I bluffed the assemblage to such good purpose that they actually got into some sort of order.

If Smith had not settled this trouble as he did he might have been criticized. This report goes on to heap further indignities upon Smith by saying that he obligated the superintendent. Such a statement is unfair. The only thing Inspector Smith promised was that these men would get a hearing. The report states that the officials were all in a funk, that they were amazed and dazed and did not know what they were doing. What amazed them? This thing had been going on for three days and they had been under the greatest stress and strain. This man came in and started to find fault and began to use language such as "God damn your soul."

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ROSS: I am using the words exactly as they were said. If they are not true, they can be refuted, but they will not be refuted by the men who were there and heard them. Similar language was used to the clerks and everybody else.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Was he addressing convicts or guards?

Mr. ROSS: He never went near the convicts.

An hon. MEMBER: Who was that, Ormond?

Mr. ROSS: It was Ormond, and that was the language he used. Then he goes on and reviles the deputy warden, a man with twenty-eight years' of service. He charges him with two or three things, such as being down in the yard with a shotgun on his shoulder. Anything to heap indignity upon these fellows. These men have never been given a chance to reply to these charges. He states that the deputy warden changed this man Behan without orders. The deputy warden absolutely denies this charge, but he cannot get a hearing.

Mr. Chairman, I am treating this matter with some heat, but these people are my constituents. This matter does not affect any other hon. member in this house. These questions will be answered and the answer will be given at election time. I am going to see that these men are given a hearing and permitted to state their case. The report states that these things date back for ten years. Every year we have had rumours of prospective riots but the men in charge have handled them in such a manner that they never occurred. To accomplish this result they adopted the procedure now condemned by the superintendent. I have never been a worshipper or follower of Hughes or Ponsford but let me say that no riots occurred under Hughes and Ponsford. How can he say that these things date back ten years? On reading the files I find that the ages of the men brought up for trial were twenty years, twenty-one years, twenty-two years and so on. Where were those boys ten years ago? On their mother's knees. What is the use of talking of ten years ago?

He then goes on to speak of firearms. Apparently he does not know that in the interests of economy the government took off the armourer and these men had to take care of the firearms themselves. I am not interested in the communists or other bad elements in the penitentiaries, but I predict that if firearms are supplied freely and these men are instructed to fire just as quickly as they can pull the bolt and load, there is going to be trouble just as sure as day follows night. When it does occur it will be very difficult to explain, because public opinion is against the taking of life by firearms. The superintendent puts all these things down as causes for the trouble, but he has not struck the real cause. In my opinion the real cause of the trouble has been the failure to fill vacant positions. The treasury board say that they do not feel like paying out the money to fill these positions. As far back as the regime of the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), Ponsford was kept for years without a deputy warden and a chief inspector. It is quite true there were acting officials, but an acting official has not the power and authority of one who is duly appointed. There were no outbreaks until this man came along, and from then on there was a continuous trail of them. I blame the superintendent for these riots, and I charge him with being the cause.

Mr. STANLEY: The new superintendent?

Mr. ROSS: The hon. member does not know anything about penitentiaries. When he rises to ask a question, I will answer it. When the superintendent made his first visit to that institution, there were six or seven men there who had been connected with the riot in the stone gang. Those fellows were very bad actors and they were being kept in isolation. He released all but one. Most of them have been put down now by his own official and representative as the ringleaders in the last riot. Under an experienced person those men would not have been released until a better disposition of their case had been made. Fortunately one man not named was not released; if he had been there would have been bloodshed, because he has not yet taken part in anything without blood being shed.

When the superintendent arrived on the occasion of the second riot, he was to have heard those convicts, but instead of doing that, I am told that he spent his time searching the criminal code for some provision under which he could prosecute the mayor of the city of Kingston. Surely no government official has any right to go into a man's private residence and quarrel with him; nor has one the right to go into a private citizen's residence at midnight, though this was not done in this case, but in another. The citizens of this country have some rights.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Did the superintendent do that?

Mr. ROSS: The superintendent visited the mayor. These prisoners were promised a hearing, but though time was valuable then, several days elapsed without any hearing. They asked that a deputation be permitted to see him, but he refused. The deputy warden kept warning him that these men were getting restless, out of hand, and could not be controlled. Then he did hear one or two of them separately, and the outbreak occurred. No one but himself was responsible for the second riot.

I pointed out to the officials at the top that there was danger ahead; that this penitentiary was so crowded that men were sleeping in the corridors. At the time ninety men were sleeping in the corridors with all possible means of contact and nothing yet has been done in the way of lessening that evil. There is something at the bottom of all this trouble and I have repeatedly pointed out what I think it is. Let me illustrate: On one occasion a boy fifteen years of age and wearing knee breeches, was brought into the penitentiary accompanied by a six-footer. What was the trouble? This man had arrived at the boy's home on the bay of Quinte. The boy knew no crime, no wrong. It is true that his father was not all he should have been, but the boy had never gone wrong. He had a dog and a sleigh, and the man coaxed him one day to hitch his dog to the sleigh and come along with him. The boy escorted the man across the bay to a summer camp and some things were stolen from it. Along with this man that fifteen year old boy was sent to Portsmouth penitentiary for two or three years. This boy did not know that he had done wrong, and when he arrived at the institution in those knee breeches, he burst into tears. What was his reason? "I am afraid", he said, "that nobody will feed my dog." That boy knew no crime until he got into that penitentiary; now he is there on his fourth commitment and he stands to-day as one of the ringleaders of this riot. Who is responsible for such a situation?

Mr. STANLEY: The present superintendent.

Mr. ROSS: Don't be so smart. If the hon. member cannot talk sense, let him be silent. Who is responsible for a condition of that kind? That boy is now languishing in the Kingston gaol waiting to be tried as one of the ringleaders. Let us get down to the basic causes and stop these young boys from being sent to penitentiaries, and in that way the number of criminals will be lessened. Once a boy enters this institution, if he is allowed to finish his sentence, he is done. This superintendent comes in without experience and writes up the causes of riots, when the penitentiaries are filled to overflowing with boys of seventeen, eighteen, twenty, twenty-two years of age; these are boys who are first sent to a reformatory and then, if they escape from there, they are sent to the penitentiary. From then on they are finished; they are in the professional class. Such facts mean more to me than the swallowing of a wishy-washy report such as the one before us. Had this superintendent waited until he had gotten his feet and learned conditions, I am satisfied he would have written a report far different from this one. But no matter what my good friends behind me think, this is my constituency; I am responsible for it; hon. members do not understand conditions, and if they knew the actions of the superintendent when he visited the penitentiary; if they knew other things that should be brought out into the open, they would come to the conclusion, just as I have, that he is not a fit and proper person for this position.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not expect in the committee stage of this bill we were going to go into the question of the penitentiary riots, but there are a few statements of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) which I can answer without the papers which I should otherwise have had before me. I have been aware for some time that the hon. member for Kingston was not very complimentary to the gentleman who was selected and put into office on August 1 of last year as Superintendent of Penitentiaries of the Dominion of Canada. I am just as fully aware from my hon. friend himself that he was just as unfavourably impressed by the superintendent who for ten years preceded the present appointee. Perhaps some day we may get a superintendent exactly in accordance with the ideas of my hon. friend, but it is evident we did not succeed in the choice of the late superintendent and we have not, or the Civil Service Commission has not succeeded in selecting a suitable man in the present instance, according to the views of the hon. member for Kingston.

My hon. friend mentioned a serious affair which occurred in the Portsmouth penitentiary in the month of August, 1931. A very serious plot, involving some six or seven dangerous prisoners, was discovered through one of those implicated getting cold feet, as the saying is in the penitentiary, and informing the guards or the warden of what was contemplated for the following day. The prisoners were all immediately locked up; a search was made; certain knives and other dangerous weapons were discovered and the plot was frustrated. That was a year before the present superintendent took office. Under the regime of former Warden Ponsford and Superintendent Hughes these seven or eight prisoners were confined in isolated cells. When the new superintendent took office and made his first visit to the penitentiary some time in August last year he made inquiry as to who occupied the punishment cells, and was informed in regard to these seven or eight prisoners and the length of time they had been in punishment cells. I understand that after consultation with the officials the superintendent ordered the release of six or seven of these prisoners, leaving only one man, known in that prison as two-gun O'Brien, in the special confinement cells. My hon. friend the member for Kingston suggests that the release of these seven or eight prisoners by the superintendent after they had been over a year in confinement precipitated the riot in Kingston penitentiary. All I can tell my friend is that his suggestion is absurd.

He has criticized the superintendent's report on the happenings at Kingston made after a full investigation of the facts. There is no doubt that the trouble had been brewing for a long time. Matters in regard to the penitentiary had not been very satisfactory for a considerable time before I took office. I know that when I did take office there was constant friction as between Warden Ponsford and Superintendent Hughes, and there was a line-up of partisans and sympathizers among the officers of the penitentiary supporting, on the one side, the superintendent, and on the other side, the warden. I had deputations on behalf of the warden, and my hon. friend from Kingston came in with him, and I had also deputations on behalf of the superintendent, and had to hear his story. I came to the conclusion that there was a condition existing there which could only be cured by the removal of somebody, and thereupon I asked for the retirement of both the superintendent and warden. I think my hon. friend from Kingston approved my action in that regard.

It became necessary then to appoint a new warden and a new superintendent, and instructions went forward to the Civil Service Commission regarding these appointments. Pending the appointment of a warden, one of the inspectors was sent from Ottawa to take charge of the Kingston penitentiary. The acting warden was Inspector Smith. I am inclined to think, having regard to all the circumstances, that Acting Warden Smith acted the part of a brave man during that riot.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe he was in an exceedingly dangerous position, and I sympathize with him in the predicament in which he found himself. But where the superintendent has found that acting warden Smith was not quite as efficient as he should have been lies for the most part in the fact that as early as the twenty-eighth day of July preceding the riots, which took place in October, a document was found in that prison, clearly the work of a fairly well educated man, practically laying out a scheme for a revolt. That document had evidently been to some extent compiled from the book written by ex-warden Lawes of Sing Sing entitled Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing. There are passages in that document which are almost word for word from the Sing Sing book. The document was eight or ten pages long, and its concluding paragraph was, "This is copy number so and so. Pass it on to friends you can trust."

Acting warden Smith, I think, rather carelessly placed that document on his file in his office, and left it there and took no action in regard to it. That was in July. Later, in the month of September, through information obtained from prisoners in writing, the acting warden again received information that there was going to be serious trouble in the very near future, giving him particulars of what was going to happen, giving him information that had been passed out of the prison by certain guards, giving him notice of where outside influence was at work on behalf of the prisoners and for the purpose of a disturbance, giving him details of a plot whereby the walls were to be scaled by scaling ladders brought up on the river side, and various matters of that kind. Again, acting warden Smith took no action in the matter. He simply filed the document and awaited events. I agree with the superintendent—

Mr. GRAY: What the minister has just recited is not contained in the report.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not sure, but I can produce the documents, the evidence of acting warden Smith in regard to the statement I have made.

Mr. GRAY: I have no doubt, but it should have been in the report.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I read the documents and I know what I am talking about. Then came the disturbance in the month of October. My hon. friend from Kingston, in a very emphatic way, announces that in his opinion Superintendent Ormond was the man who had caused these riots. The idea is, I think, thoroughly ridiculous.

I might mention some other points that I just caught in passing. My hon. friend from Kingston seems to think that no guard should be removed unless he is given what he called a trial similar to that of a court martial. Now the law of this country, and I think of every British country, in respect to all servants of the crown will be found in chapter 1 of the revised statutes of Canada. Every servant of the crown is appointed and removable at pleasure. That applies to every member of the service. It is possible, without giving any reasons whatever, to retire any member of the civil service. If he is retired for cause, if he is retired for misconduct of any kind, he loses his rights; he forfeits his pension and anything that is payable to him by way of retiring allowance. But if he is retired as in the cases mentioned by my hon. friend from Kingston, for the greater efficiency of the service, he loses no rights; he gets his retiring allowance. That is the way in which the officials spoken of by my hon. friend were retired.

There were reasons given in every case. I live here in Ottawa. I occupy an office in the East block. I have paid officers to advise me in regard to matters of this kind. Reports come to me from the warden and from the superintendent, detailing the offences, if offences there be, or detailing the reasons why such and such a guard should be removed or retired. These men know the situation. They are paid to do so. They have examined the case and made a report, sometimes a very lengthy one. I have to study this report, and I have to come to the best conclusion I can on the evidence.

My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Reid) this afternoon brought up the case of some guards out in New Westminster. I have time and time again gone over a long file in connection with each of these cases. All the dismissals to which he refers took place before I was minister. They were all approved by my predecessor. My hon. friend asks me now to override the position which the former officers and the former Minister of Justice took. I have not been able to do so. Similarly, in the case of the guards who have been discharged at Kingston, in every instance there was a reason, and a substantial reason. Many of the guards were most leniently dealt with when they were retired for the greater efficiency of the service. I do not know that it is necessary for me to put upon the pages of Hansard the evidence and reports, I do not intend to do so, nor do I intend to mention the names. But complaint after complaint having come to me from my hon. friend from Kingston, I have diligently gone over these reports, I have questioned the superintendent personally in regard to them, and the only conclusion I can come to is that I should follow the recommendations that he has made, and for the greater efficiency of the service I have concurred in the recommendation that these guards be retired. None of the guards is known to me personally; not a single member of the staff of the Kingston penitentiary is known to me personally. I do not suppose any of them were known to the superintendent until recently because he never was in the penitentiary until August of last year. But on his advice I have approved these retirements. In no case under the Civil Service Act, as far as I know, is a man entitled to trial by court martial when he is relieved from office as suggested by the hon. member for Kingston. I grant you that under that act if a man is charged with political partisanship the custom has been established that he shall not be removed until he has had a fair investigation. But such is not the law that applies in the case of the penitentiaries of this country. No man has a right to a formal trial who is appointed only "at the pleasure of His Majesty," as the saying is.

My hon. friend from Kingston takes a strong exception to the report made by the superintendent—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): At that point may I ask whether the dismissed guards themselves know what the cause of dismissal is?

Mr. GUTHRIE: They say they did not but I have not found any who have come to see me who did not know. I had one in to see me the day before yesterday; he knew why he was dismissed. If the case my hon. friend refers to is just a case of "a piece of paper"—I am not sure it is, but he says a certain guard was dismissed on account of a piece of paper—all I can say without giving names, is that the piece of paper constituted a very serious piece of evidence.

Mr. ROSS: May I say it is not the case? The hon. gentleman knows the case; I went to him—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Oh, that is the old case?

Mr. ROSS: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was years ago—I was only a boy when that happened; I do not remember anything about it. That was fourteen or fifteen years ago, long before my time.

Mr. ROSS: And, now, fourteen years after, the man is refused a job.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not speaking of that. I refer to the case where one of the most notorious convicts in the penitentiary, when questioned by the superintendent, would not answer candidly until he knew whether there was a letter for him in the warden's office. One of the guards who was sent to find out came back; a large sheet of paper with the word "no", written in letters four or five inches high, was turned towards the prisoner who could see what was on it, and he immediately changed his evidence. The letter had not arrived. The prisoner was expecting something. The guard was let out. That is only one of the circumstances connected with his dismissal. I thought when my hon. friend from Kingston was speaking, that this was the case he referred to as "a piece of paper." The other I fancy is a case that took place fourteen or fifteen years ago, and while I have read the report made upon it I do not think it lies in my power to change the finding at this late date.

Another thing my hon. friend waxed rather merry upon is the conclusion of this report. He pointed out that everything the prisoners asked has now been granted. Of course that is an exaggeration, a few requests were granted. The question of cigarette papers arose in this way: up until 1923 prisoners had cigarette papers in the penitentiaries. For some reason they were then cut off, and it has always been a grievance among prisoners in all the penitentiaries that while they were allowed pipes and tobacco they were not allowed cigarette papers. They got their supply of tobacco and would make cigarettes with the usual toilet paper that is supplied. Last spring complaints became quite common in regard to the toilet paper; it was porous, they said, and would not smoke as a cigarette. From that time on complaint after complaint was made about the want of cigarette papers. During his first visit to the penitentiary in August, 1931, the superintendent discussed with acting warden Smith that question of cigarette papers. He was inclined to recommend it; he consulted the various wardens in regard to it, and I believe all but one approved an allowance of cigarette papers. One did not approve. The matter had not been decided but was about to be decided when the first riot took place in Kingston. Now prisoners are allowed a moderate supply of cigarette papers. That was the first complaint of nearly all the prisoners who were examined. There were over seven hundred prisoners whose evidence I have read, and ninety per cent of them, placed the want of cigarette papers as their first complaint.

After cigarette papers I think the largest number of complaints would be on the question of cropping the hair, a reference to which caused so much merriment in the chamber. Prisoners object to cropping as an indignity. They complain that when their relatives come to see them it is a great indignity that they have to appear with a close crop. In some prisons in England now they allow the military hair cut, and the military hair cut is now permitted in the penitentiaries of Canada, in order to remove what the prisoners describe as a great indignity.

Lack of recreation and amusement was a common complaint, I am inclined to think that there was some ground for complaint in that respect. Exercise and recreation hours were not utilized as they could have been in what I would call useful exercises. The new superintendent has taken that matter up and has increased the time allowance for exercise and the method of exercise, and the reports I get from the wardens throughout Canada are that there has been a great deal of improvement in regard to the exercise, and far less complaint.

Lack of newspapers and magazines has been an outstanding grievance. In nearly all countries, as far as I know, the rule prohibiting newspapers in prisons prevails, although in Sing Sing and some American prisons these are permitted. There was recommendation by a commission in this country some ten years ago that weekly newspapers be permitted in limited numbers. That recommendation was never adopted. Magazines are permitted, certain classes of books are permitted. One great complaint is that the magazines when given to the prisoners have been mutilated by the censor, and all the interesting articles, they say, have been cut out. Newspapers have not yet been granted.

Insufficient lighting in the cells—I think there was a real grievance. I think they had only what they call a ten candle power lamp light. We have increased that to twenty-five so that in the long hours of darkness during the winter particularly they will have a longer period for reading.

Harsh treatment by officers—there were complaints from many prisoners in that respect, and we tried to verify them as well as we could. Many of them, I have no doubt, were exaggerated, and some fictitious, but others may have some foundation in fact.

Compulsory church attendance is alleged as a grievance by probably fifty per cent of those who gave evidence or made complaints to the superintendent. One of the inspectors said that compulsory church attendance was really part of the punishment and should be continued. But a number of prisoners take strong exception to church attendance and say they will refuse to go, that they do not enjoy the services, that they do them no good, that they do not believe in what they hear. Compulsory church attendance, particularly in the Protestant chapel, has been a serious question not only in Kingston but in other penitentiaries.

Insufficient medical and dental treatment are complaints that occur in the statements of many prisoners. Some complained of lack of toilet articles, combs and mirrors and the like; some even wanted a canteen or shop where they could buy these articles. We have now allowed them each a comb; as we are allowing the hair to grow, of course a comb will be necessary. Mirrors are not allowed on account of the danger of the glass, and there are many complaints on this score. Others want knives and forks, but these are not allowed on account of the danger in the use of them by dangerous men. All these are very serious complaints on the part of the prisoners. They do not think they are laughing matters.

More frequent letters—we have allowed a letter a month instead of every two months. We have doubled the number of visits from one every two months to one a month by relatives or close friends. Lack of paroles has been complained of by eight or ten of the seven hundred; the objection to steam cooked food is a common complaint, and the monotony of prison diet is another. While these may appear rather trivial to us they are very serious matters with the prisoners concerned. They look upon them very differently, and these constitute the chief complaints which were made by prisoners in regard to Kingston penitentiary. I think these comprise almost all the complaints that were said to have caused the riot, and as will be seen we have righted some of these grievances, but many others we have had to refuse.

The other details as to the treatment of prisoners at Kingston or related by the hon. member for Kingston caused some merriment in the house. For the last twenty-five years there has been a per diem allowance in every penitentiary in Canada for Christmas entertainment, and no one understands this better than my hon. friend from Kingston. If Christmas cards were sent to these prisoners I fancy it must have been done by some outside party; certainly so far as my knowledge goes they were not sent by the department or by any official of the department. There are people who do such things, particularly at Christmas time, some furnish gramophones, some furnish radios and so on. This surely exhibits a true Christmas spirit. During the few days at Christmas there is some relaxation of strict prison discipline; there is and has been for the last twenty-five years a per diem allowance in every penitentiary in this country to provide extra rations at Christmas time. My hon. friend from Kingston cannot blame this ancient custom on the new warden or the new superintendent.

I do not know that there are any other matters I need mention at the present time. I had expected most of these questions to be raised when the estimates came up, when I might have been more fully prepared. Perhaps just here I might say a word with regard to the brokers at Collins Bay. These brokers were sent to Collins Bay under Superintendent Hughes and acting warden Jackson, who was at Collins Bay; it was not done under the present superintendent at all. For some reason or other Collins Bay has been known as a preferred class penitentiary. That name was adopted by Superintendent Hughes with no authority whatever except his own before I became minister; Collins Bay appears in the report of the superintendent and in the debates of the House of Commons under the name "preferred class penitentiary." They had a sign painted and put up at the institution, to which I see some reference has been made in the newspapers, and of course I am blamed both for the selection of the name and the erection of the sign. But this was all done before my time, and when I heard that the name "preferred class' had been adopted both at Collins Bay and at St. Vincent de Paul, I concluded that such was not a very appropriate name; I ordered the name changed and the sign taken down, and this was done a long time ago. The new name is Collins Bay penitentiary, and the so-called preferred class at St. Vincent de Paul is now the Laval penitentiary; neither is now known as a preferred class penitentiary. They were simply construction camps, and Collins Bay is in large measure a construction camp still. We are building it with prison labour, and it will not be completed for some years. There are no cells at Collins Bay such as we have in other penitentiaries; there are wire entanglements instead of the stone walls of other prisons. When a man's conduct in Kingston penitentiary has been approved by the warden he may be selected for transfer to Collins Bay if his services can be utilized there as a stone mason, a carpenter, a trench digger, a clerk or anything else. The warden submits a list of names to the superintendent and the superintendent makes out a list of names and numbers and nothing else and submits this list to the minister. I have seen 115 names on one list and 160 names on another. Then, on the warrant signed by the minister, these prisoners are transferred. The minister knows nothing about the individual prisoners; the warden and the superintendent make the selection. These men are then transferred from Kingston to Collins Bay. Of course they are looked upon as more or less of the peaceful or trusty class rather than the dangerous class of prisoner because it is not so easy to care for them at Collins Bay; there are many more opportunities for escape. When they get to Collins Bay they are put at some useful work.

Inspector Jackson was the acting warden at Collins Bay, and my hon. friend from Kingston has alleged that Jackson allowed these brokers privileges that were not allowed other prisoners. I have heard that charge made before by my hon. friend from Kingston, and I made diligent inquiry of Inspector Jackson. I am inclined to think, however, that I did not succeed in getting all the truth as a result of the inquiries I made, and subsequently the time came when in my judgment Inspector Jackson should be removed, so for the greater efficiency of the service he was asked to retire.

I do not know the particulars as to the cases cited by my hon. friend from Kingston with regard to these brokers, but I have been assured that the hours of labour, the clothing, the food, the privileges and the like are precisely the same in both penitentiaries. I do know this, that in looking over the documents in connection with the transfers from Kingston to Collins Bay, in one list of eighteen who were to be transferred sixteen of the prisoners asked to be left at Kingston, and the reason given was that the work was too hard at Collins Bay. Other individual cases have come to my notice of prisoners who, finding their names set down for transfer, have asked to be retained at Kingston. Many untrue and nonsensical stories have been published in the newspapers with regard to the easy work and the good times enjoyed by the brokers and other prisoners at Collins Bay. Such tales were absolutely unwarranted. There may have been lapses; I do not say that I am fully satisfied with the result of the inquiries I have made in respect of the treatment of the brokers and their families by the then acting warden of the prison, and I came to the conclusion that it would be better for the penitentiary service if I asked acting warden Jackson to retire, and I did so.

When the estimates come up I will have all the papers before me and can go more fully into any questions that may be asked. I did not think these questions would arise on this bill, but perhaps it is just as well that these matters should be brought up now; it may save time later.

Now I should like to say just a word with regard to juvenile offenders. If I understood my hon. friend from Kingston aright he said there was a fifteen year old boy in knee breeches, a first offender, who had been sentenced to Kingston. That must have been done by one of the judges or magistrates of this country; it was not done by the superintendent of penitentiaries or the minister. If the boy was a first offender he should not have been sent to Kingston at all; our law provides otherwise. If he was sent there as a first offender he should have been removed at once on complaint to the attorney general at Toronto, who has available prisons, homes and reformatories for the purpose of looking after youths under sixteen years of age. I must say, however, that after a lad is sixteen and has been sent to a reformatory or a provincial prison and associates with the ordinary run of prisoners, he very often gets into serious crime before he is eighteen years of age, so he may be sent to Kingston for a fairly long term. We have lads at Portsmouth now who are serving their fourth and fifth terms but who are not yet twenty years of age. It is not safe to put them in ordinary reformatories; they escape at once, and at a very early age they become what are called hardened criminals.

It is a very difficult problem to deal with boys of that kind. The idea behind the construction of the new prisons at Collins Bay and St. Vincent de Paul is that when they are completed we will be able to segregate, so far as possible, the youthful prisoners from the old offenders. However, one great difficulty will be that many of the youthful prisoners are themselves old offenders. In the prosecutions which are to take place at Kingston in connection with the recent riots it is quite true, as my hon. friend from Kingston says, that a large proportion of the offenders are juvenile prisoners; I do not mean youths, but men under thirty years of age. There are to be twenty-nine prisoners prosecuted in connection with that riot. They will come up in June at the court of general session of the peace. That is done because one of the terms of capitulation, as it is called, when the riot was at its height and Warden Smith's life was actually threatened, was the promise, in reply to the question whether they would get a fair trial if they went back to work and stopped the row, that they would receive such a trial; and acting warden Smith's idea of their language was that they meant a trial by the courts of the country and not a trial by the warden's court in the penitentiary. It is for that reason in particular that we are having the men prosecuted in the courts of the land at the general sessions of the peace.

I may observe how similar the conditions were in the riots in Dartmoor in England and in Kingston here. In Dartmoor the same disturbance seems to have arisen, the same actions were taken by the prisoners, with the same results so far as damage is concerned; in each case one man was injured and there was a property damage of about $3,000. In Dartmoor there were thirty-one prosecutions of ringleaders and thirty convictions. I do not know how the cases will proceed here, but there are twenty-nine to be prosecuted in Kingston in June next. In St. Vincent de Paul the situation, from the point of view of damage, was much more serious than in Kingston, the loss being estimated at about $50,000, whereas in Kingston it is about $3,000. In St. Vincent de Paul there were fewer convicts engaged in the disturbance, but some elements of the trouble were more serious than in Kingston; they set fire to the premises, using gasoline, and deliberately cut the hose to prevent anyone putting out the fire, and they waved the red flag, calling upon the convicts to follow the revolution. There are only twelve prosecutions before the criminal courts in Quebec. In Dorchester, where the affair was minor as compared with the other two, there are only four or five prosecutions, and the property damage there was slight. Without any loss of life we have come through these three affairs and while the property damage in Montreal has been serious, in the other two places it was negligible. Considering the overcrowding in the penitentiaries, and considering other questions in regard to the guards whom we have had, we have been very fortunate in getting out of the difficulty as well as we have.

There may have been mistakes, and some of the staff may be open to serious criticism, but I am satisfied that the criticism levelled by my hon. friend from Kingston at the new superintendent is not justified. I think the new superintendent has done exceptionally well during the eight or nine months he has been in charge. All the reports I get from the penitentiary are daily more and more satisfactory, chiefly on account of the reforms that have been put into force by Superintendent Ormond. He will gain by experience; about that there is no doubt. Any man in such a position would. But he is diligent, careful and painstaking, and will prove a very successful superintendent in the end.

Mr. ROSS: I think the minister has been fair in his reply, but there is one thing I want to point out and that is that when differences of opinion did exist such as existed when the matter was brought to his notice in regard to the brokers, the least he might have done was to go and see for himself. But he never went. Simply swallowing the report of an official is what I complain of. I never meant that he was responsible for the brokers' state; I do not think for one moment he would stand for such a thing. But I did refer to the matter because it had been reported to me and he admits now that he did not make any investigation himself. I am positive of the truth of the statement made to me; I know that the conditions indicated in that sworn statement are absolutely true.

As to the cigarette papers, if I understood the minister rightly he said that cigarette papers were once given. That is not so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have been so informed; up to 1923 they were allowed.

Mr. ROSS: Neither cigarettes nor tobacco came in until 1922 or 1923. This followed the investigation of the commission, to whose report no attention whatever was given. At that time there were many complaints, and the great thing that these guards complain of today is what is called trafficking in the penitentiary. We all condemn it. The man who goes out there not knowing what he is going for, has this tacked on his back, that he was trafficking.

I did not ask for a court martial, although I believe it is a fair method. The private in the army is the king's servant just as much as a guard in a penitentiary, and he is given a fair hearing; he is given a chance to deny any charge that is made against him. The minister refers to the proceeding in connection with the paper that has been mentioned. A certain guard in the penitentiary was fireman, and a woman came along with a paper bearing an address on it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is the old case my hon. friend is referring to.

Mr. ROSS: Yes, and I think I have the right to refer to it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, certainly.

Mr. ROSS: It shows how unfair the whole thing is. This piece of paper which this woman carried had an address written on it. The address was that of this guard, who had not been there for six months. He refused to have anything to do with the matter and the woman went away. She came back. This piece of paper was taken, and the only thing we have is the evidence of the man Duncan and some others, stool pigeons, spies and spotters in the penitentiary. There were affidavits from these fellows, but this man never knew what he was put out for. He found later, however, that this piece of paper was taken by the mounted police to a handwriting expert, who said it was his writing. All we did was to ask for that piece of paper. If the writing on it was the fireman's, then we have nothing more to say; but the man denies the whole thing and the circumstances bear him out. They show that he had not for over six months been at this place. We asked for this piece of paper, and if it does not bear out this man's story, a man who has lost his job after fourteen years, we have nothing further to say. I submit that it was only the fair and the British thing to do, to produce the paper, notwithstanding what clause 1 has to say.

This is what these men complain of. They are stamped as men who have been trafficking, and in this instance the man absolutely denies it; he declares that he can prove conclusively that the charge against him is false. But he cannot get a chance to establish his innocence. It seems to me that if they have evidence then the man should be told what it is.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The man has been told; I told him personally.

Mr. ROSS: In a great many cases the man goes to the warden and the warden says he knows nothing about it. A man was dismissed the other day and the warden of the penitentiary offered to give him the highest kind of recommendation, because the dismissal had been made without his sanction. I think the committee will see that I actually have some reason for the position I am taking in this matter. This paper which was found is used as something against Smith. It was called Barbarism in Civilization, and the figure 26 appeared upon it. It was not as if this paper had been circulating around; they got it and nothing like it has appeared since. There was nothing at all to that, but it is pasted all over this report as being something awful. There is no doubt that it was the work of a communist or someone of that kind; I do not dispute that, but it should not be taken as sufficient cause for the dismissal of an inspector who was doing his duty to the best of his ability.

I am not going to discuss this matter any further. In our part of the country we feel that a great deal of damage has been done and considerable expense will be incurred by the community. The rioting on the second day could have been prevented. A member of the permanent forces wanted to go in and stop it but his offer was refused by the superintendent. I have been in touch with this penitentiary for many years. I came down here and complained about the treatment given to Warden Ponsford, which I thought was very unfair. He was told that if he would apply for two months' leave of absence he would be put back on at the time of the elections. When his leave came through he found it was for three months and no one could be found who would admit having changed it. He was practically thrown out. Ponsford was no friend of mine; I never got and never asked a favour of him. I thought the treatment unfair and I came down here to protest. I will say for the minister that he received us and I think, after all, used perhaps the best judgment in the settlement of that case. However, the treatment Ponsford received was unfair and I came down here to fight for him.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be quite obvious that this committee cannot form a clear conclusion from the details which have been presented during this debate. I submit that from the statements made by the minister and the charges levelled by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross), we would be warranted in urging upon the government the absolute necessity of the appointment of an independent commission to investigate the whole question of our treatment of criminals. I agree very largely with the hon. member for Kingston in his criticism of the report upon the riots at Kingston penitentiary. It seems to me that the attitude of the superintendent is simply that of adopting repressive measures. He stated that there was only occasional foot and arm drill, that twice a year each guard fired eight shots and that during the annual drill a certain number of guards were put through some sort of perfunctory fire drill. He states further that shortly after the end of the late war a fair sprinkling of guards were brought into the service who had had military training of some type or other. The attention of the committee has been drawn to the rather peculiar statement of the superintendent with regard to the inability of the ordinary soldier to become an efficient guard. I do not want to go into that matter, but I would say that a soldier's training, whether he be a private or an officer, is not necessarily such as to fit him to be a guard or other official in a penal institution. Had I the time I would have liked to submit some memoranda which have come to me—copies have been sent to the minister—dealing with the whole question of the treatment of criminals. One was from the Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association, another from the Social Service Council of Ontario, and so on.

I think it is high time that we in Canada followed a line of procedure similar to that followed in Great Britain and many countries of Europe. In those countries a very careful investigation has been made not only of the details of the administration of the penitentiaries but of the general question of penology. Following these investigations in Great Britain and elsewhere, men have been appointed to take charge of these institutions who had a good knowledge of sociology, psychology and penology. These men have a wide knowledge of the type of treatment that had proved to be the best in other institutions, and they have brought into effect certain new types of treatment which have proved very effective.

I do not think that any hon. member who has a boy of his own could listen to the instance quoted by the hon. member for Kingston of a fifteen year old lad who had become a hardened criminal without feeling that that statement alone was sufficient to warrant our asking for a royal commission to inquire into the whole situation. The minister himself has had to admit that after all these years we have not as yet succeeded in segregating the youthful offenders. It is high time we had a thorough and far-reaching investigation of these matters. The minister has admitted also that there is considerable overcrowding. There has not been a very great increase in our population in recent years and this overcrowding would seem to suggest that our mode of treating criminals has not been very effective—we have not been able to reform very many and we are creating more. We are taking little trouble to discover the causes of crime and to eliminate those causes. In this scientific age we ought not to continue simply to use the old repressive measures. A commission should be appointed to be composed of men of high ideals possessing a wide experience of such matters. The riots at Kingston, although serious enough are a comparatively small matter when considered in the light of the big problem involved. This commission should investigate the whole matter and report to this house as to what steps should be taken in the future to solve this great problem.

Some hon. members may remember the commission set up years ago to investigate Kingston penitentiary. I do not think the recommendations made by that commission were followed in any regard. I had the greatest difficulty some months ago in securing a copy of their report. They made some recommendations but everything was forgotten. Some years ago the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) in two successive sessions made the plea that prisoners, especially married prisoners, should be paid for work performed. That resolution was adopted by the house, but practically nothing has been done in the matter.

These men are unable to defend themselves and every precaution should be taken to ensure that their interests are safeguarded. It is not a question of this or that little thing, such as cigarette papers or the providing of some toilet necessity; the trouble goes a great deal deeper than that. Moreover I do not believe those causes which are assigned by the men could, under the conditions under which the investigation was made, reveal the real reasons for the riot. These real reasons could be ascertained only by men of scientific training and with some knowledge of the general character of criminals of this type. I would plead with the minister and the government that now the report has been presented on the immediate question of riots in the penitentiaries, the government would give consideration to the appointment of a commission that before the next session of the house would bring in a report which would place the treatment of criminals on an altogether different basis.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I intend to discuss certain features of the report of General Ormond when the estimates of the penitentiaries come up for discussion. I may say immediately, however, that I agree with the hon. member for Kingston City as to the character of the report, which is certainly a very remarkable one. The superintendent's conclusions are:

1. Insufficient supervision covering a period of not less than ten years.
2. Insufficient and inefficient inspection covering not less than a period of ten years.

I have not been able to find out how General Ormond has come to these two conclusions. They are based on nothing that can be ascertained anywhere in the report or in the documents which have been submitted to us. They seem to be only the yielding to the temptation of blaming somebody else—those who preceded him. I have not the pleasure of being acquainted with General Ormond, but he seems to have been rather unfortunate. After he was appointed last August he paid three visits, one to each of the three penitentiaries, Dorchester, St. Vincent de Paul and Portsmouth. He has been unfortunate because riots took place in those three penitentiaries to which he had paid visits and where he had interviewed convicts. My information was to the effect that he lacked experience of penal institutions, and if my information is correct, he interviewed the convicts in the absence of the wardens or other officers, something which is never done. Apparently he promised the convicts many of the things for which they had been asking, such as cigarette papers and so on, and when the promises were not implemented, the riots took place.

Let me tell the Minister of Justice that, like the hon. member for Kingston City, I have no reason to take up the cudgels for either General Hughes or Warden Ponsford. They were not the appointees of the administration of which I was a member. I found both of them there when we took office. It is true, as the Minister of Justice has said, there was no love wasted between the two, as I saw, but together they made a pretty good team so far as the administration of the penitentiary was concerned, and as the hon. member for Kingston City has said, there was in Kingston under Ponsford and General Hughes no outbreak which could be called a riot. It was when this wonder from Calgary took charge of the penitentiary that the riots broke out. I shall have something else to say about the matter when the estimates are taken up.

May I say also that three or four years ago a commission was appointed by some states of the United States to study prison regulations and conditions in Canada. They visited and spent some time at Portsmouth penitentiary and elsewhere, and their report was that it was the best managed institution they had visited in either the United States or elsewhere, so it was not as bad as is depicted. I have sympathy for the Minister of Justice in the administration of that branch of his department. I agree with him that the minister cannot himself ascertain which man should be placed in a position as guard or otherwise, and has to trust to a large extent to the reports of the superintendent and the wardens, the men who are on the spot and who are responsible for peace and order in the penitentiaries. The minister must have as officers men whom he trusts, and apparently he has great confidence in his present superintendent. I hope his confidence is not ill placed and that the new superintendent will prove his ability further than by that famous report of his.

Mr. GRAY: I cannot let clause one, dealing with the governor in council appointing the superintendent, pass without replying briefly to the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Stewart) who a few moments ago stated that because he or the government had not received protests from the Canadian Legion, it ill became those of us who sat in the House of Commons to raise the question that was raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) with respect to the wording of the report made by General Ormond. The hon. member for Quebec South this afternoon quoted a protest from the Canadian Legion at Kingston. I desire to place on record a protest presented to the government by the Ottawa branch of the legion, one of the strongest of the branches, composed of many returned soldiers, and one which has perhaps done more to relieve distress in its own city than has any other branch. When the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) attempts to defend this report and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) tries to defend the appointment of this particular gentleman as superintendent of penitentiaries—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I defend his conduct, not his appointment. I did not appoint him.

Mr. GRAY: In any event it is interesting to note that one of the minister's appointees, the superintendent of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, not only recommended this gentleman as superintendent but was one of those who sat in judgment on the appointment to the office. I mention this in passing because I think it is worthy of note. Moreover, when the hon. member for East Calgary states that this gentleman is a Liberal, it is interesting to note that he was recommended first by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, second by the Hon. Mr. MacPherson, Attorney General for Saskatchewan, and third by the Hon. F. G. Taylor, formerly leader of the Conservative party in Manitoba and recently appointed by the present Minister of Justice to the Court of King's Bench of that province. I leave it to the house as to the Liberal leanings of the gentleman appointed.

With respect to the protest by the Ottawa branch of the legion, which I desire to place on record, may I say that they first of all passed a resolution protesting against taking out from the operation of the Civil Service Act this branch of the service. Their second resolution was as follows:

> That the Ottawa branch of the Canadian Legion desires to record its strong resentment and disapproval of the tenor of the remarks contained in the report recently submitted by the superintendent of penitentiaries, touching upon the qualities of the private soldier who served during the great war, considering such remarks as uncalled for reflection upon the rank and file who served in the Canadian expeditionary forces.

I leave that expression of the views of the Ottawa branch of the legion with the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): This bill has to do with taking the appointment of the administrative staff of the penitentiaries from under the operation of the Civil Service Act and placing it with the governor in council. I do not propose now to debate the question of the advisability or otherwise of so doing. Most of the discussion late this afternoon and this evening has rather centred around an attack upon or severe criticism of the present superintendent of penitentiaries.

Let me say in passing that the purpose of the bill is to remove from under the operation of the Civil Service Act these appointments. It is contended by the sponsor of the bill, the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), that the duties of these servants peculiarly unfit them for appointment by the Civil Service Commission. If the criticisms which have been levelled against the superintendent of penitentiaries are to be carried through to their logical conclusion, it would be an argument against at least that appointment being made under the Civil Service Commission, but I do not think we can generalize from individual cases.

The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) has made reference to the contention that General Ormond's was not a political appointment inasmuch as he was a Liberal appointed by a Conservative administration. He endeavoured to cast doubt upon that by indicating who had recommended him. I know of my own knowledge, coming from the same province as General Ormond—he comes from the town of Portage la Prairie, and I know his family very well—that he and his family have been Liberals for generations. I do not say that in disparagement at all. It is a fact, however, that General Ormond and his family are Liberals. His appointment was made certainly not for any political consideration, but simply because under the system of appointments under the Civil Service Commission he answered the advertisement, and having had a very distinguished war record undoubtedly that recommended him to the commission, and he received the appointment.

Leaving that, I wish to deal with one other matter around which the discussion has largely centred, and that is the remarks of General Ormond as contained in his report as superintendent of penitentiaries. So that the matter may be clearly on the record I wish to read the words to which reference has been made. They appear on page 8 of his report under the heading, Training of Guards. He says:

> At the present time there are many guards who had little or no service that would recommend them to be penitentiary or prison guards, mostly having terminated from three to five years' service with the rank of private, which would indicate that they had reached their limit in military advancement, and could not be expected to show a higher standard in civil life.

I do not propose to defend such language on the part of the superintendent of penitentiaries. My experience tells me that such language is ill-considered, unfair and indefensible. I am glad to associate myself with hon. members on both sides of the house who have taken this opportunity to register a protest against such language being incorporated into a report that becomes part of the records of this house. I think that that point was particularly stressed by the hon. member for Quebec South, and I entirely endorse his sentiments. Knowing General Ormond's record as a soldier, and it was a magnificent record, knowing his splendid record of service and that he must have come into close contact with thousands upon thousands of privates in the army, it is to me incomprehensible that such a statement should represent his considered opinion. However, it is in his report, and we must deal with it as such.

This statement of General Ormond will not stand even a cursory examination. Note what he says. He is speaking of guards who are in the penitentiary, and says that the records show that they have had from three to five years in the army as privates, and he draws this conclusion:

> —mostly having terminated from three to five years' service with the rank of private, which would indicate that they had reached their limit in military advancement.

The Canadian corps was an army of over five hundred thousand men. They could not all be generals, they could not all be colonels or majors or captains or lieutenants. In the very nature of things only a small percentage of them could be officers.

Mr. MITCHELL: Somebody had to do the fighting.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): As my hon. friend says, somebody had to do the fighting, and so in the nature of things hundreds of thousands of them served during the war for years, and came back as privates. Is it to be concluded from that that they were lacking in mentality, or lacking in those abilities that would fit them to be guards in the penitentiaries? The denial of such a position is to be seen in this house. There are hon. members of this house—I do not need to name them—who served in the ranks as privates, and remained privates. One is a minister of the crown. You find them taking their place in civil life, in the professions, in the business life of this country, in every walk of life to-day. So that suggestion was entirely uncalled for.

Who were the men who served in the ranks of the army? Who were the five hundred thousand odd? Some of them are members who sit in this house to-day. Many of them were the sons of men who are sitting in this house to-night. They were the sons of all classes of people in this country. That was the magnificent thing about not only the Canadian corps but the British army. The sons of some of the most privileged people were among the first to go. That was so in the motherland and it was so in this country. Who were these boys in the army? The western plains sent a battalion known as the university battalion. They were boys of eighteen and twenty, who stopped their university courses and signed up—the flower of this country filled with idealism of youth, to all of whom life was still "A perfumed wonder."

It is not for me to disparage officers, but as far as intellect is concerned, or those qualities which make for good citizenship, you can take a cross section of the army and in every class you will find most of them pretty good stuff, some medium, and an odd one poor. But in the main those who know best will say they were simply magnificent. That is true of the private in the ranks, the platoon lieutenant, the captain, the major, and the commanding officer. Mutual confidence and initiative was the keynote of the success of the Canadian corps in France. It was the same with the padres who were sent to us in France; most of them were splendid fellows, some not quite so good; I will say the privates stood up just as well as they did. So I join with other hon. members who have protested in this house against these remarks in the report, or that they should go into the archives of parliament.

In conclusion I want to say that the most charitable view I can take of the language of General Ormond is that it was used thoughtlessly, and possibly under provocation in relation to one or two particular individuals who had not measured up to the standard. That is the only reason I can think of; I have no purpose here to defend him. I submit there is no necessity for reading into the record, as my hon. friend from West Lambton did, the protests of some soldiers' organizations; not only the rank and file of the Canadian corps some 500,000 strong, but every fairminded citizen of Canada protests against such language. Privates got advancement from the ranks, officers got advancement—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I think it is high time the committee came back to article 1 of this bill.

Mr. KENNEDY (Winnipeg): Well I will just conclude, Mr. Chairman. I want to say that the successes of which the people of Canada read with pride were attributable to all ranks and particularly to the brains of the privates and the energy and initiative they showed in tight places. Time and time again, in the absence of officers and N.C.O.'s, privates took charge and saved many a difficult situation. During the last hundred days when town after town fell to the Canadian corps it was a common thing in France and Flanders to see at noonday in a liberated city or town or village the mayor and public officials gathered on the steps of the hotel de ville holding a thanksgiving celebration, thanking the general of the brigade for deliverance. But let me sum it up in this way: that before such an occasion that town had to be delivered, never at noonday in one of those delivered villages did a general in gold lace or red cap or tabs accept the plaudits of the multitude but earlier on that day or some other day it was the rank and file of the army who fought through the wire and gas and made that celebration possible.

Mr. JEAN: The other day in discussing the resolution I asked the Minister of Justice if the act would provide for a bilingual superintendent and officers as far as the province of Quebec was concerned. The answer of the minister was: I should say yes. I have read over the bill which is now before us and do not see any such provision in it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not intend to say that the act would so provide. I said that would be carried out in the administration of the act. I do not think it is customary to put such a provision in an act of parliament.

Mr. JEAN: I think it would be desirable to put it in.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Since the committee rose at six o'clock I have considered the suggestions made by my hon. friend from Quebec East and I have to some extent recast the bill to accord therewith. The bill as prepared would give to the governor in council the right to appoint the superintendent, the inspectors and the staffs of the penitentiaries, and all other officers of the penitentiary branch would remain as now under the Civil Service Commission. It does not require much amendment; I can explain the amendments all at once and then move them separately. It will require the words "and three inspectors" in line 9 after the word "penitentiaries." Then in section 2, line 17, we strike out the word "inspectors," strike out lines 20, 21 and 22 altogether and insert in lieu thereof: "who are engaged in and about the various penitentiaries and are upon the respective penitentiary staffs thereof." To make it clear that this applies only to the limited number that would be inspectors, superintendents, guards and wardens, we are putting in a clause as clause 3 of section 3: "All other officers, clerks and employees of the penitentiary branch of the Department of Justice shall be appointed and paid under the provisions of the Civil Service Act." As we are on clause 1, I would move:

That section 1 be amended by adding in line 9 after the word "penitentiaries" the words "and three inspectors of penitentiaries," and that the words "an officer" be changed to "officers."

Sir EUGENE FISET: Perhaps I may call the attention of the minister to the fact that he is cancelling clause 20 of the present bill with regard to these inspectors and leaving it open to the governor in council.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are repealing clause 20 which provides for the appointment of three inspectors, and allowing the inspectors to be appointed under clause 14.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But in your amendment you are limiting the number of inspectors to three.

Mr. GUTHRIE: So it is in section 20.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But if you look at section 2 of the present bill repealing clause 20 you find that instead of providing for only three inspectors you have an unlimited number.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, it says "three inspectors." Three inspectors is the maximum.

Mr. NEILL: Then you must change the word "him" in the last line also.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, the word "him" in the last line will have to be changed to "them".

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2—Governor in council to appoint inspectors, wardens, officers and clerks.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This section is to be amended by striking out the word "inspectors" in lines 17 and 23.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The next amendment—

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to say a word in connection with this section. I oppose it for the same reason that I opposed the amendment last year, which permitted something like 3,000 postmasters to be taken out from under the Civil Service Act. My reason is that this does away with the preference to ex-service men.

I will detain the committee for just a moment to remind hon. gentlemen of all that this parliament and this dominion have done in the way of endeavouring to provide employment for ex-service men. The Civil Service Act was passed away back in 1918, and in that act a preference was provided for ex-service men in connection with government positions. Order in council P.C. 1053 was passed exempting certain skilled and unskilled labourers, but even in those cases the preference was retained. I think it is to the credit of this country that from 1920 to 1924 between 69 per cent and 79 per cent of all the appointments to the public service were filled by ex-service men. We did not only give them the right to apply; we went further and paid out the money of this country for the purpose of training ex-service men in order that they might fill civil service positions. By order in council P.C. 2944, of August 31, 1931, we provided for special training for ex-service men in order to fit them for these positions. We were only doing what all the belligerent countries, especially those who were on the side of the allies, had done; that is, providing for the employment of ex-service men in the public service.

We even went further and aided schemes put forward by civilian agencies in this country. I remember particularly the Toronto rehabilitation scheme put forward by the citizens of Toronto, by which they assisted ex-service men to get positions in civil life. This country contributed a substantial amount by way of assistance to that scheme, particularly in order that employers, who took on disabled ex-service men, might be able to give them a specified living wage. From the treasury of this country we contributed sufficient for that purpose. Then we provided for vocational training; hon. members who were in this house before I came here will remember the consideration given that question by committees of this house in 1921, 1922 and 1923. Then we sent delegates to the international labour bureau in order to find out what was being done in other countries, in an endeavour to adopt some uniform system of giving employment to ex-service men. Our representatives there reported that the unanimous conclusion had been reached that ex-service men were entitled to the benefit of the assistance of the country in order to secure employment.

Then the 1921 parliamentary committee approved the vetcraft shops and recommended their establishment in conjunction with the Red Cross. The Red Cross established various agencies all across this country, and they were assisted by the Dominion government. As a matter of fact we paid 85 per cent of the capital expenditures and 75 per cent of the deficits in connection with those Red Cross agencies. Then we had provincial employment agencies; we put a handicap section there and we paid out money in that direction also in order to provide employment for ex-service men. The employment service and the handicap sections were united, I think in 1923, that the dominion might better cooperate with the provinces in order to give the ex-service men what was regarded as their due. In addition it was found that in some other countries the voluntary schemes were not working out, and in some countries acts were actually passed not only providing that ex-service men should be given a preference in connection with civil service positions but requiring employers to hire these men up to a certain percentage of their establishments. That happened in France, and to a certain extent that scheme also was adopted in Germany, Italy, Austria, Poland and the kingdom of the Serbs and Croats. In each of these countries provision was made whereby a certain percentage of ex-service men would be entitled to a first preference in civilian employment, not only in government positions.

I give this recital only to remind the committee of what has been done in that regard in other countries as well as in Canada. Now I find that at one fell swoop this bill proposes to do away with the preference given ex-service men employed in positions in the penitentiaries, and as I understand my hon. friend the Minister of Justice he says the reason is that the men who are disabled or handicapped are entitled to the preference, as well as the men who have had service overseas and are physically fit. I point out to the minister and to the committee that this is no answer to the contention we are making. What we say is that these men must qualify for the position for which they are applying. No one even suggests putting in a man who is not qualified for the job. We suggest that when men pass an examination and are found to be qualified the ex-service men should be given the first preference. What exception can be taken to that? That is the provision in the Civil Service Act; it has been there all along, and why that principle cannot be perpetuated is beyond me. The reason appears to be that General Ormond has made a report, which I submit is not to his credit as a soldier. I know of his service overseas; I know he was a gallant soldier, but I cannot understand the mental processes of a man who would make a report such as that made in connection with the penitentiaries, in which it is said that because a man had from three to five years of service in the ranks as a private only he is not fitted to be a guard in a penitentiary. I think there must be something wrong with his mentality, and I submit in the strongest possible terms that this is a reflection on men who have served this country faithfully and well. General Ormond knows as well as anyone knows that overseas privates were not simply led by their officers. Privates held important and dangerous posts; privates led raids; privates showed initiative and judgment. I have known privates to take command of platoons and do magnificent work, and it is because of that fact, we feel, that our Canadian forces made such a record overseas. It was not simply because of the officers; it was because of the men in the ranks, who had the initiative, the courage, the spirit, the understanding and the leadership. I say that this report is a reflection on the men who went in the ranks, many of whom did not care to take the stars of an officer; it is a reflection which these men do not deserve—far from it—and I submit that it brings no credit whatever to the gentleman who made it.

It is my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that nothing could better qualify a man for the position of guard than the fact that he did serve overseas for from three to five years. He was doing guard duty all that time. Who held the outposts? Who did the guard duty day after day and night after night, but the privates who were given most important and dangerous missions and posts? I submit that this very fact does qualify them, and I come back to this point: If these men are qualified it ill behooves this government to take away from them the preference laid down for them in the statute since 1918. No one is asking that they shall be given positions unless they are qualified, but I submit in the strongest possible terms that this section is a direct confiscation of rights which have long since been given these men, rights to which they are entitled, which have been recognized by other countries, which have been recognized in civilian industries, and which this parliament should hesitate before taking away from the returned men.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I thought I made it clear this afternoon that if returned soldiers were qualified, not suffering from physical incapacity, I would welcome a clause in the bill to give them preference. My hon. friend need not have engaged in his rather heated remarks on the subject. General Ormond's report had nothing to do with the suggestion, and if my hon. friend from West Lambton will draft a clause I shall be glad to consider it. I must say it is difficult, having regard to the fact that the men must have physical qualifications; and if they are pensioners suffering from some physical disability one can hardly ask them to be guards. The other question is with regard to the age limit; thirty-five is the limit. A man who was twenty-six or twenty-seven at the end of the war would now be pretty well advanced in years. In the case of returned soldiers we extend it to forty, so that now any returned soldier up to forty can become a guard. I do not know that for the position of guard I would increase the age limit above forty because a man must be hale, hearty and husky to fill the position. If my hon. friend from West Lambton can agree with me on a clause I shall be only too glad to include it in the bill and see that the preference is maintained.

Mr. GRAY: I appreciate the remarks of the minister. Unfortunately I was not present this afternoon when he spoke and I may have been the cause of misleading my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth in that regard. I do not think I misled him to any great extent, however. I am glad to hear what the minister has just said, and if this is not the proper place for the clause he proposes, perhaps we can let the section stand.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I desire to get in certain amendments, but we will reserve a place for the new section.

Mr. GRAY: That will be all right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: These amendments are technical. I have submitted them to my hon. friend for Quebec East and he has approved of them. The first amendment is:

That section 2 be amended by striking out lines 20, 21 and 22 and by inserting in lieu thereof:

"who are engaged in and about the various penitentiaries and are upon the respective staffs thereof."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I wish to congratulate the minister on having limited the effect of the bill so far as this section is concerned. What is the meaning of "and other administrative or executive officers" in view of the fact that the clerical staff and others have been confined to the operation of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have all sorts of instructors, keepers and so on, and that is the class to whom it refers.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Those within the penitentiary?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, on its staff. The next amendment is to subsection 2, to strike out the words "clerks and employees" in line 24.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is another amendment to subsection 2, to add the words "administrative or executive" after the word "other" in line 23.

Mr. RALSTON: Does this section stand?

Mr. GUTHRIE: As amended.

[Mr. Guthrie.]

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend suggested some amendment to preserve the ex-service man's preference.

Mr. GUTHRIE: After section 4, or anywhere in the bill, so that it will be a general section to apply to the whole bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—Appointment of guards, trade instructors, and subordinate officers.

Mr. POWER: Is there any amendment here?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have an amendment to propose, that subsection 3 be added to section 3 in the following words:

"All other officers, clerks and employees of the penitentiary branch of the Department of Justice shall be appointed and paid under the provisions of the Civil Service Act."

Mr. POWER: Section 3 reads:

The said act is further amended by inserting after section twenty thereof the following section:—

20A (1) The superintendent may, upon the recommendation of the warden, appoint such guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers and employees as are necessary for the service of any of the penitentiaries.

Perhaps the meaning of the amendment to clause 2 was not made quite clear, but as I understand it, that clause covers all these officers.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, no.

Mr. POWER: Clause 2 reads:

The governor in council may appoint such inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and other administrative or executive officers as are required for the proper administration and management of the penitentiaries.

And all other officers in and around the building, or words to that effect. If that is the case, that clause would cover guards, trade instructors and subordinate officers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would depend upon the meaning you put upon the words "executive and administrative officers."

Mr. POWER: The minister added something to the clause referring to all other officers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The words added were:

—who are engaged in and about the various penitentiaries and are upon the respective staffs thereof.

Mr. POWER: Would not that include guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. POWER: Under section 2 the governor in council appoints those officers and under section 3 the superintendent appoints them.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The intention is that the governor in council shall appoint the wardens and deputy wardens, and other administrative or executive officers which would include accountants and people of that kind. Then we come down to the minor officials, the guards, the instructors, the keepers and so on.

Mr. POWER: As I understood the amendment it would cover guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We have left out guards, keepers and instructors until this clause.

Mr. POWER: Would the minister read section 2 as amended?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would read:

The governor in council may appoint such inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and other administrative or executive officers as are required for the proper administration and management of the penitentiaries, and who are engaged in and about the various penitentiaries and are upon the respective staffs thereof.

Mr. POWER: I had misunderstood the amendment. In connection with the appointments to be made under section 3, the minister gave an assurance to the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt) during the course of the debate that in making appointments under this section preference would be given to returned soldiers. General Ormond has stated distinctly that he does not consider returned soldiers as being fit for these jobs and yet this section gives him the power to make these appointments. How can the minister assure the committee that the superintendent will do anything else but what he would be expected to do in the face of that statement?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will draw up a clause to cover that.

Mr. POWER: Under the bill, the superintendent would have the discretion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Upon the recommendation of the warden.

Mr. POWER: The minister knows that if the superintendent is any good at all there is no clause which can prevent him from exercising some discretion. This gentleman has entered upon this position apparently sincerely convinced that returned soldiers who have been privates would not be fitted to be penitentiary guards. I do not think the minister would be fair to the superintendent by endeavouring to circumscribe his activities by telling him that he must appoint so and so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would not be telling him, the law would be telling him.

Mr. POWER: I suggest that this section should be changed and the power of appointment taken away from the superintendent. He is bound to follow the recommendations he made in his report.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, he is not; that is nonsense. I think any reasonable man would understand that report to refer to the individuals with whom he was dealing in Kingston. I have agreed to put in a clause which will make it obligatory that first preference be given to returned soldiers.

Mr. POWER: I would suggest that instead of leaving this to the superintendent, the minister should take the right to make appointments by order in council.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I thought that that would be objected to.

Mr. POWER: I would rather place the responsibility upon the government than upon a superintendent who has expressed himself in such a manner. The minister knows my views upon the Civil Service Act, so what is the use of camouflaging behind wardens and superintendents—let the government take the responsibility and appoint these men.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would refer to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which I have the honour of administering for the time being. All appointments to this force are made without consultation with me. All appointments are made by General MacBrien and his staff and the political element does not enter into the appointments. If it is seriously thought that these appointments should be made by the governor in council, I am willing to amend the bill in that way. However, I think a clause to safeguard the rights of the soldier would be sufficient.

Mr. POWER: There is a great difference between enlistments for the mounted police force and appointments to a civil service job. After the discussion we have heard with reference to General Ormond I think the majority of the members of this committee would rather trust the government to make such appointments and see that the returned soldier got a preference. If this principle was not carried out we would have the opportunity of pointing out to the government wherein it was remiss, whereas otherwise there may be a hiding behind the superintendent.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is a vast difference between making appointments to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to the staffs of the penitentiaries. In all my twelve years of experience in government work I never heard General MacBrien or his predecessor make such a derogatory statement in connection with returned men as that made by General Ormond. It would be extremely difficult to frame a clause to give preference to the returned men and expect a superintendent who has made the statements he has to enforce that clause. This gentleman has made certain statements regarding the returned men and if we tell him that he must enforce a clause in a certain way, we are putting the whole act in jeopardy. Some other means ought to be devised of enforcing this act—let somebody else other than the general administer the act.

Mr. BURY: Much of the criticism that has been offered and many of the suggestions that have been made refer not to a bill intended to be enacted into law but to an appointment that happens to have been made to the position of superintendent of penitentiaries. Surely the principle is a more vital matter than the particular appointment which some hon. members are criticizing. That was the very argument that was earlier used in regard to this bill, the force of which the Minister of Justice recognized by making changes in the wording of certain sections of the bill. I suggest that the committee is really trying to draft the bill on a wrong principle.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 4—Departmental staff.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Should clause 4 not be struck out?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, it repeals section 23 of the Penitentiary Act which now has no effect because we have added the words "all other officers".

Section agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—No increase of gratuity if compensation payable.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is just to prevent double compensation.

Section agreed to.

Section 7 agreed to.

[Mr. Power.]

On section 8—No gratuity payable under Civil Service Act.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This afternoon on the bill to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act there was a provision that time served by men in the South African war would count. That is only proper. I note in clause 7 this provision:

> But the amount of the gratuity which may be paid under this act to any such officer on retirement from the service shall be computed in respect only of the period of his service down to the date on which he became a contributor under either of the acts aforementioned

I do not quite grasp this, but I would not want to be taken as consenting to the limitation of any particular length of service. If a man has had prior service, that, as in the case of the other act, ought to be taken into account.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This provision is only to prevent a claim for double gratuity or retirement allowance.

Mr. CHEVRIER: But his time should count just as it did in the other case.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Clause 8 takes away any claim under the Civil Service Act and gives them a claim under this act.

Section agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the hon. member for West Lambton will come to my office in the morning, if convenient to him, I should like to draft that clause so that we may put it in the bill to-morrow. I shall try to have one drafted and see if we cannot agree.

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Third report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization—Mr. Senn.

SALMON FISHERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau). We have just been advised that the legislature of British Columbia unanimously adopted a resolution emphatically opposing P.C. 206, passed on February 3, relative to the landing of salmon on wharves within twenty-four hours after being caught. In view of that decision by the province I should like to ask the minister if he will not consider cancelling or withdrawing that order in council.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): My hon. friend was kind enough to give me notice this forenoon of the question he intended to put. My answer is that we will get official confirmation of the decision of the legislature of British Columbia, and then the matter will be very seriously considered.

TARIFF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) whether the recently appointed tariff board is functioning and, if not, when it will start to function as a board.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): The board is making arrangements to begin its operations immediately. There is no delay at the moment, because cases are being considered in a preliminary way preparatory to the public hearings.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would the minister say where their offices are?

Mr. RHODES: In the national research building.

TRAWLER LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): With respect to the licensing of steam trawlers, Mr. Speaker, it may be of interest to recall the conditions under which steam trawling was begun in this country. Some years ago those who were engaged in the marketing of fish found that steadiness of supply was essential in order to increase the demand, and at that time there was no assurance of such steadiness of supply, particularly in the winter season. Hence in 1910 steam trawling was initiated with one vessel. With the development of the demand for fresh fish the number was increased to two in 1912 and in the following year to five.

During the war the demand grew rapidly, and probably the number of trawlers would have been increased more rapidly than it was had they been available. The largest number operated in the war period was eight in 1918. In 1926 the number had increased to eleven, and since then it has declined.

Following consideration of the majority and minority reports of the Atlantic Fisheries Commission of 1927-28, legislation for the better control of trawlers was adopted in 1929. The main provisions of this legislation were:

(a) All trawlers must be licensed.

(b) All trawlers should be registered in Canada and owned by Canadian companies or persons.

(c) That trawler fishing should not be allowed within twelve miles of the shore.

(d) That the minister may determine the number of trawlers to be licensed.

(e) That regulations might be made by order in council prescribing the evidence to be submitted with applications for licences fixing the conditions under which licences should be issued and making any other provisions respecting licences.

By order in council of October 30, 1929, regulations were adopted under the authority of the new legislation. These regulations provided for the licensing of trawlers and for a fee of one cent per pound on all cod, haddock and halibut that were landed by foreign built trawlers and two-thirds of a cent a pound on all such fish that were landed by Canadian built trawlers, excepting on fish landed during the months of January, February and March each year, when no fee would be charged.

One of the trawler operating companies failed to pay the licence fee, and action was taken in the exchequer court to compel payment. This resulted in a decision of that court of the 9th of March, 1931, that the regulations were ultra vires. After further consideration of the matter new regulations were adopted by order in council of August 14, 1931. These provided for a licence fee of $500 for each trawler and that the applicant must furnish the minister with evidence that would satisfy him that the applicant could not obtain an adequate supply of suitable fish to enable him properly to conduct and develop his business from the hook and line fishermen, and that the granting of the licence would not adversely affect the extent to which fish would be purchased from the hook and line fishermen.

Following the submission of applications, which were accompanied by the necessary evidence supported by declarations, licences for six trawlers were granted for the fiscal year 1932-33. Five of these were for trawlers operated by the Maritime-National company and one by the Leonard fisheries.

Fishermen's organizations and boards of trade have strongly urged that no trawlers be licensed for the present fiscal year. On the other hand, the Halifax board of trade and the mayor of Halifax have urged very strongly the renewal of all the existing licences. Applications for renewal of the five licences held by the Maritime-National company have been made, and the Leonard Fisheries has intimated that it intends to apply for a renewal of its licence.

At this point it may be interesting to note that the decline in the trawler catch in recent years has kept pace with the decline in the hook and line catch. In Nova Scotia alone the hook and line catch of the kinds of fish landed by trawlers was 150,200,977 pounds. The trawler catch that year was 31,365,423 pounds. Last year the Nova Scotia catch of these fish by the hook and line fishermen was 108,645,871 pounds, while the catch by the steam trawlers was 22,956,729 pounds, or a decrease of practically 27 per cent in each case.

It is also contended that the trawler operators are amongst the largest purchasers of fish from the hook and line fishermen, and the former maintain that it is only possible for them to continue to make such large purchases from the hook and line fishermen because of having the trawlers so that they can keep continuously in the market. It is also contended that the main landings by the trawlers are during the six winter months when hook and line fishing is reduced to a minimum, and during a portion of which no licence fee was charged on the trawler landings under the previous regulations.

It also may be of value to note that all other countries are allowing trawlers to operate. Out of European ports about 5,000 of these vessels are operating yearly. Out of United States ports there are usually over 300. These latter vessels as well as a large number from France and sometimes from other European countries, fish on the Banks adjacent to our coasts, so that even if our trawlers were withdrawn it would decrease the amount of trawling on these Banks by a very small proportion only.

After consideration of all the facts it is thought that if the Maritime-National had three trawlers instead of five operating they could reasonably assure the steadiness of supply as well as the proportion of haddock needed. Hence it has been decided that for the present year that company will be allowed three trawlers and the Leonard Fisheries one, as before. There are no other applicants. This will involve a reduction in number of 33⅓ per cent. This reduction will be put into effect from the first of May, thus giving one month to the company to enable it to fill certain contracts into which it has entered.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

VISIT OF JAPANESE WARSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): According to press dispatches a Japanese warship is to visit Vancouver harbour to-morrow. In view of the trouble in the orient and the withdrawal of Japan from the League of Nations, may I ask what the attitude of the government will be?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I was not aware that the question was to be asked, and I have nothing to say because I have received no correspondence with respect to the matter. If the ship comes into the harbour she is entitled to anchor, and I assume she will.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is the government extending entertainment to this visiting warship?

Mr. BENNETT: I doubt not that the citizens of Vancouver will extend to them the hospitality for which that city is proverbial.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIALS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

The house resumed from Monday, April 3, consideration in committee of Bill No. 59, to amend the Penitentiary Act—Mr. Guthrie—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Since the committee had this bill under consideration yesterday I have talked it over with the Deputy Minister of Justice in regard to one of the amendments which he made and in regard to which he thinks the language might be very much improved. I refer to subsection 3 of section 3. The following words were added as subsection 3:

> All other officers, clerks and employees of the penitentiary branch of the Department of Justice shall be appointed and paid under the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

It has been pointed out that the words "shall be appointed and paid" are not proper. There are more provisions in the Civil Service Act than appointment and pay. The amendment I have to propose is the insertion of a new clause in these words:

> All other officers, clerks and employees of the penitentiary branch of the Department of Justice shall continue to be subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Shall the amendment passed last night be rescinded, and the new section now proposed be adopted?

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: On the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Gray), a clause has been drafted to meet the question raised with reference to returned soldiers. The hon. member for West Lambton and myself and others went over the matter this morning and drafted a clause which I propose to insert, with the concurrence of the committee, as 20B:

In making appointments under the powers conferred by this act, the governor in council and the superintendent respectively shall extend to returned soldier applicants the preferences set out in section 29 of the Civil Service Act.

Section agreed to.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is one other matter which has been called to my attention since last evening. There is an anomaly in the Penitentiary Act as it now stands by reason of an amendment to the criminal code passed in 1929. Under that amendment the crown was permitted to appeal in criminal cases; in other words, where a man was tried for a crime and the charge against him was dismissed, the crown was permitted to enter an appeal. In many cases the prisoner was forced to remain in gaol pending the hearing of the appeal because he was unable to furnish bail. Sometimes a man would spend three, four or five months waiting the result of the appeal. Under the provisions of the Penitentiary Act as it now stands on the statute books, the time spent in gaol pending trial shall not be credited on the length of the sentence and it is now proposed to amend that section by providing the following:

Any period during which a convict is detained in the gaol or other place of confinement pursuant to the authority of this section shall not be computed as time served in the execution of his sentence unless he be so detained pending an appeal by the attorney general or counsel for the crown.

If the crown appeals and the charge against the man is subsequently abandoned or dismissed, the time spent in gaol pending appeal shall be considered as part of the sentence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is he a convict if he has been acquitted?

Mr. GUTHRIE: We are not changing the law with reference to an appeal by a man who has been convicted; we are dealing with the man who has been acquitted. After the crown appeals and the man is finally convicted; the time spent pending appeal shall be taken as part of his sentence.

Mr. YOUNG: If he is acquitted?

Mr GUTHRIE: The same.

Mr. YOUNG: What will be his sentence if he is acquitted?

Mr. GUTHRIE: If he is acquitted, he goes free like my hon. friend. I move that this provision be added to the bill as clause 9. It would remove the anomaly which now exists by reason of the amendment to the criminal code made in 1929.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In the case of a man appealing after being convicted, would the time he had spent in gaol count in his sentence?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not see why the converse of the proposition now proposed by the minister should not apply. I think in both cases the time spent in gaol should count on the sentence.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It never has applied.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Because a thing has never been the law is no valid reason why it should not be the law.

Mr. McINTOSH: You are right this time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am always right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If a man is acquitted how can he be described as a convict?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The section describes as a convict the man who has been convicted. The section reads, "any period during which a convict is detained in the gaol or other place of confinement pursuant to the authority of this section." Where a man has been convicted the time so spent shall not be computed as time served in the execution of his sentence. That has been the law for generations. Under the Ticket of Leave Act we often recommend that the time spent in gaol before trial shall be counted in reckoning the time after which ticket of leave shall be granted, but the matter of an application for ticket of leave is not involved in this. Ordinarily the warden computes the sentence as from the date it is pronounced in court notwithstanding the fact that the man may have spent a certain period in gaol before the trial. Where a man has been acquitted and the crown or the attorney general for the crown enters an appeal and the man is subsequently convicted, the time spent in gaol shall be counted as part of his sentence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it fair to describe a man who has been acquitted of a crime as a convict?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Where a man appeals and is subsequently convicted, he is still a convict.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He is not a convict until the appeal is decided.

Mr. GUTHRIE: He is a convict as soon as the appeal is decided and the time spent in gaol pending appeal by the crown is taken as part of his sentence.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Should he be termed a convict during the period prior to the deciding of the appeal?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The section does not describe him as a convict until he has been finally convicted and is serving his term of imprisonment. That is the time referred to in this section, and it becomes a question of deciding when he will be released from penitentiary.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would the minister read the section again?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It reads:

> Any period during which a convict is detained in the gaol or other place of confinement pursuant to the authority of this section shall not be computed as time served in the execution of his sentence unless he be so detained pending an appeal by the attorney general or counsel for the crown.

That time shall count as part of his sentence.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But he does not become a convict until the court of appeal overrules his acquittal.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This section does not have any effect until the man is actually convicted and imprisoned. If this section is passed the warden of the penitentiary would be allowed to count the time the man spent in gaol pending appeal as part of his sentence. The ordinary man will get bail and will not spend that time in gaol, but if he has had to spend it in gaol it shall be counted as part of his sentence.

Mr. EULER: I should like to ask a question of the minister as a layman. It is suggested that the time a man spends in gaol pending appeal shall be counted upon his sentence, but should not the time spent in gaol prior to his original trial be counted also?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It never has counted.

Mr. EULER: That is not a very good reason why it should not be counted.

Mr. BENNETT: The judge takes that into consideration when awarding punishment.

Mr. EULER: It should be taken into consideration on the appeal.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. GUTHRIE: As a rule, the court of appeal does not fix the punishment.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill as amended reported, read the third time and passed.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston.

Mr. A. M. EDWARDS (South Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in rising to contribute a few remarks to the budget debate, may I first of all add my congratulations to those that have gone before to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) in the most trying time any government ever had to finds ways and means to finance the budget. Some of the items in the budget we may not like; personally I have never yet seen one which imposed taxation that was popular. There are one or two items in it with which I might disagree, but I shall reserve discussion of them until the house gets into committee.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), in his official criticism of the budget, wound up his speech by moving an amendment and I wish to quote and to refer to the following portion of it:

> They imply a continuance of fiscal and other policies which have not only signally failed to afford any solution of our national problems, but have been proven to have the effect of diminishing trade, of decreasing revenues, of increasing unemployment—

And so forth. From that clause of the amendment the implication is that the tariffs which have been imposed during the sessions of 1930 and 1931 have had the effect of decreasing trade in Canada. After that speech was delivered, I thought the only fair way to judge the matter would be to find out just what had happened in other trading countries throughout the world. With this idea in mind I had prepared statistics covering some of the leading trading countries of the world: the United Kingdom, the United States, Germany, France, Italy and Canada. I shall give first the imports into these countries and afterwards the domestic exports from them showing the comparison for the years 1930 and 1932:

Imports into—	1930 Million $	1932 Million $	Decrease Million $	Percentage of Decrease %
United Kingdom	5,080.7	2,797.9	2,282.8	44.9
United States	3,060.9	1,502.4	1,558.5	50.9
Germany	2,473.6	1,110.6	1,363.0	55.1
France	2,057.1	1,168.6	888.5	43.2
Italy	907.8	478.3	429.5	47.3
Canada	1,008.4	452.6	555.8	55.1

This leaves Canada in the fifth position. I now give the figures in regard to the domestic exports from those countries:

Domestic exports from—	1930 Million $	1932 Million $	Decrease Million $	Percentage of Decrease
United Kingdom	2,777.6	1,453.0	1,324.6	47.7
United States	3,843.2	1,790.9	2,052.3	53.4
Germany	2,696.1	1,365.9	1,330.2	49.3
France	1,683.2	771.6	911.6	54.2
Italy	634.8	394.2	240.6	37.9
Canada	885.9	493.8	392.1	44.3

This again puts Canada in the fifth place in the trading nations of the world. I quote these figures merely to show that notwithstanding the fact that other countries had not materially changed their tariff rates, their percentages of decrease of exports and imports were relatively high compared with those of Canada.

I want to compare some of the exports from Canada to the United Kingdom for the last three months of 1931, with the corresponding quarter of 1932:

Commodity	Year	Bushels
Wheat	1931	39,942,933
	1932	64,305,847

A huge increase in quantity. Somebody will ask about the price. I have secured also the cash values of these exports.

		Last Quarter of: 1931	1932
Wheat	Bush.	39,942,933	64,305,847
	$	24,232,047	32,782,184
Canned fruit	Lbs.	2,566,593	5,542,013
	$	137,184	295,302
Oats	Bush.	1,376,341	2,612,471
	$	455,991	760,726
Wheat flour	Brls.	603,993	744,919
	$	2,080,733	2,326,960
Condensed milk	Cwt.	22,456	60,461
	$	154,768	402,240
Vehicle and parts (total)	$	9,506	513,362
Passenger motor cars	No.	9	789
	$	7,487	351,876
Copper in ingots, bars, etc	Cwt.	61,289	430,871
	$	466,710	2,406,237

With regard to the other side of the picture, namely Canadian imports from empire countries, the accompanying tables reveal that the fourth-month period concluded January, 1933, shows a sharp drop in the rate of decrease in such imports, and that, while the value of imports from empire countries for the latest four-month period decreased by 6 per cent compared with the corresponding period ended January, 1932, nevertheless the value of imports from foreign countries decreased by 29½ per cent. Once again, if quantity figures could be obtained, it is likely that Canada actually increased her imports from empire countries during the four months ended January, 1933, as compared with the corresponding period ended January, 1932. Some articles imported from the United Kingdom in larger quantities during the last quarter of 1932 as compared with the last quarter of 1931, are:

		Last Quarter of: 1931	1932
Cotton fabrics	Lbs.	1,235,394	1,306,365
Woollen yarn	Lbs.	780,209	840,609
Anthracite coal	Tons	231,686	406,057
Chemicals and allied products (total)	$	1,092,608	1,481,660
Sodium compounds	Lbs.	1,955,262	6,907,177
	$	114,649	238,936

The short period of time during which the tariff changes resulting from the conference agreements have been in operation precludes, of course, a final and definite estimate of their effect on Canada's trade with the empire. Nevertheless, the above analysis of the latest available statistics of Canada's foreign trade would seem to be indicative of a far-reaching development in our trade relations with other parts of the empire. This must be gratifying indeed to Canadians, as this country has ever been a leader in all proposals to promote intra-empire trade.

I dislike quoting so many figures but I have gone into them rather exhaustively to refute the argument that because Canada has stabilized her tariff structure—by that I do not simply mean that she has raised her tariff—her trade has languished while trade throughout the world has gone ahead.

Now I wish to say a word or two as to the agricultural stabilization fund. The stabilization of the pound sterling at $4.60 for certain specific, agricultural products, viz., animals, meats, including bacon and hams, poultry, fresh fish, canned fish, tobacco, cheese, milk products, canned fruits, canned vegetables, maple products, eggs and honey, will materially assist the exporter of these products to United Kingdom markets and enable these producers to partake of the benefits of the arrangements made with the United Kingdom at the Imperial conference last summer.

This should prove of great value to the farmers of the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this house, and in fact to the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In this connection, I may state that the province of Ontario has, during the past two years, established cold storage plants at Trenton, Picton, Collingwood, Thornbury, Strathroy, Thedford and Simcoe, and the Grimsby cold storage plant has been renovated.

The results from these cold storage plants have been quite startling. The farm products that went through them have had a manager and he has had the farmers on their toes regarding quality, pointing out to them how much more good-quality articles receive than poor-grade ones. This has led to great improvement in the quality of the products going through cold storages, and the continuity of supply is much more certain.

It will be recalled that in the report which the high commissioner Hon. G. Howard Ferguson made from Great Britain it was pointed out that at certain seasons of the year you could get Canadian fruit in Great Britain in abundance, and people were becoming accustomed to Canadian fruit, but that there was a considerable period throughout the year when it was not obtainable, and the high commissioner's idea was that the continuitv of supply of Canadian fruit should be assured. It was with that idea in mind that Ontario established these cold storage warehouses, and with the assistance of this agricultural stabilization fund I feel quite certain that the farmers of the two central provinces and possibly of other provinces in Canada will greatly benefit. Necessarily anything that can be done for the farmer is certainly the right point at which to start. If the farmer is not in a position to purchase goods from the manufacturer, manufacturing plants go out of business, throwing numbers of employees out of work, and so it seems to me that any success which we hope to have in bringing back better conditions in this country is pretty much predicated upon the prices the farmer receives and upon his success.

After the United Kingdom went off the gold standard on September 21, 1931, sterling exchange broke to such levels, that nearly all Canadian customs duties were nullified, I mean those imposed on goods coming into Canada from the United Kingdom.

The great majority of British preferential tariff rates do not exceed 15 per cent on an average; consequently, practically all protection of Canadian producers was automatically wiped out and it became necessary to impose what is known as a special dumping duty partly to take care of this situation.

Contrast the Canadian importer's position before and after the suspension of gold payments. Before September 21, 1931, the importer paid a bill of $100 by purchasing sterling at $4.86; after England went off the gold standard sterling broke to as low a point as $3.59. In other words, what cost the importer $4.86 before now cost $3.59. This, of course, as hon. members will readily see, completely wiped out the benefits of the protection which the Canadian producer had before that time.

To illustrate and, perhaps I may say, justify the imposition of the special dumping duty I have secured three invoices of goods actually imported, one for worsted cloth, one for woollen cloth, and one for yarn. The figures that I will give will, I think, fully bear out the statement that the special duty is justified, and the importer not penalized. Here are the three invoices:

Value as invoiced	Description	Number of yards	Weight	Cost laid down to importer exclusive of freight under the existing law. Special duty of 30c. per £. Goods paid for at $4	Cost laid down to importer exclusive of freight if importer were to pay for goods at par rate of exchange
			lbs.	$ cts.	$ cts.
£69 11 8	Worsteds	248	230	435 65	475 58
£31 12 5	Woollens	200	250	223 22	241 34
£ 5 13 9	Yarns		21	31 23	34 93

That shows conclusively that the importer to-day is paying less for his goods, even with the dumping duty attached, than he was before. In order to make that perfectly clear and to bring it out especially for the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), I have had the figures analyzed, and I now present them in the following tabulation:

These are actual invoices, which can be produced, of imported goods.

I wish now to say a few words concerning the unemploment situation as it applies to the textile industry. The other industries I have to do with are certainly in a very serious condition. Anything which has to do with furniture, or any of the iron working industries, is in bad shape. Personally I do not think very much can be hoped for until there is a larger building program where furniture is required, and machinery to make that furniture. The one bright spot in my particular part of the country is the textile industry, and perhaps hon. members will pardon me if for a few moments I speak concerning it. For several years in this house I have argued that certain lines of the textile industry—and in that I include woollens and worsteds—should have more protection, and I believe conditions since 1930 have amply borne out my contention. As I said before the bright spot in employment in Canada is in the woollen hosiery and silk industries.

The February employment situation 1933 report, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, shows that in this month in the last six years the low spot of employment in the woollen yarn and cloth industry was February, 1931, with an index figure of 97.4, while in February, 1933, the index figure is 108.7. In hosiery and knit goods the low spot was in 1928, with an index figure of 99.6. In February, 1933, the index figure was 102.4. This figure would have been substantially greater but for the fact that nothing was done for knitters, other than hosiery, and consequently employment which would have been given to Canadian workers was given to the people in other countries. In the production of silk and silk goods, the employment figure in February, 1929, was 230.5, in February, 1933, the figure is 375.0.

Mr. John Lalor, president of the Canadian Allied Textile Trades Association, which is a group of those supplying the textile industry with raw materials and supplies, said recently:

> Members of our association and their employees are continually visiting the widely spread centres in Canada in which the woollen and knitting industries are situated. They are eye witnesses and have an intimate knowledge of what has happened in the last three years. Of the two things we are certain. One is that without the tariff action of 1930 the woollen and knitting industry would have been practically wiped out. And the second is that without the increased and steady employment which this industry has provided numberless small centres which are carrying on would have been faced with disaster.

I am sure hon. members who have textile mills in their towns—and nearly all of the mills are located in the smaller towns—will be willing to substantiate what Mr. Lalor has said. In fact, had it not been for the employment given to girls and women by textile mills, I hesitate to think what would have happened in some of the larger industrial centres.

Comparing production figures for 1931 and 1930, in Canada the production in quantity of worsted yarns increased by 25 per cent, worsted cloth by 38.7 per cent and socks and stockings by 25 per cent. The increase in employment was practically in direct ratio. It is understood that in 1932 the increase in production and employment was held. There are 302 factories in Canada producing these lines of goods. If hon. members care to consult the record of last year they will find that in April I placed on Hansard a list of the cities, towns and villages throughout Canada in which mills are located. There are 302 factories located in 132 centres, so that production is widespread and the industry is not concentrated. It can be easily seen that prices cannot be controlled under those conditions. There is real internal competition. Forty-two per cent of the total number of mills are located in centres of under 5,000 population; eleven per cent are in centres over 5,000 and not over 10,000; nineteen per cent are in centres over 10,000 and not over 25,000 and twenty-eight per cent in centres over 25,000.

Now I turn to prices and qualities. Something has been said—and this is the particularly fine morsel with which we have to deal—to the effect that the prices of textiles have not gone down correspondingly with other prices. In the next few moments I shall attempt to disprove that contention. Under the existing tariff, prices in Canada for woollen and knit goods have been substantially reduced, in all cases to the extent of the drop in raw materials, and in many cases far beyond any such drop. The woollen knitting industry is so widely spread in small independently owned units, which provides the keenest internal competition, that no advantage can be taken of tariff rates to charge the consumers more than they should be charged. In the English press we have noted complaints that the Canadian industry have reduced their prices to too low a level. At the same time that prices have been reduced the variety of lines produced have been increased and the qualities have been substantially improved. It is no secret that the industry works closely with their customers with a view to continually improving their products, increasing and widening their range of patterns and styles, and searching out and filling the requirements of the trade.

In comparing prices may I say that retail prices cannot be taken for the simple reason that the manufacturers of the products in question have no control over those retail prices. In order to get a proper close-up of just what has happened, and what prices are to-day as compared with prices prior to the 1930 tariff revision, I have prepared some data concerning three different articles. First I take men's cashmere half hose, which were sold by a mill in 1930 at $3.35 per dozen and are being sold by it to-day at $2.50 per dozen. This is a large selling and popular line. Then we turn to sixteen ounce botany blue serge from super 64's tops, cold water shrunk, Canadian condition, which sold for $2.02½ per yard in 1930 and which is being sold to-day by the mill at $1.60. It takes three and one-quarter yards of cloth to make a man's suit of clothes. At those prices it can readily be ascertained that the actual value of the goods used in a $50 or $60 suit is only $5.20.

So surely it cannot be said that the maker or seller of the cloth is receiving a very high price. In 1929 a mill was selling an all wool white blanket of standard construction at $1.05 per pound; to-day the mill is selling the same quality blanket at 60 cents per pound. Good tweed clothes for boys' suits and men's working suits are being produced at 50, 60 and 75 cents per yard, full width, and such suits take an average of three yards. These cloths were not produced in Canada prior to 1930, so there are no comparative figures. The cloth in the complete suit costs $1.50, $1.80 or $2.25, and the volume of this cloth now produced in Canada is very large. That is the value of the cloth that goes into a suit costing $18 or $20.

In the calendar year 1931, the first full year after the new duties came into effect, Canada purchased from Great Britain more wool tops and woollen and worsted cloth than was purchased from Great Britain by any other country in the world, inside or outside the empire. Canada purchased from Great Britain more worsted yarn than was purchased by any other country in the world except Germany; Canada was Great Britain's best customer. During the calendar year 1932, the second full year after the duties came into effect, Canada purchased more wool tops from Great Britain than were purchased by any country in the world with the exception of Germany. The drop in wool top purchases was due to the fact that Canada began to comb her own wool into tops instead of exporting it. Canada purchased more yarn from Great Britain than was purchased by any other country with the exception of Germany and China, including Hong Kong, and Canada purchased more woollen and worsted cloth from Great Britain than was purchased by any other country in the world, inside or outside the empire. Again Canada was Great Britain's best customer. I should like to place on Hansard figures in this connection with regard to the seven leading countries who purchased from Great Britain:

Canada	£1,626,815
China and Hong Kong	1,579,737
Germany	1,540,000
Denmark	1,002,367
Japan	886,570
Argentine	869,732
Netherlands	749,184

The purchases made by British Empire countries were as follows:

Canada	£1,626,815
Irish Free State	864,051
British South Africa	718,033
New Zealand	621,974
Australia	539,100
British India	343,434

Following this in natural sequence someone will ask how about the wool grown in this country; what are we doing to assist the wool grower? I should like to show prices paid for domestic wool. In 1929, the price received by a blanket manufacturer for a standard type blanket was $1.05 per pound, while his batched wool cost from 48 to 50 cents per pound. For the same blanket made from the same type of wool the manufacturer now is getting 50 cents per pound, while his batched wool costs from 20 to 22 cents per pound. In other words, while his raw material has dropped 28 cents per pound the price of the blanket has dropped 55 cents per pound. Batched wool is clean wool from which the natural grease and acquired dirt has been scoured, and the price per pound includes freight and handling charges and the cost of scouring.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that Canadian wool?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I will come to Canadian wool in a moment. One of the most encouraging features to-day in the woollen branch of the textile business is the increased use of Canadian wool. I have taken the trouble to make inquiries regarding this feature. Prior to the revision of the tariff on worsted yarns in 1930, the combing and spinning plants of the country were practically closed, the reason being that worsted yarns were duty free. As a result yarn could be imported from England for less than the cost of production in Canada. This was due to the different wage schedules and other charges imposed on Canadian mills such as workmen's compensation, minimum wage laws and so on, which did not obtain in England. From the time the ten per cent duty was taken off in 1927, therefore, the combing and spinning plants of this country were practically closed, and no Canadian wool could be used. It was shipped out of the country. It is worthy of note that the arguments used by the Canadian mills when they protested against the removal of the ten per cent duty was used in turn by the English mills to protect themselves against yarns imported into England from mid-European countries.

I should like to illustrate this position. Dominion Woollens and Worsteds, Limited, have a large plant in my constituency at Hespeler, Ontario, with subsidiary spinning plants at Milton and Orillia. Prior to 1930, the Orillia and Milton plants were closed, and the Hespeler mill had about 600 employees working part time. Since that time the Orillia plant has been re-opened and is running to-day with 60 to 80 employees on full time. The Milton plant ran for a short time but the equipment from this mill was moved to Hespeler for reasons of economy but the equipment is still in operation. The payroll of the Hespeler and Orillia mills has averaged from 800 to 830 employees this winter, with from 60 to 80 of these employees at Orillia.

One of the most encouraging features to-day is the increased use of Canadian wool in the products of these mills. Three years ago practically no Canadian wool of any kind was used in the Hespeler mill. To-day, however, the combing department is operated as a commission combing department for the wool trade, and is consuming Canadian wool at the rate of 3,000,000 pounds a year in the greasy or unscoured state. The tops produced are being distributed by wool dealers throughout the entire worsted spinning industry. This development appears to be in its infancy and, I believe, the use of Canadian wool will expand very quickly to a much larger figure.

Mr. YOUNG: What percentage of the 3,000,000 pounds is tops?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): About 20,000,000 pounds is produced in Canada.

Mr. YOUNG: That was not my question. What percentage of the 3,000,000 pounds comes out as tops?

Mr. EDWARDS (Waterloo): I could not say exactly. The combing department employs from 50 to 60 people, and it is estimated that the dealers handling the wool employ another 50 people. Three years ago the percentage of Canadian wool used in the manufacture of worsteds in Canada was practically nil; to-day all the medium and coarse quality cloth produced contains about 50 per cent of Canadian wool and this proportion is increasing steadily. It is estimated that within the next six or eight months at least two-thirds of the material in medium and coarse cloths will be Canadian wool. This wool is not being used in this plant in the manufacture of the finer qualities of cloth, but other manufacturers who are buying tops combed there appear to be using large quantities of botany wool grown in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The question of dealing with wool prices is an extremely difficult one. The trouble is that the farmer sells on a grease basis at so much per pound, the wool including the natural grease and acquired dirt, while the manufacturer buys on a clean content basis even though he may pay so much per pound in the grease. For example, a manufacturer has offered to him two wools which, when clean, can be used for the same purpose. I just want to deal with these two samples of wool in order to explain the variations in prices. For the first sample the manufacturer pays 8 cents per pound in the grease; there is a freight charge of 2 cents per pound and a scouring charge of 2 cents per pound, with a 50 per cent shrink. For the second sample the manufacturer pays 12 cents per pound in the grease; there is a freight charge of 2 cents per pound and a scouring charge of 2 cents per pound, with a shrink of 25 per cent. The clean cost to the manufacturer for one pound of wool would be: for the first sample, 16 cents for the wool, 4 cents for freight and 4 cents for scouring, or a total of 24 cents. For the second sample the cost would be 15 cents for the wool, 2½ cents for freight and 2½ cents for scouring, or a total of 20 cents. In addition there is a large number of different types of wool to deal with.

I hope I have made the situation clear with regard to the woollen and worsted part of the textile industry. I do not profess to know anything at all about the cotton end of the business, but the figures I have given in connection with woollens, including worsteds and worsted yarns, are absolutely correct.

I should like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, with a word of appreciation for the splendid manner in which this government has handled the situation. We are in extremely difficult times, to get out of which it will be necessary for hon. members on all sides to cooperate. There is no panic in this country. The people are satisfied with the present government; and headed by the right hon. gentleman who leads it, will emerge from this situation. If the Prime Minister is given proper assistance he will pull us out of our present difficulty, and I am sure that we shall recover long before other countries that lack our natural resources are able to return to normal. The indomitable spirit of the Canadian people will triumph.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): The discussion of the budget is always the most important debate that takes place in the House of Commons in any session. I am afraid I shall not have time to deal with the arguments put forward by those who have preceded me in the present discussion, but so far as the presentation of the budget itself is concerned, I desire, in common with others, to congratulate the minister. He made a splendid presentation of a very difficult subject. I do not think that in the history of Canada any Minister of Finance has had to face as difficult a problem as the present minister in presenting his budget to this house. For three successive years this country, with the rest of the world, has been suffering from a very severe depression. Let us try to be as fair as we possibly can. With other countries we have been suffering in consequence of that depression. Now the minister takes a great deal of credit from the fact that Canada, according to his statement, is not quite so badly off as other countries; he suggests that we have not suffered quite so much. I can hardly agree with that statement; I believe that the position which we occupy to-day, if matters were properly managed by the government, would not be as bad as it is, and many of the difficulties through which we are passing at the present time could be avoided.

I will not take time to recount the various promises which the present Prime Minister gave to the country when he was appealing for its support. Those promises have been frequently referred to in this house, and with one single exception the right hon. gentleman has failed to implement them. He has not carried out the promises which he made with so much vigour and force during the election. Indeed, many hon. gentlemen opposite owe their seats in this house to those promises made by their leader. I am not going to discuss the promises he gave the people, but there is one promise which I am bound to say he has kept, a promise that has had the most serious consequences for the people of Canada, and that is the promise to increase the tariffs of the country to the point where he would give protection to every industry in Canada and shut out imports. He has kept that promise one hundred per cent. I am glad that hon. gentlemen opposite applaud that statement; I am glad that farmers particularly applaud it, because if there is any comfort to a farmer in the fact that our tariffs have been increased to the extent they have been, I should like to see him rise in his place and say so.

I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards). He comes from a manufacturing centre and finds that on the average the tariff of seventy per cent on textiles has been of immense benefit to the industry in his locality. He frankly admits however that the furniture industry has severely suffered in consequence. Let us give credit to the government for having kept this one promise. Let us give them all the credit that is coming to them for the fact that the world is passing through a period of depression. At the same time let us look into the facts for a few moments to see whether or not hon. gentlemen opposite have helped to improve the situation in Canada.

What was the great difficulty in 1930, according to Conservative speakers at that time? My hon. friends were not complaining about the financial situation in Canada. I venture to say that ninety-five per cent of them had no complaint to make about any suffering among the manufacturers. The manufacturers were fairly prosperous in this country. I suppose my hon. friend who has just taken his seat will take issue with me on that point so far as the textile industry is concerned. With the single exception of that particular industry, and the woollen part of that industry, there was certainly no serious complaint from the manufacturers, for they had enjoyed a period of prosperity never before known in any previous period in the history of Canada. They all admitted that. Unemployment was the evil that had to be cured. We had 117,000 unemployed in Canada—and I am quoting the words of the Prime Minister, which no doubt were repeated by other hon. gentlemen on the opposite side. There were 117,000 unemployed, and we rushed through increases in the tariff in the short session of 1930—to do what? In order to protect industry in Canada but primarily, as we were told, to cure unemployment. In connection with unemployment we were assured that another thing which was to be deplored would be remedied; there was to be no system of doles in Canada, but everyone was to be furnished with work.

Now, what is the record? I have no time to go into details, but hon. gentlemen opposite frankly admit that there are to-day in Canada nearly 900,000 people out of work. The question is: Have tariffs helped to relieve unemployment or on the contrary have they contributed to the present situation? Undoubtedly they have, and that is the answer to the application of high tariffs as a means of aiding unemployment. What else has it done? We had fairly prosperous farmers in this country in 1930. There was not very much complaint in 1930 in regard to the returns from farming operations. Well, what is the condition of the farmers to-day, not only in the west but in Ontario, which as is so frequently stated in this house is the banner province of the dominion? What are the conditions in this province to-day among the farmers? At least fifty per cent of them are facing bankruptcy. Not only were the increased tariffs going to help them, but we were told that we were going to blast our way into the markets of the world for the benefit of our farmers.

Mr. SPENCE: What could you do under the circumstances?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Before I conclude I shall be glad to tell my hon. friend. Now, what has happened to our manufacturers? What has happened to the mining industry? I know that hon. gentlemen do not like to hear these things; it does not sound so pleasing to the ear to be told that the woollen industry has had to carry on with seventy per cent protection. What about the mining industry, and what about the gentlemen who thought they were going to make fortunes by investing in mining stocks? What about the lumbering industry? What about the fishing industry? Where does the individual find himself to-day who is engaged in basic industry? He finds himself in such an unfortunate position that one of the salient features of this budget, one that is made so much of, is stabilization or bonusing as a means of keeping people on the land. That is the position our farmers are in; that is the position of those who are engaged in basic industries.

We are going to cure the situation by conferences. Notwithstanding the desperate plight of this country we are going to have another conference. You agriculturists and you who are engaged in the basic industries of this country are willing to await the consummation of another conference before you obtain relief. If fifty per cent of us are in the unfortunate position which I have just mentioned, I am afraid that before this conference takes place and we receive any results from it, we will all be in the unfortunate position of being bankrupts. That is the position in which we will find ourselves under the beneficent administration of this government. That is what this government has done for agriculture; that is what it has done for lumbering and that is what it has done for mining and fishing.

But hon. members opposite would have us believe that there is one bright spot—the wool industry has been helped. Out in my province you cannot even sell wool, you have to give it away. The hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Stewart) shakes his head, but three cents per pound is the magnificent price to be obtained for first class wool. If you happen to have a hide to sell you have to beg the purchaser to take it off your hands. That is the situation in western Canada. The hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards). takes credit to his government for having helped the woollen industry of this country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They have wool in their brains.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have 900,000 people out of unemployment and on the government's own admission we are feeding 1,300,000, yet we require a seventy per cent protection to keep an industry running that employs less than 40,000 people even in good times. Sometimes I wonder if it would not be better to scrap the textile industry altogether. That may seem to be a rash statement but I sometimes wonder whether the tax we pay to this industry and the revenue diverted from the Minister of Finance is worth the results obtained. According to the figures given the other day by the Minister of Finance, in 1930 the collections from customs and excise amounted to $244,000,000; the collections to-day are only $110,000,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: And still going down.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the estimate for this year and it may not amount to that much. It is costing the treasury of Canada more than $140,000,000 to continue exorbitant tariff protection of this kind. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) did very well the other day with a bad subject. He succeeded in making himself believe, if he did not make anyone else believe, that Canada was not in such a bad condition. He stated it was unfair to use dollars and cents in making comparisons, that we should use volume in order to explain the real position of Canada. Unfortunately volume does not take our wheat out of the country, nor does it take care of our cattle. The government states it is going to do something, but this is the greatest to-morrow government I have ever seen. It has been going to do things for the past three or four years.

When the Minister of Finance delivered his budget I had hoped that his speech would show that he and his government realized that the imposition of these high duties was the cause to a large degree of the difficulty through which we are now passing. I had hoped there would be some remission in the tariff, but there was not a sign except as it affected certain manufacturers and their raw products. I am not alone in this opinion, the best economists in the world hold with this position. Hon. gentlemen will say that other countries have done certain things and Canada would suffer if she did not follow suit. In reply to that I would refer them to the last four years of the Liberal administration. Other countries were putting up their duties to an unprecedented degree and we did not seem to suffer very much as a consequence because we were able to make agreements with other countries. I had hoped that our tariff had been raised to such a point that it could be used in making favourable trade treaties with other countries willing to trade with us. Did it work out in that way? I need only refer to what the Prime Minister said when he attended the trade conference in England in 1930. He was not willing to trade with Great Britain and give her a chance to get her goods into this country. Hon. gentlemen may talk until they are tired about the encouragement given to empire trade by the conference agreements, but so long as Canada maintains her present position and refuses to buy, we poor individuals engaged in the primary industries will be unable to sell our products. It is futile to talk about blasting, that does not mean anything.

What has the government been forced to resort to? It has been forced to the subsidizing of the natural products of the country. There is also talk of reducing the wheat acreage and other matters of this kind. It is said we have overproduction but hon. members who have given any thought to this matter know perfectly well that we have not overproduction—our trouble is under-consumption. Do hon. members mean to tell me that the 1,300,000 people being fed by the government are consuming all they are capable of consuming? Not at all. The same thing applies to the people in other countries where similar policies are being pursued. Because other countries are carrying on a policy of trade restriction, it is said that Canada should follow suit. Such a policy is costing the treasury of this country more money than we can possibly estimate. I do not mean to say that under a different policy we would be able to collect $244,000,000; not at all, but I do say that we would not have the tremendous drop in revenue which has occurred through the infliction of these excessive duties with the consequent restrictions of trade.

In the forty minutes at my disposal I am not able to go very far into this matter, but I should like to deal with another point raised the other night by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He referred to the stabilization of the wheat market through the injection of assistance by the federal government. I have sold and raised wheat for the past twenty-five or thirty years and may I say to the minister that whatever advantage this step may have been in 1930 and 1931, it certainly was no advantage in 1932. Do hon. members mean to tell me that the government stabilized that market when, after they went into it, wheat which was selling at sixty cents a bushel, began to go down? Were we foolish enough to believe the government were stabilizing that market when the price of wheat would drop four or five cents a bushel within a day, until it reached the low price of forty cents, the lowest it has ever been since I have been engaged in farming in western Canada. I am bound to think and still believe if the market had been left alone, we farmers who produce the grain would have had more from our products than we have under the circumstances that exist. I have not time to go into details in that connection, but examining these orders in council and looking into the whole matter of what they fondly call stabilization of the Canadian market and what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other night, namely, that Canada played a very important part in stabilizing prices throughout the world, let me say to him that it is not such an important part Canadian products play in the stabilization of world prices.

Mr. STEVENS: I said the Winnipeg grain market.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am speaking of the Canadian market—the Winnipeg market, yes.

Mr. YOUNG: The Winnipeg market is a world market.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister did not say that.

Mr. YOUNG: I say it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member may say it if he likes. One does not believe that sort of thing. So far as the stabilization of the Canadian market is concerned, if my hon. friend takes any comfort out of that, then I shall say to him that I would like a better explanation than the one he was able to give the other evening when presenting the case to the house.

Another matter the government seemed to be determined to preserve was the sanctity of the dollar; we must remain on the gold standard. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago we had in this house a vote on which most of us on this side voted for the placing of the dollar on a parity with sterling. I recognize some difficulty in this connection, but we were told by the Prime Minister that the government stood for a sound dollar and that there would be no inflation which it was assumed there would be were we to attempt to place our currency on a parity with sterling. It was plain that to do so would reduce the value of the Canadian dollar to a very low point. To-day I made inquiry and I find that exchange is twenty cents; that the Canadian dollar is worth eighty cents in New York. That is what we have to pay if we wish to exchange Canadian currency into United States funds.

We were warned also that, this being the case, the situation in Canada would become serious. Let us examine this for a moment or two. According to the statement issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day, we owe in the neighbourhood of $3,700,000,000. It is assumed that the provinces and municipalities owe something in the neighbourhood of over $2,000,000,000, making a total of about $6,000,000,000, and that corporations and individuals owe in the neighbourhood of $2,500,000,000, bringing the total to about $9,000,000,000. If we take the whole amount, fully one-half of it is owed in Canada; the other half is owed in the United States and abroad. The first benefit from inflation would be that it would help the situation in Canada in connection with at least one-half of our obligations and to some extent, not altogether, offset the increase in our obligations abroad. In the second place we would not be talking to-day about stabilization of the items mentioned in the budget if we were on somewhat of a parity with sterling and we would not be having the complaints from hon. members on this side and from hon. members opposite, if they would speak their minds, regarding the selection of a restricted number of commodities. This benefit would apply to every Canadian commodity marketed in the old country; we would get the benefit all along the line. Hon. gentlemen say that they are going to increase prices by something like fifty or sixty cents on the British pound on all the goods on the selected list sold in Great Britain. If that is the case, the goods that are not mentioned will have to take a reduction of fifty or sixty cents on the pound sterling. The argument must be good both ways. Therefore the advantage to be obtained by inflation far out-weighs the bugaboo held out that our exchange will cost us too much and it will be the ruination of the credit of Canada. Let us see what happened in Australia—I have a quotation which puts the matter much more tersely and better than I could:

> Two years ago the people of Australia confronted a situation more desperate and more disheartening than the people of Canada have ever faced. But to-day Australia is the most prosperous part of the British Empire.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

We were told that Canada was, but apparently this economist does not think so.

The six and a half million people of that dominion found themselves two years ago saddled with the colossal debt of $5,000,000,000, their solvency despaired of, their export restricted, unemployment growing, and all the influences of the world-wide depression breaking upon them as they did upon the people of Canada.

Australia has not defaulted one dollar of its interest payments abroad, and has not asked outside creditors to cut down their claims. These obligations have been met in full. The spread of unemployment has been checked, and the movement turned in the other direction. Business is on the upgrade. Exports have expanded. Deflation has not been allowed to run riot there. The farmers are drawing twice as much per bushel for their wheat as the farmers of western Canada. The country is buoyant with hope, money is cheap and plentiful and public credit has been restored.

I very well remember it was stated in the house the credit of Australia was doubtful two years ago.

These changes did not come about by chance. They were the direct and calculated results of public policy. Instead of submitting to the depression, Australia has fought it, and won. The government of Canada has let depression dictate conditions, with the results that we see, and another tax-raising budget as the latest of them. The government of Australia has actually started to reduce taxation!

There were three steps in the program by which Australia countered the change in world conditions. The first was a revaluation of the currency. The gold standard was abandoned and the Australian pound hitched to the British pound. Export trade went up to 26 per cent more than in the previous peak year. Australia had no wheat carry-over last summer. Her farmers sold out their crop at from 60 to 75 cents a bushel at point of delivery. Our farmers sold at half the price, and 130,000,000 bushels had not left the country when the shipping year ended.

As a second step, Australia increased the amount of its currency, otherwise "inflated," but only to a limited extent. That should interest our stand-pat economists who say inflation cannot be controlled. Australia has controlled it. It has applied no farther than to modify the ruinous process of deflation, that has been allowed to have full swing in Canada.

The third step was a plan of national economy. But the "economy" was not made to fall only on the civil servants, wage earners and poorer classes. Australian holders of public securities were asked to accept a cut of 22½ per cent in interest rates. To their eternal credit, 97 per cent of them did so voluntarily, and only three per cent from compulsion. Interest on mortgages was cut 22½ per cent.

A conversion loan was offered to the public. The result is particularly significant. Whereas the old six per cent bonds had fallen to 80, the new four per cent conversion bonds went up to 102. The bond holders who had sacrificed 22½ per cent of their interest found themselves with their whole capital in hand. That shows what the Australians think of the way the depression has been met and what they think about the future. It shows also that they have money to invest.

Mr. COTNAM: May I ask who is the writer of that article?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is written by a very good friend of mine in western Canada who has just recently come from Australia.

Mr. COTNAM: What is his name, may I ask?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): John Jackson.

An hon. MEMBER: Where does he live?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why can we not do something of this kind in Canada? I have heard some reasons given, but frankly I cannot agree with them. Why is it that we drift on from year to year with no concrete plan for improvement? Why is it that we are simply waiting for the economic conference, the date of which has not yet been fixed? And all the time the load of debt taxation is increased from year to year, and we come to the end of the year in what condition? This year my hon. friend has to borrow $156,000,000 to supply what he should have received from the taxpayers of this country, and he has had to do the same thing every year since this government took office. How long can we keep going under those conditions? There has been added to the public debt of this country nearly $500,000,000, since the government took office. To-morrow I suppose we shall be discussing the railway bill because the railways are suffering for lack of business. To my mind, 75 per cent of the cause of that lack of business are the trade restrictions that have been imposed which kill traffic. What does my hon. friend propose to do about the railways? The government are appointing trustees, trustees in bankruptcy practically, to take care of the national railways of this country. I picked up the paper the other day and read that the drop in earnings of the Canadian National Railways for February over February of last year was $800,000, and that the drop in earnings of the Canadian Pacific was $132,000 over February of last year. Is it not time that drastic remedies be thought of in connection with public affairs in this country? Is it not time that we began to realize that the abyss spoken of by the Prime Minister is much nearer than many of us thought?

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have to do something. What other indications do I see that the government are feeling a bit serious about the situation of this country after three years of their policies? Just a day or so ago they took the right by order in council to depart from the gold standard. I say to them in all sincerity that if they had taken that step long ago we would have had some benefit, but as it stands we seem to have all the evils and none of the advantages of staying on the gold standard. I say to them now that one of the first things they should do is to pass that order in council right away. Let them abandon this idea of bonusing the natural products of this country exported to the United Kingdom, and instead let them spread the advantage over the whole gamut of exports to Great Britain and let every producer get the advantage. I am entirely in favour of that kind of policy. I feel that perhaps the government will do it, and I pray to the Lord that they will do it. I hope that one of the first orders in council they will pass will be that very order.

Have we not arrived at the place, Mr. Speaker, where we cannot afford to borrow any more money. I believe every thoughtful man in this country realizes that. Indeed, how are we going to borrow any more money when we cannot to-day pay the interest on what we have already borrowed? We are now borrowing money to pay the interest upon borrowed capital. That is the situation of this country to-day. How long would an individual last who found himself in that position financially? Yet no one will deny that that is the position in which we find ourselves. We need not talk about the western provincial governments and their difficulties, because a part of their difficulties is a result of these obnoxious tariffs which I have mentioned; that and the excessive taxation in this country. I do not say that that is the whole cause of their difficulties. I do not defend them. I know that they have been reckless in expenditure for many years, but something has got to be done, and done quickly. I doubt very much if Canada can continue to feed 1,300,000 people very much longer. Then what are we going to do about it?

I noticed that the other day a delegation came to see the Prime Minister and urged the government to engage in a building program on borrowed money. I was relieved the other day when the Prime Minister stated in this house, in reply to an inquiry as to what effect inflation might have, that many years ago this country did inflate to the extent of $68,000,000, and no particular harm was done. We could not discover any evil consequences. The exchange did not go very seriously against us, and up to this day we have not yet discovered that that inflation worked any detriment to Canada's position. Since that time the Canadian dollar has at times been at a premium in the United States. I have no fear, speaking for myself, of inflation at the present moment. I support it and believe in it. Not only that, but I would suggest to the government that in every city in Canada there are public buildings required in the public service of this country which might be constructed. This work could be begun at once. The government could take the responsibility of issuing currency for the purpose of constructing needed public buildings in every city in this country. Let them take this responsibility as it was taken in 1915, as depicted by the Prime Minister. If they are afraid of the effects so far as exchange is concerned, let them put a clause in the agreement reducing the issue by annual instalments from revenue for a period of fifteen years. The note issue will be reduced and we shall have the improvements and we shall have added nothing to the public debt on that account. The interest charges that we would have to pay on borrowed money would take care of the whole thing and provide work for a large number of the unemployed.

Those are some of the things, Mr. Speaker, which I would suggest to the government that they might do, and do immediately, to relieve the situation. Before this budget passes, for heaven's sake let the government remove some of the grievous inflictions which they have visited upon the trade of Canada with other countries. Let us do something to get rid of our surplus products. Let the government make some move. Do not simply sit still and wait for something to turn up, because it usually does not turn up.

This government has got a great deal of credit for the courage which its leader possesses. Let him exhibit some of that courage now and take a bold step as other countries have done; for the benefit of the taxpayers of this country. If he does that, not only will it help to relieve the situation, but it will save $15,000,000 or $18,000,000 for bonusing, which this government are going to pay out of the treasury, which apparently they consider inexhaustible. We deny our people the right to trade by imposing excessive tariffs, and then in order to provide some compensation for those whom trade restrictions hit the hardest the government dips into the treasury to give a hand-out to those people in order to square things. It cannot be done. In the long run it will mean that we shall not simply be standing on the brink of an abyss, but that we shall go right over unless drastic action is taken. I say to the government, let them take action, and so far as I am concerned they may depend upon my support.

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I join with hon. members who have preceded me in congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the lucid manner in which he presented the budget. I agree with hon. members opposite that the minister did not present a very popular budget; in fact there are many points in it which I do not like. At the present time however this government is not looking for votes, and consequently this is not a vote catching budget. It was framed to meet realities, not imaginations.

I followed with a great deal of interest the remarks of the previous speaker, the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and also those of the chief opposition critic, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). After listening to the remarks of these hon. members I am prompted, in all kindness, to class them as listless diatribes, with more heat than light.

Certainly the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth made a very clever legal analysis of the budget, an analysis of which only a high priced corporation lawyer like the hon. member would be capable. I believe I would not be unfair to him if I said that ten minutes after the close of his remarks he could have risen to his feet and made just as good a speech in favour of the budget, if he were honest with himself, with as much sincerity. All down the line we have been damned for our tariff proposals. Coming from western Canada I am not one who particularly favours tariffs. I have always felt that a low or medium tariff would be in the best interests of Canada as a whole. I realize that east is east and west is west, and what will make a meal for the east will starve the west to death. But, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not made up merely of the sum of its provinces; it is something greater than that. We from the west have to make sacrifices, the same as those in other parts of Canada, for the good of the body politic. That we are doing, and doing cheerfully.

The hon. member for West Edmonton was not quite so critical as the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. Of course he talked trade and tariffs, money inflation, gold standard, and touched upon all other subjects to the discussion of which we have been listening for weeks. In view of the economic conditions obtaining in Canada to-day, I am sometimes convinced that we need a human standard more than a gold standard. How we are going to bring about that human standard I am not at the moment prepared to suggest. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth criticized at length the deficits on the Canadian National Railways. I believe there has been sufficient evidence adduced in the house to show that the Canadian National is not the only railway system suffering from deficits. Practically all of the greater railways in the United States are in the hands of receivers. The New York Central, one of the best and, in the past, most prosperous railways of the United States is to-day, in that position. For that reason I do not know why the hon. member felt justified in criticizing so severely the Canadian National system. It is simply a victim of conditions, that is all.

With his criticism of the pensions provision in the budget I find myself very much in agreement. I do not think it is necessary to take this crack at pensioners in the civil service. I believe there are other avenues of escape and other sources of revenue which might be explored. What is the position of these pensioners working in the service? When war broke out and Canada threw in her lot with the motherland, two things were asked for, namely men and money. We may picture two chaps, probably chums, one with a good job and the other with one not quite as good. One of these chaps enlists and in due time goes to France. He may come back all knocked to pieces, with a leg off, his nerves shattered and unable to resume his former vocation. The other fellow did not enlist, but stayed at home, and to make his contribution purchased bonds. The point I wish to make is this: We talk a good deal about the sanctity of contracts. If contracts are to be honoured, then, the promise made to the man who went to France is just as sacred as that made to the man who bought the bond. I think the government is ill advised in taking the step outlined in the budget. If it were going to stop there, it would not be so bad. However we have no assurance that provincial governments will not follow suit. Then, industries throughout the country will take similar action, and the first thing we know we will have a general condition as a result of the example set by the government.

If the government feels that returned soldiers should make a further contribution, and if it can be shown to those soldiers that they ought to help meet a national emergency, they will cheerfully make their contribution. But they want fair play. They do not want the government to take money from one branch of the service and let the rest go. We should not take it from the man who went to France, and not touch the chap who stayed home, slept in a feather bed and had three square meals a day. If it is necessary to assess returned soldiers, I believe it will be much fairer to make a five per cent assessment on pensions up to $50, and ten per cent over that, such assessment to apply throughout the whole pension list. If that action were taken I do not believe there would be a squeal from returned soldiers. They are never very far behind when contributions are necessary.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has criticised the government because of the falling off in trade and read many figures and statistics to prove his contention. I do not believe the people of Canada are very much interested in the trade figures for the last five years. They want to know what is happening to-day and what is going to happen to-morrow. That is what they are interested in. It must have been most disconcerting to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth when, picking up the Ottawa Citizen the morning after he made that great speech, he read on the first page the following article:

> Canada's foreign trade more stable than other nations. Decrease in export trade from 1931 to 1932 only 18·4 per cent, while that of the United Kingdom 20·7 per cent, United States 27·8 per cent, Germany 33·9 per cent, France 37·9 per cent and Austria 41 per cent.

That looks as though we are not the only country in the world which has suffered a loss in trade. I think those figures are very interesting in view of the statements that have been made by speaker after speaker from the other side of the house. From start to finish their arguments have been based on the assumption that the only country suffering from this depression is the Dominion of Canada.

Now I should like to say a word with regard to the government gamble in wheat, out of which the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth sought to make a good deal of capital. The hon. member damned this government for taking a flier in wheat, as he termed it. Just what do some people in western Canada who are closely in touch with the wheat situation think about that government gamble in wheat? I would not be unfair to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, I think, if I were to say that these men in the west have forgotten more about wheat than he will probably ever know. I have a statement before me made by Professor Swanson of the university of Saskatchewan. This gentleman does not need to be introduced to members of this house; he is one of the best informed men in western Canada as well as one of our leading economists. Professor Swanson says that western Canada was saved from economic collapse by the action of the Dominion government in entering the Winnipeg grain market to buy futures at a time when heavy deliveries from western farms were pressing on the market. I think the people of the west will be prepared to accept the judgment of Professor Swanson in preference to that of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth in this connection.

Then the hon. member went on to the stabilization fund, which is designed to help the agriculturists in western Canada who are so sorely in need of help at this time. I do not need to deal with the condition of that industry; every western member at least knows full well just what those people are facing to-day. The hon. gentleman damned the government for granting this bonus, as he called it. Again I would quote the opinion of a western man whose judgment I think should carry some weight in this house, and before reading his words may I say that he is not a supporter of the political party on this side of the house. I refer to the lieutenant-governor of Manitoba, who is a very strong Liberal, and who has farmed and raised cattle all his life in western Canada. Lieutenant-Governor J. D. McGregor is reported as having said:

> The dawn of a brighter day for the western farmer as the result of the Rhodes agricultural stabilization fund was predicted by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, J. D. McGregor, at the annual meeting of the agricultural bureau of the Winnipeg board of trade—

He goes on further to say:

> I am sure we are on the upturn . . . because of the fact that we are getting into the British market on a better basis. It will give an impetus to the marketing of a lot of our products. There is a possibility also of entry into United States markets, but there is no doubt that the British market is our market if we can cater to it.

I think that statement pretty well disposes of the arguments of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth.

I do not intend to follow the diatribes of those two hon. gentlemen at greater length; I am going to devote the remainder of the time at my disposal to the discussion of matters that particularly concern my own constituency. Two weeks ago I had no intention of speaking during this debate, but one day the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) made a vicious attack on the Hudson Bay railway, and I have never been backward in my support of that enterprise. I have nothing against any hon. member opposite, but the hon. member for North Waterloo is one of those hon. gentlemen whom I like very much. I like his delivery; I like his attitude in debate, but I must say that I thought it was unfair of him to attack this project at this time. The Hudson Bay railway and the port of Churchill are just being put into operation this year. Previously that road has not been open for traffic; there was a dead line at mile 412, and Churchill is mile 511. If you wanted to get a passenger or a package of freight to Churchill you almost had to go down on your knees to some official in order to get a special permit. So really this is the first year the road has been thrown open for unrestricted traffic, and under those circumstances the hon. gentleman was very unfair in making his attack. We from the west who are supporting this project are not heard day after day and week after week damning the government because they have put $500,000,000 into a canal system in the east which does not even pay its operating expenses. You do not hear us damning the government for the Prescott elevator which cost $10,000,000, or for the Montreal bridge which cost $19,000,000. You do not hear us referring constantly to a dozen harbours in Canada that are not paying any interest on the investment. Right in the budget the minister was forced to take $26,000,000 from the active column and transfer it to the non-active column, simply because these harbours are not paying any return on the investment. Why then do these eastern members pick out this particular project and damn it all the time? I would say to my hon. friend that this is no time for this narrow, picayune sectionalism and provincialism. If this country is to become great there must be the heartiest co-operation between all parts of the country. I sincerely hope I have heard the last of this sort of thing in this house. Give this road a chance.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend will pardon me if I remind him that my statement was made in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), I think it was, in which he attacked Ontario and Quebec with regard to tariffs. I had no intention of making a vicious attack; I do not think I ever made a vicious attack on anyone or anything in my life. Would the hon. gentleman say that this was a fair attack to be made by a western member?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I am sorry if I placed the wrong interpretation on the remarks of the hon. member; perhaps I am a little sensitive with regard to this project, but I will defend it whenever it may be necessary.

During the discussion of the estimates the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) was asked certain questions, and there appeared to be some confusion as to the insurance charges out of this port. I am going to present these figures to the house. They are authentic; they are compiled from figures furnished by Thomas Harling and Sons, who chartered all the boats out of Churchill, and who should know what they are talking about. Before I conclude I will also state what I consider to be the proper time to open and close that port, because there was a little confusion in that regard also. These figures are as follows:

Cost via Churchill

	Cents per bushel
Ocean freight 3/3 per 480 pounds at exchange $4.10	8.325
Ocean insurance $1.25 per $100 value—say 60 cents per bushel	0.750
Out-turn superintendence and expenses at discharging port	0.500
Say, total	9.575

Cost via Fort William and Montreal

	Cents per bushel
Fobbing and expenses at Fort William	1 5
Lake freight	6.0
Lake brokerage	.25
Lake insurance—25 cents per $100 value say 60 cents per bushel	.15
Fobbing and expenses at Montreal	.375
Ocean freight 1/9 per 480 pounds at exchange $4.10	4.48
Ocean insurance—25 cents per $100 value —say 60 cents per bushel	.15
Out-turn superintendence and expenses at discharging port	.5
Say, total	13 405

Mr. BOWMAN: Shipping to where?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): Shipping to Liverpool, and this in spite of the fact that we are paying just five times more insurance out of Churchill than they are paying out of Montreal. In the case of a steamer carrying 280,000 bushels, the total insurance out of Churchill would be $2,100 as compared with $500 out of Montreal. That gives a fair idea of the difference in insurance rates; it shows the iniquitous rates charged out of that port at the present time.

Another commodity which is as important to the west as wheat is flour. Last year some of the western milling companies shipped some flour out on one of the boats and saved 19 cents per hundred by doing so, even at the high insurance rate. That I think is very important to western Canada.

Next, let us take the live stock rates, Churchill compared with Montreal. I will give some of the points and the corresponding figures:

Live Stock Rates to Churchill and Montreal

From—	To Montreal	To Churchill	Savings in rates to tidewater
	(Rates per car of 20,000 lbs.)
Winnipeg stock yards	$170	$116	$ 54 00
Swan river	202	94	108 00
Yorkton	202	96	106 00
Saskatoon	225	102	123 00
Moose Jaw	221	108	113 00
Edmonton	229	126	103 00
Calgary	229	132	97 00
			$704 00
Average reduction per car or 50¼ cents per 100 pounds.			100 57

These rates apply all down the line on dairy produce, wheat and wheat products, and every other commodity produced in western Canada. All these savings have been made in spite of the fact that that route is discriminated against most unfairly by the marine insurance underwriters.

I come now to the question of season. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) was asked some questions with regard to the season and I think the answers he gave were based on the length of time the port was open last summer. I think we should clear that up. The time that the first steamer arrives there and the time the last steamer leaves should not be considered as the length of time the route is open, because while the government maintains an icebreaker in the straits to assist incoming and outgoing vessels, the fact is that almost as soon as the last vessel clears she immediately leaves there and comes back east and finishes her work for the season somewhere on the Atlantic coast. So that it is hardly fair to say that the open season lasts only from the time the first boat arrives until the last boat leaves. I have some figures with regard to the dates of opening and closing of the harbour at Fort Churchill, taken from the Hudson's Bay Company log books. It is therefore official. The average is about four and a half months, from 1825 to 1894. I will not burden the house by reading this long list but will hand it over to Hansard for publication:

This table extends from the year 1824 to the year 1894, a period of seventy years; it gives the date of the opening and closing of Churchill harbour for all of these years, taken from the records of the Hudson's Bay officials, and it is found that the average day of opening is June 19, and the average day of closing was November 19, and that the average period of open navigation is five months.

[Mr. B. M. Stitt]

Doctor Robert Bell gives his testimony with regard to other points in the bay, somewhat south of Churchill. He says:

I have a record of the principal phenomena of the seasons at Martin's falls, on the Albany, extending through a period of fifty years, and from it I find that the river is open there on an average of six months in the year. I have also a record of the dates of opening and closing of Hayes river at York Factory, extending over more than fifty years, from which it appears to enjoy an average of fully six months of open water. The Nelson river is open for a longer period.

I will add to the foregoing statement the opinions of some men who know what they are talking about. They are opinions that carry more weight than those of gentlemen who sit behind mohogany desks in the old country and set these rates—men who would have a good deal of trouble finding Hudson bay on the map, to say nothing of having any information about it. I will give the opinion of Captain Bernier, an explorer who spent almost a quarter of a century in the northern waters and who knows the Hudson strait and bay probably better than any other man in the world. What does he say? This is the evidence which he gave before the Senate investigating committee:

The Hudson bay and strait are open to navigation the year around, but as far as the strait is concerned icebergs block the way in places according to where the current into or out of the bay drives them. With wireless stations established so that ships could be directed in their course the Hudson bay ports would rank amongst the most important on the continent, owing to the very appreciable difference in distance to Europe compared with that of other ports.

Radio stations and other aids to navigation have been installed and it is now admitted by all shipmasters who have been there to be one of the most foolproof routes in the world. I talk to almost every captain who has sailed into Churchill in the last two years, men who have sailed the seven seas and been all over the world, and every one of them says, without hesitation, "Mr. Stitt, we would much rather go into Churchill than into Montreal, any day." So that it does not lie in the mouths of eastern members to condemn the route before it has been given a fair chance to make good.

I hope that this year the government will see fit to declare the port officially open, and that some sort of celebration will be held there worthy of a route which is going to mean so much to the farmers of western Canada. We who are behind this route, who have given our time and money to bring the project to a successful conclusion, are going to make it our business to see that it gets a fair chance. We are going to tolerate no shenanigans or monkey business from anyone. I do not mean by that that either this government or any member of it has made any attempts at monkey business. I will say for the Minister of Railways that he has cheerfully done everything that any man could be expected to do to make the route a success, notwithstanding adverse criticism; and I can assure the house that had he failed in that respect at any time it would not have been long before I would have got on my feet and told him about it.

This route is being thrown open for business this year. It is still under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals and is in no way connected with the Canadian National Railways. This railroad runs through my constituency and I know a great deal about the territory it serves. This is one of the richest undeveloped pieces of territory in the world to-day. There are 178,000 square miles of virgin territory adjacent to this line, sixty per cent of which is known to be mineralized. Only two per cent of that area has been prospected, yet we have one of the largest producing mines in the world at Flin Flon, a mine turning out $40,000 of new wealth every day. This development would not have been possible had the Hudson Bay railway not been constructed. Prospecting and exploration work is going on at a dozen different points and new gold finds are being made almost monthly. I hazard the guess that within the next two years there will be ten producing gold mines in that district turning out at least $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 of gold per year.

There are millions and millions of cords of black spruce, the finest pulpwood in the world, not to mention the millions of horsepower still undeveloped. There are other mineral resources besides gold as well as great fishing resources, despite reports to the contrary. I should like to see a proper organization installed as quickly as possible to handle this railroad. An operating superintendent who knows railroading from the ground up should be placed in charge. At the present moment a construction engineer is operating this line. I have no criticism to make of this man as a construction engineer because he is very honest and efficient in that line but we have reached the stage where we are going to put on long pants and a proper organization should be provided. If possible, a new divisional point should be made at The Pas. At the present time there are 772 miles of railroad running out of The Pas. There is the Canadian National line from Hudson Bay Junction to The Pas, the Hudson Bay railway from The Pas to Churchill, the Canadian National line from The Pas to Flin Flon and the Canadian National line from The Pas to Sherritt Gordon Mines on lake Kississing, in all a total of 772 miles. This mileage is the average mileage covered by division points throughout the Canadian National system. With a new divisional point having an operating superintendent in charge, a colonization department could be organized. There are thousands of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world adjoining this railroad and no attempt has been made to tell people about it. The operating superintendent could organize a traffic department which could go out after new business for this road. One of the greatest difficulties facing this road is the fact that it is not connected with the Canadian National Railways although owned by this government. The Canadian National station agents throughout the west at points which this road could serve well and profitably go out of their way to route grain to Fort William or Port Arthur rather than to Churchill over the Hudson Bay railway. They do this because they get no credit for any new business they may obtain for the Hudson Bay line whereas they do get credit for new business obtained for the Canadian National Railways. If this road is going to be given a chance a new divisional point should be created with an operating superintendent in charge.

It is hoped that we will be able to have an official opening of the port this year. If that does take place I hope that as many members of this parliament as possible will attend. I can assure hon. members, especially those from the east, that they will have their eyes opened. A couple of years ago the Canadian chamber of commerce made a trip to Churchill in a special train. I can recall the fur coats and other heavy wearing apparel which they brought along but after their arrival at Churchill they found the weather so warm that the heavy coats were soon placed back in the cars. It was a bright sunny day, just the kind of day you get here in July. We have that kind of weather for almost six months in the year. It is true we have extreme cold and heavy snow storms, but such weather is to be expected in any country bordering on the Arctic. Personally I prefer that kind of weather to the so-called climate you have here. We at least know that we will have winter weather during the winter season. On behalf of The Pas and the north country I extend a most hearty invitation to all members to pay us a visit. They will be sure of a welcome such as only true northerners know how to extend.

[Mr. B. M. Stitt]

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. John's-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I regret that none of my French speaking colleagues, who sit on the government benches, are in the house, as I should have liked to put a few questions to them.

Since I have had the honour of being a member of this house, it is the third budget which I have pondered over. Even previous to becoming a member, I had been for a number of years a reader of Hansard; I have always followed with interest the various phases of the Dominion government's legislation. Even, to-day, I referred back to the Hansards of the 1929 and 1930 sessions, in order to ascertain the views of our good friends opposite on the budgets brought down by the government of that period. The budgets introduced by the late Liberal administration, from 1923 to 1930, decreased taxation and showed surpluses. For the past three years, this government has introduced, at each session, new taxes and have only had deficits to show. Glancing over the 1931 budget, when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was Minister of Finance, I note that he opened his remarks by announcing duties on tea, increasinng the tax on postal stamps, raising the sales tax from 1 to 4 per cent, levying a tax on coal and burdening us with numerous other forms of taxation. He stated, however, when levying these new taxes that he would have the pleasure of announcing a surplus for 1932. To the great amazement of the house, when the 1932 budget was brought down, a deficit and further taxation were announced. A few days previous to presenting the budget, the right hon. Prime Minister appointed the present incumbent (Mr. Rhodes) to the post of Minister of Finance. I must congratulate him on the courage he displayed in bringing down a budget like the present one. It holds the record, because never to my knowledge or to that of old parliamentarians was there ever submitted to the house a budget so burdened with taxes. In 1932 also, we were informed that with the new taxation the government hoped to declare a surplus. The 1932 budget disclosed an increase in the sales tax from 4 to 6 per cent, a duty on biscuits, an increase in excise taxation, such as on cheques, telegrams, long distance telephone calls, railway tickets and everything one can think of, beside lowering the minimum exemption of the income tax. Moreover, it disclosed a decrease in the agriculture estimates and an increase in those of the National Defence.

The other evening, the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Golding) in a speech quite to the point, stated that five ministers of the crown had taken part in the election of South Huron, in the autumn of 1932, and had requested the people of that constituency to elect a competent farmer in order to advise the government on the means which should be taken to help the farming class. I regret to state that ever since the advent to power of the Conservative party, the only thing that was done for the farmers and workmen was to burden them with taxation.

What were the pledges given to farmers and workmen in 1930? For the workmen, work was to be found; the farmers were to have markets and better prices for their products. I do not wish to refer to butter, we heard enough of it during the election of 1930. The New Zealand treaty was cancelled, nevertheless there has just been imported into this country 425,000 pounds of butter, and the price of this commodity is now two cents lower. No protest has come from the eastern townships Conservative members who were elected on the butter question. I am aware that our good Conservative friends of Quebec are perhaps busier these days carving out counties with the hope of being returned at the next election, than in devoting their time to the budget or studying the taxes which will burden the farmers and workmen; however, I wish to give them fair warning that notwithstanding all the means to which they may resort, I do not think that there are among them any who display the qualities required to be re-elected, in spite of all the county carving they may resort to.

We note that in the Agriculture estimates of 1932, there was a decrease of more than $3,000,000, yet, not a single member opposite protested, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of my Conservative colleagues of Quebec represent as I do constituencies mostly composed of farmers. Again, in 1933, there is a decrease of $381,000 in agriculture and not a single rural member opposite has protested. In the National Defence estimates, on one single item of $111,000, we find an increase of $32,000. I think that in these times of depression, the government should first cut down expenditures which are absolutely unnecessary. One may object that it behooves the opposition to protest. One of my good Conservative friends from St. Johns, an admirer of the right hon. Prime Minister, in 1930, as recently as yesterday, asked me what were my views on the 1933 budget. My reply was "I cannot give you my views because you might think that I am biased in this respect." He then replied that the Prime Minister was certainly the first (premier) Prime Minister of Canada who has proved the greatest disappointment to this country. The Prime Minister, when leader of the opposition, in the course of his 1930 electoral campaign, promised to find work for everybody, to balance our budget and make of Canada a prosperous country. My friend further added: "He has done absolutely nothing, neither has he reduced expenditure." The government did reduce certain expenditures, for instance, in public works, agriculture, beside cutting down ten per cent of the salaries of civil servants, etc. All this to throw dust in the people's eyes. However, I state that from a business viewpoint, nothing has been done. Taxes have been increasing from year to year.

A short time ago I met a good friend of mine who said to me: "What can we expect from this budget? Will there be further taxation?" My reply was: "My good friend, there will certainly be further taxation because no government has ever existed which has displayed more ability to tax than the present Conservative government." And this year's budget has certainly proved my contention.

The hon. Minister of Finance is an able lawyer, an eminent man. On March 21, last, in his budget statement, the hon. Minister of Finance, at page 3225 of Hansard, states:

> The chief items to be taken from the exempt list are materials and non-permanent equipment entering into the manufacture of goods subject to the sales tax, fuel oil, molasses, corn syrup and sugar cane syrup, cleaned rice, sago and tapioca, certain other processed foodstuffs, and certain types of machinery and appliances.
> All items included in schedule IV of the Special War Revenue Act, now taxable at 3 per cent, will be subject to tax at the full rate of 6 per cent, with the exception of articles manufactured or produced by the labour of the blind in institutions in Canada . . .

This list contains many items, however, if I am not mistaken, peas, beans, rice, vermicelli and all canned vegetables have also been taxed 6 per cent, and it is most unfortunate on the part of the hon. Minister of Finance not to have made any mention of these products, because, after the discussion which is taking place in committee, the public will be able to judge for themselves how much they are being taxed.

I am fully aware that to carry on the administration of this country the government requires funds and must seek them in taxation; however, what astonishes me is that each budget of the Liberal regime showed a decrease in taxation and a surplus in our balance sheets.

Ever since I have been a member of the house, the government has always increased the taxes and even doubled them, yet it has always had deficits. What I disapprove is the reduction of taxes on articles of luxury, such, for instance, as a $2.00 reduction on spirits per gallon and 20 per cent on cigarettes. Since taxes are necessary why reduce those on spirits and cigarettes and increase those on the prime necessities of life? To my mind it is reversing the national order of things. It would have been more rational to increase the duties on spirits and cigarettes, however, the reason for this may be to favour certain companies which, no doubt, subscribe large amounts to the election funds of the Conservative party.

A duty on cigarette paper of 2 cents per 100 sheets and 5 cents per 50 tubes has just been levied.

Therefore, a person who cannot afford paying 20 cents for a packet of cigarettes or one cent each, is now forced to pay a duty on cigarette paper of 2 cents per booklet of 100 sheets or 5 cents per 50 tubes. I think it would have been wiser not to reduce the duty on cigarettes which everybody admits is an article of luxury. I do not smoke more cigarettes now than I did when I had to pay 25 cents per packet of 20. Those who indulge in liquors do not consume more, to-day, owing to the fact that they now pay a few cents less per bottle.

I deny to the government the right of taxing molasses—the dessert of the poor man's table—sugar, 2 cents per pound, when the price at the refinery is $4.18 per cwt A good Conservative told me yesterday that they had paid as high as 15 cents per pound during the war. It is true that we paid as high as 15 cents per pound during the war, however, at that period, people had work and could afford paying that price.

I must insist that an inquiry be held by the government, in connection with those who profited by the tax increase on sugar and that the names of those who realized profits of $600,000, be revealed. The newspapers disclosed the fact that a manufacturer of soft drinks, in Montreal, had made such a profit. I state, Sir, when Canadians are starving, when we have over 1,000,000 unemployed, the government has no right to allow companies or private individuals to realize such profits. I have been informed that friends of this government, who were tipped off, made a profit of $150,000, on one sugar purchase. The government will sustain a loss of more than $5,000,000 on sugar duties.

[Mr. Rhéaume.]

I am aware that the government is always well disposed to appoint commissions, for instance, the commission which inquired into the prices of coal. The latter held an inquiry in the offices of those who were charged with exploiting the people; I know for certain that no more will be heard about this inquiry, and that the result will be hushed. However, I state that the government should hold a searching inquiry in connection with those who took advantage of the duty on sugar, they should denounce the guilty parties, fine them and make them reimburse the treasury. When a poor fellow is caught with a gallon of whisky or even a quart on which no duty has been paid, he is fined $200 and costs, beside being condemned to 30 days in gaol, while those who have stolen $500,000 from the country escape punishment. I do not know whether the information on the proposed duty on sugar leaked out before the budget was brought down; however, there must certainly have been some indiscretion. It behooves the government to hold an inquiry and punish the guilty parties, if possible, while forcing them to reimburse the treasury. These people purchased sugar by hundred thousand bags, they will sell it to the working classes, the farmers, to everybody in this country and will realize a profit of 2 cents per pound, a profit which should have been paid as a duty to the government.

When I spoke on the budget, sir, in 1932, the hon. Minister of Finance was absent from the house, so I requested has colleague, the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) to communicate to him the remarks which I then made in connection with the tax on luxuries. May I, sir, quote those remarks in English so that the hon. Minister of Finance may follow them:

> Now, sir, I wish to make a few comments on the luxury tax. I regret that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) is not in his seat. However, I trust that his good friend, the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland), will draw his attention to my remarks or that he will read them in Hansard. This luxury tax was discontinued, I do not know by whom. However, if an error was committed, it was when the luxury tax was abolished, much to the detriment of the people.

In May 1920, there existed a luxury tax which had been levied by the Conservative government. A delegation, naturally, composed of capitalists and millionaires probably interviewed the government in order to protest against this tax which was detrimental to those who subscribed to the election funds; it was, therefore, decided by order in council, in December 1920, to abolish this luxury tax.

This reduced by 10 per cent the price on these articles and allowed these gentlemen to save that amount when making gifts.

There exists a duty on the prime necessities of life as, for instance, on boots and shoes, picks and shovels which the working classes required to earn a livelihood.

The 6 per cent tax is the same for the workman who purchases a pick, a shovel or a pair of rubber boots required to earn his bread, as it is for the well-to-do person who purchases a pair of shoes to attend a dance or some other event. I state that it is unjust. A luxury tax should exist.

One may object that the thing seems absurd. However, one has but to visit the principal stores of Ottawa and Montreal or elsewhere, as, for instance, Morgan & Co., Birks and Mappin and Webb, in Montreal, to find out that their stocks comprise more than 90 per cent of articles of luxury. I think that previous to taxing the prime necessities of life we should levy a tax on luxuries, especially in times of depression. When a duty has just been levied on molasses, sugar, articles of first necessity, rice, vermicelli, necessary to the workman to feed his family; biscuits and jams, I think that this has no common sense. Why not place a duty on furs, silver fox, diamonds, expensive dining room sets, lace, evening dresses, in fact all jewels and articles of luxury? In times of crisis and distress such as we are passing through, when one tenth of the population is in want, I state that those who can afford it should be the first to be taxed.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): We would have to tax motor cars made in the United States.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Then, we have the automobile de luxe. A duty of 5 per cent has just been levied on tires. Do you think it fair and reasonable, sir, that a poor worker or farmer, who is obliged to have a motor truck to transport his products to the market or his milk to Montreal or elsewhere, should be placed on a level with millionaires who own a Packard, a Pierce-Arrow or the best makes of motor cars, and forced to pay 5 per cent on tires. We should have established a difference. It may be objected that a Ford tire does certainly not cost as much as one for an automobile de luxe. That is a fact. But the tires for ordinary truck with a capacity of one or two tons, which are used by the working class to earn a livelihood, are as expensive as those of an automobile de luxe. Could not a person, who has the means of purchasing a motor car of $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000,—that is his business after all—could he not, I say, afford to pay 5 or 10 per cent duty? One may object that 10 per cent is a high duty. However, when 6 per cent is levied on articles of prime necessity, which are absolutely necessary to keep one alive, do you consider, sir, that a tax on luxuries of 10 per cent is too much? I state that it is not. When comparing the sales tax on articles of prime necessity with that of a tax on luxuries of 10 per cent, it is certainly not an exaggerated one.

I happened to be in Montreal, yesterday, and called on a friend who is employed in a furniture store. He asked me to look over the new furniture they had received for the spring sale and showed me a bed room set; the latest thing out, made in Ontario. I inquired the price. It was $850. It is rather expensive, but very beautiful, indeed, a marvel, I said; however, a person who can afford to pay $850 for such a bed room set, when he can purchase a good one for $50 or say $100; I state, that he certainly can afford paying a tax to the country.

When a person buys his wife a silver fox fur and pays $50, $60 or $75. . .

Mr. PARENT (Translation): $150.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): . . . also furniture, dresses and many other things, do you think, sir, that it is unfair to put a tax on luxuries? When a lady purchases an evening dress and pays $35 or $40, the 6 per cent sales tax is included; when you require a comfortable overcoat and have to pay $25 or $30, the 6 per cent sales tax is also included. If you require an ordinary suit you must pay $25 and that includes the 6 per cent sales tax; if you require a tuxedo suit to attend banquets three or four times a year or you think you should have one in your wardrobe for your own satisfaction, you certainly are able to afford to pay 10 per cent more to help out the poor people of this country to weather the crisis.

Briefly, sir, I consider that the present budget—I do not blame the hon. Minister of Finance with whom I am personally acquainted, having chatted, on occasions, with him, he is a charming fellow, always well disposed, however, circumstances, so to speak, forces him to become the hangman. I state that before levying a tax on all articles of prime necessity, on farm implements which have been increased from 150 to 300 per cent, the government should weigh their acts after the promises made, in 1930, and the solemn pledge given to the people of this country.

When a candidate aspires to become mayor, councillor or member of parliament, either for a town or county, he pledges himself, if elected, to carry out certain reforms or measures. When the Prime Minister was touring the country, he also made promises to the working classes in Montreal and Sherbrooke. Last Saturday, while in Sherbrooke, I met a workman who told me that, when the Prime Minister came to Sherbrooke on his election tour, he had gone to the Armory to hear him speak, and, the Prime Minister had pledged his word that, if elected, within two months all the factories of Sherbrooke would be in operation, that everybody would have work. Although a Liberal he said, I took him at his word and voted for the Conservative candidate.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): He was wrong.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): There is no doubt about that. Rest assured that he will not cast his vote for him at the next election. However, when the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition, a minister of the crown or a candidate makes a promise to the people, he is bound in honour to fulfil it, yet our good friends opposite, from the eastern townships, made promises to the farming class, and since I have been in the house, I have not seen one rise and protest against the conference agreements entered into last autumn, such as the tariff increase on barbed wire and cream separators; no, not one rose in the house. The Liberal party was criticized for permitting New Zealand butter to enter this country, yet, to-day, it is flooding the market and not a protest is heard. Again, I state that they are false to their pledges. When a candidate presents himself before his constituents and pledges his word, it is a solemn pledge, it is not, one may say, an oath (serment), but it is his word of honour.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): That is an anguish (serrement) of the heart.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Must we only act under oath! When a man has probity and honour, when he makes a promise, he fulfils it. His party may blunder; however, he must have the courage to rise, point out the errors of their ways, and protest. The other day an hon. gentleman opposite, the member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) protested on behalf of his constituents because lambs were not selling, on the Montreal or Toronto market, the price they should I congratulate him because I think he is the only member opposite who had the courage to rise in the house and protest on behalf of the farming class.

In closing my remarks, sir, I state that the government has done nothing for the farming and working classes. Since three years the government has been in power, it has taxed, overtaxed and treble taxed the people. When the reckoning day comes, let me assure you sir, that the people will remember; and we, the Liberal party, are anxiously awaiting the day when the Canadian people will recover their rights and again enjoy prosperity.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 49, respecting a certain patent application of Fred Charles Fantz—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston.

Mr. W. T. LUCAS (Camrose): Mr. Speaker, may I first take this opportunity of offering my congratulations to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) for the very complete and businesslike statement which he presented to the house and the country in his budget speech of March 21. In my opinion it gives to the ordinary person a very clear and vivid picture of the financial condition of the country. It is a statement which should be easily understood, but if not, at least the application of its provisions will I think be readily felt by all. The addition of $156,000,000 to our national debt should bring home to every citizen the fact that in spite of her great natural wealth, and her virile man power, Canada, under our present financial system, is fast building up a colossal interest-bearing debt which if not properly dealt with will eventually drag us down to ruin.

Perhaps one of the bright spots in the budget may be found in the first part of the minister's speech where under the heading, a short review of world economic conditions, he points out that a world financial storm of unprecedented severity first started in Austria, passed from one country to another, finally reaching the United States, which, with its huge gold reserves, had been thought to be impregnable. But the world has recently witnessed the financial debacle which took place in that country, and many are coming to realize that after all gold is not real wealth. Now, however, that the last stronghold has been bombarded and compelled to yield, it may bring home to the people of the world the fact that the financial policies of the past have proved themselves totally inadequate to meet present day conditions, and also that the men who have guided and directed those policies will either have to change their views or give way to men with a clearer vision of the new world in which we live, a world endowed with great wealth, with plenty for all who are ready and willing to work and play their part in society, or else carry on as we are doing, and be dragged down into the bog of misery and despair. The choice, Mr. Speaker, will have to be made and made quickly, for to quote the words of the Minister of Finance in introducing his budget, "Events are moving rapidly, driven by the urge of economic necessity."

Under our present financial system the object of every minister of finance is to balance his budget, a very laudable thing to do if it can be done without entailing too much sacrifice on the part of the masses of the people. But with a total expenditure of approximately $418,000,0000, only $145,000,000 or roughly 35 per cent of which is controllable expenditure, and with a total deficit of $156,000,000, if we are to balance the budget through economy alone we would have to wipe out all salaries and all services to the people, together with all upkeep of our public works and public buildings, and on top of that find another $11,000,000. One realizes then how absurd the argument becomes Yet we have such bodies as the Montreal board of trade circularizing the members of the House of Commons, advocating the cutting down of expenditures in order to balance the budget. A banker from the same city is also reported on the front page of the Ottawa Citizen, on March 23 last, as saying in regard to the present budget that the only disappointment in the budget speech is a lack of a serious effort to reduce expenditures. I wonder just what services and expenditures these men would have us cut out. Or do they mean that interest charges, which is by far the largest item in our uncontrollable expenditure, should also be cut?

A careful perusal of the finances of the country shows that while the government have been making heroic efforts to reduce controllable expenditure by the reduction of salaries and services, and so forth, any savings which have been made in this direction have been largely offset by an increase in interest charges. For instance, at page 3223 of Hansard the Minister of Finance makes the following statement:

> It is proposed therefore that the original allotments to departments of the votes for controllable services should, when supply is released in the new fiscal year, be so modified that ten per cent of the total, or approximately $14,000,000, will be withheld.

It will be noted that while $14,000,000 is thus to be saved during the coming year, on top of the cuts already made, our interest on the national debt increased last year by $13,-820,000, or almost all of the saving to be made. It will be seen therefore that while we sacrifice human values, that sacrifice goes to compensate the owners of so-called wealth. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is not the cost of salaries and services that is strangling the people to-day, but our ever-increasing debts and interest charges, the burden of which has been increased tremendously during the past few years by the drastic fall in the price level, thus lessening our ability to pay.

Coming to the budget itself, I should like to deal for a few minutes with some of its provisions. The minister in his budget speech referred to debts and interest. As is well known, this question is now before the banking and commerce committee, and it is to be hoped that when that committee makes its report to the house, constructive suggestions will be offered which will give a lead in dealing with this vexed question. I should like to point out, however, that the figures so far disclosed show debts so enormous that it is hopeless to think of paying them in full. The figures given for dominion, provincial and municipal governments, direct and guaranteed alone show the staggering sum of $6,539,728,053, and when one adds to this corporation obligations other than those guaranteed by government, farm and urban mortgages and private debts amounting to many more billions of dollars, and when one realizes that on top of this our ability to pay has been lessened by fifty per cent or more through the drastic fall in price levels, one then begins to realize the tremendous burden which is dragging us down and commences to see the cause of our present predicament. The proposal to lower interest rates is a step in the right direction but the reduction should be made worth while. However it is not only on savings deposits that interest rates should be reduced, but on bank, mortgage and other forms of debts upon which rates of interest are far too high.

Next we have reference to the conversion loan. By lowering interest charges the minister believes substantial savings can be made to the public treasury. I hope so. I see no reason why Canada should not follow the lead given by Great Britain and Australia, and if necessary make the conversion compulsory. This is no time to quibble with these matters. From all accounts Australia was in a worse financial condition than Canada, but she tackled this problem in a courageous manner. The economy was not made to fall only on the civil servants, wage earners and poorer class of employees. Australian holders of public securities were asked to accept a cut of twenty-two and a half per cent in interest rates, and the interest rates on mortgages were also cut by that figure.

While I heartily agree in principle with sanctity of contracts, I cannot for the life of me see why a contract with a bondholder should be considered any more sacred than a contract to compensate returned soldiers for disabilities received while fighting in defence of our country. Had it not been for these men who were so ready and willing to offer their lives, if need be, bondholders might have found themselves with something of very little value. May I ask if a government employee holding government securities will have his salary reduced by the amount of interest he receives? If not, why not? Why distinguish between pension payments and interest payments? If I might quote a few lines from the chronicle of the Pilgrim Fathers—

> It wonderfully encourages men in their duties when they see the burden equally borne.

I will say this, however, that there are pensioners drawing one hundred per cent disability pension and holding jobs requiring one hundred per cent efficiency. I believe this should not be allowed. There can and should be adjustments in such cases, but lower paid men should not be penalized.

Next we have the proposed agricultural stabilization fund to apply to certain agricultural and fish products. May I congratulate the government upon taking this step, which is at least a partial recognition of some of the handicaps under which the farmer has laboured? But, Mr. Speaker, those steps should have been taken long ago. If it is good for certain products, why should it not be applied to all? Because if there is one thing which has been strangling the trade of Canada it has been the disparity in exchange against our goods in British and foreign countries, the currencies of which have been depreciated so much more than our own. In regard to the present proposal, however, it remains to be seen whether the producer or the exporter receives the benefit. I am disappointed that the government has not taken any steps to set up an agricultural export marketing board, about which we heard so much last year. Had this board been properly constituted, and had it been given complete jurisdiction over exports, over shipping, and so on, there is no doubt that the producer would receive full value from the stabilization fund. It is hard to estimate the number of millions of dollars our farmers have lost through the disparity in exchange, and had the farmer benefited, as he should have done, this benefit would have been reflected in an improvement in all lines of business.

The reduction in the value of the pound from $4.40 to $4.25 for duty purposes is another step in the right direction. Again, however, it does not go far enough. The whole step should have been taken last year when the conference agreements were consummated, if we were to derive any real benefit from those agreements. I wish to commend the government upon the assistance it gave to the co-operative wheat pools, and for its efforts to stabilize the price of wheat. Again may I say, however, that much more effective assistance would have been given by bringing our dollar to a parity with sterling, which action would have helped not only agriculture but every other industry in the country. How can our farmers compete against those of countries which have tied their currency to sterling? Australia and New Zealand currency have even gone lower than sterling. In the last issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal dated March 25, and issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce I find the following at page 419:

> Not taking into consideration the acreage bonus which farmers anticipate, growers have recently been receiving from 2s. to 2s. 6d. per bushel of sixty pounds, in Australian currency, for wheat delivered at country railway stations, the disparity being the freight distance to the seaboard.

Taking the minimum price of two shillings, it would equal 48 cents per bushel net to the Australian farmer, compared to 30 cents or under for our Canadian western farmer. Some hon. members who preceded me in this debate, speaking on this question, have when making comparisons converted Australian currency into Canadian currency. But may I say that the Australian farmer does not pay his debts in Canadian currency; therefore their argument falls to the ground.

The increase in the income tax is to be commended. Coming on top of the increase of last year it is very substantial, but there is still room for further increases, especially in the higher incomes. I am pleased to note that my suggestions of last year when dealing with taxation in regard to bearer bonds have been adopted, and I am confident this should realize a substantial amount of revenue.

The two cents a pound tax on sugar is in my opinion excessive, and will place a tremendous burden on the already overtaxed householder. The poor man with the large family is the one who will be hit hardest, and our farmers in the west who are struggling to make a living, and the good housewives who try to store up some of the wild fruit to be used by the family during the long winter months, will find it more difficult.

The removal of the exempted list under the sales tax is particularly bad at this time, as it will only tend to lower the standard of living of a great mass of the people, when as a matter of fact what is needed is an increased standard of living so that the great body of people who exist on a mere living wage, or less, may be enabled to consume more of the surplus goods on hand, and thus create a demand, which would again set our factories running and relieve the unemployment burden which is weighing so heavily upon us all.

In fact, Mr. Speaker our action reminds me of the following lines in the Church of England prayer book:

> We have left undone those things which we ought to have done, and we have done those things which we ought not to have done, and there is no health in us.

Certainly there is no health in our economic life to-day.

I now come to what I consider by far the most important announcement in the budget, namely the appointment of a royal commission to study the organization and working of our entire banking and monetary system, to consider the arguments for and against a central banking institution, and to make recommendations for revising or supplementing our existing banking and monetary legislation. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the future happiness and prosperity of the people of this dominion, for at least some time to come, will depend largely on the outcome of this investigation, and the success or failure of this commission will depend wholly on the type of men selected. If the government appoints men of the old school, with the orthodox bankers' viewpoint they might just as well save the country the expense of such a commission. If the world is to be saved from the catastrophe which is now facing it, far-reaching changes will have to be adopted in connection with our banking and monetary policies. One of the great troubles in the past has been that the people have been kept in ignorance in regard to monetary problems and the intricacies of finance. In support of that statement I should like to quote a short passage from Norman Angell's book, The Unseen Assassins, at page 143:

> We deem it necessary to let our scholars know about the structure of the earth, its movements round the sun, facts in geography, botany, zoology, something of the stories of kings and queens, snatches of dead languages, and much else, but in all that strange medley of information not one word, from the day that he enters school to the day he leaves, about the most indispensable, the most powerful and the most frequently used of all the devices of our daily lives: the money in our pockets and in our banks, the thing about which—or about matters intimately related to it—we are all of us in some measure called upon to make vital and far-reaching decisions, decisions of public policy which affect enormously the distribution of wealth and the lives of millions. About that, we are, speaking broadly, taught nothing whatsoever. The thing which, of all things in human society, concerns us most insistently every day, almost every hour of our lives, and about which man has made some of his worst mistakes and developed his worst understandings—something which has grown into an elaborate system and around which our whole civilization rotates—is something which our popular education completely neglects.

As this quotation points out, the average citizen has been taught little or nothing about monetary matters, and in the past a tendency developed to place our financiers and bankers upon a pedestal surrounded by a veil of mystery, behind which it was considered the rankest kind of sacrilege for the average citizen to attempt to penetrate. But, Mr. Speaker, the happenings of the last few years have disillusioned many people; they have discovered that these men were far overrated and that these so called pillars of finance, upon whom they depended, after all were mere men of clay. The crisis through which we are passing, in my opinion, is purely monetary in character. Other adjustments will have to be made, but they will all prove futile unless we tackle the root cause of the disease and find a remedy for it. I am supported in that statement by an article appearing in the financial column of the Toronto Saturday Night, a publication printed in one of the financial centres of the east. Under date of January 7 Saturday Night has this to say:

> The immediate cause of this depression (which need never have occurred) was the inadaptability of our monetary and credit systems to latter day requirements and their inability to stand the extreme strains to which they were subjected, notably by the payment of war debts in gold. Though serious unemployment is a product, this depression is a monetary and not an unemployment depression, and solution of our monetary problems will enable the cure of the unemployment evil.

The Liberal party pins its faith largely on a lowering of tariffs as a remedy. I do not ignore the strangling effect of tariffs as they exist throughout the world to-day but, Mr. Speaker, if we are effectively to lower tariffs we must first remove the root cause. Last year the London chamber of commerce appointed a committee of its members to study this question and make a report, which might form a basis for a discussion of the monetary question at the Imperial economic conference held in Ottawa last July. I think those in charge of the conference made a tremendous mistake when they ignored the report and treated this most important question so lightly; one might almost say it was conveniently shelved. If one will take the trouble to read this report and study the names of the men who composed the committee I think it will be agreed at once that they are men of the very highest standing who could not by any stretch of the imagination be accused of being imbued with communistic doctrines. I should like to quote just a few lines from this report:

> The committee, on January 5 last, issued a memorandum, for private circulation, giving its conclusions. These, however, related only to the domestic aspect of the question, and were designed to provide a currency which would rise and fall automatically with business activity, instead of in accordance with the fortuitous influx and efflux of gold.

The following resolution was adopted:

> That in the opinion of this council, monetary reform is of outstanding importance. The arrest of progressive deflation is, in their view, the condition precedent to a restoration of world prosperity, and no other measures which may be taken can prove effective substitutes.

The report goes on to say that the problems with which industry and commerce are faced are these:

> (i) To restore and expand the purchasing power of the peoples of the world, without which unemployment must remain, and defaults, national and individual, must increase.
> (ii) When once a fair price level has been restored, to eliminate so far as may be practicable, fluctuations in price level due to monetary causes.

I should like hon. members to listen to this next paragraph:

> (iii) To remove the causes which are inducing nations to strangle world trade by tariffs, quotas, exchange restrictions, etc.

In the final summary, speaking of British domestic matters, the report recommends:

> The Bank of England should become a central bank pure and simple. The currency should be issued against all commodities, as represented by the eligible commercial bill—i.e., a bill relating to current production and distribution, and not against one commodity, gold, which can be cornered.

Finally the report states:

> With full internal purchasing power in the participating countries, none would object to a fair exchange of commodities with other countries, since imports, visible and invisible, would equal exports, visible and invisible, to a corresponding value. (This does not, of course, mean that the exports to an individual country would necessarily equal the imports from it, or vice versa.)

And again:

> Excessive tariffs would therefore tend to disappear. Differences between nations in the volume of internal taxation would be a matter of domestic concern to each, and would not cause disequilibrium as between one nation and another.
> International money payments, whether in respect of interest or debts, reparations, etc., could only be received in the form of goods or services against which no corresponding export was made by the receiving country.

There are those who state that the members in this corner stand for a system of uncontrolled inflation. I want to deny that charge. What we are opposed to is any controlled or uncontrolled policy of deflation such as we have had in the past few years. When we find that the total amount of bank loans and currency in Canada is approximately $700,000,000 less to-day than it was three years ago it bears out the statement I have just made. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) speaking a few days ago quoted Irving Fisher as saying that we want neither inflation nor deflation but that we should keep the car in the middle of the road. Perhaps I might illustrate this in a more homely way. Let us take a standard quart of milk, with which everyone is familiar. If we add sufficient water to make two quarts we all know what will be the result; we will have twice the quantity but the food value will not be any greater. This might be called inflated milk. If we start again with a standard quart of milk and put it through a process of dehydration we also know what will be the result; finally we will have what is called powdered milk. This might be called deflated milk. If to that powdered milk is added sufficient water to fill the bottle then we will once more have the standard quart of milk with which we started. No one could say that was inflated milk; rather it might be called reflated milk. We would apply this principle to our money problem; this might be called reflation, and the object would be to restore the volume of circulating media to a normal relation to the volume of business to be done. Is there anything unsound in such a proposal? I venture to predict that a measure of inflation will be adopted at the coming world conference, most likely by depreciating the value of gold in our dollar; but it will be inflation just the same. So long, however, as those in authority feel that they must still tie our currency to some metal, if we get some measure of inflation that will give some assistance I am sure we shall all appreciate it.

Let us pause and ask ourselves just what is wrong to-day. Has nature failed us? Has man's inventive genius lessened? Has the large percentage of the human race refused to work? Is there any real lack of demand for the necessities and luxuries of life? Have our transportation systems broken down? No, Mr. Speaker, emphatically no. None of these things have failed nor are they seriously at fault, but the one thing money, using that term in its broadest sense, our medium of exchange, has ceased to function properly, to distribute the goods which we can produce so abundantly; and until the whole monetary system is made to serve mankind, instead of mankind serving money as it is doing at present, I see no hope for a permanent recovery.

Let all the money in the world disappear to-morrow and ask yourself: Would the world be any poorer, so far as the necessities of life are concerned? Money is not wealth, but only a symbol of wealth. I could quote many authorities in support of this statement, but I will not take time to-night to do so. Are we then to starve amidst the greatest plenty the world has ever known? Surely the intelligence of mankind, which through science has conquered and subdued to his commands the superhuman powers of nature, will not now perish because forsooth we cannot find sufficient gold, which is of no value so far as human needs are concerned.

Here may I quote a short passage from one of Professor Soddy's works, The Inversion of Science, at page 13:

> What solution have the statesmen to offer? Mr. Baldwin has recently remarked that it is no use our being able to make things if we cannot sell them, a true deduction from what Ruskin termed mercantile economy, but not a statesman's sentiment. Is there no one now in the state to regulate its bits of paper and metal so that people who can and do make things can buy them? The recent president of the board of education, justifying his betrayal of his trust, remarked, "The grim goddess of finance exercised, as she always must, an inexorable power." These utterances show that the ostensible government of this country is not its real government and that we are in the grip of a money power which will rivet unemployment and war upon society till its doom.

Only a few short years ago the world was gripped in a death struggle, the greatest war ever known in human history, and while those who fought thought they were fighting to end war, we find now, only fourteen years after, almost superhuman efforts being made to avert another conflict. And what is the main cause? Let me quote again from the same work of Professor Soddy, at page 15:

> Anticipating somewhat the conclusions to be arrived at, we may define here the cause of war more precisely as due to an accumulation of mutual international indebtedness without any possible method of repayment. Strong nations at once get the weaker into their debt and prefer to extort from them a permanent annual tribute of wealth by way of interest, rather than to allow them to repay the principal and go free. War cannot be abolished till that is rectified.

History records that down through the ages some form of human slavery has always existed, some form of mastership controlled. As our civilization developed, mankind revolted against this form of treatment and a determined effort has been made to free the human race from such tyranny. It may be within the memory of some men in this house when human slavery was abolished on this continent; but while the type of slavery of which we have been accustomed to think has been abolished, another form more subtle, more insidious in its character, has been fastened upon a great majority of the human family. I refer to the financial power that dominates the world. The slave of old had to be clothed, fed and sheltered and could at least sleep from bodily fatigue; but what about the millions of people to-day who, because of the burden of debt, even find it hard to sleep from worry and fear, fear of seeing their life savings disappear, in most cases through no fault of their own, fear of the spectre of want, fear of being thrown upon charity for their subsistence, the fear of thousands of our youths coming out of school, fitted and ready to make their contribution to life but denied the right to work? Let me ask, how long is this sort of thing to continue?

Just as the barons in days gone by wrung from King John that charter of liberty which we prize so highly to-day; just as our forefathers fought and conquered one obstacle after another, to lift mankind to a higher plane; just as science and research have rid the world of that dread spectre of famine and scarcity, so surely we in our day and generation will not hesitate to do our part in ridding the world of that giant octopus money power, which is spreading its tentacles in every direction and dragging the human race down to destruction. I hope and trust therefore that the government will realize the important task which lies ahead of this royal commission which is to be appointed.

Finance has developed to such an extent along with the development of the industrial machine that it has become the very lifeblood, or the air of our business and industrial life. We would not for a moment think of granting to a small group of men the right to control the air about us, which we all need in order to live, and yet we have done that very thing so far as our business and industrial life is concerned; and while this power, granted no doubt unconsciously, has grown up gradually, clothed in a veil of mystery to the average citizen, the disclosures of the past few years have broken the spell and in my opinion the time has come when the people will demand that this money monopoly must be broken and the control returned to the people to whom it rightly belongs.

Mankind has made tremendous strides in learning how to control and prevent disease, and has long since discarded the belief that pestilence and plagues are an act of God. When he develops the will to do so, man can also prevent unemployment and poverty. Man is no longer the slave but the master of nature, in so far as eliminating the fear of scarcity is concerned; and when he discards the cloak of mystery and superstition which surrounds our economic structure and assumes the control and regulation of finance in all its various phases, in the interests and general wellbeing of all, he will for the first time in history become the real master of his fate, and carry civilization to new heights of achievement in peace and security.

In regard to the Liberal amendment, Mr. Speaker, it is nothing but a sweeping condemnation of the government, without offering one constructive suggestion, something which the people are looking for at this time. I am inclined to believe that the people of the country are more interested in a change to a system that would bring some relief to their sufferings than they are in a mere change from one party to another, which would carry on along very much similar lines.

While we in this corner of the house recognize that the budget contains certain commendable features, while we recognize that under present world conditions any government in power must face tremendous difficulties and carry heavy responsibilities, yet we feel that we must register our protest against a continuation of the present disastrous policy of deflation. But in doing so we wish to offer something of a constructive character, something which we believe, if put into effect, would go a long way towards relieving the people of the tremendous burden under which they are at the present time struggling, and also restore that measure of prosperity and happiness which we are all so anxious to bring about.

I therefore beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), the following:

That all the words after "therefor" in the said proposed amendment be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

"Whereas, the present depressed condition of agriculture, industry and of business generally, with its consequent unemployment, is the direct result of fundamental defects in our economic system, accentuated during recent years by the policies of deflation and of credit restriction which have been followed by different governments and financial institutions, and

"Whereas, while it is recognized that the present budget contains certain commendable features, including the proposed appointment of a royal commission to investigate banking and finance, and a measure of assistance to agriculture, it must also be recognized that it is based in principle upon a continuance of the aforesaid ruinous policies of deflation and an increased restriction of purchasing power, and

"Whereas, the continuance of these policies, accompanied as they must be by a constantly increasing burden of debt, recurring budget deficits, and a decrease of purchasing power, and therefore of consumption, must inevitably result in a condition of still greater depression, and increasing unemployment, and

"Whereas, it is imperative, in view of the foregoing facts, that such policies be inaugurated as will have the effect of restoring the price level of agriculture, and other primary products, increasing purchasing power, reducing the burden of interest bearing liabilities, encouraging consumption and raising the standard of living amongst our people;

"Therefore be it resolved, that in the opinion of this house the government should give immediate consideration to the introduction of such measures as may—

"(a) Make available the real credit of the nation through the instrumentality of a national central bank, and render possible the utilization and control of this credit for the legitimate needs of the people of this country;

"(b) Bring about such a degree of controlled inflation as would stabilize the price level of our chief commodities at a point where it would bear a reasonable relation to costs of production and to incurred obligations;

"(c) Provide employment and purchasing power to our people, through the above mentioned means, and where necessary, by the direct use of our national credit in the construction of public works of various kinds, and in other ways which might be suggested including the construction of houses, etc.;

"(d) Ensure a more equitable distribution of the national income through well considered methods of taxation, and the legislative control of interest, profits and investment;

"(e) Nationalize our insurance systems, including the establishment of such systems of social insurance as may be necessary for the protection and well being of our people."

Mr. P. G. DAVIES (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that the path of popularity and the path of duty do not always coincide, and I feel sure that if the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) was not fully acquainted with all the implications of that aphorism before he took over his present portfolio, he has become convinced of its truth since that time. I am sure all hon. members of this house are fully appreciative of the fact that a most difficult task was placed in the hands of the Minister of Finance, but I think hon. members, on this side at least, will acknowledge that that task has been done very well. I have not been a member of this house for any great period of time, but I have been here long enough to know that the character of its deliberations are both varied and variegated. Sometimes its deliberations are most serious; at other times they are interesting—not only because they are serious—but also because, unfortunately, they are both amusing and tragic. It is because I think that the address delivered on March 24, by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) comes within the four corners of these qualifications, and in particular within the confines of the latter two, that I hope to make reference to it, in some measure of detail, before I conclude.

In passing may I say that as I sat and listened to the address of the hon. member I could not help but think of the similarity which existed between him and his speech and Christopher Columbus and his voyage westward. Hon. members will recall that Christopher Columbus, after taking the blessing of the Queen of Spain—and incidentally all her money—started out on his voyage. When he started out, he did not know where he was going; when he got there, he did not know where he was, and when he came back, he did not know where he had been. So it was, it seems to me, with the speech of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. When he started out, it was obvious, at least to all hon. members on this side of the house, that he did not know where he was going. When he got to where he did not know he was going, it was equally obvious that he did not know where he was, and when he came back home from where he did not know where he was going to, it was again obvious that he did not know where he had been.

May I refer for a moment or two to that portion of the budget in which the Minister of Finance announced the appointment of a royal commission to make a study of the financial structure of the country. I think the minister is to be particularly commended for having decided to do this, because unquestionably, as many hon. members have stated, this matter goes to the root of our present difficulties. There is one question which I hope this royal commission will study in detail, and that is the relationship between our present monetary base and unemployment. My knowledge, I must confess, is very elementary, but I am convinced that some relationship does exist between these two matters. A great many different economists have been quoted in this chamber and strangely enough, there is just one thing upon which they all agree, namely that the present depression which started with the financial collapse of 1929, is substantially nothing more nor less than a breaking down of the medium of exchange. Upon different occasions hon. members sitting to the extreme left of Your Honour have referred to the results. They have stated, not infrequently, that in the world to-day we find want in the midst of plenty. May I say to them that if hon. members on this side do not express the same opinions to the same degree it is not because they do not recognize that such conditions exist throughout the world. On the contrary, may I venture the opinion that a good many more grey hairs have been added to the heads of hon. members sitting on this side of the chamber, who perhaps have talked less about these things, than to the heads of those who have done much more talking; for we on this side of the house have had the misfortune—it is the good fortune of the country—to be charged with the responsibilities of government in these distressing times.

I should like to refer particularly to the conditions which exist in the United States, because I think that country provides an apt illustration of exactly what our difficulties are and fortifies me in my belief as to the real difficulty. While the diagnosis may not be very difficult, unquestionably the cure is.

Hon. members who are acquainted with United States statistics will perhaps recall that the export trade of the United States—I speak from memory, but I think I am right—is approximately only ten per cent of its total production. Therefore it must be obvious to all that the greatest market for that country is its home market. The United States has practically everything it needs and it has the possibility of being the most independent country of any in the world; nature has endowed it with everything. They grow oranges in California, bananas in Florida; they have huge coal mines in Vermont and Pennsylvania; they have iron ore in tremendous quantities in Minnesota; they have oil in Oklahoma, Texas and California, and they have the great wheat fields of the plains of the middle west. It is not sufficient, therefore, for the United States, having regard to the fact that its exports are only ten per cent of its total production, to say: Well, quotas and tariffs have quenched our export trade; because, after all, the greatest market for its products is within its own boundaries. Nobody will deny that the productivity of the great republic to the south of us is ample to take care of all its needs; nobody will deny that in that population of 120,000,000 there are many more millions of wants waiting to be satisfied. It would seem therefore safe to draw the conclusion that the only reason the productivity of that country cannot be taken advantage of by those who wish to do so is that the means of exchange has broken down—she has an antediluvian system of exchange. This brings us logically to the money question.

Is there anything more pitiful than the conditions to which the breakdown in the exchange situation has brought us? Is there anything more pitiful than an honest man, with a wife and family, who wants a job, a chance to earn an honest day's living, and cannot get it? That is the problem which faces all governments throughout the world, and the present civilization has to solve it or else in the course of time nothing but anarchy can result.

I should like to pause for a moment to ask what the purpose of government is. I must confess very frankly that until I decided to say a few words in this debate, I had not stopped to consider the question of the purpose of government. But I think all hon. members will agree that the purpose of government, whether here or elsewhere, should be to create an ideal state. Many hon. members may disagree as to what that is. I have been in the house for a sufficient length of time to know that the idea of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) of an ideal state might be one which did not have any tariffs. The idea of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) as to an ideal state might well be one which did not have a criminal code, or if it had to have one, it would be one in which section 98 was deleted. I do not think I would be unkind in saying that possibly the idea of the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) of an ideal state would be one where "someone would do something sensible." I see the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) is not in his seat, but I imagine he might have an entirely different conception of an ideal state. He might think it would be one which would be a broad plain, completely flat, in order that there might be no "valley of humiliation" in it.

Mr. DUPUIS: Has the hon. member anything to say about his leader (Mr. Bennett) who is not in his seat?

Mr. DAVIES: I shall say that before I conclude. The conception of the hon. member who hails from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) might well be a state in which he could speak in parliament for 100 per cent of the time instead of just for 99⅘ per cent of it as he does now.

Mr. COOTE: Where stations grow on every bush.

Mr. DAVIES: I think perhaps, economically speaking, we might all agree an ideal state conceivably might be one in which there would be more jobs than men to fill them and in which every honest day's work would bring an honest day's pay. Out of such a definition it would naturally follow that such a state would have a reasonably stable price level.

The next question I should like to consider is what hope we have of achieving an objective of that nature with our money based on gold. I frankly confess I cannot see much hope in the light of my present knowledge. May I give my reasons? In the first place, if gold is to be the basis of our currency, it necessarily follows that it determines the amount of currency that is issued, whether it be metal coins or notes, subject only to slight qualification. Unfortunately the gold production of the world is more or less static, but business is progressive. Science, invention and discovery are improving the means of production, and the needs of the people increase as new wants are created. But the production of gold has no relation whatsoever to the goods that have to be handed over and the services that have to be rendered. This is clearly illustrated if one looks at the present situation in Canada. We have on hand approximately $78,000,000 of gold and about $175,000,000 of dominion notes outstanding. In February the deposits in our savings accounts amounted to about $1,397,000,000, and current bank loans were approximately $1,000,000,000. Theoretically those loans would cancel the deposits, but again, theoretically speaking, everybody with a savings account is entitled to draw his money out if he wants it, and if so, he is entitled to demand dominion notes. If we were on the gold standard —we are not—he would be entitled to demand gold for his dominion notes, and we therefore have this huge credit structure built up on merely $78,000,000 worth of gold, an amount which bears no relation whatsoever to the structure.

My second complaint against gold as a money basis is that no provision is made in gold for the retention of the national income when debts are being deflated. May I make myself a little clearer on this point? After all, every time a bank loan is repaid, money—purchasing power—is taken out of circulation unless at the same time as that bank loan is repaid, a new loan is taken out. That is a matter which I think we should all recognize; we can follow it through very simply. Under our present arrangement, let us suppose that the supply of the products of an industry is too great and that the demand is not there. What happens? The industry lays off men, who join the ranks of the unemployed and thus lose their purchasing power. In losing their purchasing power, they are no longer taxpayers; they even have to be kept by the state and become a charge on all other taxpayers. Their unemployment—no purchasing power—further aggravates the situation. That is what is happening now; it has happened all along; it has happened in previous depressions. It explains business cycles, because when debts have to be paid out of earnings, without a new loan being made, the process of deflation is started.

What does the policy of "easy money" mean? I look forward to such a policy. I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance say that the government was prepared to reduce the interest rate on postal savings, but while the banks have been talking for some time of reducing their interest rate on deposits, it is hardly possible they will do so unless there is cooperation throughout the country. The provinces must reduce interest rates on their deposits because it is unreasonable to expect the banks to reduce their interest rates while provinces, which are in competition in taking public funds into their savings, do not do so also. If this adjustment is not forthcoming in the not distant future and if there does not appear to be cooperation between these various bodies, I hope the Minister of Finance will take advantage of the provisions relating to "peace, order and good government" so as to bring about that cooperation. Why do we look forward to this policy of easy money? Is it only because we think we will be able to pay our debts more easily, or is it not also because it will be easier for us to go into debt? After all, every credit is a debt; is it not a fact that we are waiting for somebody to go into debt in order to get business going and thus clear away the depression?

Another objection that I have to gold is this. With gold as a basis of money, having regard to our present available supplies, it seems to me it is dependent upon a contracting and expanding body of unemployed labour for stabilizing the price level. What I mean is this: under the gold standard, if the supply of the products of industry is too great for the demand, men are laid off. It is expected then that production will diminish to some extent, and when it does catch up again, if it does, if we do not run into another cycle of deflation and depression, we expect the men to be reemployed to meet the new demands for production. I should like to spend more time in registering one or two other points in this connection, but I must pass on in order even roughly to cover the field.

It seems to me that with gold as the money base there is only one logical way of solving the problems of a depression or period of deflation, and that is by putting everybody—all the unemployed—to work in the gold mines. I cannot see any other way. I can see ways of relieving the situation, but I cannot see the solution. Let us assume for a minute that all the provinces in Canada had potential gold mines. Then the logical thing to do when a man became unemployed would be to put him to work in a gold mine, to produce the money base. The result would be that Alberta gold would be sent to the Minister of Finance and he could issue new bills against it. That would create new purchasing power, and that is the only way in which he can create it. This in turn would stimulate industry and national income would be maintained. If all the countries of the world had potential gold properties where they could put their unemployed to work the depression would be solved quickly under the gold standard; but they do not happen to have them. Our gold mines have been of tremendous benefit to us, but it seems to me that they have not been of the benefit they might have been, because we happen to be a debtor country. What happens at the present time is: that the gold mines of Canada are being entirely supported by the taxpayers of the country. I am not objecting to this because it is what we have to do; but we are paying the gold mines for the gold they produce and then sending that gold to New York to meet our obligations. The difficulty therefore at present is that all the gold we are producing is not a basis for currency expansion in Canada. Neither is it any good to the United States because she has not used her accumulated gold reserves as a basis of monetary expansion. The work was done in Canada—this does not help the United States.

Now if we can agree that the logical way to solve this depression is to put everybody to work in the gold mines at the production of the metal base of our currency, I think we can reasonably agree, further, that that indicates a weakness in gold alone as a money base, for it is something that is too scarce; it is not plentiful enough, and is not equitably distributed.

A great many suggestions have been offered as to what might be done to patch up gold. The hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) told the house of the revaluation plan of Peter Robertson. Doctor Stephen Leacock has published a little book in which he puts forward a plan which amounts to the same thing. His book is entitled something to this effect: How to solve the depression in six seconds, eradicate it in six minutes, and permanently cure it in six hours. He advocates the reduction of the gold value of the dollar by twenty-five per cent.

Then there is the suggestion of an international banker or economist that gold certificates should be issued by the Bank of International Settlements, and that these gold certificates by treaty should be accepted in all the various countries as gold. They would be loaned out to countries in need of gold reserves. There is also the suggestion that silver should be remonetized. But these suggestions are all practically the same in principle. They all admit the fact that there is not a sufficient quantity of the monetary base in the world. I do not for a moment doubt but that by these various means the price level can be raised; there is no doubt that it can be. I do not doubt that through bringing about revaluation a reasonable measure of prosperity can be brought back, but so far as producing an ideal state, or a return of permanent prosperity is concerned, I must confess that I cannot see any very definite hope in that direction through such suggestions. I am afraid we will just be preparing ourselves for another business cycle.

How do my hon. friends in the southeast corner of the house view the situation? They look at it in this way: Here is a man who has been working in a boot factory and is now out of work; there are others who need boots. Here is the plant. They say: "This whole thing is a dirty mess. Let the government take it over." I think that is what socialism is. I cannot agree with my hon. friends in the southeast corner in their method by which they would get us out of the depression. They look upon the government, as one writer has called it, as an omnicompetent political chore-boy robot who can accomplish everything. I do not view the function of government in that light. If that form of state socialism was adopted—and that is what they advocate—unless the real causes are got at, would we have anything more than something in the nature of a glorious scheme of national relief?

Mr. MITCHELL: What have we now?

Mr. DAVIES: We can do that now just as well under the present system, and there is no use changing unless your system has something better to offer, and it hasn't. Then my hon. friends in the southeast corner look at the banks. They see the beautiful buildings and the nicely polished brass doors. They see the weekly bank returns showing savings deposits of approximately one and a half billion of dollars, and they say: "Let us nationalize the banks and take the whole thing over; we will fix this thing up." But is that necessary? With our banks nationalized and our bank managers and bank employees directly or indirectly civil servants, would it be easier to lend a dollar to any man than it is under existing conditions? There are only two ways to get purchasing power into the hands of the people; one way is to give it out and get something done; the other way is to hand it out and get nothing done. I firmly believe that under a socialized or nationalized banking system if money would be handed out without any reasonable expectation of its being returned—and I submit that it would not be returned under existing conditions—the final result would be that the banking system would run the state into bankruptcy much quicker than the Canadian National Railways has any possibility of doing.

It seems to me that there is another very substantial defect in what my hon. friends in that corner of the house advance, and that is that it would bring credit into the sphere of politics. It would seem to me that that is an evil which above all we should steer clear of. If we are going to have a democracy—and they tell us that under their scheme we would have—and that democracy is going to operate the banks, how could you keep credit out of politics? What would be the consequences?

The question naturally arises, what should be done? It is much easier to see what some of the fundamental causes of our difficulties are than to suggest practical remedies. May I, however, draw the attention of the house to a book recently written in which the writer puts forward a suggestion which I have not heard put forward in this house. I am not in a position to say that the suggestion is sound, but this writer, who has been studying the question for a great many years, advocates public improvements as a money base. He says that it would solve the depression and ensure permanent employment by making public improvements the money standard. He would at all times put the unemployed to work on public improvements. He selects public improvements because there is no limit to the public improvements which a nation will want as time advances—roads, bridges, sanitation schemes, cleaning up the slums, and so forth—all of which would raise our standard of living. He would pay for these public improvements with a newly issued money, just as if we had half a billion dollars' worth of gold produced in this country which we did not have to send abroad to pay our debts, and the Minister of Finance would issue new currency when that was delivered to him. He would retire by taxation the currency thus issued at the rate of depreciation. This writer points out that under this scheme unemployment would be done away with. Let us suppose that through technological improvements in industry men would be thrown out of employment; his plan would be to put them to work on public improvements—put them into the production of the money base, just as if we could put men to work in our gold mines to-day of which we have not sufficient, despite the fact that we are the world's second largest gold producer. In this manner he submits that the purchasing power of the people, in other words the national income, would be retained while debts were being deflated, which unfortunately is not the case at the present time. If one were to compare such a money standard with the gold standard, one might make the comparison first on the basis of redeemability. Well, it must be obvious that such a currency would not be redeemable. If the Minister of Finance was presented with a dominion note he could not walk over to the east block, pick off a couple of huge stones and say, "Here is your portion of the public funds." Obviously such a currency would not be redeemable. But, on the other hand is gold redeemable? Gold is only redeemable, it seems to me, so long as you do not ask for it to be redeemed. The essence of its redeemability is that you do not ask for it. We have seen what happened in the United States, and throughout the world. Once you ask that it be redeemed, you cannot get it.

Then, as to its utility: It would seem desirable, I suppose, that our money should be based upon something which would have some utility—which gold has not. He compares it with gold in this way, by saying, "We mine gold, and put it away in the vault. I doubt if it creates much happiness or raises our standard of living." On the other hand he continues: "With public works as a money standard; as you continually launch your public works program the standard of living of the people would be raised, because they would have utility."

There is one other item I should like to refer to in this connection. I said I hoped that the commission would study the relation between unemployment and money, and our money base in particular. That brings me to express this view: We have been told that the big thing behind our money, that which is of most importance, is "confidence." We have been told, furthermore, that "confidence" is largely dependent upon our ability to meet our foreign debts in the terms of our contract. If that is so, if that is what "confidence" is dependent upon, may we not make further inquiry and see upon what does our ability to meet our foreign debts depend. It seems to me there are only two ways in which foreign debts can be met, one is by the shipment of gold, and the other by the creation of credits in a foreign or creditor country, which is done by the shipment of goods and the performance of services. Otherwise, the only way left open to us to meet foreign debts is to borrow in a creditor country. If this is so it naturally follows that every time one joins the ranks of the unemployed, there is one less working to help establish these foreign credits.

It was the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) who said he did not understand why, when we issued $68,000,000 of dominion notes during war time and had no gold behind them, it was possible that since that time our currency was at a premium over United States funds. May I say to the hon. member that if he would consult the records of that time he would find that when our funds were at a premium in New York there were tremendous loans—gold credits—being floated in our favour, which created demands for funds to be payable in Canada, and that this put our money at a premium. It is true in point of fact that we pay our debts by buying foreign exchange, and that brings us to the point to consider on what that premium depends. I have always understood, myself, that the question of the rate of foreign exchange, outside of the speculative element, was entirely dependent upon supply and demand. That is, if there were more people in Canada who wanted to exchange Canadian dollars into American dollars than there were people in the United States who wanted to exchange American dollars for Canadian dollars, that in itself puts our money at a discount. If that is so, it seems to me that, outside of the speculative element, it must necessarily follow that provided we can ship enough gold and create enough foreign credits to meet the external demands on Canada, then, outside of the speculative element, our currency should be at par.

This brings me to the point where I feel I should emphasize the necessity of a favourable trade balance for a debtor country. Hon. members in the official opposition frequently laugh at the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) when he has pointed out that Canada has a favourable trade balance. May I point out to this chamber that the $70,000,000 trade balance announced by the Minister of Finance was of more value to Canada in 1932 than the total value of the product of our gold mines. Frequent reference has been made to Australia. Those who are intimately acquainted with the Australian situation must know that one of the sole reasons for the depreciation of Australian currency was to create a favourable trade balance. In 1929-1930 she had an unfavourable trade balance of approximately £33,000,000 sterling, and she could not meet heavy external obligations falling due in the United Kingdom. In two years' time she turned this unfavourable balance into a favourable trade balance of £30,000,000 sterling.

It is to the credit of this government that they have succeeded in converting what under the former administration was an unfavourable trade balance of $180,000,000 to a favourable trade balance of $70,000,000. These observations exclude insurance remittances, tourist balances, et cetera. I put it to hon. members opposite in this way: I hope some hon. member will answer the question: How long can a debtor country keep solvent with a continuous adverse trade balance? I believe the only answer to this question is: Just so long as they are lucky enough to be able to float foreign loans to meet the deficiency. To-day the hon. member for West Edmonton referred to Australia, and talked about Australia as if that country were Canada. May I point out to the hon. member, although he is not in his seat, that from the point of view of where we pay our debts—the United States—we are to-day paying our debts at an adverse exchange rate of twenty per cent, and Australia, which is approximately forty per cent below us, is only paying her debts, where she has to pay them, namely in Great Britain, under an adverse premium of five per cent more. If we put our currency down to where Australian currency is, Canada would then be paying her debts under an adverse exchange rate of sixty per cent, instead of only twenty per cent as it is now, and twenty-five per cent as it is for Australia.

I believe it was the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) who said he did not hold out much hope for international conferences. I must confess frankly that if we cannot have hope for international conferences to be productive of good we cannot hope to get anywhere in world progress. International conferences are the only hope towards bringing about the pacification of nationalistic sentiments and differences throughout the world. In expressing his views here he disagrees with his colleagues in Alberta. In this connection may I read a paragraph from the speech from the throne put into the mouth of the lieutenant-governor of Alberta by the Cooperative Commonwealth government in Alberta, and read by him on February 2, in the Alberta house. The paragraph in part, is as follows:

> Although hopes of a speedy return of prosperity have hitherto proven illusory, there are many signs of growing realization of the gravity of the world crisis and the necessity of international action to meet it. The approaching world economic conference may therefore well prove to be a definite turning point that will make the beginnings of national and international adjustments in the field of trade and finance which may be the beginning of a brighter day. In the meantime, the task which confronts my ministers and to which your deliberations will be turned at this session is to deal with the affairs of the province so that no ill considered action of to-day shall jeopardize the welfare of the future.

It seems to me the only difference between the point of view of those who represent the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in the federal house and those who represent that body in the province of Alberta in government is just the difference between having the responsibility of office and not having it. That is all.

May I say in conclusion to the Minister of Finance that in my own mind I have little doubt that his present policy is predicated entirely upon a successful world economic conference. And while I too have every reason to hope for a successful conference, if by any chance, unfortunately, it should not be successful, may we then hope that he will not hestiate in any way to reorientate his views so as to put us back where we may deal with the situation as it exists in Canada only, and from the point of view of what is best for Canadian producers and consumers, particularly in respect to price level. I may add that I have little doubt in my own mind but what the hon. minister will be fully equal to the occasion, should it arise.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it is a happy circumstance that in this house, where there is such a great difference of opinion on almost every subject that is brought up for discussion, there should be one thing on which we are unanimous; that is, the manner in which the budget speech was presented to the house. So I should like to add my congratulations to those already expressed.

Before dealing with the budget itself I should like to offer some criticisms with regard to some of the speeches that have been made, and to point out the fallacies contained in some of the arguments that have been advanced. While in the main I disagree with the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) there was one remark which he made in opening that I think will be received throughout the country with the same measure of approval that was shown in this house—at least this will be so if the future works of the government give evidence of the new faith that is in them. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> As we look back over the past year and, indeed, over the past three or four years, many of us are willing to admit that we are much wiser to-day than we were three or four years ago. Many proposals made with great confidence that some suggestion, if accepted, would cure all the ills from which we were suffering, we now realize were mistaken ideas.

That expression was received with a great deal of applause from this side of the house, and my hon. friend added:

> My hon. friends opposite seem to think the monopoly of that rests with this side of the house, but I have very definitely in mind innumerable weird suggestions that have come from the other side.

Just at this point let me say to the minister that the policies which have been advocated from this side of the house are not on trial; the policies advocated by the government during the past two or three years are on trial. Those are the policies that have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Let us hope, however, that the minister's statement means that the government have recognized that the proposals they made, which were to bring about the salvation of the country, have been found not to have accomplished the end hoped for. Let us hope that his statement means a repudiation of the doctrine of Canada first, as defined by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett); let us hope that it means the repudiation of such doctrines as shutting out the foreigner and making the foreigner pay tribute to the empire, or that red-blooded doctrine enunciated by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion). Let us hope also that it means an end to that long series of letters which, following the election of 1930, the Minister of Trade and Commerce addressed to the people of Canada, and which were published in all newspapers throughout the dominion at public expense.

I wish I had time to read extensively from this document, which is one of the first if not the first of the letters issued. It is headed and addressed as follows:

> Department of Trade and Commerce
> Ottawa, Canada
> To my fellow citizens, in every part of the Dominion:

I should like to quote a few sentences from this letter:

> Every year for the past few years Canada has been importing $800,000,000 worth of merchandise that she might just as well have been producing from her own mines, on her own farms or in her own factories. Some things, of course, like raw cotton and raw rubber, she must import. But making due allowance for such items, the fact remains that $800,000,000 of her annual imports have been of a class or kind that she was quite capable of producing for herself.

Then in the next paragraph he goes on to argue that if proper policies were pursued employment would be given directly to 147,527 workers in Canada. It was in order that effect might be given to this policy that during the session of 1930 the government undertook to raise tariffs immediately. A little later another letter appeared, headed with these words: "Remember the Golden Rule."

I think the minister and the country will have to recognize that the golden rule has a very much wider application than has been given it by those who advocated the Canada first, the shut out the foreigner and the make the foreigner pay tribute policies. Finally let us hope that the statement of the minister means the repudiation of that famous creed which was presented to us in such an attractive form. Therein lies its danger. Ever since the woman looked upon the forbidden fruit and saw that it was pleasant to the eye, evil has been most insidious when presented in a form that was not outwardly repulsive. Sometimes it has worn the garb of innocence; indeed sometimes it was seemingly good. We recognize this in our English speech; we refer to the wolf in sheep's clothing; we speak of Satan arrayed as an angel of light. So this creed, containing as it does many beautiful expressions, nevertheless contains the germ of that disease which has been afflicting the world, that extreme nationalism which has brought our modern civilization to the very brink of the precipice.

This is not the only confession of past error we have had since the opening of this session; we had another from the Prime Minister. When the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) moved his resolution advocating reciprocity with the United States we were completely astonished to hear the Prime Minister raise his voice in favour of that suggestion. There is no question of what his attitude has been in the past, but when he changes his faith I think he should take his supporters into his confidence so they will not make contrary statements. For example, it would have been well if the right hon. gentleman had taken the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Beaubien) into his confidence before that hon. gentleman issued this long letter to his constituents, in which he said:

Canada may as well make up her mind that she cannot hope for anything like dependable trade arrangements with the United States. That country, whether it is a Republican or a Democratic administration, and no matter what the political complexion of congress, doesn't propose to buy anything from Canada that it can help; and any arrangements that it can make with Canada of a contrary nature will be a temporary arrangement, subject to withdrawal at congressional caprice.

That is just one paragraph from this letter; it is not at all in agreement with the statement made in this house by the Prime Minister, in the course of which he said that he now favours a reciprocity with the United States. There is no question that in the past the Prime Minister did commit himself to the policy of no trade with the United States except when we could not deal within our own country. Evidently the right hon. gentleman has seen the error of his ways; he has seen the complete breakdown of that policy of extreme nationalism which has been the curse of modern times. It would be more honest if he would candidly admit his error and not try to give the country the impression that it was not the principle of reciprocity that he opposed but the form in which it was presented to the people. That is what he tried to tell us in the house when the matter was before us a few weeks ago. Oh no; he did not seem to be opposed to reciprocity, but he did not like the idea of a loose agreement that could be cancelled in a very short time.

I know it is not permissible for me to quote from a former debate in the same session, but we all remember that speech and we remember the reason he gave for his having opposed reciprocity back in 1911. But that was not the attitude taken by the Conservative party at that time. They opposed reciprocity because they thought they saw in that agreement our entire separation from the British Empire. One of the chief Conservative leaders at that time was the late Sir George Foster, and I want to read the closing words of his speech, delivered in the House of Commons on February 14, 1911, so that the house may see the reasons he gave for opposing the reciprocity pact, and also just to what extent his reasons agreed with what the Prime Minister told us a few days ago. Let me quote:

This proposal cuts square across that national ideal, challenges it at every point, will endanger it undoubtedly, may destroy it entirely. Should we not think before we enter into it? Ninety-three millions to the south of us mean it in the way of absorption and hegemony and mean it in no other way, hence these gifts. This proposal cuts our country into sections and at every section bleeds the life blood from it. The well-filled arteries of interprovincial trade will be drained until the whole system grows anaemic and flabby. Do not treat it lightly. The sustained pressure of ninety-three millions to eight millions, the far-reaching effect of business affiliation, the close proximity and constant efflux and influx, the seductions of commercialism, the constant intercourse of business, social and official life, will inevitably weaken the ties of empire and wean the thoughts of our newer generations, if not of ourselves, towards the predominant power, and create new attachments, until like Samson we would arise and would shake ourselves and find that our strength is gone.

I utter the most solemn words I have ever uttered in my life, and I believe them to the very bottom of my heart, that there is danger, and deep danger ahead. This path entered upon leads us away from home to a strange country. I pray, sir, that the full meaning of this first step may sink into the hearts of members of parliament and into the hearts of the people of this country until there shall burst forth a protest of such strength that the steps contemplated will be recalled to the old paths, leading east and west, in and out amongst our own people, converging on the great metropolis of the mother land, and which we may follow without uncertainty and without menace to our national existence.

Mr. CANTLEY: Good stuff.

Mr. BROWN: Good stuff perhaps, but very different from what the Prime Minister gave us the other day. Well, the campaign was fought out along those lines. I remember the Manitoba campaign organized by the present member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Rogers), who then had the reputation of being one of the greatest election winners in Canada. At any rate, the campaign was organized by that hon. gentleman, and he brought with him Mr., afterwards Sir Robert Borden and another gentleman who afterwards became a cabinet minister, to the town of Morden in my constituency. I travelled from my own town to hear them, and I remember the dire picture they painted of what would happen to Canada if we entered into that arrangement. I remember hearing of the 90,000,000 head of cattle that would come from the United States and graze in our pastures, and of the disastrous consequences that would follow if we yielded to the solicitations that were being put forward. I remember the Conservative candidate at that time, a gentleman who now sits in the other house, telling us after it was over, "We saved Canada". That was the way the campaign was fought and it ended, as other campaigns have ended, by the people responding to the absurd pleas that were made to them. It was another instance in which, in our judgment, democracy showed its weakness by counting the number of heads instead of taking the quality into consideration.

The house met in November and the right hon. the Prime Minister, then a man occupying a high position in the country, was given the honour of moving the address. Here is what he said, and we can see what resemblance it bears to what he said the other day:

> To many of us, it seems but fitting that a member of the royal family should open a new parliament, with a new government with a clear mandate from the people on a great issue, indicating in no uncertain terms a settled conviction that the Canadian people would consider no trade proposals that menaced, even remotely, their fiscal and national independence, or threatened to lessen the strength of the ties that bind them to the British Empire,—

We remember what we heard a session or two ago about cutting the painter that binds us to those islands across the sea.

> —or rendered for a moment more difficult the realization of the hope that lives in all of us for the commercial and organic union of that empire.
> Mr. Speaker, the risk was real and the danger imminent. I doubt not that when the proposals to which I have referred were first introduced, they were regarded merely as trade proposals; but when it was ascertained that in their ultimate results they involved the whole future of Canada, then it was that the national spirit of our people was aroused. I venture to think that the right hon. gentleman who so successfully leads the opposition in this house would not have introduced those proposals if he could have foreseen that there would have arisen around them an agitation, the results of which were so vital to the imperial and national future of the country.

I shall stop there, for I am afraid that if I continue reading from it I may not have time to say all I want to. But that extract shows sufficiently that the opposition of the present Prime Minister to reciprocity in 1911 was not on the ground that the agreement was loose, as he now says; rather, the reason was as indicated in the quotation I have just given.

When I heard the confession of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) that the government's policies had now proved inadequate, I was reminded of another confession I once heard him make, and I was still more reminded of it as he proceeded with his speech. He once admitted in a burst of candor that when his case was weak he was unusually vigorous in presenting it; in other words, he made up in vigour what he lacked in logic. There were a number of illustrations of that truth in the speech to which we listened the other day. For instance, when he turned his guns against the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) with regard to stabilization. He tried to prove that the hon. member was inconsistent because in the first place he had condemned the principle involved and then later, as the minister tried to make out, the hon. gentleman had urged the application of the same principle to all exports. But someone on this side pointed out that the minister was forgetting that little word "if"—if it was sound. The minister saw he had made a mistake and it was rather amusing to see him floundering about for a while. It reminded me of the only other time I have ever seen the minister completely floored, the time he undertook to defend the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson) when the Vigilant matter was before the house. That was one of those cases where he could not even be vigorous when his argument was bad. After a while he got started again and soon found his feet, but it was not long before he again fell into the same error. He taunted us with opposing everything in the budget. He said we were opposed to the reductions in the tariff and to the reducing of the valuation for dumping duties from $4.40 to $4.25. He said we had nothing good to say for it. He adopted these same tactics last fall when we were discussing the question of trade through Canadian ports. At that time he said that we were opposed to Nelson, to Churchill, to Saint John, to Halifax and to Vancouver. This was the accusation levelled at us when we ventured to say that we wanted the American ports kept open as competing routes. No one knows better than he that that is not a fair argument to use. When he voted against the budgets presented by the former government, did that mean that he was opposed to everything that they contained? He knows perfectly well that that is an entirely wrong interpretation to place upon the actions of any group. Of course there are some things in the budget of which we approve. We approve of the reductions in the tariff, in so far as they are reductions. We certainly approve of the placing of repair parts for farm implements upon the items in the lower range of the tariff. Why should we not approve of that when the matter was brought to the attention of the house by hon. members on this side?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BROWN: Does he think we are going to go back on our own work? No, that would be too absurd.

There was another matter in connection with which he used that kind of language which he alone knows how to use. Referring to the hon. member of Shelburne-Yarmouth he said:

> And he used this old hackneyed phrase; the taxation proposed, he said, will fall upon those least able to bear it.

He then went on to tell us that the taxes paid by the banks for the years 1922 to 1930 averaged $1,240,000 while the average for the years 1931 to 1933 was $1,390,000. I am not at all impressed by the fact that the taxation of the banks has been increased by ten per cent when I recall that every bank statement issued last fall showed tremendous profits and the payment of large dividends. The two cents per pound tax on sugar is an infinitely greater burden upon the ordinary householder than the tax paid by the banks. I wonder if the house has got a true picture of just what this tax on sugar means? It is estimated that about 50,000,000 bushels of wheat are consumed each year by the Canadian people. At fifty cents per bushel this would be valued at $25,000,000 which is only $5,000,000 more than the government expects to get from the tax upon sugar. Think of it, the tax upon sugar amounting to almost the total value of the wheat consumed in one year by the Canadian people.

The minister then referred to the decrease in revenue, and objected again to the criticism of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. Is the house surprised at the fact that there has been a decrease in the revenues received from customs tariffs? It is only what could be expected. The minister gave us to understand that the whole trouble was the decrease in the volume of goods. Undoubtedly that is a factor, but it is not the only factor. This was recognized a year ago by the Minister of Finance when making a statement in explanation of the reduction in customs revenue which had taken place up to that time. He admitted that one factor in the reduction was the policy of the government in encouraging Canadian production. That is just as true to-day as it was a year ago; it has had the same effect upon the revenue this year as it had a year ago, but the Minister of Finance made no mention of this factor when delivering his budget this year. A year ago we pointed out that the new excise tax of three per cent would not bring in additional revenue from the customs. It was called an excise tax but in reality it was a customs tariff. We pointed out that while the tax might bring in some revenue from those goods that were coming in free or under the lower rates, the effect upon other goods would be to place them in the non-revenue producing class. That was the inevitable effect of the tariff, and our argument has been proved valid.

The claim has been made that the tariff rates were lower under the Conservatives than under the Liberals. In answering this argument I shall include with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis). I wish hon. members on the other side would come to some agreement among themselves as to whether the tariff has been raised or lowered or as to what extent it has been changed. Speaking this afternoon, the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) referred to the tremendous increases which had been made in the tariffs. This statement was received with great applause from the other side. How can that action be reconciled with the statements of the hon. member for Souris and the Minister of Trade and Commerce? The hon. member for Souris said:

> That is somewhat important in my opinion in view of the way in which elections are conducted in western Canada. We were told in the west in 1930 that we must vote for the low tariff policy. Had the people done so at that time, they would all have voted Conservative, but they did not. As usual, Mr. Barnum was right; the people like to be fooled.

Yes, and they were fooled badly in 1930. Such statements remind me of the story of the policeman who arrested a man for speeding. When charged with speeding the man said,

"I was not speeding, I was not going thirty miles an hour, I was not going twenty miles an hour, I was not going ten miles an hour". "Hold on," the policeman said, "the first thing you know I will have to charge you with backing up." The hon. member for Souris has fallen into the same error into which that famous statesman Milton N. Campbell, now on the tariff board, fell when he made a computation of tariffs.

Mr. DUFF: He fell into a good job.

Mr. BROWN: In computing the rates of tariff, the hon. member for Souris fell into the same error as did Mr. Campbell. In fact, one would almost think he had taken his figures from Mr. Campbell's statement. The hon. member included the year 1922 in making his list of Liberal tariffs. He knows, or at least he should know, that the fiscal year ends on March 31.

Mr. WILLIS: What difference does that make in the results?

Mr. BROWN: I have not figured it out. The Conservative policies were in effect up until the end of May, 1922. I shall indicate the difference in the results a little later on. I should like to point out to the house the fallacy of all arguments based on average percentages. Mr. Campbell said that at that time the only index as to tariff trend was the average duty collected. That seems to be the opinion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and of the hon. member for Souris. Nothing could be more fallacious than that. So many factors enter into the problem that it is practically impossible to arrive at an accurate conclusion. If it were true that the duties had been increased by only such an infinitesimal amount as that indicated by the hon. member, what becomes of the pledge of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to make tariffs fight for us?

Mr. WILLIS: So he has done.

Mr. BROWN: What becomes of the argument that was used again and again during preceding parliaments that Canada alone among the nations was reducing tariffs? That was the argument we heard again and again. If it was true, then this other statement cannot be true.

Mr. WILLIS: That is how we got the imperial conference agreements.

Mr. BROWN: I shall have something more to say later about the conference agreements, and I shall point out another fallacy of the hon. member. As I say, so many factors enter into the problem that it is almost impossible to arrive at an accurate conclusion. The first, for instance, is specific duties. Let me give an illustration. These figures go back to 1927. Cast iron pipe was for years brought into Canada at rates of duty of $6, $7 and $8 a ton under the various tariffs. In 1918 the price was $66 a ton, but in 1927 it was only $47 a ton. Naturally, calculated on an ad valorem basis, the tariff had risen, but there was no difference in the amount of duty collected, which still continued at $6, $7 and $8 a ton respectively. On an ad valorem basis it might have been contended that in the first case the duty was 11·7 per cent and in the latter, 14·7 per cent. Yet those figures do not give us a proper picture. There are on our tariff list a large number of items of that class and these prices fluctuate from time to time, so that it is impossible to form an accurate conclusion.

Further, in the years quoted by the hon. member for Souris there appeared in 1917 and 1918 when we were exporting large quantities of war material to Europe, and the raw material for those commodities was imported in large quantities at a low rate of duty. This naturally affects the average. It will be noted in the figures given by the hon. member for Souris for those years, the average was down to about 12 per cent. That of course affects the whole computation.

Mr. WILLIS: The average was over 20 per cent.

Mr. BROWN: But for the two years. The hon. member will note that, according to the figures he gave the duty on all imports was 12·1 in 1918 and 12·3 in 1919.

Mr. WILLIS: It was 21·5 per cent.

Mr. BROWN: Why can the hon. member not be fair? I have his own figures before me: average rate of duty on dutiable imports, 21·5, and average rate of duty on all imports, 12·1 in 1918 and 12·3 in 1919.

Another factor that affects the question is prohibitive tariffs. I have already referred to the fact that prohibitive tariffs shut out goods, and consequently when one comes to compute average rates of duty, this whole class of goods that has been shut out under prohibitive tariffs is not taken into account in the computation.

Another factor is that of luxuries. In hard times luxury goods are perhaps the first class to be dispensed with. These goods carry high tariffs. Let me give an illustration: In 1918, for various causes the importation of liquor had been cut down and it was then only $4,350,000 worth from Great Britain.

This was given at the time in answer to Mr. Campbell's argument that the British preference was not as great under Liberal rule as it was under Conservative rule, but by 1927 that importation had reached $40,314,000, and that commodity bore a high rate of duty. Necessarily that would have its effect when one comes to compute averages. The same condition holds to-day and is responsible in some degree for the present situation. For instance, the importation of distilled liquors in 1929 amounted to 2,604,769 gallons and by 1932 this had dropped to 1,426,214 gallons.

Mr. STEVENS: I excluded liquors from my computation.

Mr. BROWN: I remember that, but I am pointing out that this must be observed as a general principle when we are discussing tariff averages. The importation of all beverages amounted to $48,844,111 in 1925 and $25,929,880 in 1932. Therefore the same arguments may be made now as could have been made in the years from 1921 to 1927.

The matters with which western members will have to deal are not tariff averages, but the tariffs imposed by the present government on agricultural implements, the tariff imposed on barbed wire, the tariff of 25 per cent on cream separators, while liquor is being imported at a reduction of $2 a gallon in the duty. I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce would hold that this will increase or decrease the consumption of liquor in British Columbia, or, for that matter, in any part of Canada. These are the points hon. gentlemen opposite will have to explain, and they will not be allowed in the country to get away with the same fallacies that they have tried to put over on hon. members.

As regards the wheat preference, we have the hon. member for Souris saying, as reported on page 3592 of Hansard:

> Fifthly, I should refer to the fact that under the Imperial conference agreements we receive a six cents a bushel preference on our wheat, due to the imposition of a duty of six cents a bushel on wheat entering Great Britain from other countries. Of course, we have to sell our wheat at the world price. The benefit of this preference was brought vividly to my attention when I happened not very long ago to be in Fort William, where I saw beside an elevator the grain vessel, Le Moyne, with a capacity of 600,000 bushels of grain. If that grain vessel had been from Russia, before it could have been unloaded in Great Britain it would have had to pay a duty of $36,000, but if it were loaded with grain from Canada it would have to pay nothing at all.

[Mr. Brown.]

Unfortunately for his argument, the grain would not under the circumstances go to Great Britain; it would go to another market which helped fix the world price. That is the situation. Once admit that we are selling our wheat at world market prices and the argument falls absolutely to the ground.

In conclusion, I shall vote against the amendment to the amendment, first because it proposes to nullify the amendment, which deals with fundamental facts in our economic life; and secondly because it makes no reference at all to the fiscal policies of this government which in large measure I believe are responsible for the depression. I shall also vote against the budget, not because it does not contain some things that we approve, but because there is nothing in it that indicates any radical change in government policy, even although the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated in the first part of his speech that he recognized the error of their ways.

Mr. V. C. PORTEOUS (North Grey): Mr. Speaker, this is my first voluntary attempt to take up the time of this house. On the occasion of my last speech in this house I was associated with the late member for Restigouche-Madawaska, and I shall always entertain fond memories of the late Max Cormier.

The task of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on an occasion of this kind is no easy one, and I am sure that he is to be complimented for the able manner in which he discharged that task.

Following the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) in this debate, and hearing him talk about sincerity and denials and backings up, I could not help wondering as I looked over his records if he was himself sincere, and whether he, like Peter of old, has not sometimes denied his leader; because I understand that in the last general election he ran as a straight Progressive and denied any association with the Liberal party.

Mr. BROWN: That is not true, Mr. Speaker. It is a complete misstatement of fact.

Mr. WILLIS: What about 1926 then?

Mr. BROWN: I want that statement withdrawn, Mr. Speaker. I was elected at a joint convention of Liberals and Progressives, and I announced that I supported the Mackenzie King policy.

Mr. PORTEOUS: I made no statement; I said I understood that the hon. gentleman ran as a straight Progressive in the last election, and he is reported in the Parliamentary Guide as having done so.

Mr. ROWE: Take it out of the Guide.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Shortly after coming to this house I listened to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) giving an analysis of the 1930 election figures, and I wish to quote from his speech on that occasion as reported in Hansard:

> May I say at once that the victory which my hon. friends have achieved is much more apparent than real. They sit opposite in numbers considerably greater than those who are sitting on this side of the house. Nevertheless when the vote is analysed, when we look into the figures of the official returns of the votes cast on July 28, it will be seen that the number of those who voted for hon. members sitting on this side of the house was considerably in excess of the number who voted for hon. gentlemen opposite.

He goes on to say that the total vote cast on July 28, according to the official figures, was 3,898,995, that of this vote the Conservative party received 1,909,955 votes, and that the total vote opposed to the government was 1,989,040. I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that that is a very unfair analysis of the vote at that time because, as a matter of fact every Liberal candidate in that election was a government candidate, and every candidate who opposed a Liberal candidate was opposed to the then government. A true analysis of the vote in 1930, gives a total vote of 3,898,-995, of which the Liberal party received 1,714,-860, and there was opposed to the government 2,184,135 votes.

Further, on looking over the votes in the last four elections I find that there was opposed to the Liberal party in every one of those four cases a majority of the votes polled. At no time, in other words, did the right hon. gentleman now leading the opposition have the confidence of the people of Canada, as expressed by a majority vote, to assume the portfolio of Prime Minister and to lead the government. In 1921, the Liberal party had 117 members in this house; in 1925, 101; in 1926, 116; and in 1930, 88. I go further and say that the Liberal party has never received a majority vote in any general election in this country since 1908.

There has been much talk among the members of the opposition with regard to trade expansion and trade relations. Looking over the trade returns of Canada during the periods of Liberal regime I find that our imports increased from a total of $747,804,000 in 1922, to $1,248,273,000 in 1930. Our exports in 1926, amounted to $1,328,700,000 and they had decreased to $1,144,938,000 in 1930. So during the regime of the Liberal government there was a general decrease in the trade of Canada. During the ten years from 1920 to 1930, we had an unfavourable trade balance with the United States of $2,120,142,484, and in that same period our gross debt, dominion, provincial and municipal, increased by $3,872,136,-780. Hon. gentlemen opposite speak slightingly of a favourable trade balance, but I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if a man buys more than he sells and continues to do so until his credit is exhausted, what happens? Everybody knows, and it is the same with a nation as with the individual. We canot keep on having unfavourable trade balances and remain solvent, and therefore I say that the hon. Minister of Finance is to be complimented on the showing he made in his budget speech, that during the first eleven months of the fiscal year we had a favourable trade balance of $70,000,000.

With regard to trade and taxation I have before me figures showing the taxes collected from duties between the years 1922 and 1930, and I learn that the Liberal party collected from the people of Canada ever increasing amounts of duty, beginning with $71,864,000 in 1922 and reaching $122,122,000 in 1930. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has said the only way to balance the budget is to cut down expenditures. I challenge his sincerity in this statement, because of the fact that any demands made by this government to cut down expenditures have been opposed by hon. members opposite. It is all very well to talk about cutting down expenditures in a wholesale way, but when the items come before the house and are vigorously opposed we have evidence of the insincerity of such suggestions. The total expenditures of the dominion today, because of expenditures for unemployment relief, old age pensions and other things, have greatly increased. Yet hon. members in the far corner of the house come to us at this time with a new movement known as the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, having for its purpose the socialization of our whole system.

The people's ability to pay will at some time reach its limit. It is not possible for one half of the people of Canada to keep the other half; therefore we must work towards economy. The amendment to the amendment has been based upon the inflation of currency. From time to time Australia has been set up as a good example of an inflated currency policy. May I quote from the remarks of Mr. Bruce on monetary standards as they appear in the report of the 1932 Imperial economic conference, as follows:

With this growing trade, no one will welcome stable exchanges more than we will if they come with higher prices. But any attempt to restore stable exchanges without a tolerable level of prices would be a mockery. A true international standard must give us stability of prices both in place and in time. By that I mean that we need currencies stable in their relations all round the world. We need, even more sorely, money that will enable a debt contracted in one year to be repaid by a comparable service when it falls due in another. If out of the present universal distress we can learn something of the art of reconciling these two stabilities we may yet extract from adversity a lesson of unrivalled value. Perhaps that reconciliation is not so difficult. Even now, the way to it may be clearing.

In conclusion I recognize that anything that Australia or any other dominion can do in relation to this great problem is relatively unimportant. The influence of action by Great Britain however, cannot be exaggerated. We trust that Great Britain will make a definite declaration of her policy and give us and to the whole world the lead which she alone can give.

The matter of inflation of currency has been ably dealt with by the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Davies). There is one thing certain, however, that if we as a nation wish to deal with other nations we must have an international basis of exchange. We are a self-governing nation, and therefore the parity of our currency cannot always be established because of the fact that it depends on our ability to pay. If we spend extravagantly as a nation, and our ability to pay becomes hampered, then we must of necessity suffer an adverse balance of exchange. The amusing part of it is that those who have stood up in the house from year to year and talked against tariffs now stand up and introduce an amendment to the amendment for the inflation of our currency in order that they may give us an advantage in other markets and put to a disadvantage those other nations dealing with us.

I now come to the stabilization fund as set up in the budget. The farmers of Canada recognize the fact that when Great Britain departed from the gold standard and thus made an adverse rate of exchange between Canada and Great Britain, they were being hampered in their trade so far as exports are concerned. In recognition of this fact I think I can safely say that every hon. member of this government has from time to time received communications from farmers asking the government to take steps to stabilize the exchange between here and Great Britain. The government decided that inflation of currency was dangerous, but at this time they have set up a stabilization fund which does exactly the same thing as the inflation of currency, so far as our exportable surplus of farm products is concerned. Prices of exportable surplus of any commodity are governed by the price in the country to which the goods are exported, minus the obstacle confronted in order to get into that market. In the past those obstacles have in many cases been transportation, sales and excise taxes, and tariffs. We are now faced, however, with a new problem of exchange. I believe the stabilization fund will do more for the Canadian farmer than any other legislation which has ever gone through the House of Commons, because of the fact that it will not only raise the price of that surplus but will also raise the price of all the commodities affected in Canada. This is fully recognized throughout the farming districts, and I think it only shows the insincerity of those members who condemn the stabilization fund when they say it was designed not for the benefit of the farmer but for the benefit of the processor of meats and meat products, canned goods and so on. If our currency were on a par with the British pound sterling we would derive exactly the same benefit that we will derive under this stabilization fund.

There is much talk to-day about economy; you cannot go to any municipality where that is not a common topic of conversation. The only way any government can economize is by spending less, and I think that should be impressed upon all governments. As I have already said, in some cases the ability of the people to pay has reached its limit. There is no use trying to get taxes from sources which are not taxable; therefore the income tax schedules have been increased so that those receiving the large incomes pay the large taxes. I am not in favour of a capital levy, but I have always maintained that some method should be devised whereby certain investments could be taxed that to-day are not taxed. I think that might be considered by governments in the future. I will give an example. A man buys a farm for $10,000, and has to borrow $6,000 in order to do so. Just as soon as he takes possession of that farm he begins to pay taxes on real estate valued at $10,000, but the man from whom he borrows the $6,000 escapes the payment of any tax unless he pays income tax. I think this is very unfair to the purchaser of real estate; it discourages investments in real estate. It encourages people to invest their money where it will not be taxed, and I think some small tax might be established under which the holder of the mortgage would pay part of the tax.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that a great deal of ridicule has been directed at the government and particularly at the Prime Minister. This is nothing new; history records the fact that the greatest men have been condemned by the people they served, and the greater the service the greater the condemnation. So it is only to be expected that much unjustified abuse should be thrown at the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett. There may be times when I doubt his qualifications as a politician, but not for a single instance have I ever entertained the least doubt as to his qualifications as a statesman, administrator or prime minister. I believe the day will come when the people of Canada will appreciate to the fullest extent the ability he has shown in guiding and directing the Canadian people through this grievous period of depression.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): I hope the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Porteous) will pardon me if I do not attempt to follow him in the arguments he has advanced.

I think every person in the Dominion of Canada, Mr. Speaker, who has given thought to the situation in which we find ourselves will sympathize with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) for having to bring down a budget at this time; I think everyone will realize the difficulties with which he is confronted in his endeavour to balance the budget. We are passing through the most difficult times Canada has ever known. It is true that the early settlers had difficulties also, but they were able to accommodate themselves to the conditions which existed perhaps better than the people of to-day can accommodate themselves to the conditions which exist now.

The budget was eagerly awaited by all the thinking people of Canada. Everyone was wondering if it would contain some ray of light and hope. So far as I can gather, Mr. Speaker, from the correspondence I receive from my own constituency and from the conversations to which I have listened, this budget has been received with a feeling of despair on the part of the people of Canada. Perhaps they were expecting too much; perhaps they were hoping that the Minister of Finance would be able to change things overnight and usher in the dawn of a new era for Canada.

Many things have contributed to this feeling of despair. We are well aware that there is a world depression affecting all countries, but, with many others in this country, I believe that the situation in Canada might be remedied to a very considerable extent. We do not see anything in this budget, however, tending to help matters at all. I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance on his presentation of the budget; I think he explained the situation in an admirable manner and gave us facts which perhaps we did not expect to hear. The hon. gentleman did not try to paint the picture any brighter than the situation warranted.

Perhaps the first contributing factor to this feeling of despair which I mentioned is the continual drop in the trade of Canada. I find that at page 3206, of Hansard the minister stated that for the eleven months ending February 28, 1933, the trade of Canada had decreased by $250,521,000 as compared with the eleven months ending February 29, 1932. We have been hoping for an increase in our trade. We do know, and we may congratulate the minister on the fact, that the government has brought about a favourable trade balance; but there is still a tremendous decrease in the trade of the country. We believe that the trade of Canada must increase if we are going to usher in that period of prosperity we are looking for. Then we have the falling revenue, for which we have been looking. We knew there would be a falling revenue, and that was not much of a surprise to most of the people. We have been studying railway statistics in the past few days. There has been an enormous drop in the earnings of the railways, not only in the Canadian National, which has been talked about so much, but also in the Canadian Pacific, and we believe on this side of the house that these deficits are largely attributable to the stagnation in trade which has been brought about to a considerable extent by the restrictions on trade which have been put into force by this government. We do not believe there is any chance of our railway earnings increasing with the freight rates that are now in effect, but the people of Canada cannot pay any higher rates, unless there is an increase in the trade of this dominion, and unless we give our railways something to do.

We had a good crop in the west last year. The railways have always in the past made money when there was a good crop in the west, in transferring the crop to the eastern seaboard, but in past years, in addition to hauling the crop, they have had cargoes to carry back. But the trade restrictions that have been imposed, together with the general depression, have eliminated that return traffic. The people of the west cannot buy, and about the only shipments that are going west are absolute necessities of life, a large proportion of which is made up of purchases through relief commissions.

We had hoped that the government at this time would do something to ease the burden that lies on the consuming public of Canada, but we cannot find in this budget anything that tends to do that. Additional taxes are being levied under this budget upon people who are unable to pay the taxes that are now in force. We thought that something would be done to equalize the imposition of taxation upon the people. In his budget address the Minister of Finance gave a statement of the funded debt of Canada, and among the items enumerated at page 3219 of Hansard I find that there is the sum of $774,650,000 odd of outstanding bonds that are tax free. There is an annual interest payment on those bonds of $39,347,950.25—bonds that are tax free. A portion of that will become taxable on the first of November of this year, namely, the sum of $276,688,100, but the balance will run for a further term of years. The people of Canada, not only in the west but in central Canada and in the maritime provinces, the ordinary person, the labouring class, the consumers, the common people of the country, are doing their utmost to make ends meet, but they find it impossible to pay taxes on farm lands, if they own farms, or to pay taxes on town properties if they have houses in the town. I think we were entitled to expect at this time, after two or three years of a depression such as we have been going through, that in this budget some step would have been taken to see that those people who have been escaping taxation should be brought just a little closer to the average man in the country. It may seem to the minister and to the government a rather extreme thing to do; it may look like renouncing contracts. But you must realize that the great majority of the people of Canada have been forced to renounce contracts; they are not able to live up to contractual obligations, and if there are 1,300,000 people in Canada on relief in addition to the hundreds of thousands who are on the verge of relief, surely it is time for some of these corporations and individuals who are holding tax free bonds to contribute to the upkeep of the country. A suggestion of that kind was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt), but he did not give us the figures to show what amount was involved. There is however a sum of $774,000,000 odd, as I calculate from the statement of the Minister of Finance, of tax free bonds in this country.

I believe we have come to the time in the history of this country when every person must help to carry the load. It does not seem fair any longer to leave the great bulk of the Canadian people suffering while those who were fortunate enough to get hold of tax free bonds go scot free. I realize that investments which they may have in corporations and in industrial concerns may not be earning the dividends they have in the past; I readily understand that these people are taking a substantial reduction in income right now. But they can afford to take a still greater reduction, or can afford to pay some part of the taxes of the country instead of the government endeavouring to tax the home, the housewife and children by such levies as an additional two cents on sugar. Before such taxation was levied, I submit that the government should have exhausted every other source. I know it sounds almost revolutionary to suggest breaking contractual relations even with individuals within Canada, but the time has come when, in my opinion, it has to be done.

I should like to refer to another matter. I think the government would be well advised to make a reduction in the duties imposed against certain classes of commodities coming into this country, for example, gasoline. It does not seem to me to be a fair proposition that oil companies such as Imperial Oil, the British American, the McColl-Frontenac, the Shell Oil, and other companies which may be able to take advantage of the protection afforded to the larger companies, should be able to draw out of the pockets of the people of Canada moneys to which they are not entitled. This commodity has a protection of two and one-half cents per gallon plus the excise tax. A dumping duty was in effect and a form of dumping duty is still in effect notwithstanding what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) says. It is time that the people of Canada were able to get some of the benefits to be derived from the cheap gasoline being sold throughout the world. If this government was deriving any benefit from these duties it would not be so bad, but duties should not be imposed simply for the sake of protecting an octopus like the oil industry and penalizing all individuals who find it necessary to buy gasoline and oil. Such action is not fair in times such as we are now experiencing. One oil company was able to ship $12,000,000 of profits down to the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to enable that company to get on the right side of the ledger for last year's operations to the extent of $8,000,000, whereas otherwise they would have shown a loss of some $4,000,000. This is only one class of industry which is protected by the tariff legislation put through by this government in 1930, and 1931. Most of the people in Canada have not enough to pay their absolutely necessary outgoings, and yet the Imperial Oil Company have been protected to such an extent that they were able to ship out of Canada some $12,000,000 of profits taken from the Canadian people in order to build up a parent concern.

I was rather surprised at the effort made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) to show that this government has not raised tariffs. It seems to me that they must be in a bad way to find something to talk about when they endeavour to prove a thing like that. The other evening the hon. member for Souris gave some rather astounding figures which he had taken from the publication Trade of Canada. On page 3496 of Hansard the following appears:

Increase in average Mackenzie King tariff, 1922 to 1929, over previous Conservative tariff, 1917-1921 on dutiable imports 2·2 per cent.
Increase in average Bennett tariff, 1930-32, over previous average Mackenzie King tariff on dutiable imports 2 per cent.

I ask the house to listen to this:

In their first full calendar year in office the Mackenzie King government increased the average tariff by 4·3 per cent, and similarly in the first full calendar year the Bennett government increased the average tariff by 1·6 per cent.

If any hon. member will take the trouble to look up that particular page of Hansard he will find that the hon. member included the year 1922—I assume that is the fiscal year ended March 31—as a Liberal year. The records will show that after the elections of 1921 the Mackenzie King government came into power, I think in the month of December and the budget was not brought down until May, 1922. The great increase of 4·3 per cent referred to by the hon. member took place under a Conservative and not a Liberal régime. That is the first mistake he made.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They made many more.

Mr. BOTHWELL: The hon. member took his figures from the publication Trade of Canada, but I should like to know what sense there is in having a column headed "Average Ad Valorem Rate of Duty on Dutiable imports" and then another column showing the average for total imports. In order to arrive at an average rate one must take into consideration all the goods imported as well as the various rates under which they were imported. This morning in the committee on banking and commerce Doctor Coats illustrated this in connection with another matter. He said that in order to arrive at an average rate of interest it would not be fair to take $1,000,000 at six per cent and $100,000 at eight per cent and strike an average without taking into consideration the amount of money which bore the different rates of interest. The same thing applies in striking an average ad valorem tariff rate. A number of commodities entering this country bear a specific duty. If you have a $4 duty on a $40 article, you have an ad valorem duty of ten per cent, but if you have a $4 duty on a similar article worth $80, you have only a five per cent duty. To put it in another way, if you have a duty of $4 on an article worth only $20, you have a twenty per cent duty. The hon. member for Souris simply took the average duty, not the average weighted duty. A drop or increase in the price level would make a considerable difference as would the quantity of the various goods coming into the country. In order to prove my point I would refer again to the statement made by the hon. member which I quoted last, as follows:

—and similarly in the first full calendar year the Bennett government increased the tariff by 1·6 per cent.

The other evening the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Golding) gave certain figures in connection with duties. I should like to quote a few of these to show the house the difference between the duties imposed by the Mackenzie King government and those imposed by the present government, even after the preference was allowed. The first figures he gave were in connection with cotton printed piece goods. Under the Mackenzie King government the rate was 18 per cent while under the preference of the Bennett government the rate was 58·5 per cent. That rate includes the dumping duties and the exchange duties.

	King %	Preference %
White cotton flannelette	15	52
Wool piece goods	24¾	64
Wool overcoating	24¾	93
High grading suiting	24¾	68
Wool hosiery	20¼	82
Blankets	20¼	80

Then, coming to the agricultural end of the duties, he gave the following figures:

	Old rate Liberals %	New rate Conservatives %
Binders	6	25
Seed drills	7½	25
Manure spreaders	7½	25
Cultivators	7½	25
Milking machines	10	25
Hay loaders	10	25
Incubators	10	25
Ensilage cutters	10	25
Barbed wire	Free	10
Cream separators	Free	25

When those figures go out to the Canadian people, will any of them believe the statement that the hon. member for Souris says he took from the condensed preliminary report of the Department of Trade and Commerce? I do not need to quote other instances, because they were quoted in the press after the Imperial conference, on actual shipments of goods into Canada showing what the increase was, and all along the line they were similar to what I have already mentioned.

I should like to say a word in regard to the stabilization fund. An attempt has been made by some hon. gentlemen opposite to show that we on this side are in favour of it. I have listened to most of the speeches delivered from this side, and if I understood them correctly, what was stated was this: If you are going to establish a stabilization fund for the benefit of some thirteen products, then you should go further and apply it to all other products. I have not heard any hon. member on this side say either that he was definitely opposed to the stabilization fund if it were applied in that way or that he was in favour of it as being applied only to the thirteen commodities to which it now applies. It is something like the wheat bonus. I heard the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) the other afternoon state that we on this side were opposed to the five cent bonus on wheat. I was in the house during that time; I heard the debate on that particular subject and I know from this side we were opposed to the five cent bonus on wheat in the way it was originally introduced; that is, when we thought it was going to be paid to the railways on account of freight, we were opposed to it. Then when we thought it was to be paid to the grain trade, that is to the exporters of wheat, instead of going back to the farmers, we were still opposed to it. I believe many hon. members then stated that they were opposed to the principle of the five cent bonus on wheat, and I do not blame anybody for that attitude. We derived some benefit from that bonus in the west, but the people there who were most in need of help in that particular year, received no benefit at all from the five cent bonus. The same thing applies to this stabilization fund. No one is anxious to take any benefit that may be derived from that away from those who can get the benefit of it, but if a certain number of people in this country are to derive benefit from it, then we believe there is a great body of other people in Canada who are also entitled to derive similar benefits on other products. The fact of the matter is that we believe the government by its tariff legislation has so penalized the people, the producers of Canada, it is necessary for it to hand out bonuses of one kind and another in order to keep things moving. Just in that connection I want to draw attention to a report that was made by one of our Canadian correspondents in London, Mr. M. H. Halton, after the budget came down. He said:

"The Canadian plan won't, of course, nullify any Ottawa preferences," he said, "but it's exactly the kind of dumping which, on the part of other countries, raised so much protest here and in Canada. However, it is almost bound to benefit Canadian primary producers."

He went on:

The board of trade said no British law exists against importation of bonused products. Sir Douglas Newton, agricultural expert at the Ottawa conference, expressed intense surprise at the announcement, and said the plan would necessitate much consideration. Sir John Gilmour also seemed surprised but refused to comment. The London Central Markets, the chief British wholesale meat and meat products associations, however, is frankly cynical. "It's dumping, but what of it?" said an official, "and it won't increase Canadian meat sales over here."

If Britain is going to consider a payment out of this stabilization fund as a bonus to agriculture as a species of dumping, then I think we would be better without it. In any event it is not fair to the people of Canada unless the stabilization fund is established for the benefit of all primary producers who are able to produce goods for export.

On motion of Mr. Rowe the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, April 5, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

COMPLAINT BY MEMBER OF NEWSPAPER REPORT OR COMMENT—RULING, MR. SPEAKER

Mr. SPEAKER: On Monday, April 3, the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), raised a question of privilege. He quoted, he said, an article from a newspaper called "Le Journal" of Quebec referring to him, and complained that he had thereby been misrepresented. I find, however, on reading a translation of the hon. member's remarks that he went much further than he had a right to in addressing himself to a question of privilege. He attacked the reporter and made remarks concerning members of the house which he had no right to do at that time and in that way.

I therefore direct the Editor of the Debates to expunge from the record the first and second paragraphs of the second column of page 3893 of Hansard of Monday, April 3, commencing with the words "Le correspondant" and ending with the words "le premier ministre," and also the fourth paragraph of the first column of page 3894 commencing with the words "Il y a un paragraphe" and ending with the words "pour bien faire," the remarks therein being entirely improper and unparliamentary on that occasion.

The practice in England in dealing with a newspaper article alleged to be a breach of privilege is found in May, pages 98-99—

> When a complaint is made of a newspaper the newspaper itself must be produced, in order that the paragraphs complained of may be read. A member complaining of the report of his speech in a newspaper, has been stopped by the Speaker, when it appeared that he had no copy of the newspaper on which to found his complaint. It is irregular to make such a complaint, unless the member intends to follow it up with a motion, but such a motion has been confined to declaring the article, or letter, to be a breach of privilege, without further action.

In this house the practice has been for the member to cite the article, point out that it is a breach of privilege, and that he has been misrepresented. It is not permissible for him to go further when so speaking.

Quoting from Blackmore's decisions by Speakers Dennison and Brand at page 248 on an occasion when an hon. member complained to the house of certain newspaper articles as libellous of an hon. member and constituting a breach of privilege and an objection being taken that the hon. member was entering into extraneous matters, the Speaker said "The hon. member is bound to confine himself strictly to the question of privilege which he has brought before the house," and quoting from Peel's decision, House of Commons, page 107, "If motion is made that certain passages in a newspaper constitute a breach of privilege, the discussion must be strictly confined to whether the words read at the table do constitute a breach of privilege," and so in this house discussions must be similarly limited.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BENNETT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I desire to direct attention to the fact that yesterday, as reported at page 3947 of Hansard, the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) added to the report of Hansard certain words which he said were used by me on the preceding day. I had not seen the report of Hansard, nor was I able at that moment to send for it; as a matter of fact I have seen it for the first time within the last hour. I find that the report in Hansard, which was not revised, was made from the sheet which I hold in my hand. It did not contain the words which the hon. member for Témiscouata has sought to add to what I said, and I deny the right of that member to add to any observation made by me in the house. I therefore ask that the words in question be deleted; otherwise, it would permit any hon. gentleman in the house to impugn the accuracy of a statement in Hansard and make remarks for other members of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say that, after reading the report of the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member of Témiscouata, I examined the transcript of the report made by the reporter on the occasion and I find that the words in question were not reported. I have discussed the matter with the Editor of Debates and he informs me that no such words were reported and therefore were not deleted, nor has the report of Hansard been in any way changed. I direct that the remarks made by the hon. member for Témiscouata in this connection be expunged from the record; they should not have been made.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I beg to lay on the table of the house a number of orders in council passed pursuant to relief legislation.

COURTS OF ADMIRALTY

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 66 respecting the courts of admiralty.

He said: I might offer a word of explanation in regard to this bill. At the present time the admiralty courts in Canada are constituted and obtain their jurisdiction under the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act of 1890, passed by the parliament of Great Britain. In the year 1929 a conference was held in London on the operation of dominion legislation. That conference made a report regarding the question of admiralty and other matters and the report was taken up at the Imperial conference which met in London in 1931. It was adopted and has been subsequently ratified in effect by the statute of Westminster, passed by the parliament of Great Britain and by the parliament of Canada. Under the authority of the statute of Westminster this parliament can now pass an admiralty act and establish a court of admiralty, as proposed in this measure. I may inform the house that the bill I have now the honour of introducing has been prepared by those considered in this country most capable of dealing with admiralty laws.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CALLING OF WITNESSES BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE ON SHIPPING

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Perhaps before the house proceeds to questions I might be permitted to say that the Senate committee dealing with the shipping bill has been hearing large numbers of witnesses and the committee would be greatly pleased if any members of the House of Commons who desire to suggest that witnesses attend from their several constituencies would do so at once. The proceedings are being printed, and in view of what has transpired I think it would expedite matters if any witnesses desiring to be heard would appear before that committee and make their statement.

Mr. GRAY: Did I understand the right hon. gentleman to say that the proceedings are being printed?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Will witnesses not be allowed to appear before the committee when the bill comes to the House of Commons?

Mr. BENNETT: We would avoid that by considering the bill in committee of the whole and proceeding in the way I have suggested.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

DESTROYERS SAGUENAY AND CHAMPLAIN

Mr. GIROUARD:

1. Is it true that the Canadian destroyers Saguenay and Champlain are still cruising?
2. If so, what is the purpose of such cruises?
3. What is the cost per day for the operation of each of said destroyers, including salaries of men and officers?
4. Do these destroyers form part of the British West Indies squadron?

Mr. SUTHERLAND:

1. Yes.
2. To train the personnel for the purpose of maintaining sea going efficiency under conditions which are essential but which are not obtainable in Canadian waters during the winter months.

There is, of course, expenditure for fuel on passage, but the figures given for cost of upkeep include the cost of fuel for the average amount of steaming done in twelve months.
4. No.

FERNIE COAL MINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon) based upon a telegram I have before me from the city of Fernie, British Columbia. Has the minister received representations from Fernie pointing out the very serious condition of the coal industry in that vicinity, and what are the intentions of the government with regard to preventing the closing down of that industry and the total collapse of that community?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Mines): Yes, a communication was received by a member of the government in connection with the situation at Fernie. It appears that through inability to market their products, which has been growing apparent for a period of years, I believe, the mines at that point gradually have been going down until now they are practically closed. The question of what can be done, if anything, has been taken up with the government of British Columbia, upon whom the responsibility rests, if there is responsibility on any other than those immediately concerned. If it is possible for this government to assist, of course that assistance will be given. I have not the details as to the number of people affected, and am awaiting further word from the government of British Columbia.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 4, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston and the amendment of Mr. Lucas.

Mr. W. E. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to follow the varied arguments that hon. members who sit to your left have brought forward during the course of this debate, in which they charged the government with broken promises and made a general criticism of the budget now before parliament. However, I am glad indeed to express my appreciation of the mutual admiration which has been shown on every side of this house for the very capable manner in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) presented his budget for 1933.

In common with all other hon. members I appreciate the situation and the condition with which we are confronted to-day. I believe every hon. member realizes that the great difficulties we have had to face within this country, confused by even greater problems without, have added enormously to the task of the government, and have brought about grave and unprecedented problems in administration. I do feel, Mr. Speaker, as I know many other hon. members feel, that it is unfortunate that following the great war and until the depression in 1929 so many countries entered upon an era of extravagance; there seemed to be something of a celebration, and I believe Canada was right in the vanguard. We saw reckless extravagance such as has not been witnessed in modern times; watered stock and borrowed money became the principal methods of our new progress, and future generations were bonded in debt for services we have enjoyed in the past. At last we have found that we cannot borrow ourselves out of debt, and now we must meet the obligations we incurred in connection with services we enjoyed for several years.

Mr. Speaker, though we find the ship of state rocking and listing in perhaps the worst economic storm we have ever experienced, the hon. members who sit to your left charge the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and this government with having broken some little pre-election promises.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: Perhaps the government has not followed as rigid a course as would have been pursued during finer weather, but I think it is only fair that I should recall the record of hon. gentlemen opposite. We remember that in 1919 the Liberal party drew up their famous platform; the Progressive party began to appear somewhat dangerous, so we had a platform of double construction, with new party principles in Liberalism, re-planked by agricultural timber, in the hope of catching Progressive votes all over the country.

Then in 1921 what happened? The then Prime Minister, the present leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Mackenzie King), questioned as to why he did not carry out the promises he had made, said they were merely a chart and compass by which he might set the ship of state aright. However, Mr. Speaker, there were two charts, one for low tariffs and free trade and the other for lower tariffs and freer trade, but the wisdom and influence of the Right Hon. W. S. Fielding prevailed and both charts were discarded, the compass buried at sea, and the ship of state began its reckless, uncertain journey. In 1925 and in 1926 we had, by the way, a new system, a new array of fantastic promises. I am not going into details, but I well recall the speeches of the leader of the Liberal party at Richmond Hill and other places throughout the dominion. He promised: We will reform the Senate and we will give the Progressive and Farmer parties what they cannot secure for themselves. The Liberal party was returned to power, and it answered the first promise by placing in the Senate some of the most remarkable reformers Canada has ever known. How did it answer the second promise? By kidnapping the leader of the Progressive party and his shipmate, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown), leaving the Progressive party shipwrecked, in distress and still crying for aid.

In 1930 we had from my hon. friends opposite a new array of promises more fantastic than Liberalism had ever before known. They said: Now we will shelve the old low tariff policy, that old, dusty free trade program which we have had for years, and bring forward a "countervailing" system. Nobody knew how high; nobody knew how low it would be, and only heaven itself knew how often it might be changed to suit the whims and fancies of various countries in control of our fiscal policy.

As I listened the other day to the ex-Prime Minister, with all respect to him I must say that my interest was more or less mingled with amusement as he defended his fourteen points of his new policy, and concluded by saying: "Mr. Speaker, we and the Liberal party guarantee tariff stability for Canada." I have long since made clear my position in the house, and I do not want to take an attitude of, I told you so, to refer to any speech I have made, but hon. members who have been in the house for a number of years will know that I pleaded with the former government to try to develop agriculture in a less lop-sided fashion. We are charged with having increased tariffs. The ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) said yesterday that if the present government had lowered tariffs it would have been much better for the Dominion of Canada. In another breath he said that we must inflate our credit to buy where we can buy the cheapest; while the countries with which we trade would not know the value of our money. Such is another inconsistency.

If the years from 1920 to 1929 were those which we are to assume were the prosperous ones, all one need do is to recall the development of this country during that period. What was the trend of development? In 1920 we sold $27,000,000 worth more finished products from farm and factory than we purchased, while in 1929, the concluding year of this era of prosperity of which my hon. friends opposite boast, we imported $243,000,000 worth more of the same products than we sold. That is some indication of the trend of development of the dominion. That is partly the reason we had to spend $26,000,000 on immigration and had a government which, in the year it went out of office, had produced a situation whereby more people were leaving Canada than were entering it. In 1922, 72,000 Britishers came to Canada, while in 1929, 10,000 more people left this country for the United Kingdom than came over from the old land. That was the concluding year of their prosperous era, the year before the present opposition had even admitted that the depression had begun. So I say: What would have happened had we inaugurated a policy of lower tariffs? Is there an hon. member who sits either to your immediate left, Mr. Speaker, or among the wilder group in the far corner, who will for a moment maintain that had we lowered tariffs in 1930, we would be better off now, especially when it is considered that in the way of debts, which were largely inherited by us from our predecessors, we owed a million dollars a day to the republic to the south? At the same time, every day but Sunday we were buying from them a million dollar's worth of goods more than we were selling to them. Just a month before we gave the electors an opportunity to express their opinions, the Hawley-Smoot tariff came down that would have shut out, in normal times, each day three quarters of a million dollars' worth more of our products. Is there an hon. member who has the courage to say that in spite of that we should have inaugurated low tariff policies for the benefit of the dominion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ROWE: Some say yes and some say no. I believe this lopsided development which was carried on from 1920 to 1929 contributed in no small measure to the crisis through which we are now passing. I refer to agriculture, not because I am a farmer, but because I believe if prosperity comes in this dominion it must develop through agricultural prosperity. There is an old adage in that good book—and I advise my hon. friends opposite to read it oftener—that tells us that it is "to the fruits of the earth and the flocks of the field we must all turn for substance." We must turn to these in our day of adversity. What happened with respect to our progress from 1920 to 1929? Improved machinery and fertile lands have brought about the production of more wheat with less labour, but let us take the export of agriculture in mixed farming. In 1920 we sold to the old land $77,000,000 of meats alone, while in 1929 we imported 41,000,000 pounds of meat to feed our own people. Through a low tariff policy, the cheap meat producing countries were able to export to Canada these products, to say nothing of other farm commodities.

The present Prime Minister, realizing that it was only through the maintenance, development and restoration of agricultural prosperity that we could secure prosperity for all, made a brilliant effort in 1930 in spite of the fact that other markets were shut to us, as everyone will admit. Hon. members opposite may smile, but I ask them: Where would they have sold these products? In June, 1930, the Hawley-Smoot tariff shut us out of the United States markets. In the same year the Prime Minister made one of the most brilliant attempts to secure an imperial conference agreement. It is true that he failed in 1930, but the British acceptance of the same proposals in 1932 was a clear-cut vindication of the Prime Minister's judgment, and time alone will record this achievement as an outstanding feature in imperial development. Is there an hon. member who would say that the British market does not mean anything to this country, a market that consumes 65 per cent of all the exportable mixed farming production of the world, that had been buying 76 per cent of its supplies from foreign countries and only 26 per cent of it from empire countries? It is the only free market left and the only market that buys more foodstuffs now than it did before the war. Therefore I consider that in that market and in our home market lies the only hope for agriculture in the Dominion of Canada. I know there are those who will say: No, we shall drift on at the mercy of the different elements throughout the world; we were the fine weather birds; we got along fine in world prosperity; we will make prosperity by improved world prices, by favourable world conditions. It is remarkable that almost always in the days of adversity of this dominion, the people have turned to the party which now sits to your right, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: I thank hon. members because they agree. If you study the history of this country, you will find that our people have usually turned to the Conservative party to bring them through the days of adversity. In these difficult days the Canadian people have again turned to this party, and the present government is doing everything in its power, independent of the political consequences, to clean up the mess that was left to them by the Liberal party. It is of fundamental importance at this time that we should encourage the development of our overseas market. While I am a farmer, I have still every confidence in the national protective policy of the Conservative party. As a farmer I realize that there is no other market that is as important for our farm products as the home market, and there is no development more necessary than its development through the finer processing of our products from farm, forest and factory. When we consider the great possibilities that we have overseas at the present time, I want to impress upon the government the necessity of developing that market still further.

I heartily support the agricultural stabilization fund which has been brought down in this budget. It is almost needless, indeed, for me to say that I am in favour of it because last year I proposed something similar myself; in fact, the present plan looks to me like my plan of last year in a dress suit. What I proposed last year when agriculture was confronting the greatest crisis in her experience was a straight bonus on mixed farm products, to be administered by a board so that none but the high-grade products would receive the bonus, and the bonus would be automatically eliminated when prices increased in order to encourage regularity of supply. But the plan proposed by the Minister of Finance is even better. At present pound sterling value low, and with hogs at three cents, as they were last year, it means that we would receive 35 cents a hundred; if hogs go to six cents, we shall receive 70 cents, and so on. So the future looks brighter than the present. This is the first attempt in the last quarter of a century that any government in this country has made to improve the price of farm products. I would urge upon hon. gentlemen opposite who represent rural constituencies throughout this dominion, when they go back home and speak in the little red schoolhouse against the duty on sugar and how they voted against it, to tell the farmers also that this agricultural stabilization fund will mean more money to the farmers of this country than all they will have to pay for the sugar, taxes included, that they consume throughout the year. But I am very glad that some hon. gentlemen opposite have taken the attitude they have in regard to this agricultural stabilization fund because it means that there will be very many more Liberal constituencies vacated at the next election.

Any hon. member who represents a farming constituency or knows anything at all about farming knows what advantage this agricultural stabilization fund will be to the farmers of this country. I have heard lawyers, industrialists, doctors and other professional men, all asking how this is going to help the farmer. I have even heard hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house who are farmers themselves asking the same question, but every hon. member who knows anything about agriculture knows what a great influence the price we receive for our surplus farm products abroad has on the domestic price. All you have to do is to look at the market reports since the budget was brought down to see that this is so. I say further that there is not a farmer in this house who will dare rise and say that it will not affect the domestic price of farm products. Every fisherman, every poultry raiser, every cheese maker, every cattle raiser and every hog producer in this dominion will receive material benefit from this fund.

Mr. DUFF: Did you say every fisherman?

Mr. ROWE: Every fisherman who exports—

Mr. DUFF: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. ROWE: It is applicable in the same way to the fisherman who exports his products. I have spent as much time in agriculture as the hon. member has in the fishing industry—

Mr. DUFF: Leave fishing alone.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has no right to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor, particularly in that way.

Mr. DUFF: Stick to agriculture.

Mr. ROWE: I hope that when my hon. friend goes to the agricultural sections of his riding which I have visited he will tell the farmers there that he voted against the agricultural stabilization fund. I have figured just what it will mean on the sale, say, of a small load of hogs. It will mean more on a load of a dozen hogs to the farmers of this country than the farmer pays, including the sugar tax, for all the sugar that he and his wife and family uses during the year. It will be of similar benefit to the cattle raiser; it will be of similar benefit to the poultry producer and to the cheese maker, and I leave it to the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) to apologize for any harm he thinks it will do to the fishermen of this dominion.

We have on the horizon the possibility of new outlets for our products. I have explained briefly what Britain buys from world production. I have mentioned the 800,000 head of cattle imported into the old land from the Irish Free State, and in view of the rather difficult imperial relationships at present existing between Ireland and Great Britain and the tariff which has been placed against Irish cattle entering the British market, there are new opportunities for the Canadian producer.

We know that we have improved our position in the British market with respect to chilled beef. Argentine's exports of chilled beef to the British market have fallen off by 25 per cent in the last three years, while Canada's exports have increased from 4,000 quarters to 19,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite may shake their heads and say that that is not a large amount of beef. True, but it is sufficient to demonstrate the possibilities that lie ahead for this dominion, particularly with the ever-increasing speed of the great transportation lines crossing the Atlantic.

When I hear hon. gentlemen opposite criticizing the Imperial conference agreements, I should like to know what market they hope to get for our surplus products, or do they propose that we should consume all that we grow in this dominion? I know that under their reckless lopsided development this country from 1920 to 1929 increased its exports of wheat by 100 per cent, while its exports of finished products decreased by 65 per cent.

As to the hon. members in the far corner of the house who pose as the apostles of agriculture, there has been no group in this country which has made more noise and accomplished less for agriculture than that particular group. I say that with all respect, because they were a hindrance to the previous government. They claimed to be apostles of freer trade, and when the government had not a majority in this house without them, this country became dependent upon wheat and wheat alone in consideration for lowering the tariff barriers against everything they wished to buy. In 1928 I warned the then government against the possible difficulties in competitive wheat marketing, and I remember that at that time a Progressive member said to me: "You do not know what you are talking about. Wheat will never go below one dollar a bushel. The market for Canadian wheat is unlimited so long as we buy all the products that we require free of duty." That hon. gentleman did not come back to this house, and last year I suppose he grew wheat at 40 cents a bushel. I would ask, is there any way in which our surplus wheat can be consumed more readily than by our hogs, our dairy cattle and our poultry throughout this country? Is there any place less interfered with by machinery better suited to give employment to our people? Are there any two conditions weighing more heavily on the situation to-day than unsold wheat and idle hands in Canada?

Mr. VALLANCE: Two cent hogs.

Mr. ROWE: The hon. member says "two cent hogs." I might remind him he is not selling any in Ontario because we are getting six cents at some points.

An hon. MEMBER: Since when?

Mr. VALLANCE: We are dealing with the feeding of wheat though.

Mr. ROWE: During the period from 1920 to 1929, western grown cereals were being shipped to Denmark and that country was exporting bacon and securing the bacon trade that we had established in Great Britain. We were very successfully supplanted by Denmark. In 1920 we supplied 26 per cent of the British bacon requirements; at that time Denmark supplied 12 per cent. In 1930 Denmark supplied 60 per cent, and after the nine years of prosperity about which hon. members opposite talk we supplied only two and a half per cent. We supplied some of the grain that enabled the Danish producers to capture our market.

Every effort should be made by the government to study outlets in other countries, especially in British countries, to study and explore the possibilities of continuity of supply to the countries we are now supplying, and to ascertain the particular grades they desire. I know there are those who say we cannot develop this trade to any great extent. I can say that it has come to the stage described in the story the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. White) once told, that we have to. It seems that the hound was after the rabbit, and the rabbit climbed a tree. When someone said that the rabbit could not climb, the reply was that he had to climb the tree. I know that to-day farmers of Canada realize something must be done, or else they cannot go on and produce wheat at less than cost. We know that Australia, Argentine and New Zealand produce mixed farming products at a much lower cost than we do in the Dominion of Canada. We know those countries have organized their agriculture, and by commission and investigation have explored the outlets in each country, because they were forced to do it. For example, New Zealand consumed only eight per cent of her meat production and only fourteen per cent of her dairy production. Therefore the export market was an actual necessity to them. They studied and explored the markets, and to-day they have captured them. After the great war Denmark explored the British market, studied its requirements, studied its desires, studied how much was needed in the mining sections of Great Britain; they found out how much heavy thick pork was needed in those sections; they studied the demand for the finer, thinner breakfast bacons to be used in the urban districts, with the result that after concerted effort, in 1929, they had captured the market. We have entered into a competitive game; we have entered into a difficult task. We are faced with the necessity of capturing markets which we had and lost. We must secure those markets against the odds of favourable climatic conditions in other countries. We must capture them against the whole organized efforts of other countries.

I know there are those who ask: Why did the government bring down the agricultural stabilization fund at the present time? Because they realize that agriculture must be restored. We learned long ago that "he who counts the cost will never yoke the plough."

In recent times we have learned new truths, "if we go on, we will lose more, and if we stop we will lose all." Something must be done if this nation's prosperity is to be restored. It is a problem not only before hon. members sitting to your right, Mr. Speaker, but surely it is the concern of those who sit to your left. It is a problem not only existing before this country, but before other countries. The economic committee of the League of Nations have expressed their conviction that world conditions will never be improved until agricultural prosperity is restored. Two years ago the Macmillan committee in Great Britain made an investigation with reference to general conditions and reported that until price levels were raised, and until agricultural prosperity was restored, even in the old land, we could not hope for improvement or prosperity. In the old country only ten per cent are engaged in growing foodstuffs, while in Canada fifty per cent are engaged in that occupation.

In the old land they appointed a dairy commission, a hog commission, a fat stock reorganization commission, to find ways and means by which they might give to the United Kingdom some assistance to bring back the prosperity necessary to give the purchasing power required to improve business and to put work in each factory throughout the empire. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government of this country—and this is merely a suggestion—should appoint a live stock export commission made up of hon. members of this house. It should not be a royal commission, but should be composed of members who have a mandate as the business representatives of the people of Canada. That commission should investigate, survey and explore the outlets in other countries, should investigate our present supply, the regularity and grades of such supply, the continuity of it, and should also arrange so that the statistical bureau of Canada will show to us, as they have never done in the past, statistical references as to the volume of supply expected for high class trade, and so on, so that we can approach the problem with some accuracy as to the grades available for the market. First, we would have to ascertain the continuity of the demand for particular grades which might be guaranteed regular supply.

It is absolutely necessary to revitalize agriculture. I compliment the government upon what it has done; I believe it has taken a step in the right direction. I believe such a commission might well investigate the possibility of utilizing the port of Churchill to transport cattle from western Canada, to the great cattle market of Birkenhead. I believe the commission might investigate the possibility of establishing feeding stations in eastern Canada. I believe they might also investigate conditions in both the west and the east with a view to freight rate adjustments so that eastern farmers might be encouraged to feed western cattle in transit with the advantage of a through rate, in this respect following the example of the western states.

They might well investigate further the possibility of establishing in the maritime provinces not only feeding stations but killing stations. I know there are some hon. members on this side of the house as well as on the other who do not agree with that, but I say conditions are changing and changing rapidly. We are told that the British housewife to-day does not want the heavy beef, but she wants the fine prime finished beef, and she wants it fresh, so that she can have more hot roasts, and not so many larger cold roasts off frozen beef carcasses from the Argentine.

I should like to refer hon. members to the fact that during the last three years the exports from the Argentine have fallen off by twenty-five per cent, and our exports have increased to nearly five times their former extent. Even though that is small, it is at least an increase and a hope. I believe killing stations might be installed in the maritime provinces so that chilled or almost fresh meats, in ever increasing quantities, in view of our improved transportation facilities, might be supplied through cool Atlantic routes and sold on the counters in London as fresh Canadian beef. These are matters which are absolutely essential. I believe they are of such national concern that they should not wait. I am convinced that the restoration of prosperity in Canada must come after a careful organization and investigation of these better and more stable outlets. After all, mixed farming is the basis of prosperity in this dominion. I know that some hon. members who are wheat growers and who would not have agreed with that view a few years ago will now agree. I believe the time is not far removed when mixed farming will take the place of wheat growing in many wheat growing sections. The time is not far distant when other wheat growing sections will be engaged in supplying the British beef market. I believe that there is another step that the government might take, if I may make another suggestion. I think I have done more prescribing without being called in, as the doctors say, than many other members of this house, but I say this with all respect—it concerns both sides of the house—we are passing through the most critical times Canada has ever gone through, and I say in the interests of agriculture, of the small manufacturer, of the small business man, of Canada itself, we must have a lowering of interest rates in this dominion. I say that with all sincerity. I say it as a farmer. I have no apology to make for any votes I have given in favour of the national fiscal policy of protection, but I do believe in a quid pro quo for agriculture. The great distance between Canada's agricultural producers and their markets is a further handicap to them, whereas the manufacturer in Canada is protected by that very handicap of distance from his competitor. The manufacturer is protected by tariffs which preserve his market for him but the farmers cannot be protected in their markets when they have an exportable surplus. Therefore we must get that quid pro quo by any reasonable means in order to make our whole social organization more successful. I say that I believe the lowering of interest will help a great deal in this terrible financial crisis through which we are passing. I do not think there is an hon. member but will agree that I am not pleading needlessly for agriculture, when you consider that last year we were selling the products of our soil for 44.9 per cent of what we sold them for in 1926, while the manufacturer if he was selling anything was selling his products at from 72 to 96 per cent of 1926 prices.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to have less confidence in my argument by reason of the applause I hear from the opposite side.

An hon. MEMBER: Come over here.

Mr. ROWE: If what I said in the former part of my speech met with the same agreement, my hon. friends would come over here. I will say further with reference to the financial crisis that we have been going through that the brunt of it at the present time is being carried by agriculture, the basis of the prosperity of any country, the distress of which is a main factor in the present depression. But I can see no cure in the proposals of those who want to inflate our currency so that no one will recognize it. As we maintain our national financial institutions, maintain the credit of this country, the soundness of its money, and help to pay the obligations of large industrial corporations that a protective policy has built up, I say our quid pro quo should be such as will help us to maintain our position in the future and bring back prosperity to the farmers of this dominion, to the benefit of everyone in the country.

I congratulate the government on the steps which they have taken. I know there is the soldiers' pension reduction, the sugar tax and other little things that might be criticized but I do not propose to go into them. I wish only to warn my farmer friends on the other side—because there are some of them I would like to see come back—when they are considering this proposition of sugar tax and stabilization fund, not to forget the old saying that it is possible not to see the woods for the trees. While maintaining the financial credit of this dominion, we should not forget the reminder of Goldsmith that:

> Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay;

And I would quote his further warning:

> An honest peasantry, a nation's pride,
> Once destroyed can never be supplied.

I think that indicates Canada's first obligation at the present time. As a farmer myself I am not ashamed to compare the Canadian cultivator of the soil with the bold peasantry of whom Goldsmith wrote. On the other hand, I can say that there are many farmers in this dominion from whom you have not heard. We have had petitions presented by those in the far corner from 6,000 farmers, but we know there are 720,000 more who have not been heard from. We know there have been a few stampedes started and brought to the parliament buildings to embarrass this government by trained agricultural politicians, but most of the farmers of Canada do not require organizations signified by several letters of the alphabet to describe where they stand. The farming class in Canada are still the stable class in Canadian citizenship, and they have stood this test with the same fortitude and loyalty as in other times of trouble. The agriculturists form the great mass of Canadian citizenship, they constitute almost fifty per cent of the population and probably another thirty per cent are intimately dependent upon them. They will maintain sound Canadian citizenship, they will preserve the institutions and form of government that we have enjoyed in the past, and I say to all those interested in good government and who cherish the institutions we have inherited that they need not fear that the rural part of our population will be carried away by these alphabetical new proposals. They are not concerned about sending to parliament members who have searched the alphabet for descriptive letters; these will be sent back home and will never be heard of again while Canadian agriculture marches on into a brighter and more prosperous future.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this debate has been so intermittent that it is very difficult to get back to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). The minister admitted what he termed the darker elements in the picture, the low level of business activity, the shrinkage of trade, the pressure of low prices and existing debts, the increase of unemployment and the various social costs which it involves. Perhaps no more serious indictment could be drawn against the policies of the government of the last two or three years than those words of the finance minister himself. If it were necessary to add anything by way of illustration I might point out that in a very interesting pamphlet by Mr. J. A. McLeod, general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, it is shown that since 1929, Canada has experienced a shrinkage of export trade of sixty-five per cent. Nothing that the hon. member for South Waterloo (Mr. Edwards) said yesterday in his rather elaborate presentation will offset this statement by Mr. McLeod. Further than that, with regard to unemployment may I emphasize the situation which was brought to our notice within the last few days by reports from social agencies of the city of Montreal, which show that one-third of the entire population of Montreal is now in receipt of relief. These are appalling statistics. Again I say no government can very well present its report of the preceding year's work and disregard the effect of its policies as we see them in this huge unemployment which exists all over this country.

The unfortunate thing is that the finance minister indicates no way out—none whatever. In my judgment his budget will intensify rather than ameliorate the evils. It is all very well to admit the difficulties involved in the shrinking of trade; it is all very well to point out the evils of diminishing returns. It seems to me that the situation is as if a man tied a tourniquet around his arm. Gradually the arm becomes numb, the blood ceases to circulate, the fingers are dead, and we ask what the trouble is. Surely one would point out that the bandage was too tight around the arm, and the common sense of the situation would be to release the bandage. In this case, instead of that, the government admits the shrinking of trade, it admits the deadness and the depression, but all it says is, "Give it another twist; tighten it still more; cut off still further the free circulation of goods, make it more difficult still for us to increase purchasing power."

[Mr. Rowe.]

Is not that a suicidal policy? The Minister of Finance said:

> As a nation, Canada is able to take care of her foreign commitments without undue strain. Our financial structure continues intact and our credit remains unimpaired in the markets of the world.

Without being too disrespectful I would suggest that the one word to characterize that is the word bunk. That is the only way to describe these high-sounding phrases. Let me read again what he says:

> As a nation Canada is able to take care of her foreign commitments without undue strain.

Does anyone mean to say that we are not having undue strain to-day?

> Our financial structure continues intact.

Yes, the banks continue intact, but the very foundation of our financial structure is being undermined and we are threatened with bankruptcy. The minister says also that our credit is unimpaired in the markets of the world. Nonsense. Can we float loans in the markets of the world as we have been able to do in the past? It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to get off these high-sounding phrases, but they mean nothing.

> Our banking system has fully maintained its enviable reputation, meeting every demand upon it—

Does the Finance minister mean to say that it has met the demands of the people of this country? I do not think so.

> —and retaining the fullest confidence of the public.

The minister's public must be a very narrow one, because I submit that across the country there are a large number of people who have not the fullest confidence any longer in our banking system.

> The chief concern of our banks would appear to be the difficulty of finding satisfactory outlets for the investment of their surplus reserves.

That is an extraordinary situation. As I take it, the only factors necessary for the production of all the commodities needed in this country are these: First, natural resources; secondly, the equipment with which to work them; thirdly, man power, labour of hand and brain; and lastly, finance, capital, something to tide us over the present. I do not know of any other factors than these four. We have undoubtedly the natural resources, the capital equipment, to produce three or four times what is now produced, and this could be readily extended without difficulty. The only thing we seem to have lacked in the past has been a little financial credit, and now we are told that the banks have so much of it that they do not know what to do with it. This shows that there is an absolute need of fundamental changes before we can bring about the prosperity for which we all long.

There is a word of wisdom given by the Minister of Finance which I would commend to the house:

> The present crisis is international both in its causes and its effects, and the remedy must be sought in international understanding and cooperation. Slowly, but nevertheless surely, the world is approaching full realization of the fact that the day of national self-sufficiency is past.

I would commend these words to the member who preceded me, but he too hurriedly left the chamber to receive the ovation tendered him because of his partisan speech.

> Slowly, but nevertheless surely, the world is approaching full realization of the fact that the day of national self-sufficiency is past, that an international disease can only be cured by an international remedy.

That is a far cry from the self-contained, commercially independent Canada, as depicted by the Prime Minister in his pre-election speeches. The Prime Minister may be learning, but he is learning at the expense of Canada.

What is there in the budget that would indicate any move towards international co-operation? The Minister of Finance does suggest that we should give support to the world economic conference. But let me ask this: What can the world economic conference do as an independent unit, something apart from us all? It may pass certain resolutions, but before they can become really worth very much they must be implemented by act of all the people attending the conference, by practically all the nations of the world. If any one nation or group of nations stood aside the resolutions of the conference would be worth nothing, and it must be conceded that our government in the past has been travelling in exactly the opposite way to that which would be indicated by the leading economic authorities of the world.

The speech of the Minister of Finance reflects what I have before called the professional optimism of the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance says:

> I am of the firm belief that we can look forward with complete confidence to better and happier days. We still retain the same rich and varied resources, we are still blessed with those qualities of resourcefulness which are a heritage from our sturdy pioneer forbears.

I wonder that the Minister of Finance can talk about our natural resources. When I attempted to do so the Prime Minister promptly told me that they belonged to the provinces and we could not take them into consideration when dealing with federal affairs. But we are told now that they belong to the provinces.

Mr. GEARY: Perhaps he was speaking as a Canadian.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When I talked about our natural resources I too might have been talking as a Canadian, but immediately I was told that our natural resources came under provincial jurisdiction. Further than that, I would ask: Who actually owns these natural resources? Outside of agricultural resources, a great many of them were owned by large corporations, many of them American corporations, and therefore they are not immediately available to us. Our policies are cramped because of the ownership of these big concerns by people south of the line. As regards resourcefulness, if we had one-tenth of the resourcefulness of the pioneers we would sweep away this plutocracy under which we now live. We have resourcefulness but it must be directed along different lines because we face a different problem from that of the pioneers.

As I listened to the speech of the Minister of Finance, and as I tried to understand something of the situation in Canada, there was one word that stood out above everything else like a great illuminated sign from which you could not get away—the little word "debts." The Minister of Finance says that the net debt on March 31, 1933 was estimated at $2,599,089,000. The interest on the public debt amounts to $134,971,000 and the deficit on ordinary expenditures is $68,000,000. I would say that this is only a part of our debt, and perhaps we would get a truer picture if we viewed the situation as it is presented in that pamphlet by Mr. W. Sanford Evans, entitled Cost of Government in Canada. The gross debt of the government in 1931, even before the enormous increase under this administration, including guaranteed bonds, was $3,348,975,668; provincial debts amounted to $1,276,629,288 and municipal debts to $1,430,000,000. From approximately $120,000,000 in 1904 the aggregate ordinary expenditure increased to $275,000,000 in 1913 and to the huge total of $920,000,000 in 1931. Adjusted to population the per capita expenditure in 1904 was $19.08; in 1913 it was $36.72 and in 1931 it amounted to $88.68.

Mr. Evans proceeds to bring home what that really means. The average value of all field crops for the five years from 1927 to 1931, which included three years of good prices, was $866,000,000, while the ordinary expenditures in 1931 alone were $920,000,000. Not only have we had these ordinary expenditures, but almost all governments have been getting by through adding to our debts. Debts have increased even faster than ordinary expenditures, the per capita increase being 147 per cent of the rate of increase in ordinary expenditures. The expenditures in debt service during 1930-31, the last figures given by Mr. Evans, amount to $225,603,554, or one quarter of the entire expenditures. It is an appalling situation. Governments have become vast debt collecting agencies; we exist very largely in order to gather from the little people all over the country huge sums, of which then we turn over a very considerable proportion in the form of interest.

Here is another table given by Mr. Evans. The per capita taxes in 1895-96 were $10.94; in 1904-05 they were $15.98; in 1913-14 they were $31.20; in 1921-22 they were $66.10, and in 1929-30 they increased to $77.08. Taking the census return of 1921, and taking the average family as consisting of 4·62 persons, the average tax per family in 1913-14 was $144.14, while in 1929-30 it was $356.10, or almost two and a half times as much, practically $30 per month. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to say that we have a sound financial structure. I do not see how we are going to struggle along under this load very much longer.

In a recent number of the Canadian Forum Mr. D. C. MacGregor contributes an article entitled The Threat of Financial Crisis, in which he gives us some idea of what this enormous debt load really means. I quote:

> . . . one-fifth of the national income is being diverted by taxation already, it has almost reached its limit. In order to pay their taxes (which includes paying themselves bond interest), Canadians now work for the common treasury for two and one-half months in every year.

I wish I could have brought that statement to the attention of the hon. gentleman who preceded me. He spoke about little cuts here and there; he tried to show how the advantages derived by the farmer under this budget would offset all the disadvantages in the form of higher taxation on sugar and so on, but just think what our taxes really mean to us to-day. Out of every twelve months we work two and a half months for the state, just in order to pay the taxes. Consider the bondholders to whom we are paying such tribute. I continue to quote:

> During the nineteen twenties the holders of government bonds received four per cent of the national income, and were quite satisfied. To-day they are receiving more than seven per cent of the national income, and with that larger share they can buy from fifteen per cent to thirty per cent more goods than when the bonds were issued. They have gained richly at the community's expense, without rendering any corresponding service in return, due to the catastrophic fall in prices.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Whose words are those?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quoting from an article by D. C. MacGregor which appeared in the Canadian Forum. In connection with this payment of the interest on our bonded indebtedness may I suggest that it is absurd that we should continue to pay a premium to the Canadians who happen to hold bonds payable in New York. I think it a disgrace that a certain group of Canadians should thus profit at the expense of the great masses of the Canadian people. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimates that the total of the bonds so held, including only the direct obligations of the dominion, the provinces and the municipalities, is at least $600,000,000. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that if he wants to raise a little more revenue he should collect that extra premium. There is no earthly reason why Canadians who hold such bonds should not have to subscribe very liberally to the cost of carrying on the affairs of the country.

The situation has become impossible. We might cut down our debts, but that is not suggested at all. Rather the Minister of Finance is intent on as nearly as possible making his budget balance, and he intends to do so by cutting down expenditures. He calls the interest charges on the debts uncontrollable and takes it for granted that they will be paid one hundred per cent. It seems to me that the time is rapidly approaching when we will have to face the cutting down of our bonded indebtedness. This might be done by a reduction in the face value of the bonds; it might be done by converting these bonds so that we would pay a smaller rate of interest, or it might be done by inflation. We in this corner of the house are inclined to think that inflation would be the fairest and easiest way to carry out the operation. It is true that the Minister of Finance proposes a conversion loan, but he says it will be on a basis that will keep faith with the investors and will not in any sense involve a repudiation of existing contracts. I would point out to him that after all the bondholders to-day are receiving practically twice as much as they should receive, because to-day the dollar will purchase twice as much as it would buy when the bonds were issued.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the position is something like this: I believe that in Greenwich observatory there is a standard yardstick which is very carefully looked after. It is exactly thirty-six inches in length and is kept free from climatic influences lest it should expand or contract the least fraction of an inch. It is kept steady and unvarying, as a standard. Now let us suppose that I contract with someone to supply a thousand yards of cloth, and of course it is understood that thirty-six inches constitute a yard. Three or four years go by; someone gets hold of the yardstick and stretches it until it is seventy inches in length. Then he demands: Pay me my thousand yards of cloth, and he holds up a yardstick seventy inches long. The Prime Minister would say: Yes, of course, it must be paid, that is a contractual obligation. It is not a contractual obligation. The fact is that the dollar has increased in buying power, and under such circumstances it is only fair in the eyes of anyone who is not obsessed with the legal way of looking at the matter, that the people who own the mortgages, for that is what the bonds are, should receive back the real purchasing power of those mortgages or bonds at the times the debts were contracted.

Moreover, when the minister talks about keeping faith with the investors, I ask: What about keeping faith with our Canadian pioneers who put their all into this country? What about keeping faith with our pensioners who at the call went over to Europe and risked their lives, and who are now finding their pensions cut down? What about keeping faith with the ordinary farmers and labour people throughout Canada who are having their incomes very seriously reduced? Why should the bondholders not take their share of the losses and the depression? They are the only class that is exempt to-day. The Minister of Finance, in speaking of the high credit position of Canada, said:

> This enviable position has been and can be held only by the maintenance of sound financial and monetary policies. . . . Let the sponsors of inflation never forget—one inevitable result would be a flight from our dollar, a withdrawal on a large scale of the capital invested by foreigners in this country in the form of securities and bank deposits—against policies which might lead to such dangers, this government has resolutely set its face.

I do not suppose my personal opinions would avail very much in opposition to those of the Minister of Finance, but let me read the remarks of Mr. McKenna to the shareholders of the Midland bank as recently as March last. He said:

> The national finances are certainly better in countries where the persistent fall in internal prices has been arrested than in those where through adherence to gold it is still continuing. Separation from gold is no longer a sign of budgetary disorder; adherence to it is not longer a distinguishing mark of sound national finance. . . . Controlled inflation, from being the remedy of fools or knaves, has become widely regarded as the best available solution of our troubles.

Mr. COOTE: Who said that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Right Hon. Reginald McKenna. Of course, if we in this corner say this, we are called the wild men from the west and I suppose the hon. member for South-east Grey (Miss Macphail) will be called the wild woman from the east.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order!

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I hope that is in order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to repeat these words of Mr. McKenna:

> Controlled inflation, from being the remedy of fools or knaves, has become widely regarded as the best available solution of our troubles.

Confirming that, Mr. H. G. Hawtrey, a treasury official, said this:

> The evil consequences of uncontrolled inflation are definitely surpassed by the evils of deflation.

Mr. COOTE: Would the hon. member mind telling us who Mr. McKenna is?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: He is chairman of the Midland bank, a former chancellor of the exchequer, and in order that it may be realized he is quite respectable, I may say he is a member of the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

The Prime Minister the other day gave us a very elaborate dissertation on gold and emphasized that our money was well taken care of by the gold coverage. I do not suppose my words would avail against those of the Prime Minister, who is supposed to be omniscient, but I would like to quote as against his position the words of another Conservative, the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, a former Prime Minister. In an address before the Bankers' Educational Association of Toronto on January 21, 1931, Mr. Meighen said:

> Under the Finance Act of later years, our government was authorized to advance to banks against specially named classes of collateral government notes by way of temporary loans and no provision was made for a gold reserve against these notes. . . . As to the money advanced under the Finance Act it is indefinite, consequently loans of unstated amounts, without limit, depending wholly upon the discretion of the Finance department, can be made without a gold reserve.

The Prime Minister said nothing whatever about these advances under the Finance Act. I do not know whether it would be quite fair to him to say that he studiously avoided such a reference. Let me read from section 6, part II of the Finance Act:

> Such securities shall be deposited with the minister or with an assistant receiver general; and the minister may request the trustees of the central gold reserves to make a valuation of and recommendation as to the amount which in the judgment of the trustees may properly be advanced on any securities offered in pledge under this part.

I ask: Who are these trustees that are given such enormous powers? Subsection 4 of section 61 of the Bank Act reads:

> Appointment of trustees. Central gold reserves.
> 4. The association may, with the approval of the minister, appoint three trustees and the minister may appoint a fourth trustee.

The other day I asked the Prime Minister as to who the trustees at the present time were and he replied to me, as reported on page 3511 of Hansard:

> The trustees are the Royal Trust Company, the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Bank of Canada.

The Royal Trust Company is, I think, generally considered to be more or less a subsidiary of the Bank of Montreal, so that apparently the Bank of Montreal and the Royal bank are the two who determine what advances shall be made under the Finance Act. The people have nothing to do with the matter; the gold reserve has nothing to do with it. Let me repeat this sentence from Mr. Meighen's speech:

> Under the Finance Act of later years, our government was authorized to advance to banks—

Not to municipalities, although the banks may offer municipal securities.

> —against specially named classes of collateral, government notes by way of temporary loans and no provision was made for a gold reserve against these notes. . . . As to the money advanced under the Finance Act—

Listen to these words:

> —it is indefinite, consequently loans of unstated amounts, without limit, depending wholly upon the discretion of the Finance department, can be made without a gold reserve.

If that be true, I submit that much of what the Prime Minister said the other day was absolute nonsense. Without any undue reflection upon the Prime Minister, I say that those statements of Mr. Meighen read in conjunction with the Finance Act indicate clearly that my right hon. friend's contention that we had for all our money a sufficient gold reserve was—well, parliamentary language fails me!

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

I should like to reply briefly to what was said the other day with regard to myself by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). He will forgive me for replying to him in his absence, as he spoke in my absence. The other day I made this statement with regard to the Farm Relief bill:

> If we give great powers to the Dominion government and they proceed to use those powers in order that the banks and insurance companies may write up and keep written up their assets, and in order that loans may be made to the railways, I would say that the result will be disastrous indeed for this country.

I am quite prepared to stand by that. But on the basis of that statement the Minister of Trade and Commerce had this to say about me, at page 3470 of Hansard of March 28:

> Why does the government, he asks, safeguard insurance companies when the people of this country are out of work.

That is something I did not ask. He went on to say:

> This is the utterance of a demagogue.

In the first place he puts words into my mouth which I did not utter, and then he characterizes me as a demagogue. As a matter of fact, what I was at the time protesting against was this, that the government under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, as has been time and again pointed out, did use their powers not merely to give relief in the drought stricken areas in Saskatchewan and to the unemployed, but also to allow the writing up of the assets of the insurance companies. I submit I am perfectly justified in resenting that being done under that kind of legislation, and in so doing I do not think I can be classed as a demagogue.

The Prime Minister himself in introducing the legislation last year with regard to insurance companies admitted:

> A more stringent restriction of investments by life insurance companies is desirable.

And, speaking particularly of the Sun Life, he said:

> As to the wisdom of some of the investments . . . they are not investments that I would make.

I am not at this time going to refer to the plea that we put up some years ago for the mutualization of the Sun Life. I am not going to deal particularly with the large dividends and big salaries enjoyed by the officials of that company. I am not going to go into the rather shady transactions of the officials of that company in connection with the Kreugers and the Insulls, but I do urge that when I suggest it is dangerous to give powers to the government when the government may use those powers in connection with an insurance company, especially with insurance companies of this class, I have a right to resent being called a demagogue. I suppose there is no use bandying words. I might, I suppose, call the Minister of Trade and Commerce a "plutogogue." I do not know whether that is parliamentary or not; I think it would be, since I do not think the word is in the dictionary. But where do we get with that kind of thing?

I have hardly time to go into the details of the budget; this may possibly be done at a later stage. But as I see the matter, the budget on the whole will tend to retain for the wealthy their wealth, and at the expense of heavier taxation upon the poor. The Minister of Finance decreases the income tax exemptions. He said:

> It is felt that higher rates of taxation could not reasonably be imposed, bearing in mind not only the depleted incomes out of which the tax must be paid but also the fact that in some provinces the same incomes will be subjected to further levies for provincial and/or municipal purposes.

That is a very nice doctrine for those in receipt of large incomes, but may I point out that indirect taxes, like the tariff and the sales tax, repeat themselves over and over again; in fact, they pyramid themselves. Look for a moment at the income tax exemptions and the increases that have thus been made in the tax. Take the case of a married man with two dependent children. His tax at varying salaries, would be as follows:

Income—	1932 tax	1933 tax	Percentage increase
$ 3,000	.....	$ 6	—
4,000	$ 12	38	220
5,000	32	80	150
6,000	58	132	130
10,000 (including surtax)	275.10	462	70
20,000 (including surtax)	1,545.60	2,005.50	30

That is, in the case of a man with an income of $20,000, under the new regulations, the tax is increased by 30 per cent, whereas in the case of a man receiving an income of only $4,000 his tax is increased 220 per cent. I thought it was bad enough last year when the government proposed to make an equal cut on everybody, because whilst the cut might have been 10 per cent all around, actually it was not equal in its effects, because it is not so much the actual percentage or the actual amount taken, but what a man has left, and 10 per cent on the little man means a great deal more than 10 per cent on the big man, so far as his power to pay is concerned.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Geary): The hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But this is worse, because there is an increase in taxation in which the percentage decreases when it comes to the men of larger means.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in the budget debate this year, but as the budget deals largely with farm products, and coming as I do from a constituency largely composed of farmers, I felt it my duty to express to the government my appreciation of what has been done to further the interests of that class of our citizens. I do not wish to take up much time, and for that reason I shall not spend the usual time in paying compliments to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) for the able manner in which he presented his budget.

This is not a political budget; it is a business man's budget. Taxes are never popular. In critical times such as those through which we are now passing revenues have to be found and consequently taxes must be imposed. But in this budget most of the taxes will fall on those who are best able to bear them.

The government deserve to be complimented for some of the measures they have brought down. First of all I would mention the stabilization of the pound for duty purposes at $4.60. I am sure that this provision as applied to some of the exported products of the farm will prove of great benefit to producers of that class of goods and will do much to stimulate the farming industry in this country and have a beneficial effect on trade in general.

I shall not undertake to analyze all the various features of the budget, as I do not feel qualified to do so. I shall confine myself to agricultural questions, and I desire first to make a few remarks on the dairy industry, and more particularly on the present butter situation in Canada. Hon. members opposite, from their leader down to those who sit on the same row of benches that I myself occupy on this side of the house, are very much divided on many of the questions that come before this house, but there is one question at least on which they are closely united. It is that one particular argument that has been so frequently used against this government, namely that of decreasing commodity prices. More particularly has that argument been raised in connection with butter prices. How many times has this house listened to these words: "Butter was selling for so much in 1929, but in 1931, 1932 or 1933—as the case may be—"it is only so much."

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Or so little.

Mr. GOBEIL: I did not hear what the hon. member said. I do not object to hon. members using that argument, if they wish, until the next general election. I feel quite sure that such an argument will not lead them out of the valley of humiliation. Unless they have made up their minds that they do not wish to come back to the house after the next election I really cannot understand why they still use that argument. In the first place it will do them no good, because Canadian dairy farmers are not fools. This argument is certainly the poorest hon. members opposite could put forward. There is one way and one only of establishing relatively high or low prices on any one commodity, and that is by comparing the price paid in Canada with that paid in other countries where it is produced or sold. Every Canadian knows that a comparison of present prices with those obtaining four or five years ago is a childish and ridiculous procedure. People outside the house would not dare do it, but it would seem that hon. members opposite have not abandoned the practice. Outside the house we never hear such comparisons, because they cannot be substantiated by facts. Hon. members opposite cannot mention one country in the whole world where commodity prices are the same to-day as they were three or four years ago. There remains, however, the infallible method of comparing the prices paid in other countries with those paid in Canada. If we follow that method, in what position does Canada stand to-day?

Speaking in this House of Commons on October 20 last, I placed on Hansard some comparative butter prices on the three markets in which we are interested. I refer to the markets in Canada, the United States and Great Britain. The quotations I gave at that time were for different months in the years 1930, 1931 and 1932. I am sorry that at this time I find it necessary to repeat them, but I feel I will be justified in so doing, and for that reason shall place them again on Hansard. My purpose in placing these figures before the house is, in the first place, to show that there has been a change in butter prices not only in Canada but in the other two countries, and, in the second place, to show that the Canadian position has been improving. The following is a comparison of butter prices in the three markets I have mentioned:

	Canada	United States	England
June, 1930	27.13	32.93	28.02
July, 1930	27.59	35.24	28.95
August, 1930	28.67	38.92	28.53
December, 1930	28.63	32.18	23.43
January, 1931	30.80	28.50	24.11
February, 1931	31.61	28.50	25.74
March, 1931	31.13	28.88	25.32
March, 1932	26.31	22.61	18.94
April, 1932	20.06	20.04	19.38
May, 1932	16.81	18.83	17.81
August, 1932	19.21	20.31	17.81

Speaking a few days ago the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) placed a few figures on Hansard. He gave the prices of butter for the months of January, February, November and December of 1932. I shall not dispute his figures; I take it for granted they are correct, but they are not for the same months as the figures I gave. I quite agree with the hon. member that since the winter of 1930, Canadian prices have been fluctuating, bringing about a condition under which in some months the United States prices were higher and in others Canadian prices were higher. On the whole, however, Canadian prices gained. The hon. member gave figures which would indicate that in the four months there was a margin in favour of United States prices of anywhere from two cents to three cents per pound. But he went farther than that. In reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Shaver) he gave the following figures for 1928:

	Canada cts. per lb.	United States cts. per lb.
January, 1928	35.50	48.90
February, 1928	36.50	46.50
November, 1928	39.90	50.70
December, 1928	40.60	50.80

This was a comparison of Canadian with American prices for some time back, showing a difference of anywhere from five cents to ten cents per pound in favour of American prices. Since the winter of 1930, however, the difference has very often been in our favour, and seldom in favour of the United States farmer.

May I remind the house that several hon. members opposite have referred to my remarks of October 20. I refer particularly to the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr.

Rheaume). I am sorry he is not in his seat. On October 25 last, referring to me, he made the following statement:

During the speech of my good friend from Compton he has declared that the farmers of this country should be proud of the prices they are obtaining for their butter, and I defy the member for Compton to go and repeat these words in his county.

Let me tell him that I never uttered such words, and the hon. member knew it when he said it. He knew it because he referred to Hansard, and he had only to refer to page 416 and he would have seen that what I said was this:

It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the action taken by this government on behalf of Canadian farmers has resulted in our farmers getting more for their butter than are the farmers of any other country in the world.

I wish to point out that the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville, deliberately misquoted me; he sought to put in my mouth words that I never uttered. But I remind the house that he did not dispute the figures I gave; neither did any other hon. member opposite, because they were the correct figures. He challenged me to go back to my constituency and say words that I never pronounced here. I challenge the hon. member—well, perhaps I should not say that, because the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville has proven that he can say anything; but I defy any hon. member to prove to the house that the figures I gave on the 20th of October last were not accurate figures for the month I mentioned.

What has been the situation in regard to butter in Canada since I gave these figures, and what is it to-day? The condition has continually improved, so much so that to-day there is a difference of between six and seven cents in favour of Canada as compared with United States prices and over ten cents a pound as compared with London prices. Let me read to the house some short comments made by two Montreal papers on the butter situation. These comments were written after the answer given by the right hon. the Prime Minister to my question relative to New Zealand butter en route to Canada a few days ago. Le Bulletin des Agriculteurs dated the 21st of March made the following comments:

Last Monday answering a question of Mr. Sam Gobeil, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett gave assurance to the house that these importations of butter would be controlled under the terms of the treaty with New Zealand because he considered these importations prejudicial to the dairy industry. The occasion seems to be favourable to examine what that protection that some are trying to discredit is actually worth to us. Without this treaty and the protection that it affords us butter would sell to-day in Canada for 16 cents per pound, the price of butter is actually 18 cents in United States or 22 cents in Canadian funds, on the English market the best New Zealand butter is selling to-day for 14·54 in Canadian funds.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the comments made by that newspaper in Montreal which since its foundation has been looked upon by the farmers of the province of Quebec as the watchdog of their interests. But if some hon. members think that the opinion of this newspaper may not be impartial, let me give them now the comments of the Liberal organ in the city of Montreal, Le Canada, on the 21st of March. I have the newspaper article here, and this is a translation:

New Zealand has always the resource of directing her butter to another market. There is no question of denouncing the treaty between the two governments. Their butter enters Canada by paying a duty of 5 cents per pound. The price of butter in Montreal to-day is higher than in New York, and even much more than the English price where New Zealand sells nearly all her butter. The highest price in Montreal to-day is 25 cents, in New York Saturday the price was 18 cents or 22 cents in Canadian funds. The average price paid on the English market for the best New Zealand butter is 14·54 in Canadian funds, so that, lacking action by the government, it would permit New Zealand to flood our market with butter, and would smash the prevailing present prices.

Now, sir, could there be a better compliment paid to this government than that? And it is paid by one of the greatest Liberal newspapers published in Montreal. Do hon. members opposite believe that such a happy condition was brought about by chance? I know they are not so narrow minded, they know better, but so does the Canadian farmer. The Canadian farmer knows that this situation was brought about largely by the efforts of the hon. Minister of Agriculture in 1930, by his constant supervision of the market, and by the arrangement arrived at by which no foreign butter would be offered for sale in Canada for less than 31 cents during the winter of 1930-31. It was brought about by the foresight of this government when the New Zealand treaty was drafted, the terms of which permit this government to take action, as it will on this occasion, without endangering or cancelling the whole treaty; preventing the flooding of our country with large quantities of butter and lowering our price to the London price. If hon. gentlemen opposite were in power to-day or if the same condition that existed in 1930 were still prevailing, as this Liberal newspaper said, the price of butter in Canada would be that of London, that is around 15 cents a pound. If hon. members opposite dispute that statement I invite them to explain the difference. How is it that to-day there is a difference of 10 cents a pound between the Canadian and the London price? What would stop New Zealand from selling butter here at the same price as they sell it at in London if it were not for the five cent duty and clause 4 of the treaty?

The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), speaking a litle while ago said that in times of adversity Canadians called the Conservative party to power. My hon. friends opposite sneered at that. I will go further, I will say that had Canadians failed to call the Conservative party to power in 1930 Canada would be bankrupt to-day. It would be a calamity.

Mr. HOWARD: On what do you base that statement?

Mr. GOBEIL: It is all very well for my hon. friends opposite to smile, but let them explain how it could be otherwise if we still had an adverse balance of trade of $240,000,000 a year. If this government had not had power when England went off the gold standard to stop the export of gold, would not this country be bankrupt? Although the position of Canadian dairy farmers is not too rosy, where would they be to-day if they had to sell their butter at 16 cents as they would if my hon. friends opposite were in power? Does that mean that the Canadian farmer gets enough for his butter or that he is producing at a profit? Not at all. It means, however, that on the return of normal conditions, if the farmer producing butter enjoys, as no doubt he will, the same happy conditions that he enjoys to-day, he will find himself in a favourable situation such as has never existed before in Canada, and it will be entirely attributable to the action of this government.

This is only one class of commodity; let me deal with one or two other items. Let me take for instance cattle, to which the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) referred. How would hon. members opposite explain that under such depressed conditions as we are experiencing now we had exported to England from January 1 to March 23 last 7,863 head of cattle as compared with 409 last year for the same months, and nothing when my hon. friends were in power. Since March 23 last two or three cargoes have left Canada, but on that date the number of cattle we shipped out was 7,863. There was another item I wanted to refer to, and if I have time I shall deal with it before I get through.

I would not want to finish these remarks without saying a few words with regard to the question of trade agreements with the United States. I listened with much interest the other day to the speech made by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) and I am bound to say I had to smile at some of his remarks. He spoke, and others since then have spoken in the same way, as if it depended on this government alone to enact satisfactory trade agreements with the United States. I am not going to give the history of the negotiations between the two countries under the Liberal regime between the years 1896 and 1930. No better picture can be given of it than was given in the speech made by my right hon. leader on February 20. May I be permitted however to quote one paragraph from a speech made by Mr. Fielding in 1910, when he was Minister of Finance in the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

> We had had negotiations from time to time with our American friends in relation to better trade conditions, and they had not turned out very successfully. We had, after repeated efforts, taken the ground that we should not again approach the United States with proposals for betterment of our trade relations, and that, if the matter was to be reopened again, it should be reopened, not upon the initiative of Canada, but upon the initiative of the United States. Accordingly, we declined to make any approach to the United States while the question of the French treaty was pending.

Since that date the government headed by the right hon. gentleman who is now leader of the opposition held power for nine years, and what did they do to bring about better trade relations with the United States? Nothing at all. Did they try to do anything? Hon. members opposite know that better than I, but if they did their efforts have been absolutely fruitless. I will go further and say that during those nine years the duties imposed by the Americans have been constantly increasing; they have been raised to such a point as to become absolutely prohibitive. I would quote some figures given to this house by my hon. friend from Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Thauvette), who I am sorry is not in his seat. These figures can be found at page 663 of Hansard of this session. The hon. gentleman was trying to convince the government that before the treaty for the deepening of the St. Lawrence was passed the government should see to it that better trade agreements were arrived at. If he were here I would tell him that this might very well be brought about without his advice. On that occasion however he made a more telling criticism of the late government than any Conservative member could. He was comparing exports to the United States in 1921, when the rates were very low or practically free, with those of the year 1931, under present duties. Of course, I can very well understand the hon. member quoting 1931 instead of 1930. He was trying to make the house believe that this government was responsible for part of that change, although he knew very well that between 1930 and 1931 not one change had been made except on lumber, to which he did not refer, so far as the American tariffs are concerned. So that he might have quoted the 1930 figures; it would have been the same. Exports of live stock in 1921, under free entry, according to the hon. member, amounted to $21,240,000; and in 1931—one might read 1930—they amounted to $764,000. As regards sheep, in 1921, under free entry, the amount was $1,676,000, whereas in 1931 at $3 per head the amount was $244. In wheat, in 1921, without any duty, the amount was $101,997,000; and in 1931, with a duty of 42 cents per bushel, the amount was $6,580,000. In butter, the amount in 1921, at 2½ cents per pound, was $2,294,000; and in 1931, at 14 cents per pound, it was $20,000. Maple sugar in 1921, free, amounted to $1,122,000; and in 1931, $310,000.

Mr. LACROIX: What about 1932?

Mr. GOBEIL: The hon. member can easily find the figures. He knows very well that we have gained since 1930—I am not going to say how much.

Mr. LACROIX: On maple sugar?

Mr. GOBEIL: I say we have progressed as an exporting country; we have advanced from twelfth to fourth among the exporting countries of the world. Is that sufficient for my hon. friend?

Mr. LACROIX: No, it is not; there were no exports of maple sugar.

Mr. GOBEIL: I do not think my hon. friend can indicate another country in the world that has done so well during this period of depression. I have shown the results of the nine years of power of hon. gentlemen opposite; I have shown the condition in which this government found our trade relations with the United States in 1930. The hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges went further and gave the adverse balance of trade with the United States as $323,000,000 in 1929. Fortunately for Canada, and for my hon. friend opposite who has been interrupting me, that condition does not exist to-day. I only speak for myself as representing the county of Compton, but I feel confident that this government is prepared favourably to consider any trade proposals or suggestions which may be made by the United States that would be to the mutual advantage of both countries. I am also confident, however, that this government does not propose to follow, and will not follow, the policy adopted by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) during the years he was in power, when he was so much afraid lest any member of this house should say anything that might annoy the Yankees.

A few moments ago I said I should like to mention another matter; I could mention several, but the point I have in mind is rather personal. First let me say a word with regard to our exports of canned goods to Great Britain. Unfortunately I have not the figures with me. I went to secure them to-day, but I had no idea that I would have anything to say this week, and the figures will not be ready until Friday. I do know, however, that our exports of canned goods have increased very materially. I have in mind one item for which I can give the round figures. In 1931-32 we exported some 47,000 cases of canned apples, while last year we exported about 71,000 cases. This is only one item and there are several others I could mention.

Mr. HOWARD: Following the remarks of the hon. member, would he suggest that the farmers in the county of Compton are as well off under this regime as they were under the Liberal government?

Mr. GOBEIL: If my hon. friend from Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) can show me one farmer anywhere else in the world who is as prosperous to-day as he was in 1926 or 1927 I will show him one in Canada. I claim that in the British market we have a wonderful opening for canned goods of all kinds. The market is unlimited; even if our Canadian farmers went into the canned goods industry to the fullest possible extent for the next ten years they could not supply it.

Now I should like to refer to a somewhat personal matter. I am sorry to have to do so, because this really does not concern the house at all, but I feel that it is necessary after the repeated insinuations—I will not say attacks because the gentlemen who made the insinuations were not brave enough to make what I would call attacks—from the other side of the house at different times in connection with strawberry preserves that were sold the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific by Joseph Gobeil, who happens to be my brother. I feel that I must give the house an explanation, which I am sure will satisfy every hon. member that this matter should not have been brought up in the first place. Before doing so, however, let me say that I am proud of that little home industry, without regard to who owns it; I believe there should be an industry such as this in every community and every parish. It happens in this case that the owner was my brother, but would the house suggest for a moment that because he happened to be my brother he had no right to sell preserves to the railways? This is a home product, Mr. Speaker, that is not surpassed anywhere. Every hon. member knows the difference between cultivated and wild strawberries, and the best proof I can give the house as to the quality of the product is the fact that my brother receives orders from as far west as Saskatchewan and British Columbia. When the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) raised this question in the house some two years ago the committee on railways and shipping was sitting. At one of the meetings of that committee I asked Sir Henry Thornton for an explanation, and two or three days later Mr. Vaughan, general purchasing agent of the Canadian National, gave me this statement, which I will read to the house without comment:

In the House of Commons on April 1, Mr. Jean-François Pouliot stated that the Canadian National was charging 25 cents per jar for a while for strawberry preserves made by Jos. Gobeil, when the price for an excellent product put up by E. D. Smith & Son is only 15 cents.

Mr. Pouliot said that the Gobeil preserves is a "vicious stuff."

He intimated that the Gobeil preserves are bought through the Stadacona Sales Company of Quebec.

These preserves are made of wild Canadian strawberries, and were first brought to the attention of the general manager of the Canadian National hotel and dining car department in June, 1931. A trial order was placed with Mr. Gobeil on July 7, 1931, for 190 dozen of 3 ounce size at $1.20 a dozen and distributed to Halifax, Quebec, Montreal and Toronto.

The trial preserves met with considerable favour with the travelling public and were finding a ready sale. It was found, however, that the 3 ounce size was too small to make a proper serving, so the next order placed with Mr. Gobeil on October the 23rd, was for 100 dozen of 5 ounce jars at $1.50 a dozen, which was the price he had originally quoted for the 3 ounce jars. These prices included delivery at Montreal.

On December 4, 1931, another order for 96 dozen of the 5 ounce size was placed.

[Mr. Gobeil.]

There is very little of this stock left, and a fresh supply will not be available until after strawberry picking time about the first of next July.

In Mr. Pouliot's remarks regarding prices, the comparison made is between preserves and jam which are quite different.

The statement was made that the jars used by E. D. Smith & Son are of the same size and shape as those used by J. Gobeil: if that is so, Smith's sample must have been from some very old stock, as the last order given by the dining car department to E. D. Smith & Son for preserves was placed on July, 1925. The order preceding immediately the Gobeil order for strawberry preserves was placed on December 26, 1929, with Canadian Canners Limited and was put up in 3½ ounce jars.

All jam is put up in 3 ounce jars (government standard) and sold in dining cars at 15 cents a jar. All preserves are put up in 5 ounce jars and sold at 25 cents.

Bids were issued by the Canadian National on March 21, 1931, and on three items, namely strawberry, raspberry or peach preserve the E. D. Smith & Son Company did not quote, their bid reading "Sorry do not pack." The only quotations on these items were by Canadian Canners Limited at $1.40 a dozen and Wagstaffe Limited $1.28 per dozen. These quotations were for cultivated strawberries which do not compare in flavour with wild strawberries.

The price submitted by E. D. Smith & Son on strawberry and raspberry jam in the bid referred to was 15 cents a dozen more than one submitted by the Old City Manufacturing Company of Quebec who are supplying Canadian National requirements.

Many favourable comments have reached the dining car department regarding this wild strawberry preserve. One gentleman remarked that it is the best jam or preserve featured by the railway. The product is a good seller and many patrons of dining cars have asked where the product could be bought for their homes. There have been no complaints.

The product was submitted to Milton & Hersey & Company (chemists) for analysis. The report was as follows:

"We have completed the analysis of sample of wild strawberry preserve with the following results:

Weight of contents	4.2 oz.
Water	35.2 %
Per cent of sugar	21.1 %
Fruit substance	43.7 %"

This material consists solely of wild strawberries, without the addition of any other fruit or fruit substance. It has a good flavour and is well made. The weight is a little greater than that claimed.

The orders for the preserves were made direct with Joseph Gobeil, and not through the Stadacona Sales Company.

I must apologize for taking up the time of the house in reading this statement, but I feel sure hon. members will realize that I had to read it in view, as I said before, of repeated insinuations. As long as those inferences were made by the hon. member for Témiscouata only I did not object very much to them; I was even pleased at the free advertising for my brother and I did not object for the reason that clowns are never taken seriously, but—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. W. J. LOUCKS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, I feel happy to have this privilege as a farmer and representing an agricultural constituency, to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on his budget, I do so, first, because of the royal commission which we are promised, to investigate banks and currency and, second, because of the creation of an agricultural stabilization fund. Let me dwell on the latter for a few moments. I realize that probably some hon. members from the east may feel that we in the wheat growing area are not so much concerned with the thirteen items mentioned in the stabilization fund, but I should like to assure the house that I am very much interested in the stabilization fund in regard to the thirteen items mentioned, more particularly as regards the production of cattle and hogs. I have four miles from my home, a neighbour who is feeding over 200 head so he can regard with pleasure and satisfaction the fact that the government of Canada is taking action in connection with a stabilization fund. Just imagine what it will mean to this particular farmer on over 200 head of cattle this spring, when he gets $4.60 on the pound sterling! Therefore I am glad to be here to endorse the budget in connection with the stabilization fund. I shall not take time to enumerate all the items mentioned, but they refer to agricultural products.

This shows vividly that after all the criticisms that have been offered, our government have the vision that we must start with agriculture if we are going to get out of the great depression in which we are at present. They have taken these items as a beginning. Some hon. members have offered criticism because the stabilization fund did not cover all commodities, but why should we criticize for that reason? It is a step in the right direction; it covers commodities produced from one end of the country to the other, and the very fact that the government has established this fund shows that it realizes that we must assist the basic industry of this country if we are to get out of the depression.

The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) is not in his seat, but if he would turn a little more of his attention to agriculture, he might be more hopeful of a solution of the unemployment problem, because if agriculture could be brought back, many of those at present unemployed would find employment. I do not think I would be extravagant were I to say that in Saskatchewan, if we could only come back to former conditions and have a fair return for what we are producing in that province, we could take care of 100,000 of the unemployed. That in itself would help, and when one considers the nine provinces and the relationship between their populations and the situation, one might well feel we could go a long way towards ending unemployment if we could bring agriculture back to normal. I think we are now pursuing the right course along that line.

We are at present investigating the milk situation. I see the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) has just left the chamber, but I remember at the beginning of this part of the session he introduced a resolution to divide the agriculture committee, the east from the west, because he was convinced that the west was concerned with wheat and wheat only. I think he is assured now that the west is just as much interested in agriculture in general as is any other part of the dominion. As one of the members of the committee on agriculture—and I am not bringing in a report—I may say that there have been some very startling revelations. From what has been revealed before the committee, I wonder how the dairy farmer exists at all. When, as has been shown by at least one witness, a man can start out with an old milk wagon and a horse and become a multimillionaire, while all the farmers are going bankrupt, it is time we tried to find out how such things can be.

I make the statement that I feel, before we are through with this inquiry, we should investigate the packing plants. I should like to see the stockyards investigated, because there is something there that is worth while studying. Before leaving home I was informed that the stockyard at Saskatoon was charging at the rate of $40 a ton for hay and $40 a ton for oat chop, while oats are selling for ten cents a bushel and hay is very low. The stockyard is charging the same prices now as it charged when it went into business. As the price of wheat has gone down, the farmers are going more into mixed farming and they are making more shipments to the stockyards. I am sure, before we are through with this inquiry, we shall go further into the investigation why the middleman at this time, in our opinion, is exploiting the agriculturist.

I want to deal with interest rates for the farmer. I heartily endorse the suggestion that has been made in this house that there must be a reduction in interest rates because it is impossible for the farmer in western Canada to meet the interest charges that are being piled up against him. I have been twenty-eight years in that country and I have never yet been able to borrow money from the banks at iess than eight per cent, and I think that is true of most of the farmers out there. The mortgage companies are not reducing their rates; they still hold out for eight per cent compound interest, and the banks are doing the same. I am therefore glad that the government has appointed a royal commission to investigate banking and currency questions, and their investigation will undoubtedly include interest rates and the other questions I have mentioned. The action of the government in that respect will be appreciated by the people of this country. If there could be a reduction in interest rates, it would give hope and encouragement to agriculture. I think it might be possible to recommend that interest be thrown off for a year or two. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company threw off the interest which the farmers on their lands were paying two years ago, in order to give them a little encouragement, and at the very least I do not see why the mortgage companies could not reduce their interest rates.

There is another question I wish to speak about, and that is the cost of agricultural implements and repair parts. The farmers are demanding to know why agricultural implements and repair parts are as dear as they are to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: You had better come over here.

Mr. LOUCKS: I think it is time that question was investigated. I remember that when I bought my first binder out west in 1906, a Massey Harris binder, it cost me $170. In 1907 I bought my second binder, and it cost me about the same. What do we find to-day? Binders are costing all the way up to $290. I mention that to show how the price of our implements has gone up while wheat is selling at practically the lowest price in history. I can tell you that very few binders were sold in our town last year. There was only one purchase, and the purchaser told me that he bought it on a two-year term and that it cost him $295. That is a ridiculous price to have to pay at this time. I remember that in 1905 I bought a John Deere 14-inch gang plough, with breaker bottom, and the price was $101. To-day it costs around $200. Those are excessive prices, and the farmers are asking why they should have to continue to pay these prices when their products are selling so low. I know that the farmers say that it is easy for the manufacturer to close his factory and lock up his door. But the farmer cannot do that. He must continue. It would be pitiful for the people of this country if the farmer ceased to produce.

Last summer before harvest I had occasion to buy repairs for a combine. I needed a new table canvas for my combine. I do not know whether some hon. members know the nature of a canvas for a combine. The length of that canvas is 33 feet or twice 16½ feet. I asked the price, and the agent wanted $93 for a canvas. I said, "You are crazy; surely you do not mean that." "Oh, yes," he said, "that is the price." I said, "That means at least three hundred bushels of wheat to pay for the canvas." He said to me, "Mr. Loucks, you go over to that tent-builder over there. He repairs canvas and he may be able to do something with that old table canvas of yours." I went over to the tent-builder, and I got a price on duck to rebuild my canvas, and the price was $11 for the duck to put on a new table canvas. Then I went to the hardware store and bought $2 worth of rivets, so altogether it cost me $13. I have a boy who is quite a mechanic, and he fixed it up. So I paid $13 for a table canvas for which I was quoted a price of $93 by the dealer. Such a price is ridiculous. All that was left outside of the canvas were the slats and four strips. If the manufacturer had charged me $25 for the labour, that would have been quite sufficient.

I might mention another thing, the bill hook for a Massey Harris binder. I do not know whether some hon. members know what a bill hook is, but it is self-explanatory; it is a bill with a hook on it. We have always paid $1.60 for a bill hook, and this year for the first time in my twenty-eight years out west I had to pay $1.75. Is it any wonder that the farmers are asking, why should this thing be? Imagine the number of bushels of wheat it takes to pay for a bill hook for a binder to-day, and you have to replace bill hooks quite often.

Some hon. members may say that it is the tariff that is causing the increased price. But I take issue with that. It is not the tariff. I was down in Montana on the first of January and I got prices on an International binder, an International drill, and on different implements; and I found that right in the state of Montana prices are about the same as at Delisle, Saskatchewan. So it cannot be the tariff. That is not the cause at all.

While it might be well to have reciprocity, if you like, with the United States, yet at the present time I am not convinced that that would save the situation. While I was down in Montana I also got prices on the bacon type of hog, and the very best price they could get down there on the first of January was 2½ cents a pound. I got prices on different commodities, and they are all about the same as we are getting in Canada. Last Sunday I got a letter from my daughter in Montana, and she says that eggs are selling there at five cents a dozen to the farmer. So it is a good thing for the farmer that eggs are included in the commodities coming under the agricultural stabilization fund. When I went home a year ago a friend of mine said to me, "Bill, it took 160 dozen of eggs to pay for the setting of the tires on my lumber wagon." He will not say that when I go home next time, because eggs are at a much better price to-day. Recently I got a letter from my son in Saskatchewan, and he tells me that the bacon type of hog has doubled in price. So already we are getting results from this budget, and the government deserves the credit.

Some hon. members may say: But you have not exported any of these commodities to Great Britain. The great point is that our farmers know that they will now get a fair price on the commodities they export, and that is bound to stimulate the domestic market, and that is where we are beginning to get results.

I have already mentioned interest rates, and now I want to say a word or two about the inflation of money. I know that some of my friends may not agree with me, but I am willing to wait for the world economic conference which is going to be held this summer. I believe that if a universal system can be worked out at that conference for the stabilzation of money we shall get the right results. I agree with the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) when he states that should that fail our only alternative is to inflate money, or to bring our money to a point where it is on a par with the pound sterling. However I would not be one who at this time, with knowledge that a world conference is at hand would press for such inflation.

We all agree that there must be an international stabilization of money, I do not wish to criticize, but one important point came to my mind when the hon. member for West Edmonton was speaking. Going over the fourteen points in the Liberal platform I noticed that nothing is said about inflation. As the hon. member was Minister of the Interior in the late government I wonder how he could come out so boldly for a policy of inflation when, as a matter of fact, that is not mentioned in the Liberal platform. I do not believe the farmers of western Canada will accept, with very good grace, the fact that the Liberal platform contains nothing about an inflation policy. I think hon. members opposite might well take it from me that they would do well to insert another plank in their platform.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Thank you.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: You might insert it in the Conservative platform too.

Mr. LOUCKS: There is something else I should like to say. There is to be a world grain conference at Regina in July of this year. Although I am not dictating, I suggest that a committee be appointed to meet representatives of other exporting countries. In fact, I would include the importers as well, because there must be a spirit of cooperation. More particularly however the exporting countries should be represented. That will be the opportune time to get together with representatives from other wheat growing and exporting countries to see if we cannot possibly organize an international selling agency to look after the selling of our wheat. I am convinced great good would come from that. I believe this government will see that Canada is well represented, and that our representatives will be in a position to cooperate with those from other countries in discussions of matters touching the export of wheat.

This brings me to another matter which I describe in the following words: The wind sweeping over the prairies carrying new ideas to the hearts of men. I wish to relate what happened at a meeting held in my home town on January 17, and in doing so I will read some of the resolutions there considered. It was representative of Conservatives and Progressives or, if you like, members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. The mayor of the town was the sponsor of the meeting. Although he is a Liberal, and spoke against me during the last election campaign, there are no hard feelings between us. We realized that we must get together and do something; and for that reason the meeting was advertised. The town went to the expense of throwing the town hall open, upon which occasion over two hundred farmers assembled. The provincial member from Rosetown constituency was on the platform with me. I was convinced of the sincerity of our audience; they were attending the meeting only in an attempt to find a way out of present difficulties. Many ladies were in attendance; the hall was packed.

At this point I shall read some of the resolutions so that hon. members may have an idea of the trend of thought in my constituency, because I believe these resolutions reflect the views of my people.

Mr. DONNELLY: Read them all.

Mr. LOUCKS: The first resolution was as follows:

Moved by A. L. Anderson, seconded by Mr. W. Hurley that having two great transportation railways in Canada, operating at considerable loss to the Canadian people, more particularly the government owned Canadian National; and in view of the fact that thousands of Canadians are unemployed and much rolling stock lying idle; and in view of the fact that American wheat is exported in considerable quantities and that we are of the impression that much of our Canadian wheat is utilized to bring up the standard of American low grade wheat which is exported, be it resolved that we ask our federal member, Mr. W. J. Loucks, to support or propose legislation whereby we as shippers of Canadian wheat may be assured of the perfect identity of our high grade wheat.

The interpretation I place upon the resolution is that the people in my constituency feel the time has arrived when we should consider patronizing our own ports to an extent greater than we have done in the past. The second resolution was:

Moved by Mr. Alec. Currie, seconded by Mr. W. Clark, that we ask the Dominion government to establish a national grain marketing agency.

Our farmers are convinced that is the action we should take. I must say that I hold a similar view.

May I add that the farmers in my constituency, to a great extent, have lost confidence in the grain exchange at Winnipeg. There is no doubt that we have tried a wheat pool and I must confess, to a certain extent have failed in our attempt. Therefore the farmers turn to this government and ask: "Why not set up a selling agency to look after our wheat"? They would heartily approve of the scheme if such an agency could be made international. Our people are convinced that is what we should do. When I think of the farmers who gambled on wheat and who lost their farms, I feel more certain than ever that there should be some provision whereby we could sell our wheat without the intervention of the grain exchange. I know of a man who lived in the town adjoining that in which I live—I will not mention his name—a man who was a great asset to the Dominion of Canada, a man who stated he had never gambled until 1929, but who as a result of losing over $50,000 lost his mental balance. I am not speaking too strongly when I say that the grain exchange is probably the greatest gambling hole in Canada, and has wrecked more farmers than has any other agency. Therefore I say that we should not hesitate to take some step toward the elimination of gambling in wheat on the grain exchange. The business man can gamble, or leave it alone, but it is clear to me that farmers who are not gamblers know nothing about taking a first loss, and that is the reason they lose their farms. I could mention one farmer after another who mortgaged his farm, men who had money in the banks. The very man I mentioned a few moments ago was one of the biggest exhibitors of grain in this dominion. There is no doubt as to why he went wrong mentally; he is in the old country at the present time. Everybody said wheat was going to come back to $2 a bushel; our banks all said that.

I can remember very well that in the fall of 1929, while in the pool, I took my initial payment. I wanted to go down to Moose Jaw to get some feeder steers. With a certificate before me for 10,000 bushels of wheat on which I had realized eighty cents a bushel, I said to the banker, "I want to borrow some money." The manager at our local bank said, "Why, Mr. Loucks, your certificate is still worth at least half a dollar; that is all the security you need. How much money do you want?" "Well," I said, "I want enough to go down and buy a carload of feeders—probably; I am not sure. The answer was: "You can have all the money you want." What has happened since, since this depression came? I want to tell you something that happened last summer. I got letters from different municipal secretaries in my constituency; the provincial member was sick, so they began to write to me. The secretaries said: The farmers are coming here; they do not know how they are going to get twine and repairs for binders; what can you do? I told them it was a provincial issue, and I was the federal member but would do what I could to help the situation. Mr. Given, the provincial member, was sick, so I went to his house and talked it over with him. I said: "There is only one thing to do, and that is to call a meeting in some central place." This we did. We went there that night, and the hall was packed with farmers. After we appointed a chairman and discussed this thing I said to the chairman: "Let us have a show of hands; in fact you had better ask them to stand up—tell them that only actual farmers who know they cannot get repairs, cannot buy twine, cannot go to the bank and get a dollar, are to stand." Do you know, there was not a man there but rose? One happened to be a brother-in-law of mine, and I thought I knew his financial standing; so when the meeting was over I went to him and asked him: "Why did you stand up, a man with the holdings you have? What do you mean by it?" He said: "You don't know the story at all; I went to the bank the other day and could not borrow $40." Now let me tell you the standing of that man. He has ten quarter sections of land clear that I know of, thirty as fine Belgian horses as you ever looked at, a threshing machine, five good binders, a barn that cost over $5,000, 120 feet long, and buildings in accordance; and he is not one of these men who is just growing grain, he had a good herd of cattle as well. He said: "What would be the use of my going back when I could not get $40?" I said, "Charlie, do you owe the bank anything?" "Oh, yes," he said, "about $2,200." The barn alone had over $5,000 invested in it, to say nothing of the land; there was a crop of wheat ready for the binders, and yet the bank was afraid to let him have any money. The manager said: "I will have to write to the head office." These managers of branch banks are scared stiff; they would not lend the best man in the country any money to-day. Now I say it is time there was an investigation made.

Another resolution, moved by A. Currie, seconded by A. Kirch, is as follows:

That the Canadian currency be inflated to a parity with the British pound or less.

That was the feeling of our meeting, comprising over 200 farmers. They said: We cannot go on in this way; we cannot sell wheat at this price and live; you will have to do something. So if we do not get results from the world economic conference I am prepared to say: Let us inflate our money. In connection with Australia, do not forget that our wheat is superior to Australian wheat, but even at that Australia is getting more for her wheat—that is in her own money—although ours is away above it in quality and would naturally have the preference in the market.

Here is another resolution, moved by Dennis Pattison, seconded by A. Kirch:

That the banks be nationalized and that we have a managed currency.

Well, I do not think there is anything very serious about that. I have another that will probably shock some hon. members. Moved by A. Currie, seconded by J. Durham:

That the producers of wheat receive a price of $1.35 a bushel for wheat milled for consumption in Canada.

I do not think there is anything very shocking about that either. We could well afford to pay the farmers of western Canada $1.35 a bushel for the wheat that is consumed at home. I do not think it would hurt the bread eater a bit; in fact I do not think it would make a bit of difference in the price of bread. Someone who lives in Montreal told me he had never paid less than ten cents a loaf for bread there. If that is the case, do you think it would make any difference at all if we paid $1.35 for the wheat? This would help to the extent of forty or fifty million bushels. I do not think Canada would suffer or that the consumer of bread would suffer. That audience was not radical at all. I submitted this resolution to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) when it first came down—

Mr. HOWARD: What did he say?

Mr. LOUCKS: He could not endorse the resolution as submitted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Did he come across?

Mr. LOUCKS: He is a farmer in western Canada and he knows our need. We know the criticisms that formerly came from the other side of the house, but we are not hearing them so much now. The manufacturers want to be subsidized, but the conviction is now becoming general that neither the manufacturer nor the professional man can get anywhere until the farmer does. I have spoken with lawyers and doctors and they all realize that they will never prosper until the farmer has some money. My hon. friend the other day said that Saskatchewan alone had produced $6,000,000,000. You had no depression down here when we were shipping millions and millions of bushels of wheat and sending the money here—not only millions but the Prime Minister said billions at one time. The manufacturer was getting along nicely then. I know we were accused of being extravagant, but after all I have not much use for the hoarder; it is the man who puts his money in circulation who keeps the wheels turning, not the one who wants to live in a shack. When I think of what I went through in that western country when I lived in a shack, I cannot imagine that anyone would find fault because I put up a good house when I was able to do so. Why shouldn't I? Is there any condemnation of me because I bought an automobile, and put a radio in the house to keep the boys there? I think it is the best place for them. We talk about the boys going to the city; what is the reason? Because we have not given them the home life that we should. My boys are well satisfied to stay on the farm; there are three of them, but they say that something must be done; we must lift the price of commodities. As far as I am concerned they have the place and they are doing the best they can. I hope that before long prices will go up and we farmers will have our proper share of purchasing power, and then, sir, I can see the wheels beginning to turn, with benefit to every industry in this country.

On motion of Mr. Macdougall the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

RAILWAYS—POOL TRAINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Railways and Canals regarding the pool trains of the two railway systems between Toronto and Ottawa, and Toronto and Montreal, which trains are now running. Did the railway systems get the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners, or is it necessary that they should get its consent to run those pool trains?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I am afraid I cannot answer the question offhand. I shall look into it and give my hon. friend an answer to-morrow. This matter is not submitted to me or to the government in any way; it is an arrangement between the two railways. I shall get the information and inform my hon. friend to-morrow.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Is it the intention to have the special committee on government railways and shipping meet before Easter?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): There is standing in my name a resolution which will, I think, come up to-morrow, and as soon as it passes and the bill based on it is introduced, we shall probably have a meeting of the committee. That will most likely be the beginning of next week.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

Penitentiaries—amount required for cost of administration, construction, purchase of land, supplies and equipment, maintenance and discharge of inmates at Kingston, St. Vincent de Paul, Dorchester, Manitoba, British Columbia, Piers island, Saskatchewan and Collin's Bay penitentiaries, $2,941,400.

Mr. REID: Has the minister any information regarding the expenditure and the number of inmates that are at Piers island?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): This matter in regard to Piers island was brought to my attention a few days ago by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), and I prepared a statement which will probably cover the inquiry of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). In the first place, the acreage of the island known as Piers island, which is now a penitentiary, is 254 acres, about 40 acres of which is cleared. Negotiations are under way for the lease of the island by the government. No money has been paid to the owners; they are asking $3,600 per annum and the department has offered $420. The matter is before the exchequer court by way of expropriation proceedings for lease, not for purchase, and I anticipate that the case will be heard some time next June, because the president of the exchequer court is at that time proceeding to British Columbia to hear the cases from that province and we shall endeavour to have this one ready for hearing then.

The expenditure on buildings and wharves to date is: for material, $29,769; for labour, $24,000; for pump, engine, lumber, etc., $3,807. The number of convicts confined on the island on the first day of March was: males, 295; females, 279.

The fifth inquiry that I received would be answered as follows: All employees on Piers island are appointees of the civil service commission. Piers Island penitentiary is administered by the warden and staff of the British Columbia penitentiary, officials being transferred for temporary employment on Piers island. This has necessitated the employment of an extra number of temporary police guards; one physician, part time, $1,500 per annum; one male hospital nurse and five matrons have also been temporarily employed.

A question has, I believe, reached the newspapers in regard to the purchase of toilet articles and I might give the information I have received to date in regard to that. In the purchase of toilet sets cognizance was taken of the fact that such articles were for temporary use only and therefore bowls and tanks suitable for removal and installation in one of the penitentiaries were purchased. The cost of the former was $6.82 each, and of the latter, $11.89 each, delivered at Piers island. Sixty-four sets were purchased and delivered. All fixtures, lumber, pump, engine will be removed to one of the penitentiaries when Piers island is abandoned as a penitentiary.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We shall not own the property there?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, we propose only to lease the island and there is a wide difference between the government and the owners of the island as to the value of the rental. There was a negotiation for the purchase of the island, but the price was so high that we did not consider it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The inmates there are Doukhobors?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes; there are two prison camps, one for males and one for females.

Mr. POWER: Is there anyone there to dress them?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not know about that. I have not been out there.

Mr. MUNN: What is the total expenditure to date?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The total expenditure is $29,769 in one case and $24,000 in the other; that is, about $53,000.

Mr. NEILL: How many employees are there?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Forty males and eleven females.

Mr. VENIOT: How many convicts who took part in the riot at Dorchester are being tried under preliminary examination?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Six.

Mr. VENIOT: The newspapers report a far larger number.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, six.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is there a tariff of fees for lawyers who represent the Department of Justice before the courts—for instance, in cases under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act?

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is no fixed tariff. All bills that come from the Department of Pensions and National Health in its enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act are taxed by the officers of the department. I think I am right in saying that, under that particular act, perhaps higher legal fees are allowed than in ordinary prosecutions before magistrates and the like. The cases are looked upon as more serious, and experience shows that in such cases the accused are equipped as a general rule with excellent legal assistance.

Mr. DUPUIS: Can the minister give us what was spent in legal fees during the past year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I cannot give them offhand; they do not arise under this vote.

Mr. DUPUIS: I understand we are on item 190.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, this is No. 43, the penitentiary vote.

Mr. NEILL: What is the responsibility of the Department of Justice in relation to Doukhobor children? There is a good deal of misunderstanding in this respect in British Columbia, where the idea prevails that this department is responsible.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. The responsibility in regard to the care of children of those confined in our prisons rests entirely on the provinces and municipalities; that is the law that pertains throughout Canada. The situation is a little more acute in British Columbia owing to the number of children to be taken care of there, and the province is paying for the maintenance of the children.

Mr. NEILL: Is the minister's department not paying something in view of the fact that the government is supposed to be responsible for the introduction of the Doukhobors?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I believe that an arrangement has been made with the government of British Columbia that, in regard to children born after the mother has become an inmate, the care and maintenance shall be taken care of by the department.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Health of animals, administration of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and the Meat and Canned Foods Act, $1,817,991.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): Has there been any change of policy in regard to the payment of compensation in tuberculosis free areas?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): The regulations have not changed in that respect.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): Is the provincial government required to pay compensation?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): Do they pay anything towards the administration of the act?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The transportation of officials.

Mr. REID: Does the Dominion government bear the total cost of tuberculosis inspection throughout British Columbia—transportation of inspectors?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the restricted area work the provinces pay the transportation, and we pay the salaries of the officials and the compensation for animals that are condemned.

Mr. DONNELLY: Have any new restricted areas been established?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, not for this year.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): There has been no extension of restricted areas?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No; there are no new restricted areas.

Mr. GERSHAW: In case of epidemic among horses or cattle what do the officers of the department do in the way of investigation and the recommendation of treatment?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In the case of an infectious disease, if the farmer or the owner of the stock will get in touch with the district inspector for the province he will be given full advice and the matter will be investigated by the federal officials.

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): Could the hon. Minister inform the House whether the tuberculin test of cattle comes under item No. 56?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in 1929, the Department of Agriculture undertook the tuberculin test of cattle in the county of Drummond. The officers of the department were carrying out this test in the parishes of South Durham and "L'Avenir", when, in the autumn of 1930, they were recalled, we understand, so as to be sent to another county. Since that date, I wrote on various occasions to the Department of Agriculture, at Ottawa; nevertheless, the work begun, in 1929, was continuously postponed. I am sure that the hon. Minister of Agriculture will understand that it is most important to the farmers of these parishes that the test which was begun should be continued without interruption. I wish to specially refer, in this connection, to the parish of "L'Avenir" in the county of Drummond. I would request the hon. Minister of Agriculture to kindly give orders that the tuberculin test begun in 1929 and 1930, be resumed.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that no work has yet been done in Drummond county. However I shall be happy to look into the matter raised by the hon. member and write him personally in connection therewith.

Mr. DUPUIS: What amount of indemnity is paid for each head to be destroyed?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): For grades the maximum is $40 and for pure breds $100.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Shall the resolution carry?

[Mr. R. Weir.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. When this vote was under consideration a few days ago there was considerable discussion about the proposed merging of the live stock branch with the health of animals branch. The minister's explanation left upon the minds of some hon. members the impression there was nothing in the rumor, while on the minds of the rest of us it left the impression that there was something in it. I should like him to elucidate a little more and let us know his position. If he does not mean to merge the two branches he has done himself a great injustice by not being more explicit, and if he does mean to merge them nothing could be gained by concealing the fact.

While I am on my feet I should like to point out that these two branches were at one time under the control of the late Doctor Rutherford, a very prominent veterinarian, at one time chief veterinary inspector and later veterinary director general. I remember quite well that although the two branches were merged under him he came to the conclusion that they should not be merged. However, he was head of both branches, and his position made it possible for him to be fairly just to both. The positions he had occupied enabled him to pay particular attention to the health of animals end of his new duties. He expressed the opinion that they should be separated, with the result that his successor, the late Doctor Torrance, in the year 1912 or 1913 did carry out the separation. The late John Bright then became live stock commissioner, and the two branches have been working smoothly ever since. I take the ground that after twenty years of separation the minister should have some valid reason for suggesting a merger.

When the matter was under discussion before I gave some reasons why they should not be merged. Will the minister tell us whether he is or is not going to merge these branches, so that the discussion may be terminated. If it is his intention to merge them all I can do is to admonish him that in the light of past history, and in view of the splendid work the branches have been doing he should not merge them, because in fact they are quite separate and distinct in their character and viewpoint.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If hon. members who were in attendance at the last meeting of the committee had read what I said on that occasion I do not believe there would be any doubts remaining in their minds. If, after full consideration—

Mr. BROWN: "If" after.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): —with the heads of both branches, and their officials, it is felt that it will be in the interests of the live stock industry, and more economical, without any loss in efficiency of any kind, there will be a certain amount of amalgamation. At the last committee meeting some hon. members expressed the opinion that any change would be injurious. I cannot make a more definite general statement than that. I further said however that there would be no laymen put in positions where scientists should be doing the work. I cannot make my position clearer in a general statement and would like to be specific. We will say that in the city of Calgary we have hog graders and live stock marketing agents under the live stock branch. We have under the health of animals branch a stock car inspector. If these two branches can agree that in addition to his regular work one of the hog graders can do stock car inspection, I think there would be some gain, no harm done and no decrease in the efficiency in either branches. That is a specific case.

The qualifications for a stock car inspector are certainly no higher than, possibly not as high as, those of a man in charge of a stockyard. Such an arrangement would to a certain extent reduce the office staff as well as the personnel doing the actual work. I have made the general statement that no laymen will be put in positions where scientific men are required. But where the heads and officials of these branches after full discussion agree that any change or merging could take place which would not decrease efficiency and would reduce costs, it will be done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, that would seem to be—I say, "seem to be"—quite satisfactory. However when we analyze the minister's statement we find there is not much in it, and the illustration which was intended to show a saving of expenditures was not very convincing. As I understood it, the hypothetical case was that there was no reason why a hog grader at Calgary should not do stock car inspection. Of course not. Hog grading, although to some extent technical, could not be classed as a highly technical position. Anybody who could grade hogs could very soon learn to inspect cars. Further than that, car inspection is frequently only a part time job. Although in a sense it may be important work, it is very often performed by men holding other positions—at least that used to be the case.

Then we have the minister's further statement that laymen will not be put in the position of doing the work of scientists. When the item was under discussion before, the minister pointed out that the office of the veterinary director general for the last twelve years had been under the supervision of two laymen, namely the minister and the deputy. Again, the minister's attitude is not very satisfactory. Perhaps I am too hard to please, but I believe this is an important matter. The health of our farm animals is the pride of Canada. I am sure that during the Imperial Economic conference the minister must have felt some degree of pride surging within his own veins when he could show the excellent health standing of our farm animals under the supervision of the veterinary director general. And might I come to a little closer grips with my hon. friend, indicating how these two branches sometimes differ, though not frequently but fundamentally, in their views of certain questions. For instance, some six or eight years ago and for some years prior to that there was connected with the experimental farm for experimental purposes what we called a "Bang" herd farm; that is a number of tubercular cattle were segregated on one farm and were used as breeding animals under what is called the "Bang" system. That is they were valuable animals for breeding purposes, they were tubercular, and it was desired to get some heifer calves from them, and by taking the calves from the cows immediately when dropped and pasteurizing the milk, it was thought that they could raise the young stock in safety without transmitting the tuberculosis. That was a matter that had been in dispute among live stock men and veterinarians for years and years, and the purpose was to demonstrate whether or not it could be done. It was done for a number of years with safety and success on a farm not far from Ottawa under the supervision of the experimental farm. But at various points, particularly at one central point, outbreaks that could not be accounted for occurred at intervals. The attitude of the live stock husbandman at that time was that it was perfectly safe to conduct that kind of experiment, that there was no danger of transmitting tuberculosis to adjoining herds or other herds by using those animals male or female for breeding purposes. But the veterinary director general took the opposite stand, that it involved too much risk, and he advised strongly that the "Bang" herd be discontinued. Now which point of view should prevail? Running the risk of associating with and continuing the "Bang" herd because there had been no outbreak for a while, or taking the advice of the veterinary director general and playing safe by cutting out the "Bang" herd experiment? At that time we took the advice of the veterinary director general rather than that of the live stock husbandman. Which attitude would my hon. friend have taken? And who would decide such questions under a merger? I am a layman and the minister is a layman as far as veterinary science is concerned. That is the reason I think those two branches should be kept separate. Both points of view are held conscientiously, but with such dissimilar viewpoints they are bound to differ at important points of contact.

Mr. REID: The other evening the minister was good enough to say that it was going to be the policy of his department to encourage the private veterinary practitioner. I wonder if he would be good enough to state how that policy will be carried out and who will have the hiring of these private practitioners?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is first an examination under the veterinary director general. Private practitioners who pass this examination will be given an opportunity to do certain work that is now done by health of animals officials. For instance if they are suitably located, they might be given the work of testing more municipal or supervised herds. They would be paid for that out of this vote under the present arrangement, at a cost not exceeding what the cost has been during the last number of years when done by our own officials. There might be other work, such as taking blood for blood tests. The provincial governments are also in sympathy with this proposal and believe that they can turn some work towards the private practitioners.

Mr. FERLAND: I observe that this item 56, health of animals, is decreased by more than a quarter of a million dollars as compared with last year's estimates. May I ask the minister if the animals are partially cured of the disease or if it is only for reasons of economy that he is making this decrease?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This was explained the last night the committee was in session. There are so many retests due that it is impossible for us with our present staff to do the retesting work and also undertake any considerable amount of new work. It is the new work that involves the large cost, owing to payment of compensation. So we feel that we have enough work to carry on with retesting, for which the cost is very small in comparison with the costs of the initial tests. Therefore we can carry on with the smaller amount.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. GIROUARD: How many inspectors are there for tuberculosis in Quebec?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They keep changing from time to time as they are taken from one province to undertake work in another province. At present I am informed there are from twenty-five to thirty in Quebec.

Mr. GIROUARD: Have they an office in Montreal?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister has chosen not to answer my last question. I assure the minister however, that it is not a hypothetical case at all, it is an actual condition of affairs that occurs and will continue to crop up. I hope the minister will be able to answer the next question, I think perhaps it will be easier and should be given a specific answer. My information is from newspaper reports, which while not always right generally have some element of truth in them; sometimes they are entirely true. This one I hope is entirely false. It is a report that comes from the west, that the live stock men assembled at Calgary recently expressed the opinion, by resolution or otherwise, that the quarantine of fifteen days at Levis, just across the river from Quebec, should be discontinued; that animals imported from Great Britain, after the precautions taken on the other side, are sufficiently safeguarded without quarantining them in Levis. I hope that is wrong, I hope there is no truth in it whatever. When it was my privilege to have charge of this work the period of quarantine used to be thirty days, if it is now fifteen I should like to know how and when that came about.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The quarantine at Levis is to be continued. There is this change, that where animals are quarantined in London for two weeks the quarantine in Levis will be only for two weeks. It differs in that respect from what it was before the Imperial conference. The change has not only been recommended by our own officials but agreed to also by the American officials, so that it will not interfere in any way with their regulations in connection with our live stock.

With reference to the first question, my hon. friend would not think I would be so discourteous as not to answer or attempt to answer his question; I did not think he really asked a question. If there was any question it was this: In case a decision had to be made with reference to isolation or precautions against diseases what would be the correct procedure? I would say that there could be but one answer, that the decision of those qualified to do that work, the veterinary scientists, should prevail.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear, that is very good. Then there is no talk at all about dispensing with the quarantine at Levis? And the reduction from thirty days to fifteen is compensated for by the other fifteen days quarantine taking place in London, England?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Right.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just another point and I am through. In the vicinity of Ottawa, on the Ontario side of the river a restricted area was established back in 1928, I think it was. It was quite large; it formed a triangle between the Ottawa and St. Lawrence rivers and the Rideau canal. Some spots were badly saturated with tuberculosis, and as often happens there were some objections raised to the test being applied. I wonder how the minister is getting along in that area. It is nice to be able to assure our international and other visitors that we have not only a beautiful capital city but also healthful surroundings from which they can get their meat, poultry, milk and other products without the possibility of any contamination from this or other diseases.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The work is almost completed. This was set aside as a restricted area before the last election, when it became pretty much of a political question. For that reason I think it was felt advisable—and I quite agree—to drop the work until the controversy was over. After the election it continued to be very much of a political question. I think one day I saw a delegation of seventy-five people who insisted that the test should not be carried on, and they were headed by one of the successful candidates at the election. I think the next day I saw a delegation of more than eighty people, headed by the other successful candidate, who took the opposite view. I think I recognized quite a number of the same faces in both delegations, and there were similar names on the different petitions submitted to the department. However, we were successful in handling the situation with the least possible friction, though feeling was very high. We are glad to say that now the whole area has been cleaned up with the exception of parts of Leeds and Grenville counties, and that work will be completed shortly. It is to be among the first work undertaken.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend was successful he says in handling the question by dropping it, and losing most of the money that had been spent in that area. These sources of infection were bad, naturally they will contaminate the adjoining areas. Thus it will be only a matter of time until the whole area is re-contaminated unless these spots are cleared up. I think this is most lamentable.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think the hon. member can have heard me.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know I have not my hearing apparatus with me, because the batteries are low, but I can hear fairly well without it.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The work has been completed with the exception of a very small area in Leeds and Grenville counties. The work proceeded; it was not dropped, and I believe it has been carried on to the satisfaction of every person, which at one time seemed absolutely impossible.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The less work there remains to do then the more justification there is for doing it so far as cost is concerned. There must be ten constituencies in that area, and of those apparently two are reneging. There will always be two parties to this question, some for and some against the test and in all probability some of those are beef areas rather than dairy districts.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are not two parties in the area left, and there has been no reneging. We have not completed the work yet, but it will be among the first work to be done after this vote is passed. There was not sufficient money last year due to the much higher percentage of reactors than was expected. The work was dropped about one week before the end of the fiscal year, and there is only a very small area remaining.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps my hon. friend can tell us when that work was begun. I object to the suggestion that this was a political question before the last election; it was not. If it became such later that was under my hon. friend's administration. I took the ground then, as I had taken it previously, that when either a provincial or federal election came on, this class of work should be discontinued temporarily, because it is rather delicate work and is liable to cause ructions in the heat of an election contest. We did not stop it because it had become a political question but because of our previous experience in the maritimes during an election which was held a year earlier than we expected. The Nova Scotia elections came on right in the middle of the work; I happened to be overseas that year, and when I got home there was the dickens to pay. We continued the work during the election and finally completed it quite satisfactorily, but only after a good deal of heart burning. The newspapers took sides; one blamed the Dominion government and the other blamed the provincial government, and I made up my mind that rather than go through that unfortunate experience again during any subsequent election we would cease work in the east till the election was over where there was likely to be friction. At that same time we continued the work in the west, where there was no friction. Out there on the prairies they are so strong for this bovine T. B. work that even in the middle of an election contest no one could make it an election issue.

That was what we did in 1930, so I think my hon. friend will have to examine the facts a little more carefully. This work around Ottawa must have been started either in 1928 or 1929, so this is either the fifth or sixth year since. All the time these remaining infected sore spots are festering. If you had only two festering sores on your hand they might easily affect your whole body in five years, so with all the earnestness at my command I would urge the minister to complete this work. Some of his colleagues are medical men; they know the importance of this work. I am sure they will give their colleague enough money to go ahead and complete it and other subsequent areas in less than five years. The responsibility does not rest entirely on the minister for this parsimony; he admits that he had to suspend operations for want of money, yet he has been telling us all along that there has been no material lessening of the agricultural work because of the reduction in the estimates. In almost every vote we come across work that has been neglected because there is not sufficient money. That is the fault of the minister's colleagues. I know the staff well enough to be sure that the estimates go up to my hon. friend large enough and I know human nature well enough to be sure that he passes them on to the council, so it must be his colleagues who reduce them. I appeal to both the minister's medical colleagues present and who know the close connection between human and bovine tuberculosis; if ever money was well spent it is the money devoted to the elimination of tuberculosis among our cattle, especially pure bred cattle.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I accept my hon. friend's explanation with regard to the test. What I had to say was in no way critical; I felt that if this had become a matter of politics this action was advisable, and had I been in my hon. friend's place I would have dropped the work also. Certainly the work was started and with no particular reason being given it was stopped, so the officials of the department felt it was stopped for that reason.

With regard to the question of money I gave a clear explanation. The vote recommended by the officials of the department was not sufficient to carry on the work. They could not foresee that the percentage loss would be anything like as high as it was in certain areas. There never had been such a loss, running up to even forty per cent.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was not in this area; that was in Quebec, was it not?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes. More money was required than was required in Quebec. An additional vote was included in the supplementary estimates and it was felt that this would furnish sufficient money to carry on this work. We did not want to carry over charges from this to the next fiscal year but the percentage of reactors was much greater than had been anticipated by the officials, and it was found necessary to stop the work for the last week.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the minister erred by having too many irons in the fire. I suppose the pressure from Quebec was stronger than that from the Ontario end. I feel sure the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) will appreciate the importance of this matter. I have a lot of sympathy for the minister because I know both the importance and worries of this work. If the provincial Conservatives and the federal Liberals get criss-crossing and scrapping locally not even the angel Gabriel could carry on the work satisfactorily. The Minister of Public Works resides in a splendid dairying area and I am sure he would give the right-of-way to a vote to clean up these two festering spots in the area in which he resides as quickly as possible. The committee may not understand why I am so interested in this matter. I thought it to be a good thing when it was established and I enjoyed the Hon. John Martin's complete cooperation in everything that was done, and I think similar cooperation could be obtained even at this late date. If this matter could be cleaned up it would be a credit to the minister, to his department and inure to the safety of the cattle and human population therein.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am afraid the hon. member is in error through not knowing just what we did. He has suggested that we concentrated upon Quebec but the fact is that the work was divided fairly and equally between the two provinces and carried on simultaneously. Unforeseen circumstances arose for which no one could be blamed and it was found that there was not sufficient money to complete the work in a small area in Leeds and in part of Grenville.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Was not the Quebec area taken on after that?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was taken on at the same time.

Mr. DUPUIS: I understood the minister to say that the work in Quebec was found to be more expensive than that carried on in Ontario.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think I said that. We have run into high percentages of reactors in Quebec.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That runs away with the money.

Mr. DUPUIS: What amount has been spent in Ontario and in Quebec?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I shall be glad to send the hon. member that information. I am told that the percentage of reactors in one part of Ontario was over thirty per cent.

Mr. DUPUIS: How many areas are there in Quebec and how many still have to be covered?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are still some areas in Quebec to be covered.

Mr. DUPUIS: What are those?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Part of Saguenay, which has to be covered for the first test; L'Assomption, for the first test; St. Hyacinthe; Bagot; Drummond, west of the St. Francis river; Yamaska west of St. Francis river; Richelieu, east of the Richelieu river and Terrebonne. I believe more money has been spent in Quebec than in Ontario.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is that because there were more reactors?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes and more cattle tested.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is the minister aware of any instances where stock dealers went to cities like Toronto to buy stock that had been condemned to bring into Quebec to be sold as sound stock?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am informed that that has not been done. It was felt that it would be attempted and notice was given that the department would take steps against such a practice.

Mr. DUPUIS: I understand that the inspectors are veterinary surgeons. Could the minister tell me how many inspectors now working in the province of Quebec are natives of that province? As I understand the minister, several inspectors have been taken from other provinces.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are inspectors now working in the province of Quebec who will be sent to other districts when their work is completed, and the same thing will apply to Ontario. I think I know what the hon. member has in mind, and it was one of the first matters I took up with the veterinary director general upon taking over this portfolio. I can understand the difficulty when an English speaking veterinarian goes into a French speaking farmer's stable to carry on tests. He may be unable to explain the test and invariably it is the best cattle that are affected. The high producers are weakened and are more susceptible but the veterinarian may be unable to explain just what is happening. He may be also unable to explain the precautions which should be taken. I was told that there were insufficient fully qualified French speaking veterinarians available to carry on this work and I got in touch with the principals of the veterinary colleges in Quebec and emphasized the importance of this work. Those of us who do not understand the French language would be upset if an inspector speaking only French came to test our herds. The farmers in Quebec must be commended for the patience they have displayed in allowing this work to be carried on. They offered practically no obstruction and we are making every effort to increase the number of French speaking inspectors for work in French districts.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister will not get on with this work very rapidly with the vote reduced by $250,000 this year and $300,000 last year. I do not wish to be put in the position of advocating that the work in Quebec should be discontinued while that in Ontario should be carried on, but I know that this particular work in Ontario was started before that in Quebec. If, however, the two cannot be done simultaneously, then either first finish the one that has been started first, or else increase the vote substantially so that both can be carried on simultaneously.

Mr. GIROUARD: Is it the intention of the minister this year to cover the area where the test has been started?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: Some little time ago I took up with the minister on behalf of the poultry raisers in British Columbia the question of supplying free chickenpox serum to poultry farmers who do their own inoculating. Has the minister had time to go into the question and has he been able to come to any conclusion?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My information is that we do not wish to give a vaccine containing live organisms to laymen poultrymen or workers.

Mr. REID: Under this vote I wonder if the minister could tell me what inspection is done under the Meat and Canned Foods Act?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The inspection is chiefly in abattoirs and also in connection with export trade.

Mr. REID: What I have in mind is that there was a firm in British Columbia which was buying horses, slaughtering and canning them. I understand much of that product was shipped to France and quite a quantity of it was distributed to fox breeders. Was any of that inspected by our inspectors?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It was inspected.

Mr. FERLAND: I understand the district of Terrebonne has been named in the new areas or zones to be covered during the coming year. Could the minister include with the district of Terrebonne the electoral district which, if I understand aright, will be the new Joliette-Montcalm?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is no application, and I cannot say anything about the electoral district.

Mr. PARENT: Does the minister intend to continue the work of tuberculosis inspection in the district of Terrebonne? The inspection ceased about a year ago.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): It is a new area and, as such, it will not be started this year unless we make better progress than at the present time is expected.

Mr. SEGUIN: I thank the minister for what he has done in the county of L'Assomption, but I would like to know from him whether the testing of cattle will be continued this year.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. GIROUARD: The minister has just stated that there are a few French Canadian inspectors in Quebec. In order that he may make more progress, would he not consider that in certain areas the veterinary surgeons could do the work where the inspectors could not come?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The system of selection is that an examination will be set under the supervision of the veterinary director general and any veterinarian of any province can write on that examination. If he passes it, he is eligible to be taken on the list.

Item agreed to.

Farm economics, including agricultural co-operative marketing, $15,190.

Mr. LUCAS: I am glad to see a small increase in this vote, but it is altogether too small for the work to be carried out. When one looks over the list of the agricultural estimates, one finds live stock, $1,430,000; experimental farms, $1,642,000; health of animals, $1,817,000, and all these votes are for the purpose of showing how to produce more and, of course, a better qualtiy. As regards this, I have no criticism to offer. After all, however, what is the use of producing these commodities if we cannot market them properly? This practically new branch, which was started a few years ago under the title of farm economics, including agricultural cooperative marketing, is one of those branches that should be pushed very rapidly to the front. I believe we have a splendid nucleus of a staff in that branch, and while I do not advocate the cutting down of the agricultural vote in its entirety, yet I think it could be so re-arranged that a greater proportion of the expenditure could be placed under this vote.

A few nights ago the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) referred to the disparity between the price which the farmer was receiving for lamb and that which the consumer had to pay for it. At the present time we have in a committee of the house an investigation proceeding in regard to the spread in milk prices. If this branch were properly organized and sufficient money devoted to it, we should have a branch of government that would have its inspectors throughout the country keeping in close touch with this very idea of seeing what the farmer was getting for his product and whether advantage is being taken of him or not. In that way, when these questions came up in the house, this branch would be able to furnish full information. Further, it should make a greater effort to develop cooperative marketing of our products, because there is very little use of the farmer working to produce these commodities unless he gets a fair return for them. We find the consumer is paying too high a price and the producer is not getting the benefit. I would impress upon the minister that he seriously consider the question of increasing this vote very materially, especially for another year.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to support the attitude of the hon. member for Camrose that a larger amount be spent on this particular branch. The sum at present allowed is altogether too small. Can the minister give us some information as to the work this branch has done with the limited amount of money at its disposal?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This branch, of course, collects information directly from the farmers and cooperates with the other branches; it also works in cooperation with the provincial departments of agriculture and in that way it saves the expense of a large staff to do that part of the work other than interpreting and analysing the figures. Some of the work undertaken last year was a cheese factory study including merchandising costs. Cheese factories to the number of 250 have submitted statements as requested and given full information of the cost of operating for one business year. There has also been an investigation into the cost and other factors of milk production in the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec, that is, the relation between volume of business and cost of operation. That analysis is complete and the report will soon be ready for publication. They have also carried out careful work for three years in connection with ranching costs and have received reports from a number of leading ranchers. A comparison of percentages has been made with relation to costs and weight of lambs. They have also finished an investigation comparing costs as between tractors and horses in western Canada, reports having been received from one thousand farms.

Mr. SPENCER: What power have the officials of the department in seeking information from various people? Can they compel people to give them the information they require?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They have not this power and the commissioner does not wish it. He thinks he can perform better service by getting voluntary cooperation, and he feels that there is no reason for changing his attitude.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Last year when this item was under consideration the minister made a statement with regard to a proposed marketing board. He was interrogated on several occasions by some of my colleagues and asked to state his policy with respect to agriculture. On two occasions he intimated that it was the intention of the government to establish a marketing board, and he said he had support from different parts of the house, from members of all parties. I believe he said it was the intention of the government to establish this board after the Imperial conference. What has been done in the matter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We did endeavour to form a commission to investigate the whole subject of marketing and to report thereon. We felt that we should get the very ablest men in the dominion and we approached a number of individuals who realized the importance of the subject but who, owing to the financial stress through which we are passing, felt that they could not very well leave their own work. In the meantime the various marketing officials of the department have been gathering all the information they can and making a closer study of the whole question.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I take it from what the minister says that it has not been abandoned.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Item agreed to.

Assistance to fairs and exhibitions, including the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair, $395,000.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is it the purpose of the minister to continue grants to fairs as before?

Mr. McINTOSH: How many regional fairs will there be in Saskatchewan?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That depends on the agricultural societies themselves. I can answer the hon. member definitely by saying that North Battleford is to be one of the regional fairs.

Mr. McINTOSH: And Prince Albert will remain?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: Will Melfort be a regional fair?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about the provincial fairs of Saskatoon and Regina? Will they remain provincial or regional?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not regional.

Mr. McINTOSH: What will be the grant for Regina and Saskatoon?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Up to $2,500 to the summer fairs.

Mr. McINTOSH: And the regional fairs will get $2,000?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): They will get $1,500 and if they conform with the regulations for regional fairs they will get $500 extra.

Mr. VALLANCE: How many fairs will there be in Saskatchewan?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We do not know until the agricultural societies decide whether they will hold fairs or not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I guess it isn't my hearing that is amiss; it must be my brains, as I have never been able to understand this regional fairs business. The minister told us when this question was up before that there would be nine fairs in Saskatchewan that could be eligible for regional fairs. I might have heard him wrong. There used to be seven. Are there nine B fairs in Saskatchewan, or does that include two A fairs and seven B fairs?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Seven B fairs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: So that there are seven that are eligible and two that are non-eligible. Has the minister worked out the regulations in such a form that we can get them into our heads? What are the regulations under which any fair becomes a regional fair? Just what have they to comply with before they are completely eligible to earn the extra $500? Are the regulations out?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The regulations are out, and have been sent to all fairs that have been recognized in the past.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I suppose we can obtain copies of the regulations.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about a fair that is neither provincial nor regional? Will that class of fair get any grant whatsoever?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not from the federal government.

Mr. GIROUARD: Does the department make any grant in Quebec to fairs and exhibitions held outside Quebec, Sherbrooke and Three Rivers?

[Mr. R. Weir.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There are spring and winter fairs at Lachute, Ormstown and Sherbrooke. The A fairs are Sherbrooke, Quebec, Three Rivers, Valleyfield. The other fairs are Waterloo, St. Scholastique, St. Hyacinthe, Ayer's Cliff and Brome.

Sir EUGENE FISET: There is no grant given to county fairs?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. DUPUIS: Were grants given before this year to county fairs?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What was the experience of the department in connection with the experiment which was held in Red Deer last year and in other places as well? Was it looked upon as successful?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The experiment was carried on for two years, and the results, as indicated by people who had been in close touch with the experiment, were such that this year we have evolved a policy whereby we shall extend the regional grant.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: So that fairs which previously have received a grant will be eligible now for regional fairs.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes, provided they have qualified.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the word regional imply that within a certain radius or region only, will exhibitors be permitted to show exhibits at that fair? For instance, Melfort and Prince Albert: these are regional fairs. Is it the assumption that within a certain radius of either of these fairs, and only within that radius, will exhibitors be eligible to show exhibits and compete at that fair?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The area is left in the hands of the agricultural society of, we will say, Prince Albert. They can go as far east or west as they wish, but no exhibitor can show at more than two fairs in regional competitions. The idea is to keep down the professional exhibitor.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Could the minister put on record the list of class B fairs in Saskatchewan, and particularly those which have made application to become regional fairs?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Lloydminster, Melfort, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Weyburn, Yorkton and Estevan.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): Would the minister give the names of the fairs in Manitoba which have made application?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Carman, Dauphin and Portage la Prairie,

Mr. DONNELLY: Is the fair at Assiniboia not called a class B fair?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, they cannot qualify. They come under the list known as the B-2 circuit. Kindersley and a number of others are in the same class.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister give a list of the class B fairs in Alberta?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Lethbridge, Red Deer, Vegreville, Vermilion and Camrose.

Mr. DONNELLY: Does the minister mean to say that the fairs which come under the B-2 circuit will receive no assistance from the government this year? Why is it thought advisable to cut them out this year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): When the B-2 circuit was formed, I believe it was understood, so far as the Department of Agriculture was concerned, that no commitment had been made that a grant would be given. However many people connected with the smaller fairs were under the impression that because they were called B circuit fairs grants would be given. In the first year one or two fairs were given grants. Others had gone to a certain expense, but received no grants. So, in the following year—1931 I believe it was—on account of representations made we decided it was only fair that for one year we should give a grant to the other B-2 fairs, on the strict understanding that it would not be continued.

Mr. VALLANCE: I believe the minister mentioned that Carman, Manitoba, came under the regional fairs. My understanding was that Carman was a B-2 fair.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I am glad that point has been brought to my attention. New fairs were brought in to make two circuits, namely, the B-1 and B-2 circuits. So that there would be the least possible travelling, some of the new fairs were included in the B-1 circuit, which was really the old B circuit. I understand Carman originally had been a B fair.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister has stated that the class A or provincial fairs, two of which are held in the province of Saskatchewan, secure a grant of $2,500. The class B or regional fairs receive only $2,000. What is the outstanding differentiating factor between these two fairs? In other words, why should Regina and Saskatoon get $500 more than larger fairs such as Weyburn, Yorkton, North Battleford and Prince Albert?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I agree with the hon. member for North Battleford that perhaps in many respects the most important fairs are the smaller ones. That is why we have increased the grants to the smaller fairs and decreased those given to the larger fairs.

Mr. McINTOSH: I thank the minister for his answer, and must add that I believe he is on solid ground. For practically five or six years I have accepted the principle he has stated, and believe it should be worked out to the full. However there is still $500 difference. I am asking why there should be that difference. Is the minister aiming gradually at eliminating even that $500?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There is no intention at the present time to eliminate it.

Mr. DONNELLY: How many class B fairs were there in Saskatchewan which received grants? Would the minister give the names of the fairs in that province which will not be given grants this year?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Of the so-called B fairs?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We have not yet received all of the returns, but my understanding is that none of them will be cut out in Saskatchewan.

Mr. DONNELLY: Only a minute ago the minister mentioned Assiniboia as being one to be cut out.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Assiniboia is one of the new fairs which came in with the formation of the two circuits. Each of them receives a grant for one year.

Mr. DONNELLY: How many are there in the same class as Assiniboia?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): From memory I would say there are Kindersley, Kerrobert, Assiniboia and Rosetown.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is Assiniboia not getting a grant now?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No.

Mr. GERSHAW: Nearly $400,000 is to be voted for these fairs. Would the minister give us a brief explanation of what they accomplish? We notice that certain towns and cities in different parts of the country receive grants while other areas receive no benefits at all. Is it largely a matter of entertainment, or of improving live stock?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This money is given for prizes with the understanding that it will be used entirely in live stock and utility classes. It is not given for entertainment of any kind, but only to encourage competition in agricultural products.

Mr. McINTOSH: The minister said he admitted that generally speaking regional fairs were more important than class A fairs; yet we find they are receiving $500 less. I am not just clear as to why an extra grant of $500 should be given above and beyond the regional fair grant, if in fact the regional fairs are doing the ground work?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Those who compete at the regional fairs may also compete at the larger fairs. They are under greater expense to go to the larger fairs, and for that reason they should perhaps be encouraged by larger prizes. We know that the winners at smaller fairs go to the larger ones.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is the class B fairs a closed list, or are there qualifications or standards which must be equalled before a grant can be given? Is it still possible for fairs coming up to the qualifications or standards required, to get the grant?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): This year the list is closed because to a certain extent it is based on what has been paid out in prize moneys over a period of years. During the year however we will always be pleased to accept an application from any fair setting out what it is prepared to do and has done. If we believe we would be warranted in giving it consideration, we are free to do so.

Mr. DONNELLY: You have no standard, though?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Is there an arrangement with the provincial ministers concerning the fairs to which grants should be given from the federal treasury, or do we understand the minister does as he pleases in the matter or as hon. members please. I know he is anxious to cooperate as closely as possible with provincial authorities and I want to know if he has agreed on some policy.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The officials of my department got in touch with the officials of the provincial department at Quebec after Mr. Godbout and myself had discussed this whole question. We made our policy in Quebec conform to the regional policy that the provincial Department of Agriculture have developed.

Mr. BOUCHARD: But that does not exactly answer the question. Is there any possible way for, let us say, a county fair, to make direct application to the federal department for a grant when their exhibition is held?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Not for county fairs in any province.

Item agreed to.

Department of Agriculture—civil government: salaries, $736,326; contingencies, $98,600.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that went through the other night when the hon. gentleman was absent. The Minister of Railways filled in fifteen minutes and he put civil government through.

Mr. MANION: It was just the civil government of my own department.

Mr. COOTE: There is a matter of considerable importance to agriculture, and of interest to the minister and to the department I am sure, about which I have received considerable correspondence lately. It is in connection with the use of surplus grain in making industrial alcohol to be used with gasoline as motor spirit. An editorial in the Calgary Herald under date of February 24 says:

> According to a recent press report from Washington, the United States government will be asked to consider legislation providing that all gasoline sold shall contain one-fifth of denatured alcohol.
>
> This is of special interest to Canada. If similar legislation were enacted in this country it would mean that some 100,000,000 gallons of grain alcohol would be required to form a 20 per cent statutory content of our annual consumption of gasoline which in turn would call for some 50,000,000 bushels of wheat for alcohol distillation purposes.
> The manufacture of industrial alcohol proper is a business entirely divorced from that of the production of spirituous liquors both in equipment and practice, and all considerations of this subject should avoid the ordinary meanings of the terms "distilling" and "distillery." If the United States should enact the proposed legislation, the manufacture of industrial alcohol from grain would naturally form a part of the petroleum refining industry rather than of the brewing and distilling industries, for obvious reasons, and the same would be true in Canada.

I have a letter from a Mr. Faulkner in Calgary who has had some years' experience as a director of a large industrial alcohol plant in the United States. He says in part:

> Apart from the fact that alcohol necessary to supply Alberta's requirements for such a motor spirit would take some 3,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum, and give the farmer about $1,000,000 above present prices, there is the additional advantage of the refuse in the form of cattle feed, either in the wet form for immediate consumption or in the dry form for shipment. Also, that this industry is the largest consumer of coal of any industry outside of blast furnace operations.

. . . this industry is entirely divorced from the manufacture of liquor for human consumption. Differing in equipment and practice and in everything it has no identity with the ordinary distilling business in any form, if run solely for the purpose stated.

And in referring to the legislation which is now before congress at Washington he says:

If such legislation could be passed it would mean an increase of ten cents per bushel at least in the price of grain to the farmer and a big boost to the cattle and hog industries.

I took the trouble to write to the bureau of standards at Washington, D. C., and ask them if they had any bulletins dealing with the matter. In a bulletin which I received from them I find two or three paragraphs which show that this industrial alcohol can very well be used with gasoline to make a better motor spirit than gasoline itself. It says:

Blends of alcohol and gasoline containing less than 15 per cent of alcohol sometimes can be substituted for gasoline without readjustment of carburetors. These blends give leaner fuel-air mixtures than gasoline alone, hence if the carburetor is adjusted for an over-rich mixture, as is commonly the case, the alcohol blend substituted for gasoline may give equal fuel economy.

Alcohol is an anti-knock fuel and alcohol-gasoline blends knock less readily than the same gasoline without the alcohol, therefore they can be used in high-compression engines. The addition of fifteen per cent of alcohol to a gasoline will improve its knock rating about as much as the difference between the usual premium and non-premium gasolines, or about three cents worth at retail prices.

Ethyl alcohol can be made from grain, potatoes, molasses, or from various vegetable by-products. It can be made also from natural gas and from by-products of the distillation of petroleum or coal To produce one gallon of alcohol requires about twenty-five pounds of either grain or molasses, hence the cost per gallon of alcohol from these sources can hardly be less than the cost of twenty-five pounds of grain or molasses.

Mr. DUPUIS: I would ask the speaker what he is citing.

Mr. COOTE: I am reading from a bulletin put out by the bureau of standards at Washington, D.C., dealing with the use of alcohol as a motor fuel.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is this used for agricultural purposes?

Mr. COOTE: The industrial alcohol is made from surplus grain, that is why it should be of interest to this committee when we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

I have just one sentence to finish the quotation from the bulletin:

This permits a comparison between the cost of alcohol and gasoline.

If a gallon of alcohol can be made from twenty-five pounds of grain it is quite clear that the gallon of alcohol might easily be sold at less cost than a gallon of gasoline now brings in western Canada, considerably less.

Then it continues:

In certain countries the cost per gallon of gasoline considerably exceeds that of alcohol.

I think that is true in western Canada to-day.

Under such conditions the use of alcohol-gasoline blends for fuel purposes is economically justified provided the technical difficulties are satisfactorily met.

The reason I am bringing up this matter here is to ask the minister whether his department has made any investigation of the subject, and if so, what conclusions have been arrived at; and if no investigations have been made, whether the minister would not take it under consideration and have some of the officers or some branch of his department investigate the subject. It seems to me that there is evidence enough available to justify a thorough investigation. It might be that we could supply a percentage of the gasoline requirements, or the motor fuel requirements, from surplus grain rather than imported oil.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I believe this work is now undertaken by the National Research Council, but we will be very glad to look into it.

Mr. COOTE: Does the minister mean the National Research Council? I know that very often the national research bureau carry on investigations which extend over a very long period of time before we get any definite results, and if the minister has any way of speeding up this investigation I am sure it would be very much appreciated by a good many people in western Canada. I judge that from the correspondence I have received regarding the matter in the last couple of months. The fact that such a bill has been introduced at Washington has caused considerable interest in western Canada. I think that is a matter that should be pushed energetically, so that we may know if it is feasible. If it is we can proceed to make use of some of our surplus grain for motor fuel.

Mr. DONNELLY: I notice on page 68 of the estimates, under the heading of contingencies, an item for travelling expenses. In looking over the estimates for 1931 I find that we voted $90,000 under this heading, and the last year the amount voted was $79,500. This year I see all the government asks for is $6,000. What is the idea? Are they not going to do any travelling or were the votes in other years higher than usual?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The travelling expenses this year have been taken from this vote and included in the departmental votes. That was discussed when various items were being put through.

Mr. REID: I see an item here in connection with dominion apiarist. I wonder if the minister has given any consideration to the coordination of the work of the dominion apiarist with that of the provincial authorities. I believe I am correct when I say that those who keep bees in British Columbia do not get the benefit from the Agassiz experimental farm that they would obtain if the farm were in a more central location. The provincial government have inspectors who not only inspect apiaries but who also give demonstrations for the benefit of those keeping bees. I believe we are not getting the advantage we might get from the money spent in this work at the experimental farm. The provincial grant has been cut down for reasons of economy, and I think it must be very difficult for one inspector to cover the whole of the Fraser valley. I would suggest to the minister that whoever is in charge of the Agassiz farm should work in close cooperation with the provincial authorities in connection with inspections and demonstrations throughout the Fraser valley.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The dominion apiarist does work in very close cooperation with the provincial authorities; there is full cooperation in all work between the dominion and the provinces. For instance, I have instructed all the officials of my department in British Columbia that when the provincial minister of agriculture calls a meeting of technical men he is equally free to notify the federal men to attend. These conferences have been called in British Columbia, as in several other provinces, and the benefit derived is in the fact that they decide on what outstanding agricultural problems should be attacked. They also review what is already known, and if any other problem comes up they have the advantage of any knowledge that may be possessed by the federal experimental farms. They all work together as one body on any agricultural problem that may present itself.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): When this item was under consideration previously certain information was requested as to the details of expenditures made under the general vote of $400,000. Those details were tabled that day.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Would it be proper under this item to refer to the Riviere-Ouelle wharf?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, to any matter.

Mr. BOUCHARD: As the minister knows, I have written on different occasions with regard to this wharf. Two years ago a storm destroyed the middle portion, and this wharf is bound to disappear if repairs are not made immediately. I would urge upon the government the necessity of having this work done at once. I always receive very kind and courteous answers from the minister, but I think the time has arrived when there should be some action. There is a gap of about 35 feet between the two parts of the wharf; as a matter of fact the outer end is an island to-day. This wharf is very important; I think it is one of the few deep water wharves in the lower St. Lawrence. I believe the minister said it would cost something like $30,000 to make repairs at the present time, but if we wait a few more years it is impossible to say how much it may cost. I would like the minister to say if it is his intention to maintain this wharf, which is essential for the navigation of that part of the river and, if he is prepared to do some temporary repairs this year, when that work will be done.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As my hon. friend has said, he has made representations from time to time in connection with this wharf. There is no doubt that it does require repair, and it is just a question of whether or not we can find the necessary funds. It is rather a large amount, but I will have the matter reviewed to see if we can meet my hon. friend's request.

Mr. BOUCHARD. Does the minister realize that in another year or two this wharf will be completely destroyed? Has he any report from the engineers? I wish we could get a little more information. I am not an engineer, but I have observed the wharf quite closely. In its present condition it is not a credit to the government. The minister always has been very courteous; he has always answered my letters and given me some hope, but we cannot live on hope. In my locality there are many unemployed who would be glad to get this work. There is no deep water wharf between Rivière du Loup and Quebec, a distance of 125 miles, and in time of storm, or for other reasons, this wharf might be of great use. If it is not repaired within a year or two the government will have to spend three or four times the amount that would be required if something were done now. The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is aware of the condition. Many tourists arrive at this point and at times the boats used to chase bootleggers are forced to take refuge. It is necessary to use rubber boots or find other ways of going from one part of the wharf to the other. I wish the minister could see this wharf to judge for himself how necessary are the repairs. I am sure he would be convinced that something should be done. The minister has been given lots of time to consider this matter and I am sorry to see that the estimates do not provide for this work. I hope the minister can see his way clear to promise that fuller consideration will be given to this matter. The people in my district want more than faint hopes. With the engineers at his disposal, the minister should be fully acquainted with this matter. It will be all right if he desires to obtain further information but I think it is my duty to insist that this wharf be put in proper condition.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say that our reports are very complete and they indicate that it is desirable that repairs should be made to this wharf and that if they are not made, heavier expenditure will probably have to be made in the future. My hon. friend must realize that there is a very persistent and general as well as a sincere demand for a curtailment in expenditure. He knows that these expenditures are made from revenue and not from borrowings and that we have to meet the emergency of falling revenues. We are unable to make all the repairs which we recognize it would be to the advantage of all concerned to make. I cannot give my hon. friend a definite promise, and I am sure he does not expect one, that this expenditure will be made this year but I can promise him that we will review the situation and see if we cannot make some provision in the supplementary estimates. However, if the supplementaries are not larger in proportion than the main estimates, we may have to disappoint him.

Mr. POWER: When this item was being considered some time ago the attention of the committee was called to the item covering harbours and rivers generally. No new works are undertaken under this vote, it being for the maintenance of services. The vote this year totals $400,000 while the total vote for Quebec totals $720,000. Over half of the total vote is to be expended by the minister without consultation with parliament. When this matter was last before the committee, if I remember right, the minister stated that it had been the custom to vote fairly substantial amounts for harbours and rivers generally. The estimates for 1931-32 show that this vote totalled only $110,000; for the year 1930-31 it was $100,000 and for 1929-30, a preelection year, it was only $100,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And in a time of great prosperity.

Mr. POWER: And in a time of great prosperity. The amounts voted for harbours and rivers generally in those years were small when compared with the total vote. The government has got away from the control of parliament with the peace, order and good government and relief proposals, which covers relief to the fishermen of Newfoundland in the payment of their debts, and other matters, and it seems to me that in the case of public works it is going a little too far to ask that over half the total vote be left to the discretion of the minister. If the minister would bring before the committee all the details of this vote I have no doubt that some hon. members would be able to point out certain items which were not necessary. I think the procedure followed by the minister is wrong and is not in keeping with the traditions and customs of the department. It is altogether out of line to have more than half of the total expenditures for one province left entirely to the discretion of the minister and his officers. It would be much better and we probably would get through much faster if we just had a total vote for $720,000 without any details. We might just as well have that as only a few details and then a lump sum vote for $400,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In ordinary times there might be some force to the argument made by my hon. friend, but he must remember that these are not ordinary times. We are following a policy of reducing to the minimum the expenditure for public works and making provision only for repairs and maintenance. This vote is made elastic in order to meet any emergent conditions which might arise through storms or other causes. We have specified and asked for votes for certain items which were thought desirable and it is proposed that only the most urgent and necessary repairs will be made under this particular item. Very often it is found that storms produce conditions which require an immediate expenditure, and it is for this reason and this reason only that the vote is made in this way. The last time this vote was before the committee I gave the details of the expenditures during last year. I think my hon. friend will agree that those expenditures were pretty general. I assure him that there is not any desire to select works here or there or to prefer one particular district to another. Our aim has been to keep open the public services to the best possible advantage.

Mr. POWER: I would be the last man to accuse my hon. friend of having the idea of spending money only in certain selected localities. I know he would not do that, and I am quite sure none of the members from Quebec sitting behind him would ask him to do so. I know their altruism, their patriotism and their strong desire not to expend any money in their ridings; they wish to set an example of economy to the public. I suppose that would apply equally to money to be spent in Liberal ridings. They ask the Liberals also to set the example. I realize that we are going through a time of emergency, but perhaps the minister's estimates would be lower, he would be called upon to spend less money, if he gave an itemized account of the manner in which he proposed to spend it. In former years, when the vote was, as I have already stated, something like $100,000 for these unforeseen expenses, storms occurred; the wind blew just as much along the gulf of St. Lawrence and it was just as strong and the waves were just as high as they will be in 1933-34. At least I expect they will, and it was not considered necessary to lay aside for these repairs more than $100,000. It is true that under the present administration we may expect storms of all kinds, but surely Providence will save us from what I might call physical storms; it is bad enough to have the brainstorms which are sometimes inflicted upon the house, without our being troubled by wind and rain. Even though the minister has given his explanation in the best manner possible and without offence, arguing the case well, I suggest that his explanation is a lame one. There is no more reason why we should this year permit half the estimates to be spent at the discretion of the minister than there was any other year. If the minister really wants to economize, he will accept my suggestion—and I am doing this for the harbour and river work in my own province—that we cut this item by $200,000. I am making that suggestion with a sincere desire to cooperate.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would the minister tell the committee how much was spent last year out of this $413,800 general vote, and where?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The amount expended was $407,000 to March 15, and at the request of several hon. members I tabled a list of the works upon which this money had been expended. I can only supplement what I have said in reply to my hon. friend by telling him that this expenditure was very general. I find that out of the sixty-five constituencies in Quebec, expenditures were made in forty-two. That is a pretty general distribution of the amount. I can assure my hon. friend that we did not find $400,000 last year sufficient to meet the requirements of my hon. friends on that side and on this. My hon. friend has just been preceded by another hon. member who is asking for a considerable expenditure —I think he said about $30,000—on one wharf, and suggesting that in the meantime possibly a smaller expenditure of $10,000 might meet the situation. There are particularly on the lower St. Lawrence in Quebec, a number of wharves that are badly in need of repair, and if my hon. friend's suggestion were adopted that this vote, which we did not find adequate during the past year, be cut in two, we would only be increasing the grounds of complaint and the difficulty of meeting the suggestion of my other hon. friends opposite.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If we vote the whole amount, will the minister guarantee the repairs to the wharf of the hon. member for Kamouraska? I know the place very well—this used to be my constituency—and the wharf needs that work very badly.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say that the chances would be very much better of getting something done if the vote were not cut in two.

Mr. POULIOT: Would the minister be kind enough to table the engineer's report on wharf reconstruction at Isle Verte, $13,300, which item is included in this vote? Would he be agreeable to tabling the report to-morrow or some other day in order that hon. members may see it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot say offhand. This is one of the items mentioned in the estimates. I think my hon. friend will agree that sometimes engineers' reports are of a confidential character and possibly should not, in the public interest, be tabled. At this time I have no reason to believe there is any objection to tabling this report; I shall be pleased to go over it and if there is no objection in the public interest, I shall be glad to give my hon. friend a copy of it.

Mr. POULIOT: The Minister of Public Works speaks like a Norman; he gives very nice answers that can be taken both ways. He knows the house likes him, but I do not think we should be asked to vote $13,300 for Isle Verte without knowing the details. If the report of the engineer has satisfied the minister sufficiently to permit him to put that amount in the estimates, we have the same right as he has to pass our judgment on the matter. May I tell him now that I have been very useful to him in the house; I have brought up matters that have been of use to him; I have told him what has happened in my constituency. On February 7 I informed him what happened last year at Cacouna in regard to wharf repairs and he was kind enough to send an engineer to make an investigation. I hold in my hand reference No. 206, sessional paper 343, in which the engineer mentions my remarks and then makes his own comments. He contends that most of my remarks were invented and the others were much exaggerated. The house will see whether there is exaggeration in my remarks. He says:

Mr Pouliot remarked that:—

(a) "Most of the time there were two foremen in charge of two men. One foreman was named Roy and the other Dumont, each having to look after one man. Many men were employed at the wharf, but each only for a short time; they were employed mostly two by two or three by three throughout the summer. The two foremen did not take more men so that their work would last longer."

These were my remarks he quoted. This is the explanation of the investigator:

To this, I may say that there was only one foreman, Mr. Jean Roy. He conducted the work, worked sixty-one days and was paid $5 less 10 per cent, per working day. Mr. Vincent Dumont worked with his hands—

I do not imagine he could work with his feet.

—forty-nine days, as carpenter, and two days, as labourer. He was recognized as the chief carpenter, but was paid the regular carpenter and labourer rates, viz: forty-two and a half cents and thirty-five cents, less 10 per cent, per hour.

This is a little job for one man to work sixty-one days and the other fifty-one, but there was only one real foreman, the other being chief carpenter.

The foreman had under his orders up to eleven men at the same time, and the average number during the whole period from the beginning to the end of the work was eight men.

There has been a total of twenty-nine different persons employed on this work. Of these, twelve worked during June, twenty-one during July, and eighteen during August.

The number of working days is not mentioned, but if one man worked only one day he would have been counted as one of the twenty-one who worked during July.

That means to say that most of the workmen worked for a relatively good portion of the time that the work lasted.

That is only a supposition; nothing is said about the length of time any of the men worked there.

(b) "Roy and Dumont were very busy looking after the two other men. One had a chisel in his hand and the other a hammer. On the hammer there was an apparatus for pulling out nails, so that when he hammered a nail he immediately pulled it out, because it had been hammered in the wrong direction. Then he proceeded to put it in again. All this took place under the vigilant eyes of one foreman. Then the other used his chisel to give a satin finish to the timber in the wharf."

Now, the departmental investigator said that most of my remarks were unfounded while others were exaggerated. Here is his comment:

To this, I may say that no such hammer has been used. As to the chisel, I may say that one has been used for a few hours—

As a matter of fact is was a few hours.

—not to give a satin finish to the timber of the wharf, but to make the joints in the handrail. I may add, however, that a plane has been used to make the bevelled edges of the railing and plane the surfaces of these timbers and of the handrail.

He says that the chisel was not used to give a satin finish to the timber of the wharf but that a plane was used to make the bevelled edges of the railing. I suggest that his term is synonymous with mine; at any rate, if there is a distinction between what he says and what I said, it is very subtle.

(c) "I have been told by reliable people that two young men about fifteen or sixteen years of age were employed fifteen days doing some painting which could have been done by a good man in two days".

To this, I may reply that the two youngest men employed on the work were Lucien Roy, nineteen years of age, and Baptiste Berube, twenty-five years of age.

The painting work done consisted in giving two coats of paint to the whole railing, top of the sheathing, handrail and mooring posts.

In order to magnify it, he mentions the whole railing first and afterwards the top of the sheathing, and then the handrail and mooring posts, though, the top of the railing is included in the whole thing; and as everyone knows there are not more than a dozen mooring posts on any of these wharves. However, to continue:

It is estimated that about ten thousand square feet of timber had thus been given two coats of paint. Fifty gallons of paint were used, and it is obvious that no good man, however good he might be, could have done the work in two days.

It will be observed that the time during which the foreman and the chief carpenter worked, respectively, has not been separated.

I may remark here that the painting was executed by Lucien Roy and Baptiste Berube, who have worked together a total of 34 days on the wharf, but the time taken for doing the painting has not been separated from the time employed at other works. They were paid as labourers 35 cents, less ten per cent per hour.

(d) "Another young man was very busy carrying wood shavings from the wharf to a small building nearby, putting those shavings in bags and taking them to the home of the foreman."

The foreman reports that he had employed an old man to carry water and do other light work, and this old man was so active, a kind of old age pension.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. member is purporting to read the report in answer to his objections taken on a former occasion, and he is interspersing it with comments of his own which are being read into the record as if they were part of the report. It is not fair. He says it is a kind of old age pension.

Mr. McINTOSH: He wants to improve the construction.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not think my hon. friend intends to convey the effect which his interjection of words into the report will have.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He wants to put some spice into the report.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It will appear as part of the report. If the hon. member will make it clear what is his own contribution, and just what is contained in the report, I have no objection.

Mr. POULIOT: I am perfectly agreeable to the minister's suggestion, but he knows that I shall give the text to Hansard. Hansard is true in its reports, and I will see to it that the text of the report is published in small characters while my own—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —appear in large letters.

Mr. POULIOT: I am too modest to say, every time I interject something of my own, "This remark is mine." I am too modest to do that sort of thing; it would offend my sense of what is right. However, so that there may be no misunderstanding at all, I will say, whenever I introduce a parenthesis of my own, "between paragraphs", or better still, "between brackets", which would be more appropriate, seeing that we are discussing the work of carpenters. I will continue:

To this I may say that the foreman reports that he had employed a very old and poor man to carry the water and do other light works, and that this old man was so active that when he had a few moments to spare he picked up the wood shavings and brought them in bags to the shed. He claims that the workmen that wanted any of these wood shavings could take them after their day's work, and that he, the foreman, had taken less than the others.

It shows how disinterested he was.

(e) "I am informed that some of the paint left over was used to decorate a sailing boat or canoe belonging to a good friend whose home happened to be near the wharf."

Between brackets, this is a quotation from my own speech given in this report, and here is the comment of the investigator:

To this, I may say that some children, playing at the wharf, after the workmen had left the place, found some of the empty paint cans and daubed a rowboat belonging to Mr. Levesque. Of this, Mr. Levesque complained to the foreman, and as the damages had been done with remnants of paint belonging to the government,—

Between brackets, it is extraordinary that there were remnants of paint in empty paint cans. Close brackets.

—, it was thought that it was proper to repair these damages in giving a new coat of paint to the rowboat of Mr. Levesque. But this was done the last day that they worked at the wharf with the paint that was left over by Lucien Roy, during his lunch hour.

Imagine that. After they were through with their work one of them, a young man of nineteen, was so devoted to his country that he remained throughout his lunch time to paint the boat, using paint that had been left over. What great devotion to his country.

(f) "It was a family affair and did not help the unemployed at all."

This is a quotation from my speech. The comment of the investigator is this:

To this I may reply that the work was not an unemployment relief work, but a regular work of the department. The foreman has employed his brother, Ernest Roy, because he was a poor man with eight children and his son, Lucien, because he was a painter by trade. He has also employed alternately two other relatives, Theodore Michaud and Georges Michaud, but he said that they needed to work as much as the others.

As twenty-nine persons have been given employment on this work, it is clear that although the foreman, Roy, has favoured some of his relatives, the work cannot be considered as a family affair.

If the foreman of the wharf had been Prime Minister he would have appointed not only his brother-in-law to Washington but his brother as well, and he would have appointed his son and two other relatives, and I suppose that would not have been described as a family affair. That remark is between brackets. I resume the quotation:

As the work was not considerable, it was not possible for the foreman to economically give work to a greater number of men than he did. Most of the twenty-nine men employed were men in the same condition as those not employed.

I cannot understand that very well.

I consider that the work did help as much as possible the unemployment situation.

It did help the unemployment situation for those men who had work on the wharf, but those who did not receive work did not have the same chance. Then, here is something:

The work was executed from June 23, to September 2, 1932, inclusively, and was done at a total cost of $2,561.87 divided as follows:—

Materials and supplies .. .. ..$	1,120 30
Labour and superintendence.. ..	1,441 57
$	2,561 87

The authorization, dated June 4, 1932, was for $3,000 leaving, therefore, an unexpended balance of $438.13.

I am very sorry that the department did not see to it that the complete repair work was not done to the wharf in order that the money might be spent for the relief of the unemployed. Without any desire to be facetious, may I ask the minister in the future to give as much attention as possible to heads of families and men supporting mothers or sisters. I say that in the interests of all hon. members. I am not asking the Minister of Public Works to do anything particularly for my own constituency, because I know very well there are other requests coming to his department to which he has to listen. At the same time there is a wharf at Cacouna which needs repairing. The top of the wharf has been torn away by ice, and as a result it is in very bad condition. Some years ago a resolution was forwarded by the municipal council of Cacouna asking for the immediate repair of the wharf, but at that time the application was set aside. Again last year I asked the minister to do something, but nothing was done. I am wondering if this year he will do something under the $400,000 vote now submitted to the house.

It is not my job to recommend the employment of certain persons. However, I am as much interested as the minister is in seeing that the money serves the purposes for which it is voted. There are many places in my constituency as well as in other constituencies where money could be spent, and I am interested in seeing that it is not wasted. I have much consideration for the minister. Although I do not recall doing so, I believe I have said to the minister that the bite of a friend is better than the kiss of an enemy. If I give to him information which appears strange, I can substantiate it. When the report states that my representations were exaggerated, I must leave to the judgment of the house whether they were or not. I spoke in all fairness, and only for the information of the minister. The House of Commons is the proper place to express the grievances of my county, and I am doing my duty to the best of my ability. Although at times I may be wrong, yet I speak in all sincerity, and I hope the minister will accept my words in the spirit in which they are given. When the minister does something right in my constituency I would be the first to offer my praise, and when something is done improperly I will be just as frank. I ask for information about the public works at Isle Verte only in fulfilment of my duties as a watchdog of the exchequer, and in defence of the attitude of the minister when it has been assailed by his own friends in my constituency.

I speak now in all fairness, and I hope the minister will accept my observations in that light. I should be very happy if he would tell me how much of the $13,300 will be spent for labour, and how much for materials.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The hon. member has asked for information regarding expenditures at Isle Verte, one of the specific items in the estimates. In the ordinary course of events that work will be done by contract. I believe the hon. member will agree that in advance of asking for tenders it is not in the public interest that engineers' reports and estimates of costs should be made public. I assure him that the specifications or plans have been under consideration and are subject to revision. Suggestions have been made as to possible changes or improvements which might be made in the plan as outlined when the estimate was prepared.

The hon. member has been fair enough to read practically the whole of the report of the district engineer. As I recall it he omitted only one paragraph on page 4, which gives details of the work, and I believe that paragraph was not material to the discussion. I say to him, and to every hon. member in any section of the house, that I welcome honest, candid, fair criticism. That is the only way in which the administration of a department such as the Department of Public Works can be kept clean and efficient.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister will admit that he is treated fairly by this side of the house.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When the hon. member made his criticism of expenditures I assured him there would be a thorough and complete investigation.

Mr. POULIOT: For which I thank the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I repeat what I have stated on many occasions, that if an hon. member rises in his place, makes a criticism and states he believes it to be well founded and a matter which should receive investigation, it will be investigated, regardless of consequences,—let the chips fall where they may. That will be my policy as long as I have the honour of being in charge of the Department of Public Works. Following that policy, instructions were given the district engineer to investigate the matter about which the hon. member has spoken. The hon. member has quoted practically the whole of the engineer's report. I believe it is only fair to say the answer of the district engineer is that the complaints are not well founded. Unfortunately from time to time hon. members from all parts of the house receive information which they believe to be correct, but which upon investigation either by themselves or by others is found not to be as accurate as they had supposed. The report of the engineer goes into the statements of my hon. friend in detail and gives his finding. Some good comes of these investigations; all I ask is that my hon. friends convince themselves in the first instance that the complaints are well founded, or that there is some good reason for an inquiry, because these investigations involve time and expense, and some complaints have been found to be frivolous, not well founded, really unwarranted in the first instance. I do not go so far as to say that that applies to the complaints of my hon. friend in this case.

Mr. TETREAULT: I have listened with great attention to the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), who is a notable member of this house, because he is on his feet about every five minutes. I noticed he was trying to cut a channel through the administration of this department with a hammer and chisel. I have some remarks to make at this time about the previous administration. I will not use the same tools as my hon. friend; I am going to use a dollar bill or a thousand dollar bill. While the committee is considering public works estimates may I make a few remarks which I presume will be of interest to our hon. friends opposite who have been so bitterly criticizing the Department of Public Works on account of public expenditures and political interference. My hon. friend from Témiscouata will, I trust, bear this in mind and listen to what I have to say with regard to public works carried out in my own constituency under the previous administration. Listen to the interesting story of the erection of a post office—

First, I may inform the committee that my Liberal friends waged three elections with the promise to build a post office in the town of Waterloo, Quebec. It was in 1921 that they first promised that the building would be erected without any delay. They won the election, but nothing was done. In 1925, feeling that they had to do a little more, the late Mr. George Boivin, then member for Shefford, recommended to the government the purchase of a lot belonging to Mr. H. Forand of Waterloo for the erection of a post office. Eventually the land was purchased for the sum of $3,650, which was paid by cheque to the order of Mr. Forand and two other parties. I must say, however, that according to the registers of the town of Waterloo, as they actually stand, this piece of land appears to be still in the possession of Mr. H. Forand. But in the meantime the sum of $3,650 appears to have been divided among three ardent friends of the previous administration whose names I shall not mention. In 1927, in spite of the fact that land had already been sold to the government and paid for, some other political friends of the then administration decided to try to sell another site for the erection of the post office adjoining the one already purchased by the government. Consequently under the recommendation of an officer of the Department of Public Works, Montreal, and of the ex-member for Shefford, Mr. Boivin, another piece of land was sold to the government, this time for the sum of $7,500.

Mr. POULIOT: Is Waterloo in Témiscouata county?

Mr. TETREAULT: No, I was just referring to the challenge the hon. member was trying to make of the administration of this department, I am just bringing before the committee what was done under the previous administration.

This sum, added to that already paid for the first lot purchased, makes a total of $11,150 for the land only, paid by the then government to its political friends in Waterloo. I may say that at the time the department could have purchased the nicest property on the main street of Waterloo for less than this amount. In this respect perhaps the house will be interested to know the exact value of the property sold to the government for that sum of $11,150. I communicated with Notary A. Boulay, secretary treasurer of the town of Waterloo, asking him the valuation of this land according to the municipal roll. This was his reply, under date of February 17, 1933:

> Replying to your inquiry of the 15th instant, I must state that when the government purchased the piece of land on which the post office was erected, the said lot was assessed at $800 by our municipal appraisers.

I was not satisfied with the answer, for of course, I know that under the previous administration everything was done honestly and without any political interference whatever, so I took it upon myself to write again. I said this secretary must be wrong, because I heard the hon. member for Témiscouata finding fault with everything done by this government—

Mr. POULIOT: Not everything.

Mr. TETREAULT: I wanted to find out if there was anything wrong with this reply, so I wrote a second letter to Mr. Boulay, for more precise information. This was his reply:

> I am sorry that I cannot give you a more precise figure, as this lot has not been valuated after the sale of a part thereof to the government. Before this piece was taken off, the Forand property was valued at $1,000, and the property purchased from Mr. Whitehead at $800 In order to get the exact figure it would be necessary to subtract from the sum of $1,000 the value of the piece of land remaining to Mr. Forand, and this represents the largest piece thereof.

This means, in a word, that land estimated at somewhere around $800 by the municipal appraisers was sold to the government at the price of $11,150. This statement needs no further comment.

In 1929, just before the 1930 election, the party decided that it was time to build the post office which had been promised during the two previous campaigns. We have heard something in this house during the last three years about the election of 1930. I would like to remind my hon. friend what was done just before the election of 1930. The party decided that it was time to build the post office. An amount of $21,000 had already been voted for that purpose, therefore our friends proceeded with the enterprise. If we look up the records of the department we find that many friends of the then administration were interested in that building. My hon. friend had three, one father and two sons, interested in this work under the Public Works department.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask my hon. friend if the post office was built?

Mr. TETREAULT: I will tell you when it was built. They have bought the land now.

Mr. POULIOT: Why was it not built? On such expensive ground it should have been built at once in order to make use of the site.

Mr. TETREAULT: I will let you know exactly about that. First the hon. member for Sherbrooke recommended the architect

Mr. Gregoire of Sherbrooke, who happened to be his recognized Liberal organizer. No tenders were asked. Mr. Gregoire was appointed. Then, after the plans were submitted by Mr. Gregoire tenders were opened and the contract awarded to Mr. Alphonse Daris, of Richmond, and the building was finally put up.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to know if the post office was built on that property.

Mr. TETREAULT: I will tell the hon. member the whole story. Let us see how much it cost—that is the important part for him. During the election campaign of 1930 the ex-member for Shefford, Mr. P. E. Boivin, and his supporters were claiming on the political platforms of the county of Shefford that this nice building which had been erected in Waterloo cost only $21,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not wish to interfere with the reading of my hon. friend, but we are discussing undertakings in harbours and rivers. I wonder if this post office is built in a river or in a harbour. I ask if my hon. friend is in order in reading something about the building of a post office.

Mr. TETREAULT: If I do not get this before the committee now I will do it later.

Mr. POULIOT: I ask for a ruling.

An hon. MEMBER: You are afraid to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): From the discussion so far I cannot say whether the remarks of the hon. member are in order or not. When I am sure I will give a ruling.

Mr. TETREAULT: It was said that this nice building cost only $21,000. The truth is quite different. In fact, to certain questions which I put on the order paper on February 16, 1933, inquiring as to the total cost of building the post office, the answer was $43,303.99. Here is another incident which will demonstrate that this building was erected for the benefit of political friends. As usual, a man was required by the department to supervise the construction work. This selection was to be made by the Civil Service Commission, and notices were issued advertising it and specifying the qualifications, which were as follows:

Education: primary school, preferably high school graduation; three years experience as foreman of construction.

However, the Civil Service Commission did not have anything to do with the nomination. Mr. Oscar Seguin of Waterloo was recommended by the clerk of public works and the then member, for Shefford, Mr. Boivin, as being an expert fully qualified for the position. Consequently he was appointed. Mr. Seguin was and still is the Liberal organizer of the county of Shefford, and I claim this is the only qualification he had to supervise this work. In fact he had no experience whatsoever in construction work, as he had previously been a motorman on the Montreal electric tramways and, if my information is correct, red or green pill salesman, finally and suddenly to become the editor of Le Journal de Waterloo, the most ridiculous and insignificant newspaper that could be found in the eastern townships. At the time he was appointed to supervise the construction works his occupation was selling liquor for the provincial government. These were his qualifications; that was the kind of expert we had to direct the construction of that building. For his services as supervisor this man received $1,500.86 for one year, and he also had a position with the provincial government at the time. This fact will prove to the committee that whenever the Civil Service Commission makes an appointment it is not always the best qualified man who obtains the job.

This is not all. When the new post office was finally erected the old one, which still stood in front of the new one, had to be demolished. Instead of proceeding in the way generally adopted, as was done in my own city of Granby when we constructed a church two years ago—that is, to sell the properties to be demolished by auction sale and thus receive from $500 to $700 for each—they gave a contract for the demolition of the old post office. The man who was awarded this contract received from the government the sum of $2,240, plus the material remaining from the old building. And this is not all. There was, of course, a deal between the government and the owner of the first piece of land for the sale thereof. This deal was completed before notary R. R. Bachand, who charged the department only $73 for signing this transaction. I may inform hon. members that in addition, his name appeared on the first cheque for $3,650 issued by the government in payment for this piece of land, which still appears to be the property of Mr. H. Forand.

There is still more. When the post office was completed a heating system was installed therein, the cost of which amounted to $800. This system was sold to the department by the Fess Oil Burners, Limited, through their official agent in Granby, Mr. P. E. Boivin, ex-member for Shefford. However, due to the fact that members of parliament are not allowed to sell to the government, I must explain that the sale was conducted under the name of Mr. Boivin's accountant, who acted as regular agent in this instance.

In conclusion, I may say, Mr. Chairman, that it is quite fortunate that we do not have a water power such as Beauharnois in the county of Shefford, because certainly we would have had a repetition of the Beauharnois scandal had our Liberal friends from Waterloo and Granby only had a wider field to work on than the mere construction of a post office.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that the officer of the Department of Public Works who recommended to the government the purchase of these lots at such prices and the nomination of the so-called expert who supervised the work, should not remain in the employ of the government. Therefore, in conclusion, and as a consequence of the facts I have stated, I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Works that this officer, whoever he may be, be compelled to hand in his resignation.

Mr. HOWARD: Would the hon. member repeat what he had to say about me a moment ago?

Mr. TETREAULT: I am sorry the hon. gentleman was not here, but he can read it in Hansard to-morrow.

Mr. HOWARD: But the item may be passed if we wait until to-morrow.

Mr. POWER: May we have your ruling now, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I think in the discussion of the estimates most hon. members are at times out of order. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat might have discussed this question on item 130, which will be called in a few moments, but when he started it seemed just as well to let him continue his explanation.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is the first I have heard of this matter, and the hon. member asks that I should do something as minister of the department. All I can say is that I will review the file and endeavour to find out what it discloses and to ascertain who is responsible for the conditions described.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Then we can take it that the minister never heard of this complaint previously.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. TETREAULT: May I remind the hon. member that I, not the minister, represent Shefford county?

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think in fairness to the department the minister should have been notified that this question was going to be raised in order that he might give the committee the department's side of the question.

Mr. POULIOT: I think the behaviour of the hon. gentleman has been most unfair to the Minister of Public Works, and on his behalf I protest.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Before the item passes I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the iniquity of putting in estimates lump sums such as this $400,000 under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): That point has been raised.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not asking you whether or not the point has been raised. If I may say so, Mr. Chairman, if you had been as diligent in noticing points of order a short time ago you would have intervened then and made the suggestion you now make. I want to say to the minister that the very fact that he has spent $407,000 under this item is the best reason that could be given why an amount such as this should not be included in the estimates in this way. Two or three years ago, when there was money in this country with which to carry on public works, $100,000 was considered sufficient for this item. If this item had provided only $100,000 I am satisfied the minister would not have spent anything like $407,000. This is not the time for the minister to place himself in the position of having to submit to the importunities of hon. members with regard to any public works that can be avoided. I think he has seen the error of that policy in regard to public works being done under the relief act, and I want to commend the minister and the government for the all too late repentance and change of heart they have experienced in that regard. They admit now that it was a mistake to do it in that way.

Mr. BURY: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then why did they change the policy?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was referring to the item of $400,000 contained in this vote No. 117. I was pointing out the objections to an item of this kind. As I said before, up to 1930 the highest amount provided for harbours and rivers generally in the province of Quebec was $100,000. When objections were raised to this item the minister suggested that he was only following a principle which had been followed for some time. The increase from $100,000 to $400,000 in this item is out of all proportion to the necessities of the present time. That the whole amount plus $7,000 was spent last year indicates the danger in following a course of this kind. It brings about a condition similar to that which occurred under the blanket powers given to the government by the unemployment relief measures. The minister will recall that in objecting to the granting of those powers, I called his attention to the fact that the expenditures in the province of Ontario had been seven times as much in the ridings represented by government supporters as they had been in the ridings represented by opposition members. Such a principle is absolutely wrong. I think the minister and the government have been ill-advised in increasing this item to the amount that now appears in the estimates. It is bad business, and particularly in times like these when the budget presented to the house shows the lamentable condition of the finances of this country. The minister and other members of the government know perfectly well that if this $400,000 had not been in the estimates, no such amount would have been expended. In cases of dire necessity the government can issue a governor general's warrant to cover the cost of repairing and restoring buildings destroyed by fire or wharves washed away by storms. The minister would be better advised to limit himself to what is reasonable rather than to increase the amount by four times. Estimates for public works are in a different category from estimates for other purposes. Representatives of various constituencies are anxious to have works constructed in their own districts and there is a tendency to give way to what is really political patronage when the money is available and the members who sit behind the minister know that it is available. I thoroughly agree with the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) when he says that this item should be reduced by at least $200,000. There is no justification in a time like this for such a large increase in the amount of money made available for expenditure on matters of this kind.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Chairman, I do not see why the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) should ask that this Quebec item be reduced by $200,000. I do not agree with him, and I congratulate the minister for providing a sufficient vote to help whatever community may need help in days like these. I thank him in the name of my constituents for providing a vote of $47,000 for the city of Rimouski. I would suggest to him that the patronage system might be eased up to a certain extent. I would not ask that a fifty-fifty basis apply, but I do suggest that in considering the needs of our local population at least one-third of the works should go to Liberals of Rimouski.

Mr. HOWARD: I should like to say a few words to correct an impression which may have been left with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) by a speech delivered just before six o'clock by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Tetreault). I think that speech was entirely out of order, but I think also that it is only right that I should correct any wrong impression which may have been left. Reference was made to the construction of a post office at Waterloo, Quebec, in the eastern townships in the county of Shefford. The statement was made that I had recommended the architect, Mr. J. O. Gregoire, for this work. I did not know that I had, but I hope I did because I would tell the minister that he is a mighty good architect. There are three good architects in Sherbrooke and I am glad that this particular work went to the eastern townships instead of somewhere else. I am sure any one of these architects could have done justice to the work. The hon member criticized the fact that the superintendent of works, Mr. Oscar Seguin, had been working in the government liquor store. I might say that this gentleman came very near to getting the nomination at the last election and being the choice of the people of that constituency. I think that is a fairly good recommendation. He also criticized Mr. Robert Bachand, N.P. This gentleman has since been elected to represent this constituency in the provincial house. That is not such a bad recommendation. As to the suggestions made in connection with Mr. P. E. Boivin, I think that gentleman is well known to the committee and can stand upon his own recommendation. I have no complaint to make of the fact that no items appear in the estimates for the city of Sherbrooke. I appreciate the present financial stress which has forced the minister to take the action he has.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to be in a similar position to the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) and congratulate the minister upon finding items in the estimates to take care of the recommendations which have been made as far back as five years ago for the construction of certain public works in my constituency, but I am not. Many necessary public works have been recommended in years past and would have given considerable employment to the distressed population, but no provision has been made for their construction. Considerable discussion has taken place in connection with this $400,000 item and I should like to ask the minister if he could indicate to the committee whether or not some of this vote will be used to construct certain public works which are urgent and about which I have written personally. I know that some of these works have been recommended by my late opponent. There has been a request for a wharf at Havre St. Pierre as well as at Sacré-Cœur and Bersimis. Many other requests have been sent to the minister and I should like to know if it is contemplated that some of this vote will be expended in the construction of these works. The population is in need of employment and the works are necessary. They were recommended a long time ago.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall endeavour to reply, in their order, to the comments and suggestions that have been made, dealing first with those of the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Elliott), the former Minister of Public Works. Let me say that nobody is more impressed than is the present Minister of Public Works with the necessity for economy, and if any department is a victim of circumstances, then it would be correct to say that that is true of the Public Works department. Let me briefly run over the total estimates of that department for a number of years. I am giving the round figures:

Year—	Total appropriation for public works
1920-21	$22,000,000
1921-22	20,000,000
1922-23	16,000,000
1923-24	20,000,000
1924-25	21,000,000
1925-26	20,000,000
1926-27	19,000,000
1927-28	20,000,000
1928-29	27,000,000
1929-30	30,000,000
1930-31	38,000,000

In the year 1929-30 the appropriation for this general vote about which my hon. friend speaks was increased from $75,000 to $100,000. The total estimates for public works for the next three years are as follows:

Year—	Total appropriation for public works
1931-32	$23,000,000
1932-33	15,000,000
1933-34	14,000,000

In 1933-34 it was really less than $14,000,000.

Mr. YOUNG: Is that for all public works, no relief work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All public works, buildings, harbours and other public undertakings which, as I have said, in the year 1930-31 amounted to $38,000,000. So I think my hon. friend must agree that this is evidence of economy, of cutting down expenditures. As a matter of fact, I think they have been cut a little too close. The reason this vote is now $400,000 with the limitation upon it that no new work can be undertaken, is on account of the very limited character of the specific appropriation and a desire to leave, as I said, a reasonable, indeed a very small amount in view of the other limited appropriation, available for necessary repairs. My hon. friend spoke about a comparison he made of employment relief expenditures in Liberal constituencies with those in Conservative constituencies. I think the answer is to be found in the fact that for a year prior to the Conservative party taking office my hon. friends took such good care of Liberal constituencies in that area that we could not find anything that really needed expenditure, and I have no complaint to make on that score.

Mr. ELLIOTT: All the constituencies were taken good care of then.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Their representatives do not all say so. I might point out that in the constituency of my hon. friend for Charlevoix-Saguenay there was an expenditure last year of $38,000 on twenty-four works. He has a very long coast line.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Very long—785 miles or thereabouts.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Almost 800 miles, and in a long coast line like that works from time to time require repairs. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that we have taken fairly good care of conditions down there.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Following what the minister has said, I quite agree with him that some years ago, when the former administration was in office, this district was well taken care of. At that time there was much development and certain works had to be constructed. At present those works are there and of course they have to be repaired, maintained and kept in good working condition to be available in the near future when business revives and the people operating in those districts resume operations. If the government does not make the necessary repairs now, in a few years it will cost the people of Canada much more money to put these works into proper condition to give the service that will then be required. For instance, from a place called Sacré-Coeur, which I forgot to mention a few minutes ago, about twelve miles north of Tadoussac, I received a communication in regard to some necessary work there. I wrote to the minister in February and he replied that he would put it on the program for the next fiscal year. This is a necessary work. Some people at Havre St. Pierre have communicated with me, and people on the other side have also sent communications as to necessary work there. This is a most important point on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, and the people need proper means of communication there. The government ought to see that these works are done as expeditiously as possible.

I should also like to get from the minister some information regarding what I said a month or so ago about some works that were carried on at Tadoussac. I remember at that time I read to the house a letter regarding certain complaints that were made. I have been told that since then the government has sent some of its officials to investigate and find out if the facts that I have reported are exactly as they have been presented to me. At that time the complaint was made and submitted to me on good authority that some of the timber which had been purchased there was purchased at a high figure and that only very few people had profited by its sale. Has the minister received a report from the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Again I can only say that the work to which my hon. friend refers involves a rather heavy expenditure, the estimated cost being $125,000. I think he will agree with me that that is a pretty large undertaking in these times.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What place is that?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Some representations have been made recently that we might get along temporarily with a small expenditure just to put the structure into a condition that would prevent further decay, and we are having an investigation made.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What place is that?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Havre St. Pierre.

Mr. CASGRAIN: As regards what I have just mentioned about the investigation that was made at Tadoussac, has the minister received the information? I am told that the investigation was conducted by Mr. Gobeil, an official of his department.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, he made an investigation and I have the report. I could send a copy of it to my hon. friend.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should be glad to have it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I rather thought one had been sent to him.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is it the intention of the department to call for tenders for repairs at the Rimouski wharf?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is work which apparently can be properly done by contract, and the amount is such as to render necessary the calling for tenders. It is the intention to invite tenders.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister has overlooked the point I was endeavouring to make. What he said with regard to the years from 1922 to 1930 is perhaps the best evidence one could have of the impropriety of the course that is being followed at the present time. During the years to which he referred, particularly the years in which there was an expenditure of over $20,000,000, that is to say from 1926 on, in every one of those years the government of the day showed a surplus. That illustrates better than anything else the difference between that regime and the present one. At that time real works were being undertaken. After the expenditure of the moneys in those years the government was able to show a substantial surplus annually. But let me impress upon the minister and the government that to-day there is a very critical condition in Canada. We are running behind, not a matter of a few millions a year, but in the last few years amounts almost equalling the total of the public debt before the war. That is the condition that faces us at the present time. I do not think the government realizes how important it is to pay as little attention as possible to the appeals that come from the various ridings. I know my hon. friend from Rimouski, and I realize that he is diligent in looking after the interests of his riding, and I am not criticizing him on that score. Personally, however, I prefer to take the suggestion of the hon. member for Quebec South. This house has reached the stage where it must consider whether or not we are going to go on spending money irrespective entirely of whether we have the money or have any means of obtaining it. The country is in too serious a condition to go on spending money by increasing an expenditure from $100,000 to $400,000, as the minister has done in the last few years in connection with this one item.

The people of the country cannot stand it; we have reached and passed the limit. These expenditures must be cut. I am sure the minister must realize that. I know something of the difficulties which the Minister of Public Works has in resisting the appeals made to him, but the point I am trying to bring home to him is that he has not the money and that it is not available to the government. The government cannot afford to make expenditures of this kind at the present time; it is time to call a halt. There is a very great difference between spending money when you have a surplus and increasing expenditures without the people's representatives in this house having an opportunity to pass on different items, as should be done in regard to public works. You cannot excuse increasing the expenditure from $100,000 to $400,000, as the minister has done.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, would you kindly inform me whether I am in order. The house has just passed an item amounting to $35,000, for the reconstruction of the wharf, at Ste-Emilie. This is of interest to me, as it is in my county. Am I in order in discussing this item now?

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Thank you, sir. The government advocates economy. Economy! Hon. members sacrifice $400 of their indemnity; that is economy. It benefits everybody. However, $35,000 is voted to rebuild the wharf at Ste-Emilie. I have been a liberal member for a number of years past, yet, never did the government grant my request to rebuild the wharf in that locality. For the last two years the work on this wharf has been going on, and we must thank a conservative administration for it.

Ste. Emilie once had an industry which gave work to all its inhabitants. The Seignior Joly was the owner of a saw-mill on which the whole population was dependent, including the clergy and the people of the parish and surrounding county; unfortunately, the mill closed its doors and no more wood is shipped.

Mr. DORION (Translation): His mill runs too fast.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): His mill does not run too fast, it has shut down. A Mr. Paris purchased it. This saw-mill is not working any more, yet $35,000 is expended to improve the wharf.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It is unreasonable.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): The mill has shut down and no further sawing is done in that section of the country, yet $35,000 is being expended.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): That augurs well for the redistribution of the counties.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I ask the minister why, in times of depression such as we are passing through, make an outlay of $35,000, at Ste. Emilie? This village is located in my county and I have no objection to my constituents earning money, but, I state: spend your money rightly, because you will soon need it. Who recommended such an outlay? Since you are undertaking such an expenditure, it must be because there is work ahead. However, the mill is being demolished, there is no lumber to saw, no work, absolutely nothing to do. And, you vote $35,000! For whom? Why? To please your friends? Well, carry on.

Mr. CHAIRMAN (Translation): Order! the hon. member must address the chair.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have the honour to address to you what I have just communicated to the house.

The saw-mill has disappeared, there is hardly any more timber, no lumber operations are undertaken. All has been swept away except the $35,000 which the government has just voted.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The government will also be swept away with it.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I am entirely opposed to this item of $35,000 to rebuild or extend the wharf at Ste. Emilie. I protest against this extravagant and uncalled for expenditure. Were I only to consider the needs of the people of that district, I would state: All is well, let the government grant them $35,000. However, the wharf is not worth repairing because it is no further required. If you wish to grant these people $35,000, let the member for the county handle it so that it will be fairly distributed, and not in the way the government wish to expend it, because, again I state, this wharf is not worth rebuilding and is useless. Let the government place this amount in the hands of the member for the county so that it may be fairly distributed and thus be a blessing to the people.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I trust, sir, that I have conformed myself to the rules of the house, and I wish to thank you for the latitude which you have afforded me.

In closing my remarks, sir, I would request that this item of $35,000 be withdrawn, because it is not required, we are practising economy and, furthermore, the members of this house could well apply it elsewhere. No doubt, the people of Ste. Emilie would be glad to accept the whole of this amount, without it having to undergo the clipping of the conservative machinery which would leave, out of $35,000, practically nothing for the public to benefit by.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I gather the hon. member for Lotbiniere is protesting against the proposed expenditure on a wharf in his constituency. That is indeed unusual.

Mr. STEVENS: And refreshing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Certainly it requires some consideration. I would be the last one to force upon any constituency any public work it does not need or want. Last year the reports from our engineer, upon which we place a good deal of weight and in which we have confidence, pointed out that this wharf was in very bad repair, that the traffic was very heavy, and that unless the wharf was renewed a heavier expenditure would be involved in the near future. Tenders were invited, the lowest of which was for the sum of $12,420, not the larger amount mentioned by the hon. member. On a review of the situation, and owing to the fact that the investigations were made late in the season, it was decided that the work could stand over until this year. Now the hon. member seems to think it might stand over until next year. I am inclined to accept his suggestion.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I wish to thank you, sir, for postponing this vote. I contend that the saw-mill having been demolished, there is no further need to repair the wharf. My opposition to this $35,000 outlay arises from a desire to economize that amount to the country. what member would rise in the house and state: I shall save the country $35,000. I do so, the house must take my word that the outlay is unnecessary or else must seek the truth of my statement on the spot. If the house does not care to make the necessary inquiries in my constituency, then, let them take my word.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Granted.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): May I inquire the name of the tenderer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Wilfrid Robidoux, for $12,420.

Mr. VERVILLE: I am satisfied, thank you.

Mr. DUPUIS: Under this item there is a vote of $23,000 for dredging at Riviere la Guerre, and further, under item 124 there is a vote of $215,500 for dredging in Ontario and Quebec. We have in the counties of Laprairie and Napierville a river called La Petite Riviere Montreal, about which the minister knows the details. Upon my request to the federal and provincial governments this river was dredged in 1929 and 1930. With its source somewhere in the neighbourhood of the border between the United States and Canada, this river flows into the Richelieu, passing through the counties of Huntingdon and Napierville and the township of Sherrington. In Sherrington there is an area of about 1,100 acres of good land which used to be flooded in the spring and fall, and mostly during the greater part of the summer. As the minister knows, dredging operations were commenced at Napierville, and a large amount of money was spent upon the dredging operations until they had reached a certain point in Sherrington county. I am informed that there is about one mile of river in soft land still to be dredged, and it will be very easy for the department to finish the work. From the minister's letter of February 11, I would judge that his reason for not proceeding further with the work is that he believes he has spent enough money in operations on that river, and that during these days when economies must be made the expenditure of $2,000 more would not be justified. Upon our request the Quebec department of agriculture were ready to contribute $2,000 towards the completion of the work, provided the federal Department of Public Works would furnish the same amount. I would not dare to ask that this department spend a large amount of money if in the first place the proposed work were not useful, and if in the second place it were not already partly completed; because in these times when all departments are bound to economize I think we should not ask for a large amount of money. But without any reflection on the wisdom of the item, if the department is ready to spend as large an amount as that already in the estimates for Rivière la Guerre, I think the small amount for which I am now asking, $2,000, should be granted. There has been some criticism on the part of my opponents in my constituency —I will not give names—that I was negligent in this matter, because in Sherrington, in the vicinity of this river, there are large numbers of good farmers, good citizens, who happen to be Conservatives. I think the two descriptions can go together; I am not so narrow-minded a Grit as to think that among Conservatives there are not good citizens. A large number of these citizens in Sherrington are Conservatives, and they attacked me because I am supposed to have neglected to ask for this small amount. I know well to do farmers in this district who have 100, 200 and sometimes 300 acres of land which they are unable to cultivate because of the conditions now prevailing, whereas if this work were done this large area would be available for cultivation, with very beneficial results to this part of the country. To justify myself before this committee and before the electors of my riding, and especially those who attacked me, I will remind the committee that on the 21st of December, 1931, and the 21st of January, 1932, I made two identical requests to the Department of Labour under the relief act in answer to a circular sent to all members of this house asking what kind of public works they could suggest in their ridings that would be useful to the citizens and help the unemployed. In reply I mentioned many public works that might be done in my riding, and especially this dredging of the little Montreal river. On the 4th of February the Minister of Public Works answered me thus:

Dear Mr. Dupuis,—

Mr. Harry Hereford, Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief, has sent me copies of your letters under date of the 21st December and 21st January, with his replies thereto, respecting requests for works under the provisions of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, in Laprairie-Napierville.

When tentative lists were being made of works to be carried out directly by the federal government, we had to consider first the class of works which could be included in a limited program for each province and to confine these to harbour and river works and public buildings, according to established practice in the Department of Public Works. It was also necessary to take into consideration the most pressing situations resulting from dislocation in industry in the large centres of unemployment.

So far as the department is concerned apart from public buildings, works are confined in the main to the actual requirements of navigation, with due regard to seasonal conditions to effect construction. We could not undertake any extensive program of protection or drainage works. It was not intended that the federal government should carry out works which could be initiated by the provinces and the municipalities, except by contributing a certain percentage of the cost, if and when these works were grouped and submitted to the Department of Labour by the provinces and finally authorized by the federal government.

As you are aware, farm relief under the act was confined to the prairie provinces, and this matter was handled by the Minister of Agriculture.

I shall not read the whole letter, but I have read the paragraph which states that these works could not be done, and that under the Relief Act the provinces of Quebec or Ontario were not entitled to any appropriation. I do not want to criticize the government unduly because I believe they have enough difficulties without adding to them, but I felt bound to make this statement so that the friends of hon. members to your right, sir, shall not in future attack me for having neglected their interests. Moreover, I believe that the hon. Minister of Public Works, for whom I have a very high regard because of his kindness and all the good qualities I am ready to recognize in him personally—

An hon. MEMBER: He is a nice fellow.

Mr. DUPUIS: I do not want to throw any flowers, but he deserves it. I hope that when the hon. minister replies, apart from what I say as to his personal qualities, but from the point of view of administration only, comparing this with what has been voted for other parts which I will not name, he will assure us that he will grant this small amount.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How much?

Mr. DUPUIS: It is $2,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: For a breakwater?

Mr. DUPUIS: No, to finish dredging the river to drain a large area of land in my riding.

Mr. NEILL: The flowers would be cheap at the price.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I might pay it myself.

Mr. DUPUIS: Some hon. member to my left says if it were $400,000 it would be easier, but I do not believe it. I will wait until I have a favourable answer from the minister, and then I have another request to make.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If my hon. friend defers making his second request until he gets the promise, possibly he will not make the second request to-night. I have not before me the particulars of the work to which he refers, which was undertaken in the little Montreal river some years ago. It was an undertaking on the basis, I believe, of a contribution by the province of Quebec and possibly by the municipality interested in the scheme.

Mr. DUPUIS: Fifty per cent by Quebec and fifty per cent by Ottawa.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am told that the portion of the work assigned to the Department of Public Works was fully carried out, and that what is now sought is some additional contribution to take care of the cost of the work that was to be done by the province or by the parties directly interested. From time to time my hon. friend has presented these claims, but the circumstances were such that we did not feel that we should do the work at this time. With regard to the farm relief act I can only say that if my hon. friend will look up the records he will find that very large expenditures have been made under the provisions of that act in all the provinces. The undertakings carried on by the Department of Labour were begun by the municipalities in the first instance and then approved by the province, and to the cost of those undertakings the municipalities and provinces, as well as the dominion, made contributions. I cannot say whether the work to which he refers was ever suggested under that plan; I do not think it was advanced or approved by the province of Quebec. If it had been I think in the ordinary course it might have been undertaken, together with other works of a similar nature, but I cannot tell my hon. friend at this time that I can promise to do that work.

Mr. DUPUIS: The minister states that the work undertaken by the federal government was accomplished. Although his statement is correct it does not show the complete picture, because the undertaking was to drain that river to its source in order to relieve that area of the floods from which it has suffered. That work has not been completed. It is as though my hon. friend and myself started on a trip to France; when we came within ten miles of the coast of France we turned back. We would not be able to say to our friends that we had seen Paris. The provincial department of agriculture was in the same position as the federal government. So far as economy goes I believe Quebec is in the same position as Ottawa; they must make economies in Quebec also. Nevertheless, knowing the great advantages that would result from the completion of this work the Department of Agriculture decided to make a contribution. I have here a letter written by Mr. J. Antonio-Grenier, deputy minister of agriculture of Quebec, to which I referred in my letter to the Minister of Public Works. This letter is dated July 29, 1932, and is as follows:

(Translation):

Pursuant to your last recommendation, the minister wishes me to inform you that he is disposed to reconsider his promise of August 22, 1931, which was for 40 per cent, with a maximum of $520, and to replace it by another for 50 per cent, the amount not to exceed $2,000, on condition that a similar contribution be obtained from the Dominion government.

As the minister understands, the letter states that the Department of Agriculture is ready to increase its contribution to fifty per cent of the cost, the amount not to exceed $2,000, if the federal government will do the same thing. I believe the Department of Public Works here would make a very wise decision if they changed their minds and put this small amount in the supplementary estimates. I do not want to obtain anything by blaming the government for having done similar work in other ridings, but the minister knows that even in these days of drastic economy similar work has been done, and probably quite properly done. I am informed by the authorities in Quebec that in the constituency of Laval-Two Mountains dredging and surveys have been carried on, costing a large amount, in order to drain certain areas or to prevent flooding. Laval-Two Mountains is a very nice riding, but it is no nicer than the constituency of Laprairie-Napierville. I have great regard for the hon. member for Laval-Two Mountains, but I shall be jealous of him if I am refused that small amount while I know that in 1930, 1931 and 1932 similar work was done in his riding.

Mr. POULIOT: Would the minister be kind enough to tell the committee exactly where the work will be carried on at Isle Verte? Will it be near the old wharf?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am informed that it is proposed to do the work at the upstream end of the headlock, which is in bad repair.

Mr. POULIOT: The main wharf?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: I will not detain the committee long, but I should like to answer the speech made by the hon. member for Shefford.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: On a question of privilege the hon. member is in order.

Mr. POULIOT: This afternoon the hon. member said I spoke every five minutes; he insinuated that I was imposing on the committee and wasting time. Let me tell him that I saved more money—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: —for the government—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: —than he ever did.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think this is a question of privilege at all; it seems to be a matter of personal opinion. As the hon. member knows, a question of privilege must relate to the dignity of the hon. gentleman as a member. If the hon. member wishes to answer the hon. member for Shefford he will have a chance to do so under a different item.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I will pay no more attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Shefford; I will eulogize the Minister of Public Works instead. There was a dirty robber—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: —who was foreman in one part of Témiscouata county. He padded the pay-rolls and stole government money. I was the watchdog of the treasury; I notified the Minister of Public Works, who did his duty as a minister of the crown and forced the man to pay back the money. That same man was indulging in joy rides at the expense of the government; on Sundays he would drive for miles and miles with his family. The Minister of Public Works put a stop to that and I praise him for it. This is how I waste the time of the house. Not only that—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member must speak to the item; he knows the rules.

Mr. POULIOT: I am speaking with regard to public works in the province of Quebec.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend's remarks must be directed to the item under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not blame the minister, but I blame the contractors for putting inferior timber in that wharf. At my request the minister forced the contractors to replace them with stone.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must speak to the item under discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry I cannot pay compliments to the minister when I wish; it shows my broadmindedness.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member must comply with the rules.

Mr. POULIOT: I want to be nice and I cannot.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If there are facts to be stated, why cannot the hon. member state them?

The CHAIRMAN: They do not apply to the item.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not see why an hon. member should be run off simply because he is stating unpleasant truths.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: this item of $400,000 refers to the whole province of Quebec and I could speak about Cacouna or any other place in the province.

The CHAIRMAN: As far as harbours and rivers are concerned, but not post offices.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not speaking about post offices, I am speaking about a wharf; it is spelled w-h-a-r-f and the plural is spelled w-h-a-r-v-e-s. You know, Mr. Chairman, how all times I respect the rules of the house, especially when you are in the chair. I would not do the least thing against the least rule of the house.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no doubt about that, but the hon. member rose to a question of privilege when there is no privilege.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Remain on the wharf.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Stay on the dock.

Mr. POULIOT: Thanks are due to the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) who has made such a good point. This item of $400,000 covers the whole of the province of Quebec, not only the lands bordering the sea, but the sea itself. I want to know that things are being properly done in my constituency. I am not concerned with what happens somewhere else except when I am provoked. I have to render an account of what I have done; I have to defend the people's pocketbook, especially the people in the county of Témiscouata. It is only proper that the hon. members for Shefford and Compton should know about this. Cement was required for the wharf at Trois Pistoles, and before the election of 1930 I asked the department to give instructions that the cement should be purchased from the two stores at Trois Pistoles. This cement was purchased at the regular price, but after the change in government other cement was sent from Rivière du Loup. The cost of this cement was three times that which had been purchased in Trois Pistoles and the department was charged with the cost of transportation from Rivière du Loup. In order to protect the Canadian exchequer, I protested against this transaction. As the result, the quotations for the cement were lowered and I think the merchant was told to sell the cement at five cents less than the previous price as well as to pay the transportation charges. That merchant also had to pay a commission to the dealers in Trois Pistoles.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): That is patronage.

Mr. POULIOT: The cement company forced him to do that. This is one of the reasons why I have such respect for the Minister of Public Works. I saved the government money on that occasion. I should like to give the committee another instance. Some work was being done upon the wharf at Riviere du Loup and the government was being defrauded by means of padded payrolls. Not only that, but government money was being used to provide joy rides for these men and their families all around the district. I called this to the attention of the minister and he forced these people to pay back this money. The fact that this money was recovered was due to the efforts of Jean-François Pouliot, who mentioned the matter in the House of Commons. I direct this to the attention of the hon. members for Shefford and Compton who complain that I speak too often in this chamber. Let me give the committee another instance. A wharf was being constructed at Cap St. Ignace and I learned that rotten timber was being used in its construction. Mr. Chairman, perhaps you are hearing of this matter for the first time. This matter did not concern my own constituency, but we are elected to represent the country as a whole and I thought it my duty to notify the minister of what was happening. The minister sent the chief engineer to investigate the construction of this wharf. The chief engineer ordered the removal of the stone filling in order to inspect the timber at the bottom of the wharf. It was found to be rotted and the contractor was forced to change it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: You win again.

Mr. POULIOT: Instead of the wharf having been constructed with rotten timber, it was constructed with firm timber which will last much longer. I saved the country a lot of money. If I speak occasionally in the House of Commons, the government is paid for the time I use by what I save outside. I believe the country benefits more from the time I use than it would if I were selling my brother's jam. The fact is my brother does not sell jam or preserves.

Mr. GOBEIL: The hon. member spends inside what he saves outside.

Mr. POULIOT: But there is a surplus and that is about the only surplus the government has. It should be thankful to me for what I do. I have no desire to be unpleasant to any hon. member on the other side, even to any who might be disagreeable to me. They do not succeed in their efforts even though they try very hard. I see smiles upon the countenances of some of them. I see the countenances of my hon. friends from Shefford and Compton are adorned with very pleasant smiles. I assume they are satisfied with my explanation and I hope in the future they will follow the example I have set and endeavour to save the government money in the construction of public works. In the meantime I am glad to tell the Minister of my very high appreciation of and regard for what he has done in those circumstances, and I hope he will not lose any opportunity, when occasion offers, to help the people of my riding.

Mr. McINTOSH: Has the hon. member one left?

Mr. POULIOT: I have one left now. I do not know what is going to happen, but at present I defend my own people, my own family, Conservatives as well as Liberals. In conclusion, I may say that I am sure the minister will be fair to me; and I shall be fair to him and treat him with due justice.

Mr. TETREAULT: On a question of privilege I want to reply to the hon. member for Temiscouata.

Mr. POULIOT: I said that the hon. member was smiling. Is he smiling?

Mr. TETREAULT: Yes, I am smiling. Is the hon. member smiling too?

Mr. DUPUIS: I told the minister that I had another favour, a very important one, to ask of him. In the town of Laprairie there was constructed by the Department of Public Works a protection wall.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A dyke.

Mr. DUPUIS: Yes, a dyke. This was built in 1930; it was the continuation of a dyke which was begun ten, twenty years ago. To do that work, the Department of Public Works had to cover part of the public road leading from the town of Laprairie to St. Constant. Just that part of the road which follows the shore of the St. Lawrence was taken by the department, of course with the permission of the town of Laprairie. The dyke remains there. To provide for a similar road, the department built on the side of the dyke a kind of elevated road eighteen feet wide, not wide enough to replace the old road, because the latter was thirty-six feet in width. The department, in doing the work they did in Laprairie, had not directly the duty of building a road. I shall admit, because I presume the minister will tell me that it is not the duty of his department to build roads, but on the other hand, if the minister admits that his department built a dyke on a road, they must see to it that that road is replaced by a similar one. They took a road thirty-six feet wide and reduced it to eighteen feet, just cut it in half. They simply laid the bed of the road, if I might say so; they did not finish it. They laid large stones, then smaller ones; then they put a coat of smaller stones on top of that, and they left the road in that condition. The Department of Roads of Quebec refused to accept the road as it was laid, first, because it was not wide enough and, second, because it was not according to their requirements; it was not built in a proper manner so that they could finish it. The result is that the road is left in that dangerous condition. The Department of Public Works, when the dyke was finished, closed the road, putting at each end of it a notice that it was prohibited to pass there. I believe they were not entitled to close that road. It was their duty to build a road, if not of the same width, at least of a width sufficient that two rigs or two automobiles could pass without danger. Moreover, the department should have put a fence on the south side of the road to protect the public, because some parts of the road are from twelve to fourteen feet high. It is a very dangerous place to travel, and the town of Laprairie is threatened with damage suits for leaving the road as it is by other municipalities on the south shore, for example, Hemmingford, Sherrington, St. Edouard, St. Constant, St. Emile and all the places on the way to Valleyfield, Chateauguay and Beauharnois, the people of which are interested in passing along the road because it is a shorter route. Some time ago I wrote to the Department of Public Works and to the Department of Roads of Quebec and I did not receive a very proper answer from either. Recently I received the following letter from the divisional engineer, Mr. Leclerc:

(Translation):

In reply to your letter of March 11, as regards the petition signed by the ratepayers of Laprairie requesting the completion of the parish road, please find attached a copy of a letter from Mr. Vincent Dupuis, dated May 11, 1932 . . .

This letter was sent to Mr. Gosselin, chief engineer of the district of Montreal.

(Translation):

. . . and a copy of a report which I made in reply to that letter.

As you will note by this report, the road over which improvement is requested has a length of 4,105 feet, and to improve it in the way the petition requests, the work would cost as follows:

To widen the road-shoulders—
3,800 cubic yards. borrowed material, $1.30	$ 4,940
Protective cable fence—
3,350 feet at 60 cents	2,010
Laying of pavement—
342 cubic yards at $4 (including the screenings and rolling)	1,368
A layer of macurban and macasphalt 3 inches—
8,210 cubic yards at $1.50	12,315
	$20,633

In a letter from the same district engineer there appears one paragraph which I will try offhand to translate as well as I can. He says: "This road cannot be accepted by the public roads department of Quebec because the foundation is everywhere in bad condition and is not suitable for making a road. As it stands, the road is not in such a condition as to be completed. It would have to be widened and rebuilt." The Department of Roads in Quebec has reported that it would cost $20,633 to build the road, and I presume, although I am not authorized to speak for that department, that if the Department of Public Works in Ottawa were prepared to contribute half the cost of the road the Department of Roads of Quebec would pay its share. My reason for asking the federal department to contribute to this work is that the question of obligation arises here. The work done by the federal department in building the dyke resulted in the destruction of the original road, which it left in the present state of disrepair. I submit, therefore, that there is a principle of justice involved and the Department of Public Works is under obligation to restore the road to a proper state of repair.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This work was undertaken some years ago—

Mr. DUPUIS: In 1930.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Some work was done earlier than that, before the present government came into office. I am told that the object was not the construction of a road—

Mr. DUPUIS: No.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —but the construction of a dyke for protection, and that the road as it existed before was very imperfect. It was in bad condition a great part of the time through flooding, so much so that it could not be used at all. There is another road on the shore, almost parallel and not far removed, which was used. My information is that there was no agreement on the part of the Dominion government to leave the work in such a condition as would make it available as a highway, and that what has been done has materially improved conditions; instead of injuring the road it has made it better. It is true that some work may remain to be done to render the road passable at all times, but that would have been true of the former road, and my hon. friend's request for further expenditure cannot be made in pursuance of any agreement on the part of this government to do anything further than has been done. It would be a matter of grace. Probably the work is desirable, but it is another illustration of the demands that are being made for more expenditures, demands which go far to cancel requests from other hon. members that we should spend less. I do not know how we can spend more and at the same time spend less. My hon. friend has made representations in regard to this matter and I regret I have not been able to see my way clear to meet his request.

Mr. DUPUIS: The minister states that we urged his department to do this work last year, and he was kind enough to receive a delegation from the town of Laprairie in connection with this matter. In reply to the argument advanced by the minister may I point out to him that when he says there is another road parallel to this one for which I am asking money, he is not exactly correct. There is no road parallel to the one which I am asking to have repaired. The road over which the public is bound to pass is about two miles longer than the one on the shore and it goes south instead of towards Montreal. The minister states that the work done by his department was not for the purpose of building a road but was for protection, and that is quite true. But I would point out that the Department of Public Works, or any other department for that matter, when it undertakes a public work, has certain responsibilities if it injures other public works, causing damage thereto. In that event it is the duty of the department to repair the damages or to rebuild the road in such a manner as to make it available to the public as it was before. Although this is not a very favourable time to ask for a further amount of about $10,000 which would be necessary to put that road in a proper condition, I urge upon the minister that it is imperative. This road is absolutely necessary, and the town of Laprairie, which is responsible for it, will be bound to answer to the public for it. If I were discussing the matter from a legal point of view I would say to the minister that if my client were sued by parishes and townships to the south of that road for damages sustained by the travelling public, as a lawyer I would bring the Department of Public Works into the action in guaranty in that suit, and I am sure that, as the minister knows, before a court of justice he would be compelled to restore the road to its former condition.

I have no complaint to make against the Department of Public Works with respect to the dyke; I am quite satisfied in that connection, and I congratulate the minister on the work done there. But I am not speaking of the dyke; I am speaking of the road which was covered by it. The minister said that the road which was covered by the dyke was in bad order. That is perfectly true, but the farmers on the south shore who now have to travel an extra two miles used to go by that road, thus shortening their trip to Montreal by two miles. Going and coming, it would represent a difference of four miles. I believe the people on the south shore are entitled to a proper road, and that the Department of Roads in Quebec is very generous, inasmuch as it is not bound in any way to contribute a half share towards the rebuilding of the road. I say that in offering a payment of $10,000 the department in Quebec is acting generously, and the federal Department of Public Works should not refuse to assume its share of the cost of the rebuilding made necessary through the construction of a dyke within the town limits of the town of Laprairie. I am pressing for that work because it is absolutely necessary; it is most urgent. The people are threatening suit against the town of Laprairie if the road is not opened. Upon whom is the responsibility for the closing of the road? My answer is that the Department of Public Works at Ottawa is responsible.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The information my officials give me is to the effect that the work on the road was submitted to and approved by the town of Laprairie.

Mr. DUPUIS: You mean the dyke?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Whatever was done and whatever effect it had upon the road was approved by the town of Laprairie. If the people of that town wish to have the highway improved they are perfectly free to go ahead with the work. We believe we have made their task much lighter, and the expense involved will be much less than it would have been had we not done as we have done.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am sure the minister's officials will corroborate my statement when I say that before beginning the work on the dyke they obliged the town of Laprairie to deliver into their hands and to place under their authority a certain parcel of land, including a road. They threatened that unless this abandonment on the part of the town took place, they would not build the dyke. As I stated before, the dyke was properly built, but the town of Laprairie was forced to abandon a certain piece of land along the shore of the St. Lawrence river. If the Department of Roads are the sole owners of that piece of land, I believe there should be some remedy. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, I am not making this statement simply for purposes of political expediency. The minister knows perfectly well that I do not bother him very often. I must tell him, however, that in respect to this matter I am pressed by the public not only of Laprairie-Napierville, but of Beauharnois, Chateauguay and Huntingdon. The town of Laprairie has received request after request for the reopening of the road but has not been able to comply, because, owing to the conditions prevailing on the road, and the state in which it was left by the federal Department of Public Works, the reopening has been forbidden.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. DUPUIS: No, it is not carried. I hope the minister will give me a favourable answer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not believe I can add anything to what I have already stated. The hon. member has explained the situation from his standpoint, and I have explained it from mine.

Mr. DUPUIS: Give me $10,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I cannot promise him that this year I can authorize an expenditure of that amount on the road.

Mr. CARDIN: I understand that following the cancellation of a contract awarded to an Ontario company for the building of a pier in the port of Sorel, a claim for damages has been filed. Is the minister in a position to inform me as to what has become of that claim?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am informed that a claim was made and an adjustment effected by taking over certain materials on hand. I am not aware of any outstanding claim. As the hon. member knows, the contract involved an extensive expenditure for which there was no parliamentary appropriation.

Mr. CARDIN: Will the minister supply me with the details of the settlement?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes. I will give the hon. member particulars concerning the action taken by the department.

Mr. GRAY: For some time the minister has been considering work in connection with a warehouse on the wharf at Sarnia, and I should like to know why some amount is not placed in the estimates for that work. I make the inquiry because I find he has included in the estimate the sum of $9,500 to be expended in Wallaceburg, which is situated in a neighbouring constituency. I have no fault to find with the Wallaceburg expenditure, but I do say to the minister that having proceeded to the extent of asking for tenders for the construction of the warehouse on the public dock at Sarnia, and having gone to the point where those tenders have been practically awarded, with the exception of actual closing, to a Chatham firm, I wonder why the work was not proceeded with. We are in dire need of a warehouse at Sarnia, at which point there is a harbour second to none on the great lakes. We have there a public wharf all ready for a warehouse, but without the facilities of a warehouse proper use cannot be made of the wharf. I should like to ask why the minister has included in the estimates an expenditure for a neighbouring constituency and has left out the city of Sarnia.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I understand the proposition in Sarnia involved the extension of the wharf and the building of a large warehouse thereon. Then, there is some trackage which is not completed. It is perfectly true that the item did appear in the estimates, and tenders were asked for. No contract was awarded, and therefore no contract was cancelled. This is just another case where, faced with shrinking revenues and a demand for an endeavour to make revenues meet expenditures, this and other works were not proceeded with.

Mr. GRAY: Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is a much more important centre, and that the work should have been proceeded with at the port of Sarnia before proceeding with the warehouse at Wallaceburg. Is there any chance of including in the supplementary estimates an amount for this purpose? We do not ask anything from the government with respect to trackage. If the minister will assure me now that the warehouse will be erected upon the dock, without any extension of the dock, he does not need to worry about the track. I will undertake to look after the trackage if he will look after the warehouse.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry that I cannot give my hon. friend the assurance he desires that the warehouse will be built this year.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia

Essential undertakings—

Columbia river (below Burton)—improvements to diversion work, $2,000.

Comox—float extension and wharf repairs, $11,600.

Deer park—wharf reconstruction, $12,500.

Fraser, Skeena and Naas rivers—operation and maintenance of snagboats, $37,000.

Fraser river—repairs to Woodwards Training Wall, $14,000.

Fraser river—North Arm—dredging, $39,000.

Port Clements—wharf repairs and improvements, $6,500.

Victoria—dredging, $6,000.

Harbours and rivers generally for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $100,000.—Total, $243,800.

Mr. REID: I notice there is an item of some $39,000 for dredging in the north arm of the Fraser river. That is very good, but where is the appropriation for the dredging that is being carried on at the present moment?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is in item 124. This year, as in past years, the expenditure has been made from that general vote, and will continue to be made from that vote.

Mr. REID: Is there a sufficient amount in item 124? I see the appropriation is the same as last year, but the dredging that is being done in the main channel of the Fraser is practically new work. I was wondering why the minister could segregate the $39,000 for the north arm and not put down anything for the main channel of the Fraser, which is practically new work and will probably cost around $50,000 or $60,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The north arm work is an undertaking that would naturally be done under contract, whereas the work in the main Fraser, as my hon. friend knows, is done with our own dredges and paid for out of the general vote.

Mr. MUNN: In my riding of Vancouver North, there are perhaps thirty or forty steamboat landings, wharves and floats. When this government took office in 1930 these wharves and floats, generally speaking, were in good repair. I would like to take the hon. minister for a trip in that country, and I do not think he would be very proud of the condition in which he would find the wharves at the present time. This government took charge of a property on which the people in my riding had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, and they have not even taken care of the ordinary, necessary repairs. If for instance the wind blows a door off a farmer's barn he fixes it up, but they have not even taken that much trouble to keep things in repair. I have written several letters to the hon. minister, and I must say he answers the letters promptly and gives me a very polite reply, but I never get any action. Every year I have been asking, not for new work, but for reasonable repairs; and even taking into consideration the hard times there is no reason in my opinion why this government as guardian of those properties should not take care of them by making the required repairs. There are hundreds of men on relief in British Columbia, many of them living right alongside these wharves and floats, and if there had been any cooperation, any common sense used, this work could have been done without cost beyond that of taking care of these men who are unemployed. At the present time several of the wharves are entirely out of commission. From little villages here and there where the wharves have been out of commission on account of storms or reasonable repair work done, people have to go perhaps in a rowboat or along the road or trail to some other landing at great inconvenience. I do not think it is fair that these people should be treated in that way. The hon. minister should give my riding some little consideration. I have had mighty little, practically none since I have been here. I assure him that when the present government came into office those public conveniences were in reasonably good repair, but at present they are in anything but good repair.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend again points out an opportunity for spending more money. There is no doubt that a number of these wharves do need expenditure; we have reports to that effect. But again I can only plead shortage of funds. When my hon. friend says he did not get any work done in his constituency I can only point out that he is in error, because during the last year in North Vancouver we carried out thirty-one works at an expenditure of $14,369, one-sixth of the whole amount spent in British Columbia out of this vote.

Mr. MUNN: Perhaps I exaggerated a little, but I meant those I recommended direct. These others were taken care of, but there were several cases where repairs that I asked for were not taken care of. I realize that this is not a time to ask any government to spend money, but when you have a property that has cost money, that is a public convenience, an effort should be made to keep it in repair so that the public can make use of it.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, it is a striking tribute to the integrity and fairness of the minister that so many men among his political opponents have risen one after the other to speak of it. I do not think I ever saw that happen in this house before, and I am pleased to add my testimony to the same effect.

Now I will say a word or two about the appropriations. As the minister truly says, I suppose I am asking for more money to be spent. I understand the policy of the department is not to do any new work but to maintain the works that are already in existence. That certainly is all I ask, or that I think the hon. member for Vancouver North asks. The vote out of which these things comes will be the general vote of $100,000; that is not enough. I suggest that it should be enlarged, not necessarily to spend it, but to have it in case it is necessary. I heard many comments in the early part of this session from the minister and from hon. members saying that an extraordinary storm which occurred last fall necessitated extra work which had not been foreseen. I have lived forty years in British Columbia and I never saw a winter yet that there was not an extra storm at some period, an abnormal and unusual one; it always happens, and it ought to be provided for. I have before me the estimates prepared by the minister's own engineers in British Columbia as to what they thought was necessary for the even bare upkeep of these public works in my district. It totals $40,000, and out of that there is one item in these estimates for Comox of $11,000. But the other items are just as urgent and necessary. It is not my suggestion alone that we need $40,000; it is that of the minister's own engineers. I would not ask and I am not asking for a penny to be spent unless on the O. K. of his engineers. In fact I think in the case of two works it is not necessary to spend what the engineer recommended, because I thought he had been got at politically and had recommended something that was not called for. At any rate this $40,000 has the endorsation of his own practical, experienced engineers. I will not read all the details, as some of the hon. members for Quebec did; I could go on for an hour giving names and explanations, but they would be only names to the minister and I would be wasting the time of the committee. His deputies and engineers are acquainted with these works; they know what is necessary and I do not think they would ever say that every item is not required.

One hon. member said the coast line in his constituency was some 780 miles in length, and he seemed to think that was something unique. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have one fiord in my district that is almost equal to that. I never took the trouble or went to the expense of figuring out what would be the total coast line, but certainly it would run to almost six or seven thousand miles if all the indentations were measured. The two engineers recommended an expenditure of $40,000 for works now in existence, with no provision for emergencies, which are bound to develop due to storms and other factors. That sum is forty per cent of $100,000, the entire vote, and certainly you could add another $10,000 for emergencies. There you have half the vote for the whole province of British Columbia recommended by the engineers for Comox Alberni. There are three other districts, making four in all, which will require the expenditure of money in this connection, and I suppose the Skeena district would require an even greater expenditure than my district, while some of the others perhaps would require a little less. Also there are several lake wharves in the interior which must be looked after out of this vote, and we find one district out of four requiring one-half the total vote. That is why I suggest that there is not enough money being voted.

Now just a word with regard to the general principle. There are three reasons why these works should be maintained as we go along, and the first reason is that it would be cheaper in the long run. I think somewhere in the scriptures you will find this quotation:

There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.

That is the situation; it does not pay to be penny wise and pound foolish. I have some recollection of a wharf approach, a float, which was broken during a storm. Only $10 or $12 would have been required to repair that approach at the time, but before they got around to it the constant dragging of the broken portion of the float necessitated an expenditure of something over $100. This is just an illustration; it could be duplicated in scores of cases. It pays to keep your house, your car, your wharf or anything else in good repair; it does not pay to let it go down, because you must repair it in the long run, when it costs more.

The second reason is that it is not fair to the settlers. These men have been encouraged to go and have gone in there, and for twenty years their only means of access has been by water. It is not a case of driving or walking over a road as compared with going by water; it is their only way of obtaining supplies. The steamers, which are getting larger all the time with the increased traffic, will not stop at these wharves if they are not safe; they are afraid of accidents. They simply refuse to call; whether or not the settlers must go ten or fifteen miles in an open row boat, they will not call until repairs are made. Of course that is not fair to the settlers.

The third reason is that it is economically unsound, because the life of these works is very short. An uncreosoted pile or log has a very short life. I suppose the minister's engineers would know exactly, but I should say they would not last more than four years at the most. I know of a float that was put in during the month of August; the very best cedar logs and so on were used, but it was so ravaged by teredos that it had to be renewed the following September—just thirteen months afterwards. That is an illustration of the short life of these works. Of course when the piles are creosoted they last much longer, perhaps for fifteen or eighteen years if nothing happens in the meantime. When you take a work whose life is only four years and leave it out of commission for six or nine months it certainly makes your work very costly for the short time it is in operation.

Therefore I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that they should be repaired; I believe it would pay the government to keep them in good order. I think it is the best policy in the long run, and it is only a question of voting the money a little sooner. I do suggest to the minister that $100,000 is insufficient to carry on the work in British Columbia. It does not make a great deal of difference, it seems to me, whether we vote $100,000 this year and $200,000 next year or $150,000 this year, and the same sum next year; it would be cheaper if we did so. I am fully seized of the need for economy, but as I said before sometimes it is the best policy to spend wisely. I hope the minister will bear that in mind when he is preparing the supplementary estimates.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I wonder if the minister could tell me what part of the vote was spent in the riding of Skeena last year, and where it was spent.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Eight works were given attention in the constituency of Skeena, at a cost of $3,239.82.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Would the minister tell me where those works were located?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The list I have gives the work done in all ridings. I can find those in Skeena, but it will take a little time.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Perhaps the minister could let me have it later.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will try to give it to the hon. member now. I see Port Clements, $914.44; Port Essington, $95.54; Prince Rupert, $15.06, lighting for float; Queen Charlotte City, $18; Sandspit, $1,088.25, and Stewart, wharf repairs, $50.04. I believe that is all.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is it the intention of the department to carry on the work indicated by the items in vote 121?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have not yet allocated this vote or determined on how it will be spent. I gave the expenditures made last year. We do not know where we will spend the money this year, but it will be spent where it is needed most.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): But will those undertakings set out in vote 121 be proceeded with?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I misunderstood my hon. friend. It is our present intention to proceed with those special items, though we do not know what the future may bring.

Mr. MUNN: I should like to appeal to my hon. friend on behalf of the people at Robert's Creek, in connection with which I wrote the minister a few days ago. This is quite a prosperous community, and the wharf was partly destroyed during a storm which occurred a month or two ago. Four of five times a week the boats from Vancouver pass within a couple of hundred yards of this wharf, but they cannot stop there; they must go to the wharf at Wilson Creek, which belongs to the Union Steamship Company. This is several miles from Robert's Creek, and these people must pay wharfage on any goods handled over that wharf. This puts them at a very great disadvantage. During the summer time a number of boy scouts and girl scouts and other societies go to that district for their summer holidays. I consider that this is an emergency work and on behalf of the people I appeal to the minister to restore this utility.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A small expenditure was made at this point last year. My hon. friend's request has been placed upon the list of those items for consideration in connection with expenditures under this vote. I may say to my hon. friend that the list of requests very much exceeds the total amount of this vote, so we will just have to do the best we can.

Mr. MUNN: I have no doubt of that, but this is an extreme case.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1930-31 the general vote for Ontario was $85,000, whereas for this year it is $200,000; the vote for Nova Scotia in 1930-31 was $100,000 as compared with $200,000 for this year; the vote for New Brunswick was $60,000 as against $125,000 and for British Columbia, $75,000 as against $100,000. In this last instance the increase is only one-third whereas in the case of Quebec there was an increase from $100,000 to $400,000, or three hundred per cent. Is there any rule to govern in arriving at this vote, or does the minister just jump at it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The present Minister of Public Works does not jump at anything any more than did the former minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid he does not jump as much.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He endeavours to exercise the best intelligence he has, assisted by the advice of his officials, considering at all times the amount of money placed at his disposal.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The basis of my objection to this item is that the works performed under it are not submitted to the house. Can the minister give any reason why in some cases this vote has been increased to four times what it was, whereas in other cases it has been increased only by one-third?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): For instance, we had information that Nova Scotia had suffered from severe storms. We are asking the district engineer to make reports and give us an estimate of what is required. The estimates are based upon the information we receive. Although the information is the best obtainable, it must necessarily follow that no rule of thumb or any other rule can be applied to the fixing of estimates. I would point out to my hon. friend that he increased his general vote from $75,000 to $100,000; perhaps he will tell me what principle he employed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does the minister mean that these items are to cover repairs which were rendered necessary prior to the vote being passed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Not altogether. They are based upon our experience from year to year as to what is required. Some years we have to defer to the next certain works which should be but are not done. Last year we had to do this, and it will probably have to be done this year.

Mr. REID: Is it the intention of the department to complete the new channel prior to the beginning of the freshets? Has the minister any information as to the silting up of the old channel which may interfere with shipping on the river?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We are doing our best to complete the channel. As my hon. friend probably knows, a double shift is working on the dredge and we hope to complete the channel before the freshets arrive.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I gather from the minister that he is including in this general vote the amounts required to make repairs rendered necessary by conditions which have already arisen. Is it his usual practice to include in this special vote repairs rendered necessary before the estimates are prepared? I understood him to say that the total had to be estimated in order to provide for contingencies which might arise because of storms during the year and I should like to know if he expects that the storms will increase three hundred per cent in some provinces and only thirty three and a third per cent in others?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend knows very well that that is not the basis upon which this estimate is made. I have told him that there is no principle as to storms or anything else upon which we can rely. My hon. friend carried a substantial general vote and this vote is for the very same purpose. Our specific items have been reduced very materially and this general vote is enlarged to enable us to meet emergencies rather than have the money tied up in some specific vote so that it cannot be used when something more urgent turns up.

Mr. NEILL: Could the minister give the total—I will not ask for the shameful details—of the few meagre nickels which have by some fortuitous change been scattered around the district which I represent? I know he will blush when he states the amount because it is so small; I will blush when I hear it, but it may be just as well to have it upon the record.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There were thirty-two works undertaken in my hon. friend's constituency and $22,440.44, or more than one-fifth of the general vote, spent.

Mr. NEILL: Then I was right in stating that the vote was not large enough.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I agree with that statement.

Mr. NEILL: I am somewhat in the position of the young lady teacher who went to the bank to get her salary cheque cashed. The teller had run out of clean bills and he asked her if she would be offended by having to take dirty ones, with the possibility of getting some microbes. She said she was not afraid because no microbe could live on the salary she was getting.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services; no new works to be undertaken, $25,000.

Mr. VENIOT: I hope the minister will excuse me for taking up a little of his time at this point. Unfortunately I was ill at home at the time the New Brunswick items went through and therefore was not in a position to obtain the information I would like to obtain. Under appropriation No. 116 I see an amount of $25,300 for wharf extension and repairs at Shippigan. Is it the intention to ask for tenders for this work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: I am glad to hear that, because I have word from home that it is understood that tenders would not be called for and that the department was already preparing to see that only such-and-such persons would get on that work. I am satisfied now that if the work is under tender, things will be all right.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Perhaps I am trespassing on the rules of the house, but I wish to refer to another item:

Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $125,000.

Either under that item or under another further on, No. 124, "dredging, maritime provinces," is it the intention to do any dredging work in Tracadie harbour this year? If it is, this would be quite satisfactory; but if the minister has not money devoted to that purpose, that is for continuing the work done in 1930 by a suction dredge, I forget whether it was No. 4 or No. 12, I wish to point this out to him: An expenditure of $175,000 or $165,000 was made for the construction of breakwaters for the opening of a new entrance to Tracadie harbour. Tenders were called for this work in 1930 under the former government; the contract was awarded under the present government and work was completed last year, I think some time in October, and accepted by the department. If no dredging is done in Tracadie harbour this year out of this item for dredging in New Brunswick or the one for harbours and rivers generally in that province, that work will remain in such a state that it cannot be used and $175,000 will have been spent without there being any chance of the work already done being used. In these times of depression the government should be anxious to do everything possible to help people to earn their living, and if the opening of the new channel at the entrance to Tracadie harbour could be proceeded with this year, this would mean giving a chance to earn a living to from seventy-five to one hundred fishing boat crews. If this dredging is left as it is and the $175,000 breakwater already constructed remains idle, those people will have no means whatever to earn their livelihood in the fishing industry. The present entrance to Tracadie harbour is and has been for years too dangerous to allow those people to carry on their work in the fishing industry. Prior to about four or five years ago, the lumber industry was flourishing in that district, but now that the mills are closed and that industry is not carried on to any great extent, the people there have to resort to farming and fishing. The dredge boat is in Tracadie harbour; it was idle during all 1931 and 1932; it has to remain there because it cannot get out without dredging its way out. It is going to decay because no repairs have been made. The minister might as well have it employed to do this useful work which will give those people the means to earn their livelihood.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is not proposed to do any work in the way of dredging in Tracadie harbour this year.

Mr. VENIOT: I am sorry to hear that.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The only reason is that the appropriation will not permit. When the construction of the breastworks or breakwater referred to by my hon. friend was undertaken, it was realized that to make the work effective, dredging would have to follow. The breastworks had to be constructed first. The importance of the work to the fishermen is fully realized and I can only assure my hon. friend that when circumstances permit and when funds are available, we shall resume that work, but I do not hope to be able to do so this year.

Mr. McINTOSH: Before this item is carried, I should like to say something under item 120.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Go ahead.

Mr. McINTOSH: But I can say what I want to say under item 120, just as well under item 123. This item deals with harbours and rivers. I notice British Columbia is getting $354,000 out of this vote for harbours and rivers; Quebec is getting $789,000; Ontario is getting $815,000. The maritimes, I notice, are getting over $700,000. I was asking myself: Where do Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta come in? We have a great area of country and yet under item 120 we are given the paltry sum of $15,000. Before I amplify that statement, might I ask the minister what this sum is for?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is just as the item states, for the maintenance of existing services, no new works to be undertaken.

Mr. McINTOSH: In what provinces are these existing services?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The note I have is that this is required to provide for the maintenance and repair of existing harbour and river facilities in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest territories. In former years this appropriation was used only for small repair work of $1,000 and under, and special votes were taken for large repair works.

Mr. YOUNG: Does that include Churchill?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not think so.

Mr. McINTOSH: Has the minister before him a record in regard to a vote of $4,000, either in 1929 or in 1930, for clearing the rapids between Meadow lake and the foot of the Grand rapids on the Beaver river?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My officers inform me that we have no particulars on that matter here. I shall be glad to obtain the information and send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. McINTOSH: I understand a vote of $4,000 was passed for that work, but I am not certain whether the work was ever done. May I say that Meadow Lake is a thriving village 125 miles north of North Battleford, and is in a very productive agricultural area. It ought therefore to be the point which would draw all northern trade 250 miles north from Churchill river down the Beaver river and along the Meadow river to Meadow lake. Between Meadow Lake and Grand Rapids this waterway is filled with rocks for miles so that navigation is impossible, and about four or five thousand dollars would render that river suitable for navigation. It would bring northern trade down to Meadow Lake and on to North Battleford. It is important that something should be done in that direction. We find here a large vote for Ontario, a large vote for Quebec, and an extremely large vote for the maritimes, but there is a paltry vote for the three prairie provinces. I am at a loss to understand why a small sum of $4,000 should not be spent to clear the rocks out of this otherwise navigable stream.

The minister cannot really say that he has not the money, because the expenditures in the other four large areas of Canada which I have indicated prove conclusively that he has the money; and since he cannot plead a want of funds for this small undertaking I would impress upon him the importance of investigatiing the matter and doing something at once. I urge this matter upon the minister not only from the point of view of the importance of clearing that river in order to make it navigable but because there is a good deal of relief wanted in that area. Indeed, I have under my hand a telegram pointing out the need of relief there. The telegram says: "Much relief required in the Meadow Lake country." That means that these people are not getting relief from the Saskatchewan relief commission, and therefore the expenditure of a few thousand dollars on a public work of this kind would be well advised.

Although parts of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta may be called the prairies, the minister must remember that in the far north we have wonderful rivers and lakes, and transportation by water is quite important to the people living in that section, as well as to the people living in the middle parts of the provinces, because northern trade ought to come southward, and coming in that direction it would benefit the centres lying south of these rivers and lakes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not think my hon. friend can seriously compare the western provinces with Nova Scotia.

Mr. McINTOSH: No, not according to this vote; I shouldn't think we could.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not think he can compare them in any way from the standpoint of requirements with regard to wharves or anything in that line.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not on the basis of equality.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In the east there is a coast which is exposed to severe storms. There are fishermen all along the coast and there are wharves and breakwaters, all subject to rapid deterioration and requiring constant renewal. The conditions are altogether different. I suggest that if my hon. friend will diligently look through the expenditures of Canada he will find that the provinces he is speaking about are in large measure compensated by other expenditures which they need and which they are entitled to have for their development, but which are not applicable to the maritimes. I can only say that I will consider the matter, but I think that my hon. friend will agree that it is not a fair comparison to suggest that the expenditures should be on anything like a basis of population. The demands and the conditions are not at all the same. We are trying as far as possible to meet the demands according to the locality.

Mr. McINTOSH: I did not argue that the expenditures should be on the basis of population; I do not think they should. I said that, far from it, it was apparent that the votes we have carried are not on the basis of population. But to a certain extent they ought to be, and they are not, and it was on that foundation that I was presenting a claim for a small vote for the clearing of this navigable river, or at least a river that ought to be navigable. I submit that the minister ought to investigate the matter and come to a decision. As regards the requirements of Saskatchewan, I know that we do need public money. We are the expanding part of the dominion and I am quite sure that the minister will not make out that we are getting more than we ought to get. As a matter of fact, we have not obtained by any means the fair share to which we have been entitled in the last twenty-five years.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Though we have no rivers in the prairie provinces such as hon. members in the east boast of, I know of some rivers in western Canada beside which, considered from certain points of view, a few rivers in the east are mere streams. I hear of the wonderful fishing for trout and even for salmon in the rivers of eastern Canada. Well, in the river in my district they go fishing for dinosaurs. Go to the museum and you will see that we supply the dinosaur trade for Canada from Red Deer river. If that does not prove that we have real rivers in the west I do not know what does.

Mr. DONNELLY: Following up what the hon. member for North Battleford said, I admit that we in Saskatchewan have no great rivers or lakes. We freely admit that in the maritimes and Quebec there are breakwaters, wharves and many other public works of this kind which must be looked after, and which require the expenditure of a good deal of money. I sometimes think, however, that when we in the west ask for some money for the Hudson Bay railway, which is the only thing on which we have public money spent, hon. members from the east should bear in mind that when we give them money for breakwaters, wharves, dredging and so forth, we are only asking for what is justly due us when we make requests for expenditures on that undertaking.

Item agreed to.

Mr. PRICE: May I ask the hon. member for North Battleford what he has to say with regard to the bonus received on wheat of $12,000,000 in the province of Saskatchewan? What did the maritime provinces get?

Mr. DONNELLY: What did you get from freight rates?

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. member is misinformed; Saskatchewan did not get $12,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Order; this discussion is out of order. The item has already carried.

Dredging

Maritime provinces, $149,200.
Ontario and Quebec, $215,500.
Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $36,800.
British Columbia, $130,000.—Total, $531,500.

Mr. BOWMAN: Mr. Chairman, I note that the dredging item for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta has been reduced from $46,800 to $36,800. Will the minister tell me how the reduction is accounted for?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is a lump reduction brought about by the fact that it is proposed this year to operate only one dredge instead of two. It was thought that the reduction could well be made.

Mr. BOWMAN: Will the minister tell me whether, in view of the amount set aside, it is the purpose of the government to operate the dredge Winnipegosis on lake Winnipegosis?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The appropriation will not permit the operation of that dredge.

Mr. BOWMAN: May I point out that the cutting off of this dredge would be a very serious matter to a large community. The dredge Winnipegosis has been operating on the lake of that name as far back as I can remember. I came to Dauphin constituency about twenty-three years ago, and during all that time, and perhaps for several years previously, the dredge has been operated. Some members have spoken about the lakes and streams in western Canada. Lake Winnipegosis is very large, and stands in size next to the great lakes, Great Bear lake, Great Slave lake and lake Winnipeg. Its area is about 2,000 square miles. A very considerable amount of business in the way of fishing, lumbering, and so on, is carried on on the lake. At its south end there is the village of Winnipegosis, with a population, according to the last census, of 976 people, which constitute the trade centre of the lake. The dredge Winnipegosis has for many years kept the harbour at Winnipegosis open. The village is situated at the mouth of the Mossy river on lake Winnipegosis, and at that point there is a harbour for the boats plying up and down the lake. During the last few years at low water periods it has been necessary to dig a channel out into the lake for a distance of about a mile. That is the only way in which the boats engaged in the fishing business can enter the harbour. Hon. members will readily appreciate that if the dredge Winnipegosis is not allowed to operate during the coming summer the effect upon the community will be serious. As hon. members know, during the last few years there has been very little moisture in western Canada, and in most of our lakes, even in a large lake such as lake Winnipegosis, the water is extremely low; I am told that at the present time it is three or four feet lower than it is under normal conditions. About a year ago, in the winter of 1931-32, the department spent a considerable sum of money blasting out the bottom of the Mossy river so that the boats might enter the harbour—under the conditions obtaining before that, they had been unable to enter in safety. The dredge has been operating in the channel to which I have referred, and its operations extend practically throughout the whole season because the high winds keep filling the channel, necessitating dredging operations throughout the whole summer.

In this connection I shall read a letter received from the mayor of the village of Winnipegosis. Under date of February 15, 1933, and addressed to myself, it reads as follows:

I thank you for your letter regarding dredging operations on lake Winnipegosis.

There is no doubt whatsoever but that the channel from the village wharves to deep water in the lake is much too shallow for safe navigation. Unless dredging is done this summer to clean out the entire length of channel, which is a good mile in length, our steamboats at present in the harbour will not be able to get on to the lake for navigation purposes. We had difficulty last fall in navigating, especially in periods of low water resulting from south winds, so much so that as a result of touching bottom the Armstrong Company's ss. Armenon is now on dry dock for repairs as she damaged her stern bearing to such an extent that it required replacement. She also requires renewing of a portion of her keel which was worn down through scraping bottom.

This work is of paramount importance to this community as without a channel to the lake proper all works will be tied up. There are other works required at various portions of the lake, a list of which Mr. Goodspeed, chief engineer has, including work at two lumber mills on the lake and one channel.

In support of having this work done I would point out that the existence of the village of Winnipegosis rests practically entirely on the products coming in from lake points. There are two lumber mills and two box factories on the lake which bring their production into Winnipegosis. Combined I would estimate that they will produce this year about 250,000 feet of lumber. Our principal industry centres in the fish business, and on account of low water last year it was impossible for the Booth Fisheries Company to operate their tug.

May I add that the summer fishing is carried on about 110 miles up the lake, and it is necessary that the fish be brought down by steamboat and barge. For that purpose there has to be a channel of fair depth, and a good harbour at Winnipegosis in order that these boats may ply their trade and the business be carried on. The letter continues:

This resulted in curtailment of operations in the district, but should conditions be such that the Armstrong Fisheries tug is tied up on account of low water, stagnation will result locally. With an improved channel we anticipate that fish production will be increased this fall, but unless this work is done there is every likelihood that fishing operations will be greatly curtailed, which as you can appreciate will hit this locality very hard.

I feel very decidedly that this work should be done and that the dredge should operate.

Our district here has passed through a very trying time, and the unemployment situation is acute. The only prospect we have of relieving this condition is in our lake operations; stoppage of this would be a catastrophe. The mills mentioned, the box factories and the fishing operations employ a great number of men, not only from the village of Winnipegosis but from the surrounding district.

Yours very truly,

C. L. White.

For many years Mr. White has been a resident of that district, and for some time has been mayor of the village. He is reliable, and from my personal knowledge I know the statements he makes in this letter are quite true.

Then, I have a letter under date of March 7, 1933, from the secretary of the Winnipegosis board of trade. It is as follows:

At a recent meeting of the Winnipegosis and district board of trade a resolution was unanimously passed that I be instructed to write you requesting that you do all in your power to have the Dominion government dredge at Winnipegosis kept in operation over the coming summer.

The water in lake Winnipegosis last year was lower than it has been for a number of years. It is impossible to navigate some of the channels of the lake without doing injury to boats propelled by steam power.

Yours respectfully,

W. S. Howatson,

Secretary.

Mr. Howatson with that letter forwarded to me a letter addressed by him under date of March 24, 1933, to Mr. F. G. Goodspeed, district engineer of the department of Public Works at Winnipeg, as follows:

Dear Sir,—

I have for acknowledgment your letter of the ninth instant with respect to the dredge on lake Winnipegosis. This has been placed before the board, and I have been instructed to place before you the following in regard thereto.

Lake operations last year—1932—would undoubtedly have been most difficult had the dredge not operated. As it was, the river and the approach channel were hardly passable during periods of south winds, as was instanced when the ss. Armenon had to lie outside on occasion and get use of the dredge tug to tow in her barge. In addition to this the dredge tug also had to be used in taking out of the river the same steamboat and equipment, as it was too dangerous to operate the steamboat through the shallower water. The result of this navigating this river and channel has put the ss. Armenon on the bank this winter for repairs, including a cracked stern bearing through wheel hitting bottom, and a broken shoe. If this had happened earlier in the season it would have tied up some fishing operations and resulted in lean times for certain residents.

This leads to the fact that this district practically wholly is dependent on the fishing operations and other industries on lake Winnipegosis. Stoppage of operations through lack of a navigable channel out of this port will have a direct and serious effect on the livelihood of our residents.

I cannot too strongly endorse that statement, Mr. Chairman. Winnipegosis and the surrounding area probably has a population of 1,200 to 1,500 people, in addition to various settlements around the lake, and this population is practically wholly dependent on fishing operations and the perhaps lesser industries that are carried on on the lake. The letter continues:

Appreciating the serious financial situation at present existing the board feels that, although curtailment in dredge operations may be essential, some work must be done here.

May I point out that last year the dredging operations were shortened; they did not take up the whole summer season as in previous years, but were discontinued in the month of September.

The recommendation now is that your dredge operate along the river channel and outside channel for a reasonable portion of the season to make these channels safe for navigation. There is too much at risk with the residents of this district to withdraw all dredge operations.

Regarding the possibility of the water of the lake rising; in a normal year, with a normal rainfall, the lake rises with the spring inflow of water. The evaporation during the summer months offsets this rise. In the present season, wherein we have had a reasonable fall of snow, there will be some drainage into the lake, but owing to the fact that the land is so dry there will not be a normal inflow in our opinion. Against this is the natural decrease from evaporation during the summer, which may bring the water level to what it was last year, or even below that. Our opinion is that only an abnormally heavy rainfall can raise the lake to a safe, navigable level. Again leaving the future of our lake operations in the hands of nature and an anticipated heavy rainfall is too heavy a risk when the livelihood of a large number of people is at stake.

I would therefore request that you give the subject of operating the dredge here further consideration, advising me of your decision.

I think these two communications will indicate to the minister the real seriousness of closing down the operation of this dredge during the coming summer. The very fact that that dredge has been in operation for probably twenty-five or thirty years, and that it is now proposed to take it out of operation when the water is at the lowest level it has been for possibly forty or fifty years, indicates the seriousness of the situation. I trust that the minister will take these representations into serious consideration. It is not a minor matter; it involves as I have said, the interests of 1,200 to 1,500 people in the neighbourhood of Winnipegosis, in addition to a large number of settlers around the lake, which is one of the largest we have in the whole Dominion of Canada. I trust that if the figure which is under discussion is not sufficient to put that dredge in operation during the coming summer the minister will see to it that provision is made in the supplementary estimates for a sufficient amount to keep it in operation so that the channel may be kept open.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend, both on this occasion and previously in conversations with me, has, I think, made out a good case in favour of his contention. I cannot assure him that we will make provision for it, but I will give his very strong argument further consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: Maritime province dredging, item 124, is $149,200. Could the minister tell me where that money is to be expended?

Mr. PRICE: In item 116 I see an amount for Shippigan, $25,300, which is in the constituency represented by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot). I cannot understand what his objection can be at the present time—

Mr. VENIOT: I am not objecting.

Mr. PRICE: —and why he is objecting to other expenditures in different parts of the province of New Brunswick. If ever there was an expenditure in New Brunswick which was not justified it is the expenditure at Shippigan, and here we have an item of $25,300 to continue the work. We had previously an appropriation of $80,000 for Caissie Cape, Kent county, a work which has cost now in the vicinity of $100,000, and was never justified in the world, while other parts of the provinces were neglected under the administration of which he was a representative. No expenditure is allowed for repair of wharves at Pointe du Chene, and nothing for Barachois, one of the French Acadian districts. We have on record the hon. member for Gloucester criticizing, wanting to know how much was spent in this district of Barachois; the people of that district long have desired a wharf, a place to handle their lobster fisheries—

Mr. VENIOT: Order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PRICE: —a portion of the county in which no provision was ever made by the previous administration. I want to say to the hon. member for Gloucester that under this present administration expenditures have been made to provide for these fishermen who have been duly shown to be justified in making the applications they have made. They have been provided for under the present administration as they never were provided for under the government which preceded it. And when the hon. gentleman, if he has the privilege in later years to go into those towns in Westmorland county and tell the good people along Northumberland straits what he told them in previous years with regard to what has been done for them, and criticizing the present administration, I want to tell him that he will meet with just the reception and the criticism he deserves. He cannot go to that district and criticize the present administration which has done so much for the fishermen of Westmorland, whom the previous administration never helped.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that many expenditures made by the previous administration cannot be justified. I might mention this item of $25,300 for Shippigan, which is required to complete work that was begun by the previous administration. The facts are here; many unjustifiable expenditures were made in the province of New Brunswick simply for political purposes, while other constituencies such as my own have suffered simply because they were represented here by members who were in opposition to the government. I do not understand how the hon. gentleman has the nerve to stand up in this house and attempt to justify the expenditure of $25,300 for Shippigan. The same thing applies in Kent county, where over $80,000 was spent in order to construct a wharf and breakwater for about six or eight fishermen. That was the biggest steal ever put over in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: I am somewhat surprised at the heat with which the hon. member for Westmorland has discussed an item which was passed about an hour ago. He should have been in his place then. I have not criticized, either during this session or any other session, the expenditure of money in the province of New Brunswick. I asked for information, to which I have a right as a member of this house. To-night I asked the minister for information with regard to the expenditure at Shippigan, which my hon. friend says is not justified. If that is so let him have his battle with the Minister of Public Works, because I never recommended that expenditure.

Mr. PRICE: Your administration made the first expenditure.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member is wrong when he says this money is required to complete work started by the former government. That is not true. The Shippigan wharf was built years ago, and lately there has been a demand for an addition.

Mr. PRICE: The other government justified it and started the expenditure.

Mr. VENIOT: That addition is demanded in order to afford the shipping interests greater facilities. Last year nine steamers were loaded at Shippigan with wood pulp for different parts of Canada and the United States. Those steamers could take on only part of their cargoes at the wharf; then they had to lay out. I did not recommend an addition to this wharf, and I know the minister will support my statement. I did recommend an expenditure of some $2,500 for improvements to the wharf which would allow these steamers to load there. I have not uttered a word of criticism with regard to any expenditures in the constituency of Westmorland. I asked for information, and that information was given to me. Let me tell the hon. member that if I feel like going into the county of Westmorland, to the Cape Bald district, I will go without any fear of him or the people living there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to get some information before we adjourn. I should like to know where this $149,000 is to be expended.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend full information as to where this money will be spent. The program is only tentative; it is still under consideration, and details will have to be settled later.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Carried.

Mr. HAY: Before the item carries—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Carried.

Mr. HAY: Surely the item could stand until to-morrow—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Sullivan): Carried.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Friday, April 7, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. POULIOT

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to Hansard of Wednesday, April 5 which contains your ruling as to the expunging of certain passages. This ruling having been made, I would direct your attention to the first column of page 3748 of Hansard. I have no complaint to make but in view of your ruling my expectations are high.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is entirely out of order in the remarks he has made.

Mr. POULIOT: I am referring to a reference made to me in Hansard.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege involved. An hon. member when speaking in the house made a certain reference to the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) and the hon. member for Témiscouata is entirely out of order in seeking to discuss this matter at this time. The matter might be discussed in an ordinary debate but it certainly should not be taken up in this way.

Mr. POULIOT: On a question of privilege—

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege involved.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to know whether the word "clowns" is parliamentary.

Mr. SPEAKER: It has not been used.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, it has.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member point it out to me?

Mr. POULIOT: The following appears on page 3748:

> As long as these inferences were made by the hon. member for Témiscouata only I did not object very much to them; I was even pleased at the free advertising for my brother and I did not object for the reason that clowns are never taken seriously.

Mr. SPEAKER: Probably the hon. member should not have used the word but it escaped my attention at the time.

Mr. POULIOT: In order that proper decorum be maintained in this house, would Your Honour be kind enough to order that the above-mentioned quotation be expunged from the record?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member for Témiscouata believes that the word referred to him, I will direct that it be expunged from Hansard.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES

EXPUNGEMENT OF OBJECTIONABLE STATEMENTS FROM RECORD

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take exception to what Your Honour may have done in the way of expunging possible objectionable phrases from Hansard, but I would ask if it is not part of the privilege of the house to control its own records, and whether the house should not, before any statements are expunged from the records, pass a resolution in the first instance. I raise this point now because Your Honour has made decisions which equally affect members on both sides of the house. I did not wish to take exception to anything done in the past but I respectfully submit so far as the privileges of the house are concerned that His Honour the Speaker is the servant of the house in this as in all matters, and the house should itself determine whether anything is to be expunged from any of its records.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will take the remarks of the right hon. gentleman under consideration.

PRIVILEGE—MR. HEENAN

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege: The Ottawa Citizen of this morning contains the following statement:

Hon. William Finlayson, Minister of Northern Development, in the legislature to-day promised to investigate charges made by Peter Heenan, former Minister of Labour in the federal government, to the effect a Liberal merchant had received only $350 for supplies—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order!

Mr. HEENAN: The report continues:

—while a Conservative merchant in the same northern town had received $125,000.

I did not use those figures. The correct figures will be found in Hansard and if there is going to be any investigation I want the Ontario government to investigate the figures I gave.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member can refer the house and the public to Hansard. If every hon. member is to bring up misquotations by newspapers of what he has said in the house, we will never get ahead with business.

Mr. HEENAN: This report states that the legislature is going to investigate and I want it to investigate the figures I gave on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER: The figures the hon. member gave are properly quoted in Hansard. This house has no control over the Ontario legislature as to what investigation it shall make.

Mr. HEENAN: I am quoted here—

Mr. SPEAKER: What point is the hon. member seeking to make?

Mr. BENNETT: This cannot be considered as a question of privilege in this house.

Mr. HEENAN: I am misquoted.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has said so and that is as far as he can go. He has admitted he is correctly quoted in Hansard.

Mr. HEENAN: The figures I gave—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order!

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the hon. member to order. I want the hon. member to understand that there is nothing personal in my remarks with regard to this matter but when the Speaker rises to address the house it is the duty of any hon. member to take his seat. I call the hon. member to order.

Mr. HEENAN: On a question of privilege: Surely if I am misquoted in the press or in the legislature, I am entitled to make a correction.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. member had made his correction.

Mr. HEENAN: I was just about to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member said the figures given in the report are not correct, but he said also that he is correctly reported in Hansard.

Mr. HEENAN: I am going to give the correct figures now.

Mr. BENNETT: That cannot be a question of privilege in this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has made his statement; he has gone far enough.

Mr. HEENAN: Well, sir—

Mr. SPEAKER: I call the hon. member to order.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order!

Mr. HEENAN: I appeal against the ruling of the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no ruling to appeal from; I call the hon. member to order.

Mr. HEENAN: I appeal against the ruling of the chair.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has confused the privileges of this house with the privileges of another assembly. According to his statement, a report appears in a newspaper of what took place in the legislature of Ontario, and it is contended that the statements thus appearing are not correct. The privilege is the privilege of someone in the legislature to correct an erroneous statement of what was said in the legislature, not here. There has been no question raised as to the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statement in this house, neither has it been impugned so far as this house is concerned. The newspaper purported to report what took place in another legislature altogether. If they did it inaccurately, the hon. gentleman might say that it was an inaccurate report of what was alleged to have been said by him. But there is no proof that it was said by a member of the legislature of Ontario or that the report in the newspaper is not wholly inaccurate. That is the ground of the objection that I have frequently urged against the reading of newspaper statements in this house. If we all indulged in that practice, practically the whole time of this house would be taken by each member rising in his place from day to day to explain a misstatement of his position with respect to any given matter. In this case the privilege, if any, is of someone in the legislature of Ontario, and not of someone in this parliament.

Mr. HEENAN: I am prepared to accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker. All I want is a square deal in this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have asked the hon. member to keep order. This is no time to speak.

Mr. HEENAN: May I not correct a misquotation of what I said on the floor of this house?

Mr. SPEAKER: That has already been done.

Mr. HEENAN: No, I have not yet corrected it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have asked the hon. member to resume his seat.

Mr. HEENAN: I am only resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, on the ground that as a member of this house I have been unfairly treated and I am appealing against the ruling of the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

On the order for motions.

Mr. HEENAN: I want to appeal against your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have ruled that the hon. member is out of order; that is my ruling. He has stated his complaint. He has complained that he was incorrectly reported in a newspaper report of what took place in another legislature which has nothing to do with this house, and I submit that he is not within his rights in going further with the matter here, and I call him to order.

Mr. HEENAN: Then I shall take another opportunity of correcting it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not wish to be driven to naming the hon. member and having him expelled from the chamber.

Mr. HEENAN: It makes no difference to me. I will come back again anyhow.

AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale) (for Mr. Senn) presented the fourth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

TAX RETURNS TO BE VERIFIED BY DECLARATION

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 70, respecting the Income War Tax Act (declarations on returns).

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. RHODES: The title of the bill practically explains its provisions. The bill provides that income tax returns shall be verified by a declaration, and it also sets out the form of the declaration.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

AMATEUR BOXING CONTESTS—PROTECTION OF CHILDREN—THEFT OF LOGS

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 71, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Explain.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There are two or three provisions in this bill which I might mention. The first is to exempt from the operation of a section of the criminal code boxing contests which are conducted by amateurs, with gloves not to exceed five ounces in weight, under the auspices of provincial commissions which have been authorized by provincial legislatures. In two or three provinces, notably in Ontario and Quebec, such commissions have been authorized, and recently a question has been raised as to the authority to carry on these contests under such provincial authorization.

The next is a provision brought forward at the instance of the Children's Aid Societies in various parts of Canada to amend the sections of the code in regard to acts of immorality and drunkenness in premises where children reside.

The third is an amendment which seems to have become necessary through recent occurrences, when stench bombs have been set off very frequently in moving picture theatres, and on one occasion I think in a church.

The fourth provision is to make a theft of the removal of logs lying in the bottom of streams and belonging to certain owners.

The other changes are very minor, more clerical than otherwise.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORIZATION OF PROVISION OF MONEYS TO MEET EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to empower the Canadian National Railway Company to issue notes for a sum not exceeding $13,058,604.63 for refunding requirements and capital expenditures for the calendar year 1933, and to authorize the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the governor in council, to make loans on the security of such notes to an amount not exceeding the said sum; and to authorize the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the governor in council, to make temporary and accountable advances not exceeding in the aggregate $47,941,395.37 to meet the net income deficits occurring during the calendar year 1933, the total of such deficits as certified by auditors appointed to audit the accounts of the company, to be included in the estimates submitted to parliament at the first session following the close of the said calendar year.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS—POOL TRAINS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson), on the orders of the day yesterday, asked if the arrangements under which pool trains between the two companies are run had been approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners. I have information to-day that on March 21, by order 49675, the Board of Railway Commissioners approved of those trains.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed from Thursday, March 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion.—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I wish to register a strong protest against this bill, because it is submitted to a committee of the whole house instead of to the regular committee before which such matters are generally studied. At page 2777 of Hansard the Minister of Railways and Canals is reported as follows:

In connection with the question asked by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Heenan) as to whether or not it is my intention to submit this bill to the committee on railways, shipping and telegraph lines, I should like to say that it is my intention to suggest submitting it to a committee of the whole house. These matters have been dealt with very fully by the royal commission. This commission travelled from coast to coast and took evidence from all those who desired to submit evidence. They heard provincial authorities, railway officers, railway employees—public bodies and individuals—any who felt that they had some contribution to make to the solution of the question. In addition, the Senate committee heard further witnesses, most of whom had appeared before the royal commission, and it is my opinion that it is not necessary to go to the trouble and expense of hearing these witnesses over again.

In the same debate I am reported at page 3000 of Hansard as follows:

First I would say that the matter of expense is only a pretext. What was the expense of hearing witnesses in the Senate? Does the minister know? Will he tell us? Was it so much?

There was no answer to that question. Then I continued:

The railway debt is $2,300,000,000, a figure—

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is quoting from a previous debate on the same subject matter, namely the debate on the second reading of the bill. According to my understanding of the rules he is not entitled to do so.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking to the point of order, the rule of the house is to the effect that we cannot quote from a previous debate, if the quotation is in regard to another matter. At this point however we are discussing the same bill, and I submit a member is entitled to quote Hansard on the same debate. However to save time and trouble I shall not insist upon reading further from Hansard, and shall be content to read some documents which do not appear on Hansard but which it is my intention to place on record. The quotation I have just read appears at page 3000 of Hansard of March 14, 1933. Any hon. member may find at that point what I said.

Then, I sent the following question to the assistant clerk:

Mr. Pouliot:

1. What has been the taxation of each witness heard at each of the sittings of the Senate committee on Bill A of the Senate from November 10, 1932, to February 16, 1933?

2. What is the total amount of other expenses incurred by that committee in connection with said bill?

On March 17, 1933, Mr. Speaker ruled as follows: "This is a matter for the Senate, not the House of Commons. Question not in order." Then I wrote to the Minister of Railways and Canals. My letter under date of March 20, 1933, is as follows:

Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Doctor Manion,—
On Friday last I sent the following questions to the assistant clerk of the House of Commons.

The questions I have already mentioned are quoted in the letter. I then continued as follows:

The Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons wrote me thus: "This is a matter for the Senate, not the House of Commons. Question not in order."

Will you kindly give me that information?

With thanks,

Sincerely yours,
Jean-François Pouliot.

The answer to that letter is as follows:

Office of
The Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Canada.

March 22, 1933.

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—
I am obliged for your letter of March 20, and for your suggestion that I give you information as to expense incurred by the committee of the Senate which dealt with Bill A.

As the Speaker of the house has already advised you, such inquiries should be addressed to the officials of the Senate, who could no doubt give you the desired information.

Yours very truly,
R. J. Manion.

The letter is addressed to Jean-François Pouliot. I then wrote the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen leader of the government in the Senate, the following letter:

Ottawa, March 23, 1933.

Right Hon. Arthur Meighen,
Leader of the Government,
The Senate,
Ottawa. Ont.
Dear Mr. Meighen,—
Pray find herewith enclosed copy of a letter to Hon. Doctor Manion, dated March 20, and copy of his answer dated March 22.

Would you kindly communicate with the officials of the Senate in order that the information asked for is forwarded to me as soon as possible?

With thanks,

Sincerely yours,
Jean-François Pouliot.

Then I wrote another letter to the same right hon. gentleman. It is as follows:

Ottawa, March 25, 1933.

Right Hon. Arthur Meighen,
Leader of the Government,
The Senate.

Dear Mr. Meighen,—
You will greatly oblige me if you answer my letter of March 23 at your earliest convenience.

Sincerely yours,
Jean-François Pouliot.

The answer of the right Hon. Arthur Meighen was as follows:

The Senate,
Canada.

Ottawa, March 28, 1933.

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—
On my return to Ottawa to-day I have your letters of the 23rd and 25th instant.

As I understand the procedure it would be necessary for you to move in the Commons that a message be sent to the Senate asking for the information you desire.

If such a message is received in the Senate I shall see that it is given prompt consideration.

Yours very truly,
Arthur Meighen.

This letter was addressed to J. F. Pouliot, Esq., M.P. It was impossible for me to have such an address moved in the House of Commons and communicated to the Senate. It would have been impossible for me to have the answer to-day when the bill is being considered before the committee of the whole house. So my good friend, the good Samaritan, the Hon. Senator Horsey, was kind enough to put the following question before the Senate:

Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Bill
Inquiry—Expenses of Witnesses

Hon. Mr. Horsey inquired of the government:
Whether any expenses were incurred by the government for the payment of the expenses of witnesses who appeared before the Senate railway committee on Bill A, and, if so, what was the total amount paid therefor?

Right Hon. Mr. Meighen: No expenses were incurred for payment of witnesses.

Mark you, Mr. Chairman, this answer is of the utmost importance, as it illuminates the whole matter. I shall repeat it.

Right Hon. Mr. Meighen: No expenses were incurred for payment of witnesses.

This question and answer is to be found at page 445 of the official report of the debates of the Senate. I protest strongly, Mr. Chairman, against the bill being submitted to the committee of the whole house, and I expressed a similar protest upon the second reading of the bill. It is impossible for any hon. member to give a clear decision or to make a clear judgment concerning unknown facts. True, the minister has said that the commissioners travelled from ocean to ocean, and gathered an immense amount of evidence, with which they are satisfied. When the bill was originally brought to the Senate it was such a bad piece of legislation that the leader of the government in the Senate, the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, refused to accept responsibility for it. Senators had the opportunity and the advantage of hearing witnesses in the Senate committee. Many witnesses were called, among others Mr. Beatty and Mr. Hungerford. They gave evidence which to a certain extent changed or transformed the bill. I state now that the matter cannot be properly considered in its present form, and that it should be studied carefully by a special committee of the whole house, a committee which has existed since confederation for the purpose of examining such matters. In that way any hon. members on the committee would have an opportunity to hear witnesses in connection with any point upon which they wished to base a judgment.

Now, sir, this bill is submitted to this committee. The statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals during his speech on March 7, when he moved the second reading of this bill was that in order to save expense and trouble we should study it here without hearing any witnesses. This is most startling. What is the expense? The leader of the government in the Senate says there is no expense in calling these witnesses. I understand it is a great honour for Mr. Beatty, Mr. Hungerford, Mr. Ruel and others to appear before a committee of the Senate. I do not know if they feel that it is such an honour to appear before a committee of the House of Commons. That bill should have been moved first before the House of Commons. It came before the Senate first because the government had no other legislation ready to give to the Senate to examine, while we were discussing other matters in the House of Commons.

Now, sir, to show the committee, and prove to the minister himself, that it is absurd to go on with the study of this bill without hearing other witnesses, I will ask him the following questions:

How many superintendents and assistant superintendents, first on the Canadian National Railways, second on the Canadian Pacific Railway, are civil engineers?

How many officers earning $2,500 or more a year in the offices or management of both railways were there in 1930,? in 1931, and in 1932?

How many of them were dismissed each year?

How many of them are there this year, 1933?

How many of them have been dismissed since the beginning of the year?

On the other hand, how many men earning $2,500 or less have been in the employ of the Canadian National Railways, and in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and how many of them have been set back in both railways for the same periods I have mentioned, in 1930, in 1931, in 1932 and since the beginning of 1933?

And if the hon. minister is kind enough to answer these questions I will be glad to ask him some more.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, in regard to one matter which the hon. gentleman mentioned, that of the expense of bringing witnesses before a House of Commons committee, I did not emphasize that feature as much as he has emphasized it; I merely mentioned it as incidental. I pointed out that the witnesses had been heard before the royal commission and before the Senate committee, and that the evidence as given by these witnesses was, to a large extent, open to perusal of hon. members of this house and therefore was not necessary to repeat it. Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Beatty both appeared before the royal commission, Mr. Beatty appeared before the Senate committee, Mr. Hungerford took the attitude that his evidence had already been given before the commission and it was unnecessary to repeat it because there was no change in it. That was the point, the expense was incidental.

In regard to the dismissal of various employees of the two railways, I do not know the details as to the men who were laid off. I cannot give these details at the moment and I do not know that it would help particularly in the consideration of this bill to give that information. The information in a general way has already been brought down; that is the house has before it, in replies to various questions, the number of employees which the Canadian National had in various years and the number which it has at the present time. That really covers the information the hon. gentleman wishes so far as that road is concerned. He also wanted to know how many superintendents on the Canadian National were civil engineers. I am sorry I cannot tell; there are some who are civil engineers, but I believe even my hon. friend, or myself, neither one of us being a railway man, will realize that a man does not need to be a civil engineer to be a superintendent. According to my information superintendents on the various railways of this and other countries are chosen from various groups of employees. Sometimes they come up from the ranks of the locomotive engineers, the firemen, and other classes of railway workers. And some come from the civil engineers. The reason is, I am informed, that it is considered better to have superintendents of various trainings, it is to the advantage of the road. I shall be glad to give my hon. friend any information I can, but I hope he will not ask for information, as to matters of which I have no knowledge, and cannot reasonably be expected to get.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, it is a good time to understand our position clearly. I do not want to have any evidence repeated. I have here the evidence, the report of the commissioners, the report of the debate in the Senate, and of the Senate committee, and the Hansard of the House of Commons containing the discussion on this bill. I do not wish any evidence to be repeated, but I want new facts to be put before the house. I cannot get them to-day from the Minister of Railways because he does not have them at hand, but if the heads of both railways were here I could secure that information from them. What the hon. minister has said proves that my contention was right.

Now, sir, I have another ground of protest against this bill, I would say a ground of protest at large. I am strongly against the abandonment of governmental responsibility. The government must have a policy with regard to the railways. The government has to foresee. The only way to have that policy applied and applied well is to put the railways under the direction of the Minister of Railways. I do not see why the Minister of Railways is at the same time the Minister of Canals. Both of course are transportation systems, one by rail, the other by water; but canals should rather be under the Minister of Marine. The Minister of Railways has to supervise the whole railway system of this country from coast to coast and that is enough for one man. My idea about such legislation as this is that there is no reason for the government to abandon its responsibility, to put it on other shoulders, the shoulders of trustees whom they appoint, but who will not be responsible to this house. The only way to have the railway problem settled in this country is for the government to have a definite policy and then have it applied by the Minister of Railways to both railway systems and all branches of railways. On our statute books we have an extensive body of railroad legislation. It has been enacted by the parliament of Canada, both houses, it has been given the royal sanction and it is the law of the country. Now shall we vest some individuals with the powers of parliament? I am here as a member of parliament, I and my two hundred and forty-four colleagues have certain rights. We can lay before this house the complaints we have to make, we have the privilege to submit legislation to this house, but as soon as this bill is passed the powers we now have will be handed to other people who will not be responsible to this parliament. Sir, it is a sign of weakness; a strong government should have a strong railway policy and be able to apply it strongly, apply it themselves, and not lean on others to apply it. This is my second ground for objecting very strongly to this bill.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, this act provides for the amalgamation of the two great railway companies in Canada. I should like to address a series of questions to the minister; I presume he has the information available, because the effect of the bill is so great and has to do with so many of our people that I do not think we can over-estimate its importance. Already we have seen some of the results of this cooperation between the two companies; this afternoon the minister referred to the service between Montreal and Chicago, the first result of which was the laying off of probably several hundred employees on the two systems. So far during the discussion of this measure the minister has not given any information to the committee as to what might be the effect of this cooperation on the unemployment situation in Canada. Further, I should say it is common knowledge that for some considerable time the railways have been investigating to what extent they can amalgamate their services in various parts of the country. I understand that this amalgamation extends to the joint use of terminal facilities both in freight and passenger service, as well as the amalgamation of the freight and passenger services themselves.

Therefore I should like to ask the minister if he is in a position to tell this committee how far the railways have gone up to the present in regard to amalgamating their services; what the probable effect will be in regard to the number of men who may be laid off, and further what financial saving is expected after this cooperation is put into full effect.

Mr. MANION: I am afraid my hon. friend is asking a rather difficult question. He is as familiar as I am with the statements that have been made by various persons as to the savings that may be made by amalgamation. This is not amalgamation, but there is no doubt that through cooperation there will be a considerable saving, and no doubt some of that saving will be brought about by the laying off of a certain number of men. I have no idea how many men will be affected in this way, but I am convinced that if business revives as we hope it will in the near future, instead of the railways even under cooperation laying off men they will be taking them on. My conviction is that when business comes back to anything like normal, not necessarily to the peak year of 1928, the railways will take on thousands of men no matter what may be done in regard to cooperation.

I cannot give my hon. friend the number of men who probably will be laid off; I do not think anyone in the country could give that figure at this time. I do not suppose either Mr. Beatty or Mr. Hungerford could say how many men are likely to be affected. In the first place any cooperation that may take place must be agreed to by the two railways; then it is put into effect, and until that is done naturally nothing like definite figures can be given.

Mr. HEAPS: The reply of the minister is very unsatisfactory; he bases his statement on ifs and hopes. These have not proved very satisfactory in the past two or three years. It is not much satisfaction to the men who are to be laid off if they are told to hope that prosperity will return in the near future; neither is it satisfactory to tell them that if conditions get a little better than they are to-day they may not be laid off. We do know that the president of the Canadian Pacific railway told a meeting in Winnipeg a short time ago that if amalgamation were carried out the railways could get along with from seventy to seventy-five per cent of the present staff. Under a complete amalgamation of these two systems that would mean the laying off of about forty thousand employees. On the other hand, if we do not have complete amalgamation but get as close to it as possible by means of cooperation—though I cannot see the difference between amalgamation and cooperation—we should be able to get a proportionate figure. So far as I can see, having in mind the service between Montreal and Chicago to which the minister referred, there is no difference between amalgamation and cooperation; it makes no difference to the men concerned what you may call it. They only know that they are to be laid off as a result of the two railway companies working together.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is the weak point in this method of dealing with this bill. My claim is that if the bill had been submitted to one of the railway committees or to a special committee of the house we could have heard the experts of the two companies, and could have obtained some idea as to what the financial saving would be and as to the estimated number of men who would be laid off. The first question addressed to the minister to-day brought the answer that he had no information to give us. If the Minister of Railways is not in a position to give the committee any information on the most vital point of the whole bill I say we should rise and report progress until the minister has the information the committee desires.

Mr. MANION: No one in the world could give that information; it is asking for the impossible.

Mr. HEAPS: It is not impossible at all. If Mr. Beatty can tell the Winnipeg board of trade that forty or forty-five thousand men would be laid off as a result of amalgamation I imagine he could give us almost identical figures as to what would be done in regard to cooperation.

Mr. MANION: I must say that I read Mr. Beatty's speech, and I do not remember seeing any such statement.

Mr. HEAPS: I quoted his exact words when I discussed the matter on the motion for second reading. Mr. Beatty's words were to the effect that the two lines could get along with from seventy to seventy-five per cent of the present staff. Surely the inference is obvious; it means that if the present staffs of the two railways total about 170,000 men, 40,000 would have to be laid off.

Mr. MANION: As a matter of information would my hon. friend be good enough to quote the exact words, if he can place his hands on them?

Mr. HEAPS: I will undertake to give the Minister of Railways the exact words of Mr. Beatty before the afternoon or the evening is over. I think most hon. members of the house read the full report of his speech, in the course of which the words I have quoted were used. I think that speech was delivered during the early part of last February. If Mr. Beatty could give the number of men who would be laid off through amalgamation surely it should be possible to get the number of men who will be laid off as a result of cooperation. Mr. Beatty also stated that by the process of amalgamation there would be a saving of some $75,000,000 a year. He can give that information to the public of Canada—

Mr. MANION: That was under amalgamation.

Mr. HEAPS: But if we take it on the basis of cooperation what is the difference?

Mr. MANION: There is a vast difference.

Mr. HEAPS: I know there is a difference, and that is why we want the figures. Surely we have a right to expect them. I have just been handed a copy of the speech made by Mr. Beatty in Winnipeg on February 8 of this year.

Mr. BOWMAN: At what page?

Mr. HEAPS: This is on page 9; Mr. Beatty says that he is unqualifiedly in favour of unification for the purposes of administration. He goes on to say that careful and comprehensive inquiries by the officers of the company have persuaded him that under unification permanent economies of $75,000,000 a year would be secured after the lapse of a period to permit adjustments to be made in the ordinary way.

In another part of this speech will be found the statement with regard to the number of employees who will be required if the companies were amalgamated. I do not have that at the moment, but I can assure the minister that those words are contained in the speech. Now I am trying to get from the minister some idea of the number of men whose services will be dispensed with as a result of cooperation. I want to go further and ask what provision will be made to care for those men if, through the action of this parliament, they are laid off. There has not been a word said in that connection during the course of this debate. We had a commission consisting of seven individuals, two of whom represented the bondholders and shareholders in the United States and Great Britain. During the whole course of their proceedings not a thing was done in an attempt to make any provision for the men who will be laid off as a result of the cooperation of the two railway systems. It is common knowledge that both railways have field men out in various parts of the dominion with the avowed object in view of cooperation or amalgamation of services, and that being so, I am sure the department must have some information at hand to show how far the work has proceeded along that line. Can the minister not indicate just what the situation will be in the immediate future?

Mr. MANION: There is no doubt that for some years both the railways have been looking into the question of cooperation at various points. One of the first recommendations made by this government, both by the Prime Minister and myself, to Sir Henry Thornton and Mr. Beatty, when we came into power, had reference to the greater need of cooperation than had existed in the past. But even prior to that the two railways undoubtedly had been canvassing the possibility of cooperation at certain points. I do not believe that either railway has any definite figure as to the number of men that would probably be laid off as a result of cooperation in different parts of the country. It all depends on the extent to which the cooperation is carried. In the case of cooperation affecting a few passenger trains it might mean very few men; but in extensive cooperation a great many men might be involved. In the speech delivered by Mr. Beatty, from which my hon. friend has quoted, Mr. Beatty spoke of unification—that was the word my hon. friend quoted, I believe. I distinctly remember reading about a statement on the part of Mr. Beatty regarding a possible saving of $75,000,000, but although I should not care to oppose my views to Mr. Beatty's on the subject, I am bound to say that I have grave doubts that such a saving could be effected. As to my hon. friend's request for definite information, I do not think that either of the railways can say precisely what number of men may be laid off. I have seen statements attributed to Mr. Beatty and Mr. Hungerford, certainly to Mr. Beatty, that in the course of natural decrease year by year in the number of the employees there need not be very much interference at all with the number of those who work on the railways. Some high officials of both the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways have made that statement to myself. At any rate, while I am not disputing my hon. friend's word, I should like him to quote what Mr. Beatty said with regard to forty or fifty thousand men being affected.

Mr. HEAPS: He mentioned a percentage, seventy-five per cent.

Mr. MANION: Yes, and as my hon. friend says, that would work out at forty or fifty thousand. If I remember rightly Mr. Mosher did make a statement before the Senate committee to the effect that it would mean the laying off of some forty thousand men, but I do not agree with him; I do not think that by any method of cooperation that is possible, even by amalgamation, any such number of men would be laid off under any circumstances, even under the present depressed conditions in the country.

Mr. HEAPS: What the minister has just said shows the difficulties that will be encountered throughout the passage of this bill if we have not the experts of the railways to inform us. The fact that Mr. Beatty could make a statement along the line he did would indicate that he must have had certain information on which to base his statement with regard to the saving of $75,000,000; if he had not some basis for that statement he would not have made it at all. No doubt these figures were given him by experts in his own company and then submitted in the course of a public speech. I would ask the Minister of Railways to reflect for a moment on one of the statements he has made to the committee. He said that in the natural course of events, taking into account those men who leave the railway service each year and those who die off, there need not be much unemployment on the two railway systems. On a moment's reflection, I do not think the minister would have made that statement. Does he not realize that each year there is growing up a new generation looking for work?

Mr. MANION: Not a new generation of railway men.

Mr. HEAPS: It makes no difference. The new generation must be employed somewhere, and if the possibilities of employment on the railways are being gradually eliminated it means that fewer and fewer men among the rising generation will have any chance of entering the service. Here we have a government who a few years ago pledged themselves to end unemployment in this country; yet the very basis of this bill is to throw twenty thousand persons out of work. That is something that must be considered. In my own constituency there are thousands of railway men whom I shall have to face when I go back and give some information as to what their prospects are likely to be in the immediate future. Am I going to go back and tell them that when this matter was being discussed on the floor of the house the minister was unable to give any information?

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman is disputing a statement which he is under the impression that I made. I did not give it as coming from myself; I said that I had read somewhere that Mr. Beatty had made the statement, and I added that other railway men had spoken to the same effect, that there need be no great interference with the railway employees even by amalgamation. The hon. gentleman was very much shocked. As a matter of fact, I was quoting Mr. Beatty from memory. However, perhaps it might be well for me to read the exact words used by Mr. Beatty in a speech he gave in Winnipeg before the Canadian Club. It was the second address delivered by the chairman of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it was made on February 8:

> Railway labour has been disturbed naturally by proposed changes in administration. The necessary adjustments cannot be made without some disturbances of staff. But, wisely handled, these need cause no widespread discomfort or dislocation. The normal turnover of labour will absorb the majority of those displaced as the adjustments are made. The temporary inconvenience involved will not be greater than that resulting from our present situation, and the change will lead to a permanent cure for the worst evils. There is not the slightest reason to fear that a consolidated system, operated by men who have dealt fairly with employees in the past and who know the priceless advantages of esprit de corps, would show lack of feeling in working out the problem of reorganization. I believe that the advent of such a system would immeasureably improve the position of railway labour in Canada.

Mr. HEAPS: The speech I referred to was the one Mr. Beatty delivered in Toronto, not in Winnipeg.

Mr. MANION: This is subsequent to the Toronto speech.

Mr. HEAPS: It was the Toronto speech that I was referring to. I quoted from it, where he said something about seventy-five per cent of the present labour. I have the exact words somewhere.

Mr. MANION: If that is the case, Mr. Beatty has answered Mr. Beatty.

Mr. HEAPS: I will not try to defend Mr. Beatty, but perhaps the minister can answer a simpler question: What is the result of the present amalgamation of services, or cooperation, between Montreal and Chicago and between Montreal and Toronto?

Mr. MANION: The cooperation has only begun and I do not think it is possible to give absolute figures at the present time. The judgment of the railway commission, as I indicated to the hon. member for South Perth this afternoon, was handed down only on March 21 and has been in effect since April 1. I quite admit that there may have been some men laid off as a result of the pooling of services, because that is natural; they have cut two fast trains to one fast train, and it does not require so many men to handle one.

Mr. HEAPS: Surely the minister has in his possession some information as to the number of men affected by the amalgamation of services between those points. I am told that in Toronto sixty-one employees of the Canadian National were laid off. Surely the same thing would apply to other terminals.

Mr. MANION: I hope my hon. friend does not think that I carry in my head the figures concerning every change made in the railways from day to day, from week to week and from year to year. I can get that information for my hon. friend but I cannot give it offhand right at this moment. I do not think he is fair in asking for such information out of the blue sky.

Mr. HEAPS: The unfairness of the whole proceeding is that we have to proceed with this very important bill without having the experts of the railways before us in order to furnish information. I do not expect that the minister carries all this information around in his head. I know he is next to an encyclopaedia but I do not expect him to be a complete encyclopaedia. Perhaps he will obtain the information as to what the amalgamation of the services between Montreal and Toronto means in the number of men affected, as well as the estimated savings to the railways.

Mr. MANION: This bill will probably take some time and I will obtain the information in the meanwhile.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I think the committee should have the number of men laid off since 1929, divided into those laid off due to the slump in railway business and those laid off due to amalgamation of services.

Mr. MANION: If possible, I will have that information later in the day.

Mr. MITCHELL: We should also have the number of men laid off through the increase in the size of locomotives and length of trains. That would give a proper picture.

Mr. BOWMAN: Mr. Chairman, a discussion of the number of men laid off naturally brings up that portion of the commission's report which deals with the contributory causes of the railway problem. I would direct the attention of the hon. member for North Winnipeg to the fact that Mr. Beatty's statement to the commission is predicated upon the assumption that from 4,000 to 5,000 miles of railway will be torn up and destroyed. Mr. Beatty's reference to the saving of $75,000,000 was through a possible saving which would be spread over a period of five years. These facts should not be lost sight of. Chapter IV of the report deals with the contributory causes of the railway problem. The major portion of that chapter deals with the competition from other transport agencies, special attention being given to the competition from road transport. I do not purpose dealing at any great length with the facts set out under that heading, as I have no doubt they are familiar to all hon. members of the committee. However, I should like to refer to the general findings of the commission, and I quote from paragraph 163 as follows:

> It is generally recognized that there is a need for regulating road motor services and for equalizing the conditions under which road and rail services are provided.

The following rather important statement is made in paragraph 164:

> If the railways lose a large part of their profitable short distance traffic to the roads a readjustment of the whole freight rate structure may be necessary, with a possible increase in the rates charged for the long distance and heavy freight traffic.

I referred to this possibility in a speech which I made in this chamber about a year ago. At that time I stated that unless some adjustment was made in the matter of freight rates as between private motor competition and so forth it might be that the railroads would have to come to the Board of Railway Commissioners to ask for an increase in freight rates. As a matter of fact, this was suggested by one of the labour representatives, who appeared before the commission. In my opinion the competition from motor trucks and private automobiles is one of the questions which must be solved if we are going to see any daylight in our railway problem. The following appears in paragraph 165:

The railways themselves should be empowered to provide and operate services of road vehicles, subject to whatever restrictions are imposed upon other road transport operators.

I think most hon. members will agree that up to the present time the railways have been more or less asleep as far as the meeting of this type of competition is concerned.

An hon. MEMBER: How would they meet it?

Mr. BOWMAN: They could meet it in the manner suggested by the paragraph I have just quoted. Certain of the railroads in the United States have already gone into this class of business.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Some of the provinces prohibit the railway companies from entering that type of business.

Mr. BOWMAN: I am not so sure that they do.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The province of Ontario has done it already.

Mr. BOWMAN: To what extent?

Mr. CHAPLIN: They control the highways and the granting of charters.

Mr. BOWMAN: There can be no question but that up to the present time the competition has been unfair as between the motor truck, the private automobile and the railways. I think this fact can be summarized best by reading another sentence or two from the report. Paragraph 166 contains the following:

By concentrating less on mutual competition and by turning their energies to the coordination of the services they provide, a properly coordinated system of transport will be evolved.

That is the finding the commission arrived at after investigating this matter carefully for some months. Paragraph 167 reads:

The federal and provincial governments in cooperation should, however, examine this question of the regulation and taxation of road motor vehicles with a view to equalizing the conditions under which road and rail transport is carried on, and to securing uniformity throughout the dominion. A joint inquiry in which both federal and provincial governments were represented should enable a measure of agreement to be reached upon the general principles which should govern the regulation and taxation of motor vehicles using the public highways.

An finally in paragraph 168:

In our view the general principles upon which operators of road passenger services and common and contract carriers of freight should be regulated are as follows:

(i) Schedules of rates and charges should be published.

(ii) Within those schedules common carriers of freight should accept and carry what is offered to them without discrimination between customers and commodities.

(iii) Operators should be insured against all risks, including third party risks.

(iv) Operators should keep accounts on a prescribed system and render returns to appropriate public authority on a common basis.

(v) Minimum standards in regard to working conditions, including wages and hours of labour, should be required.

(vi) In the interests of the safety of the public, a standard of fitness should be required of all operators in regard to their vehicles.

(vii) Due regard should be had to the preservation of road surfaces, and, to this end, restrictions should be imposed upon the size and weight of road vehicles in accordance with the type and character of the highway.

Finally the commission suggested that there should be a uniform system of licensing based upon and providing for the maintenance of highways. I understood from a remark of the Minister of Railways when this bill was introduced that at the last interprovincial conference in January this question came up, and that a resolution was passed by that conference, and it was agreed that the Minister of Railways should submit to the provinces a questionnaire dealing with matters relating to the regulation of truck and motor bus service, and that after the information had been assembled and studied a conference of the appropriate officials of the dominion and the provinces would be called to consider the whole situation. It was further agreed that the dominion statistician should assist the Minister of Railways in preparing the questionnaire. I was subsequently informed by the Minister of Railways himself that the questionnaire had been prepared and sent out to the various provinces. I should like to ask the minister if any report has since come to hand from the provinces on that question, and if so what was the general purport of their replies.

Mr. MANION: There have been no replies received as yet to the questionnaire beyond the acknowledgment of receipt and stating that instructions were being given by those receiving the questionnaire, the provincial premiers in most cases, to the appropriate officials to prepare the information required.

Mr. BOWMAN: Perhaps the minister, without divulging something which the house should not be told, might state what was the general attitude of the provinces in respect to the matter to which I have referred.

Mr. MANION: They were all agreeable to the idea of a questionnaire, and also to the idea of dealing with this matter, but some of the provinces took the attitude that already their charges upon motor vehicles were sufficiently high and that they would not agree to any change in that regard. It was rather with the idea of bringing about an equalization of these charges that the questionnaire was sent out, with a view to dealing with those cases where the motor vehicle was not paying its due proportion of the maintenance and interest charges for highways. However, the provinces were all agreeable to the proposal as finally decided upon.

Mr. BOWMAN: Has either of the railway companies made application to the government for the authority suggested in clause 165 of the Duff commission's report, that the railways themselves should be empowered to provide and operate services of road vehicles, subject to whatever restrictions are imposed upon other road transport operators?

Mr. MANION: That is a question which comes within the purview of the provinces, but in any event the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National have already decided upon a certain amount of that type of transport in the territory from Toronto to Sarnia and also to Windsor. They have organized and I believe have put into operation, at least they were hoping some time ago to put into operation, a service of collection and delivery by motor truck at either end of the journey. They had to put that matter up to the provinces in order to get their consent. I presume that those arrangements are now in effect, but I have not been definitely advised.

Mr. BOWMAN: Does the minister know whether former railway employees have been given positions as truck drivers and so forth under these new arrangements?

Mr. MANION: The railways have nothing to do with the trucking themselves. What they did was to make arrangements, hiring or renting or leasing arrangements, whereby trucking companies at either end of the route handled the trucking that pertained to the traffic.

Mr. SPROULE: Those arrangements are now in effect at Sarnia in my riding.

Mr. HEAPS: A few moments ago the Minister of Railways and myself had a discussion as to what Mr. Beatty had said at a certain time and place. I have now his exact words, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding in any quarter as to what he did say, I wish to quote from the published report of Mr. Beatty's speech before the Canadian Club at Toronto on January 16, 1933. I shall quote the whole paragraph in which he refers to expected lay-offs of employees, which appears at page 16 of this booklet, which I have no doubt most hon. members have received. Mr. Beatty says:

> Then there is the second objection that union means a disregard for the human element in that it will involve a reduction in personnel. It is true that this may be the result; yet such a reduction is inevitable unless very prosperous conditions are restored. But those who are apprehensive are apparently unaware of the substantial turnover of railway labour in normal times. It has been shown by investigations in the United States that the normal turnover by withdrawals due to ill health, death, retirements and voluntary changes runs from five to six per cent per annum of the total number of employees. Therefore, from natural causes, in the event vacancies were not filled, the personnel of Canadian railways would be reduced in five years from twenty-five to thirty per cent, and it would not be possible to administer the unified properties with a staff reduced below seventy-five or seventy per cent of normal. Consequently, the danger of injustice can be readily exaggerated, and, of course, the danger of reduction, even to the extent I have mentioned, decreases with the return to more normal times and heavier traffic.

It will be observed that the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway admits that in all probability they will get along with 70 or 75 per cent of the staff, assuming that amalgamation takes place, but he also says that if conditions were normal there would be an annual turn over in normal times of about five per cent. But the facts are that conditions are not normal, and we are now legislating in abnormal times, trying to adjust abnormal conditions to suit a particular case or argument. I put this question to the minister: Has he or the government given any consideration to compensation for the men who are likely to be affected by this legislation?

Mr. MANION: I did not question the hon. gentleman's word, but I wanted to have the exact words that Mr. Beatty used, and I have since had them drawn to my attention. I would however point out that the quotation which I gave from Mr. Beatty was not so extreme as the statement he made three weeks later in Winnipeg.

Mr. HEAPS: You would not call Mr. Beatty an extreme man.

Mr. MANION: No, I did not mean that he was extreme; I meant that the statement was not so extreme with regard to labour. My hon. friend will find even in the statement which he quoted that Mr. Beatty said:

Therefore, from natural causes, in the event vacancies were not filled, the personnel of Canadian railways would be reduced in five years from twenty-five to thirty per cent, and it would not be possible to administer the unified properties with a staff reduced below seventy-five or seventy per cent of normal.

He uses the word "normal," by which I presume he means the normal number of employees in a normal year. Certainly this is not a normal year, nor have we had one for some time.

Mr. HEAPS: Then his argument in regard to lay-offs and the five per cent turnover also falls to the ground because when employment is scarce the turnover is less, because people do not give up their jobs and look for another. The turnover in employment to-day is much less than it ever was before, because there is so little employment and there are such vast numbers of unemployed. In view of the possible effect of this legislation, could the minister inform the committee as to whether or not the government has given any consideration to compensation for the men who are likely to be affected by the passing of the bill?

Mr. MANION: Undoubtedly individuals in the government have given consideration to the matter. It is debatable however whether this or any other government should take any class of employees, namely railway employees, and compensate them in the event of their being laid off, without making such practice general. I doubt whether my hon. friend is any more anxious than I am to see that in times such as these the unemployed are cared for. I believe any reasonable or charitable man, I was going to any Christian man—I believe I might include any Hebrew gentleman, so that I may not be accused of any discrimination—would take the attitude that the industrialists and public men of Canada should work out a scheme whereby, in depressed times such as these through which we are passing men, whether they be railway employees, or any other class, will not be thrown on the street. I feel that very strongly, and this is not the first occasion upon which I have expressed my views. The first time I made a public statement to that effect was in Windsor about two years ago. Upon that occasion I said that in times like these it is the duty of industrialists and public men to endeavour to look after employees. Unfortunately when depression does come upon us it is almost impossible to put such a scheme into effect. When recovery does take place it will be our duty to endeavour to see in the matter of unemployment, that we shall be in a better position if again, unfortunately, we are faced with a depression.

Mr. HEAPS: Let us start now.

Mr. MANION: If I may repeat, I do not believe this or any other government should take the attitude that railway men alone, of all classes in the community, must be looked after if laid off. It would not be proper to give them special attention, and ignore other classes. I realize it is a difficult matter, and I am willing to give it consideration. So far, however, as far as I know, the problem has not been solved.

Mr. HEAPS: I say that this legislation places the railway men in a category different from other employees. They are to be laid off as a result of parliamentary action. We are about to put through parliament a bill, the effect of which will be to lay off a large number of employees. Had there been no act of parliament, the railwaymen would probably have had no grounds upon which to lodge a complaint. In the present instance however there is a distinction which I have no doubt the minister appreciates. It is a fact that as a result of an act of parliament undoubtedly a large number of railway employees will lose their positions. Under the circumstances does the minister not feel that the railwaymen are placed in a category different from that in which they would have been had no legislation been passed?

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for North Winnipeg has placed the case before the minister much better than I could have done. I agree with him in everything he has said, and I feel sure that all hon. members on this side of the house hold a similar view.

The bill before the house is not a temporary measure to deal with an emergent situation. As the minister and other members of the government do not like the word "amalgamation" I shall say the legislation is designed to merge for all time the services of the railways in Canada. As I have said before outside of the house, undoubtedly the bill is for the purpose of amalgamating the operations of railway services in Canada. If the government does not like the word "amalgamation" they may use the word cooperation, merging, or any other word they like. The effect would be the same, so far as the men employed on the railways are concerned. I am not quoting Mr. Beatty, Mr. Hungerford, the late Sir Henry Thornton or anybody else, because my experience and the experience of all men who have had to do with railways must teach me that after this bill becomes operative we will never have the same number of men employed on Canadian railways. When this bill becomes operative, men who have worked ten, fifteen or even twenty years on the railways might as well kiss their railway service goodbye. It is designed to amalgamate train services, not for to-day or to-morrow but for all time. As an hon. member on this side of the house pointed out there must be agreement, and a continuance of agreement, because it is so directed in the measure.

With the larger engines—the larger power, as we call it,—and with all the up-to-date facilities there is no doubt that to-day railways are in a better position than ever before to move heavy tonnage quickly. Under the legislation before us one railroad is going to move that tonnage where previously it had been done by two and sometimes three railroads.

Only last week one train was taken off between here and Toronto, and another between Toronto and Montreal. No doubt the people will receive as good service, but the elimination of the service means that over one hundred men must be taken out of the service of the railway companies. I know that is what the bill is designed to do; we might as well face the facts. Unless it is designed to throw men out of service, the bill can have no purpose whatever. I repeat that it is designed so that the railway companies may be induced to cooperate for the purpose of throwing men out of work in order that salaries may be saved.

As the hon. member for North Winnipeg has intimated, in the discussion of this measure we ought at least to have some information from the government as to the number of men likely to be affected by the bill. How many men are going to be thrown out of employment? What are their ages? Are they fit to enter any other occupation, or have they passed the age where they could adapt themselves to other work? Where do they live? Do they own property, and is their property going to be abandoned along with their jobs? What compensation is to be given to them? Surely when we are discussing a measure designed to save $75,000,000 a year we ought to give consideration to spending a few of those millions so that the hardships of employees might be eliminated.

[Mr. Heenan.]

That is the reason why, upon the second reading of the bill I asked the minister whether he purposed submitting it to the committee on railways and canals. If the bill went before a committee the representatives of the men affected would have a right to appear before the committee, so that members of the House of Commons—not the Senate—might hear them. The House of Commons is now dealing with the matter, not the Senate. I am not one who is content to take his cue from members of the Senate as to the proper attitude to take towards this or any other bill, and I make that statement with all due respect.

We should have had railway presidents before us, and should have been afforded the opportunity to ask them the questions we are now asking the minister. I feel sure they could have given us the information better than the minister because he has not got it. I do not see how he could have it unless he went into this question very thoroughly with the presidents of the railroads. We could ask them how many men their cooperation proposals would displace, what compensation they intended to give these men and their families, what provision they intended to make for the future of these Canadian citizens. We should have this information, because to my mind this bill affects more vitally the railway men of this country than any measure that has been put through this House of Commons. Here we are, the parliament of Canada, legislating to do what? To undo the very thing that prior parliaments did. These railroads were built under the authority of parliament. Private corporations and others secured charters and authority to build railroads through territories whose requirements in the matter of transportation should have been demonstrated and full information should have been laid before parliament as the prospect of the railroads paying, what competition they would have to meet, and so on and so forth. After this authority was given and the lines constructed men and boys were induced and encouraged to leave their homes and farms and enter railroad service. Had not the parliament of Canada given charters to build these railroads, and did not the papers picture in flaring headlines the great development of this country, its prosperity, the opening up of new territories, clay belts, fine agricultural and mineral areas, forest resources and undeveloped water powers? Men were induced to go into this line of work, they were sent out to isolated towns to do their part in carrying on the commerce of Canada; it was a national proposition. They got married, they built or purchased their little homes, all their life savings are in those homes, their families are there, there are communities along these lines in which practically ninety per cent of the people are railway employees or their dependents. They built their churches, their community halls, all these facilities, and now at the stroke of a pen it is suggested that parliament wipe this out without giving those men or their wives or dependents any consideration whatsoever. All through this affair the people most vitally affected are the only ones who have not received any consideration. Not the slightest consideration have the railway employees of this country received. Take first the appointment of the commission, no representative of the railway employees was selected—

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman's remarks, but there is a rule of this house that when we are in committee we must deal with the clause under consideration. The hon. gentleman made the same speech as he is making now on the second reading of the bill. It was appropriate then, but I submit that it is not appropriate at the present time. He is not the only one; a number of hon. members have also transgressed the rules. I do not wish to limit debate but I think we should keep within a mile or two of the clause under discussion. I do not think we are within a thousand miles at the present time.

Mr. MITCHELL: Observe the twelve mile limit.

Mr. HEENAN: When the minister was speaking on the second reading of the bill, in concluding his remarks he made a similar statement with respect to myself, which I had ignored up to the present time. He stated figures, which he said I gave, that were entirely wrong; he misquoted me, said I was only half right all the time, that it was usual. Now he says I should keep within a mile of the measure. I want to tell him, Mr. Chairman that when I am defending the railway employees of this country and the government introduces a bill that is designed to throw thousands of them on the streets, I am within my rights in speaking for them in this house. I say it is designed to throw thousands of them on the streets, and the Minister of Railways ought to be the last one to raise a point of order when any man is trying to defend them.

Mr. MANION: I rise again to a point of order. The hon. gentleman made this same speech on the second reading. It has no bearing on the clause now before the committee. I do not like to interfere with the hon. gentleman, I am trying to treat him with courtesy, but I do not think he should be permitted to make a political speech before this committee under cover of a clause with which he is not dealing at all.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): I shall have to ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the item under discussion. I did not know the item myself when I took the chair, but I understand it is clause 1, namely the title. I ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to that.

Mr. HEENAN: I would like to give it a title, but not the title on the bill!

Mr. MARCIL: It is customary in debating these bills to deal with the title last.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) has the floor.

Mr. MARCIL: I am just raising a point of order. I think this clause should be allowed to stand until later.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the short title, it is not even the title.

Mr. MARCIL: Well the title might be much shorter than it is. I think it should be allowed to stand until the last.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): I will read clause 1—

Mr. POWER: On the point of order, supporting the point raised by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) I suggest that if we are on clause 1, the short title, my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River is in order in discussing anything. But I suggest that the custom of the committee has been not to discuss the title until the rest of the bill has been passed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the short title itself is out of order. It relates to last year, and we are dealing now with 1933. It is a year out.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether you are going to give a ruling on that point, but I suggest that if we are speaking on the title of the bill it should be:

This act may be cited as an act for the amalgamation of the operation of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways, 1933.

On that I want to point out that as such it is designed to throw thousands of railway men out of employment, consequently the title as presented to the house is not a proper title. Now I am not going into it, because the Minister of Railways evidently does not like to hear me making the same speech as I made on second reading, but if I have opportunity I am going to make that same speech, with a little latitude, on the third reading as well. The point I want to make is this, that if this measure had been submitted to a committee of the house—and I ask the minister to consider it even yet—the railway employees could, through the members representing the various constituencies, have secured from the railway companies the information that the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) has now asked the Minister of Railways for—and I say in all fairness to him I do not see how he could expect it. I want to point out that the government has some responsibility in connection with the employees. I read during the election campaign of 1930, not the slogan "amalgamation never, competition ever," which has been repeated so often, but the report that the then leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) promised the people in the maritime provinces on the 10th of July that if he were elected he would split these big heavy freight trains in two so as to give employment to double the number of engine and train crews in the maritimes. Surely we have to have some regard for this kind of thing. I notice some members of the committee looking askance at me, but I have it here in the Halifax Herald of July 10, 1930, on page 4, under the heading:

The Railway Herald and the Labour Men's Forum

It is a Conservative writer, who writes during election times especially, presenting the railway men's viewpoint and regarding the government railways, he says:

He (Mr. Bennett), will, until times improve, break up present huge freight trains into two trains, thus employing double as many men, extra trains and engine men, as are now employed. He will restore local passenger trains that have been cut off and thus make further employment for engine and train men, and give people the service they are entitled to.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Who said that?

Mr. HEENAN: That was Mr. Bennett. Then the writer goes on to say:

Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Labour, says this cannot be done, and apparently will not be done if he can prevent it. Hon. Mr. Bennett declares it can be done and will be done if he is elected to power on the 28th. There you may make your choice on the 28th.

I want to point out to the Minister of Railways—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): I should like to read paragraph (2) of standing order 58, because I do not see that the hon. member is confining his remarks to the section under discussion. Section 1 of the act reads:

This act may be cited as The Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1932.

The minister will have to explain whether that date should be 1932 or 1933. Paragraph (2) of standing order 58 reads:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the section having to do with the short title.

Mr. VENIOT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman, before you give a final decision. It is customary to leave the title to be taken up last, but in this case the title has been taken up first. That being so any hon. member has a right to say in general terms why he opposes section 1. He opposes it because he does not think the bill should be cited as the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1932; he does not think that should be the title, so he has a perfect right to give in general terms the reason why he does not agree to section 1. If section 1 is defeated the whole bill is defeated. That is my point of order, Mr. Chairman, and I think your ruling that we are out of order in carrying on a general discussion under section 1 is erroneous.

Mr. HEENAN: I know you want to be fair, Mr. Chairman, but before you took your seat a general discussion was proceeding and the minister was being asked questions which he was not able to answer. We are just carrying on from that point. Even though I may be out of order I do not think I should always be the butt who is called to order either by the Speaker or by the chairman whenever I rise to defend the workingmen of this country.

The point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is that in my riding, which is not large numerically but which covers a wide area, there are several railway terminals. I feel there is the danger, and if I know what the railway companies contemplate there is the possibility, that some of those towns will be blotted out. So if I speak with greater feeling than I have shown in other matters it is because I feel for these people. As you all know I am a railroad man; I earn my living in that way. I have so much seniority that I do not think the government could possibly draft a bill that would put me out of business, unless they knock off my head, and I believe the provincial minister of lands and forests is going to do that very soon. So I am not appealing for myself; I am appealing on behalf of the men and women with whom I have been associated for more than thirty years. I see the great danger of these men and their families being thrown in the dirt and sacrificed in the interests of the financial institutions of this country and the money barons of New York.

What is it all for; what is the reason for all these economies? Last year the railways paid more than their operating expenses; I think they had a surplus of income over operating expenses of about $5,000,000. We need the money to-day to pay the interest on the bonded indebtedness; we must sacrifice hundreds and thousands of people in this country so that those who invested their money may get the last pound of flesh. So I think we have a right to ask the minister and the government what is contemplated before this measure is passed. That is why I speak with so much feeling. I do not know how long I can speak or how often I can speak, but I am going to speak as long and as often as possible until I get sufficient information to make clear that the people whom I represent are protected.

I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that if this measure passes, no matter what assurances we may get from the government these people will not be protected. Once this bill becomes law the government will have no more responsibility. They are going to hand over that responsibility to a board of trustees, so far as the Canadian National railways are concerned, and that board will be headed by a man who, once he is appointed, cannot be dismissed though the whole House of Commons and the government want to dismiss him. He can only be removed from office by an address of both houses. I do not care who that man may be; I will not support such a proposal. We are going to put a dictator in charge of the whole investment of the Canadian people in our railways. No matter what assurances the government may give, once this measure is adopted they will have no more control over this man than I will have. He can snub any minister of the crown or the whole government; they will have no come-back unless they can obtain an address of both houses of parliament.

It is easy to see what this means to the railway people in Canada. In the very beginning this bill prevails over all inconsistent provisions and acts which may have been passed previously. All the acts that have been introduced in and passed by this parliament are subordinate to this bill. The chairman of the board, who has the deciding vote in all these matters, is above all the acts that have been passed by the parliament of Canada, and when any matter goes to the tribunal that gentleman has the last word again.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, all I want is some consideration for the railroad men of this country, and I would bring forward the same arguments if we were considering those employed in some other line. A few minutes ago the minister said it was about time the industries of this country got together to see that men should not be employed when profits were being made and then discharged when there was no future for them. I admired the minister for that statement; I give him all credit for it, because it is not very often that we can agree. But what better time could there be for the introduction of that policy than the present, when the government of Canada is asking parliament to pass an act which will have the effect or depriving men of work? Why does not the government give a lead to employers throughout the country? We can do it here. I am not going to object very seriously to the economy that is being practised so long as we make some provision for the railway men and their dependents who are going to be thrown on the streets. If you can save $75,000,000 a year surely you can afford a few millions a year to take care of these men, as the hon. member for North Winnipeg put it, for five years. Give them an opportunity to get on their feet. The railway men of this country have had no consideration from the beginning. When the commission was appointed they had no representation on it but there was a gentleman named Loree on the commission, a man on whose railway there are the worst working conditions in the United States. He was brought here to serve on the commission, and if you will read the evidence you will see that from the day he sat down on the commission until he got up he could think of nothing but to slash the wages of Canadian railway men and to pull down their working conditions. In other words, his whole purpose was to see whether he could not lower their standard of living. That is the evidence before us. Not one working man in Canada was appointed to serve on the commission, to say God bless them, although the present government when in opposition went through the country in 1930, telling the railway men and other labouring classes that they would be given representation on all important commissions. You should have heard how that sounded in the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River—representation on all important commissions. Well, what commission is more important to the railway men of Canada than this one? I am only reiterating the protests of twenty-one general chairmen of all classes of railway men who met in Montreal and wired their protest to this government when they saw in the newspapers that certain gentlemen were likely to be appointed. No notice was taken of them by the government then, nor is any notice being taken of them now, because the minister refuses to allow the bill to go to a committee so that the railway men might be able to present their views. They have no possible way of letting this House of Commons hear their views as to how they will be affected; they are not afforded an opportunity to ask for some protection. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate the fact that you did not rule me out of order.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member said that this act would prevail over all other acts. It does not say so; it says:

> The provisions of this act . . . shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts . . .

That is vastly different. The hon. member made another point in regard to compensating men. It is well to remember that in part II provision is made for compensation of men, so far as the Railway Act in the past has compensated them, at terminal points which are being eliminated. I mention that to show that there is some compensation for that class of labour, just as there has been in the past.

Mr. HEENAN: There is no guarantee of compensation in the bill.

Mr. MANION: There never was any guarantee of compensation.

Mr. HEENAN: The point I make is that we are now passing a measure which is going to throw men out of work, and I submit that we should incorporate in it some guarantee of compensation.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. MANION: I have already given my reasons for opposing that suggestion; I do not think we should compensate one class of labour when it is thrown out of work and ignore all other classes, much as we desire to compensate the men in this case. The leader of the opposition has directed attention to the fact that this clause reads:

> This act may be cited as The Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1932,— whereas this is 1933. The reason for the apparent error is that this bill was introduced in the Senate in 1932. I am going to ask my colleague to move an amendment substituting 1933 so as to avoid any possibility of misapprehension in that regard.

Mr. VENIOT: I am opposing clause 1 for reasons which I consider very important. If clause 1 goes through it means the adoption of this bill practically as a whole; if it does not go through, then my views may prevail with regard to leaving certain railway conditions in the maritime provinces as they exist to-day. Before going into details, showing the reasons for my objection to this first section, I wish to correct the minister on the question of compensation. The minister tells us that under part II of the bill there is compensation for the men at the terminals. That compensation is provided for in the old act and it has reference only to cases where a terminal is closed or changed and men are moved from one terminal or station to another. But the only compensation they get is expense caused by removal from one point to the other. Surely that cannot be called compensation under this act, when men are being retired from the service.

One of the reasons I gave on the second reading of the bill for my opposition was that there was no guarantee in it with regard to seniority. If laid off for a certain number of months or years the men lost their seniority. I wish now to correct the impression I may have left at that time. I have since gone fully into the question of seniority and I find that it is not governed by any act of parliament; it is covered by an agreement entered into between the different railway unions or lodges and the railway affected. I will therefore leave that argument entirely out of consideration.

Let me however call the attention of the minister to the provident fund or, as we now call it, the pension fund. Up to 1929 there was a provident fund, but the statute has been changed and the new Pension Act appertaining especially to railway employees on the Canadian government railways, was passed in that year. All new employees on the government railways must come under the new Pension Act and they can no longer be considered as eligible under the old provident fund. They are empowered to make certain rules and regulations, and such rules and regulations have been drawn up governing the administration of that pension fund. I have here a copy of the rules and regulations and it is provided that a man laid off, if he has not been fifteen years in the service, having reached the age of fifty, cannot get compensation. He may get it, but it is not absolute. It is only permissive, depending on the decision of the board and backed by the approval of the minister. A man who has been in the service of the railroad for a shorter term and is laid off because of changes contemplated, we will say by this bill, has absolutely no guarantee that he will benefit from the amount he has paid into the pension fund. For instance, if he is under fifty years of age and has had less than fifteen years of service, under these regulations there would be no guarantee that he would benefit. Under the regulations, the rule of seniority applies in the contracts between the railway and the men. For instance, if I have been fifteen years in the service and my colleague has been only twelve years, he would be laid off if there was a necessity to lay off a man. Take another case: if I am employed, say on section 50 of the Intercolonial and it is found necessary to drop a man from that section, if there is another man employed on another section who is junior to me in service, he will be laid off and I will be transferred to that section. Under the act of 1929 there is no guarantee given to a man that he will enjoy the benefits of the amounts he has paid into the pension fund. The railway commission knew that if their recommendations were accepted the railways would lay off many men and they should have seen that those men were protected. They should have examined the regulation governing pensions; they should have examined the pension act of 1929 and if necessary, called in an experienced railway man to give them any required information. They failed to do that and that is why I contend that this bill should be sent to a special committee so that complete details could be obtained and the necessary protection afforded to these men. The minister should study the regulations in conjunction with the act of 1929, and he should study also the bill now before the committee in conjunction with that act and in conjunction with the regulations. A clause should be placed in this bill so that the men would not have to be dependent upon the whims of the board of trustees as to whether they were entitled to compensation.

Mr. MANION: The deputy minister has handed me a copy of The Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Fund Act. Clause 19 reads as follows:

> Employees who are discharged from the service for any cause other than those mentioned in paragraph (b) of section 17, after they have been three or more years contributors to the fund, may be paid out of the fund the total amount of their contributions to the fund, but without interest and less the cost and expense of medical examinations.

I do not think that clause agrees with what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. VENIOT: If that act were in existence to-day, then I would admit I was wrong, but it was superseded by the pension act of 1929. That act brings the Intercolonial, the Prince Edward Island road and the ferry service under its provisions. Any person employed from that time on would come under the provisions of the act.

Mr. MANION: My deputy insists that this is still the law.

Mr. VENIOT: Then I differ from him; I am right and he is wrong. A list is given of the railroads that are to come under these very regulations, and that list includes the Intercolonial and all branch lines which are purchased by the government. I would advise the deputy to study this thing very carefully before giving a legal opinion. I maintain I am right but I hope I am wrong.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You are.

Mr. VENIOT: If I am wrong, the men will be protected.

Mr. MANION: I have no desire to attempt to show that the hon. gentleman is wrong, but I am sure that he has no desire to give the committee any inaccurate information. My deputy informs me that where a man joined the service since 1929 he would not be contributing to the pension fund.

Mr. VENIOT: If the minister had followed me closely he would have seen that I agreed in part with that statement. I was referring more particularly to those men who have had only a few years of service on the road, to men who have come in since 1929.

Mr. MANION: They do not contribute anything.

Mr. VENIOT: They are contributing now.

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. VENIOT: If they are in the pension fund.

Mr. MANION: No; the Canadian National Railways has no contributory pension fund.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): I would direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that they are addressing one another instead of the chair.

Mr. VENIOT: I am glad you called me to order because I am not the only guilty one. Perhaps this practice will be stopped.

Under these regulations a man would obtain no protection unless he had served a stated number of years and had reached a certain age upon retirement. I want to see that the men are fully protected. If the government believe that they are not as fully protected in this way as they should be, I wish to have a clause placed in the act giving the employees the protection which I feel they should have.

I come to another reason why I am opposed to clause 1. As I said in my remarks on this bill when it was before the house for second reading there is nothing in the bill itself to conserve the status of the old Intercolonial railway. The act, I think it is chapter 172, defines what the old Intercolonial is or shall be. I may be told that we have sufficient protection under the British North America Act, and that nothing contained in this bill can or will supersede the British North America Act as relating to the Intercolonial railway. That may be so, but if power is given under this bill to a board of trustees to lease the road or any section of government owned road or any branch line connected with the government main line, without reference to the governor in council or to parliament, and if the board did put such a lease into effect, the people of the maritime provinces would have the burden cast upon them of protesting before the governor in council or carrying their case to the Supreme Court of Canada. That is something we wish to avoid, and I suggested to the minister on the second reading that a general clause might be inserted at the end of the bill or in any part of it which would absolutely guarantee and safeguard the status of the old Intercolonial railway.

The minister may reply that that is not necessary. But on the question of amalgamation, when there was a great deal of doubt on this side of the house whether the bill as laid before parliament might not mean amalgamation, the Prime Minister in order to satisfy that doubt on this side of the house consented to insert a clause stating absolutely that there would be no amalgamation. All I ask the Minister of Railways to do now is to insert in this bill, before it goes through, a clause absolutely guaranteeing the status of the Intercolonial. Here is the clause I would suggest, and while its phraseology may be a little on the rough side as I jotted it down hurriedly, it could easily be put into legal phraseology that would meet the occasion:

> Nothing in this act contained shall authorize or empower the board of trustees to lease in whole or in part the Intercolonial railway so called or any branch line constructed connecting with said Intercolonial railway constructed or purchased by the government of Canada.

The reason I include the branch lines connecting with the Intercolonial railway is this: While in the original construction of the Intercolonial they did not form a part of it, and while perhaps they are not included in section 145 of the British North America Act, the Intercolonial at Campbellton, New Brunswick, is connected with what is known as the old International railway from Campbellton to St. Leonard, a distance of 108 miles. That International road, constructed in 1908, was acquired by the Canadian government to become part and parcel of the amalgamation which is known to-day as the Canadian National Railways.

There is also the old Canada Eastern railway connecting Newcastle with Fredericton, a distance of 113 miles. In each case the Canadian Pacific almost joins these roads at St. Leonard and Fredericton. There is nothing in this bill to prevent the board of trustees, if they see fit, leasing the old International from Campbellton to St. Leonard to the Canadian Pacific, thereby giving a deep water terminal to the Canadian Pacific in northern New Brunswick. Should such a thing happen what will take place? All freight from Montreal destined for northern New Brunswick would be carried over the Canadian Pacific to St. Leonard, then cross over to Campbellton, and the Intercolonial would become a mere distributing agent for that freight as local freight. The same thing might be done with the Canada Eastern line from Fredericton to Newcastle or to Chatham, where again the Canadian Pacific would get a deep water terminal. We know in northern New Brunswick that the Canadian Pacific have had an eye for a deep water terminal either on the baie des Chaleurs or the gulf of St. Lawrence. That would give them an opportunity of entering into a slaughtering competition with the Intercolonial right from Montreal down.

Again, supposing that the Canadian Pacific got running rights from Saint John to Halifax over the road which was not a part of the Intercolonial under the act of confederation but was attached to the Intercolonial at a later date, then as I stated before, and it is worth repeating, the Canadian Pacific would have an absolute monopoly of traffic, both passenger and freight, from Halifax to Montreal, because the freight traffic in particular would no longer go by the northern route. It would be routed by the Canadian Pacific over their leased lines from Halifax to Saint John, and from Halifax to St. Rosalie, and into Montreal.

I think I can safely say that I am expressing the fears of the inhabitants of northern New Brunswick when I deal with this question in the way I am. We fear that these things may happen. Some may say that I am suggesting an extreme case. Not at all. The Canadian Pacific has been looking for years and years for running rights over the Intercolonial from Saint John to Halifax. Fifteen or twenty years ago the Canadian Pacific had their eyes on what is known today as the Gaspe road. It was constructed by English capitalists who, after they had put their money into it, felt that it was not a paying proposition and wanted to get clear of it, and the intention at that time was to construct a line from Matapedia across country to the border of Maine.

Mr. PRICE: May I ask if those trains from Halifax and Saint John operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway have not always had Canadian National crews?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, when the Canadian Pacific had no running rights over the road, but when they had running rights away back in 1910 or 1911, the trains were run by Canadian Pacific crews.

Mr. PRICE: They were never run by Canadian Pacific crews.

Mr. VENIOT: At the present time when the Canadian Pacific runs a passenger or mail train from Halifax the train may be manned by Canadian National workmen. But when the Canadian Pacific has a lease on a road from Saint John to Halifax the train will be run by Canadian Pacific railwaymen, just as trains were run when the Canadian Pacific had running rights from Saint John to Halifax as far back as 1912, 1913 and 1914.

Mr. MANION: What is the hon. member suggesting? Does he suggest that trustees would be appointed who would be so insane as to lease the Canadian National from Saint John to Halifax to the Canadian Pacific and not use the Canadian National? I do not understand the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. VENIOT: It has been done before. It was done in 1914, not under a lease, but under running rights.

Mr. MANION: That is different.

Mr. VENIOT: The Canadian Pacific was allowed to compete with the Canadian National over their own lines.

Mr. MANION: Running rights is a different matter.

Mr. VENIOT: I am opposed even to running rights. Why should the Canadian Pacific have running rights over the old Intercolonial from Saint John to Halifax, and compete with our own railroads?

Mr. MANION: I do not say they should, but there might be a decision arrived at between two railway companies whereby in return for running rights on one section the other company may give running rights over another section. Certainly there is no intention or thought on the part of the government to appoint trustees who would lease any portion of the Canadian National railway in a way that would permit injury to be done to the Canadian National system.

Mr. PRICE: In regard to running rights over the Canadian National—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): I would ask the hon. member to take his seat until the hon. member for Gloucester has completed his statement.

Mr. VENIOT: I fully appreciate it is not the intention of the government to appoint trustees to do what I say might be done. But I should like the minister to point out to me, what power the government has to stop the trustees from such action, once they are appointed. The trustees will have absolute power, and the Minister of Railways, or the government, have no power over them at all. The House of Commons would have no power over them. Parliament, consisting of the combination of the two houses, is the only body which would have power.

Therefore I say the situation is such that the government should not hesitate to allay the feeling of uneasiness and mistrust which has been created by this bill, by inserting in the bill a clause such as I have suggested to the minister.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up much time of the committee dealing with my own bill, but there are one or two points mentioned by the hon. member concerning which I should like to make some observations. In the first place, there is no action that this parliament could take which would interfere with the rights of the Intercolonial, as set out in the British North America Act, and to which the hon. member referred earlier in his remarks. He is an old parliamentarian, and is well aware of the fact that the proposed measure cannot overrule the British North America Act.

Mr. VENIOT: I said that.

Mr. MANION: In regard to the amendment suggested by the hon. member, may I say that we have some amendments under consideration, one of which would probably cover the ground taken by the hon. member. I just wish to mention one other point raised by the hon. member for Gloucester, in connection with the running rights of Canadian National crews when the Canadian Pacific Railway runs trains over Canadian National lines in the maritimes. The hon. member asked me a question a moment or two ago concerning which I had not complete information. I am informed that he is entirely right in the statement he made a moment ago, and that the arrangement he set forth is the result of an agreement made between the two railway companies. There is no thought of changing that agreement. In regard to Canadian National crews handling Canadian Pacific trains over Canadian National territory there is no change in view or under consideration.

Mr. VENIOT: That provision applies only under certain conditions, in the event of certain steamships coming to Halifax. It is not a direct privilege of running rights granted to the Canadian Pacific, as they were granted in the old days. The hon. member for Westmorland is quite correct in his statement as to the conditions under which crews are operating, but I maintain I am quite correct when I say that in general running rights are granted over that road. In 1913 and 1914 the crews manning the Canadian Pacific trains were, absolutely, Canadian Pacific crews, and were not Canadian National crews at all. At that time there was no such thing as the Canadian National.

Mr. MANION: An agreement has been recently made to protect those rights.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did the minister say he had in mind some provision with regard to the pension of those men laid off as the result of cooperation proposed under this legislation?

Mr. MANION: No, the hon. member must have misunderstood me. Replying to the hon. member for Kenora I pointed out that under clause 2 subsection (a) conditions of compensation which exist under the Railway Act are not changed at all. I mention that merely as one instance. The other question to which the hon. member has referred has not been given serious consideration by the government.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should like to mention a matter which is giving a good deal of concern to employees who in all probability will at least run the risk of being laid off as the result of a reduction in the number of employees engaged. As I understand it employees who have been forty years in the service, upon attaining the age of sixty-five years are entitled to a certain pension. Representations have been made to me, and I have no doubt have been made to the minister, that in regard to employees who have served for forty years but have not reached the age of sixty-five, pensions should be given now, before reaching the required age. It is urged by those interested that an advantage would be gained due to the fact that the period of employment would cease and that the pensioners would make way for persons who hitherto had not been employed. The rate of pension drawn would be less than that which would have been drawn had they reached the age of sixty-five years.

I happen to know of some persons who would be affected. They feel, and I believe with some cause, that great hardship would be worked upon them if, through no fault of their own, they were laid off before attaining the age of sixty-five years, unless in the meantime the pension to which those employees over forty years in the service are entitled were allowed to those men who were laid off who had not attained the age of sixty-five years.

Mr. MANION: I have had some representations along the lines outlined by the hon. member. I must point out to the hon. member however that the men can be retired only in accordance with the agreements made between the mens' unions and the railway companies. Whether or not a railway company can retire a man who has been, say, forty years in the service and has not reached the age of sixty-five, I cannot state positively. However I shall look into the matter and give further information to the hon. member. Generally speaking however the railways may retire an employee who has served up to the age of sixty-five years. When they reach the age of sixty-five years they may be retired, and when they have been fifteen years in the service they are entitled to a pension. The matter of pensions to which the hon. member has referred and to which the hon. member for Gloucester referred earlier in the afternoon, is complicated.

There were three different pension systems. They have been changed at various times. I confess frankly that I am not fully familiar with all their intricacies; it would take a great deal of study to become so, consequently I do not care to make dogmatic statements as to details. But I believe that men can be retired on pension—in fact I know they can—if they have served fifteen years and have attained the age of sixty-five. But the different pension schemes vary in these respects. At any rate the thing is complicated and I do not care to make definite statements without more information than I have. The point made by my hon. friend that men may be retired before reaching the age of sixty-five so long as they are pensionable is, I suppose, worthy of consideration, in these times when we are endeavouring to make as much employment as possible. But the consideration would have to be given by the management in association with the men's unions. I do not know that parliament would have the right to take a very strong attitude in regard to it without some careful study. I shall certainly see that the representation made by the hon. gentleman is put before the railway management.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I realize the difficulty of working out in a way entirely satisfactory to the employees the question of pensions. The pension payable to a man who has served for fifteen years but has not attained the age of sixty-five will not be as great as if he had continued in the service right up to sixty-five; the pension that will have to come out of that fund will not be as large. I may say with regard to the right to discharge, apart from misconduct, that according to the regulations, I think under subsection (d) of section 8 of the Canadian National Railway pension department rules and regulations, there is a provision to pension an employee of the age of fifty or upward who has to his credit fifteen or more years of service and is discharged from the company's service otherwise than for misconduct. That makes it perfectly clear that men who have attained the age of fifty may be discharged from the company's service otherwise than for misconduct with fifteen years of service.

Mr. MANION: Any man is eligible for pension after fifteen years of service.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to urge this upon my hon. friend—I am not so particular about an answer immediately because I realize that perhaps that would be unreasonable; but I do ask that before this bill goes out of committee we should have some statement as to what the minister thinks can be done to meet the case of the men to whom I have referred.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A few minutes ago objection was made to the nomenclature of the bill, as being the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, 1932. This bill came into the house from the Senate; it entered the Senate in 1932 and was so named there. But in view of the objections that were made I beg to move:

That in clause 1, line 5, the figures 1932 be struck out and be superseded by the figures 1933.

I am advised that for purposes of reference in the future the figures 1933 will be better.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): The committee has heard the proposed amendment, that 1932 be struck out of section 1 and 1933 be inserted in lieu thereof. Shall it carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I am quite agreeable to the amendment carrying, but I think as the minister is considering amending the section at all, in view of his statement that the act was in no way intended as a measure of amalgamation of the two railways, he might well consider whether another title would not be better than the short title selected. It seems to me that, if he were framing a measure designedly in the nature of amalgamation, he could not have chosen a better short title than that which he has chosen. This act deals almost wholly with the Canadian National; it does not deal to any extent with the Canadian Pacific. It has one part which deals with possible co-operation—

Mr. MANION: Part II and part III deal with both.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But as to the parts of the act that are really vital it is in the nature of an act to amend the Canadian National Railways Act. I think it ought to be called the Canadian National Railways Amendment Act, 1933, unless the minister wishes to further in a quiet way the idea of amalgamation by just introducing at the outset this hyphenated title.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I did not make the title; the title was framed in the Senate—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the minister must take responsibility.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I do. But with all due respect to my right hon. friend I do not see much in his argument, because as a matter of fact, while it is true that part I deals with the Canadian National, parts II and III deal with both railways. Part II deals with co-operation between the two railways, and part III sets up an arbitral tribunal for cases of dispute as to cooperation. So that the Canadian Pacific Railway has to do with II and III,, while the Canadian National is entirely dealt with in part I. While there may be something in what the right hon. gentleman says that someone might draw the conclusion that this is for the purpose of hinting at amalgamation, I am afraid we cannot prevent people from drawing such conclusions as they may choose to draw. But the Prime Minister has made the statement, and I have made it several times, that there is in the mind of the government no thought of amalgamation in any shape between the two roads. Under the circumstances I am ready to accept the title as it stands, with the modification as to the year suggested by the right hon. gentleman himself.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): Shall the section as amended carry?

Mr. MITCHELL: I want to speak on the section before it carries.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): If the committee will permit, before the hon. member speaks I think I should say that so far the debate has not been confined to this section, namely the title, and I think before the discussion proceeds the committee should say whether they would like the debate to be carried on along the lines it has followed, along the line of second reading, or confined to the title. I am in the hands of the committee and will take my directions from the committee.

An hon. MEMBER: Let the debate go on —general policy.

Mr. MITCHELL: I want to make a few observations arising out of some statements made by the minister in connection with the remarks of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). I agree with the hon. member that practically no consideration was given to the human element engaged in the transportation industry of this country, in connection with the setting up of this commission. Mr. Loree who has been mentioned this afternoon, is the president of the Delaware and Hudson Railway, which is in some way connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Mr. Loree has been known for many years as perhaps the best labour hater on the North American continent. That is the general understanding among railway men. I believe that the employees should have been represented on that commission. After all, when the evidence is in it is the commission that determines what the recommendation and report to the parliament of this country shall be.

The minister has said that in the Railway Act there is already some measure of protection for the workers in cases where a divisional point is shut down. I understand that the section does not operate unless there is a complete shutdown of that divisional point. All they have to do is leave one crew there, and the section becomes inoperative. I think last session the railroad organizations endeavoured to get an amendment to that section to cover cases where there was an almost total shutdown of the divisional point, but they were unsuccessful. I do not think the men who may be laid off under this scheme of cooperation or amalgamation, whichever you wish to call it, receive very much protection under that section of the Railway Act.

I think in our consideration of this problem we must recognize the fact that the railroad industry is different from almost every other industry in Canada. It must give continuous service, yet it must hold enough in reserve to handle whatever business may come along. Its structure is radically different from that of any other industry, and the men engaged in it have spent their lives in that work and are specialists in their particular callings. The railway engineers, dispatchers, conductors, trainmen, shop workers and track men, while their services are essential to the conduct of the railroad, find it very difficult when they are laid off and thrown upon the general labour market; their only chance of obtaining employment is to go into the unskilled class.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): If the hon. gentleman will allow me, we are discussing section 1, the short title, and the hon. gentleman's remarks would be perfectly in order under a later section of the bill. I must ask the committee either to adhere to the section we are discussing or to leave it wide open for any speeches that might be made. I would request the hon. member to confine his remarks strictly to the section under discussion.

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak this afternoon, but certain remarks were made by the minister and other hon. gentlemen with respect to pensions. I have certain suggestions to make, and I understand that the debate will close at six o'clock.

Mr. MANION: I am not sure as to that. Some hon. members asked me if that would be possible, and I told them it would, but I am not sure that it will be done.

Mr. MITCHELL: All that I want is some continuity to it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): Is it the pleasure of the committee that the hon. gentleman shall continue to discuss something absolutely foreign to the section before us?

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled—

Mr. VENIOT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. This question was brought up previously, and I directed the attention of the committee to the fact that, quite contrary to the usual practice, we are dealing with the title first. This section has to do with the short title, and in dealing with this section I claim we have a perfect right to deal with the bill as a whole, because we wish to give our reasons for opposing the adoption of section 1. That is the point of order I take now and it is the point I took previously. I think it should be decided now once and for all.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): Then I rule that what we are now discussing is section 1, the short title.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then may I ask a question. Does not the title of the bill bring in the whole principle of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): When I took the chair the clerk advised me that we were discussing the short title. I therefore presumed that the title had been discussed previously. If that is not so are we to go back now and discuss the title? I refer the committee to standing order 76:

In proceedings in committee of the whole house upon bills, the preamble is first postponed, and then every clause considered by the committee in its proper order; the preamble and title to be last considered.

The first section has to do with the short title, and as I understand it that is what we are now discussing. The title is at the beginning of the bill, but it will be discussed later.

Mr. VENIOT: I claim that the short title should have been the last section in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): The standing order I read a moment ago gives the order of discussion. I am informed that we are now discussing section 1, the short title, and I am under the impression that the committee should confine its discussion to section 1.

Mr POWER: Then may I make a suggestion to the minister? He might facilitate matters if he asked that section 1 stand; probably then we might get on.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps I might be permitted to say just a word. I have no desire to do anything but to facilitate matters, and earlier in the afternoon I did object to the general discussion. According to my understanding of the rule Mr. Chairman, I think there has been a slight misapprehension. The general discussion of the principle of the bill is carried on when the motion is made for second reading; once second reading is given it seems to me the discussion should be on each section in turn, as you have ruled. Before section 1, which deals with the short title, is reached, there is the title:

An act respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway System, and for other purposes.

So far as there is a preamble I should say that is it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the title.

Mr. MANION: That is the title and the preamble, if you like, and that should be left to the last. Apparently my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition agrees. Now we are discussing the short title, and quite frankly I believe the discussion has been a bit wide of the mark. I only wish to facilitate the passage of the bill, but at the same time I should like to point out that all this discussion could have been carried on under part II, and I think it should have been carried on under that part of the bill. Part II has to do with cooperation, and whatever loss of employment may take place will come about under that part. As a matter of fact it is my personal opinion that the general discussion carried on this afternoon should have been carried on under part II, and I believe we would facilitate matters—because I suppose no one desires to stay here all summer—without in any way limiting discussion or debate if we adhered pretty closely to a discussion of the sections as they come along. I suggest that with all due reference, but I am content to abide by whatever the committee may decide.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On a point of ofder, Mr. Chanrman; from the section of the rules which you have just read, it is obvious that we have been completely out of order all afternoon, because it is definitely stated there that the title—and there is only one title—should be left to the last. Throughout the time we have been discussing this matter, Mr. Chairman, it has been understood that we were discussing the title, so that evidently the whole discussion has been out of order. Objection was taken some time ago to any broad discussion under this heading, "title," and it was then stated very definitely that the section was broad enough to admit almost everything. I think that undoubtedly that is so and under that tacit ruling, not a definite ruling of the chair, we have had considerable discussion, for example on the part of my hon. friend from Rainy River and the ex-Postmaster General. It seems very strange now, when someone else gets up to talk along precisely the same line which the discussion has followed for the last hour or two, that the chairman himself should say that the hon. member who wishes to speak is out of order. I do not think there should be any discrimination. The hon. member is as much justified as any of the previous speakers.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): An hour ago I asked the committee to confine its remarks to clause 1, the short title, pointing out that if that clause carried the committee could go on to clause 2 under which, as I understand, almost anything can be said in connection with the bill.

Mr. DUFF: I suggest that clause 1 be allowed to stand and that we go on with the rest of the bill.

Mr. MANION: Why not pass it?

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. DUFF: Because under the rule it is not supposed to be passed now. The title is passed after all other sections.

Mr. MANION: I think there is confusion in regard to the title. What we are discussing now is the short title. The title itself reads:

An act respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway System, and for other purposes.

Mr. DUFF: That is the preamble.

Mr. MANION: It is the title.

Mr. DUFF: No, it is the preamble too.

Mr. MANION: It is the short title we are discussing.

Mr. DUFF: What the minister read is the preamble. If it is the title it is not very short.

Mr. POWER: I suggest again that it would be far better to let clause 1 stand.

Mr. MANION: I have no objection to the clause standing. We have been discussing it all afternoon and I had hoped that by five minutes to six we should be able to carry it. If we could carry it, it would be so much progress made. However, if it pleases my hon. friends, and I am always so anxious to please them, I have no objection to having it stand. I suggest that the clause as amended stand and we will come back to it later.

Mr. POWER: To facilitate the business of the house, will the minister hand to someone on this side the amendments which he proposes to move. He said he had certain amendments to propose as we go along, and though I know that it is not customary to do as I suggest, it is extremely difficult to discuss amendments on a moment's notice. If the minister would lay on the table copies of his amendments, in connection with the next four or five clauses at any rate, the committee would have an opportunity of studying them and it would expedite matters.

Mr. MANION: As the hon. member says, that is really not customary and I do not think I should care to do it. I will go as far as this, however. When we come to a clause which is to be amended, unless the amendment is a simple one, such as the one before us now, I shall give it to the committee and let the clause stand and go on with other clauses, so that the committee will have plenty of time to study the amendment. None of them is complicated; I believe that most of them will be readily accepted. There are however one or two that are not so simple and I will put them before the committee as soon as we come to the clauses affected, and then proceed with others.

Short title stands.

On section 2—Inconsistent provisions.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): Does the hon. member for East Hamilton wish to go on now?

Mr. MITCHELL: The question I wish to discuss was raised largely by the minister himself. He said that the government could hardly take the responsibility of providing in this legislation for people who might be thrown out of work through the passing of this act. He left the impression that he could not differentiate between the railways and other industries. I could understand that contention if legislation had been passed or proposed that had for its purpose the laying off of men and women in other industries, for I have always held that neither a government nor any other employer has the right to take away work from the wage-earner or interfere with his ability to earn his living, without assuming some responsibility for that act.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Bill No. 63, for the relief of Hilda Nice Allen.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 64, for the relief of Mary Louise Robinson Reid.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 65, for the relief of Elizabeth Bernstein Schmerling.—Mr. Lawson.

SARNIA-PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

The house resumed from Monday, April 3, consideration in committee of Bill No. 41, to incorporate the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company—Mr. Gray.—Mr. Stirling in the chair.

On section 2—Declaratory.

Mr. BENNETT: When this bill was last before the committee I indicated that I thought certain provisions of it were highly unsatisfactory and that the matter should be referred to the appropriate officers of the departments for the purpose of enabling a report to be made and received. The Deputy Minister of Justice has made a report in which he points out that in 1927 we passed an act to incorporate the Detroit and Windsor Subway Company; in 1928, an act to incorporate the St. Clair Transit Company and an act to incorporate the St. Lawrence River Bridge Company, and in 1932 an act to incorporate the Lake of the Woods International Bridge Company, all similar to some extent to this bill. His opinion was that, in view of this fact, he did not think it of practical advantage to question at this time certain provisions of this bill which, but for the acts above referred to, he should have thought questionable.

Leaving aside for the moment the fact that we have enacted the legislation to which I have referred and that but for that fact we should be able to have a different appreciation of this bill from what we now have, I think there is one objectionable feature to which attention might be directed. I daresay that it is within the memory of some members of the committee that the Detroit tunnel is alleged to have cost some $10,000,000; that securities were floated to the extent of $18,000,000 and that investors in both Canada and the United States sustained very heavy losses by reason of that fact; that is that the securities which were issued were nearly twice in amount the cost of the tunnel. This bill makes, it seems to me, no adequate provision to safeguard the investors, and the fact that the stock which has usually been referred to as promoters' stock in all measures of this character can be issued on such terms and conditions as the shareholders, who are the promotors, may determine by by-law, makes it important in my opinion that the bill should be recast. But for the fact, as I have said, that this house has enacted in the past similar legislation with respect to which I certainly on one or two occasions expressed grave doubt,

I would have asked the committee to reconsider this year the idea of passing the bill at all. Since we last met, however, the promoters of the bill have sent their solicitor here and he has expressed the opinion that it can be arranged so as to conform to the suggestions which the departmental officers have made. Under those circumstances I see no reason why it cannot be recast, if the departmental officers and the solicitor of the company are able to arrange satisfactory language to express the intention as indicated by the hon. member for West Lambton the other day, namely, to safeguard the investing public by every means that can be reasonably suggested and to make it clear beyond peradventure that the provisions of the Ontario Securities Act would apply to any securities that might be issued or sold on the undertaking in Canada; it must be remembered that the undertaking is under our jurisdiction only to the centre of the stream and we have no jurisdiction over the complete whole, it being an international undertaking. That difficulty arose in the St. Lawrence in connection with the so-called Peace bridge and was dealt with fairly satisfactorily, except that trouble arose in connection with taxation. Under the circumstances I suggest that the hon. member in charge of the bill permit the committee to rise and report progress. That will allow the solicitor representing the enterprise to confer with the officials of the Department of Justice so as to recast the provisions of the bill in conformity with what I believe would be the reasonable provisions that should govern in a matter of this kind.

I am sorry it was not until late this morning that I received the report from the Department of Justice and it was a little later, I think, when I received the further report from one of the other officers. But this afternoon I had an oportunity of discussing the matter with the solicitor for the undertaking, and in view of that fact I venture to suggest it might be desirable to have the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again so that on Saturday an opportunity may be afforded to ascertain whether a satisfactory arrangement may be made for passing the bill with the safeguards which I have indicated.

Mr. GRAY: As sponsor of Bill No. 41, now before the committee, I appreciate what the Prime Minister has just said in respect to it and especially his view that so far as possible we must safeguard the investing public. Therefore I am quite pleased to allow the bill to stand until such time as the matter can again be adjusted, if possible. But might I suggest that the clerk of the house have the members' bill files brought up to date so far as this bill is concerned. I find that in some of the files it has been brought up to date, but in the majority that I have looked at during the afternoon, only the original bill as first presented is to be found. This bill was amended and reprinted twice before the railway committee. If my suggestion is taken and the amended bill as reported by the railway committee is placed on all the members' files, so that when the amendments suggested by the right hon. gentleman are placed before the committee of the whole, confusion will be avoided. I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN-NORTHERN PACIFIC AGREEMENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 48, to confirm an agreement between the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—Mr. McDade—Mr. Stirling in the chair.

On section 1—Agreement ratified and confirmed.

Mr. STEVENS: I was not at the railway committee when this bill was considered; in fact, I had not known before that it had passed the railway committee and was before the house. This is a rather more serious bill than on the face of it would appear. It will be noted that the bill ratifies an agreement between the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway Company, which is really the Canadian end of the Great Northern Company, over the tracks of which the Great Northern has access to Vancouver from the boundary on its Seattle-Vancouver line, and the Northern Pacific Railway Company. From a hurried reading of the agreement set out in the bill for ratification, it appears that the two railways are entering into an agreement whereby, on the one hand, the Northern Pacific will tear up its tracks from Colebrook to Sumas and run over the Great Northern line, that is the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern line, into Vancouver. It is pretty well known that the regular service of the Northern Pacific has for many years run over the line that is indicated in the bill.

But if I am not very seriously mistaken the agreement affects another line altogether. The Great Northern Railway Company proposes, I believe, to take up its line from Osoyoos at the boundary, in the south Okanagan country, to Princeton. That is part of the whole rearrangement of the operations of this American line in British Columbia. Now if they are permitted to take up or abandon that line from Osoyoos to Princeton it will seriously affect a highly productive and important section of central British Columbia, and before giving permission for the lifting of the tracks on this section I should like the committee to have all the facts before them so that they may be in a position to give consideration to the proposals of the railway.

It may be advisable—I am not for a moment prepared to dogmatize—to permit the company to take up this particular section of track mentioned in the agreement from Colebrook to Sumas. I will admit that it is a line that runs through a section that is pretty well served by a trucking system, and so forth; so that may be quite all right. But that is only part of quite a scheme of abandoning roads, and before parliament ratifies this agreement and permits this American railway company to abandon several pieces of railway in Canada, in the province of British Columbia in this instance, we ought to be sure that the rights of the communities through which run the lines proposed to be abandoned are safeguarded. After a railroad has operated as this one I mentioned from Osoyoos to Princeton has been operating for twenty-five years I should say, and scores of families have built up a fruit farming industry along the line, before the company is permitted to abandon that road, parliament, if it has any control over the matter, ought to make sure that the rights of the people in the locality affected have been properly considered and that their representations have been heard. I do not know whether the sponsor of the bill or the chairman of the railway committee, whom I do not see at the moment, or any other member of the committee is in a position to give all the information that is necessary to assure us that the step to be taken is one that is warranted having regard to the rights of the settlers along the lines affected.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very much more serious matter than it appears to be on the surface, and I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill or any other member of the railway committee who knows the facts if he could inform this committee in regard to the points I have raised.

Mr. McDADE: I regret that I am not in a position at the moment to give the Minister of Trade and Commerce the additional information he requires. So far as this bill is concerned, it simply involves the elimination of running rights, as the minister has stated, between Sumas and Colebrook. Those running rights have not been exercised since 1918. In view of the request of the minister, however, it is agreeable to me that the bill should stand, and I will make inquiries from the solicitors, Messrs. Tupper and Hamilton at Winnipeg.

Mr. BENNETT: When the hon. gentleman is investigating, I suggest that his attention be particularly directed to the clauses that provide for the dismantlement of a portion of the line and to the provisions with respect to the payments that will be made in consequence thereof, and determine whether or not there are any settlers' rights that should be dealt with having regard to what was said in this house a year ago with respect to a similar matter when another railway company was dismantling a portion of its line to the detriment of the settlers. After all that is investigated, I think he would be in a position to answer some of the questions that are in the minds of this committee.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In justice to the railway committee I should like to indicate that there was not any such laxity as it might be supposed there was, because the committee did with some care ascertain the opinion of the Department of Railways with respect to this bill. We were particular to ask whether the department had examined the bill and if they had any objection to it, and the point now raised was not raised by the department at that time.

Mr. MANION: In appearing before the railway committee with respect to a matter which does not directly affect the Department of Railways or the Canadian National Railways, I am there just as an ordinary member of the committee, and I do not think I expressed myself on this matter at all. I simply sat there and listened, and was informed in regard to it. I saw no reason to oppose the bill, as it did not affect the Canadian National Railways. I say that just to indicate my position in the matter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The query was not directed to the minister, but to the officer of the department who, I suppose, spoke for the department.

Mr. MANION: Only in a legal way. The officer was one of the legal officers of the department, and his purpose there is merely to advise from a legal standpoint.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: He would share the responsibility?

Mr. MANION: Quite right.

HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved the second reading of Bill No. 67, with respect to hospital sweepstakes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading perhaps I had better explain to the house how it came about that, perhaps unconsciously, I assumed paternity of this bill. I assure hon. members that when the bill was called yesterday I had no intention of intervening in any way, but it appeared that there was no sponsor for it in this house. Knowing the high esteem in which the sponsor of the bill in another house was held when he was a member of the House of Commons, and the deep feeling of gratitude which should animate many hon. members opposite toward him, I thought perhaps they would be grateful to some hon. member on this side of the house who would give them an opportunity to express their views on this bill respecting hospital sweepstakes. Moreover, I felt that a matter of this kind which had been so much debated in the public press and by the public generally throughout Canada should come before the House of Commons in order that the principle underlying it might be either accepted or rejected by hon. members.

The measure passed the other chamber with a reasonably good sized majority. I assume hon. members of that chamber believe that the time has come for people in Canada to do away with a certain amount of the hyprocrisy to which for many years we have been the slaves. Most of those men have reached mature age, they are men who are not influenced by public outcries, men who have lived perhaps longer than most of us in this House of Commons, and have had the experiences of life. If the measure commends itself to them—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member's sense of humour still prevails.

Mr. POWER: I can assure my hon. friend that in moving the second reading of the bill I had no intention of being humorous, but I might derive a certain amount of amusement from watching the vote of a number of hon. members in this chamber. Many of whom, I have no doubt, if left to their own devices and given the assurance that their actions would not be reported in the local press or to the local church, would be very happy to buy a ticket on, let us say, the sweepstakes in the native land of the hon. member who has just spoken.

In passing this legislation I believe the Senate took into account the ordinary feelings which animate nearly every citizen of Canada. We are a new country; our citizens are accustomed to taking chances. My western friends take chances on the harvests and on the climate, and the statement has been made by one hon. member that in order to eke out their existence they even take chances on the wheat pit.

Mr. McINTOSH: And on the government, too.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, a long chance.

Mr. POWER: It has even been said that the government itself takes chances on the wheat pit. I have heard it said outside of the house that not since the time of Joseph has there been such a strenuous attempt made to corner the wheat market as has been made by the government. If any hon. member opposite gets the impression that I was in any way offensive or blasphemous may I tell him that I referred to Joseph Leiter of Chicago, who along with Arthur Cutten and other operators, is well-known to those who have been interested in wheat.

There is no doubt that throughout the length and breadth of this land there are thousands of people who are willing to take chances on the races, on the stock markets or in the businesses in which they are engaged, and who would be only too glad to be given the opportunity of risking a very small sum of money in the hope of acquiring great wealth. Many of us hold tickets on these sweepstakes. I make no bones about it when I say that there has not been a sweepstake in the last ten years to which I have not subscribed willingly. We have dreamed sweet and pleasant dreams, and built ourselves castles in the air on the more or less problematical winnings we expect to make. Why not permit our people to continue to have these dreams—to continue to build these castles? The days of depression are hard enough and long enough, Lord knows. Why not give them at least a few minutes of joy and pleasure in anticipation of what might be or what might happen?

I commend this bill to hon. gentlemen opposite having regard to the responsibility of another house, to those of my friends who hold the views I do with respect to the so-called sin of gambling, and generally to all the members of the house.

To explain the bill, as I suppose I must, may I say that one clause provides that the attorney general of any province may authorize sweepstakes and may make regulations. These regulations shall be printed so that the public generally may know the rules of the game, and be assured that they are getting a run for their money. Authority is given to sell tickets, notwithstanding anything which may be in the criminal code, and penalties are provided for those who sell tickets without authorization. That is about all there is in the bill. It may appear to a number of hon. members, as it does to me, that we might strike from the bill altogether the provisions regarding hospitals. There is no necessity for being hypocritical about it; let us just put the bill on the basis on which most of us think it should be, that of affording an opportunity for the citizens of Canada who so desire to buy a ticket in a sweepstake.

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton): I am a little in doubt whether the hon. member who spoke last (Mr. Power) was speaking seriously or jocularly. I could not help but remember, as I listened to the first part of his argument, based on the action of the Senate, the argument along absolutely opposite lines made I think, by him, certainly by some hon. members on the opposite side, in connection with the railway bill which is now in committee. Hon. members on that side were vociferous in their protestations that the mere fact that the Senate had given its blessing, its imprimatur to the railway bill after most elaborate and careful consideration, after hearing an enormous amount of evidence at great expense, was no argument for its acceptance here; they were none the less disinclined to accept the findings of the Senate. They were not even prepared to give any weight to these findings.

Mr. POWER: I was dealing with the morality aspect.

Mr. BURY: They said that this house must stand on its own feet and consider the question independently, without taking into consideration any argument of the Senate or any result at which the Senate arived. That being so, when we come to this bill, which certainly had not the support of the Senate to the extent the other bill had, which certainly had not the consideration given to it by the Senate which the other bill had, I can hardly believe that my hon. friend is anything but jocular when he asks us to give any weight to the fact that the Senate has passed this bill.

He has referred to the conditions in which the country unfortunately finds itself, the condition of depression from which people in all positions are suffering. He has urged that this is one means of dissipating the mental state arising from the depression, that if we put this bill on the statute books the sun will shine again, the clouds will roll away, the birds will sing and all will be for the best in this best of all possible worlds. I can hardly believe that. My own strong feeling is that one of the things which we need—and in that need I associate myself with every other citizen of Canada,—more than anything else at this time is not the spirit of gambling but the spirit of hard work and of thrift. I am quite conscious from my experience in the small circle in which I move that one of the great curses of the last few years has been the spirit of gambling. I do not think there is anything which this parliament could do that would be worse than to pass a bill which gives countenance to the institution and practice of gambling, and which is a distinct bid and incentive, if you like, to the spirit of gambling.

My hon. friend skated over the provisions of the bill with consummate skill; I think if he had dwelt upon them he would have found that the ice was not strong enough to bear his weight. As I look through the provisions of this bill I find that the sweepstakes that are to be made legal are virtually the sweepstakes of the attorneys general of the provinces. The attorney general of each province is linked with this machinery from first to last. He does almost everything except to advertise and sell the tickets. It is he who gives sanction to it; it is he who decides among what hospitals the money is to be divided; it is he who is to determine the proportions in which the money is to go to such hospitals. It is he who does almost everything from first to last, and the committee is very little more than his agent. I therefore think it would be the worst possible action on the part of this government to pass a bill of this kind. I have, as perhaps hon. members of this house know, a profound admiration for the legislative wisdom of the people of the motherland, and I cannot refuse to allow myself to be influenced by the fact that notwithstanding that in England gambling is practised to a very great extent and society indulges in that pastime and indulges very extensively in betting on horse races, the coursing of greyhounds, and every other conceivable form of sport, none the less the British parliament has not legalized sweepstakes. And while it is true that the parliament of the south of Ireland has done so, I do not know that that would be any argument to me for considering it particularly good. I have no great admiration for the wisdom of the parliament of the southern part of my native island.

If the argument of my hon. friend is true, why not go the whole way? Why not completely abolish every restriction on gambling? If my hon. friend is right in his argument that what we want is to have the gaiety of nations increased by the passage of such a bill and by the removal of the restrictions on gambling, why not go the whole way; why not lift the cloud of depression and put this country on its feet again by encouraging everyone to gamble on every possible pretext and occasion and on every possible form of chance? That is the logic of it. If gambling is good to any extent why not use it to the limit? But the bill does not propose that. The bill proposes to take a practice which has been declared illegal, which stands now as an illegality in our criminal code, and, because the object is worthy, to clothe it in a garment of white and send it out as a good and pure thing. If it is bad, how can it be argued that the fact that the money it produces is to be used for hospitals makes it good? If it is good, why is it in our criminal code? Why not sweep away all the restrictions and withdraw the prohibitions that now make gambling illegal?

I have no intention of labouring this matter any further because I imagine there are other hon. members who desire to speak on it. For the reasons I have given in a rather rapid and sketchy form, I am opposed to the passage of this bill.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the house need make any mistake as to the purpose of this bill—it is to legalize gambling in the various provinces at the option of the attorney general of each province. As the previous speaker (Mr. Bury) has pointed out, this bill puts within the hands of one individual in each province the decision as to whether or not sweepstakes shall be permitted in that particular province. In other words, this great moral question of gambling is to be decided by one individual in each province. That is entirely unfair. There might be an attorney general who looked upon gambling as a moral question which should be decided upon its merits. He might not feel like opening the door to gambling. On the other hand, there might be an attorney general who took the contrary view. There is being placed within the ambit of one man's judgment the decision whether or not the doors shall be opened to gambling within a particular province. I have been informed that the real purpose of this bill is to raise money for the hospitals in the Pacific province which have got into rather bad financial condition.

The last speaker referred to the hospital sweepstakes act passed by the Irish Free State. This act, known as the Public Charitable Hospitals Act, was passed on June 4, 1930. I think it should be drawn to the attention of the house that there is a time limit placed upon the operations of this act. The act specifies that it shall become inoperative after July 1, 1934. Its operations are confined to the period between June 4, 1930, and July 1, 1934. I should like to give the house some information as to how this act has worked out in practice. After all, the official test of any legislation is the results obtained. The Irish sweepstakes bill was in operation for five sweeps prior to the one of 1932. The total amount of money involved in those five sweeps was £13,800,000. The sellers' commissions amounted to £2,300,000; other expenses amounted to £1,041,000, while the prizes totalled £7,675,000. The total of the prizes, expenses and commissions was £11,016,000. Deducting that from the total amount collected we find that there was left for the hospitals £2,784,000. Bringing these amounts down to percentages, we find that the hospitals received just twenty per cent of the money collected. There are a number of business men in this house and I do not think it would be hard to convince them that it is not good business where it costs 80 cents to collect 20 cents. If the Minister of Finance brought forward some proposal to raise money by way of taxation at a cost of 80 per cent, I do not think we would take very long to defeat it. I recall a few years ago that we were told it cost 2 per cent to collect over $100,000,000 in income taxes. We considered that that was very good business.

Last year a royal commission was appointed by the British government to investigate sweepstakes and decide whether or not it would be profitable for the British government to undertake the operation of sweepstakes similar to those operated in the Irish Free State. This commission was under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. Sir Sydney Rowlatt, and representatives of various interested organizations gave evidence. I think it would be interesting to those of us who have not first-hand knowledge of the working of such legislation to know just what evidence was given before this commission. Sir Arthur Stanley gave the following evidence on behalf of the hospitals:

> The annual conference of the British Hospitals Association held at Eastbourne June 2, 1931, passed the following resolution:
> That the British Hospitals Association is not in favour of amendment of the law affecting public sweepstakes which purports to be for the benefit of voluntary hospitals.

That is the attitude of the British hospitals towards sweepstakes legislation. The evidence continues:

> Those engaged in hospital work know that if a large sum of money were given out of the proceeds of lotteries as in Ireland towards the maintenance of individual hospitals, it would have a tendency seriously to diminish charitable contributions which are now the main source of the income of those hospitals.
> It is estimated that approximately £8,000,000 a year comes from private contributions. A considerable part of this sum is given by people who are opposed to lotteries on principle, and these would certainly withdraw their support.

That is the evidence given before the commission by a gentleman representing the hospitals in Great Britain. Another interested organization was the jockey club. The following evidence was given by the Earl of Harewood, senior steward of the jockey club:

> The jockey club does not ask for, nor even support, the legislation of sweepstakes. So far as the interests of racing are concerned, the jockey club opposes it.

Here are the reasons for so doing. They oppose it—> —because of opportunities for fraud which are offered by these sweeps. A man who has £30,000 (or in some cases much more) to play with can offer large bribes. Stable boys, jockeys and trainers might be tempted to accept a bribe to secure the defeat of a horse, and are, of course, in a position to make certain of his defeat. Even an owner, placed in the same temptation, can prevent his own horse from winning.

That was most convincing evidence, and it was evidence submitted by the jockey club to show where they stood in regard to the sweepstakes investigation. There was also presented before that commission the evidence of the Church of Scotland. On page 151 of the evidence we find recorded there that the church and nation committee of the Church of Scotland submitted evidence as follows:

> Its membership embraces 1,300,000 communicants and has the religious training of 350,000 boys and girls in Sunday schools, and 120,000 young men and women in bible classes. The general assembly in 1931 communicated to His Majesty's government a statement of their "opposition to any legislation which would sanction sweepstakes or lotteries for charitable or other purposes."

On May 31, 1932, the general assembly, in considering the report of one of their committees, passed a unanimous resolution in these terms:

> The general assembly instruct the committee to take steps to bring before the royal commission on betting laws a statement of the church's conviction that any amendment of the law should be in the direction of reducing the facilities for every form of betting.

Then we have recorded also the evidence of what is known over there as the Christian Social Council of England. This council is made up of representatives of all the Christian churches in England except the Roman Catholic church. The speaker for this organization was the Most Reverend and Right Honourable William Temple, Archbishop of York. He said:

> The Christian Social Council, which is a body consisting of representatives officially appointed by all the churches in England (except the Roman Catholic church) through a special committee appointed stated:
> "That legal recognition should not be given to lotteries, sweepstakes or prize draws in any form whether for charitable purposes or otherwise. . . . The committee view with alarm the suggestions made to the commission that the hospitals should derive benefit from state lotteries, and are assured of the strong opposition of the Christian churches to any such proposal."

There was further evidence to show how sweepstakes as carried on in the Irish Free State tended to foster disrespect if not contempt for law and order. It was brought forword in evidence that in England, though it is illegal for anyone to sell tickets in the Irish sweepstakes, approximately £2,500,000 of English money had gone across the channel to Ireland in connection with Irish sweepstakes; and besides that £100,000 of English money had been intercepted in the mails. Prosecutions had been undertaken against some individuals in certain cases, but it was pointed out in the evidence that there seemed to be rather a contempt for meting out law and justice to offenders in such cases.

If we want any evidence nearer home with regard to the possible effect of sweepstakes legislation on the people of our country, we need only look back about two years to note what happened in the stock market crash. That crash will give some idea of the results of speculation and gambling. Stock values in 365 leading securities on the London Stock Exchange in 1922 were worth £5,500,000,000, and in 1929 they had increased to £7,200,000,000; in other words, in seven years there had been an increase of £1,700,000,000, or approximately $8,300,000,000, brought about largely by speculation. In May 1931, two years later, they were worth approximately £6,000,000,000, or a drop in two years of £1,200,000,000 or nearly $6,000,000,000. That is on the London Stock Exchange alone.

On the New York Stock Exchange, in the peak of 1929, values were about £18,000,000,000. In 1931, two years later, they were £9,000,000,000. This represents a drop in values of £9,000,000,000 or about $44,000,000,000. That represents losses to the people of Canada, the United States, Great Britain and other countries. Indeed it represents not only losses but ruin to a great many people.

In addition to these forms of speculation and gambling which have prevailed in past years, we have had in the western country a great deal of gambling on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and I think we could bring scores, yes hundreds, and perhaps I might be safe in saying thousands of farmers here who could testify to ruin—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hour for private and public bills has expired. The Minister of Railways moves that the house go into committee to resume consideration of Bill No. 37.

Mr. VENIOT: Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, for the house to go into committee on this motion, having been in committee this afternoon, and progress not having been reported?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: According to the rules, on Friday night at nine o'clock the house automatically resumes in committee on the subject matter under consideration before six o'clock.

Mr. VENIOT: Under what rule?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Of course, the hon. member may raise a question of privilege at any time; otherwise I shall have to leave the chair automatically.

Mr. VENIOT: But you did not leave the chair automatically, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: No. I put the motion; I should not have done so.

Mr. VENIOT: Then I am in order in taking objection.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: At nine o'clock I should have left the chair, and if the hon. member had a question to raise he could have raised it in committee.

[Mr. Carmichael.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion—Mr. MacNicol in the chair.

On section 2—His Majesty bound.

Mr. HEAPS: When the committee rose at six o'clock, we were discussing section 2 and I think some hon. members had previously discussed the question of compensation as contained in paragraph (a) of this section. Paragraph (a) deals in a very limited manner with compensation to employees, and for a few minutes I am going to discuss the question of compensation to those employees who are likely to lose their positions through the operation of this measure.

The fact is—and I think it is generally realized—that the personnel of the commission appointed to inquire into the railway situation was not very much concerned with the well-being of the men composing the staff of the two railway systems; it was more concerned with the financial structure of the railways and with the prospect of the two companies being placed upon a dividend paying basis. For the time being I have no fault to find with that aspect of the case, but I feel it would have been better had serious consideration been given to the probable plight of many thousands of men who have been in the employ of the railways for quite a number of years. During the past few years, on account of contraction of business and other minor reasons, large numbers of railway employees have been compelled to leave the service, and those who are to-day employed on the railways are mostly men who have given them long years of service. It is hard to arrive at an exact figure as to how many men are likely to lose their positions as a result of the operations of this bill, but I believe, as mentioned by Mr. Beatty in his speech to which reference was made this afternoon, there is likely to be in the next five years half the number let out of employment as would be let out were actual amalgamation of the two railways put into effect. I think I am stating a conservative figure when I say that 20,000 employees will find themselves without work in the next few years. It is also claimed by Mr. Beatty that the actual saving to the railways if amalgamation took place would be in the neighbourhood of $75,000,0000. Whether that be an extravagant figure I cannot say, but I presume the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with his usual thoroughness, would have investigated the matter with extreme care and used those figures only after mature consideration. I figured out rather roughly this afternoon that in at least the next few years there is a possible saving to the two railways of $25,000,000 in the form of wages, and I feel no injustice would be done to the railways if a fairly large percentage of that amount which they are to save were used to compensate the men who will lose their positions as a result of this measure.

This afternoon we had it as the opinion of the minister that because he is in favour of granting compensation to all employees who lose their positions, we should not deal simply with railwaymen. Now is the appropriate time to initiate measures to take care of men who lose their jobs, because so far as I know, this is one of the very few cases where men are likely to lose their positions on account of the operation of a measure to be put into effect by parliamentary action. The time has come when practical application should be put to those phrases which we use in regard to the human element in industry. I should like to take the opportunity of moving an amendment to clause 2 along these lines:

> Any employee of the railway companies affected by this act or any employee who loses his employment as a result of cooperation of services between the railways shall be entitled to such compensation to be determined by a board of three to be appointed: one by the employees, one by the railways, and a third to be selected jointly by the preceding two parties.
> In case of failure to select a third party, who shall be chairman of such board, then such selection shall be made by the Minister of Labour.
>
> The funds for such compensating board shall be derived from a levy on the gross receipts of the two railways and the award of such board shall in all cases be final.

I move that as an addition to clause 2.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): May I ask the hon. member to what part of clause 2 this amendment refers?

Mr. HEAPS: I would put it at the end.

Mr. MANION: Before we deal with the merits of the amendment, I should like, just for the information of the committee, to suggest that it is possible the amendment may be out of order, the reason being this: there is a rule that no one but a member of the government may introduce legislation to increase public expenditures. My hon. friend has introduced an amendment, it is true, that the railways out of gross earnings shall pay to men who are dropped because of cooperating measures such compensation as may be decided upon by some board. It is true that technically the railways would pay that, but as a matter of fact if we take the earnings of the railways for the last year or, at any rate, for the last few years, it would be the people of Canada, through the government, who would be paying it, because the deficit last year on the national railways, including eastern lines, was over $60,000,000, the operating net revenue of the national railways being $5,000,000, and the interest on both eastern lines and the general system amounting to so much that the total deficit, as I say, was over $60,000,000. I merely draw that to the attention of the committee as a point that should be considered before we discuss the merits of the amendment.

Mr. HEAPS: The point raised by the minister is a peculiar one. It appears that a motion will be quite in order if the Canadian National has a surplus and be out of order if it has not. You cannot have a point of order based on such conditions. If the government is providing funds for the railway, it is doing so of its own volition. Parliament has the power to vote it down, if it so desires. So far as the Canadian Pacific is concerned, it does not come in the same way under the provisions of the act; consequently in my opinion the amendment is not out of order.

Take the case of the workmen's compensation boards in our provincial legislatures; in certain of our legislatures private members have introduced bills to increase the compensation paid to men who are injured and who come within the scope of the board. If it is in order for a private member in a legislature to make a motion to increase compensation by a levy on industry, whether the industry pays or not, the same thing applies to this case.

Mr. MANION: In the case of the compensation board, the money is paid by the industry from which the compensation is collected, so that it would not be a payment by the government at all. Therefore a private member could introduce such legislation.

Mr. HEAPS: We are told that the Canadian National Railways is a private institution and that the government had to take over the assets of the company. I cannot see how putting a levy on the receipts of the two corporations can be regarded as spending government funds. I would like to have the committee consider this amendment because I believe it is one of the most important questions that can be considered in connection with this bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Speaking to the point of order, as this bill removes entirely from parliament the control of the expenditures of the Canadian National Railways, I do not think the point of order is well taken, because the levy proposed is upon an industry which by the terms of this legislation is no longer within the purview of the minister or of parliament. If it were otherwise, the point of order raised by the minister would be well taken.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): I am advised that the amendment is not in order, and my authority for so ruling is standing order 61. Paragraph 561 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, page 167, says:

> Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the House of Commons. B.N.A. Act, sec. 53.

And paragraph 562 reads:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that house by a message of the governor general in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

I therefore rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the effect of your ruling—I am not quarrelling with it—is that the government does accept complete financial responsibility for the operating revenues and the operating deficits, as the case may be, of the Canadian National Railways from now on.

Mr. MANION: We cannot help ourselves so far as the deficits are concerned. If we do not accept responsibility, I do not know who will.

Mr. HEAPS: If you rule the amendment out of order, Mr. Chairman, I must challenge your ruling because I think your interpretation of the amendment is entirely wrong and that your ruling creates a precedent which I should not like to see adopted in this house.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER took the chair and submitted the question to the house in the following terms:

> Mr. MacNicol from the committee of the whole reports that an amendment was submitted to clause 2 in the following terms by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps):
>
> "Any employee of the railway companies affected by this act or any employee who loses his employment as a result of cooperation of services between the railways shall be entitled to such compensation to be determined by a board of three to be appointed: one by the employees, one by the railways and a third to be selected jointly by the preceding two parties.
> "In case of failure to select a third party, who shall be chairman of such board, then such selection shall be made by the Minister of Labour.
> "The funds for such compensating board shall be derived from a levy on the gross receipts of the two railways and the award of such board shall in all cases be final."
> Mr. MacNicol, acting as chairman of committee of the whole, has ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that it calls for the expenditure of money, which amendment cannot be moved by a private member. Mr. Heaps appealed from the ruling.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is important that mention should be made in the chairman's submission of the fact that the essence of the amendment is that the moneys required will not necessarily be appropriated by parliament but may come out of the revenues of the railway. That is a very essential point in considering the ground on which objection has been taken to the chairman's ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is not for me to decide that. I take the amendment as brought before me and the decision of the chairman.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the house should understand that feature of it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have read the amendment to the house, and it is for the house to decide whether it is in favour of the ruling of the chairman or not.

Mr. NEILL: Do not the rules call for the point of order to be put in writing by the chairman? Was that done?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, it has been put in writing by the chairman.

Mr. NEILL: Would you be kind enough to read it?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have just read it. It is as follows:

> Amendment ruled out of order on the ground that it calls for the expenditure of money, which amendment cannot be moved by a private member. Mr. Heaps appealed from the ruling.

That was the ruling of the chairman.

Mr. NEILL: That was the ruling, but not the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The point of order has been raised in committee and it has been referred to me by the chairman for decision. Those in favour of the chairman's ruling will kindly say "aye", and those against, "nay."

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chair be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

CANADIAN NATIONAL—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific railway system —Mr. Manion—Mr. MacNicol in the chair.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I think we were on section 2, which reads thus:

The provision of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts, but so that—

And then it goes on, referring to compensation for employees who are removed from one place to another, the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the statutes providing for specific or special freight rates, meaning I suppose the Crowsnest pass rates and things of that kind. If this clause is left as drafted it is going to override many other acts which should not be overriden in this way. For instance, the Canadian National Railways Act distinctly states that terminals and many other services of the railroads cannot be abandoned without an order of the railway commission. The Canadian National, especially with the powers given to the trustees under this bill, will be able to do many things that I do not think should be permitted. It might set aside the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and many other acts of parliament having to do with railway matters and services. I do not want to speak at length on the point, but I intend to move an amendment, which I will send to the Minister of Railways:

That all the words after the word "prevail" in the second line of section 2 be deleted and the following substituted: "when not inconsistent with the provisions of any other act."

The clause as amended would read:

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail, when not inconsistent with the provisions of any other act, but so that—

And then going on to (a), (b) and (c).

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry again to raise a point of order, but I must submit that this is entirely out of order, because to my mind it is a complete negation of the clause.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Why would that put it out of order?

Mr. MANION: Because an amendment cannot be a mere negative. A negative is accomplished by voting against the section. An amendment may change words or some portion of the meaning but cannot completely negative the proposal; that is expressed by simply voting against it. I do not know the rule, but I am sure the chairman will be able to find it. I should like to hear the rule read.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: When the minister introduced this bill he asked the cooperation of every member of the house, and in moving this amendment I am trying to cooperate. The Minister of Railways said he was willing to accept amendments. If we are going to have an appeal to the chairman on a point of order on every amendment we might just as well go home.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend's reasoning is extraordinary. Neither he nor I can move amendments which are inconsistent with the rules of the house. I draw the matter to the attention of the chairman, not in order to oppose my hon. friend, but simply to point out what I think is the fact. It is not due to any lack of desire to cooperate. I will appreciate very much the cooperation of my hon. friend and his friends, but I take it the rules must be followed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): The hon. member for Provencher has moved an amendment to section 2, commencing with the first sentence. I will read the section:

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail—

And then the amendment is that the words following be deleted and the following substituted:

—when not inconsistent with the provisions of any other act—

I am advised that this amendment is not in order, on the ground that it is an expanded negative, a new clause. My authority for so ruling is paragraph 778 on page 223 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, which reads as follows:

In the commons all the clauses of the bill are considered before any new clauses are brought up and added to the bill. But this practice is not rigorously followed and the committee is generally guided by what is most convenient in each particular case.

In this case I rule that the proposed amendment is out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I discuss the point of order? Do I understand your ruling to be that the amendment as moved by my hon. friend is a direct negative of the section?

Mr. BENNETT: An expanded negative, he said.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I suggest with all respect that it is neither a negative nor an expanded negative. It is certainly an alteration, because the terms of the legislation as submitted by the minister "shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts." The amendment moved by my hon. friend is:

—when not inconsistent with the provisions of any other act.

Surely that is not a direct negative; it is an alternative. The hon. Minister of Railways has the opportunity of voting this down, but I suggest with all respect that this is not in any sense a negative of the provision as submitted.

Mr. MANION: With all due respect I think it is a negative. I am in the hands of the chair. I have no particular desire to have it ruled out of order unless it is out of order. However, there are other reasons against it, apart from the rules of order—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On the point of order, there is no doubt the amendment does limit the resolution, but it does not negative it. It limits it by eliminating, to begin with, (a), (b) and (c).

Mr. BENNETT: No, he leaves those in.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, they come out, he says.

Mr. BENNETT: No, that is the point, he said they were to stay in.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not so understand it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: After receiving the advice which you were so good as to give me at the table, with the consent of the committee I will withdraw my amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: The reason I suggested this was out of order was that the hon. gentleman proposes to leave in clauses (a), (b) and (c).

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am going to amend those.

Mr. BENNETT: You are going to strike them out?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: With the consent of the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I warn the hon. gentleman that if he does that he will be destroying the object he is trying to achieve.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I do not see how the Prime Minister can take that view. If the amendment I intend to propose is accepted, I believe I will attain the object I am trying to attain.

Mr. BENNETT: They are saving clauses.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I move that the words "over all" in the second line of section 2 be struck out and that the words "when not" be substituted therefor and that clauses (a), (b) and (c) be struck out. Would that amendment be all right?

Mr. BENNETT: No. It would be necessary to add the words "with the" after the words "inconsistent." Subsection 2 would then read as follows:

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail when not inconsistent with the provisions of all other acts.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is the way it is now except that the words "but so that" would be struck out.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be negative of what is desired to be achieved. The first provision of this section is, "The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty." The next is, "shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts." That is, where there are provisions that are inconsistent, this act shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts. As has been pointed out, it is desired to preserve three things, whether consistent or inconsistent with the provisions of this act. They are:

(a) that part of section one hundred and seventy-nine of the Railway Act which relates to compensation of employees for financial loss caused to them by removal, closing or abandonment of any railway station or divisional point;
(b) the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act; and
(c) the provisions of any statute of Canada which confirm any contract or enact or provide for any specific or special freight rate, toll or tariff or for the ascertainment of any one freight rate, toll or tariff by reference to any other and the making of deductions or allowances, shall not be deemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or to be in any manner affected thereby.

It will be observed that the section as amended would read:

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail when not inconsistent with the provisions of all other acts.

The rest of the section is struck out. There then would remain doubt as to the consistency or inconsistency of at least one of the three matters contained in the remainder of the section. The decision as to whether a provision is consistent or inconsistent is not quite as simple in a court of law as it seems to be in a committee of this house. This clause was framed with the idea of protecting beyond peradventure at least two of the three matters

[Mr. Beaubien.]

I have mentioned. The first is that of compensation to be paid to employees. It might well be that nothing in this act would be inconsistent with that provision, but in order that all doubt may be removed, it is specifically stated that this section is not intended to deprive any employee of compensation to which he may be entitled.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Would the Prime Minister permit a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but will the hon. member wait until I finish? The next clause refers to the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Obviously there is nothing inconsistent between this bill and that act but it is desirable that it should be made perfectly clear that that act shall survive. The provisions covered by clause (c) are so numerous that it is hardly necessary to mention them. We had one before the committee to-night in connection with contracts approved or ratified by the house. The special toll or freight rate obviously refers to the Crowsnest pass rates. If the legal members of the committee will look at this section they will see that it has been drawn with adroitness and skill and with the idea of making it clear that it shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts, but it was provided that those enumerated should not be regarded as being inconsistent.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Under the provisions of the Canadian National Railways Act a decision of the board has to be referred to the governor in council. If the bill passes as it is now, how would that provision be affected?

Mr. BENNETT: Clause (a) covers section 179 of the Railway Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I must respectfully take exception to the interpretation of the Prime Minister that the amendment would be a negative one.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): There is no amendment before the committee.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I move the following amendment to section 2:

That the words "over all" in line 7 be struck out and that the words "when not" be substituted therefor; that the words "but so that" and subsection (a), (b) and (c) be also struck out.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The amendment would read, "shall prevail when not inconsistent with the provisions of all other acts."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): The committee has heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was discussing the point of order.

An hon. MEMBER: There is no point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The effect of this proposed amendment is to negative these provisions as they now stand; that is all. I might again refer to the serious consequences that would follow; the loss of the Crowsnest pass rate is one consequence that would follow the adoption of this amendment. Moreover, the other provisions intended to be safeguarded by this act would be destroyed. I do not think the hon. gentleman desires to destroy the Crowsnest pass rate, but that it what he is doing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is that the Prime Minister's interpretation of the amendment?

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt about it: "The provisions of this act shall bind his majesty and shall prevail when not inconsistent with the provisions of all other acts." Now there is nothing in this bill inconsistent with the Crowsnest pass rates act, and therefore it prevails; that is all. It is not an accident that this clause reads as it does. The hon. member says that these saving provisions should be inserted, and in order to protect from inconsistency the supremacy of this act, it is provided by (a), (b) and (c) that, with respect to them, they shall prevail whatever happens, and this act does not affect them, the reason being that the Crowsnest rate, the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and the provision with respect to compensation for the financial loss suffered by employees were three important matters which, after much consideration, it was thought should be saved, whether consistent or inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It saves those three, but it abolishes all the other acts.

Mr. MANION: No, it does not.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I find myself at variance with the opinion expressed by the Prime Minister. The difference between the amendment and the terms of the clause as it stands is this. Clause 2 as it now stands makes this act supreme over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts—

Mr. BENNETT: Except with respect to three.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am coming to that, and then it specifically makes three exemptions referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of section 2. The intention, the purport and the effect of the amendment is to make this act prevail only where it is not inconsistent with other acts. In other words, there is not a single right that exists to-day in any other statute which is abrogated by this act, because it cannot prevail where it is inconsistent with the others. So that the effect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher is to safeguard not only the three exemptions that are specifically set out in section 2 of the bill but also many other rights. In other words, this bill shall prevail only where it is not inconsistent with the Crowsnest rate structure, with the Maritime Freight Rates Act, with the provisions in regard to compensation, or—and this is important—with a hundred other rights that may exist in a hundred other statutes. That is the intention of the amendment, and with all respect I must take exception to the point raised by the Prime Minister. I must take issue with his interpretation of the effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Provencher. The intention of the amendment is to safeguard rights that now exist under all statutes; it is intended that Bill No. 37 shall prevail only where it is not inconsistent with rights and functions that already exist with respect to employees or companies or corporations or citizens under the various acts now existent and which might be affected by the terms of this legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think there is any doubt that that is the intention. The point of order I withdraw, but the effect of the amendment, if it were adopted, would mean the abandonment of this bill. The bill is abandoned if the amendment is accepted.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is true the bill is abandoned in part—

Mr. BENNETT: No, the whole thing falls.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As the clause is drafted, it necessitates parliament legislating wholly in the dark, because it declares that, notwithstanding all statutes which may exist on any subject whatever, if their provisions conflict with any section of this bill, those particular provisions shall not be considered. Let me illustrate. There is a statute known as the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act which deals for instance, with matters of dispute between employees and the railway companies. If this section is permitted to remain as it is, and it suits the convenience of the person, whoever he may be, who is interpreting this statute to say that the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act are inconsistent with its provisions, out that statute goes, and, I venture to say, without any intention on the part of this House of Commons to bring about any such effect. What should be done is for this particular act to amend by its provisions existing acts in such a way that the effect of the amendment will be self-evident, we would then be enabled to see how far we are overriding the provisions of other acts. We should not, however, have a clause that goes the length of obliterating provisions of statutes passed for a variety of reasons and which undoubtedly, were they known, this house would wish to safeguard. To make my point clear, I shall ask the minister this question to which I venture to say he will not be able to reply: Will he tell us what particular statutes and what provisions in those statutes are there that may be inconsistent with this bill?

Mr. MANION: I should not like to attempt to give a list of such statutes because I might omit some of them, but I will tell the right hon. gentleman that the statement he has made with reference to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act is not correct because this would not affect it one particle. My right hon. friend is confusing inconsistent provisions with inconsistent statutes. He says that this would wipe out different statutes. It does not propose to wipe out statutes but inconsistent provisions. May I, while agreeing with what the Prime Minister has said, point out also one most important respect in which this act would be made nugatory if the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher should carry. This legislation provides for co-operation and it provides for tribunals in cases of dispute. These provisions do not exist in the Railway Act and therefore the provisions in the Railway Act which are inconsistent with the provision in this act with respect to tribunals and also with respect to the bringing about of cooperation will be prevailed over by this act. The Railway Act is not prevailed over by this act except in so far as certain provisions of the former are inconsistent with this legislation, and that is the only effect this has. If however the amendment of the hon. member were to carry, it would indisputably have the effect of rendering the rest of this act null and void, because you would not then have tribunals as provided for in part III of this bill. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre sees the point. You could not have tribunals under this act at all if the hon. member's amendment carried, inasmuch as they would be inconsistent with the Railway Act and therefore that act would prevail and nullify this one. May I point out to the committee that this legislation has been considered by many lawyers in the Senate, and as the Prime Minister has pointed out it was deemed advisable after careful study that with respect to these three acts which are specified here, namely, section 179 of the Railway Act which deals with the matter of compensation in the case of moving a terminal; secondly, the Maritime Freight Rates Act; and, thirdly, the Crowsnest Pass legislation, they should be specifically set out by way of exemption.

Mr. BURY: It may be that, in the language of the Scotch, I am slow in the uptake, but as I read the first clause in section 2 I am still of the opinion that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher is a direct negative. The clause as it is in the bill reads:

> The provisions of this act. . . .shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions.

The hon. member wants this changed to read:

> Shall prevail when not inconsistent.

If this act is to prevail only when the provisions of other acts are not inconsistent, it surely cannot prevail over inconsistent ones. The effect of the amendment therefore is virtually to say: "The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall not prevail over inconsistent provisions of other acts." Is that not simply to introduce a negative in front of the word "prevail"? The clause as it stands, reads, "shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions." The proposed amendment in fact reads, "shall not prevail over any inconsistent provision."

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is the hon. member speaking to a point of order?

Mr. BURY: Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There is no point of order before the chair.

Mr. BURY: The statement was made that the amendment was not a negative. In my opinion it is a distinct negative. May I call attention to another difficulty that, it seems to me, exists arising out of the proposed amendment? The clause as it now reads is that this act shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions. In other words, it makes this an overriding act. I do not have to search other acts to find out inconsistent provisions; I simply go to this act. Its provisions alone are relevant; the only relevant provisions of other acts are those that are inconsistent, and this measure provides that I do not need to bother my head about them. But if you insert the amendment which my hon. friend is suggesting, what you are providing is this, that this act shall prevail only when the provisions of another act are not inconsistent. How, then, am I to know whether the provisions of this act are to prevail or not? I can ascertain that only by looking into all other acts to see whether there is in any of them any inconsistency with this act? I take this Railway Act and I cannot say whether upon a particular point it is the ruling, dominant act, because I am saddled with a condition which tells me that this provision may be of no use to me; that I must look at all the other acts to find out whether there may not be in them some inconsistency; and if I find some inconsistency in some other act, it overrules this. This will put a tremendous onus on people who are construing this legislation and will raise a great deal of difficulty concerning it; whereas as it now stands, it is quite simple. The clause makes this act rule, and you have not to consider anything but its provisions.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is there any point of order before the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): No. The committee has heard the amendment and I presume it is now ready to decide the question.

Amendment (Mr. Beaubien) negatived.

Mr. MANION: I should have moved a minor amendment in regard to paragraph (c) of section 2, which reads:

> The provisions of any statute of Canada which confirm any contract or enact or provide for any specific or special freight rate, toll or tariff—

I wish to have an amendment moved by one of my colleagues for the removal of the rest of the words of that paragraph, because they are unnecessary—that is, the words following the word "tariff" in the eighteenth line, to the end of the paragraph, will be dropped.

Mr. POWER: May I ask the minister whether he knows what was in the minds of those who drafted this bill when they added the words which he now wishes to strike out and which read:

> Or for the ascertainment of any one freight rate, toll or tariff by reference to any other and the making of deductions or allowances.

Surely the persons who drafted this bill had something in mind when they added those words which the minister now wishes to strike out.

Mr. BENNETT: The point is simply this: the Crowsnest Pass legislation, as is known, dealt with certain commodities that were to bear certain rates. There are rates that have been fixed by reference to that particular act and the question was whether they were adequately covered by the provisions of this measure. These words were added to make this abundantly clear. The minister is satisfied that these words are unnecessary, having regard to the interpretation to be placed on the other portions of the act. If, on the other hand, the committee thinks there is any doubt about the matter, these words should remain.

Mr. MANION: I have no objection to their remaining. I still adhere to the opinion there is no necessity for the words, but as they do not do any particular harm, they may remain.

Mr. POWER: I am not objecting; I only want an explanation and I am satisfied with the one given by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MANION: Those who drew up the original bill thought the words were advantageous for some reasons I do not know. When we studied the bill in this house, we considered the words unnecessary and after we had discussed the matter with those who drew up the original bill, they agreed. But as my hon. friend and my leader, who are lawyers, consider there is some doubt, and as these words are merely redundant, there is no objection to their remaining.

There is a certain amendment in regard to the word "or" which should have been placed in subsection 2 of the same section. Paragraph (a) of section 2 reads:

> Any manufacturing, land, mining or ocean marine company, undertaking, property, work or service—

The word "or" should be inserted there, to make the bill more complete.

Mr. DUPRE: I move that.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GRAY: Before section 2 passes the committee, I should like to say a few words in connection with it and to add another saving clause.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacNicol): Is the hon. member now discussing section 2, subsection 1?

Mr. GRAY: Yes. In my opinion this is a dangerous section. It may be designed to and it certainly will relieve unemployment among the members of the legal profession, because from now on we shall have plenty of work deciding what is consistent and what is not. I suppose as a lawyer I should be in accord with that part of the provision. It seems to me, however, that we are going a long way when we enact legislation such as section 2, subsection 1, saying that this act shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts. I am sorry at the attitude taken with respect to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Provencher. There come up in the house almost every year private bills in which special provisions are inserted that certain sections are to prevail so long as they are not inconsistent with, for instance, the Companies Act. The bill under consideration is in its nature a railway act, and in many private bills we have special provisions that the Railway Act, so far as it is not inconsistent with the bill at the time under discussion shall prevail. What the hon. member for Provencher is trying to do by his amendment, and what we are trying to do is to see that all this legislation which has been passed and has withstood the test of time shall not simply be wiped out by Bill A, No. 37, introduced by the Minister of Railways into this house. But now that we have been told that this thing is going through as it stands, I hope that I may have some better success than has been accorded to my hon. friends who have already moved amendments. I am hoping that mine may be one of those of which the minister was thinking when he said on the second reading that he would welcome amendments. I am hoping that my amendment to add to the saving clauses will be accepted. By the way, I am wondering just when those saving clauses came to the minds of those who framed this bill. I am told, for instance, that certainly paragraph (a) had not been thought of by the framers of this bill when it was introduced into the Senate, and I think I am on safe ground when I presume that pargraphs (b) and (c) had not been thought of when this bill was introduced. I think I am almost safe in saying that this bill when it was first drafted simply read, so far as section 2 is concerned:

> The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts.

I think I am safe in that supposition. Then there came a doubt; there came pressure. "we must make certain". I commend my maritime friends for their insistence on matters of this kind. They have made certain that the Maritime Freight Rates Act will not be made inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and that there shall be exports through Canadian ports, as is provided by subsection 2 of section 14. Someone else suggested that we must make sure that the members of the various railway organizations be protected. And so in a great gesture paragraph (a) was inserted as a saving clause. I wonder if hon. members know how far that paragraph (a) does go in the protection of railway employees in the light of further provisions of this act and in the light of what we know is happening and will happen in respect to the laying off of railway men in this country. Paragraph (a) refers to section 179 of the Railway Act which is chapter 170 of the revised statutes of 1927, which provides for compensation. Section 179 of the Railway Act provides that where there is a change,

> The company shall compensate its employees as the board—

Meaning the Board of Railway Commissioners.

> —deems proper for any financial loss caused to them by change of residence—

Change of residence only.

> —necessitated thereby.

Suppose terminals are closed and men are dismissed, as I submit they are going to be wholesale, then section 179 of the Railway Act and this saving clause (a), which hon. gentlemen opposite boast of having put in. is absolutely worthless to the employees of the Canadian National Railways.

If we are going to start putting in saving clauses, let us stop right here at section 2 until we have gone through all the various acts which have been passed and which have withstood the test of time, and see whether any of their provisions are inconsistent with the provisions of this bill. The minister says: I cannot tell you how many such there are. That is going to be a very interesting question. Let us pause before we legislate in this house for the future by a bill as drastic as this. In order to show the absurdity of having a provision of this kind, having simply saving clauses (a), (b) and (c) and not going on and inserting saving clauses (d), (e) and (f), and so on, I am going to move an amendment to add one other saving clause. I could add a dozen, but I am going to move to add only one simply to show what the minister is getting into and what we may expect for the future of this bill. The amendment I am going to move is with respect to section 23 of the present Canadian National Railways Act, which I say is entirely inconsistent with the powers given to the trustees under this bill. I say now, as I said on the second reading, that under this bill the trustees are permitted to allow lines to be abandoned without any regard to parliament, without any regard to the Board of Railway Commissioners, without any regard to the governor in council. If the bill means anything, certainly that is what it is intended to mean. It was to give the board of trustees this power without any regard to the Board of Railway Commissioners or the governor in council or parliament.

Let me read section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, not the Railway Act to which the minister referred a few moments ago in speaking to one hon. member. The Railway Act proper is chapter 170 of the statutes of 1927, but the Canadian National Railways Act, as the minister well knows, is a special act that was passed in 1920, at which time the Canadian National as we know it was created. It deals with the appointment of directors, the powers of directors, and matters of that kind. Section 23 of that act, being chapter 172 of the statutes of 1927, has this marginal note: "Power to abandon line, and dismantle or dispose thereof by consent," and reads as follows:

23. With the approval of the governor in council, and upon the recommendation of the Board of Railway Commissioners, the company may abandon the operation of any lines—

I draw attention to that, that it must be with the approval of the governor in council:

—or parts of lines of railway and incidental works, the operation or continued maintenance whereof has, in the opinion of the Board of Railway Commissioners, become unnecessary or inexpedient through duplication—

That is exactly what we find to-day, and the minister has pointed out, and in many cases rightly so, that these duplications make for certain abandonments. which is quite true:

—or other economical considerations;

The very tenor of this bill.

—and with the consent of a majority in value of the registered security holders affected may dismantle or dispose of the lines of railway or works so abandoned.

I think I should also read subsection 2 of section 23, in order that it may be a matter of record. It deals with the consent of the security holders for such abandonment, and reads, the consent having been referred to just prior to that in subsection 1 of section 23:

Such consent may be given by a majority in value of the registered security holders present at any meeting, in person or by proxy, called by the president of the company, to be held at any time or place stated by him, on notice in writing sent by registered mail to all of the registered security holders at least one calendar month before the date of the meeting; or may be given by a majority in value of the registered security holders by written consents filed with the company upon a circular stating the facts being sent by registered mail to all of the registered security holders.

It is interesting to note that when this section was discussed in the house at the time the original Canadian National Railways Act was considered in the House of Commons in 1919—many hon. members, including the minister himself, were in the house at that time —the gentleman piloting the bill through the House of Commons, now the leader of the government in another place, then acting Minister of Justice, had this to say with respect to section 23. Someone had raised the point with respect to the security holders, and the whole debate turned on many of the subject matters that we are now considering, namely, the control by parliament over matters dealt with in the legislation that was then being considered—and by the way the government had eventually to put closure on in order to pass that particular bill. It had been suggested to Mr. Meighen, then Acting Minister of Justice, that clause 23 was a far-reaching clause, and he replied, as reported in Hansard of 1919, volume 2, page 1709:

In so far as the security holders are concerned, their consent is obtained, but their security is not lost. This would only be a small part of their security that would be dismantled and abandoned, and they would see the wisdom of adopting that course and would consent accordingly. Inasmuch as the whole idea of this measure is the joining together for operating purposes of lines that were formerly under several managements, there will presumably be cases of duplication that may be cut out without injury to the public, and the intention of this section is to provide that that may be done.

Then, let me call the attention of the minister to this part of Mr. Meighen's speech:

The Board of Railway Commissioners is entrusted from the point of view of public convenience and safety with deciding what is necessary and what is not in the way of service. Consequently that is the tribunal, it seems to me, to which resort should be had to determine whether any small part or branch is a duplication or for other reasons may be abandoned.

Those are the words of the right hon. gentleman who introduced and piloted this present bill through the Senate only a few weeks ago. I submit that we should hesitate before we place in the hands of trustees, I care not who they may be, this power which up to the present has been exercised only after careful consideration by the Board of Railway Commissioners, with the governor in council as the final body to whom appeal may be taken from a decision of the board, we should hesitate before we take out of the hands of these men control of abandonments which would be to the detriment not only of eastern Canada but of western Canada as well, where lines have been built, and around which community centres have grown up. If, as the Prime Minister has said, this is a saving clause, then let us add another to (a), (b) and (c) which will save the rights of these branch lines and community centres, and which will protect those who have gone into new communities, and not place them at the mercy of trustees who think only of dollars and cents and not of the welfare of the community as a whole. With that in mind I beg to move the following amendment to the bill:

That section 2, subsection 1, be amended by adding thereto a clause to be lettered (d) "and the provisions of section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, 1920."

Mr. MANION: The hon. member has elaborated the point of his amendment, but I should like him in a few words to state his meaning. I do not suggest that he has confused the issue, but I should like to have explained to me the object of the amendment he has proposed.

Mr. GRAY: I am glad the minister is not the judge before whom I sometimes appear, because if he were I am afraid I would not win many cases. I am attempting to show to the minister that I want to preserve what is contained in section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, so that the board of trustees to whom he is giving all these powers shall not be able to go out and abandon lines, considering only the dollars and cents, without there being someone to whom we as members of parliament and, if you like, shareholders of the Canadian National Railways can go. Under section 23 the abandonment of a line must first have the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and then on the recommendation of the board the governor in council are for the time being directors acting on behalf of the people—I care not what you call them—the cabinet of this country. Those directors come into their places and we the shareholders can rise in our places and condemn or approve the abandonment of those lines. I know the minister will be fair in the matter, and I plead with him not to pass this section until he provides for that safety with respect to the abandonment of lines.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, to deal instantly with an amendment such as the hon. member has just moved, and apparently to which he has given considerable thought, is difficult. However, may I offer one or two suggestions to him? In the first place, so far as section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act is concerned—and I am giving my interpretation only as a layman, because as he knows I am not a lawyer—the section will remain to a large extent in force, with the exception that the trustees will act in the place of the directors. So far as the abandonment of lines is concerned I have this to say: Suppose under the present bill the Canadian National wished to abandon some portion of its territory, irrespective of the possibility of any cooperative measures, the trustees would still have to come before the Board of Railway Commissioners and obtain consent. But suppose it were dealing with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the change was being made for cooperative purposes, if there was any objection made by either of the companies an arbitral tribunal would be set up. Even then the arbitral tribunal would not have the power to carry out a cooperative measure unless the chairman of that tribunal agreed with the measure. And hon. members must bear in mind that the chairman of the arbitral tribunal is the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. GRAY: I do not wish to interrupt the minister's line of thought, but may I point out to him that in addition to the powers given to the directors as outlined in the Railway Act, he must take note of subsection 6 of section 9 of the bill, which reads that:

(6) No order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty—

And I presume His Majesty in this instance means the governor in council, if it means anything. Certainly it must mean parliament, but let us assume for the sake of argument that it means governor in council. Let me proceed with subsection 6:

—or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies.

The section referred to is that which transfers to these trustees the powers of the directors of the Canadian National Railways as they obtain under the Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken, and I am sorry I cannot follow the argument of the minister in connection with the bill. He said the trustees will still have to go before the Board of Railway Commissioners in regard to the abandonment of branch lines. I cannot find provision for such procedure.

Mr. MANION: I refer to the abandonment of services. The directors have to go to the board at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, but they are being abolished. You are appointing a board of trustees.

Mr. MANION: Under the Railway Act the board of trustees would not be able to abandon services to any greater extent than they are abandoned at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But there is no safeguard in this legislation. That is what the hon. member is stating, and that is the condition we wish to guard against in the amendment submitted. I think the minister confuses the trustees with the arbitral tribunal. The arbitral tribunal has nothing to do with the point raised by the hon. member for West Lambton. They come into play only when there is a dispute between the two railway systems. In this legislation the government is seeking to appoint what may be known as an arbitral board of trustees. They are given sweeping powers whereby they are not subject to the approval of the governor in council. They could abandon branch lines without going before the Board of Railway Commissioners, without going before the governor in council or before this parliament.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member referred to subsection (6) of section 9. I call to his attention the fact that in subsection 2 of section 9 page 6 of the bill we find the following:

The trustees shall and may thereafter, subject to the provisions of this act, have and exercise all the powers, rights, privileges and immunities, and perform and be subject to all the duties, responsibilities and restrictions, which now appertain to the board of directors of the national company.

Mr. GRAY: Mr. Chairman, if the minister will agree here and now to the deletion of subsection 6 of section 9 I might consider the withdrawal of my amendment.

Mr. MANION: I believe we should deal with subsection 6 of section 9 when we come to it.

Mr. GRAY: I did not raise the question with regard to that section.

Mr. MANION: Yes, my hon. friend did raise it a moment ago. We should deal with subsection 6 of section 9 when we come to it, not under section 2.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The point applies equally to the minister, who has just dealt with subsection 2 of section 9. May I reread part of it:

The trustees shall and may thereafter, subject to the provisions of this act, have and exercise all the powers, rights, privileges and immunities. . . .

These are new powers which the directors never had under the Canadian National Railways Act. You are giving them powers apart from the governor in council, apart from parliament, and without any limit whatever. Subsection 2 is subject only to the provisions of this act. There is no comparison whatever between the powers of the trustees under this act and the powers of the directors under the old Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. MANION: I think my hon. friend should read all of it, not merely part of it.

Mr. BENNETT: May I say a word, Mr. Chairman? I do not desire to trespass upon the time of the committee, but I am amazed at some observations that have been made. That, of course, may be because I have been unable to grasp the situation as it has been presented. Section 9 provides that—

When the governor in council shall proclaim in the Canada Gazette that he has vacated all nominations to the board of directors of the national company and has appointed trustees as by section 4 of this act provided the said board shall cease to exist—

That eliminates the board.

—and, by force of this act and without more, the direction and control of the national company and its undertaking shall be vested, subject to the provisions of this act, in the trustees.

That is the substitution of the trustees for the directors. Then follow the subsections to which attention has been directed, by which it is perfectly clear that the trustees are clothed with wide powers additional to those they may exercise by virtue of succeeding the former board of directors. But will the committee be good enough to look at subsection 4 of the Caandian National Railways Act? It says:

(4) The National Act and all statutes, charters, letters patent and orders in council of Canada which relate to any of such companies in Canada shall, in so far as they may be inconsistent with the provisions of this section, be read in the light hereof and be construed so as to conform herewith.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is right.

Mr. BENNETT: That makes it perfectly clear that the Canadian National Railways Act, so far as it is possible to read that act with this, must be read to conform with the provisions of this measure, letter A of the Senate, Bill No. 37. If the hon. gentleman will examine with a little more care the provision at the top of page 7 of the bill, subsection 6, of section 9, having given evidence of his astuteness as a lawyer he will realize that that subsection does not deal with orders in council, has nothing to do with orders in council. The shareholder of all the national railways is His Majesty, in the right of the dominion, and he is registered as such. It will be observed that inasmuch as you have to appeal to the shareholders under the provisions of some statutes, and inasmuch as His Majesty is a shareholder, when it says—

No order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies.

—that means His Majesty qua shareholder—not the governor in council, not the cabinet, not anything else except His Majesty as a shareholder. The crown is the shareholder of the Canadian National at the present moment, and it shall not apply to His Majesty or to any other shareholder, that is the half dozen people who have been selected for the purpose of constituting quorums and matters of that kind. That is the reason that provision was put there. I think the hon. member for West Lambton will remember the rule of law, ejusdem generis. Here you have the words, "His Majesty or any other shareholder," the words "His Majesty" mean His Majesty as a shareholder or any other shareholder. Under the general rule affecting railways as provided by the Railway Act and other statutes you have to call a meeting of shareholders to deal with certain matters that the directors have set in motion, their power being to set the machinery in motion. This subsection merely provides that no appeal is necessary to the shareholders. Neither the consent of the crown in the right of His Majesty is required, nor that of the other shareholders of the company. That is all it means. As I read section 23, to which the hon. gentleman has referred, there is nothing in the bill inconsistent with this section. As far as I am concerned at the present moment, without looking at it in more detail, section 23 is unaffected by this legislation. It has not yet been pointed out in what sense it is affected. Just let us look at it:

With the approval of the governor in council, and upon the recommendation of the Board of Railway Commissioners, the company may abandon the operation of any lines or parts of lines of railway and incidental works, the operation or continued maintenance whereof has, in the opinion of the Board of Railway Commissioners, become unnecessary or inexpedient through duplication, or other economical considerations;—

As I see it at the moment there is no inconsistency between the two; this section in its force and vigour is retained. Nothing that has been said this evening, no reference that has been made to the statute affords a reason for changing that view. The supreme purpose of the statute is not to take from the security holders any powers they possess or any rights they enjoy, but rather to say, as this act has said, that unless they consent to action being taken the action cannot be taken. After all, as I said the other day, although an endeavour was made by many people to have it misunderstood, the equity of redemption in these roads is all that we have, and inasmuch as they were built without a single dollar of capital being put up other than that represented by the securities, the non-payment of interest on the securities put them in the defaulting class had it not been for the guarantee given by the Dominion of Canada. That guarantee is what saves them from receivership, and the trustees in this case are merely trying to preserve the rights of the security holders who really built the roads in question on the bonds guaranteed by the dominion. There never was, although it was hoped there would be, any value in the equity of redemption; there is none now. As far as this section of the statute is concerned I see nothing at the moment that would induce me to believe, unless I hear arguments more powerful than I have yet heard,—and I do not reflect on the power of the arguments made—that there is any inconsistency between that provision and section 23.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If that were the effect of this provision there would be no trouble at all so far as the amendment is concerned, and if the right hon. gentleman will accept the spirit of the amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton I think all on this side will be satisfied. The Prime Minister cited subsection 4, which exactly proves the contention of the hon. member for West Lambton. The Canadian National Railways Act, and all statutes, and so forth, which relate to any such companies, shall, in so far as they may be inconsistent with the provisions of this section, be read in the light hereof and be construed so as to conform herewith. What does that mean? It means where there is any inconsistency between the Canadian National Railways Act and Bill No. 37, the Canadian National Railways Act must be subsidiary to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has just made one mistake. If he will look at subsection 4, he will observe that the inconsistency must be "with the provisions of this section," and that is the section which substitutes the trustees for the directors. I am sorry the hon. gentleman should think that the inconsistency must be with the act; it deals only with the trustees, and the substitution of them for the directors. Any inconsistency between the Canadian National Railways Act and this—and there are many—must be read in the light of this section.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Section 9 gives the trustees certain powers. In the first place, it abolishes the directors and, in the second place it constitutes the trustees. The powers of the trustees are practically set out in this section 9.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. member look at section 3?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I have read that. I am now referring to the subsection which the Prime Minister read, subsection 4. There may be inconsistencies with the provisions of the section which confers the powers upon the board of trustees which is to take the place of the board of directors created by the Canadian National act. Let us now consider subsection 6, also referred to by the Prime Minister. This reads:

> No order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies.

It is not material whether this refers to His Majesty in the capacity of a shareholder or in any other capacity, the effect of the subsection is that His Majesty has no control over any order, any regulation, any by-law, any act, any decision or any proceeding of the trustees which is being set up under section 9. That is the fundamental and vital difference between this bill and the Canadian National act. A board of trustees is being substituted for the old board of directors and the trustees are given powers which the directors never had. The directors were always subject to the governor in council and there is not a single clause in this bill which subjects the board of trustees to the dictates of the governor in council. Their acts cannot be discussed even by parliament. There is no comparison between the powers granted to the trustees under section 9 and the powers granted to the board of directors under the Canadian National act. Subsection 4 of section 9 specifically states that where the provisions of the Canadian National act are inconsistent with the provisions of this section, then the provisions of the act shall be of no avail. It is intended that this bill shall override the provisions of the Canadian National act. That has been our fight all along. As I stated on the second reading of the bill, it means the abandonment of government control and government ownership of the Canadian National railways.

Mr. POWER: I should like to add a word or two to the argument of my hon. friend from Vancouver. If the argument made by the Prime Minister is sound, surely he would have no objection to stating in the bill that section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act shall not be deemed to be inconsistent with the provisions of this bill or to be in any way affected thereby. There seems to be some dispute between those who believe they are capable of interpreting the meaning of this bill, and its provisions should be made clear. Apparently a similar dispute arose in the other house in connection with the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and in order to make it quite clear subsections (a), (b) and (c) were inserted. As I understand it, there is no difference between hon. members on either side of the house in connection with the principle that before any branch line or section of road shall be torn up someone other than the trustees whom we have set up shall pass upon the action, that the human element shall be taken into some consideration and that responsibility shall be placed upon the shoulders of someone other than this irresponsible board of trustees. I submit that this matter could be easily settled by the government accepting the amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton.

Mr. MANION: In connection with section 23 of the National act, I still adhere to the position that where the trustees decide upon the abandonment of any branch line or service, they would have to appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners just the same as the directors must appeal.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Where is that?

Mr. MANION: The Railway Act still applies except those sections which are inconsistent. That section is not inconsistent. Another point which I should like to bring out is that if section 23 were put into the present bill as proposed by the hon. member for West Lambton, the arbitral tribunals would be rendered useless. There will be times when an arbitral tribunal will meet for the purpose of deciding whether a branch line shall be abandoned or a joint service inaugurated.

Mr. GRAY: I am hopeful that the tribunal will be the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MANION: That is another matter. I take the position that section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, while perhaps not completely, will be to a large extent still in operation even after this bill goes into effect. I differ from my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre. If that section were included in this bill it might and I think it would interfere with the power of the tribunals in dealing with cooperative abandonment of certain branch lines or the decision to operate a joint service or something of that sort. I do not think the amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton should be accepted.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It has been intimated that we are agreed on both sides of the house that no branch lines shall be scrapped without the trustees having to appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners. If the minister accepts that view, surely we could agree upon some clause which would make it absolutely clear.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Apparently the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways are not in agreement as to the effect of this amendment. The Prime Minister has stated that there is sufficient provision in this bill to safeguard what my hon. friend wants to obtain by his amendment. The Minister of Railways tells the committee that he is afraid of the effect of including a safeguarding clause in the bill which would retain the provisions of section 23 of the Canadian National act. The minister is afraid that such a section would disturb the functions of that august and majestic arbitral tribunal. I suggest that there is nothing in the amendment which would hinder the work of the arbitral tribunal; it would mean that the consent of the governor in council would have to be obtained to whatever was proposed by the private and national systems in connection with the abandonment of lines. We want to safeguard against the wholesale slaughter of branch lines throughout Canada without parliament having a single word to say. I repeat what I said before: This is a final abdication of the principle of democratic control and ownership of the Canadian National system. The Prime Minister says we are not losing that and the Minister of Railways says we are. The minister has stated that if this amendment is added to the bill it will interfere with the work of the tribunal. The Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways might agree among themselves that the abandonment of a branch line would be in the interests of economy. Cooperation by direction is covered by part II of the bill, and cooperation by compulsion is made possible by part III. I ask the minister to show me one clause or one sentence in this bill which will give us the right asked for by the hon. member for West Lambton, that section 23 shall be preserved for the people of Canada in the legislation we are now considering.

Mr. MANION: I do not know offhand that I can show my hon. friend the section, but I still maintain that the trustees are in exactly the same position with regard to the abandonment of lines as are the directors under the legislation which exists at the moment. Dealing only with section 23 of the Canadian National act, I say that the trustees will be in exactly the same position in having to go before the board as the directors are now. That is my claim.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the minister show me where that appears in the act? I understood him to say that the trustees were in the same position as the directors of the Canadian National Railways in regard to obtaining the consent of the governor in council—

Mr. MANION: I did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I understood him to say that the board of trustees under this legislation was in exactly the same position as the directors of the Canadian National Railways under the Canadian National Act and I submit that that is not so. Even though the minister may find some section here which I cannot find, which might make it desirable for the trustees to go before the Board of Railway Commissioners, there is nothing in this legislation that makes it necessary for them to obtain the consent of the governor in council in regard to the abandonment of a single branch line.

Mr. MANION: I am informed by the legal advisers that there is nothing in this act that takes away reference to the governor in council so far as the trustees are concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Then will the minister agree to the representations made on this side of the house to have a specific clause inserted that will maintain the right of endorsation by the governor in council.

Mr. BENNETT: There should be certain fundamental principles to apply to the case. First, if I followed the hon. gentleman fairly, and I think I did, let me ask: Where in this bill do you find any section that provides that section 23 of the Canadian National Railway Act does not apply?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In what the Prime Minister has said this evening with regard to subsection 6 of section 9, he gives an entirely different interpretation of the measure from that which all of us on this side of the house had given it up to the time he spoke. If he wishes to be understood in the light of what he has just said, I will say at once that many of the objections which we have to the measure are removed; we want, however to have the point made perfectly clear. As we have understood the subsection up to the present time, we have taken it to mean that all provisions in the former act, which require consent on the part of the governor in council to certain actions by the trustees, were being wholly removed, and that no order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty. We were reading that in absolute terms as referring to all acts—any act of the trustees. As I now understand it the Prime Minister interprets the section as follows: No order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees, in so far as it relates to this section and this section only, shall require the approval of His Majesty or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I said. I desired to convey to the committee this meaning: that His Majesty, here, was referred to as a shareholder—"or that of any other shareholder"—and that the rule ejusdem generis applies, namely, that where you have the words "His Majesty" they must mean His Majesty as a shareholder, because that is clearly what is meant. All our legislation is based on the assumption that the shareholders must express their approval. For instance, in the Canadian National Railways Act there is a list of several pages of companies—a page and a half—to which it applies; and under the general law, whenever certain acts or by-laws have to be made effective, the shareholders must be called together to give approval. Now, we have provided in subsection 6 that no order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, April 10, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES

EXPUNGEMENT OF OBJECTIONABLE STATEMENTS FROM THE RECORD

Mr. SPEAKER: On Friday, April 7, the right hon. the leader of the opposition raised the point that the house having control of its own records, the house should, before any statements are expunged from the official report of the debates, pass a resolution to that effect, and he submitted that the Speaker being the servant of the house in this, as in all matters, the house itself should determine whether anything is to be deleted from any of its records.

In the case in point, the first opportunity I had of fully understanding the words complained of was when I saw the official report, and since I should have ruled them out when they were uttered I consider I was justified in ruling them out from the chair as soon as the house sat again. I agree that in dealing with Hansard the Speaker's authority is subject to the approval of the house.

Instructions for any alteration in the official report of the debates should not be given without communicating them to the house in session, and for this reason, whenever I have deemed it advisable to direct that certain statements be expunged, I have done so from the chair, thus giving a ruling which, under standing order 12, is subject to an appeal to the house. I have followed the precedent established by one of my predecessors who, on April 6, 1925, decided that an answer given by the government should be expunged, and he did so in the following words:

> I therefore rule that the answer be expunged from Hansard, and if the question is put again, a distinct answer should be given.

I have dealt with all such cases as questions of order subject to the ordinary rules of parliamentary procedure.

PETITIONS PRESENTED

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, under standing order 68 I have the honour to present four petitions addressed to the House of Commons endorsed, as required by paragraph 5 of the same standing order, by myself.

The first is from the electors of the parish of Notre Dame du Portage, in the county of Témiscouata, protesting against the proposed annexation of that parish to the county of Kamouraska.

The next is a petition from the electors of the town and parish of Trois-Pistoles, in the county of Témiscouata, containing the signatures of several hundred people, protesting against its annexation to the county of Rimouski.

The next is a petition of the parish of Sainte-Françoise, in the county of Témiscouata, protesting against its annexation to the county of Rimouski.

The next is a petition from the parish of Saint-Jean de-Dieu, in the county of Témiscouata, protesting against its annexation to the county of Rimouski.

There are in all, on these petitions, about 992 names, mostly of heads of families.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

ACCEPTANCE OF INVITATION TO THE PRIME MINISTER TO MEET PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): As a matter of public interest, if the Prime Minister would not regard me as unduly inquisitive, may I ask if he has received an invitation from the President of the United States to meet him in Washington to discuss international problems, and if so, whether he intends to accept the invitation in person?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is in the affirmative.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend one further question? Does he intend to pay the visit during the Easter recess, if that is not asking too much?

Mr. BENNETT: I am not in a position to answer that question definitely, but at the moment I would say no.

SINO-JAPANESE DISPUTE

SPEECH DELIVERED BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE AT GENEVA TO BE DISCUSSED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): In view of the extensive and somewhat conflicting press references to the speech delivered at Geneva by the Secretary of State, may I ask if the house will be given a definite statement of policy with regard to that question at an early date?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I do not think there is any necessity of saying anything further than has already been said with respect to that particular matter. I had no notice that such a question was going to be asked, but I might add that when the estimates are under consideration an ample opportunity for discussing the matter will be given in fairness to the Secretary of State, who has not yet had the opportunity, and I trust that he will avail himself of it.

GRAIN COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): May I ask if the Minister of Trade and Commerce has received the report of the Board of Grain Commissioners for the crop year ending July 31, 1932, and if so, whether it will soon be available to the house?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will answer my hon. friend's question definitely to-morrow.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. F. GARLAND (Carleton): May I ask if it is the intention of the Minister of Finance to have voted a proportion of the estimates in order to provide for the salaries of the civil service which are due on the fifteenth of this month?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I propose in the course of the afternoon, as soon as we reach government orders, to ask for interim supply.

SARNIA-PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

On the order:

The house again in committee on Bill No. 41, an act to incorporate the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company (as amended).—Mr. Gray.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I would like to suggest to the hon. member that he have the bill as it has now been amended after a conference with the officials of the Department of Justice reprinted before we proceed with it, because as it now stands it would be almost impossible for anyone to understand the various amendments which have been made if they are simply pasted on to the original. I think the bill should be reprinted. It is not a matter of very great expense, and I think it should be done.

Mr. GRAY: I shall be glad to comply with the wishes of the Prime Minister.

Order stands.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT—LEASES

Mr. BARRETTE:

1. Is the contract dated December 10, 1908, repecting the leasing of the old Beauharnois canal, to which the Minister of Railways and William Cassell McIntyre and Edmond Arthur Robert were parties, still in force?

2. Was the contract transferred to some other party, and who holds the contract at the present time?

3. Are the obligations arising out of this contract still in force, and if any modifications have been made, what are they?

4. Are clauses 16 and 17 of the original lease respecting the transfer of the lease of the old Beauharnois canal still in force?

5. If these clauses in the contract were cancelled, what reasons were adduced for their cancellation?

6. Were similar clauses inserted in the agreement concluded between the federal government and the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company?

7. Was a guarantee to the effect that this company will not amalgamate or merge with or sell any of its shares to the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company inserted in the contract of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company?

8. Was the clause mentioned in paragraph 7 inserted in the contracts in which the federal government is interested directly or indirectly?

Mr. MANION:

1. Lease dated December 10, 1907, of the old Beauharnois canal, to William C. McIntyre and Edmond A. Robert (as renewed April 26, 1930) is still in force.

2. On October 23, 1908, the lease was assigned to the Canadian Light and Power Company, which company now holds renewal of same.

3. The obligations arising out of the lease are regarded as still in force.

4. Clauses 16 and 17 of the original lease expressly forbade any assignment of the lease to the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, its assigns or successors; or any partnership or amalgamation. These clauses were waived by P. C. 3136 of December 18, 1920. This change is not regarded as a change in obligations entailed by the lease.

5. The reasons set out in the order in council waiving clauses 16 and 17 were to the effect that the provisions of the clauses in question caused the company great hardship in financing its operations and prevented it from borrowing at advantageous rates on its securities, and had hampered the company's development, tending to increase the cost of power to the public.

6. Not specifically, but it is provided therein that there shall be no assignment except with the approval of the governor in council.

7. If the contract referred to is that embodied in Dominion order in council, P.C. 504, of March 1, 1932 (and not the agreement as between the province of Quebec and the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company), the answer is that no such guarantee was exacted. However, as stated in answer No. 6, there is a measure of control, clause 31, of the agreement and of order in council, P.C. 504, providing:—

"That no assignment of the company's works nor of its rights under Chapters 19 and 20 of the Statutes of Canada, 1931, and/or under order in council (P.C. 504) dated the 1st day of March, 1932, shall be made unless the approval of the governor in council is first had and obtained; and in case the company shall make any such assignment without such approval His Majesty may take over and operate the whole or any part of the company's works without compensation; Provided, however, that an assignment by the company to a trustee or trustees as security for an issue or issues of its securities shall not be deemed to be an assignment within the meaning of this clause."

8. Answered by the replies to questions 6 and 7.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT—REFINANCING

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

The holders of the $30,000,000 6 per cent collateral trust bonds of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company held a meeting called in accordance with the provisions of the trust mortgage deed securing the said bonds, default having been made in the payment of the interest thereon, and elected a committee to deal with the situation. A further meeting of such bond holders will consider a plan prepared by the committee, which involves certain action being taken by the Dominion government if the plan is acceptable to the bond holders.

2. The government is aware of no reason why any interested person might not submit a plan for reorganization of the company to the committee of the bond holders. In the event of any plan being submitted, it would be for the committee to consider what appropriate action should be taken, but the committee would undoubtedly ascertain the views of the government with respect to its guarantee. The committee of the bond holders is charged with the responsibility of dealing with the plans for reorganization of the enterprise, and not the government.

Mr. RHODES: A few days ago I spoke to the hon. member and, as a matter of fact, supplied him with a copy of the order in council. I understood it was his intention, if I am not mistaken, to drop the order. In the meantime I ask that at least it should stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. members will observe that motion No. 15, refers to all the documents in possession of the Civil Service Commission, and raises the old question as to the extent to which all these papers may be made available. No doubt some of them are privileged communications with various correspondents whose names they do not wish to disclose, concerning the habits and characters of those seeking employment.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry, with those reservations?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried, with reservations.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT

CHANGE IN POSTAGE ON ADVERTISING PORTION OF NEWSPAPERS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Post Office Act to provide that the advertising portion of newspapers and periodicals transmitted for a greater distance than forty miles from their place of publication, or of which the publication is of greater frequency than once a week, shall be subject to postage of two cents a pound where the space devoted to advertisements exceeds 20 per cent but does not exceed 30 per cent of the total space; of 3 cents a pound where such space exceeds 30 per cent but does not exceed 50 per cent; and of 4 cents a pound where such space exceeds 50 per cent.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General in Council, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the operation of the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, make it desirable, indeed necessary, that we should have interim supply. I therefore would ask the unanimous consent of the house to vote one-twelfth of supply. If that consent be given it is of course distinctly understood that the reservations usual in such cases as to full rights of discussion shall be preserved to all members of the house.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): As far as the official opposition is concerned, there is no objection to meeting the request of my hon. friend.

Mr. RHODES moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair—

Mr. RHODES: May I point out that we can only proceed in this way by unanimous consent, otherwise the motion would not be made. That being so I hope my hon. friend will not embark on a discussion, which would be out of the ordinary course.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend the Minister of Finance will have unanimous consent. What I have to mention to the house is a very important matter, and it will be very short. This is the only opportunity I have to bring the matter before the house now.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, may I say with all deference to my hon. friend that if he exercises his right the same right is open to every hon. member, and we therefore could not proceed by unanimous consent, which is the only method by which we can proceed. If my hon. friend objects to the motion I will withdraw it.

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell my hon. friend that I do not wish to be unpleasant to him, therefore I will take the first opportunity to bring this matter before the house at another time; but I hope that on that occasion the government will be just as courteous as I am now.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. RHODES moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $16.220.422.36, being one-twelfth of the amount to be voted as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1934, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty, on account, for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1934.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Mr. RHODES moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. RHODES moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1934, the sum of $16,220,422.36 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 72, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1934.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORIZATION OF PROVISION OF MONEYS TO MEET EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, I should like the house to consent to advancing resolution 31 to the stage of getting the bill before the house, because it is a financial bill for the Canadian National Railways. When the bill reaches second reading it will be referred to the select standing committee on railways, so this is a formal matter.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): A special committee?

Mr. MANION: Yes. I move that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to empower the Canadian National Railway Company to issue notes for a sum not exceeding $13,058,604.63 for refunding requirements and capital expenditures for the calendar year 1933, and to authorize the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the governor in council, to make loans on the security of such notes to an amount not exceeding the said sum; and to authorize the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the governor in council, to make temporary and accountable advances not exceeding in the aggregate $47,941,395.37 to meet the net income deficits occurring during the calendar year 1933, the total of such deficits as certified by auditors appointed to audit the accounts of the company, to be included in the estimates submitted to parliament at the first session following the close of the said calendar year.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Manion thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 73, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1933 and to authorize His Majesty to make loans and advances to the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. MANION moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: If the house would give permission, Mr. Speaker, I would move that the bill now be given second reading and referred to the special committee on railways and shipping.

Motion agreed to; bill read the second time and referred to the special committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Lucas.

Mr. ISAAC D. MACDOUGALL (Inverness): Mr. Speaker, before offering any comment on the budget or the criticism to which it has been subjected may I pause briefly to pay a humble meed of tribute and of praise to the memory of a personal friend, a fellow commoner from the maritime provinces who, since the beginning of this session, has passed on to that bourne from whence no traveller returns. The late Mr. Cormier, who all too briefly represented in this house the constituency of Restigouche-Madawaska, was in every sense of the word an educated, cultured, Christian gentleman. He exemplified in private as in public life the highest and noblest traditions of the French Acadian race in Canada, a race whose unselfish sacrifices, indomitable courage and fortitude in the face of travail and adversity; whose respect for law and constituted authority, whose love of home, and abiding faith in a triune and eternal God combined to earn for it a distinctive place in the annals of maritime history. To that race, which through the passing of Mr. Cormier has lost a distinguished representative; to the electorate of Restigouche-Madawaska; to the many friends of the deceased and especially to his immediate relatives, on this occasion I extend my sincerest condolences.

Mr. Speaker, as a fellow Nova Scotian may I be permitted—if he can stand any more felicitations—to felicitate my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the presentation of his second budget to the parliament of Canada. My hon. friend—and I wish he would not look at me at the moment, because I know his native modesty—has earned for himself an exalted place in Canadian public life. For some years he occupied the position which you, sir—and may I congratulate you also on having reached to-day the sixtieth anniversary of your birth—occupy at the moment with such ability, impartiality and urbanity, the position of chief commoner of Canada. On two occasions my hon. friend was selected by his fellow citizens of Nova Scotia to be premier of that province. When my hon. friend accepted the portfolio of finance he brought to the discharge of onerous public duties a keen sense of business acumen, a wide knowledge of men and affairs, natural intellectual endowments that are not surpassed in the House of Commons, high educational qualifications, and perhaps above all and more important than anything else an unsullied and irreproachable character. During the world depression and dislocation of to-day I think we can all agree, irrespective of party politics, that Canada is most fortunate in having the present Minister of Finance.

But let me have done with congratulations for the moment, Mr. Speaker; that is hardly a Highlander's role. I turn now to the speech of my hon. friend who so ably represents Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), over the long distance telephone from Montreal. From the point of view of time my hon. friend's speech was the longest he has made in parliament; from the point of view of delivery it was the loudest, and from the point of view of material it was by far the emptiest of his public addresses. From its exordium to the colourless and broken-backed amendment with which it concluded there was not even the genesis of one constructive idea. But perhaps no one who has been in this house for the last few years would be surprised at that. For several years past the sole role of our friends opposite has been to offer carping, destructive criticism. It would be just as futile, just as bootless, to expect anything of a constructive nature to emanate from the opposition benches as it would be to put a blind man in a dark room and expect him to discover a black cat that was not there.

My hon. friend, in the beginning of his speech, essayed the role of prophet, a role that sits rather heavily upon him, because as I understand in the last election he made some predictions that proved entirely unwarranted. In this role he predicted that there would be changes in the budget before it passed its final stages in parliament. May I tell him that there never was a budget presented to the parliament of Canada, either by a Liberal or by a Conservative government, in which material changes were not made before it passed its final stages. But, sir, it does not lie in the mouth of any Liberal to talk about changes being made in the budget after its introduction. We all remember what happened in 1927. When the Liberal government of that day brought down its budget, one of the features of that budget was a reduction in the duty on automobiles. Shortly after the budget was presented to parliament a very large delegation of working men and also women engaged in the automobile manufacturing industry of Canada, stormed the citadel hill. The government of that day declared that they would stick to their guns, that nothing would be done to satisfy the automobile manufacturers. They paid no attention to that delegation of workmen, nor to other delegations that came to them. But when the automobible manufacturers themselves interviewed them, what happened? In the dead and darkness of the night—it must have been in the night because nothing was done that day—in the darkness of the night, I say, when evil deeds are wont to be perpetrated, my hon. friends sought and found a method of relief for the automobile manufacturers of Canada, and to the amazement of this country the very next day they reduced the sales tax on automobiles and completely wiped out the luxury tax, with the result that they put the manufacturers of automobiles in a more preferred position than they had been in before the Liberal party tinkered with the tariff at all. And if Dame Rumour be a wench of her word, as she sometimes is, in grateful acknowledgment a couple of years later of this sneaking, contemptible, subterranean and typical Grit method of escape that was given to the automobile manufacturers of Canada by the then Liberal government, these same manufacturers pledged large sums to the campaign fund of the Liberal party in 1930.

I say therefore to my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth that it lies not in the mouth of any Liberal to talk about changes being made in the budget before it reaches its final stages in parliament. After assuming the role of prophet, my hon. friend went on to take the role of financial critic, and he criticized the government of the day because in its financial presentation it dealt with net debt and not with funded debt, forgetting, with that blissful forgetfulness of the Liberal party, that for nine years budgets were presented by the Liberal government and dealt solely and entirely with the net debt and not with the funded debt. The hon. gentleman also criticized the Minister of Finance for not laying aside a sinking fund. That is something that is becoming quite important to the Liberal party. In the days of buoyant revenues, before the world became enthralled in the present depression and when there was an opportunity to set aside a sinking fund, my hon. friends were in power for nine years and took no steps to set aside such a fund. But with that inconsistency which is the dominant characteristic of the Liberal party, the hon. gentleman censures the Minister of Finance for not setting aside a sinking fund in this period of depression.

The hon. member also referred to the fact that there were increases in the national debt, and it is true that there have been increases. But is there any man in Canada, who is not a fit and proper candidate for a lunatic asylum, who would think that there would be no increases in the national debt? This country, in common with every other country, had to meet an extraordinary situation and make extraordinary expenditures, and I do not hesitate to say that the increase in the national debt was justified. Those who argue otherwise must take the responsibility for saying that this government should refuse to discharge the fundamental right of a government in regard to the unemployed; they must say that the government should not have come to the rescue of those farmers in Saskatchewan who were suffering on account of circumstances over which they have no control. Extraordinary expenditures with respect to all these matters resulted in an increase in the national debt, but in every instance the increase was absolutely necessary.

And this is true of every government that recognizes the functions and the duties of government. They could not have been avoided.

My hon. friend next dealt with the stabilization fund proposed in the budget. This he damned with faint praise. He spoke mostly in reference to the maritime provinces in dealing with this matter, but he forgets that the farmers in the maritimes are still producing pork, poultry and cattle, even though he has left, and this stabilization fund will be of great benefit to them. He dealt with the stabilization fund only as it applied to fish; and of course, in the political blindness of prejudice that obscured his otherwise clear vision, he said, "Why this refers to only $50,000 worth of fish." My hon. friend must surely know, as I believe he does, that the fish products of the Atlantic and Pacific coast affected by the stabilization fund, did not amount to $50,000 but over three million.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will find no such statement in my speech. He is quoting me and he must quote me correctly. There is no mention in my speech of $50,000.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I wish to do my hon. friend absolute justice—

Mr. RALSTON: Do it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: —but I think he is a little bit afraid of justice in this matter. He reminds me of the story of the Irishman who appeared in a New York court. He broke down and someone said, "Don't carry on in that way; you will get justice here." The Irishman replied, "Begorra, that's the very thing I am afraid of." I will do my hon. friend justice; the amount of fish to which he referred was fresh fish, and he said $50,000—

Mr. RALSTON: I must ask my hon. friend to take that back; I did not say $50,000. My hon. friend must have been reading somebody else's speech.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: $500,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Nor $500,000.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Well, tell us what it was.

Mr. RALSTON: I think I mentioned $300,000 as the exports of fresh fish to Great Britain and about $6,000,000 to the United States. If that has any reference to $50,000 or $500,000, I do not see it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: My hon. friend makes his position worse. He says it was only $300,000, but the trade returns absolutely contradict that statement. But the point is that when my hon. friend was reading the budget speech, there was not a period or a comma between fresh and canned fish, but there was a full stop after the word "fish." These are the returns which my hon. friend wants; I shall be glad to give them. The fresh fish and canned fish products that will be directly affected by the stabilization fund amount to $3,884,550. That is quite a different amount from $300,000. Those are the statistics of the Department of Fisheries and my hon. friend can verify them.

When I listened to my hon. friend making his statement I was not at all surprised that he was only about sixty-five per cent unfair to the present government. What I did wonder at is that he could be thirty per cent fair to them. Knowing the deep dyed partisanship of my hon. friend, I could almost visualize the political labour pains he must have suffered in making a statement that was even thirty per cent fair to the present government in a matter redounding to its credit.

My hon. friend says that the right thing to do is to cancel the licences of the beam trawlers. For the purpose of being fair to him, let me go into the history of beam trawler operations in Nova Scotia. The first permit ever granted to a fish corporation to operate beam trawlers was granted by a Liberal government. To come nearer to the present time and to the time when my hon. friend joined the government in 1922, permits expired for the operation of beam trawlers in Nova Scotia and they were renewed by the King government for the benefit of the fish corporations. The permits expired again in 1923 and again they were renewed by the King government for the benefit of the fish corporations. The same thing happened in 1924 and 1925, but in 1926 my hon. friend, the present official critic of the opposition and the champion of the shore fishermen of Nova Scotia, entered this house as a member of the King government. The fishermen surely had a right to believe my hon. friend would make some protest against the renewal of permits, but the months wore on and the time came around in 1926 to renew the permits for beam trawlers. They were again renewed and the permits this time bore not only the imprimatur of the Prime Minister of that day but the nihil obstat of my hon. friend the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. And to use his own words, women wept and the fishermen bowed their heads.

In 1927, 1928 and 1929, we had the same procedure, but in 1930, with a federal election on and after a report of a commission appointed to investigate the fisheries in the maritime provinces, steps were taken by order in council. I am sorry the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) is not in his seat at the moment because, when anything approaching constitutional matters arises in this house, particularly regarding the rights of parliament in matters of expenditure and taxation, he becomes very fidgety; he squirms and twists as if in some way afflicted with a malevolent form of constitutional "fleabitis."

But in 1930, what was done? A tax was levied by order in council on beam trawler caught fish. When my hon. friends levied that tax by order in council, and unconstitutionally, if I may use the term of my hon. friend in regard to matters of taxation, because they did not consult parliament, they knew the order in council would be annulled by the courts of the country. As a matter of fact, to my knowledge defeated Liberal candidates went to fish corporations in Nova Scotia and said: "Never mind, do not worry about this tax; it is only a little Grit stageplay; it will never be collected." It never was collected.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will allow me on a point of order, he says that this tax was not collected. He knows that it was. There was $5,000 collected which was paid back by this government. While I am on my feet, might I point out to my hon. friend that the order in council was not held unconstitutional. It was held that the act was not broad enough to cover it, but parliament had power to pass the act. May I also point out that the order in council was passed in October, 1929, and not in 1930.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: That does not make any difference. My hon. friend is right about the date.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member said it twice.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: But I said it was not an act; it was an order in council. My hon. friend was a member of the government when it was passed.

Mr. RALSTON: I said that.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: A large fish corporation in Nova Scotia defied the government of this country and did not pay the tax. My hon. friend knows no attempt was made to collect the tax until ten days before the election when it became known in Nova Scotia that the National Fish Company were defying the government and Conservative speakers were making use of that. Then letters were written informing the fish corporations that they were expected to pay the tax. It is true that the Leonard Fisheries paid something in the neighbourhood of $5,000, but the National Fish Company paid nothing. When this government came into power they took proceedings in the courts of this country, as my hon. friend should know, to collect and recover the amount owing. Mr. Neill R. McArthur, of Glace Bay, a very distinguished barrister of Nova Scotia, acted as the representative of the government, and the operators and owners of beam trawlers were represented by an equally able counsel in the person of Mr. C. J. Burchell, I believe a former law partner of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend's information is wrong. Mr. N. W. Rowell represented the beam trawlers.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It was Mr. Rowell, was it?

Mr. RALSTON: Why does my hon. friend make these statements?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The result was that this order in council was nullified in the courts of this country and payments were refunded to the Leonard Fisheries with the consequence that the National Fish Company had to pay nothing at all. If in the treatment of a public question there ever was as much persiflage, bluffing and hyprocrisy melted into one, it was the way in which the Liberal government, of which my hon. friend was a member, dealt with the beam trawler question in Nova Scotia.

But criticizing actions of hon. gentlemen opposite may not clear other hon. members from Nova Scotia who should fearlessly take their stand in regard to this matter. So far as I am concerned, I wish to congratulate the present government for taking what is at least a fearless, truthful, frank and open stand in declaring that its policy is to be gradual elimination of trawlers as a means of prosecuting the fishing industry in Nova Scotia.

Mr. RALSTON: You are simply cutting out two of the three trawlers which are already tied up.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I know what they are doing. They cut out two trawlers when my hon. friends cut out none at all. So far as I am concerned, as one representative from the province of Nova Scotia, I am unalterably opposed to the operation of any beam trawler, not simply one or four, in the fisheries of the province of Nova Scotia. I welcome this step which the government has taken as a step in the right direction, but so long as I am representing the people of my constituency, and I think that in this the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) will join with me—

Mr. DUFF: I am not committing myself just now.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: That is tactful and rather good Liberal politics.

Mr. DUFF: I learned that from Sir Robert Borden.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: He was a Liberal at one time until he saw the light. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the beam trawler ought not to operate in competition with the shore and boat fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia. I am unalterably opposed to their operation, and I shall continue to support the fishermen of Nova Scotia who, through their cooperative unions, desire that beam trawlers shall not be allowed to operate in the fisheries of Nova Scotia. I congratulate the government on going as far as they did, and while they did not go as far as I would like to see them go, and I say that frankly, I trust that next year when additional representations are made, they will go a great deal further in this matter.

Here may I pay a tribute to the personal representative of Premier Harrington who so strongly urged upon the government not merely that the number of licences granted to beam trawlers should be reduced, but that they should not be allowed to operate at all in the province of Nova Scotia so far as the power of this government could prevent it. Those of us who believe that the beam trawler is furnishing competition which is unfair to the shore fishermen are prepared to carry the fight on until the beam trawler method of fishing is entirely suppressed, because in my judgment and in that of a great many more, in the judgment I believe of ten out of eleven fishermen in the province of Nova Scotia, it is a destructive method of prosecuting the fisheries.

Another matter was placed on the order paper which is of vital importance to the fishermen of the maritime provinces, and that was the resolution standing in the name of my good friend from Antigonish-Guysborough in reference to reciprocity. May I congratulate him upon placing that resolution on the order paper? He was fearless in his attitude towards reciprocity, but I noticed that he did not get very much support for his resolution from the Liberal party.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We have not had a chance yet.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The resolution was adopted by the government. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), though he is a very tall man, is always able to succeed in pulling himself up in sections to discuss almost any matter. I have seen no lack of jumping to his feet to discuss other matters. I have had many requests from Liberals in my constituency for the speech delivered on that occasion by the right hon. leader of the opposition on the subject of reciprocity, and I was very much pained to have to say in complying with those requests that it was the shortest speech that I had ever heard the right hon. gentleman make, because he said nothing.

Perhaps there is some little difficulty between the machine that controls the Liberal party in Halifax and my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough, but I do not see why he should not have had support from his own party in this house for his resolution. Furthermore, the same resolution was introduced by a Liberal in the city of Halifax when nominating a Liberal candidate for the provincial house. I presume that he was a friend of my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough, and he was made to withdraw his resolution.

In regard to reciprocity, I have always believed in a reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States, but I make this statement, and there is not a man in public life who can deny it, that there never was any intention in 1911 on the part of the government of Canada of that day, or on the part of the United States, to enter into a reciprocity treaty. I do not hear that denied by any hon. member. If they attempted to deny it, I would quote the words of the Right Hon. W. S. Fielding who, speaking in this house in 1922, said that what was proposed:

> —was not a treaty but a comprehensive agreement which was entered into in 1910-11 as the house will remember.

It was not a treaty.

Mr. RALSTON: That is a fine distinction.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I am just going to point out to my hon. friend, who may not be able to catch fine distinctions, what the fine distinction is. A comprehensive trade agreement can be cancelled overnight without notice being given by either of the contracting parties, but a treaty cannot be cancelled. It is for some specified time. Surely that is not too fine a distinction for my hon. friend to catch.

I want to make this statement, although it may not find favour with hon. gentlemen opposite, that we are nearer to-day to a reciprocal trade treaty with the United States than we have been since 1911. Why was it that hon. gentlemen opposite who were in office in this country until 1930, and were so loud in their advocacy of reciprocity, never sought reciprocal trade arrangements with the United States. Time and time again on the floor of this house the leader of the party opposite was challenged in that regard, and he never committed himself as to whether he would ever seek, or whether he even desired, reciprocal trade arrangements with the United States—never.

And why is it that we could not have made a reciprocal trade treaty with the United States during the last ten years? The answer will be found in the trade returns of this country. Why should the American government enter into reciprocal trade arrangements with us when, under the weak-kneed trade policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, we had handed over to the Americans almost everything they wanted from the Canadian market without asking from them anything in return? Let me quote a few figures for my hon. friend. In 1928, for example, under this wise fiscal policy of my hon. friends opposite, Canada imported from the United States $825,651,549 worth of goods, and in 1929, the year before hon. gentlemen opposite went to the country and when they had not yet felt the full force of Beauharnois, we imported $893,585,482 worth of American goods. We exported to the United States in 1928, $491,566,297 worth of goods, and in 1929, $522,677,767. Do you think that the United States would ever seek a reciprocal trade treaty with us when they had a favourable trade balance to that extent which was granted to them by the unwise fiscal policy of the previous administration? But to-day we have a party in power which has placed restrictions upon the flood of American goods entering Canada. To-day we have something to bargain with. That is the answer. As a result we are nearer to a reciprocal trade treaty with the United States than we have ever been in the last thirty years. But when that trade treaty is made—I do not know about my hon. friends opposite, but I suppose that following their glorious record of inconsistency, they may not support it—we on this side of the house, if that trade treaty does eventuate, have full confidence that the right hon. the Prime Minister will see that the position of Canada be safeguarded and that the treaty, if it is signed, will be mutually advantageous to Canada and the United States.

[Mr. Macdougall.]

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth had something to say concerning the coal industry of the province of Nova Scotia, and in his remarks twitted the Minister of Mines (Mr. Gordon), suggesting that the government had not done all it should have done for that industry. In case there may be illusions in the minds of the people of Nova Scotia in connection with this matter, I shall spread on the records of Hansard exactly what the government has done for the coal industry and the people in the native province of my hon. friend and myself. Before giving the figures, I challenge the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, or any other hon. member, to dispute the statement that the Bennett government has done more for the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia than has any government we have had in Canada.

Mr. RALSTON: I ask the hon. member simply to look at the coal industry in Nova Scotia to-day.

Mr. SHORT: Look at every other industry.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes, look at all of them.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I make the statement that the present government has done more for the Nova Scotia coal industry than has any government which has held power since the Canadian union was consummated. I am not at all criticizing hon. members opposite for the little they did to assist the coal industry when they were in power. They made a step in the right direction, but that step was not sufficiently long.

Under order in council P.C. 539, of 1928—and I say to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, quite frankly, that he had something to do with the passage of it—114,010 tons of coal were shipped from Nova Scotia under the assisted rates; the cost to the government of that day was $65,760, and the cost per ton for movement of the coal was 57·6 cents. In 1929, still under the administration of hon. members opposite, the tonnage of coal shipped from Nova Scotia under P.C. 539 was 304,744, the cost was $206,019.98 and the cost per ton 67·6 cents. Although during part of the year 1930 order in council No. 1300 applied, the tonnage from Nova Scotia under the assisted rates amounted to 371,800 tons, the cost was $214,142.58, and the cost per ton 57·7 cents. In 1931, under orders in council 539 and 1300, the tonnage shipped from Nova Scotia mines under the assisted rates was 403,976 tons, the cost to the government of Canada was $228,625.62, and the average cost per ton was 56·6 cents. In 1932, under the assisted rates granted by this government, the Nova Scotia coal operators shipped into central Canada 711,589 tons, the cost to the government of Canada was $538,110.16, and the average cost per ton was 75·6 cents.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the budget covers a wide field, involving many important changes. Having regard to the basic tariff and financial policies of the government, as indicated by their action since 1930, I certainly favour a number of these changes. I am prepared of course to support the tariff reductions, the income tax proposals, the wheat marketing assistance, and agricultural stabilization.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) had something to say regarding the government's assistance to wheat marketing, and wound up with words to the effect that instead of gambling in wheat the government should take its loss, get out and be rid of the transaction. I do not believe the western farmers want the government to get out.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member should read the whole passage.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Hon. members must realize that there is a difference between what is known as gambling and assistance to provide a market.

Mr. RALSTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): I say, however, that if a farmer sells his wheat in the fall and buys options he may be accused of gambling, but in so doing he would be doing exactly the same thing as if he kept his wheat in a granary all winter, awaiting a favourable opportunity to haul it out. In effect he would be running exactly the same risk. For those reasons I believe the criticism is not well taken. Time will show, when the final figures are given to the house, to what extent the government is involved and to what extent it may lose money. But I do not believe it would be fair to say that, if the government loses some money in connection with the stabilization of the wheat market, it should be condemned. Undoubtedly the stabilization of the wheat market is of vastly greater importance to the three western provinces than it is to the rest of Canada. However in ascertaining whether or not a certain policy is fair to the whole country one must consider all factors, one must balance all the policies of the government, and their advantages or disadvantages to every part of Canada.

There can be no doubt that tariff legislation is of more advantage to Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia than to the three prairie provinces. It is possible that when the maritime provinces advanced their claims for additional moneys and bonuses by way of freight rates, the western provinces may have felt that the maritimes had received special consideration. It is possible that the maritimes may feel that in connection with wheat stabilization the west is receiving special consideration. I say, however, that if we are going to be fair to every part of Canada we must consider not one policy, but the combination of all policies, and do our best to weigh their advantages and disadvantages. The business of the government and parliament is to see that so far as possible the advantages and disadvantages balance so that the various parts of Canada may share equally. I believe I would be stating the opinion of the maritimes as truly as the hon. member stated the opinions of western farmers if I were to say that the government should pull out and take its loss, so far as the maritimes are concerned. Were I to take that stand I would be as near the truth as was the hon. member when he said that the western farmers want the government to pull out of the wheat market altogether. Certainly that is not so, as far as the farmers in my constituency are concerned. I believe the stabilization fund will be of some advantage. There is no question that it was the loss due to exchange that put the cooperative pool practically out of the business of shipping cattle to the old country. Even if it were one hundred per cent true that the cost of paying this amount to those who undertake to export cattle, getting rid of the five per cent surplus, must be borne by the ninety-five per cent of the cattle sold in Canada, it would in my judgment still be a substantial advantage to the farmers of Canada. For it is a hopeless task to try to market ten head where are are only purchasers for nine. Whether or not some day, under conditions where supply and demand are just about equal, we will be able to work out something better in price control, this is the only thing possible to-day.

I want to refer in passing to the question of the royal commission on banking. The Macmillan committee in the old land found its terms of reference, which appear to be fairly wide, were still not wide enough to enable them to deal with the issues they thought it necessary to deal with. I want to call attention to a few words in the concluding note of the full committee:

> We have now completed all the recommendations which we are able to make for remedial action by the monetary machine itself. If our recommendations relating to international action are given effect, we should hope for a great improvement in the situation in due course. If, however, progress along these lines is delayed or if the action taken is insufficient, we believe that our own monetary authorities will not be able to remedy matters without assistance from changes in other non-monetary factors by which the volume of our domestic output and employment, and in particular our balance of trade, are also much influenced.

Several members of the committee made additional recommendations. I say that as a result of that experience we should see that the terms of reference to the banking commission do not confine the commission to inquiring into banking alone, but if certain changes in monetary policy are found desirable then the commission should have reasonable power to enable them to deal with these other matters as well, as far as they are directly connected with changes they may recommend in monetary policy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree with a good deal that has been said about the budget. I have already stated that I am supporting certain matters initiated, and certain policies embodied in the budget. But it is a deflationist budget. That is made quite clear by certain words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and on that ground we challenge it. It is said that Naaman the Syrian, captain of the hosts of the king of Syria was a great man with his master and honourable. He was also a mighty man in valour but he was a leper. The budget is a comprehensive review of Canada's financial situation, it proposes many changes of importance, some of them good and some not so good, but it is a deflationist budget. I do not agree with those who say that in Canada we are bound up altogether with world conditions and that we can do nothing by ourselves. I cannot agree that the policies of the government alone are entirely to blame for the present price levels and the present situation in Canada. But it is taking a hopeless position to say that because of world conditions we can do nothing. It is just as foolish as to say that everything that has happened in Canada in the way of distress and unemployment is due to the policy of this government or any other government. We must consider what we can do on our own part with regard to money, with regard to tariffs, as well as what we can do in cooperation with others. And the test to be applied to any government is whether, of itself as a national government, it has taken action along the lines it should, and whether in addition to that it has offered cooperation along the lines best calculated to improve the world situation and the national situation as well.

I have said that the budget is based on deflation. This is clearly shown by the words of the Minister of Finance as reported at page 3208 of Hansard:

> During the past year Canada was the only foreign country that was able to borrow in the public markets of the United States.
> This enviable position has been and can be held only by the maintenance of sound financial and monetary policies. Much has been heard in recent months about inflation. Some of the advantages claimed for inflation may seem alluring to industries harassed by falling prices and declining turnover. But let the sponsors of inflation never forget that apart from the other difficulties and dangers involved in their program, one inevitable result would be a flight from our dollar, a withdrawal on a large scale of the capital invested by foreigners in this country in the form of securities and bank deposits. There are also to be considered internal reactions to any steps which might impair confidence in a country's currency. Against policies which might lead to such dangers, this government has resolutely set its face.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it can be said, if that defines the government's position correctly, that the government says we will have no inflation. They stand, for the present at least, by the deflation of recent years, which in three years since 1929, in credit and currency amounts to approximately $700,000,000. We have challenged that policy by an amendment, calling for controlled inflation. Those who stand by the gold basis, as far as it has been possible to stand by it—but I do not think we can take that position very seriously, since so many nations have abandoned the gold basis—but those who stand by it in theory seem to think it is a limitation on the amount of currency that may be issued, and so prevents uncontrolled inflation. I do not think, however, that inflation and deflation are necessarily tied up with or free from the gold basis at all. I think you can have both on the gold basis, if any country to-day is on the gold basis. What is inflation and deflation? The best definition that I have come across is given by Doctor Marvin, the economist of the Royal Bank. In a few sentences he gives us inflation, deflation and stabilization. This was an address delivered, I think, in Montreal about two years ago:

When credit was expanding at the same rate as production, the price level remained steady. It is true that the price level depends upon the ratio of credit and production. When credit expands excessively, prices rise, and when credit is unduly contracted, prices fall. When the volume of credit is kept proportionate to the volume of production, prices remain stable. These last three sentences constitute the whole story of what was wrong with the engine and tell how distribution can again be made to function.

Irving Fisher, in chapter III of his book on The Money Illusion, answers the question, Why does money fluctuate? He says:

The question now arises, Why does money thus change in its buying power? The answer, in brief, is "relative inflation and deflation." The emphasized word "relative" means inflation or deflation relative to the volume of trade in any given period.

There are two or three things that enter into the question of the variation in the purchasing power of money. When we say money we mean the money that circulates, whether based on bank credit, figures in bank books, actual currency, silver and copper coins; it is all money, all buying power. Inflation, then, is simply an increase in the volume of money, and the velocity of circulation as well, relative to the amount of goods and the state of trade in the country. Deflation is simply the opposite, and it is because we have had so much deflation since 1929 that we are calling for a controlled inflation at least back to the place we held, so far as credit was concerned, in 1929. For the moment I am not arguing that this was the only factor that helped break prices. It has been said that we have everything in Canada now that we had in 1929 except the flow of money, but that is not right. We have not the demand for wheat that existed before 1929, but simply because the world demand for wheat fell off I do not see that we should superimpose on the industrial structure of this country a ruinous policy of deflation, and thus intensify the depression. If our farmers were to take that position and stop raising the amount of wheat they have been raising what would happen? If our railways were allowed to cut off services what would happen? If our medical men cut down the service they give simply because they are not getting the returns they received previous to 1929 what would happen to the health of our people? If the lawyers took the same position what would be the result? Why should we not look for something in the nature of stabilization, when so many economists tell us that the volume of money in circulation determines what will be the price level? This is an important factor, though it does not determine it absolutely. Instead of a policy of deflation I think we should have had an attempt on the part of the banks to keep money in circulation.

What are the arguments against reasonable inflation? The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) stated in Toronto some time ago that those who were supporting inflation were calling for something like what happened in Germany during and after the war. There is no doubt that there are dangers in connection with inflation, but there are other and perhaps greater dangers in connection with deflation. We cannot get away from danger; we must try to adopt a reasonable course. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, in his speech in London last December, pointed out that Canada should not depart from the position of sound money; he said that if our dollar were on a parity with the pound sterling for twelve months it would cost Canada approximately $150,000,000. The hon. gentleman was supported in that statement by Sir Thomas White, and a few days ago in Winnipeg we had the statement by Mr. Jackson Dodds, manager of the Bank of Montreal. He held up some stamps that were taken off letters which came from Germany in 1923, at the height of inflation; he said we might expect to pay a good many dollars to send a letter around the country if we adopted a policy of inflation.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that it is utterly ridiculous to argue that because Germany inflated in that way we should not reflate or inflate back to where we stood in this country in 1929 with regard to the volume of credit, without running the same risk. If we did that and we had the same fall in the dollar that took place in the mark in Germany, wheat would be worth $716 a bushel.

Mr. COOTE: It would not take long to pay off the mortgage.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): John Maynard Keynes, in his book Monetary Reform, states that Germany's pre-war currency totalled six milliard gold marks, an average of about $25 per head. In 1920 it totalled eighty-one milliards, and by August of 1923 it had increased to 116 thousand milliards. Is it fair to say that because Germany did that in the years 1920 to 1923 we would do the same thing in Canada? Every nation inflated during the war; Canada, the United States and Great Britain, yet nearly every nation was back on the gold standard by 1925. They did not allow it to go uncontrolled. What was the position of Germany? She started her inflation in earnest after she was defeated. I refer again to John Maynard Keynes, in his book, The Economic Consequences of the Peace: All her fleet was ceded to the allies, together with her overseas possessions and property. The allies reserved the right to retain and liquidate all property rights and interests belonging to and controlled by German nationals within the former German colonies. In Alsace-Lorraine the same provisions applied; the allies reserved the right to retain and liquidate all property rights and interests belonging to German nationals in their territory. Article 260 of the financial clauses provided that the reparation commission might demand within one year the expropriation of German nationals and the delivery to the commission of any right and interest of German nationals in any public utility in China, Turkey, Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria. Germany renounced her right to any participation in any financial or economic organization of an international character operating in any of the allied or associated states, in Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, Turkey or any dependencies of those states, or in the former Russian empire. One-way tariffs were established between Germany and Alsace-Lorraine. Upper Silesia, with a plebiscite ceded to Poland 22 per cent of the German output of hard coal, and the Saar mines were ceded to France. It has been said that Germany was built on blood and iron. That is not so; Germany was built on coal and iron. The Rhine, Upper Silesia and the Saar made possible her steel, chemical and electrical industries. The total reparation bill was $40,000,000,000, and under these impossible terms she inflated and absolutely wiped out all her internal debt. She was the same credit risk after the war that a man would be who had been convicted of some heinous criminal offence and against whom a judgment had been issued for three or four times what he was worth, with practically all his civil rights taken from him. Would anyone say that Canada today could be compared to Germany at that time? That will not go; some better argument than that will have to be brought forward. We have inflated under the stress of war and other national circumstances, and we did not let it get out of hand. There is no reason in the world why we should not do what we can to raise the price level, through our monetary policy, by a reasonable inflation in Canada, though I do not say that this would cure all our troubles at once.

[Mr. D. M. Kennedy.]

The next point, of course, is to what point we should inflate. When would you come to the point where you would stop inflation and, if possible, attempt to control any further increase in prices? I think Sir Josiah Stamp said that point would be somewhere around the average of 1924 to 1928. In any case it must be a place which will establish a reasonable parity between the earning power of the people, the expenses of government and the debts of the country, private, municipal, provincial and federal. What was wrong with the conditions existing in this country between 1924 and 1928? We were able to balance government budgets, no matter whether those governments were Liberal, Conservative or Farmer; we were able to advance reasonable public works, railways and municipal improvements, and I do not believe the creditor class suffered particularly because of the fact that the purchasing power of money was not what it is to-day. I do not think there is any question of the fact that during that period we had a reasonable parity between the general price level and our debts, the cost of government and so on. I submit therefore that that would be a reasonable point to aim at. I do not know whether experience will show that we can get there; we cannot get there so far as wheat is concerned. I am certain, however, that even if we cannot get there with regard to wheat, this country dare not liquidate on the basis of the present level of wheat prices. The statesmen of Great Britain as well as of Canada have recognized that. We know that to bring other commodities down to the level of wheat prices, to bring wages down, would mean absolute ruin to the country. In Winnipeg the other day Jackson Dodds said that we should have to do that, among other things. He said:

> "Before better times can come," he added, "competition in depreciation of currencies must cease; international debts must be adjusted. tariff barriers which have been erected beyond peace time needs must be lowered reciprocally, permitting of exchanges of goods, and payments in goods; government expenditures and taxes must be decreased; budgets must be balanced —which in our own case include federal, provincial and municipal—wages and prices must be brought into proper relationship again, so that prices received by farmers and other producers of raw materials may be brought into balance with prices of products of the factory, thus restoring activity and employment in cities and so increasing the demand for the products of the farm and factory, providing traffic for railways and ships. . . ."

Such a policy would greatly increase our debts.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): My hon. friend says "hear, hear." Well, the significant part of the debt of the country is not what the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth pointed out, that there has been added to the national debt within the last three years or so about $400,000,000. What is of significance is that all debts have been doubled—not the $400,000,000, but all debts—because of a drop in commodity prices; and if we must drag down labour, if we must drag down factory prices to the level of wheat prices as they are to-day, then we are also going to drag the creditors down without any question. It means therefore wholesale liquidation, and we cannot do it without increasing our debts in the first place. It is possible that if nothing can be done to increase the prices of primary products we shall be forced to do that, but it will mean a tremendous sacrifice and terrible hardships so far as the Canadian people are concerned.

The Prime Minister himself indicated this pretty well at the Imperial conference. I quote from Annex III, statement made before the committee on monetary and financial questions by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett:

> Canada, like all other countries, has suffered severely from the calamitous fall in commodity prices. Since August, 1929, our index of wholesale prices has fallen 32 per cent and is now only 4 per cent above the pre-war level. This means that the dollar has increased in purchasing power by 48 per cent. As a result of this rapid and persistent decline in the general price level and the inevitable disparities created between different kinds of prices, normal business relationships have been disrupted, profit margins have disapeared in many cases, enterprise has been discouraged, unemployment has steadily increased, the fiscal problems of all our public bodies have been greatly aggravated, and the burden of fixed charges is exerting an almost intolerable pressure upon some of the strategic elements in our national economy. . . . Interest charges represent the most important of the fixed or semi-rigid element in our cost structure. If prices remain on their present level, such charges will constitute an intolerable or almost intolerable burden in many cases. Even if it can be borne, the fortuitous gain to the creditor of 40 to 48 per cent in general purchasing power above what he contracted for appears to be a grave injustice.

I agree with that, but judging by some statements that have been made subsequently, I take it that the government has not thoroughly grasped the gravity of the injustice. There is one statement made by Jackson Dodds with which I heartily agree, because it is a satisfactory statement.

Mr. SPENCER: Only one.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Just one. He says:

> "It is an elementary fact," he remarked, "that one must return whatever one borrows—whether it be a book, a lawn-mower, a guinea or an American dollar. No abstruse question of exchange enters into it so far as the lender is concerned; he merely wants back what he lent, plus the hire of interest according to agreement. Certainly we in Canada would not have accepted at par German marks. . . ."

Now that is exactly what we want, and it is because we believe that deflation in Canada has made it impossible to pay back the kind of dollars we borrowed that we want inflation. We do not borrow dollars to eat; we borrow dollars to buy food, clothing, lumber and so on, and other necessaries of life. A reasonably honest dollar, a sound dollar, is one which you can borrow at the beginning of the year and repay at the end of the year, being sure that its purchasing power will remain the same or reasonably the same; and it is because the present dollar does not do this that we are opposed to it.

What is sound money? I have been trying, in all the speeches I have read and in the various declarations that have been made in this house, to find out what sound money is. It is not the kind of money we have in Canada to-day, because the Prime Minister himself said that the present situation was a grave injustice to those who had borrowed money; and you cannot have a sound monetary policy nor sound social conditions based on a grave injustice. The only sound dollar is the dollar that is within reason stable in its purchasing power from year to year. We believe that at least a reasonable inflation will tend partly to bring that about—it will not do it alone, but it will tend to do it in part—and that is why we are asking for reasonable reflation or inflation.

Sound money is just a catchword. I remember I used to argue years ago with a socialist friend of mine in Alberta about socialism, and when I began to ask him questions he could not answer, he always ended up by saying, "It's the hell of a system we are living under." I could not answer that; it was not an argument.

An hon. MEMBER: It was a description.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): We find another catchword in the Acts of the Apostles. The silversmiths met together when they found that Paul was telling the people that the silver images they were making were not gods, and Demetrius got his followers together and said, "You had better come with me and we will protest against this heresy of Paul's. We are going to lose our wealth. Great Diana's temples will be destroyed." And so they shouted, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," and the whole city was filled with confusion. After all, sound money is just a catchword, like this cry about Diana of the Ephesians and the other expression of my socialist friend, to which I have referred. If anyone can tell me what sound money is and it is not money that has the same or reasonably the same purchasing power year after year, then I shall be greatly surprised. To me at any rate that is sound money.

I have about ten minutes left and I want to deal with the flight from the dollar and the flight from the pound, and after that I want to deal with the question of paying our debts in the United States. There was a flight from the mark in Germany owing partly to the piling up of troubles saddled on Germany by reparations. Germany was able to pay reparations so long as she could borrow twice the amount from the United States, Great Britain and other countries, from 1924 to 1929. Whenever she was unable to borrow, owing to the boom in New York, and could receive no further loans from that centre, Germany could not pay reparations. G. D. Cole, in his book on The Guide Through World Chaos, shows that Germany borrowed $750,000,000 between 1924 and 1929. Great Britain tried to come to the help of Germany and as a result of that she saved Germany for a time, but Great Britain herself was dragged into difficulties. These countries experienced the flight from the mark and the flight from the pound under the gold standard. When Britain went off the gold standard, the flight from the pound was stopped. Britain made desperate efforts to stand by the gold standard; she borrowed first £50,000,000 and then later £80,000,000, but it was gone in a few days. Finally, in spite of the recommendations of the Macmillan committee, in spite of her credit position in the world, the loss of which meant a loss to her because debts due her were payable in sterling, Britain went off the gold standard, stopped the flight from the pound and to-day, while economists and bankers were afraid of the result, Mr. Keynes, in his Halley Stewart lectures on world economic crisis, calls it "That blessed event that broke the strangling power of gold so far as Great Britain is concerned and stopped the fall in the price levels of Great Britain's commodities." With the experience of Australia and Great Britain we need not fear the flight from the dollar.

Has the government itself not taken action that might cause a flight from the dollar, if it were a real danger? What about lowering interest rates? What is the difference between getting three per cent on a sixty-five cent dollar or two per cent on a one hundred cent dollar? Even if inflation does lead to a further devaluation of the Canadian dollar in relation to the United States dollar, I am going to argue that this does not make it harder to pay our debts in New York; it does not make it harder to pay our debts anywhere abroad, but it will actually make it easier. I am going to go as far as I can before my time has expired and then I shall take up the matter at some other time. In the British note to Washington, that is the one of last December, they show how debts are paid abroad and I think this makes the matter so clear that it is worth while putting it on record:

> Repayment of these war debts necessitates unnatural transfers which provoke widespread economic evil. In so far as they have been paid in the past their payment was made possible directly or indirectly by further foreign lending on the part of creditor countries which temporarily conceal but eventually aggravate the difficulties.
> In the long run international debts can only be paid in the form of goods or services. But as the Basle report of August 18, 1931, truly pointed out "in recent years the world has been endeavouring to pursue two contradictory policies in permitting the development of an international financial system which involves the annual payment of large sums by debtor to creditor countries while at the same time putting obstacles in the way of the free movement of goods."

So there is no question about the fact that if we pay our obligations abroad, we pay them in goods or services. When we pay in New York we pay by buying exchange, either in Britain or New York or anywhere else, that can be transferred there. When we sell wheat or cattle or services from Canada on the markets of the world, the question of what our dollar is worth or at what point it stands has no relation to what we can get for those commodities or services. What we get for them is in reference to their intrinsic value, following the law of supply and demand, on the markets of the world. Because of that fact and that the lowering of the dollar will decrease the cost of production of commodities and of giving service, at least for a while, I submit that the devaluation of our dollar will not make it harder but will make it easier to pay.

I have just one other point and it will take me about two minutes to make it. In Canada our net production last year was something about $3,000,000,000. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth the other day told us that Great Britain's price level was about fourteen per cent higher than ours due to a rise in Great Britain and a drop in Canada. This was done by monetary policy in Great Britain. I do not think the tariff could have had any effect or this would have been effective in Canada. The chief difference between Great Britain and Canada is a cheap and abundant monetary policy. If we could increase the value of our net production by fourteen per cent, this would increase the return to this country on primary products alone by almost $350,000,000, but it would affect all the other transactions maybe two or three times that. Yet we are told that lowering the dollar to around sixty-six cents instead of one hundred would mean an additional payment of $150,000,000 a year in New York. What I want to ask is: Is it good business to increase your income by at least $350,000,000 a year in order to pay out $150,000,000 additional? I submit it is.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, about two or three weeks ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) gave us a statement of the country's affairs. He gave us a detailed statement of our expenditure for the past year, an estimate of our expenditure for the current year and he told us of the ways and means to which he intended to resort to raise the money necessary to carry on government during that period. A few days later the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) replied on behalf of the opposition. He chided the minister for failing to balance his budget; he told of increased debt and of increased expenditure. He criticized the government's aid to the wheat growers of the west, its relief program, its railway policy and condemned in detail and en bloc everything that the government had done. He accused the administration of lacking in leadership, of temporizing futility and in a final flight of rhetoric, he invited it to come out of the dugout of fear. According to standards which are applied to parliamentary utterances, I am willing to say that it was a good speech, a good partisan speech, and I have no complaint to make either of the form or of the substance of the speech, but I sometimes wonder whether this form of government, of government on party lines, is not a little threadbare. I sometimes wonder if the time has not come when, whatever may be our tendencies, our inclinations, or even our habits, we should forego this type of party strife. I shall try.

I shall not attempt to review all that the government has done in the last three years to cope with the very difficult situation which is not only ours but that of every country in the world. One can summarize, very roughly, what the government has undertaken under two heads. First, the emergency program, second the program for permanent betterment. By emergency I mean those undertakings which the government put on foot to delay and prevent the further disintegration both of society and of business.

An extraordinary session was called to this end; during that session extraordinary measures were taken. Some hon. gentlemen will not agree that those measures were wise, but whether or not they were wise, they were definite, they were concrete, and they were carried out in fulfilment of definite undertakings. There is a large body of public opinion in Canada which believes that, however useful or however useless tariffs might be, it was necessary that this country be protected by extremely high tariffs for a time at least against the dumping from other industrial countries. Whether hon. gentlemen believe in those enactments or not, they will admit that those tariffs were high, and that they did produce the effects which were expected of them. They did give employment to our industrial population by excluding from our markets commodities which were manufactured in other countries under other conditions, where wages and living conditions are entirely different.

Further, at that session moneys were voted to help those who were entirely out of employment. A program of public works was initiated and carried out. Legislation was passed which was used to extremely good advantage. I do not think that anybody denies that when England went off the gold standard we were enabled to protect our gold supply by invoking wisely conceived legislation which had been passed in anticipation of some unforeseen and unforeseeable event. We derived further benefit from that legislation when insurance companies were permitted to value their securities at a date when they had a value, rather than at a date when prices and values were unknown quantities. These I say were useful measures, useful emergency measures which were taken, and taken promptly by the government.

Obviously permanent changes in the business structure of the country are far more difficult to enact, yet when the government is accused of inaction, is it not fair to ask hon. gentlemen if the charge can confront the facts?

The greatest problem which confronted Canada was the railway problem. I am not enamoured of the solution which is being given to that problem, but nevertheless, I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the problem was not manfully tackled and skilfully handled. There are those who complain to-day that the government has not healed this running sore. There are those who criticize the government because millions are still required each year by the government railways, but may I ask: What is it possible to do? Who has suggested any possible remedy which would enable the government to escape from the liability of its endorsement of the Canadian National bonds? Has the Canadian Pacific Railway ever offered to assume the liabilities of the Canadian National? Let us merge these railways; let us give them away; let us wash them into the sea, but the burden of $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 of interest due each year will remain. I have given no small amount of thought and no small amount of honest endeavour to the study of the problem. I fail to see how any action that the government might have taken in the last three years at the dictation or invitation of the most wise could have delivered this country from the burden which weighs upon it to-day. It is suggested by some that we might repudiate the obligation. Fortunately that suggestion is not very seriously taken, nor made by anybody who is very serious.

But, Mr. Speaker, I would like parliament and the country to realize that however, manfully and fearlessly the government might have wrestled with this problem, it could not have done away with the railway debt which is Canada's debt, assumed by the people of Canada. The only possibility of relief from this burden lies in increased revenue from the railways and increased revenue from the railways can only come with increased tonnage and increased business. I think, Mr. Speaker, that not only in this country but in all countries men of good will are seeking for that specific which will bring back business and bring back tonnage not only to our own railways but to the railway and other transportation facilities of the different countries of the world.

We hear a great deal in this house about banking and currency. I am not of those who are skilled in the arts of the economist. I listen in reverential awe every time that an economist tells us that we can make ourselves rich by writing promissory notes, and that it is now possible to lift oneself by his boot straps. I have but very scant faith in short-cuts back to prosperity. In my view the way will be long, those who travel it must know industry, frugality, possibly penury. The government is providing an opportunity to examine the monetary, banking and currency questions. The bankers and all interested will have an opportunity to suggest any and all specifics which may possibly yield a remedy. I contend it is not quite fair to say that the government has been entirely supine, that it has been negligent of the requirements of the country or deaf to the prayers of any section.

What about the trade agreements? Were they not conceived in the highest patriotism? Was the opportunity for their perfection not brought about by skilful, courageous and constant negotiations? Have those trade agreements not yielded a return, or have they not justified the hope for permanent betterment which was incident to their signing?

Mr. YOUNG: No.

Mr. HACKETT: The hon. member says no, and is entitled to his view. I think however he will agree at least that the majority in the house feel his decision has been taken a little too hastily. I for one believe that the faith, good will and spirit of sacrifice which characterized the signing of the agreements will not be entirely fruitless. I believe that the men who met in Ottawa, in an honest attempt to solve the difficulties of that portion of the world which they represent, came with a fund of information and experience, and an intent to deal fairly with all, which must bring good results.

There is one policy of the government which is bound to be of definite assistance: I refer to the back to the land movement. Many hon. members who have spoken concerning this movement have shown little faith. Only the other day the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) said, "You cannot expect to make a farmer out of an artisan who is out of a job." He went on to point out that probably the agricultural population had greater grounds for complaint than had any other element in Canada. I ask the house to consider, for a moment, the trend of events in Canada during the last fifty years. Fifty years ago only eighteen per cent of our population lived in cities and towns. Thirty years ago only thirty-seven per cent had gone to the larger centres of population. But the census taken only a year ago shows that 5,572,000 Canadians were urban dwellers, whereas only 4,800,000 were on the soil. How long can this progression from the soil towards the city continue? Is it not evident that of necessity there will result an unbalance and disequilibrium which, as in all cases of lack of equilibrium, is bound to manifest itself in an upset. Is it possible that we can take away from the land a greater and greater number of people, and still maintain the strength and the poise characterized by perfect equilibrium. It is true that life on the land has not always been attractive, and that to-day the prices of farm products are extremely low. Yet, should we not recall that regardless of the fact that there is no money, regardless of the fact that there is a fair amount of drudgery, —and then some—the population on the land is the only population in Canada which is certain of food, shelter, clothing and fuel. True, there have been areas, such as that in Saskatchewan, which through an unusual occurrence were denied any returns from their fields. That condition was dealt with in an unusual way. I submit however it is true that on the land there is shelter from the economic storms which is not found in the cities and towns. I do not suggest that these men should return to the land to make fortunes by selling vast crops in the world's exchanges, or that they should return to enable the manipulators to make fortunes, but that their return should be for the purpose of supporting themselves and their families with the food they can get from the land. The plight in which hundreds of thousands of Canadians find themselves to-day, having to depend upon sources other than their own earnings for the food necessary to keep body and soul together is devastating. There comes from the very acceptance of that type of support a disintegration in the fibre of a people which is regrettable, and which is bound to manifest itself in a weakened spirit in this and future generations. I submit that back to the land is the most hopeful outlet from this dismal position in which we find ourselves at present. We are now at the spring of the year, and I ask the government to encourage the provincial and civic authorities to help the many thousands of people in the cities who were raised on the land to get back to the land. It is not necessary to take them away to remote regions; there are numerous opportunities in proximity to the large centres for a man to cultivate ten or twenty acres and provide himself and his children with the necessaries of life. I thoroughly believe that by disembarrassing the cities in this way, relieving them of the intolerable burden that now rests upon them, much can be done to overcome the present depression. We find in the United States cities like Chicago and Detroit—unfortunately we have them within our own area—which are on the verge of bankruptcy. Some have even failed to meet their obligations, because of the money they have been forced to spend to provide food for their citizens. It may mean a return to a more frugal mode of life, but what of that? It may mean a lesser margin for luxury, but what of that, when starvation seems to be the alternative? I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for this country to continue much longer the generosity—that may be an improper word—of the dole that has been meted out for the last three or four years. It is beyond our resources; the substance is not there for it.

One other matter about which I should like to say a few words is expenditure. Many people wince to-day under the burden of taxation. Others find in a disinclination to pay taxes what they take to be the growing pains of statesmanship. They say, why should the government levy $70,000,000 additional taxes? Why does not the government stop spending, retrench to the extent of $70,000,000? I have pointed out the futility of that suggestion with regard to the railways, but one sees in the press news items and editorials which take the view that increased taxation is not necessary, that the budget could be balanced by reducing expenditure. I think it well that the people should have these facts placed clearly before them. This year we have estimated that the cost of government will be $445,000,000. Of that sum $369,000,000 represents ordinary expenditure. Every penny of that amount, less $143,000,000, is a fixed charge, something that cannot be escaped, something that is nailed down. We find among the items which constitute this total $138,000,000 of interest charges. There is a deficit on the Canadian National Railways of $55,000,000; pensions and soldiers' care, $58,000,000; subsidies to provinces, $15,000,000; old age pensions, $12,000,000; unemployment relief, $35,000,000. We find that of the $143,000,000 which is controllable nearly the entire amount represents services. In the abstract everybody wants expenditure reduced in order that taxation may be reduced, but everybody does not seem to be aware that nearly that entire amount is spent in wages paid to somebody, and that when it is reduced—and it is being reduced by $14,000,000—somebody gets less wages or loses his job; and when somebody loses his job he is another candidate for the dole. These services are possibly wise, possibly useful; at any rate we are wedded to them, we want them, we complain if they are taken from us. Looking over some of the possibilities of curtailment—my hon. friends opposite and even my friends on this side will see that I have been indiscriminate in the selection—I find for instance that the Receiver General has an office in every one of the nine provinces. In Montreal his office is in the offices of the City and District Savings
