Bank, who perform the service for $25,000 a year and lose money on it. Is it necessary that there be an office in each of the maritime provinces? Of course not; there is more business done in three weeks in the Montreal office than there is in three years, I was going to say, in the maritime provinces—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HACKETT: But attempt to take away one of these offices, and you will be opposed with much vehemence by my hon. friends from the maritime provinces, on both sides of the house. And if one attempted the same thing in the prairie provinces the result would be similar. I merely take this as an example to show how difficult curtailment is, although it be necessary. Everyone knows that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture have suffered a considerable reduction: $2,792,000 have been taken from its estimates since 1930. We know that the department gives excellent service. Take the experimental farms; they are useful, well manned, economically run, but the question is, can we afford them? Yet try to close up one and find out what would be the attitude of the area it serves. The same is true in regard to forestry; both agriculture and forestry are essentially within the ambit of provincial activities, yet the federal government spends large sums of money in that work. If an attempt were made to reduce those services I fear there would be much discontent.

Let us move to national defence. I dare say the number of units could be reduced without materially interfering with the efficiency of the service as a training or fighting agency, yet if either party attempted to curtail or restrict or do away with any of these units there would be much ado. Old age pensions and war pensions make heavy demands upon us. We recall that a few years ago pensions were increased because of the increased cost of living. Now that the cost of living has fallen is it not possible to make a corresponding reduction in pensions? We all know that anything affecting the returned soldiers is an extremely difficult and delicate matter to deal with, yet I submit to that gallant body that someone must lead the way. Everyone wants reductions but no one wants to give up very much himself; he wants the reduction to be made at the expense of someone else. Bondholders are receiving 4½ per cent, 5 per cent and 5½ per cent to-day. They may not be anxious to take a lesser return, but it may be necessary for them to do so at an early date.

Much has been said about the tax on sugar. It is unfortunate that a commodity so universally used and so vitally necessary should be taxed, yet I think there are possibilities of good even in this tax. I would suggest to the government that they cause to be printed small tags indicating that this tax is to be used in aid of the Canadian National Railways, let us say; one of these tags might be attached to each package of sugar so that the individual buying the sugar would realize that the government is not a beneficent Santa Claus but that expenditures made by the government must be met by taxation.

I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who believe that our government—and I say this without regard to party—has followed a protective, paternal, socialistic theory which seems to permeate the whole administrative fabric. Unless we are willing to turn sharply to the right we will find that our charges will continue to increase. Every politician knows before he is out of his nonage that it is impossible to cut sheer across either the history or the habits of a people and start afresh from a clean edge, but I submit that unless the people of Canada are willing to depart from the principles of socialism which they have introduced into their government by socializing their means of transportation, their means of communication, their production of power and to some extent their methods of buying and dealing in certain commodities; unless they are willing to do something to resurrect the rugged individualism of the past, we can only expect to follow the course of those nations that have yielded to this insidious doctrine and that to-day are under the control of dictators. If our people can be made to realize that services must be paid for, and that the people must pay for them, they may be willing to yield up in aid of economy a good many of the excellent services which are being lavished upon them at the present time, not because those services are not well administered, not because they do not add much to the ease of life, but because at the present time the Canadian people cannot afford them.

Mr. CHARLES BELEC (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to my constituents of the great county of Pontiac to give an account of my stewardship. First I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the exceedingly able manner in which he presented his budget to this house on March 21. I am strongly in favour of that budget and of the policies of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), whose courage and ability have done much to see Canada through this time of crisis.

The county of Pontiac, Mr. Speaker, is one of the largest counties in Quebec, if not in Canada. It is rich in minerals, water power, timber and agricultural products, and particularly in red blooded Canadianism. We have the sturdy sons and graceful daughters of those brave pioneers who did so much to build up our country. With such worthy, true citizens I believe we need have no fear for the future, because in the past few years we have overcome obstacles greater than ever confronted us before.

I have such a diversified county to represent, Mr. Speaker, that I must divide my speech into two parts; first I will deal with the mines and then I will have a word to say with regard to agriculture. First, however, I should like to say that in my opinion the coming year will see heavy orders for lumber placed in Canada by Great Britain. Russia has been supplying Great Britain's wants to our disadvantage, but I have reason to believe that this condition will not exist much longer. Already the agreements arrived at here in Ottawa are building up our trade, especially in agricultural products.

There are two matters of wide interest to my constituents which I should like to discuss at this stage of my remarks, and first I should like to refer to the highway between Sheenboro and the Timiskaming district. I was in hopes that the provincial government would take advantage of the Dominion unemployment relief scheme to build up this highway. It would afford employment to a good many and open up a large forest and lake region, establishing communication between old Pontiac and Timiskaming. It would shorten the travelling distance between these two points by many miles and our people would not have to leave their own county to make the trip. Then in regard to the back to the land movement, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I was amazed when I listened to the speech delivered by my hon. friend for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) with respect to the back to the land settlers. I have received many letters from settlers stating that they are well pleased with the treatment they received and are now receiving. In Riviere Solitaire, Lonely River, region over 400 families settled there since early last spring. They have a parish priest, a hospital with good equipment, and two post offices are to be established shortly. I visited that region, Mr. Speaker, long before there were any settlers, and I was amazed to see the large tract of land, thousands of acres, and if it were cleared it would make the best farming section in the province of Quebec.

I want to tell the house that I have the biggest county in Canada. I visited every corner of it last summer and I was glad to go to the mining section where there is no depression. Quebec's gold production—all in the county of Pontiac, amounted to 401,105 fine ounces last year. This was an increase of 34 per cent over 1931. The Noranda copper mine is the large producer, and the Siscoe, Granada and the O'Brien Cadillac all showed an improvement in output last year. In addition, considerable active prospecting was carried on, and at the Beattie property a large low-grade gold mine will commence production early in 1933; an 800-ton mill was completed, and low cost of operation is expected.

Last year, as I have indicated, the production of gold in Pontiac county totalled 401,105 fine ounces valued at $8,291,576. In 1931, the gold produced amounted to 300,075 fine ounces valued at $6,203.101. So you see, Mr. Speaker, that our great Noranda and other mines are increasing their output and doing much to relieve unemployment and bring about better conditions. Our mines have shown the ability to survive the worldwide economic crisis and great credit is reflected upon the management and employees of the mines for their successful work. In total value of output mining is exceeded only by agriculture and forestry, but our mines in Pontiac, with their many requirements for all kinds of materials necessary to their successful operation, are playing an important part in the general industrial life in Canada.

In regard to agriculture, the different countries of the world, as well as the different classes of our business interests in Canada, to-day realize more than ever that the restoration of agricultural prosperity is the first and most essential national necessity. It has been said by many hon. members in this debate that agricultural soundness depends upon the more thorough development of the live stock industry as the basis. Our soils require and demand this change. The present government are true to their promise to encourage and foster the live stock industry. They have restored a better sire policy, have bonused better breeding stock so essential to improved grade, as well as lower cost of production. They also, upon assuming power, raised the duties on poultry, dairy and other live stock products. True, our prices have been low but we have no control of world prices; therefore when there is an exportable surplus of any product, the domestic price of such product is influenced by that price. On the other hand, of the products we can protect, the price has been maintained more nearly normal than in any other country under present conditions. For instance butter prices have been at times 10 cents per pound better than in London, England, during recent months.

The Prime Minister has made great efforts since assuming power to secure our proper place in the British market, the greatest market in the world. The agricultural stabilization fund provided for in the present budget gives direct assistance to the farmers. It increases returns to the farmer by 12 per cent, placing the value of the English pound at $4.60 by direct payment from the treasury to make up for the difference between exchange value which is now $4.10. This, it is true, is on export products only, but the price of export surpluses naturally becomes home market prices. It will therefore increase the value of a 200 pound hog at the present exchange rate and market value by $1.50. It will therefore increase the farmer's returns on one load of 15 hogs more than an amount sufficient not only to pay his sugar tax, but to buy more sugar than the average family in Canada would use in twelve months.

This should also increase the price of poultry and agricultural products in view of the fact that considerable poultry has been at different seasons of the year exported to the United Kingdom. It will be recalled that last fall 1,000,000 pounds of poultry was exported to the British market bringing reasonably good returns to the producers. Had the agricultural stabilization plan been in effect at that time, it certainly would have increased the returns substantially. It should also prove to be of real value to those in the riding whom I have the honour to represent, who are interested in cheese manufacturing as we export a large amount of cheese annually and therefore it is one product that almost at all times is priced according to world conditions and overseas markets. It should raise the price of cheese at least one cent per pound or more, which after all is an important factor in view of the present dairy situation.

It is only by more milk being manufactured into cheese that the domestic butter prices can be improved. We hear a good deal with reference to the overproduction in milk producing districts even near the larger cities such as Toronto, Montreal and so forth. This oversupply invariably forces the price down to levels that are even below the cost of production. By the stabilization fund as presented by the government, our export market for cheese is bound to be improved, thereby consuming an increased volume of milk production.

[Mr. Belec.]

It can readily be appreciated by at least everyone interested in the dairy business that it will have a stable influence on the domestic market. It will be noted that this fund is not applicable to butter exports, chiefly for the purpose of encouraging expansion of the cheese manufacturing business. It has been recognized for many years that Canada can make as fine cheese as is made in the world and has for forty years maintained an extensive foreign market for this production; while other countries with much more favourable climatic conditions can produce high grade butter more successfully and cheaper than we can in Canada. It would therefore appear that if Canada's exports of dairy products are to be increased it must be through an expansion in cheese manufacturing as well as such special products such as condensed milk and so forth. This must be done before any effort is made to develop our butter trade in other markets where that product meets with such strong competition. Every housewife in the rural districts of this country will realize that her returns in the dairy and poultry and egg products will be materially improved by this plan.

As a farmer I find myself in favour of the proposals made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) for the appointment of a live stock export products commission to encourage more careful and uniform grading and to ensure if possible a greater regularity of supply to overseas markets. The United Kingdom buys a large amount of foodstuffs and Canada should make every possible effort to secure markets which we lost through the carelessness of the former government.

I also believe lowering of interest rates would help agriculture a great deal. The farmer to-day is carrying a heavy burden of debt incurred when prices were much higher and is carrying a debt on those values at a very heavy rate of interest as well. I believe he is sharing an undue burden at the present time and that an equalization of conditions is absolutely essential in order that he may restore, for the common interest of all, prosperity that must by necessity be born in agriculture first.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I wish first of all to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the very able way in which he presented the country's budget. Finance ministers during the present crisis have a very difficult task to perform, and whether or not we agree with the finance minister's budget proposals and his system of taxation, we must all admit that he presented the budget in an admirable manner.

This year, as during the last three years, we have unfortunately a very large deficit. I do not think any member of the house expected anything else. I do not think the government could have expected anything else; for in spite of the fact that the world is passing through a very difficult period the government I believe could not have done more to aggravate the situation than they have done in the last three years. We have only to look at the enormous increases in the tariff to see how they have helped to crush the trade of this country and what a tremendous factor they have been in reducing our revenue from customs tariffs. We have only to look at the exchange dumping duties which were imposed by this government to see at once how they interfere with the business of importers. Further, we see an enormous curtailment in bank credit. Although that may not be the direct responsibility of the government, so long as they shelter the banks in the program which the latter are carrying out, the government must bear a certain share of the responsibility. Or we might look at the tremendous curtailment which has been made in public works in the last three years. That in itself has meant a reduction in purchasing power and increased difficulty in carrying on business, which must have diminished taxpaying power. In the last three years we have had to face an enormous increase in taxation. We cannot tax a people on the one hand, cancel money out of existence when it is paid, and then expect trade to grow. So, taken all in all, I do not think the government could have done much more than they have done by their policies in the last three years to curtail the purchasing power of the people, and for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, it was not surprising to find that we have a considerable deficit. The solution of the government for this problem is heavier taxation, on the one hand, and curtailment of public works on the other. They also give advice which was perfectly right a hundred and fifty years ago in an age of scarcity, when the people were advised to work longer hours and consume less, in other words produce more and consume less. But this is an age of plenty.

We have been given figures in a tremendous amount of detail in the budget so far as cash received and cash spent is concerned, also cash borrowed and cash lent, but it seems to me that, in some respects, the budget could have been fuller than it was. For instance, we have never yet had a budget which presented to us the total amount of national production and the total consumption in Canada in a single year. Why should we not in our total assets show the following three items: total production, total appreciation, total imports; and against them the total consumption, total depreciation, and total exports. If we had those items set out in the budget we should find that Canada, instead of being a poor country as so many people think, is not only a very rich country but is getting richer every year. Canada's assets in round figures are supposed to be 30 billions of dollars. If an individual uses a good deal less of his income than he receives in the year he thinks he is fairly well off, and that is exactly the position of Canada, because she produces a great deal more every year than she actually consumes. Therefore in a commodity and service sense, if not in the arbitrary financial sense, we are getting richer every year.

The Finance minister in his budget indicated a favourable trade balance of about $70,000,000, and he seemed to be pleased about it. Personally I think that if we took all the trade figures into consideration we should regret very much the questionable showing. For instance, while the government boasts of having a favourable trade balance of $70,000,000 we have to admit, on the other hand, that our export trade has suffered a drop to the tune of $250,000,000. If we go on at that rate it will be quite possible eventually to have a favourable trade balance of $100,000,000 and yet do much less trade than we have done even in the past year.

There are certain things in the budget which I am very glad indeed to support, and I express my appreciation for their inclusion. First of all I want to congratulate the government upon deciding to appoint a royal commission to look into the whole banking and financial situation. Such an inquiry is long overdue, but even at this late date, if the commission is appointed and it is, in the words of the Finance minister, "an unbiased one and above-suspicion commission," there is no reason why it should not be productive of enormous good, particularly if it reports before the Bank Act comes up for revision next year. I sincerely hope that when the personnel of the commission is being chosen, great care will be taken to select men of worldwide repute, and I trust that the scope of the commission will be as wide as is necessary.

I also want to congratulate the Minister of Finance upon his reference to the necessity of cutting down debt and interest rates. While it was all right for him to make that statement and to hope that an improvement might be brought about, it is within the government's power to bring about decided reductions in both debt and interest charges. I also wish to congratulate the government upon the effort that is at last being made to help out the agricultural situation by setting up an agricultural stabilization fund. Although it is something in the nature of a bonus, and although bonuses may not be right in principle, at the same time when other industries are getting help from the government in this and other ways, it is only fair that agriculture should also be considered. My criticism is that consideration was not given to agriculture just about three years earlier.

It will also be very reassuring to importers to know that they are going to get some relief through the partial elimination of the adverse exchange dumping duties. To have carried on an import business in Canada during the last two or three years must have put any business man to a very severe test. I appreciate that the income tax rates have been made a great deal steeper than they were. If I had any criticism at all it would be that larger incomes should have been taxed even to a greater extent. I have under my hand figures given me a few months ago by the Income Tax department showing incomes in the fiscal years 1927-28 and 1930-31. In the earlier year only 8,510 people paid taxes on incomes ranging between $10,000 and $50,000; in 1930-31 there were 12,848 paid on those incomes. In 1927-28 only 345 people paid taxes on incomes between $50,000 and $100,000, whereas in 1930-31 there were 470. While only 75 people in the earlier year paid taxes on incomes of $100,000 and over, in the later year there were 131. So hon. members will note that in every instance those large incomes increased despite the bad business period through which we have been passing.

There are certain unpleasant factors in the budget which I should like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance. I regret very much the general trend of deflation in which the government is persisting. Up to the present time it has cost us dearly enough, and if it continues it will cost us a great deal more. Personally I can see the ultimate possibility of a financial crash if this policy is not changed. We cannot tax ourselves into prosperity, and apparently that is what we are trying to do. I should like to place on Hansard certain figures taken from the last three budgets. In 1931 we had a deficit of $94,500,000. The reply of the government was to increase taxation in the following year to an equal amount. In the year 1932, instead of balancing the budget, unfortunately we were $119,000,000 short, and again somewhat similar efforts were made to balance the budget. In that year there was increased taxation, and in one way and another $50,000,000 was lopped off the estimates for public works, etc. However, such measures have not had the desired effect, and we find that this year we are faced with a deficit, including that of the Canadian National Railways, of about $156,000,000. Again I say we cannot tax ourselves into prosperity.

I am sorry to see the sales tax placed on certain commodities which were previously exempt. This will be a consumers' tax and will be paid very largely by those who, to use the common phrase, are the least able to bear it. I have no doubt the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has had voluminous correspondence regarding the tax on sugar. No doubt we all eat about the same amount of sugar, but some of us who may be in a better financial position may be able to afford it. There is no doubt it will hurt the poor householder, and particularly those in the country who can a considerable amount of wild fruit. The extra tax will make the canning more expensive.

The next item which I purpose to criticize I hope the government will see fit to change, namely that affecting soldiers' pensions. There may be a few ex-soldiers in the service who are receiving very large pensions and also a considerable allowance by way of a wage or salary. However, taking all in all, the proposed change would be a great hardship, and the amount of extra money collected would be infinitesimal as compared with the hardship involved. I am sorry, further, to see the tax on postal notes increased from one to three cents. No doubt this change will have the effect of driving business to the private banks. When we have an institution of our own such as the post office, in my view we should do everything possible to support it.

With regard to the criticism by the Minister of Finance concerning any suggestion of controlled inflation, I have a few comments to make. At the outset I shall quote from the Commercial Intelligence Journal of February 25, 1933, issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce. At page 262 I find an article concerning Australia under the following headnote:

Improvement in Australian Financial Outlook, 1932

In part the article is as follows:

There are, however, some features apparent which distinctly point to the improvement. these including a return to stable government and a bountiful supply of cheap money. This latter has resulted in a readjustment of all capital values to a higher level, and the nominal increase in wealth and confidence is being reflected in a greater freedom of credit. The increasing confidence over the past few months has had a stimulating effect on public spending, and at the close of the year the sentiment was one of restrained optimism.

Would that Canada could say the same thing! Unfortunately we are realizing that we are getting into a more critical position as the months go by. The government seems to have two pet obsessions, the one to balance the budget and the other to have a favourable trade balance. I should like to point out first that we could balance the budget, and continue to balance it, but at the cost of bringing the people to a very low standard of living; secondly, a favourable balance of trade means little if in the effort we lose trade valued at hundreds of millions of dollars.

The present situation in Canada is unique. A rich country, yet we are simply twiddling our thumbs, as it were, and not making use of our great natural advantages. I believe our inactivity lies in the fact that our problem is financial, and we have not tackled it from the proper angle. For instance, from Halifax to Vancouver we are badly in need of public works. At the same time there are in Canada about 800,000 unemployed, and we are continually adding to their ranks. Those men would be only too anxious to find employment on public works; instead they are kept on relief. Although we have plenty of food in the country we are feeding through public charities about 1,300,000 people. Again, our railway problem is caused not because people do not want to travel or send freight, but because they cannot afford to do either except to a very limited extent. We have the great industries of agriculture, forestry, fishing and manufacturing, with possibilities of tremendous production, yet all of them at the present time facing bankruptcy. We have much sickness in this country—in times of stress such as this there is always more than in normal times—yet many of our doctors and nurses have not enough to do, and many others are idle because people cannot pay. Never more than at this time do we need life insurance, but during the period from 1930 to 1932 inclusive live insurance policies surrendered amounted to $782,500,000, and insurance lapsed amounted to $1,224,000,000. These, Mr. Speaker, are serious figures. It only shows the extraordinary intensity of the financial crisis through which this country is passing, and which I think could be in large measure alleviated if the right thing were done. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) the other day informed the house that during the last few years the gaol population of this country has doubled. These problems will not be solved by the cutting of wages and salaries; that is no final solution. The only benefit is that in some instances there is an equality of sacrifice where high salaries are reduced; otherwise in the aggregate it is a bad thing, because it is cutting down purchasing power, the one thing we need more than anything else.

The reasons for the lack of purchasing power, I take it, are largely two. First is inequality of income. That is being adjusted to a certain extent, by income and other taxation. Secondly the government does not seem to appreciate the fact that the total amount of money paid out in the cost of producing goods is never equal to the price of the goods. That being so it is necessary to put new money into circulation, and that new money should not be put into circulation through credits in the shape of debt, but by drawing on the national credit of the country, and that without interest. New money to-day is put into circulation only for productive purposes. As long as that is done we will always have difficulty in getting rid of our so-called surplus goods. We have to find a means of putting new money into operation through the consumers' channel.

There are certain facts it seems to me that we should face, and face boldly. First we should recognize that we need more money, more purchasing power. Does the minister not realize that to-day bank loans are over $600,000,000 less than they were four years ago? Does he realize what that means to business? We in this corner have advocated controlled inflation. Those who would criticize us leave out the "control;" that is their fault, not ours. We stand solidly for controlled inflation. We recommend trying to get to a definite agreed-upon price level, and putting new money into circulation until we get to that price level; we should then have controlled inflation.

We must find a means of getting the food to the people without its going through the channels of charity as it is doing to-day.

We have to find the means of putting people to work. Surely that is not beyond man's power and initiative; when there is so much to be done in every part of this country, surely it is not beyond our power to find ways and means of putting men to work.

Another problem we have to face, and I am glad to see it is mentioned in the budget speech, is the debt problem, whether private, municipal, provincial or federal. We cannot go on with a dear dollar and cheap goods and expect to meet these liabilities.

We have to recognize that we should show the same consideration to commodity wealth as we show to financial wealth. For instance, there is no reason why money put into a business that is for the benefit of the community should not be just as sacred as money put out at loan. The government should alter its policy with regard to public works and taxes. It seems to me it is a wrong process to tax heavily when times are bad; taxation should be heavy when times are good and people have the money to pay. On the other hand public works should not be encouraged when times are good, when business is active, but should be carried on a large scale when times are bad and business generally is frozen. To-day general business is too nervous to start the wheels of progress moving; the government is the only body in a position to start the machinery, and if that were done there is no doubt that general commerce would follow.

I would like to quote from Mr. V. C. Vickers who wrote a preface to Doctor Eisler's book, Stable Money. I may say that Mr. Vickers was a director of the Bank of England from 1910 to 1919. He said in part:

> If for the time being we concentrated a little more upon assisting productive work, and a little less upon balancing the budget, it would, in the end, be better for us all. Our aim should be to go forward to a new economy, not back to the old regime.

I particularly commend that statement to the finance minister.

In closing I should like particularly to draw the government's attention to the following quotation, and to suggest that consideration of the principle stated therein is long over due:

> A new orientation of national policy is needed to take care of the interests of the consumer, but there is no sign of it, nor likelihood of it, so long as the general belief is that prosperity at home is dependent upon exporting to markets abroad.

[Mr. Spencer.]

Mr. CHARLES BOURGEOIS (Three Rivers-St. Maurice): Mr. Speaker, there are a few observations which I should like to make upon the budget. The previous speaker (Mr. Spencer) like others from the same side, has complained about the new taxes. It was not expected, sir, that the budget brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) would be a pleasing or cheery document. At no time in the history of Canada has a government been faced with problems more gigantic, problems of greater difficulty. Governments the world over are grappling with tremendous financial difficulties, and all that could be expected was that the government would introduce drastic measures to meet the situation.

A cheering feature of the budget is the agricultural stabilization fund. From it there will be paid to exporters to the British market the difference between the price actually received for the pound sterling and $4.60. In other words, if the pound sterling falls below $4.60, as it is at present, the difference will be made up from the fund. This feature of the budget should be heartily commended; it will bring a higher price for the products the farmer exports, it will encourage production and will result in bringing wealth from outside to the agricultural districts in Canada. This in turn will stimulate trade and work to the good of all.

Last fall I was criticized by one hon. member for having made a promise during the by-election to the effect that a premium would be granted on cheese. The advantages which will result from the stabilization fund, in connection with milk products, doubtless are more than equivalent to those that would result from the granting of a premium, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) will not contradict me when I say that I repeatedly made pressing representations to him to have cheese included under that fund. This stabilization plan is more than a bonus on agricultural products exported to Great Britain; it is an attempt at equalization. During this depression agriculture has taken the hardest blow; farm products have shown the greatest shrinkage in value, and the farm income has been greatly reduced though the articles that must be purchased have been kept at high prices. This measure introduces some attempt at equalization, and I am sure there will be no complaints so long as all classes contribute equally during hard times and share equally in times of prosperity.

I sincerely regret the necessity of taking up the time of the house with personal matters, but I think it better that these points should be settled once and for all. Some hon. members who have not forgotten the defeat of their candidate in the Three Rivers-St. Maurice by-election have expressed certain innuendos with regard to promises made by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) concerning the expenditure of some $700,000 on the Three Rivers wharf and $50,000 for a retaining wall along the river in the bay of Shawinigan and St. Boniface parishes; they say these promises have not been fulfilled. On October 25 the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rheaume) informed this house that it was his intention to ask some question in this connection. I expected that the hon. member would formulate his questions and have them included in the orders of the day, but so far as I know he has not done so as yet. For his information and for the information of his friends let me say that the sum of $700,000 has been spent by the government in the construction of a wharf at Three Rivers, and that the retaining wall which the inhabitants of the Bay of Shawinigan and St. Boniface parishes and the northern part of St. Maurice county have been requesting for the past twenty-two years is now an accomplished fact. While the main principle of the government's policy is the curtailing of expenses I dare, for it is my duty, to request the building of sheds on the new wharf.

From the Montreal press I understand that the government, by granting the land required, intends to assist in the construction of an additional elevator at Sorel. I do not wish to object to that proposition, but I would suggest that the elevator be erected at Three Rivers, because lake St. Peter constitutes an obstacle to navigation at Sorel. From early in December until late in April the Sorel harbour is blocked by the ice from lake St. Peter, so the harbour of Three Rivers has the advantage of having navigation open two months longer than is the case at Sorel. Three Rivers is a first class shipping port and is the centre for a considerable portion of the cattle shipping trade on the St. Lawrence river. I sincerely regret that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) is not in his seat, because I know he is an authority in this matter. I invite him to pay us a visit and look over our facilities. I am sure that he would corroborate my opinion. Our position, near lake St. Peter on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river and at the mouth of the St. Maurice, gives us the advantage of the natural deep water of the St. Lawrence while we also command the vast St. Maurice territory, which exceeds 17,000 square miles in area. Until a few years ago the city was forced to struggle along with the development of its own harbour, but later this work was taken over by the federal government. Since that was done rapid progress has been made in the construction of a great permanent harbour, and at present Three Rivers boasts of the facilities it can offer all classes of inland and ocean going ships. An additional 3,600 feet of wharves has been completed and will be ready for use with the opening of navigation, and with the completion of the present building program Three Rivers will have a modern commodious harbour. Any person visiting Three Rivers will be convinced that we have the most advantageous spot for the purposes of the cattle shipping trade. From the city limits, extending westward along the St. Lawrence river for several miles, we have a magnificent tract of beautiful grazing land, as level as a prairie, and watered by several streams. This land is traversed by the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a branch line to deep water on the wharves, forming without exception the most desirable storage for cattle trade which can be possibly imagined.

I must not omit a reference to the supplies required for feeding cattle on the Atlantic voyage. At Three Rivers any required quantity of first class hay and oats can be purchased and at lower price than at other ports of the St. Lawrence. A certain quantity of live stock can also be purchased for shipment, in Three Rivers, and in the back country, which includes Shawinigan Falls and Grand'Mère; so that, in fact, all circumstances combine to facilitate in a remarkable degree this most important branch of the Canadian export trade at the port of Three Rivers.

I may add that several petitions have been circulated and signed throughout the Three Rivers district requesting that a measure should be adopted by the federal government in order that the Canadian National railway should reach Three Rivers at a point situated between Charette Mills or another point on the Canadian National railway. I submit that if, owing to the conditions now prevailing, this cannot be done, it would be possible to utilize the Canadian Pacific line from Les Piles. The only thing which would have to be done would be for the federal government to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to allow the Canadian National Railways to use its line from Garneau to Three Rivers. It is to be noted that under section 16 of the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act as passed by the Senate on the 23rd of February of this year, 1933, and now under consideration in the house, this scheme should be absolutely realizable.

In regard to the measures adopted by this government in connection with unemployment and farm relief, it may be said that on the whole, and taking into account the urgency of the situation, they were beneficial. But, without casting any blame on those who were charged with the distribution of the money voted by this parliament for relief purposes, one may ask whether with the experience acquired since that relief policy has begun, some modification should not be made to it. We are all agreed on the principle that people should go back to the land, provided there is a reasonable hope of their earning a living. But the first thing to ascertain would undoubtedly be: Have they the natural disposition and the experience required to earn their living in that way? Then consideration should be given to the place where these would-be farmers are sent. They should not, as it has been said, have to find their way through stumps and underbrush. In many parts of Canada, at least in the province of Quebec, there are farms, small farms which have been already under cultivation and which have for one reason or another, been abandoned, their owners having migrated to industrial centres in Canada or to the United States.

Without agreeing with my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) concerning the administration of the back to the land movement, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, my suggestion would be that the money which the government intends to contribute in helping the unemployed should, first and principally, be used in attempting to place them on those farms where they would have far greater chances of making a living than by becoming settlers on undeveloped lands in remote regions.

While disclaiming any desire to be an alarmist, the hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has lately told this house that communistic activities are more acute and dangerous in this country than in many years past. The agents of Russia are busy fomenting troubles among the unemployed and the economically distressed. Reds are putting forth renewed efforts to undermine the loyalty of veterans' associations, it is said in Mail and Empire, April 4, 1933, by the familiar method of penetration from without. The returned men are invited to attack the authorities. The Minister of Justice is no doubt in possession of specific information from the veterans' association that overt acts are contemplated in certain populous centres. It is no doubt for such reasons that he asked for the means to increase the strength of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the event of possible emergency. The minister and the government will undoubtedly have the backing of every loyal person in adopting a policy of adequate preparedness. These are days of stress and strain, when the decent citizen looks to the powers that be for timely, efficient and effective protection. It is to be noted that at President Roosevelt's request the United States congress is putting through severe legislation to prevent any disloyal section of the United States press publishing information inimical to the national welfare. One may doubt whether section 98 of our criminal code is sufficient to repress seditious activities which, it is reasonable to surmise, are caused by communistic propaganda. It is known that there is among us a campaign conducted by communists who are not only advocating and diffusing ideas subversive of our economic and political institutions, but attacking religious ideals in general and overtly preaching atheism. Their insults to Christianity and their blasphemies against God are so violent and so frequent that every Christian in this country must believe it is time such offences were repressed and punished by our criminal law and I submit that our criminal code should be amended accordingly.

In Montreal there are two so-called labour universities, one on Craig street and the other on Montcalm street. At those places meetings are held every night attended by numerous unemployed workmen who are taught the pernicious doctrines of soviet Russia. In consequence attempts to burn, and actual burnings of churches in the province of Quebec have reached a point where surely the authorities would feel it necessary to take drastic action to discover what is beyond those dastardly acts. The utmost condemnation of such acts must be felt by all; indeed it is difficult to imagine any one capable of such conduct who is not out of his mind. It is well known that the psychology of the Russian five year plan, which was put into effect on October 21, 1928, is one of militant communism and militant atheism or anti-religious propaganda.

The man's the gowd for a' that.

The refrain of Burns' immortal song is just the reverse of that theory. "There is a divine law of rewards. When the Creator gave us the earth with its fruitful soil," said William Jennings Bryan, "The sunshine with its warmth and the rains with their moisture," he proclaimed as clearly as if his voice had thundered from the clouds: Go, work, and according to your industry and your intelligence, so shall be your reward." Let us hope that our country, "this blessed country, this earth, this realm, this Canada," shall ever escape the danger of being ruled according to socialistic principles.

It is through immigration that the socialistic and communistic ideas may subvert our economic system. It was then wisely that on August 7, 1930, when he had been carried to power on the twenty-eighth of the preceding month the right hon. the Prime Minister caused an order in council to be adopted putting an immediate stop to immigration, and now every immigrant in order to be allowed to come and settle in this country is bound to go through the strictest immigration formalities. I dare say that on account of the splendid services he has rendered to this our country, the Prime Minister, like the celebrated English statesman, the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, may rightly say:

> I have faith in our race and in our nation. I believe that all the forces and enthusiasm of which democracy alone is capable will complete and maintain that splendid edifice upon greatness, which, commenced under aristocratic auspices, has received in those later times its greatest extension, and that the fixity of purpose and strength of will which are necessary to this end will be supplied by that national patriotism which sustained the most strenuous efforts and made possible the greatest sacrifice.

In my opinion the Prime Minister is and will remain among us as a teacher of the will to do and a professor of energy. He should be valued not in the abstract, but with due regard to the conditions of the time. I have not in the least the desire to minimize the worth of any of our statesmen of by-gone years. A thorough Canadian should admire in their turn all those who have given to this country more comfort, more renown or glory. The Prime Minister has a very high conception of the functions of his office, and he fulfils them with a rare firmness. He has adopted a program and stuck to it in the extremely difficult circumstances which have existed since he has been the head of this government. All of us, barring all differences of opinion and party feelings, should honour him as a servant of our country who is doing his duty manfully at a time when the interest of Canada requires, of course, that every Canadian shall do his duty, but especially he who has in his hands the direction of our destinies.

The comments I have just made, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the budget and the criticisms I have ventured to develop with regard to socialism and communism may have been lengthy and somewhat tedious, but I trust I shall be forgiven. Now, may I invite you, sir, and all the hon. members of the house to come to Three Rivers, the second oldest city of Canada, to participate in the festivities which will take place in July 1934, in commemoration of the third centenary of its foundation. While the city of Three Rivers has been and is still affected by the economic depression, perhaps in a larger measure than most other industrial centres; while its main industry, the pulp industry, lies in a state of quasi-stagnation and leaves a large number of men and women without employment, the citizens of Three Rivers, in a worthy spirit of optimism and because they have faith in the future, have come to the conclusion that, in spite of the difficulties and anxieties of the times, they should, as a matter of duty, celebrate this anniversary.

Our city, founded by Sieur de la Violette, has a history which reads both like a poem of heroism and an adventurous tale. For a hundred years Three Rivers was a most important post for the fur traders. It was also there that was created and developed, so to speak, that type of man so truly Canadian, the shantyman, who lived in the wide open spaces; who heard the tumultuous voices of the falls and impetuous torrents; who loved to seek the adventures and brave the dangers of lands beyond, and who filled the forest with the echoes of his songs. One may recall among the travellers or voyageurs from Three Rivers, such famous names as those of Nicolet, Godefroy, Chouart, of Hudson bay fame, and Gaultier de Varennes, Sieur de la Verendrye, of Rocky mountain fame, a great Canadian discoverer, and other names glorious and immortal in the annals of Canada.

It might also be recalled that Three Rivers was the cradle of metallurgy in Canada. For nearly a century and a half what is still known as Forges St. Maurice furnished the country with the iron products that it required. Of the three cities established on the shores of the St. Lawrence during the French regime, Three Rivers is decidedly not the most important, but while Quebec is the seat of the provincial legislature and Montreal the commercial metropolis, Three Rivers has doubtless charms of its own in which to glory on occasion.

To be particularly proud of such a city as Three Rivers, I am sure is permissible to one who was born there and who has the honour to represent that city in this parliament. This feeling on my part shall not, I am sure, astonish any of the members of this house who at the time of the Imperial conference in August, 1932, paid a visit to Three Rivers and observed its marvellous possibilities of development.

Mr. J. A. BARRETTE (Berthier-Maskinongé) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the courage displayed by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), in bringing down a budget so burdened with taxation, is certainly worthy of praise. I especially wish to draw the attention of the house to the well established fact that alone the economic depression of which Canada, as well as the rest of the world, suffers, has forced the government to resort to such a budget.

All members of this house realize, better than I can express it, the moral courage displayed by a government, when it risks its popularity by increasing the taxes which burden a nation. It is the outward and fearless expression of a government conscious of its duty. It is the accomplishment of this disagreeable duty which all statesmen have to face when the nation's credit, upon which the prosperity of the people depends, demands it.

Above all, the duty of our governments is to safeguard the nation's economic system, so rudely shaken by a world-wide depression and which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) would completely cast aside because as he states "the present economic system is responsible for the fact that a large number of people are out of work, and that both our natural resources and the social organization in this country serve the interests of a few and not those of the people, as a whole."

These two statements are baseless and the hon. member carefully avoided substantiating them. In what way is our present economic system responsible for the unemployment of so large a number of people? The hon. member does not state. This economic depression is world-wide, as the hon. member pointed out. Almost all countries differ in their economic systems and even Russia's economic regime was powerless against this depression. Ever since the world was created, at various periods, there have been economic crises in all countries and under all economic regimes. All forms of government were tried and none of them were able to stem the rising tide of economic crises.

This economic depression has been attributed to a thousand causes, however, there are plausible reasons to believe that the main cause is the lack of trust among nations as well as among individuals. It belongs to a moral order rather than to a material one. The world's wealth has remained intact but badly distributed, and a large portion of it has remained unproductive owing to this lack of trust. It is clearly a trial sent by Heaven. The world was likewise upset when the erection of the tower of Babel was undertaken.

[Mr. Bourgeois.]

The entire population of the world worked on the construction of this tower. It was the golden period of those past ages. All had work and cherished great hopes in the achievement of this gigantic tower which eventually would reach Heaven. Suddenly, God's hand smites the world. The workmen can no more understand one another as God has given them different languages. No more co-operation can exist. All their hopes have vanished. The tower remains unfinished, the people are left without work and they are forced to rest. That was, perhaps, the first world-wide economic depression. It must have been terrible since history has recorded the fact. It was certainly not the economic system of that period which was responsible for that crisis. It was a punishment inflicted upon human pride. Why not attribute the present crisis to the same cause?

Then, why assert that our natural resources and the social organization of the country's production are diverted to benefit a few? It is certainly an unfair statement. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) is fully aware that, if the working classes have no work, it is because those who had wealth have lost it and cannot carry on their industries. It is true that there are a few capitalists left and it is fortunate for us, and our few industries which remain. As long as there is a scarcity of wealthy people, we shall be deprived of industries and our people will be unemployed. Captains of industries are needed so that the people's savings may be invested and bear fruit. That is the work of financiers. The profits they make are infinitely small compared to the benefit the nation derives. During the periods of prosperity our working classes earned wages varying between $4 and $10 per day. Do you not think, sir, that our workmen would not gladly see the fortunes lost by our financiers returned to them, so that they might again receive the wages they once earned and enjoy the prosperous days of the past.

Among all these wealthy men, there were certainly robbers and profiteers, but, even while robbing they contributed to the happiness of the people.

That the state should better control industrial trusts, I agree; but I do think it absurd to suppress them. The economic conquest is carried out just like a war is waged: with soldiers and generals. The soldiers are the workmen and the capitalists are the generals. The worker is therefore interested that his employer should make sufficient profits which will allow him to continue his operations, and, in fact, a good worker, is always glad to see his employer acquire wealth because he is bound sooner or later to derive some benefit from it. Self-interest is one of the most potent incentives of life, it compels man to work and leads to achievement. It is the prime mover of human effort; it is the main incentive of production, trade, researches, discoveries, inventions and all human activities. All social organizations must tend to foster private initiative for the greatest welfare of the community and all political reforms tending to curtail the freedom of private individuals are directly opposed to human nature, destined to failure and lead to disorder. Human activities small and great, must be the result of private initiative to be beneficial.

If the lot of our people is to be improved, there is but one thing to do: preach by example and word the social and religious truths which alone can assure the progress and happiness of humanity. Preachers of religion should avoid persecuting, under the pretence of religion, their fellow-citizens; similarly those who are intent on reforming morals or society should avoid upsetting social institutions under pretence of social welfare and putting everything to the sword and fire. Let us point out to the people not only their rights but also their duties. Let us seek the means of being useful to others while serving our own interests. Let us seek the real aim of life. Let us remember that freedom is indispensable to attain moral progress, which, to be efficacious, must not be interfered with.

Mr. IRVINE: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would draw your attention to the fact that there is not a quorum in the house.

The Clerk having counted the members:

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Gagnon): I am informed that there is a quorum.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): To a delegation of socialists who once interviewed John D. Rockefeller, requesting him to divide his wealth among the United States citizens, Rockefeller replied: Very well, my wealth amounts to $55,000,000, and as the population of the United States comprises 110,000,000 people, each of you is entitled to 55 cents. Do you think, sir, that this amount could relieve their distress and contribute to their welfare? No. On the other hand, this capital, well managed by a financier, could, annually, earn in salaries, for the benefit of the community, the sum of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000.

Let us, especially, remember that a moral, social and religious background is necessary to our legislators. Unfortunately these qualifications are gained through experience and the people can only discover them after putting them to a test. Fortunately for Canada, it has as leaders captains of industry, builders, a cabinet whose chief and members are very highly gifted with these moral, social and religious qualifications and this assures her an unparalleled economic and political system which needs no change.

Not only does our political system require no change as a mere sop to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but what is more important is that, for the welfare of Canada, we cannot change the present government because the moral, social and religious qualifications of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his colleagues are too greatly required in the present crisis for us to be deprived of their guidance. I make this statement in all earnestness, and I am the more sincere that I do not wish to conceal that my views and those of the Prime Minister and his French Canadian colleagues differ on certain subjects. However, these differences of views have no bearing on the administration of the affairs of this country. In my opinion, at the helm of the affairs of this country, we cannot ask for better leaders and I feel confident that I am fulfilling my duty and mandate by supporting the measures of the government.

This, however, does not prevent me from highly protesting against the unfair way French Canadians are treated in this Confederation of ours, where we entered as partners and where we are looked upon as distant relatives. I note that we have lost a large part of the political heritage handed down to us by Sir Etienne Cartier, namely, that equality in political influence, in civil service matters and fair distribution of subsidies which our province enjoyed at the time when Cartier, in assuming the leadership of French Canada, demanded and obtained from Sir John A. Macdonald, the fair proportion of the political rights and privileges to which the importance of our population entitled us.

The situation complained of, the unfair treatment meted out to us in the distribution of positions in the civil service, the grants for the development of transportation facilities in our province—railways and navigation—assistance to our farmers and fishermen, are not entirely due to the Prime Minister or to his colleagues.

The hon. leader of the opposition and his party must assume the major part of this responsibility.

I do not intend to give a complete list of our grievances. I shall restrict myself to a few: In 1882, out of the fifteen deputy ministers, seven were French Canadians, now we have but two. Since 1927, the Auditor General's report shows that we have received $17,000,000 less for public works than to what we are entitled.

More than $4,000,000,000 have been expended on railways while our share has been only $489,000,000, that is $600,000,000 less than our quota. All our ports are neglected. The Montreal harbour owes its development to its citizens. We are entitled to double the number of grain elevators and many more wharves. And to mention more recent events, how can one justify the discontinuance of a certain undertaking in connection with the Canadian National Railways, at Montreal, which has left an open and large excavation in the centre of the metropolis, thus depriving the Canadian National Railways of an economic terminus, when millions of dollars are expended to complete the doubtful enterprise at Fort Churchill. The St. Lawrence channel should have been dredged to a depth of 35 feet, on a width of 600 feet, at least 10 years ago.

I never neglect an opportunity of reminding the Prime Minister and his colleagues of these grievances. That is the only source of our quarrels. However, I note that the Prime Minister greatly sympathizes with me and I still have hope of convincing him to take this question of French Canada out of Canadian politics by granting us the fair quota to which we are entitled in the administration of this country, especially, as I expect that the next house will be composed of 60 French Canadian members from Quebec, elected to uphold the principles and ideas advocated by the Conservative party, which are the best and wisest for the government of our country, but, especially, in order to insist that our rights be entirely recognized. The new imposts may not be popular; the hon. members of the opposition may be piously listened to by the people in distress; the gloomy description of our situation may still further dishearten our citizens; utterances like those of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) may rouse the passions of the people; however, all these appeals to prejudice and human selfishness can in no way belittle the deep gratitude which our people feel toward the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues. A moral force emanates from their courageous attitude in facing the problems which rise daily and which they are busy in solving for the greatest welfare of our people.

Thus, further revenue had to be raised to consolidate our credit, assist those in want and help our people through this crisis; therefore, the government levies an impost on sugar, increases the income tax and taxes other articles.

With their good common sense the people fully understand that the moment taxes are levied, the rate payers must be assessed. Bear in mind that the working or farming class does not form a caste apart and that it is as disagreeable to them to note that the village employer, merchant or banker is taxed; in either case, the workman or farmer knows that he will equally share in the distress or prosperity of his fellow citizens, whatever high position they may occupy. The people are fully aware that the present distress started higher up, by the financial losses made by the upper classes. The prosperity of a nation is closely linked to every form of taxation, no matter how unequally distributed it may seem at first, it ends by reaching directly or indirectly all individuals.

All the government must decide is the amount necessary to administer the country's affairs. Should $300,000,000 be required, there will necessarily be $300,000,000 levied in taxes. If the government were in a position to know exactly the salary or income of each individual, the problem of taxation would soon be solved, as all would be assessed in proportion to his resources. But, unfortunately, it is practically impossible to arrive at exact figures concerning the income of each individual. The government is therefore forced to resort to taxes easily collected which will bring in the revenue foreseen. The sugar tax will thus enrich the treasury by $20,000,000. This anticipated amount is not gainsaid. We could analyse all taxes and always arrive at the same conclusion. We should avoid levying them, but, unfortunately, they are necessary. All we can request from the government is that it should only levy the taxes which really benefit the treasury.

I trust the hon. Minister of Finance will permit me to make a suggestion. Why not confine ourselves to customs duties and excise taxes, reducing the latter by 50 per cent, so as to foster domestic trade, and why not abolish all other imposts, such as taxes on corporations, sugar and sales tax, briefly, all existing taxes, and replace them by a 1 per cent tax on all bank transactions? The latter amounted to the enormous sum of $31,000,000,000 in 1931, and would have brought a revenue of $315,000,000 to the state. The collection of such a tax would not cost a cent to the government.

All banks would retain on cheques presented at the teller's wicket, 1 per cent of the cheque amount, as a government tax. The majority of cheques are generally drawn to pay bills or debts, and the tax would fall on the payee, which after all would only amount to 1 per cent deducted on his bill. Thus, the poor man who has no banking account would be exempt from taxation, while those who have large banking accounts would be taxed according to their standing in the financial world. It would be a far more equitable tax than the income tax, because nobody could escape it. A 1 per cent surtax could be demanded for each endorser, other than the beneficiary, so as to avoid that the same cheque be used by various holders, thus avoiding the tax.

Note that with this proposed system, the 1 per cent tax is levied on the payee and not on the person who issues the cheque; there would be no inducement to pay with cash; and the banks, thereby, would have no fear of receiving less deposits.

Another advantage attached to this form of taxation would be that large companies as well as prominent financiers would be obliged to practically pay their taxes daily, thus their financial affairs would be better balanced than with the present system, which consists in paying at the end of the fiscal year an income tax, when, in the ordinary course of business, they have already invested their money in various enterprises and find it most difficult to raise the necessary cash to pay the enormous tax which the state collects each year, at a fixed period. And it is the more burdensome because no person can figure out the amount he must pay before first making a complete survey of his affairs; it is then too late to think of suppressing other expenses or industrial investments to meet this tax.

The uncertainty as to what the income tax will amount, necessarily makes capitalists very cautious and forces them to set aside, each year, much larger amounts than the tax calls for, because of the fear of making an error in their calculations; this actually deprives industry of a much larger amount than the tax collected.

The objections to the taxation which I suggest must necessarily be numerous, because all taxes meet with opposition. However, I wish to point out that this tax has a great redeeming quality; it will be economical and easy to collect. I believe that the cost of collecting the income tax and other excise taxes, etc., amounts to more than $8,000,000 per year; while this 1 per cent impost would practically cost nothing to collect; because the channel through which the government gets its information already exists; the banks, at present, supply the government with monthly statements on cheques passing through their institutions. The government, therefore, has always this information on hand. The amount varies between $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,000,000 per month; thus banks when forwarding their monthly statements would simply have to inclose a cheque of 1 per cent on the amount mentioned in the statement. The government would, therefore, receive, monthly, a cheque varying between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. I do not think that any doubt could be cast on the honesty of our banking institutions as regards their statements; at all events, it would be an easy matter for a few government inspectors to check up the books of the various banks.

This tax is so simple in its practical application and so devoid of complication, compared to the existing tax system, that the government should have no hesitation in adopting it. What would be more simple than the collection of this tax; when a cheque is presented at the bank, the teller would only pay 99 per cent of the amount mentioned, and would debit the account of the client 100 per cent. At the end of each day, banks add the total amounts of cheques presented and debit their clients' accounts with said amounts. This operation would immediately indicate what amount is due to the government, namely 1 per cent of the total amount of the cheques. At the end of each month, banks would forward to the government a statement showing the total amount of the cheques debited to the accounts of their clients; this is actually in practice, it would therefore require no further outlay by the banks. In preparing their statement the banks would simply mention that they have deposited to the government's account 1 per cent of the total amount of cheques cashed. Is there any simpler system as regards tax collection? Compare this system with that of the present collection of the income tax, consider all the irregularities to which the latter system gives rise and the necessity the government is under of continuously checking up their employees and seeing that they carry out their duties, notwithstanding the always growing temptation of granting favours to their friends. There could be no possible favour granted to friends with this 1 per cent tax, so that you suppress the factor of human weakness which should not be put to a test. All are aware of the corrupt practices of which the putting into force of the Volstead Act was the occasion in the United States; the Income Tax Act is similar to the Volstead Act and is destined sooner or later to corrupt officials and weaken the moral force of the whole administration. We should make a strong effort to abrogate all laws which are generally disregarded by the large majority of citizens. If by the excessive severity of our laws, we tempt the great majority of our people to disregard them, we thereby tempt these same people to break other laws which are of a much higher moral order, the observance of which is absolutely necessary for the moral uplift of our people.

To foster agriculture I would suggest that the government erect cold storage plants, costing about $10,000 each in all farming counties. Farmers could then store their perishable products and banks could be authorized to loan to farmers 50 per cent of the par value of these products. In order to market these products abroad, I would suggest that the government promote a commercial organization of salesmen something similar to the organization existing in the past to induce immigrants to settle here. When we were endeavouring to increase the population of this country, we had immigration agents in all European centres liable to send us immigrants. These agents were paid a salary and a commission of so much per head. We thus succeeded in drawing thousands of immigrants to these shores, although such a policy cost us many millions of dollars.

I would suggest that the government appoint agents in all large European cities in a position to purchase our farm products. These agents would be supplied with a list of all our farm products in cold storage. In each respective country they could employ people who would visit the various retail stores offering for sale our farm products. Each day, orders thus obtained would be grouped to make up a complete cargo so that reasonable shipping rates could be had. In this way we would have abroad thousands of clients, instead of being at the mercy of a few wholesale houses. It might be necessary to erect some cold storage plants in a few large European cities so as to always have on hand a surplus of our products for quick sales. The government could be reimbursed for this outlay by adding a small storage charge on the sale of these products.

[Mr. Barrette.]

Is it not time, in order to further assist the Canadian farmer, that we should, as a measure of expediency, settle what is to be the minimum prices on farm products? For instance, why not decree that the minimum price of butter should be 25 cents per pound and that of cheese 10 cents a pound. Such measures would tend to encourage the Canadian farmer to raise his spirit depressed by this crisis which has already lasted too long.

Other means of indirectly assisting the farming class and stemming unemployment would be to allow Canadian distillers to export alcohol, which would result in reopening again the doors of distilleries. We must bear in mind that a distillery of Melchers Gin standard, operated within the limits of my constituency, uses millions of bushels of Canadian grain, without mentioning the hand labour and by-products of these manufactures utilized by the farming class. Moreover, when the debate on the Robinson bill took place, it was proved, without a doubt, that alcohol exports brought into the treasury an amount varying between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000. Would not this amount have been sufficient to permit our government to carry on without levying a 2-cent tax on sugar? Such a measure would be well received by the people, because those who are making millions of dollars, to the detriment of our industries, have a questionable reputation, and to-day the United States doors are wide open to clandestine trade.

Other means of checking unemployment would be to further develop the Beauharnois power and St. Lawrence waterways. These two undertakings would give work to about forty or fifty thousand men and would completely relieve unemployment in this country. No doubt, sir, you are aware that between 1872 and 1878 there was a similar crisis in this country and that the construction of the Lachine canal contributed in a large measure to end that crisis.

Recently I received a letter from a Montreal friend who pointed out the necessity of curbing the electricity trust in Canada. The letter is as follows:

1280 Bernard Ave., Outremont,
March 28, 1933.

Mr. J. A. Barrette, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—

Pursuant to our conversation, I respectfully submit the following facts:

The Beauharnois Company such as organized, with its advantageous and permanent current contracts, provides for the payment of all interests on mortgages and bonds, and moreover raises the value of the common stock to many millions of dollars, why then should not the original bondholders receive for their investment 100 cents on the $1?

As it is believed in well informed quarters, if the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company acquire the Beauharnois Company under the stipulations of reorganizing the company as stated, those who subscribed the original $30,000,000, will be deprived of $12,000,000. Should this scheme succeed, it will be a clever stock exchange transaction, without precedent, to cover the loss of $24,000,000 that the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company sustained in their investments.

We feel confident that the leader of the government will not force the original bondholders to make such a gift to Mr. Holt and his silent associates, why not preferably make this gift to the people of Canada, if one absolutely wishes to be philanthropic.

With the slightest effort, the least gifted can calculate what the realizable profits the Beauharnois Company will make:

Contracts signed, 400,000 h.p. at $15	$ 6,000,000
Contracts not yet signed, 100,000 h.p. at $15	1,500,000
	$ 7,500,000
Yearly operation outlay	1,000,000
Profits	$ 6,500,000

The total cost of the undertaking will reach $70,000,000; at 6 per cent the interest will amount to $4,200,000; after the interest on mortgages have been earned and paid, if the Montreal Light, Heat and Power became the owners, their yearly profits would amount to $2,300,000; this would increase the value of the common shares to $40,000,000. Now that all the risks entailed by the project are things of the past, a shameful proposal is suggested to those who risked their hard earned money under the pretence that alone the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company is unable to finance the Beauharnois Company. Will a theft of $12,000,000 be permitted openly, notwithstanding the protest of intelligent people who know these facts?

It is a cunning scheme; they wish to acquire, by every possible means at their disposal, a sound and splendid enterprise to cover the poor investments made by Mr. Holt.

If the Beauharnois project passes into the hands of the ogre, it will no more be the imposing and gigantic undertaking which was the pride of its promoters and of all the citizens of this province. It will become a simple subsidiary enterprise paying its tribute as regularly as the hum of its turbines.

We have faith, however, that our representatives in parliament will act promptly and energetically.

Believe me, Sir,

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) J. C. Coté.

At present in the United States, commissions are being appointed to inquire into the financial operations of the banker Pierpont J. Morgan. The Canadian people would very much like to get to the bottom of the financial operations of Sir Herbert Holt; perhaps, they might find out how the people were exploited and robbed and whether it is possible to make these large financiers stump up what they have robbed from the public.

You are no doubt aware, sir, that the Quebec government has just enacted a measure permitting the exportation of electricity. Could not the Dominion government disallow such an act, so as to conserve all our electrical energy to develop our own industries? It behooves the Prime Minister, who has the exceptional advantage of being supported by a large and united majority, who repose in him their trust, beside having a great admiration for his achievements, it behooves, I state, the Prime Minister to oppose such a measure. Will he follow the example of Mussolini, Hitler and Roosevelt who took advantage of their prestige to introduce in their respective countries new principles of government, setting aside class prejudices, financial influences and red tape procedure, which are inherent to all governments, in order to give their respective countries an administration rendered necessary by the present crisis, and which seems destined to solve, happily, their national problems.

I trust that the right hon. Prime Minister will openly prove, without constraint, his reputation of statesman and leader of men, for the greatest welfare of Canada.

Mr. F. H. PICKEL (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to supplement a few words that I said in March with respect to the committee on agriculture. I have a resolution on the order paper calling for the division of the agriculture committee into two sections, an agricultural section and a wheat section, but I wish to state now that the western members on that committee are helping us in every possible way. They are doing everything in their power to help us in our investigation of the milk situation, in which they seem quite interested. I do not now request that the agriculture committee be divided, and I have much pleasure in withdrawing that resolution.

The western farmer has been interested in dairying for the past year or two simply because wheat has been so low in price, and if this depression starts the western farmer into the right channel and he will only go in more for mixed farming than he does at present, it will not have been wholly in vain. There is a great potential market in the east for the western farmer. Undoubtedly the farmers in the west could supply Canada with butter. We understand they would have difficulty if they entered into the manufacture of cheese, as milk is bulky and collection would be difficult. Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes should in my opinion devote all their energies to cheese making. Although at the present time butter is selling at better prices than cheese, comparatively, the fact is that the year round there is more money in the manufacture of cheese than in the manufacture of butter. Eastern farmers should be instructed and intelligently directed to devote their efforts to cheese making. On the English markets our cheese is supreme, and brings a higher price than cheese from any other part of the world. On the other hand our butter, as a general rule, grades lower than butters from other countries. After making that statement in the month of March of this year I received a protest from the Provision Trades Association of Montreal, in which they sent statistics showing that Canadian butter graded higher than any other butter on the English market. I have taken great pains to ascertain the facts with regard to the marketing of butter, and I find that the best grades of Australian, New Zealand and Danish butter supersedes those of Canada, and that our butter is classed higher than that from the Soviet and Poland. These are the facts, and I amend my former statement accordingly.

After I made my speech in March on agricultural conditions a practical joker from Winnipeg sent me a postcard containing a message which I should like to place on Hansard:

Dear Rip Van Winkle:

Wake up; did you ever visit a farm out west? Please be advised that all the eastern prizes for butter are always won by western farmers, and we can all milk cows—and how?

I had no intention of intimating that the west could not make butter. I believe that they are capable of making butter as good as and probably better than we make. However that is not the point in question. Further, I received a letter from a gentleman in Edmonton, one or two paragraphs of which I should like to place on Hansard:

In the northern portion of this province, of which Edmonton is the centre, we have not had a crop failure in the last twenty years, in fact nine out of ten years we have had real good crops. In the ten years from 1922 to 1932 we really had only two years of depressed prices. In other words we had eight years in succession from 1922 to 1930 with good crops and good prices. I will venture to say there is not one out of ten farmers here who set aside any surplus or reserve during these eight years to take care of a lean year. The surplus, generally speaking, was spent in trips to the south. They have few, if any, cows and hogs to look after during the winter and the ones that have these few, the hired man or neighbour looks after them. The horses are usually cut loose around the straw piles to be taken up in March or April by the farmer, when he returns from the south.

Then he goes on to give a history of the western farmer:

You may think you have a lot to put up with having to listen to a few western M.P. farmers in the House of Commons. We have this to listen to every day in the year from our local U.F.A. members. Our farmers here, had they behaved themselves, would be in a much better position than the farmers in Ontario and Quebec. The farmer here, or his father, got a good 160 acres of land at a cost of $10—homestead fees, and one of the first things he thinks of, on receiving his title, is how much he can borrow on it.

I have very little more to add with regard to the western farmer except that he has made millions where we have made only thousands. Many farmers out in the west make more in one year than the eastern farmer makes in a lifetime.

Mr. YOUNG: How many?

Mr. PICKEL: The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) made the statement I had suggested that all the western farmers should go into mixed farming. I made no such statement, but suggested merely that those western farmers who could go into mixed farming should do so. It would be not only in their own interests but in those of the whole country.

For many years the Canadian farmers have been sadly neglected. The only real help that has been given to the mixed farmer has been since 1930, when the government gave the fruit farmers and market gardeners some seasonal protection. The people affected have certainly derived great advantage from the help given, and I hope and trust that in its wisdom the government may see fit to extend those seasonal helps. Ever since Mr. Joseph Chamberlain made his memorable speech in Glasgow in 1903 I have been favourably impressed with his views. On that occasion he advocated preferential trade within the empire; to-day we have it. Ever since 1896 every government in this country has striven to attain that end. But they were all unsuccessful until the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) went over to the old country and in a businesslike way, laid his cards on the table, and a preferential tariff within the empire was the result. I contend that the right hon. gentleman is entitled to be and should be acclaimed the Right Hon. Sir Richard Bedford Bennett, the saviour not only of Canada, but also of the British empire. I think he has done more for the empire than any other statesman that ever lived.

I am glad that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) has just come into the chamber. One of his chief occupations since I have been in this house, as also of the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume), has been to compare prices in Canada with prices in the United States—butter so much in Canada, so much in the United States; eggs so much in Canada, so much in the United States. But this session, Mr. Speaker, we have not heard anything about that. Why? We are getting 28 cents a pound for butter in Canada, and in the United States it is 18 cents.

Mr. HOWARD: Who is getting 28 cents in Canada?

Mr. PICKEL: To-day for the first time since 1914 every farm product in Canada is selling at higher prices than anywhere else in the world.

Mr. YOUNG: How about wheat?

Mr. PICKEL: Don't worry about wheat. Canadian wheat is bound to come back; we raise the best wheat in the world.

Mr. YOUNG: It has not come yet.

Mr. PICKEL: It is bound to regain its level. It is low at present, and we are sorry for it, but it is a world wide condition and I do not know what you can do to help it.

Mr. YOUNG: What about the tariff?

Mr. PICKEL: The hon. member for Sherbrooke and the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville stand up in this house with voices full of tears and eyes as dry as dust, and with a pious and fervent hope in their hearts that things would get worse to serve their political ends. Remember, Mr. Speaker, they are both distributors. They are not working for the farmers; there is politics underlying it.

Mr. HOWARD: You ought to be fair at least. How do you make me a distributor?

Mr. PICKEL: We have not heard any comparison of prices this session. If to-day we were on a butter export basis, instead of getting 28 cents a pound we would be getting 11½ cents.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I do not think any hon. member can discuss in this house, even on the budget, a matter which is sub judice before a committee of the house.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Gagnon): I regret to say that the point raised by the hon. member is not well taken.

Mr. PICKEL: If we were to-day on an export basis, instead of getting 28 cents we would be getting 11½ cents. For that reason I advocate the making of just sufficient butter in Canada to supply our market, production intelligently controlled to make just about what we require. The minute we begin to export we take the export price. It would be much better for us, rather than run any risk of having butter to export, to have to import a little.

Mr. TOTZKE: Who is going to direct the production?

An hon. MEMBER: The cow.

Mr. PICKEL: I am not a political economist, and I am not versed in railroads or banking or anything of that kind. Last session I had the privilege through the courtesy of the Prime Minister of hearing two very learned addresses delivered in the House of Commons restaurant. One was by Sir Josiah Stamp, the other by Lord Reading. They were very careful in their remarks in contrast with hon. members in the southeast corner of the house who think it is the easiest thing in the world to inflate, deflate, and arrange our currency just as they please. These gentlemen, who should know what they were talking about, were very careful in their suggestions.

As far as the railroad situation is concerned I advocated a year ago that our railway should be either leased, sold, given away, or scrapped, and I am still of that opinion. I voted for the railway bill in the hope that a change might be beneficial, but I have not much faith that it is going to be much good. I do not quarrel with the statement of which we have heard so much, "amalgamation never, competition ever." It is rather a taking slogan. I am for competition, but I do not think the government should be in business, the government should not be one of the competitors.

Mr. YOUNG: We will put them out of business at the next election.

Mr. BOUCHARD: There is no business left.

Mr. PICKEL: The government has been trying to do too much business. At the present time we are investigating the milk situation in Canada. As far as I am personally concerned I feel this is just a stop-gap; I think every branch of agriculture should be investigated. There is not a branch of agriculture to-day in which the farmer is not exploited. Hog grading, egg grading, packing houses, stockyards, millers—the farmer pays the price every time. In the circle with which I am acquainted I do not know a farmer who pays income tax. I have one farm of 400 acres in which I have nearly $47,000 invested, and I did not make one per cent on it last year. I made sufficient to pay my insurance and taxes; that is all.

Mr. YOUNG: You were lucky if you did that.

Mr. PICKEL: I know it. That is a bad condition. And it is not due to the prices of commodities; if the farmer were sure of getting a square deal and his fair share of what his goods sell for, he would be on easy street. He was never much better off than he would be to-day if he got his just share.

Mr. BOUCHARD: It is the tariff.

Mr. YOUNG: Anything in the budget to help him?

Mr. PICKEL: The government, all governments since the tuberculin test came into operation in this country, have let the farmer down. I have a petition here from the Quebec branch of the United Farmers of Canada, Danville section, in which their demands are in substance as follows:

(1) That it be forbidden to put T.B. reactors on the market for human consumption;

(2) That the monopoly in the handling of our dairy products be taken out of the hands of wholesalers of Montreal;

(3) That an investigation be made into the affairs of the city of Montreal with the view of lowering the price to the consumer and thus increase consumption or raising the price to the shipper.

In that regard I should like to cite one or two personal experiences. In 1926 I lost five reactors, the last I have had on my farm. I sent these animals to Montreal, and received for them the sum of $24. My neighbour had five reactors at the same time, but my animals would outweigh his and they were in better condition. He telephoned to the veterinary inspector in Montreal and said, "I am sending five reactors to Montreal to-day. I should be glad if you could send a man down to the abattoir." He received $125 for his cattle, an average of $25 per head, while I received only $24. Last November I lost two cattle from another farm, for which I received $4, or just enough to buy a can of disinfectant for the stable.

I do not find fault with the indemnity paid by the government for reactors; I think it is very generous, but why should middlemen in Montreal be allowed to steal these reactors from the farmers? A farmer in Stanbridge East, Quebec, had a reactor last summer. He is a big feeder and the heifer was good beef, but you might just as well put a card on these reactors and say, "I am for sale; you can have me for anything you want to pay." The farmer sold this heifer to a dealer for $20; he also sold three hogs and two or three calves, and went to Montreal with the dealer when the animals were taken to the abattoir. When they got there the buyer came around to inspect the animals. The hogs were all right; the calves were all right, but when he came to the heifer he said, "How much?" The dealer said, "Well, I gave $20 for her." I cannot put in parliamentary language the words the buyer used, but he said, "Are you trying to be a philanthropist or what?" The dealer said, "I know she is worth more than $20." The buyer replied, "I know, but they have to sell her; they have to get rid of her right away, and you do not need to pay so much." I agree with the farmers of Danville; I contend that these cattle should be sent to the fertilizer plants right away. These fellows should not be allowed to profiteer any longer.

Perhaps in passing, Mr. Speaker, I might say a word or two with regard to the rumours which are spreading throughout the House of Commons in respect to a reciprocity pact with the United States. As an agriculturist I want to protest against any such reciprocity pact covering mixed farm products. My county touches the United States border for about seventy miles; you can go there to-day and find any number of places where they are bringing in United States pork, eggs and butter. They are not doing that because they get less here; they are bringing it into Canada because they get more for it. I agree with the hon. member from the maritime provinces who spoke a short time ago; a reciprocity treaty covering fish, potatoes and lumber would be a great advantage, but I protest against the mixed farmers having to pay for those concessions. If this is done they will be put right out of business. To-day the United States farmer is a good deal worse off than we are; the Canadian farmer gets higher prices for his pork, his eggs, his butter and everything he produces. As the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) said the other day, the best way to help the Canadian people out of this depression is to commence with the mixed farmers, who are by long odds the largest class of consumers in the country. Increase their purchasing power and you will help everyone, and we will not get out of this depression until that is done.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I think the government is seized with the importance of the cheese industry, and I hope they will see that intelligent instruction is given the farmers of eastern Canada in the manufacture of cheese. I contend that if we can store our cheese and age it here in order to give the English consumer just what he wants, with the assurance of a continuity of supply, we will secure a much larger return than we are getting now.

I shall not detain the house for more than another two or three minutes, but I should like to mention two other acts that are working against the interests of the farmers. I refer to the hog and egg grading acts. I spoke in this house last autumn, and the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), in his usual style, poked some fun at me because of my age and various other infirmities. I want to tell the house that the hon. member is not in touch with his farmers. I am in favour of grading, but I want it administered with reason. If we are to export goods from this country we must have grading; we must package our goods carefully and must produce a good article. But I am not in favour of the hog and egg grading acts; I think they should be amended. On several occasions I have seen a crate of select eggs sent to the Montreal market. They were laid in the morning, picked up right away and rushed to Montreal, reaching that market at noon. In two or three days a return has come back saying that of the crate a few were selects, a few firsts and most of the eggs seconds, cracked and rotten. The next crate of eggs brought the same result, but the third crate, which was made up of small, inferior eggs that would not grade over seconds, would bring in a return equal to that from the first crate. A poultryman in my section died last July. After his death his estate went to his brother, and there were sixty or seventy dozen inferior eggs on hand. The person in charge asked the brother what he should do with them and was told to sell them. The man pointed out that they could not be sold because they were not marketable and he was instructed to put them in a crate and send them to Montreal. This was done and they sold as well as if they had been graded. This demonstrates that people do not look at the grading.

The governments of this country and throughout the world are fighting socialism, communism, bolshevism, anarchism and all sorts of "isms," and are passing restrictive legislation of one kind or another and endeavouring to compel people to conform to these acts. All these restrictive measures are simply driving people into communism.

I will not take up more of the time of the house, but I do hope that the dire condition of the farmer to-day will be seriously considered and that means will be taken to investigate everything that interests him, including the grading of maple sugar and of all other products. All these restrictions are operating against the farmer and it is high time they were removed, or amended.

Mr. JEAN LOUIS BARIBEAU (Champlain) (Translation): I wish to congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) of his clear and precise statement on the financial situation of this country. The budget speech of the hon. Minister of Finance, is not an election one; however, the Canadian people, as they did during the great war, must unite and make sacrifices so as to check this depression which prevails not only in Canada but throughout the world.

The balance sheet of the Dominion shows a deficit of $53,000,000 for the present fiscal year; ordinary expenditure was reduced by $19,000,000, notwithstanding this fact there is a gap between expenditures and ordinary revenue. Funds had to be found to meet the deficit, therefore new taxes had to be levied. The Canadian people expected that such measures would be taken, because the late administration had been extravagant during prosperous years, when our administrators of that date should have economized so as to prepare for rainy days, these years of crisis and depression. They were improvident and the people, to-day, are called upon to make sacrifices. We, therefore, note that 40 per cent of our federal budget will be absorbed in meeting the interest on loans contracted in the past.

All are interested to see that the finances of our government should be placed on a sound basis and to obtain such a result all must contribute their quota.

The burden will, however, not be felt by the ratepayers with little means; the large majority of our people will be affected by only one of the new taxes, namely, that on sugar. The latter has given rise to innumerable criticisms by our opponents; however, if we admit that the government needs further revenue, we must also recognize that all Canadians must do their bit. This tax will certainly have the good effect of inducing our people to consume a greater quantity of maple sugar. The producers of this commodity throughout the country and especially Quebec, will benefit by it. The same may be said for the producers of honey. There will be a greater demand and better prices for these products.

The farmers and exporters of live stock, bacon, ham, poultry, fish, tobacco, eggs, cheese and other dairy products, were glad to hear that the government would guarantee them $4.60 on each sale, amountng to £1 sterling, made to the United Kingdom, and, should the value of the pound sterling drop below this figure, in Canadian funds, the government will make up the difference. All farm products will benefit by this measure and the farming class will greatly benefit by this stablization of the exchange. I am pleased to note that the government is doing everything possible to help agriculture, the main industry of this country, the foundation of prosperity. As a representative of a constituency which is three-quarters rural, I laud such an act.

The unemployment relief work and the dole system forces the government to make considerable outlays. Nobody refuses to help those in distress, because of the lack of work caused by the world-wide crisis.

May I, sir, suggest to the house a plan which I think affords great advantages, it was adopted by the municipal authorities of Grand'Merè, in the county of Champlain, and has proved entirely satisfactory to everybody, while economizing considerable sums.

The town of Grand'Merè lies about 27 miles north of Three Rivers. This town owes its importance to the paper industries located there. It is at Grand'Merè that the Laurentide Company established one of the first paper mills in Quebec. As the electric power at their disposal was greater than what they required, the Shawinigan Water and Power company purchased the surplus.

Gradually, other industries attracted by the low cost of the electrical h.p. and labour, as well as the railway facilities, located themselves at Grand'Merè. There are now two boot and shoe factories, a hosiery manufacture, etc. A large portion of the population depended for a livelihood on the paper mills. When, throughout Canada, the paper industry became stagnant, owing to the present crisis and, especially, the over capitalization of this industry, a large number of workmen, in Grand'Merè, lost their jobs. Consequently, in 1931, the town decided to carry out certain public works to increase its importance as a manufacturing centre and thus give work to its unemployed.

Both the federal and provincial governments approved the scheme sponsored by the municipality and furnished a proportion of the funds to carry out this work. Thus heads of families were given work and nobody suffered from want. However, on May 1, 1932, the government notified the town authorities that no further funds were available to carry out their municipal works, and that they would have to depend on their own resources; promising, however, their cooperation in connection with any well planned project which the town might think fit to submit to them.

The question was an urgent one. The town authorities coped with it immediately, in a way which showed the energy and initiative which animated them. As early as the middle of May, the mayor and the municipal council had adopted a plan of action based on the following fundamental principles:

1. No dole would be distributed.

2. To heads of families, work would be given to keep them occupied and also to provide them with food and fuel for the next twelve months.

3. Where cases of distress occurred the town would place the necessary amounts in care of a charitable society already existing and independent of the municipal council, its duties would consist in ascertaining the needs of families, as regards food, clothing, etc., and supply them. This charitable society would provide goods, never any money, and the person receiving them would have to sign a receipt, as well as a promise to repay their value by working for the municipality when required, and at the rate of 35 cents an hour. Those thus assisted could not be looked upon as depending on charity but rather as borrowers who would reimburse such loans by their work.

The town authorities were of the opinion that unless they could find work for the unemployed the dole system would cost them about $5 per head, monthly, while with the scheme they had worked out the cost would amount to less than half that figure. The number of unemployed to be given relief amounted to about 400, and between 2,000 and 2,500, including their families and other dependents. After the government had assured themselves of the feasibility of the measures adopted, the municipality requested the necessary funds as provided by the unemployed relief act.

The municipality rented about 150 acres of uncultivated land. The ploughing and harrowing of the soil was done and the land was divided among heads of families, in patches of ¼ or ½ acre. Towards the end of May, a delegation of the municipal council went to Quebec to request the provincial government to approve the scheme. The government gladly acquiesced and supplied all the seed grain and the services of experts from the College of Agriculture in order to make a success of the scheme.

May I point out to the house that the municipality paid a very small amount, as rent, for these 150 acres of land, for, with the exception of a small corner, the land was uncultivated.

Tractors, ploughs and harrows immediately began work and land surveyors proceeded to measure out the plots. Following the advice of the provincial Department of Agriculture, the municipality purchased about 60 tons of fertilizer. Each owner of a plot of land was given six varieties of seed grain with instructions how to sow them. Each plot of land was numbered and bore the name of the owner. In June, 342 plots, representing 142 acres, had been sown under the supervision of three provincial experts. In one day alone 752 bags of potatoes were sown.

This scheme, heretofore, has cost the municipality about $5,000, this includes the land, fertilizers and labour. By these means, 342 families are provided for 12 months with vegetables. The municipality established regulations to prevent waste or the sale of the whole crop.

Most of these plots of land produced excellent crops. The owners and their families worked steadily. Cases of neglect were scarce and when they occurred those at fault were deprived of their patch of land and left to their own resources.

When the reaping time arrived, the municipality again cooperated by transporting the crops and storing them so as to distribute them when need be. This part of the scheme, therefore, provided a quantity of food.

The other part of the scheme refers to fuel which, in the past, was supplied free by the municipality. The provincial government and companies which owned timber limits conceded certain strips of land where unemployed were placed and lodged in summer camps. they, however, received no pay but food was provided. Sufficient wood, therefore, was cut for the winter. The municipality undertook to deliver the wood to the homes of the unemployed. The latter were, therefore, provided with sufficient vegetables and fuel for the winter.

The welfare bureau granted them with other necessities for which they gave a receipt and undertook to repay when required, by working for the municipality.

The town authorities are in a position to prove that had it not been for their well planned scheme, the government would have had to contribute about $5 per head, weekly, while their contribution now only amounts to about $2.50 per head.

The scheme is based on the principle that the unemployed must do their bit. Councils, experts and assistance provided give them the assurance that when they do their share they are not forsaken.

The promise given by the unemployed to repay by their work the assistance in kind they receive removes from the scheme this touch of charity which is so often disagreeable and demoralizing.

No doubt the scheme could not alone defray its expenses. It has however the merit of lightening the burden of municipalities and governments and encouraging the unemployed.

I would deem, sir, having done my duty towards my country, if the scheme adopted by the town of Grand'Mère, which I have submitted to the house, was of a nature to render the same services to other cities in Canada, and, thereby, saving large amounts to the treasury, while encouraging our workmen who are at present unemployed.

Mr. FRANK BOYES (East Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few observations in connection with the question now before the house, but before doing so I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the very admirable budget he presented to this house. I feel sure that this budget is being received with considerable favour throughout the dominion. I have the honour of representing a riding located in the western part of the province of Ontario, that of East Middlesex. The population of this riding is partly rural and partly urban, and I feel it to be my duty to represent the people of the rural districts as well as those of the urban centres. This duty has been a comparatively easy matter because of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) as well as the government have been thoughtful of both classes. My riding contains part of the city of London and the eastern half of the county of Middlesex, and I should like to join with the hon. member for London (Mr. White), who has represented that riding so ably for so many years, in bringing a couple of matters to the attention of this government.

The first matter to which I would direct attention is that of the post office in London. This building was erected a great many years ago when the city was possibly not more than thirty per cent of its present size. It is very much out of date. I know the present finances of the country will not permit the building of a new post office, but I ask the government to keep this matter in mind when finances improve.

Another matter which I wish through the house to bring to the attention of the acting president of the Canadian National Railways is the necessity for a new Canadian National Railway station at London. There is an old building there which was built many years ago. About two years ago the Canadian National elevated the railway tracks and built subways, and I believe the intention then was to proceed with the building of a new railway station, but financial conditions became worse and it was not proceeded with. I wish to bring to the attention of the Canadian National Railways the importance of having this railway station built as soon as finances will permit.

I wish to-night to deal more particularly with agriculture, but before doing so may I say that I have been most favourably impressed with the government's action in dealing with those in this country in urban territory. Shortly after this government came into power a special session was called for the purpose of granting money for the relief of unemployment. The sum of $20,000,000 was voted, and unemployment was adequately taken care of. We had a number of unemployed in the city of London but I believe that these men have been taken care of very well indeed, and that satisfaction has been given.

So far as the rural territory is concerned, the city of London being located in the centre of the riding of East Middlesex, it will readily be understood that a number of those engaged in farming operations in the vicinity raise a considerable quantity of vegetables. Protection has been given to the vegetable growers by this government, and in addition seasonal duties have been established which have been of some benefit to those engaged in the market gardening business.

Coming now more particularly to the tariffs which have been imposed by this government since it came into office, I wish to compare the present duties on a number of farm commodities with the tariffs previously in effect:

Comparison of general tariff rates of customs duty on certain farm products immediately preceding the coming into power of the present government and at the present time, March 23, 1933:

Products	Previous Rates	Present Rates
Live hogs	1½ cents per pound. With countervailing provision to effect that if any country imposes higher duty on live hogs from Canada equivalent rate applies.	3 cents per pound.
Cattle	25 per cent, about one to two cents per pound.	3 cents per pound.
Sheep and lambs	25 per cent, about one to two cents per pound.	$3 each.
Meats, fresh, n.o.p.—
(a) beef and veal	3½ cents per pound.	8 cents per pound.
(b) lamb and mutton	3½ cents per pound.	8 cents per pound.
Bacon, hams, shoulders and other pork	2 cents per pound.	5 cents per pound.
Eggs in the shell	3 cents per dozen.	10 cents per dozen.
Cheese	3 cents per pound.	7 cents per pound.
Butter	7 cents per pound.	14 cents per pound.
Peas	15 cents per bushel.	1 cent per pound.
Oats	10 cents per bushel.	16 cents per bushel.
Rye	10 cents per bushel.	15 cents per bushel.
Wheat	12 cents per bushel.	30 cents per bushel.
Hay	$2 per ton.	$5 per ton.
Potatoes	Free.	75 cents per 100 pounds.
Milk and cream	17½ per cent of value.	25 per cent of value.

The Import Duties Act of the United Kingdom, which became effective March 1, 1932, provided for free entry of empire dairy products into the markets of the United Kingdom, and for a ten per cent tariff on dairy products from non-empire countries. The preferences extended to Canada and to the other dominions under the Import Duties Act were to become inoperative after November 15, 1932, but in the meantime the agreements negotiated at the Imperial economic conference held at Ottawa during July and August were implemented by the parliaments of the United Kingdom and of the dominions.

[Mr. Boyes.]

The preferences on dairy products accorded to the dominions as a result of the agreements negotiated at the Imperial economic conference are in the form of free entry to products of empire origin, with duties applied to products of non-empire origin. The preferences to be enjoyed by Canadian dairy products in the markets of the United Kingdom are as follows:

Cheese, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Butter, 15 shillings per 112 pounds.
Condensed milk whole sweetened in addition to sugar duty, 5 shillings per 112 pounds.
Evaporated milk not sweetened, 6 shillings per 112 pounds.
Milk powder and other preserved milk not sweetened, 6 shillings per 112 pounds.

Since, as already pointed out, empire countries supply almost 88 per cent of the cheese imported by the United Kingdom, and practically all imports of the type of cheese produced in Canada, it was felt that a preference on cheese would not of itself be very effective in raising prices by reducing the quantities imported from non-empire countries. But since preferences were to be granted on other dairy products, a corresponding preference on cheese was necessary; otherwise non-empire countries exporting butter to the United Kingdom would in all probability divert milk from the manufacture of butter, to the manufacture of cheese, which would enter into competition in the markets of the United Kingdom with cheese from the dominions. The Canadian viewpoint was that no action should be taken which would place the cheese industry at a disadvantage.

If the desired result of such restriction of imports of hog products is obtained, cheese will for the reasons already mentioned advance in price. In this connection it might be noted that Canada is, for five years, guaranteed free entry into the United Kingdom for a maximum of 280,000,000 pounds per year of bacon and hams of good quality.

The budget also brings down another proposal which will be of great benefit to agriculture. After giving most careful consideration to the problem with which agriculture in this country is confronted in selling its products in countries with depreciated and fluctuating currencies, the government has decided to establish an agricultural stabilization fund, from which there will be paid to Canadian exporters to the British market on a certain range of agricultural commodities the difference between the price actually received and the pound sterling valued at $4.60. In other words, to the extent that the pound sterling falls below $4.60, the difference will be made up by the government. The agricultural stabilization fund will apply to the following commodities: animals, meats, including bacon and ham, poultry, fresh fish, canned fish, tobacco, cheese, milk products, canned fruits, canned vegetables, maple products, eggs and honey. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, a considerable increase in the preference afforded by the Imperial economic conference, with the stabilization of the pound at $4.60. Hon. members will note especially the protection afforded in connection with butter. Canada is receiving considerable benefit from that protection. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Pickel) has made some comparisons of prices before and after this government came into power. I shall attempt to enlarge upon his statement.

In 1929 the average price of butter in Montreal was 39¼ cents; in the same year the average price in New York was 45 cents. On April 3 of this year the price in Montreal was 24¼ cents, while that in New York was 17¾ cents. I ask hon. members to note the difference between prices when the former government was in power and those now obtaining. While in 1929 the Montreal price was 5¾ cents less than that obtaining in New York, on April 3 of this year it was 6½ cents higher than the New York price, making a difference in that time of 12¼ cents a pound. To-day New Zealand butter is selling at 68 shillings per 112 pounds which, at $4.11 to the pound sterling, is equivalent to 12·48 cents per pound. On this basis Canadian butter for export would be worth about 11 cents delivered at Montreal. It is quite evident that we are receiving a considerable benefit through the protection afforded on butter. If conditions were the same as those obtaining prior to the time this government came into power, I am quite sure we would not be receiving 11 or 12 cents per pound. It would be quite an easy matter for New Zealand to send butter into Canada and sell it as cheaply if not cheaper than they sell it in England. I am quite sure they would be willing to sell butter in Canada to-day at 11 cents per pound.

Canada is receiving a preference on her cheese in the English market. On April 1, 1933, with the pound at $4.60, New Zealand whites were selling at from 39 to 40 shillings per hundredweight, which means 7·15 to 7·34 cents per pound. New Zealand coloureds were selling at 47 shillings per hundredweight, or 8·62 cents per pound. Canadian cheese was selling at from 60 to 66 shillings per hundredweight, or 11·01 to 12·11 cents per pound. It is possible that within a short time cheese may increase in production so that we shall have some for export. In that event the price will not be influenced by local trade which we enjoy to-day. Owing to the protection afforded by this government cheese is receiving a benefit of seven cents per pound. Were it not for this protection I feel confident New Zealand would be exporting cheese to Canada, and our price would be less than it is. As I have said, it is possible that we may soon be required to export cheese to England, and I should like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, some of the advantages we will receive when we enter the export market. I shall place on Hansard some figures showing a percentage increase in price due to stabilization of the pound at $4.60.

Exchange at	Increase per pound with cheese at 10 cents
$3.60	2.77
3.70	2.43
3.90	1.79
4.00	1.50
4.10	1.22

I believe these figures show a considerable benefit and I am certain that those who produce the milk for the production of cheese will receive this budget with great favour. We are producing a very large quantity of cheese in Canada to-day. In 1930 we exported 74,260,700 pounds of cheese, whereas in 1932 we exported 83,813,900. Hon. members will see that the benefits received on that quantity of cheese will be considerable.

I should like to say a few words with regard to the grading of cheese in Canada. A few years ago the federal government appointed a staff of cheese graders to grade cheese for export. I give the government of that day credit for arranging for that grading. Our cheese enjoys a good reputation in England to-day. Hon. members who have spoken before me have stated that we are receiving a preference on our cheese. The statement was made a few days ago by the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) that the previous government should receive credit for the premium paid on Canadian cheese in England. I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman, because even though the former government did establish the grading system, the actual inspection has been carried out by the provinces. If the grading of cheese ensured a premium on Canadian cheese in the English market, I cannot understand why the former Minister of Agriculture would favour one province and not another in that connection. I can say that the grade of cheese in the province of Ontario and Quebec, so far as No. 1 quality is concerned, is not equal. In the province of Quebec the average percentage of cheese scoring No. 1 and special in 1931 was 89·41, and in 1932 the average percentage scoring No. 1 and special was 86·32. This is a very good showing indeed in the province of Quebec, but I wish to point out to the former Minister of Agriculture that the inspection as carried out in the province of Ontario has been a little more effective than it has been in Quebec—

Mr. FAFARD: Will the hon. member permit a question? Is my friend aware that Quebec took first prize at Toronto exhibition last year?

Mr. BOYES: I was not aware of it. It will have to be proven to me that it is the case. If it is I shall be glad to note the improvement. But in Ontario in 1932 the average score of No. 1 and special cheese was 96·38 while in the province of Quebec it was 86·32. I am not wishing in any way to discredit the province of Quebec; even a score of 86·32 is good, yet in Ontario with their special system of instruction they were able to attain an average score of No. 1 and special of 96·38. Further, sir, I wish to draw to your attention the fact that the province of Ontario is divided into different sections—the northern, eastern, western, and central, and in the northern section the average score was 88·42; in the eastern section, 95·29; in the central section, 96·87, and in the western section, 98·37. I wish to give credit where credit is due, that is to the men in the western part of Ontario—they have done excellent work, making a very fine article of cheese grading an average score of 98·37. In the county I have the honour to represent, the county of Middlesex, the average score of No. 1 and special was 99·1. This will show that those in that county are doing very excellent work.

As I stated before, we are receiving a premium for our cheese in England. The government of Ontario has tried to do its duty in seeing that the finest possible article is produced. The province of Quebec is also making an excellent article, but I do feel that the instruction work in the province of Quebec might be a little more effectively carried on and the percentage of high grades increased up to what it is in Ontario, and then we might receive in the old country a greater premium on our cheese than we do at the present time. I hope this will be carried into effect in the near future, as it will result in a great deal of benefit.

In conclusion I wish to say that I think this budget is being received with great favour in the Dominion of Canada, and especially in the province of Ontario. The agricultural population, I am sure, thank the Minister of Finance for the benefits to the agriculturists. I have heard quite a number who are opposed to me in politics commend this budget and express themselves as very favourable to this feature. If hon. members to your left, Mr. Speaker, were not so strongly influenced by their politics, if they expressed their honest sentiments, they would join with us on this side of the house in the belief that we have in the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett the right man in the right place.

On motion of Mr. MacInnis the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Guthrie the house adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

Tuesday, April 11, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER

LEGISLATION TO GIVE EXTRATERRITORIAL OPERATION TO ACTS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 74, respecting extraterritorial operation of acts of the parliament of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for the unanimous consent of the house for the purpose of introducing a bill to give extraterritorial operation to the acts of the parliament of Canada pursuant to the statute of Westminster. If I might have the opportunity now of introducing it, I should be obliged.

In so doing I should like to mention that this particular bill does not refer to section 1024 of the criminal code. The law officers of the Department of Justice have advised me that it would be better to add an express clause to Bill No. 71, which is now before the house for the reenactment of section 1024 of the criminal code. I mention this matter because the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) has a similar proposal in a bill which he introduced only a few days ago.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

VISIT OF JAPANESE WARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a week ago to-day the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) asked a question with respect to the visit of a Japanese warship to Vancouver. The question was asked without notice, and I gave him a very unilluminating answer. I proposed later to give him a detailed answer, but he was not in his place. As he has not been in his place for the last few days perhaps I should now answer his question, because there has been a great deal of comment in the newspapers for some weeks with respect to this visit and its so-called imperialistic tendencies.

The hon. member's inquiry presumably relates to the visit of a Japanese training squadron, consisting of two cruisers. In October, 1932, the Japanese minister inquired from the chief of the naval staff as to whether there would be any objection to the proposed visit on the part of the Canadian government. The chief of the naval staff was authorized to advise the Japanese minister unofficially, there would be no objection to the visit of this training squadron and, on the twenty-first January, 1933, a formal request for such consent was addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, by the Japanese minister. The formal consent of the Canadian government was communicated to the Japanese minister by note dated February 2, 1933.

Arrangements were made by the interested departments of the Canadian government for harbour and landing facilities, police, customs, immigration and other details, and the necessary information was communicated to the appropriate authorities of the government of British Columbia.

Commander T. Seno of the Japanese navy, and the Japanese consul at Vancouver are, with the authority of the Japanese minister, acting as liaison officers between the local Canadian officials and the Japanese squadron.

The Japanese training squadron has visited both Canada and the United States frequently, in the course of the last ten years. The giving of the consent of the Canadian government to this visit, and the arrangements for courteous treatment, are in accordance with international custom and practice.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health if he intends to introduce legislation during the session to amend the Pension Act, and if so, when?

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I desire to say a bill will be brought down within a few days.

GRAIN COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) asked a question regarding the tabling of the annual report of the Board of Grain Commissioners for the crop year ending July 31, 1932. I will table now two unrevised copies. It will be recognized by hon. members that this report, when sent to the printers, must be sent out to the Board of Grain Commissioners for revision, and it is now in their hands being revised. So while I table the two reports at this time it is understood they are unrevised, and there may be some typographical errors in them.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

EMPLOYMENT OF UNMARRIED MEN AT VALCARTIER CAMP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) whether the report is true that thousands of unmarried unemployed will be given work at Valcartier camp, and if so what sort of useful work will they be required to do.

Hon. D. M. SUTHERLAND (Minister of National Defence). Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. Probably there will be about a thousand single, homeless, unemployed men employed at Valcartier camp. Largely they will be drawn from Montreal, because there is a necessity of getting some men out of that city. A good deal of work can be done by way of clearing roads. Sooner or later probably some new buildings will have to be erected there to replace the present arsenal at Quebec. However, that is not in immediate contemplation. At present certain preliminary work such as levelling the ground and work of that kind will be done. I have no doubt the hon. member will be quite pleased with the work done at that point.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What salary basis will apply?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Twenty cents a day is the allowance paid to the men.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is that the same allowance that is given throughout Canada?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

[Mr. MacLaren.]

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Monday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Lucas.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, like many speakers who have preceded me in this debate I find much in the budget I do not like. However I am going to refer particularly to only one item, namely that which affects those civil servants who are in receipt of pensions for war services. I am not going to say very much concerning this item because I have been given to understand that the government have been discussing the matter and will probably revise the proposal as it appears in the budget. I hope they will do so, because I can see no justification for the government dealing differently with civil servants in receipt of a pension than with civil servants in receipt of any other income. I sincerely hope that they will not proceed with this item as stated in the budget.

However, I cannot say that I am particularly disappointed in the budget, as I do not see that there is much that the government can do as long as they continue along the lines they are following at the present time. It seems to me that there are two courses open to the people and governments of the world at this time. The first is to make capitalism function, that is to make it provide the people with the means of life. I believe governments are doing that to the best of their ability, though without very much success. The other course, and I think a much better one, would be to realize that we have reached a stage in our industrial development where the policies of the past no longer suffice and that we must adapt ourselves to the new conditions that almost everyone to-day admits are here. However, I do not expect that the government for some time will take that position. Until they do I see no alternative except a continuance of budgets such as we have at this time, each worse than the one preceding it. The government seem to have abandoned every effort to do anything in a constructive way. The hopeful declarations and optimism of 1930 seem to have evaporated into the mists of hopelessness and despair of 1933. But I would like to point out that this is the same Dominion of Canada which the Prime Minister so eloquently and fervently eulogized during the election campaign of 1930. The natural resources of that time are still here, the soil is just as fertile, the mechanical means of production are still here in all their former efficiency, and the human element is still with us as capable and as willing as it was in 1930. Yet hopelessness, starvation and misery stalk the land, while the government stands impotently by hoping that something will turn up that will get us out of our difficulties.

I referred to the optimism of the Conservative party in 1930. Let me quote from a speech by the Prime Minister at that time—and may I say that I am not at this time quoting it to draw attention to promises made, I am quoting it to show why it is that he cannot do anything, no matter how much he may want to, unless he breaks the bounds within which he formerly worked and which restrict him at the present time. This is from a speech made at Renfrew, Ontario, on July 16, 1930, reported in the Ottawa Journal of July 18. He said:

> There is no excuse for unemployment in our country. . . . There is no excuse for poverty. We have the people and the resources. We have the capital, but capital will not allow itself to be used unless there is stability and certainty.

I wish to read this again as I am going to draw from it a conclusion different from that which was drawn, I believe, when I heard it quoted in the house once before.

> There is no excuse for unemployment in our country. . . . There is no excuse for poverty. We have the people and the resources. We have the capital, but capital will not allow itself to be used unless there is stability and certainty.

Stability and certainty of what? What is capital used for? Used to make a profit. And unless there is stability and certainty of profit, the owners of capital will not allow it to be used. Now note the assertion, "We" have the people, "we" have the capital. The people and the capital are put in the same category, and the "we" who have the capital are the "we" who have the people. And the "we" who have the capital and the people will not allow the capital and the people to come together unless there is certainty of profit, and stability of profit. There you have the reason why the Prime Minister did not and cannot end unemployment no matter how much he wants to. It is because the capitalist class of this country will not allow him to. World development has come to the stage where it is no longer possible to invest with profit or to make a profit, consequently it is impossible to put an end to unemployment.

Unemployment is not a new thing. Unemployment we have always had with us since we have had capitalism. As a matter of fact it is absolutely essential to capitalism, and it will be with us as long as we have capitalism. Every time profits are created unemployment is also created, because profits are made out of the surplus values that the working class produce, the surplus value over and above what they receive in wages; and because over a cycle of time these surplus values accumulate to such an extent that industry has to slow down in order that they may be consumed when production is not taking place. Now I maintain that there you have the reason why the government could not end unemployment, granting of course that the will to end it was there.

Let me put alongside of that statement by the Prime Minister the following statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) in his budget speech of March 21, as reported at page 3209 of Hansard. In referring to the banks he said:

> The annual bank statements which have been issued recently indicate an exceptionally strong and liquid position, while the chief concern of our banks would appear to be the difficulty of finding satisfactory outlets for the investment of their surplus reserves.

"Satisfactory outlets for the investment of their surplus reserves" means investments giving a profitable return on capital. Because these satisfactory outlets cannot be found the industry of the country languishes, regardless of the fact that people are in need. There again you have the nature of capital and its function under the present system; that is to produce profits for its owners.

To substantiate further my contention as to the nature of capital, let me refer to a speech made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) before the Association of Automotive Engineers in the city of Toronto on October 5th last year. According to the report, Mr. Stevens asked the engineers if when considering the introduction of certain progressive machines, they had thought of the problem they were laying on the doorstep of the government of their country when machines displaced thousands of workingmen. It was that vital problem they should consider, he said. I maintain it is not the automotive engineers only who should consider that vital problem, it is the government of the day, if they are going to allow the owners of machinery to use that machinery only when profits can be made. He said:

> We are choked with goods, yet it is not a matter of too much goods but it is the distributive system that is at fault.

The report goes on:

> Consideration of the last three years had led him . . . to the strange fact that the so-called depression was a depression resulting from plenty. Plentiful supply of goods was the chief embarrassment.

There you have the nature of capital, producing goods not to supply human needs but to be sold, and if the would-be purchasers have not the price the goods are not sold. Let me say that the goods produced in a country never can be consumed within that country under capitalism, because under our method of production and distribution the purchasing power is not provided. Now I will quote from the report of the speech of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) before the Canadian section of the American Water Works Association on March 23 of this year:

> "This crisis of abundance," the speaker continued, "made us wonder what was wrong with our system when we could erect so efficient a machine for production and yet have such suffering."

We need not wonder why we have such suffering; the wonder would be if we did not have it, considering the purpose for which the machine is made and the way it operates. Then the minister went on:

> He was certain that there was no one remedy; it could be solved by no one country, nor a single leader. The main cause for the whole situation, he thought, was the war, which had left in its wake debts, the Russian experiment, nationalism and restriction of trade, lowering of commodity prices and unemployment.

The war is responsible for a great many things, but like everything else the war too had a cause. May I say just here that unemployment to-day is caused by the same thing that brought about the war of 1914, that is, capitalism and the impossibility of finding markets for the production of the workers of the world. That was the cause of the war; that has been the cause of the unemployment and distress which we find all over the world to-day. That a war of destruction should cause a crisis of abundance is something beyond my comprehension, and I should like the Minister of Railways to explain it.

Then yesterday we heard the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett), who is not in his seat at the moment. In concluding his remarks he made a very peculiar statement, bearing in mind that we have an embarrassment of plenty and a crisis of abundance. He said:

> If our people can be made to realize that services must be paid for, and that the people must pay for them, they may be willing to yield up in aid of economy a good many of the excellent services which are being lavished upon them at the present time, not because those services are not well administered, not because they do not add much to the ease of life, but because at the present time the Canadian people cannot afford them.

Surely we have a confusion of thought here. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) says that a plentiful supply of goods is the chief embarrassment; the Minister of Railways and Canals tells us this is a crisis of abundance, and the hon. member for Stanstead comes along and says we must give up many of the things we now enjoy because we cannot afford them. The hon. member tells us we must economize. What are we to economize on? I should like to ask. Every time we economize—and we have been doing nothing else for the last three years—we further accentuate and add to our difficulties. Are we to economize on wheat and other food stuffs when we have more in the Dominion of Canada than we know what to do with, and when they will have to be destroyed if they are not consumed? Shall we economize in our use of clothing when there is a super-abundance of the raw material out of which our clothing is made and of the machines and workers to make it? Must we economize in the use of our railways or our hydro electric power? Shall we economize in our education, in our sanitary improvements or the thousand and one things which were not known to our fathers but which have resulted from the accumulated labour and knowledge of countless generations? Of course not. We should not economize; we should find ways and means of breaking away from the dead weight of privilege and monopoly which exacts its tribute from every productive effort. Let us hope the viewpoint held by the hon. member for Stanstead is not shared by very many people in the Dominion of Canada to-day. I should like to commend to the hon. gentleman a statement made by a man who has been quoted in this house very frequently. For that reason I have a little hesitancy in reading this quotation, but I believe it is so much to the point at present that the time of the house will be well spent in listening to it. I quote from Sir Arthur Salter's book Recovery. In the epilogue we find the following:

Before the vast magnitude of the tasks ahead, man's spirit has for the moment faltered and his vision contracted. The public mood is apprehensive where it should be bold, and defensive where broad and generous policy is most required. Everywhere men fly to new tariffs and restrictions, to nationalist policies, domestic currencies, parochial purchasing and personal hoarding—like frightened rabbits each scurrying to his own burrow. Surely it is for the moment only. Which country of us has not, but a few years since, shown the resources we now require of courage, of personal devotion, of industrial and financial leadership, of public direction, in a need no greater and in a cause less worthy? We are, if we could but grapple with our fate, the most fortunate of the generations of men. In a single life time science has given us more power over nature, and extended further the range of vision of the exploring mind, than in all recorded history. Now, and now only, our material resources, technical knowledge, and industrial skill, are enough to afford to every man of the world's teeming population physical comfort, adequate leisure, and access to everything in our rich heritage of civilization that he has the personal quality to enjoy. We need but the regulative wisdom to control our specialized activities and the thrusting energy of sectional and selfish interests. To face the troubles that beset us, this apprehensive and defensive world needs now above all the qualities it seems for the moment to have abandoned—courage and magnanimity.

I would commend this quotation to the attention of the hon. member for Stanstead; I should like him to ponder it and see if there is any reason in the world why we should economize when we have so much material upon which to draw.

The only hopeful aspect of the world situation, according to the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), is the world economic conference which is to meet in London some time in the future. Even here the minister admits that the success of the conference rests on the solution of many of the problems which now are being discussed, such as reparations, the settlement of war debts, the disarmament question, and so on. If the success of the disarmament conference however, is any criterion of the success of the world economic conference, I believe we shall have to look elsewhere for a way out of our difficulties. It seems to me that only an incorrigible optimist could look hopefully for any successful result from the world economic conference. Cooperation, like charity, should begin at home, and before we look to London for cooperation with the nations of the world we should look for ways and means of removing the obstacles to cooperation here. It seems to me that that would be a Canada first policy worthy of the effort. However, for this government, considering their attitude since assuming office in 1930, to look beyond Canada is a hopeful indication. In 1930 we had the Canada first policy, and in 1932 we had an empire policy. We were then told that we were going to have the rest of the world pay tribute to us. Now it seems to me that if we are to have international cooperation we cannot bring it about so long as we exact tribute from the rest of the world; we cannot go to the world economic conference in that spirit. We must go there with open arms, willing to cooperate.

I have often wondered how much the Canada first policy depended on the fact that there was a Labour party in office in Great Britain in 1930. The events of the time would lead one to believe that our imperialists were preparing to cut the painter in case the Labour party in Great Britain took steps to end capitalist exploitation. In any event, we found the great empire party, that is to say the empire party of former times, coming out for the first time with the Canada first policy as the battle cry. Then we had the special session of parliament when imperial preferences were reduced; that is, the tariffs were increased against Great Britain. The Prime Minister then went over to Great Britain to attend the Imperial economic conference, where he made his proposals which were so very cleverly designated by the Right Hon. J. H. Thomas. Of course, we had also our High Commissioner, the Hon. Howard Ferguson, stating that he accepted the position in order to save Great Britain from the socialists.

However, 1930 passed on, and with it went the hope of settling our problems through the Canada first route. In 1931 there was an election in the motherland and Great Britain was made safe for capitalism once more; the empire was saved for capitalism. Then our Prime Minister went across to the old land, but this time he left his bluster on this side of the Atlantic. Then came 1932 and all our hopes were based on the imperial conference; we were told there would be wonderful results. Some of us were rather doubtful of governments being able to increase trade without increasing purchasing power, and the trade returns would seem to indicate that our fears were justified. The imperial conference having proved as fruitless as the Canada first policy, we are now asked to look forward to a world economic conference to settle the world's difficulties. Let me warn this house and the people of Canada that there can be no amelioration of economic conditions, to say nothing of ending those conditions, so long as production and distribution remain on a profit-making basis. The capitalist world has one more chance to stave off the inevitable collapse in the event of their continuing capitalism. When the failure of the world economic conference is at last admitted, I have no doubt that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald will say that it was not a complete failure, inasmuch as it had paved the way for future conversations which might lead to an interplanetary conference. In my opinion that is the only hope of the capitalist world.

There are two things absolutely essential to capitalism: first, foreign markets; and secondly, an ever-expanding field for new capital investment. These are not to be found anywhere on earth to-day, so that if we are to continue capitalism we must find them somewhere else. Each country is steadily becoming more capable of supplying its own needs, and there is no great profit in supplying the home market, except in the matter of capital goods. Every move made by nations as well as by individual employers to improve conditions only makes conditions worse.

I wish to refer to the speech of the hon. member of Athabaska (Mr. Davies) on April 4, and if I differ from some of his conclusions it is because we approach these questions from different angles rather than because I wish to find fault. The hon. member referred to the fact that the export trade of the United States was only ten per cent of her total trade, and then he said it was obvious that the greatest market for that country was the home market. Then he made this statement:

> It would seem therefore safe to draw the conclusion that the only reason the productivity of that country cannot be taken advantage of by those who wish to do so is that the means of exchange has broken down. She has an antedeluvian system of exchange.

Let me state most emphatically that in my opinion the economic distress in the United States, in this country or in any other country I know of is not due to a breakdown in the monetary exchange system, because that system is the same to-day as it has always been. And for a time the present monetary exchange system functioned. Countries were able to carry on. They were able to carry on for two reasons: there was a foreign market for their goods, and there was a field for the investment of surplus profit. These factors are missing to-day, and that is why the monetary situation is coming so much to the fore. It would be just as logical to say that the fluctuations of the mercury in the thermometer are responsible for the fluctuations of the weather as to say that the fluctuations of the monetary system are responsible for economic conditions. Economic conditions in this and every other capitalist country are as they are because of the social relationship of the people of the country to the means of production; and this will continue to be so just so long as that relationship exists. I do not say that nothing can be accomplished by monetary reform or by a change in the monetary system, but I do say that it would be only temporary; and other things remaining as they are, we should soon be back in the difficulties in which we are at the present time.

The hon. member for Athabaska asked a question as to what the purpose of government is, and he answered his own question. He said: "The purpose of government should be to create the ideal state." That leaves a lot of explaining to be done. I would quote someone who did a great deal for his country in his time; I would give his view as to what the purpose of government should be. He said:

> To secure to each labourer the whole product of his labour, or as nearly as possible, is a worthy object of any good government.

I thoroughly agree with that definition of the purpose of government, and lest someone may think that this statement is from Karl Marx, from Frederick Engels or from some other wild socialist, let me say that its author was Abraham Lincoln. The hon. member for Athabaska then goes on to say:

> How do my hon. friends in the southeast corner of the house view the situation? They look at it in this way: Here is a man who has been working in a boot factory and is now out of work; there are others who need boots. Here is the plant. They say: "This whole thing is a dirty mess. Let the government take it over." I think that is what socialism is.

And he says further:

> —unless the real causes are got at, would we have anything more than something in the nature of a glorious scheme of national relief?

Even that would be better than what we have now because we have not a glorious scheme of national relief even though we need it. My hon. friend's understanding of socialism seems to be very elementary. If he had read any socialist literature he would have found out that the first thing a socialist goes after is the cause. We say most emphatically that the economic distress prevailing to-day is not due to lack of money, but to the fact that production is carried on not to supply human needs but to make profits for owners of capital. That is the cause and the only cause. Profits can be made only when a market can be found for the surplus values produced by the workers. The owners of capital in every country are using every means possible to increase the volume of their production in relation to the wages paid. When production is carried on under such a system or under such conditions, the market is bound to become glutted with commodities. The issuing of more currency cannot do anything towards solving the problem unless the workers in industry are to receive, through higher wages, a relatively greater share of the products of their labour than they are receiving at the present time. But here is the rub: If you increase the workers' share the owners' share must be lessened. The crux of the whole situation is to decide how the products of industry shall be divided. Nationally there is the struggle between an owning and a non-owning class. The international aspect of the question is the struggle which is taking place among the nations of the world to find a market for those commodities which the working class in each country need and could consume. But they cannot consume because they have not the price with which to buy. They have not the price with which to buy because in the process of production they have received as a return for their labour a value less than the value they have produced. The result is that because of the smallness of their wages, the workers cannot consume the goods produced. On the other hand, the owning class cannot consume the surplus because of its magnitude and because of their limited capacity to consume.

If the hon. member for Athabaska wants to know just what is the purpose of government, let me refer him to what his own leader said during the election campaign of 1930. Speaking in Montreal on June 26, he is reported in the Montreal Gazette of June 27 as follows:

> Unemployment has become a national problem in Canada. It is the direct result of nine years of unsound economic policies applied by Liberals under Premier King, and the King government cannot escape the charge of having failed to realize that the first duty of the Canadian government is to provide work for Canadians.

Prior to assuming office in 1930, the Prime Minister insisted that it was not only the duty of the government to provide work but it was the first duty of the government to provide work for Canadians. But ever since he made that statement, the leader of the government has taken the position that the first duty of the Canadian government is to provide interest for the bondholders. As further information for the hon. member for Athabaska, I would quote the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). Speaking on the relief act on February 24, 1933, he said:

> But, if a man is able and willing to work and cannot get work or find work, it seems to me that it is the state's business to endeavour to provide work for him and, if necessity demand it to look after him until he does get work. Anything short of that signified some malorganization of the affairs of the state.

I agree with both right hon. gentlemen that it is the first duty of any government to look after the welfare of its people. However, it is significant to note that both these statements were made when the respective gentlemen were on the outside looking in. I insist that the individual has the right to demand of the state every assistance that the state can give, and that the state has the right to demand and receive similar assistance from the individual. The function of a state is determined by the dominant factor or class in the state. The function of a capitalist state is to facilitate the exploitation of the working class and its government must of necessity act as the executive of its owning class. That is what we have in Canada at the present time and that is why we find so much emphasis being laid upon maintaining our "contractual obligations;" that is why we find our police forces being increased while relief expenditures are decreased. The function of a socialist state is to abolish class society, to do away with class interests and class antagonism. Its function is to foster co-operation and to organize the productive forces of the country in order to maintain a standard of living based upon the natural resources of the country, the efficiency of the mechanical means of production, the technical knowledge, understanding and willingness of the people to work.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, before forgetting to do so, I should like to compliment my fellow Nova Scotian the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the splendid presentation he made when delivering his budget speech. While I cannot equal the eloquence of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall), I none the less agree fully with his opening remarks of yesterday when referring to the finance minister. By virtue of the right of every member of parliament to ask for the righting of grievances before granting supply, I desire to say that I dissent from some of the proposals made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) in connection with the penitentiaries appropriations for the present fiscal year. So far this session I have not burdened Hansard or bothered the house with any lengthy discussion and I now crave indulgence if my remarks seem to be unduly personal. As I proceed, I fancy that the object I have in mind will become apparent.

After eight and forty years of continuous work, I planned a holiday a few years ago. I planned to visit portions of the old country and Europe which I have not seen since sometime before the war and in carrying out that plan I sailed from Montreal on May 6, 1921, making my thirty-third trip across the Atlantic on one of the new Canadian mercantile marine boats, the S.S. Canadian Commander. The passage was a slow one, occupying a fortnight. As I had nothing to do I mingled with the members of the crew, among whom was a young chap named Harris. At one time this man had been a member of the crew of one of the Thompson liners running out of Saint John, New Brunswick. I should like to relate his experience as an illustration of the prison discipline in the old country and what it means to those who have had the opportunity, the privilege or the misfortune—it depends upon how you look at it—to experience it. Upon reaching Liverpool young Harris deserted, got into bad company and undertook to do some house-breaking. Later on he was apprehended by the police, convicted and sentenced to prison at hard labour. If my memory serves me right, he was sent to Wormwood Scrubbs. His experience there, illustrating what hard labour in a British prison means, is, in substance, as follows: For some weeks after sentence he was given daily alternating periods of exercise on the treadmill, followed with an equal period of picking oakum. I fancy none of my hon. friends have had much experience in picking oakum. This means teasing by hand old, hard, tarred hemp rope into its original fibre which is afterwards used for the caulking of ships. The treadmill is built inside a wooden tank which is connected with a water main. The treadmill is geared to a pump, and while the treadmill continues to work, it pumps the water out as fast as it comes in. If the man ceases to pump, the water rises and drowns him out; he has either to pump or drown. After forty minutes of this type of exercise, he is given forty minutes picking oakum, the idea being that a period of forty minutes on the treadmill is about as much as he can stand physically.

He had five hours of this exercise in the forenoon. Then he got some dinner or lunch composed of thin skillet and black bread which is a mixture of whole wheat and barley. He got just sufficient of this to maintain life and a little more and at the end of six weeks he had lost forty pounds in weight. His narrative in regard to the scarcity of food is very interesting. He said that every crumb that could be salvaged in any way or stolen from somebody else, was utilized. If a crumb fell on the stone floor, he stooped down, moistened his finger, picked up the crumb and was glad to get it. While on the treadmill the operatives fell under the observation of the prison doctor who watched them closely, and in the case of near collapse varied somewhat the forty minute treadmill period. In short, this man was worked to the limit and fed pretty close to the point of starvation. After he got through, he took very good care, so far as the future was concerned, not to enter again a British prison or risk another period of penal servitude. In this connection it occurs to me that if some of our young bucks that are to-day occupants of St. Vincent de Paul, Portsmouth or Dorchester, had six months' similar experience, this might induce them to give some thought as to the advantages of leading a regular rather than an irregular life, and our prisons would be less popular than they apparently are at present with a considerable section of our criminal class. What is a particularly serious consideration is the startling increase of crime among the young men of this country, practically all of whom are armed, as the prison commitments of recent years so clearly show.

In this connection it might be interesting to compare the crime statistics of Great Britain with those of our southern neighbours or even our own Canadian criminal record during the past decade. It might also be interesting to note that during the past ten years practically one-half of the prisons of Great Britain have been closed, due to lack of occupation. Contrast this with the great increase in the record of prison occupation in Canada over the same period.

The prime object of our penal system is the protection of society. To this end, the main thing is to have punishment of crime, first, sure; second, swift, and, third, most unpleasant for the criminal. In dealing with the matter of prison discipline, we should be neither vindictive nor sentimental. In Canada to-day too much sentiment is wasted on self-determined criminals. Men convicted of crime should not be regarded as other than what they are—enemies of society.

Penitentiaries are penal institutions and those incarcerated therein are there as a punishment for crime committed in defiance of law, order and the general welfare of society. All such enemies of society, while undergoing prison sentences, should be deprived of all luxuries and given only a minimum of wholesome food with reasonable periods for rest after toil. Allowances of tobacco or any luxuries I would not permit, and be it known that during the year ended March, 1932, there was spent in Canadian prisons for pipes, tobacco, and so forth, nearly $18,000; for dental services for the same inmates, nearly $10,000, and for medical and hospital treatment over $37,000. These sums, particularly that spent on tobacco and cigarettes, will, I take it, this year be much larger and, in all, for luxuries and hospitalization, will probably exceed $75,000. For library and literature last year the cost was $6,000. Notwithstanding these expenditures, some of our decayed clerical morons and antique virgins of Toronto and some other places are not yet satisfied and have expressed the view that greater luxuries should be available for these gentry. As regards physical punishment, this, under certain conditions is not only justifiable, but necessary, and is the only effective punishment for some types of offenders. For rape and robbery with violence I would prescribe the old sea-going cat-o'-nine tails, a good stiff application of say, thirty lashes, immediately after entering prison to be followed by a similar quarterly application, lest they forget.

During January last, I received a letter from one, Reverend Phillip Jones, M.A., D.D., of Toronto, enclosing some printed matter, one an appeal from the Social Service Council of Canada, Toronto, and another from the Canadian Prisoners' Welfare Association of Montreal, each covering several typed pages of advice tendered to the Minister of Justice. The opinions therein expressed and the advice so freely offered are an indication of the type of officious, meddlesome idlers who suggest that our prison population should be given suitable recreation, with payment while in prison, and whose well-being should be the subject of careful consideration by a special board to be composed of a judge, a lawyer, a physician, a clergyman, an industrialist, a social worker, a college professor and an editor, the duties of the latter, I presume, to be to broadcast the views and wishes of the prisoners. According to these gentry, corporal punishment is discredited, instead of which, prisoners should have the finer influences of literature and music, and the physical side of the inmates should be catered to by healthy exercise such as football, baseball and similar forms of recreation. Furthermore, in the achievement of such progressive and up to date treatment the prison authorities should have the aid of unofficial workers, and the prisoners' recreation should be in accordance with the national ideas of sport. Those, Mr. Speaker, are the ideas held by these gentlemen in Toronto, including the Rev. Phillip Jones, M.A. D.D., and so on. With practically all of such suggestions I am in distinct disagreement, and have some doubts as to the mental condition and capacity of those making them.

Referring to the new penal regulations as published in the Montreal Star of December 30 last, may I say that in my judgment the greater consideration there shown for prisoners is an entirely mistaken departure in prison policy. Men convicted of serious crimes should not be regarded otherwise than what they are, namely, enemies of society. Our penitentiaries are penal institutions, and those incarcerated therein are there as punishment for crimes and misdemeanours committed in defiance of Canadian law, order and good behaviour. In view of this, in my judgment these men should be deprived of all luxuries and comforts and given only sufficient wholesome food and reasonable periods of rest.

Referring to the Ticket of Leave Act and the matter of the release of prisoners who have served but a portion of the sentences originally imposed upon them—of which, so far as I am aware the last outstanding examples are those of that precious pair of scoundrels, Mowat and MacGillivray—may I say that the idea that buccaneers of that type should escape with little better than one-half of what, in popular judgment, was certainly not an excessive prison sentence, is provocative of indignation particularly on the part of those who were cognizant of and suffered from the operations of these brokers. The minister is not in his seat, but I should like to say that I do not wish my fellow members to suppose that I hold him personally responsible for the release of those gentlemen. Unfortunately, the law was, and still is, such that he had no choice in the matter.

A reasonable diminution in the time to be served by prisoners, based on good conduct, is not objectionable. I submit however that such diminution should not exceed thirty days per year of service. In other words a man given a ten-year sentence, if his conduct were uniformly good throughout the period of incarceration, might be entitled to 300 days good conduct rebate, and given his liberty after having served say, nine out of a ten year sentence. Such treatment would in my judgment be reasonable, and I submit the present law in connection therewith should be amended.

That practically exhausts what I have to say concerning the treatment of prisoners, tickets of leave and discipline. I know of no possibility of reforming criminals except by punishment. The eternal law is that punishment of some kind must follow a crime, that the way of the transgressor is hard is true and as it should be, and the sooner these gentry understand it and the sooner it is drilled into them by practically the only way in which they can be reached, namely by physical discomfort, the quicker we will be rid of that herd of young men who to-day are occupying our prisons in practically double the number of a few years ago.

Another interesting point in connection with prisoners is that of their ages. We are told that the world is upset, due to the world war. But if we look over the prison records of most of the young men in our penitentiaries to-day we will find they range between the ages of eighteen and twenty-six. They constitute also by far the most dangerous part of our prison population. What do those young men know about the war? When the war began most of them were just out of the cradle, and were only ten or twelve years of age when it ended. Therefore the war cannot be blamed for the increase in our prison population; we will have to look somewhere else for the reason. I believe we should look first in the homes, and consider the home training. There is no such training in the homes of to-day as obtained fifty or sixty years ago. Practically every hon. member in the house familiar with these matters must agree with that statement. The period when I have to look after my family has passed. But there are men within my hearing to-day who might well consider giving more attention to the younger members of their family than a good many people in Canada are giving to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the courtesy shown me.

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Willow Bunch): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) will hardly expect me to follow him in his criticism of the treatment of prisoners, and his observations concerning prison reform. I am not competent to discuss those matters, in fact I am not much interested in them, because I have no friends in penal institutions.

Some time ago the house had a budget presented to it by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). May I say that the presentation was made in a most capable and efficient manner; the minister made the best of a bad job. He had a difficult task on his hands which he performed in an efficient and capable manner, and I wish to join with other hon. members who have complimented him upon his presentation.

I should not be disposed to take up the time of the house discussing the budget were it not for certain remarks and criticisms by hon. members opposite, particularly the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who made comments concerning speeches made by hon. members on this side of the house. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), acting as the official financial critic, made a very capable and efficient speech. He made a careful analysis, and his criticism still stands four square. Replies by hon. members opposite have had no effect whatever upon the remarks by the official opposition critic. His statements stand unanswered. In fact, so far as I am concerned, he covered the ground so completely it will not be necessary for me in any way to spend further time in detailed criticism. The budget has been criticized and analyzed thoroughly by the public; they look upon it as just another Tory blunder, as the work of a blundering government that has done nothing but go from one mess into another. They feel that in presenting the budget the government has just stepped into another mess, they see no good whatever in it. The point which stands out most prominently in their minds, and strikes them in the face when they look at it, is the two cent tax on sugar. With sugar at four cents a pound there is an excise tax of two cents. That is the one part of the budget which people generally throughout the length and breadth of Canada are condemning. It enters into the costs of living of our people. When I went to school there was a saying that such and such an act was as ridiculous as taking candy from a baby. This government does not take candy from the babies, but by the two-cent tax it taxes the candy out of the babies' mouths.

Mr. GOTT: Terrible.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, it is terrible, I believe it. But perhaps the hon. member is one of those not affected. There is only one class of people not affected, that is those who due to their physical condition cannot eat sugar. The government has always looked after the big financial interests, these big corporations, so now they are looking after the individual with a big corporation who does not dare to eat sugar. That is so my hon. friend can say "hear, hear." Throughout the length and breadth of this country that is the only individual who is exempt from this tax. In the past we have had budgets known as Robb budgets, we had the budget known as the Dunning budget, and we had one known as the Bennett budget, but this budget is known to-day from one end of Canada to the other as the diabetic budget.

I will now refer to some remarks made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. He started his discourse on this budget by painting a particularly rosy picture, and then he said something to the effect that it may even be grim, but we are looking to the future with a great deal of confidence. He deplored the condition that the country is in at the present time, spoke of the terrible depression affecting all the world, and then turned around and tried to picture to us the wonderful amount of trade we are doing, extending our trade with different nations of the world. After I had listened to him for five or ten minutes I was almost persuaded that there was no depression in Canada at all. The minister told us about the volume of our trade. Instead of dealing with values as one would naturally expect he began dealing with volume. Of course a man in business to-day can increase the volume of business done, all he has to do is lower his prices. If a business man is financially embarrassed what he does is to put on a sale and sacrifice his goods at a lower price. And that is what the primary producer in Canada is doing to-day, he has got a fire sale on, or you might say a bankruptcy sale, he is selling his goods at a loss. Naturally we sell a larger volume, but we are not getting anything for it.

But let us look more closely into the figures quoted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have before me his speech made on the 28th of March. This is what he said:

> I have here a calculation made for me by the Bureau of Statistics, which indicates that the fall in the volume of our trade as compared with 1930, is only five per cent. I refer to the total exports to all parts of the world.

Notice what he said, he said this calculation was made for him. Well, it must have been made especially for him, because I got a report from the Bureau of Statistics for the year 1932, under the same Minister of Trade and Commerce. I turn to page 3, and this is what I find:

> . . . while exports on a volume basis decreased in 1931, 15·9 per cent, and in 1932, 21·4 per cent. . . .

The minister says they decreased only five per cent, but his department says they decreased on a volume basis 21·4 per cent. Now someone is wrong. Who is wrong!

Mr. YOUNG: The minister.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well I would not like to say who it is, but he says this was made specially for him, so probably that is the reason. Probably he is dealing with it in the same way as he dealt with a question I asked him here a year ago in connection with the gambling in wheat, to which I intend to refer later on. There is an old saying that figures do not lie, but—some people should not figure. This seems to be one of the cases.

Then he goes on to say:

> We take the volume of business in 1932, and measure it by the price level of 1930, or apply to the volume of business in 1932, the price of 1930. Revaluing the 1932 exports at the 1930 price we have this result—

In 1930 the volume of business done was $895,000,000. I do not know where he gets that, I cannot find it. I looked all over for it and could not find it. But looking up the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce I find different figures entirely. This is what I find, on page 10, under Canada's Trade 1932. I find our exports, to which he was referring at that time, were, in 1930, $1,144,938,070. Taking 1932 and taking this reduction said by his own department to have taken place, that is 21·4 per cent, I find that the volume of trade in 1932, if put on the 1930 price level, would be only $899,921,323. We would therefore have a drop of over $200,000,000, not what the minister says at all. I do not know where he got those figures, they seem to be absolutely wrong. I will show more than that; I will show that practically every figure that he has used here is wrong. I cannot find one that is right. And further may I say that volume of trade is a comparison of no value whatever; the amount of money is what we are interested in.

Then he goes on to deal with tariffs, and his dealing with tariffs is the most ridiculous thing of all. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) tried the same thing. There was an hon. member for Mackenzie who at one time tried this, a Progressive Tory or Tory Progressive, and then he got a job on the tariff board. Probably they thought they might get one too. But that job has been filled, there is no more chance, and I advise them to desist because they are not going to get anything of the kind. Anyway the public is wise to it.

The minister began to analyze the trade and tariffs of the country. Probably I had better read what he said, and you will know more particularly what I am criticizing. Referring to what had been said by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, "Up went the duties and down went revenue," the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> Let us take the average duty on goods imported from the United Kingdom, other than alcoholic liquors, for the term in which my hon. friends opposite were in office. You have an average rate of 17·9 per cent. In 1932, under the present government's increased tariffs condemned so much by my hon. friends, we have a rate of only 18·62, about ¾ of 1 per cent increase on the average on dutiable goods imported from the United Kingdom.

Before the last election our friends went up and down the country telling us how they were going to make tariffs fight for us, how tariffs were going to bring back prosperity, how the tariff was going to work for the farmer. But if we have only got ¾ of 1 per cent increase I can understand why the farmers are not very well off; ¾ of 1 per cent increase is not going to do much good. I wonder if that is the reason. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in that at all; it is absolutely absurd and ridiculous. There is no sense in comparing averages in connection with tariffs; it cannot be done. It is like the story they tell of the man who was making sausages. They asked him what he was using to make them, and he said he was making them from horses and rabbits. They asked how he mixed them and he said, "I am mixing them fifty-fifty." They questioned that and he said, "Yes, fifty-fifty; one horse and one rabbit." That is about all it amounts to when you compare these averages in connection with tariffs. It is no good at all. Let me give an example. When the Liberals were in power we were paying 40 cents a pound for butter. If there had been a tariff of 8 cents per pound at that time it would have meant a tariff of 20 per cent. Not very long ago the price of butter was 20 cents a pound, and we have a tariff of 8 cents; that meant a tariff of 40 per cent on butter. So when you talk of percentages in this way it means nothing at all; it is of no use whatever. Then again, Mr. Speaker, we know that it is quite possible to have a long list of goods on the free list and another long list of goods with an extremely high tariff; the result will be that none of the goods under that high tariff will come into the country, so everything entering will be free simply because the tariff is so high that it keeps everything out. That is what this government is doing; it is making the tariff so high that it is keeping everything out of the country; it is cutting off our trade by prohibitive tariffs, and that is why averages such as these do not mean anything at all.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Even if the averages were of any value the figures given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce are absolutely ridiculous. They do not mean anything; they are not correct, as I shall endeavour to show. The minister said:

> Let us take the average duty on goods imported from the United Kingdom, other than alcoholic liquors, for the term in which my hon. friends opposite were in office. You have an average rate of 17·9 per cent.

That is wrong.

> In 1932, under the present government's increased tariffs condemned so much by my hon. friends, we have a rate of only 18·62, about ¾ of one per cent increase on the average on dutiable goods imported from the United Kingdom.

I say that is wrong, and my authority for that statement is the same report from the minister's own department, which I have before me. Turning to page 12 I find the following:

> Canada's dutiable imports from the United Kingdom, less imports of alcoholic beverages and tobacco, but plus imports free of duty under the preferential tariff,—

Then the figures given by the minister are quoted. One or the other is wrong; either the man in the bureau of statistics who compiled this report is wrong or the Minister of Trade and Commerce is wrong. I leave it to the house; hon. gentlemen know well enough that the figures given by the minister were wrong according to the figures set out in this statement issued by his own department. But this is in line with what the minister has done all the way through, in one thing after another.

Let us go a step further. Not only are the minister's figures wrong; I say that if he had taken the right figures on these dutiable goods coming in from the United Kingdom under Liberal rule from 1922 to 1930, the period to which he referred, he would have found that the average was about 18.35 per cent. In 1932, the first full year of Conservative rule, we find that the dutiable imports from the United Kingdom totalled approximately $79,693,000, and that the duty paid amounted to about $23,305,000. The liquor imports totalled $21,694,000 and the duty paid amounted to $10,111,000. Thus the average duty on all the imports from the United Kingdom, with the exception of alcoholic beverages, was 22.75 per cent instead of 18.62 per cent, which was the figure given by the minister.

But that is not all, Mr. Speaker; there is something else to be taken into consideration.

This government put an excise tax on all goods coming into this country, which is the same as a duty. All goods had to pay that excise tax of one per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Three per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: No, it was made 3 per cent in 1932. I want to be fair to the government, and these are the returns for the year ending March 31, 1932, while the 3 per cent tax was not put in force until the end of March, 1932. It must be remembered also that this excise tax is collected on the duty paid value, so that gives us a total of 23.98 per cent. But even that is not all. This duty is calculated on the basis of the pound at $4, but the duty was collected on the basis of the pound at $4.86⅔. So now we have the duty totalling 29.16 per cent. That looks more like it. These people had some grounds for saying they were going to make the tariff work, but I leave it to the public to say what kind of work it has been doing. This government raised the tariff all right; we will admit that. They raised it from 18.35 per cent under Liberal rule to 29.16 per cent for the first full year of Conservative rule, and it will be higher than that this year, because now we have the 3 per cent excise tax. When we figure it out we will find that the average will be about 32 per cent instead of 29.16. They have raised the tariff, all right; they have shut off our trade with the outside world, and now they are trying to prove that they have not raised the tariff at all. I am willing to give them all the credit they deserve for raising the tariff, but I think if there is one thing in the world to-day more than another that has caused our present depression it has been this extreme nationalism, this prohibitive tariff, this idea that we must have higher and higher tariffs and that each country should live to itself and not trade with its neighbours.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the only true index of tariffs is the duty collected. Under the Liberal rule we collected 6 per cent on farm implements; at the present time they are collecting 25 per cent. That is all we need say. The present tariff on cream separators is 25 per cent; under Liberal rule they were free. What is the tariff on barbed wire now? It is 10 per cent, but under Liberal rule it was free. That is all we need to know, and that is the only true test. The other night I listened to my hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Loucks) tell us that he had been in Montana and North Dakota and could not find any difference in the prices of farm implements there as compared with the prices in Canada. I have under my hand a list of prices of farm implements in the United States and a list of prices of implements in Canada, and I shall be glad to show them to any hon. member who wishes to see them. I shall give only one or two figures so that the house may have an idea of the comparison. Here is a new Deere gang plough, which is the usual plough used in western Canada, fourteen inch, extra heavy. In Canada it is worth $152 cash and in the United States $118.75, or a difference of $33.25. That is not very much to the hon. member for Rosetown but it is a whole lot to me. I find also a Van Brunt single disc drill, twenty-two runs, two poles, made for four horses. Anyone who has ever farmed in the west knows what it is like. This drill sells in the United States for $182.40, while across the line in my constituency the price is $233, or a difference of $50.60. You can compare all the others and you will see a difference right through, but I give these as examples. The price in western Canada is practically the United States price with the addition of the tariff, twenty-five per cent, notwithstanding that we live just across the line. We can see their implements and we know what prices they pay, so that it is ridiculous for anyone to say that the prices of farm implements on the Canadian side are the same as the prices in the United States. Possibly $25 on the hundred may mean nothing to some hon. members, but when I put my hand in my pocket it means a good deal to me. I have had a ten per cent cut along with other members and I know what the difference is.

I come now to a matter discussed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely, the stabilizing of the price of wheat—at least, what he calls the stabilizing of the price. I should not like to describe it in that way, because I remember that when hon. gentlemen opposite came into office the price was from 95 cents to $1, and the only stabilizing they have done has been to keep the price dropping steadily. They kept it going down and down, until it reached 40 cents—

An hon. MEMBER: 38 cents.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, it was as low as 38 cents, and that is the only stabilizing I have ever seen them do. As I say, they have kept it going steadily down. The minister went some length to tell us of the activities of the government in connection with this matter. May I say that I have been interested for some years in the handling of wheat. For some time we had two bodies handling wheat. In western Canada we gave the grain pool our wheat and they were told to sell it and pay us our money back at the end of the year, whatever average they may have received. They did no hedging; at any rate they were not supposed to do any hedging but were supposed to sell so much wheat from week to week and month to month, so that we should have an orderly market. If we had 12,000,000 bushels they would sell 1,000,000 bushels a month, thus securing an orderly marketing of the product. But they were not supposed to be gambling in wheat; they were not supposed to use the exchange for any such purpose. They may have done so, but that was never the intention. That was one method of handling grain. We had also the organized grain trade, and whenever they would buy wheat in the country they would wire the head office in Winnipeg, informing them that they had bought so much wheat to be delivered in June or July as the case might be; and they would go on the market the next day and sell that wheat; to be delivered in June or July or whatever month it might be.

The pool, which was handling our wheat in western Canada, met with more or less success, and the price of wheat was going up. But they made the mistake of not selling the wheat in an orderly way as guaranteed. They were holding a certain quantity over and the result was that in 1929, when the price began to break, they were caught with a good deal of wheat on hand. They had made advances to the farmers on the wheat, and when the break came the price gradually fell until it dropped below the amount of the initial payment given to the farmers, and the advances which they had received from the banks were consequently in danger. In this situation it seemed that they were going to break and they asked the government for assistance, which was given them. In 1930 Mr. John I. McFarland was put in to sell the carryover of this wheat; he was instructed to sell the wheat which the pools had left over from the 1929-30 crop. That was what he was supposed to do—to sell the wheat which the pools had left over from that crop. After he had been there for a while what did the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as the hon. gentleman informed us, tell Mr. McFarland to do? I would refer the house to Hansard at page 3468, where the minister is reported as follows:

> Recognizing this fact and appreciating the serious loss which would be entailed, particularly to the producer, the government authorized Mr. John I. McFarland, the head of the pools sales agency, to purchase grain for future delivery. . . .
>
> [Mr. Donnelly.]

Not to sell grain at all, but to purchase grain for future deliveries. Remember what I said he was put there to do. He was put there to sell the carryover of the 1929-30 crop, but here we have the government telling him to purchase grain away back in 1930. When we were sitting in the committee with James Robertson, and Smith and the others, dealing with this very matter, John I McFarland had been authorized at that time, I am told, to buy wheat. Thus it came about that last spring I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question with regard to this very point, whether John I McFarland was buying futures and whether he did have any wheat. Listen to what the minister said on April 15, 1932. At page 2084 of Hansard of that year the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) had said:

> May I say that in the Financial Post of last week the statement appeared that when Mr. McFarland undertook to sell the 1930-31 crop he at the same time bought futures against it, and that as a result of his activities the government to-day is holding millions of bushels of future wheat which it cannot get rid of, except at a loss, until the price goes up.

What answer did the Minister of Trade and Commerce make to the hon. member for Weyburn? He said:

> I do not know of a bushel of wheat held by the government, either directly or indirectly.

What are we to say to that? Here he turns round now and tells us that instructions had been given to buy wheat. What do you make of it? What do you think of a man standing on the floor of the house a year after telling us that he did not know of a bushel of wheat that was held by the government, either directly or indirectly, and making the statement which the Minister of Trade and Commerce made to this house the other day? When telling us the other day that John I McFarland had been told to buy wheat, he said, addressing the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain):

> Let me again assure my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) I had this written out merely for the purpose of accuracy owing to the importance of the subject and my desire to get before the house as clear a statement as I could give it on this very important matter.

So that this is no haphazard statement, but one deliberately thought out.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Prepared by the government.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, prepared for delivery by the minister in the house. He had told Mr. McFarland to buy wheat, and in this very statement he said that this was not a gamble but the most conservative form of doing business. Well, if any man appeared in a court of law and said that the buying of wheat futures was not a gamble, he would be laughed out of court. I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he go into western Canada and tell them that the government was buying wheat futures and that it was not gambling. Let him do that and see what they will say to him. If that is not gambling, no one in western Canada has ever gambled in wheat. That is the way they all gamble and it is the only way they can gamble, outside of buying puts and calls. Very little of that is done, the gambling in wheat is done principally by the buying and selling of futures. Mr. McFarland buys wheat to be delivered in July. When July comes he has either to take delivery or postpone delivery to some other month. He must pay the interest and the carrying charges. But this is only conservative business, it is not gambling at all. I would remind the minister of what his leader has said, I refer him to page 779 of Hansard of 1931, where his leader is quoted as follows:

> What is the cause of the great depression in western Canada? Hon. gentlemen opposite know that the most important cause is speculation.

The Prime Minister was very hostile at that time and he was telling the farmers how they had lost their substance in gambling and riotous living. Later on in the same session the Prime Minister referred to Mr. Priestly, the vice-president of the United Farmers of Ontario, who had appeared before the Stamp commission in the city of Calgary. He quoted a newspaper report, as follows:

> While on occasions farmers have been borne to the crest of prosperity on the wave of the system, they found on looking back that they had spent more time in the "trough of poverty" than in the joy of prosperity. Dirt farmers now believed that "paper wheat" had too much influence on the price of real wheat.
>
> Dealing with the money side of the question, Mr. Priestly quoted the results of his survey which showed the losses in excess of one hundred million dollars.
>
> Individual losses, he declared, were all the way from a few hundred dollars to $168,000. "In some instances it was shown that farmers lost everything—land, crop and equipment," said Mr. Priestly.

That is what the government has been doing. The other night the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) stated that the farmers were pleased with the wheat stabilization plan, but I want to say to him and to the government that I have not met a single farmer in western Canada who believes that the stabilization plan has had one particle of effect upon the wheat market. Does the hon. member know that hundreds of speculators bought wheat in Chicago and came over to Winnipeg and sold it to the government? The government was buying not only Canadian hedges but American hedges as well. We have seen the results of other attempts at stabilization. Look at what happened in Brazil when an attempt was made to stabilize the price of coffee. Look at the United States where the farm board poured hundreds of millions of dollars into the market in an effort to stabilize the price of wheat. Their efforts had absolutely no effect, and yet this great Samson of ours was going to go out to put his shoulder under the wheat market to hold up the price. It was absolutely ridiculous. It is the world's supply and demand that governs the price of wheat. We hope that later on in the session the minister will tell us how much wheat was purchased and how much money the government expects to make. There is a chance that they will be able to get out. All of us have been in the wheat market at some time or other; some of us got out with a loss and some with a gain, while others will be lucky to get out with their hides.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. DONNELLY: We must all take off our hats to the wheat trade. They started in and they skinned the wheat pool until they were broke; they skinned the western provinces until they were broke; they skinned the western farmers until they were broke, and now they are skinning the Dominion government.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Donnelly) will pardon me if I do not attempt to follow his line of argument. I was obliged to leave the chamber and did not return until he had been speaking for almost twenty minutes. Therefore, I shall not attempt to reply point by point.

I desire to express my humble views upon the budget, which views I hope will be shared by my constituents in Dorchester. The discussion upon the budget affords a member an excellent opportunity to discuss not only the problems which confront the country as a whole but the special conditions arising in his own province and constituency. It provides also an excellent occasion to review and compare the policies of the different political parties and ascertain whether they are for the welfare of the country. Canada is struggling along under enormous difficulties and the Canadian people expect a continuance of that masterful leadership which so far has saved the country and which I hope will, with the aid of divine Providence, continue fearlessly for the common good. It has been said that adversity puts statesmen on trial. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has undertaken a courageous and excellent task in finding the ways and means to balance the budget. I have no hesitation in offering here, as I will before my constituents, my most sincere congratulations. The Canadian people as a whole are appreciative of the enormous strain to which he and his colleagues have been subjected in their efforts to preserve the integrity of this country. Canadians of all classes recognize that the ship of state would soon be on the rocks if we were to apply the vacillating and conflicting theories of hon. friends opposite or the strange and somewhat revolutionary principles underlying the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation movement.

I need not repeat what has been better said by those who have preceded me, that the government is doing everything humanly possible to maintain the integrity of this country, to safeguard its institutions, to provide the unemployed with food, clothing, fuel and shelter and to keep the nation in peace, order and security. The Canadian people understand that the actions of the government are, as are all human acts, open to criticism but that in the main they have been guided, inspired and directed by the highest motives. In these days of suffering and depression the people look for real statesmanship and not for narrowness of vision or bitterness which will destroy the harmony now existing among the different provinces and races in Canada. In my opinion the financial critic of the Liberal party, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), a distinguished barrister and parliamentarian, has been more desirous of securing political advantage than offering his sincere cooperation. May I also express my amazement at the action of some hon. members opposite, for instance, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) who has not yet spoken on the budget, but who, on March 28 in Quebec City, safely surrounded by his political friends, indulged in his usual sectional attacks upon this government, which, according to him, does everything for western and nothing for eastern Canada. Such attacks are, as I shall later demonstrate, wholly unfounded.

[Mr. Gagnon.]

What is the main doctrine propounded by those two distinguished gentlemen to bring back Canada to the road of prosperity? What is the measure of their cooperation? What constructive suggestions do they offer? Nothing but vague and nebulous theories which do not receive the approval of all Liberals in this country. May I give an example? Is it not surprising to recall that those two hon. gentlemen insinuated in their budget speeches that the government was using money derived from taxation to promote radio broadcasting throughout Canada? Such views are not only erroneous but made deliberately with the idea of misleading the people and creating discontent among the poor. Everybody in this country knows that money spent on radio broadcasting is not collected from the taxpayers generally but is paid by radio set owners who are scattered all over Canada. The government has wisely decided that those who can afford radio sets are able to pay for the service they get from the state which has to provide for them the free enjoyment of our air channels and at the same time to enact regulations whereby the marvellous invention of radio will be used for the diffusion of arts, sciences and culture and at the same time be an instrument of harmony between the different races of Canada. Is it necessary to emphasize again that to maintain state control over radio, control which was adopted unanimously by the house last year, not a single cent is collected from the taxpayers at large? Radio set owners are called upon to pay for that service, and while in our country radio set owners pay only $2, yet the report of the Commission on Radio Broadcasting which was created by our hon. friends opposite, shows that in Great Britain, for instance, radio set owners pay ten shillings a year for a licence whilst in Germany and Japan they pay $6 a year, in Australia, twenty-four shillings a year, and in some other countries even more. In Canada the licence fee is only $2 a year and it is only this money which is put down this year in the estimates in order to provide radio broadcasting in Canada. I maintain further that last year when the government decided to increase the licence fee from $1 to $2, it entered with the radio set owners into a contract whereby it bound itself not to expend this money for other purposes than for the betterment of programs and the expansion of radio broadcasting in this country. Therefore my hon. friends opposite are certainly making a narrow criticism when they try to induce the people to believe that this government is now providing for radio set owners something at the expense of the poor and, indeed, of all the taxpayers. It is easy to surmise what themes will be developed by hon. gentlemen opposite in the approaching election. I hear them assailing the government violently, saying, "People starve and yet the government spends their money on music." Knowing these Liberal tactics, I condemn such insinuations as being cowardly and contemptible.

Before commenting further on the attitude of our hon. friends opposite, let me come back to the situation of our country since April 1, 1932. A year has passed, one which has brought no happiness to this country nor to the world, one which has not given us more wealth or prosperity, but which has certainly strengthened our confidence in our institutions, which has also strengthened to a great extent the bonds of friendship between the different elements of the Canadian nation and which has instilled in our hearts the true sentiment of courage and hopefulness. In 1931 everybody remembers that the Bank of England went off the gold standard. In 1931 and 1932 in the United States thousands of state banks closed their doors and I cannot do better than use the words uttered by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth when, a few days ago he described the appalling situation of banks in the United States in these words:

> A few weeks ago, despite the inconvenience and humiliation in connection therewith, the people of the United States turned the key in the door of every bank from Massachusetts to California and from the forty-ninth parallel to the gulf of Mexico; because they believed it was necessary so to do, they did it.

Why in this country was the government not obliged to resort to such desperate means? It was because the government was vigilant enough to foresee what might happen and to take the necessary precautions to prevent such a disaster, by passing the necessary orders in council preventing the hoarding and export of gold which have had such calamitous effects in other countries.

When speaking about the banks we do not, may I humbly suggest, reflect enough on the fact that banks are the only instruments whereby the savings of the nation may be safeguarded, and those who sometimes wildly attack our banks, are not mindful of the interests of depositors. I admit, however, that the laws with respect to banks and banking ought to suit the needs of the moment and this is why the legislators of all political parties have deemed it wise that the Bank Act should be revised every ten years. It now seems opportune that I congratulate the government very warmly on the creation of a commission to investigate banks and banking in Canada. I hope this commission will begin its work very soon and if I might offer a humble suggestion, may I recommend that the scope of the proposed inquiry be extended as much as possible in order that the commission may study the vexed question of public and private debts which has been discussed in the house and in the banking committee by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman)? May I ask the government that this commission study attentively the problem of rural credits for our farmers? May I repeat what I have already said and what I believe to be true, namely, that the Canadian farm loan board legislation is certainly not very practical for the farmers of eastern Canada; its workings are too expensive and its interest charges are too high. The fact that the board does not operate in the winter time causes great prejudice to the farmers of eastern Canada. I understand that on account of snow covering the ground in the winter, the inspectors cannot inspect the land of the farmers who apply for loans. This objection has some force. On the other hand it seems it could be overcome if the Bureau of Statistics had carefully noted in their files all details with respect to land under cultivation in Canada. Time does not permit me to dwell at greater length on the subject. Nevertheless I hope the commission will recommend that the legal rate of interest be lowered. Not being an expert on the matter I shall not attempt to say to what extent it should be decreased, and I shall not be presumptuous enough to dictate what the commission should do. However with my humble knowledge I simply ask that the commission advise the government as soon as possible to take the necessary steps to lower the rate of interest on bank deposits and on all sorts of loans.

Need I state that the most important announcement in this year's budget is for the benefit of the farmers throughout Canada, and especially those in eastern Canada. I refer to the creation of a stabilization fund to apply to farm produce. Last year the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) and myself asked the government which, to a great extent had helped the western farmers, not to be unmindful of the pitiful condition of agriculture in eastern Canada. We both recommended that a bonus be given to farmers to promote the export of their farm produce.

This year we have been quite surprised to hear from hon. members opposite that the bonusing of farm exports was unsound in principle. Last year, however, some Liberal members opposite were in agreement with me in that connection, and during the by-election at Maisonneuve and South Huron held during the past summer hon. members opposite blamed the government for not bonusing the farm produce of eastern Canada. During those election campaigns they assailed the government by repeating their accusation: Nothing for the east and everything for the west. Now, when the government which has helped the western farmers takes a most appropriate and effective step towards helping the farmers in eastern Canada hon. members opposite say, "This help you purpose giving the farmers by way of the creation of a stabilization fund is unsound in principle." Everybody deplores the fact that owing to the depreciation of the pound sterling the price of farm produce exports has decreased to such an extent that some farmers in eastern Canada as well as those in western Canada have lost faith in the future. But the creation of the proposed stabilization fund, not only for the benefit of farmers but for the benefit of the fishermen of the maritimes and Quebec, will certainly prove that the government has given to these different problems its most careful attention.

As I said a moment ago the creation of the fund is the most appropriate and effective way of helping the Canadian farmers to increase their domestic production and to increase the volume of their exports. I have in my hand the Bulletin des Agriculteurs which, by the way, is the best informed agricultural newspaper on agriculture published in eastern Canada. I have before me the issue of March 30, 1933, on the first page of which appears an article signed by Mr. Donat C. Noiseux, one of the best informed economists in the province of Quebec. He writes as follows:

(Translation):

The new measure, announced by Mr. Rhodes, must bring joy to all farmers: it is the organization of the agricultural stabilization funds. Few newspapers pointed out the importance of this measure to farmers who devote themselves to mixed farming, this, therefore, applies to us, from the province of Quebec.

I shall not attempt to read the whole article, and shall conclude by reading the last words:

This act of the Dominion government which establishes an agricultural stabilization fund to the benefit of the eastern farmers certainly deserves our congratulations, and we believe that we are doing an act of justice by proclaiming it.

[Mr. Gagnon.]

Any hon. members who are interested in this newspaper, published in the interests of the farmers of the province of Quebec would do well to direct their attention to this article which discusses in detail the proposed stabilization fund for farmers. Almost all farm products exported will benefit from the operations of the fund. Those affected would be animals, including meats such as bacon and ham; then there are poultry, fish, both fresh and canned, tobacco, cheese, milk products, canned fruits, canned vegetables, maple products, eggs and honey. Who will say that the farmer of the province of Quebec will not receive enormous benefits from that legislation?

I wonder why the hon. member for Quebec East and his friends so strongly condemn the stabilization fund, and why he has attacked it so violently. Speaking in Quebec city on March 28, and referring to the national protection policy of the Conservative party, he accused the government of pursuing a stupid policy. We have not forgotten that the hon. member for Quebec East, who likes sometimes to abandon himself to violent flights of oratory, said in 1931 in the city of Ottawa, that the policy of Canada first was pure folly. Who could be surprised at this time to learn that the hon. member has stated, the stabilization fund for farmers is just a stupid policy based on an unsound principle.

In 1930, before the party on this side of the house took power, Canada had become the dumping ground for all foreign countries. Our distinguished leader, realizing the fact that Canada was in a very critical situation, owing to the fact that the United States, Germany, France, and many other European countries had raised their tariffs sky high, decided to go back to the national policy of protection which had saved Canada in days of depression in the past. In his famous speech delivered at Winnipeg the present Prime Minister enunciated in his program the steps he considered necessary for the restoration of prosperity in Canada. Realizing the absolute necessity of Canada protecting itself against foreign competitors, and at the same time the necessity to find new markets for Canadian agricultural products, in his usual energetic fashion he expressed his policy and stated that if necessary Canada would blast its way through the markets of the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GAGNON: We can hear the laughs and the derisive comments of hon. members opposite. Certainly they were not used to such definite expressions from their leader.

We remember, for instance, that the former Prime Minister and the hon. member for Quebec East, stated we ought not to raise our tariffs for fear of offending the United States. They remind me of the mother who would try to prevent the dogs from barking for fear they might awaken her baby.

Do hon. members know how those words of the present Prime Minister were explained during the last election campaign in the province of Quebec? How did they explain the expression that if necessary we would blast our way to the markets of the world? Hon. members opposite explained those words by saying that they meant a new step towards conscription. We are not surprised when they are not able to understand that the language of diplomacy may sometimes be firm and not cease to be diplomatic. History will show that our great leader was right, and anybody reading what has taken place in Canada since 1930 will acknowledge that in certain ways Canada has blasted its way through the markets of the world.

Let us state briefly what has taken place. In 1931 we made treaties with Australia and New Zealand, so drafted that now, although New Zealand butter dealers are shipping thousands of pounds of butter to Canada, this butter remains in bond until the sale of it will not be injurious to the butter producers of Canada. We secured at the Ottawa conference of 1932 substantial and profitable preferences for our goods in all markets of the empire. We have also concluded satisfactory arrangements with Germany, in a few days we hope to conclude a satisfactory treaty with France, and we already see the dawn of the day when the United States of America will come to us and offer to lower the tariff walls which have proven so disastrous to our Canadian agricultural producers. Why should we not be proud of our achievements, why should we not boast of our accomplishments, why should we not be optimists, when our conscience tells us that we have done everything possible to help agriculture all over Canada?

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that this stabilization fund will assure more than $10,000,000 to Canadian farmers, and consequently this measure of salvation will be an additional burden on the exchequer of the country. Therefore the hon. Minister of Finance has been obliged to increase taxation, because revenues have decreased, because the deficits of the Canadian National Railways have increased to an appalling extent and because, as the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has frankly admitted, in relieving unemployment the government has spent lavishly. I am pleased that the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has made that admission, in view of the fact that this afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) said we had done nothing practically to relieve unemployment. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have to find the money for that stabilization fund, for the relief of unemployment and to continue to pay pensions to soldiers. Naturally the Minister of Finance must find it somewhere. Therefore he has decided that this year he would impose a tax on sugar. Hon. members opposite profess to be horrified. The hon. member for Quebec East, speaking in Quebec on March 28, characterized such taxation as infamous. Our Liberal friends are fond of such moderate expressions. The hon. member for Vancouver South last fall referred to the Ottawa conference agreements as "iniquitous documents." And a few weeks ago the same hon. member, when discussing the railway legislation, called it an "iniquitous bill." But now the hon. member for Quebec East wants to get first prize for using wild expressions, so he calls this sugar tax "infamous." Let us consider for a moment the various aspects of that taxation. We find that refined sugar before the war sold at ten cents a pound, and during the war it sold at even more than thirty cents a pound. Since our party came into power, whether it is because the refiners were afraid of the energetic action that the government might take in using against them the Combines Investigation Act if they tried to crush the consumer, or on account of some other cause at any rate the fact is that the refiners kept the price of sugar at about five cents per pound. Now even if we add two cents a pound tax, sugar will still be selling at three cents less than it sold before the war all over Canada. Now, Mr. Speaker, why should we wonder that the hon. Minister of Finance believed that a tax of two cents a pound could reasonably be levied on sugar, when it is recognized that such a tax can be collected at the refineries, thereby saving an enormous amount that sometimes has to be spent for the collection of taxes? I have no hesitation in saying that the principle of such a tax is just, because it causes no discrimination against any class of taxpayers. Poor people, Mr. Speaker, are certainly willing to share the burden of taxation, because they are patriotic enough to understand that a government which is spending lavishly, as the opposition says, for the relief of unemployment and for pensions, and which is burdened with a heavy deficit on the railways, must find the money from some source. They are courageous enough to do their share to help the exchequer of Canada. It has been said that this tax of two cents a pound on sugar will not represent more than ten cents a week to any family, be it rich or poor. I ask you earnestly, who are the people who receive pensions in Canada, who are the people who receive relief money, who are the people receiving old age pensions, who cannot spend ten cents a week extra on sugar to help the exchequer of Canada in such times of need and depression? Mr. Speaker, those who condemn the action of the government in imposing a tax upon sugar, who call it an "infamous" tax, who take pride in imitating Robespierre and Lenin by attempting to set class against class, certainly are misjudging the sense of patriotism of the poorer classes in Canada when they accuse them of being unwilling to help the Canadian exchequer to the extent of ten cents a week. I will go further, I will say that this tax will not constitute a burden on the farmers of this country. Refined sugar is mostly used in the manufacture of candy, cakes and pastries, which are seldom purchased by our farmers in these times of depression. The tax on refined sugar will on the contrary help the farmers of eastern Canada, since this tax does not touch maple sugar and maple syrup, which last year was sold at distressingly low prices. Here we may admire the far-sightedness of the government which on the one hand helps the maple sugar producers by giving maple products the benefit of the proposed stabilization fund and on the other hand taxes refined sugar which is certainly a competitor of maple sugar products.

It is not inopportune to say a few words with respect to the maple sugar industry, which is properly called the oldest industry in Canada, and which adds much to the prosperity of the province of Quebec, and my county of Dorchester. Last year I asked the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to help the maple sugar producers by finding ways to increase the sale of their commodity. I am pleased here publicly to thank the minister not only for having listened to my humble views with sympathy, but also for providing this year for a publicity campaign all over Canada to stimulate the sale of maple products. This publicity campaign will be paid for in part by the maple sugar producers of the province of Quebec, in part by the Quebec government and in part by the federal government. I am pleased to tell this house that with my hon. friend for Quebec West (Mr. Dupré), the Solicitor General, I have been in close touch with the chief of the maple industry for the Department of Agriculture in the Quebec government, Mr. Cyrille Vaillancourt, who, by the way, is a native son of Dorchester and a devoted and competent official of the Quebec government. We have studied together, since I have been a member of this house, to find means to help the maple sugar industry which unfortunately had been forsaken and abandoned in previous years. Mr. Vaillancourt is largely responsible for the revival of the maple sugar industry in Quebec. Eight years ago, he established a cooperative society of maple sugar producers, called the Quebec Maple Sugar Producers, and endeavoured to put the industry on a paying basis. In one of the pamphlets published by the Quebec government I find the following:

> Before a prospective member is accepted by the society, he has to sign a contract undertaking to make his product according to the methods recommended by the society, and further, always to gather and boil his maple sap under the most sanitary conditions possible and to ship only an absolutely pure product.
>
> Each member is given a number, and labels bearing the member's number accompany each shipment made to the society. It is thus an easy matter to check up on the producers if any attempt is made to defraud, since, when the syrup reaches the society's warehouse, it is immediately inspected and graded by officials of the Department of Agriculture.

A school is supported by the Quebec provincial government, which is attended by young men who desire to acquire a better knowledge of the best methods of manufacturing maple syrup and sugar, and a refinery has been established at Plessisville which last year received twenty thousand barrels of maple syrup, each containing thirty gallons, from the two thousand members of this cooperative society. I am glad to say that chemists are at the disposal of the government, who devote their researches to the improvement of the product. A new refining plant has been established at Valley Junction, near my county, and I am glad to say that this government helped in the construction of that plant in 1931 under the unemployment relief scheme. This will be a great benefit to the maple sugar producers in my county and in the municipality of Valley Junction. I should like to thank the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) who supported my humble efforts to have the government cooperate with the province of Quebec and the municipality in the construction of this plant.

May I add that since we have been in power we have lost no opportunity to help the maple sugar industry. In December of 1930, for instance, we put into force by proclamation the Maple Sugar Industry Act and Regulations which, in a letter to myself dated March 4, 1932, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) described as follows:

> The Maple Sugar Industry Act and Regulations . . . became effective one year ago. It benefits the industry by prohibiting the adulteration of maple products, by establishing standards of quality, by requiring sanitary conditions in sugar camps and processing plants, and by requiring proper identification of table syrups or sugars which resemble or imitate the pure maple products. The fruit branch, charged with the administration of this act, has conducted some educational work in regard to maple products which, with the administrative work in regard to the act, will undoubtedly stimulate the interest of the producers in the production of quality products and tend to increase the demand for maple syrup and sugar, not only from the housewife but from manufacturers of ice cream, confections, etc.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, the inclusion of maple sugar products under the proposed stabilization fund will prove a substantial help to the industry, but on this side of the house we propose to do more to encourage the maple sugar producers in Canada. Last fall, for instance, just after the Imperial conference, Mr. Vaillancourt went to England, where he succeeded in organizing successful exhibitions of maple products in London, Liverpool, Plymouth and Glasgow, Scotland. He even went to France, where he tried to promote the sale of Canadian maple products. I have several times requested this government to cooperate with the provincial government of Quebec in that regard by enacting new tariff regulations which will prove more favourable to the sale of maple products in England and France. I understand that within a few days we hope to conclude a new trade treaty with France, and I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) to take the necessary steps to see that Canadian maple sugar and syrup are allowed free entry to the French market. At the same time I would ask the minister to open negotiations with the British government in order that our maple products may secure a more favourable rate of duty. It is true that Canadian maple sugar and syrup enjoys a preference on the British market at present, but I would ask that the necessary steps be taken to ensure the entry of Canadian maple products to the British market free of duty.

I do not like to detain the house too long, but I had three reasons for bringing up these points. The first was to prove to my constituents in the county of Dorchester, many of whom are engaged in the maple sugar industry, that this government is doing its best to help them. My second purpose was to show that the government was extremely willing to cooperate with the provincial authorities, and in the third place I wanted to prove to the house that the imposition of a tax on refined sugar would be very helpful to the producers of maple products in Canada. These producers are not only in the province of Quebec; there are a great many of them in the province of Ontario and in the maritime provinces as well.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I agree with what was said by the brilliant member who just sat down (Mr. Gagnon) with regard to the banking commission, the lowering of the legal rate of interest and the bonusing of wheat, but I hope he will pardon me if I do not follow him in the rest of his remarks, because of the time limit that has been imposed upon me by a rule of this house.

I do not think a single member of this chamber will disagree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), when he says that the world is approaching full realization of the fact that the day of national self-sufficiency is past, that an international disease can be cured only by an international remedy. The remedy for Canada's ills, however, must be sought both internally and externally; indeed I think all the countries in the world must take steps not only to put their own houses in order but to advance the cause of mutual cooperation among all nations before the world can enjoy if not greater prosperity then at least some semblance of the prosperity that existed prior to 1929; but in order to attain this goal the obstacles standing in the way first must be removed.

It has been said that many of our troubles are the result of the great war and that the various countries cannot rehabilitate themselves unless there is a cessation of martial strife and dissension. The desire for peace is general, Mr. Speaker, but, like the weather, everyone is talking about it and no one is doing anything about it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) soon will depart to Washington to confer with President Roosevelt and the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and so I believe the right hon. gentleman should do everything in his power to bring about those conditions that are essential to peace. At the present time the world is clamouring for peace but there is no peace. It is also awaiting the return of prosperity but there is no prosperity. We cannot have prosperity without the propagation and the realization of peace, neither can we maintain peace without an application of the contributing factors or conditions essential thereto, nor a return of prosperity without the cultivation of the peaceful arts and pursuits incidental thereto that are so obligatory during a period of reconstruction in the midst of which all countries find themselves to-day.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that a prolonged period of sickness usually is followed by an even more prolonged period of convalescence. We have had a sickness lasting four years, and if that dictum is true it will be another ten years before we are completely out of this depression. In the past four years financial stringency and economic chaos have brought out the reality of the interdependency of nations in much bolder relief than ever and have emphasized the utter impossiblity in this great age of industrial development of any country living unto itself. Even in the United States, where such pet phrases as "self-contained nation," "splendid isolation" and "no foreign entanglements," were so long in vogue, the president has put himself on record in regard to the interrelationship of the constituent parts of the world and the dependence of America's future on the successful solution of universal economic troubles.

As regards Canada and the United States, I am of the opinion that our troubles can be traced directly back to Europe, where the present conditions in this country have for the most part originated. I believe that for immediate causes we must refer to the lack of purchasing power of our customers overseas. There is no doubt that if Europe cannot buy, America cannot sell, Canada's difficulties have been greatly enhanced by the fact that she is largely an exporting country, especially of wheat and other agricultural products. For many decades the European market has absorbed the exportable surplus thereof, but of late years accumulating bankruptcy consequent upon the last great war has left this great market of ours, Europe, so weak and impoverished as to make it quite impossible to maintain anything like that trade which the European market used to call forth in pre-war days. For things have come to a pass, as has been suggested by the Minister of Finance and by the president of the United States, whereby our neighbour's troubles are merged with our own difficulties, and where the latter cannot be solved without simultaneous solution of the former.

The duty of governments, to my way of thinking, must necessarily be twofold—stabilization and improvement of both internal and external relations. Now, domestic conditions must be met with some new form of adaptability, whether monetary or otherwise. National stability is essential, but so is international stability; but in order to maintain the former the nations are adopting at the present time methods which simultaneously destroy the vital mechanism of international exchange. The Minister of Finance has announced with great pride a favourable balance of some $70,000,000 odd; in other words, while imports were being restricted exports nevertheless were expanding, creating the aforementioned balance. If nations are as interdependent as the Minister of Finance pointed out in the introductory remarks of his budget address, I do not see how he can logically advocate interdependence and favourable trade balances at one and the same time; for I do not see how all countries, together and at the same time, can send out greater exports and take in fewer imports. Every debit still requires a credit, and it is a physical impossibility for all countries simultaneously to have a favourable balance of trade or even of payments.

I have referred to Europe as our great customer and have casually mentioned the obstacles that bar the way to trade with said continent. A manifesto issued by two hundred bankers and manufacturers representing all the nations of the world has this to say:

> It is difficult to view without dismay the extent to which tariff barriers, special licences and prohibitions since the war have been allowed to interfere with international trade and to prevent it from flowing in its natural channels.
>
> The break-up of great political units in Europe dealt a heavy blow to international trade. Across large areas, in which the inhabitants had been allowed to exchange their products freely, a number of new frontiers were erected and jealously guarded by customs barriers. Old markets disappeared. Racial animosities were permitted to divide communities whose interests were inseparably connected.
>
> To mark and defend these new frontiers in Europe, licences, tariffs and prohibitions were imposed with results which experience shows already to have been unfortunate for all concerned. One state lost its supplies of cheap food, another its supplies of cheap manufacture. Industries suffered for want of coal, factories for want of raw materials. Behind the customs barriers new local industries were started, with no real economic foundation which could be kept alive in the face of competition by raising the barriers higher still. . . . Too many states, in pursuit of false ideals of national interests, have imperilled their own welfare and lost sight of the common interests of the whole world by basing their commercial relations on the economic folly which treats all trading as a form of war.

There can be no recovery in Europe till politicians in all territories, old and new, realize that trade is no war, but a process of exchange, that in time of peace our neighbours are our customers and that their prosperity is a condition of our own wellbeing. If we check their prosperity, their power to purchase our goods is reduced.

It is expected that the Prime Minister of this country will attend the world economic conference some time this spring or next summer, and that he will exert the weight of his influence to help to restore some stability to the situation overseas. As a great exporting nation we need that market very badly; for every restriction and curtailment of our foreign trade must react most disastrously on our primary producers, whose whole existence depends practically on the profitable sale of their products in markets abroad. At the present time there is no profit in farming in Canada. All operations are on the debit side of the ledger. It is thus impossible to continue on such a basis, for unless the trade situation improves and better methods of distributing our products are evolved, agriculture in this country is bound to be ruined; and when an industry like agriculture fails, it is bound to have serious and adverse repercussions and reactions on all other industries in Canada.

It is folly to deny the worldwide nature of the depression and that the crisis in Canada is due to the breakdown of our own foreign markets. It is equally futile to ignore the existence of vast domestic problems that call for immediate solution in Canada and the necessity of setting our own house in order so that we might adjust ourselves more effectively to world conditions. In stressing the influence of world conditions, I hope that we in this country are not seeking an alibi for Canada's lack of policy; for this reference emanates from a realization that trade is not war but a process of exchange. Trade being essentially barter, debts can be paid in the long run only in goods, and we cannot continue to sell abroad without buying from abroad. In spite of the fact that science has accomplished wonders in making the world a harmonious whole, extreme nationalism the world over has managed to divide it, as it were, into many parts and to keep it from forming any close alliance which would react beneficially not only to each component part but to the collective whole as well.

There is no doubt that the problem arising out of the wheat situation has been made harder to solve by the futile attempt at self-sufficiency being made by such nations as Germany and Italy. These countries have attempted an artificial stimulation of industries for which they are not fitted. Wheat growing is not a natural industry for a country like Germany. Her soil is not adapted to it, yet every effort is being made to encourage production through the bonusing of German farmers and the raising of high tariff barriers against other countries. In this act of intense economic nationalism Germany has been actuated by a desire to make herself independent of other nations in case of war which seems to be looming everywhere upon the horizon in Europe. I think the experiment has proven to be too costly. It is far more economical to import wheat from countries where it can be produced more cheaply and exchanged for the cheaper manufactures of other countries. It may be an exaggeration of the case, but what would we think of Canada trying to produce under hothouse conditions an independent crop of bananas or oranges when these products can be brought in from other countries where their cultivation is indigenous to the locality and where the cost of production and the ultimate sale price make it more desirable as an export than as a domestic product? Wheat raising has always been indigenous to this country. With her favourable climate, with her progressive people and with her fertile soil, there is no place in the world where a better grain product can be produced than in Canada. Wheat is now our great staple export product. In 1929, the peak year of prosperity, nearly forty per cent of our total exports valued at more than half a billion dollars were grain products. It was through the grain trade that Canada reached her peak of prosperity and it is through the same trade that Canada will regain her prosperity. This is the problem which Canada's representatives at the forthcoming world economic conference must undertake to solve successfully. The present economic condition of Canada, especially in the west, is so precarious that further delay will be serious.

I agree with the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) when he includes the tariff as one of the disturbing factors in trade recovery and I agree especially with his reference to the multilateral agreements which are essential to tariff revision. One country cannot do it alone by means of a unilateral agreement but all countries acting in unison and cooperation can do a great deal in this regard. Therefore, let us hope that the economic conference will be the means of bringing about these changes without any further delay

Canada with her meagre force under arms and her four thousand miles of undefended boundary should be an example to the rest of the world, especially to Europe, now torn by stress and bitter racial animosity, of the benefits of disarmament, of the virtues of peace as the essential conditions of prosperity. When one realizes that during the last war 65,000,000 men were mobilized and out of 37,000,000 casualties, 9,000,000 died, that the cost of the war is now rapidly approaching $100,000,000,000, these figures will give some idea of the devastating effects of warfare upon the morale and economic conditions of a country. The manhood which has been destroyed cannot readily be replaced and its disappearance has left a void which has had a terrible reaction upon the spiritual and economic wellbeing of the world. There cannot be prosperity without peace, and peace is unlikely without disarmament. Therefore, I feel that the forthcoming visit of our Prime Minister to other lands should have something to do with this all-important subject. I am reminded of an allegorical story which I read recently in a magazine. Some worms and caterpillars in a chicken yard decided to have a conference with the chickens, and for this purpose they appointed a committee. This committee was well equipped with logic and with oratory but it did not know how to speak the chicken language, so they were forthwith gobbled up. Chicken yards are bad places for worms. There is no question that a heavily armed nation will use its instruments of war to defeat an unprotected nation, and to reduce it to subservient slavery and national oblivion. The only alternative is peace through disarmament.

The stagnating influence of war debts is too obvious to require any extended explanation at the present time. There are many reasons for drastic reductions, the most important of which is the fact that war debts are a great impediment to the recovery of prosperity. So many anomalous situations have arisen since the war that it has become impossible to pay, no matter what the good faith of the nations may be. There are three ways in which payment can be made: first, by goods and services; second, by the proceeds of a loan, and, third, by the movement of gold. Owing to the terrific fall in the wholesale price level, it has become necessary to pay in increasingly larger quantities of goods and services; the precariousness of the economic situation has made it harder both to secure and to pay a loan, and the disequilibrium of gold and its concentration in few hands has made it impossible to pay balances in that standard. War debts are a dead asset; they are not a productive asset as railways and the sooner they are wiped out the better it will be for the world generally. I should like to quote a little passage by Walter Lippman as follows:

> There will be no economic stability until there is peace, and the world war is not over while the question of reparations and war debts is still alive. If the world can make peace and settle war debts and reparations, there will be such a return of confidence that prices will rise permanently.

The real point is that the countries still on the gold standard, the United States and France, have forced other countries to deflate and this deflation has forced down prices. If such emergencies were managed more scientifically by a controlled currency there would be no need for the sad state of affairs which we have in the world to-day. It is essentially a monetary and credit crisis, the fundamental cause of which can be given in the words of a New England weekly—a systematic creation and increasing disparity between physical means of production and financial means of consumption. We know how to produce and can produce in apparently limitless quantities, but where we fall down is in distribution. Our system is operated for profit, and when that element or motive fails, the whole structure topples over like a house of cards. Can one imagine thousands of cattle being burned, shiploads of coffee and oranges being dumped into the sea and other products deliberately destroyed because of the lack of profitable markets and efficient methods of distributing our superabundance of goods to a starving consuming public? But that is exactly what is happening in profit-making capitalistic civilization to-day where human values are sacrificed for individual gain and the ideal of service is superseded by the pursuit of economic reward.

If the government persists in laying the blame for this depression on the international situation and in seeking an international remedy to cure an international disease, then they should at least make some move in this direction. The Prime Minister of course might ask for a complete revision of the Versailles treaty, the remaking of the map of Europe, not in accordance with the vindictive spirit of the makers of this treaty, but on the basis of justice and ethnic principles, such as race, religion and language of the inhabitants involved. The gnawing bitterness, the smouldering fires and antagonisms that prevail so persistently throughout that greatest of our markets are mostly due to the forcible suppression of the various nationalities. This, I think, is the key to the situation. We should do everything possible to create ethnographical boundaries and to allow the self-determination of the nations in that greatest market of ours in keeping with their innate traditions and aspirations. The Prime Minister will realize how extremely galling it is for these people to live in continual physical and spiritual subjugation and forced negation of the very qualities which are considered a virtue in those who rule but a sin in those who unfortunately come under domination. My observation has been that these people somehow will not stay down, and as history has given us countless examples of the folly of forcible suppression, I think nothing but a guaranty of autonomy and liberty of cultural development will free Europe from its potential menaces to peace and well-being.

At the present time all those races are more interested in political than economic liberation. They all wish to be treated as equals and not as inferiors, but once the former object is attained, they will then be unhampered in their cooperation in the latter. As matters stand, economic liberation is subordinated to political liberation, for the races seem determined to free themselves politically even if their efforts meet with untold misery, suffering and spiritual degradation. All these realities must be taken into consideration before the status of Europe is finally decided. The united states of Europe is a most desirable object for the economic salvation of that continent, but it can be attained only when all those races enter such a union voluntarily and are accepted as equals.

The era through which humanity has just passed might be called the age of frenzied finance. The next stage therefore will logically be one of stabilization and social control. I think the laissez-faire, rampant individualism of the past must give way to greater socialization under government supervision. The decay of vigorous predatory imperialism brought about by the awakening of the economic energies of undeveloped countries and the reduction of international trade to the interchange of products required by the mere difference in resources, climate or racial habits, the disintegration of our political situation and a host of minor problems have forced a reorientation of thought and a revaluation of ideas arising out of the realities of present day conditions.

Once again, the science of economics, being dynamic, has become subject to change. As in many other matters, so in this case nothing is ever learned definitely and completely and so the methods of the past century cannot be applied to twentieth century conditions. The present budget does not offer any solution for our difficulties beyond retrenchment, drastic economies, increased taxation, sanctity of contractual obligations and a policy of let well enough alone. But even in the case of drastic economy and taxation, the burden and incidence thereof might have been placed equally on those higher up rather than on those least able to pay. In times like these and under the present system new taxation cannot be avoided, but there should be more equality in the sacrifice. No one will quarrel with the desire for equal sacrifice, but as drastic economies and retrenchment will not solve the problem of unemployment and farm relief, one must look to more fundamental remedies for a solution.

The minister mentioned relaxation of exchange and other excessive restrictions on international trade, stabilization of currencies and stimulation of a rise in wholesale prices as fit topics for discussion at the next economic conference. He might also have added the inadequacy of gold as a metal standard as regards both quantity and efficacy, and the general problem of financial credit as the pivot of the whole economic structure. Economists are in agreement that the problem of the price level is the most important single one of our age and that low prices are due to deflation of credit. Mr. Cassel has pointed out that progressive deflation is grinding our national economy to pieces and that unless something is done to stop the process, it will mean the ultimate ruination of our country. There must be some antidote to the destructive policy of deflation, and if inflation will supply this function, as I think controlled inflation should, then I see no valid reason why it should not be employed.

Mere policies of retrenchment and aimless, hopeless groping in the dark will get us nowhere; unless governments try to do something to pierce through the economic fog in which we are at present enveloped and bring to light some constructive policy, ultimate collapse cannot be avoided. It may be good tactics to raise the bogy of contractual obligations and the sanctity of the bond, but why the bondholders should be placed in a different category from that in which others are situated is, in my opinion, very hard to justify. The Minister of Finance has spoken of equality of sacrifice; why should other classes be more amenable than are the bondholders? In a period of progressive deflation I do not see why the prosperity of the average man should be subordinated to the greed and avarice of a few moneylenders. As far as the average man is concerned, deflation has knocked the bottom out of every vestige of prosperity he ever enjoyed, and it has destroyed the equity in whatever property he may at any time have owned. It has put about 1,500,000 Canadians on relief. As a recent writer put it, to-day the average man thinks not of prosperity but of a job, not of profits but of wages. But a search for one or the other is like hunting for the needle in the proverbial haystack. Hon. members may perorate as much as they like about the virtues of individualism. But, Mr. Speaker, what is there left of opportunity to the average man? I think that even such men as Lord Strathcona and Mr. Booth, those individual giants of the past, would not get very far with their individualism and their initiative at the present time.

An hon. member has asked what the duty of a government is. Adam Smith said the duty of any government is to increase the wealth of its people. In the absence of opportunities for employment the state is faced with the necessity of assuming the responsibility for the subsistence of its citizens. With the right to such subsistence must also go the imposition of the duty to work. This, of course, will require social and economic planning on a very much larger scale. How it can be done without the inflation of our currency and without simultaneously launching a constructive public works program is very hard to understand. Up to the present time the government has managed to avert responsibility of control of industry—I speak not of one government but of governments throughout the world. However, the inevitable trend of the times lies most certainly in the direction of government control. Mr. G. D. H. Cole had this to say:

> Parliaments, if they are to survive as sovereign, have to find ways of bringing the economic life of the nations under their effective control; for this economic life is crying out for organization, for national and economic planning. And if parliaments resign this task into other hands they will, under modern conditions, be throwing away the substance of authority, and keeping only the shadow.

Much has been said in this house and out of it about the glories of individual initiative and private industry. If private industry is as has been pictured, why is it that all the wrecks and derelicts thereof must be taken care of not only by this government but by all governments? Why is it that even able-bodied men and women cannot secure work in private industries? Hon members in both major parties do not want inflation, but certainly with the continuation of deflation, higher taxation, higher interest rates and other charges, diminishing purchasing power and increasing unemployment, I do not see how it can be avoided.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. MacLAREN

Hon. Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I have read in this evening's Ottawa Journal a short article purporting to give the report of a meeting of several members of the government with representatives of the Associated Veterans. I wish to state that it is quite inaccurate. We did have a meeting this morning to talk over the proposed new pensions bill, which is under consideration, but no mention whatever was made of any reduction in the pensions now being paid.

PRIVATE BILLS

SARNIA-PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

The house resumed from Friday, April 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 41, to incorporate the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company—Mr. Gray—Mr. Plunkett in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Declaratory.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What is the purpose of having this work declared to be for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: Because it is international work.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3, 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6, subsection 1—Capital stock.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should like to ask the promoter of the bill if he thinks $25,000 is a sufficiently large paid up capital upon which to commence operations. It seems to me to be ridiculously low.

Mr. GRAY: The hon. member will note that that sum is merely a deposit left as security with the government. The hon. member is reading subsection 2, which refers to the deposit guaranteeing that the work will be proceeded with. It has nothing to do with the capital stock mentioned in subsection 1.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is there any provision in the bill stating how much shall be paid up before the work is commenced?

Mr. GRAY: The hon. member for Argenteuil will note that under section 21 of the bill the Dominion Companies Act shall apply, so far as it is not inconsistent with the special provisions of this bill. Therefore my opinion is that with respect to the commencement of business and the amount required to be paid up before the commencement of business the Dominion Companies Act shall apply.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is nothing in the Companies Act which requires any amount to be paid up, with the exception of the corporation shares.

Mr. GRAY: There used to be a provision for ten per cent. As I understand it, that provision was eliminated in 1930. At the present time there is a provision that a certain amount—I realize it is not very large—must be paid. I do not see why we should go beyond the provisions of that act when we are considering the amount to be paid up under this bill.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Have all the subsections with the exception of numbers 1 and 2 been struck out of the original bill?

Mr. GRAY: The whole bill has been reprinted. If the hon. member has a reprinted bill he will find the proposed changes underlined, and in italics on the page opposite he will see the sections as they appeared in the original bill.

Section 6, subsection 1, agreed to.

On section 6, subsection 2—Deposit before commencing operations, etc.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If this company is granted a charter, I know nothing in the Companies Act which will force them to put up any substantial sum before beginning operations. When a company has power to issue bonds to the value of $5,000,000, it certainly should put up a substantial sum before actually beginning work. A large enterprise such as this should have substantial backing. I do not know who the incorporators are, or whether they are men of large means able to carry on an undertaking of this magnitude, but I suggest there should be a provision for a large amount to be paid up before the company begins business.

Mr. GRAY: Is the right hon. gentleman discussing subsection 1 of section 6, or subsection 2.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Subsection 2.

Mr. GRAY: Subsection 2 provides only for a deposit being put up in good faith by the company. It merely provides that the company shall not commence its operations or incur any liability before a sum of at least $25,000 has been paid into the treasury of the Dominion of Canada, which sum shall not be withdrawn until at least twenty-five per cent of the proposed subway or tunnel together with its approaches, buildings, and all other assets used in connection therewith is constructed, and such sum shall be forfeited if the project is not proceeded with. In my opinion subsection 2 is merely a guarantee that when commenced, the work will be proceeded with, and if not the moneys will be forfeited to the crown. I submit subsection 2 has nothing whatever to do with subsection 1, which deals with the capital stock of the company. With respect to the amount to be paid up under subsection 1, I again submit that we are under the Dominion Companies Act, which has withstood the experience of time.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sorry I have not the Companies Act before me, but if the hon. member has I wish he would read the provision contained therein in regard to paying up capital stock before the commencement of work.

Mr. GRAY: As a matter of fact I have only the revised statutes of Canada, 1927. Subsection 8 of section 9 of the Companies Act states:

> In no case shall the amount of capital with which a company shall carry on business be less than the sum of $500.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is the only limitation suggested?

Mr. GRAY: Yes, as it exists now. The ten per cent provision is now out, and as I understand it under the Dominion Companies Act there is only now the $500 limitation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The hon. gentleman says this is the course usually followed in private bills relating to private companies, but I submit for his consideration that although this is a private bill it is far from being a private company. This is going to be a public corporation, an international enterprise, for the building of an expensive tunnel. I know that some very unfortunate things have happened in connection with a bridge further down the river, built not long ago, in connection with which bonds were sold which now have comparatively little value because I suppose there was not sufficient money put up for stock ahead of the bonds to give them some value outside of the actual tunnel itself.

Mr. GRAY: I agree with what the hon. gentleman says. To meet that very difficulty, at the suggestion of the Justice department we have incorporated in this bill subsection A of section 7, and I submit that it will meet with the approval of the hon. gentleman and meet the objection he has now raised. It is a new clause:

7a. No securities whether shares of stock, bonds, debentures or other securities shall be issued by the company unless and until the governor in council has been satisfied that the company has, in respect of such securities, complied with "The Securities Act" of the province of Ontario.

That is what is popularly known in Ontario as the Security Frauds Prevention Act. I hope and trust that will meet the hon. gentleman's objection.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Bonding powers.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Plunkett): There is a slight change in this section, therefore I will read the whole section:

7. The company may issue bonds, debentures or other securities to an amount not exceeding five million dollars in aid of the construction of the said subway or tunnel authorized by this act; and such bonds, debentures or other securities shall be secured by deed of mortgage; and such deed of mortgage shall contain provisions that all tolls and revenues derived from the use of said subway or tunnel by other corporations or persons shall be specially charged and pledged as security for the payment of interest on such security.

Section agreed to.

On section 7, subsection A—Issue of securities.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the promoter be good enough to tell the committee just what are the safeguards for the public under the Securities Act of Ontario?

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. GRAY: I wish to take issue with my hon. friend as to my being the promoter.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I apologize —the sponsor.

Mr. GRAY: Thank you. As I understand the act it has to do with the registration of any broker or issuer of stock before stocks or bonds or debentures can be issued. The provisions of the act require registration and licensing to sell, and in its very nature the suggestion of licensing must mean protection as far as possible to the public. In order that we may ensure compliance with that provision, this subsection is inserted.

Subsection agreed to.

Sections 8, 9 and 10 agreed to.

Ou section 11—Powers.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Plunkett): There is a slight change in this section:

11. The company may,—
(a) lay out, construct, complete, maintain, work, manage and use the said subway or tunnel under the St. Clair river, for vehicular, pedestrian, railway and other purposes, with the necessary approaches from convenient points on the Canadian side of the international boundary between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada in or near the city of Sarnia, the township of Sarnia and the township of Moore, to points in or near the city of Port Huron, and the city of Marysville, in the state of Michigan, one of the United States of America.

The former paragraphs lettered (f) and (h) are deleted, therefore paragraph (g) becomes (f); (i) becomes (g); (j) becomes (h); and paragraph (k) becomes (i).

Section agreed to.

Sections 12 and 13 agreed to.

On section 14—Expropriation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Very large powers are being given to a private company under this bill. It occurs to me that they are rather unsusual powers to be given to a company of this kind. While the provisions of the Railway Act are made to apply, I should think that that is not all the safeguard that should be made applicable in such a bill as this. Giving to a private company which is promoted for private gain the power to take the property of others against their will is something which should be done very sparingly by any legislature. I can remember a long series of battles over this very same sort of thing. While it is necessary in railway development or in works of great public utility to give this power, there is strong objection to giving it to such a company as this, which is not in the same category as a railway or other public utility. I for one object to the powers of expropriation that are given under this bill.

Section agreed to.

Sections 15 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Municipalities may purchase tunnel.

Mr. MORAND: No doubt the intention of this section is that the municpalities may have the opportunity, at some time in the future, to purchase this tunnel, but I would suggest that in the third line the word "value" be replaced with the word "cost." The value might be ascertained with the company considered a going concern, having no regard to the cost of the undertaking.

Mr. GRAY: I have no objection to that change.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a very serious section, Mr. Chairman, and in the form in which it now stands I think the committee should hesitate to pass it. Whatever else should be done at least we should exercise what jurisdiction we have within our powers, ostensibly at any rate. I do not think we have any power to say the board of arbitration shall have power to fix the cost or the value if one of the members of the board is without the jurisdiction of this country.

Mr. GRAY: Is that the suggestion?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The section declares:

> The board shall consist of three members, one to be appointed by the city of Sarnia or the municipality within the Dominion of Canada in which the portion of the said subway or tunnel in Canada may be constructed, one by the city of Port Huron or the municipality within the United States of America in which the portion of the said subway or tunnel in the United States of America may be constructed and the third by the company.

In this section the tunnel is dealt with as an entity, both ends being united as one, whereas in the previous sections the statute makes it clear beyond doubt that we do not endeavour to exercise jurisdiction beyond the centre of the stream. I am bound to say that I do not think the section as it now stands is one we have power to pass.

Mr. GRAY: I understand the point raised by the right hon. gentleman. I am not particularly enamoured of the section in any shape or form. As the hon. member for East Essex suggests, apparently the intention of the section was to have some recapture clause in the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: And there should be one.

Mr. GRAY: As the right hon. gentleman points out, there should be one. I would be quite content to have the section wiped out if it were not for the suggestion of the Prime Minister that some recapture clause should be placed in the bill. If the right hon. gentleman retains that point of view I suppose there is no alternative but to have the section stand, otherwise I am quite prepared to agree to the deletion of the section.

Mr. BENNETT: During the last two months my attention has been directed to the somewhat similar provisions of the statute concerning the bridge lower down, and if my attention had not been directed to that perhaps I would not have read this bill so closely. It does seem to me that it is perhaps desirable that there should be some form of what has been familiarly called—though it is not technically correct—a recapture clause in a bill such as this. I think the hon. member for East Essex has put his finger upon the real difficulty, the question of fixing the actual cost of the undertaking early in its period of operation. We are familiar with proceedings that have taken place in connection with matters of this kind in which the value bears no relation whatever to the cost, the value being determined largely by the earnings and the percentage of the return upon the investment. When I heard the hon. gentleman from East Essex make his observations with regard to value I thought that was very important, but I think the hon. member will agree that the section must be recast. As it stands now it undertakes to do something which I fear we have not the power to do, and I suggest that it might be better to have a section stating that the cost of the undertaking must be made clear to the satisfaction of the governor in council, and that should be lodged with the Department of State, and then the provisions as to recapture might be dealt with.

Mr. GRAY: Then I would suggest that the section stand.

Section stands.

On section 20—R.S., c. 170, to apply to the company.

Mr. BENNETT: I direct the attention of the committee to the fact that both these sections are striking illustrations of the doctrine to which the hon. member for West Lambton referred the other evening.

Section agreed to.

On section 21—R.S., c. 27, to apply.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When this section was before the railway committee it was agreed by the promoters that it should be changed in order to bring this company within the Companies Act when it was not inconsistent with the Railway Act, instead of taking out this act from under the Companies Act when that general act was inconsistent with this act. I think the sponsor of the bill will agree to that statement.

Mr. GRAY: If the hon. member will look at the reprinted bill he will find that this has been done. Section 21 now reads as the hon. member suggested it should read.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have the reprinted bill, which states clearly that the Companies Act shall apply, so far as it is not inconsistent with the special provisions of this act. If I understand that, it simply means that this act overrides the Companies Act, instead of the Companies Act prevailing where there is any inconsistency. There can be no question as to that.

Mr. GRAY: Perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister would express an opinion.

Mr. BENNETT: This is my hon. friend's bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—Labour and materials.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my hon. friend may find a little difficulty here. The section reads:

> So far as it may be practicable to do so, Canadian labour and materials must be used in the construction of the said subway or tunnel. . . .

He may find a little difficulty in connection with that provision in the state of Michigan.

Mr. GRAY: This section has been included in all international bridge and tunnel bills since 1929 or 1930. It may be, as the Prime Minister says, that it is more a pious hope and prayer than something that will be of practical benefit. The intention is that, in so far as we do not overlap the international boundary, so far as the approaches to the subway or tunnel are concerned, we shall use Canadian labour and material in the work that is done. If our American friends do not like the section, then I suppose they will object to it; but in the meantime I am rather surprised that the right hon. gentleman should object that as far as possible we are protecting Canadian labour and material.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: How unfair the hon. gentleman is. The remark is rather cheap. I directed his attention to the fact that the bill as it now stands undertakes to legislate The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930, to apply to the United States, which it cannot do. The section reads:

> The employment of labour in the construction, maintenance and supervision of the said subway or tunnel shall be subject to the terms and conditions of The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930.

Just as the congress of the United States would not undertake to legislate with respect to the Dominion of Canada, so we should not undertake to legislate with respect to the United States; and because I direct attention to that fact the hon. gentleman, with a cheap sneer, says he is surprised that I should object to Canadian labour and material being used. That is unworthy of him; let me say that to him at once.

Mr. GRAY: I apologize if—

Mr. BENNETT: I have given every possible assistance in connection with this legislation, and I was merely pointing out that it is not desirable that this dominion should leave the impression abroad that it is endeavouring to legislate in a country over which it has no legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. GRAY: I had no intention of arousing—

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is not arousing anything.

Mr. GRAY: —any suspicion of a sneer. I was not sneering. As the right hon. gentleman says, he has given every assistance and afforded every opportunity to have the bill presented and passed. This section was discussed at great length in the committee, and the committee thought that as far as practicable it should be insisted upon that Canadian labour and material be used in the construction of every international bridge or tunnel. There is an international half of the construction over which we have control and an international half which is under the control of congress. We are providing against the fact that there may be overlapping by declaring that as far as practicable we shall use Canadian labour and material in our section, and apply to the work carried on in that section The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930. Surely that has only to do with the Canadian section of the tunnel. I hope the Prime Minister will not find fault with the section. The committee gave it considerable thought and at the suggestion of the hon. member for London (Mr. White) and one of the members for Vancouver it was insisted that it should be made compulsory that Canadian labour and material be used.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman will look at the section he will see that the practicability is the test with respect to the use of Canadian labour and material, and properly so. But in a statute of the dominion we are providing that:

> The employment of labour in the construction, maintenance and supervision of the said subway or tunnel shall be subject to the terms and conditions of The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930.

They shall be subject—shall be—to the terms of a Canadian statute, and I only desire, being responsible for the bill in the narrow sense of the government's responsibility for the legislation of this house, that it should not be said that we had passed a statute in which we undertook to provide that a Canadian act, an act of this parliament, should govern the construction of this work. If the hon. gentleman would add words indicating that the provision had reference to the Canadian section of the tunnel, I could understand it. That was what I was pointing out.

Mr. GRAY: I should not think that in this act we were legislating with reference to anything but the Canadian section.

Mr. GORDON: It says differently, in terms. The forepart of the section distinctly comprehends the whole operation.

Mr. GRAY: But we could not legislate, and the minister knows we could not possibly legislate, with respect to anything except the Canadian section.

Mr. GORDON: Why try to do so, then?

Mr. GRAY: We are not doing so, I submit. However, if it is desired for clarity's sake to insert, "in so far as the Canadian section is concerned," or words to that effect, I see no objection to doing so.

Mr. GORDON: We are all trying to assist the hon. member, and if the bill is desirable, as I assume it is, it seems to me that he would meet with an insuperable barrier when he approached the government of the United States, where there must be a companion bill, if they found in our legislation that the whole subway and tunnel must be built subject to our Canadian laws in relation to the matter set out in the section. It is with the desire to assist the hon. member that the observations have been made. As the section reads, it implies that our law is to apply to the whole building of the tunnel. Obviously therefore, unless the hon. member has some idea of what congress may do, this section will be an insuperable barrier to his operations later on, unless it is altered.

Mr. GRAY: I suggest, then, Mr. Chairman, that after the word tunnel there be added the words "in so far as the Canadian section is concerned."

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Has the hon. member received any opinion from the Department of Justice or from any other source as to the constitutionality of the whole section?

Mr. GRAY: I can only say that I have looked at similar bills passed in which there was a provision such as this—bills passed on two or three occasions.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I don't dispute that.

Mr. GRAY: I know that does not make it right, but I can assure the hon. member that the whole bill was submitted to the Department of Justice, though possibly they had not time to look into it very carefully. However, in view of the fact that section 19 has been allowed to stand, I am quite prepared to allow section 22 also to stand for recasting.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the hon. member would meet the difficulty if after the word "supervision" he added the words "of the Canadian section," so that the section would read: "The employment of labour in the construction, maintenance and supervision of the Canadian section of the said subway or tunnel shall be subject."

Mr. GRAY: I agree to that.

Mr. GEARY: Has the hon. member considered how he is to make The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930, apply? The language of that act is directed simply to government contracts, and unless he has precedents for its application to private contracts I doubt whether this section can be made effective. Has he considered that point?

Mr. GRAY: I presume the intention is to make that act applicable to this legislation. The language contemplates that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Has the hon. member given consideration to the practical effect of the words, "so far as it may be practicable to so do"?

Mr. GRAY: I think it was the hon. member for North Winnipeg who stated that a section similar to this one was passed some years ago and has been working out quite satisfactorily as far as as labour is concerned.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have often heard that member denied the right to speak for organized labour. He is not here to speak for himself, but if he said that it would not impress me at all.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the words "Canadian section of the" should be added after the word "the" and before the word "said" in the fourth line from the bottom of this section. If this were done the matter would be made clear in both cases.

Mr. GORDON: I do not want to hold up the passage of this legislation, but the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) has just called my attention to the provisions of The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930. In order that the progress of the work should not be rendered difficult by the wording of this section of the bill and in order that the operative provisions of The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act, 1930, may apply, I submit that this section should stand for revision. The act to which I have referred applies only to government contracts and I think some explanatory note should be given in the bill to the effect that in fixing wages and hours of labour, this particular work shall be deemed to stand in the same position as a contract under the provisions of The Fair Wages and Eight Hour Day Act. Such an addition would dispel any difficulty which might lie in connection with the application of the statute.

Mr. GRAY: Section 19 is standing and I have no objection to this one standing also.

Mr. MITCHELL: By the time the construction of this tunnel is started there may be an entirely different fair wages act in effect, and I should like to have a clause inserted which will stipulate that the fair wages act in effect when the work is started shall apply.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN-NORTHERN PACIFIC AGREEMENT

The house resumed from Friday, April 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 48, to confirm an agreement between the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—Mr. McDade.—Mr. Plunkett in the chair.

Progress reported.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF TORONTO—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 29, to amend and consolidate the several acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES

The house resumed from Friday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Power for the second reading of Bill No. 67, with respect to hospital sweepstakes.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, when the hour for private bills expired on Friday last I had just completed a reference to the prevalence of speculation and gambling in the stock markets and had started to refer to the gambling carried on in our grain exchanges. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that the speculation and gambling carried on in this and other countries during recent years have played a very large part in bringing about the depression now existing. I have given extracts from the evidence adduced in England before a commission dealing with a proposed sweepstake measure. I gave extracts from the evidence given by the representatives of the Church of Scotland and the Christian Social Council of England. I have had submitted to me the opinion of the United Church of Canada, and I should like to refer to a letter written by the Reverend D. N. McLachlan, the secretary of the Board of Evangelism and Social Service of the United Church of Canada. Mr. McLachlan points out, first, that the sweepstakes proposal is economically unsound and, second, that the principle is morally unsound. He continues:

> The better elements of Canadian citizens view with regret and misgiving this backward step proposed by the Senate and are depending on the members of parliament to defend the honour of Canada by defeating the bill to legalize sweepstakes in this dominion.

I should like to quote from a resolution passed by the Kindersley presbytery of the United Church of Canada, as follows:

> In the move to change the Criminal Code to permit the conducting of sweepstakes for the support of hospitals; this presbytery believing that the result would be a widespread development of the gambling spirit, which would more than offset any advantages which might be derived therefrom, strongly protests against any such action.

That resolution is signed by H. Craner, secretary, Coleville, Saskatchewan.

Every afternoon before the commencement of business in this house Your Honour reads a form of prayer, one day in English and the next in French. In the third clause of that prayer you, sir, invoke the Deity that He "be pleased to direct and prosper all their consultations," referring to the House of Commons:

> That all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavours, upon the best and surest foundations, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us for all generations.

That is a very worthy sentiment, but the proposal of this sweepstakes bill is diametrically opposed to the sentiment expressed in that feeling prayer of yours as uttered every day in this chamber.

The sponsor of this bill asked: Why not let people gamble?—they have the gambling spirit anyway. He tried to impress upon us—and he did not make a very good job of it, I will admit—that everybody is addicted to the gambling fever, so why not give him a chance to gamble? I challenge that statement; I claim it is not correct. Every person is not addicted to gambling and gambling is not a natural instinct. It would be just as sensible to say in this chamber that opium smoking on the part of a Chinaman was a natural habit and we might as well let him smoke his opium. So far as giving peace and exhilarating joy and transporting the individual into the realms of ecstasy and feelings of inward satisfaction are concerned, I am told nothing surpasses the smoking of the opium pipe. If such be the case, why deprive the poor Chinaman of that wonderful peace and satisfaction of mind which he has as a result of smoking opium?

The sponsor of this bill says that because some people get a little satisfaction out of gambling, we should throw the door wide open and let them gamble; they are raised to such heights of joy; they are given such wonderful feelings of ecstasy, it would be too bad to deprive them of that. But we do not assume that attitude towards the Chinaman who takes his long pipe and endeavours to smoke opium. We have legislation that applies to such a person and we take good care that he is restricted in his operations with the opium pipe. So, believing as I do that this bill is a retrograde step in our legislative enactments, I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), the following amendment:

> That the word "now" be left out and the words "this day six months" added at the end of the question.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, may I offer a few observations in regard to this bill? In the first place the proposal embodied in it is purely and simply gambling. It undertakes to legalize what, under our criminal code, is recognized as illegal. In other words, if I understand the matter correctly, the object of the bill is to give respectability to what is generally understood as an illegal undertaking in Canada, something that is made illegal under our criminal code. Gambling of all kinds is objectionable and this form of it is not any exception to the rule. It is well understood that during the last several years, particularly in 1928 and 1929, gambling was the great evil of this country and the source of most of the troubles from which we are now suffering. Particularly is this so in regard to many of our young people, and yet we are undertaking under this bill to make respectable that which we know introduced many of the troubles from which we are now suffering.

Another feature of the bill is that it throws around the evil of gambling a certain mantle of virtue by introducing some benefit or presumed benefit on behalf of the hospitals. I am ready to admit that it is possible hospitals may be immediately benefited, financially speaking, but I am also firmly convinced that ultimately they will suffer financially as well as otherwise. At present in all parts of our country hospitals are benefited by the donations of the people and also very largely by contributions from estates. Even to-day where the formerly established practices in the administration of hospitals have been interfered with in one way or another by the state, there has been a decided tendency on the part of many people of means not to make in their wills provision for extending donations to hospitals. If gambling, presumably to assist hospitals, becomes law, I am certain this will in the long run be detrimental, financially speaking, to the hospitals. Certainly it will drive away from them a great deal of sympathetic support which they now receive and which they require.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ralston and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Lucas.

Mr. W. A. BEYNON (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, Canada's economic life has been the theme of a great many speeches delivered by hon. members sitting to your left. A number of those speakers have dealt only with the situation as we find it in Canada, and have made no reference to world conditions. Others have dealt fully and freely with the fact that the present condition exists throughout the world as well as in our own country. Those who have confined themselves to Canada have done so, apparently, because they wish to fix upon the government of the day the responsibility for that condition. They have sought to show that the policies adopted by this government are responsible for that condition. Those who have taken a wider view, and have considered the matter from a worldwide standpoint, have sought to lay the responsibility for present conditions upon the currency and credit system of the world, and finally to blame the government for not having remodelled the Canadian credit and currency system.

That represents fairly well the two schools of thought in the House of Commons. There are others who have gone further and said that the whole social order will have to be changed. Others, again, direct their criticism only against the capitalistic system. One hon. member opposite said that capitalism is on trial to-day. The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) took a broader viewpoint when he stated that it is not only capitalism but democracy which is on trial. If that view be correct—and I think it is—then not only is democracy on trial, but the very institutions of government founded under the democratic system are on trial. It has often occurred to me that this House of Commons, of which we form a part, is on trial to-day as it has never been before. It stands on trial before the bar of public opinion. There are in Canada a number of people who are criticizing freely the manner in which this house approaches the country's business. They are saying that we do not act in a businesslike manner. They are saying that the opposition, whether it be Liberal or otherwise, is concerned not so much with finding out whether legislation is good or bad as with fixing responsibility for the legislation, and making political capital out of it. They even go so far as to say that when any legislation, good or bad, is brought down by the government, the opposition, Liberal or otherwise, will attempt to make it appear bad. Even if the legislation is bad these people charge that the opposition is not so much concerned with making it good as with making capital out of it.

We know that in times like these, of stress and strain, people are more disposed to be critical of governments and institutions than they are in normal times. If the criticisms are unjustified and unwarranted, we have little to fear. On the other hand if in our institutions and the manner in which we approach the business of our country there is room for criticism, there rests upon the shoulders of every hon. member a heavy responsibility. All hon. members, Mr. Speaker, whether they sit to your left or to your right should feel that the good name of this house of parliament is their first concern. It is from this viewpoint that I purpose reviewing for a few moments some incidents that have occurred in this house since I came here, and some speeches that have been made.

Before going any further I admit quite freely that any party when in opposition is much more prone to be captious than when charged with the responsibilities of government. That, however, does not relieve the opposition, whether it be Liberal or any other party, from reasonable restraint. The fact is that the people are looking to the members of this house to deal with the business of the country in a businesslike way, in a manner free from political partisanship. With that thought in mind I wish to refer to some remarks made by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly), particularly his reference to the administration of relief in the province of Saskatchewan. I refer now to his remarks as reported at pages 3243-44 of Hansard:

> . . . during the first two years of such administration we saw men running up and down the country handling relief and drawing salaries equal to what they were handing out in the way of relief for groceries.

Then I find he is quoted again at page 2696 as follows:

> There are now no relief officers running about the country in high-powered cars. Last year they were driving from one town to the other, smoking big cigars, burning gas up at the rate of $150 to $200 a month, doing nothing but just going from town to town and drawing as much money themselves as they were handing out in relief.

If these accusations are correct, if that is the way relief is being administered by the relief commission in the province of Saskatchewan, the people of Canada ought to know it. On the other hand, if the statements I have just read are incorrect, they do a great injustice to the province of Saskatchewan and create a very wrong impression in the minds of the people of the rest of Canada. Therefore I want to deal for a little while with the administration of relief in that province by the relief commission.

The Saskatchewan relief commission was operating in 220 municipalities, over an area comprising 105,000 square miles. There was a relief officer in each municipality. To supervise these relief officers there were eleven supervisors. I leave it to any member of this house to say whether eleven supervisors would be too many to supervise 220 relief officers. The average salary of these relief officers was $76 per month; the average expense bill was $80 per month. The average salary of the supervisors was $100 per month and their average expense amounted to $153 per month. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the members of this house, if the hon. member for Willow Bunch fairly represented the work of these supervisors when he referred to them as running about the country in high-powered cars, smoking big cigars and burning up gasoline at the rate of $150 to $200 a month, when their salary was $100 a month and their average expense bill $153.

That commission administered in that time a fund of over $17,000,000. I want to tell you something else that is unique about that commission. It is generally accepted that when any institution is functioning under a government there will be a great deal of graft in connection with it, or in any event there will not be any saving. Let me tell you what happened in connection with this commission. They handled gasoline, fuel oil, machinery repairs, fuel and seed grain. On one item alone, that of kerosene for the tractors of the farmers, they made a saving of 2 cents a gallon, amounting to $77,000. It is unique in the history of this country that any institution functioning under a government should drive a hard bargain in buying supplies. Similar savings were made on all the commodities purchased by the commission, with the result that they saved on the total purchases an average of 33⅓ per cent. In all they saved to the Dominion of Canada $422,085.23, the benefit of which went to the people who received the relief. That means a saving of nearly half a million dollars to the people of Canada, accomplished by the relief commission of the province of Saskatchewan driving hard bargains with the people from whom they purchased. It amounted to more than the total cost of administration of relief in Saskatchewan. I wonder if the hon. member for Willow Bunch realizes how difficult he is making it for this administration to get the people of the rest of Canada to vote relief for the province of Saskatchewan when he is creating such an erroneous impression about that relief commission.

It is unfortunate that there are those in this country who try to stir up strife between eastern and western Canada. There are people in western Canada, including a certain section of the press in the west who are always trying to stir up strife between the two parts of Canada. They tell us we have tariffs to suit eastern Canada—a certain section of the press dwells upon that at all times. Then there are those who say that the west has to be fed by the east, and that the west would be no good if it were not for the east. Then some in the west come back and say that the east could not exist without the west. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have purchased from eastern Canada their machinery and the products of their factories, and we have borrowed their money to develop western Canada. But we purchased their goods and machinery because we could purchase them here better than we could elsewhere, and we borrowed their money because we could borrow it better here than elsewhere. They sold us their machinery and their goods because we were the best market they had, and they sent us their money because we paid interest on it. It is nothing more or less than a satisfactory business arrangement between the two parts of Canada, and the east owes the west nothing and the west owes the east nothing for it. As a matter of fact we are working together on a business proposition to develop a good and substantial country; and all this puerile, trivial talk about the west depending on the east or the east depending on the west is a most pernicious thing in a country which we are trying to unify and consolidate and build up.

I wish to deal with another statement made by the hon. member for Willow Bunch. In the working out of this relief the Saskatchewan relief commission, in order to have uniformity in distribution, provided that all applicants should sign an order; certain goods are stipulated and none but those goods could be delivered on that order. The hon. member for Willow Bunch says that the merchants in his constituency did not fill out those orders according to instructions, that they gave the recipients any goods they wanted so long as they totalled the amount stated in the order. These orders of course were approved and certified by the relief officers and by the merchants as well as by the recipients of the relief. First the relief officer stated what goods should be delivered, then the merchant certified that those goods were the precise goods he did deliver, and the recipient certified that those were the precise goods he got. If the orders were filled with other goods, or if the recipient was given cash, then both the merchant and the recipient were guilty of fraud and of obtaining goods or money under false pretences. The hon. member for Willow Bunch says that he has inquired of hundreds of merchants in his constituency and that none of them filled out the orders as they were required to do but that they gave false certificates. Therefore it follows that the recipients of relief also must have given false certificates. This simply means that there is not an honest merchant or an honest recipient of relief in the whole of the constituency of Willow Bunch. I do not believe this, Mr. Speaker. I believe the hon. member for Willow Bunch has maligned his constituents and that what he said with respect to them is not true.

The hon. member also referred to the fact that the Prime Minister had stated that notes were taken for this relief because the people of western Canada had sent in telegrams stating that they did not want charity, that they wanted the right to pay back the amount of this relief. Then he said:

> When I was in western Canada, on every platform I stood, I asked that those who had sent telegrams should stand up, but have never yet seen anyone do so. I believe they were afraid to stand up in case they might be lynched.

What does that mean? It simply means that if what the hon. member said is true the people in his constituency are not like the rest of the people in western Canada; they are prepared to be objects of the charity of this government rather than stand on their own feet and pay their own way. It means that if a man stands up in the constituency of Willow Bunch and says he does not want to be an object of charity he is liable to be lynched. I do not believe that. I know the people of Willow Bunch; I have done a good deal of business with them, and I believe they are good, average types of Canadian citizens. From what I know of them I am quite satisfied that in this statement also the hon. member has maligned his constituents. I do not believe they entered into this conspiracy to defraud; I do not believe they are prepared to take charity rather than pay their own way, and I seek to rescue the reputation of those people from the aspersions which have been cast upon them by their representative in this house.

I should like to make one further reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Willow Bunch this afternoon. Dealing with the budget he spoke of this government instructing Mr. McFarland to indulge in gambling on the Winnipeg grain exchange. The hon. member said that Mr. McFarland was put in there to sell the carry-over that was held by the pool, and that instead of doing so he bought wheat futures, or in other words did not do what the government placed him there to do. I do not know whether the hon. member knew what he was talking about; I do not know whether he understood the problem Mr. McFarland had to solve. The fact is simply this, that Mr. McFarland was given the task of disposing of that large carry-over held by the pool. How could he do it? He had to sell that grain and no one would buy it unless he could sell futures against his purchases. Mr. McFarland had to buy those futures in order to make that transaction possible. In other words, in buying those futures he was doing the very thing the government placed him there to do; he was selling the grain. The hon. member for Willow Bunch said that was gambling, and that Mr. McFarland and the government should not have indulged in this practice. I am not going into the question of the moral right or wrong of dealing in futures; that is not the question. The fact is that this is the system of handling grain in this country at the present time; there is no other system. Mr. McFarland did not have the time or the means to step in and change the whole marketing system of the world in order to dispose of that surplus. He could dispose of it only in one way and, that was through the ordinary channels of trade and the ordinary means at his disposal. He used those means, and he did so legitimately. If they are wrong that is something that will have to be considered, though a royal commission appointed by this government has decided that this system is necessary and is the best that has so far been devised. That being so I think the hon. member, when he made those statements to-day, should have known that he was giving an entirely wrong impression to the people of this country when he tried to give them to understand that Mr. McFarland was deliberately gambling in futures for the purpose of making up something he thought this country had lost.

I have referred to these matters, Mr. Speaker, as I stated in my opening remarks, because I believe that the people of Canada expect the members of this house to approach the business of the country from a business standpoint instead of waging political battles on the floor of the house. Such statements as those made by the hon. member in the speeches to which I have referred do not tend to establish confidence in our institutions of government but rather cause people to lose faith in those institutions. I believe such statements are responsible for a good deal of the discontent and unrest that we have in Canada to-day.

Now I should like to refer briefly to one or two matters dealt with by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) in his speech on the budget. I always have had a good deal of admiration for the hon. member, but I must say that some of his remarks rather surprised and disappointed me. I should like to say a word with regard to his reference to the amount placed in the estimates for the radio commission. At page 3372 of Hansard he is reported as having said:

> Now let me mention one or two other matters that are in the minds of the people, though hon. gentlemen opposite may say they are minor matters. I imagine there were very few people in this country, when they saw the contents of this budget, with the taxes which are being imposed and the lack of any real reduction in expenditure, who did not immediately think of the radio commission, for which we are being asked to vote $1,000,000 at a time like this.

I should like to direct attention to this, Mr. Speaker: First of all the hon. member mentioned high taxation and then referred to this amount being placed in the estimates at a time like this. Apparently he desired to leave in the minds of the people the idea that these taxes were being levied in order to raise this amount for the radio commission. The hon. member knows, or ought to know, that this money has been collected in radio licence fees. I have inquired from the government and I find that the Department of Marine has collected about $1,500,000 through the sale of radio licences. Last year we appointed a committee of this house to consider the question of radio broadcasting and to bring in a report. That report was unanimous, and was signed by every member of the committee; I think it passed through this house with greater unanimity than has been shown in regard to any report presented since I have been here. I do not think one dissenting voice was raised. If any hon. member is interested the report appears at page 2710 of Hansard for last session. Recommendation (d) contained in that report was as follows:

> That all revenues obtained from licence fees, sale of advertisement and other revenues accessory to the business of broadcasting be used by the commission in the interests of radio.

The act also provides that these licence fees shall be paid into the consolidated revenue fund. True there is no way of identifying that money, but there is a recommendation in the report providing that these fees shall be used by the commission in the interests of radio. If that is wrong, then the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is just as responsible as any member on this side. Indeed, every hon. member who sits opposite is equally responsible with those on this side of the house because it was the most nearly unanimous vote we have had in this house in a long time.

Mr. YOUNG: No; it was not unanimous.

Mr. BEYNON: Probably there was one objection; I did not know the hon. member was present on that occasion. Apart from him, however, it was the most nearly unanimous vote we have ever had in this house, and yet the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth tries to leave with the people the impression that this government is taxing them for the purpose of voting $1,000,000 to the radio commission. What does that mean? How can we expect the people to have confidence in the institutions of government if an hon. member who has been a minister of the crown is going to stand up in this house and, at least by his conduct or his silence, endorse what the government does to-day, and then try to escape responsibility for it to-morrow? That is precisely what the hon. member was doing.

I refer now to another remark made by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth. He said to the Minister of Finance: What did the government of Great Britain do when they found that their revenues would not meet expenditures? Why, they reduced expenditures; they economized. Now, that seems a very, very reasonable thing to do, but I would point out that in all the time since I have been in this house I have not known one retraction in expenditures proposed by this government which has not been opposed by the official opposition—not one. It might be that in some of its proposals of reduction in expenditures the government would be wrong, but it is inconceivable that in all these proposals it can be wrong. Surely it must have been right sometimes; yet we find the opposition, so far as I can remember at any rate, opposing practically every proposed retraction in expenditures, and when they come to deal with the budget they turn around and ask, "Why doesn't the government economize?"

The hon. member also made some references to the tariff. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very keen about the tariff; this is their pet subject. My hon. friend referred to a statement made by Sir John Aird, as reported at page 3379 of Hansard. Sir John Aird is quoted as speaking of the recognition in several quarters that extreme protection had proved a boomerang, and he used the phrase nationalistic mania, a phrase which the hon. gentleman commended to the attention of the Prime Minister. And he says that he thinks that on this occasion Sir John Aird must have had in mind the dumping duties applied by this government. He tries to leave with the people the impression that the strangulation of Canada's trade is attributable to the duties imposed by this government. It happens, however, that there are those who do not take the same view. Let me quote now, not from a Conservative, not from a friend of this government, but from the leader of liberalism in the province of Saskatchewan. I have before me the report of a speech delivered by the Hon. James G. Gardiner, the present leader of the Liberal opposition in Saskatchewan and ex-premier of the province, and this is what he said in Grand Coulee in March last:

> Canada was suffering to-day, said Mr. Gardiner, because of the high tariffs imposed on Canadian exportable foodstuffs by European countries. These tariffs had been placed against Canadian goods, not because of antagonism to Canada, but as an inducement to the people of the European countries to produce more food. These tariffs will remain—

How long? So long as the dumping duties remain? No; that is not what Mr. Gardiner says.

> These tariffs will remain just so long as those countries believe there is an immediate danger of war, and foodstuffs within their own boundaries are required.

That comes from a leader of liberalism in Saskatchewan; he has placed the tariff problem where it belongs in relation to the strangulation of trade. It belongs to those countries which have placed their tariffs against our goods, due not, as he points out, to antagonism to this country, or to the desire to retaliate, but to the fact that they have a problem of their own to solve.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth knows as well as anyone else does that the tariffs placed by this government have been placed for the purpose of saving this country, for the purpose of saving the industrial and financial fabric of the country; and he knows as well as anyone else does that it would spell blue ruin to Canada if these tariffs were taken off. I believe that the leader of this government is more in favour of low tariffs than the leader of the official opposition, and I think he has done more to bring about a proper adjustment of world tariffs than any leader of any government we have had in Canada, and this not by throwing down our tariff barriers but by putting them up so that others might see that they could not exploit this country while keeping up their own tariff walls. That is why we now have some prospect of entering into a trade agreement with the United States.

Mr. D'ARCY B. PLUNKETT (Victoria): I am sure that every hon. member of this house realizes, as every member of any legislative body anywhere in the world must admit, that the ways of ministers of finance are not easy in these times. It is therefore a pleasure for me to-night to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the very able budget he has brought down and the manner in which it was presented, and to assure him of the great expectations we have with respect to it.

With the indulgence of the house I purpose to-night to refer to some aspects of the late empire economic conference and the treaty arrived at. I did not speak last fall nor have I spoken during the present session, and I trust therefore that the house will forgive me for bringing this matter up at this late date. When I look back upon that treaty and think of the great Liberal party of Canada, and when I see how it has denied its own views in opposing the consummation of that treaty, I sometimes wonder where hon. gentlemen opposite find the strength to maintain their position. In that connection I wish to read a statement made in 1930 by the Hon. Mr. Dunning, then Minister of Finance in the late Liberal government, when he brought down the budget that proposed the countervailing duties. We never hear anything about countervailing duties now; they are forgotten. In fact, I think the word is now counterfailing; it was a budget that passed over the counter but it was never accepted. Perhaps it was a remnant, but this is what Mr. Dunning said at that time:

> But we believe that within the British community of nations lies the greatest measure of opportunity for mutual development of trade because of our common heritage, kindred institutions and a common patriotism.

I am sure the house can grasp the meaning of those words which were endorsed by the party as an election appeal and then repudiated two years later in no mild way. This house had to suffer for six weeks listening to criticism which could have been made in three. We had to suffer and listen to the most rabid speeches. Finally they accepted the agreements and now they are claiming virtue. But that is nothing new as far as the Liberal party is concerned. As trade with Great Britain increases we may expect the Liberal party to take the stand that it was only criticism they were offering. They are turning now to their old friends the United States of America.

Mr. YOUNG: We have lots of company.

Mr. PLUNKETT: The Conservative party has always been ready to negotiate a treaty with the United States but it has not been ready to let a country raid our markets to the extent of nearly $900,000,000 in one year. I should like to quote what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) said with reference to British preference when seeking election in his own city. His statement was even worse than that of Mr. Dunning and it must be hard for his party to swallow. He used these words:

> British preference will divert $200,000,000 of Canadian purchases to Great Britain from the United States. Great Britain will buy $300,000,000 of Canadian foodstuffs.

The hon. member knew what business could be done with Great Britain and he knew also that that country was going off the gold standard. He continued:

> British preference means that Canada will give Great Britain and other parts of the British empire the right to sell to us under more favourable terms than we offer foreign countries those commodities which we do not produce economically ourselves. In other words, Liberal policy is: We prefer to trade with the empire.

But listen to just how consistent the hon. member is when he speaks in this house. Last fall he said that the treaty was an attempt to set up an imperial economic unit, and he then described the whole treaty as an iniquitous agreement which had failed completely to deal with the question of exchange and empire content. Surely that was a right about face! But such a thing is not unusual with the Liberal party.

It has been stated by members of the Liberal party that a national unemployment commission or committee should have been appointed. Let us study this matter for a moment to see what is involved. How would this commission be set up? Would we select one member from each province? Would it be a royal commission to travel up and down the country as they usually do inquiring into conditions existing in each province and realizing finally that the problems of one province were not those of another? It must be remembered that Ontario and Quebec are manufacturing and agricultural provinces; the three prairie provinces are grain producers while the lumbering business takes first place in British Columbia. Would a national committee be able to carry on this work as economically as committees set up by the provincial governments? These provincial commissions understand the conditions prevailing in their own provinces, and they do not interfere with local jurisdiction or provincial rights. These statements may sound fine when they are made but they are vastly different when they are analysed. I do not think anyone would expect a commissioner from Quebec or the maritime provinces to understand the problems of British Columbia. This would have been a costly enterprise.

It has been said also that the unemployed should be put to work on provincial and dominion public works. I have spoken with many contractors and they tell me that the difficulty is not in putting these men to work but in getting them to do some work. These men contend that the state owes them a living and many of them do not realize just what is the state. The state is the taxpayers of Canada, just as long as the people pay taxes and no longer. There is the idea abroad that certain taxpayers should keep others who are unemployed. We all regret the conditions that prevail but to my mind it would mean nothing less than bankruptcy to start out on the construction of costly public works. The difficulty is to get these people to believe that they have to work once more. This is one of the problems which we must contend with in unemployment relief.

Certain Liberal policies remind me of some handshakes I have received. There is the gesture of the proferred hand with no sincerity behind it, and so it is with some of their policies. Many of us have shaken hands with people who suddenly withdrew their hands as though they were hurting our feelings. Very often the Liberals bring out a policy and suddenly withdraw it, but such action has never hurt the feelings of the people of Canada. That party is now commencing an era of saving. It was refreshing the other night to hear the hon. member for West Middlesex

(Mr. Elliott) and Quebec South (Mr. Power) criticizing the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) for spending too much. That was such an unusual occurrence that I decided to look up the record of the late Liberal government for the last ten years it was in power. I found that the Department of Public Works under the Liberal regime spent on an average of $23,000,000 per year, while the same department during three years of Conservative regime spent on an average of only $17,000,000 per year. I hope this saving will not be carried too far or it may mean that the wages of the charwomen which were advanced so handsomely just before the last elections will have to be reduced.

I often regret that the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) does not make up his mind to speak on something else than the civil service. I have no doubt that if he did so he would make a splendid speech. He seems to have the idea that the only place in Canada where there is a civil service is in Ottawa; he forgets that there are just as loyal civil servants right across Canada. These civil servants have taken the ten per cent cut just the same as those in Ottawa. He seems to forget that it is taxpayers who are paying the salaries of these civil servants, and there are many taxpayers who have never seen a civil servant. The hon. members for Ottawa have great ability and I am sure it would prove to be refreshing if they would speak upon some other subject than the civil service. Civil servants across Canada have asked me: "Are the civil servants in Ottawa any better than we are? The members for Ottawa speak oftener for the civil service than does the member from my constituency." I find it hard to answer such a question. I feel that the civil servants are just as loyal in one part of Canada as in another.

Speaking of bank failures, we should be gratified at and proud of the situation in Canada. Bank failures in the United States during recent years have amounted to 9,366, involving deposits of $4,271,000,000, ending finally with temporary suspension of all banks including the federal reserve system. In Canada there have been no bank failures since 1923, and not one depositor has lost a dollar through bank failures in this country since that year.

The proposal of the government to appoint a royal commission to study our banking and monetary system and to make recommendations is excellent, but I believe this commission should have wider powers of inquiry or jurisdiction and that authority should be given to it to inquire into and report upon the conduct of all stock exchange transactions. It may not be logical to combine these two commissions, but there is throughout Canada to-day more regret, discontent and unrest in regard to future business transactions and the stock exchanges than there has ever been before in our history. It seems to be a racketeering job in Canada for promoters to get hold of some well established old firm, where perhaps the man who made the business has passed away and the younger generation is not so much concerned with the good name of the business that was built as with the money they can get out of it. So they are approached by these promoters, and on the name of that very old firm and its reputation, people buy those stocks after they have been watered to the depths. Then the banks ask for their interest and the firm is unable to pay it. There must come a time when stock exchanges will have to be examined and we shall have to provide regulations to control the issuance of stock beyond a certain degree or margin of safety for investors, or, in other words, curtailment or control of watered stock operations by high pressure salesmen or promoters. When that is done, I believe it will be of more value than anything else in bringing confidence back to the nation. I know many old firms that have been closed up and incorporated into other companies. Such firms were of great service to the country at the time. Small shoppers could get extended credit from them. To-day if you go into any incorporated company which has become a large concern and do not pay in thirty days, they close you out. But the old responsible firm which carried these people, which extended their credit for the time being, did not have watered stock; that was the difference. The next purposeful step this government takes should be to appoint a commission to inquire into stock exchange transactions and to stop promoters and high pressure salesmen from flooding the market with watered stock.

Speaking of the new party, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—and I am not going to join them up with Russia; I do not want any of them for a moment to think that; I do not believe they have quite reached that depth in the mire—I have never been able to understand what they mean by planned economy. Let us look at this nation, its infancy and how it has grown. Could we have accomplished what we have if we had not had some system of planned economy? Another statement which my hon. friends often make is: "The capitalistic system has failed." There is some excuse for its slipping once after the many years through which it has carried us, after the great nation it has built here, after constructing, as it has, transportation systems across this country. Are we going to condemn all those things because we have been brought back to the light, to frugality and a better mode of living? Are we to give up all the things we have won—our social and labour legislation, hospitalization, mothers' pensions, mothers' allowances, old men's homes? Is that the product of a backward nation and a system that has failed? I think not. Are we to condemn it because for four or five years we have travail and hard labour? Perhaps we need this; we may not have been working along the right line.

My hon. friends speak of an increase in commodity prices. We all wish for that. It is easy to make statements and to express wishes in a general way, but it is quite another thing when we try to work them out in applying them. No inference or indication has yet been given by the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party that they have evolved a system, that they have got down to facts and can advise us of any definite arrangements they are making for the government of the country. The suggestion was made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) that we should confiscate all incomes over $20,000 a year. That is a different matter. I do not know whether the people will accept it or not. My hon. friends, however, have been insistent in quoting to us views of professors on economics. The other day I came across something which I am going to read for the benefit of members of the C.C.F. party and any others to whom it may apply, who may have extreme ideas and wish to change the whole system. This is a statement made by G. D. H. Cole, reader in economics in the University of Oxford and member of the Economic Advisory Council, in a book recently written by him:

> Indeed there are some people who go so far as to attribute almost all our economic difficulties to the misuse of money, and hold that everything can be put right by a change in monetary policy without making any fundamental alteration in the other aspects of economic organization. These are "currency cranks" whose doctrines have at all times of economic distress exercised an extraordinary fascination over men's minds, so that whenever anything goes wrong with the industrial system it is safe to predict that a fresh batch of infallible plans for restoring prosperity by the manipulation of money will promptly make its appearance . . . For it is so fatally easy to go stark staring mad in thinking and talking about money, and those whom the madness grips appear to become fatally incapable of talking sense on any subject.

That is from a professor and I believe it will have great effect with the members of the C.C.F. party, for we have had to suffer in this house quotations from so many professors, it is a relief to find one a little bit different from those who so far have been quoted to us.

I wish to speak for just a moment on one or two points of the Liberal platform. Let me take the first:

> To deal with unemployment "through a representative national commission which would cooperate with the provinces and municipalities."

Are we not doing that now at less cost to the dominion than as proposed by them?

> As a permanent measure, the party was pledged "to institute policies which will serve to provide employment by reviving industry and trade and the institution of a national system of unemployment insurance.

When the Liberal party were in power, they did not establish a national system of unemployment insurance, although they had the opportunity.

Another of their points is:

> To promote "trade with all nations—"

This is really laughable.

> "—and negotiate trade agreements with any countries willing to trade with Canada on a reciprocal basis."

I do not think there would be any objection to this government doing that; it is what this party is anxious to do at all times. That is another great platform and not new. But the last one, the fourteenth, is a gem:

> Overhauling of the costs of government, federal, provincial and municipal.

Yet we have the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) continuously telling us not to interfere with the provinces; if you do that, it is unconstitutional. Nevertheless he would control their finances, run their governments notwithstanding this great constitutional fetish which he carries about with him.

What reason have we to be discouraged? I speak particularly to the western members. It is peculiar to note that due to the blinding partisanship of hon. members from Vancouver and other parts of British Columbia they can see nothing good in their native province. If one were to listen to what some hon. members from British Columbia have to say, he would almost imagine that that province is on the road to oblivion. In that connection I shall quote from that great Vancouver paper, The Sun:

> Vancouver's trade greatest in four years. Four hundred shiploads of grain alone. General export has big improvement.

Here is where Vancouver begins to get a little bit jealous. Vancouver has never been noted for generosity, so they say.

Total exports apart from grain experienced a decline of 150,000 tons from 1931.

New Westminster gets benefit. To some extent this loss was only nominal. The port growth of New Westminster, which in 1932 reached heights never before attained, has been made to a degree at Vancouver's expense. Some commodities, like metal and fruit, which formerly moved mostly through Vancouver, now go out chiefly through Vancouver's companion port on the Fraser.

If you interfere with the trade of Vancouver, or get a greater share of the trade than she does, you will be called a chum; or pal; that is the way they figure. Hon. members from British Columbia never tell any of these facts. So far as they are concerned one would be led to believe there is nothing but destitution on the Pacific coast.

Then in The Sun of another date we find the following:

Vancouver's vast foreign trade; 80 ships at sea with British Columbia goods. Colourful port activity hardly equalled in world centres.

The article continues:

The shipping season is at the peak of its seasonal rise. Thousands of tons of Canada's products are moving daily to a hundred different lands. The harbour throbs with steamships, motorships, towboats, gasboats . . . On one day last week 25 deep sea carriers, representing seven different maritime nations were in Vancouver harbour at the same time . . . As many as 17 ships to take grain were in port together on one day last week and not five minutes delay was recorded by them according to harbour board officials.

There are capital investments coming into Canada. Many United States firms have built branch industrial and commercial houses in this country, and have been spending money here. Our trade with Great Britain has increased, and the prices received for our agricultural products compare favourably with those obtaining in any other part of the world. Our Canadian citizens are coming home. This year four Canadian families about which I know returned to Victoria in my province.

When we consider all these factors we should not persist in carping criticism and political partisanship, but should accept the difficulties and try to meet them. If the Liberal party feel they should be in power there may come a time when they will have an opportunity to criticize the present government, but when we are going through these difficult times they are not acting properly or from the national point of view when they try to influence the faith of our people in Canadian institutions.

[Mr. Plunkett.]

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I hope the house will bear with me as I speak in the closing stages of the debate. First I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the very able manner in which he presented the budget. I congratulate him further upon his imagination and upon the spirit of progress reflected in his utterances. I believe however that the budget is not one upon which I can altogether congratulate the government. I make bold enough to offer a few comments, particularly with regard to one phase of the speech, because I believe I have peculiar qualifications for knowing something about the returned soldier problem.

I believe I am the only member of the house who has been a pensioner, a returned soldier and at one time a civil servant. In 1920 I was chairman of the committee of the Great War Veterans' Association of Ottawa when it went before the government concerning pension legislation. On that occasion the one principle which we espoused, and which the government accepted, was that no matter how much a returned soldier was given by way of pension, that pension would never be taken into consideration by industry in fixing his emolument. I believe that principle is enshrined in the Pension Act.

We are passing through very difficult times, when the very fabric of the state is in danger, when industry has collapsed, when unemployment is rife, and when all Canadians have to be called upon to make sacrifices. I believe the veterans will not be the last to make any sacrifice which may be necessary in the interests of Canada. I should like to direct my remarks particularly to that part of the budget speech of the Finance Minister which I quote as follows:

In this connection, I may say that with respect to pensioners who are in the employ of the government and who are paid the salary of the position, action will be taken whereby the payment of pension will be suspended during the period of such employment.

What did these men who are in the preferred position of pensioners in the civil service really get out of the war? True, they got a job. They received that position through the Civil Service Commission, and they have their pensions. I believe the Association of United Veterans have appeared before the Minister of Finance and the cabinet and have laid down the principle of equality of sacrifice. They are willing to make a sacrifice, if necessary, but they are asking that other Canadians make an equal sacrifice. I notice that on the memorandum submitted to the government the name of Mr. Ed. Baker of the Sir Arthur Pearson Club for Blinded Soldiers and Sailors appears. In this year 1933, so many years after the war, I wonder if the government —this government that I support, this government that has always stood behind the empire, this government that has brought about inter-imperial treaties—I wonder if they really realize just what sacrifices some of these men made. All they have to do is to look into the glassy eyes of Ed. Baker—that is all they have to do. If any man can stand up in this house and say that the armless veterans represented by Reg. Bowler, who no doubt was before the government; that the legless veterans represented by Sydney Lambert, that the blind veterans represented by Ed. Baker, have really not put to the government a fair case when they ask for equality of sacrifice, then I say that the government is lacking in imagination, which I do not believe they are. I do not believe they can have truly estimated just what this provision in the budget means.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, there were two classes of men who gave service to the country during the war; the men who gave their money, and the men who gave their bodies, their blood, and their lives. You entered into a contract with the men who gave their money to carry on the war—we have heard a great deal about the sanctity of contracts, and in order to preserve our credit position as a nation in the international money markets it is necessary for us never to entertain for a moment the idea of the repudiation of contracts. But I say that a contract was made with the veterans of this country; this nation gave its covenant to them by statute even as to the bondholders it gave a contract in writing. To me, Mr. Speaker, it is a very strange situation, it is something I never expected, it is beyond any flight of my imagination, that a Conservative government, a government of men who love the empire, can dishonour a contract made with the true sons of the empire, when that contract was signed and sealed with their blood. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the Finance minister or some member of the government to give some statement before the vote is called on this matter. I am going to suggest that this is not the time when this matter regarding civil servants' pensions should be considered. There is going to be a measure presented to this house in a few days with regard to returned soldiers' pensions. It is in connection with that that this question ought to be decided; it should not be included in the budget. I am going to be bold enough to ask the government if they will not withdraw this proposal from the budget when we come to vote on it this evening.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I am going to put this proposition up to the government; the time is coming when other Canadians are going to be asked to make a sacrifice in the interests of this country. The time is coming when, owing to the decline of prices, to the very great difficulty that the Finance minister has in raising revenue to carry on the ordinary business of government, that the holders of Canadian bonds are going to be asked to make a conversion. They are not going to be forced to do it by statute; you are going to put the proposition up to them as a voluntary action. You are going to say: We made a contract with you and we abide by the contract, but we ask you as Canadians to release us from that contract in the interests of the country. I say, if you are going to treat the bondholders in that way, treat the veterans in the same way and you will get just as noble, just as true, and just as prompt an answer from them as you will get from the bondholders. It may be necessary, yea, Mr. Speaker, it may be imperative before very long to carry into legislation provisions which will relieve us from the terrific burden of interest which is weighing upon this country at the present time. I do not know that I can put in words what I feel on this matter. I believe that if the government will show to the veterans of this country that there is a financial crisis, instead of saving by compulsion a mere $850,000 the veterans may hand back to this country voluntarily $5,000,000. They are not going to be the last to make a contribution, because they were the first to make a real sacrifice in the interests of Canada.

Now let me pass on to a few items in the budget with which I am in accord. I want to congratulate the Finance minister on raising the income tax. I was rather surprised at the chief financial critic of the Liberal opposition when he found fault with the increase in the income tax. It is rather illuminating to note the contributions which are required in the way of income tax in England in comparison with what is required in Canada. Under the new provisions of the Canadian budget a taxpayer with an income of $10,000 will be required to pay $546, but on an income of £2,000 the English taxpayer is required to pay $1,715, or £353. Then they make a differentiation between earned and unearned income. On an income of £2,000 obtained entirely from investments the taxpayer has to contribute $2,080, which is a much higher tax than that to be levied in Canada. And I believe when the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth made this criticism of the government for raising the income tax he illustrated in a very graphic way the truth of the statement made by Sir Richard Cartwright when he said that oft times in the history of this country the Conservatives had proved themselves the true Liberals while the Liberals were really the Conservatives—using the word "Conservative" of course, in a bad sense.

I desire to congratulate the government on the decision to appoint a commission to investigate currency and banking. There is a wind rising in this country regarding money and finance. I hope that when the appointments are made they will not be confined to merely a bankers' committee. I hope some opportunity will be given to men not exclusively interested in banking to consider these problems.

I also desire to congratulate the government on the stabilization fund. It is a recognition of the fact that after all, money is the blood of trade, and that unless we have uniform money throughout the world we are going to be in the same difficulty that we are in now with respect to high tariffs.

There are perhaps a few other matters upon which I might speak, but as the hour is growing late and we have reached the closing stages of the budget debate I merely want to say this, that in the words of Disraeli, I am a Conservative to stand for all things that are good in this country, and I am a radical to eradicate those things which are bad. I believe there is a great deal of merit in the amendment which has been moved by the group in the corner. As my hon. friend from Moose Jaw (Mr. Beynon) stated, a member does no good by being merely a blind partisan and simply following the party whip. I am a member of what I think is a great party, led by very great men, and I want to tell the house that in spite of the fact that throughout my whole life I have been and still am dominated by ideas I always have had some conception of the reality of things. I believe we have in the leader of our party, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), a man who is grappling with realities and who, when the time comes, because of his character and his courage will be perhaps the one man capable of facing the situation and doing the things necessary to preserve this country and its institutions.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a great deal of merit in the amendment moved by the Progressive group, and I want to indicate why I think so. The amendment was moved as a protest against the continuance of the policy of deflation and increasing unemployment. I do not know but what the time has come when this country must decide whether in the interests of Canada it is not necessary to adopt a policy which will mean more employment and which, to a limited extent, may mean a conscription of wealth in order to develop this country as it ought to be developed. When I speak of the conscription of wealth perhaps I should explain myself. I do not believe we should take from any man that which he has without promising him a return, but I do believe that in times like these, when capital has no opportunity to make profitable investments, or when capital is so frightened—and properly so—of what might be the result of any investment whatever, the state must step in and take over those functions which capital is failing to exercise. Inasmuch as the Progressive amendment is a protest against the present policy; inasmuch as I believe that unless something is done at the world economic conference we will have to come back and put that policy into force; inasmuch as the hon. member for Moose Jaw has stated that now is the time for the members of parliament to face issues and facts and stand up as men, this will be my course: I am not going to vote in favour of the Progressive amendment, because that will mean that I must leave my party, that I have lost confidence in it. But I am not going to vote against it. I believe we are reaching the stage in this country when capital, if it is to be preserved at all, must take a very different attitude.

I had intended, Mr. Speaker, to occupy the time of the house for only fifteen minutes, but I have taken a little longer. My remarks have been disjointed, but before resuming my seat I should like to urge the government to consider whether this whole question of the pensioners in the civil service should not be considered when the pension legislation is brought down. Do the members of the government not realize that the greatest force in Canada for the preservation of law and order is the veterans themselves? Do they not realize that before they compel the veterans, by statutory enactment, to make this sacrifice, they should give them an opportunity voluntarily to assist the country? Do they not think that before these men are compelled to do this there are other interests in the country which should be asked to assist this dominion in its struggle against adversity?

Mr. W. W. KENNEDY (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know it is the desire of the house to take the vote on the budget before eleven o'clock to-night; it is now half past ten, therefore I will take only a very few minutes. I am going to resist the temptation to discuss a number of matters; I will devote my remarks to one subject alone, in the hope that by so doing I can perhaps place special emphasis on that subject. I refer to that portion of the budget address concerning which the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt), who has just taken his seat, spoke so eloquently. His words, the manner of his speaking, the clarity and the simplicity of his statement, have rendered the task I propose to undertake very simple indeed, and I am enabled very considerably to shorten my remarks. For that I am indeed grateful to my colleague from Selkirk.

The hon. member read the statement in the budget referring to the intention of the government to interfere, if I may use that word, with the pensions received by ex-service men in the civil service. Perhaps it would be well if, beside the statement read by the hon. member from the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on March 21, I placed the explanation given by the minister three days later. I will read that explanation to the house. Speaking on March 24 the Minister of Finance said:

> Perhaps in this connection, however, I might be permitted to say one word, as there would appear to be some considerable misapprehension with regard to what is in the mind of the government in respect to pensions. The last thing in the world that we had in mind was any interference with the sanctity of the contract concerning pensions. Whatever merit there may or may not be attached to the suggestions contained in the budget speech with respect to pensions, it was never intended to interfere with pensions as such. Perhaps I should also add for the information of the house that this morning we had a long conference with the heads of the various veteran organizations. That conference is to be renewed, and at its conclusion an announcement of a specific character will be made to the house.

I further understand from the Minister of Finance that arrangements have been made for another conference on Wednesday next with the representatives of the various soldier organizations in this country as well as some fifty others gathered from all parts of Canada, in the hope of meeting the views of the veterans generally as expressed through their organizations. Just here I should like to say —and I speak with knowledge—that the representatives of the ex-service men have been pleased indeed with the interviews they have had already with the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Finance. They have spoken very warmly indeed of the manner in which their views were received. I think the veterans generally throughout Canada, as well as all Canadians, should be proud to have such fair and competent men as leaders of their organizations. In dealing with this matter—which, when it was first broached, came as a shock to the pensioners generally—they did not rush into print at once; they took the good Anglo-Saxon method of meeting and reasoning together, and it is my confident belief, from the assurances I have had from the Minister of Finance, that an adjustment will be worked out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

I am not going into details with regard to the rights of pensioners under the Civil Service Act, except to say this. By virtue of the provisions of that act preference is given, first, to ex-service men suffering from disability in regard to governmental employment, and in receipt of pension and secondly, to ex-service men not in receipt of pensions. By virtue of these provisions of the act quite a number of pensioners have found their way into government departments in employment, in a measure, sheltered. The suggestion in the budget has to do with that class and that class alone.

It appears to me that behind the suggestion contained in the budget there must have been this theory, that a pensioner who was suffering a disability, so found by the Board of Pension Commissioners, and awarded a pension should be considered by that award to have had his disability removed in so far as competition in civil life was concerned. In other words, the proposal must have been premised on this: If I am an ex-service man disabled and the board assesses my disability at thirty per cent and gives me a thirty per cent pension, then it must have been assumed, I take it, that that thirty per cent pension would put me on a competitive basis with another ex-service man who was not entitled to pension. Well, it may do so on paper, but it does not in fact, and that is one point I wish to try to impress upon this house to-night. I think I can do it best by illustration.

I do not wish to harrow the house with scenes and tales of service; I wish to state only facts and in such plain and simple language as I can command. I will not indulge in exaggeration or hyperbole. The facts are these—I will give one instance. On the eve of October 26, 1917, a wet, miserable, rotten night in Flanders, sleet and mud and mire, a wilderness, where shell fire served only to make darkness visible, there went up to Passchendaele the Canadian corps. They moved up through mud and shelling and for two days and two nights they lay in open fields without trenches, ready to go over. They had no sleep that could be called sleep. Not one hour of that time were they dry or warm, but always cold, shivering and miserable. But they were representatives of Canada. On the eve of October 26 they were in the jumping-off position. I will speak of a regiment in what was known as the first wave of attack on the morning of October 26, the forty-sixth battalion of infantry of Saskatchewan, of which hon. members from that province should be proud. At five-thirty in the morning they went over the top and took all objectives, but they were decimated. They fought off three separate counter-attacks that afternoon. They were relieved at midnight. How many came out? I speak of my own knowledge for two left companies of that battalion. Of half the regiment there came out that night one officer, one lance corporal and forty-three other ranks. These were all the men that returned, having been through that experience from five-thirty in the morning until midnight. What about the rest? Many never came out, but a fair percentage did. They were walking wounded and stretcher cases and at night, after the regiment was relieved, searching parties, directed only by the cries of the wounded men, located them and carried them out. These men found their way back to Canada. Some of them are still in the hospitals, though sixteen years have passed. Some of them are walking our streets crippled, and some have found their way into the service of the government of Canada. It is of these that I speak to-night. These are the ones, men of that regiment and of like regiments, who will be affected by this legislation if it goes through.

Let us take a specific case. There is one who stands at the door of this chamber. He receives a pension of thirty per cent—stomach muscles torn away, with a plate in. A government job, it is true, a government job, standing at the door of this chamber. But why this job? Because that disability makes it impossible for him to go out and take his place in the competitive life of the country where he might obtain anything like the job, if one were going, which he would be capable of filling. He gets $30 a month pension and takes the only job he can fill, one that requires no manual work—a light job and light pay. Add his light pay to his thirty per cent pension. Is he put on the same basis as the man without war disability who can fight his way through life? Not by any manner of means.

If this forecast legislation went through it would mean that that man would have deducted from the salary that goes with his position the $30 per month pension. Does Canada want to do that? Does she need to do it yet? And to the eternal credit of these men filling these positions to-day, let it be said that the country has hardly heard a chirp out of them. I will tell you why. They do not believe that this government will do such a thing, nor do I believe it in view of the explanation given by the minister. Sacrifices must be made, it is true. I believe the hon. member for Selkirk was right. In fact, the officials of the soldiers' organizations have suggested, according to the press, that if it be necessary for pensioners to give something from their pensions to help out Canada in her hour of need, they will do so, as they gave their bodies and their ideals on another occasion. I believe they would do it. But Canada is not in such desperate straits as that. I say to the government, so far as these men are concerned, let Canada wait a little longer.

It is still a great army, and I want to say this in closing. The ex-service men of the great war, so far as the Canadian corps is concerned, have been treated more fairly, more generously, if I may use that term, than the soldiers of any other nation that fought in that war. That is a fact. Do not forget this, either, that the ex-service men of Canada appreciate the privileges and distinction they enjoy, and it is a distinction in which I think all Canadians should feel proud to share. I say, let Canada wait a little longer. It is still a great army, but the ranks are thinning, though not with shrapnel; for every day, almost every hour, death strikes. Each spring a little ceremony takes place across this country in our cemeteries, where the soldiers who still remain parade and play the Last Post and then the Reveille. The ranks are thinning. It is an army to whose ranks come no new recruits, but from whose ranks daily and hourly men are being discharged by that great demobilization officer—death. I say to this house and to the government: if it be any advantage to disabled pensioners to have a little pension in addition to their government pay, let them enjoy it not only for their own sake but for the sake of their dependents. It must be remembered that the disabilities from which they suffer will be carried not by them alone, but by their children and their children's children unto the third and fourth generation.

I agree with the hon. member for Selkirk when he states that the budget is not the place to interfere with pensions. The Pension Act is to be amended at this session. If there is to be any change in pension rights that change should be made under the Pension Act. The preference given to these men is given under the Civil Service Act. If it is thought that too great a preference is given, if there are inequalities to be adjusted, they should be adjusted under that act.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Lucas) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Carmichael,
Coote,
Garland (Bow River),
Irvine,
Kennedy (Peace River),
Lucas,
Luchkovich,
MacInnis,
Macphail,
Mitchell,
Neill,
Speakman,
Spencer.—13.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Anderson (Halton),
Arsenault,
Arthurs,
Baker,
Barber,
Baribeau,
Barrette,
Beaubien,
Belec,
Bell (St. Antoine),
Bell (St. John-Albert),
Bennett,
Bertrand,
Blair,
Bothwell,
Bouchard,
Boulanger,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Brasset,
Bury,
Cantley,
Cardin,
Casgrain,
Casselman,
Chaplin,
Charters,
Chevrier,
Cotnam,
Cowan (Long Lake),
Davies,
Denis,
Desrochers,
Dickie,
Donnelly,
Dorion,
Dubois,
Duff,
Dupré,
Dupuis,
Duranleau,
Edwards,
Elliott,
Embury,
Esling,
Fafard,
Ferland,
Fontaine,
Fortin,
Fournier,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Garland (Carleton),
Geary,
Girouard,
Gobeil,
Golding,
Gordon,
Gott,
Goulet,
Gray,
Guthrie,
Hackett,
Hall,
Hanson (Skeena),
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Hepburn,
Howard,
Hurtubise,
Jean,
Johnstone,
Jones,
Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre),
King, Mackenzie,
Lacroix,
Laflèche,
Lapointe,
Larue,
Laurin,
Lawson,
Lennox,
Macdougall,
Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),
MacLaren,
MacLean,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
MacNicol,
McDade,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McIntosh,
McKenzie (Assiniboia),
McLure,
McPhee,
Maloney,
Manion,
Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon),
Morand,
Motherwell,
Munn,
Murphy,
Myers,
Nicholson,
Parent,
Peck,
Perley (Qu'Appelle),
Pettit,
Pickel,
Plunkett,
Porteous,
Pouliot,
Price,
Quinn,
Ralston,
Raymond,
Rhéaume,
Rhodes,
Roberge,
Robinson,
Rogers,
Ross,
Rowe,
Rutherford,
Ryckman,
Ryerson,
St-Père,
Sauvé,
Séguin,
Shaver,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smith (Cumberland),
Spankie,
Spence,
Spotton,
Sproule,
Stanley,
Stevens,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Stitt (Nelson),
Sullivan,
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Taylor,
Tétreault,
Thauvette,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Thompson (Lanark),
Totzke,
Tummon,
Turnbull,
Vallance,
Veniot,
Verville,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (London),
White (Mount Royal),
Wilson,
Wright
Young.—171.

PAIRS

Messrs:

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.)

Ernst,
Macdonald (Kings),
Heaps,
Gardiner,

Mr. HARRIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMOKE: I was paired with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Cayley). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MULLINS: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHORT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DUGUAY (Trans.): I was paired with the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dumaine). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Ralston), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Beaubien,
Bertrand,
Blair,
Bothwell,
Bouchard,
Boulanger,
Brasset,
Cardin,
Casgrain,
Chevrier,
Denis,
Desrochers,
Donnelly,
Dubois,
Duff,
Dupuis,
Elliott,
Fafard,
Ferland,
Fiset, Sir Eugène,
Fontaine,
Fournier,
Gershaw,
Girouard,
Golding,
Goulet,
Hall,
Hanson (Skeena),
Hepburn,
Howard,
Hurtubise,
Jean,
King, Mackenzie,
Lacroix,
Lapointe,
Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),
MacLean,
McIntosh,
McKenzie (Assiniboia),
McPhee,
Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Motherwell,
Munn,
Neill,
Parent,
Pouliot,
Ralston,
Raymond,
Reid,
Rhéaume,
Roberge,
Rutherford,
St-Père,
Séguin,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Taylor,
Thauvette,
Totzke,
Vallance,
Veniot,
Verville,
Weir (Macdonald),
Young.—63.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Arsenault,
Arthurs,
Baker,
Barber,
Baribeau,
Barrette,
Belec,
Bell (St. Antoine),
Bell (St. John-Albert),
Bennett,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Bury,
Cantley,
Carmichael,
Casselman,
Chaplin,
Charters,
Coote,
Cotnam,
Cowan (Long Lake),
Davies,
Dickie,
Dorion,
Dupré,
Duranleau,
Edwards,
Embury,
Esling,
Fortin,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Garland (Bow River),
Garland (Carleton),
Geary,
Gobeil,
Gordon,
Gott,
Guthrie,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Irvine,
Johnstone,
Jones,
Kennedy (Peace River),
Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre),
Laflèche,
Larue,
Laurin,
Lennox,
Lucas,
Luchkovich,
Macdougall,
MacInnis,
MacLaren,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
MacNicol,
Macphail, Miss,
McDade,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McLure,
Maloney,
Manion,
Mitchell,
Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon),
Morand,
Murphy,
Myers,
Peck,
Perley (Qu'Appelle),
Pettit,
Pickel,
Plunkett,
Porteous,
Price,
Quinn,
Rhodes,
Robinson,
Rogers,
Ross,
Rowe,
Ryckman,
Ryerson,
Sauvé,
Shaver,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smith (Cumberland),
Spankie,
Speakman,
Spencer,
Spotton,
Sproule,
Stanley,
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Stitt (Nelson),
Stitt (Selkirk),
Sullivan,
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Tétreault,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Thompson (Lanark),
Tummon,
Turnbull,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (London),
White (Mount Royal),
Wilson,
Wright.—119.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.)

Messrs:

Anderson (Halton),
Beaubier,
Bell (Hamilton),
Beynon,
Black (Halifax),
Burns,
Cahan,
Cowan (Port Arthur),
Duguay,
Ernst,
Factor,
Ahearn,
Mercier (St. Henri),
Euler,
Dubuc,
Butcher,
Rinfret,
Ilsley,
Dumaine,
Heaps,

Ganong,
Hackett,
Harris,
LaVergne,
Lawson,
MacDonald (Cape Breton),
Macdonald (Kings),
McGibbon,
Matthews,
Mullins,
Nicholson,
Perley, Sir George,
Senn,
Short,
Smoke,
Spence,
Stevens,
Willis,
Hanbury,
Perras,
Jacobs,
Deslauriers,
Gray,
Urquhart,
Gardiner,
Power,
Moore (Ontario),
Howden,
Bradette,
Marcil,
Sanderson,
Heenan,
Cayley,
Fraser (Northumberland),
Malcolm,
Brown.

Mr. SENN: I was paired with the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland, Ont. (Mr. Fraser). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS: I was paired with the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. MURPHY: I was paired with the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. HACKETT: I was paired with the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Perras). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SHORT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. SMOKE: I was paired with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Cayley). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

The house divided on the main motion (Mr. Rhodes) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Arsenault,
Arthurs,
Baker,
Barber,
Baribeau,
Barrette,
Belec,
Bell (St. Antoine),
Bell (St. John-Albert),
Bennett,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Bury,
Cantley,
Carmichael,
Casselman,
Chaplin,
Charters,
Cotnam,
Cowan (Long Lake),
Davies,
Dickie,
Dorion,
Dupré,
Duranleau,
Edwards,
Embury,
Esling,
Fortin,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Garland (Carleton),
Geary,
Gobeil,
Gordon,
Gott,
Guthrie,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Johnstone,
Jones,
Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre),
Laflèche,
Larue,
Laurin,
Lennox,
Macdougall,
MacLaren,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
MacNicol,
McDade,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McLure,
Maloney,
Manion,
Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon),
Morand,
Myers,
Peck,
Perley (Qu'Appelle),
Pettit,
Pickel,
Plunkett,
Porteous,
Price,
Quinn,
Rhodes,
Robinson,
Rogers,
Ross,
Rowe,
Ryckman,
Ryerson,
Sauvé,
Shaver,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smith (Cumberland),
Spankie,
Spotton,
Sproule,
Stanley,
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Stitt (Nelson),
Stitt (Selkirk),
Sullivan,
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Tétreault,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Thompson (Lanark),
Tummon,
Turnbull,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (London),
White (Mount Royal),
Wilson,
Wright.—107.

NAYS

Messrs:

Beaubien,
Bertrand,
Blair,
Bothwell,
Bouchard,
Boulanger,
Brasset,
Cardin,
Casgrain,
Chevrier,
Coote,
Denis,
Desrochers,
Donnelly,
Dubois,
Duff,
Dupuis,
Elliott,
Fafard,
Ferland,
Fiset, Sir Eugène,
Fontaine,
Fournier,
Garland (Bow River),
Gershaw,
Girouard,
Golding,
Goulet,
Hall,
Hanson (Skeena),
Hepburn,
Howard,
Hurtubise,
Irvine,
Jean,
Kennedy (Peace River),
King, Mackenzie,
Lacroix,
Lapointe,

Lucas,	Ralston,
Luchkovich,	Raymond,
MacInnis,	Reid,
Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),	Rhéaume,
MacLean,	Roberge,
Macphail, Miss,	Rutherford,
McIntosh,	St-Père,
McKenzie (Assiniboia),	Séguin,
McPhee,	Speakman,
Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),	Spencer,
Mitchell,	Taylor,
Motherwell,	Thauvette,
Munn,	Totzke,
Neill,	Veniot,
Parent,	Verville,
Pouliot,	Weir (Macdonald),
	Young.—72.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.)

Messrs:

Anderson (Halton),	Factor,
Beaubier,	Ahearn,
Bell (Hamilton),	Mercier (St. Henri),
Beynon,	Euler,
Black (Halifax),	Dubuc,
Burns,	Butcher,
Cahan,	Rinfret,
Cowan (Port Arthur),	Ilsley,
Duguay,	Dumaine,
Ernst,	Heaps,
Ganong,	Hanbury,
Hackett,	Perras,
Harris,	Jacobs,
LaVergne,	Deslauriers,
Lawson,	Gray,
Loucks,	Vallance,
MacDonald (Cape Breton),	Urquhart,
Macdonald (Kings),	Gardiner,
McGibbon,	Power,
Matthews,	Moore (Ontario),
Mullins,	Howden,
Murphy,	Stewart (Edmonton),
Nicholson,	Bradette,
Perley, Sir George,	Marcil,
Senn,	Sanderson,
Short,	Heenan,
Smoke,	Cayley,
Spence,	Fraser (Northumberland),
Stevens,	Malcolm,
Willis,	Brown.

Mr. HARRIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. SMOKE: I was paired with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Cayley). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. SHORT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

[Mr. Smoke.]

Mr. SPENCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland, Ontario (Mr. Fraser). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MULLINS: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I was paired with the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell). Had I voted, I would have voted against the subamendment, for the amendment, and against the main motion.

Mr. BROWN: I was paired with the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis). Had I voted, I would have voted against the subamendment, for the amendment, and against the main motion.

Mr. HACKETT: I was paired with the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Perras). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. STEVENS: I was paired with the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was paired with the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. POWER: I was paired with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BUTCHER: I was paired with the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Burns). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. DUGUAY (Trans.): I was paired with the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dumaine). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

Wednesday, April 12, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, April 12, 1933.

Sir,—

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. Lyman P. Duff, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day at 5.00 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

James F. Crowdy,

Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 75, for the relief of Olga Shidlowskaya Lowrey.—Mr. Simpson (Algoma).

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

First report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping.—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

INTERNATIONAL RADIO—TELEGRAPH CONFERENCE

Mr. DUFF:

1. What was the total cost of the Canadian representation at Madrid, Spain, in connection with the International Radio-Telegraph conference?

2. What was the amount of the minister's expenses?

3. What was the amount of the expenses of each of the other members of the delegation?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. $21,621.62.

2. $4,690.

3. Col. W. A. Steel, $4,407.49; W. L. Laurie, $2,109.15; J. W. Bain, $1,979.70; D. Manson, $2,920.19; J. Desy, $2,008.30; J. L. K. Laflamme, $2,375.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—HAZELTON, B.C.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena):

1. What was the total cost of maintaining the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Hazelton, British Columbia, for the year 1932?

2. What is the name of each of the four men who were stationed there, what salary and other remuneration did they receive in each instance, and what were their duties?

3. What did it cost the Dominion government, in 1928, for maintaining the dominion police office in the town of Hazelton, what salary and other remuneration did they receive, and what were their duties?

4. If any increases, what was the reason for same?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. $6,918.58.

2. Corporal L. S. Kingston, $1,532.25; Constable A. F. Unia, $977.40; Constable D. A. Dunlop, $966.60; Constable J. P. Hartnett, $398.50. Their duties are principally connected with the supervision of Indians and the enforcement of the Indian Act.

3. The detachment at Telkwa, British Columbia, was closed and Hazelton detachment opened on December 26, 1928, at the request of the Department of Indian Affairs.

Salaries, etc., for 1928:—

Corporal M. T. Berger.	$15 00
Constable Pritchard..	12 60
	$27 60

Their duties were chiefly connected with the enforcement of the Indian Act.

4. The increases in strength and consequent increase in expenditure is due to the long patrols necessary and a considerable number of night patrols to enforce the Indian Act.

RADIO STATION CHRC—QUEBEC

Mr. LAVERGNE:

1. Is station CHRC at Quebec state-owned or privately owned?

2. If the station is privately owned, who are the owners?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Privately owned.

2. CHRC Limited, incorporated under dominion charter December 29, 1930, with head office at 42 Palace Hill, Quebec city.

FEDERAL LOANS TO SASKATCHEWAN—RELIEF

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were loaned or advanced by the Dominion government to (a) the government of the province of Saskatchewan to provide for relief in the drought area or areas; (b) the Saskatchewan relief commission to provide for relief in the drought area or areas; (c) any other province or commission to provide for relief in the drought area or areas?

2. Are all or any of these amounts to be considered as (a) advances to the province repayable by the province; (b) advances to individuals, farmers and others repayable by individuals; (c) advances to the Saskatchewan relief commission; (d) direct contributions?

3. What are the amounts, if any, which fall into each of the above mentioned categories?

4. Have repayments been made to the Dominion government of any such loans or advances, and to what extent?

5. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing such loans, advances or contributions?

6. What is the total amount disbursed, either by way of loan, advance or contribution by the Dominion government, in connection with relief in the so-called drought area or areas?

Mr. RHODES:

1 (a) and (b) $10,250,000, for direct relief administered through Saskatchewan relief commission; $6,000,000 for seed grain loans; (c) $740,000.

2 and 3. (a) $6,000,000 seed grain loans, Saskatchewan; $600,000 seed grain loans, Manitoba; $140,000 seed grain loans, Alberta; $250,000 approximate balance advanced to Saskatchewan in excess of dominion's contribution for relief in drought areas (1931-32); (b) so far as dominion is concerned, none; (c) none; (d) $10,000,000 (figure subject to minor adjustments).

4. Repayments on account of seed grain loans: Saskatchewan, $410,000; Manitoba, $230,000. Advances to Saskatchewan for direct relief administered by Saskatchewan relief commission, have been reduced by cash refunds of $10,016 and credits in respect to dominion's contribution of $9,989,984.

5. Loans and advances to Saskatchewan are detailed in the answer printed on page 3860 of Hansard of April 10, 1933.

Manitoba (seed grain), P.C. 973—April 28, 1932; Alberta (seed grain), P.C. 975—April 28, 1932.

6. Direct relief in drought areas is segregated only in the case of the area in Saskatchewan covered by special agreement for the year 1931-32. Subject to the foregoing, $16,990,000 has been the total of all disbursements.

PURCHASE OF LETTER BOXES—AMEDEE LESIEUR

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many combination letter boxes were purchased by the Post Office Department from Mr. Amédée Lesieur, of Montreal, since August, 1930, and what was the price of each one?

[Mr. Power.]

2. Was such transaction approved by order in council?

3. If so, what is the number and date of same?

4. If not, who approved it?

5. How many of those boxes are used now, and since when?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. 50 at $46.25 each.

2. No.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Postmaster General.

5. 50—December, 1931.

MAIL SORTER—GILBERT VIAU

Mr. POULIOT:

What is the age of Gilbert Viau, final sorter into lock boxes, city delivery branch, Montreal post office?

Mr. SAUVE: 50 years of age on 21st December, 1932.

NORMANDIN, QUE., RURAL MAIL CARRIER

Mr. POULIOT:

What are the names and addresses of the persons acting as sureties for Mr. Onesime Boudreault, who holds the contract for rural mail delivery at Normandin, lake St. John?

Mr. SAUVE: Origène Hamel, Normandin, P.Q.; Wilfrid Hamel, Normandin, P.Q.

FEDERAL LOANS TO SASKATCHEWAN—SEED GRAIN

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government by way of loans to the government of the province of Saskatchewan for farmers for seeding operations, including purchase of seed grain (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3. Included in answer made April 10, 1933; see page 3860, Hansard.

FEDERAL LOANS TO SASKATCHEWAN—RELIEF

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government to the government of the province of Saskatchewan to provide funds for payment of direct relief in province and municipalities (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3. Included in answer made April 10, 1933; page 3860, Hansard.

FEDERAL LOANS TO ALBERTA—RELIEF

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government to the government of the province of Alberta to provide funds for payment of direct relief in province and municipalities (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3

Included in answer made April 10, 1933; page 3858, Hansard.

FEDERAL LOANS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA—RELIEF

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government to the government of the province of British Columbia to provide funds for payment of direct relief in province and municipalities (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3.

Included in answer made April 10, 1933; page 3859, Hansard.

FEDERAL LOANS TO MANITOBA—RELIEF

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government to the government of the province of Manitoba to provide funds for payment of direct relief in province and municipalities (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

53719—250½

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3.

Included in answer made April 10, 1933; page 3859, Hansard.

FEDERAL LOANS TO ALBERTA—SEED GRAIN

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government by way of loans to the government of the province of Alberta for farmers for seeding operations, including purchase of seed grain (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3.

Included in answer to question No. 8, orders of the day, April 12, 1933.

FEDERAL LOANS TO MANITOBA—SEED GRAIN

Mr. POWER:

1. What amounts were advanced or loaned by the Dominion government by way of loans to the government of the province of Manitoba for farmers for seeding operations, including purchase of seed grain (a) during the year 1931; (b) during the year 1932?

2. What were the dates and numbers of orders in council authorizing the said advances or loans, and amount covered by each such order in council?

3. How much has been repaid on said advances or loans?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2 and 3.

Included in answer to question No. 8, orders of the day, April 12, 1933.

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS—SOLICITOR

Mr. BROWN:

1. Has a solicitor been appointed for the Board of Grain Commissioners?

2. If so, who is the appointee?

3. On whose recommendation was he appointed?

4. What salary does he receive?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Yes, temporarily.

2. E. L. Taylor.

3. Upon the recommendation of the Board of Grain Commissioners and appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

4. $5,000 per annum less 10 per cent.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CACOUNA WHARF

Mr. POULIOT:

Who sold the lumber, paint and the other materials used in connection with repairs to the wharf at Cacouna in 1932, and what amount was paid to each person selling such supplies?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Return tabled forthwith.

CACOUNA WHARF

Mr. POULIOT:

What are the names of the men who were employed in connection with repair work done to the wharf at Cacouna in 1932, what was the total sum paid to each man and the number of hours worked by each man so employed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Return tabled forthwith.

VACANCIES IN TRANSLATION SERVICES

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. How many vacancies have been created in each of the following departments or branches of government in respect of translation services (a) Interior; (b) Finance; (c) Marine; (d) Board of Railway Commissioners; (e) Civil Service Commission, since September 1, 1930?

2. How many translators have been released or let out of the service at Ottawa by reason of (a) death; (b) dismissal; (c) resignation; (d) superannuation; (e) abolition of position; (f) any other reason, since September 1, 1930?

3. What was the classification and salary of such translators in the above departments or branches of government at the time of being let out or released from the service?

4. Upon whose recommendation, when recommendation was necessary, were the said translators released or let out of the service?

5. How many vacancies created by such releases, etc., of translators (separately) in said departments or branches of government, have been filled since September 1, 1930?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CALGARY AND EDMONTON

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of order in council P.C. 1543 of July 6, 1932, providing for financial assistance to the extent of $500,000 of which $250,000 was to the city of Edmonton and $250,000 to the city of Calgary.

Mr. POWER: Dropped.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS

Mr. LUCAS:

For a return showing a list of the names of all persons receiving a pension payable out of the consolidated funds voted annually by the parliament of Canada; also showing (a) the date when the pension was granted; (b) the date from which the pension became effective; (c) the nature of the services for which the pension was granted; (d) the annual amount payable in each case; (e) if a disability pension, the percentage of disability. Also a statement showing the total amount payable annually on the different classes of pensions paid by the government of Canada, and the number of persons in each category receiving a pension.

Mr. BENNETT: That might stand.

WARDEN OF COLLINS BAY PENITENTIARY

Mr. SANDERSON:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, recommendations, reports, memoranda and other documents on the files of the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and of the Civil Service Commission in respect to the appointment of R. M. Allen to the position of warden of Collins Bay penitentiary.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I think a motion in that form should hardly be passed, because there are memoranda placed on file that are not subject to production by order of the house. There is no difficulty about the motion if it is understood that it does not cover documents that are not produceable under such an order. Sometimes memoranda are made on documents for confidential purposes, and should not be brought down in the house; but subject to that there is no objection.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried with that reservation.

DIGBY, N.S.—POSTMASTER

Mr. RALSTON:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports, applications, recommendations, results of examinations and other papers and documents, relating to the pending appointment of a postmaster at Digby, Nova Scotia.

Mr. SPEAKER: With that reservation shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS—SOLICITOR

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence passing between the Minister of Trade and Commerce or any officers of his department, or any other minister or departmental officials and the Civil Service Commission with reference to the appointment of a solicitor for the board of grain commissioners.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the hon. member fix a date? As the motion stands now it would mean since the establishment of the board.

Mr. BROWN: Since 1930.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution carry, with the addition of the words "since 1930"?

Motion agreed to.

SOLDIERS' PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): On March 24 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) a question with regard to the attitude of the government respecting soldiers' pensions. The answer given by the minister, as it appears at page 3354 of Hansard, was as follows:

> That conference is to be renewed, and at its conclusion an announcement of a specific character will be made to the house which will embrace also an answer to my hon. friend the senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier).

May I ask the hon. gentleman now whether that further conference has been held and, if so, whether he is prepared to answer the question I asked at that time?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): The conferences have not been concluded, and therefore I will not be in a position to give an answer to the question until after the Easter recess.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): I suppose that answer applies also to the announcement of a specific character to which reference was made in the minister's statement.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): On February 8 the following order was passed by the house:

> For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, petitions, reports, plans and other documents, in the possession of the government, respecting the post office at Missanabie, Ontario, since the month of August, 1930.

Since then I have been in correspondence with the private secretary to the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), to whom I wrote on March 8, March 11, and other occasions. On March 15 his answer, translated, was: "Referring to your letters of March 8 and March 11 I should like to tell you that the answer you ask is not within my jurisdiction. Accordingly I would ask you to communicate directly with the minister." I telephoned on March 16 and was told to see the minister. May I ask the minister now if the file which has been tabled is complete and, if not, why it is not complete.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): I have nothing to say to-day.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a question of privilege. I have asked for a file and the minister refuses to produce it.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no question of privilege involved. The minister says he cannot reply to-day, and the hon. member must be content with that.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) has raised a question which affects the privileges of every member of this house. An order of the house has issued for the production of certain papers. Apparently part of the correspondence has not been tabled, and the hon. member for Temiscouata has proof of that. I have seen the file myself, and certainly the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) is not acting according to parliamentary usage when he says he is not ready to answer to-day. If the file is not complete surely the hon. member has a right to ask the minister to table those papers.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am rather surprised at the hon. gentleman. Without giving notice a member of the house directs attention to the condition of a file. Obviously the minister should have an opportunity to ascertain just what has been said in order to find out whether or not the statements are founded upon fact, and the minister said he could not answer to-day. What other answer could he make? He might have said, "I shall treat this as a notice and deal with the matter to-morrow" but he said, "I am not able to deal with it to-day." I trust the hon. gentleman has not taken umbrage at the way the observation was made; the minister merely said, when confronted with a statement by an hon. member without having any opportunity to verify it, that he was not in a position to give an answer to-day. The minister said to me over my shoulder that he wanted time to look into the matter and ascertain the facts.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The right hon. gentleman says he is surprised at me. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at him. The Postmaster General was requested by the hon. member for Temiscouata to table those papers, and he had his secretary answer the hon. member. I do not think that is acting in accordance with the usages of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: And it is not courteous.

Mr. SAUVE: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot say more to-day. I know the rule.

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): On March 20, I asked the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if letters had been received from the western provinces with regard to their financial position. The answer was that some letters had been received and that further answers were expected shortly, and the right hon. gentleman said he would be prepared to lay those answers on the table when they were received. I should like to ask now if those replies have been received and, if so, whether they will be tabled before the Easter recess.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Replies have not been received from all, but the premier of the province from which my hon. friend comes asked if the papers might be laid on the table of the legislature, and I sent him a telegram saying that might be done. The other provinces have not yet been heard from, and the papers will not be brought down until those replies have been received.

DREDGING—DETROIT RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ECCLES J. GOTT (South Essex): On Thursday, March 16,—and I am surprised that this has not been settled also—I directed a question to the government regarding a matter of urgent concern to the community in which I live. I sought to explain that huge blasts were being discharged in connection with the construction of a channel in the Detroit river causing very extensive damage to property in that community. I should like the government to see that the company is instructed to discharge smaller blasts in their work. I refer the government to page 3050 of Hansard for this session. Since this is a government of action I think we ought to have some action in this regard.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the blast of my hon. friend I shall look into the matter further, but let me say that this is a matter for the Department of External Affairs rather than the Department of Public Works.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I rarely receive such manifestations of approval from hon. gentlemen opposite, and I must say it is highly gratifying. The circumstances in connection with the matter are these: The deepening of the channel is proceeding, and in order to blast out the rocks from the bottom of the river charges of explosives are being used. If any injury happens, those who cause it are amply responsible for such damage as may be done. In the agreement made with the two countries under which the stream is being deepened, there is provision that the work will be properly carried on, and if damage results from operations the companies carrying them on are well able to discharge any obligations that may arise out of the conduct of their business. I have no reason to believe that they have endeavoured to escape their responsibility, but in view of what the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) has now said, further inquiries will be made at once.

Mr. GOTT: I sought to make an explanation before. I want to explain—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed from Friday, April 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes.—Mr. Manion.—Mr. Sullivan in the chair.

On section 2.—His Majesty bound.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When the bill was last under consideration there was before the committee an amendment moved by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) that there should be added to section 2 another subsection, (d). Certain questions were raised in the discussion and some observations were made both by the Minister of Railways and by the Prime Minister. The minister contended on that occasion that under this bill the trustees to be appointed were to be subject to the Board of Railway Commissioners. He held that there were in this bill the same powers as contained in the Canadian National Railways Act of 1920, while we on this side maintained that this was not so. In the legislation of 1920, with respect to the abandonment of branch lines, the Canadian National Railways were subject in the first instance to the Board of Railway Commissioners and they were also subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council, and we pointed out that under this bill these two safeguards were being removed. We contended that the trustees were no longer subject to the Governor General in Council or to this parliament, if this bill went through in its present form, and the minister endeavoured to prove the opposite. Has he anything to add this afternoon with regard to the construction of the legislation?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): Naturally I have made further inquiries and they have merely strengthened the position I took when the bill was under consideration before. After a thorough study of the question and consultation with the legal branch of the department as well as with an outstanding legal gentleman not connected with the department, I am strengthened in the opinion I expressed on that occasion, namely, that so far at least as part I is concerned the trustees are in exactly the same position as the directors, and the insertion of this amendment would therefore make no difference with respect to part I. Under section 9, subsection 2, the trustees are given the same powers and are restricted in the same manner as the directors. I will read the provision again, although I put it on Hansard on the former occasion:

> The trustees shall and may thereafter, subject to the provisions of this act, have and exercise all the powers, rights, privileges and immunities, and perform and be subject to all the duties, responsibilities and restrictions, which now appertain to the board of directors of the national company.

In reply to that, my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre and some other hon. members opposite pointed out that subsection 6 of section 9 conflicted with subsection 2 which I have just read. Subsection 6 reads:

> No order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies.

This applies only in so far as the governor in council acts as shareholder of the company. As pointed out by the Prime Minister, the governor in council has a dual capacity. On some occasions it acts as shareholder and on others as representative of the parliament of Canada; it is the executive of parliament and acts in that capacity, as will be seen by reference to section 151 of the Railway Act. I adhere therefore to the opinion that the incorporation of section 23 of the Canadian National Railway Act into this part of the bill now under consideration would have no effect on the trustees so far as part I is concerned, whereas it might interfere with the actions of the trustees in cooperating with the Canadian Pacific Railway. So that it would be unnecessary for part I to include that section, while it would perhaps be harmful so far as parts II and III are concerned.

The Canadian Pacific Railway can to-day abandon lines without appearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners at all, but the Canadian National Railways are not in the same position; they cannot abandon branch lines without appearing before the board, even under this section. I maintain therefore that this amendment is unnecessary and indeed might be harmful.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does the minister contend now that the board of trustees must have the authority of the governor in council before there can be abandonment of branch lines?

Mr. MANION: Of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Yes, so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned, even under this bill. That is my contention.

Mr. VALLANCE: Under this bill, then, the Canadian Pacific Railway will no longer be able to abandon lines.

Mr. MANION: Under this bill the Canadian Pacific Railway will be in exactly the same position as it was before. To-day it can abandon lines without reference to the Board of Railway Commissioners at all, but the Canadian National cannot. In other words, the Canadian National has been throughout, from that point of view, at an advantage or a disadvantage, just as you wish to take it. At any rate, the Canadian National could not abandon a line without submission to the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada whereas the Canadian Pacific could and will still be able to.

Mr. VALLANCE: In making an application for a branch line, has the Canadian Pacific to meet the same conditions in getting a charter as the Canadian National? That is, must the charter be subject to the approval of the railway commission?

Mr. MANION: The charter is not obtained from the board, it is granted by this house. The Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National both have to come before a committee of this house in order to obtain a charter, and both companies will be in the same position in the future as they have been in the past. It will be perhaps a little more difficult for them to obtain charters as I think the committee will agree that charters have been granted a little too freely in the past.

Mr. VALLANCE: Do I understand the minister aright? I understand him to say that all charters are granted by this house and that the railway commission would have the right to nullify such charters. The commission may grant to the Canadian National the right to discontinue a branch line but the Canadian Pacific may take this action without appearing before the commission.

Mr. MANION: That has been the law throughout.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I ask the minister just what action has been necessary by the Canadian National in the past in regard to the abandoning of branch lines?

Mr. MANION: There is no doubt that branch lines have been abandoned but I could not name any particular instance at the moment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There was a line at Jasper.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not to any great degree?

Mr. MANION: That is quite right.

Mr. REID: Supposing a proposal was made by one company to the other in regard to the abandonment of a line. If they could not agree a tribunal would be set up. Would it be possible for that tribunal to give a decision as to the abandonment of a line without the company appearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners and the governor in council?

Mr. MANION: One of the clauses of the bill provides that if a tribunal is set up in connection with a matter which, but for the provisions of this act, would require the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners, no order of a tribunal shall be operative without the assent and concurrence of the chairman, who is also the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But not the board?

Mr. MANION: No, not the board. He is the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and in a sense the two bodies are in a similar position. I should like to elaborate upon a point to which I referred a moment ago. Under this legislation it is provided that if one company should decide to build a branch line and the other company took the attitude that such a line was not necessary, that its construction would be extravagant or wasteful due to the fact that the same service could be given by common running rights, this would be considered a proper matter for determination by a tribunal. The tribunal might come to the decision that the construction of the particular branch line would be extravagant and unnecessary as the same service could be given through common running rights.

Mr. VALLANCE: Will it still be necessary for either company to come to this house when applying for charters?

Mr. MANION: Yes, just the same as in the past.

Mr. VALLANCE: Then the tribunal could go contrary to this house which has granted the charter?

Mr. MANION: Yes, it could.

Mr. VALLANCE: The tribunal is to be supreme over parliament?

Mr. MANION: It is all a matter of economy. Might I suggest that it would have been better in the past if some such tribunal had been set up to restrain the useless duplication and extravagance which has taken place. I do not think anyone will deny that if such a tribunal had been set up there would have been no duplication of hotel facilities at Halifax or at Vancouver. The same thing would apply to the building of many branch lines as I have no doubt that in a number of instances the same territories could have been served by common running rights or joint operation.

Mr. HEENAN: I was rather alarmed at the statement made a few moments ago by the minister to the effect that the Canadian Pacific could abandon lines without the permission of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The railway employees have always been dependent upon section 179 of the Railway Act.

Mr. MANION: That section covers terminals and divisional points.

Mr. HEENAN: If you abandon any section of a line, surely you abandon a terminal. Section 179 reads:

> The company shall not, at any time, make any change, alteration or deviation in the railway, or any portion thereof, until the provisions of the last preceding section are fully complied with,—

That is to say, the municipalities and others are to have the right to appear before the Board of Railway Commissioners. The section continues:

—nor remove, close, or abandon any station, or divisional point nor create a new divisional point which would involve the removal of employees, without leave of the board;

I think the minister should develop this point a little further as I am rather alarmed at his statement.

Mr. MANION: If there is any cause for alarm, it has existed for all the years the Canadian Pacific railway has been in operation. I checked up this matter because I must confess that I was a little surprised to learn of it. The Canadian Pacific Railway has never had to apply to the railway commission in connection with the abandonment of branch lines. The section which my hon. friend just read refers to divisional points, and so far as employees can be protected in connection with divisional points, they are protected by the clause with which we are dealing. I think it was upon the suggestion of a labour representative in the Senate that this subsection (a) was included. It reads:

(a) that part of section one hundred and seventy-nine of the Railway Act which relates to compensation of employees for financial loss caused to them by removal, closing or abandonment of any railway station or divisional point;

The employees are still protected just as they have been in the past. Throughout the years the Canadian Pacific Railway have had the right to abandon lines if they so chose without submission to anyone, whereas the Canadian National has not.

Mr. HEENAN: As the minister knows, I am not a lawyer but I have a book here which I am able to read, as I learned to do that at one time. Section 179 reads:

The company shall not, at any time, make any change, alteration or deviation in the railway, or any portion thereof, until the provisions of the last preceding section are fully complied with.

The preceding section provides that the railway cannot make any deviation, change or alteration without submission to the board. It is alarming to me to find out that the Canadian Pacific Railway is not subject to this law the same as the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. GEARY: What is it my hon. friend is worrying about? Is it the abandonment of lines that is bothering him?

Mr. HEENAN: I am alarmed about the whole bill.

Mr. GEARY: I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is.

Mr. HEENAN: The minister has just made a statement that is new and alarming to me because he said that the Canadian Pacific could abandon branch lines—I think he used the words "branch lines"—

Mr. MANION: Any line.

Mr. HEENAN: —without first appearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners and getting leave, but that the Canadian National Railway could not do so; consequently our railway employees who secured the insertion of section 179 have been labouring under a misapprehension all these years.

Mr. GEARY: And it is to remain in force.

Mr. HEENAN: What is the use of its remaining in force if the company does not live up to it?

Mr. REID: To come back to my former point, do I understand the minister correctly that in all matters in which the railway companies will have powers under this legislation, when any dispute arises, the arbitral tribunal which is to be set up, will have power under the Railway Act and over that of the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. MANION: The question of arbitral tribunals does not arise until we reach part III of the measure, and in a discussion of one clause I do not like to deal with the whole bill because it is a little difficult to deal with it in that way. Let me point out to my hon. friend that when a tribunal is set up, the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners is automatically chairman of that tribunal and as regards any matter which would ordinarily be referred to the railway board, he must assent in writing or no order of a tribunal will be operative. So that at any rate the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, being also chairman of the arbitral tribunal, is in a position similar to that of chairman of the railway board if there is possibility of some public interest being interfered with. I do not know whether I have made myself clear, but I have tried to do so.

Mr. REID: With this difference: a matter may go before the Board of Railway Commissioners and it is possible for that board to give one decision and the chairman to give another when a matter comes before the tribunal.

Mr. MANION: If the arbitral tribunal makes one decision and the Board of Railway Commissioners makes another, the decision of the arbitral tribunal prevails.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Has the minister not got this the wrong way round? He makes the chairman of the arbitral tribunal decide first, and then the Board of Railway Commissioners, which is there to watch the larger public interest, gives a second decision. Should the Board of Railway Commissioners as a whole not be regarded as more important than its chairman?

Mr. MANION: I do not think my right hon. friend has seen the point I made. In a case where the arbitral tribunal have decided on a matter which ordinarily would go before the Board of Railway Commissioners, the chairman of the tribunal has to put in writing his agreement with the decision of the arbitral tribunal if the decision is to prevail and then the matter does not go before the railway board at all. But he, being by virtue of his position, also chairman of the railway board, is in a position to judge as to the public interest involved. There is no reason why he should give two decisions; he gives one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why should the matter not go before the Board of Railway Commissioners at the outset without troubling about the arbitral tribunal? If the Board of Railway Commissioners are going to decide the public interest part of the matter, should they not have the first say?

Mr. BENNETT: These are matters that do not in the very nature of things come within the ordinary statutory jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, otherwise it would not be necessary to set up the arbitral tribunal which, of course, has no reference to the matter under consideration. An arbitral tribunal might not be set up during the whole ten years or more, let us say, of the operations of this measure. An arbitral tribunal comes into being only when there is a direct and specific matter to be considered which remains unsettled after negotiation between the heads of the railways. If they fail to agree, this tribunal comes into being, but not otherwise. There can be no setting up of an arbitral tribunal unless they have failed to agree.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But that raises the larger question why the Board of Railway Commissioners might not act as an arbitral tribunal instead of making all these special provisions for such a tribunal where in the end there will have to be an appeal to the railway board.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. BENNETT: With deference to the right hon. gentleman, not appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The principle of the finding of the transportation commission is—and it seems to me it is sound—having regard to the extraordinary powers vested in the trustees and to the possibility of arranging matters so as to effect economy, and having regard to the possibility of difference of opinion between the heads of the two systems with respect not to matters over which the Board of Railway Commissioners has jurisdiction but to a matter within the purview of the present statute, there is to be set up this tribunal; because it was regarded as fairer to both the interested corporations, the Canadian National system and the Canadian Pacific system, that this specific dispute shall be settled, but that advantage should be taken of the knowledge and experience of the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners by his being made a member of the arbitral tribunal. That is, I understand, the theory on which the legislation was based.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But does this not all come down pretty much to a matter of designation? The chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners is the important factor. In one case he is called president or chairman of the arbitral tribunal and in the other he is chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Why have the arbitral tribunal at all if this one person is really to be the deciding factor? Why not say in this bill at once as in others: We will enlarge the scope of the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners and it will deal with these matters, thus cutting out the part concerned with the arbitral tribunals.

Mr. MANION: The answer to that is that the Duff commission in its wisdom made a recommendation to the contrary. It believed this course to be wiser, and the Senate committee, which was composed of representatives of both parties, was practically unanimously in favour of it. Even in the final decision there were only two or three who expressed any dissent from the almost complete unanimity in regard to this method of dealing with disputes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are not the Duff commission; we are the House of Commons, a part of parliament. The fact that the Duff commission makes a recommendation of which the minister cannot show the virtue, does not help the situation in any way. The minister has not made out any case for these arbitral tribunals.

Mr. MANION: I have not been attempting to make out a case for the arbitral tribunals because they do not arise until we come to part III. We have been jumping all over the map; we have been dealing with clause 2 and the committee has been passing from one end of the bill to the other. So far as the arbitral tribunals are concerned I can make out a good case for them on the past record of both railways. They have each spent huge amounts of money to the extent of tens, yes, scores of millions of dollars—and I am not saying it just for the sake of saying it—that might have been saved to both companies had there been such a body as an arbitral tribunal to which one or other could have appealed in order to prevent unnecessary duplication of one kind or another. Therefore I think the best case of all for arbitral tribunals is provided by the record of the past, the wastage that has taken place to the extent of perhaps $100,000,000 or even $150,000,000 so far as the Canadian National is concerned.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mention some of them.

Mr. MANION: I think I could mention at least $100,000,000 worth.

Mr. POWER: What are they?

Mr. MANION: Take as examples the Halifax hotel, the Vancouver hotel. They make up about $15,000,000 between them. Then there are the Montreal terminals, $50,000,000 and the acquisition of obsolete and well nigh useless lines, that had never paid their way and may never do so.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister think this bill will prevent such occurrences in the future?

Mr. MANION: Yes, an arbitral tribunal could prevent proposed extravagances and duplications, perhaps not the buying of lines. They certainly could have prevented the building of hotels, the Montreal terminals and the spending of $8,000,000 on those triangle tour steamships on the Pacific. Those four items alone amount to about $73,000,000. They certainly could have prevented tens of millions of dollars being spent on branch lines, many of which were a duplication of other branch lines already in existence. Speaking just from memory there are about eighty or ninety millions of dollars which they could have prevented from being spent. I am not saying that with a view to criticizing anybody, but rather to indicate that the arbitral tribunal provision is justified because the leader of the opposition suggests that a case has not been made out to justify such an arrangement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My objection was not to having some body to which reference could be made for these purposes, but was to having an arbitral tribunal of which the chairman of the railway commission was to be the chairman, as distinct from the railway commission itself doing this work at the outset. While I do not admit for a moment that what the minister has said is correct, nevertheless if that were so, the argument would be equally strong if the railways had to go in the first instance before a commission already established rather than before some body constituted following this legislation.

Mr. MANION: May I say something to justify the establishment of an arbitral tribunal as a principle. Taking my hon. friend's own argument, the chairman of the arbitral tribunal has had, as chairman of the railway commission, a couple of years of actual experience which in my judgment should make him eminently satisfactory as a judge of general railway matters. He has that advantage. Secondly, the arbitral tribunal has this superiority over the railway commission, that it is presided over by the chairman of the railway commission and there are also on the tribunal a representative of each of the railway companies concerned. You have those three men on the tribunal and they will not sit as does the Board of Railway Commissioners merely as a judicial body, because of course the members of the railway commission are judges just as those presiding over the appeal court and the exchequer court, and they cannot be expected to go into the details of things as an arbitral tribunal could do. The chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, sitting as chairman of a tribunal, with the representatives of the two railway companies may sit down and have a round table conference over any railway matter at issue. I might say quite frankly that I have had the opinion expressed to me by the highest officials of both railway companies that that would be the greatest advantage of a tribunal, that they could meet at a round table conference rather than with the formality, or the fuss and feathers as one hon. member suggests, of a court. I believe myself in all sincerity that the arbitral tribunal as proposed is a type of tribunal superior to the Board of Railway Commissioners for that purpose. That is my own personal view, but after all it is a matter of opinion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What about the tariff board? Why should not they do the same, have a round table conference?

Mr. MANION: I do not want to get off on to the tariff board at the present time because we have troubles enough with this bill.

Mr. VALLANCE: The chairman of the tribunal, who is also the chairman of the railway commission, is assisted by a representative of each of the railway companies on the tribunal, and the tribunal can come to no decision unless the chairman assents to it. He must be satisfied. Is not that right? So why not just enlarge the powers of the railway commission, because in the final analysis the chairman of the railway commission must be satisfied.

Mr. BENNETT: I take it that the committee is desirous of expediting this bill which we are now discussing. With respect to Part III, I would have a few observations that I think might be of some value to the committee when that stage is reached. I had thought that this was merely an incidental discussion, but I do think that if we are going to make any progress with the bill we should confine ourselves to the section before us. When Part III comes up to be considered it is not impossible that the house might make out a case that Part III should not be there at all. That is a matter that will have to be considered by the committee as a whole when the moment arises, but I do suggest that if we desire to make any progress we should deal with the sections as they come before us.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would the Prime Minister be agreeable to the committee reverting to different sections and reopening the discussion on them if, in the light of further discussion of other parts of the bill, that is found advisable, because what we are discussing now is very vital in view of our interpretation of the bill? But of course the government may put another interpretation upon it.

Mr. BENNETT: I have always thought that it was a very proper course to pursue if, in the light of discussions taking place in committee, it is thought desirable to reconsider a particular section, that the house should at the conclusion of its discussion revert to it. As far as I am concerned, I have always followed that course, and I think it is a sound one. It would merely mean that in the light of further knowledge and greater wisdom we desired to reconsider a certain section. Certainly I think that should be so, and especially with a bill of this character. But I do feel that the ordinary rules of procedure should be adhered to, and that we should not discuss Part III when we are dealing with a section such as this.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The reason possibly that more time is being taken in committee at the moment than might otherwise have been the case is that this bill did not go to the committee on railways and canals or to a special committee as it should have done. Might I say to the Prime Minister that some suggestion has been made that other bills which have been before committees of another house might not go to committees of this house? I think that we in this house ought to maintain strictly the privileges of our own house and that when we wish to be enlightened with respect to a particular measure it should go before a committee of the House of Commons. This bill should certainly have gone before a select standing or special committee of this house, and then we would have come here in a position to run through the sections understanding their whole significance. But inasmuch as the Prime Minister himself stated that this bill would have to be considered in committee of the whole in this house, I think additional latitude must be expected in the matter of discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not going to waste the time of the committee beyond saying this, that not in my time has any bill been as adequately considered as this particular bill was by a committee of the Senate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: We are not the Senate.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of you would like to be. Might I observe that the Right Hon. George Graham, who was at one time Minister of Railways, presided over that Senate committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He is not responsible to any constituency to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: Just permit me to conclude what I have to say, and that is this, that the evidence taken before that committee was made available to the members of this house. Very few of the members of this house who are now discussing this bill would give anything like the attention and attendance upon a committee that they could give to reading the evidence that was given before the Senate committee. When my right hon. friend says that if the bill had been considered by a committee of this house we could then run through the sections here, that does not mean that the right hon. gentleman himself is going to attend the House of Commons committee. As a matter of fact, he cannot do it and discharge the duties of his office, and therefore he will be dependent for his information upon what he reads and what is said to him. Nor would the ex-Minister of Justice nor other members of the house be in any different position. There was no desire in any way to curtail or lessen inquiry with respect to this legislation. It was introduced into the Senate because it was believed that a more adequate opportunity would be offered there for dispassionate and free discussion and criticism of its provisions than could possibly happen if the bill was dealt with originally in this house and sent to a committee of the House of Commons, to be wrangled over and then sent back to the house, where the whole discussion would be gone over again. I venture to say this, and I know the committee will not misunderstand me, that Lord Ashfield told me in December in England that he could not recall any committee that he had known in his time that had given finer thought and consideration to a measure affecting transportation than had the Senate committee to this bill as he read their reports.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He has not seen us in action.

Mr. BENNETT: He has seen striking evidence of the house being in inaction, and I am not sure that if he were here this afternoon he might not think that was the case today. If I were asked to say what progress we are making with respect to section 2, after an elaborate legal argument the other evening based on an entire misapprehension of section 6, subsection 4—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There is a difference of opinion about that.

Mr. BENNETT: It is open to argument always, and that is the reason we have courts. But I do suggest that if we desire to expedite the passage of the bill or to see that intelligent discussion takes place with respect to it it is not good to jump to part III when we are considering section 2.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have no desire as a member of this committee to stop the progress of the bill. As to the wrangling that is going on in the house now, I will remind the Prime Minister that we amended the Canada Grain Act some two or three years ago, and wrangled for two weeks in a committee of the house specially set up, and when the bill came into the house it took only a few hours to go through. I feel that if this bill had had the same treatment probably it would have been through by now.

An hon. MEMBER: If it had been introduced in the Commons it would.

Mr. RALSTON: As I understand it, the immediate point is whether or not we are preserving the supervisory power of the governor in council and the Board of Railway Commissioners with regard to the abandonment of lines. I understand that it is urged upon the Minister of Railways—if he will permit me to put it that way—by these eminent legal gentlemen, that subsection 6 of section 9 is not inconsistent with section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, because subsection 6 of section 9 has to do with His Majesty in his capacity as shareholder, and still leaves the powers of the governor in council as set out in section 23. But what about the power of the Board of Railway Commissioners under section 23; is that still extant? Is my hon. friend satisfied on that point?

Mr. MANION: Yes, as far as part I of this bill is concerned my best legal information is that the Board of Railway Commissioners and the board of trustees stand in exactly the same position under this bill as the directors stood to that board in the past. The arbitral tribunals may make a difference, but as far as concerns part I which deals distinctly with the Canadian National, my best information is that the position will continue exactly the same under this bill as it has been in the past.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my right hon. friend amplify that, so that we may have the facts? Subsection 6 of section 9 provides that no order, regulation, by-law, etc., of the trustees shall require the consent of His Majesty qua shareholder?

Mr. MANION: That is right.

Mr. RALSTON: Are there in fact any shareholders? I know there is provision in the Canadian National Railways Act for shareholders, but have shares ever been issued?

Mr. MANION: Yes, I understand there are shares of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern—

Mr. RALSTON: But shares of the Canadian National Railway Company?

Mr. MANION: Yes, the Minister of Finance holds shares.

Mr. RALSTON: How many shares, and how long have they been held?

Mr. MANION: I do not know.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the start, I believe, after the order in council was passed following the decision of the privy council in the Grand Trunk arbitration. I do not think the hon. member was a member of the government at that time. An order in council was passed by which the shareholders as existing on the register of the Grand Trunk were eliminated, and the Minister of Finance was substituted as a shareholder. With respect to the Canadian National the shares are held by His Majesty, and there is in one section of the act provision that His Majesty shall be the shareholder. I took the trouble to look it up not long since.

Mr. RALSTON: I have that section here, but I was just asking whether, as a matter of fact, shares were actually issued. The provision is that if shares are issued they shall be issued to the Minister of Finance in trust for His Majesty. What I am asking now is whether shares were actually issued, and if so, how many.

Mr. BENNETT: Shares were issued to the extent necessary to qualify directors. I am not quite certain as to the number each director must have, but in the short time I was in the Department of Finance I signed transfers to qualify directors of the Canadian National system. The shares are held—if my memory serves me correctly—by His Majesty, except the shares necessary to be held by directors; and the executed transfers in blank so that the matter could be dealt with as occasion necessitated.

Mr. RALSTON: I am distinguishing between the different companies.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend is speaking, I think, of shares in the various companies taken over.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the directors are directors of the Canadian National. If my hon. friend will look at the last annual report of the system he will find how it is made up. They are divided into three blocks; first a block of shares that belonged to the government of this country, the railways belonging to the government; that is the old Intercolonial, the National Transcontinental, the Prince Edward Island railway and so on. Then you have a summary of those mileages, and I think it says "Canadian government railways." Then you have the old Canadian Northern and its subsidiaries; and then the Grand Trunk and its subsidiaries, which included the Grand Trunk proper, the Grand Trunk Western and various subsidiaries that comprised what was known as the Grand Trunk system. I dare say it is within the mind of the committee that the Grand Trunk system was made up of a very large number, some fifty-six odd companies. That is the reason, I think, that it used to read "the Grand Trunk system" as distinguished from the Grand Trunk Railway. Then you have the Grand Trunk Western, which was at one time included in what was called the Grand Trunk system, but for the sake of facility in handling the American as distinguished from the Canadian part of the system it was spoken of separately. It was of course and still is a separate entity, incorporated, if I remember aright, under the laws of the state of Michigan. And there was the Grand Trunk Pacific. Those three together constitute what is called the Canadian National system of railways, and under the act of incorporation the shares representing the corporate entity are held by His Majesty. But the act provided for directors of the Canadian National Railway company as well as of these subsidiaries, the lives of which have still to be maintained—and it is an enormously expensive thing unfortunately. You will find in the annual report the story of all these companies.

Certainly directors of the Canadian National system are qualified from time to time. I cannot at the moment tell the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth what shareholding is necessary—perhaps I can find out from the deputy minister. I am informed that only one share is necessary to qualify a director. Those shares are in the Canadian National system. Of course there have to be qualification shares with respect to the various subsidiary companies. For instance the Grand Trunk Western still has corporate entity; has a president, vice-president and all the machinery to maintain its corporate existence. The Canada Atlantic is still an entity, because there are certain securities outstanding, but the Canadian Grand Trunk owns the Canada Atlantic. The same is true with respect to the Central Vermont, that is another striking illustration. It will be remembered that it was reorganized; is carried in the balance sheet as the Central Vermont Railway, Inc., and the shares of that enterprise are held by the Canadian National system. The securities of course are deposited in the treasury. We guaranteed Canadian Northern bonds to discharge the liabilities created by the rehabilitation and reorganization of the Central Vermont system as it now stands. I do not think there is the slightest doubt—though it can be ascertained, because they are in the vaults—that shares have been issued in the Canadian National system and they are held in the name of His Majesty through the Minister of Finance.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the only point I wanted to have cleared up—whether shares had been issued by the Canadian National system as distinct from the subsidiary companies which are still extant and shares of which are held by His Majesty.

Mr. BENNETT: No, they are held by the company.

Mr. RALSTON: The shares of the Canadian National Railway Company incorporated by chapter 172 of the revised statutes of Canada are not the same shares as those to which my right hon. friend has been referring, which are the shares of the individual constituent companies. I was asking whether there really were shares issued of the Canadian National Railway Company as such to which subsection 6 of section 9 would apply. I do not think my right hon. friend is correct; perhaps I misapprehended what he said, but I do not think any share qualification is required for the directors of the Canadian National.

Mr. BENNETT: Each man, as appointed, has been qualified.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not know that, but it may be so. The statute expressly provides that there shall be directors, so I do not think there can be a share qualification required. I was going to suggest to my hon. friend the minister that this amendment now under discussion is inseparably intertwined with subsection 6 of section 9, which appears to take away some control by His Majesty, exercised by the governor in council or otherwise, and it is really that section which gives rise to the great apprehension on this side. I should like to ask if there would be any real objection to doing away with this subsection. I know we are jumping ahead, but I think this is the time to consider that point. If you did away with that subsection, which does not seem to be in the Canadian National Railways Act, that apprehension would be removed, and then we would be back to section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. MANION: I suggest, with all due respect, that we should leave subsection 6 of section 9, because it is quite a long distance ahead. When we come to that we will consider the various aspects of that subsection and if necessary, as the Prime Minister has said, we can come back to this section. Let us deal with this section now, and then when we come to subsection 6 of section 9 we can deal with those questions.

Mr. RALSTON: The sponsor of the amendment is not here, but could we not have the amendment stand until we come to subsection 6? That was suggested by the right hon. leader of the opposition and I think assented to by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would withdraw his amendment with the consent of the committee; then if he wishes to submit it at some other point he can do so.

Mr. RALSTON: Why can we not let the section stand and go on?

Mr. MANION: The only objection I have is that we started on section 1, the short title, and after spending all afternoon on it we let it stand. Now we have spent one whole evening and a part of an afternoon on this section, and we are asked to let it stand. I should like to make a little progress. The Prime Minister has agreed to come back to this section if, in future discussions, anything comes up making that course of action advisable. Surely that should be satisfactory to my hon. friend. There is no trick to it; we are not trying to get this section passed by anything like that, but I do not wish to have all the sections stand as we go along. We would have to start all over again.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think that is so; I believe a general discussion is necessary in the beginning and expedites the matter in the end.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman looks at Hansard he will find the general discussion which took place on the motion for second reading. I would refer my hon. friend to pages 24 and 25 of the annual report, where he will find a list of the constituent companies making up the whole.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If the minister will read subsection 2 of section 2 he will find the words "parts II and III," so we can discuss those parts under the very section we are discussing now.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think that gives us the power to discuss those parts.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Might I ask the minister if he would consider substituting for paragraph (a) of section 2 a provision similar to that which was inserted in the Maritime Freight Rates Act, merely stating that the provisions of section 179 of the Railway Act shall apply.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We have a distinct amendment before the committee, and I understand that the hon. member is referring now to an entirely different amendment. I respectfully submit that we cannot discuss a further amendment until we dispose of the amendment now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): I think the hon. gentleman is anticipating what the hon. member for East Algoma may say. I should like to hear what the hon. gentleman wishes to say.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I merely suggest that the minister might take under consideration the insertion of a paragraph which would bring section 179 of the Railway Act into operation.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Again I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We are discussing a distinct amendment which deals with the abandonment of branch lines.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): If I understand the matter correctly there is before the committee at the moment an amendment to subsection 1 of section 2 which must be disposed of before another amendment may be considered. If the hon. member for East Algoma wishes to submit another amendment after this has been disposed of he will be quite in order in doing so. Might I ask, for my own information, whether this is a correct citation in the amendment? I cannot find any Canadian National Railway Act of 1920.

Mr. BURY: What is the amendment? I thought one had been moved and disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): My information was that there was before the committee an amendment to subsection 1 of section 2, by adding thereto a clause which will read as follows:

(d) the provisions of section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, 1920—

Mr. POWER: That is the title of the Canadian National Railways Act.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): I cannot find that statute.

Mr. POWER: It is in the revised statutes of 1927.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MANION: I do not wish particularly to help my hon. friends with their amendment, but I am informed that 1920 should not be there, that it should be called merely the Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. POWER: In the revised statutes of Canada it is cited as the Canadian National Railways Act, 1920. As a matter of fact the hon. member for West Lambton mentioned the fact to me and wondered why it should be so described.

Mr. MANION: I am informed that 1920 was the date when it was passed, and that those figures do not form part of the title of the act.

Mr. POWER: The title is so given in the revised statutes of Canada.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): I do not desire to raise any litigious question, but the right hon. leader of the opposition sent me a copy of the bill, in pamphlet form, in which it is indicated that the correct title should be Canadian National Railways Act. A period follows those words, and then we have the figures 1920, which is a reference to the year in which it was passed. According to the statute itself the correct title is the Canadian National Railways Act, with no reference to the year.

Mr. POWER: We will not find out for sure until we get the revised statutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): Is there any objection to my striking out the figures 1920 in the amendment?

Mr. POWER: I would suggest that the chairman wait until we get the revised statute, so that we may see how it is described there.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): Subject to correct designation shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to point out that it is rather difficult to dispose of section 2 until we dispose of the proposed amendment in some way or other, or make some arrangement to have it stand until we have considered the other sections. After the long discussion the other evening I thought perhaps we were nearly of one mind with regard to the inadvisability of having any of these lines abandoned or scrapped without an order of the railway board, particularly those lines belonging to the Canadian National Railways, with which I think the people of this country are more intimately concerned. Do I understand the minister to say that in his opinion, and according to the best advice he can get on the subject, that cannot be done now without an order of the board?

Mr. MANION: Yes, so far as the Canadian National is concerned.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then do I understand the minister to mean that in future it should not be done without an order of the board, so there will be no change?

Mr. MANION: There is no change so far as Part I is concerned, which part deals entirely with the Canadian National Railways. That is my best information, and I think it is correct.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The point about which I am concerned is that branch lines shall not be abandoned or discontinued without an order of the board. If we are assured of that it meets many of my difficulties. I take it from what the minister says that that is his view—that it cannot be done now under this act.

Mr. MANION: I said that under part I of this bill no change was being made. When part I becomes law, together with the rest of the bill, the conditions will be in my opinion the same as they are now. So far as parts II and III are concerned, the conditions may be different, but we are dealing with the preliminary portion of part I. Part I deals distinctly with the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not greatly concerned whether it is done by part I, or II or III, or preserved by anything contained in any of these parts, so long as I know that lines cannot be abandoned without an order of the railway board. That is very important to the people of the country, particularly in the rural sections.

Mr. MANION: I have no desire to give to the committee any information that is not correct. I say that so far as parts II and III are concerned, the cooperative measures, it probably does make a difference, and the arbitral board is supreme in that case. As the Prime Minister says, there may never be an arbitral board, because the two railways are now showing a greater disposition towards cooperation than they have ever done in the past. If, however, an arbitral board is set up, it will be supreme in this matter, and if it were decided to abandon part of a line either of the Canadian Pacific or of the Canadian National, and to utilize a section of the other railway, by joint agreement, there is no doubt in my mind that the arbitral tribunal would be supreme in that respect.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If that is so I object most decidedly to such power being given to any board. We know that Mr. Beatty has suggested that 5,000 miles of railway could be disposed of, and then to give any board that ever existed such authority as is indicated, without the endorsation and consent of the government, is simply scandalous. I object to it with all the vehemence and earnestness at my command, and in the strongest language I am capable of. I know what will be done under this authority; the authority will be exercised and exercised to the limit, and the national railway will be the sufferer.

Mr. MANION: What does my hon. friend insinuate—that the purpose of the bill is, in some insidious way, to wreck the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that the government should be the protector of the people they are governing; the government should protect the country and its railway property from any possible depredations and dismantling.

Mr. MANION: It is precisely for the purpose of protecting the country that this legislation is being put through. It is being enacted with a view to having the two railways in the future operate more economically than up to recently they have been doing; for the Canadian National was in danger of wrecking not only itself but the whole financial structure of the country.

Mr. POWER: Does that apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway too?

Mr. MANION: The Canadian Pacific Railway could not wreck the financial structure of this country except of course by reflex action. It is a private corporation for which we are not responsible, and if it went into bankruptcy such injurious effects as might follow would be reflected in the country only indirectly. But the Canadian National Railways could not be allowed to go into bankruptcy.

Mr. POWER: We have the Canadian National Railways because private lines went into bankruptcy.

Mr. MANION: I am not going to discuss the history of the railways. No one knows better than my hon. friend what unnecessary expenditures have been made in connection with the Canadian National.

Mr. RALSTON: Voted for by everyone.

Mr. MANION: I am not questioning that; I am not discussing the history of these matters, nor am I making any references to the late government. I am simply pointing out the situation as it exists. The hon. member for Melville stood up and implied that there was something in this legislation that had for its purpose not the protection of the people but the wrecking of the Canadian National Railways. I do not remember the exact words he used, but that was their effect. Now I resent that. I do not believe that any government, either this one or the late government, would be so derelict in its duty at this time as to attempt to wreck the Canadian National Railways, and I think it is about time that all hon. members took that attitude. Indeed, I go a step further; I think it is about time that writers on behalf of the Liberal party, such as Mr. Deachman, stopped sending out lies about this government attempting to wreck the national railways, and telling about our driving business from those railways into the hands of the Canadian Pacific—falsehoods sent out under the frank of the Liberal whip. I think it is about time my hon. friends opposite regarded such an attitude as disgraceful to anyone. I have criticized my hon. friends; I criticized them when they were in power and since they have been in opposition I have also been critical of them. But I have never accused them of intentionally trying to wreck the Canadian National Railways. I think they made mistakes, and I do not wish to say more in that regard at the moment; but, I repeat, I have never thought of accusing them of attempting to wreck the system, and I think that any suggestion of that kind on their part now is unworthy of them. No decent Canadian would attempt such a thing, and I resent the implication of my hon. friend from Melville.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not going to imply anything now; I am going to say something definite.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) has the floor.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am wound up now; let me run down.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): Do I understand that the hon. member for West Middlesex gives the hon. gentleman the floor?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was going to say that when we were sitting on the other side of the house, being then in power, and hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side, led by another gentleman now in the Senate, we witnessed on more than one occasion the other chamber throwing out proposed branch line after branch line, holding back the prospective national road for a sufficient length of time to enable the Canadian Pacific to bob in ahead of the Canadian National and cover the very same territory. Was that a friendly act towards the Canadian National Railways? I have in mind particularly the Kelvington line and the Bengough, both in Saskatchewan. The Canadian Pacific got in ahead of the Canadian National, the proposed Canadian National line was slaughtered in another place, although the Canadian Pacific line served largely, and in the case of the former, entirely, the same territory. I could cite a number of branch lines which the other chamber held back long enough to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to get into some of the best territory in Saskatchewan. Were such acts friendly to the Canadian National. Is it any wonder we suspect the designs and intentions of the government under this bill? It is not the same government, admittedly, nor is it the same leader, but it is the same party—the Conservative party—and their attitude has been the same from the time Sir Henry Thornton took the saddle up to the present. It has never been any different at any time that I know of.

Mr. MANION: If the Senate threw out bills of the Canadian National Railways and permitted bills to go through for the Canadian Pacific, enabling the Canadian Pacific to go into Canadian National territory, why did not the hon. gentleman as a member of the government of that day hold up the Canadian Pacific bills?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How could you get it past the Senate? The Senate blocked it once and would block it again.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman could have stopped the Canadian Pacific bills; it was during his regime that the Canadian Pacific was permitted to go into the territory as he has indicated.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was done in the other chamber. We did all we could to get it as far as that chamber but it could get no further, and this occurred not once but half a dozen times.

Mr. MANION: You could have stopped the Canadian Pacific bills.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Now that the air is clear once more and everybody is in good humour, may I ask the minister this question. Is it the intention of the government that no branch lines of the Canadian National shall be abandoned except by order of the railway board, as in the past? If that is the case, I think we can make some headway; if it is not the case, I must say that I am very much opposed to making it easier to get rid of branch lines.

Mr. MANION: May I point out to my hon. friend that the Canadian National Railway Company is made up of the Grand Trunk and certain branch lines. As my leader has said, the Canadian National Railways is made up of the Grand Trunk and some of its subsidiaries; it is made up of the Canadian Northern and some of its subsidiaries, and it is made up of the government railways. Up to the present the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific could abandon lines without submission to the Board of Railway Commissioners, whereas the Canadian National Railway Company could not. The Grand Trunk could not abandon lines without submission to the railway commission, but the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific could and can at the present time just the same as the Canadian Pacific. The Canadian Pacific can abandon lines but the Canadian National Railway Company cannot and it is only to that that section 23 applies.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): If hon. members will pardon me, I should like to know just to what section this amendment applies.

Mr. POWER: I regret that I led the chairman astray. I said that the act should be the Canadian National Railways Act, 1920, whereas it should be the Canadian National Railways Act.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): With the approval of the committee, the amendment will be changed by striking out the figures "1920."

Mr. MANION: Incidentally, the hon. member contradicted the minister.

Mr. POWER: I include the minister in my regrets.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It does seem to me that my question could be answered. Is the minister satisfied that the legislation which he is sponsoring makes it clear that branch lines or portions of the Canadian National Railways cannot be abandoned without an order being first obtained from the tribunal?

Mr. MANION: I must point out that we are getting into parts II and III which deal with the question of arbitral tribunals. I should like the committee to stick to the section with which we are now dealing so that some progress may be made and these other matters can be taken up when we come to that portion of the bill which deals with cooperation and the arbitral tribunals.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am just as anxious as the minister that we make some headway but without wanting to be at all disrespectful, I must submit that the minister is now in possession of all these facts and he can answer my question now just as easily as he can when we reach other portions of the bill.

Mr. MANION: I have answered my hon. friend two or three times. Under the arbitral tribunals which may be set up under part III of the bill, lines may be abandoned without submission to the Board of Railway Commissioners. However, I am suggesting that this matter be dealt with when we reach that portion of the bill.

Mr. McINTOSH: There would be no investigation?

Mr. BENNETT: This amendment would apply to part III of the bill. In view of the observations which have been made, I suggest that this section be allowed to stand. We could take up section 3 which deals with definitions. I admit that section 2 is a difficult one but the observations of the hon. member for West Middlesex apply more appropriately to part III. If amendments have to be made to ensure what the hon. gentleman thinks to be desirable, they can be made at that time.

Mr. HEENAN: I should like to ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways to give some consideration in the meantime to the redrafting of paragraph (a) of section 2. The minister has stated that these roads can be closed without recourse to the commission and I am quite sure that paragraph (a) does not carry out the intention of the government with respect to compensation for loss of property and so on. After what the minister has said with regard to the power of an arbitral tribunal to close a station without submission to the Board of Railway Commissioners, I am satisfied that the railway employees are not protected as the government intends them to be protected.

Mr. BENNETT: Inasmuch as section 2 is to stand there will be ample opportunity for the hon. gentleman to consider what he desires to say in that regard when it is again before the committee.

Mr. HEENAN: I am just saying it now; I ask the minister to give this matter consideration.

Mr. MANION: I consider that they are amply protected by subsection (a).

Mr. HEENAN: There is no protection whatever.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the protection that was in the law when the hon. gentleman was Minister of Labour, and it is the protection that still exists; it has not been altered or changed since this government came into power. If it was worth anything two, three or five years ago, it is worth something to-day.

Mr. HEENAN: The Prime Minister does not need to show any heat in connection with this.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the slightest.

Mr. HEENAN: The government of which I was a member never attempted to amalgamate portions of the railroads and throw thousands of railroad men and their families into the streets. If we had done that, we would have seen that these men and their families were protected. Had that not been done I would not have remained a member of that government, I would have walked out.

Mr. BENNETT: Walking in and walking out is the hon. gentleman's strong point.

Mr. HEENAN: That may be, but if I were a member of the Prime Minister's government I would walk out rather than introduce such a bill.

Mr. BENNETT: I have heard rumours and perhaps he is not unwilling.

Mr. HEENAN: I had the chance if I wanted to take it, but I had no interest whatever.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman's efforts were apparent.

Mr. HEENAN: Whatever faults or weaknesses I had, the fact remains that every measure which I or the government of which I was a member introduced gave more work than any measure introduced by the present government and at higher wages than had ever been paid in the history of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: That may be the reason we have to pay out $160,000,000.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman, will you ask the Prime Minister to keep quiet. We have here a measure which gives the arbitral tribunals and the trustees the power to close stations and abandon lines, and yet the minister says that section 179 of the Railway Act will still prevail. The minister has told us that the Canadian Pacific Railway can abandon lines without first coming before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and he has given an interpretation of this section of the act which I have never heard before. If that is so, of what use is section 179?

Mr. MANION: They could always do that; they could do it just the same when my hon. friend was Minister of Labour.

Mr. HEENAN: When we were in power we were not putting this bill through.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but my hon. friends were preparing the foundation for it. In 1929 they laid the foundation.

Mr. HEENAN: I know what the Prime Minister means. When we were in power the Canadian National was earning $22,000,000, $24,000,000 and $50,000,000 over expenditures.

Mr. MANION: There was never a year when the Canadian National did not have to get $20,000,000 from the government.

Mr. HEENAN: The Minister of Railways can twist figures just as well as the Minister of Trade and Commerce can.

Mr. MANION: I am not twisting figures.

Mr. HEENAN: The minister was talking about interest on bonded indebtedness and so on. I was talking about surplus of earnings over operating expenses.

Mr. BENNETT: If I were my hon. friend I would keep away from figures.

Mr. HEENAN: The earnings of the Canadian National were in those days from $22,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year over and above operating expenses, because they were carrying freight. We had no obstacles, no high tariffs to prevent traffic. Consequently you cannot compare conditions to-day when the government is putting through a measure like this with what they were when both railways were on their own. I rose merely to give the Minister of Railways—and he can read this if he will not listen—and the government some credit. I rose to offer a suggestion to them that inasmuch as section 2 stands, the minister might glance at paragraph (a) and rewrite it in order to do what I believe the government intended to do when this bill was in the Senate, namely, to give these men compensation. This is the only clause in the whole measure in which the railwaymen of this country are interested and now, with the interpretation the minister puts on it, it means nothing.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish false interpretations to be put on it. I was not interpreting paragraph (a); I was dealing with the abandonment of lines. Now my hon. friend is discussing the abandonment of divisional points which is an altogether different matter. So far as the railway men in divisional points had protection in the past as regards compensation, they have it under this bill, and they will continue to have it. This was inserted by the labour representatives themselves. This was their suggestion in the matter.

Mr. HEENAN: No, it was not.

Mr. MANION: I say that it was.

Mr. HEENAN: It was not. I understood it was Senator Murdock's suggestion.

Mr. MANION: Is he not a labour man?

Mr. HEENAN: I did not say he was not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is out of order to discuss the Senate proceedings.

Mr. MANION: We cannot discuss this bill without saying where the suggestions originated. This was inserted at the suggestion of the labour people themselves and under this bill it protects and will continue to protect them. I do not know what the hon. gentleman is worrying about. I was discussing abandonment of lines, a question which has nothing to do with divisional points. We have let section 2 stand. Let us go on with section 3, unless it is the desire of the committee not to make any progress on the bill.

Mr. ARTHURS: Just before we leave section 2, I would suggest that the amendment at present before the committee regarding section 2 might better be added in a different form to section 9, subsection 6, where it would be far more effective. I would suggest that the government take into consideration making this addition to section 9, subsection 6:

Provided that no lease shall be made for a term of more than five years, no sale of any portion of the national lines, no branch line or any part of a main line exceeding five miles in length shall be dismantled unless and until the consent of parliament has been obtained.

I think that would cover the whole ground and it would certainly be in a section of the bill where it would be more effective than it would be in section 2.

Mr. MANION: Regarding subsection 6 of section 9, we have been considering, when we reach it, strengthening it from the standpoint suggested by various hon. members, for instance the hon. member for Parry Sound who has just spoken, and others. But as I have been trying to suggest, I should like to deal with subsection 6 of section 9 when we come to it.

Mr. POWER: As I told my hon. friend the other day, it would be far better if we had some knowledge in advance of what amendments the minister intends to propose to these sections.

Mr. MANION: I shall give my suggestions in plenty of time for my hon. friends to think them over. I do not know that I have definitely settled upon this one. I have a possible amendment, but we are considering the matter in view of the discussion which has taken place. I could not at the moment give every possible amendment we may make. Discussion in committee may alter our viewpoints, or may convince us we should make some other amendments. With all due respect may I say that my hon. friends moved two amendments, one of which would have killed the bill altogether, made it null and void and, if I may say so, that was not done accidentally. The amendment that was moved and that would have put this bill out of commission was not submitted in advance to me. I did not see the amendment of the hon. member for West Lambton until it was read in committee by him. By the way, may I suggest to him and others that when they have amendments, I should be glad if they would have a couple of copies typed off so that I might have one to study. It is very difficult for anyone to consider an amendment without having it before him so that he may judge of its effect on the bill.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Parry Sound and the other one will be dealt with when we reach subsection 6 of section 9. As it has been decided by the committee that section 2 stands, let us now go on with section 3.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Before we pass on to the next section, might I point out to the minister that, as evidenced by the hon. member for Parry Sound, it seems that hon. members sitting around the minister are largely of the same opinion as we are regarding the desirability of the government keeping some control over these branch lines and, in fact, all lines, especially those which are in the ownership of the government. I cannot contemplate the government abdicating power over a national railway and handing it over to a railway board under the guise of a pretended movement, owing to the alleged too little control that the former government exercised over capital expenditure, to have proper control. I gathered from the minister that he thought the previous government did not exercise sufficient control. They exercised some. Now the present government is going to cure any ill along that line by exercising none, abdicating, handing it over to a self perpetuating board. I am partly in accord with the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Parry Sound, and I think possibly half of the members on the other side feel on this question just as we do. We should be deserting the rights of the people if we permitted this government without protest to hand over these great properties, not only the Canadian National but the Canadian Pacific, to a board that we cannot even get at, and could not dismiss if we wanted to; and if I understand the terms of the bill correctly we could not do much about their salaries. Surely this is madness personified. It is too much modesty for this government, which is sometimes charged with assuming dictatorial powers, to be exhibiting now. They want to have no powers at all in this matter but to hand over complete power to the board. I do not know what has possessed hon. gentlemen opposite. I know that there must be a lot of members on the other side of the house who feel just as strongly as we do about this great property, especially after we have been told by the Premier that we do not own it at all but that it belongs to the bondholders. Who the Sam Hill it will belong to next I do not know.

Section stands.

On section 3.—Definitions.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): Is it the desire of the committee to consider this section clause by clause?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Section 3 (a) agreed to.

[Mr. Manion.]

On section 3 (b).—"Dispute."

Mr. MANION: It has been suggested by the legal officers that the word "Tribunal" in lines 19 and 24 should not be spelt with a capital "T." It is not a very important change.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is a capital offence.

Mr. DUPRE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It occurs all the way through with a capital "T."

Mr. MANION: There are certain places where the capital is correct, but in others it is not.

Mr. REID: What is the reason?

Mr. MANION: Because in this particular case it is a general tribunal as distinct from the specific Tribunal. "Tribunal" is defined, but not arbitral tribunal.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Should it not be a small "a" for Arbitral as well?

Mr. MANION: "Tribunal" should be left with a capital "T" because that word is defined in the definition clause.

Amendment agreed to.

Section 3 (b) as amended agreed to.

On section 3 (c)—"National Act."

Mr. POWER: We have just had a splendid example of cooperating with the minister in accepting the amendment he suggested. I think we should go the whole way now and spell Tribunal with a small "t." I am sure we should; that is what it means. It is an arbitral tribunal.

Mr. MANION: But "Tribunal" is defined in (h) with a capital "T."

Mr. POWER: But it refers to an arbitral tribunal and not to the Tribunal you are setting up.

Mr. BURY: As I understand it, there will be more than one tribunal appointed from time to time. It is not the same persistent court.

Mr. MALCOLM: Read (h).

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): Shall section 3 (c) carry?

Mr. POWER: Carried on division, on the "T."

Section 3 (c) agreed to.

Section 3 (e) to (g) inclusive agreed to.

On section 3 (h)—"Tribunal."

Mr. BOTHWELL: In view of the promises made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, I think that this should stand until Part III has been considered. In the meantime I wish to move an amendment to strike out all the words after the word "means" in line 10, and to substitute therefor the words "Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada."

Mr. MANION: May I suggest that this would hardly be the proper place to move the amendment because we shall be dealing with tribunals when we come to Part III. It would be there that the amendment would be in order. May I say that we are expecting to go to the other chamber in a few moments, and I now move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Just in answer to the minister, I think that the present definition will be wrong if the Board of Railway Commissioners is substituted because the wording of the clause is that "Tribunal" means the arbitral tribunal constituted pursuant to Part III of this bill, and I therefore submit that "arbitral tribunal" would not be in order if we are substituting the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. MANION: If in Part III the tribunal is made the Board of Railway Commissioners, then (h) would be absolutely correct.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I would suggest to the minister—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Lawson): There is a motion before the chair that the committee rise, and it is not debatable.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Honour, the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate,

And having returned,

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to make provision with respect to forces of His Majesty from other parts of the British commonwealth or from a colony when visiting the Dominion of Canada; and with respect to the exercise of command and discipline when forces of His Majesty from different parts of the commonwealth are serving together; and with respect to the attachment of members of one such force to another such force, and with respect to deserters from such forces.

An act for the relief of Auguste Burdayron.

An act for the relief of Nora Tulloch Carr.

An act for the relief of Alberta Grace Wood.

An act for the relief of Hilda Nice Allen.

An act for the relief of Mary Louise Robinson Reid.

An act for the relief of Elizabeth Bernstein Schmerling.

An act to amend and consolidate the several acts relating to the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto.

An act respecting a certain patent application of Fred Charles Fantz.

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1934.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion—Mr. Bury in the chair.

On section 3 (h)—Tribunal.

Mr. MANION: May I point out that I suggested to the hon. member who moved the amendment to this paragraph that it would be much more appropriate if it were moved to part III, which deals with tribunals. I pointed out also just before we rose that it would not change the definition at all if his amendment were adopted in the end. I do not say that it will be adopted, but if it were "tribunal" would simply mean an arbitral tribunal constituted under part III of this act, so this definition would be still appropriate.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I submit that this definition would not be appropriate. In the first place, if the Board of Railway Commissioners became the tribunal it would not be a body constituted under part III of this act, because that body is already constituted. Under part III as it now stands provision is made for the constitution of the tribunal provided for in this act. I am not going into my reasons for suggesting the Board of Railway Commissioners, because I am following the suggestion of the Prime Minister that we leave that until we consider part III. If it is desirable at this stage that I should go into my reasons I can do so.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend refuses to change his amendment, then I am sorry we cannot accept it. I have already stated to the leader of the opposition the reasons why the tribunal proposed under the present bill is in my opinion superior to such a tribunal as the hon. gentleman suggests. First of all, under the tribunal to be constituted in accordance with this legislation, both railways will be represented, whereas they would not be represented if the Board of Railway Commissioners were the tribunal. They would be represented by witnesses, it is true, but they would not be represented on the court. Secondly, and this is very important,—I have discussed it with those who, in a judicial capacity, should know more about the matter than most of us—a tribunal constituted in such a manner as this will be, whereby the members, after hearing the case and arguing it among themselves, can sit down at a round table conference and go into it thoroughly, as an ordinary court or the Board of Railway Commissioners could not do, would be in a far better position to come to a reasonable decision than would be the railway board in the same circumstances. These are the chief arguments and I think they should commend themselves to the committee. On these grounds I must decline to accept the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I submit that the reason given by the minister for preferring a tribunal such as is proposed in part III of the bill is not a good reason at all. If that is a sound argument, then it seems to me that in courts of law counsel for the respective litigants should sit with the judge instead of with their clients. I took the trouble to read the evidence given before the committee in the other house and I find that even the leader of that house was more or less in sympathy with the idea of having the Board of Railway Commissioners; but he advanced the same reasons against that course as the minister has stated to-day. The Board of Railway Commissioners is a body that has been functioning in Canada for some twenty-nine years and it has the confidence of the people. The head of that board is the man whom the government regards as the outstanding arbitrator in connection with disputes between the two railways. That being so, surely a body that has been trained in settling disputes in railway matters is more competent to dispose of such disputes as will arise now than any other body that might be set up. What shall we have under the arbitral tribunal referred to in part III? A dispute will arise between the two railway companies and the tribunal will come into operation. The best men of both companies will be appointed and their representatives will sit with the chairman of the railway board in order to decide the dispute. But these men appointed by the two railways will not be in a position to be arbitrators at all; they will be simply counsel for the respective railway companies and they will be sitting at the table to advance the arguments of their own particular companies. The result is that in all cases the chairman of the railway board will be left to decide the dispute. There would not be a dispute if the two representatives sitting with the chairman could possibly agree, because they would agree before the chairman sat in with them, if there was any possibility of an understanding. We want to have a board that will be able to give a decision after listening to the arguments advanced. When we come to part III, if this section is amended as proposed, other changes will have to be made. Under the Railway Act at present one commissioner may form a quorum in certain cases and in other cases two. It will be necessary to change part III of the bill, or to make a change somewhere else, to indicate how the tribunal shall be comprised. In my opinion the tribunal should consist of at least three members of the railway board. I am afraid I cannot withdraw the amendment, because I think that the tribunal set up under this legislation should be the best trained body we have in this country, and that is the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I wonder what position my hon. friend would take with regard to the board of arbitration set up under the disputes investigation act, such as is now set up where disputes arise between any of the railway companies and the employees. Would he suggest that the dispute be referred to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and that that board would be the proper tribunal to consider the matter?

Mr. YOUNG: That is something that would not come before this tribunal anyway.

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, it would not, but the position is precisely the same. Under the disputes act, if there is a difference of opinion between the railway company and its employees, the employees appoint their representative to act as arbitrator. The company appoints another and the chairman is nominated either by the two or by the Minister of Labour, and thus the board of arbitration is constituted. In the present instance there may be a dispute between the two railway companies as to what is to be done in a particular case—whether they will take off a through train of the Canadian Pacific and allow the Canadian National to do all the business, or vice versa. If an agreement cannot be reached, the matter will go to arbitration. My hon. friend's suggestion is that it be referred to a board made up entirely of nominees of the owners of one of the railways, and that the other railway shall not have any representation on the board at all.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at all.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is exactly what it means. The Board of Railway Commissioners is appointed by the government of Canada, parliament acting through the government, and it is suggested that the board shall be the sole arbitrator. Neither of the companies may be represented on it at all. On the other hand, the arbitral tribunal is just what it means, a board of arbitration to decide a dispute between the two railway companies, and one company has the same right to be represented as the other. Counsel for each railway may appear before that tribunal. My hon. friend says that it is counsel for both railways sitting in with the judge, but it is the arbitrator from each company sitting in with the chairman of the arbitral tribunal.

Mr. HEENAN: There is this important difference so far as industrial disputes are concerned, that neither of the parties is bound to accept the decision of the board. Under this legislation it is not merely a matter of taking off a train or two, or anything of that sort, because if the hon. gentleman will look at the bill he will see that power is given with regard to the joint use of terminals, the running rights of one line over the other, the joint use of tracks, control and prohibition in respect of construction of new lines, joint use of facilities, the abandonment of lines, services and facilities, the pooling of any part or parts of freight or passenger traffic, and all things necessary and incidental thereto. These three gentlemen are to sit in private. I agree with the minister when he says that perhaps they could arrive at a better arrangement to their own way of thinking than they could sitting in open court, but are we going to provide that three men may sit down in private without the public knowing what they are doing or why they are doing it and decide upon the slaughtering of branch and main lines, the giving of running rights to one road over the other, and the throwing of thousands of railroad men out of work? This is one thing above all others which should be decided out in the open so that the people interested might appear before the board.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Does my hon. friend suggest that because of the comprehensive powers granted to the tribunal, one of the parties to the arbitration should not be represented on the board?

Mr. HEENAN: No.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is his argument. There is no doubt that comprehensive powers are being given to these tribunals and my hon. friend is arguing that because of these comprehensive powers, one of the parties to the dispute should be represented on the board while the other is not.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not think the hon. member for East Algoma fully understands what I said. I have no objection to the two railroad companies being represented but I do contend that what is done by this board should be done in public and not in private. I would be quite satisfied to go right down stream with my hon. friend if he would get the government which he is supporting to follow the same procedure as that followed under the Industrial Disputes Act.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am not talking about whether the board will sit in private or public, I am referring to the amendment which provides that the Board of Railway Commissioners shall be the arbitral tribunal. This board is appointed by the owners of the Canadian National Railways and the amendment provides that they shall be the arbitral tribunal which may decide that the Canadian Pacific shall surrender a terminal to the Canadian National, that it shall abandon a line or other such matters. The Canadian Pacific would have no representative upon this tribunal. As the tribunal is now set up it is a board of arbitration purely and simply. Whether the dispute is great or small, each party will be represented. It is an entirely different matter to discuss how these arbitral tribunals shall carry out their work; I am referring now to the amendment which provides that the owners of the Canadian National Railways will appoint the arbitrators while the Canadian Pacific cannot make any appointment.

Mr. VALLANCE: The bill provides that a representative of both companies shall be a member of the tribunal, but it also provides that the chairman of that tribunal, who is to be the chairman of the railway commission, must be satisfied with all decisions. In reality, he is the sole arbitrator.

Mr. GEARY: If the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is objecting to these tribunals simply because they may sit in private, his objection cannot stand. It is expressly provided in the Railway Act that the Board of Railway Commissioners may sit in private if they choose to do so. If the procedure followed by the Board of Railway Commissioners is to be adopted in the consideration of these matters, the sittings could be held in private.

Mr. HEENAN: But the Board of Railway Commissioners or any other board has never had to deal with a bill like this. My point is that when the Board of Railway Commissioners or a tribunal is given powers such as those contained in this bill, their sittings should be held in the open.

Mr. GEARY: Then my hon. friend does not agree with the hon. member who has moved the amendment. The mover of the amendment asks that these matters be carried to the Board of Railway Commissioners. If that is done, the sittings could be held in private.

Mr. HEENAN: We will have other amendments to offer.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for South Toronto and the hon. member for East Algoma have suggested important reasons why this amendment should not carry, but there are other reasons also why these matters could not be left to the Board of Railway Commissioners. I would refer the committee to clause 19 of the bill, which reads:

> If, in the opinion of the presiding officer of any tribunal, any application made to him raises matters of substantial concern to the public or a section of the public, he may direct that notice of the sittings of the tribunal shall be given either by advertisement in one or more newspapers, or otherwise as he may consider expedient.

He may permit the public to be represented at the meetings. Therefore, it is provided by the bill that the public can get into these meetings.

Mr. HEENAN: What provision is made to let the public know that the arbitral tribunal is going to deal with a certain matter?

Mr. MANION: If, in the opinion of the presiding officer of any tribunal, the matter to be considered affects a certain section of the public or the public as a whole, it would be his duty to notify the public either by advertisements in the public press, by personal letters or otherwise. He would also inform the attorney general of the province to which the matter under consideration referred. There are one or two other points which I think make the present arrangement more acceptable than having the Board of Railway Commissioners constitute the tribunal. The purpose of parts II and III of this bill is to bring about greater cooperation between the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways. As the bill distinctly states, it is to effect economies and provide more remunerative operation. That being the case, it seems to me to be much more reasonable to have a representative of each company upon the tribunal than to have the Board of Railway Commissioners constitute such tribunal. To a large extent this board has been dealing with questions such as freight rates and other similar matters.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Would not the other members of the railway commission become just as competent as the chairman to deal with these matters?

Mr. MANION: Possibly they would over a period of time. It must be understood that the two railroads would not appoint the same representative to sit on all tribunals. They would appoint a representative who was familiar with the particular branch of the service with which the particular tribunal was to deal. A tribunal might be appointed to deal with the pooling or cooperation of telegraph lines or express services, and the railroads would appoint representatives who were familiar with telegraphic operation or express services, as the case may be. That is a very important and useful provision which could be worked out under this method of having a tribunal.

Another point is that the arbitral tribunal as set up by this bill may not have to give a decision at all. Being set up as it is in a more or less informal manner, I mean so far as its members are concerned, the chairman being the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners and the other two members being representatives of the two railways, and being able to sit down, as I suggested a little while ago, at a round table conference to discuss a matter, it is very likely, as the object of the two railways is to bring about greater cooperation and more economy, there will be a greater possibility of their coming to an agreement without any formal judgment being given. That is really the whole object of part II and, indeed, of the bill so far as parts II and III are concerned, namely, to bring about greater cooperation and in that way save both companies from the pressure of competition, duplication and the consequent unnecessary expense. Having listened to the observations of hon. gentlemen opposite and two hon. gentlemen on this side who, besides myself, have taken part in the discussion, I should think the arguments are all for leaving in the bill the arbitral tribunal just as it is at present.

Mr. YOUNG: Has the minister considered the position in which this will put the chairman of the railway commission supposing a dispute should arise in which five commissioners decide it one way and the chairman decides it the other? The chairman would be overruled by the five others. He could then induce one of the railway companies to ask for a tribunal. He would be the sole arbiter on that and in that way he could defeat the purpose of the entire railway commission.

Mr. MANION: I do not quite get my hon. friend's point. Is he referring to a tribunal that has five men on it?

Mr. YOUNG: I understand the railway commission has six members. Suppose a matter is referred to it; five of the members decide one way, and the chairman decides the other. The decision of the five would prevail. Then the chairman, not satisfied with that decision, could request one of the railway companies to ask for a tribunal. The matter would be referred to a tribunal of which he would be the sole arbiter and in that way he could defeat the entire purpose of the railway commission; he could overrule the five.

Mr. MANION: Of course my hon. friend is putting up a theoretical case which I do not think is likely to occur. As a matter of fact, generally speaking and without reflecting in any way upon the members of the railway commission as it exists at present or as it was in the past, the chairman has been the outstanding member. I say that without any disrespect towards any other member of the commission. I do not think the case suggested by my hon. friend is likely to occur.

Mr. YOUNG: It could occur.

Mr. MANION: I do not suppose any legislation can prevent some remote possibility from occurring. No legislation that is set up provides for every remote possibility. But I do not think the surmised case of the hon. gentleman is likely to arise in practical railway questions.

Mr. YOUNG: On other boards it frequently happens that one member will oppose all the others, and I do not see why this might not occur on the railway commission.

Mr. MANION: Another point that might be put forward is that this would amount almost to a conspiracy. Supposing the board had given a decision and the chairman did not like the judgment the majority had given against him. He would be conspiring with the two railway companies to defeat that.

Mr. YOUNG: Not necessarily. The railway company that was not satisfied with the decision could ask for an arbitral tribunal.

Mr. MANION: Then he would be conspiring with the one railway company to defeat the other.

Mr. YOUNG: Not at all.

Mr. McINTOSH: We have been considering what would take place if a tribunal were established, how one railway might get into difficulty with another, thereby bringing about the establishment of a tribunal and subsequently a solution of the matter that might not be satisfactory to some parts of Canada. What about the situation that might arise supposing the two railways deliberately never disagreed? There would then be no tribunal and a policy of inaction adopted from year to year. The roads would take the line of least resistance. In such a case, what would be the situation of parts of the country that would be seriously affected by not having the necessary transportation facilities? I am afraid they would be in a bad way.

Mr. MANION: In the past the railways took the line of least resistance and they did not cooperate. I say quite frankly that when this government came into power, one of the first matters pointed out to the heads of both railway companies by the Prime Minister and myself was the need of greater cooperation. It is obvious to every hon. member and, indeed, to every citizen who cares to look about him, that there were great opportunities for cooperation in regard to a number of trains, for instance, those running between here and Montreal, Montreal and Toronto, and in other parts of the country. There were great opportunities for cooperation in ticket offices, for instance, those on Sparks street. We pointed out to the railway companies that there were these opportunities of cooperating and thereby saving money.

To-day, in view of the fact that this legislation is pending and that it carried practically unanimously in the other house, the railways are making an effort to cooperate to a greater extent than they ever did in the past. I do not think either railway would take the position suggested by the hon. gentleman, that is, merely to stand pat, or the management of the road would not be doing their duty towards it, because it is certainly the duty of both railways under present circumstances to endeavour to cooperate and to bring about more economical operation than has been the case for some years.

Mr. McINTOSH: I believe the two roads should cooperate as far as possible, but supposing they are opposed, as I believe they are, to this tribunal, the purpose of setting up the tribunal might be nullified by the failure of the railways to avail themselves of its services and the result that the public interest in the matter of transportation and other facilities would suffer. Where would the country be in a situation of this kind? I am afraid the transportation facilities of different areas of Canada would seriously suffer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The hon. member is out of order in discussing that. It comes under part III; it does not come under this clause.

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, I am putting it under.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I have one other word to say. The minister suggests that this tribunal is going to be simply a round table conference. Under part II of the bill, the two railway companies are surely going to get together and have their round table conference before a matter comes to a dispute. When it comes to a dispute, it is time then to have some independent body to decide the question at issue. Such a dispute will be one in which the Canadian people are vitally interested and we should have a board in which the people have learned to have confidence and on which are men who are trained in the duties that this tribunal will have to undertake.

Mr. RALSTON: Following that up and emphasizing what has been said with respect to the possibility of conflict between the Board of Railway Commissioners and the tribunal, let me put this case to the minister for the purpose of finding out just what this bill means and seeing if we are not in effect wiping out entirely the jurisdiction of the railway commission, at least with regard to the abandonment of lines. Assume, for instance, that the Canadian National Railway wants to abandon a line without reference to the Canadian Pacific. After this legislation is passed this matter will be under the jurisdiction of the board of trustees. It is said that those trustees cannot exercise the power to abandon the line without the recommendation of the Board of Railway Commissioners and the approval of the governor in council. That is to say, if they want to operate on their own, they must, as I understand the minister, operate under section 23.

Mr. MANION: May I make that clear? Only so far as the Canadian National is concerned. That does not affect the Canadian Northern or the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. RALSTON: I am talking about the Canadian National. It has to have the recommendation of the railway board and the approval of the governor in council. Supposing the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National are in conflict in some particular area; they have possibly a duplicate service. The Canadian Pacific takes the initiative and asks the Canadian National to agree to abandon its line in order that the Canadian Pacific may operate. The Canadian National fails to agree. A dispute arises and the tribunal is formed. The tribunal orders the Canadian National to agree and therefore to abandon its line. What I want to be clear on is whether under such circumstances the Board of Railway Commissioners have power to keep the Canadian National from abandoning that line, or whether the tribunal, representing simply the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners and the two representatives—or one representative it may be—of the railway companies, has power not only to authorize but to require the Canadian National to do what section 23 says it cannot do without the approval of the governor in council and the recommendation of the Board of Railway Commissioners. May I refer to section 23 of this bill, which provides that:

> Where the execution of an order, or the carrying out of a decision of a tribunal, involves the doing of any act which by any statute requires, but for the provisions of this act, the leave, sanction, assent or approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners, or where in the opinion of the presiding officer the public interests involved are of sufficient importance to warrant it, no order made by a tribunal shall be operative without the concurrence of the presiding officer and his formal written assent.

Section 24 reads:

> In the event of any conflict between an order of the Board of Railway Commissioners and that of any tribunal, the order or decision of the tribunal shall prevail.

That it seems to me, makes it perfectly clear that the Canadian Pacific Railway, on a definite and—shall I say?—hostile application involving a dispute and the convening of the tribunal, can succeed in having the Canadian National forced to override the provisions of section 23 and abandon a line which otherwise it could not do without the approval of the governor in council and the board.

Mr. MANION: I think my hon. friend has interpreted it correctly, but that is just as true of the Canadian National forcing the Canadian Pacific to do the same thing.

Mr. RALSTON: No, the Canadian Pacific does not require the approval of the governor in council nor of the board.

Mr. MANION: That is true, but so far as the abandonment of a line is concerned the tribunal has the same power to force the Canadian Pacific as to force the Canadian National to abandon. My hon. friend will agree to that.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act really refers only to the Grand Trunk Railway. It is true that that may be wiped out by the arbitral tribunal under this act, but as I said, that section applies only to the Grand Trunk. At the present time the Canadian Northern or the Grand Trunk Pacific and their subsidiaries could abandon their lines without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners just as the Canadian Pacific could; but the Grand Trunk could not, because the Grand Trunk is the railway constituting the Canadian National Railway Company.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think the minister is absolutely right when he states that the Canadian Pacific has the right under existing law to abandon part of its permanent line; but on the other hand, is it not true that the community that would be affected by the abandonment of that line have a perfect right to appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and if a judgment is given by the board, that judgment rules?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is partly right, to this extent, that if the Canadian Pacific had received a subsidy, for instance, from this government, and in consequence had agreed to carry on a particular service, it could not abandon that service, or if it had made an agreement with or received assistance from a local community and had agreed to carry on a certain service, it could not abandon that service because that would be an agreement as binding as any other agreement. But apart from an agreement of that kind, binding the company because of some subsidy given by this government or some other government, the Canadian Pacific I am informed, and I think it is absolutely correct, could discontinue a service.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think the minister is correct. But the community affected by the abandonment of that service or line has the right to appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and if judgment is given by the board it applies to the Canadian Pacific just the same as to everybody else.

Mr. MANION: That is true. The public might appeal to the Board of Railway Commissioners, but the Canadian Pacific can abandon a line unless it is tied by an agreement, contract, or subsidy to carry on that service, and it can abandon it without appealing to the board at all.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend says that section 23 applies only to the Canadian Northern.

Mr. MANION: The Grand Trunk, I said.

Mr. RALSTON: Just on what does the minister base that statement? As I understand section 19 of the Canadian National Railways Act, it permits the putting of any railway under the operation and management of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MANION: I do not like to attempt to express the legal reasons, but the actual fact is that the only railway in the Canadian National Railways is the Grand Trunk railway and the branch lines which have been built in recent years have also been put under the Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. RALSTON: The Canadian Northern was under the Canadian National.

Mr. MANION: For operation. The Canadian government railways are under the control of the government. That is the difference. But the Grand Trunk is the only one under the Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. RALSTON: Surely the abandonment of lines is operation.

Mr. GEARY: It is the very opposite to operation.

Mr. RALSTON: Does not abandonment come within the term "operation"?

Mr. MANION: I do not quite follow the question.

Mr. RALSTON: The governor in council has power to vest in the Canadian National Railway Company the management and operation of any road, and the governor in council has done that in the case of the Canadian government railways, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk Pacific; and in the case of the Grand Trunk the Canadian National actually owns the stock. Under section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act, with the approval of the governor in council, the company may abandon the operation of any lines or parts of lines. I submit that that applies directly to the lines which the company is empowered to operate, and it applies not only to the Grand Trunk but to the Canadian government railways and other roads as well. The very words of the section are "may abandon the operation of any lines or parts of lines." In a previous section the governor in council has vested in the Canadian National Railway Company the operation of all these different railways. This means only that it may cease to operate them.

Mr. MANION: That is not my information. Section 23 applies to the Grand Trunk, and it would apply also to the branch lines that were built under the Canadian National Railways Act.

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot believe that the abandonment of operation of a Canadian government railway line is to be permitted without the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. MANION: That is a different matter.

Mr. RALSTON: This is the section which requires the approval of the governor in council before the operation of any line can be abandoned. My hon. friend says that the Canadian government railways are not within that section. There must be something wrong with that.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, April 13, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 76, respecting the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company.—Mr. Simpson (Algoma).

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I desire to lay on the table of the house a number of orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

[Mr. Ralston.]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

ENGAGEMENT OF LAWYERS—BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. REID:

1. What lawyers, of Vancouver or New Westminster, were engaged by the government during the fiscal year ending 1932-33?
2. For what specific purpose was each engaged?
3. What respective amounts were paid by way of fees, emoluments or expenses to each of these lawyers so engaged?
4. Are any amounts still outstanding; if so, what amounts are yet to be paid?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I think this will have to stand as an order for return, because it affects every department of the government. It will have to be circulated by the Secretary of State to all departments.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 3959 of Hansard, I asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauve) with regard to a return ordered by the house on February 8, with respect to the post office at Missanabie, Ontario. The minister replied: "I have nothing to say to-day." I protested, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said, referring to the Postmaster General:

He might have said, "I shall take this as a notice and deal with the matter to-morrow"—

I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the to-morrow to which he referred then is to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: What point is the hon. gentleman trying to make?

Mr. POULIOT: I am asking if the return will be completed to-day, because that is what I understood from the remarks of the Prime Minister yesterday.

Mr. BENNETT: The Postmaster General is not here.

DREDGING—DETROIT RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Yesterday the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) asked a question with respect to the operations being carried on in the Detroit river for the purpose of deepening the channel. I have again looked into the matter; I find that a contractor is in charge of the operations and that following the statement made in this chamber a few days ago by the hon. gentleman we communicated with the United States legation. I am informed that an engineer of the United States government will visit, or is on his way, or is visiting the scene of the operation, and a report will be made without delay.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Laflèche in the chair.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation, maintenance and equipment of elevators, administration of, $2,295,172.20.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is a slack day, with small attendance, to take up this item; the minister has left it until quite late.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Oh, no; I haven't had an opportunity to take it up before.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have just been reading in the Winnipeg Free Press that further amendments to the Grain Act are expected. Should we not put those amendments through before dealing with this matter?

Mr. STEVENS: The suggested amendments to the Grain Act are very formal and deal with something entirely related to eastern Canada. They will be ready in a day or two but they will not affect matters appertaining to these estimates. One of the members of the Board of Grain Commissioners is here and I am anxious to get the item through while the commissioners are in the east.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no criticism to offer of the endeavour to get a difficult item through on a quiet afternoon—half the members are away. I expect, however, that the next call will be from the Minister of Agriculture to get live stock items through. If that is the plan, I do not blame hon. gentlemen much.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not the plan.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BROWN: No, it isn't carried yet.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Last night the Prime Minister indicated that to-day the house would proceed with public works, trade and commerce, marine and fisheries and agriculture. We thought that public works would come first.

Mr. STEVENS: I have already said that I am trying to take advantage of the presence in Ottawa of a member of the Board of Grain Commissioners, but I wish hon. members to understand that they are at perfect liberty to discuss the matter as fully as they desire. There is no suggestion whatever of putting anything over the committee, none whatever.

Mr. YOUNG: We appreciate the minister's position, but is he prepared to make a statement now as to the government's dealings in the grain market?

Mr. STEVENS: I thought that was pretty well indicated in the budget debate.

Mr. YOUNG: Has the minister nothing further to say?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think there is anything further to say.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I hear what the minister is saying?

Mr. STEVENS: I say, there is nothing to add to what was said during the budget debate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should have thought there would be a good deal to say in answer to the hon. member for Willow Bunch, but if his statements are correct we have not much more to ask. He made many statements that would require a reply from some member of the ministry if he is not correct. If, however, his statements are correct, then I suppose we have all the information it is possible to get.

Mr. BROWN: Yesterday I had a question on the order paper to which the minister gave an answer. There was also a motion passed touching the same subject, with reference to correspondence between the government and the Civil Service Commission. These papers have not yet been brought down and until we get full information I do not see how this matter will be satisfactorily disposed of. Of course, the minister may be able to give us now the information we desire. The question I put on the order paper, with the answer, is as follows:

Board of Grain Commissioners—Solicitor
Mr. Brown:
1. Has a solicitor been appointed for the Board of Grain Commissioners?
2. If so, who is the appointee?
3. On whose recommendation was he appointed?
4. What salary does he receive?
Mr. Stevens:
1. Yes, temporarily.
2. E. L. Taylor.
3. Upon the recommendation of the Board of Grain Commissioners and appointed by the Civil Service Commission.
4. $5,000 per annum less 10 per cent.

I might add another question, as to the time of his appointment. That question having been answered, I have on the way to the order paper another one: What was the amount spent by the Board of Grain Commissioners in the way of fees for legal services during each of the five crop years preceding July 31, 1932? Information has come to us that these legal services were being provided for the Board of Grain Commissioners at a comparatively small charge, and now it seems that the government has appointed a solicitor at a salary, according to the answer given me, of $5,000 per annum less ten per cent. Another question I asked, to which I should like fuller information, was: On whose recommendation was he appointed? The answer was that he was appointed on the recommendation of the Board of Grain Commissioners by the Civil Service Commission. I should like to know whether that is the answer to the question as I intended it to be answered, or whether the Board of Grain Commissioners took the initiative in requesting a solicitor for the work. I wish to know whether, according to statements that have been made, this officer, Mr. E. L. Taylor, was foisted upon the Board of Grain Commissioners. These are some of the questions we want to have answered.

Mr. STEVENS: I am happy to be able to give an answer to practically all that the hon. member has asked. The appointment of a solicitor to the board, in the position occupied by Mr. Taylor, originated I believe in a recommendation by the Brown commission that someone should be appointed as legal adviser to the assistant commissioners, who later were appointed, and to help, if required, any complainant to get his case before the board in proper order. Mr. Taylor has been acting as legal adviser to the various assistant commissioners who are located, as my hon. friend no doubt knows, in Calgary, Saskatoon and Winnipeg. He gives legal advice constantly on the innumerable matters that arise in connection with the administration of this board's business, which is very extensive and intricate—particularly intricate in view of the amendments of 1929 and 1930 and the adjustments which became necessary. Constantly questions are coming up regarding licences, insurance, and so forth. In addition to that, Mr. Taylor is at the disposal of applicants before the board for adjustment of various matters which they complain about, and he also renders assistance to them.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does he give this assistance free of charge?

Mr. STEVENS: Free of charge, yes. That is his position and he is recognized as a very useful and competent solicitor in that class of work. In addition to that there are some major matters of litigation that may and do come up, and for that purpose, if I am not mistaken, the board retains the services of Mr. Travers Sweatman, K.C., of Winnipeg. I presume that where necessity warrants it, in matters of sufficient importance, they retain other solicitors as well. I am sorry I have not the particulars of the expenditures for legal services over the past five years.

Mr. BROWN: I think that information is very important. The other day I asked the minister to table the report of the Board of Grain Commissioners for the year ended July, 1931. At that time I had in my hand the reports for the previous years and in looking over the particulars I could not find a single item which could be identified as an expenditure for legal services. Evidently the expenditures were so small that it was not considered necessary to concentrate them in a separate item. In view of this, it is hard to understand why a solicitor should now be appointed at a salary of $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I have a list of the detailed general expenses which include legal fees. The estimate for the current year is $3,000. I have not the particulars for the past year but I should imagine they would be about the same amount.

Mr. BROWN: When was Mr. Taylor appointed?

Mr. STEVENS: About a year or a year and a half ago.

Mr. BROWN: Why does his salary not appear in the statement of expenditures for the crop year ended July, 1932?

Mr. STEVENS: I speak subject to correction, but I assume that it would be included in the salaries item.

Mr. BROWN: It does not appear in the expenditures for the 1931 crop year. I have looked over the reports for the two years and I cannot find anything which could be identified as an expenditure for legal services.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My curiosity has been somewhat aroused by this new appointment. This is the age of economy, of coordination, of the avoiding of overlapping and other hackneyed matters, and yet this appointment is made. We have entered into a period of extreme quietude so far as the administration of the grain act is concerned. There has been no trouble in connection with grading and the quality of grain has been high. Everything has been running as smooth as silk and yet we find the minister appointing a legal adviser to the Board of Grain Commissioners. The salary to be paid is $5,000, a rather snug little sum these days and more than most of us in this chamber are receiving. As I understand it, prior to this appointment the annual cost for legal services was only about $500. We are just entering the Easter season and I shall try to keep my language moderate. The ministry has chosen a very convenient and quiet time to discuss these matters; we are all necessarily more or less under the discipline of the hour but we want the information just the same.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend can get any information he wants.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What was the idea of departing from the fee system, whatever it cost? My understanding is that the cost was less than $1,000 per year, and yet a permanent official is being appointed at a salary of $5,000 at a time when there is the minimum requirement for legal counsel.

Mr. STEVENS: As my hon. friend recalls, the act was amended in 1930. Without doubt there was a general desire upon the part of everyone in western Canada, as well as those having to do with the administration of the act, to see that it was as effective as possible. As I have stated already, the act provides for the appointment of resident assistant commissioners. The appointment of this legal adviser to the commission generally enables the commission to give the resident assistant commissioners the full value of his advice on legal matters. Appeals are constantly being made by farmers to the board in connection with elevator companies and others and frequently the elevator company or the other business concerned has legal advice while the farmer has none. Mr. Taylor takes charge of all such cases and puts them forward in the proper and legal form. In other words, he is the general legal adviser to the board, to the assistant commissioners and to the complainants of the character I have mentioned. I think he is rendering a very valuable and useful service to all concerned.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is the salary of this official being charged to the administration of the act which has to be paid by the farmer? If it is, then all I can say is that it is just another case of the government policy of loading everything on to the farmer. I may be wrong in this surmise, but the minister has not indicated the amount of the fees paid before this counsel was employed.

Mr. STEVENS: As I stated to the hon. member for Lisgar, I am very sorry that I have not before me the information for the preceding five years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend must know what they are.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely the minister would not employ a permanent official without knowing what it was costing under the other system. Surely he is not going to admit that he does not know that much about this branch of his department. It looks like another extravagance practised by this government at a time when it is preaching economies from the housetops. We want some more explanation about this item.

Mr. DONNELLY: This official is appointed at a salary of $5,000 and yet when any important matter comes up it is handed over to another firm of lawyers. For fifteen or twenty years we managed to get along without employing any firm of lawyers.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. DONNELLY: They were not employed unless they were needed from time to time. When the grain act was amended two or three years ago we appointed not only three grain commissioners but three or four assistants. Now it seems that we must have a lawyer and an assistant to the lawyer. All these officials are required to help the grain commissioners arrive at a decision because they are the ones who decide what is to be done.

Mr. MALCOLM: I must confess that I was amazed at the last remarks of the minister in connection with his counsel. As hon. members will recall, in 1930, there was a very thorough investigation of the Canada Grain Act. As the minister pointed out, assistant commissioners were provided to provide a little closer contact with the farmers in each district. After all, the Canada Grain Act has a board appointed for one purpose only, namely, the administration of the act; that is the duty of the board. The new board which was appointed met, I think, with general approval of the grain growers and elevator companies in western Canada, and we all feel it should be able to administer the act. If this new solicitor at $5,000 a year is appointed to advise the board, which is after all the court of appeal in cases of dispute, and if the appointment is made because the board hardly feels competent to interpret the act which this parliament passed, well and good. But the minister makes the amazing statement that one of the duties of this lawyer is to act on behalf of the appellants.

How can he be counsel for the board and at the same time be counsel for the appellant? As I understand the matter, the board is the court that must make a decision in a case of appeal against the action of an elevator company or some other organization or individual. The elevator company, of course, will have a solicitor to present its case before the Board of Grain Commissioners, and naturally the appellant, whoever he is, would have his own lawyers. But how a solicitor before the board can undertake the duty of advising the board and at the same time of advising the appellant, I cannot understand. Perhaps the minister will explain.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think there is any difficulty in understanding that. This board is not a court in the sense that the Supreme Court of Canada is; it is rather a court of equity than a court of law.

Mr. MALCOLM: Quite so.

Mr. STEVENS: Ninety per cent of its dealings is with farmers. A substantial portion of its time is taken up with elevator companies and grain dealers. Where there is a conflict, it has usually been between an individual shipper or farmer and an elevator company or broker or someone of that character. The board will sit to hear those complaints.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will the minister pardon me for a moment? He knows many of the complaints are not against elevator companies; they are against weighmasters, or officers of the board.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, but I am simply indicating the general class, shall I say, of disputes that may arise. They may be with weighmasters.

Mr. MALCOLM: Inspectors.

Mr. STEVENS: But generally speaking, the dispute is between the individual shipper and the elevator company or grain concern. Last year, for instance, I find in a memorandum just handed me, that 127 complaints were heard by the board. In forty-two cases no grounds for complaint were found. The complaints were made; they were gone over carefully and dismissed as being without ground. Fourteen cases were withdrawn; thirty-nine settlements were arrived at, and thirteen were found to be outside the jurisdiction of the board owing to questions of law or matters that had to go to the courts of the land. In five cases the board ordered a stated settlement. In one case there was a prosecution of the defendant. Thirteen cases are not yet disposed of.

This legal adviser that I mention is certainly of value to the farmer who appears before the board. The board is a moving body which, for the convenience of the farmers, the grain growers of the district, holds hearings in different parts of the country. The legal adviser would give assistance to the farmer who was making a complaint, thus saving him the expense of retaining a lawyer. I do not think we should make this board's hearings of a character that would force a man to have a lawyer appear before it. I remember very well, when the Board of Railway Commissioners was first organized, the late Justice Mabee would scarcely hear a lawyer before the board on the ground that complainants would be private citizens and it was not fair to put them up against skilled lawyers representing railway companies. In a measure the grain commission is of that character. It is desired to have these things as informal as possible and to deal with them on the grounds of equity. But it is desirable and certainly useful to those who present their claims that they should have the assistance of someone thoroughly familiar with the act so that they may put their claims forward in the best possible form. That is one of the services this lawyer renders. I do not wish to reiterate this to the point of being tedious, but as I said before, in the board's business many matters arise of a small or petty legal character, such as questions of licensing elevator companies and so forth.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If they are small or petty, they are hardly worth $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS: But in the aggregate my hon. friend must understand they would cost a great deal more if fees were paid to outside lawyers. Owing to the growing business of the board it was thought desirable to retain this lawyer.

Mr. BROWN: The explanation of the minister is not very satisfactory. Instead of asking whether a solicitor had been appointed for the Board of Grain Commissioners, it seems that I should have asked the question: Has a legal representative for the farmers been appointed to represent them before the grain commission? Then the answer might have been yes. Whether he is to be temporary or not I do not know; the answer is not very satisfactory.

We are told that many small cases arise in regard to licences where the advice of the solicitor is required. I am not altogether unfamiliar with the man who has been appointed, and I venture to say that Mr. E. B. Ramsay, the man whom we appointed as head of the Board of Grain Commissioners, is just as competent to settle these questions as is E. L. Taylor.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is he a good Tory?

Mr. BROWN: I shall tell my hon. friend more about that before we are through. When Mr. E. B. Ramsay was appointed chairman of the grain commission, he had the full confidence of every farmer in Manitoba. He was recognized as thoroughly competent to discharge the duties of his office. When we revised the Grain Act in 1930 he was present at almost all the sittings of the committee of agriculture, and most of the provisions of the clauses of the grain act were made with the sanction of Mr. Ramsay himself. He is quite familiar with every section and subsection of that act; no lawyer can be better qualified to administer the act than he is. It is unnecessary to appoint any man to instruct him as to the provisions of the grain act. So much for that question. This lawyer's duties as outlined by the Minister of Trade and Commerce are so ridiculous that I think the minister should give us some better explanation for the appointment of Mr. E. L. Taylor, who is well known in Manitoba.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is he?

Mr. BROWN: Well, he was a Conservative candidate in the constituency of Mountain in two elections and he was defeated. I am not sure whether he was ever elected to the Manitoba legislature, but his name figured very largely in the election scandal in the constituency of Gimli. That is the man who has been appointed.

Mr. STEVENS: It is always very easy for one with prejudice to besmirch the character of someone who, of course, is not able to defend himself. I shall say, without fear of contradiction by any self-respecting citizen of this country, that Mr. Taylor is a respected barrister and citizen of the city of Winnipeg and holds the confidence of a very large proportion of his fellow citizens. I am not questioning the fact that he was a Conservative. After all, is it a sin or crime that a man should espouse the Conservative cause?

Mr. BROWN: I am not saying that.

Mr. STEVENS: It may be so considered, but I suggest to the hon. member for Lisgar that it is neither courageous nor fair to besmirch by innuendos the name of a man who has no opportunity to defend himself. I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Taylor is a respected citizen in his own community.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What attitude did the minister take in the customs inquiry? Did he not cast a blemish on anyone's character then?

Mr. STEVENS: I will tell my hon. friend what attitude I took. We looked with great care into various matters pertaining to the administration of the Customs department—this is more or less out of order, Mr. Chairman—but from one end of the five months to the other I never put my finger upon nor uttered one syllable against the personal character or reputation of an individual—not one.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What about the speeches the minister made in this house, casting insinuations against several members sitting opposite him? He cannot deny that because it is on Hansard.

Mr. STEVENS: I do deny it.

Mr. BROWN: Over and above this $5,000 that Mr. Taylor is going to get as solicitor for the board, do I understand the minister to say that he is also going to receive out of the estimated expenses for the 1933-34 crop year an additional $3,500 for legal fees?

Mr. STEVENS: Provision is made in the estimates for $3,000.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is that in addition to the $5,000?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: If Mr. Taylor is such an eminent lawyer as has been suggested there is no reason in the world why he cannot perform these other services, because his time will not all be taken up performing the petty duties indicated by the minister, and there is no need for giving him that extra $3,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not wish to hold up the minister's estimates, but as one who has administered this department I am going to say to him that this is the most unjustifiable appointment he has ever made. In the first place, when the Board of Grain Commissioners do run into trouble in the administration of the grain act they want the advice not of Mr. Taylor but of the best solicitor obtainable in Canada. That has been the course that has been followed in the past. Eminent counsel, of course, have to be called in occasionally by governments and by government departments to help them, but the Board of Grain Commissioners, under Mr. Ramsay and the other two commissioners, know the Grain Act from cover to cover, as do many members of this house, and I say to the minister that it is all hooey to talk about needing a lawyer for the issuance of certificates or licences or for anything of that sort, because Mr. Ramsay knows the act perfectly, and its provisions are as clear as crystal to anyone who studies them. If the minister takes the other stand and says that he thinks the farmers of western Canada have a right to legal counsel in presenting their appeals to the board, he is probably justified in the appointment; but if a lawyer is to be appointed to represent the farmers of western Canada I would expect the minister to request of the house that a growers' counsel be appointed and that the expense be charged up to inspection fees. There is no one more interested in the grain act than the grower, and every dollar that we are here voting is repaid to the treasury, out of inspection fees, by those who ship the grain. It is not paid for by the taxpayers at all. This is a service paid for by the grain producers of Canada, and the sooner members of the house realize that fact the sooner will they realize that this expenditure should not be increased unless the people who are producing the grain and paying the fees so request. I never heard of Mr. Taylor as an eminent counsel in Winnipeg to whom any of the boards in the past went for advice. The last chairman of the board, Mr. Leslie Boyd, appointed by my hon. friends opposite, was a lawyer, a man who I consider gave very valuable service to this dominion. I do not think he ever consulted Mr. Taylor when he wanted an expert opinion on anything pertaining to the grain act, nor do I think that any of the other commissioners did. Why this man should be appointed at a salary of $5,000 without the request of those who are paying the fees I cannot understand. Personally I shall not hold up the minister's estimates but I think he is making a very grave mistake.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: While the minister is recovering—he does not seem to have anything to say in reply—I wish to say, arising out of what was said by my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) and the lawyers will correct me if I am wrong, that there is a well known principle in British law that no lawyer can act for two sides of a given case. He cannot act for both the appellant and the defendant at one and the same time. Some lawyer repeated that axiom to me just the other day, and it is such plain common sense that any kind of layman on the opposite side of this house should be able to grasp it. As a matter of fact, the minister is caught with the goods, and he is hunting in every hole and corner to find an excuse for this appointment. That is what is the matter. We all know the fix he is in. We all know something more, and that is that $5,000 was not the sum first mentioned, nor $6,000, but a good deal more, was it not?

Mr. STEVENS: I never heard of anything more than $5,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did, and that is the information which the hon. gentleman has not got. I think he had better let this item stand until he gets the important information we require, particularly after it has been pointed out, and as we all know, that this $5,000 comes out of the fees which the farmers have to pay on every car of wheat. The farmer pays $2 per car for weighing and grading, and that is what pays for this service. The government is recouped out of these fees. I suppose this vote in the estimates for the Canada Grain Act has been reduced because of this $5,000 that is going to Mr. Taylor, but should it not have been increased instead? It would seem as if the government under their blighting administration of affairs, anticipate a smaller crop next year, that bugs or worms or Tories are going to attack our grain. Out of this sum that is being voted the minister is giving $5,000 to a political henchman, as far as we can make out to-day, for doing what was done for $500 before, and there hon. gentlemen opposite stand, caught with the goods, thinking they were going to sneak this thing through on a quiet Thursday afternoon. My heart was touched at the beginning by the minister's helplessness, and I was inclined to let him go, but he has made such a mess of it that we can now very well afford to sit down and let him mess away at it himself.

Mr. BROWN: I move to reduce this item No. 275, amounting to $2,295,172.20, by the sum of $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I am quite sure the committee will not expect me to reply to my hon. friend from Melville in the same language and the same terms as he used.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minister cannot reply; that is the trouble.

Mr. STEVENS: I have stated three times—I stated it in the first explanation that I made, I stated it again, and I repeat it now—that a substantial portion of the time of Mr. Taylor has been occupied in assisting those who are presenting cases to the board; that is, farmers and producers and that class of applicant. The hon. member for Melville suggests that a lawyer cannot act for both sides of the case. Mr. Taylor is not acting for both sides of the case at all. On the one side of the case would be, as I pointed out before, an elevator company or a concern of that kind, and on the other side would be the applicant such as a farmer, producer or shipper of grain in one of the western provinces. The elevator company would have its solicitor to appear before the board, and the board has put into practice the system that I have mentioned of paying a solicitor and getting him to assist the farmer or producer or the shipper, as the case may be, in presenting his case to the board. In that work about half of Mr. Taylor's time, I should judge, is occupied.

My hon. friend from North Bruce, the hon. member for Melville and the hon. member for Lisgar also suggest that the act is so clear and so perfect that anyone can understand it.

Mr. BROWN: That Mr. Ramsay could understand it?

Mr. STEVENS: It is a large act, an important piece of legislation, and it is no reflection upon Mr. Ramsay or the members of the board to say that there are many little things which require close study. For instance in a day or two I shall show that there are certain amendments now called for arising out of complexities in the act, if you like to put it that way, or in connection with matters which were overlooked. It is no reflection upon those who drafted it or the Board of Grain Commissioners. The same thing has occurred in connection with many of the major statutes. But in regard to the large number and variety of bonds that the act imposes upon the commission to exact from those using the facilities of the board, such as elevators and so on, there is required careful supervision and drafting. Mr. Taylor has been devoting a considerable portion of his time to that work, a work which constitutes valuable service to the commissioners. I am sorry the hon. member has taken the attitude he has shown in committee. Certainly there was no thought in my mind of hiding this item, or of slipping through the grain estimates this afternoon. I am quite willing to ask that the item stand over until some other day, so that we may have a full-dress debate on it for a whole week, if the hon. member wishes it. However, I tell the committee this, that some few weeks ago we had one of the commissioners in Ottawa. He waited two or three days, during which time I was unable to get my estimates before the house. At that time the attention of the members was directed towards other matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The budget.

Mr. STEVENS: No, it was not the budget. I was taking advantage of the presence in the city of one of the commissioners to have my estimates placed before the house to-day. Hon. members opposite must know that it is inadvisable to hold these gentlemen here in the east day after day awaiting the pleasure of the house. It is only for that reason that the estimate was brought on this afternoon. If the committee feels that it is not being treated fairly, I am quite satisfied to ask that the item stand, and I shall go on with other items to which there will be very little opposition.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Go ahead; nobody is asking that.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not desirous of proceeding contrary to the views of hon. members opposite. I shall undertake to give them ample notice of further discussion on the estimate now before us.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the minister is much too accommodating. When reinforcements to the committee were not here he wanted to put this vote through. Now that they are here he wants to place it to one side. That is all his talk amounts to.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member wishes me to stop?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are just getting warmed up, and we want now to see it through. There is no use having two fracases when one might settle it. The minister has given no information. We might just as well let it go through, or go on with the discussion of it, or pass on to some other phase of the matter—because we are dealing with only one phase—the new counsel and his salary. I wish to impress upon the committee and everybody concerned with this measure that the farmers will have to put their hands in their pockets and pay this bird $5,000. My information is that had the government had its way they would have paid $7,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Arsenault): I shall read the amendment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. member is speaking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Arsenault): I have not read the amendment. It is moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) that item No. 275 be reduced by $5,000.

Mr. BROWN: This matter came to my attention only yesterday, and the information I was given has been proved, so far, to be correct. I should like to know whether the further information I have is correct. That will show, of course, when we have the correspondence between the department and the Board of Grain Commissioners.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is that not down yet?

Mr. BROWN: No, it was ordered only yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Arsenault): Do hon. members want this item to pass?

Mr. BROWN: We are discussing it, and we are in order. You were in order a minute ago, when you insisted upon reading the amendment, and we are in order now when we speak to it. The information I have is that the first salary demanded was $7,000. Probably when we have the correspondence we will find who demanded it. The Civil Service Commission balked at that figure, and it was brought down to $6,000. Finally an agreement was reached at $5,000. As I say, although my information on the other points was confirmed, it was not confirmed on this one. I should like to know whether correspondence with regard to the salary passed between the department and the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly I cannot recall any such correspondence. So far as my recollection goes $5,000 is the only sum that has been mentioned. I have no recollection of a larger sum being mentioned, and I am informed by my officials that they have no recollection of any such correspondence. In that connection I can say no more.

Mr. VALLANCE: Who requested that Mr. Taylor be appointed to the position? Was it the farmers, or was it the Board of Grain Commissioners?

Mr. STEVENS: So far as I know the suggestion was made by the Board of Grain Commissioners, and the appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission. Again, without examination of the records I cannot say offhand whether a demand was made by the farmers.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. VALLANCE: Has the appointment of Mr. Taylor been made permanent?

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: It has not? Because in the investigation last year into the civil service and the Civil Service Act I find at page 919 the following statement concerning the appointment of Mr. Taylor:

> On recommendation of the Civil Service Commission the temporary appointment under section 40 of the Civil Service Act of Mr. Edmond L. Taylor as counsel of the Board of Grain Commissioners at $5,000 per annum was authorized for a period of six months from August 1, 1931, under authority of order in council P.C. 298-2188, of September 10, 1931.

Has this temporary appointment been renewed from time to time, and if so, why is there not a permanent appointment made? It must have been renewed several times, because the original appointment went back to August 1, 1931, and we are now in April of 1933. If the position is so important, why is it not filled permanently?

Mr. STEVENS: The decision whether or not it should be made a permanent office has not yet been arrived at. The temporary appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission, and at the request of the Board of Grain Commissioners the period was extended a further six months.

Mr. VALLANCE: This appointment is made by order in council?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BROWN: I cannot believe that the Board of Grain Commissioners recommended the appointment of Mr. E. L. Taylor. When I asked the question I had it in mind that someone outside the board might have recommended the appointment of Mr. Taylor, and that was the information I wanted to get. Of course I have not got it, and perhaps may not get it. In the beginning the minister said this action was taken because of some recommendation contained in the report of a commission. I do not remember that recommendation, and I should be glad if the minister would point it out.

Mr. STEVENS: I am speaking on the advice of officials who ought to know and who do know.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the minister know whether Mr. Taylor was engaged in the practice of law prior to his appointment?

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly he was, for many years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Had he any special experience in connection with the grain act?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I never heard of him; he must have been buried in the basement somewhere. I never heard of the man being associated with any cases before the courts involving the grain act, because there have been few, if any, such cases. Everything has been as quiet as sitting about the home fire, and yet this appointment must be made at this time. As a matter of fact I know that a lawyer, to be worth his salt in dealing with the grain act before the courts, must have studied that act not for a month but for years, and he must have had some experience before taking over an important case or pretending to fill an important appointment such as this if there were anything to do. There is no one so helpless as an inexperienced lawyer in a grain case, because it is very involved and intricate business. Half the time the lawyer will not know what he is talking about unless he has an army of supporters and prompters around him. The late Mr. Bonnar of Winnipeg was considered one of the best lawyers in the west in connection with grain legislation or litigation. I do not know of anyone who has been able to equal him, but even Mr. Bonnar had to have all sorts of technical support when he went into court. We have never heard of this man Taylor; he may have dropped from the moon for all we know. We do not know whether or not he knows anything about this grain act. As a matter of fact the government is caught spending $5,000 of the money of the farmers in order to give a salary to one of its friends who has the reputation described by the hon. member for Lisgar. Surely his word should be as good as that of the minister in regard to Mr. Taylor; in fact he is far more likely to know the facts, because he knows the gentleman. Does the minister know Mr. Taylor?

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly I do.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then why did you appoint him if you knew him to be that sort of man? The government should not give away the hard earned money of the farmers at a time when they can hardly buy a clucking hen, and when a lot of them are on relief. Many of them cannot even buy postage stamps to write us, as we know by the small volume of mail we get; they do not know they do not require a stamp. The minister has just displayed what we always knew, his lamentable ignorance of this branch of his department. It is high time the administration of this grain act was handed over to the Department of Agriculture. At least the gentleman heading that department knew enough to do justice to garnet wheat, which my hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, wanted to butcher.

Mr. IRVINE: Did I understand the minister to say that the Board of Grain Commissioners asked for this appointment and that the Civil Service Commission made it?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, that is my information.

Mr. VALLANCE: I should like to proceed a little further. I hold in my hand a copy of the evidence presented before the committee that investigated the civil service commission last year. I do not wish to deal with the many files that were presented to that committee, some of them trying to prove that the two commissioners were always opposed to the chairman while Doctor MacTavish presented cases in which he was the dissident. This is one case in which Doctor MacTavish dissented; he brought it in to prove that he and the other commissioner were not at all times opposed to the chairman. This is what I find with regard to this position:

> The civil service commissioners on August 12, 1931, directed in this case that, in case of extension beyond six months, the continuance of the temporary position to be authorized, and if the position is to be of indeterminate duration, that it be advertised.
>
> This office is now in receipt of a request for the extension of temporary certificate in above connection for a period of six months from February 1, 1932, it evidently being the desire of the department that the appointment of Mr. Taylor be extended by order in council for a further period of six months.
>
> The department advises regarding the possible duration of the employment of Mr. Taylor that they are not at the present in a position to furnish definite information.

At that time the department did not know whether or not this would be a permanent position. I should like to know if the position is of such moment that it should be filled permanently and, if so, why it has not been made permanent.

Mr. STEVENS: In all probability it will be disclosed that it should be made a permanent position. We have not decided to make it permanent up to the present, and in view of the criticisms that hon. gentlemen opposite have hurled at my actions in this regard, and particularly in view of the language used by the hon. member for Melville—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear, and I shall have more to say.

Mr. STEVENS: —we might be justified in abolishing this position at the end of the temporary period, which I think will be in about three months. But I want to suggest to hon. members opposite that in my estimation they have been grossly unfair in their treatment of this matter, because I am confident that it will be found that the services rendered by Mr. Taylor have been of value to those who most required them, and in all probability if we discontinue the position we will be inundated with demands for the restoration of that service. Personally I am not interested in the matter in any shape or form. If it is thought by the committee that this is a service that should not be continued I am quite prepared to end it when the temporary certificate expires.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister says Mr. Taylor has been acting for the producers or shippers and also for the Board of Grain Commissioners. Has the minister at hand the number of shippers or producers who have availed themselves of the services of Mr. Taylor?

Mr. STEVENS: I could not give my hon. friend that information at the moment, but I understand there have been quite a number of cases, as well as many that never appeared on the records, where complaints have been made to assistant commissioners at Saskatoon or Calgary in addition to the complaints reaching the head office in Winnipeg. Mr. Taylor has frequently investigated those cases and given advice and counsel so that they may not have come to a formal hearing. This has been a useful and valuable service, but that is all I can say in regard to the matter.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): I wonder whether the minister could indicate, from the records under his hand, the sort of cases on which Mr. Taylor has been working, and if the minister could review one or two of those cases to give the committee an idea of what Mr. Taylor may have been doing.

Mr. STEVENS: The record at which I am looking does not give that information, but I may be able to give it in a moment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is down cellar in a tea cup, I suppose.

Mr. STEVENS: I would suggest to my hon. friend that nothing is to be gained by that sort of language; it does not add to the dignity of the house nor does it help the amity of debate. I am prepared and willing to give to this committee all the information I can. A moment ago the hon. member said that all I had succeeded in demonstrating was that I knew nothing about my department. I do not wish to boast, but I am not afraid to meet the hon. member or anyone else in a discussion of the affairs of the department. I do not pretend for a moment to have mastered in detail all its intricacies, but this I certainly do: From eight-thirty in the morning until late in the evening I devote whatever energy, ability and time I have to a study of the affairs of the department, and so far as the Board of Grain Commissioners is concerned I leave the administration of the act very largely in their hands, as it is my duty to do. When I come to parliament with the estimates of the board I come fortified with as much knowledge as I have been able to gather to anticipate ordinary questions asked, and I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite, who, generally speaking, are pretty fair and sportsmanlike, that I am prepared to give as complete answers as possible on all matters relating to the department. In this instance I am quite prepared to grant that hon. members have a right to criticize; I do not object to that at all. But I do feel that it is not quite playing the game for the hon. member to suggest to the committee, and particularly to the public, that I have been so neglectful of my duty since taking office as not to know anything about the affairs of the department. That, I think, I have a right to resent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The rearguard think they have something to cheer about, but they have not. I was just referring to this branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the work under the grain act, which is the only matter before us at the moment. This is the second time this session that the hon. gentleman has undertaken to lecture me on the amenities of debate, although I have been fair enough to allow his ghastly mistake to pass with regard to the wheat which the government were holding over—saying that the government were not in the grain trade when all the time they were—and I excused him before Christmas on the ground that perhaps it was not in the best interests of the state to have the actual facts brought out. Now he takes me to task and picks me out as the chief sinner in criticizing him. Don't I remember when he was on this side of the house? If he had had his way not one of us would have had a square inch of hide left on us after he was through. And then to squeal now because we give him a little bit of his own medicine! As a matter of fact, the appointment was made by the hon. gentleman without knowing whether it was necessary or not, and now he tells us, a year and a half afterwards, that he does not know whether the man's services were used by the farmers.

Mr. STEVENS: I made no such statement.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. gentleman has just said it. What did he say? The hon. member for Macdonald and two or three others have asked for information with regard to the suggestion about farmers falling prostrate before the hon. gentleman's appointee and asking for succour and advice at a time when they did not need it, and he lectures us. If he wants to keep his head on his shoulders he had better be civil himself. We do not always get him in the box he is in now. He had better come down the tree as the coon usually does when smoked out. We are not particularly concerned whether he comes down head first or tail first, but I suggest that it would be well for the hon. gentleman to admit that he is up against it instead of attempting to lecture us as he has been doing.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have listened with interest to what the minister has had to say with regard to the appointment of Mr. Taylor. Going through the evidence, I find a letter sent by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Civil Service Commission, setting out the reasons why the appointment should be made. During the discussion this afternoon, or at least that part of it that I have heard, I have not detected the real reason given to the Civil Service Commission. Let me quote from a letter written to the secretary of the Civil Service Commission by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce:

> I have your letter of the 22nd instant and in reply beg to say that at the moment I cannot furnish definite information regarding the probable duration of the employment of Mr. Taylor.
>
> Matters have been cropping up from time to time which require his attention; and more especially now that the ten cent wheat bonus is being paid, many legal questions regarding the ownership of the wheat grown, etc., are having his attention. I would suggest if possible that the Civil Service Commission extend the certificate for another six months when the matter may then be given further consideration.

This letter was dated December 23 and was addressed by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to the secretary of the Civil Service Commission. I suppose the six months have expired, and it will be seen that he speaks here of a ten cent bonus, which was never ten cents at all, and which is no longer in existence. So that the reasons given by the department for the appointment no longer exist, and I think the minister would be well advised to cancel the appointment.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): Has the minister anything to show what work this gentleman is doing?

Mr. STEVENS: I have stated it over and over and my hon. friend has added one other duty which I overlooked; it is true he did give some service in that respect. As regards the individual cases, I am sorry I have not under my hand a statement containing that information. I understand there is an amendment before the chair to cut the item by $5,000. I am advised by the Board of Grain Commissioners that they have reduced their estimates as low as they possibly can consistently with proper administration, and we cannot accept the amendment. I have already said that the appointment is temporary. It has been renewed at the request of the department and the commission and I am quite prepared to say that, in the light of what is disclosed, the services may be discontinued at the expiry of the period.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. YOUNG: I asked the minister whether he had anything to tell us of the government's activities in the wheat market. When the committee of the House of Commons was investigating the grain marketing situation a few years ago, Mr. James Richardson told us that one of the principal reasons for the prevailing low price of wheat was the fact that the federal farm board of the United States was holding a quantity of wheat. A few weeks ago an announcement was made that the federal farm board had got rid of their surplus and since then the price of wheat in Chicago has been steadily advancing. We believe that the Canadian government, through Mr. McFarland, is holding vast quantities of wheat, but we see no corresponding advance in price here. When may we expect the government to get rid of the wheat which it is holding, with results similar to those obtained in the United States?

Mr. STEVENS: Let me point out in the first place something which I am sure my hon. friend knows, namely, that the price of wheat in Chicago has risen because the United States market is no longer on an export basis. It is virtually on a domestic market basis, and that is the chief reason for the rise. Canada, on the other hand, still is and inevitably will continue to be on an export basis; consequently there is not likely, through any local agency, to be any rise in price in Canada, except in so far as the price of wheat rises in the world market generally. Now, as regards the quantity of wheat which my hon. friend says is hanging over, let me say this: The official figures of the bureau of statistics show an anticipated carry-over of about 150,000,000 bushels. Of course, it is impossible to give precise figures. The movement of wheat this year has been very creditable. The following movements for export have taken place:

	Bushels
1931	217,000,000
1932	191,000,000
1933	239,000,000

These figures show that our wheat is moving out to the world markets in a fairly creditable and rapid manner. In my opinion, given for what it is worth—in the estimation of some it is not worth much—the world situation in connection with wheat is gradually and steadily improving. The obvious failure of the winter crop of the United States and the comparatively poor quality of the Argentine crop of the past season has changed the situation very materially. Russia was almost entirely out of the market last year and the indications are that she will not be in the market next year as an exporting factor to any great extent. The position has greatly improved over what it was two years ago. The position at that time was due to the heavy crop of 1928-29. The fact that the government through the agency of Mr. McFarland contributed to the stabilization of the wheat market in Winnipeg during the past two years does not necessarily enter into this picture. That was something which was done to prevent the cash wheat market from collapsing. I think every hon. member will admit the grave danger with which we were confronted during the last couple of years in the complete collapse of the cash wheat market. That collapse was prevented by the action taken by Mr. McFarland acting under the instructions of the government. We feel confident that the holdings which Mr. McFarland has and which are merely futures can be put forward in an orderly manner so as not to create a sudden break in the market. I do not know whether my hon. friend intended to suggest it, but I have heard the suggestion made that we should sell this wheat as quickly as possible. Such action would result in the complete collapse of the market. We intend to make possible a gradual liquidation of the surplus Canadian wheat. I suggest to my hon. friend and to others who are interested that the best and most helpful thing that can be done for this country and for the producers of this country is to have the surplus quantities of wheat fed on to the market in quantities that the market can bear. May I point out again that in my opinion the general world situation is such that the outlook is not too black.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. YOUNG: The minister has stated that there is some 150,000,000 bushels of wheat still in the country. Can he tell us how much of that is in the farmers' hands, how much is in the hands of the trade and how much in the hands of Mr. McFarland?

Mr. STEVENS: That figure I gave was the likely carry-over but there is more than that in the country. I have not the exact figures before me but I think I can give them fairly well from memory and they may be subject to correction. According to the latest estimates there are about 80,000,000 bushels in the hands of the farmers. This is an abnormally large amount for this time of year. I think it can be accounted for very largely by the fact that the farmers more remotely removed from the head of the lakes and Vancouver and subject to additional freight charges have been inclined to hold their wheat.

Mr. GARDINER: Would that amount include wheat held for seed?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. About a week or so ago there were about 69,000,000 bushels at the head of the lakes, 10,000,000 bushels at Vancouver and about 10,000,000 bushels in transit on our railroads and on the high seas. There are about 4,000,000 bushels in the hands of the milling companies, which is somewhat lower than normal—the normal holdings of the milling companies being about five to six million bushels.

Mr. DONNELLY: Will the minister compare those figures with the figures of a year ago?

Mr. STEVENS: I have not all the figures my hon. friend asks for, but I can give some of them. As at the end of March, 1931, there were 69,000,000 bushels at the head of the lakes, and as at April 1, 1932, there were 55,500,000 bushels. The amount at the head of the lakes this year is about 15,000,000 bushels over and above what it was a year ago. The amount held by the farmers would be about thirty per cent more than normal, while the amount in the hands of the millers is less than normal. There is a little excess at Vancouver, amounting to probably one or two million bushels.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the remarks of the minister are worthy of a good deal of consideration by this committee, because they have confirmed what I knew to be the case when I was occupying the position now occupied by the minister, namely, that the law of supply and demand as it applies to commodities like wheat cannot be changed by governmental regulations. I have a distinct recollection of making a statement in this house which was severely criticized. I said that as far as the trade commissioners were concerned they had nothing to do, nor could they do very much, in connection with the selling of a commodity like wheat. This commodity must find its own levels on the markets of the world. The minister has referred to the abnormally large crop of 1928-29 as having been a disturbing factor in the price of wheat a few years ago. He is perfectly right in stating that that was the disturbing factor. The minister states also that the present plan is to put forward this carry-over wheat in an orderly manner, but it must be realized that the opportunities which we will have to dispose of our wheat will not be caused by any action of the Canadian government or any action of any member of the Canadian government. These opportunities will be brought about by a world shortage or a need of wheat and the wheat will go forward just as fast as the markets can absorb it and will command the price the markets can afford to pay. One fact should be impressed upon the producers of such commodities as wheat; they should realize that the commodity which they produce is liable to be affected by weather conditions in various parts of the world. Wheat is a world commodity and must be sold at the prices prevailing upon the markets of the world. I think the minister's statement, when analyzed, will remove a lot of the nonsense that has been talked as to what can be done to control wheat prices. We have in this dominion, under this item which the minister is asking us to vote on to-day, the very finest wheat handling system in existence in any country, paid for by the producers; the taxpayers are not being asked to pay a cent of this item. Our certificate for Canadian grain is treated in the markets of the world as a final certificate.

There is another delusion that it is well to shatter when the minister talks about the growth of Canadian trade with Great Britain since the imperial conference was held. We have sold a great deal of wheat lately at a price that the world would pay for it, but that wheat has not all been consumed in Great Britain. It has been credited in our trade returns to Great Britain, but some of it has gone to other countries.

I rose for two purposes: one was to thank the minister for clearing up the situation by pointing out that it was the 1928-29 crop that caused such a surplus all over the world, because the crop was heavy. The minister pointed out also that Russia is not—and in my opinion it never again will be—a large exporting country. Only about five billion bushels of wheat are grown in the world and this is all consumed in the countries in which it is grown with the exception of 700,000,000 or 800,000,000 bushels. Russia cannot produce more than 1,100,000,000 bushels and has 160,000,000 people who need it all. If they raise the standard of living in that country they may need more. The days when the Russian peasant consumed black bread and Russia exported 300,000,000 bushels of their good grain have gone; the Russians will use more of their own grain as food, and I look forward to Canada coming back to her place as the greatest grain exporter of the world. Shortage of crop may make the 800,000,000 bushels needed very valuable. A long crop may throw an extra 500,000,000 bushels on the market and the price of course will be affected by the surplus so offered.

The second point I want to make is that European countries can do without wheat. France can consume her soft wheat; she can grow practically as much wheat as can the Dominion of Canada. Germany can use rye bread, and can substitute her coarser grain for Canadian wheat. The only thing that will stop Germany from using rye bread and that will induce France to use hard wheat is for this government to give those countries an opportunity to sell something to the Dominion of Canada. If a favourable trade treaty can be made to take some French commodities and another one to take some German commodities, the very high rates of duty prevailing in those countries against Canadian grain might be modified and we might have a still better market more willing to absorb this carry-over, while the price would reach a high level very much sooner than it would with these trade restrictions existing. Nothing should be more important to a country with 150,000,000 bushels of grain carried and financed by the taxpayers' money than to find an outlet at a high level. I suggest to the minister that the only way in which he can find an outlet is to get favourable entry into countries like Germany and France which now have very high tariffs against us. If he wants that favourable entry, he will have to give favourable consideration to imports of commodities we may satisfactorily buy. The whole wheat situation revolves itself around the opportunity Canada has to trade.

Before I sit down, may I say that it is unfortunate—and the minister knows it, as well as I do—that France, Germany and other continental countries subscribe to the system of keeping their statistics on a country of origin and country of destination basis, while Canada, the United States of America and Great Britain subscribe to a system of export and import figures, regardless of the country of origin. Our trade returns of exports of Canadian wheat to Great Britain are invariably larger than is the actual consumption in Great Britain because, on the Liverpool Corn Exchange, she is the greatest jobber of wheat in the world and resells much of the wheat we ship to her. Nothing would be more valuable in computing what our actual British trade is than for the minister to be able to present—and I tried to get the figures but I never was successful—a statement of the actual consumption of Canadian wheat at all times and in all years by the British consuming public. If he were able to find that and show it to the Canadian people, I think the public would discover that we show very considerable quantities of wheat credited to Great Britain which are going from Britain to other markets.

So far as this item is concerned, I have no desire to hold it up. I have spoken, indeed, at greater length than I had intended. This matter is in the hands of an efficient board. I do not think we need this extra lawyer, but that is aside and apart, as the minister says now that he is not anxious to retain his services. Members of parliament on this side have joined with members of parliament on the other and great assistance has been given by members of the Progressive group, notably the leader of that group and the hon. member for Bow River, to make the grain act so clear, so plain, that I believe any layman can interpret it. I agree with the hon. member for Melville there are not many lawyers in Canada who are as familiar with the act as are members who sat on the committee on agriculture, and no one knows the act better than does Mr. Ramsay. Our inspection system is almost as close to perfection as perfection can be achieved. We have returned to the sensible idea that in order that grain may be handled, it must be hedged on the market. It cannot be taken off the market. I have a distinct recollection of Doctor Magill telling the committee that in 1922. He was right then, and the same thing is true now. Wheat is ripening in some country all the time and the sooner we realize we have to protect our position from day to day and take world market prices, profiting by the years when prices are higher and facing the situation when they are lower, not allowing any carry-over to disturb the market, the wiser we shall be as a wheat exporting country. When we realize we can broaden the scope of our market by entering into trade treaties with countries that can use our wheat, the wheat situation in Canada will improve. It is improving now owing to actual scarcity. I agree with the minister that the situation will improve during the coming season and before long we may be in a much more comfortable position with regard to wheat producing and marketing in this dominion.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. YOUNG: I do not think the minister quite got the drift of my question. He said that there were some 80,000,000 bushels in the hands of the farmers, 69,000,000 bushels at the head of the lakes, 10,000,000 bushels in Vancouver, 10,000,000 bushels in transit and 4,000,000 bushels in the hands of the millers, making a total of 173,000,000 bushels. If there are in Canada 230,000,000 bushels, that still leaves 57,000,000 bushels to be acounted for. Let me explain the object I had in mind: it was to find out how much actual wheat we shall have to sell yet and also how much paper wheat is in the hands of Mr. McFarland on behalf of the government, which wheat will have to be disposed of. If the minister will tell us that, we shall have some light on the question.

Mr. STEVENS: I think my hon. friend is wrong in saying "also," because they run more or less concurrently, if I might use that term; the one is complementary to the other; if you have a contract for the delivery of wheat, that means that someone must deliver that wheat to you, and so on.

Mr. YOUNG: If he has purchased options, he has a contract not to deliver wheat but to take it.

Mr. STEVENS: And of course to pass it on.

Mr. YOUNG: Yes, to sell it.

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly. When I spoke before, I spoke entirely from memory. I have now before me from the bureau of statistics the exact situation on March 24, 1933. While the arrangement is a little different from what I gave, it will be accurate and I shall read it as I have it before me:

Stocks of Grain at Different Elevators during the Week ending March 24, 1933

	Bushels
Western country elevators	109,564,466
Interior private and mill elevators	5,608,863
Interior, public and semi-public terminals	3,170,610
Vancouver and New Westminster	9,990,449
Victoria	390,134
Prince Rupert elevator	301,695
Churchill	2,430,283
Fort William and Port Arthur	67,274,934
Eastern elevators—lake ports	14,298,249
Eastern elevators—seaboard ports	5,840,579
United States lake ports	5,758,644
United States Atlantic seaboard ports	951,552
	225,580,458

That makes a total of 225,580,458 bushels.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is there any statement with regard to the Prince Rupert government owned elevator?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, a very small amount, hardly worth mentioning, 300,000 bushels.

Mr. VALLANCE: How long has that been there?

Mr. STEVENS: It passes through. They are not shipping very much. It is rather an unfortunate thing that the elevator is there. The situation generally, in my estimation, as the hon. member for North Bruce said a moment ago, is improving because world conditions are improving. There is no question about that. It may be, and I am a bit hopeful of this, that Canada will actually profit by the conditions that seem to be developing throughout the wheat world to-day. The only thing that could intervene to prevent it would be one of those phenomenal crops all over the world simultaneously, such as actually did occur in 1928-29, but that is a most extraordinary and unusual thing to happen. We do not expect it, and so I believe that Canada will actually benefit from this improvement in conditions. I do not know that there is anything that I can add. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but these facts I think are useful and illuminating and encouraging.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The minister said that it was unfortunate that there was an elevator at Prince Rupert. That is a remark that I cannot let pass unchallenged. That elevator was built in Prince Rupert and taken over by the government. It was built under the pretence by the government of the day that the port of Prince Rupert would be one of the outlets for grain from British North America. For the benefit of the house I wish to state that wheat can be shipped to the Pacific coast more cheaply to Prince Rupert than to any other port on the Pacific coast. I have taken this matter up with the minister and he has given due consideration to seeing that at the next renewal of the lease with the wheat pool a certain amount of wheat shall go through that elevator at Prince Rupert each year. I must, however, challenge his statement that it is unfortunate the elevator is there. I repeat, that it is cheaper to send wheat to Prince Rupert owing to the grade on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway than it is to any other port on the Pacific coast. We have a harbour in Prince Rupert second to none on the Pacific coast from South America right up to Alaska. The minister knows that, and I hope he realizes that as a representative of British Columbia in the federal cabinet he does not represent only one portion of British Columbia but the whole province.

Mr. YOUNG: I really admire the skill of the minister in answering questions, but to my mind he has not cleared up the situation yet. Everybody knows that when the miller is not buying wheat, then in order to have a market at all, wheat is sold to the speculator. Now the impression throughout the country is that there will be this year a carry-over of 158,000,000 bushels to be disposed of. That will be sold by Mr. McFarland or by the grain trade. In addition, it is believed that Mr. McFarland carries large numbers of options which he has bought against wheat he held previously and which must still be sold. When the speculator comes into the market to buy, these options will be offered to him in competition with the actual wheat we have to sell. Is that impression which is abroad correct? Are we carrying large quantities of options in addition to the carry-over of 158,000,000 bushels of actual wheat?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not agree with the form in which the hon. gentleman puts the situation. I will answer as frankly as I can. It is true that Mr. McFarland is carrying a certain number of options, and it is true that there is in Canada a certain quantity of wheat. Obviously when the purchase of Canadian wheat gradually increases, as we hope and feel confident it will, then the trading in wheat will develop and these options can be absorbed by the market.

The point I was making to my hon. friend a moment ago was this. He suggested, perhaps not definitely but I gathered that that was his suggestion, that we should get rid of these options as quickly as possible. If we did that, we would break the cash wheat market, which is of course the very thing we ought not to do. You can only sell as the market is able to absorb, and if the pressure on the market exceeds the ability to absorb, the market falls inevitably as night follows day. If we were to do what has been suggested and get rid of these options, the market would fall and it would destroy the world market because Winnipeg after all is perhaps the most influential centre in the world where wheat is marketed, and wheat prices are fixed. Further, the opposite of that is true. When Canadian wheat was pressing on the market during the past couple of years faster than the market could absorb the actual wheat, there was no speculative buying on the market because it was a falling market, and because of disturbed conditions throughout the world. It was then that Mr. McFarland was authorized to step into the market and take up these options. Otherwise the pool would have had to stop buying the farmers' crop and there would have been a disorganization of the whole wheat-selling system of western Canada. The service that has been rendered has been invaluable in steadying the cash wheat market, and those after all are the figures to examine for the real condition—the wheat actually being shipped and the cash sale price in Winnipeg. Those are the most important factors; the rest is adjustment.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to take issue with the minister in that statement which he has made several times in this house. I happen to be on the producing end, and am therefore a seller of wheat. I have to sell my wheat in the fall. The large stocks of wheat which the government were carrying in the fall when the new wheat came on the market did not help the situation very materially. That was not their fault. But I do point out to the minister that in October and November of last year large quantities of wheat were thrown on the market by Mr. McFarland, and that action broke the price for me and every other producer in Canada. When the minister tells us in the House of Commons that the action of this government through Mr. McFarland in 1932 saved money for the farmers of western Canada, he is telling us something that cannot be borne out by the facts. No matter what Mr. McFarland may have done in 1931, in 1932 he certainly did not help the situation. He may be helping it now by keeping wheat off the market, but I can name three occasions upon which he threw very substantial quantities of wheat on the market and broke the market by five cents a bushel. That is what happened to me. I am one of those who happened to pay the piper. I began selling wheat locally for 37 cents per bushel. Before I got through the market was at 28 cents, and it went away below that. If wheat will not leave Canada when the farmers of Alberta are getting less than 30 cents per bushel for No. 1 northern, then I do not know when wheat will leave this country. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the work of John I. McFarland and the support of this government of the wheat market was not worth anything this year. It may be that they were in for a very heavy carry-over, and had to get out from under, but when they took action this year they certainly did not help the farmers of western Canada.

I hold in my hand an order in council passed on the twelfth of this month about which I was going to ask the minister. In it the government seek authority to sell grain. I do not know why they ask for that authority because they can sell grain at any time. The order in council renews the guarantees to the banks and to those whom they have been backing. Now they are going to get out of the market. Apparently that is so, if this order in council is correct, because it states:

> The minister recommends that the governor in council may at any time fix and determine a date at which wheat producers shall proceed to sell and dispose of all wheat and other grains in its possession or control acquired under the guarantee of the governor in council, and shall proceed to sell and dispose of all contracts, entered into and falling within this guarantee, for the future delivery to it of wheat and other grains.

I cannot see the necessity for such a provision in an order in council, because ordinarily they may sell wheat if they see fit. I do take issue with the minister when he states that in the marketing season for 1932 Mr. McFarland and the stabilization fund were worth anything to the farmers.

Mr. DONNELLY: As I understand it, in 1930 when the pools were in financial difficulties Mr. John I. McFarland was appointed by them to act as the head of their selling agency and to sell the carry-over of wheat from 1929 and 1930. I tried to get from the minister on April 15 of last year some idea of Mr. McFarland's activities, and we are still endeavouring to get that information. We have not got it yet. I ask the minister: How much wheat was given to John I. McFarland by the pools to sell? That is my first question. That was the office to which he was appointed; that was the job given him to do, namely to sell the carry-over of the pool. First of all we want to know how much wheat was given to him. Next we want to know how much of that wheat he sold; how much has he still left on his hands? As we find that later on, at the instance of the government, he has taken on other activities, we want to know how much future wheat he has bought. How much he has bought for future delivery?

Mr. POWER: And at how much?

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes. How much has he sold, and how much is he still carrying? When we asked the Prime Minister this question last fall we were told that we would be given the information when we reached the committee stage. We are asking for it to-day. The minister comes along now and tells us that had it not been for the activity of Mr. McFarland in the wheat market last year, dear knows what would have happened to the pool. I say the pools were not in any worse condition than the grain trade; they were in the very same position. They were buying and selling wheat from day to day. The minister knows as well as anybody else that because the government was in the grain market, because the government was in on the wheat market, all the small speculators left the market and would not go near it. They were afraid to touch it. The small speculators were driven out, and that is why the government was in. Further, I want the minister to tell me how much Chicago wheat was sold on the Winnipeg market and was bought by the government through John I. McFarland. How much wheat was sold there by Chicago speculators? We are told that the Americans were buying large quantities of wheat in the Minneapolis and Chicago market, which they sold in Winnipeg. How much did they buy and sell? We want to know.

Mr. STEVENS: Obviously it is impossible for me to answer the questions the hon. member has asked. In the first place he is mixing two entirely different activities.

Mr. DONNELLY: I am not mixing them at all. I have set them out separately and distinctly.

Mr. STEVENS: As I recall the facts, the pools of western Canada—and in this statement I speak subject to correction—the three western pools were associated and operating together in the marketing of their wheat abroad. This was prior to the fall of 1930. For a great many years they had been successful, as the market had been largely a rising market. Everything worked profitably and I believe satisfactorily. In 1930, difficulties arose in the world market. We will not go into details, but I will make the simple statement that difficulties were experienced in the marketing of wheat. The three pools, operating through a western pool selling agency—

Mr. VALLANCE: The central selling agency.

Mr. STEVENS: —secured the services of Mr. McFarland to act for them. That is an arrangement between the pools and Mr. McFarland, and has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. VALLANCE: No, that is not correct —excuse me for saying so. I think the minister will agree that when John I. McFarland took over the central selling agency of the pools it was done on the say so of this government. Only on that understanding, namely that John I. McFarland took it over, would they guarantee the bank.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: The Prime Minister said so.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not prepared to accept that statement. I shall not enter into an argument about it, but I cannot accept the statement of my hon. friend. However, the fact is that Mr. McFarland was retained by the pools for the purpose of managing the selling agency. Synchronizing with that was a request from the pools for assistance, also a request from the provincial government. The pools were in financial difficulties and owed the provincial governments considerable money. If I am not mistaken the amount in question was about $23,000,000, but I speak entirely from memory and am subject to correction. The government did guarantee the banks against that loss. That guarantee is still outstanding, and unless I am very much mistaken the order in council to which reference has been made is one of the renewals of the original transaction.

Mr. POWER: With a little more added.

Mr. STEVENS: I believe it is a renewal.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is this the same guarantee under which hedges are being bought?

Mr. STEVENS: I would say this is a renewal of the original order, and—again speaking subject to correction, because I have no documents before me—is the order under which the purchases are being made under the stabilization scheme.

The hon. member asks me this question: Under these circumstances how much wheat did Mr. McFarland take over from the pools? Mr. McFarland and the government did not take over any wheat. All Mr. McFarland did was to step in and manage the selling agency of the pools, thereby carrying on their business. The government guaranteed the banks against loss in the transaction, thereby making it possible for the banks to continue financing the pools. So far as the government is concerned, that is all that happened. Had we not done so there would have been a liquidation, which would have been one of the worst things that could possibly have happened to western Canada, involving, as it did, all the fixed assets of the pools, such as the elevators and other assets, scattered throughout all four western provinces. The action of the government preserved that situation, and enabled the banks to finance the pools so that business could be carried on in a normal way. They have been carrying on since, and I am convinced that ultimately the pools and the banks of the western provinces will come out of this whole business without any serious loss. I do not think there will be any loss.

Then my hon. friend asked how much wheat he took over. I cannot answer that question, but it is not germane to the discussion. The hon. member also asked how much wheat he sold. He took over whatever wheat they may have had in store at the time and he sold that wheat plus whatever they bought during his term of office.

Mr. DONNELLY: No, he has not had anything to do with the wheat since the carry-over of 1930. He has had nothing to do with the selling of the 1931 or 1932 wheat.

Mr. STEVENS: He continued to act as manager of the sales agency up to a certain time, but I am not certain of the date.

Mr. DONNELLY: His term is not ended yet.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is John I. McFarland manager of the central selling agency of the pool at the present time?

Mr. STEVENS: There is a matter which introduces itself here which complicates the question very much. The pools split up at some point. My hon. friends have me at a great disadvantage, because I cannot carry in my mind the exact dates, but I believe they split up at the end of the crop year 1930-31.

[Mr. Stevens.]

The pools as such ceased to operate as a central selling agency, and my impression is that this was done at the end of the crop year 1930-31, which would be in July, 1931. Since then the central selling agency has not functioned in regard to the handling of the wheat crop of the three western pools.

Mr. VALLANCE: I hold in my hand an order in council which was passed on April 10, 1933, in which I read:

> The minister recommends that the governor in council may at any time fix and determine the date at which wheat producers—

I presume that means Wheat Producers, Limited, which John I. McFarland has been operating as manager of the central selling agency.

> —shall proceed to sell and dispose of all wheat and other grains in its possession or control.

Has the government, the minister or the governor in council taken over that function, previously performed by John I. McFarland, of selling the wheat now held by Wheat Producers, Limited? They have done so, according to this order in council.

Mr. STEVENS: This question is too complicated to discuss from memory or on the basis of just one order in council. About two months ago I was informed that there was still some of the 1930 wheat on hand, but I think that is down now to a very small amount. This order in council necessarily must carry through, until the whole operation is completed, the power inherent in the first order in council. That is why the terms of the first order are repeated.

Mr. POWER: This is the first time this appears in any order in council.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister has stated already that John I. McFarland was not engaged by the government. Then we find an order in council which says that at any time the governor in council may perform the functions heretofore performed by John I. McFarland.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend has misunderstood me. I said that so far as the original contact of Mr. McFarland with the selling agency in 1930 was concerned it had nothing to do with the government, except so far as the hon. member for Willow Bunch and my hon. friend suggest that the government urged that he should be appointed. I am not going to dispute that. I have no knowledge of its being done, though that may be so. The fact of his employment, however, had nothing to do with the government. He acted for the three pools as head of the selling agency, but his appointment did synchronize with the undertaking of the government to guarantee the banks against loss in connection with the operations of the pools at that time. Now there enters another factor, that is, this stabilization of the market.

Mr. VALLANCE: Before the minister leaves that point I wish he would correct me if I am wrong in this suggestion: Was it not the undertaking of this government that they would guarantee the banks against loss provided Wheat Producers, Limited, would appoint John I. McFarland as manager of the central selling agency?

Mr. STEVENS: I would say to my hon. friend that no such condition was imposed.

Mr. VALLANCE: Was the guarantee given before Mr. McFarland became manager of the selling agency?

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friends will permit me to say so, if what my hon. friend says is correct I am not trying for a moment to deny it. I would not hesitate to say, "God bless you; you are right." I would not have any objection at all to doing that; I am not objecting particularly, but if I can I should like to be accurate, and I have no knowledge of any such condition having been imposed.

Mr. DONNELLY: It is a matter of common knowledge in western Canada that the government had to guarantee the banks in connection with the money loaned the pools, and that before they would give that guarantee they insisted that the pools appoint a satisfactory man to sell this carry-over. Several names were presented from which one was to be chosen. Mr. Brownlee of Alberta was suggested, together with John I. McFarland, and I understood from common report that Mr. Brownlee would not accept. Mr. McFarland did take the position, and it was understood that this was one of the conditions imposed by the government.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me make it quite clear. Let us assume that this was a condition. I am not objecting to it at all; I am quite willing to accept responsibility for it, but in order to be accurate I must answer my hon. friend from my own memory, and I do not recall any such condition. So far as I am concerned, however, my hon. friend is quite at liberty to take that position if he wishes to do so.

Mr. DONNELLY: I am just telling the committee what is common knowledge in western Canada and I claim that my hon. friend, as Minister of Trade and Commerce, is in charge of this branch and should know what was done in that regard. This is our only opportunity to get that information.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is not quite correct there. This guarantee to the banks was dealt with by the cabinet, of course, but it had to be handled through the Department of Finance. I had nothing to do with that part of it at all.

Mr. DONNELLY: That may be quite true, but for all that the Department of Trade and Commerce had to look after the marketing of the wheat. What I should like to impress upon the minister, however, is that John I. McFarland's duty was to sell only the carry-over of 1929 and 1930; he has had nothing whatever to do with the pool wheat of 1931 and 1932. Anything Mr. McFarland has done in the wheat market since then has been at the instigation of this government, for whom he went in the market and bought futures or hedges; in any case he speculated in wheat, took a flier in the market. There is no doubt about that. You can call it by whatever name you like, but the ordinary man calls it gambling in wheat. I do not know of any other way to gamble in wheat; you can buy and sell futures or you can buy and sell what are called puts and calls, but that is not the common method. The ordinary way is to buy or sell futures. Not long ago the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth accused the government of gambling in wheat, but according to the government there was no gambling at all; it was an extremely conservative form of doing business.

Mr. VALLANCE: The Minister of Trade and Commerce was one of the delegates who attended the imperial conference of 1930. With him went the Prime Minister, and the advisers in connection with wheat were John I. McFarland, Doctor Swanson and one of the officials now sitting in front of the minister, Doctor MacGibbon.

Mr. STEVENS: And Mr. MacPhail, head of the pool.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister seems to remember that name well enough. He will remember also that after Mr. McFarland came back from the imperial conference some two weeks elapsed before he took over that position, and I believe it was suggested to him that the government would guarantee the banks only if the pools would accept Mr. McFarland as head of the selling agency. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Willow Bunch that to-day John I. McFarland is not selling for the pool. If the statement of the hon. member for Willow Bunch is wrong I would like the minister or his official, Doctor MacGibbon, to correct it.

Mr. STEVENS: The situation is this. So far as the handling of physical wheat is concerned, Mr. McFarland acted for the pools for the 1930-31 crop year.

Mr. DONNELLY: Up to August 31.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. There was a carry-over at that time. That wheat had to be put on the market in orderly fashion. Had it been put under pressure for liquidation it would have seriously affected the market. So far as I know, the pools at that time broke up through the combined selling agencies. They were now more or less in liquidation in any case; they were in the hands of the banks which were guaranteed by us. Then arose this situation. The pools had to fix their initial price according to their system—we will not bother our heads with just what the price was in different years; it varied and there were some difficulties in that regard. At any rate, they had to pay the initial price. Here again the pools had to go to the banks to get funds to pay that initial price and the government had to guarantee the banks against loss in that respect. The pools desired, as had been their custom in the past, to take all the grain offering by the members; that is the service they are supposed to render their members. Now, the wheat came on in the autumn months under a pressure greater than the fixed credit in the bank would permit them to absorb, and if the pools could not carry that wheat themselves, in their own account in the bank, then they had to sell options on the market in order to recoup their credit in the bank. I must differ with the hon. member for Willow Bunch, or whoever it was that said that Mr. McFarland went into the market and drove the speculator out. That is not the case. With the general world collapse and the falling market in wheat, the speculator, the so-called purchaser of options, disappeared; he disappeared in virtually all markets and there were not sufficient buyers of futures in the market to absorb the offering. We were consequently again confronted with a possible collapse of the market, and it was then that Mr. McFarland was authorized, some months after the end of the crop year. to stabilize, that is to say, to take up these futures in order that the pools who were hedging on the market against their physical purchases of farmers' grain might be protected in their bank credits. The result of that operation has been an accumulation.

[Mr. Vallance.]

My hon. friend from West Edmonton a moment ago made an analysis with which I will not quarrel, but I would invite him and other hon. members to try to see all sides of this story. I will not quarrel with him when he says that the holding last year, in so far as it related to last year's crop, was not of great value, but I would ask him to remember this. Had the weight of the physical volume of the wheat been poured upon the market, and if the carry-over of last year, which was 130,000,000 bushels, had not had someone to carry it, someone who could carry it, then the wheat condition would have been worse than it was. That is the point the hon. gentleman overlooked; he did not give due weight to it. Someone who was financially capable of carrying it had to be found, and we alone could. We are carrying it to-day and, I think, successfully, and I hope that we shall be able to liquidate the situation without serious loss ultimately.

Mr. POWER: I wish to read one order in council dealing with this matter, P.C. 2239, dated September 12, 1931:

The committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated September 11, 1931, from the Minister of Finance, submitting that the economic depression prevalent in Canada, in common with all other countries with which Canada has business relations, is intensified in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta by a partial crop failure, and the difficulty of finding a market for the exportable surplus as rapidly as deliveries are made by the farmer of wheat and other grains grown in the year 1931 in these provinces is apparent. There is need, therefore, if unemployment and distress are not to grow greater, not only in these provinces but elsewhere in Canada, of making immediate provision to enable the farmers in these provinces to sell at market rates or secure reasonable advances upon delivery of their wheat and other grains to the marketing agencies possessing the facilities for marketing the crop. These marketing agencies are:

Manitoba Wheat Pool, wtih its subsidiary, Manitoba Pool Elevators, Limited.

Saskatchewan Cooperative Wheat Producers, Limited with its subsidiary, Saskatchewan Pool Elevators, Limited.

Alberta Wheat Pool, with its subsidiary, Alberta Pool Elevators, Limited; but they, while possessed of a certain amount of cash, do not possess adequate financial resources warranting banking advances that will probably be necessary. Representations have been made by the respective provincial governments, already burdened by obligations arising out of the marketing of the 1929 crop, for assistance from the government of Canada.

The committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, advise that repayment of advances made by any chartered bank to any of these marketing agencies, and interest thereon as may be agreed upon between the banks and such marketing agencies in connection with and for the purpose of marketing said wheat and other grains. be guaranteed by the governor in council under the authority of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, under the conditions and to the extent hereinafter mentioned, to wit:

Then it refers to each of the wheat pools and goes on:

(d) That security upon the wheat and other grains be taken by the banks under the provisions of the Bank Act;

(e) The extent of the guarantee shall be limited to the maintenance at all times of a fifteen per centum margin in the securities so taken.

When, in the usual course of accounting and auditing from time to time, it is ascertained that the margin of fifteen per centum is impaired, the liability under the guarantee of the government to the several banks shall accrue.

The committee further advise that in the event of impairment as above set forth further advances, under this guarantee may thereafter be made by the banks, the total not to exceed the respective credits originally established by the banks for the respective marketing agencies unless and until the Minister of Finance makes further arrangements with the banks for additional credits if such be required.

The committee further advise that payment under this guarantee shall be made out of the consolidated revenue fund for the respective balances, if any are owing after the marketing agencies have sold and realized upon all or practically all such wheat and other grains in their possession or control and application of the amounts realized, less expenses, has been made against bank advances and interest, and thereupon the governor in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, shall determine the date at which payments are to be made in pursuance of this guarantee.

That is one order in council. There was another one dated September 28, 1931, and others, a large number of them, down to the latest, April 10, 1933. Now, it is nearly two years since this first order in council was passed and we have never been able to ascertain from the government exactly what the extent of their guarantee was. I do not care whether it was McFarland or anyone else, the government has backed, endorsed and permitted people acting on its behalf to gamble in wheat. It does not matter whether you call it buying hedges or buying futures, they gambled in wheat. They dealt in a commodity they did not have. They bought options for the future delivery of wheat. Very early in his regime the Prime Minister brought Sir Josiah Stamp over from England to find out whether it was moral to deal in futures. I am not sure that at the very time Sir Josiah was investigating this matter the government was not playing the market. I do not know whether the Prime Minister's conscience was bothering him after he started to deal in wheat, but the fact is that an Englishman was brought over here to tell us that it was permissible and perhaps a good thing to gamble in wheat. I do not think that is sufficient justification for any government to take the money raised by the taxpayers and throw it into the wheat pit like any vulgar speculator. That is what happened.

But there is something still worse than that. Either through incompetency, a lack of the knowledge of finance or for some other reason, we have never been able to find out just where they stand. Many of us gambled in the stock market and we were always able to find out from our brokers just where we stood. We were called for margins upon all occasions and the government must have been called for similar margins. The minister shakes his head but I should like to know if they were not called upon for margins when wheat went to thirty-eight. If they were dealing with brokers and they were not told that their guarantee called for such and such an amount of money, then they had a blanket guarantee. The wheat market is really worse than the stock market as far as gambling is concerned. Lord knows, most of us know how bad the stock market was. We bought Nickel on margin and we bought Auburn automobile, which I consider to be about the worst gamble, on margin, but we knew the condition of our accounts. If rumours are correct this government has been speculating in hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat and they are not able to tell the taxpayers the extent of their gamble. That seems to me to be an unfortunate situation. Apparently there is no accounting to parliament. To the ordinary person who does not know anything about wheat the explanations given as to the wheat pools and Wheat Producers, Limited, and so on are more or less incomprehensible. However, everyone does know that when you play a market, whether it be the stock market, the mining market or the wheat market, you are able to find out whether you are ahead of or behind the game. The taxpayers have never been able to find out from the government just where they stood.

We are told that because of conditions in other countries we may have a win on our gamble, but is that any justification for the action taken by the government? Any bank clerk absconding with a bank's funds can always say: if I had continued to gamble I would have been able to make restitution. But that does not save him from criminal prosecution. To-day the minister told us with a certain amount of pride: we are going to get out and we may make some money. I do not know of any gambler who does not think the same thing. Everyone in the world who goes into a gamble believes he is going to make some money but that is no justification from the moral or economic standpoint. It looks as though we may make some money out of it because this last order in council says that the governor in council may at any time fix and determine the date at which Wheat Producers shall proceed to sell and dispose of all wheat and other grains in its possession or under its control acquired under the guarantee of the governor in council. There must be a very intimate relationship between Wheat Producers and the government if the government can by order in council order Wheat Producers to sell. If it was an ordinary transaction of guarantee I do not think they would have the right to order them to sell, but here they say by order in council: you must sell. In order to be able to do that, Wheat Producers must be the agents of the government. I cannot interpret it in any other way.

Mr. STEVENS: Is it not reasonable where one party guarantees another that there should be some safeguarding power so that they can at any time force, if you like, the one guaranteed to liquidate?

Mr. POWER: Surely, and I am not complaining about that.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a reserve power.

Mr. POWER: What we have heard all through has been the statement that the government are not in the market, that they are merely giving a guarantee; but I am trying to show that if they can give an order to their agents to go ahead and sell, they possibly gave an order to go ahead and buy. If they gave an order to go ahead and buy, it was gambling. I do not see any other interpretation that can possibly be made of this action. If they can tell them they must sell, they can give them an order to buy. If they gave them an order to buy stuff to be delivered at a future date when they did not know the price, it was gambling.

Mr. DUFF: Who will get the profit, if there is any?

Mr. POWER: I assume the government will.

Mr. DUFF: Then they are not guarantors, they are in the deal.

Mr. POWER: They are in the deal and they were up to their necks when the price was thirty-eight. The order in council reads: "application of the amounts realized," that is the swag from the gamble, the kitty. It continues:

[Mr. Power.]

> Application of the amounts realized, less expenses, shall be made against such advances and interest, and thereupon the governor in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, shall determine the date at which payments are to be made in pursuance of this guarantee.

If we are lucky we may get a little money for unemployment relief, and that will not be such a bad idea. We would have as much chance to relieve unemployment through gambling as we would have through some of the other policies of the government.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is just as good as a sweepstake bill for hospitals.

Mr. POWER: At any rate I stated its purpose quite frankly. There was no hypocrisy about it, I admitted it was gambling. The final paragraph of the order in council of April 12, 1933, reads:

> The minister finally recommends that should the Relief Act, 1933, expire and no renewal or further extension of the powers therein contained be then exacted, and any portion of such advances or interest to wheat producers be unpaid to the said banks, wheat producers shall proceed to sell and dispose of all wheat and other grains, if any, in its possession or control acquired under the guarantee of the governor in council and shall proceed to sell and dispose of all contracts entered into and falling within the guarantee of the governor in council for the future delivery to it of wheat and other grains. Application of the amounts realized, less expenses, shall be made against such advances and interest, and thereupon the governor in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, shall determine the date at which payments are to be made in pursuance of this guarantee.

I am not quite sure just what that means, but it looks as though when the Relief Act, 1933, is about to expire the government will be able to come to us and say: Unless you pass this act at once we are going to dump so many million bushels of wheat upon the market, and think what the results will be in western Canada! I cannot see any other reason for it. They are going to order the sale of this wheat before the Relief Act expires, and if it does not, apparently the wheat will have to be disposed of.

There is one other point: I have not the order in council before me, but perhaps the minister can give some explanation of it. It is an order in council passed a month or so ago, dealing with advances made to farmers. It is all mixed up and rather confused in the minds of those who are not familiar with the wheat situation. It relates that an advance of thirty-five cents has been made under the pool plan as an initial payment to the farmers. It goes further and relates that it is not likely that any additional payment would be justified. Then it says further that even though such additional payment may not be justified, the government authorizes an interim payment of five cents a bushel to persons who have delivered their wheat under the pool plan and that such wheat amounts to about 13,000,000 bushels. As I interpret this order in council, it means this: that people in western Canada who were hard pressed for money last fall and sold their wheat outright will receive only the amount which they got at that time; that those who were able to hold their wheat and carry it according to the pool plan, received an initial payment of thirty-five cents and will now be given five cents more than the men who were so hard up that they had to sell. If that is the wrong interpretation, I shall be glad to get an explanation from the minister.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member is not quite correct in his interpretation of that last order in council. It will be understood very readily by all western members and, I think, by most members, that in the operation of the wheat pool system, the pool at the commencement of the season makes an estimate, which is usually supposed to be very conservative, of what wheat will bring throughout the season. Then for its initial payment, it fixes a price with a safe margin below that estimate. During all the years of the operation of the pool, with the exception of one or two in these very recent years of distress, the market upheld the expectation. The consequence was that the intial payment was invariably followed by one, two and, I think in some cases, three subsequent distributions. The final distribution would not occur until the pool had disposed of that particular crop year's purchases. In the instance my hon. friend has mentioned, the pool fixed a price of thirty-five cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What year?

Mr. STEVENS: That would be for the current crop year.

Mr. VALLANCE: At the head of the lakes.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, at the point where it is always fixed, thirty-five cents at the head of the lakes, but that is standardized. Then later in the season, had they been free of any obligation to the government, they would of their own volition have made a second payment, a dividend as they call it, if they had earned that dividend in the sale of their grain. In this case they had earned that dividend, but they could not pay it without authority of the governor in council because of the various guarantees against them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The guarantee of 1931 is still the guarantee?

Mr. STEVENS: The original guarantee. The point I would like the committee to grasp is this: If the government had wished, let us say, to be exceedingly exacting, they might have refused and said: Until you liquidate the original guarantee, that is the one which protected their elevators, their other property and all the rest of it, we will not authorize a further dividend. But that would have been obviously unfair, because that guarantee is being liquidated by a long process and over a long period of time. So the governor in council permitted the pool to pay a dividend in this case, and I think it was a fair and proper thing to do, wholly in the interests of the farmers.

Let me turn to my hon. friend's rather lengthy, humorous—

Mr. POWER: I was quite serious at that time.

Mr. STEVENS: —and fairly reckless dissertation of a few moments ago. This matter is not just a cheap gamble.

Mr. POWER: It is a very extensive one.

Mr. STEVENS: It has nothing to do with ordinary gambling in the markets. This is a very serious matter and it amounts to this: There are two ways in which this wheat can be marketed; one way is the elimination of the grain exchange in Winnipeg and the physical wheat to be offered for sale and purchased as the purchasing market will absorb it. If that method were resorted to in Canada you would have a pressure of Canadian wheat in the world market in the autumn months. As long as the market is such that it can absorb that pressure, Canada's returns will be the fair world market value. But at the present time and for the last four years in particular—and the same may be said of previous periods of time—nothing but chaos and disaster would have resulted to the Canadian seller of wheat had that course been followed. There is no escape from that.

What is the other method? It is that which has grown up over a long period of years. I remember, and my hon. friends in the far corner opposite will remember, that many a time in the committee on agriculture this point has been raised and debated. We have urged the farmers to hold their wheat back and to feed it more slowly into the market. That is fine in theory, but the farmer must pay his taxes; he must put in his stock of food and so on for the winter. So he presses his wheat on the market in the fall. This is his practice and there is no need of our questioning whether he is wise or the reverse; he does this. If he presses his wheat on the market and there is no one to buy the futures, to hold them and to carry them forward for a period of three or six months as the case may be, I believe the market will break. What the grain exchange does is this: it permits buying for later delivery by those who desire to use the wheat later on, for instance, milling companies which want delivery in May, or people who are bona fide exporters, who want to anticipate foreign requirements over a period of months, or speculators. It must be borne in mind that it is not only irresponsible speculators who buy futures. Let us not for a moment get that idea.

Mr. POWER: We know that.

Mr. STEVENS: We know there is the element of the irresponsible speculator, but there is the exporter who is providing for his normal requirements over the whole period and there are the milling companies and other agencies which are bona fide dealers in wheat. They come forward and carry this wheat during a period of time that permits the farmer to dispose of his wheat for cash and by that system and the negotiation of those contracts in the banks bona fide concerns and speculators are enabled to carry those futures over a long period of time. It was to perform that function in part that the government authorized this purchasing of futures to which my hon. friend has referred.

I want to emphasize again, as I did before, that it is a matter of opinion whether the government should or should not have done it, but it is not open to question that in doing it they rendered a service to the market. I wonder if my hon. friends, particularly my hon. friend from Willow Bunch and hon. members from Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, would take the opinion of those responsible for the operation of the big wheat pools of western Canada.

Mr. DONNELLY: No.

Mr. STEVENS: I suppose not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They were in a position where they had no say in the matter.

Mr. STEVENS: I have just been given to understand that it is desired that the committee rise and report progress, and I now move accordingly. We shall have to continue the consideration of these estimates at some future time, but I do ask hon. members of the committee to give thought to the welfare of the pools in whose interest and support this operation was carried on.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 5.45 p.m., until Tuesday, April 18

Tuesday, April 18, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to relief legislation.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Pension Act to give effect to certain recommendations of the committee appointed to investigate the administration of the act; to provide for the elimination of various provisions relating to the pension tribunal; and for an increase in the number of members of the commission and to prescribe their tenure of office; for the continuation of the pension appeal court as a court of appeal and of review; for the appointment of an ad hoc judge as a member of the pension appeal court and his remuneration; for the appointment of a travelling inspector of the veterans' bureau, and of pension counsel, and a reviewing officer; for the payment of awards by the comptroller of the treasury, and generally to simplify and improve procedure under the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

RELIEF CAMPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Will the Minister of Labour please inform me whether it is the intention of the government to continue the relief camps for single men after the thirtieth of this month. In Prince Albert national park there are ten such camps, and the men are performing a very necessary work. Is it intended to continue these camps?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): The continuance of the relief camps referred to is at present under consideration. I agree that the men in these camps, in places at least, are doing very useful work and the desirability of their continuance in this work is under consideration. In plenty of time notification will be given as to the policy to be pursued.

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will go to Washington next week in the capacity of negotiator, like the Right Hon. Mr. MacDonald, or in the capacity of observer like Mr. Herriot, and whether he will be accompanied by experts. If so, who are they?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): It is the intention of the Prime Minister to go to Washington. He will not be accompanied by experts.

CANADIAN LEGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): I have a question to ask the Minister of Labour. It is based on a report appearing in a newspaper published in my riding. The Canadian Legion made an appeal to Victoria, the capital of the province, for further assistance for the unemployed and to take care of those being evicted. The answer came back from Victoria, from the Minister of Finance, to the effect that in his opinion the allowances were inadequate but that they were doing the best they could, and that, in the meantime, the federal government was in arrears to the province to the extent of $2,000,000. Is that report correct?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): The question only illustrates again the undesirability of relying upon newspaper reports. The hon. member was good enough to intimate to me that he would ask the question. The Dominion government does not owe the province of British Columbia $2,000,000; $185,910.42 is the total of the accounts at present in the Labour department, $100,000 of that amount of accounts being received only to-day. It takes about five days to a week to have the accounts passed through the various departments of government for payment. I can assure the hon. member that the report in the newspaper is not correct.

Mr. MUNN: My private opinion is—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MUNN: —that the Victoria report is incorrect.

RADIO BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Marine. Has the radio commission or the department under the minister taken over the broadcasting station at London, Ontario, which has been controlled by the London Free Press?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I will take the question as a notice and refer the matter to the radio commission and give an answer later.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 12, consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion.—Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

On section 3 (h)—Tribunal.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): An amendment had been moved by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) to subsection (h) of section 3. As I recall it, the discussion was in connection with a point raised by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) as to whether the Canadian National system could abandon lines without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners and the governor in council. The opinion of the hon. member was that inasmuch as the Canadian National company had taken over the operations and management of the entire structure, no portion could be abandoned without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners and the authority of the governor in council. The committee was discussing this point when it rose at six o'clock on Wednesday and I was wondering whether the minister had looked into the matter and was prepared to make a statement.

Mr. MANION: It is the desire of the government that this bill should be as acceptable as possible to all sections of the house, and to that end, I intend to make a suggestion. Before making this suggestion, may I say that the Duff commission were very strongly of the opinion that as far as possible we should endeavour to have the National railways so managed as not to be subject to pressure of any kind either from members of the house or members of any government. In other words, it was felt that in so far as it was possible we should endeavour to place the Canadian National Railways in such a position that they could be managed as a private railway company would be managed and not subject to what might be termed political or public pressure. For these reasons, it is the desire of the government that so far as possible we should avoid referring to the governor in council matters which have been decided upon by the trustees. The moment you get back to the governor in council, you get back to political pressure of some kind from the party in power, or the other.

Mr. JACOBS: Only the one party, not the other.

Mr. MANION: In order to comply with the suggestion of the Duff commission and at the same time not leave the management open to political pressure, it has been suggested that an amendment should be made to section 2. This amendment will provide that lines may not be abandoned without the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and I think it will appeal to hon. members opposite as being a reasonable and satisfactory solution of the difficulty. We have no desire that the trustees should be in a position to do anything but good for the Canadian National Railways. At the same time we have no desire to get away from the recommendation of the commission that the railways should be kept free from political or public pressure. Section 2 has been allowed to stand but this amendment can be proposed when the committee is again considering that section. It will be remembered that section 2 is a preliminary section and applies to the bill as a whole. For that reason it will probably be better to have the amendment made to that particular section. The suggested amendment reads:

Notwithstanding anything in this act or any other act, no railway company—

This would apply to the Canadian Pacific as well as to the Canadian National Railways.

—shall abandon the operation of any line of railway or any part thereof without obtaining the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada of such abandonment.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would that apply to the operation of the railway docks located at Vancouver?

Mr. MANION: No. We have tried to word this amendment so that it would not apply to those railway activities which it is felt should be operated more in a cooperative spirit than they have been in the past. There is no reason why running rights over certain lines should be interfered with, and there is no reason why the docks at Vancouver, for instance, should not be operated jointly. The fear has been expressed by hon. members, possibly with some ground, that the board of trustees, either acting for themselves, for the Canadian National Railways or in an endeavour to cooperate with the Canadian Pacific, either with or without an arbitral board, could abandon portions of the Canadian National. I think that is the conclusion which might be drawn from the discussion which has taken place, and it was thought that if the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific had to obtain the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners before any abandonment could take place, it would be reasonably satisfactory to all portions of the house.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners be final?

Mr. MANION: Yes. I would refer the committee to clause (e) of section 17 of part III of the bill. It must be remembered that this part of the bill deals with the arbitral tribunals. Subsection (3) of section 17 states that the powers of the tribunals shall extend to the abandonment of lines, services or facilities and in view of the amendment which has been suggested, it will be necessary to eliminate at least that part of clause (e) of this section which deals with abandonment of lines. The committee could decide later on whether it desires to eliminate that part of the clause dealing with services or facilities. It would thus be made clear that in so far as the abandonment of lines was concerned, the Board of Railway Commissioners would be supreme over an arbitral tribunal.

Mr. EULER: As a matter of information I should like to ask the minister what is the position under the present act. Is it possible for the board to abandon lines?

Mr. MANION: That was the question we were discussing very fully the other day.

Mr. EULER: There is no certainty about it?

Mr. MANION: I think there is, according to my information. The Canadian Pacific could abandon any part of its system except the main line, and the Canadian National, with the exception of the Grand Trunk, could abandon portions of its lines without submission to the Board of Railway Commissioners, and in some cases without submission to the govenor in council. As I said before, the Canadian Pacific can abandon any portion of their system, with the exception of the main line. This amendment would put a restriction upon the Canadian Pacific as well as upon the Canadian National. I may say quite frankly that I have not discussed this amendment with the Canadian Pacific to see whether or not they would be pleased with it; I do not know their attitude.

Mr. JACOBS: I am sure they would be delighted.

Mr. MANION: I am not so sure; I should not be surprised if the Canadian Pacific did not care to have an amendment of this kind, but we have not had time to submit it to either railway company. I am submitting it now to the committee as a reasonable compromise arrangement which I think should be fairly satisfactory to all parties in the house.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Under this proposed amendment would the public be in the same position in regard to the abandonment of lines as they are to-day, with respect to the Board of Railway Commissioners?

Mr. MANION: As a matter of fact I think they would be in a far better position. As I pointed out before, the Canadian Pacific could abandon some of its lines without submission, and the Canadian National, according to the advice of those learned in legal lore, could abandon lines, with the exception of those of the Grand Trunk, without submission to the board. By this amendment neither company could abandon a line without submission to the board, so I think the public is protected to a greater extent.

Mr. DUFF: Do I understand that under the amendment suggested by the minister no railway line shall be abandoned unless that is agreed to by the Board of Railway Commissioners? How would that affect lines which are partially constructed? Would the same thing apply; before such lines were abandoned would the matter have to be submitted to the railway commission?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): May I remind the committee that the proposed amendment reads:

—shall abandon the operation of any line—

Mr. MANION: I was going to point out that this would apply only to the abandonment of lines that were in operation, but the chairman has just pointed out that fact. I know the line to which my hon. friend is referring, the Sunny Brae-Guysborough branch, which is in his riding, and in that of my hon. friend from Pictou. There is no reason why this amendment would place that proposed line, which is partially constructed, in any different position than it is in to-day, because it is not in operation and therefore would not be affected by the amendment. The question of the completion of that line would remain in the hands of the Canadian National Railway Company, as it is to-day; it will be completed when they think it wise to do so.

Mr. MALCOLM: Would this legislation, if adopted, override existing contracts with muncipalities which subsidized the construction and operation of branch lines?

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understood the minister to say that he was not going to move this amendment just now.

Mr. MANION: The only reason I did not move it was that we happened to be dealing with section 3, but if the committee wishes to do so we can go back to section 2, and I will be glad to move it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would prefer not to have that done, because I should like to consider the amendment first.

Mr. MANION: I laid it on the table because I thought it might save a good deal of discussion; several times my hon. friend from Quebec South proposed that we should lay our amendments on the table in order to give hon. gentlemen time to consider them. While I am on the subject of amendments there is another point with which I might deal. There has been a good deal of discussion with regard to the possibility of amalgamation, and my right hon. leader and I have both told the house and the committee that it is not the intention of the government to permit amalgamation. We have both stated that an amendment would be moved designed to prevent any amalgamation, and perhaps since I am laying one amendment on the table so that hon. members may have an opportunity to study it, with the hope of curtailing unnecessary discussion and perhaps shortening the time we must spend on this bill, I might read to the house the amendment dealing with amalgamation, a copy of which I shall send across to hon. gentlemen opposite. Probably this amendment will be moved as the last clause of the bill, so that it will apply to the whole act. The proposed amendment is as follows:

Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the amalgamation of any railway company which is comprised in national railways with any railway company which is comprised in Pacific railways, nor to authorize the unified management and control of the railway system which forms part of national railways and the railway system which forms part of Pacific railways.

That sounds a little complicated, but in view of the many acts which have been passed by this house at various times with regard to the organization of the Canadian National railway system it is necessary to put this amendment in this form. To show how difficult it is to get an amendment fully covering the intention of the government may I say that this morning there was a good deal of difference of opinion among those of us who were considering the matter, with regard to two different amendments, the one I have read and another, both drawn with the intention of preventing amalgamation. Finally, after the matter was submitted to the Department of Justice and considered there, with the object of getting an amendment which would prevent anything in the way of amalgamation of the two companies in any manner whatever, this amendment was approved by the Department of Justice.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to direct my hon. friend's attention to some words appearing in one section of the bill which I suggest might very properly be added to the proposed amendment. I would suggest that at the end of the amendment my hon. friend might add the words found in subsection 4 of section 9, preceding them by a reference to the section so that it would read as follows:

> The provisions of this act, in so far as they may be inconsistent with the provisions of this section, shall be read in the light hereof and be construed so as to conform herewith.

If that additional clause was incorporated in the amendment proposed by the minister, it would make the meaning wholly clear.

Mr. MANION: I will take that suggestion into consideration; of course I cannot decide upon it at the moment. I do not think the words would make the amendment any stronger, because it says very distinctly that nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize amalgamation, so I think the point is amply covered. But I will give consideration to the suggestion of my right hon. friend and discuss it with my legal advisers a little later. I do not know that I could pass an opinion upon it at the moment.

Mr. ILSLEY: I should like to ask the minister whether it will be necessary still for the governor in council to approve certain abandonments. As I understood the argument of the Prime Minister a week ago last Friday night it was that section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act is still in force and that the trustees merely have the powers of the directors with regard to the abandonment of portions of the Canadian National railway system. If the Prime Minister was correct in that contention it would appear to me that even if we pass this amendment the position will be that with regard to parts of the Canadian National system it will be necessary to have the approval not only of the Board of Railway Commissioners but also of the governor in council. Is that the understanding of the administration?

Mr. MANION: The whole question is so complicated and involved at times that I do not like to answer too definitely. If I may speak subject to possible correction a little later, though I think I am right, I would say that in regard to the government railways such as the Intercolonial, for example—since the Intercolonial has been entrusted to the Canadian National for operation, by order in council—I do believe that before any part could be abandoned, in addition to the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners, which is covered by this proposed amendment, the approval of the governor in council would be necessary also.

Mr. ILSLEY: Under section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act?

Mr. MANION: Perhaps. This is a very complicated matter and I do not know that I wish to say specifically that it would be under that section. As I pointed out the other evening, so far as my information goes section 23 applies specifically to the Grand Trunk, which was the only road to be amalgamated with the Canadian National Railway Company. I do believe as well that with regard to the government railways, such as the Intercolonial, the National Transcontinental and the Prince Edward Island railway, in addition to the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners there would have to be further approval by order in council. They have been entrusted to the Canadian National for operation; that was done by order in council, and therefore I think any abandonment would require to be approved by order in council as well.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the event of the Hudson Bay railway being incorporated with the Canadian National for administrative purposes, it would apply to that also?

Mr. MANION: The Hudson Bay railway has never been incorporated with the Canadian National. It is merely operated by the Canadian National as agents for the government.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I prefaced my question with the words "in the event of." In the event of the Hudson Bay railway being incorporated with the Canadian National, it would be in the same position?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: Do I understand that an amendment is to be proposed to take away from the tribunal the power to order the abandonment of lines?

Mr. MANION: That is right.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not know whether I am in order now, but I should like to put a question to the minister for information. It affects the whole act and I have never heard any explanation in regard to it. In what way does this bill affect the lines of the Canadian National Railways in the United States?

Mr. MANION: The lines in the United States are not affected at all so far as cooperation with the Canadian Pacific is concerned. That is as regards Part II. Nor are they affected so far as Part III of the bill is concerned which deals with the arbitral tribunal. But so far as Part I is concerned, the American lines are affected just the same as any other portion of the Canadian National Railways, because Part I applies to the Canadian National Railway Company alone; it does not apply in any way to the Canadian Pacific as regards cooperation or otherwise. My legal adviser points out that the trustees are not the directors, and that is true. When the new trustees are appointed they will not be the directors of either the Grand Trunk Western or the Central Vermont, because by the laws of the United States these lines have to have certain groups of directors. They are both American corporations and naturally they have to be managed according to the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so in that respect they are in a somewhat different position. So far as Part I can apply to those roads it would apply; but so far as cooperation with the Canadian Pacific is concerned, that does not apply at all in regard to Part I of the bill.

Mr. SANDERSON: For further information, is not the board of directors of the Canadian National railway system also the board of directors of the lines owned by the Canadian National in the United States?

Mr. MANION: No. They have their own separate boards of directors, both the Central Vermont and the Grand Trunk Western.

Mr. SANDERSON: I take it from the minister's reply that when this bill becomes law the trustees will have no jurisdiction over the lines in the United States?

Mr. MANION: That is quite true so far as actual management is concerned, but of course they will have supervision over those lines in a general way just as the board of directors to-day has general supervision over them as a part of the Canadian National railway. I do not know if I have made the difference clear to my hon. friend.

Mr. SANDERSON: Perhaps it is my fault that I do not quite see the difference. What I should like to know is this: If this bill becomes law, who will control the lines of the Canadian National in the United States? Who will have the management of them?

Mr. MANION: The trustees will have the management so far as the board of directors now have the management. They will be general supervisors, if I may put it in that way, of the whole Canadian National railway system. In addition, there is a board of directors of the Grand Trunk Western and of the Central Vermont, some of whom are directors as well of the Canadian National in Canada, and some of whom are Americans. Through these boards these American lines would be managed subject to the control of the trustees as to financing, and generally in an advisory way.

Mr. EULER: Will the new board of trustees have representation on these American boards?

Mr. MANION: Yes, no doubt.

Mr. BENNETT: We own all the shares.

Mr. EULER: Will one of the trustees be on each board?

Mr. MANION: For example, some of the directors of the Canadian National are also directors of the Grand Trunk Western. My deputy minister is a director of both of them, and so is Mr. Hungerford; Mr. Grant, the financial comptroller, is also one of the directors over there. That might have to be changed, but perhaps not. It is quite probable that one of the trustees, or possibly two, would be directors on the boards of the United States, but I have not thought that out sufficiently.

Mr. HEAPS: When this bill was first before the committee the Minister of Railways promised to get certain information in regard to the effect of cooperation or the consolidation of train services between Montreal and Toronto and Ottawa and Toronto. I would ask him if he has that information now and if he will give it to the committee.

Mr. MANION: I am sorry I have not that information. I must confess that I have overlooked that detail. I remember quite well that my hon. friend wanted information as to what would be the effects on labour of the general cooperative scheme. I looked into that matter and found that that information was not available. I am afraid that I have neglected to secure the information my hon. friend now asks for as to the decrease in labour employment because of the pooling of trains between Montreal and Toronto and Ottawa and Toronto, but I shall be glad to get it for him.

Mr. HEAPS: There was more than that involved. There was also the question of the anticipated financial saving as a result of this consolidation of services. I should like to go even further than that. The dividing line between consolidation of services and cooperation or amalgamation is so thin that any subsequent enactment against amalgamation does not mean anything because by this bill to all intents and purposes we are going to have cooperation or the amalgamation of services under two managements instead of one. In the case of the consolidation of services between Montreal and Toronto, and Ottawa and Toronto, for instance, to all intents and purposes there you have amalgamation under Canadian Pacific and Canadian National management, and what I should like to know is what are the anticipated savings over a certain period of time for the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific as a result of that consolidation of services. Secondly, what is the amount of labour that has been displaced as a result of that same consolidation of services. While the minister is obtaining that information I think he might go a little further. As I said on a previous occasion, it is common knowledge that efforts are already being made by the two railways to bring about greater consolidation and cooperation of services right across the country. In the last few days I have been among a great many railway men, and the spirit of these men has been completely broken down by the bill that is now before the house. Men with fifteen or twenty or twenty-five years of service do not know how long they are going to be kept in the employ of the railways. I know that engineers have been looking over many of the large terminals of this country on behalf of the railways to see what saving might be made by the closing down of certain terminals and the consolidation of services right across the country. I anticipate myself that in a short time, perhaps two or three years, about twenty thousand railway men will find themselves without a job. Now that is a very serious state of affairs. I do feel before the bill passes the committee hon. members ought to be fully aware of the implications involved in it. I am not so much concerned about tribunals or the powers of any board which may be appointed under the bill, but I certainly am concerned with any move to introduce legislation which will have the effect of throwing about 20,000 men out of work when, as a matter of fact there are hundreds of thousands walking the streets with no possible opportunity of being absorbed into industry. In addition to obtaining information in regard to the consolidation of services between Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto, and the effect such consolidation has had upon the financial situation of the two railways, I am asking the minister now to obtain information showing what efforts are now in progress, or what action has been taken by the two railway companies, towards cooperation in services between other terminal points in Canada.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend asked that question a few days ago. However in listening to the discussion which followed I am afraid I overlooked the smaller detail in attempting to oblige him with information on the larger points at issue.

Mr. HEAPS: It is not a smaller detail.

Mr. MANION: Certainly Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto are small when compared with the whole of Canada. So far as the larger question is concerned I could not and cannot obtain information concerning it. The railway management informed me that they are only surveying the whole matter at the present time. They cannot give me any estimates and I cannot force them to give me estimates in regard to the number of men who may possibly be laid off through cooperative efforts or by pooling the use of terminals.

The hon. member has stated that about 20,000 men may be laid off. I do not in any way pretend to be an expert in railway matters, but I believe that instead of laying off men in the near future, due to the cooperative efforts being made, the railways will be taking on men. If they do not, then I think it will be a serious matter both for the railways and the country. With all due respect may I say that some people, including some railway men themselves, to a certain extent have overlooked the present financial condition not only of the railways but of the country. The railways must effect economies or they will be in such condition that not 20,000 but more men will be laid off for some time or, at any rate, until the railways get into a better financial position than they are to-day.

This country cannot go on paying $50,000,000 or $75,000,000 a year out of its revenues for the Canadian National Railways, without serious effect upon the whole financial structure of our country. Last year the Canadian Pacific Railway barely earned its fixed charges, or the interest on its bonds. At any rate, it has paid no dividends on its common stock, and I believe it has discontinued dividends on its preferred stock. Hon. members will see that it has barely earned sufficient to pay interest on its bonds. Therefore unless there is a revival of business, the Canadian Pacific Railway, too, will be in a very serious condition. May I add that in the last week the decrease in traffic on the Canadian National railways, and no doubt on the Canadian Pacific railway, continued. So far the traffic has continued to decrease each week in 1933, when compared with the same weeks of last year. The decrease in gross traffic has amounted to about $600,000 a week.

Mr. HEAPS: Could the minister give us the percentage?

Mr. MANION: Last week was about 22 per cent under the same week last year. I do not like to use percentages, because I believe they are dangerous in matters such as this. However the fact is that last year in gross earnings the Canadian National Railways were about $39,000,000 below the 1931 figure. So far this year the decrease has continued. There seems to be no bottom to the world-wide condition through which we are passing. Because, despite anything in the nature of criticism which may be lodged, the condition is world-wide and not confined to Canada alone. Railways in the United States are certainly in no better condition than are our Canadian lines. Many of them have gone into the hands of receivers, and unless conditions change, no doubt more will follow.

Therefore I suggest that the seriousness of the situation ought to be considered. No member of this government has any desire to see men thrown out of work. Certainly I should regret very much if this legislation should have that effect. However, coming back to my former statement, in my opinion if there is a revival in business, as there must soon be if we are to avert a complete catastrophe, the railways should be taking on men rather than laying them off, despite co-operative efforts being made.

I shall endeavour to get the information for the hon. member by to-morrow. We cannot get through this bill to-day, I am quite sure. I shall endeavour to obtain for him the information he wishes in regard to Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto services, with the information showing the savings and the number of men involved. I may say that Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Beatty gave out a statement in connection with the pooling of the passenger services between the points in question—I believe I have a copy of it among my papers—and at the time the statement was made they counted on saving something like $500,000. They did not mention the number of men affected, but without any doubt a number will be affected temporarily, at any rate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister has spoken of the falling off in traffic on the Canadian National railways, and suggested that there might be a similar falling off on the Canadian Pacific railway. I received a communication to-day stating that quite recently arrangements had been made for sending a number of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and their mounts from Regina to Saskatoon. The original transportation order had been placed with the Canadian National Railways, but was changed at the last moment, it is alleged, by reason of the fact that the government had directed the traffic should be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. If that is the case, undoubtedly there must be a falling off in Canadian National Railways traffic. I should like to ask the minister whether he knows anything of this matter, also whether it is the government's policy to route government business via the national railways, or if not whether the government gives any direction concerning the routing which shall be followed?

Mr. MANION: My reply to the right hon. gentleman is that in that connection this government acts exactly the same as did the last one. I must say that the Department of Railways and Canals gives practically all its business to the Canadian National Railways. However I made inquiries after this government came into power which disclosed to me the fact that most of the departments of government, as they did under the late government, divide their traffic about fifty-fifty between the two railways. However the Department of Railways and Canals have taken the position, which I believe was taken by the late government, that practically all our traffic, whether it be freight, express or telegraphic, should be given to the Canadian National system.

In regard to the passage of mounted police and the shipment of their mounts, and any change made concerning the routing which would benefit the Canadian Pacific Railway, I have no doubt there was some good reason for making the change. However I cannot make a definite statement in the matter. May I say while I am on my feet there is a great deal of misconception throughout the country in regard to a possible condition implied by the remarks by the right hon. gentleman. In certain newspapers statements are being made to the effect that it has been the object of this government to push traffic over Canadian Pacific rather than over Canadian National lines. I have made a survey of that question, because I am of the opinion that if any government—the late government, this one or any other government—endeavoured to take traffic away from the people's railway and give it to the Canadian Pacific in an unfair manner, that government would certainly be unworthy of the confidence of the Canadian people.

I certainly do not admit that this government is any different from other governments in that regard. This government, like the last government, I presume, when it was in power, has treated the Canadian National as far as traffic is concerned as fairly as possible. I do not suppose anyone would suggest, whatever government is in power, that all the traffic from that government should go to the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific get none. There may be some who would suggest it, but it has never been done.

Mr. HEAPS: Why not?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend says "Why not." Anyhow I repeat that it has never been done. After all I think the Canadian Pacific Railway should be treated fairly. The people of this country owe something to the Canadian Pacific; it is an institution of which we can well be proud, just as we can of the Canadian National once it gets back on its feet. I do not think it would be the desire of any government—even if such an unlikely thing happened as that my hon. friends should get into power—to give all the business of the government to one railway, I believe they would give some to the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. EULER: They could not do it.

Mr. MANION: The Prime Minister mentions another point, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is one of the largest taxpayers in this dominion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The railways would be all one under the existing government. There would be no Canadian Pacific.

Mr. MANION: Well, the railways might be all one, or there might not be any railways.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I may come back for a moment to the question raised by my colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps); it does not seem to me that the minister has given an altogether satisfactory answer. We are not suggesting that there should not be an arrangement made for economies, but we do say that the government has some responsibility, not merely to those financially interested in the roads, but also to the employees of the roads. And as fas as we can ascertain there is nothing whatever in this legislation, nor in the amendments which are now being laid on the table by the minister, to suggest that anything is to be done in the interests of the men who are to be laid off through the various economies proposed. Now I cannot see how a railroad or a government—this is a little of both—can avoid all responsibilities of an honourable employer. The employees constitute part of this railway system, they have had a great deal to do with the building up of the system, they have been encouraged to do their best work, to stay with the company in order to help build up the system. Now it would seem that they are to be thrown aside, with only the most remote possibility of ever being taken on again. It seems to me that is not fair, it would not be fair in the case of a private employer and is especially unfair in the case of a public employer. I am not urging that these men should be continued in the poistions which they have had in the past, it may be necessary to pool certain services; but since there are to be economies effected, running perhaps to half a million or a million dollars, even in the taking off of a few trains, if these economies are to be effected, it seems to me that something should be done to help the men in the meantime. It may be that ultimately these men will be able to secure some other work, but that is an impossibility under the present circumstances. I talked to some of these men only this last week, publicly and privately. They are at their wits end to know what to do. For instance on these trains mentioned between Montreal and Toronto, I know one man who was transferred from Winnipeg, to be given an opportunity of working on that train. He has now his little house in Toronto; shortly, he expects to be on the street; no connections here in the east whatever other than his railway connection, and no possibility of being able to secure a job on the railway in the near future, much less in the general labour market outside. I do think that under these circumstances the minister should pay some attention to the suggestion that we have made that the immediate needs of these men—I will not say entire compensation, that is a phrase which perhaps is liable to a good many meanings—but that the immediate needs of these men who are being laid off should be a first charge on the savings to be effected. I think that is a reasonable proposal. My friend here suggests an equal charge; I do not think that, I think there ought to be a preference given the men. We are trying to provide that the bondholders shall not suffer, but even in bankruptcy proceedings the last stick cannot be taken out of a house and the family left helpless. In most of our provinces there is a certain minimum amount exempt from seizure so that the people can manage temporarily. It seems to me we ought to adopt some such policy as that, make some minimum provision for these men. Now is the time to do it, when other amendments are being offered. I hope the minister will take into serious consideration the addition of a clause that will make some provision for the men displaced under the operation of the proposed legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL: Following the remarks of the two previous speakers on this side, in 1921 a railway consolidation bill was passed in Great Britain which had for its purpose the consolidation of 120 railroads into four systems. The problem that is under discussion here this afternoon naturally confronted the British government at that time. This bill dealt only with private roads, but that government accepted the responsibility, which in my judgment is a responsibility of all governments when legislation is passed throwing on the labour market thousands of men. When my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was speaking I remarked that the responsibility for the men was at least equal to that to the bondholders. I believe that under these circumstances, where there is going to be a saving of possibly $75,000,000 a year, fifty per cent of that saving should be used to create a fund for the amelioration of the condition in which these unemployed railway workers will find themselves. It is true there is a section of the Railway Act, No. 179 I think, giving protection in certain cases, which will be unaffected by this legislation. But that does not begin to meet the situation. Take the towns in northern Ontario where these men have built homes, built up a community life, which towns will be wiped out by the passage of this legislation, because they are purely railroad centres. They are left in the midst of, may I say, a desolate waste, all that they have built there will be rendered absolutely unnecessary by the passage of this bill.

I would like to read into the record—it will take some time but it may be useful—the clauses relating to the men who would have been laid off had this provision not been made in the British act. The act is chapter 55, of The Public General Acts of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 1921:

An act to provide for the reorganization and further regulation of railways and the discharge of liabilities arising in connection with the possession of railways, and otherwise to amend the law relating to railways, and to extend the duration of the rates advisory committee.

Third Schedule

Existing Officers and Servants

The following provisions shall apply in respect to persons who at the date of the passing of this act are, and for a period of not less than five years have been, officers or servants of any constituent company or subsidiary company, and who shall not, prior to the amalgamation or absorption of such constituent or subsidiary company, have become pensioners or annuitants in accordance with the rules of any railway pension or superannuation fund of which they may be members, or have voluntarily retired, or have been removed from the service of any such constituent or subsidiary company by reason of misconduct or incapacity (all of which officers and servants are in this schedule hereinafter referred to as "existing officers and servants"):—

(1) Every existing officer and servant shall, as from the date of amalgamation or absorption, become an officer or servant of the amalgamated company:

(2) The amalgamated company may abolish the office or situation of any existing officer or servant which they deem unnecessary, and any existing officer or servant required to perform duties such as are not analagous or which are an unreasonable addition to those which as an officer or servant of the company from whom he was transferred he was required to perform may relinquish his office or situation:

(3) No existing officer or servant so transferred shall, without his consent, be by reason of such transfer in any worse position in respect to the conditions of his service as a whole (including tenure of office, remuneration, gratuities, pension, superannuation, sick fund or any benefits or allowances whether obtaining legally or by customary practice of the constituent or subsidiary company) as compared with the conditions of service formerly obtaining with respect to him:

(4) If any question arises as to whether the provisions of the last foregoing paragraph have been complied with, the question shall be referred to a standing arbitrator or board of arbitration appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and, if the arbitrator or board consider that those provisions have not been complied with, and that the officer or servant has thereby suffered loss or injury, they shall award him such sum to be paid by the amalgamated company as they think sufficient to compensate him for such loss or injury:

(5) Every existing officer or servant whose office or situation is so abolished or who so relinquishes his office or service or whose services are dispensed with on the ground that they are not required or for any reason not being on account of any misconduct or incapacity, or whose salary, wages, or remuneration are reduced on the ground that his duties have been diminished, or who otherwise suffers any direct pecuniary loss by reason of the amalgamation or absorption (including any loss of prospective superannuation or other retiring or death allowances and allowances payable to his widow or orphan children, whether obtaining legally or by customary practice of the constituent or subsidiary company), shall be entitled to be paid compensation for such pecuniary loss, to be determined and paid by the amalgamated company, subject to appeal to such standing arbitrator or board of arbitration as aforesaid, in accordance with the provisions contained in section one hundred and twenty of the Local Government Act, 1888, relating to compensation to existing officers, and those provisions shall apply accordingly as if they were herein reenacted with the necessary modifications. For the purpose of this schedule, any solicitor who was continuously retained by a company as their chief legal adviser for the period of five years before the passing of this act shall be deemed to be an existing officer of the company:

Provided that, in the case of any officer or servant who was appointed to his office as a specially qualified person at an age exceeding that at which public service usually begins or of any officer or servant who suffers any loss of prospective superannuation or other retiring or death allowances as aforesaid, such addition may be made to the amount of compensation authorized under the said provisions as may seem just, having regard to the particular circumstances of such case:

Provided further that the expression in subsection (1) of section one hundred and twenty of the Local Government Act, 1888, "the Acts and Rules relating to Her Majesty's Civil Service" shall mean the Acts and Rules relating to His Majesty's Civil Service which were in operation at the date of the passing of the Local Government Act, 1888.

(6) The fee payable to an arbitrator or member of a board of arbitration under this schedule shall be such as the Lord Chancellor may fix, and that fee shall be paid by the amalgamated company concerned.

After the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I looked up that act, and I see no reason why the government of this country should not, within the four corners of this bill, make provision for the protection of those thousands of men who will be laid off in consequence of this legislation which we are now considering. The men in the railway industry are specialists of a kind. They are men who, in my judgment, have made their contribution to the successful operation of the railways, and when they are thrown out they will have to take their place in the unskilled labour market of the country. I say, they are specialists, and they are specialists of a type absolutely essential to the proper conduct of a transportation industry such as we have in this country. The minister said there had been a considerable falling off in passengers even in the last week. Well, I believe that you can keep chopping off the limbs of a tree until you have no tree left. I quite agree with him that we are facing in Canada a condition that almost borders on bankruptcy in the next twelve months, but I believe that this condition has been brought about by the deliberate deflationary policy of this government. No one else is responsible for it. I think the government would be well advised to adopt the suggestions made by the small group in this corner of the house, who still have regard for the human element in our railway industry.

Mr. MANION: I do not think the small group in the corner should arrogate to itself sole regard for the human element in the railway industry. Hon. gentlemen directly opposite as well as those on this side have just as much regard for the human element as my hon. friends in the corner.

An hon. MEMBER: More.

Mr. MANION: Some hon. gentlemen say more, but certainly as much. The question is worthy of consideration, but I would point out to my hon. friend that it was fully argued the other day, when an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and ruled out of order. I do not admit the huge figures mentioned by some speakers with regard to the numbers of men who are likely to be laid off in consequence of co-operation between the two railways. This parliament meets every few months. We shall be out of session only seven or eight months, at most ten months, before parliament meets again, and if after the passing of this legislation some amendment were found desirable, it could then be made. The passing of this bill is not the last word that will be said in this matter. It is possible that the act may require amendment. It is new legislation and, like most acts of parliament, it may require attention later on. If it is found that as a result of cooperative arrangements between the two railways amendments are necessary, they can be dealt with at the next session, although I make no promises as to what will be done—I do not wish to be misunderstood in that regard. At any rate, at the present time the government takes the position that we should pass this act and give the new trustees an opportunity to function, and the new arrangements a chance to produce results which we hope will tend to retain men who have been at work; and if it were found later on that something had to be done because men had been treated unjustly, because of the passing of this bill, then the matter could be brought up at the next session of parliament and dealt with at that time as the government of Canada and the House of Commons might see fit.

Mr. HEAPS: I am fully in agreement with what the minister has said, but perhaps I might put my point in another way. There are a large number of people who have invested money in the railways of this country and who live in the United States and other parts of the world. These people draw dividends from the securities which they hold.

Mr. MANION: None of them are drawing a cent of dividends at the present time.

Mr. HEAPS: They are drawing interest.

Mr. MANION: There is quite a difference between the two.

Mr. HEAPS: As I understand it, a large part of the Canadian Pacific securities are in the form of bonds.

Mr. MANION: About half.

Mr. HEAPS: Interest is being drawn upon almost the total amount of the Canadian National indebtedness and these securities are held largely in the United States and Great Britain. I do not think more than fifteen per cent of the securities of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways are held in Canada. These security holders draw interest amounting to millions of dollars. Why should we not follow the suggestion of the minister and let these people wait until next year so that we can give relief to our own Canadian people who are out of work? Let us put the boot on the other foot and see if it would not work just as well.

Mr. MANION: Last year the Canadian Pacific Railway barely earned its bonded indebtedness. Bonds are first mortgages and how could that company say to its bondholders: We do not intend to pay you part of the interest which is due. The bondholders would at once foreclose upon the railway and put it into liquidation, just as has been done with many of the railways in the United States. It is quite true that a larger proportion of the indebtedness of the Canadian National Railways is in the form of bonds than the indebtedness of the Canadian Pacific Railway; it is true also that the Dominion of Canada has guaranteed these bonds and the only way that the payment of interest could be avoided would be for this country to repudiate its indebtedness. So far, Canada has not decided to take that step. Last year the Canadian Pacific barely earned enough to pay the interest upon its bonded indebtedness while the Canadian National Railways was $53,000,000 short of paying the interest upon its bonded indebtedness. My hon. friend, the other members of this committee and the taxpayers of this country are the people who are paying the interest upon this bonded indebtedness. We cannot refuse to pay that interest unless we choose to repudiate our debts. I think these facts should be kept in mind by hon. members rather than the bringing up of the bogey that employees of the railways are to be thrown out on the streets to starve in order that the bondholders may receive their interest. We are looking after the interests of the bondholders simply because we cannot help ourselves. As far as I am concerned, I would prefer to see the indebtedness of the Canadian National Railways in the form of securities upon which dividends would not have to be paid unless earned. Unfortunately, in the wisdom or lack of wisdom of all governments, at least since 1919, it was decided that this indebtedness should be in the form of bonds. Until this country decides to repudiate its indebtedness, therefore, it cannot refuse to pay the interest upon these bonds.

Mr. HEAPS: The effect will be the laying off of a vast number of men.

Mr. MALCOLM: What about sharing the work?

Mr. HEAPS: That is my interpretation of the effects of this bill. A large number of men will be thrown out of employment as the result of the consolidation of services, as has been demonstrated by the consolidation of the services between Montreal and Toronto. The principal saving has been in the form of wages and the use of equipment. The minister says that we have to meet our obligations to these security holders, but I contend that we should choose between our own Canadian people and these security holders, the big majority of which reside outside of Canada.

Mr. MANION: How can we refuse to pay the interest upon this bonded indebtedness without repudiating our debts? If my hon. friend will tell me how we can choose in favour of our own people and keep them in employment rather than to pay the interest to the bondholders, I should be very glad to hear any suggestion he has to offer.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What would happen if this legislation did not go through?

Mr. MANION: The indebtedness of the railways would probably increase.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: All we are suggesting is that one of the conditions of holding down this indebtedness shall be that the men must be looked after.

Mr. MANION: If that is done we will be taking away the chance of economy. It does not matter very much whether you use money to pay men who are not required or to pay interest upon securities. It was the opinion of the Duff commission, which opinion I think is shared by all reasonable Canadian people, that these two railways must economize. It was felt that if they did not do so, the whole financial structure of the country would be endangered.

Mr. EULER: What I have to say, I say with a good deal of hesitation because I know it will not meet with the approval of certain hon. members of this committee. I think most hon. members know that I have always been in favour of the public ownership of railways but I have always felt that a railway, even though publicly owned, could not be successful unless it were conducted as much as possible as a private business would be conducted. I have every sympathy with those who may be thrown out of employment by the measures of cooperation between the two great railways which may be possible under this bill, but if we are going to operate the national railways upon the principle to which I have just referred, we cannot follow the principles laid down by my hon. friends to my left, for whom I have every respect, and operate the railways mainly for the purposes of providing employment. The railways are being run by the Canadian people—I am referring to the Canadian National Railways—for the purpose of giving efficient railway service at as low a cost as possible and the employment of men to run the railways is incidental in a measure to what I have just enunciated. I agree with the minister when he states that unless something is done in the way of the elimination of waste, the railways will be in a perilous position and the whole financial structure of the country may be endangered. It becomes the duty of parliament to do whatever is possible to reduce the expenses of running the railway as a purely business proposition. There is one point to which I would direct the attention of my hon. friends; if this government is going to differentiate between classes of employees, this country will be entering upon a very big proposition. In the industrial and other centres many people are being thrown out of work because of the development of conditions in this country. In the city of Kitchener we have a great many furniture factories and to-day one of the largest factories is giving its employees only nine hours work per week, and only half of the usual number of employees are at present employed. This merely shows that if you are going to differentiate so far as railway employees are concerned, you will be entering upon a very difficult course. If we are going to say that because the employees of the Canadian National Railways are working for the people of Canada the government of Canada has a special duty to perform in looking after them when they are thrown out of work, I think it almost necessarily follows that we should enact legislation which will delegate to employers in other lines of industry the duty of looking after their employees when they are out of work. If we are going to adopt the principle at all it must be adopted in a general way. Then we get into an entirely new field, and what I am trying to say is this: I think in fairness to the country we cannot set the railway employees apart from other working men. If that is done with regard to the Canadian National, and the company is to carry the loss which otherwise would not be the case if some men were laid off, how can the company compete with its great rival the Canadian Pacific. I think you would have to enforce that principle also in connection with the Canadian Pacific, as you would have to enforce it in connection with other lines of industry. I hope I am not misunderstood; I have every sympathy with the employees of the railway company. I will say that if the government feels that by reason of the economies effected through the laying off of men by the national railways it is the duty of the government to look after those men, I am absolutely in accord with that position, but the burden should not be thrown upon the company as a business proposition. That is my point of view.

Something has been said as to whether the business of government departments should be given to the Canadian National Railways, and I am afraid in that regard I shall have to disagree with the minister. I believe that the Canadian National, which is owned by the Canadian people, should receive all the business the Canadian government possibly can give it. That sounds reasonable to me. Let us say a man has two businesses. He is a contractor and is putting up a building in one city, while his other business is the manufacture of construction material, such as bricks. Would it not be absurd for that man to go to one of his competitors in order to buy the bricks necessary in the construction of the building?

Mr. EDWARDS: Pretty far-fetched.

Mr. EULER: It is not far-fetched at all; surely we should patronize ourselves first. If you want to put it this way, charity begins at home.

An hon. MEMBER: What should we do as individuals ?

Mr. EULER: This is a free country, and an individual can patronize any company he pleases. We ought to patronize our own line. As I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, I know a good many hon. members will disagree with me on that point, but in the past I have always taken that position.

A good deal has been said with regard to amalgamation. I can only repeat that I do not believe this bill will do all that should be done. As many hon. members know, I always have been in favour of complete amalgamation, and in spite of the fact that the Prime Minister repeated many times the slogan "Amalgamation never; competition ever," I think that was an unfortunate statement, and I believe in due course he will have to change it.

Mr. BENNETT: Do you believe in amalgamation?

Mr. EULER: Yes; I believe in amalgamation under public ownership, not under private ownership. I think we will never get the full measure of saving and economy that is possible until we have complete amalgamation. I did not rise to make a speech on amalgamation, but that has been my position in the past, and I may as well make it clear now. I am in favour of the bill if certain amendments can be introduced, though I think it has a great many weaknesses. I am in favour of it because it goes a certain distance in the direction I should like to see it go, that is, in the saving of money in the operation of the road. Something has been said about the sharing of work. I am inclined to think that something more might be done by the railway people themselves so that the work which is available might be shared a little more equally among those who have been working for the company.

I have said perhaps a little more than I intended, Mr. Chairman, but once more I should like to make it clear that the railways must be run as a business proposition. If by reason of that it becomes necessary, unfortunately, that some men no longer may be employed, that cost should not be saddled upon the company; it should be borne by the whole country. There you enter upon a principle which is a great deal wider than simply taking care of those who lose their employment with the national system; you will have to extend it to all lines of business in Canada, and perhaps we will come to that yet.

Mr. POULIOT: I listened carefully to the hon. member who has just taken his seat, and I quite agree that the railways were built for service. The hon. gentleman added that they were not built to create employment, but neither were they built to create unemployment. This is an important fact. May I add that I cannot imagine any locomotive being operated by robots. Men are essential to the operation of a railway, but we must face the situation as it is and make the best of it. Many men have worked for the railway all their lives; their children have followed them, hoping that some day they might take the places of their fathers or grandfathers. While Sir Henry Thornton was president of the Canadian National he very often paid deserved tribute to his partners, the employees of the road. He understood that no railway could be run without the help, the loyalty and the devotion of the men employed by the company.

There is another point to which I should like to direct attention. In 1928 and 1929 the Canadian Pacific sold bonds to their own employees; these men were canvassed to invest their life savings in Canadian Pacific bonds. To-day, because of the decrease in traffic, those bonds do not return any interest, and as a result these employees are suffering because of their loyalty to the company. That loyalty did not impose upon them the obligation to buy railway bonds; that loyalty was shown when they did their full duty to the company. But they did more, and as a result to-day many of those men have lost their jobs and are receiving no return from their investment.

This only goes to emphasize the importance of having all the information available when discussing this question. I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for North Waterloo refer to the discrimination shown as between different classes of employees. It is most important that complete figures should be given; we should know how many engineers, firemen, conductors, trackmen, station agents, men working in shops and men working in the yards have been set back. What are the records of these men? We should have those figures for the Canadian Pacific as well as for the Canadian National. I think the Minister of Labour should be furnished with full information with regard to these men so that employment may be found for them elsewhere if there is no work on the railways. That is why I direct attention to the fact that nothing can be done for the railways unless we get the proper information and nothing can be done for unemployment unless we get all the facts. The government should be able to give the whole facts. We have already been given some figures which show the extent of the trouble, and we must see to it that a remedy is provided. That is why I ask for the information. I know that the Minister of Railways is well disposed. We cannot proceed to pass legislation without proper consideration. This House of Commons has been considering this bill for more than two weeks, and it would really take months of study by a group of members of the House of Commons to come to a definite conclusion on the subject and bring down legislation which would meet all the necessities of the case. In a few days it is impossible to have this House of Commons properly consider such important legislation having such far-reaching effects on Canadian life from ocean to ocean. The legislation needs to be studied in detail. The legislation as first drafted, by whom I do not know, was so poor that the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, leader of the government in the Senate, would not accept it. It was such poor legislation that he did not want to attach his name to it, and the legislation was changed in the Senate. It is not yet in its final shape. I sympathize fully with the Minister of Labour, but I also sympathize with all the men who have been let out of employment. I do not say that it is the fault of the minister, but I say that it is due to some of the policies of this government that the railways now have no traffic and that Canadian trade is curtailed. The railway business is only one side of Canadian life. Everything must be taken into account. There is trade, traffic, business. No railway can exist without such business. There must be an understanding of the whole situation, of all the factors involved. Although Lord Ashfield may be a good man, neither he nor another gentleman from the United States nor another gentleman from Toronto nor another gentleman from Montreal sitting together on a commission can decide such an important question as the railway question in this country. They can spend some time investigating the situation, and they can submit a report giving their views. But does the government say, when it gets the views of the commission, these are our views? The government says: Here are the views of the commissioners, and we accept them. The commissioners are the motive power of the government.

May I take this opportunity also to say this? When I see railway men out of jobs, I think of those who made money during the war at the expense of the people. We know of the immense profits that they have stolen from the people of this country, and instead of forcing them to pay back what they have stolen we see one of them, Joseph Flavelle, appointed a commissioner, and he is called an able business man. I think of the poor men who have nothing to eat and no work to do and who have spent their savings, and I get indignant when I think that their fate is decided by a common thief. I get indignant about that commissioner, about that war profiteer, who has been appointed with honest men on the transportation commission. This is a thing that no one with a head on his shoulders can understand. It must be explained to this country how the fate of these poor men, honest, hard-working, who have devoted their lives to their country in the work they were doing, should be decided upon by a man who is a millionaire, a war profiteer—lord bacon.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, before anybody else gets into the discussion, may I remind the committee that we have been on this bill now in the neighbourhood of two weeks and we have only passed two or three definitions. The whole discussion to-day, including my own remarks in reply to the hon. gentleman who brought up the subject, has without doubt been out of order. The clause now before us is paragraph (h) of clause 3, defining "Tribunal." May I suggest with all due deference that after two weeks of discussion by all sides of the house there has been a full opportunity for consideration of the principles of the bill, and the discussion which has taken place this afternoon should, I think, have taken place on the second reading. I suggest that we try, if at all possible, to stick to the clause under consideration. I do not wish to limit discussion in any way, but I should like to see some progress made on the bill, and I think the whole house wishes it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The bill ought to have gone to a committee of this house; that is the whole trouble.

Mr. BENNETT: That is an excuse; it is not fair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It ought to have gone to a committee of the House of Commons. The method that has been adopted in regard to this bill it has been suggested may be followed by my right hon. friend in connection with other bills. It is suggested that they be dealt with in a different manner than is customary in this house. I think that they should go to a special committee, and I hope that my right hon. friend will reconsider any decision of that kind with respect to the future because the procedure of this parliament is being departed from by my right hon. friend to far too great an extent.

Mr. BENNETT: The Conservative tendencies of my right hon. friend do him credit. I am glad to see them and his desire to cling to precedent, and I am not ungrateful to him for reminding me that I never feel bound by hoary precedent or hesitate to depart from it if by so doing I can advance the interests I have at heart. This bill is not being advanced by the discussions that have been taking place in this house. The right hon. gentleman suggests that the bill should have gone to a committee, but it is quite apparent from what has transpired during the last two weeks that a deliberate effort has been made to prevent the passage of this bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not say by the right hon. gentleman. I said that a deliberate effort had been made, not by the right hon. gentleman because he has not said very much during the last two sessions, nor have the leading members of his party during the last session, but let anyone look at the debates! I may say that a perfect stranger looking at the Hansard drew my attention to it the other day and said, "The rules of your house certainly are very strange." To think that hour after hour we have been listening to what has taken place this afternoon—I have heard it five times, and I have not heard it all, except on two occasions. We have listened to a speech this afternoon which consisted of an attack against an eminent Canadian. It is not a new speech in this house, but since the war it has not been made so frequently. It does not do any credit to the Liberal party nor to the gentleman who made it, to attack in this house a man who is outside, without any opportunity to say a word in reply, and who was appointed to this commission, not from any desire to serve upon it, but at the earnest request of the people, not simply one road but both roads, who thought by reason of his great experience and great business capacity that he was best qualified to arrive at sound conclusions with respect to the question, a gentleman who rendered a service gratuitously to this country, without any desire to serve any selfish purpose. To make such an attack in this house upon such a man is certainly not encouraging to those to whom we look for public service. To be attacked in this way in this house, and referred to in the terms used, charged with being the type of men we have heard they were, is not conducive to the accepting of public service by men who have by their great ability and talents made great business successes in this country. I mention that because I do not think that an attack of that sort is advancing the cause that we have at heart.

It is said that the trouble is that this legislation did not go to a committee of this house. The fact that it was considered by another chamber, in one of its committees, is a good reason why it should not go to another committee of this house. An ample opportunity was given in the Senate committee to consider this legislation. There may be differences of view as to whether that is sound or not, but it is clear that in the light of the speeches we have heard they have no reference to the bill itself. All the consideration in the world before a committee would not assist the bill, because the character of the speeches we have heard would indicate that they are aimed against the measure as a whole—to destroy it. The amendments moved would destroy it. Therefore any consideration in committee would not help it. The effort has been to destroy the measure as a whole. I think any one will agree that the minister has been exceedingly courteous and patient in his endeavours to answer any inquiry, relevant or irrelevant. He has considered carefully, at the earnest solicitation of hon. members opposite, the questions of amalgamation and the power of trustess. All those points he has endeavoured to meet, and has met admirably with the amendments he suggested. If the committee says that it is going to cause all the delay possible in the enactment of the legislation, the government cannot help it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No one says that.

Mr. BENNETT: You do not have to say it in terms; nothing has to be said in terms; all you have to do is act. I do say, with the wide experience the right hon. gentleman has had, if he will take Hansard from the day the bill came into the house and read it—no, I should not impose that penalty upon him—but if he will look at Hansard from the day the bill came into the house until to-day he will find it very difficult to recall any occasion, with the exception of possibly one, in the last seven years in which there have been the same sort of reiterated statements directed towards the principle of any measure —not the details of the clauses under consideration. I do urge that if the committee desires to attack the measure, the way to do it is to move that the committee rise, and that will be the end of it. If we do not desire to kill the bill, let us consider the clause before us with any amendment there may be to it. Anything I have said in that connection I say in the best temper in the world, because as far as I am concerned I can sit here for the rest of the summer, if the house can. If the numbers in the committee become small we will manage to keep a majority in some way.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I speak only for the official opposition. With the exception of an occasional speech here and there, to which some exception may be taken, our discussion has arisen out of our difficulty to understand the purpose of the government with respect to certain provisions of the legislation. Our questions have arisen in connection with the meanings of certain sections and I say now, as I said before, that when the minister began to make explanations we came to have a view of the purposes of the government with respect to certain sections entirely different from what we had when the bill was first presented, or during the discussion on second reading. One of the amendments the minister has brought in to-day has thrown light on the matter. We have had no desire in the world to obstruct or to delay but, for the most part, so far as the Liberal opposition is concerned, we have been seeking to get at the exact significance of the legislation and its probable effect whenever it may come into force.

With regard to the important matter which for the most part has been discussed to-day, I do not believe exception can be taken to a very keen desire on the part of hon. members, while the bill is before the committee, to speak on behalf of those men who are going to be thrown out of employment as the result of greater cooperation between the two railways. We should give special consideration to this phase if it is at all possible so to do. The matter has to be viewed from all sides. From one point of view, the question of employment is certainly one of the most important problems, if not the most important, with which we have to deal. If the bill involves throwing men out of employment it is only reasonable that every possible step should be taken to help meet such a situation until some further adjustments may be made.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. HEAPS: I do not know whether the house has considered the bill for two weeks, or not—

Mr. YOUNG: Off and on.

Mr. HEAPS: This is the fourth day the bill has been before the committee. On two former occasions when the bill was before committee, I was away.

Mr. MANION: We considered the second reading for about five days.

Mr. HEAPS: That was a general discussion. But this is the first time we have been able to get down to details, and I do not believe the Prime Minister was fair when he pointed to this corner of the house and suggested that we were delaying unduly. I believe we are justified in exercising all the latitude given us to speak in the interests of the men who would be affected. By the provisions of this bill men who have been in the services of the railways for twenty or thirty years in the very near future may find themselves without means of subsistence. We all admit the greatest problem parliament has to face is that concerning unemployment, and if we do take a little extra time discussing possible unemployment which may arise from the passage of the measure, I believe we would be only fulfilling our duty to our constituents and to parliament itself.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I do not believe there is any doubt that a good part of the discussion this afternoon has been out of order. In that connection may I read subsection (2) of standing order 58:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

No doubt much of what has been said to-day is not relevant to section 3 subsection (h) of the bill which reads as follows:

> "Tribunal" means an arbitral tribunal constitutel pursuant to part III of this act.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I shall discuss the subsection and the amendment moved by the hon. member. In reply to the strictures placed upon the committee by the right hon. Prime Minister I wish to point out that one of the amendments moved in committee was that moved by the hon. member for West Lambton, so that the provisions of section 23 of the Canadian National Railways Act would have effect. We have been told about a wonderful discussion in another place in connection with this bill. I venture to suggest that the Senate committee never brought out the points which have been raised in this committee in regard to the power of the railways in Canada in connection with the abandonment of branch lines. The discussions we have had in this committee have centered around the powers of the board of trustees in connection with the abandonment of branch lines. As the result of all that discussion which originated from this side of the house the Minister of Railways has to-day brought down an amendment which meets our wishes and protest in regard to the abandonment of branch lines.

I suggest to the Prime Minister if ever opposition was justified to the details of legislation as it left the Senate and was presented to this House of Commons, it has been justified in this instance, and that the opposition have been acting quite fairly in the last four or five days the bill has been before the committee. Everything we have pressed for, so far, has been given by amendments the minister himself has brought down. I repudiate the assertion made by the Prime Minister that there has been a waste of time. If there has been any waste of time, the government has been responsible for it in not having taken the committee into its confidence in connection with amendments. By our aggressive criticism we have forced them, in part at least, to move the amendments we wanted. I repeat the request we have made on several occasions that if the Minister of Railways has any further amendments which he will bring down in future sittings, let him table them now so that the committee may give them careful consideration. I protest against being called an obstructionist, or in fact against any one on this side of the house being so referred to.

Mr. BENNETT: The word was not used.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But the implication was most obvious. It was referred to by my right hon. friend the other day when he spoke of the useless, involved, legal discussion dealing with that very section 23. I happened to take some part in that discussion, and I am amply vindicated this afternoon, because what we sought for has been given by the Minister of Railways. I also protest against the suggestion that because a committee of the other house considered this bill, the consideration has been complete. We never heard about the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway could abandon branch lines without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners, or that the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific could abandon branch lines without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners, from the discussion in the committee of the Senate. We dragged that information out of the Minister of Railways in this committee. I venture to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill is worth anything at all when finally passed by this house it will be as a result of the careful and considered criticism offered by hon. members to your left.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, it is some time now since the Prime Minister gave us one of his little curtain lectures to which we have become accustomed during the past two or three years, and perhaps it was to some extent due from his standpoint. Had the chairman ruled an hour and a half ago that we were out of order probably we would have kept a little closer to our knitting. As a matter of fact the Minister of Railways admitted that not only the committee but he himself was out of order, so perhaps we are all equally guilty. I think I asked two questions that took a couple of minutes, so I do not feel particularly guilty. And if we have taken up one afternoon and part of another in committee we have some amendments and proposed amendments to this bill which are worth it, and we hope to get still more. So we are encouraged to go on and make suggestions. The Prime Minister says that the Duff commission, composed of eminent men, had spent, not a whole afternoon, but nearly a whole year—at intervals of course—in producing the report on which this bill is based. We are going to swallow it all in two afternoons! We are responsible to our constituents. The people are not going to ask me, What did the Duff commission think about it? What did the Senate committee think? They are going to hold me responsible. My constituents look to me, not to the Duff commission nor even the august Senate. It did good work, and so did the Duff commission, but after all we are the representatives of the people, who, I still believe, own this great railway although it is claimed by some to belong to the bondholders. In the last analysis we are the ones who will be held to account as to what is being done with it, as well as the government. The Prime Minister having settled it all in his own mind, everything shaped up fine a whole year of propaganda through the press to prepare public sentiment, a commission sitting to help formulate it, educational if you will, and the Senate making some important amendments—why can we not let it slide through without so much talk? Of course the Prime Minister is disappointed. But he will have to take it out in disappointment. We would be like the minister himself, abrogating our duty, if we took any other attitude. The government themselves apparently want to wash their hands of the administration of this road, handing it over to a board that they themselves appoint and to an arbitral tribunal consisting of the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I am sorry to differ from the Prime Minister for he has not done too badly in his unusually mild strictures. He expresses disappointment, but just the same we have to discuss this bill in order to improve it further and now I have taken about five times as much time talking about the objection the Prime Minister made as I did in asking my two original questions. But he himself is the author of this delay, not the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I was not aware of the amendment until a few minutes ago. May I remind the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that I was under the impression he was out of order. This amendment reads:

That all the words after the word "means" in line 10 shall be deleted and in place thereof shall be inserted the words "Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada."

I have no objection to hon. members answering the Prime Minister, three of them have already done so, but may I ask the committee to discuss the amendment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In view of what the Minister of Railways has said, that he proposes himself to move an amendment to a previous section, which will ensure the Board of Railway Commissioners considering in the first instance any abandonment of lines, I think with the leave of the house the amendment might be withdrawn.

Mr. MANION: That will be satisfactory to the government.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to the question I brought up about half an hour ago in regard to the Canadian National lines in the United States. I do not think the explanation the minister gave me was very clear, I do not quite understand it. I find that the Canadian National system, which is owned by the taxpayers of this country, has almost 2,000 miles of railway in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Order. This has nothing to do with the amendment.

Mr. SANDERSON: The amendment is withdrawn, I understand.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Is it the desire of the committee that this subamendment be withdrawn?

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then, Mr. Chairman, If I am in order I would like to continue.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to suggest that the hon. gentleman be limited, but may I suggest that we stick to the clause under debate? The question the hon. gentleman is asking at the moment has nothing to do with the tribunal. When some appropriate clause comes up if the hon. member will ask his question then we will explain.

Mr. SANDERSON: With all due respect, I have no desire to prolong the discussion—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Well, the hon. gentleman must stick to the subsection unless the committee desires otherwise.

Mr. SANDERSON: My contention is that my question does relate to this subsection, because it refers to the tribunal and also to the trustees.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): We have not come to the trustees yet.

Mr. POULIOT: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I submit that we are discussing now a bill which is based on the report of the commission. According to the statement made in this house by the Minister of Railways the bill we have now before us has been drafted mostly in accordance with that report. The minister can contradict me if I am wrong. Now may I point out that on every clause of the bill we can discuss what has been said by the commissioners on that clause, and we can discuss the person or pedigree of any commissioner, and be within the rules. I will not impose on the house, but may I say this, that I am the most amenable man in the world when I am supplied with the information I am entitled to every time I ask for it. And may I pay this tribute to the hon. gentleman who is Minister of Railways, that very often I have put questions on the order paper and have been courteous enough to telephone to him beforehand, but the Prime Minister blocked the answer every time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Order.

Mr. POULIOT: That is why the Prime Minister is the last man who can blame us for seeking information on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I cannot see the point of order. Does the section carry?

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking now on subsection (j).

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): May I remind the hon. member that we are on subsection (h)? Does subsection (h) carry?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend will be quite in order on subsection (j), if he will wait a minute or two and let the two preceding subsections pass.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): I would like to ask if the tribunal will have power to deal with all services, such as the closing of railway stations and matters of that kind?

Mr. MANION: The tribunals deal only with disputes. It is the hope of many that there may be no tribunal; in other words, that the railways will be able to cooperate and so obviate that necessity.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister does not propose offering an amendment with regard to the constitution of the tribunal?

Mr. MANION: No. There is one amendment but it has no reference to the constitution of the tribunal. There was a suggestion with respect to the power of the chairman of the tribunal in the event of there being five on the tribunal, the purpose being to give him a somewhat more limited power. However, we can deal with that when we come to it. It does not affect the question at issue now.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 3, subsection (i)—Trustees.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I listened with a good deal of interest to the statement of the Prime Minister with regard to the changing of the name from directors to trustees. Personally I favour the appointment of three, but I hardly understand why the change in nomenclature is made. If it is done to indicate that the national railways are in receivership, then of course trustees is the appropriate term. As that is not the case however, the property being after all the property of the government of Canada in the name of the people—at any rate they are guarantors of all its obligations—I cannot understand the reason for the substitution of trustees for directors. Personally I should very much prefer a change in the definition, to read directors rather than trustees. I will not take up the time of the house elaborating the question now, but I should like to know why this change has been made. What particular purpose is being served?

Mr. BENNETT: The word directors has a well defined meaning. The law usually requires that directors shall be shareholders, and there is a provision in our statute that obviates the necessity of the directors of the Canadian National Railways holding shares. The term directors means those who direct. As this property is in the financial condition in which it is, but for the fact that the dominion has guaranteed the securities it would be in the hands of a receiver. That is the point I endeavoured to make, and I repeat it: But for the fact that this country, so long as it remains solvent, cannot permit the Canadian National Railways to go into receivership, we having guaranteed its obligations, it would be inappropriate to use the word receiver, and therefore trustees carries the exact sense that attaches to the word, namely, those who are charged in trust with the responsibility of carrying forward the undertakings that are mentioned in the statute itself. The word was one which it was difficult to obtain, so I was told by the commission. It is not easy to find a word with the exact shade of meaning. Receiver would carry an impression as to the insolvency of our own country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The word was recommended in the Drayton-Acworth report.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank my hon. friend for reminding me of that fact. In choosing the right word to express the meaning, difficulties are met with for reasons which I think will be apparent to every lawyer. I agree with the hon. member for West Edmonton that, unless he has followed the legal side of it with great particularity, the necessity for using some word other than directors might not be so obvious. Neither the word directors nor the word receiver being quite adequate under the circumstances, the use of the word trustees sufficiently indicates the legal position of the three gentlemen to be appointed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is it possible for this utility—perhaps that is the proper expression—under present peculiar circumstances, ever to be in the position of receivership so long as Canada is solvent? I can only speak from the point of view of a layman, but I do not think the word that is being used conveys the right impression. The gentlemen who are going to undertake the control and administration of the road are to be designated trustees, and personally I have very great objection to that. I do not think that any good purpose is being served by changing the name, because under no circumstances, so long as Canada is solvent, can the Canadian National Railways be declared to be in bankruptcy; if that were the case, then the dominion itself would be bankrupt. For that reason I take very strong exception to the change. I do not think the proposed definition is applicable to the Canadian National Railways as such.

Mr. MALCOLM: The expression trustee was first used I believe in connection with the administrators of our national system, in section 31 of the Drayton-Acworth report. Personally I have no objection to the term, but I do agree with my hon. friend from West Edmonton that it is not a happy expression. A trustee is someone who holds something in trust. We are not turning over the property to these trustees; we are simply engaging them to administer it. There is no transfer of assets to these men as is the case when a private business goes into liquidation and a receiver is appointed, or when there is a trustee for its administration. I do not think it makes a great deal of difference whether we call them trustees or not, but the Prime Minister's point is that, were the national railways a private corporation, it would be in the hands of a receiver, being administered for the shareholders; and as the road is in that unfortunate position it is necessary for the shareholders, who after all are the people of Canada, represented by every member in this House of Commons, to appoint trustees in perpetuity. I do not want to anticipate any of the sections of the bill. We have been dealing with sections that have been passed, but when we come to section 4, if I may refer to it for a moment, it will be seen that we shall have to give the governor in council power to dismiss all existing directors, and the right to appoint in the place of directors certain men who are cited as trustees. Section 4, subsection 1, would indicate that the directors of the Canadian National Railways, who have been directing, are to be succeeded by some other men who are to do something more than direct. I cannot imagine, but perhaps the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways can explain, what these men are to do that has not been done by the directors. Certainly the financial problem is not facing them; any deficits they have are guaranteed by the government. The one problem that does seem to face them is the problem of the economical administration of the railways in order to reduce deficits and if possible to produce a surplus. So that in so far as the name is concerned, it matters little; what they are engaged for is the purpose of efficient management of a public utility which is owned by the people of Canada and which is not being handed to them in trust. They could be called commissioners. As trustees they do not own the property, nor are they asked to hold the property in trust. They are not even asked to hand the property back after they have placed it on a basis of efficient administration. A receiver is usually appointed for one of two purposes: either to liquidate and wind up the business or to administer it more successfully than it has been, and when it is in good shape to hand it back to the shareholders. That is not the intention under this act, because these men are being appointed in perpetuity. You can call them trustees or directors, but I contend that their function is practically the same as the function of the previous directors.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not intend to trespass too much upon the time of the committee, but the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) has asked a question to which I will at once give the answer: It is possible to appoint a receiver of an enterprise the securities of which are guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada. In the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, a statutory receiver was appointed in the person of the Minister of Railways. It would be possible to appoint a reeciver for the Canadian National, despite the guarantees. One reason why it would be difficult in practice to carry it into effect is the fact that the system consists of various enterprises linked into one whole. Without an enormous amount of accounting effort, it would be difficult to establish the insolvency of one particular section as distinguished from another. One piece of road, the bonds of which might be guaranteed by the province of Alberta, might be producing an operating surplus, while another, the bonds of which were guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada, might be operating with a great deficit and the two linked together might show a deficit. It would require a tremendous amount of accounting effort, such as took place at one time in connection with the properties in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, to determine those facts. I answer the question by saying: Not only is it possible to appoint a receiver of a property the securities of which are guaranteed by the Dominion government, but it has been done in the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, the Minister of Railways being appointed as the statutory receiver.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That was when they were taking it over from the private owners.

Mr. BENNETT: Taking it over was the result of the receivership.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The difference now is that the roads have been taken over.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, but it is still possible to put them into receivership because they cannot pay their fixed charges. I suggested some days ago that the legal position of the security holders would be that the title would stand in the name of the taxpayers of Canada. In reality the roads were built by those who loaned the money with the guarantee of the people of Canada that it would be repaid. Inasmuch as an operating surplus has not been earned and the properties have been in default year after year, they would pass into the hands of a receiver but for the guarantee. We are endeavouring to continue the existing condition rather than to create a receivership, the receivership not being for the shareholders, as suggested by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, but for the security holders. I think that is what he intended to say.

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: These security holders are scattered all over the world. I should like to answer the question asked by the hon. gentleman. The purpose alleged by the commission was to remove all possibility of political control of the enterprise. When I use the word "political" I use it in a large sense as indicating what the commission referred to as the pressure which is sometimes exerted, not by parties but by communities, and which constitutes political pressure to bring about a given result. The effort was to remove that. I think any of us would in private conversation admit that the members of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways have all been political appointees. If the committee were to review the history of this board from the time of the first appointments down to the present, I think it would be unanimous on that point. In order to remove that possibility it was suggested that three trustees should take the place of the directors and constitute an administrative trust. I do not think the hon. gentleman has been misled by the use of the word "trustees"; I do not think he believes that the appointment of these trustees will necessarily mean the holding of property.

Mr. MALCOLM: An administrative trust is usually given ownership.

Mr. BENNETT: Not always; it is quite the opposite in many cases. Inasmuch as the securities exist to the extent to which they do and the deficits have become so great, the question of the property title becomes unimportant because under the law it is vested in the crown itself. Therefore, no transfer becomes essential. It is an administrative trust, and being an administrative trust, the trustees are possessed of wider powers than were possessed by the directors. It is assumed—I use the word "assumed" because hon. gentlemen opposite may disagree—that they will be free from political pressure. That is the idea and it may or may not be possible to accomplish it. In the minds of those who had to deal with this matter, and I agree with their view, this was the last effort which could be made to maintain this property as the property of the crown and to administer it under such circumstances as would ensure efficiency and effectiveness. I believe this was the last possible suggestion which could be made because no one knows better than the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) the dangers which confront public ownership in laxity of control and increased expense of administration.

Mr. EULER: The Prime Minister states that by the appointment of these trustees he is removing the national railways as far as possible from political control or influence. The right hon. gentleman has stated that the members of the old boards were political appointees. That is perfectly true, but as I understand it, the members of this board will be appointed by the government.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly; that is the only way it can be brought into being.

Mr. EULER: The past boards were and this board will be political appointments. If the right hon. gentleman can show otherwise, I shall be very glad to hear his remarks.

Mr. BENNETT: I do say positively that the trustees will not be political appointments.

Mr. EULER: But under this bill they could be?

Mr. BENNETT: It is on the assumption that they will not be that the bill is now before parliament.

Mr. EULER: How do we know they will be any different from the radio commission appointments?

Mr. BENNETT: I would not think the hon. gentleman would describe the appointments to the radio commission as political appointments.

Mr. EULER: At least one.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What about the tariff board?

Mr. BENNETT: He has given evidence of splendid business foresight. I have not heard anyone charge him with political partisanship in the discharge of his duties. I assume that every man in this dominion has some political views, some men possessing stronger views than others. If a man who has voted for a Liberal candidate in a particular constituency is appointed to a position, I do not suppose that is a political appointment. That is not the conception I have of these trustees. I believe the directors drew a couple of thousand dollars a year with transportation, although I do not know the exact amount.

Mr. EULER: My right hon. friend knows perfectly well that that was not my argument in connection with the appointment of these trustees. They would have their political views, but I do not think that was the case in connection with one member of the radio board.

Mr. BENNETT: A man is not unfitted for a task because he has been interested in politics. I make that statement with absolute frankness. The other day a gentleman who had supported a vote of want of confidence in this government during this session was appointed to the tariff board.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All the rest of the time he voted with the government.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he did not; the records will show how he voted.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Perhaps he had second sight.

Mr. BENNETT: What is more, he had not the slightest idea that he would be appointed until five days before he was appointed.

Mr. EULER: What is meant by a political appointment?

Mr. BENNETT: I take it that a political appointment would be the appointment of a man who had been of very great assistance to a political party but who had no qualification other than that for the position to which he was appointed.

Mr. EULER: The first part goes, but not the second.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, it does. That is a political appointment pure and simple. I could name appointments made by the late administration—

Mr. MALCOLM: Not coming under that definition.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, coming under that definition.

Mr. MALCOLM: Without any ability?

Mr. BENNETT: Without ability of any kind. Now let us go a step further. I answer the one question by saying this is an administrative trust; I answer the question of the hon. member for North Waterloo by saying that the reason the governor in council makes the first appointments is that you must initiate the appointments. The chairman of the board will be a full time man; the others may not, but for the first year or two I think they would have to devote all their time to the business of the railways in order to get the work started properly. In this country we have no such reservoir to draw from as they have in a country like England, for instance. Look how simple it was when they had to appoint a tariff commission. One member was Sir George May, and I suppose no one knows whether he voted for or against the national government at the last election. Another member was Sir Sydney Chapman, and there was one other whose name I do not recall. There they have a reservoir of highly trained and skilled men to draw from. My right hon. friend knows how difficult it was to fill posts to his satisfaction when he was prime minister. No one who has not been prime minister realizes the anxiety to secure the best available man for every position, judicial, administrative or otherwise, and the number of people who are willing to serve the country at any particular moment is most amazing. But I assure the committee that the selection of judges, for example, is one of the most difficult tasks facing any thoughtful man who has regard for our institutions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You are never short of candidates.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is quite right, but you cannot say to a man, "You are unfitted for this task," because no man takes kindly to any reminder of his own weaknesses. I am not casting aspersions upon anything that has been done previously, but it is amazing what pressure has been able to do for men whose only qualification was their ability to provide that pressure. I make that statement to this committee with great frankness.

The reason the trustees have been selected is to avoid, so far as possible, any suggestion that political considerations are the controlling factors. It is thought that the word "trustees" more aptly expresses the functions of these men who have the powers of directors, and many more powers; who are clothed with the authority of directors but also much greater authority; who are not receivers but who are administering the property in the interests of the shareholders, as my hon. friend very properly observed, the idea being to see to it if possible that the amount of money earned is sufficient to pay first the operating expenses and then interest on the investment. The committee must realize how serious this matter really is. In the month of February this system did not earn its operating expenses. Just think what that means to this country, with 22,000 miles of railway track that did not earn enough to pay operating expenses.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING That is happening in all lines of industry.

Mr. BENNETT: It is happening in all countries. In some industries that is not so, but it has happened wherever there has been a displacement of traffic by reason of the introduction of motor transport and for various other reasons, together with the present stagnation of world trade. I think on consideration the committee will agree, despite what has been said by my hon. friend from West Edmonton, that the word "trustees" is the proper word giving the exact shade of meaning with regard to the duties of these gentlemen who will administer the property.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall not detain the committee more than a moment or two. I do not intend to traverse the ground that has been covered by the Prime Minister and others who have spoken, but I must confess that I cannot see anything in the act that warrants the change of name. This board of three will meet all requirements and will resist the pressure which is brought from various sections of the country, as the Prime Minister very properly said, in order to secure concessions from this utility which they are not entitled to receive. I thoroughly agree with the Prime Minister in that respect; I think the reduction in number will meet this very serious objection which we have had to consider up to the present. That is why I am in favour of this proposal. But since this utility is not in bankruptcy, in my opinion the word "director" expresses much more aptly the functions to be performed by the individual appointed. I am not concerned with whether or not the appointment is political so long as the individual will give his whole time and energy to the administration of this utility and endeavour to save it from utter ruin. If that is to be done I am in favour of the appointment, and I am decidedly in favour of the number being three. They will not be sectional in any particular, but why should we change the name? Undoubtedly the government have decided that this is the proper name for these administrators, and I presume that name will be adopted. Perhaps it will not make any material difference, but I do not like what it implies, and I would much prefer to have the name "director" remain in connection with those administering this utility.

Mr. POULIOT: I was very much interested in the remarks of the right hon. Prime Minister, but I do not clearly understand the difference between a trustee and a receiver. I have Webster's dictionary here. It is a United States dictionary, but it does not contain slang. I hope I am in order in reading the definition given by Webster for the words "trustee" and "receiver." The first definition is that of a trustee:

Law. A person, whether real or juristic, to whom property is legally committed in trust; one entrusted with property for another; one in whose hands the effects of another are attached by the trustee process.

In this bill we have the trustee process.

Mr. HACKETT: That is not the first definition given; the first is, "a person who holds property in trust for another."

Mr. POULIOT: The next definition is:

Trustee, v.t. Law.
(a) To commit (property) to the care of a trustee; as, to trustee an estate.
(b) To attach by the trustee process. See garnishment.

I would ask my hon. friend, who no doubt knows Webster by heart, to tell me the meaning of the letters v.t. I am sorry to take up so much time, but I should like to indicate how I should answer these questions if I were in the place of some of my hon. friends. The second definition refers to the verb, but in the bill we have the substantive. My knowledge of English perhaps is not as great as that of my hon. friend from Stanstead, but I know the difference between a substantive and a verb. Now let us see the word "receiver." If my hon. friend is not satisfied with this scientific pleading he should recite his own version. Webster's definition of receiver is as follows:

1. One who takes or receives in any manner.

There is no difference there:

2. One who receives on behalf of others:
(a) A person appointed to receive money due; a treasurer.
(b) Law. A person appointed, ordinarily by a court of equity jurisdiction, to receive, and hold in trust, money or other property which is the subject of litigation, pending the suit, as in case of a person incompetent to manage his property, or of the dissolution and winding up of a partnership or a corporation, etc. The receiver is an officer of the court—

Parliament is the high court:

—and the property held as such by him is not subject to process other than in the case itself. He often obtains authority to continue and manage the business as a going concern.

The definition of trustee in this bill is no definition at all. I think I shall surprise the right hon. the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, because I have taken note of all the amendments.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why not move an amendment on the subject?

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to explain my position first, and if the hon. gentleman is then convinced I shall be satisfied. I say, Mr. Chairman, that here is an amendment that was made in the second draft of the bill; it did not appear in the original bill. The definition in the bill of "trustees," namely,

"Trustees" means the trustees appointed under part I of this act, and includes their successors—

—is no definition at all. It is a conundrum. I quote again from Webster's definition of "receiver":

The receiver is an officer of the court, and the property held as such by him is not subject to process other than in the case itself. He often obtains authority to continue and manage the business as a going concern.

3. One who takes or buys stolen goods from a thief, knowing them to be stolen.

He does not mention a knight.

4. That which receives; a receptacle; specif.: (a) Chem. (1) a vessel connected with a retort, or the like, to receive and condense the product of distillation; a matrass,

And so on. To conclude, there is no distinction between a trustee and a receiver, except in law, and as we are making a law here we can give to any word its legal meaning. If the Canadian National Railways are not bankrupt, if the right hon. the Prime Minister was wrong when he said that the country had attained its borrowing limit, then I leave it to the fertile imagination of the right hon. the Prime Minister to find another word than trustee or receiver. He has a great wealth of expression, and in his rich vocabulary he may find another word which is not so humiliating because if "receiver" is humiliating, "trustee" is just as humiliating.

Webster also defines "receiver's certificates", and in that connection he speaks about railways. There is great profit to be had in consulting a dictionary. Webster defines a receiver's certificate as follows:

An acknowledgment of indebtedness made by a receiver under order of court to obtain funds for the preservation of the assets held by him, as for operating a railroad. Receiver's certificates are ordinarily a first lien on the assets, prior to that of bonds or other securities.

There are no words in the English language which have such significance as "trustee" and "receiver." The word "trust" in itself is a nice word. One thinks of Montreal Trust, Royal Trust, and so on. That is the first point I wish to make, that there is no difference in meaning between "trustee" and "receiver." When the Prime Minister was making a distinction between trustee and receiver he was simply wasting the time of the house and he took half an hour over it, while I have taken only five or ten minutes to give my demonstration that there is no difference in meaning between the two words.

May I say, Mr. Chairman, that we are not to be governed by words but by a strong policy, and that policy must first of all be framed after due consideration. We have some nice words about the appointment of the trustees. I know the Prime Minister is troubled at times to fill the position from amongst so many applicants, and he has my sympathy, but he has made good appointments, to the bench at least, upon which I congratulate him; I give the devil his due —I hope I am in order, Mr. Chairman.

What are the qualifications for a trustee? He must be a man above politics. What do I mean by that? I mean that a man who is a candidate for the position of trustee must be a man who can put aside his personal views and consider the public interest. He must allow no political affiliations to interfere with the fulfilment of his duty. That is the first qualification.

A trustee should also be a big man, not physically but mentally, a man who can put the public interest before his own in all his dealings with the railway.

Then he must also be a man who has had wide experience in the railway business. He must be able to decide railway questions. What I say of one trustee applies to them all; they should be able to give a decision on all matters that are submitted to them.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you for your support. Every time I am interrupted I shall repeat what I said before, which will make my speech twice as long, although it is not a regular speech, but rather observations that I am making for the benefit of the government.

I have said that the trustee must put the public interest before his own in all his dealings with the railway, and that he must have experience and good judgment. Good judgment is essential, because the trustees will be above the government and above parliament. They will be given a free hand to decide questions of vital importance to the future of this country. So the Prime Minister will have to find among his supporters or amongst those to whom he does not give the cold shoulder men with good judgment. He cannot find them among his own supporters. Will he find them in the Canadian National Railways or in the Canadian Pacific Railway? If he finds them in the Canadian Pacific, people will say that he is favouring that railway against the Canadian National, and if he finds them in the Canadian National, the country will be saddled. That is why I understand the Prime Minister's difficulty. But whether he gets the trustees from the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific, they will have to be given a free hand provided they are men of superior intelligence, and I say superior intelligence because I believe in superior men, not in supermen. A trustee must have given proof of his ability and experience. It will not simply do for the Prime Minister to listen to advice that Joe or Tom or Sir Joe this or Sir Tom that is a fit person for trustee. He must judge the trustee by his own accomplishments, and in what field? In the field of railway business, and in that field alone. A man may be successful in other walks of life, he may be a good business man, but he is not necessarily qualified to occupy an important position having to do with the operation of railways. I ask for the appointment of a technician, a man who has had experience in railway matters, who is familiar with the theory of railway building and engineering, and who has a sense of decision.

Sir EUGENE FISET: A sense of humour.

Mr. POULIOT: We seldom find a sense of humour on the other side of the house, except upon occasions when hon. members relax. How can the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways expect satisfactory results from incompetent officials? I am afraid I cannot congratulate them upon some appointments they have made to the bench; I am sure that they must regret what has been done. We know the difficulty with which the government will be faced if it appoints a man from either the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National railway. If they go outside the country will they take a man who is familiar only with underground railways, when, as the Prime Minister has said, the Canadian railways stretch from ocean to ocean? There is a great difference between managing underground railways in London and managing the Canadian National or Canadian Pacific systems. I do not know who have made applications to the government for these positions; as a matter of fact I do not know whether any applications have been made. Furthermore I cannot say who has been recommended. May I tell the government however that if they wish to make a wise choice, one with which they will be satisfied, as the Prime Minister has been listening to one of his supporters during my speech he need only read from Hansard what I have said. In Hansard, of April 18, he will find the suggestion I made.

I have no desire to delay the passage of the legislation, and should the government believe that I have, it would be badly mistaken. If I am satisfied with the measure submitted to the house, and if I receive decent answers to my decent questions I am content to support the government. However the more refusals I have, the more questions I will put. I do not wish to make trouble in the house, but I am firm in my views, representing not only the people in my constituency, but the employees of the railway systems and the taxpayers of Canada who are bound to pay if the revenues from the railways are not sufficient to cover operating expenses.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): We have had a most wonderful exhibition of lawyers quibbling over distinctions without differences. What does it matter whether we call these men trustees or directors? There is no difference. The Prime Minister has pointed out definitely the reason for calling them trustees. Ever since I have been a member of the house the hon. member who has just spoken, and other lawyers, have taken up a great deal of time in discussion.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Before that.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): They quibble and quarrel over matters that are of no real importance. That is one of the worst features of the discussions in this house. This country is in no mood to listen to a lot of foolish quibbling over nothing. My advice would be that some of the lawyers in this house should have less to say.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 3, subsection (j)—Undertaking.

Mr. POULIOT: Does that mean the burial of the Canadian National Railway? I suggest the trustees should be named undertakers.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister gave an undertaking to answer a question I asked about fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. MANION: When the hon. member asked the question I made an explanation with which he was not satisfied. What does he wish to know? I shall do my best to answer him.

Mr. SANDERSON: I shall endeavour to put my question as clearly as possible.

Mr. BENNETT: I know what the hon. member's question was. Probably I could save time by endeavouring to answer it.

Mr. SANDERSON: If the Prime Minister is a mind reader he might answer it.

Mr. BENNETT: The Canadian National system, as such, owns all the shares of the Grand Trunk Western. That is, they own the whole of the Grand Trunk Western. But our legislative arm does not extend into the United States, except in so far as administration is concerned. Over that, of course the trustees have authority, which they exercise. By virtue of the fact that the shares of the Grand Trunk Western are owned by our road, their control will be complete.

Mr. SANDERSON: In addition to the Grand Trunk Western there are three others.

Mr. BENNETT: The Central Vermont—that is in the same position. Perhaps the hon. member will recall that during the days of the late government the suggestion was made that we should not guarantee the securities of the Central Vermont, it being an American road. What we did was to guarantee the securities of the Canadian National Railways, to borrow the money on the strength of the guarantee, and to put the bonds of the Central Vermont into the treasury of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. SANDERSON: There are two other companies in the United States which the taxpayers of Canada own, namely the Atlantic and St. Lawrence, and the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific.

Mr. BENNETT: The Duluth road, running from Winnipeg to Duluth was built by MacKenzie and Mann. I believe the original name of the line was the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific. When built, control of the road was held by the Canadian Northern Railway Company. When the Canadian Northern became part of our system we secured control, partly by the legislation of 1922 and partly by legislation in connection with the loan of $45,000,000 to the old Canadian Northern Railway. The other is a short road running down to Portland, Maine, and is part of the old Grand Trunk system.

Mr. SANDERSON: That does not answer my question. As a matter of fact I did not put my question. It is in regard to the approximately 2,000 miles of railway that the people of this country own in the United States. My question is, when this act becomes law who will control and manage that 2,000 miles? Will it be the directors who are now in control—I mean the directors of these companies controlling the mileage in the United States—or will it be the trustees? I am aware that under this act the board of directors of the national railway is wiped out, that the trustees step in and take their place. But will the trustees step in and take the place of the directors of these several companies in the United States? Will the trustees be in control over and above the boards of directors? I think I can see that in another country there may be a different board of directors, but will the trustees under this act control that mileage in the United States?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is yes, just as to-day. The head office of the Canadian National Railways at Montreal is responsible for the direction in the broad sense of the whole system, including the 2,000 miles in the United States. As far as the personnel of the directorate is concerned, there are directors of the United States roads who are not members of the directorate of the Canadian National railway system. As the minister said, it might be possible for a trustee to be a director of one of the four American roads, and he probably would be. The administration of the trustees extends to the whole system, but it must be exercised directly in Canada and indirectly in the United States.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I ask the Prime Minister another question arising out of the first? Will these trustees have authority, without coming to the parliament of Canada, to sell out the system in the United States, for example, or any part of it? They might sell the mileage of the Grand Trunk Western. Have they the power to do that under this act?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the Prime Minister quite positive about that?

Mr. BENNETT: With the amendment proposed by the minister.

Mr. SANDERSON: But there is no amendment yet.

Mr. BENNETT: But we said that on the second reading we proposed to introduce a provision against amalgamation; it will also provide against sale.

Mr. SANDERSON: If no amendment had been added they would have had the power under this act?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not say that. I think not.

Subsection (j) agreed to.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Nominations and appointments to board of directors to be vacated and three trustees substituted for original incorporators.

Mr. MANION: In regard to section 4, there is a rearrangement of subsection 2 which will make it a little clearer without changing the meaning of the clause. I will read it and then ask my colleague the Minister of Public Works to move it. Subsection 2 will reads as follows:

(2) One of such trustees shall be their chairman. He shall devote his whole time to performance of the duties of his office and shall not be an officer nor after his appointment as trustee become, otherwise than by reelection, a director of any company other than a company which is comprised in national railways.

Mr. MALCOLM: Before we deal with subsection 2 I would like to move an amendment to subsection 1 of section 4. May I suggest that my reason for doing so is that I think it would be well for the government to treat the House of Commons as a committee acting for the shareholders of the nationally owned railway system? The Prime Minister said he had every desire to remove any semblance of political influence, and speaking on the bill I think at the time it was introduced, and again this afternoon, he referred to the fact that this system so far as its financial position is concerned would be treated as a system in liquidation were it not for the guarantee of the Canadian people, and that that was the reason why trustees were to be appointed. We do not all hold that viewpoint, I think. But in any business I contend that the shareholders are the ones who appoint the trustees. This question was just as carefully considered by the Drayton-Acworth commission, I think, as it was by the Duff commission If we refer to the report of the royal commission on railways and transportation of 1917 we find on page lxxxii, section 31, the following recommendation:

We recommend that there be five trustees, three railway members, one member selected on the ground of business and financial experience, and one as specially possessing the confidence of railway employees; that the original trustees be named in the act constituting the board; and that their tenure of office be substantially the same as that of judges of the supreme court.

Whether or not in this legislation the tenure of office is substantially the same as that of judges of the supreme court, the legislation does provide for continuity. It provides that the men shall name their successors. It is a permanent administrative trust, to use the Prime Minister's expression. No doubt the Drayton-Acworth commission had in mind that should the property be placed under the control of trustees, the right of the shareholders required that they should know who these trustees were to be. May I also suggest to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Railways that what I said a moment ago with regard to the type of man appointed trustee is important. I do not think we need a financial man; the financial problem of the railway is more or less settled by the fact that the government of Canada will have to pay the deficits. What we want as chairman of the board of trustees is the most efficient railway manager that can be obtained on this continent; for the problem is one of efficient management. I concur in the view expressed by the hon. member for North Waterloo that the purpose of this railway is to give efficient and economical service to the people of the Dominion of Canada. If that service can be given through good administration, through careful expenditure of money, and through effecting economies, it will be done by a railroad operator, not by a financial man. In selecting the trustees my suggestion would be that a very capable railway operator be included.

As far as the collapse of transportation is concerned, to which the Prime Minister has referred, I contend that it is no different from the shrinkage in volume of most businesses at this time. It is as good an index of volume of trade as can be obtained—in fact carloadings are now used as an index showing how trade is falling. We cannot entirely predicate this legislation on the emergency that now exists, for that is not going to continue; if it does, of course, the whole situation is beyond repair.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Power for the second reading of Bill No. 67, with respect to hospital sweepstakes, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Carmichael.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): I shall not prolong the discussion of this matter to any great length. When the hour for private and public bills expired the other night I had stated that this bill as presented introduced gambling pure and simple, and I further contended that hospitals would not be benefited by the financial assistance derived from this particular form of raising money; that is to say, they would not benefit in the long run.

May I now take a moment or two to review briefly the development of gambling, particularly towards that gambling on the smaller scale. If we follow the history of gambling in the old countries we shall recall that for a considerable time competition in horse racing involved a large amount of gambling, but that was on a different plane altogether from the sort of petty gambling which is introduced in this bill. As time went on the habit spread among a large section of the people and they began to gamble on the racing of dogs, hounds. This went on until gambling was engaged in on a still smaller scale, so that next we find people gambling on the racing of jack rabbits, then on the leaping of bullfrogs, and on a still minuter scale on the racing of cockroaches across the table or the floor, indeed, gambling on the ability of fleas to outdistance one another. In this bill we have gambling on an even more insignificant plane, because the chief virtue in the competition here is the ability of a person to draw a piece of cardboard out of a hat. There is something to be said for the person who wishes to place a bet on the ability of one horse or some other animal, to beat another in a race, but anyone who wants to be reasonable will agree I think that the ability to guess successfully the drawing a card out of a hat is not one of great significance.

This bill undertakes to legalize gambling and it undertakes to legalize the pettiest forms of the practice; and what is still worse, to my mind, it undertakes to justify this by associating it with a certain form of charity. In other words, we are endeavouring to give to this petty form of gambling of which I am speaking a virtue that does not inhere in it. The bill before us introduces this form of gambling, and in order that the habit may become nationwide it provides that the provinces throughout this country may participate. Moreover, the process is to be a continuous one. No period of the year will be free from the spectacle of some part of the country indulging in this form of gambling. Again, it sets one province against another. They enter into competition, and the competition is that one province will be able to extract most money out of the others. It will therefore be a competition between provinces. It will be seen from the provisions of the bill that throughout the year at some time or other one province will be invaded by the others, if its intention is to be carried out.

One of the arguments put forward on behalf of the bill is that we shall be able to go into the United States, a neighbouring country, and there extract from the people, by this particular form of petty gambling, money to be brought here to maintain our Canadian institutions—an obligation which surely is ours as Canadians. Further, and perhaps lastly, the bill undertakes to put the Canadian provinces and Canada as a whole in a competing class with those other countries which have already degraded in this way their forms of raising of money for charitable purposes. Personally I am convinced that the hospitals will not benefit by obtaining money in this manner; it may assist them immediately but in the long run they will be distinctly the losers.

One thing that was rather curious to me was the attitude taken by the sponsor of the bill the other night. He condemned in very severe terms the method of financing the sale and purchase of wheat, a method which is recognized and has been recognized for years as essential in the handling of this product, recognized by all commission agents on both sides of the water, recognized by farmers who sell the grain, and recognized generally by all those engaged in the handling of it. True, there is an element of uncertainty. There is an undertaking to protect the purchase of wheat against what may happen to it in future sale. We can call that gambling or not, and I am not going to enter into a discussion of that question at the moment. What was anomalous however was that the sponsor of the bill, who condemned that well recognized and well established form of business in this country as in every other country, should now turn round and extol the virtues of this particular form of petty gambling. Truly, he has strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel. For my part I cannot see any virtue in the bill. I cannot support in any way the raising of money in this manner for any purpose and above all I must refuse to support the raising of money in this way for the assistance of hospitals. In my opinion, as in the opinion of most people who are in closest touch with hospital administration, it would be detrimental to the cause of these institutions.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, there is a point of view in regard to this bill held by very many people in Canada, indeed I think by the majority of the Canadian people. I wish to present that point of view, and I do it more gladly because I believe it is held by the great majority of my own constituents. The sponsor of this bill—I do not know just how serious he was in making the statement—stated that there were many hon. members of this house who would indulge in the practice of gambling if they were not deterred by the fear of being brought before their local churches or exposed in their local newspapers. That to me seems to be an admission that there is a very strong popular sentiment in this country against the principle of this bill. Is it not right that public opinion should prevail in a matter of this kind? Sometimes questions arise in this house upon which a member must judge for himself; sometimes on questions of fact, in connection with which a member has had better opportunity of informing himself than have his constituents, he must assume responsibility for acting according to his own judgment; the time will come when he will have to render to his constituents an account of his stewardship and receive their approval or condemnation. But this bill does not involve a matter of that kind; it is not a question of fact, it is a question involving the well known opinions held by a large number, in fact, as I believe, by the majority of the people of Canada. I believe that this parliament would be violating the trust reposed in it if it endorsed this bill. If there are any members who feel that they are under strong moral compulsion to support the bill; if there are any who feel that to support it is with them a matter of conscience, I have no more to say so far as they are concerned; but I do not think any hon. member will seriously contend that there is any such moral compulsion or that his conscience requires that he should give the measure his endorsation.

I do not intend to discuss the question of private gambling. I have my own personal views on that matter, and my own practice is in harmony with those views. But we should remember that it is not a question of private gambling that is involved. I am not going to read a lecture to the members of this house, who are adult men and one woman of mature years.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame.

Mr. JACOBS: Withdraw.

Mr. BROWN: I will take back the latter part of my statement. As I say, I am not going to read a lecture to the members of this house, as I do not think it would be my place to do so at this time. I have my own views as to the pernicious effects of even private gambling, but it is not private gambling we are dealing with in this bill. What we have to deal with is the matter of organized or, if you like, commercialized gambling. That is the difference which many people seem to fail to appreciate. It is not a question of making a private bet as to what horse, what hound or what rabbit can run the fastest; the principle involved in this bill is the providing of facilities for people to indulge in the practice of gambling. It is not part of the business of this parliament to provide means for people to indulge in their propensities for gambling. Laws against gambling have been placed upon our statute books because it has been well recognized from the experience gained in the past that the practice was one which affected not only the private lives or morals of men but the public interest. Because it has that effect upon the public wellbeing, this country in common with others has seen fit to pass laws against any organized form of gambling.

For the information of those who say that this is a matter which concerns only the conduct and morals of the private individual, I should like to read an extract from a news item which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of April 7. It reads:

> Alexander Ramsay Ross, former accountant of the University of Manitoba, was sent to Stony Mountain penitentiary for three years by Magistrate R. M. Noble in provincial police court Thursday.
>
> He pleaded guilty to theft of $14,279.85 of the university funds, the defalcations dating back to October, 1931, and continuing to March 21, this year.
>
> In a plea for leniency advanced by C. Tupper, junior, it was pointed out that Ross had given valuable and efficient service to the university since his appointment in 1923, and until the present trouble arose had always borne a good reputation. The real cause of his downfall was "playing the ponies," Mr. Tupper declared. "Legalized race track gambling, and an army of local bookmakers had got the greater part of the stolen money," counsel advised the court.
>
> A further fact stressed was that Ross had received a substantial cut in his salary—it had been reduced from $4,500 to $3,600 a year —at a time when his client had entered into heavy obligations in connection with the purchase of a home. "Ross always intended to return the money," Mr. Tupper suggested, "but like most others who start to gamble with other people's money—he could never make the 'killing' for which he hoped."

Will anyone say that that is simply a matter of concern to the particular individual involved? Is it simply a private matter that this man should have appropriated over $14,000 of university funds? Surely this action brings it within the realm of matters which concern the public. Our statute books contain a law which legalizes gambling on race tracks by the pari-mutuel system, and in 1923 a proposal to make that practice illegal was voted down by a majority of this house. This parliament must assume a measure of responsibility for the loss incurred to the public by the misappropriation of funds by this young man. It is not simply a matter of private concern, it is a matter of concern to the public when we are to decide whether or not we are to organize institutions to enable men to indulge in their passion for gambling.

Now let us turn to the bill itself, on which the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) has made some comments along the lines I had in mind. This bill gives to the attorney general of any province authority to sanction the institution of a sweepstake in that province, but there shall be only one sweepstake in any province in any year. Perhaps those who framed the bill thought they were making a great concession when they said there should be only one sweepstake in any one year, but we can easily see what that would mean. It would simply bring about a succession of sweepstakes, one province vying with the other as to which would get the money. But there is another feature to it. Suppose only one province in the dominion wanted to establish a sweepstake; for instance, let us suppose that the good old province of Ontario had an attorney general who would sanction the promotion of a sweepstake. Let us suppose that every other province was opposed to the idea. In that case you would give to the attorney general of that one province, whether it was Ontario, Manitoba or any other province, the right to foist this institution upon the people of the whole Dominion of Canada. It is provided in the bill that agents shall not be appointed outside the province in which the sweepstake is organized, and I think it is provided also that advertisements for the sweepstake shall not appear in newspapers or magazines that are published outside the province. What does that amount to? It is a well known fact that many of our leading newspapers have a dominion-wide circulation, so the fact that agents could not be appointed outside the province and that advertisements could not appear in magazines or papers published outside the province would not prevent these sweepstakes from being advertised over the length and breadth of Canada, and this could be done in spite of any opinions that might be held in eight of the nine provinces. To me that seems a very great weakness in the bill. There is a section in the bill which reads:

> Nothing in this act shall prevent the sale outside of Canada by the committee or its agents authorized in writing so to do, of tickets for sweepstakes as authorized to be conducted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

I suppose so far as the sale of tickets outside of Canada is concerned you might as well pass a law trying to prevent the sun from rising to-morrow morning, but I presume the thought was that it should not be illegal to pay money to those outside Canada who might win a prize.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Attracting a little foreign capital.

Mr. BROWN: With regard to attracting foreign capital I am heartily in accord with the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for East Calgary. I think we would be demeaning ourselves if we should say to the people of the United States: "We want to support our hospitals by giving you a chance to win a prize in a sweepstake." It seems to me that would be putting our dominion on a very low level.

I do not think it is necessary for me to take very much time to make clear my sentiments in regard to this matter. The sponsor of the bill made some reference to the Senate and he advanced another argument —though I do not think he could have been altogether serious—to the effect that the majority in the Senate was of necessity composed of wise and experienced gentlemen of high character, and that therefore we should pass the bill also. I am not going to cast any reflections on any member of this house or of any other chamber whose conscience may compel him to support this measure, but in connection with the action of the other house there is one point to which I should like to direct attention. In these days there is a disposition on the part of some to assume that all humane and philanthropic instincts are concentrated in some new party. There is a disposition also to assume that all concern for the moral and economic welfare of the country is located in some new party, I should like to point out, because I think it is worth pointing out to the people of Canada, that the leaders of both parties in the other house opposed this bill. I am happy to believe that if this matter should come to a division in this house it will be opposed by the leader of the government and by the leader of the official opposition, no matter what the other parties may do. I think it desirable that this condition of affairs should be called to the attention of the country, and I am happy to do so at this time. We cannot afford to altogether ignore the higher principles which govern men in their relations one to another when we are dealing with these things in parliament. The Prime Minister himself has recognized that fact, and in a splendid speech a few days ago the right hon. leader of the opposition recognized the need of giving attention to some of those things which move men to action. A short time ago the former minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) used these words:

> I am firmly convinced that the greatest trouble facing the world to-day is the result of a narrow spirit of selfishness, the constant thinking of monetary interests. In every dispute that arises, in every debate, economics are being placed ahead of humanity.

I should like to quote also the report of an incident that took place in the British House of Commons not so very long ago, when Mr. George Lansbury, leader of the Labour opposition, put to the House of Commons his party's latest vote of censure on the government on the score of the government's failure to deal with unemployment:

> With trembling voice the old warrior of labour addressed the house in these terms: "This old world is in its present condition because we have all been living the wrong way. We thought that we did the best for ourselves by only thinking of ourselves. We believed that the aim of life was what we got and not what we gave. I believe that the British parliament and the British nation, if they really believe in the gospel and in doing to others as they would be done unto, could lead the world in a new campaign. We can do it if we have the will, but it must be done on the basis of working in the service of one another, and none of us asking from the world more than we are prepared, according to our ability, to give back to the world.

That is a very striking phrase which might be used in connection with this bill. Mr. Stanley Baldwin, Conservative ex-Prime Minister, replying for the government, said:

> I am sure that the right hon. gentleman need make no apology to the house for the concluding words of his speech. I know that they will find an echo in many hearts throughout the house.

Perhaps with these examples before us, Mr. Speaker, I may be excused if I appeal to the members of this house to take cognizance of those things which have their effect upon human life and which play a part in developing humanity to the highest level. It would be my earnest hope, Mr. Speaker, that this house might defeat this bill without a division.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, before the bill passes I should like to offer a few comments. In the first place, I do not think we are going to make angels by legislation. People gamble anyway, whether you legalize it or not. It is a gamble when we come into this world; it is a gamble when every member of this house presents himself before the electors, and when you go out of this world that is the most serious gamble of all.

I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have to disagree with my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Brown) for the first time since 1921, but I do so sincerely. I like taking a chance myself, and I do take a chance. I would ask, is there any member of this house who does not take a chance? We all do it, and we have to do it to carry on our everyday activities. If any hon. member wishes to tell me that he has never taken a chance, a gambling chance, if you like, I shall sit down and be glad to hear from him.

I remember many years ago when prohibition was the cry in this country, and what happened? Finally every province followed the old province of Quebec in putting prohibition legislation on its statute books. The provincial governments went into the liquor business themselves, and began making profits, and the result was that the taxpayer who did not drink had his taxes reduced although he did not save very much more by that. But every province has gone into the liquor business and is benefiting to the extent of millions and millions of dollars, which is used in order to reduce taxes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the hon. member name one province in which the taxes have been reduced?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What did you do with the profits that the province of Ontario made?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Where is the province that has reduced its taxes?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If you did not have that profit you would have to increase your taxes; that is only natural. I think the Canadian people are prepared to take advantage of the millions and millions of dollars made from the sale of liquor. Then why should I not be given a chance to buy a sweepstakes ticket, if I want one? I do not drink liquor. I do not drink it, Mr. Speaker; I sip it.

I was amused at my hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Stanley) mentioning that system of gambling which is recognized by the bankers, recognized by the farmers, recognized by the grain dealers, and that is the gambling on the Winnipeg exchange. I was rather sorry to hear my hon. friend from Lisgar cite the case of a man who had robbed the university of Manitoba of $14,000. Machray robbed Manitoba university of a great deal more than that, and he never gambled that I know of or bought any sweepstakes tickets. Gambling on the wheat market and on the stock exchange is far worse than buying a sweepstakes ticket because you only buy a sweepstakes ticket once in a while, and as the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) said, you do have pleasant dreams after buying one, although your expectations are never realized. Is paying $2.50 for a sweepstakes ticket going to demoralize people? Has it demoralized the people of the south of Ireland? I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). I know he knows that the people of the south of Ireland have just as high a moral character as we have.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There is evil in gambling, yes; there is evil in drinking; there is evil in many other things that we do; but gambling exists, and I am in favour of this bill. Whether it is framed exactly as I should like I do not know. I venture to say that there are many members of parliament who have sweepstakes tickets in their pockets right now. Undoubtedly gambling exists; then why not control it to a certain degree? Do not brand people as criminals because they take a chance; for they will take it anyway. There are many people in this country to-day who are in favour of sweepstakes. There are many who feel that many of our charitable institutions and hospitals, which the hon. member for East Calgary mentioned, are not going to be able to continue to function unless they find some means of raising funds. Will my hon. friend from East Calgary undertake to find people who will contribute to keep our hospitals going? I read in the papers only to-day that the free clinic, one of the most important branches of the general hospital in Winnipeg, is closing because of lack of funds. That clinic is saving life after life with its free treatment to the people of the city of Winnipeg, but those people will be deprived of that clinic unless money is forthcoming from some place.

Do not let us be hypocrites. Let us be frank. We gamble. Let us control it. Let the people take a chance, and let it be legal for them to do so, because they will take a chance anyway. I intend to support this bill.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): I assure the house at the outset that I shall not speak long. I do not see why we have not had a vote on this question long ago. It is my desire, in case the predictions of an hon. member come true and we decide this question without a vote, to show now which side I am on. First, I am against this bill, and for several reasons. I entirely disagree with the principle. Secondly, I am glad to have the opportunity of voting with my opponents across the floor, for it is very seldom indeed that I get the opportunity. I am prouder than ever of this house to think, rightly I believe, that the leaders of the three groups in this house are against this bill. I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) dropped a hint some time ago that he was against it; I know that my own leader is against it, and I believe that the leader of the group to my left is against the bill also. It is a rare occasion for me to have the privilege of voting with all three, and I want to embrace that opportunity, in addition to opposing this bill on general principles.

I am not going to pass any strictures on the source from which this bill came, or on its sponsor who introduced it into this house excellently, from his viewpoint—and I think be believes in what he said—or on the other chamber, except to remark that had that noble old character, the late Sir George E. Foster, been still with us, this bill would not be here to-night. He was always on the side of beneficent social legislation such as this bill decidedly is not.

My hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) rather startled me. Gambling will be with us anyway, he said. Well, murder will be with us, and has been with us ever since Cain slew Abel. Shall we therefore legalize murder? Stealing and perjury have been with us ever since the days of Ananias and Sapphira. Shall we therefore legalize these atrocities? I know my hon. friend from Provencher does not mean what he says when in effect, he talks in that way. He was good enough to say that this is the first occasion upon which he has disagreed with the hon. member for Lisgar. Surely he made an unfortunate choice when he decided to disagree on a measure of this kind.

I should like to comment in regard to the unavoidable partnership of gamblers and hospitals, as it appears in the bill, a circumstance which is most objectionable to me. For many years it was my privilege to administer the hospitals and public health of the province of Saskatchewan. Naturally for that reason I became keenly interested in hospitals. To my surprise I learned during those years that many men and women who took very little interest in other philanthropic or church work were intensely devoted to and interested in the maintenance of hospitals. It is a type of work which appealed strongly to some people, in fact to the extent that it almost became their religion. I am afraid if we associate with those people others who secure money in this questionable fashion we will to a very substantial extent dry up that beneficent source of revenue.

I believe we should encourage the promotion of individual giving towards hospitals. Those who have never been in a hospital is indeed in one respect most fortunate, but they have missed some valuable lessons which can be learned only in hospitals. Doubtless some have not learned the joy of giving towards those who are less fortunate and find themselves sick in hospital afflicted with one sort of ailment or another. Therefore I am of the opinion that anything which will discourage philanthropic and free giving towards hospitals should be frowned upon.

I have another reason for objecting to the bill. On a former occasion in this house I made the mistake of voting for a relatively harmless proposition. I believe it was not as bad as this one, but inasmuch as I had the example of the churches to follow I thought I was quite safe in voting for the introduction of a mild form of gambling into our exhibition associations.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You introduced it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, it was in the criminal code, and was under the supervision of the Minister of Justice. I supported this relatively harmless measure, and now for the first time I wish to make public the recantation of my attitude taken at that time. In those days I was younger and less guarded, and like the hon. members for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) and Quebec South (Mr. Power) have done now, I made a mistake. For reasons which I shall not enumerate I am not now going to repeat that mistake. I should be much happier to support a restrictive measure against gambling than the one now before the house. Of all times under the sun to open up and increase facilities for gambling, this is the worst I can imagine.

Undoubtedly there are many hon. members in the house who are not averse to gambling, who may not be averse even to this type of gambling, which is pure chance. Perhaps in normal times they would support the measure before us. However I believe their best judgment will tell them that the excessive spirit of gambling and chance during the last twenty or twenty-five years is one of the reasons why people in Canada and in other parts of the world find themselves faced with the ghastly depression in which we are now weltering and wallowing, and from which God only knows when we will recover. Surely to increase facilities for gambling would at this time particularly be nothing short of a crime.

I submit my views to the house without any intention of offending, and without criticizing any hon. member whose views may be different. However I feel that if we in this chamber opened up further channels for gambling the electors of Canada would think we had gone plumb bughouse. This is not a matter of speculating on the wheat pit. A man well versed in market conditions has some knowledge of world prices of wheat, and general conditions, and his knowledge and skill stands him in good stead. But when we have something that is a pure game of chance, a lottery, at which any kind of dub can make a lucky try, we have the most vicious and objectionable type of gambling.

Then, in regard to the man who gambles on race horses, I could make a few comments. By the way, that matter came to my notice in the Department of Agriculture and has been a legacy bestowed upon every minister for some time back. If a man has some knowledge of horses, information concerning the owners and jockeys, and knows that they will not sell him out, he has a better chance of winning. Therefore skill and expert knowledge of horses may help him.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They only think they know.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This legislation involves nothing but pure chance, a shaking of the dice, a lottery. Of course we realize there is chance in horse racing, but we must admit that knowledge of good horses, information as to their records and previous performances, and the honesty of the owner and jockey, give one a chance of winning.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Especially if you have a dope book with you.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not pretend to know all about it, but I am familiar with some phases of the matter. I do know that one most capable man in the Department of Agriculture went to the terrible bow-wows largely as a result of gambling while administering the act. I do not believe the virus permeated my being at all, but there is a chance of younger men being affected. Consequently without further ado I wish to ally myself with those hon. members who have spoken against the bill, and with the leaders in the house—if I surmise correctly that they are all against the measure. I shall vote with great joy against any bill of this nature, and against any attempt deliberately and by our own hands and voices to increase the facilities for gambling at this critical period in our economic history.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I intend to detain the house only two or three minutes. Possibly my position in regard to this bill is the most difficult experienced by any hon. member, because I find from the report of what transpired in another place that my constituency voted by five to one in favour of a measure similar to the one now before us. Therefore it is a question whether my duty as a member from a Canadian city should come into conflict with my own judgment.

With the indulgence of the house I shall inflict upon hon. members two short quotations from Burke's famous speech to the electors of Bristol. Possibly from his remarks on that great occasion I may find a reconciliation between my judgment and what might be construed to be my duty. He said:

> Certainly, gentlemen, it ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion high respect; their business unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfactions, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own. But, his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you; to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure; no, nor from the law and the constitution. They are a trust from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

Again the second quotation is:

> Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests; which interests each must maintain, as an agent and advocate, against other agents and advocates; but parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, that of the whole; where, not local purposes, not local prejudices ought to guide, but the general good, resulting from the general reason of the whole. You choose a member indeed; but when you have chosen him, he is not member of Bristol, but he is a member of parliament. If the local constituent should have an interest, or should form an hasty opinion, evidently opposite to the real good of the rest of the community, the member for that place ought to be as far, as any other, from any endeavour to give it effect.

And so, Mr. Speaker, although my riding has voted in support of a measure similar to this by a majority of five to one, my judgment compels me to vote against it.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I will not detain the house very long, I think almost everything has been said that it is necessary to say. I am opposed to the principle underlying this bill, because it seems to me that gambling is essentially the idea of getting something for nothing, and I take it that at this time above all others we ought not to encourage that spirit in the people. However, I must say that I cannot get up any very great enthusiasm about voting against the bill, simply because there are on the statute books other pieces of legislation which legalize gambling. There are in practice a great many institutions carrying on a species of gambling. In the business world we have our real estate exchanges and grain exchanges and stock exchanges, on which there is practised what is in my judgment virtually gambling. Therefore it seems to me ridiculous that we should go after the little man, perhaps the poor Chinaman who plays a game of fan tan, and these larger and much more dangerous forms of gambling should go on unchecked.

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): You are in favour of it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, but I say I am almost tempted, on account of the general injustice of the thing, to vote in favour of it. Sometimes one is tempted to do that. On the other hand, if one votes in favour of this particular measure it means the extension of the area, and the creation of a certain sort of vested interest that makes it much more to fight against the general evil. So while I protest very decidedly against the discrimination involved in voting down one particular kind of gambling alone, while this house is making no effort whatever to get rid of other types of gambling that are much more serious, at the same time in view of the considerations I have outlined I feel that I must vote against the bill.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Carmichael) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park), Arsenault, Arthurs, Barber, Bennett, Blair, Bowen, Boyes, Brown, Burns, Bury, Butcher, Carmichael, Casselman, Cowan (Long Lake), Dickie, Edwards, Elliott, Fiset, Sir Eugène, Ganong, Gardiner, Gobeil, Hackett, Hanson (York-Sunbury), Hay, Ilsley, Kennedy (Peace River), King, Mackenzie, Loucks, Lucas, Macdougall, Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre), MacLaren, MacMillan (Saskatoon), MacNicol, McGillis, McKenzie (Assiniboia), Malcolm, Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon), Motherwell, Mullins, Myers, Neill, Nicholson, Pickel, Plunkett, Porteous, Price, Ralston, Reid, Rhodes, Ryckman, Ryerson, Sanderson, Senn, Shaver, Simpson (Simcoe North), Simpson (Algoma West), Smoke, Speakman, Spence, Stanley, Stevens, Stewart (Leeds), Stewart (Lethbridge), Stinson, Stirling, Sutherland, Thompson (Lanark), Tummon, Weese, White (London), White (Mount Royal), Willis, Woodsworth, Young.—76.

NAYS

Messrs:

Beaubien, Beaubier, Brasset, Chaplin, Denis, Deslauriers, Duff, Esling, Fraser (Cariboo), Gagnon, McGregor, Maloney, Mitchell, Stitt (Nelson), Wilson.—15.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was paired with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. PETTIT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Bouchard). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. GIROUARD: I was paired with the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Lafleche). Had I voted, I would voted against the amendment.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I was paired with the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Main motion (Mr. Power) as amended agreed to on the same division.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for co-operation with the Canadian Pacific railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion.—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

Mr. MALCOLM: When the house rose at six o'clock I was making a few remarks with regard to an amendment which I proposed to offer to subsection 1 of section 4 of the bill. I had just pointed out that when the Drayton-Acworth commission sat in 1917 they had also, as did the Duff commission, recommended that trustees be appointed to administer the national railway system. Clause No. 31 in the 1917 report of the royal commission on railways and transportation recommended that there be five trustees and that these be named in the legislation. I had pointed out that, as the Prime Minister himself had said, if this railway were a private company it would be treated as though it were in liquidation, and as the bonds of this public company were guaranteed by the dominion it was advisable to appoint trustees to administer the affairs of the railway. I had further said that if the trustees were to be appointed, the House of Commons, representing, as the members do, the shareholders of the system, should be the body to appoint the trustees, or a receiver or liquidator, or whatever term we chose to apply to these three men to whom we were giving full charge of the system.

The legislation provides two things that remove from those who are to administer the system much of the responsibility. First of all it removes the financial difficulties, because it provides that any deficits that occur are to be met out of the public treasury. I suggested to the Minister of Railways that in selecting the chairman of the board of trustees, it would appear advisable that he should select the most able railway administrator he could secure on the continent, for the reason that if success is to come to the railway system all that can be expected of the board of trustees is efficient and economical management. The financial problem is being handled by the Minister of Finance of this dominion.

Mr. BENNETT: The statute says, by the chairman.

Mr. MALCOLM: If there is a deficit the minister has to find it.

Mr. BENNETT: But the budget is the trustees' budget.

Mr. MALCOLM: Secondly, the success of the system will be predicated very largely upon the policies of the government of Canada. We all realize, whether we wish to blame it on the government in power in this country or on governments in power in other countries, that restrictive trade policies the world over have done much to diminish tonnage not only of railways but of ocean shipping companies. Such policies have done much to decrease the volume of business transacted. The men appointed by the government to administer the policies of the railway will have nothing whatever to do with the policies of the government, and any deficits that occur will be provided for by the Minister of Finance.

My suggestion therefore, and it is only a suggestion, is that the chairman of the board should be a railway operator. If the government is prepared to consider the advisability of sharing with other members of the House of Commons the responsibility for the appointment of trustees, so that it can truthfully be said—what the Prime Minister indicated—that the object is to remove as far as possible any accusation of political partisanship. I believe that the amendment which I propose to submit would free the government from the possibilities of any such charge. If the government could decide upon the men it desired, the amendment could be offered at such time as the minister was prepared to make the selection. The section now reads:

> The governor in council may vacate all nominations heretofore made to the board of directors of the national company pursuant to section 3 of the national act—

That means that they may dismiss existing directors.

> —and may appoint in the place and stead of and in succession to the incorporators of that company three trustees whose powers, rights, privileges, immunities, duties, responsibilities and restrictions shall be as in and by this act provided.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

My amendment is to strike out the word "may" in line 28 and substitute the word "shall", and to strike out all of lines 31 and 32 and substitute therefor the words, "and hereby appoint as trustees the following". The amendment would therefore read: That section 4 of part I be amended by striking out the word "may" in line 28 and substituting therefor the word "shall", and by striking out all the words in lines 31 and 32 and substituting therefor the words, "and hereby appoint as trustees the following". I have left the lines blank. I do not know whether, in submitting an amendment, it would be in order to insert names; I do not presume to submit names to the government. If the minister thinks that he can accept such an amendment I will submit it; otherwise I propose to let the matter stand. I leave it to him whether I shall submit it or not.

Mr. MANION: I know that the hon. gentleman offers the amendment in the best of good faith and I have every respect for his submission. At the same time there are a number of reasons why the amendment cannot be accepted. Let me deal with a few of the suggestions my hon. friend has offered. In the first place, as regards substituting the word "shall" for the word "may", I understand that it has adways been the custom to use the word "may" with respect to the governor in council. That is a small matter, but I just mention it in passing. In that case, generally speaking, the word "may" means "shall".

Another point made by the hon. gentleman was that the chairman of the board of trustees should be a first class railway operator. In passing may I point out that at the present time we have not only one but a number of good railway operators connected with the Canadian National Railways. I have heard the most complimentary references made to Mr. Hungerford and the other officers of the railways and I submit that the splendid work which they have done in the past indicates conclusively that they are capable of operating the railway in excellent manner. My own opinion—I am expressing this just the same as the hon. gentleman expressed his opinion—is that rather than a railway operator, what we need is someone who will be competent to supervise the general policies of the road. Without meaning to be critical of the past, I believe that had there been greater supervision from the financial standpoint of the management and the capital expenditures of the road, it would have been better. The hon. gentleman also suggested that we should choose someone from this continent. Without attempting to make any political capital out of the reference of my hon. friend, may I say that my feeling is that if possible, and I think it is possible, we should obtain a man from this country. I have no desire to reflect upon the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman that these men should be named in the bill itself, but there are two reasons why I do not think that would be possible. The first is that the bill is not yet law, and the second is that when the bill was introduced both the Prime Minister and myself took the attitude that we would be ready to consider amendments suggested by hon. members. I think we have proven our good faith by submitting two amendments along the lines suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite. Until the bill is law and we know its terms, we could not very well approach outstanding men in Canada with a view to asking them to take this position. We would first have to know that the position was created and we would also require the general support and advice of the House of Commons as a whole. In view of these considerations it is not possible for the government at the moment to indicate just who should be appointed to these positions. I make that statement quite frankly and because of these facts the suggestion which my hon. friend has made, in good faith I know, is not acceptable to the government at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, the former Minister of Labour, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) had an amendment which he intended to offer. He has been unavoidably prevented from being here to-day, and, as a former Minister of Labour, not as leader of the opposition, I should like to move an amendment which indicates views which I very strongly entertain. It is my opinion that at least one member of the board of trustees should be a person who would be regarded as representing labour upon that board, whether the board be made up of three, five or whatever other number of members may be decided upon. It will be for the government to decide just how many members shall compose this board, but I believe that, at this time, when industry the world over is undergoing a change, and when there is a very strong feeling against monopoly of control on the part of capital of great industrial enterprises, every effort should be made by a representative body such as this house to see that the classes immediately and mostly affected in industry are accorded a voice in the formation of industrial policy. I know it will be argued that, because this board may have the unpleasant duty of cutting down services, causing the number of men employed to be reduced, and possibly reducing wages and the like, it would be inadvisable to have someone possessing the confidence of labour upon the board. From my point of view, the reasons I have just mentioned are the strongest that could be advanced for having someone in the confidence of railway labour upon this board. I believe that working men are quite as reasonable as any other class in the community, when it comes to what relates to conditions of employment much more reasonable in fact, than are any of the others who have to do with the shaping of working conditions. I believe that the whole railway policy would be carried out in a finer spirit if organized labour were represented on the board which was to determine that policy. Being given information with respect to the extent and nature of business the world over, and other like considerations, the representative of labour upon the board of trustees would be able to form an intelligent view of the situation in a better manner than would be possible in any other way. His support of any measure which involved a reduction of wages, the lessening of staff or matters of a similar nature, would carry considerable weight with the great body of railway employees. Whether the board is to be composed of three of five members, as the bill now stands, a majority, which must include the chairman, is required in order to have any decision of the board prevail. In these circumstances, there would always be at least two members who may very properly be regarded as representing the capital investors and the community generally, and, for that reason, the interests of investors or the public generally would be in no danger of being sacrificed at the hands of the one representative commanding the confidence of labour.

I should like to mention to the committee that it was the Drayton-Acworth commission which made originally the recommendation that there should be a board of trustees. I think they recommended that this board should consist of five members, but whatever the number they certainly recommended that there should be one trustee selected as especially possessing the confidence of the railway employees. That commission was appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, it was appointed by the government of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. It heard evidence from all parties and came to the conclusion that, whatever the number of trustees might be, one should be selected as especially possessing the confidence of the railway employees. I am not submitting that this representative should necessarily be a railway employee, to be chosen from the ranks of the employees of the railway. I am following the exact wording of the Drayton-Acworth recommendation.

Another reason for making such an appointment is the fact that at the present time labour is represented upon the board of directors. As hon. members know, the president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada is one of the directors of the Canadian National Railways, he having been appointed by the late Liberal administration and continued as a director by the present administration. I venture to say that if the directors appointed by the present administration or those appointed by the previous administration, or the officers of the railway were asked whether Mr. Tom Moore had been helpful or otherwise as a director, the answer most emphatically would be that his services had been of great value to all who are concerned with the management of the railway and the shaping of its policies. It seems to me that, having established the precedent of giving labour representation upon the board of directors, it would, apart from all else, be a great mistake to take a backward step by now doing away with that representation.

I would urge further that in these matters the government ought to set an example to industry generally. I do not think representation by someone commanding the confidence of railway employees should be confined to the national system; I believe the Canadian Pacific might well adopt a similar policy in respect to its board of directors and that all large industries might well do the same. I believe also that, if industry does not do so it will be all the worse for the investors in the long run. If there is not a natural evolution by the gradual broadening of the representation of all classes immediately concerned in industry on the boards that control industrial policies, there is nothing left but a kind of action which would not commend itself to any deliberative body such as this.

Furthermore, in railway matters it is all-important to have good-will and a good spirit prevailing throughout the system. There is nothing that can more effectually impede the satisfactory working of a railway than a lack of confidence on the part of the employees with respect to the policies by which they are governed. In that regard I believe that the railway as a financial institution will be benefited materially if labour is given representation on the board.

In conclusion may I say that I regard labour as a partner with capital in all industrial enterprise; certainly in railway enterprise labour is an essential partner. May I point out that our railways employ larger numbers of men than most of our industries, and that men who enter railway service as a rule go into it for life. They invest their lives in that form of service, but they invest them again in a way even more immediate. Railroading is a hazardous buiness; there is not a man who goes out on a train who does not from that moment to the end of his journey take his life in his hands and all that his life means in the home from which he comes. Men who are giving their lives to industrial service in that immediate way ought to be represented on any board of trustees or directors which has to do with fashioning the policies under which they are obliged to work. So, Mr. Chairman, I would move that section 4 be amended by adding after the word "trustees" in line 32 the words:

—one selected as especially possessing the confidence of railway employees.

I hope the minister will find it possible to accept that amendment.

Mr. MANION: I shall not traverse the ground covered by the right hon. gentleman, because the question was discussed in a very general way on the second reading of the bill. At that time, however, I did point out—we were dealing with the Duff commission, but I think the same observation applies to the appointment of trustees—that it is a little difficult to choose a representative of one class without remembering other classes who are affected also to a great extent by our railways, notably the agricultural class. For example, I pointed out that at the peak there are not more than 200,000 men employed on all the railways of Canada whereas there are more than a million agricultural workers in this dominion, including farmers and workers on farms. As the agriculturist is affected in his purchases by a tax, that is, a freight rate, on practically everything he buys, he also is very greatly affected by the operation of the railways. If class representation is to be given on a small board of trustees such as this the agriculturist might well and justly take the attitude that he also has a right to representation on the board.

I merely mention this as one difficulty which might arise. There is another point, however; it is that the Canadian National Railways Act itself contained no clause providing that labour should be represented on the board, though as a matter of fact the governments of the past all appointed someone as representing labour, as my right hon. friend has said. I submit that a matter of this kind should be left for decision to the government appointing the trustees, and that their hands should not be tied by such an amendment. In other words, I believe the government should be left as untrammelled in carrying out this act as other governments were left in the carrying out of the Canadian National Railways Act, to which as a matter of fact Part I of the present act is an amendment. So I do not believe the committee would be wise to accept the amendment proposed by the right hon. gentleman. There may be other reasons that could be advanced but those happen to come to my mind at the moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In answer to my hon. friend's remark about the agricultural class being entitled to representation, may I say, as I am sure the minister will admit, that, inasmuch as railway labour is actually employed on the road at the risk of the lives of its individual members at all hours of the day and night, there is a somewhat different obligation in the matter of its representation than there is in the representation of any other class. With regard to agriculturists, I think that their interests will undoubtedly be in the same position as those of the community generally; their interests are business interests, and I assume that they will be well represented by the two other members of the board, if there are to be only two others. It is hardly likely that the government will select as its trustees men who will not be intended to be regarded by the agricultural interests as business men capable of looking after the business interests of the country. In that way they will get representation, but there is a difference with regard to labour, particularly at this time, and at the present stage of industrial development the world over. I would feel that, if the minister thought there should be some further representation of agriculture, it would be much wiser to enlarge the board to five and make sure that the agricultural interests, as well as those of labour, were represented by someone especially commanding their confidence, instead of keeping the number of trustees so small as to exclude these representatives, and representatives of labour in particular.

Mr. HEAPS: I very much regret the attitude taken by the Minister of Railways with regard to this amendment. Even though he could not accept it I think at least he might have given it a little more sympathetic consideration than he appeared to give in his reply. The hon. gentleman tried to justify his position by the fact that there was no representative of labour on the Duff commission.

Mr. MANION: Nor of agriculture.

Mr. HEAPS: I think that was one of the regrettable features of the Duff commission. There was distinct class representation in that commission; that was evidenced by the minister's remarks when he introduced this measure dealing with our railway problem. At that time the minister said that the two appointees, the one from the United States and the other from Great Britain, had been placed on this commission in order to give confidence to those holding the securities of the two railway companies If that is not class representation I do not know what it is.

Mr. MANION: I corrected that later on; I said these men were not appointed as class representatives. They were appointed to give confidence to those people in the two countries holding bonds and securities to the value of hundreds of millions of dollars, but they were not put on as representatives of those people.

Mr. HEAPS: They were appointed in order to give confidence to the bondholders in those countries. A representative of labour on that commission might have given just as much satisfaction to our own people, and I think the government of the day should have been just as much concerned in giving satisfaction to our own people as in giving satisfaction to people living in other parts of the world. This evening the Minister of Railways said that he hoped in some way to go back on that former attitude of the government and that when the board is appointed the government will not go beyond the confines of this dominion in selecting them. I am in hearty agreement with that attitude, and I wish that it had been adopted in regard to the Duff commission itself, instead of appointing two gentlemen from outside of this country for the express purpose, in my estimation of recommending that we do something which they found it impossible to do themselves, for I see in to-day's papers that the Delaware and Hudson Railway, of which Mr. Loree is president, is in somewhat the same position as the Canadian National Railways. Yet this same gentleman comes to us to tell us how to settle our railway problem when he is not in a position to settle his own.

Mr. BENNETT: I think his road paid a dividend last year.

Mr. HEAPS: To-day's papers report a loss of $45,000,000 for the road.

In 1927 at the Conservative party convention held in Winnipeg a plank was written into their platform in favour of giving labour representation on these commissions appointed by the government. I am sure that the Minister of Railways is not going to go back on that plank which was adopted at the Winnipeg convention only a few short years ago. I hope that that recommendation was something more than mere window dressing. The workers on the railways will be very much disappointed at the attitude adopted by the Minister of Railways this evening when he does not hold out any hopes, in my estimation, of giving labour representation on the board of trustees, which will have control to a very large extent of the railways and will have some say as to the conditions under which railway men shall work.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has no right to say that I held out no hope whatsoever. I said that the government should not have its hands tied in regard to this matter. Speaking of window dressing, may I with all respect suggest to my hon. friend that there is no group in this house who do so much window dressing as he and his friends. Their whole attitude here and everywhere is one of window dressing, appealing to class all the time. That is the attitude my hon. friend is taking now. Not only in this house but on the hustings the whole attitude of that party is one of appealing to class, of setting class against class, so when it comes to window dressing I think I might learn a lot from my hon. friend. As regards the remark of the leader of the opposition in regard to the danger to life of the railway men themselves when running a train, that is true, but the passenger on the train also runs a considerable risk.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the passenger is on the train one day, while the railway man is on the year around.

Mr. MANION: My deputy points out that there are more accidents on the highways than on the railways, and I believe he is right although I have not the figures at hand. I do not think the government's hands should be tied in regard to matters of this kind. When the appointment of the trustees takes place the matter will have to be considered by the government and the responsibility taken by the government. The door is not shut by any means. The question will have to be considered from all angles. It has not been considered as yet, I say quite frankly.

Amendment (Mr. Mackenzie King) negatived.

Subsection 1 of section 4 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 2—Chairman.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This subsection provides that one of the trustees shall be chairman and shall devote his whole time to the performance of the duties of his office, and shall not be an officer of any company other than a company which is comprised in the national railways. I wish to submit to the committee an amendment to answer the suggestion made there that one of the trustees only, the chairman, shall devote his whole time to the performance of the duties of his office. The implication is that he alone of the trustees shall devote his full time to the duties of his office. I submit that with the amount of money that the people of this country have invested in these railways, their immense importance and the service that they give to the people, if the board is to be limited to three trustees they should not only be the best men obtainable but all three trustees should give their whole time to the work. The Canadian National Railways Act provided that there should be from five to fifteen directors, and actually I think there were seventeen directors, and seventeen I think for the Canadian Pacific. Now, when the number is being limited to three, I submit not only that they should be the most capable men who can be obtained but that they should give their full time to the work. I do not know that there is any great object in taking up too much of the time of the committee in discussing this matter, as there are other matters to be discussed, and I therefore move that subclause 2 of section 4 be amended by striking it out and substituting therefor the following:

> One of such trustees shall be the chairman. Each trustee shall devote his whole time to the performance of the duties of his office and shall not be an officer of any company other than a company which is comprised in national railways, and shall not during his tenure of office as trustee become a director of any company other than a company which is comprised in national railways of which he was not a director at the time of his appointment.

Mr. MANION: I would suggest that subclause 2 of clause 4 stand with the amendment which has just been proposed, on the ground that this is a question which we think is worthy of consideration. The Prime Minister this afternoon, speaking on this very question, mentioned that he thought it might be well that the three trustees for the first year at any rate give their entire time to the work. In view of that and my hon. friend's remarks I would therefore suggest that the subclause stand with the amendment which has been moved, and we will come back to it probably to-morrow, in the meantime giving further consideration to it. It might be advisable that for the first year, or possibly longer, the three trustees should give their full time to the work, and so, Mr. Chairman, I propose that this subclause stand and that we proceed with the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has the government decided to maintain only three trustees?—because I find a great deal of opinion in favour of five.

Mr. BENNETT: We intend to stick to three.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why should there be discrimination against the individual who is at present or who formerly held a position of director?

Mr. MANION: Why any discrimination against a present director?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. MANION: There is no discrimination against them. I have put myself on record here and elsewhere in regard to the splendid work they have done. However there is an opinion that there should be three trustees in charge of the road; there is no discrimination being shown.

Mr. MALCOLM: Under the bill as drafted a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway could be appointed, but he could not become a director after he was appointed.

Mr. MANION: He will not be appointed.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister might add the word "director" the first time the word "officer" is used, to make the correction that is necessary. He might be a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway and still be appointed, but he could not become a director after he was appointed.

Mr. POWER: The minister should put in some phraseology which would indicate that upon becoming a trustee a man should resign his directorship in other companies, because there is nothing to prevent his retaining his directorship in other companies. There is, however, something to prevent his becoming a director after he has become a trustee.

Mr. MALCOLM: He could not be an officer, but he could be a director of any company when he was appointed.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to call the attention of the minister to that part of clause 2 section 4 which reads, "and shall not be an officer of any company." As I take it, an officer is a paid servant, other than a director. There is no provision saying that he shall not be a director. It should read, "and shall not be an officer or director of any company."

Mr. MANION: We had intended moving an amendment to that clause. The Minister of Public Works had it before him, but in view of the amendment of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) I thought perhaps we could leave it until we had decided upon that point. I shall take up the suggestion now made regarding a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway and see how it fits in. I suggest that the clause stand, and that we proceed with clause 5.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Subsection 2 of clause 4 will stand.

On section 5, subsection 1—Salaries.

Mr. POWER: Subsection 1 of section 5 reads:

> The trustees shall be paid by the national company such salaries as may from time to time be fixed by the governor in council, and if any trustee is in receipt of a pension from any railway company he shall not be entitled to receive or to be paid such pension during his term of office.

I should like to follow that section by an amendment to the effect that the trustees of the national company shall be paid by parliament out of the yearly estimates. I submit that is the only way we can have control over the trustees. Personally my great objection to the bill is that essentially it is an emergency measure to deal with an emergent situation. We are making the persons to whom the operation of the act is to be entrusted practically irrevocable directors, and unless some control is retained by parliament I believe we will defeat the intention of the Canadian people. As the section reads the trustees shall be entitled to be paid from the earnings of the road. They need not come to parliament for their salaries, and are not responsible to parliament in any way. If an amendment were moved along these lines, namely by striking out the words, "national company" in the first line and substituting therefor the words, "out of moneys voted by parliament in the annual estimates" I suggest that then the conduct and administration would be subject to the control of the shareholders who, after all, are the members of parliament representing the people of Canada, the owners of the road.

Mr. MANION: Is that an amendment?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. MANION: In the first place I suggest that the amendment is out of order, because it would be putting charges upon the parliament of Canada, something a private member cannot do. It would be placing upon the parliament of Canada the necessity of paying the trustees. However I merely mention that objection; the chairman may consider the amendment and give his ruling thereon.

The hon. member stated that the trustees are not in any way subject to the control of parliament. I do not agree with him, because if he will look at section 12 he will find the following:

> The annual budget of the national railways shall be under the control of the trustees. Amounts required for income deficits, for interest on obligations outstanding in the hands of the public, for capital expenditures and for refunding or retirement of maturing securities shall be submitted by the trustees to the Minister of Finance for the consideration of the governor in council prior to presentation to parliament. Income deficits shall not be funded.

That clause includes practically every need of the Canadian National Railways, and to my mind by that clause the parliament of Canada will have just as much opportunity as it has to-day, if it so chooses, to investigate the expenditures of the national railways. That is the way it strikes me. Then section 14 provides the annual report must be made to parliament. It states:

> The trustees shall make a report annually to parliament setting forth in a summary manner the results of their operations, any cooperative measures, plans or arrangements effected pursuant to this act,—

And so on. Those two clauses make them subject to parliament. To my mind those two clauses make them responsible to parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are not dealing with section 12, but the minister has referred to it. I should like to be assured as to whether or not parliament has any control over the receipts of the road.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not the slightest.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): After all, that is the main source from which the trustees will operate—the revenues of the road.

Mr. MANION: They have no control over the receipts, perhaps, but when they come to parliament under section 12 and ask for money—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For specific purposes.

Mr. MANION: But those specific purposes cover all the needs of the railroad.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

[Mr Manion.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If the section means that the revenues of the road come under review, then of course the minister is correct. But if not, if we are merely to vote deficits and capital requirements, then we have no control over the trustees at all.

Mr. POWER: There are only three purposes for which they may come to parliament, —first, to get amounts required for income deficits, secondly for interest on obligations outstanding in the hands of the public, and third for capital expenditures and for refunding or retirement of maturing securities. Those matters shall be submitted by the trustees to the Minister of Finance for the consideration of the governor in council, prior to presentation to parliament. The section is not quite clear as to whether or not they have to come to parliament. The statement is made that the Minister of Finance reviews the amounts required. This may be only a formal presentation, and we may be told now, as we have been told for years—and I am not blaming the minister particularly—that it is not in the public interest to give out the information. The trustees are representing the people of Canada. We should have some kind of control over their actions, and I submit the only control we can have is by voting their salaries.

Mr. MANION: If the hon. gentleman will permit me to deal with section 12, it seems to me that section covers practically everything. For example, amounts required for income deficits, that is the difference between the net operating income of the railway and the interest owing to the public on the bonds of the railway—

Mr. EULER: The time might come when there will be no deficits.

Mr. MANION: If the time ever comes when the Canadian National Railways will require no assistance for income deficits, it seems to me that would be an ideal condition for the Canadian National Railways to reach, and it would then be well for this parliament to keep out of the business and let the management operate the road without any interference.

But to get back to my argument, I say that the provision for looking into the cause of the deficit would cover practically every branch of the railroad's affairs. True, as to certain information being given to parliament, I presume whatever government is in power would take the same attitude as has been taken in the past; there is certain information that the railway management say it is not in the railway's interest and therefore not in the public interest to divulge. I presume the same attitude will be taken in the future. But the section also refers to amounts required for interest on obligations outstanding in the hands of the public, for capital expenditures, and for refunding or retirement of maturing securities. To my mind that covers every possible branch of the railway's affairs, and the parliament of Canada will have it in its power to go into these details as far as they ever have in the past; with this exception, recommended by the Duff commission, that the officers of the railway should not be brought before the parliamentary committee. But that is no reason why we should not bring the trustees before the committee and have them give a report.

Then section 14:

> The trustees shall make a report annually to parliament setting forth in a summary manner the results of their operations . . .

That would deal with the same question. I submit in all seriousness and sincerity that to my mind, as far as parliament wishes to control the financial arrangements of the railway, it has all power to do so under sections 12 and 14.

Mr. POWER: Taking the minister's own argument, as to these matters which he says come under the control of parliament—which argument I am not prepared to admit—they are income deficits, interest on obligations in the hands of the public, capital expenditures, and retirement of maturing securities. Not one of those things do we dare refuse to vote. It is pointed out to me that in the first paragraph it is provided that the annual budget of the national railways shall be under the control of the trustees. We dare not refuse to vote the income deficits; we dare not refuse to vote the interest on obligations in the hands of the public, for if we do the road is bankrupt, and if so the country is bankrupt,—

Mr. MANION: Is not that true at this moment just as it will be in the future? But we do look into the accounts.

Mr. POWER: But if we have the trustees here before us having their salaries voted, we can criticize them. As representing the people who own the road, the shareholders of the road, we can say that the actions of the trustees are not conducive to the best administration, that our property is not being well managed.

Mr. HACKETT: We can say that anyway.

Mr. POWER: But we cannot do anything about it.

Mr. HACKETT: Just as much as you ever have.

Mr. POWER: Could parliament to-day, if it desired, refuse to vote the salaries of the directors or the management?

Mr. MANION: No, the directors are not paid by parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: The president was, under a contract made by order in council, but the money had to be provided by the railway.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think the Prime Minister makes a mistake. The salary of the president was paid out of income.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I said.

Mr. POWER: The point is that these men are to be given extraordinary power. They are vested with ownership and control—practical ownership; the Prime Minister himself said they were to act as receivers in bankruptcy—

Mr. BENNETT: Not in bankruptcy.

Mr. POWER: These men must be controlled by someone, otherwise they can play ducks and drakes with the property of the people and no one in this house can prevent it. The government itself cannot. The people of Canada have no way of taking their own property out of the control of these three men. I think that is an abnormal state of affairs in a country that prides itself on being a democracy. Unless in some way we provide that they shall be obliged to come before parliament to have their salaries voted we shall be setting up in this country something which not only we but probably future generations will greatly regret, because these men through the method of appointment are practically self-perpetuating. During the course of the debate on the second reading the Prime Minister pointed out that it was quite possible that following a referendum an amalgamation of the two railroads might be brought about. But these directors, so long as there were assets in the Canadian National Railways to pay their salaries, would remain, and we could not do anything about it except by an address of both houses. No political party, no majority of the people of Canada could remove these trustees.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend suggest that under section 12, if this House of Commons asked the trustees or some of them to come before a committee of this house, as I expect it will, to discuss the reasons why they needed this money, they could refuse?

Mr. POWER: I am talking about their salaries now. The only way we could get rid of them would be to stop paying their salaries. That is the only way I can see to get rid of these men if they were not performing their duties properly, or if the people of this country decided that an act which we are now passing, though it may be proper to put into effect during a time of emergency, was not a proper measure for the administration of our national railways at another time. If the emergency disappears we may not need these trustees, but we cannot get rid of them. We have no control over them unless we vote their salaries.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman might have stated the rest of my observation, that this parliament has power to repeal this statute next session, and the trustees would then cease to hold office. A parliament that enacts can always repeal. If it were found that the trustees abused their power, did not properly discharge their duties, I have no doubt that no government would hestitate for a moment to take the necessary action to repeal the whole statute.

Mr. EULER: Suppose the Senate refuses?

Mr. BENNETT: I said parliament.

Mr. POWER: Does the Prime Minister suggest that in order to get rid of the trustees we should repeal the whole act?

Mr. BENNETT: Repeal the section. It is nothing new in parliamentary practice; it has been done frequently and will continue to be done. Whether or not it gives ground for a claim for compensation is another matter. There is pending now before the privy council an appeal taken by a former member of the appeal courts from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada because as a result of legislation passed in 1930 an office was abolished and it was contended that there was a right to compensation. This parliament must be reasonable, this committee must be reasonable. We are facing what I think is very properly described as emergency in transportation matters. Parliament may desire to add to this bill at another session, and I cannot contemplate the desirability of the committee wrangling over the salaries paid to the trustees. I believe that in the case of one of the great institutions of this country an effort was once made by a shareholder to ascertain what salary was paid to the president, and the directors declined to give the information. Only last week the government of the province of Ontario declined to make known the salaries paid to the hydro commissioners. The general principle followed in British countries has been not to discuss among the shareholders the compensation paid to the officers of the enterprise. But there always has to be included in the reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States, and in this country to our Board of Railway Commissioners, I think, a statement of what the salaries are. The usual method taken by shareholders when they are dissatisfied with their officers is, at the annual meeting, to pass a vote of non-confidence in their directors; and that means that, although the directors retire by rotation, as they do in most companies nowadays in order to preserve continuity of policy, nevertheless, a motion of censure passed on directors has usually resulted in the disappearance of that board by resignation. I do not apprehend that there is any difficulty in a matter of this kind.

I do not think that we want to go over a bill of this character with a fine comb for the purpose of seeing that every possible contingency should be anticipated.

Mr. EULER: Why not?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is obvious. What we are trying to do is to lay down a principle and embody it in the form of a statute, and you can test any administrative statute of this kind only in the light of experience; so that if it is found defective at this or that point, parliament, which meets every year and is only for a few months not in session, can take proper measures to remedy such defects. I for one would not contend for a single moment that this is perfect legislation. It embodies the recommendation made by the commission—we will leave out altogether the question of the merits of that commission—and an effort has been made not to make it a contentious, narrow party measure but rather to ensure that there should be the freest opportunity for members of the committee to indicate where improvements might be effected—not, shall I say, to have narrow constructions placed on a broad measure of public control, but in the broadest possible sense to suggest where an improvement could be made here and an improvement there.

Dangers are foreseen with respect to amalgamation, and I for one am perfectly willing that the committee should take whatever steps it might think adequate to protect against that. Then there is the question of the abandonment of lines. Having lived in the west I know exactly how hon. members feel about that, the fear that there might be placed in the hands of some group the power to destroy branch line facilities. I think we have met that; what the minister said this afternoon completely meets that situation. And there are other suggestions of a like character. But when you get down to the question of arrangements between the employer and the employee, the trustees of the company, we have given large powers to the trustees, and this is the ground on which the commission took their position. They said: If you are to avoid the difficulties and pitfalls of political control and pressure, if you are to make this measure at all effective, you must hedge it round with such safeguards as will endeavour—we will put it that way at any rate—to secure public ownership of a great utility. When I hear the hon. member for North Waterloo talking about amalgamation of all lines under public ownership, with the history we have behind us, it seems to me that makes the whole thing a laughing stock, because the history we have behind the system is unfortunate in the sense that it has not worked well.

Mr. EULER: And what is the history of privately-owned railroad companies all over the continent, including Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: The history of the private railway in this country is an amazing history. There is $120 of cash for every $100 of shares outstanding. It is the one company in all the world about which that can be said; and in point of efficient management—

An hon. MEMBER: Why doesn't it pay dividends?

Mr. BENNETT: It is not paying dividends; it is not paying dividends on preferred shares. But no one suggests that this is due to any other fact than the lessening of traffic. During the great period of expanding traffic for the railways, the Canadian National system, which came into being, after the late government assumed office, by the passing of an order in council after the judgment of the privy council in the Grand Trunk arbitration, and during the years following, in which there was a tremendous expansion involving the building of railways, branch lines and facilities, the commission finds that through it all runs the red thread of extravagance. Hon. gentlemen opposite dislike that, because they say that it is a criticism of themselves. Now, I do not think that the commission meant that, and I am not putting it in that light to the committee to-night. But everyone who is familiar with railways does admit that it is a fair statement. We are so constituted in this young country, however, we take our politics so seriously at times and become so unwilling—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That cannot be blamed on the national railways alone. It can be applied to both railways.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the red thread of extravagance; that was applicable to one and not the other.

An hon. MEMBER: No, both.

Mr. BENNETT: But the point is that one had an accumulated surplus of $100,000,000 or thereabouts and could afford to do things which the other could not, and you cannot compare incomparable things. For instance, the Pennsylvania system was able to do things which neither the old Wabash nor the Erie could do. And the Milwaukee, up to a certain point, was a most prosperous road and could do things that the Northern Pacific and other roads could not do.

Mr. YOUNG: But extravagance is always extravagance.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but it is always relative, having regard to resources and the ability to extend your earnings in proportion to your extravagances, if you call them extravagances. I think I can say that I am less a sinner with respect to these matters than any member of the committee, because I have a singularly consistent history with regard to the railway situation in this country. The hon. member for West Edmonton knows what my position has been. I have been as critical of the one as the other, and in 1908, standing in the Lyric theatre in Calgary, I made the statement that in my belief we were signing the death warrant of the successful conduct of transportation in Canada by endeavouring to build a third transcontinental in this country. I had no hesitancy in making that statement, and I have never changed my view. But now we are dealing with an emergency; we are grappling with a situation in which recriminations serve no purpose—

Mr. MALCOLM: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: —and do not advance matters one bit. As to the suggestion that we should ask this parliament annually, with respect to these trustees, to discuss the question of their salaries, I am sure the hon. gentleman who proposes it knows that he cannot place a charge upon the country; it can be done only through the government. And the suggestion, it seems to me, is a negation of every principle that has heretofore governed in matters of this kind. The fact that it is the negative of everything that has been done does not prove that it is wrong, but you must show affirmatively that it has great merits to warrant its adoption, and there is no merit I can see that would warrant us in concluding that these trustees should have their salaries fixed by parliament annually. I do not think we could get the type of men we want for the position if we followed that course.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister has been speaking with reference to the question of salaries, and I gather from his remarks that he has been defending the point of view of secrecy with respect to the remuneration to be paid officials of the railways. I am diametrically opposed to that view. The time has come when the more publicity there is with respect to public expenditures, and especially where they relate to a need for effecting economies, the better for all. The Prime Minister has used, particularly in relation to salaries, the expression, which is found in the commission's report, of the red thread of extravagance running through various expenditures. That red thread would not have been there had not the practice been followed of regarding as sacrosanct certain privileges surrounding those who hold great financial positions of one kind or another. If the present and the recent past has removed anything, it has removed this halo from the heads of great financiers. It has been made perfectly clear that there is no greater fiction in the world than the idea of the superman in business or finance, whether it be banking, railroading or any other form of industrial or commercial enterprise. I believe that this committee would be helping along a much needed reform if it insisted that instead of secrecy there be publicity with respect to all these matters of salary.

Mr. BENNETT: It has.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: During the present debate the Minister of Railways made reference to certain salaries which he found were being paid to some of the officials of the Canadian National Railways. Personally I was astounded when I learned what some of those salaries were. Throughout the time I was Prime Minister I had no knowledge of what some of those salaries were, there were two reasons why I did not have that knowledge. The first was the avowed policy of the late administration, to allow the railway to be managed by the board of directors without any political interference. As far as I was concerned, during the entire time I was in office I never sought directly or indirectly to influence the national railways with respect to any of these matters. The other reason was that, as mentioned, we also followed the practice of replying to many questions respecting salaries which were asked from time to time by stating that this information should not be given to parliament unless the railway itself was willing it should be given. It was alleged that in making public this information an advantage would be given to its competitor. I think that practice was all nonsense. I believe the competitor as a rule knows exactly what is being paid. The practice amounts to a conspiracy between the competitors for their mutual advantage, as against the public interest or the interest of the particular concerns. I believe we should insist upon publicity in connection with all salaries. If it can be best had by having them reviewed in parliament, let it be done in that way. I am not referring merely to the salaries of the trustees, I am referring to the salaries and allowances paid to officials and others who have to do with the management and operation of the railways. If we could set an example in that regard we might be furthering a great reform which would be of immense service at the present time to this and other countries. I believe that such a reform will be insisted upon more and more in all countries. After all, there is very little about which the average individual has not to give a public accounting. In connection with his personal income and matters of the kind he has to make a declaration which is sent into a government office. True enough it is protected, but the information is open to the Minister of Finance and the members of the government as well as to certain officials, if they wish to pry into affairs of this kind. There is hardly anything in which there is not full publicity with respect to the private means of individuals, why then should there not be publicity with respect to salaries which are paid out of the public treasury?

I think it is largely a false distinction to draw a line between those amounts which are paid out of the receipts of the railways and those paid out of the public treasury. What the latter amounts to, is determined by the former. The other day the committee was discussing the question of finding some means of compensating for the time they were out of employment, or until they could obtain other employment, the men who would be thrown out of employment as a result of economies effected. It was argued in the committee, and ruled by the chairman that such a motion was out of order because if carried it would impose a burden upon the public treasury. The intent of the motion was that the money required should come out of or be a first charge upon the receipts of the railways themselves. After all, amounts which parliament will have to make good when meeting any deficit will always bear a relationship to the receipts of the railways, so in this discussion we should not try to draw too sharp a line between what is going to be a matter of expenditure coming under the heading of what the railway itself provides from its revenues, and what is going to be a matter of expenditure coming under the heading of what this parliament will have to provide. It seems to me that the matter of the budget as a whole is one of national concern and ought so to be viewed.

May I say this further word? Either this parliament is supporting a policy of government ownership and control, or it is not. If the ministry feel that the time has come when we should not have government ownership and control, let them say so and bring in a measure to that effect. Let them abolish public ownership and control and turn the railways over to a private concern. If the ministry feel that they wish to retain government ownership but do not wish to have public control, let them bring in a measure to that effect, and say distinctly that they are through with the public control of railways. This important matter should not be camouflaged, and it seems to me that that is what is being done by this bill. The ministry is taking the railway property which is owned by the people of Canada, and turning it over to three private individuals to do with as they please. They are saying to these three individuals: You run this railroad as you please, independent altogether of the parliament of Canada and the approval of the governor in council. Where is there a scintilla of public control in that? It is government ownership with private control of the most exclusive type. It is giving a monopoly of control to three men, a monopoly of control and power which does not exist with respect to any other railway in this or any other country in the world. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, the operating forces are subject to the policies laid down by the directors who are considerable in number. We are discussing having only three directors while the Canadian Pacific have something like seventeen. May I here in passing point out something which I think should have been mentioned before? The provision for a large number of directors is one which was put into the original statute by hon. members opposite. If there were too many directors appointed by the late government, it was because the late government took the act as they found it, and appointed directors to the number which was provided by the statute as passed by the previous administration.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact, we increased it so as to give representation to all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, the number of directors was increased from fifteen to seventeen by the present government. What I am pointing out is this: In this particular measure the government is proposing to give complete control to three persons. If the railway were being handed over to another company, a purely private concern, to run, there would not be anything like the absolute private control which is provided for in this particular measure. Such a company would require that at least its shareholders should know what its directors were doing. Under this measure, this parliament, which represents the shareholders of the National railways, is parting absolutely with its control, unless in some way the budget and its details can be brought here to receive both discussion by and the approval of parliament.

I rose more particularly to speak in connection with the publicity which should be given to expenditures, particularly those made in the form of salaries, and I would like to conclude by reemphasizing this point. I believe that we in parliament would have escaped some of the criticism which has been made if we had had a provision in our original enactment to provide for giving to parliament the fullest information with regard to all expenditures made in the form of salaries. If this is an error which has been made in the past, let us not repeat it by following a practice which will make for even greater secrecy with respect to the expenditure of public money.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the Prime Minister and the members of the committee that I have no desire to be unduly critical of the provisions of this bill. I would not be making any reference to the subject of the discussion this afternoon were it not for the fact that the Prime Minister referred to the matter of amalgamation. In answer to a question which he asked this afternoon, I said that I was in favour of amalgamation under public and not private ownership. Perhaps I should have said what was in my mind when I spoke on the second reading of this bill, but I will do so now. I realize that amalgamation could not come at the present moment, but when it does come, it should come under public and not private ownership. Just in passing, I may say that I have no desire to deal at any length with this particular phase of the matter, but in my opinion amalgamation will have to come. This government will have to face that problem just as it will have to face some other things which so far it has not had either the inclination or the courage to face.

Something was said about the reference by the royal commission to the red thread of extravagance which had run through the Canadian National Railways. I do not want to make any invidious comparison but I think it is known to everyone that the same description could be applied to the operations of another railway. If the red thread of extravagance did in fact run through the operations of the Canadian National Railways to any extent, it also ran through the operations of the other railroad.

Now with regard to the clause under discussion and the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec South, I would say that I am in favour of that only in case the government refuse to accept what seems to me the reasonable alternative. The suggestion advanced by the hon. member for Quebec South is that by having the salaries voted by parliament we would have some measure of control over the board of trustees. I think we should have some measure of control over that board. I do not particularly favour this method, by having parliament vote the salaries, and just here let me say that I am one of those who would like as little interference as possible with these trustees when they take over the management of this railway. But I want to point out that if the bill goes through as it stands now the House of Commons or the government itself, and I am speaking now of the cabinet, has no power whatever to get rid of that board if it should desire to do so. The members of the board will be appointed for terms of seven years, and there is no means provided for dispensing with their services except by the vote of both houses of parliament. If we have any belief whatever in democratic government I think the control of the board should rest not with both houses of parliament but with the House of Commons or the executive itself. That is the point I desire to make.

It was stated during the debate on the second reading, I think by the Prime Minister, that the board of trustees could not spend a sou without the consent of the governor in council. I think the Prime Minister was wrong in that statement; perhaps he did not mean exactly what he said, because this parliament and this government have absolutely nothing to do with the expenditure of the operating revenues of the railway. They are perfectly free to do as they please with revenues amounting to $150,000,000 or $160,000,000, and that was the case under the old dispensation.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman has not correctly quoted me, I was dealing with capital expenditures.

Mr. EULER: I regret to disagree with the right hon. gentleman but I am rather sure that if he looks up his remarks in Hansard he will find that he said that the trustees could not spend a sou without the consent of parliament. I am quite willing to believe that what he now says is what he meant; I think that must be taken as the fact, but we cannot interfere with the expenditure by the trustees of the revenues received by the railway in the ordinary conduct of its business. As my hon. friend from Quebec South said, the trustees may play ducks and drakes with the railway. I do not anticipate that they will do anything of the sort, but if that should happen we have no control over them except by an address of both houses of parliament, and I am perfectly frank in saying that I do not think that responsibility should be shared with the other house. After all it is the members of the House of Commons who represent the Canadian people, and if it should be found desirable to dispense with the services of the members of this board that should be in the hands of the cabinet or of the House of Commons. It is quite conceivable that it might become absolutely impossible for another government, after an election, to dispense with the services of these men.

Something has been said here about being sure that no political influence is brought to bear upon the board. I said before, Mr. Chairman, that I should like to have that influence reduced to a minimum. I do not desire to bring up any recriminations, but if there was one criticism made of the former government more often than another it was that they did not interfere sufficiently with the expenditures made by the board of directors of the Canadian National Railway. Yet to-day this government—and I am not particularly criticizing them—are going a great deal further; they are going to rid themselves of all power of interfering with the conduct of the railway.

Personally I rather like that idea, but I do think the matter should remain within the control either of the government or of the House of Commons so that, if we so desired, we could get rid of the board of trustees. I think that is a change the government should make a little later on in the clause, and if they would consent to that I should think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec South would be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. BENNETT: Just one word in reply, Mr. Chairman. It is not often that the right hon. leader of the opposition and myself are in accord. If the right hon. gentleman gathered from what I said that I believed in secrecy with regard to everything connected with public companies he was entirely in error. I have expressed myself very freely during the last two years or so with respect to that matter. There have been wrecks of companies in this country which, if this parliament had possessed jurisdiction, certainly would have been heard of; I say that to the right hon. gentleman now. It is true they happened under circumstances which precluded the possibility of this parliament exercising control, but I am wholly in sympathy with the effort that has been made during the past few weeks by those interested in one corporation to obtain information as to how the money they paid into that corporation was invested. Certainly I am of the opinion that publicity is the surest cure for many of the corporate evils that have grown up in the world in the last few years. About that there is no doubt; I am wholly in accord with that view. I have expressed myself perhaps too freely in that regard, in the view of some of my old time personal friends. But I put this to the committee, and I put it very fairly: it is an altogether different thing to throw into this house the discussion from year to year of the salary you are going to pay a trustee. Knowledge must be given, of course, but to say that this parliament is to vote that sum implies that the Minister of Finance will introduce it as an estimate, and if he introduces the salaries of the trustees as an estimate why should not that practice be followed in regard to the rest of the officials of the railway as well? That would negative the very object this bill has in view. Section 12 provides that the annual budget of the national railways shall be under the control of the trustees.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does not the Prime Minister think the wording of this clause is obscure? The very fact that you mention the annual budget suggests that such a budget should be presented to parliament. In the discussion on the resolution I think that was why the Prime Minister left us under the impression that the annual budget of the Canadian National would be submitted to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would follow the remaining words of the section:

> Amounts required for income deficits, for interest on obligations outstanding in the hands of the public, for capital expenditures and for refunding or retirement of maturing securities shall be submitted by the trustees to the Minister of Finance for the consideration of the governor in council prior to presentation to parliament.

Then if we turn to section 13, dealing with the auditors, we observe that the auditors are to make such explanations to parliament as may be thought desirable in connection with the conduct of the business of the company. Then we come to section 14, which provides:

> The trustees shall make a report annually to parliament setting forth in a summary manner the results of their operations, any cooperative measures, plans or arrangements effective pursuant to this act, any economies or more remunerative operation thereby produced, the amounts expended on capital account in respect of the railways, works, property, facilities and services comprised in the undertakings of national railways and such other information as appears to them to be of public interest or necessary for the information of parliament with relation to any situation existing at the time of such report, or as may be required from time to time by the governor in council.

I thought that at least sufficiently met the difficulty to which the hon. member for North Waterloo now refers, namely, that if the report of the trustees is not sufficiently clear or is not ample to enable the government to understand the whole situation, the governor in council, which is the executive, may require such information from time to time.

As to the removal of the trustees, this is a matter of extreme difficulty. In an endeavour to secure trustees who would not be subject to political pressure, shall I say—and I am using that word in the broad sense—you must provide for continuity of service and stability of employment, if I may use that expression. A few moments ago I referred to a case in which there was provision for a given number of years. On the one hand it was contended that the crown had the right to terminate that employment when parliament took the action that it did, in abolishing the tribunal of which the gentleman was a member. The Supreme Court of Canada and the exchequer court both said that was the correct view. The matter is now pending in the courts, so I shall do no more than merely direct attention to it. This parliament has the right to repeal any of these sections at any time if it so desires.

Mr. EULER: But not the House of Commons.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The House of Commons has not the power.

Mr. BENNETT: The House of Commons, no. It is rather difficult to understand any hon. member of this house, and I think the leader of the opposition will agree with me, suggesting that there are not two houses of parliament.

Mr. EULER: I am not suggesting that.

Mr. BENNETT: The suggestion is that one constitutes parliament; it does not. There are three estates of the realm.

Mr. EULER: We all know that.

Mr. BENNETT: The Commons, the Senate and the crown. The hon. gentleman may know it, but he certainly did not say it. What he said was that the House of Commons should determine these things.

Mr. EULER: That is exactly what I meant.

Mr. BENNETT: That it was the only body that should deal with these matters. Now parliament is the body that deals with them, and parliament consists of two chambers, not one, and I do submit when it is suggested that one body should usurp all the functions of parliament, that that is a mistake. Why is it that the tenure of office of judges has been surrounded with the conditions which have been applied thereto?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They administer the law; they do not make it.

Mr. BENNETT: But I say that this is an endeavour to put the administrative trustees in a position where they at least could feel that they could exercise independent judgment without having to respond to political convictions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are doing much more than administering.

Mr. BENNETT: No, they are only administering in the large sense, because administration involves all the functions mentioned in the bill. They are essentially the directing administrators as trustees of this property.

[Mr. Bennett.]

The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) said that the chairman should be a railroad man. The statute provides that the operating official of the road as distinguished from the executive head of the road shall be the operating man. The executive head of the road, the chairman of the board of trustees, the man who discharges with relation to this undertaking what is discharged by the executive committee, for instance, of the great transcontinental railroads of the United States, which have their head offices in Omaha or Kansas City, but their executive committees in New York—they have their executive offices in the city of New York, why? Because the financial concern of a railroad enterprise is of such paramount importance. This statute contemplates that the operating official—the name used is president, which might lead to some conflict of view; I do not know that it is the best word that could be used; some other word might be more apt—is the man who is responsible for operations. But so far as the board of trustees is concerned, its functions must necessarily be largely concerned with what you might call the financial picture as distinguished from the other side of it. When you hear talk about the humanities of the situation, the fact is that the humanities of the situation are dealt with by the operating head of the road and by the men themselves. Everyone who knows the history of railroads is aware of the fact that in their unions the men have established safeguards to protect themselves in the most ample manner, and the relations between them and the road itself are usually dealt with at conferences between the men and the president and the officials of the operating section of the road. You see in the paper, for instance, that the heads of the union organizations have met such and such operating officials, and if they are unable to agree, they have a board. So this is an effort at least to meet an emergency situation in which the Canadian people are called upon to pay something over one million dollars a week.

Mr. MALCOLM: Quite so, an emergency situation.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and in this emergency the board is to be appointed—

Mr. MALCOLM: But the legislation provides for permanent appointments, for the trustees acting continuously.

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly does.

Mr. MALCOLM: The emergency is not going to be everlasting.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but you could not in a bill give any form or shape to a policy if you limited its application to a particular period of time. I think the hon. member is too familiar with business not to say that is so; particularly when dealing with a large public utility, that one of the dangers in endeavouring to limit the time in which a policy is to be operative is that by so doing you defeat your own end. But the main concern of this board of trustees, I would once more urge upon the committee, which the commission had in mind was to endeavour to secure such administration of this property as would relieve the taxpayers of Canada from paying one million dollars a week.

The other side of it, the humanity side of it which has been mentioned, is left largely to be dealt with by the president and the various officials of the road in conferences with the unions, such as have always taken place and at which adequate measures have been taken for safeguarding the interests of all who might be concerned.

But the great concern of this legislation is to endeavour to provide a body of men of such competence as will ensure that these continuing deficits will vanish. That is the story as I appreciate it and as it has been put to me, and as I understand the whole purpose for which the commission was created and the action taken.

Coming back to the amendment, I submit that it is not the proper form of an amendment to be moved in this house because it asks to put a charge on the revenues of the dominion. The leader of the opposition says that you cannot sharply divide where deficits begin and surpluses end, but we all know the difference between operating revenues and operating expenses, and included in the operating expenses are the salaries of the transportation officials, not only transportation in the narrow sense but of all those who constitute the personnel operating the railway. It would be an anomalous situation if we appointed a board of trustees and provided that they shall be paid by parliament although operating a system whose revenues under the law they control. I think it is not only out of order to suggest that an amendment be moved by a private member which charges the Finance minister with introducing in parliament an estimate, which is altogether improper as I understand the constitutional workings of our law, but it goes further and would precipitate into this house a discussion from time to time as to whether or not we shall vote to these men every year a sum of money for salaries. Their salaries will undoubtedly be known to everybody. The government under the statute must take the responsibility for fixing those salaries. If they are too high the house will censure the government; if they are not adequate we shall not be able to get the trustees.

Mr. MALCOLM: When I spoke on the second reading of this bill I said that my principal objection to the legislation was that the Prime Minister had distinctly pointed out what he always points out when he arises, that we are dealing with an emergency, and yet the bill which is to deal with an emergency appoints trustees who cannot be dismissed. If the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways would incorporate in this legislation a fixed period of time, say five years, within which these men were to be given absolute power, I would support that phase of the legislation very freely, but I do point out to the Prime Minister and to the minister that in this legislation we are just continuing the system we had before under the old act, the system which was criticized in the last parliament, the system by which the directors can spend every dollar of operating revenue which they receive and spend it as extravagantly as they see fit. No one is of the opinion that railway tonnage will remain at its present low level. Everyone believes that general business conditions will improve. When they do improve, and the operating revenues of the railways are sufficiently great, not only should interest be paid to the bondholders, as it was in one or two successful years under the leadership of the late Sir Henry Thornton, but there should be provision for substantial payments towards those moneys which the parliament of Canada has advanced. I contend under this legislation we are appointing these men permanently, and giving them exactly the same power as Sir Henry Thornton had. I contend that this is an emergent situation. Probably if it were private business it would be in liquidation, and if it were in liquidation it would be in the same position as some American roads in connection with which receivers have been appointed. Yet, being guaranteed by the people of Canada, these bonds have to be met; the road being the property of the Canadian people it cannot go into liquidation. Therefore the only alternative is to appoint, one, two, three, four or five men, whatever number the government decides upon, to act as trustees. I object strongly to these trustees being appointed for a continuous period of time. They are not like judges; there can be no comparison between them and judges. A judge is appointed to administer the laws which this parliament makes, and all parliament has to do is to change that law. These men are appointed to administer a great national utility, and to administer it with such a free hand that every dollar of revenue they receive may be spent in operating expenses. This parliament or government has no control over them, unless both houses of parliament agree, which is not very likely. I have no doubt the hon. member for Quebec South would withdraw his amendment if these men were appointed for a definite period of years—say five years.

Mr. POWER: I admit I am surprised at the attitude taken by the Prime Minister in connection with observations which have been made from this side of the house. He complains that we have been unduly critical. He urges us to bless this bill, whether it be good or bad. He will recollect, at any rate I know the Minister of Railways will, that when the bill was introduced he besought our co-operation.

Mr. BENNETT: And I did it again to-night.

Mr. POWER: We are endeavouring to give co-operation. On the last occasion when the bill was presented we suggested certain amendments which were discussed and which were accepted to-day. To-day we are pointing out—

Mr. BENNETT: Two of them were promised before the house ever went into committee. It has taken six hours to talk about them.

Mr. POWER: I am now discussing an amendment which provides that the Board of Railway Commissioners shall have some control over the tearing up of branch lines. To the best of my knowledge—and I followed the debate on this bill very closely—there was no such promise made.

Mr. BENNETT: It was stated section 23 applied; that must relieve any doubt.

Mr. POWER: It was argued at great length by the Prime Minister that section 23 did apply. Evidently he is not quite sure of it. We will now find some of the theories laid down by the Prime Minister with respect to the board of trustees of which he is not quite sure, either. A great many of us are not quite sure that we agree with him on the position he takes. He has said the proposal we were making was something new. Since when is it new for the parliament of Canada to have control over moneys expended and derived from the taxpayers? Since when is it new for the House of Commons to know what salaries are being paid for the administration of its property?

Mr. BENNETT: No one has said there is any objection to knowing what they are.

Mr. POWER: Surely the Prime Minister is not serious when he tells us we ought to be satisfied to know what they are. After all our duty as members is to see that the moneys raised from the taxpayers are spent in the interests of those taxpayers, and our further duty is to control the expenditure of that money. If there is anything new in the present situation, then it is a new position which is now being created. These men mentioned in the bill are called trustees; we are told they are not directors. As the right hon. gentleman pointed out, directors are elected annually. If shareholders are not satisfied with the directors they do not reelect them. As a general rule trustees are under the control of a court. In the present instance, however, we have an example of a new species of administrator. We are setting up a railway dictator, or possibly three railway dictators. We are giving them seven years in which to operate, and providing that of their own volition their offices may be self-perpetuating. We are giving them practically perpetual control over property belonging to the people of Canada. The Prime Minister has said we may repeal the act. I know, and we all know, that the very moment any proposal is made to repeal the act or to repeal that section of it, we will be told that the national honour is at stake. Section 7 of the bill states:

> No trustee shall be removed from office, nor suffer any reduction in salary, during the term for which he is appointed, unless for assigned cause and on address of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

I suggest this is a contract which the parliament of Canada enters into with trustees, and by that contract we cannot remove them. Let us suppose that two of the trustees wish to reduce their salaries, but that the third man declines, and states, "There can be no reduction of my salary." We could not do it, and the other trustees could not do it. A change could be made only for assigned cause and on address of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada. I submit the proposal which we are making, namely that the salaries should in some way be within the control of the House of Commons of Canada, is reasonable and logical, and is not new. There is nothing revolutionary about it, and the suggestion represents one of the fundamental rights of parliament.

The Prime Minister states he wishes to place these men above all suspicion of political interference. In that connection I wish to repeat what I said on another occasion, namely that the Duff commission did not find that under the former regime, or the present one, officials were interfered with either by ministers or by members of parliament in connection with the detailed operations of the road. I assume that if the new trustees to be appointed are men of as high calibre as those who were made directors, those trustees will not be interfered with, either. But the serious political interference comes in when branch lines are unloaded, and that interference can be carried on when the trustees are appointed and when—

Mr. BENNETT: There are not any branch lines left; they have all been taken up.

Mr. POWER: When the matter was under discussion before I pointed out that there was the Témiscouata railroad, and the Pacific Great Eastern, which is worth about $50,000,000.

Mr. MANION: Without the sanction and guarantee of parliament they could not take over a railway.

Mr. POWER: That is the point I am trying to make. Parliament could foist on these trustees any branch line railway now independently existing in Canada.

Mr. MANION: Not if the trustees did not wish to take it.

Mr. POWER: There is nothing to prevent the introduction of a bill providing for the payment for the Pacific Great Eastern or the Témiscouata railway of so many million dollars, and saying that this railway shall belong to the Canadian National system.

Mr. HACKETT: Do you believe in parliamentary government?

Mr. POWER: I do, but the argument of the minister was that we are appointing these men for seven years, making them dictators so that they will get away from political interference. What I am endeavouring to make clear is that the political interference which may have bedevilled this road in the minds of some hon. gentlemen opposite and of a section of the public is political interference which put branch lines over on the Canadian National; not that which might interefere with detailed operation, such as the appointment of a watchman. These trustees are not getting us away from political interference in the harmful sense; that is the point I am trying to make. If they are not going to do any good to the road other than keep some member of parliament from a back concession from having one of his friends appointed brakeman or having someone appointed to sweep out the Union station here, if that is all we are going to appoint dictators for, I submit that one year is enough, or perhaps six months. That is the position I take.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the committee are aware that this provision, namely that the trustees shall not be removed except by an address by both houses of parliament, is something which was not in any way recommended by the Duff commission. It is a provision put in by the present ministry, or at their instigation. The Duff commission does not make any suggestion of the kind. The self-perpetuating feature of the trusteeship comes from the Drayton-Acworth commission report, and in that connection the remarks of one of those commissioners are very significant. Mr. Smith, one of the commissioners, used these words as part of his report to parliament—

Mr. MANION: He was a minority.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but it is interesting to see what he said:

> I am unable to join my colleagues in their recommendations. They propose that practically all of the railways in Canada, except the Canadian Pacific and the American lines, shall be turned over to a corporation to be managed by a board of trustees appointed by government. They insist that this board is to be permanent and self-perpetuating. I do not know by what means one parliament can bind its successors to a given policy, especially in so simple a matter as changing the organization of a government board. My friends seek to avoid government ownership and operation, in fact condemn it as inadvisable, but propose a plan which contains so many elements of danger in the direction which is sought to be avoided that I am unable to join them.

I direct the attention of the committee to what is there said about the desire to avoid government ownership and operation. Mr. Smith's friends on the commission, the majority, according to the other commissioner, wished to avoid government ownership and operation, and to make it impossible, and according to Mr. Smith one of the means taken to make it impossible was to make the trustee board self-perpetuating. I submit that as long as we have government control or purport to have it and are going to endeavour to carry it out, we should not enact legislation which is definitely designed to make government control impossible.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, April 19, 1933

The house met at 3 o'clock.

RAILWAY ESTIMATES, 1933-34

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1934, was presented by Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the select standing committee on railways and shipping.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Do these estimates refer exclusively to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. RHODES: To the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National Steamships.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

INCOME TAX

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. How many persons, companies, corporations or others paid income tax in 1932 on an income of (a) $10,000 to $20,000; (b) $20,000 to $50,000; (c) $50,000 to $75,000; (d) $75,000 to $125,000; (e) $125,000 to $175,000; (f) $175,000 to $225,000; (g) $225,000 to $250,000?

2. What was the total amount of revenue collected by the government in 1932 under the heading of income tax?

Mr. RYCKMAN:

1.	Individuals	Corporations
(a)	8,306	849
(b)	2,867	879
(c)
(d)
(e)	614	971
(f)
(g)

It is not deemed in the public interest to answer (d), (e), (f), (g) separately.

2. $61,254,399.80.

ST. OMER, QUE., PROTECTION WORK

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Was any protection work constructed by the Department of Public Works on the property of Omer Arseneau, at Saint-Omer, county of Bonaventure, and at what cost?

2. Was this work inspected by the engineer of the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

CLOSING OF POST OFFICES

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many post offices have been closed in each province since November 1, 1932?

2. How many new post offices have been opened in each province since the same date?

3. How many of these new post offices have a net revenue, after deducting the postmaster's salary and mail carriage charges from the gross revenue?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Nova Scotia	13
Prince Edward Island	0
New Brunswick	6
Quebec	15
Ontario	9
Manitoba	3
Saskatchewan	8
Alberta	5
British Columbia	2
Yukon	0
North West Territories	0
2. Nova Scotia	0
Prince Edward Island	0
New Brunswick	1
Quebec	15
Ontario	3
Manitoba	0
Saskatchewan	9
Alberta	12
British Columbia	2
Yukon	0
North West Territories	1

3. Offices not in operation long enough to enable the department to say whether there will be a net revenue or not.

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Since November 1, 1932, how many postmasters lost their position in each province by reason of the removal of post office ordered by the Postmaster General?

2. How many of these postmasters were instructed to change the location of the post office before such change was made?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Ontario	Nil
Quebec	5
Nova Scotia	2
New Brunswick	2
Prince Edward Island	Nil
Manitoba	Nil
Saskatchewan	Nil
Alberta	Nil
British Columbia	Nil

2. None.

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS—LEGAL SERVICES

Mr. BROWN:

What was the amount of the fees paid for legal services by the Board of Grain Commissioners during each of the five crop years immediately preceding July 31, 1932?

Mr. STEVENS:

1927-28	$ 135 00
1928-29	2,093 12
1929-30	5,983 05
1930-31	937 25
1931-32	5,935 20

FRANK P. JONES—INCOME TAX

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. Has Frank P. Jones paid income tax on profits made by him through the Beauharnois enterprise to the amount of between $750,000 and $800,000 as shown at page 382 of the evidence taken before the committee of 1931?

2. If not, has the Dominion government made a demand on Jones for payment?

3. Is it true that said Jones refused to pay, and the government intimated that legal action would be commenced?

4. If such legal action has not been taken, why not?

Mr. RYCKMAN: The subject matter of this question is not proper when considered in the light of the practice of parliament. It has never been the practice to give out information of the character asked for in this question and I would refer the hon. member to section 81 of the Income War Tax Act.

Question dropped.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SASKATCHEWAN RELIEF COMMISSION

Mr. POWER:

1. Were any moneys paid by the Dominion government to the Saskatchewan relief Commission or to the government of the province of Saskatchewan during the years 1930, 1931, and 1932, for the purposes of paying freight charges on goods destined to the relief area?

2. If so, what was the amount of such payments in each year?

3. Are these payments to be considered as advances or as direct contributions by the Dominion government?

COATICOOK, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many applicants passed their examinations for the postmastership at Coaticook, province of Quebec, on or about January 25 last?

2. What are their names, addresses, and the number of marks secured by each applicant?

3. Which of these applicants performed military service?

4. Who was appointed postmaster?

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many postmasters have been dismissed since the month of August, 1930?

2. How many postmasters have been appointed (a) temporarily; (b) permanently since the month of August, 1930?

INVESTIGATIONS FOR POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many investigations for political partisanship were ordered by each department in each province since November 1, 1932?

2. What was the cost of these investigations in each province?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

PENSIONS PAID OUT OF CONSOLIDATED FUNDS

Mr. LUCAS:

For a return showing a list of the names of all persons receiving a pension payable out of the consolidated funds voted annually by the parliament of Canada; also showing (a) the date when the pension was granted; (b) the date from which the pension became effective; (c) the nature of the services for which the pension was granted; (d) the annual amount payable in each case; (e) if a disability pension, the percentage of disability. Also a statement showing the total amount payable annually on the different classes of pensions paid by the government of Canada, and the number of persons in each category receiving a pension.

Mr. CAHAN: There is an order which has been some weeks in the course of preparation which will give practically all the information asked for in this motion. I have no objection to this motion passing, but I think the one return will cover both orders.

Motion agreed to.

ADVANCES TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) if he is in a position to give the house the correspondence which he has had recently with the western provinces concerning financial arrangements. The correspondence with the province of Manitoba has been tabled in the legislature and made public, but this house has not as yet received any correspondence. If it is not possible to give this correspondence as a whole, perhaps it could be presented in so far as it is available.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence published with respect to the province of Manitoba covers the correspondence with the three western provinces except that as far as I am aware no reply has been received from one of the provinces. There is no reason why this correspondence should not be brought down in part.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is identical for all the provinces?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, except as to the replies.

BRITISH EMBARGO AGAINST RUSSIA

PROCLAMATION PROHIBITING IMPORTATION INTO UNITED KINGDOM OF SPECIFIED COMMODITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it might be of interest to the house to know that a proclamation has been issued by the government of the United Kingdom prohibiting the importation into the United Kingdom on and after April 26 of the following soviet goods:

Butter.
Wheat in grain.
Barley.
Oats.
Maize.
Poultry and game.
Raw cotton.
Petroleum.
Timber.
Plywood and builders' woodwork.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). I have received a telegram from the reeve of the township of Macaulay in Muskoka who states that they have spent all the money that was possible to be raised by taxes or by borrowings, either privately or from the banks, and that they have had to discontinue the granting of relief. They have appealed to the authorities at Toronto for assistance but this has been denied. I should like to ask the minister just what we can do with conditions such as these.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the provincial authorities have not brought this matter to the attention of the department. I assume that they are in full possession of the intimate facts in connection with the township's finances. I might draw the matter to the attention of the province, but I do not think I should follow that course. The province is in a position to judge whether or not this township should receive assistance, and my view at the moment is that I should be obliged to rely upon their judgment in the matter.

Mr. McGIBBON: I wish to supplement my question. I know for a fact that the township is bankrupt; I know that the banks have refused to loan them money; I know that they have tried to borrow money privately and cannot do so. What I would ask is this: Is this government prepared to give assistance? May I have an answer?

Mr. GORDON: I cannot add anything to the answer I have already given.

COAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Has the Minister of Labour received the report of the investigation recently conducted under the Combines Investigation Act into coal prices? If so does he intend to present the report to parliament during the current session?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): The coal report has not yet been concluded by the registrar. I have inquired on a number of occasions when it will be ready and asked that the work be speeded up if it is at all possible to do so. I believe that the registrar is putting forth every effort to have the report completed, and I believe it will be ready in a very short time. When it is ready and is submitted to me the procedure contemplated by the statute itself with respect to the report will be followed.

RADIO BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Marine and he said he would give an answer to-day.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): The answer is no.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): What was the question?

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): May I revert to motions for the purpose of moving:

That the name of Mr. Munn be substituted for that of Mr. Hanbury on the select committee on railways and shipping.

I understand that Mr. Hanbury has gone home and Mr. Munn was on the committee last year. The motion is seconded by Mr. Stevens.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): The committee is now considering section 5, subsection 1, salaries and pensions, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Power.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): Before the question is put I should like to show the disadvantage of the proposal put forward in the amendment. The proposal is, as I understand it, that the salaries of the trustees be paid directly by parliament rather than by the railway. In the first place this would make a very radical change in the whole system of management and operation of the Canadian National Railways, and I do not think my hon. friend has given it the serious consideration which he devotes to other subjects; had he done so, he would probably not have moved the amendment. First of all, while this would not be a reflection in any way upon the trustees, it would nevertheless convert them from trustees of the Canadian National railways into virtual civil servants. It would bring them distinctly under the control of the parliament of Canada. They would be placed in this position, that if the government of the day, whatever government might be in power, so chose, it could use the fact that it was going to have to vote the salaries of these trustees for the purpose of getting rid of them forthwith. Moreover, it would place in the hands of any individual member of the house a club which he could use over the trustees if he were so inclined. In other words, if some hon. member wanted to have a station built at—

An hon. MEMBER: Riviere du Loup.

Mr. MANION: Someone suggests, a station at Riviere du Loup. Well, if an hon. member wanted a station there or anywhere else he might, if he were persistent enough, go to one of the trustees and give him to understand that if he did not agree to the building of this station, or it might be the building of a branch line, or the performance of some other act on the part of the national railways, it was his intention to oppose most strenuously, and to get his friends to oppose in the house, the payment of salary. I think it would be a most retrograde step so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned—the most retrograde step ever taken by any government in Canada. It would be throwing the national railways into the political arena to an extent such as they never have been under any government at any time in the history of our railways.

Mr. POWER: The minister seems to find some objection to placing the trustees under the control of parliament, but that is where they should be, and that is where we differ from the hon. gentleman. There is a very radical difference of opinion between us. As to the argument that this might constitute a club which might be held over the heads of the trustees, all I have to say is this, that if they are the men we expect they will be they will not be afraid of any such club. The same argument might apply to any deputy minister. What is to prevent any member of parliament from saying to a deputy minister that he will oppose a vote for his salary unless the deputy builds him a wharf or arranges to provide a post office? The situation is exactly the same, but so far as I know, no such attempt has ever been made by any member of parliament. I only wish to repeat the argument advanced last night, namely, that these men constitute a new body, a new species of control. They are not directors, we have been told; they cannot like ordinary directors be removed by the shareholders at the end of the year. They are not trustees in the sense of an ordinary trustee in bankruptcy, because they are not under the control of any court. They are not obliged to consult anyone. We simply hand over to three men to whom we pay a salary the whole management and control of the greatest asset which the Canadian people have.

Mr. MANION: I do not agree that they are receivers in bankruptcy or anything of the kind. At any rate, it seems to me that if you attempted to place them on that basis you would find it very difficult to obtain good men to undertake the duties. I do not think the position of trustee is akin to that of a deputy minister, because it has never been the custom of this or of any other government, or of the parliament of Canada, to pay these salaries and put the personnel directly under the control of parliament. I submit, as I did last night, that by the submission of the railway budget to the Minister of Finance and the necessity of voting the financial needs of the railway in this house, the railway will quite adequately be under the control of parliament. I do not wish to delay the motion at all, but certainly I do not think it would be wise for parliament to take any such step as that contemplated by the amendment.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I had no intention of intervening in this debate, and I shall not do so now at any length. I should like first of all to call the attention of the committee to the point raised by the Minister of Finance, that this would constitute in a measure direct political interference with the management and operation of the road. I would also call the committee's attention to a paragraph in the report of the select standing committee on railways and canals last year, which was unanimously passed by the committee and unanimously supported in this house, to the effect that there should be no political interference in any way with the management of this road. If I mistake not, my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) and my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) strongly supported that principle, and I do not think that to-day we should take this retrograde step. But my more immediate purpose in rising at this time is to raise a point of order as to the validity of the amendment. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is out of order because it interferes with the destination of supply and could not be raised at this time in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I submit that the point of order raised by the hon. member for York-Sunbury is sound, and I therefore rule the amendment of the hon. member for Quebec South out of order as contrary to standing order 60. His amendment proposes that the salaries of the trustees shall be paid out of moneys voted by parliament. A private member has no right to make a motion or move an amendment indicating the destination of moneys voted by parliament.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that we are discussing section 5.

Mr. POWER: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, whilst I do not agree with your ruling and hope that it will not constitute a precedent, I shall not press my amendment.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. POULIOT: On section 5 may I suggest to the government some means of expediting the discussion of this bill in committee?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Is the hon. member speaking to the amendment?

Mr. POULIOT: I am speaking to the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): May I first ask if the hon. member for Quebec South is going to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. POWER: I am not going to withdraw my amendment. I regret that I cannot agree with your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but I shall not press the matter further.

Mr. POULIOT: I want to make a suggestion not only to the minister but to the government as a whole, and especially to the Prime Minister, in order that the discussion of this bill in committee may take up the least possible time. What is the history of this legislation? Section 5 of the bill is based on the report of the Duff commission, a resume of which I have here, and in article 203 on page 63 I read:

> Three trustees should be appointed by the governor in council, in whom should be vested all the powers of the present board of directors of the Canadian National Railways, both in respect of the parent and all subsidiary corporations of the system; and any and every power and authority necessary to enable them to administer the property and operate the system and every part thereof.
>
> Senators and members of the House of Commons and persons holding or having within five years held office or place of profit under the crown in the right of the dominion or one of the provinces of Canada, should be disqualified for appointment.

There have been three drafts of the bill which we are now studying. The first draft was introduced and read a first time in the Senate on October 27, 1932, and section 4 of that draft reads as follows:

> (1) No person who is a senator or member of the House of Commons, and no person holding or having within five years held any office or position to which any salary is attached payable directly or indirectly by His Majesty, in the right of the Dominion of Canada, or of any of the provinces thereof, shall be eligible for appointment as trustee.
>
> (2) Vacancies among the trustees arising from any reason shall be filled from time to time by the governor in council from a list of eight persons then named by the remaining trustees or trustee. All trustees shall be eligible for reappointment if so listed.

This section in the first draft bill which was read a first time in the Senate on October 27 is in accordance with section 203 of the report of the commissioners.

The bill was redrafted by order of the Senate committee on railways, telegraphs and harbours, and in that redraft, section 5 corresponds to section 203 of the report of the commissioners, including that eminent man, as he was described by the Prime Minister yesterday, Sir Joseph Flavelle. Section 5 in this redrafted bill reads as follows:

No person shall be eligible for appointment who at the time of any proposed appointment of a trustee or trustees under this act is, or within five years immediately then preceding has been,—

(a) a member of the Senate of Canada;

(b) a member of the House of Commons of Canada;

(c) a member of the council of any province of Canada;

(d) a candidate nominated under any act of the dominion or of any province of Canada for election as a member of the House of Commons of Canada or of the legislative assembly of any province of Canada; or

(e) the holder of any office, place or appointment to which is, or while it was held by him was, attached any salary payable directly by His Majesty in his right of the Dominion of Canada.

That section in the second draft of the bill is in conformity with the previous quotations which I have given.

Now I come to section 5 in the bill before us, which reads:

The trustees shall be paid by the National company such salaries as may from time to time be fixed by the governor in council, and if any trustee is in receipt of a pension from any railway company he shall not be entitled to receive or to be paid such pension during his term of office.

(2) Each trustee shall be paid but one salary, and saving and excepting that and his right to prepayment or repayment of his proper expenditures made while engaged in and upon the affairs of National Railways, he shall not be entitled upon any ground to any recompense or emolument.

The third draft bill which was passed by the Senate on February 23 last is entirely different from the other draft. I remember that my hon. friend from York-Sunbury protested in the house against the alteration of the first two drafts, and he protested also against the report of the commissioners because the first and second drafts were in accordance with their report. My first observation with regard to this is that the Senate has been putting aside the suggestions made by the commissioners, and suggestions which were approved by the Senate in the first and second instance. The Senate has modified the views expressed by the commissioners, and has not accepted them. If the Senate had not accepted these proposals in regard to the qualifications of the trustees, why does the government stand so stubbornly behind the appointment of only three trustees? In the Bible there is a book entitled Numbers. It would seem that the government attaches very great importance to the number three. In my view there should be more than three trustees.

Since the government puts aside the views expressed by the commissioners with regard to the appointment of the trustees, why is it that we should consider their view so sacred when it applies to other matters? No one is bound to accept those views; we have to weigh the pros and cons, and decide accordingly. May I make another practical suggestion to the government? Until now the Minister of Railways has been doing very well; I congratulate him. He has no legal training, but he has sound judgment. That is the difference between him and his leader. In his dealings with the committee he has shown good judgment. I pay him no small compliment, because I place him above a superman. It is a great compliment, and he deserves it.

It is essential that the house should know each step which has been taken since the report was made by the commissioners. That report is the basis for the legislation we are now studying. As undoubtedly the minister, although not a lawyer, has much better legal sense than has the Prime Minister, why does he not explain the legislation from the time the commissioners made their report? Why does he not explain every amendment made by the Senate both in committee and in the Senate chamber? It seems to me by doing so he would prevent much useless talk, and the discussion would be centred on the vital parts of the legislation. I have no officers at my disposal, and any information I have obtained I had to get myself, because I like to study conscientiously every piece of legislation brought before the house. What I say now I say not for the benefit of the Minister of Railways but mostly for the benefit of the right hon. leader of the government. If he were the junior clerk in my country law office I would say to him, "Mark you, my boy, you should listen to this wise advice; it is never too late for you to listen to something. You are like the Bourbons, you have learned nothing and forgotten nothing. It is time for you to forget what you do not know, and to learn what you should know." That is what I would most humbly and respectfully say to the gentleman who honours us by his absence. I hope some good friend will report to him what I have said about him. But I do not wish to be discourteous to the Minister of Railways, because he is a gentleman. He has polite manners, and deserves to be treated fairly and squarely. I offer these suggestions to the house, and when they are accepted the minister will find that the legislation will pass much more quickly.

Section agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 2— One salary only to each trustee.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That has been carried.

On section 6, subsection 1—Vacancies; appointment from panel.

Mr. POWER: I should like to move an amendment to this subsection. At present it reads as follows:

6. The governor in council may from time to time appoint or reappoint a trustee to fill any vacancy among the trustees from any cause occurring. The appointee shall be selected from a panel of eight names to be provided by a nominating board composed of the president of the Exchequer Court of Canada, the chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada and the existing or remaining trustees. Such board shall be convened by the chairman of the trustees. In the case of an imminent vacancy the board may convene and act in anticipation thereof. If no such panel is so provided within ten days after the occurrence of a vacancy the governor in council may appoint as he may be advised.

I propose to move:

That all the words after the word "occurring" in the third line be stricken out.

The point I wish to make is—

Mr. GEARY: What is all this about? What is the amendment? Read it.

Mr. POWER: I have just read it. It would seem to me that the amendment has something to do with Bill A of the Senate. I do not know just how far the hon. member has proceeded in his study of the bill, but I may tell him that is the bill we are now discussing. Further, we have been doing it for some few days.

Mr. GEARY: Would you mind telling us what you are discussing? Nobody knows what you are talking about.

Mr. POWER: Well, that is too bad.

Mr. GEARY: I mean that the hon. member is not speaking distinctly. He is speaking down into his book, and hon. members on this side of the house cannot hear him.

Mr. POULIOT: Could you hear if he were looking at the ceiling?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POWER: That is probably the first time since I came into this house I have been told I did not make enough row. In order to please the hon. member from Toronto I will raise my voice a little. The amendment I am proposing is that all the words after the word "occurring" in the third line of subsection 1 of section 6 be stricken out. I propose that amendment because I believe the selection of persons to fill vacancies should be made in the same manner as the selection of the original trustees. There is no reason why in the selection of trustees two systems should operate. The present provision in that regard will serve only to perpetuate the members of the board originally selected, if they desire to be perpetuated. It will have the effect of forming a sort of small family compact controlling the Canadian National Railways. The discussion on this amendment would be along the line of that which has taken place since the beginning of the debate. If it is found impossible to place the trustees under the control of parliament, at least I believe they should be under the control of a government responsible to parliament and to the people. Therefore, as soon as I have drafted the resolution I shall move that that part of the section dealing with the composition or creation of a panel shall be stricken from this subsection. The amendment about which I have been speaking I have now prepared, and shall hand to the clerk.

Mr. MANION: I have been taking the course generally in regard to any amendments moved that we would let them stand and consider them later. So I would ask the committee, without further discussion of subsection 1 of section 6, to let it stand and we will go on with subsection 2.

Subsection stands.

On section 6, subsection 2—Chairman's tenure of office: tenure of other trustees.

Mr. HEENAN: I wonder if the minister would consider making the clause read "not more than seven years"?

Mr. MANION: I am not absolutely fixed in regard to the length of tenure. I think a period other than seven years, either in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, or possibly making it five years instead of seven, is worthy of consideration, but I am not saying at the moment that I would adopt the suggestion. There is this to be remembered, that if it were changed it would disarrange the stagger system that has been proposed in regard to the appointment of the other trustees. The intention was to appoint one for seven years, one for six and one for five, so that they would not all go out at the same time. And in that connection there may be other clauses of the bill that it would be well to have stand. I suggest that subsections 2 and 4 stand with subsection 1, for further consideration.

Subsection stands.

On section 6, subsection 3—Casual vacancies.

Mr. HEAPS: Would not subsection 3 be in the same position?

Mr. MANION: No, I think not. I think subsection 3 is all right.

Subsection agreed to.

Section 6, subsection 4—Vacancies by efflux of time.

Subsection stands.

Subsections 5 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On section 7—Removal from office or reduction of salary.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I have an amendment to move. To my mind section 7 is the most vital section in the whole legislation, and there are two possible amendments that could be moved; either delete the section entirely, which would leave the removal from office of the trustees under the jurisdiction of the governor in council; or strike out the words "Senate and" which would leave the control with the House of Commons as distinct from both houses.

This section comprises in itself the features to which I mainly object in this legislation. That is it means complete abrogation and abdication of government control over these trustees. There is no control whatever over their removal or dismissal. The entire national railways of Canada are to be put in the control of three trustees and this House of Commons has not the slightest power over their removal. As pointed out last night by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) in regard to salary, they shall not suffer any reduction in salary unless for assigned cause and on address of the Senate and the House of Commons. I interpret that to mean that if any one of the trustees objects to any reduction of salary that would bind all the trustees, and it could not be done except on address of both houses. I am aware that there is a similar provision in regard to judges and in regard to the auditor general, also I think in regard to the chief electoral officer, but I submit that the argument submitted by the Prime Minister in regard to judges cannot apply to these trustees. If we pass this section we are certainly forfeiting in perpetuity the control by this house of these trustees. Under other sections of the act they are a self-perpetuating body and under this section this House of Commons forfeits all control and ownership of our national railway. I do not think I can serve any useful purpose by elaborating the stand we have taken on this side of the house; it was emphasized on the second reading. But to my mind this section is the most objectionable of the whole legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): It is moved by Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver) to amend section 7 by deleting the section entirely. I submit that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. EULER: Why?

Mr. POWER: I move to substitute number 8 for number 7 and to leave out all the words after the figure 7.

Mr. MANION: To avoid unnecessary complication and delay may I suggest that I shall be glad to have section 7 also stand. But before we do so may I just say a word? I have been informed, in fact my hon. friends on the other side have said on a number of occasions, that section 7 was not fair, in that if another government came into power and the other house should remain of the same complexion as it now is, it might refuse to acquiesce in a suggestion of the House of Commons in regard to the removal of trustees. I submit that the real answer to that is that if the trustees were good men and from some political motive it was proposed to remove them, then the other chamber would be correct in refusing to assent. If on the other hand the trustees were not worthy men, not giving good service, I believe the other chamber would gladly concur in the motion of any House of Commons to remove them. That seems to me to be the complete answer. However I am glad to let section 7 stand with the others and we will deal with it later, with the understanding that we will discuss the whole section with a view to either removing it or proving to the committee that it is advisable to leave it as it is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is there any reason for assuming that a government composed of other hon. members of parliament would not be just as honourable in their attitude towards efficient and effective trustees as any group of hon. gentlemen in another house? It is wholly unnecessary to have a section which as it stands is a reflection upon the honourable actions of those who may be entrusted with the government of the country. After all a government is elected by the people to carry out the will of the people. I do not think any member of the House of Commons should venture to suggest that those who have been returned by the people to form an administration should be restricted in making their will effective by a group of members who are no longer directly responsible to the people.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Let us abolish the Senate immediately then.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would not object to joining with my hon. friend in an effort—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not advocating that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit that any government entrusted with office should, until something to the contrary is proven, be regarded by all members of the house, irrespective of which side they are on, as being a body of hon. gentlemen who will be governed by a full sense of their responsibility.

With regard to the possible removal of trustees who may prove themselves to be efficient may I point out that I do not think it follows that because appointments have been made by one political party, that when the other party comes into power they will necessarily remove those appointees. As the Prime Minister said yesterday, in our country it is difficult enough to find a sufficiently large number of men ready to take positions of great responsibility under the government. From their own financial point of view, many individuals can do much better in private industry than by an appointment under the crown, and it is difficult enough to obtain such persons under any circumstances. If men can be obtained as the result of conference between the parties in this house, or otherwise, who will fulfil their duties efficiently, I think any administration would be only too glad to retain their services so long as they acted impartially and fairly.

I should like to cite one case. The International Joint Commission, which deals with questions arising between this country and the United States, is a body to which representatives are appointed by Canada as well as by the United States. When the Liberal government came into office in 1921 we found three Conservative members on that commission, Mr. Magrath who used to sit in this house as a Conservative member of parliament, Sir William Hearst, who had been Conservative premier in Ontario, and Mr. Powell from New Brunswick. For several years no change was made. Towards the end of our administration, Mr. Powell tendered his resignation, largely because of his age, but up to that time no change had been made. We appointed as Mr. Powell's successor a former Liberal whip in this house, Mr. Kyte. When the present administration came into office they retained Mr. Kyte on the commission. I maintain that this is a good example of the way successive administrations may be expected to retain in these positions men who fulfil their obligations efficiently, faithfully and impartially.

So far as any possible future Liberal administration may be concerned, in connection with these trustees I should say that if gentlemen were found—and particularly if they were appointed as the result of conferences between both sides of the house—who were impartial and efficient there would not be the slightest desire to make any change. On the other hand if persons were appointed who were not persons whom we would expect to receive such appointments; if it was clear that they were appointed primarily for political reasons or if they turned out to be inefficient and partial and did not satisfactorily carry on business for which after all the government must accept responsibility, certainly we would wish to be free to make a change.

Mr. MANION: And under those circumstances I would gladly join with my right hon. friend. Let me make myself clear. I was not suggesting that my right hon. friend or his party, if they came back into power would remove these trustees because of politics; I simply said that such action might be taken by any government. However, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that this section stand, as the others have stood.

Mr. POULIOT: Before this section stands I should like to make one brief observation. The report of the commissioners contains nothing with regard to the removal from office of the trustees. The first draft bill, dated October 27 of last year, contained this section:

> Any trustee may be removed from office at any time by the governor in council on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

In the second draft bill we find this section:

> No trustee shall be removed from office nor suffer any reduction in salary during the time for which he is appointed unless for assigned cause and on address of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

We have the same provision in section 7 of the present bill, the third draft, which was passed by the Senate on February 23. The government say the bill is based on the report of the commission, but that report did not mention the removal of the trustees. This was an invention of the government after that report was received, and I am glad the Minister of Railways, with his well known amiability, has agreed to let the section stand.

Section stands.

On section 8—Provincial companies re-incorporated.

Mr. MANION: I have an amendment to this section which I shall ask one of my colleagues to move in a moment. The amendment really is designed to legalize this section, if I may use that term. Section 8 as contained in the bill is not considered to be in the correct legal phraseology, and the amendment is as follows:

That section 8 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(1) The works of every incorporated company in Canada which is comprised in National Railways but is not incorporated by or under the law of the Dominion of Canada and which have not heretofore been declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

(2) By force of this act, and without more, the now shareholders of every company in Canada comprised in National Railways, the works of which have been or are hereby declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, are hereby incorporated and such incorporated company shall have the same name, directors and undertaking as the first mentioned company and may and shall act in succession thereto and continuity thereof as respects all its affairs by, under and subject to the provisions of this act.

The purpose of the amendment is this: It was suggested, for example, that we could not re-incorporate provincial companies, and that therefore the section as contained in the bill was not in proper form. There is no change whatever in the intention of the section.

Mr. POWER: Would the minister permit this amendment to stand in order that we may study it also?

Mr. MANION: I will let it stand, of course, if my hon. friend really wishes it, but I submit that there is no change at all except in the wording. The intention is the same, and we might save time if we permit it to pass. Nothing in the amendment makes any change in the intention.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 9—when proclaimed direction and control to be vested in trustees.

Subsections 1 to 5 inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9, subsection 6—Approval of His Majesty or of shareholders not required.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If this subsection is read apart from the other provisions of the section perhaps it would be the worst of all the sections in the act, notwithstanding the fact that the last one we discussed was considered very bad. I must say that the words of the Prime Minister the other day when he interpreted the act, conveyed a different meaning from that which we on this side of the house had gathered as to the original intention of the government in the matter. As the section stands it would mean that any order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees would not require the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. MANION: As a shareholder.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Unless it were interpreted very clearly it might be taken to mean that this section by itself had reference to any act of the trustees, but apparently it refers only to the acts referred to in the previous subsections. My difficulty is now with the phrasing of this subsection. If it were preceded by some words such as "As respects the provisions of this section," and then went on to say "no order, regulation, by-law, act, decision or proceeding of the trustees shall require the approval of His Majesty or that of any other shareholder of any company to which this section applies," I think that would meet the difficulty I have in mind. Without those words or the transposition of the words "to which the section applies" which appear at the end of the section, and their insertion after the word "trustees," the section is ambiguous.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The right hon. gentleman has suggested that the rule of ejusdem generis prevails, but I may quote the definition of that rule as given by Byrne's law dictionary, as follows:

It is a rule of legal construction that general words following an enumeration of particulars are to have their generality limited by reference to the preceding particular enumeration, and to be construed as including only all other articles of the like nature and quality.

In this case the name of His Majesty is not limited by any preceding particular but by a subsequent particular, so I do not believe the rule of ejusdem generis applies. This point was raised during the discussion of subsection 6. I think we must reverse the terminology of line 3 of the subsection in order to make this rule apply.

Mr. MANION: How would it be if we simply had the words "approval of His Majesty as a shareholder or that of any other shareholder"? Would that rectify the objection?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It would as far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend will move that amendment I would have no objection.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I do not think the rule of ejusdem generis applies to this section as it stands at the present time.

Mr. GEARY: I agree with the Prime Minister; I think the rule certainly does apply in this case.

Mr. MANION: I do not know that it matters very much as long as we make the sentence clear. If someone will move that the wording be changed to "His Majesty as a shareholder or that of any other shareholder" or words of a similar meaning, I would have no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If that change is made, and I think it should be made, the marginal note would have to be changed. The marginal note is supposed to represent what is contained in the subsection.

Mr. MANION: It could be changed to read "approval of shareholders."

Mr. POWER: The words "approval of His Majesty" should be struck out altogether.

Mr. MANION: That would not be quite correct because with regard to some railways His Majesty is a shareholder. I think we all agree upon the necessity for some change, so perhaps we had better let the section stand and have it dealt with properly.

Section stands.

On section 10, subsection 1—Chief operating officer to be president.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection 2—Chief operating officer.

Mr. POWER: It seems to me that there should be some section in the bill to define the powers and authority of the president of the road. The bill only provides that a president is to be appointed and that he shall be responsible to the trustees and to them alone. Surely his powers should be further defined. As I understand it, the duty of the trustees will be to define the policy to be carried out in the operation of the road. I would not like to decrease the prestige of the operating officer by calling him the general manager, but we seem to be more or less upon the horns of a dilemma in this case. If we call him the general manager he might not have the necessary prestige to deal with the president of another road but, on the other hand, under the bill as it now stands he is not given any particular authority. It seems to me that the railroad expert should be given at least a free hand in the actual railway operations, leaving the deciding of general and financial policies to the trustees.

Mr. MANION: If the hon. member will look at the subsection which we have just passed he will see that the duties of the president are outlined to a certain extent. That subsection states that his authorities and duties shall be from time to time defined by by-law or resolution of the trustees. My deputy who has been a practical railway man for many years tells me that that is the usual custom followed by the railroads, that the duties of the officers are defined by by-law rather than by the act itself.

Subsection agreed to.

Section agreed to.

On section 11, subsection 1—Meetings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Upon a previous occasion when this bill was before the house I pointed out the objections to this section which appealed very strongly to me. The section states that the trustees may decide or act at meetings only by unanimous vote or by a majority which includes the chairman. It seems to me that that is putting in the hands of the chairman practically the full power of the whole board of trustees. Where you have three trustees and nothing can be done except with the approval of one of them, you are practically rendering useless the other two. They may devote their whole energies to the business under consideration but if their decision does not meet with the approval of the chairman they are absolutely helpless. I should like to refer to this section in the light of an amendment which I moved to subsection 2 of section 4 to the effect that the three trustees should be full time men. These three trustees are to replace seventeen directors and I submit that they should be full time men. I do not think it is necessary to take up any more time of the committee in pointing out the objections to having the trustees gagged and made dummies more or less on account of not being able to originate any ideas. This section seriously curtails their efficiency, and

I do not think such curtailment is in the interests of the railway or of the people who own the railway. Therefore, I beg to move:

That subsection 2 of section 11 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"The trustees may decide or act at meetings only by majority vote. They or a majority may without meeting decide or act by way of minute or concurrence written and signed by them or by a majority of them. When by reason of any vacancy among them there are only two trustees, their decision, vote, minute or concurrence shall not be effective unless such decision shall be unanimous.

Since drafting this amendment I have noticed another objection which might be made to this section. Subsection 1 reads:

Meetings of the trustees may be held at such times and places as their chairman may from time to time determine.

Supposing the chairman and the other two trustees took opposite views with regard to a certain question. The other two trustees might desire to hold a meeting to consider this matter but under this subsection as it now stands the chairman would be the only one who could call a meeting or decide the time and the place at which such a meeting should take place. I think that is objectionable. On the request of any of the trustees a meeting should be called. If the amendment I have moved meets with the approval of the minister, I do not think there will be any difficulty about making that part of the section conform.

Mr. MANION: I shall probably propose that subsection 2 of section 11 stand, but before doing so I wish to pass an opinion or two on it, and I should be glad to have the opinions—as briefly as possible of course—of my hon. friends on both sides. It is a very debatable point. The hon. member was good enough yesterday to send me a copy of the proposed amendment and my officers and I gave it considerable thought this morning. I think it is well worthy of consideration, especially if it should be decided ultimately that the three trustees, for some time to come, shall be full-time men. As regards the latter part of the amendment, proposing that when, by reason of any vacancy, there are only two trustees, their decision shall not be effective unless it be unanimous, that would appear to me to be acceptable. As regards the majority vote however may I point out that, without a doubt, the idea behind this bill, the idea of those who originally framed it and of the government in concurring in it, was that if possible we should get a particularly good outstanding man to take the chairmanship; and a great many people are of the opinion that if you get the right autocrat he constitutes the best type of government. The danger of course is in getting a man of the wrong type. Generally speaking, although there is much truth in the adage about two heads being better than one, three being better than two, and so on, though not ad infinitum, I think that if you obtain one particularly able man as chairman he should be given as much freedom as possible. If a good man were obtainable as chairman, and if it were decided that the other two should be merely part-time men, it might be wiser to leave the chairman in control as indicated in the bill. If on the other hand we had three strong men devoting their whole time to their duties it might be better to have a majority vote on all occasions. However, I invite discussion of this point, although I do not want to have the bill delayed. We have been doing such splendid work that I should naturally hate to hold up progress.

Mr. POWER: In answer to the invitation of the minister I can state my position in one word: Yes, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the minister's decision to let subsection 2 stand is rather a good one. It must be considered in the light of what was said in connection with section 7. If the government did not take power to remove any of the trustees and left them in office for seven years, then I think this section would be very dangerous. If on the other hand the government took power to remove the trustees then subsection 2 of section 11 would be all right. I am hardly in agreement with my hon. friend (Mr. Elliott) because I believe that on the board someone after all must be boss; someone must be president of the road. If he is chosen, as he will be, I have no doubt, for his ability to supervise the system efficiently, and if his two assistants are not to be full-time men, it would seem to me an absurd situation to have part-time men dictating to a man who is devoting all his time to the system. If on the other hand they are all to be full-time men and the government is to have the right to remove them when it sees fit, then of course I believe the vote should be a straight majority vote and the government could remove any trustee who in its opinion was not performing his duty. I am not sure what the appointment of the three grain commissioners calls for in connection with the administration of the Canada Grain Act, but I am under the impression that some extra power is given to the chairman of that board. I believe that the appointments to the grain board have met with entire satisfaction. I know that the old board, which was appointed by a preceding government, functioned satisfactorily for a great many years and was finally changed with the approval of most members of the agriculture committee. The change was made because we believed we secured a very able president in Mr. Ramsay, who had been selling agent for the pool. The present government has retained his services, which have been highly satisfactory. If you remove the personality around whom the board revolves, a man in whom you have confidence, I do not think the trustees will function as well as if he were left in charge of the whole body.

Mr. EULER: The minister has invited opinions on this matter and it is only for that reason that I rise now. I am in accord with the amendment because I am also in favour of three trustees giving full time to the work. If I remember rightly the parliamentary committee on railways and shipping recommended to parliament that there should be a smaller board and that they should give full-time services. It does not require much argument or demonstration to convince anyone that in the conduct of a business as colossal as the Canadian National Railways there is ample work for the full time of three good men, and it should go without saying that the government ought to look not only for a first class man to be chairman but for three first class men, and that they should be properly paid. If you obtain three first class men it almost follows as a matter of self respect on the part of these men that they should expect, whenever they have something to say, a majority vote to govern.

Mr. MALCOLM: In the appointment of the Board of Grain Commissioners it is provided:

> There shall be a commission to be known as the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada, which shall consist of three commissioners appointed by the governor in council.

Section 5 reads:

> One of such commissioners shall be appointed by the governor in council as chief commissioner of the board, and he shall be entitled to hold the office of chief commissioner so long as he continues a member of the board.
>
> The chief commissioner, when present, shall preside at the meetings of the board.
>
> Two commissioners shall be a quorum; and no vacancy in the board shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to act.

I would submit to the minister that in the Board of Grain Commissioners the majority vote of any two commissioners governs. They are all full time men, and the government has the right to dismiss them at any time.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. McGIBBON: It is only because of the minister's soliciting my advice that I rise, Mr. Chairman. I think I could make a much better speech against this bill than I could for it, but I realize that we must do something and that this is apparently the best solution at hand. I quite agree with the hon. member for North Bruce, the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce, that in the last analysis you have to have one-man control. I am very much inclined to believe that in all emergencies you come down at last to autocratic government. You have to have decisions, and you must have a man who can make decisions. All history testifies, I think, to that fact. One need only go back to the last war and recall how we tried to run separate armies in every country with no unified command until we were almost defeated, and it was only when we finally got a single command that we got anywhere. I do not think you will get a first class man to take the chairmanship of this board of trustees if his decisions could be perpetually overruled by his two assistants. It would be simply giving him a position without any authority.

Mr. EULER: Have no assistants, then.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would put in only one man if I could get the right man.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is a big "if".

Mr. McGIBBON: I grant you that that is the big problem that we have to face. It always was the problem. But I can see this difficulty, that if you have a chairman and his two assistants do not work harmoniously with him they might buck his decisions year in and year out, and the board would be unable to get anywhere. Under such circumstances one can readily see that the tenure of office of the chairman would be a fiasco.

Mr. EULER: And you could not remove his assistants.

Mr. McGIBBON: I grant that I do not like that side of it either, but I am not speaking of that now. I have already said in the house that I did not agree with that. But as I also said at that time, we have this problem on our hands; the most brilliant men in railway, legal and financial circles in the world have been studying it and have given us their advice, and I think it would be rather an insult to them if we did not give their advice a trial. I would not for a moment set up my opinion as worthy of consideration against theirs, although there are some general principles, such as the negation of responsible government and the delegating of parliamentary and governmental authority to officials over whom we have no control, that I do not like. There are many other things in the bill that I do not like, but certainly this section is not one of them. I think the president or chairman, or whatever you wish to call him, should be held responsible by the government, and how are you going to hold him responsible if you do not give him power? If you appoint two others and take away the power of the chairman, how can you hold him responsible? I think it is the essence of the whole bill that parliament should hold the chief trustee responsible for the operation of the road, and I would certainly advise the minister not to make the other two trustees full time men. I would rather do away with them altogether. I would not have three men at all.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I want to support the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario in the view he takes with regard to the chairman of the board of trustees. In my opinion, whatever virtue the bill may have, it will be taken entirely away if you appoint some man to be the chief executive of the Canadian National Railways to work the road out of the difficulties it is now in, and then appoint two other men who might not cooperate with him but override his decisions.

In regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Middlesex in introducing his amendment that you are making stool pigeons or something of that sort of the other two trustees, that they would not be consulted and all that, there is nothing in the bill that suggests anything of the kind. The three trustees will consult with one another and discuss every problem that comes before them, and two of them, one of whom shall be the chairman, shall decide; but the chairman, the chief executive, must be one of those two. Just let me suggest to the house what took place during the term of office of Sir Henry Thornton as president of the Canadian National Railways. There was a board of directors, but will anyone suggest that after Sir Henry Thornton had brought his fist down and said, "This goes," the board of directors vetoed what he said?

Mr. EULER: How do you know?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was not there, but I suggest that Sir Henry Thornton's word was final.

Mr. EULER: You have absolutely no authority for saying that.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It is true that I have no authority, and I have no authority for something else that I am going to say. Does anyone suggest that during the presidency of the late Sir William Van Horne or the late Lord Shaughnessy, their word was not final in directing the policy followed by the executive? The same is true with regard to any other railway or any large business organization; the president has the final word. As the hon. member for North Bruce says, there must be some final executive with authority. My suggestion would be, if it is possible to find the man—I have lost a lot of faith in supermen; we were presumed to have had a superman in charge of the Canadian National Railways from 1923 to 1930, and he may have been a superman, but he was overruled, not by his board of directors, but by politicians in many cases, as the records clearly show.

Mr. EULER: He was fired by them.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not know whether he was fired or not. He resigned, and I do not know if he was responsible for all that he was charged with. Some of the things one finds out from time to time indicate something else.

If the present railway situation is to be saved it can be done only by appointing a man with sufficient force, vision and executive ability to be able to dominate and control. Get the best possible advice you can for him by appointing good co-trustees, but if you impose upon him the responsibility of working the road out of its tremendous difficulties, and then appoint two other men who can veto his decisions, you are going to wreck the whole thing.

Mr. MANION: May I express to members on both sides my appreciation of their opinions as expressed? May I add that the proposal that the chairman should be of the majority in giving a decision is contained, as most members know, in section 204 of the transportation commission's report. Section 204 reads:

> A majority of the trustees should govern its decisions, subject to this qualification that the chairman must be a member of any majority.

Mr. EULER: That means nothing at all except he has complete authority.

Mr. MANION: The bill is based on the recommendations of the commission. May I again express my appreciation to all hon. gentlemen who have expressed their opinions? I would suggest that this subclause stand, and we shall deal with it as we deal with the other amendments proposed.

Subsection stands.

Section stands.

On section 12—Annual budget.

Mr. MALCOLM: Here we are up against the question whether parliament is to have any control over the moneys spent by this board of trustees, and whether parliament is even to have the right to discuss the expenditures of the national railways. I submit that the late board of directors of the national railways probably failed in one respect, and in one respect alone, and that is that out of the revenues that came in during years of prosperity they spent too large a sum in operating costs, and did not apply sufficient of the moneys earned towards a reduction of their obligations. True, under this bill the minister has provided for parliamentary or governmental control over all capital expenditures. As I understand it, the capital expenditures have to be submitted to the governor in council. But there is nothing in this measure from first to last which will prevent the trustees from spending every single dollar of revenue on operating expenses. Parliament would not have any right or authority to question extravagance in operation, if such extravagance should exist. The very action which is being taken at the present time towards eliminating the duplication of services might have to be taken again. I suggest that the only way we can keep track of the expenditure of revenues is by inserting after the word "trustees" in the second line of section 12 the words "and subject to the approval of parliament." The clause would then read:

The annual budget of National Railways shall be under the control of the trustees and subject to the approval of parliament.

Such an amendment would give us the opportunity to save the trustees from themselves.

If in the time of Sir Henry Thornton we had had more power in parliament to discuss the expenditures of the national railways, we might have saved Sir Henry Thornton from making the heavy expenditures which I doubt very much whether he was always anxious to make. I repectfully submit to the minister that in regard to these trustees governmental control should not be lost, and certainly governmental control should not be lost in respect to the revenues of the railways. Everyone realizes that in the emergency of to-day revenues are not sufficiently large to necessitate the amendment I suggest. We realize also that present conditions cannot continue. I look forward to a day five or ten years hence, probably much sooner, when tonnage will increase and our national railways will be back to the position they held in 1925, 1926 and 1927. Then no matter who the trustees may be, they will be asked for additional services, they will be requested to make all sorts of expenditures. Under the legislation as it now stands they may spend every dollar of increasing revenues on services, and the House of Commons will not have an opportunity to control expenditure of operating revenue. Therefore I suggest that clause 12 be amended by adding after the word "trustees" in the second line of the section the words "and subject to the approval of parliament."

Mr. MANION: It is possible, and even probable, that I am dense so far as the section under discussion is concerned. However I have read section 12 carefully not once but many times, and I do not draw from it the same conclusions as are drawn by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, or by some hon. members who spoke yesterday in regard to the same clause. I draw the conclusion from the clause that any expenditure of the national railways may be discussed by parliament—

Mr. MALCOLM: No, not operating expenses.

Mr. MANION: It distinctly states that amounts required for income deficits, for interest on obligations outstanding in the hands of the public,—I doubt very much if that comma should be in the section—for capital expenditures and for refunding or retirement of maturing securities, shall be submitted by the trustees to the Minister of Finance for the consideration of the governor in council prior to presentation to parliament. But what happens after that takes place? The budget is submitted to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. EULER: Only the budget for those three purposes.

Mr. MANION: And those three purposes cover practically everything.

Mr. YOUNG: No—except operating expenses.

Mr. MANION: It covers amounts required for income deficits.

Mr. MALCOLM: I must have expressed myself very badly, and if so, I apologize to the minister. I am not worrying about income deficits; my suggestion does not apply to those days, but to the time when there will be substantial income surpluses.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. member expect such a day?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, we had them before.

Mr. McGIBBON: We never had them under the present basis.

Mr. MALCOLM: We certainly did. My hon. friend knows that out of operating surpluses we paid interest to the public on a large percentage of the bonds.

Mr. McGIBBON: But the debt to the public was not anything then to what it is now.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is true.

Mr. MANION: Income deficit includes deficit on interest to the public.

Mr. MALCOLM: We paid it all one year.

Mr. MANION: I admit that. I shall say gladly, Mr. Chairman, that so far as I am concerned if in my time or my hon. friend's time the railways have surpluses—

Mr. MALCOLM: They will.

Mr. MANION: I hope they will. If they attain to the position where they are paying all the interest on the obligations owing to the public, in addition to operating expenses, it might well be the decision of this parliament to let the railways be run as a private corporation would be run, namely without submitting anything to parliament. I would be very happy to think that in my lifetime the railways would ever reach that position, and at such time I should gladly take that attitude. I understand now what the hon. member is speaking about, but it is so far in advance I am wondering why an amendment could not be made ten or fifteen years from now.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister will remember when the favourable situation existed before, at which time the Minister of Justice who was then on this side of the house, and hon. members now sitting opposite, were all claiming credit for surpluses on the national railways.

Mr. MANION: The interest on the funded debt at that time was $20,000,000 less.

Mr. MALCOLM: I know that.

Mr. MANION: It was $20,000,000 less than it is to-day.

Mr. MALCOLM: By economies it is proposed to reduce expenses by from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000.

Mr. MANION: Yes, and Mr. Hungerford has stated that if the same economies had been made in 1928, the year about which my hon. friend speaks, they would have saved about $19,000,000. I still adhere to the position that if in the time of this or some other government the railways reach a position where they will be paying all the interest on their funded debt, they will be doing well.

Mr. MALCOLM: They will reach that position.

Mr. MANION: At such a time it might well be managed as a private corporation. However, I point out to my hon. friend that at the moment that is not the point at issue. In time that condition may arise, and on such occasion there would be plenty of time to amend the legislation.

Mr. MALCOLM: Amend it now.

Mr. MANION: I have no special objection—

Mr. EULER: If I may presume to say so, it seems to me that the minister and the hon. member for North Bruce are at least to some extent still at cross purposes. The minister seems to assume that the budget of the national railways, that is the operating expenses of the railways themselves without any reference to deficits, refunding of loans or capital expenditures, are within the control of the government.

Mr. MANION: No, I did not say that.

Mr. EULER: I should not like to put words in the mouth of the hon. member for North Bruce, but I believe his thought was by his amendment to provide that for the actual running expenses of the road, operating expenses, the trustees shall make up a budget in advance to be submitted to the house. I fancy that is what he intended. From the minister's remarks I do not believe he correctly understood the meaning of the amendment.

While on my feet, I regret to say I am not altogether in agreement with the hon. member for North Bruce. If we are to have good men—supermen, as the hon. member for Muskoka might say—I should like to see the national railways operated by the trustees without any interference from anybody. For a good many years I have been a member of the parliamentary committee on national railways. If we compel the trustees to come to parliament with an annual budget for the operating expenses of the road, and if you bring that budget before the members of the committee—capable and all as they may be—I would be doubtful of the results. I should like to know how many of the members of that committee know anything about railway business and could make any helpful suggestion as to whether this branch shall spend so much, or whether that should be spent for something else. I would rather put that responsibility on the board of trustees. The reason I objected yesterday was that if they did not make a success of the road then parliament or the government should have the right to discharge them. I am not at all convinced, although my mind is not quite closed to the idea, that the board of trustees should be compelled to come to this house each year in advance with a budget of what they may need for the operating expenses of the road, because I do not think the parliamentary committee is qualified to pass upon that at all. I would say, give the trustees the responsibility. If we find that they are not doing their work properly, then I think clause 7 should be amended so that the House of Commons or the government itself can dispense with the services of the trustees.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) is placing, I think, undue emphasis on the words "in advance." I do not regard the amendment proposed by the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce as meaning that the trustees shall have to come to parliament and get approval of the budget in advance.

Mr. EULER: It is no good otherwise.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. All that is asked is that parliament approve the budget. That is, the ministry takes the responsibility of standing by the trustees that parliament has appointed. What is proposed by the amendment is simply a means of bringing before the representatives of the people a survey of the entire railway situation. The minister is proposing to put the control of this railway in the hands of three men, and give them absolute power. They may be the best businessmen in the world, they may run the railway in the most satisfactory manner, but they may be running it without regard to the needs of the different parts of the country, not through any desire not to meet the needs, but through having no comprehensive way of ascertaining them. What is parliament for? I submit that if the budget is brought here if only for the approval of parliament, it will enable members from all parts of Canada to give their views with respect to what should be done in regard to the railway situation. You do not take away from the trustees the right to have the first or the final word, but they will be afforded from the discussion a knowledge of those things which the representatives of the people wish them to consider in the management and operation of the road, and they cannot get that knowledge in any other way. If this bill goes through in its present form, and there is no opportunity for parliament to consider the budget of the railway as a whole, there will be no discussion in parliament at all with respect to anything but the deficit, or some capital expenditure; there will be no general discussion as to the needs of the country or superfluous expenditures or anything of the kind. The ex-minister is agreeable to the government leaving the control of the budget with the trustees. He does not say we want to take away the control from the trustees. He says he will leave the control of the budget to the trustees, but that when the budget, controlled by the trustees, comes to the minister he shall present it to council and later to parliament for approval and thereby accept ministerial responsibility for what the trustees are doing. In other words, what is suggested is simply maintaining responsible government. If you do not do that, you are simply setting parliament at naught for a term not merely of seven years, but forever, for these gentlemen are self-perpetuating. You are simply turning over the railway to three men to run it without any opportunity for the representatives of the people to say a word. If the choice lies between doing away with government ownership or parliament, I submit it should not be parliament that should be done away with.

As I understand the amendment proposed, it is that the trustees would make up their budget. They would say: We have been appointed for this purpose, here is our budget. Having made it, we find there is going to be a deficit, also we need for capital expenditure so much; they present their requests to the minister. The minister's interpretation is that all he brings to parliament is just the deficit or the needed capital expenditure or the securities or other features mentioned in this bill. Our contention is that these things are all related to the budget, you cannot adequately consider them apart from it. The deficit that parliament will have to meet is the result of the expenditures made on the road. To get an adequate view of what the minister is asking you have to have the budget before you. Under the amendment the railway would go ahead, carry on its operations, it might be five months after the period for which provision had been made by the budget, before they come here and get approval. What is asked is simply that at some time within the year parliament be required to give its approval of the budget. If a condition arose where it should appear that the three men appointed have gone wild in carrying on operations, if endowed with absolute powers, they turned out to be entirely different from what the government expected, then there would be an opportunity for parliament, at least, to say that it could not approve. Surely if a situation developed to the point that parliament would find it necessary to express disapproval, the time would surely have come when a change would be necessary. That is all that is contemplated.

Mr. MANION: I agree with much that the right hon. gentleman has said, but I do not agree that parliament is without control. I submit that under sections 12, 13 and 14 parliament is in exactly the same position as it has been in the past.

Mr. MALCOLM: Which is not good enough.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I think it was good enough, if parliament had taken its position a little more seriously and independently than it did. Parliament could through its committee and through discussion in the house have criticized as they did not, many matters that should have been criticized. But the hon. member for North Bruce interrupted me when I was giving my interpretation of section 12. My interpretation of section 12 is that after the budget is submitted to the Minister of Finance—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the budget is not submitted, that is the point. The budget is not submitted to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MANION: Well, the amounts required. The needs of the railway are submitted to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance cannot by any method give one cent to the Canadian National Railways without bringing it before the parliament of Canada; it has to come as an estimate, and it is the right of this house to deal with that estimate as it sees fit.

Mr. EULER: May I ask a question?

Mr. MANION: Well, I should like to finish my statement. My interpretation may be wrong, but it is this; estimates have to be submitted to this house, and when they are submitted the House of Commons may deal with them as they see fit. They may refuse to pass them. They may and should appoint a committee, as they have in the past; and the trustees will be brought before that committee. The Duff commission recommended that the officers of the railway should not be brought before the committee. With that I at least partially agree, but at any rate the trustees may be brought before the committee, and from those trustees any information desired by the committee or the house may be required. If those trustees should refuse to give the information required, then that committee could pass a resolution against the passing of the estimates, this house could refuse the estimates, and the trustees could not carry on until they got to the stage suggested by the hon. member for North Bruce, which is at least some way in the future.

Now in addition to the measure of control provided by section 12 there is section 13 which provides for the appointment of independent auditors by parliament. Let me read it:

> A continuous audit of the accounts of National Railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by parliament and annually reporting to parliament in respect of their audit. Their annual report shall call attention to any matters which in their opinion require consideration or remedial action. They shall be paid by the National company such amounts as the governor in council shall from time to time approve.

Then section 14:

> The trustees shall make a report annually to parliament setting forth in a summary manner the results of their operations, any cooperative measures, plans or arrangements effected pursuant to this act, any economies or more remunerative operation thereby produced, the amounts expended on capital account in respect of the railways, works, property, facilities and services comprised in the undertakings of National Railways and such other information as appears to them to be of public interest or necessary for the information of parliament—

Mr. MALCOLM: "Appears to them to be of public interest."

Mr. MANION:

> —with relation to any situation existing at the time of such report, or as may be required from time to time by the governor in council.

The gist of my argument is that before the House of Commons passes an estimate of the Minister of Finance necessary for the supply of moneys to the Canadian National Railways, the parliament of Canada, through its committee or directly, can refuse to pass those estimates until it secures any information it may desire.

Mr. EULER: May I ask my question now on that very point? Does the minister say that it is necessary for the board of trustees to come to the Minister of Finance, and through him to the parliament of Canada, for the voting of estimates to carry on the business of the railway itself for the year? Is that his contention?

Mr. MANION: No. So far as that is concerned I will admit that it never has been done. In the past the money earned by the railway has been handled by the directors and the management of the company, but when the matter came before the select standing committee of the house that committee could demand any information it required or desired.

Mr. EULER: That was afterwards, in dealing with the report for the previous year.

Mr. MANION: That is quite so, but I might make the same argument my hon. friend made a few moments ago. I do not think the members of this parliament are in such a position that in advance of the carrying on of a year's operation of the railway we can go into the details of operation. I do not think we should go into those details; it never has been done and I do not think it ever can be done with regard to any great utility. My contention is that so far as the parliament of Canada is concerned to-day it has the full right to check up, and the parliament of Canada will continue to have that right.

Mr. EULER: Yes, afterwards.

Mr. MANION: Yes, just exactly as it is done now. I admit that.

Mr. EULER: A moment ago I had the temerity to suggest that the minister and the hon. member for North Bruce were at cross purposes. Now perhaps I am in the same position; perhaps the minister and I are at cross purposes. Certainly, however, I understood the amendment to mean and to say that the annual budget for the operation of the road should be brought to the house in advance and endorsed by the house. If that was not the intention perhaps I am wrong; we may be in agreement after all. I should like to know if that is the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. MARCIL: I should like to bring up a small matter to show the position in which members of parliament are placed. Certain contracts are to be awarded for railway ties in a certain constituency. They are advertised; people send in tenders and finally contracts are awarded. The member of parliament asks for information from the government as to the quantity, the price, the names of the parties and so on, but he is told plainly that it is not considered in the public interest to make these facts public, and that he can be given no information. How can a member of parliament pass judgment upon a budget as to which he can get no information from the government?

Mr. MANION: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this sort of information, and information having to do with other details of operation, is the type of information which the officers of the railway maintain should not in the public interest be given out. I do not think the members of the House of Commons should be in a position, in regard to the details of operation, to receive that information. I have expressed that opinion previously; I said so a few moments ago. I know my hon. friend did ask a question of that kind; he sent me a letter in regard to it, but I did not have the information. I may say quite frankly that so far as railway ties are concerned I have not a list, nor have I had a list this year, of the railway tie contracts which have been let. That is the attitude which has been taken by the officials of the company, and I believe in many cases, in regard to the details of operation; it is a just attitude.

Let me come back to the point from which I departed. I hope I have made myself clear, and that perhaps I have convinced my hon. friends that we are going far enough under this act in making it possible to secure all the information in regard to the operation of the national railways that parliament is properly entitled to get.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister has stressed the duty of the board of trustees to present a report to parliament. That does not mean anything at all. Every department of government and every commission appointed by the government has that obligation imposed by statute among its duties, and as a matter of course every year the different ministers table these reports and that is all there is to it. The presentation of a report to parliament does not mean anything in the way of parliamentary control. If you were to add a clause stating that the report must be approved by parliament then you would give some significance to the presentation of the report.

There is another point with regard to the wording of the section we are discussing; there is nothing in it that in any way seems to imply any kind of control. It states that the annual budget of the national railways shall come under the control of the trustees, and that is the only place the word "control" is mentioned. It is quite clear that the trustees have the control of the budget. You give them that full authority, but in doing so you are at the same time taking away the authority of the shareholders and the directors.

Mr. MANION: May I interrupt just for the sake of clarity? We are all endeavouring to clear up the matter, and I have just checked up with both the legal adviser and the deputy minister. I thought I was right, and they tell me that this is exactly the position at the present time with regard to the annual report. It is in the hands of the directors, so there is no change whatever in this act from the procedure which is followed at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At present there is an obligation to present a report to parliament; that report lies there and no notice is taken of it by parliament at all unless in some way it is brought especially before one or the other houses of parliament. But it need not be brought especially before parliament unless the ministry so desires. The point I want to make clear is this: The making up of the budget of the company is to be under the control of the trustees, not under the control of parliament.

Mr. MANION: It is not under the control of parliament now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, but you are doing away with the directors altogether; you are doing away with any authority on the part of the shareholders namely the people's representatives in parliament, and you are leaving three men in complete control of the expenditures and revenues of the railway. That position is very different from the position in which any other railway in the world finds itself to-day. These three men may have the best intentions and may be the ablest men in the world, but how are they going to obtain knowledge of the needs of the country with regard to this great national system unless some persons corresponding to the directors or the shareholders have a chance to express their views? You will never get that expression of views unless in some way you bring before parliament the matters which are under the control of the board, in order to obtain the approval of parliament.

Mr. MANION: May I ask just one question, in the most sincere desire to understand my right hon. friend. I do not understand the objections he has raised. Would the right hon. gentleman tell me the difference—other than that the board will consist of three instead of seventeen—between the position in which parliament will be placed under this act and the position in which parliament finds itself to-day? That is what I cannot understand.

Mr. MALCOLM: When I rose to speak in the first place, Mr. Chairman, I said that the minister would have to consider this section along with section 7. The great difference is this: Previously we had a board of directors who were subject to the control of the governor in council. They submitted the annual report, of course; it was the budget of the railway. It did not have to be approved by parliament but each of these men was under the control of the governor in council, and if the governor in council was not satisfied with his services he could be removed. By section 7 we are removing every vestige of control possessed by the Prime Minister and his cabinet over these men; we are putting our whole system under the control of the trustees. All we ask now is that there should be inserted after the word "trustee" some provision whereby this budget would require the approval of parliament. Whether it be a review of the business of the past year in the form of a report or whether it be an advance budget I do not care—I do not know what meaning the minister put on the word "budget" when he drafted this legislation. The Prime Minister and his cabinet have given up control of the national railways by statute, and we are simply asking that at least parliament should have the approval of their annual expenditures. That is our only objection.

Probably the minister and other hon. members may think I am too optimistic, but I have every reason to hope that before very long the national railways will be back in the position they occupied in 1927. May I say to the minister, and I know other members of parliament in this house will agree with me, that the national railways are not down half as badly as most of the businesses in which many of us are engaged. We are all going to be wrecked if business does not come back. There is another point. Everyone realizes that at this moment we are on the verge of a substantial rise in commodity prices through some governmental action or else there is going to be a very serious catastrophe. As soon as commodity prices come back and as soon as the volume of business returns the interest payments of the national railways will become a much less serious problem than they are to-day, as will the interest payments of every business man who has to pay interest on bonds. During the next two or three years, some process of inflation, whether by the addition of other metal as a basis of currency, the revaluation of gold, or some other action, international in scope, may change this picture overnight and alter the whole financial position of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. Let us hope it does. When the day comes when the income revenue in relation to expenditure is back to where it was in 1927, when the system is able to pay part or all of its interest to the public, let us hope that this parliament will have some control to see that extravagances do not exist as they did in 1927. If we made a mistake before, surely we can be wise enough not to make the same mistake a second time. Probably it would be worse the next time. If the governor in council has no control over these trustees, parliament at least should have the right to review their budget. I think this section should be allowed to stand so that the two sections could be considered together.

Section stands.

On section 13, subsection 1—Continuous audit by independent auditors.

Mr. MANION: This subsection states that a continuous audit of the accounts of national railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by parliament. This would mean the passing of a special act each year, and I suggest that the subsection should be changed so that the appointment would be made by resolution of parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Why not make it the governor in council and retain the continuity? The governor in council is the responsible party under responsible government and should take the responsibility for the trustees in the operations of the road. I suggest to the minister that he should make it governor in council and get away from the necessity of having to come to parliament every year with a resolution.

Mr. MANION: No one knows better than my hon. friend that the governor in council will propose the resolution. It has been the desire to get as far away as possible from government control. My hon. friends have made that statement, and I accede to their opinion. I do not think the matter is important enough to argue over, and if my hon. friend is satisfied, I should like to have it by resolution of parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Duff report is a splendid report, but the minister will agree that outside of one or two members, that commission was made up of men who had very little experience in railway operation and practically none so far as an institution operated under the auspices of parliament is concerned. I object very strongly to taking away from the governor in council the responsibility of operating the affairs of government and the right to have supervision over men who they appoint. To be forced to hand out money without having that control seems to me to be an impossible situation.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. MANION: May I say that I appreciate the compliment to this government implied in the words of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was referring to all governments, not to the government of my hon. friend alone.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend's sense of humour is not quite as keen this afternoon as it usually is. I might say that we are not following out the suggestion of the royal commission. According to my recollection, the suggestion of the commission was that a panel containing a list of auditing firms should be submitted by the trustees. After all, the trustees are the people who are being audited and those who drew up this bill decided that that suggestion could not be followed. It was suggested, therefore, that the auditors should be appointed by parliament. I do not think it is worth while wasting time over this matter and if hon. gentlemen do not object, I should like to retain this subsection with my suggested amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT: A moment ago the minister suggested that there would be some benefit in the annual reports made by the auditors through their calling attention to matters which in their opinion required consideration or remedial action. Does the minister suggest that the auditors will have the power under this clause to call attention to matters other than those connected with the audit?

Mr. MANION: Yes, I should think they would have the right to call attention to anything which they thought was not in proper order.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suggest that this section refers only to the audit and not to matters of railway management or of any other kind. I do not think the minister should count upon that as a protection against anything.

Mr. MANION: In the past the auditors did nothing except audit the accounts in the ordinary way and this section is included in the bill in the hope that the auditors will report anything which they think to be unwise in the operations of the road. The present auditing firm is Touche and Company, and I remember discussing this matter with their representative, Mr. Matthews. I asked him if it would not be possible to include in the annual report reference to such matters as it is expected this subsection will cover. He said that that was impossible because they were not empowered to do so. The intention of this section is to empower the auditors to report upon irregularities of any kind. I do not think the subsection will do any harm and it may bring about the curing of irregularities which have developed on other occasions.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I agree absolutely with everything the minister has said. This section is carrying out the recommendation made in the past by the railway committee. I was one of those who recommended strongly that an independent audit should be made, and I agree entirely with the provisions of section 13.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think provision should be made for changing the auditors.

Mr. MANION: That is to be done every year.

Mr. McGIBBON: To change the firm of auditors. It is very important that the firm of auditors should be changed quite frequently.

Mr. MANION: That is why this action is to be taken from year to year. If the government of the day thinks it desirable to make a change, a change can be made.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think parliament should say that they shall be changed. A year ago I had the privilege of reviewing some of these accounts, and while I do not wish to go into the matter at all, I say quite fearlessly that the audit was absolutely useless. Parliament should lay down a rule that the firm of auditors should be changed every two or three years. I think that would be found to work out in the interests of the railways and of parliament.

Mr. MANION: While I agree that if there is any reason for changing auditors, it should be done, at the same time my hon. friend should remember that the auditing of the Canadian National Railways accounts is a huge job which requires special training and the following of a complicated set of rules. The auditing requires very elaborate work on the part of the particular firm that is doing the auditing, and unless there is good reason for a change, I do not think it would be wise for any government to change the auditors every year. The new auditors would have to learn the very complicated and elaborate system of accounting which is used, and I do not think a yearly change would be practicable.

Mr. ARTHURS: You might trade with the Canadian Pacific every other year.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend mentions the Canadian Pacific. I do not think the Canadian Pacific or any other big company changes its auditors yearly. I agree that if there were any reason for the change it could be made, and that is why it is proposed that the auditors shall be appointed annually, to give an opportunity for making the change if necessary. I think however it would be better to retain the same auditors so long as they were satisfactory.

Mr. EULER: I should like to support what the minister has said. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario that the auditors should be changed every year.

Mr. McGIBBON: I did not say every year, but every few years.

Mr. EULER: In a modest way I have had something to do with auditing in my own day, and I know that in a business so extensive as the Canadian National Railways it will take a new firm of auditors, no matter how competent they may be, a considerable time to accustom themselves to the way the books are kept. If therefore the same auditors were kept on it would save a good deal of time in subsequent audits. If it be true that the firm of auditors now employed by the Canadian National Railways is not fit for the job, then I agree—

Mr. McGIBBON: I did not say that; please quote me correctly.

Mr. EULER: I understood the hon. member to say that the audit was no good.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is different from criticizing the firm.

Mr. EULER: Then I will take the exact words the hon. member used. If it is thought desirable to obtain better auditors than those now engaged a change should be made; but once you have obtained a good firm I do submit that they should be retained so long as they are satisfactory. If a firm of auditors are appointed and they know that in the succeeding year their services will be dispensed with, I should be inclined to think, since they are human, that their work would be apt to be not quite so satisfactory for that one year as if they knew that their services would be continued from year to year. It is perfectly evident that if a man knows that he is going to be out of the job next year he is not likely to do as good work as if he were assured of being continued in office.

Mr. McGIBBON: He would feel that he would have to be a great deal more efficient.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I move that section 13, subsection 1, be amended by adding the words "resolution of" after the word "by" in line five.

Mr. POWER: What is meant by "resolution of parliament"? Does it mean the House of Commons? I have heard the Prime Minister express himself in regard to king, lords and commons; I wonder whether this has reference to king, lords or commons.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does it mean both houses?

Mr. MANION: I do not know whether such a resolution would come before both houses.

Mr. POWER: The Prime Minister and the hon. member for Temiscouata are both out; we have no constitutional lawyers.

Mr. ARTHURS: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario in referring to the audit of the accounts of the Canadian National Railways had in mind the auditors appointed by parliament. It is well known to any man who has had any connection with either the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian National that they have their own auditors to go into small accounts, and that is what the hon. member for North Waterloo has reference to. Obviously it would be impossible for a firm of auditors to go into the minute details with regard to every station and agency of the railway; they simply go into the larger items. There is a good deal of merit in the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. If the reports are, shall we say, more or less carelessly prepared and if nothing is brought to the attention of the minister or of parliament during the course of a year or two, any business man would naturally think that the firm were not doing their duty as it should be done, because undoubtedly in any large business of this kind there arise matters of great importance that should be called to the attention of the minister or of this house.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But the Minister of Railways entirely disappears here. This is all under the supervision of the Minister of Finance, and it seems to me a very serious mistake to call upon parliament to provide funds to run this huge system without having a responsible minister in charge. That is why I am so insistent that the governor in council shall retain control. I think it is a very serious mistake to dispense with the services of the Minister of Railways, who gives his whole time to looking after railway activities. Surely the national system is of sufficient importance to demand the services of one minister, whatever government may be in power. Here we are handing over to the autocratic control of a board of three men, however efficient they may be, entire charge of the money we are forced to vote. I am opposed to this whole business of removing control from a minister of railways and from the governor in council and handing over such control as is provided for in this act to a group of three trustees who can be removed, not by the governor in council but by a joint address of the two houses of parliament. The amendment which the minister is proposing is putting the auditors in exactly the same position. I want to see the auditors under the control of the governor in council. If there is to be no minister then let them be under the control of the governor in council. I will vote against the section.

Mr. ARTHURS: If the hon. member will read section 13 he will see that in this instance his argument does not hold. The report of the auditors shall be to parliament:

> A continuous audit of the accounts of National Railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by parliament and annually reporting to parliament in respect of their audit. Their annual report shall call attention to any matters which in their opinion require consideration or remedial action. . . .

In this particular case the control lies with parliament so far as the auditors are concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not speaking of that. I am referring to the hiring and the control of the auditors, and not to what they shall report to parliament. What I am talking about is the authority to hire and control them, and that I say should rest in the governor in council. That is my contention. So far as the reports are concerned, certainly they should be made to parliament; parliament is entitled to have them. As regards employing and controlling them, however, that should rest in the governor in council.

Mr. ARTHURS: The amendment proposed by the minister is to the effect that they shall be appointed by resolution of parliament. Whenever a resolution is introduced involving the expenditure of public money it must come from the governor in council or from the government, which amounts to the same thing. That answers the hon. gentleman's argument.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It does not answer my argument, which I want to get over clearly. My objection is that running through this whole bill is the withdrawal of control from the governor in council and placing it in the hands of three trustees who are going to spend at their own free will the money which this parliament is going to be forced to vote. That is what this legislation is doing, and that is what I want to prevent if I can, not because the present government is in office but with regard to any government. We look to the Minister of Railways and to the governor in council, and we make our criticism of them. We are going to appoint the trustees, but under this bill the governor in council cannot even fire them. It needs a resolution passed by both houses of parliament to fire them. Further, after the first trustees are appointed, future selections are to be made from a panel not chosen by the government at all, but from a list of eight names presented to them. If we are going to have responsible government at all in connection with the national railways or anything else, responsibility must rest in the governor in council. I think the governor in council should be able to appoint whom they will, and if they are not satisfied with their appointments fire them in the same way. Under this bill the governor in council is not going to hire and fire these men at will. They can only be fired after a resolution has been passed by both houses of parliament. I am opposed to the whole procedure in so far as it removes responsibility from the governor in council.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does the minister realize the anomaly in section 13? This bill is prepared to give the management of the national railways to a board of trustees. That is the whole purpose of the bill. Every clause of it indicates that the actual management shall rest with the judgment of the trustees appointed. But section 13 reads:

A continuous audit of the accounts of National Railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by parliament and annually reporting to parliament in respect of their audit. Their annual report shall call attention to any matters which in their opinion require consideration or remedial action.

If that is not the finest contradiction in terms, I should like to know what is. The auditors are supposed to suggest to parliament what should be done to correct the situation on the national railways, and you are appointing a board of trustees for that very purpose.

Mr. MANION: It is a check on the board of trustees. There is at the present time that check on the board of directors. We have a firm of auditors, Touche and Company, who do exactly that same type of auditing. They do not report to parliament but to the minister, and through him to the government. The group to be appointed under this section would do exactly the same type of auditing. It is true that we are giving the trustees very great powers under this bill, possibly too great a power in the opinion of some hon. gentlemen, but the auditors will have to report to parliament, because parliament has to vote these huge sums of money, and in that way parliament will get a report on the carrying on of the business of the national railways in much the same way as is done now, except that this report will be made to parliament instead of through the minister to the government.

Mr. MALCOLM: That is not the situation. The job of a set of auditors is to audit the financial business that has been transacted by a firm during the year. The policy of the business rests entirely with the management or the directorate, or in this case with the trustees for the government. It is not the place or the business of auditors to tell a company whose business they are auditing how the business should be run, but this bill says that the auditors can call attention to any matter which in their opinion requires consideration or remedial action. In my opinion it is an absurdity. That is not the duty of auditors. That provision is a straight contradiction of the powers you are vesting in your trustees.

Mr. MANION: I thought that this had carried, Mr. Chairman. The auditors will be in exactly the same position as the auditors are in to-day. The railway has a firm of auditors of its own which does the ordinary auditing of the railway, and in addition Touche and Company audit for the Minister of Railways, and through him for the government. This proposed group simply takes the place of Touche and Company.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—Annual report to parliament.

Mr. MANION: There is a slight amendment to be made to this clause. It does not change the meaning at all, but makes the section a little clearer. It is proposed to strike out the words between "respect" in line 21 and "of" in line 23. That eliminates the words "of the railways, works, property, facilities and services comprised in the undertakings."

Mr. GEARY: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EULER: I presume it is the intention of the government that the board of trustees shall submit to parliament a financial statement somewhat similar to the statement which we receive annually. If that is the intention, it is not made clear in the section as it stands, and that is why I rise to speak of it. It should be made very clear that the statement shall be a financial statement of receipts and expenditures, and so on.

Mr. MANION: There is no thought of making any change in the statement.

Mr. EULER: But the clause does not say it shall be a financial statement of receipts and expenditures.

Mr. MANION: That will be understood.

Mr. YOUNG: The trustees and management of this road are supposed to be free from political influence. Is it the intention of parliament that the trustees or president or whoever does the purchasing for the road shall be free to make purchases wherever they can to the best advantage, or is it intended still to exercise political pressure to force the road to buy Canadian made goods?

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman was good enough to write me a letter, which unfortunately I received only this morning, advising me that he was going to bring up this subject and that he required a good deal of information. On receiving his letter I immediately had my officers at work gathering the information he required, but it cannot possibly be presented until to-morrow, and as we are now within half an hour of six o'clock and there will be plenty of opportunity to discuss the matter on any other clause, perhaps my hon. friend would postpone his questioning until to-morrow. So far as I am concerned he can bring the matter up on any other clause to-morrow.

Mr. YOUNG: I am quite agreeable.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

On section 14, subsection 2—Routing of export freight through Canadian seaports.

Mr. YOUNG: This clause directs the trustees to route freight destined for export by sea through Canadian seaports. May I ask at whose request this provision was inserted?

Mr. MANION: I do not know that I could say at whose request it was done, but it was inserted for the purpose of ensuring that so far as possible Canadian traffic would go out through Canadian ports, both east and west, wherever the opportunity exists to route it that way.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think it would be very much wiser if the minister deleted the clause and accomplished his object without making it statutory. It may be only provocative as it stands.

Mr. YOUNG: Will this clause apply to freight enjoying the benefit of the Maritime Freight Rates Act?

Mr. MANION: Speaking from memory, that act does not apply to freight going into the maritimes but to freight coming out of the maritimes; so this provision would not apply to freight going into the maritimes.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think the minister is wrong. I think the Maritime Freight Rates Act applies to freight going both ways.

Mr. MANION: I may be wrong, because I am speaking from memory, but in my view the chief purpose of the Maritime Freight Rates Act is to permit the products of the maritimes to be brought more cheaply to the centre of Canada. Another implied purpose is to prevent the products of central Canada being carried so cheaply as to compete with the products of the maritimes. I am speaking subject to correction, but I believe I am correct.

Mr. ILSLEY: The minister is right.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Hants-Kings supports me, and I am content.

Mr. MALCOLM: The clause means nothing. The shipper has a right to direct his freight, and in my view this is a provocative clause which should not be in the bill and should be deleted.

Mr. MANION: I think probably there is ground for the argument of the hon. member. At the same time it was the desire of some of the maritime representatives that the clause be put in. If as the hon. member suggests it is simply redundancy, it can do no particular harm.

Mr. EULER: I do not agree that the clause means nothing, because while under the clause the shipper is still permitted to route his freight as he wishes, he has no particular concern as to whether it goes through a Canadian or foreign port, provided the rate is the same. With regard to wheat at least, I understand the rate from Montreal to Halifax, a distance of 800 miles, is exactly the same as from Montreal to Portland, a distance of only about 300 miles. The shipper will no doubt be perfectly indifferent as to which way the wheat moves out, because whichever course is taken the cost to him is exactly the same. I would say however that it costs the national railways a good deal more to haul a bushel of wheat 800 miles than it does to haul it 300 miles, and I do not believe they should be placed under that handicap. That is my reason for opposing the clause.

Mr. MANION: They will be placed under that handicap, if at all, only in the case of grain or any other commodity that has not been routed by the shipper. As the hon. member for North Bruce has pointed out, where the shipper states it must be routed via Portland or New York, it will not be affected by this clause. The clause would apply only in cases where the commodity has not been routed by the shipper. In the great majority of cases no doubt the shipper will choose the route, as the hon. member for North Bruce suggests. It might be pointed out that to-day, without any legislation of the kind suggested, both railway companies make the rate not from Montreal, as the hon. member suggested, but from the Georgian bay ports to Halifax and St. John the same as the rate on the American side from Buffalo to New York in order to get some of the traffic. Since that is being done, no injustice would be done by leaving the clause in.

Mr. EULER: I would say probably the shipper is quite indifferent as to which way the grain goes, because the rate is just the same, and naturally the outcome will be that it will go through a Canadian port and act as a considerable handicap to the railway. The railways are put to a greater expense than should be necessary. I am speaking in the interests of the railways.

Mr. GEARY: I suppose the hon. member would like the clause to be put in in the other form, so that the traffic will not be run through Canadian ports.

Mr. EULER: Keep the clause out altogether.

Mr. MALCOLM: The remark of the hon. member from Toronto was quite uncalled for, and only goes to show that he does not understand the situation at all. He knows as well as I do, and so does the minister—probably the less said about it in the House of Commons, the better—that we are operating a system known as the Grand Trunk Western, which was the old Chicago-Portland. It was the best system on the continent for moving fast freight from Chicago to the Atlantic seaboard. He knows that the Canadian National Railways get a tremendous tonnage from the United States which is shipped through Canadian ports. My one reason in saying to the minister that the clause should be deleted is to help the maritime provinces. The minute you put the proposed section into legislation you have the Chicago packer saying, "All my beef has to go through Halifax and Saint John, and cannot go through Portland; we will send it via the New York Central, and let it go through the port of New York." The less said about this the better, and I believe the minister agrees with me.

Mr. POWER: Although I shall come in for some severe criticism in my own home bailiwick, which I think generally speaking has been strongly and perhaps sometimes injudiciously in favour of special treatment as a Canadian seaport, I must add my voice to that of other hon. members on this side and object to the insertion of any such section. It appears to me that in this instance we are inserting a clause in the bill which bears all the evidence of what might be called political or sectional pressure. Ever since we began to speak about this legislation we have said that the esential object of it was to get away from political and sectional pressure. We are considering a section which would mean that the railways would have to go to considerable expense in carrying freight long distances so that such freight could go through Canadian seaports. We are in a time of emergency and crisis. As I have already said, the observations I am now making may create unfavourable reaction in the city of Quebec. I submit that since we are trying to do something to save the railroads and to operate them more cheaply, although the minister may have all the good will in the world toward Canadian seaports and the maritime provinces, he would be most unwise if in the legislation he were to insert any clause or section which could be taken as an indication that he has submitted to sectional pressure.

Mr. YOUNG: The clause must have been put in for a purpose, and no doubt the purpose was to divert traffic over a more expensive routing, when in ordinary circumstances it might go over a cheaper one. Whether or not the railway company carries the traffic at the same freight rate, someone has to pay for that extra work. If the railway company comes before this parliament every year asking for moneys to meet deficits, part of those deficits will be created because they are hauling freight 500 miles further than they should haul it, and are receiving no additional revenue for that extra work. The loss will have to be made up by the taxpayers of Canada. Everybody knows that in the future whatever is left of international trade will go to the country which can put its products on the world market at the cheapest price. Every cent we add to the cost of putting our goods on the world market will tend to keep them out of that market. The additional cost of hauling our products 500 miles farther to get them to a seaport will be added some way or another, directly or indirectly, to the price of the goods we export. The result will be that because of this particular clause we will be in an inferior and less favourable position when it comes to getting our goods on the world market. If we believe we can add to the revenues of the ports, or add to the prosperity of Canada by compelling our railways to haul freight an extra 500 miles for the same price, could we not go still farther and make them haul it an extra 5,000 miles? Would it not be advisable to put in a clause insisting that all freight originating in eastern Canada and destined for ports beyond the seas be hauled across the continent and shipped from Vancouver, and that all trade originating in western Canada destined for overseas be hauled across the continent and shipped out from the martime ports? Then we would be hauling our freight over the country before we shipped it. No doubt we would be giving employment to railway men, but it would not be good business. The clause before us is forcing the railways to do an uneconomic act at a time when uneconomic acts cannot be done with impunity. I object to the clause, and suggest that it be stricken out.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Give the freight a joy ride.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Shall the section carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. YOUNG: No, it is not carried. I move it be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): The amendment is out of order. The hon. member may vote against the section, if he wishes. Shall the section carry?

Section agreed to.

On section 15—Reports to parliament through the Minister of Railways.

Mr. BURY: May I suggest that the title "the Minister of Railways" should be "the Minister of Railways and Canals?" If that is correct I would move that the amendment be made.

[Mr. Young.]

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I ask the minister if this is really the only power he retains as Minister of Railways and Canals?

Mr. MANION: Quite possible, Mr. Chairman. The possible loss of power by the Minister of Railways has been worrying my hon. friends opposite a good deal. I know they are not worrying about me, but they are considering that in the future they may have a Minister of Railways of their own. However, may I say in all seriousness that if this bill is going to do what we hope it will, bring about a better condition and more economical operation of the Canadian National Railways, saving the people of this country immense sums of money, I do not mind particularly whether it wipes out my duties or not. I have no apology to make for the work I have done as Minister of Railways and Canals. I am not particularly modest ordinarily, yet I have not claimed that I have done anything out of the ordinary as minister; nor am I ashamed of what I have done. But if this bill means economies in public expenditure, though it affects incidentally any functions of mine, I am quite agreeable.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 16—Cooperative measures, plans and arrangements by C.N.R. and C.P.R.

Mr. HEENAN: If the minister will turn to page 9 he will find where the railroad companies are directed to agree to certain operations. At line 11:

> They are further directed that whenever they shall so agree they shall endeavour to provide, as part of such measure, plan or arrangement or otherwise, for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of National Railways and Pacific Railways, respectively, of such employment as may be incident to the operation of such measure, plan or arrangement.

I believe this is intended as a sincere attempt to apportion the employment between the men of the two companies. But how can that be done? Is it to be done by the trustees or the management themselves? Have the employees representatives anything to do with it? Will it be by seniority, or age, or fitness? If a train is cut off or works closed around Montreal or Halifax, if for instance, the Canadian National close works or cut off a train around Halifax or Montreal, and the Canadian Pacific do something similar around Winnipeg, how is the employment going to be apportioned? We have on our railroads, as the minister knows, seniority in districts. For instance there might be three groups of men, the Canadian National, the old Grand Trunk—they have their own seniority—the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific. How would it be possible to dovetail these men in in proportion to the amount of work left to be done? It is almost impossible. But there is nothing in this act providing for any consultation with the representatives of the employees. I think the minister might well consider that.

I have here an amendment to offer for the purpose of assisting in the carrying out of the purpose of this section:

That there be added after the word "arrangement" at the end of subsection (1) the following words:

"But in no event shall such measure, plan or arrangement become operative until the representatives of the employees affected have been given sixty days' notice."

I do not object to the minister or his legal advisers changing these words in any way so long as what I have in mind is carried out.

I believe that when a company come to the point of making these mergers or giving running rights or closing shops or yards, they will very likely say to the representatives of the employees: Now we will want so many men. We had 200 men before, we will now require only 100, you give us these men according to your own rules and regulations. But there is no provision whatever for that in the bill. It simply directs that the railroad company shall do this, without any provision for consultation with the men's representatives. Without that it is simply impossible to cooperate.

I would also point out why I would like to see that sixty days' notice provided for. Take for example the trains that were taken off between Ottawa and Toronto and Toronto and Montreal; the men interested or their representatives were given practically a moment's notice. So this amendment I propose is not costing the companies anything, it is simply a method of carrying on as they have been doing for the last fifty years.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I submit with all respect that the proposed amendment is not at all necessary, because both railway companies have agreements with the unions, and as far as rearrangement of the employees is concerned they could not do it without consultation with the heads of the unions. This provision, I am informed, was suggested by some of the labour representatives in the other chamber, and the purpose was this: suppose it were decided that the Canadian Pacific would give up service on a certain branch line, and running rights were taken over a Canadian National branch line to serve the same territory, or something akin to that, it would not be fair that all the men on one railway should be retained in their positions and those on the other railway should lose theirs. The endeavour was that employment should be so rearranged that in any case where abandonment of service took place or a joint service was arranged or anything of the sort, the men on the two railways should be treated fairly. I do not believe there is any possibility of these rearrangements being made without the very thing being done that the hon. gentleman suggests, consultation with the heads of the unions, because as he knows better than I, both railways have agreements with the different running trades and groups of employees. These agreements will not become null and void because of any cooperative measures; the companies will have to live up to them under any rearrangement. So I submit with all respect, and with no particular desire to oppose the amendment, that it is not required, and that the clause in the act is quite sufficient to carry out the proposal brought forward by the hon. gentleman and suggested in the other chamber when the bill was under consideration there.

Mr. HEENAN: I just want to point out to the minister that I have not offered this amendment without grave thought and consultation with others. It is true that the different organizations on the railways hold agreements with the railway companies, but they have no agreements covering a case such as this. So far as I know no organization has an agreement covering the event of running rights being granted over another railroad or the merging of the shops of two or perhaps three lines, such as the old Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific. I entirely agree that it would be impossible to work this out except by consultation with the men, but the minister will observe that there is nothing in the act saying that consultation must take place. The act simply provides that the companies shall endeavour to do so and so. The very fact that these trains were taken off between Montreal and Toronto and Ottawa and Toronto without consulting the men shows that the railways are not giving as much consideration to the men as has been the case in the past.

Mr. MANION: May I point out to my hon. friend what he may remember, though it does not concern the railway on which he is employed, that when the Canadian National coordinated the different lines, the old Canadian Northern, the Intercolonial, the Grand Trunk and so on, they were confronted with the same difficulty. By an arrangement called the Montreal agreement, with which I am sure my hon. friend is familiar, it was arranged that the men would be taken care of so far as possible in a fair and equitable manner. I have no doubt that in whatever rearrangement may take place the railways will endeavour to follow along the lines of the Montreal agreement. I know quite well that this agreement has met with a great deal of opposition from certain men who felt that they were unfairly dealt with, but on the whole it was agreed to as the best arrangement that could be made. It is suggested that if a sixty day notice were inserted it might interfere with the working out of the plan. I hope my hon. friend will think it over; it is almost six o'clock, and I am going to suggest that this clause also stand. Before we rise, however, I should like to ask anyone else who may have an amendment to suggest with regard to section 16 to bring forward that amendment before six o'clock. To carry out that suggestion I will read an amendment which will be moved as subsection (4). It is as follows:

Where the execution or carrying out of such a measure, plan or arrangement involves the doing of any act which by any statute requires the leave, sanction, assent or approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, then, except where otherwise provided in this act, the approval of the said board shall be obtained.

That amendment is entirely in line with what we have suggested, and with some of the suggestions of hon. gentlemen opposite as well. I may add, however, that it was decided upon before those suggestions were made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is in line with what we have been pressing for.

Mr. MANION: That is quite true; I will divide the honours with my right hon. friend, but at all events it was decided upon before those suggestions were made. If any other members have amendments I should like them to be presented now, so that we may have time to think them over.

Mr. HEENAN: I appreciate the kindness of the minister in letting this section stand, but I want to point out to him again so that he may read it in Hansard that the problem to which he referred in connection with the Montreal agreement, of which I have quite full knowledge, was in connection with one set of employees holding seniority on one road. The problem is complicated now by the fact that there are two different railways, and I think the minister will find that my amendment should be accepted.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have no amendment to propose but in connection with the one suggested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River I believe a study of the section itself, with all that is involved, will lead my hon. friend to the conclusion that his amendment will need to go much further than it goes at present. I have not time to discuss the matter fully before six o'clock, but with the general agreements that were prevailing between the railway companies and their employees, with the difference in the agreements between one road and its employees and another road and its employees, which in some cases is very substantial, with the agreement extending over a very wide territory in some lines and a small territory in others, I think this will have to be given very careful consideration if the rights of the employees are to be protected. I cannot pursue this question further this evening, but I think the amendment will have to go further.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, April 20, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

COMPANIES AND CREDITORS

BILL TO FACILITATE COMPROMISES AND ARRANGEMENTS IN CASES OF INSOLVENCY

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 77, to facilitate compromises and arrangements between companies and their creditors.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the present time any company in Canada, whether it be organized under the laws of the Dominion of Canada or under the laws of any of the provinces of Canada, which becomes bankrupt or insolvent is thereby brought under either the Bankruptcy Act or the Winding-up Act. These acts provide for the liquidation of the company under a trustee in bankruptcy in the one case and under a liquidator in the other, and the almost inevitable result is that the organization of the company is entirely disrupted, its good-will depreciated and ultimately lost, and the balance of the assets sold by the trustees or the liquidator for whatever they will bring. There is no mode or method under our laws whereby the creditors of a company may be brought into court and permitted by amicable agreement between themselves to arrange for a settlement or compromise of the debts of the company in such a way as to permit the company effectively to continue its business by its reorganization. Sections 144 and 145 of the Companies Act of Canada provide that the shareholders of a company may meet to adjust the relationship between classes of shares in the company. Several of the provincial acts also contain provisions whereby the shareholders may meet to make compromises and arrangements between the shareholders. Under the British North America Act, bankruptcy and insolvency fall exclusively within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada.

At the present time some legal method of making arrangements and compromises between creditors and companies is perhaps more necessary because of the prevailing commercial and industrial depression, and it was thought by the government that we should adopt some method whereby compromises might be carried into effect under the supervision of the courts without utterly destroying the company or its organization, without loss of good-will and without forcing the improvident sale of its assets. Therefore, we have studied carefully the provisions of the English Companies Act of 1929. This act contains a provision to permit such compromises and arrangements with creditors and I should like to read section 153 of that act upon which this bill is based. It reads:

153.—(1) Where a compromise or arrangement is proposed between a company and its creditors or any class of them, or between the company and its members or any class of them, the court may, on the application in a summary way of the company or of any creditor or member of the company, or, in the case of a company being wound up, of the liquidator, order a meeting of the creditors or class of creditors, or of the members of the company or class of members, as the case may be, to be summoned in such manner as the court directs.

(2) If a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors or class of creditors, or members or class of members, as the case may be, present and voting either in person or by proxy at the meeting, agree to any compromise or arrangement, the compromise or arrangement shall, if sanctioned by the court, be binding on all the creditors or the class of creditors, or on the members or class of members, as the case may be, and also on the company or, in the case of a company in the course of being wound up, on the liquidator and contributories of the company.

In attempting to draft an act which will certainly be within the legislative competence of the parliament of Canada we felt that we should not seemingly entrench upon provincial jurisdiction so far as to provide for compromises between classes of shareholders of provincial companies, and therefore we have provided in this bill, which I am about to introduce, that the provincial law shall apply in respect of provincial companies in so far the the compromise may affect the shareholders, but we provide also for the convening of a meeting of creditors of any company which is bankrupt or insolvent under supervision of the court, so that, if possible, an amicable compromise or arrangement may be arrived at; and, in so far as such compromise or arrangement may necessitate with respect to provincial companies compromises or arrangements between classes of shareholders we have authorized the court to proceed conjointly under this proposed act and the provincial acts for the purpose of convening meetings of shareholders or classes of shareholders.

The bill as drafted is quite simple. It seems to the government very necessary that such a measure should be introduced, and I commend it to the careful consideration of the members of the house.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many postmasters have been dismissed for political partisanship (a) in the province of Quebec; (b) in all other sections of the country, since November 1, 1932?

2. How many of these postmasters have been replaced temporarily or permanently by a person who had lodged a complaint or given evidence against them?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. (a) 17; (b) 16.

2. 10.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

ALBERTA POST OFFICES—REVENUE

Mr. LUCAS:

1. What was the total revenue for each of the past five years from post offices at the following points in Alberta, Banff, Camrose, Drumheller, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer, and Wetaskiwin?

2. What remuneration did postmasters receive at each of the above points, for said years, by way of a cash salary?

3. Where postmasters did not receive a cash salary, what remuneration did they receive at each of said points, by way of total commissions, box rents, or any other form of remuneration allowed by the department for each of said years?

4. Does the government supply buildings, office equipment, including postal boxes, etc., at each of above points?
5. How many assistants were employed at each of said points, for each of above years?
6. Who pays said assistants?
7. What salary do they receive?
8. What salary is paid to the postmasters at Calgary and Edmonton?

THE GOLD STANDARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if, in view of what transpired in the United States yesterday and to-day in regard to the gold basis, we may hope that the government may change its policy in the very near future in regard to the gold basis, managed currency, and the control and expansion of credit.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): If I were to make any reply offhand, it would be to say that the situation referred to by my hon. friend is rather a vindication of the attitude which has been taken by the government heretofore.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I ask the Minister of Marine if the government intends to introduce the Shipping Act in whole or in part during the present session?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I understand that some amendments may be brought before the Senate and the house before the end of the session, but the revision of the whole act has been postponed until next session.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Will there be an opportunity given next year for the house itself before a special committee to investigate the provisions of the bill?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say at this session just exactly what will take place next session.

Mr. NEILL: Will the shipping bill to be introduced deal with coastal certificates?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Does my hon. friend refer to amendments to the Shipping Act?

Mr. NEILL: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say positively, but I think that the amendments which will be brought before the house will mostly concern the coasting trade in Canada.

[Mr. Lucas.]

SURVEY OF NATIONAL PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask the Minister of Marine if anything is going to be done about Sir Alexander Gibb's report with regard to the national ports? Will there be any legislation or any change in any respect?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): I understand that the Prime Minister answered such a question a few days ago.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, he transferred it to my hon. friend.

Mr. POULIOT: We want an answer from the Minister of Marine.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand that upon representations the bill following Sir Alexander Gibb's report on the national ports of this country will also be postponed until next session.

ADVANCES TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Yesterday the Prime Minister said that he would see that the house was given as much as possible of the correspondence on file between the provinces and the Dominion government respecting financial arrangements. I would ask my right hon. friend who is leading the house, or the Minister of Finance, if he would make sure before the Prime Minister takes his little trip to Washington to see the president about reciprocity and other matters, that the Prime Minister gives the house all the correspondence that is available.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): The Prime Minister is detained to-day for a short time but I shall speak to him about it.

FRUIT MARKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he is contemplating a revision of the Fruit Marks Act this session?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I cannot make a statement in that connection as yet.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Pension Act to give effect to certain recommendations of the committee appointed to investigate the administration of the act; to provide for the elimination of various provisions relating to the pension tribunal; and for an increase in the number of members of the commission and to prescribe their tenure of office; for the continuation of the pension appeal court as a court of appeal and of review; for the appointment of an ad hoc judge as a member of the pension appeal court and his remuneration; for the appointment of a travelling inspector of the veterans' bureau, and of pension counsel, and a reviewing officer; for the payment of awards by the comptroller of the treasury, and generally to simplify and improve procedure under the act.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Explain.

Mr. MacLAREN: I wish to take this opportunity of making a preliminary statement regarding the resolution which we have just heard read from the chair, perhaps not in any detail for it is probably the wish of the house that the subject matter of the resolution should be more fully explained at a later stage.

The resolution proposes certain amendments to the Pension Act. The amendments relate especially to a certain portion of the Pension Act, namely, that dealing with its administration. In September of last year the government appointed a special committee to inquire into the administration of the Pension Act. It was composed in all of eleven members. Five were representatives of veterans' organizations, five were representatives of the different branches of the Department of Pensions and National Health, and Mr. Justic Rinfret of the Supreme Court of Canada acted as chairman. So far as I am aware the committee was composed differently from any I previously recall. It met in Ottawa, and over a period of about six weeks heard witnesses from various parts of Canada, after which a final report was submitted to the government. During the course of the meetings it was found that on account of the urgent necessity of his attendance to duties in the Supreme court, the chairman could not continue to act. Mr. Justice Audette took his place, and completed the duties which fell to the chairman of the committee.

The report of the committee was submitted in three parts. While in matters of detail there are indications of some division of opinion, yet in connection with larger and more important matters there is substantial agreement. I am making a general statement, and am not speaking absolutely. I believe I am speaking correctly however when I state that in connection with important matters of principle there is general agreement. The reference to the committee, in the terms of the order in council, was to examine and report on the administration of the Pension Act. Since that time the report has been printed and distributed to hon. members.

The appointment of the committee, and the hearings before it were due, to a great extent, to representations made to the government by allied organizations, to the effect that there was dissatisfaction due to delay in making decisions, congestion in the different courts, and an undue number of appeals to the pension appeal court. There were other troubles, but I believe I have indicated the three chief ones. The attention of the committee was directed naturally, to the special conditions about which complaint had been made. The resolution now before us sets out the nature of the amendments proposed, and in connection with which I shall mention briefly the more important features.

At the present time there are three adjudicating bodies administering the Pension Act. There is the board of pension commissioners, the pension tribunal and the pension appeal court. Under the amendment it is proposed that there be only two adjudicating bodies, namely the board of pension commissioners and the pension appeal court. Under these circumstances the pension tribunal, which has been functioning for a few years and still functions, will cease to operate. On the other hand there will be an increase in the personnel of the board of pension commissioners. Then there will be provision for the enlargement of the pension appeal court, if necessary. In any case it will be arranged so that there may be two courts sitting at the same time in order to expedite and dispose of the business. One of the essential features of the pension tribunal has been preserved, namely that a quorum of two shall be what one might term a travelling board, so that when necessary those quorums may proceed through the country acting as travelling boards, as now obtains under the tribunal. Secondly, those boards will have the right to make a decision. The two essential features of the tribunal as it now exists will be safeguarded and preserved.

There are one or two further points which I might mention before moving the adoption of the resolution. The first is in regard to the reviewing officer. The objection has been taken frequently in the house that the official or officials who take appeals should not be subject to the pension board or to the minister. The provision which will appear in the bill is that this officer, known as the reviewing officer, shall first be a medical man so that he may determine on questions of disability. On his advice appeals shall or shall not be taken. Secondly, he is to receive direction from the president of the appeal court.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is only in regard to crown appeals.

Mr. MacLAREN: I am speaking of cases upon which decisions have been made favourable to the applicant. Of course applicants who have not been successful are always at liberty within a certain time to take an appeal.

I think possibly the house has heard enough of the details now, I would like to make this general statement, that there are a number of provisions, of amendments, which will I think go far to expedite and simplify the machinery, so that matters can move more rapidly in the future. There will be less delay. Personally I recognize that there has been delay. I do not hold the officials responsible for it, I regard the impossible amount of work as the essential cause. In any case the amendments will have the effect of disposing of thousands of cases that are almost dormant yet cannot be removed. Applicants who are not taking further action will be communicated with, will be given ample time to express their views as to whether or not they desire to proceed, and if they are not proceeding then their cases will be removed. In this way much will be done, I feel, to clear up the work more promptly and satisfactorily. This will go far towards disposing of the complaints that have been made, especially as regards delays in giving decisions.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): In rising at this time for a brief discussion of the resolution submitted by the hon. Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren), I do so not with any idea of deferring the passing of the resolution, nor indeed of discussing its merits or demerits, because I realize that these can be discussed better when the definite and particular legislation based on the resolution is before the house. There are however two or three considerations that I think call for attention at the present time.

The resolution is divided into seven parts. It refers to the elimination of various provisions relating to the pension tribunal. This is not the time to discuss the pension tribunals, which have been functioning consequent on the legislation of 1930, but my own judgment, after mature observation, has been and is that the pension tribunals have been the best friends that the exservicemen of Canada have had since 1930. So I am indeed glad to hear the observation of the minister that in effect the pension tribunals are not being abolished but that their functions are being merged with those of the enlarged board of pension commissioners with their travelling quorums functioning in various parts of the dominion. That is the second part of the resolution.

The third refers to the continuation of the pension appeal court as a court of appeal and review. I presume that new title has something to do with the institution of a new officer who is to be appointed under the terms of the legislation to be introduced.

The fourth provision is for the appointment of an administrative judge as a member of the appeal court. I think that provision will command the entire sympathy and support of this house.

The fifth is for the appointment of a travelling inspector of the veterans' bureau. That, I think, is one of the recommendations made by General Ross in part II of the excellent report submitted by him.

The sixth provision is for the appointment of pension counsel, who I understand, are to take over, in an altered form, some of the duties of the commission counsel appointed under the 1930 legislation. Speaking for myself, I am very glad indeed to see that the commission counsel are to be finally abolished. The appointment of a reviewing officer must be looked upon with a great deal of care by all members of this house, because as I understood the remarks of the minister, under the legislation to be introduced a single medical officer is to be appointed who is going to have complete power to advise the crown in regard to which cases should be appealed and which should not. I think this may be—I am not saying it is—giving to one individual powers of a very far-reaching and important character.

Mr. MacLAREN: May I say that he will be under the direction and control of the president of the pension appeal court.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Well, I am not going to discuss details at the present time. I have every respect for the president of the pension appeal court, but to my mind that would be an objection to the reviewing officer. When an appeal is going to a judicial body, a court of final instance, and the president of that court has under his control the person who is to decide whether the appeal should go to that body for final judgment, I think there is a fundamental weakness there. However, I am not crticizing it at the present moment.

The seventh provision is for the payment of awards by the comptroller of the treasury; which, as I understand it, is transferring from the department the authority for paying pensions or awards made by the tribunals.

The history of pension legislation in this parliament ever since 1919 has been a very fortunate one indeed. It has been entirely removed from every suggestion of partisanship. We have had, I think, nine select committees of this parliament in various years considering all possible phases of pension administration. We had a royal commission under the chairmanship of my hon. friend the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) who submitted to this parliamen a most voluminous and excellent report upon which the legislation of 1923 was based; we had the legislation of 1930 resulting from the very excellent work of a committee presided over by my good friend the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). So if there have been mistakes in regard to the administration of the Pension Act they have not been intentional mistakes on the part of either side of the House of Commons. But the point which I rose to mention is that every single important revision of the Pension Act in previous sessions has been submitted to a committee of this House of Commons. Legislation based upon these seven provisions to which I have referred is to my mind nothing less than a complete recasting of the Pension Act. That act, as hon. members know, is one of the most complicated acts we have upon our statute books at the present time. I agree with my hon. friend the minister in regard to the splendid abilities of the gentlemen who formed that committee whose report I have before me, but we have now in this house an example of the consequences of introducing to this house a very complicated piece of legislation namely the railway bill. That bill is based on the report of a very eminent commission, yet we find a marked division of opinion among hon. gentlemen on all sides of the house in regard to its provisions. So I suggest to the hon. Minister of Pensions and National Health that before this bill is thrown into committee of the whole it should be referred to a committee of this house, not to hear further evidence, not to function as the committee whose report we have before us, but to examine the details of the bill, to call in experts, if they desire, either from the department or the associated veterans. But I think it is vital to the success of this legislation, in case there may be some controversial sections, not to have it thrown into committee of the whole without hon. members on either side of the house being thoroughly familiar with it. In all sincerity, in the interest of the legislation and to preserve the nonpartisan attitude of former years, I suggest that when this bill is ready for presentation it be referred to a small committee of this house, of members thoroughly familiar with the details of pension administration and legislation, so that if possible we may have the unanimous judgment of the House of Commons in regard to what is to my mind one of the most important pieces of legislation in Canada.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I only wish to add a few words to what has been said by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). As I understand it, although I have had no information with respect to the provisions of the bill, essentially it is to destroy and do away with the principal provisions of the pension legislation of 1930. I do not think it is my duty or that the burden should be placed upon me to defend that legislation, because it was passed unanimously by the committee that dealt with it; it was confirmed unanimously by this house and received the approbation of all soldier bodies throughout the country. I must say, however, that before taking away from that legislation its most important feature, namely the right of the returned soldier to have his day in court and to be heard by a tribunal as to the justice or otherwise of his case, we perhaps should have given the matter more consideration and should have had a more unanimous report.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is carefully preserved in the bill.

Mr. POWER: I am very glad to learn from the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the measure that this right is preserved in the bill, but I wonder why the pension tribunals are to be abolished. Is it simply because we wish to change the name? If that is the reason I do not know why so much fuss was made about this bill. If we are preserving the essential functions of the pension tribunals and simply changing their status, putting them under the board of pension commissioners instead of leaving them independent tribunals, then I think perhaps we have very strong reason for opposing this bill. The tribunals and appeal courts were established in order to get away from the final jurisdiction of the board of pension commissioners, which in the minds of the soldiers throughout the country had not been functioning satisfactorily. After having read over the report of the commission, which was composed of very able gentlemen, it appears to me that only a minority of the members recommended the action now proposed by the government. However, I will leave that point for discussion when the bill is brought before the house.

In support of what has been said by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), if the correct information has been given to us, namely that there will be some sixty or seventy sections in this proposed bill, I respectfully submit to the minister that it will be extremely difficult to discuss these sections in this House of Commons. There is no legislation on our statute books more complicated and more difficult of understanding to the lay mind—and to the legal mind as well—than the Pension Act. It requires constant study and application, and to throw this matter into the House of Commons without some preliminary study having been given to it will, I think, bring about the evil effects pointed out by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre. If the minister has not definitely made up his mind on that score I would ask him, in the interests of the legislation, in the interests of the soldier, and to keep to the practice followed hitherto in this house, to reconsider the matter and, if it is at all possible, form some small committee which need not hear witnesses but which could take means to be informed as to the reasons why these new sections are being introduced into the act. I very much fear that unless something of the kind is done we will have misunderstandings as to the purport of the legislation, and with all the goodwill in the world and the greatest desire to co-operate, which I am sure will be found on all sides of the house, those misunderstandings will occur.

There is one other matter to which I should like to direct attention. I would ask the minister, and doubtless he will reply when we reach the committee stage, whether this bill will reduce the number of pensions granted to ex-soldiers or whether it will increase them; in other words I would ask whether the purport of this act is to be more generous or less generous to the ex-soldiers. If it is designed to save money I think perhaps the minister should tell us. If it is designed further to extend the application of pensions and bring more returned men within the scope of the act I think we should know it. As to the new machinery provided, I understand that eight or ten new pension commissioners are to be appointed.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. MacLAREN: No, not ten new ones; there will be eight in all.

Mr. POWER: There are to be eight pension commissioners, so there will be five new members of the board.

Mr. MacLAREN: No, four new ones.

Mr. POWER: There are three members at present and the chief medical officer? There will be four new members who will replace the eight or ten members of the present tribunals, and to that extent I am sure there will be a certain saving of the public money. Apart from that, however, I am at a loss to understand what saving there will be. If we are accomplishing this saving by placing the control of pensions once more under the jurisdiction of the board of pension commissioners I very much fear that this move will not give satisfaction, at any rate to the people most concerned, the returned soldiers.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (Toronto South): With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the speeches we have just heard from the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) show the utter futility of attempting to discuss something of which we know nothing. They surmised that the bill would contain something, and went on to say that in that event it would be right or wrong. If we are to take information we may gather, not surreptitiously but by conversation and discussion, and consider the resolution in that light we are not helping the measure in the slightest degree; we are only stirring up objections that perhaps will not otherwise come to the surface.

However, I do agree with one point brought up by each of the hon. members who spoke; that is, that we should consider very carefully the way we take up the provisions of this bill. This is a complicated matter; those of us who have had to do with pensions know that the provisions of the act are many and that often they are difficult to reconcile. It should be made as clear as possible, for it is a bill that we should have so plain that he who runs may read if that can be accomplished. It comes up for consideration by men who are not lawyers and who perhaps are not able to comprehend all its provisions, so I submit that we should use every effort to make it quite clear. I do not propose, however, to discuss hypothetically the provisions of this bill. There are many suggestions I might make at the moment, but I do commend to the very serious consideration of the minister the suggestion that every opportunity should be given to have this matter properly considered in committee, though whether that should be a select committee of the house or the committee of the whole we do not know and will not know until we see the provisions of the bill and see what difficulties will be encountered in its consideration.

Mr. MacLAREN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The minister will close the debate if he speaks now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Stirling in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does the minister intend to proceed with the bill this afternoon?

Mr. MacLAREN: I was going to ask leave to introduce the bill. That is as far as it is intended to go.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister be good enough to give me an answer now to some of the questions I submitted to him a moment ago? What will be the effect from the standpoint of economy in administration after this bill has been passed?

Mr. MacLAREN: There will be considerable economy; I have been told it will be something like $400,000. But that is not the point.

Mr. POWER: That is the question I am asking.

Mr. MacLAREN: The question has been asked, why have this legislation? Is it because it will be more favourable or less favourable to the applicant? My answer is, that has nothing whatever to do with it. It is not whether it is more favourable or less favourable; it is a question of what is fair and right, no matter what happens. I have explained that the action of the government followed the presentation of views by representatives of the allied organizations, who asked that the administration of the act be reconsidered by a committee; so that primarily and basically the action taken and the amendments now presented are the outcome of representations made to the government by veterans' organizations.

Mr. POWER: The minister has not answered my question and for the moment I will not discuss it. I would refer now to the last statement he makes, that this legislation is the result of representations made by the associated veterans. I suppose he refers to a memorandum presented to the government by the associated veterans in January, 1932.

Mr. MacLAREN: I cannot give the date, but I know that they appeared before the government.

Mr. POWER: My information is that they appeared before the government in January, 1932, and submitted a memorandum entitled:

> Legislative and other proposals affecting ex-service men and women in Canada, submitted to the Prime Minister and members of the government of Canada by The Army & Navy Veterans in Canada; The Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League; The Amputations Association of the Great War; The Canadian Pensioners Association of the Great War; The Sir Arthur Pearson Club of Blinded Sailors and Soldiers, January, 1932.

I believe there were also representations from the non-affiliated veterans of Canada.

I do not find anywhere in that memorandum a recommendation that the tribunals as such be abolished, nor do I find anything referring to a reviewing officer, nor anything which would tend to show that the soldiers, at that time at any rate, favoured placing the full jurisdiction in these matters under the control of the board of pension commissioners. As a matter of fact, the commission which was appointed following these representations and, as the minister very well says, as a result of these representations, was very far from unanimous in its findings. I have not before me the report of the commission but as I understand three or perhaps four made one report, three others made another report, three more another report, and perhaps there was a fourth. Generally speaking, however, the majority of the commission was not in favour of legislation such as is about to be introduced. The majority, taking the three or four reports, in other words, the consensus of the majority of the members of the commission did not favour legislation such as this.

Mr. MacLAREN: In toto?

Mr. POWER: Well, the principal points of the legislation brought down by the minister to-day were not approved by any but a minority of the commission. Am I right?

Mr. MacLAREN: No, I do not think so. The hon. gentleman will find that there was a majority in most cases.

Mr. POWER: Was there a majority in favour of the abolition of the pension tribunal?

Mr. MacLAREN: Six. It occurs in two reports.

Mr. POWER: Six out of how many?

Mr. MacLAREN: Eleven.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister say positively that six members of this commission reported in favour of the abolition of the pension tribunal? I have not the report by me but I am somewhat surprised, because I was under the impression that that was not the tenor of their report. Now to refer to the question I asked at the beginning, as to whether or not the tendency of this legislation will be to make it easier for veterans to obtain pension, or more difficult, will the minister answer that?

Mr. MacLAREN: The machinery will be simplified and improved, so that it will be easier for applicants to get their applications dealt with. It will not change the basis for pension one way or the other, but it will expedite matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the minister take into consideration the suggestion made on this side to refer the bill to a committee of the house?

Mr. MacLAREN: Certainly; it will be considered.

Mr. POWER: Is there anything in the bill dealing with the section of the Pension Act which consecrates the principle that, whatever the earning capacity of the veteran who is receiving pension may become, his pension is not to be interfered with? In the Pension Act there is a section—I am informed it is section 24, subsection 4—which provides that the veteran shall not be deprived of pension nor have his pension reduced as a result of his having become more proficient in his earning capacity in any profession which he may follow.

Mr. MacLAREN: That point is not dealt with. As I mentioned some time ago, these amendments deal with the administration under the Pension Act, and as regards the awarding of pensions, the grounds for pensions, and the amount of pensions, those are questions that are outside the scope of the report and are not dealt with under this.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Having unfortunately been absent while the resolution was under discussion, I will not discuss it now but will reserve until the bill is brought down whatever I have to say. I should like to support very strongly the suggestion which has been made, I believe from this side of the house, that the bill to be founded upon this resolution should be referred to a special committee. This matter is of tremendous importance and the implications are so wide that they could not be discussed with intelligence in the committee of the whole.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. MacLaren thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 78, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 19, consideration in committee of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and for other purposes—Mr. Manion—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): We are dealing with section 16, subsection 1.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When the committee rose last evening it was discussing an amendment which had been suggested by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. At that time I pointed out that I felt the amendment did not go far enough. The latter part of this subsection reads:

> They are further directed that whenever they shall so agree they shall endeavour to provide, as part of such measure, plan or arrangement or otherwise, for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of National railways and Pacific railways, respectively, of such employment as may be incident to the operation of such measure, plan or arrangement.

That subsection refers to the amalgamation of services, whether the running of trains, the operation of shops and stations, or whatever it may be. It will be noticed that the question of the allocation of employment is left to the officers of the two railway companies with the direction that they shall endeavour to provide for equitable distribution of employment. It seems to me that if the interests of the railway employees are to be protected, something will have to be included in this section to make the equitable distribution of employment obligatory or binding. Many years ago I had some experience in these matters, although in a much less complicated form. In those days the railways were taking over other small lines to incorporate in their general operations and the question as to how the employees of the small lines were to be dealt with was constantly coming up for consideration. In a case of this kind it would be impossible, under the agreements existing at present between the employees and the railway companies, for the management of the roads to do the things suggested by this section. There should be some obligatory provision to provide for the proper allocation of employment.

Let me give one or two illustrations. It might be decided that the Canadian National shops and the Canadian Pacific shops in Ottawa be amalgamated. I am not suggesting that that will happen, but it is a possibility. The work would be concentrated in one set of shops and there is now no authority vested in the officials of the railways to take employees from the National shops and put them into the Pacific shops, or vice versa. This could not be done as long as there were sufficient employees on the lists of the one company to do all the work involved. Another illustration would be in the running of trains, say from Ottawa to Toronto or Montreal. One train might be taken off leaving the other train running over the line of the other railway to do all the work. Let us assume that the train left would run over the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The officials of the railways cannot decide that two Canadian National and two Canadian Pacific crews will be utilized. Under the agreements now existing, the Canadian Pacific men would have the ultimate decision. The same would apply to the Canadian National if it were decided to run the train over that line.

It seems to me that if there is to be equitable distribution of employment, some plan must be worked out by which a representative of the men will be clothed with authority to allocate the work upon some basis of seniority or percentage; otherwise, we will be having a continuous dispute between the employees of the two roads and injustices will certainly be done. I feel that the words "endeavour to provide" should be struck out and "shall provide" substituted therefor. There should also be an added clause to provide that the accredited representatives of each class of employee concerned would have authority to allocate employment equitably between the several classes of men involved. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is more directly involved in this matter and has been more recently concerned than I have been, and I expected that he would have brought forward an amendment which would cover this point. Unless these things are provided for, I believe there will be a very serious effect upon the employees of the railways.

Mr. GEARY: Does not the hon. member think that the word "respectively" in line 15 provides for distribution as between the two companies?

Mr. NICHOLSON: My point is that under the agreements existing between the companies and the men, the companies have no authority to do any such thing as is herein provided. If two shops at any terminal are brought together and all the work of the two railways is to be done in a National railway shop, so long as there were sufficient employees on the list, perhaps not in active employment—there are hundreds of men on the list who are not now in employment—they would have first preference in getting a job and taking extra work before a single man could be transferred from the other shop, and any who were transferred would come in as new employees altogether under existing arrangements. The same is true with regard to train service men, bridge men, track men and any other class of employee covered under the agreements now in existence. The agreements as between the employees of one company and the employees of the other are vastly different, covering different districts, and varying as to seniority rights and all that sort of thing. If the bill is left in its present form there will be utter and complete confusion and the interests of the men will not be properly taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): May I observe to the committee that we are discussing subclause 1 of clause 16, to which an amendment was proposed yesterday by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, which I understand was not put. I shall now read it. It is moved by Mr. Heenan that subclause 1 of section 16 be amended by adding after the word "arrangement" in line 17 the words:

But in no event shall such measure, plan or arrangement become operative until the representatives of the employees affected have been given sixty days' notice.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If there is no objection at this stage I was going to make some observations on the question of compulsory cooperation. I wonder if the minister or the Prime Minister would entertain the idea, if they feel so strongly on the question of compulsory cooperation, of having a clause providing for it inserted in the bill, but providing also that it shall not come into effect at present or until they think it is desirable, and then only upon proclamation by the governor in council. I may say that I have put bills of that nature through the Saskatchewan provincial house, and also through this house. We wanted a provision of that nature in certain acts, but we did not know whether it would be required or not, and so we inserted it and then provided that it would only be brought into effect by proclamation.

The reason I make this suggestion is two-fold. Out in the west we have been fed up, if I may use that term, on the policy enunciated by some of the members of the wheat pool favouring compulsory cooperation. To a great many of the contract signers of the pool such a policy was abhorrent, so much so that they started up an organization against it and defeated it, and that was the end of that campaign. The case might not be wholly parallel to this one, but nevertheless some of us feel quite strongly that so long as the two railways are doing such excellent work in the way of cooperation as they are at the present time, even though it is under the disciplining effect of the times, it might be wiser to let them run along just as they are doing, but always conscious of the fact that there is a provision in the law that the government may at any time in their wisdom invoke the provision for compulsory cooperation if the railways do not continue their good work in voluntarily cooperating. Such a course would be very gratifying to myself. I have no authority to speak for anybody else. The thought has just come to me now, and I make that suggestion. If it will not work in this case I shall be glad to be enlightened as to why it will not work, but if it will work I think it would help to bridge quite a gulf between this side of the house and the ministerial benches.

To repeat, my suggestion is that the principle of compulsory cooperation be inserted in the law but that it be invoked only by proclamation at the instance of the government, and in the meantime let the railway companies run along as they are doing now. They are doing magnificently, as was so eloquently and forcibly described by the minister in his very first speech on this subject. Why spoil that splendid work of voluntary cooperation by saying, "You must cooperate," when they are already doing it? You know how cranky and cussed human nature naturally is, and how you hate to be told to do a thing when you are doing it. That is very much the case here. The railways are being told by law that they must cooperate when everybody testifies that they are cooperating magnificently now in a voluntary way. As a matter of diplomacy, as a matter of gratifying that trait of human nature that exists in all of us, and in some more than others, it seems to me that it would be the part of wisdom, as well as good parliamentary tactics in connection with this knotty question, to adopt such a course as I have suggested. I admit that I am against compulsory cooperation. The courts in Saskatchewan have decided that there "ain't no such critter," if I may use that language and not attribute it to the bench. Injunctions have been taken out on the ground that compulsory cooperation was contradictory in its terms, and judgment has been given accordingly. So I have authority for my view. Unfortunately I have not the judgment here, but it was given by no less a judge than a member of the appeal court of Saskatchewan. With that as my authority, and with my experience of the terrible conflict that ran for years through the farmers in the wheat pool on the subject of compulsion, I say that there is something fundamentally unsound and undesirable in the principle of compulsory cooperation. If the railways will not cooperate, then as a last resort the government can say: We shall have regretfully to invoke this compulsory feature which has been provided in the law.

I have no motion to make, Mr. Chairman. I am simply making this suggestion. Maybe it is no good at all, but I know that it has worked out in both provincial and federal legislation. On one occasion we had to invoke the clause, and in the other case we did not. That is all I have to say at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: The suggestion which has been made by the hon. gentleman regarding the adding of a clause to the bill providing that Part III shall not come into force except by proclamation has been considered in another chamber, with the result that it was not favourably entertained—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was discussed there?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The vote against it was very small, only one, I think; I am speaking subject to correction.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Pretty close, but I had not heard of it previously.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the observations made by the hon. gentleman are worthy of every consideration.

This affords me the opportunity to say that there has been some misapprehension on the part of many people as to the effect of this part of the bill. Some have thought that this was a provision in the law to dragoon the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the corporation as such, to do what they did not want to do regardless of what the views of the shareholders might be. Now, first of all, the law provides that whatever action is to be taken is action that is favourable to both roads. That is, it must be of benefit to both in the minds at least of those responsible for the setting up of the tribunal.

Secondly, a tribunal will never be set up unless there is a difference of opinion between the two roads as to whether or not it is desirable to do some particular thing. One road may think that the benefits that will result from taking a given course are not anything like what have been suggested by the other road; the other road may think that the benefits may be very great. It is not compulsion in the ordinary sense of the term, but an arbitration between two contending views—the view of one company that the benefits would be very great, and the view of the other that the benefits would be, we will say, very trifling. In such an event a tribunal may be set up in the manner provided by the act to arbitrate, to resolve and determine the differences between the two roads.

As I see it at the moment, in view of what the hon. gentleman has said and in view of what has been said by others, the suggestion that compulsory arbitration should not be provided for in the bill except by proclamation would merely mean that when a difference arose that was so acute that it could not be disposed of by compromise between the contending parties, an arbitral tribunal should be set up to resolve that difficulty. The suggestion is worthy of every consideration. Between now and Monday, namely on Saturday, when there is an opportunity to consider these matters in full, the council will carefully consider what has been said. It may be that possibly in view of the strong opinion expressed by the hon. member, and by others who have discussed the matter in another chamber, such action should be taken. We will give it every consideration. At any rate debate is not closed on the section.

Mr. POWER: Lest the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Melville should appear to be the opinion of all hon. members on this side of the house, may I say—and I am not doing so out of factious opposition—that the arbitral tribunal feature commended itself most to me when I voted for the second reading of the bill. I do believe if there is anything in the legislation worthy of being retained, it is exactly that provision.

Mr. BENNETT: This will retain it. It is only a question of when the law becomes effective.

Mr. POWER: I am not making this statement with a view to being disagreeable or indulging in any carping criticism, but it seems to me that a tribunal which would be set up more or less automatically on the application of one or other of the railroads would be more in the interests of both railroads than one set up by proclamation of the government. Such a tribunal would be more in the interests of the government itself, and those of the railroads.

Mr. BENNETT: To correct my hon. friend, may I say that the tribunal would not be set up by proclamation; the law would become effective to enable it to be set up.

Mr. EULER: On that point may I ask this question: If the government should adopt the suggestion made by the hon. member for Melville, would it then by proclamation bring into being a tribunal each time a dispute arose, or once they proclaimed the act in force would it be in force from that time forward? It would not be proclaimed at intervals?

Mr. BENNETT: No, a statute could not be in force off and on.

Mr. EULER: Unless it were framed in that way.

Mr. BENNETT: And that would be a very difficult thing to do. The statute would at once become effective, and be binding for the future. The tribunals, of course, are separate tribunals with respect to each dispute. I may say that giving the matter my own personal view I was of the opinion that it was not desirable to provide for it coming into force by proclamation. In that respect I shared the view held by the hon. member for Quebec South. However, I have listened to a great many arguments, including that of the hon. member for Melville, as to the desirability of having it come into force by proclamation. As I have said, my personal view was the other way.

Mr. POULIOT: Yesterday afternoon I showed that section 5 of the bill is not in accordance with the report of the royal commission, and that there is nothing in that report with regard to the removal from office of the trustees, as stipulated in section 7 of the third draft of the bill. Therefore the government cannot pretend that the bill is entirely in accordance with the report.

In regard to section 16 of the bill the report of the royal commission at paragraph 210 is as follows:

> We have emphasized the fact that a principal weakness of the past decade has been the failure of the railways to act together in their own interests and in the interests of the public. It is not enough that each should take all practicable measures of economy in respect of its own system. There must be joint action with a view to savings in the wider sphere.

I do not agree with what the commissioners have said with regard to railways not acting together in their own interests and in those of the public. In my view that observation is unfair. Then in paragraph 211 they state:

A statutory duty should be imposed upon the trustees as well as upon the board of directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway that, consistently with the provisions of the existing law and with the recommendations of this report and with the provision of all reasonable services and facilities, they should adopt as soon as practicable such cooperative measures, plans and arrangements as shall, consistent with the proper handling of traffic, be best adapted to the removal of unnecessary or wasteful services or practices, to the avoidance of unwarranted duplication in services of facilities, and to the joint use and operation of all such properties as may conveniently and without undue detriment to either party, be so used.

That is what was said by the commissioners. Then, in the draft of Bill A as it was read the first time in the Senate on October 27, last, subsection (a) and (b) of section 15 contain the definitions of the National company and the Pacific company. We do not find it in part II of the third draft, because it is in section 3 of the preliminary part of the third draft of Bill A. Section 16 of the bill now before us is based on the report of the commissioners, and was amended many times in the Senate.

In the second draft of Bill A, as redrafted by an order of the Senate committee on railways, telegraphs and harbours, the first paragraph of section 16 reads thus:

The National company and the Pacific company, for the purpose of effecting economies and providing for more remunerative operation are directed to attempt forthwith to agree and continuously to endeavour to agree upon such cooperative measures, plans and arrangements as are fair and reasonable and best adapted (with due regard to equitable distribution of burden and advantage as between them) to effect such purposes.

That paragraph of section 16 has been replaced by substituting the following:

The National company, for and on behalf of itself and/or any or all other of its companies and other elements of which National railways as defined by this act is composed, and the Pacific company for and on behalf of itself and/or any or all other of the companies and other elements of which Pacific railways as defined by this act is composed, are for the purposes of effecting economies and providing for more remunerative operation, directed to attempt forthwith to agree and continuously to endeavour to agree, and they respectively are, for and on behalf as aforesaid, authorized to agree, upon such cooperative measures, plans and arrangements as are fair and reasonable and best adapted (with due regard to equitable distribution of burden and advantage as between them) to effect such purposes.

Then, at page 7 of the second draft, at line 27 between the words "company" and "and" the following words shall be inserted:

For and on behalf of themselves respectively and otherwise as by this part of this act authorized.

On the same page 7, line 33, after the word "company's" insert "or National railways."

On the same page at line 36 after the word "company's" insert the words "or Pacific railways."

This is the history of the legislation. I suggested to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways yesterday that whenever a section is studied by the committee the history of the legislation should be made known to the committee in order that each member shall be familiar with what has been done by the commissioners as well as by the Senate. I could not possibly quote what has been said by the hon. gentlemen of the Senate in the house and in the committee about it, but the members of this house can refer to it. It seems to me only fair to submit to the house the history of the legislation, and I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Railways appreciates the assistance it will give. On the other hand may I tell him this, that it is most important for us to have as much information about the Canadian Pacific as we have about the Canadian National. We have little information about the Canadian National and we have none at all about the Canadian Pacific. They have hotels, they have a steamship company, and as is well known these hotels were built, these steamships were put in operation, with capital coming from the profits of the Canadian Pacific railway. That money, instead of being deposited in a special reserve fund, has been used for other purposes, which I will not discuss, but the operation of those new concerns has a direct effect on the management of the railway. This is why it seems to me only fair and reasonable to suggest that the Canadian Pacific should give to the House of Commons whatever information hon. members desire to obtain. It can easily be done. They should have come here and answered such questions the members desire to ask in the public interest. I do not know what veil of secrecy covers the operations of the Canadian Pacific railway and certain operations of the Canadian National. No one, not even the most brilliant amongst us, can give judgment about the railway business without having full information at his command. Otherwise it is a farce to study this bill in committee. I am sure that the hon. Minister of Railways, who usually answers us with a smile, will appreciate that suggestion, and that in the near future every member of the House of Commons will have opportunity to familiarize himself with every detail of the operations of the Canadian Pacific railway as well as of the Canadian National. And if my hon. friend the Minister of Railways appreciates the assistance I am giving him in reciting the history of this legislation I shall be glad to supply him with the same information on the next section.

Mr. HEAPS: This clause deals with the question of men who are likely to be laid off and those who are retained in the service of the railway companies. It directs the companies to make a fair apportionment of the services of men as between the two companies, in case of consolidation of services. Now the first question that arises is: What is a fair apportionment of such employment? Secondly, who is to be responsible for making this apportionment? If this house enacts legislation to create a tribunal or direct a body to make this division of labour, then I am afraid we will get into great difficulties. Personally I think that the less we have to do with this question of apportionment the better it will be, because any legislation that we enact, especially in view of the fact that there are in existence agreements between the railway companies and their men, is bound to get us into difficulties either between the railway companies or between the companies and the men or between ourselves and the employees. So, personally, I would rather leave the question to the companies and the organizations of the men affected; in that way I think we may save ourselves a great deal of trouble. If we take any action we then become responsible for the apportionment. If we had not faith in the men's organizations or the companies to do the fair thing in this respect this might be a proper body to make provision that a fair apportionment be made. But at present the men are satisfied that they can depend on their organizations to do what is right, and therefore I would rather see the matter left in the simplest form possible to save future embarrassment.

Perhaps the minister may have in his possession now particulars of the method by which the apportionment was made in the case of the recent pooling of train services between Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. That may give some idea how the thing was worked.

Mr. MANION: I heartily agree with the remarks of the last speaker. I believe that as the clause is framed it protects the men of both companies as far as it is possible for this legislation to protect them. I have given the matter further consideration since the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) moved his resolution; I have listened to my hon. friend from East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson); I have discussed it with railway men and I am informed that to leave it as it is would be the most practical way of getting beneficial results for those concerned. This may be pointed out, that the two companies—> are further directed that whenever they shall so agree—

>
> On cooperative measures.
>
> —they shall endeavour to provide, as part of such measure, plan or arrangement or otherwise, for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of National railways and Pacific railways, respectively, of such employment as may be incident to the operation of such measure, plan or arrangement.

So the companies are directed to endeavour to see that their employees get a fair and equitable apportionment of the employment, and I know enough about the management of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National to know that both managements are very jealous of the rights of their men and would do everything in their power to see that the employment that remains, if there be some curtailment, would be fairly and equitably divided. I think to attempt to make the clause any stronger would really complicate it so that it would be very difficult of operation.

My hon. friend the member for Kenora-Rainy River moved an amendment yesterday:

> But in no event shall such measure, plan, or arrangement become operative until the representatives of the employees affected have been given sixty days' notice.

I submit that the amendment would hold up the review of any forms of attempted cooperation by the two railways and would not accomplish the end desired to any greater extent than the clause already in the bill.

There is still another point to remember; it is that there may be and no doubt will be forms of cooperation which will save money otherwise than at the expense of the men. Let me explain that by an illustration. Let us suppose two pick-up lines are serving practically the same territory, and we have many cases of that kind in this country. It is decided to abandon one of the lines and both railways are given running rights over the remaining line, without diminishing the number of trains at all. There the saving would be in the cost of maintaining that section of track which was abandoned. It is true that a certain number of men in the section gangs might be let go, but after all there are other matters in connection with maintenance than pick and shovel work; there is the matter of rails, the ties and so on, and a considerable saving would be made. So after listening to the whole discussion I submit with all respect that the clause which has been inserted in the act will accomplish the end desired. My hon. friend from North Winnipeg asked about the arrangement made in regard to the amalgamation of the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial with the Canadian National.

Mr. HEAPS: No, I was referring to the more recent consolidation of services between Montreal and Toronto and Ottawa and Toronto; I thought perhaps the minister might have some information as to how the men were dealt with in that case and what apportionment of labour was made.

Mr. MANION: I am sorry I have not that information; I thought my hon. friend was referring to the original coordination of the different portions of the Canadian National system. My submission is that under this provision, when there had to be a decrease in the number of men each railway would get an equal proportion of the jobs remaining, and those men would be appointed in accordance with their seniority. As my hon. friend pointed out, the seniority of the men is arranged between the unions and the railway companies, so it would merely be a matter of taking the men in the regular order of seniority. The senior men on one line would not prevail over the junior men on the other. If fifty men were to be kept employed on each railway the fifty senior men on the Canadian Pacific and the fifty senior men on the Canadian National would be retained. I think that is all provided for in the act, and I trust that my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River and my hon. friend from East Algoma will accept that provision. I may add, however, that if after the act has been in force for some time it should be found that any injustice was being done that could be remedied by this house, most assuredly I would be one of those to ask that action be taken. I come from a railway city which is served by both lines, and I am most anxious to see that the railway men get justice and a fair deal so far as it is possible to accord it by this act.

Mr. HEENAN: I am still assuming that the minister is sincere in his desire to understand all the complications that really arise with regard to seniority rights. I could give an illustration to show that the case cited by the minister might not work out at all. We might have the two railways running side by side, and when it is decided to abandon one line the railway companies will apportion the employment. The minister says the men will be taken by seniority, and I think probably a good many people who are not acquainted with these complications would look upon it as the minister does. But let us suppose that all the men on one of the lines were senior to all the men on the other line. Then the junior men could not get in at all.

Mr. MANION: I think my hon. friend misunderstands the clause, because it provides that the employment will be divided. I pointed out a moment ago that the senior men on one road would not prevail over the junior men on the other; that the intent of the act is that the men retained on the portion of the road operated jointly, or whatever the case may be, should be divided equally between the two roads. The senior men on the Canadian Pacific would get their proportion of employment and the senior men on the Canadian National would get their proportion.

Mr. HEENAN: This shows the difficulty of legislating along these lines. In that case we would have the junior men of one line coming in to displace the senior men of another line in that particular district. I submit to the minister that this is a complication that cannot be dealt with by legislation, and that is why I submitted my amendment. If it is carried out it will not cost the railroad companies or the government a dollar. Let me point out to the minister once more just what we are doing. Here we are doing something by legislation which I never heard of before; the railway companies themselves, without consultation with the railway employees, will apportion the employment. According to an act of parliament the railway companies can dovetail these men as they wish. A short time ago the minister stated that he had consulted some railway men in this regard. I do not know whether he meant the representatives of the employees, but I have in my hand a letter that was sent to Right Hon. Arthur Meighen when this bill was in the Senate, and this is one of the provisions requested in that letter. It also asks for compensation for employees who may lose their jobs and for other matters with which I have not dealt, because the amendment of the hon. member for North Winnipeg with regard to compensation was declared out of order. Therefore I have only suggested that when any cooperative arrangement is considered, it shall not become operative until the representatives of the men have had sixty days notice. I think I know enough about railroad operation to feel sure that in these cases the companies know what they are going to do two or three months ahead of time. All I want is some provision in this act under which the companies shall advise the railway men of what is going to happen so that they may get together and consult with the management as to what is fair and reasonable.

There are some other points, to which I should like to direct the attention of the minister, which may not have occurred to him. This is a gigantic problem; I am glad he is looking after it instead of myself, because I am sure he will make a better job of it. Even where there are running rights over different sections of the railways, because of our greater motive power and the greater capacity of our rolling stock we will not require so many trains; they will be hauling greater tonnage and there will not be so many men employed. I think it must be taken for granted that after this legislation is passed the train crews all through Canada can give up all thought of operating with much less than full tonnage. There will be a saving in that to the country and the companies, but undoubtedly fewer men will be required, and I want to provide that where these men are to be changed from one part of the country to another or to be dovetailed in the matter of seniority the government should grant them at least sixty days' notice to kiss their families goodbye.

An hon. MEMBER: Too long.

Mr. HEENAN: Some of the single men think sixty days too long. If we sentence a man to be hanged in this country we give him a few months to make peace with the world, but here we are providing for the slaughter of thirty or forty thousand men and the minister is refusing to give them sixty days' notice. In this amendment I am not asking for compensation, so that my amendment is fair and reasonable. Suppose we adopted a system of compensation as between Canadian National and Canadian Pacific employees. We close shops in Halifax or Winnipeg on the Canadian National and operate Canadian Pacific shops. How are we to dovetail the men into seniority districts? How are you going to pay the pensions of these men? Take an example? Suppose you closed the Canadian National shops in one part of the country and transferred some of the employees to Canadian Pacific Railway shops. Who would pay them? Who would make provision for their pensions—because some might be on the verge of acquiring pension. These are matters that can be dealt with only between the men and the companies. Having regard to all the adjustments that they make between themselves, I am satisfied that these things could be satisfactorily disposed of much better between the men and the company affected than on the floor of this house. This bill provides that the companies shall do this without any consultation at all with the men; the men have not a word to say in the matter. I would point out to the minister that this is an act of parliament and not an ordinary agreement, and I would again ask him in all fairness to give some consideration to this amendment. I am satisfied that if it were accepted it would iron out a whole lot of troubles in the future.

Mr. MANION: I have no desire to be at all stubborn in dealing with the hon. gentleman's amendment, but I do not think it would advance the interests of the men. If it would do that I should be agreeable to it, but my best information is that it does not in any way protect them; on the contrary, it only complicates the legislation. At this very moment, while this legislation is being considered, before it has become law, the cooperative measures which we are now supporting are being carried on just as they have been for some years, though not to the extent that we should have liked.

An hon. MEMBER: Why bother with this legislation then?

Mr. MANION: Because the railways did not cooperate on a sufficiently extensive scale. That was the opinion of the Duff commission and it is equally mine. As soon as we came into power both the Prime Minister and I advised the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific to cooperate more fully than they had done in the past, and they promised to do so. They did not do so however, each blaming the other for the lack of cooperation. That was the report I received, and the Prime Minister was informed likewise whenever the officers were spoken to about it. Each claimed that the other wanted the big share of the benefits accruing from the proposed cooperation. At this very time such cooperative measures are being taken, and arrangements with regard to employment are now in the hands of the union. I think my hon. friend will agree that when there is a dispute between one of the railways and the men as to seniority the union of the railway employees concerned have a right to interview the officers of the company and argue the case, and in the last resort they now have the right to ask for a conciliation board. I think therefore that the men are amply protected. I do not see that my hon. friend's amendment would do more than complicate the measure and for that reason I regret that I cannot accept it.

Mr. HEENAN: I agree that the men are cooperating with the railways as they have done before, but I want to point out again to the minister that there is not now in force, nor has there ever been in force an act of parliament that precluded them from negotiating. Now, however, we are passing an act that practically precludes the men from having any say in the matter. It is provided that the railway companies shall make provision for a fair and reasonable apportionment. This is an act of parliament, and it makes all the difference. Prior to this time the men did cooperate and they would do so in the future were it not for the fact that we are now passing an act that precludes them from having any say.

Mr. MANION: This does not interfere with agreements between the men and the railways.

Mr. HEENAN: I am trying to point it out to the minister; it may take me a long time to do so but I think it is important that the minister should grasp the significance of it. The agreements between the railways and the men are agreements between the men and the individual company—an agreement, for instance, between the Canadian National and Canadian National men, or the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Pacific employees. In this bill we are giving running rights and providing for dovetailing and the merging of services, something entirely different from anything we have had before. Formerly it was an easy matter when a station was to be abandoned, or anything of that kind, for the men to get together with the company and make an adjustment; but now we are going to have Canadian National services merged with Canadian Pacific in some parts of the country and vice versa, and there is no agreement existing that safeguards the interests of the men in this regard. The more I think of it the more necessary an amendment such as I propose appears to be. What possible injurious effect could it have? When the railway companies are going to merge services or dovetail men or abandon some service, ought they not to give the men notice? What possible harm could that have?

[Mr. Manion.]

All they have to do is to advise the representatives of the men, as they have done for the last fifty years, that so and so is going to be done.

Mr. HEAPS: If I understand the amendment correctly the gist of it is that the men should be given sixty days' notice or sixty days' pay.

Mr. HEENAN: No, that is not the amendment.

Mr. HEAPS: Well, sixty days' pay in lieu of their services if they are not required.

Mr. HEENAN: No. I want the hon. member to understand my amendment. I am not talking about pay or compensation. There are certain things here which the railways have a right to do with regard to new companies, leases, entrusting agreements, or licences, or agreements for the pooling and division of earnings arising from the joint operation of any part or parts of freight or passenger traffic, or express, telegraph or other operating activities or services, joint trackage, running rights and so on. I am asking that the representatives of these men be given sixty days' notice before these measures are put into operation.

Mr. BOWMAN: Just what has my hon. friend in mind? He has mentioned certain things which I am sure his amendment does not cover.

Mr. HEENAN: If the hon. member will look at section 16—

Mr. BOWMAN: I have followed the section with my hon. friend.

Mr. HEENAN: —he will find that it reads:

> Without restricting the generality of the foregoing, any such measures, plans or arrangements may include and be effected by means of—
>
> (b) leases, entrusting agreements, or licences, or agreements for the pooling and division of earnings arising from the joint operation of any part or parts of freight or passenger traffic, or express, telegraph, or other operating activities or services;
>
> (c) joint trackage, running rights, joint ownership, or joint operating agreements, depending upon the nature of the property or services included in any cooperative plans.

Undoubtedly that means the merging of services which in turn will mean that a certain number of men will be put out of employment. As the hon. member for East Algoma has said, where 400 men have been employed, there might be only 300 retained. According to this bill the railroad companies are directed to apportion the work to the men on each road and I want the companies to be obliged to give sixty days notice to the men before they put any measure into operation.

Mr. BOWMAN: Why?

Mr. HEENAN: So that they can do what they have been doing for the last fifty years, sit around a table with the railroad companies and adjust and agree upon seniority rights, fitness and other things. In that way the men entitled to work would get it while it would be just too bad for the others.

Mr. BOWMAN: A moment ago the hon. member pointed out that there might be adjustments to be made and I am pointing out that the amendment he has suggested would give no authority to the representatives of the men to arrive at any settlement. The amendment only provides that sixty days' notice shall be given before any plan, arrangement or measure shall become operative; it does not go nearly as far as the hon. member intimates he wishes it to go. He wants the men given authority to arrive at a settlement of the matters which might be in dispute. I agree with what the hon. member for North Winnipeg has said as to arriving at settlements. My reading of the section is that negotiations will be carried on between the representatives of the men and the companies as they have been carried on in the past. The old agreements are still in effect and what the hon. member has suggested should take place, will take place as it has been taking place in the past. The amendment gives no authority to the men to settle any differences, it calls merely for sixty days notice to be given prior to any arrangement or measure coming into effect. So far as I can see the bill as it now stands carries out the idea which the hon. member for North Winnipeg had in mind. The additional words contained in the amendment of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River do not add anything to the authority given to the men.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There seems to be a lot of confusion in connection with this question of allocation. As the section now stands it asks the railway companies to do something which they cannot do under the agreements as now existing. If this section passes in its present form it will prove to be a source of injustice to the railway employees. As I said a moment ago, many years ago I had some experience in endeavouring to graft the employees from one line into the ranks of the employees of another company. The agreement between the men and the company in one case is different from that in the other; in one case the seniority rights are spread out over a large area while in the other they are very limited. In the case of the amalgamation which has taken place in the services between Montreal and Toronto and Ottawa and Toronto disputes have arisen already. Under the terms of the agreements, no Canadian Pacific train crew can take a train out over the Canadian National line and no Canadian National train crew can take a train out over the Canadian Pacific line.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the hon. member any information as to the conditions now existing or complaints made with respect to the allocation of work on the Toronto-Montreal section which was recently consolidated?

Mr. NICHOLSON: It is not official, but I have received some from the railway employees. They tell me that they have not been able to arrive at a mutual understanding as to the number of men that should be employed from each company. It is not easy to get men to agree to step off a line to which they feel they are entitled in order that men from the other company may be given employment.

Mr. HEAPS: How could we do it here?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The only way is to clothe the representatives of the men with complete authority to allocate work. I think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River should have included in his amendment something similar to the following:

> In the event of disputes arising as to the equitable distribution of such employment between the employees of the National railways and the employees of the Pacific railways, accredited representatives of the different classes of employees involved shall be called upon to adjust such disputes.

That does not go a sufficient distance in order to make certain that it is going to be effective, because the representatives of the organizations will be up against the selfishness that can naturally be expected in the hearts and minds of the men. To make it effective they should be clothed with authority to enable them to refer the whole dispute to a conciliation board.

Mr. MANION: If I am not very badly mistaken, just what my hon. friend says should be done, will be done and must be done. In the matter of seniority rights, for example, the representatives of the men will meet the railways and discuss the situation, and if they cannot come to a satisfactory arrangement a conciliation board can be set up under the present law. This legislation will not take away that right in any way.

Mr. HEAPS: That is not a dispute between the railways and the employees, but a dispute between the employees themselves, and no conciliation board can be set up to settle a dispute of that kind.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend were a minister he would soon realize how many disputes there are amongst the men about seniority. How are we going to go into that in this parliament? That is something that we cannot decide. I receive letters every day from men complaining that they have been unfairly dealt with. In addition, we have what my hon. friend points out, two sets of railway unions in Canada. Is this parliament going to get in between those two sets, and decide questions of seniority? It is a most complicated question, and one that this parliament would do well to keep out of. This will neither start nor stop disputes. The disputes, as my hon. friend has said, started long ago amongst the men arguing over seniority rights, and I, as minister, who have nothing whatever to do with the matter, receive letters every day from men in different parts of the country complaining that they have been unfairly dealt with by the railway company or by their own organizations. We have also that dispute which has been going on for a year or longer as to the number of hours the men should work. This very day I received letters, as I do every day, about the number of hours the men should work per month.

I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but while I am on my feet may I say that I cannot see how this legislation can interfere in any way with the agreements of the men. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River seemed to imply that this will interfere with the agreements between the men and the railways. I do not agree with that at all. My hon. friend said, if I understood him aright, that because the two railways would be working together, it would make the agreements with the men null and void. I do not agree with that contention. The men who have agreements with the Canadian Pacific will still have them, and they will have to settle their seniority rights with that railway, just as the National railway men will have to settle questions of their seniority rights with the National railway. That is the situation to-day.

I do not think my hon. friend from East Algoma is right when he says that the railways cannot run trains over each other's tracks. That is occurring to-day. On the Intercolonial, between Moncton and Halifax, the Canadian Pacific has the right to run its own trains over the Canadian National.

Mr. NICHOLSON: My hon. friend misunderstood me. I did not suggest that they could not run trains over each other's tracks, but that they could not take train crews from one line and transfer them to the other.

Mr. MANION: I did not suggest that. May I finish what I was saying? Suppose there is going to be a joint shop, that in a place where two shops have been operating it is decided to have one joint shop for the two railways. Both railways would have the right to the same number of men. Suppose one hundred men are required. They would be divided roughly, fifty from the Canadian Pacific and fifty from the Canadian National. Each railway would put in its own men. In reply to my hon. friend's question, I take it that these men would look for their pension rights to the company to which they look for pension rights to-day. There would be fifty men of the Canadian National and fifty of the Canadian Pacific working together in the joint shop.

Mr. HEENAN: Is the minister sure of that?

Mr. MANION: I am not. I am simply saying that that is probable. I am not endeavouring to work out nor do I believe this committee can work out, all the details. The railways are directed to work out these details in consultation with the men. This committee could not possibly go into such details.

Mr. HEENAN: The minister and I are coming very close together now. He says that the companies are directed to work this out in consultation with the men. All I want to do is to provide in the bill that they will consult with the men.

Mr. MANION: I do not think that they can do anything else but consult with the men, as they do now. The men's unions have their agreements with the railways and reference is being continually made to them. Every complaint that I get about seniority rights has reference to these agreements. I pass these complaints on to the railway generally without comment unless the case seems an extraordinary one, and then I would draw it more emphatically to the attention of the company and suggest that it should be looked into. The railways in every case point out that they have their agreements with the men's unions, and between the railway companies and the officers of the men's unions, the difficulty is worked out.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister has been good in giving information and in allowing clauses to stand for further information. I should like further information as to the effects of the consolidation of train services between Ottawa and Toronto, and Montreal and Toronto, and to know what was the apportionment of labour in that consolidation. The hon. member for East Algoma said that there was a considerable amount of dissatisfaction over it, and I expect a great deal of dissatisfaction when further consolidations of service take place in future because naturally every man laid off will have a grievance.

Mr. MANION: I agree with that.

Mr. HEAPS: I wish the minister would allow this clause to stand because in a very short time, perhaps to-morrow, he could show us how the consolidation took place on these lines and give us information as to the number of men affected and the number of men laid off. Perhaps we might be able to learn what arrangements the men's representatives made with the companies, and see whether it worked out all right. I hope the minister will be good enough to accept that suggestion and look into the matter.

Mr. HOWARD: The remarks which the minister made a moment ago cause me to say what I am now going to say. No matter what attitude we take on either side of the house or how we try to solve this railway problem, we are going to run into all kinds of difficulty, which has been the case ever since this bill was introduced. I have in my constituency two sets of absolutely opposing opinion. I have one set of people who right along have been favouring handing over the Canadian National to the Canadian Pacific as the only way to solve this railway problem. On the other hand, I have another group of people who are absolutely opposed to that idea. The funny part of it is that those who have been favouring amalgamation, now that they have had a chance to study this bill, are absolutely dissatisfied wth it because they say it does not mean amalgamation. There are others, and I am quoting this to show how strongly opinion runs, who happen to have been Liberals and who have stated to me that if the Conservative government solve this railway problem they will have to support the Conservative party for the rest of their lives. On the contrary, other people who are in favour of government ownership and against amalgamation are absolutely dissatisfied with this bill because the only thing they can see in it is amalgamation and the handing over of the Canadian National to the Canadian Pacific. I put that on record just to show that the more we study this bill the better we realize the opposing views that are held.

This bill was first introduced in the Senate. It passed the Senate and was introduced into this house as a non-partisan measure because the government did not want to take the responsibility for it until they had felt out the situation. Now the government is fathering the legislation. I think that right from the start, if we are going to maintain a democracy in this country, the government should have taken full responsibility for introducing this legislation into this parliament instead of letting it be brought in as a non-partisan measure.

May I put this on record? Here is what I believe will happen: You will have all sorts of dissatisfaction; the arrangement will not work out any more satisfactorily than it is working out at the present time; we will not effect the savings we expect, and there will be a great deal of dissatisfaction from people holding different views. It has been argued that the new arrangements will stop extravagance. Surely at this stage of the game, in 1933, after what has happened nobody will suggest that we need legislation to put an end to extravagance. The privately owned Canadian Pacific Railway will not go ahead with extravagant schemes, as they did in the past, any more than the Canadian National will. We were all guilty of it. I say we have to decide one of two things, either that we will maintain the Canadian National Railway as a government owned system, or place it under private control. If we maintain it as a government owned railway we cannot have private control. There is only one reasonable course to pursue, namely that the government railway must be in the control of the people's representatives. I support one hundred per cent the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec South to the effect—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): We are discussing an amendment by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. HOWARD: Yes, sure we are.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): Oh, you are?

Mr. HOWARD: Yes. I have supported right along the suggestion made by the hon. member for Quebec South to the effect that the salaries of trustees should be placed in the estimates. In that way we can maintain control, if we wish to have the national railways continue operation under government ownership. There have been many suggestions in regard to handing over the Canadian National to the Canadian Pacific. Surely no one would suggest that we should hand over the government controlled railway, and assume its debts. We seem to be playing on both sides of the question, and getting nowhere. This is the way it is working out: A chap has a $5,000 mortgage on property valued at $10,000. The tenant moves out of the house, and takes his furniture with him. The mortgagee says nothing, because he is not interested. While the mortgage holder is away the man takes down the house and moves it off the lot. On coming back the mortgage holder finds he has a mortgage on a house that has disappeared. It seems to me we should take no action which would leave us in the position whereby we would be depleting a national asset, and at the same time have the liabilities, the mortgage and the interest to pay.

I should like to point out one or two matters which have come to my attention. I am not going to criticize extravagant expenditures, but there are one or two occurrences the public should know about in which the managements of both railroads are involved. For instance, I believe we are suggesting that there should be centralized control. What has happened in the past under that system? A few years ago we had in Sherbrooke the head office of a local railroad company. When we wanted a special train to carry a Sunday school picnic, or any other organization, we walked into the general manager's office and made arrangements. He knew the price to quote, according to the mileage travelled. Those arrangements could be made most satisfactorily to everybody. From the standpoint of the railway company the earnings were worth while and the public received good service. However, the railway companies on the North American continent—and I do not confine my remarks to Canada—seemed to think they had control of everything. With that in mind they formed the eastern passenger association. What followed? In the years following, when we went to get a special train or excursion rates, we were told by the local manager, "I am very sorry, but I shall have to communicate with Toronto" or, in some cases, Chicago, and the request was refused. For some fifteen years they have been following that policy, with the result that business left both railways. When truck competition arose the railway companies could easily have seen what was happening, but they chose to sit tight and do nothing. So much is this so that in the city of Montreal, for instance, a man in a taxi or cartage business could not back up to the railway station and take freight for delivery to a customer. He was entitled to take only his own freight. In other words the railways placed in the hands of whom they pleased the sole right to go to the freight sheds and deliver freight. These are conditions which have existed in the past, but which at the present time are changing.

Let us consider excursions. For years we have not heard of excursion rates. But under the conditions of necessity arising in 1933, what is being done? Just look at the excursions in these days. Hundreds of people who could not travel except under special rates are being carried between the larger centres such as Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Quebec and Sherbrooke. Those excursions are bringing back the real earning power of the railways. I am satisfied that the lessons the two railway companies have received will serve to correct a great many of their past faults, and bring them to their senses. With a different trade policy and with the increased trade, both foreign and internal, we can create revenues so that the railways can make some real profits.

I shall now discuss the question of seniority to which reference was made a few moments ago, and in that connection shall describe the situation in Sherbrooke. The Quebec Central closed its shops, and the men connected with what we call the running trades were moved. Repairs were done at the shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Those repairs which had been done in the Quebec Central shops have been brought uptown to the shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway. As the hon. member for East Algoma has said, there was a good deal of difficulty in adjusting the seniority standing of the men who were changed from one railway company to another. True, the men affected met officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Montreal, and made fairly satisfactory arrangements. The fact is however that there was no end of trouble. The meeting certainly could not solve the difficulties of the men who had been put out of work. Let us consider the pension situation the minister mentioned a few moments ago. I do not know how we can meet the difficulty, but I am telling the committee that when we have a man discharged who has served a railway company for twenty-eight years, a man who has only two years more to work in order to complete his pension period, a man who cannot draw his pension through no fault of his own, we are dealing with a very serious situation.

Mr. HACKETT: That is not restricted to any one class.

Mr. HOWARD: Certainly not, but in this bill we are not helping to remedy such situations. As I said before, and now repeat, personally I will vote against the bill. I should prefer not to have the bill pass, so that the situation may be left as it is. With voluntary cooperation, with the general trend toward economies and different trade policies which can be put into force to increase business, I believe we can pull out of the railway situation without passing a bill which in my view is neither one thing nor the other.

Mr. McINTOSH: Hear, hear; a little more tonnage is what we want.

Mr. HOWARD: A few evenings ago I picked up a copy of the Montreal Star, and noticed that in one month, February last, the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway had dropped $132,825. In the same month the earnings of the Canadian National had dropped $812,506.

Mr. MANION: That was in a week, not a month. Both those figures referred to the drop in a week.

Mr. HOWARD: What is the reason for that decrease? Why should not the decrease be a little more proportionately divided? I admit that if mileage is greater there is greater opportunity for shrinkage in traffic, but if it is possible I should like someone to tell me why there is that difference between the falling off of the revenues in the two railways. There must be something wrong. Are we losing to the Canadian Pacific Railway business which should naturally go to the Canadian National?

Mr. MANION: Let me answer that question at once; it has been raised three or four times. I do not like the thought to go out that the Canadian National is getting any unfair deal. The Canadian National Railways has been holding its proportion of traffic in the past year, as large a proportion as in previous years. I have looked into that question and I find that is the case. Here is a statement issued recently: I will put the figures on record and I hope they will stop the implication going out to the people that in some unknown manner the Canadian National is getting an unfair deal and that the Canadian Pacific is stealing the traffic. I do not mean to suggest that my hon. friend was saying that, but the implication is in the question. Here is a report showing the percentages of total traffic, both passenger and freight, handled by each railway system for the twelve months of each year, 1928 to 1932 inclusive:

Year—	Canadian National	Canadian Pacific
1928..	51.8	48.2
1929..	52.6	47.4
1930..	53.0	47.0
1931..	53.8	46.2
1932..	53.1	46.9

This should stop any further suggestion or implication by anyone that in some way under this government the Canadian Pacific has been getting a greater share of the traffic than formerly. I point out that in 1932 the Canadian National got 53·1 per cent of the total traffic, and that in no other year except 1931 did it equal that. Its share in those two years surpassed 1929 and 1930 when my hon. friends were in power—I am not desirous of getting into a political discussion, but I want to clear this up. In other words, in 1931 and 1932 the Canadian National Railways had a bigger proportion of the traffic than in the three previous years. These are the percentages as officially published.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Has the minister the passenger and freight traffic separately?

Mr. MANION: Yes, I have, but I do not want to put a lot of figures on record.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I have a copy some time?

Mr. MANION: Yes; I have no objection. If the committee want it I will put it on record.

Mr. VALLANCE: Has the minister any further information to give regarding the question asked yesterday about the transfer of mounted police from Regina to Saskatoon?

Mr. MANION: No. The fact is I have been driven pretty hard since yesterday; we had a railway committee meeting this morning and a council meeting at two o'clock, and this information is in the Justice department. But the fact remains that according to the official figures the Canadian National in the past two years has had a slightly larger proportion of the total traffic than it had in the three previous years, so surely the Canadian National is getting a fair deal. Every one who is fairminded knows it is getting a fair deal. I do not like the implication to go out that it is not—and it was more than an implication. The reason I looked this up—this is as foreign to the clause under consideration as was the speech of the hon. gentleman; he made a general speech, and this is general also—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Geary): Who said it was on the clause?

Mr. MANION: The reason I looked into this pretty thoroughly was that R. J. Deachman has been sending out literature through the west and made the absolute statement that we were sabotaging the Canadian National Railways. As a matter of fact he was not choosing his words very accurately, because if there were sabotaging it would be done by employees. He confused passenger miles with passengers carried and combined this and ton miles of freight into a sort of salad, and handed figures out to suit his purpose. Passenger miles and ton miles are simply work units employed by railways in the production of averages; the total passenger miles or ton miles cannot be cited as a measure of earnings. One railway might carry more passengers than the other and yet have fewer passenger miles, and the same is true of the freight tonnage carried. But he did worse than that. He set up 1922 as an index and for some years following he made use of statistics with respect to Canadian National traffic, secured from the annual printed reports of the railway, including United States lines. For other years he used statistics compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics covering lines in Canada only. In short, he took what happened to suit his purpose and achieved the greatest conglomeration of misinformation and falsehood that a man could very well get together and he palmed it off on a lot of newspapers in various parts of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Tell us what he said.

Mr. MANION: I will read one or two sentences.

Mr. McINTOSH: He will have something further to say.

Mr. MANION: I have no doubt. He has been a hired writer for some years.

Mr. McINTOSH: And a good one.

Mr. MANION: Not about this; if he knows as little about the tariff as he knows about railway matters he is not very good. He may be in the judgment of my hon. friend—

Mr. McINTOSH: And in the minds of most people.

Mr. HOWARD: The minister is not answering my question.

Mr. VALLANCE: He must be fairly important for the minister to give him so much notice.

Mr. MANION: No, but I do not believe it is a good idea for anyone, whether Mr. Deachman or anyone else, to spread the poison—because it is mental poison—throughout the country that the national railway, owned by the people of Canada, is being crucified or wrecked by any government, whether this government or the late government.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. VALLANCE: Probably Mr. Deachman construed the figures differently from the minister, but what did the Minister of Trade and Commerce do on the budget speech?

Mr. MANION: I am afraid my hon. friend is getting far away from the point under discussion. I am not construing figures; I am giving facts. The statistics I have given show that the Canadian National has more than held its own in these years, and that is a complete answer to Mr. Deachman's statement. The figures are not mine; they are the figures of the railways themselves.

Mr. YOUNG: Would the minister mind giving us the figures Mr. Deachman used and telling us wherein they are wrong?

Mr. MANION: If the committee wants me to take the time I will do so.

Mr. POWER: Certainly; we have wasted a lot of time already.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would not pay any attention to a mudslinger.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, I think it is a good idea to have your viewpoint now, and we will have Mr. Deachman's later.

Mr. HOWARD: I think the minister should be fair to me. So far as my statement is concerned I did not mean it as the minister has taken it—and then he quotes Mr. Deachman. I distinctly said I saw the item in the Montreal Daily Star.

Mr. MANION: That does not prove its truth.

Mr. HOWARD: No, but the hon. gentleman is the Minister of Railways of Canada. I admit he has not the power he should have, and that is one of the points I am arguing for; I claim that a minister of railways when he received a report like that should do what I would do if one branch of my business showed a deficit—investigate and ascertain the cause. When the statement goes out that the earnings of the Canadian Pacific have shrunk so much, and those of the Canadian National have decreased away out of proportion, the minister, if he had the control which he should have, should investigate and then he could answer such questions with the actual figures.

We must have either one thing or the other, either private ownership or public ownership, but not mix the two together.

Now I have not said a word on this railway bill until to-day. I thought that before the bill passed it was only right that I should give my opinion, because I believe that anyone who may represent the county of Sherbrooke in the future should know the view I took in connection with this bill. I am against every clause in the bill; I think the legislation is terrible, because it gets us nowhere.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member for Sherbrooke asked the committee to be fair to him. I ask the committee to be fair to the mover of the amendment now under discussion, because this clause represents about the only consideration that has been given the thousands of railway employees who are to be slaughtered by this measure. There are two classes in the bill relating to railway labour. When we go back to section 2, we will deal with one clause which in my opinion humbugs the railway men of this country because it means nothing in its practical working out. The other clause referring to labour is section 16, which we are now discussing, which provides that the railway companies shall apportion the work that is left among the employees of the two roads. That is the effect of it.

The hon. member for North Winnipeg moved an amendment this afternoon asking for compensation for those who might be dismissed, but that amendment was ruled out of order. Now I am asking that when this division of work takes place the representatives of the men should be given sixty days' notice before any new plan is put into operation. I ask the committee if that is unreasonable. I agree with the hon. member for Dauphin that I have not gone far enough; I agree that this might be regarded as a pious wish. I have eliminated many of the requests that have been made in this regard by the representatives of labour, and have only asked that they be given sixty days in which to say their prayers before being thrown into the gutter. Yet the Minister of Railways, who says he has a great railway constituency, refuses this request because he is afraid that in some way or other it may hurt the working out of some plan.

Mr. MANION: I say it is not necessary, that they are protected sufficiently now.

Mr. HEENAN: When the Minister of Railways says that, he does not know what he is talking about. I might say with regard to the Minister of Railways what he said concerning Mr. Deachman: If he knows as little about this bill as he knows about the working out of seniority and other rules, he knows very little. So far as I am concerned I do not propose to give way or to allow this measure to go through, so long as I can prevent it, without some specification as to the working out of this arrangement. The minister says that if the men cannot agree they can appeal for a board of conciliation. On what grounds could they appeal for such a board? Could they conciliate the laws of Canada? Under the Industrial Disputes Act provision is made for an appeal only in industrial disputes between the men and their employers. Here is a law of Canada; are the men to ask for a board of conciliation with regard to the provisions of an act of parliament? I cannot quite understand why the government does not jump to its feet immediately and say, "We will give these men sixty days in which to adjust themselves."

I am going to take a cue from my hon. friend from Dauphin and ask the hon. member for North Battleford to move an amendment to my amendment so that it will appear in Hansard for the assistance of the minister. I hope that even yet the government will accede to this request. This is not the only suggestion I shall make even in connection with this clause, but I may say to the minister that if this amendment is adopted it will eliminate many of the suggestions I have in mind. I am against the bill from cover to cover. I voted against the second reading and I may tell the minister that I am going to vote against the third reading if I am here.

Mr. MANION: I must say that grieves me terribly.

Mr. HEENAN: I want to ask how the Minister of Railways and some of the other hon. members, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre the hon. member for Brandon, the hon. member for Regina, the hon. member for East Calgary and others can rise in their places and vote in favour of throwing out of work thousands of men in their constituencies without even sixty days' notice. I will tell the hon. member for East Calgary that one of his back shops will be closed as surely as he is sitting here.

Mr. STANLEY: Nonsense.

Mr. HEENAN: I know it is nonsense to the hon. member because evidently he does not care a continental about his constituents. The two or three yards at Fort William and Port Arthur will be made into one; there is no doubt about that. The three yards in Winnipeg will be made into one; two of the back shops in Winnipeg will be made one; two of the yards and the operating activities surrounding the terminals in Brandon will be made one. That will be the case also at Regina, Calgary and Saskatoon, and Sutherland will practically disappear. How the hon. members representing those constituencies can rise in their places and support a bill which directs the railroad company to do these things is something I cannot understand. I cannot even get support from these hon. gentlemen when I ask the government to insert a provision giving sixty days' notice to the men about to be slaughtered.

It is close to six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and I would ask the minister to take this under consideration even yet. I know it does not go far enough, but the hon. member for North Battleford will move an amendment to my amendment which will cover the ground suggested by the hon. member for Dauphin, and I hope the hon. member will support it.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am pleased to move the amendment referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. His amendment will be found at page 4089 of Hansard; it reads as follows:

That there be added after the word "arrangement" at the end of subsection (1) the following words:

"But in no event shall such measure, plan or arrangement become operative until the representatives of the employees affected have been given sixty days' notice.

I move that the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following words:

—and endeavour to agree with such representatives to an adjustment of the seniority or rights to work of the employees affected thereby.

Mr. POULIOT: In the report of the royal commission, at page 60, there are a few lines with regard to contractual relations with labour. Paragraph 191 reads:

With the continuance of good relations between the management and employees of both systems, and a frank recognition of the serious financial situation, much can be done to ease the position of the railways, without imposing any undue hardship upon the employees.

The report is dated September 13, 1932, and since then the position of many employees has become a good deal more serious. If the employees do not all complain at the same time it does not mean that they are not suffering.

I had occasion to write to Mr. Hungerford on December 1, 1932, the following letter after I had asked certain questions in the house. I will read the letter:

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. S. J. Hungerford,
Acting President,
Canadian National Railways,
Montreal, P.Q.

Dear Mr. Hungerford,—

On October 28th, Hansard page 696, I asked the following questions:

1. Up to what age and after how many years of service can an employee be appointed permanent in the locomotive and car department of the Canadian National Railways?

2. Can a temporary employee replace such a permanent employee in said department?

3. What is the schedule in force as regards the appointment of permanent and temporary employees and the right to seniority of each in said department?

The Hon. Minister of Railways answered me thus:

"This question refers entirely to the internal management of the railway. The government has no information whatsoever in regard to the matter and I would suggest that if the hon. member would address his question to the railway company, they would probably be glad to give him any information he desires."

On October 31st, I brought the above to your attention and asked you to give me that information.

On November 3rd, you wrote me that the schedule in force does not specifically cover my questions.

This is the letter from Mr. Hungerford:

Canadian National Railways,
Montreal, Quebec,
November 3, 1932.

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 31st. The schedule in force does not specifically cover your questions.

If you care to let me have the particulars of any case you are interested in I will be pleased to ascertain what regulations are applicable.

Yours faithfully,
S. J. Hungerford,
Acting President.

Jean-François Pouliot, Esq., K.C., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My letter continues:

On November 3rd, I tried to combine those three questions in the following one: What is the difference between a permanent and a temporary Canadian National Railways' employee and on what conditions does a temporary employee become permanent?

Since then I have received your two letters of November 14th and 30th, your file 330-427 PO, but my question is not answered in either letter.

Does the Canadian National Railways management make a difference of any kind between temporary and permanent employees especially with regard to seniority rights? The answer to that question would be yes or no and I want to know it.

Now, if the above answer is affirmative, what does the management consider as the difference between a permanent and a temporary employee and on what conditions does the management appoint or promote a temporary employee as permanent?

If the schedule in force does not specifically cover my questions, the management must have issued some orders or there must be some regulations of some kind in that regard.

Therefore, I will be very thankful to you to supply me with that information.

With thanks,

Sincerely yours,
Jean-François Pouliot.

P.S.—Please send your answer to the House of Commons, Ottawa.

The reply reads:

Canadian National Railways,
Montreal, Que.,
December 6, 1932.

330-427 PO:

Dear Mr. Pouliot,—

I have your further letter of December 1st and note your specific question:—

"Does the Canadian National Railways management make a difference of any kind between temporary and permanent employees especially with regard to seniority rights?"

The answer to the above question is in the affirmative. In reply to your further question I would state that a permanent employee has seniority rights, etc., which a temporary employee has not.

A permanent employee is assigned to regular work, whereas a temporary employee is used only for intermittent jobs that may arise from time to time. In the locomotive and car departments the wage agreement provides that an employee who has been in the service of the railway over thirty days shall not be dismissed for incompetency nor be discharged for any cause without his case being given an investigation. This thirty day period marks the recognition of the rights of a permanent employee.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) S. J. Hungerford,
F/E Acting President.

Jean-François Pouliot, Esq., K.C., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house now discussing this matter but I will ask the minister this question. Will this bill allow anyone to submit grievances to the board of trustees in order to have them redressed?

Mr. MANION: I regret that I did not hear all of the hon. member's remarks. I could not follow the letters he was reading, being distracted at the time.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister is familiar with the whole situation because I sent him copies of my correspondence with Mr. Hungerford. I am not discussing any particular case now, but I want to know whether, should employees complain of grievances, they will have the right under this legislation to submit such complaints to the board of trustees for redress.

Mr. MANION: Generally speaking, neither the directors of the Canadian National nor those of the Canadian Pacific take any part in the disputes between the men and the management; that is usually regarded as distinctly a managerial affair. From Mr. Hungerford, of the Canadian National, and Mr. Grant Hall, of the Canadian Pacific, down the line of officers, the management in both companies deal with the men because the directors do not understand the complications of the agreements between the unions and the companies. Generally speaking, disputes between individual men and the company concerned go no higher than Mr. Hungerford as vice-president and general manager of the Canadian National and Mr. Grant Hall, vice-president and general manager of the Canadian Pacific. Neither the trustees nor the directors would be capable of dealing with such questions and that is one of the reasons I have endeavoured to keep away from such matters.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. POULIOT: Just before six o'clock the minister told us that when an employee had any complaint to make, it was referred to the management of the railway through the brotherhood. However, there are some employees who do not belong to a brotherhood. In certain parts of the country, especially along the old Intercolonial, railway employees are in the habit of coming to their member of parliament for assistance in cases of trouble. This afternoon the hon. member for East Algoma referred to human nature. Men are not perfect and they sometimes make little mistakes. I do not consider it to be political interference for a member of parliament to intervene with the management on behalf of an employee who has been charged with drunkenness or something of that kind. I have followed this practice ever since I was elected and I am not ashamed of it. These men have always come to me for assistance, and it never made any difference whether they were Liberals or Conservatives. I investigated their cases and drew up briefs to be submitted to the management. I was not always rewarded with gratitude but I felt I was doing only my duty. The only time I was ever insulted during an election was once by a Tory whom I had had reinstated in the employ of the railway. I recall another instance where a man was accused of being drunk while on duty. I went with him to see the superintendent who gave him a calling down and he was finally reinstated because of his family and upon the promise of behaviour in the future. On the station platform he wanted to kiss my hand after he found he was to be reinstated, but I would not stand for such a demonstration. But a few months afterwards he voted against me.

An hon. MEMBER: He kissed someone else.

Mr. POULIOT: I recall another instance where I had a man reinstated and when I visited the polls in my home town I found him representing my opponent. Some years ago there was a rumour that the shops at Rivière du Loup would be closed. I at once wrote to the former Minister of Railways, Mr. Dunning, and stated that I would object very strongly to the reengagement of Sir Henry Thornton if my people did not receive justice. I sent copies of that letter to the members of the cabinet. I met Sir Henry Thornton in Montreal with Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Appleton and in my presence Sir Henry told Mr. Appleton that I should have justice. After several trips to Montreal I was able to find out definitely that the shops would not be closed.

There was another man who had twelve or fourteen complaints made against him. This man had been most unfair to me upon a previous occasion but when he came to me for assistance I wrote to the management. Because of the numerous complaints, the management did not feel like reinstating him. He telephoned me to ask for another recommendation. I refused to give it to him, but immediately sent one to a friend of mine who lived in his vicinity and told him to tell the man not to speak to me again but that I was ready to assist him provided that such assistance was asked for by someone else. Every member of parliament should be ready to assist any railway employee who is in trouble or who has not been treated fairly either by the brotherhood or by the management. I do not intend to recite all the cases of injustice to railway employees in my district but in endeavouring to help these men I have made no difference between Conservatives and Liberals.

When a man once has a job, every effort should be made to see that he retains it. When an opening occurs we can favour our political friends, but I do not think any effort should be made to replace a man already in a position. These men rely upon their jobs for their living and they should not be displaced because of political considerations.

I do not intend to propose any amendment before asking the minister if he would accept an amendment to section 16 to provide that the trustees shall investigate and reconsider every case submitted to them by a member of parliament.

Mr. MANION: I do not think it would be possible for the trustees to do that because it would mean that their whole time would be taken up in the consideration of these cases. During the last three years since I have been minister I have received complaints practically every day from men who felt they were not getting a fair deal from either their own union, some other union or the management of the railway. It is the duty of the managing officers of the railway to consider such cases. I do not think the trustees should be asked to deal with matters of this kind. I have no reason to believe that the officers of either railway have any desire to do other than to give the fairest consideration to every case with which they have to deal. Of course the personal equation enters into the matter but I do not believe they have any desire to be unfair. I am sorry I cannot offer any encouragement to my hon. friend in regard to the matter he discusses because I do not think it would be fair to the trustees. I believe it would detract from the possibility of their doing good work from a business standpoint for the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MITCHELL: I quite agree with the minister, that it is an absolute impossibility for this parliament to interfere with the seniority rights of the railway men. They have their agreements and the necessary machinery to deal with a matter of that kind. Reading the clause before us as it stands, I do not think it means anything, and I believe that something is needed along the lines of the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River to give what I consider very necessary protection to the men who might be involved in any cooperative effort by the railways of this country. The section is not mandatory. It simply says that they shall endeavour to provide as a part of such measure, plan or arrangement, for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of the National railway and the Pacific railway. In my judgment that would place too much power in the hands of the management. The amendment gives the necessary opportunity to the men's representatives to meet with the management, and if necessary have a board of conciliation set up.

It is absolutely essential that there should be a clear definition of the rights of the men in this regard. The way I construe the section is that the railways themselves have absolute power, and can ignore the existing arrangements between the men and the railways, because, since this is an act of parliament, it would take precedence even over the award of a board of conciliation. The minister would be well advised to incorporate in this section the idea expressed in the amendment of the member for Kenora-Rainy River. From my practical experience in many years of negotiating agreements between men and employers I can say that the question of seniority rights stands out even above that of wages. Men are deeply concerned over their seniority rights and more trouble is experienced in negotiating the seniority rights of the men than in negotiating wages and working conditions. I think we should see to it that these rights are protected prior to the passage of this bill into law. I am not unmindful of what the minister said this afternoon that in the practical application of this legislation amendments may be found necessary, but I would rather see the amendments made now than take a chance on making them after the railways have probably got into difficulties with the employees over this particular section.

Mr. HEENAN: I had hoped that after the recess the minister would have been in a position to say that he accepted both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment, because I think it is only fair and reasonable. The amendment provides that the men shall receive sixty days' notice in any readjustment of the railway services in this country. It is quite evident from the silence of the minister, however, that the government is not prepared to accept the amendment; consequently I hope that more members on this side of the house will take part in the discussion in appealing to the government for a square deal for the railroad men of this country.

Here we are with a measure before us that contemplates throwing out of employment thousands of railroad men, and yet the minister and the government practically refuse, or have done so up to the present, to allow the men to be given notice so that they can readjust their working arrangements with the company. I wonder if the minister is not now prepared to close me off by saying that he will accept my amendment even though he reduces the sixty days to fifty, or even forty. If only the railroad men of this country could look in at the spectacle that is presented in this house at this moment and see how they are being treated by the government!

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Cheap stuff.

Mr. HEENAN: That is all they have ever got out of the Conservative party, just what they are getting now; they never got anything else. Here we have a commission appointed to investigate all the ramifications of the railway situation in Canada, and not one solitary railroad man in Canada was appointed to that commission. Instead, two gentlemen were chosen whose appointment was protested by the railroad men of this country on the ground that with their appointment the railroad men could not expect a square deal. In the Duff report we have a reflection on the railroad men of this country.

Mr. MANION: Quote it, please.

Mr. HEENAN: On page 60 of the Duff report, dealing with the contributory causes of the position of the railways in Canada and mentioning the contractual relationship between the railroad unions and the railroad companies in Canada. Mr. Loree was appointed to that commisison and from the very first day of its sitting to the last he suggested that we cut down the railroad men's wages in this country to the level of 1911 or 1913. Is it any wonder that the railroad men of this country have protested against that gentleman's appointment? I shall not say anything about the one Canadian whose appointment has been reflected on by members on this side of the house, but with reference to Mr. Loree's appointment I say that the wages and working conditions on his road are worse than on any other railroad in the United States, and many of the men to-day fear that he is going to be the chairman of the board of trustees of the Canadian National.

An hon. MEMBER: He is across the line.

Mr. HEENAN: You sent for him from across the line. We have had enough of him if you have. I read in the papers only a few days ago of some very prominent gentlemen from this side of the canal going across to the other side. I am not reflecting on conditions across the line; there is no doubt that the government is now trying to do what the Liberal party tried to do in 1911.

There are two clauses in the measure before us referring to railroad labour. One of them

I called humbug this afternoon, because in its practical application it can be very little less than humbug.

Mr. POULIOT: It is less than humbug, it is just bug.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member for North Winnipeg moved an amendment providing compensation to the men who would be dismissed. That amendment was declared out of order. I notice that every member on the Conservative side supported Mr. Speaker. No doubt some of them will go out to their constituencies and say they did not vote against compensation, but voted to sustain Mr. Speaker's ruling. So far as I am concerned they voted against compensation to dismissed railroad employees. When my right hon. leader one day this week moved an amendment to the effect that one of the trustees should be a railroad labour man, or a man representing railroad employees, that amendment also was defeated by the Conservative party.

Now we come to another amendment, the only one left to discuss. It provides that when these men are to be slaughtered they be given sixty days' notice in which they can say "God bless them." The government is not prepared to grant even that. I wonder if my hon. friends in this corner of the house will sit idly by, as they sat this afternoon, and tolerate a slaughter of 20,000 men, without raising any opposition. The Prime Minister may smile and laugh—

Mr. BENNETT: I am laughing at the hon. member's language.

Mr. HEENAN: It is the only language I have.

Mr. BENNETT: "Slaughter."

Mr. HEENAN: If the Prime Minister would only use his influence and pretend, as he did in the maritimes, that he would break these big freight trains into two and double the crews as he promised in 1930, then he would be doing something for the railway people of Canada. You will find it in the Halifax Herald of July 10 of that year. He is reported as saying, "Until this depression is broken I will break these big freight trains in two; I will give work to double the number of train crews and engine crews."

Mr. BENNETT: Did you ever see that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: "I will restore all these branch line passenger trains, and give more men work." Yes, it is reported in the Halifax Herald of July 10, 1930. The Minister of Labour said it could not be done, but Mr. Bennett said it would be done if he were elected on the twenty-eighth. Now I am appealing to his Minister of Railways to give these men sixty days' notice in order to enable them to adjust themselves. The government will not agree even to that. Will the Minister of Railways now say he will give us fifty days instead of sixty?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Be kind.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Have a heart.

Mr. HEENAN: The Minister of Railways says that the men will adjust their grievances in the same old way. He overlooks the fact that he is passing legislation which will prohibit them from adjusting their grievances in that way. He says: "Well, if there is any dispute the men will apply for a board under the Industrial Disputes Act." Did you ever hear of a commission being appointed under the Industrial Disputes Act to settle a grievance which, as a matter of fact, is part of the law of Canada? What could any Industrial Disputes Act, or a board functioning under that act, do, when there is an act of parliament legislating on the point at issue? Could the board override the legislation? The act of parliament says what? Probably I had better read it; the Prime Minister or the Minister of Railways may be able to tell me what it means. The part of section 16 I should like to have explained is as follows:

> . . . directed to attempt forthwith to agree and continuously to endeavour to agree, and they respectively are, for and on behalf as aforesaid, authorized to agree.

That is the language appearing in the bill. Evidently it has been placed there by some eminent lawyer, and after reading this part of the section I believe I need not apologize for my language. If I do not use proper language it is because I have been reading this bill so much. We find the expression "to attempt forthwith to agree." To agree to do what? After they agree to amalgamate the railroads of Canada, that is what it is. Will the Minister of Railways tell us what rights the railroad men will have after the new amalgamation? Could the new company not say: "You had rights under the Canadian Pacific and under the Canadian National, but under this new company you have neither seniority nor rights." Subsection 2 further provides that plans or arrangements made may be effected by means of "leases, entrusting agreements, or licences, or agreements for the pooling and division of earnings arising from the joint operation of any part or parts of freight or passenger traffic, or express, telegraph or other operating activities or services." They have the right to use joint trackage; they have the right to use running rights over one road or the other. There is provision for joint ownership,—and yet the Prime Minister says it is not an amalgamation We find the expression "joint operating agreements, depending upon the nature of the property or services included in any cooperative plan." Yet, while these companies are authorized to enter into all these ramifications, all my amendment does is to ask that the men be given sixty days' notice so that they may make some adjustment of their services.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You suggested forty days a minute ago. Why not auction it off?

Mr. HEENAN: I wonder if the Minister of Railways will listen to the appeal, and if sixty days is too long, make provision for fifty days.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Auction it.

Mr. HEENAN: Or forty days.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Auction it off.

Mr. HEENAN: I wonder if the Minister of Railways will agree to give one day's notice, or is he going to sit still like the rest of the government and say that they do not give a continental what becomes of the railway men in Canada.

Mr. GEARY: Nobody has said that.

Mr. HEENAN: Nobody has said that, do you say? By their silence now, hon. members opposite say nothing else. I say that; if nobody else says it, I will say it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEENAN: I say that the government of Canada and the Conservative party does not give a continental what becomes of the railway workers.

Mr. SPENCE: Nobody believes you.

An hon. MEMBER: You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. HEENAN: And they never did. If I did not know what I was talking about any more than the hon. member who has just spoken, I would go back and resign my seat.

Mr. BENNETT: The seat is vacant, then.

Mr. HEENAN: In 1921, just before the Conservative party left power, the railroad men had to take a 12½ per cent reduction in wages. Since that party have come back they have had to take a 10 per cent reduction, and now the railroads are demanding a 20 per cent reduction.

Mr. HACKETT: Who is responsible for the cut in the United States?

Mr. HEENAN: I heard the Minister of Railways suggest that the government of Canada had nothing to do with the reduction of wages of railroad men. I say that is not true; they are responsible for it.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I resent that; I object to it. I have stated that the government of Canada have nothing whatever to do with the cut in wages of men on the railroads, and I repeat it. I object to the hon. gentleman making statements which are untrue. An hon. gentleman from the back concessions may be as irresponsible as he likes, but not in the house.

Mr. HEENAN: I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call the Minister of Railways to order. I have the floor and I will relinquish it to no man. I repeat what I said, that the government of Canada is responsible for the initiation of this 20 per cent reduction.

Mr. MANION: That is not true.

Mr. HEENAN: Who is it that initiates a reduction in wages in any corporation? The directors.

Mr. MANION: The directors did not.

Mr. HEENAN: And the directors of the Canadian National Railways, the deputy minister representing the minister—

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Tom Moore, you mean?

Mr. HEENAN: —initiated this 20 per cent reduction.

Mr. MANION: He did nothing of the sort.

Mr. HEENAN: That is quite in line with what was done in 1921. The Minister of Railways and the government and the leader of the Senate glorified the great savings that were taking place under the jurisdiction of the present Minister of Railways, and he got credit for it all. You have to take the bitter with the sweet. The Minister of Railways said he reduced the salaries of the heads of these railroads; yes, and he is reducing in a more insidious way the wages of the rank and file of the railroad men of the country. The Prime Minister said in this house when he introduced the ten per cent reduction in civil service salaries that someone had to take the lead in this country, and everyone has been following the lead of the Prime Minister in the reduction of wages.

I ask the minister now—I pleaded with him most humbly all yesterday afternoon; I pleaded with him this afternoon until I saw that the minister was decided—or the government, I suppose I should not blame the minister any more than the rest of the government—not to give the railroad men of this country a chance. Now I have to use the only language that seems to be understood by the members of the Conservative party. Amalgamation never, competition ever! Yet we have a bill here that is nothing more or less than amalgamation of the railroads of Canada. Pooling of freight, pooling of pssengers, pooling of earnings—what is left?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Pooling the public!

Mr. HEENAN: Fooling the public! It is a bill to fool the public of Canada, because it is an amalgamation. The minister says that the railroads always treated their men well. Of course they did, until the minister or the government introduced a bill here to prevent them from doing so. The men can get along with the railroads. I have shown how impossible it is from a practical standpoint to work out this provision. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways may be able to tell me whether the t's are crossed or the i's dotted or the sentences correctly punctuated, but as far as the practical operation of this bill is concerned—and in this respect I take my hat off to no man in Canada—how can you take men out of the Canadian National shops in Toronto and balance it by taking men out of the Canadian Pacific shops in Winnipeg? How are you going to dovetail these men in according to seniority unless the men sit down and agree with the company? Who is going to decide whether the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific is to be responsible for the payment of those men's wages? Who is to be responsible for their pensions—because many of them are on the verge of getting pensions. All these things have to be ironed out. Yet the government will not even give the railroad men of Canada one day's notice so they might sit down with their employers; instead they would pass an act of parliament practically prohibiting the railroad men having any say in the matter. If I feel pretty strongly on this it is because I have worked with these men for thirty years. I have never been a salaried officer of any brotherhood or organization and never will be, but I am saying what is in my heart—

An hon. MEMBER: Your gizzard.

[Mr. Heenan.]

Mr. HEENAN: I know that hon. gentlemen on the other side do not understand what a heart means when you speak of labour men; but let them go into that part of the country where I was this week end and see these men with $1,500 or $2,000 or $3,000 invested in a home, not knowing but what next week they may be on the street, many of them approaching fifty or fifty-five years of age, wondering how soon they are going to be out of a job. And I am telling you that 20,000 to 40,000 are going to be thrown out. Talk about a heart! Why, you men on that side of the house that vote for such a measure as this have no heart.

An hon. MEMBER: Only a spleen.

Mr. HEENAN: No, they have not a spleen or they would not vote for such a measure. Again I ask the Minister of Railways and the government of Canada—and I ask the members on this side of the house to make an appeal and see if we cannot touch the heart of the Prime Minister—

An hon. MEMBER: Impossible.

Mr. HEENAN: —to make an appeal and show the railroad men of Canada that there are some in this house who feel for them and will uphold their rights. Before I sit down I am going to ask the Minister of Railways again, if he does not like the sixty days, will he give us fifty or forty days?

Mr. BENNETT: Peradventure there will be ten righteous men!

Mr. HEENAN: I do not know what the Prime Minister is muttering.

Mr. BENNETT: I say peradventure there are ten righteous men, and the city will be saved.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not hear even yet. Yes, we have rights, but the only rights that are taken into consideration are the rights of the men who lend the money, the moneylenders of New York. These are days of sacrifice, we all know that; but have we to sacrifice human beings in Canada so that the moneylenders of New York may get their last pound of flesh? It is about time the government of Canada told these moneylenders: "You have had your innings, and before we sacrifice the lives of the people of Canada you will have to wait a year or two for your interest." Sacred contracts! Yes we hold contracts sacred, but the men who invested their lives in these railroads also invested them in good faith. These railroads were constructed, as I said before, after the parliament of Canada had granted authorization to construct them. Parliament should have taken into consideration whether or not the railroads were likely to pay, what lines were likely to compete against them, and so on. After these charters were granted the boys left their farms and their homes and entered the service of the railways. During the war they were called our civil heroes because they promised the government that not a wheel would be stopped during the war no matter what might be their grievances. Our big daily papers carried headlines stating that these were our civil heroes, the men of sanity and so on. Well, they are receiving their compensation to-day. I wonder if there is any one else ready to speak?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You seem to be stumping anyone on the opposite side.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not expect any hon. gentleman opposite to rise, except the hon. member for East Algoma, who is my only champion over there. On the second reading the hon. member for Dauphin said that if he thought this measure would throw railway men out of work he would not vote for it. Let him read the bill; it is nothing more or less than an amalgamation of the railways of Canada, and if it does not throw from twenty thousand to forty thousand men out of work what will it do? Let me read those sentences again, and ask what they mean if not amalgamation. This section provides that arrangements may be made for:

(a) New companies controlled by stock ownership, equitably apportioned between the companies;

(b) Leases, entrusting agreements, or licences, or agreements for the pooling and division of earnings arising from the joint operation of any part or parts of freight or passenger traffic, or express, telegraph, or other operating activities or services;

(c) Joint trackage, running rights, joint ownership, or joint operating agreements, depending upon the nature of the property or services included in any cooperative plan; and

(d) Joint or individual highway services, or highway and railway services combined, in any form.

Then if you turn over to the section dealing with the arbitral tribunal you will find that the government gave the tribunal a little more power. Listen to this:

—the power and jurisdiction of tribunals shall extend to—

(a) joint use of terminals;

(b) running rights and joint use of tracks where there are actual or functional duplications, or where such may be avoided;

(c) control and prohibition in respect of the construction of new lines and provision of facilities and additional service—

(d) joint use of facilities—

(e) abandonment of lines, services or facilities;

(f) pooling of any part or parts of freight traffic or of passenger traffic; and

(g) things necessarily incidental to the above enumerated matters.

If any hon. gentleman opposite can coin a better phrase than amalgamation I should like to hear it. Then when an hon. member gets up to speak he is heckled and chewed at, with ignorant sneers coming from the Conservative benches because he tries to defend the working men of this country. The Minister of Railways, together with the other members of the government, sits idle, lounging back in his chair, without offering a suggestion of any kind. The only suggestion to come from hon. gentlemen opposite was offered by the hon. member for East Algoma, yet hon. gentlemen opposite will go to the railway men during the next election and say they made jobs for them. This government was elected to end unemployment, but here they are creating unemployment by an act of parliament. Of course this is not the first measure they have put through which has had that effect; we have seen their tariff measures and their actions in regard to the civil service. Practically every act of parliament they have put through has created more unemployment. I asked the Minister of Railways to accept an amendment which would give these men sixty days' notice before they were thrown on the streets, but he refused. I asked if he would accept fifty days, or forty days; I asked if he would give them one day, but he remained silent. I hope this parliament will not allow this measure to go through until some provision such as I have suggested is included in order to protect the railroad men of this country.

Mr. MANION: At this stage of this debate I do not intend to take up much of the time of the house in replying to the irresponsible misstatements of fact made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. My hon. friend's methods of attack are always the same; anyone who has sat in the house with the hon. gentleman for the last few years realizes that his method is to put on record as many misstatements and as much abuse of his opponents as possible, quite irrespective of the facts of the case. Then he reads them in the back concessions, when he goes to attend political meetings, and tries to show how quietly we sat in our places and took it from him. The hon. member's object to-day is obvious to anyone who knows him; it is to make himself appear the great champion of labour, and to have it seem that none of the rest of us has any regard at all for labour. He even attacked his own party because they did not support him, when as a matter of fact most of them were laughing at him.

My hon. friend's very first statement tonight was that the Duff commission had belittled or reflected upon labour. I asked the hon. gentleman in what section that appeared, and he said in section 6. There are several sections 6 in the report, and there is no reference in any of them to labour. The only reference I can find is in section 5, and I presume that is what the hon. gentleman had in mind. I intend to read that reference; it is very brief, and I should like the house to judge as to whether or not it contains any reflection upon labour. As a matter of fact it compliments labour, and so far as I know it is the only reference to labour in the entire report. I read section 5, paragraphs 190 and 191:

190. The wages and conditions of employment of a large majority of the employees of both railways are fixed by agreements with the trade unions concerned. A majority of these employees are members of trade unions which include not only employees of the railways in Canada but also of the railways in the United States. Whether by reason of this close affiliation, or for other reasons, it is the fact that the wages and conditions of service of railway employees in both countries are substantially on the same basis.

Listen to this:

In recent months the wages of the officers and employees of both systems have suffered certain reductions which have eased the burden upon the railways, and it is satisfactory to record that these changes have been made without any disturbance.

191. With the continuance of good relations between the management and employees of both systems, and a frank recognition of the serious financial situation, much can be done to ease the position of the railways, without imposing any undue hardship upon the employees.

Would anyone say that there is a word of anything but commendation for the railway men in that reference to labour? So far as I know that is the only reference contained in the entire report to the labour situation.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): You are wrong there.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend has been able to find any reference reflecting on labour I should like to have him read it.

Mr. HEENAN: Very well; I would refer to the paragraph headed "Contributory Causes of the Railway Problem," which is chapter IV, appearing on page 53.

Mr. HACKETT: What section?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Look at your copy.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. HEENAN: Paragraph 155:

Contributory Causes of the Railway Problem

1. The over-development of railways beyond the immediate needs of the country.

2. Aggressive and uncontrolled competition between two nation-wide railway enterprises, a competition the more disastrous in that one of the competitors was publicly-owned and supported by the full resources of the Dominion.

3. The reactions of the world trade repression which began in 1929 and has progressively increased in its severity with each succeeding year.

4. Competition from other forms of transport, notably road transport.

5. Inelasticity of freight rates and railway practice generally which prevents prompt action in the meeting of falling revenues and dealing effectively with competition from other forms of transport.

And listen to this:

6. Contractual arrangements with labour organizations which set up a rigid wage scale and inflexible labour practices generally.

Mr. MANION: There is no reflection in that.

Mr. HEENAN: No reflection in that?

Mr. MANION: No, there is not.

Mr. HEENAN: Well, according to the Duff report that is one of the contributory causes of the railway problem.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has read the part of the report that is of interest. He has brought out the reference in it that I had not found, but I do not admit that there is any reflection upon labour in that reference to contractual relations. The hon. gentleman this afternoon was very abusive in his remarks with reference to the conciliation board which it was indicated might be set up in connection with seniority, and he made any number of statements regarding myself which were anything but flattering. Indeed, he indulged in so many abusive adjectives that I hardly remember them. He spoke of my stupidity, and so on. I understood him to take the attitude that a conciliation board could not be set up in connection with seniority matters. May I ask him whether that was a correct understanding of what he said.

Mr. HEENAN: In connection with this bill.

Mr. MANION: That is a different matter. I do not admit that this bill changes the position of labour at all. I do not need to cite it, but in the Montreal agreement dealing with the seniority of employees a conciliation board was set up under the Lemieux Act to take into consideration the very subject which the hon. gentleman this afternoon railed at me for having mentioned. That was dealt with in the Montreal agreement.

Mr. HEENAN: I said that after the passage of this act the position would be changed.

Mr. MANION: I do not admit that the passage of this legislation will affect it. I submit that if the hon. gentleman had taken the attitude which other hon. gentlemen opposite have taken throughout this discussion the committee would make better progress. After all, we need not get into any serious row about it; we do not need to abuse one another. Surely we can all hold our opinions honourably and tenaciously without resorting to abuse. This discussion has gone on now for two weeks, including the second reading of the bill and its consideration in committee, and practically no personal abuse has been indulged in nor has any political strife been stirred up except by the hon. gentleman. Not one hon. member, so far as I can recall, has taken any unfair partisan attitude except my hon. friend, and I submit again that we shall get on much better if we adhere a little more closely to the attitude taken so far, and not be abusive. This afternoon the hon. gentleman abused the Prime Minister and myself and all on this side of the house. Let me assure him that we are just as anxious as he is to do everything possible for labour, and if I were inclined to accept the amendment at all the attitude he took this afternoon would be the very thing to dispose one to reject his amendment, even if it were good, which I do not admit. Other labour members are of the opinion that there is nothing in the amendment that would improve the situation, and others again take the opposite view. This afternoon I read the clause, which has been read a number of times in the house, in regard to the position to be taken by the two railway systems whenever they bring about cooperation. That direction given to them places them in the same position in dealing with the representatives of labour as they are in at the present time under existing railway legislation.

I have no reason to object to the amendment except that in my opinion it does not help matters. If it would improve the legislation I should be glad to accept it. May I point out that a number of amendments have been suggested by hon. members opposite, some of which we have shown our readiness to accept. My hon. friends claim that they inspired them and I will not quarrel with that. If the amendment of the hon. gentleman would serve any purpose I should be glad to accept it, but I still think that it does not improve the situation. It does not add one iota to the strength of the railway employees in dealing with the railways so far as cooperation is concerned.

My hon. friend from East Algoma this afternoon, although he did not support the amendment, intimated to me that he had a suggestion to offer and I shall be glad to see whether it satisfies the labour members. He read it to me and my opinion offhand would be that it would rather strengthen the section. If it tends to improve it, I shall be glad to accept it, but I do not admit that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River does improve this legislation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: May I intervene for a moment while these two Irish gladiators get their second wind? I object a little bit to the minister taking the ground that we are laughing at our colleague. We are not laughing at him; we are rather amused at his ability to put the whole ministerial side up a tree—that one Irishman can trim the whole outfit, and a lot of them over there Irish too, or half-bred like myself. Now, what is there unreasonable about the hon. gentleman's amendment? What is there unreasonable in suggesting that sixty days' notice should be given to railway employees about to be dismissed? Notice is required even in the case of a farm labourer—and I do not say that by way of reflection on that form of labour because I have been a farm labourer myself. In fact, my first year's earnings I got as a labourer on a farm, so I know what it is to be a labourer, and I know that under the law they have the right to be given notice. It is a long while since I had anything to do with administering the law as a magistrate, but I know that in some eastern provinces domestics hired by the week have a right to a week's notice, if hired by the month, to a month's notice, and if by the year to two or three months' notice.

Mr. HACKETT: There is no change at all in that regard.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why have not these railway men the right to sixty days' notice? My hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River wants to have it stated in the law, and nothing prevents its being adopted but the deliberate stubbornness of the minister. I am not going to have my colleague laughed at by the ministry because of their incapacity to answer him.

Mr. HEENAN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all. I want my remarks to be as persuasive and conciliatory in tone as possible, but at the same time when it comes to a showdown I am not going to stand for any kind of answer which my hon. friend opposite chooses to give my colleagues. And then he tries to pass the buck and to have the laugh on him, pretending to give an answer when he has not given one at all. I see no objection to the amendment but on the contrary many advantages. The minister says that even if he had been disposed to accept it he would be inclined now to reject it because of the manner in which it has been presented. Well, we all have our own style of saying things. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has his manner, and whatever else it may lack it is in my opinion mighty effective. I myself have been lectured quite often in this house for my peculiar way of presenting things. I cannot help that; I cannot help my way—that is the way I am built. The language I use is the language I understand. I have never swept the halls of a university with a gown and all that sort of thing, and so I have to make use of such language as I learned in my youth, trimmed up a little bit if you like.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It's pretty good.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, if I tried any other way I would be an utter failure, and the same with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. He would not be the same man if he tried to be somebody else.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are a doctor.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know, but a different kind. Anyhow, I will try to be worthy of it just the same. It took me seventy years to earn it and I should try to be a credit to it. At any rate, I say that the minister has not met the situation at all. He has not answered the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. The minister had to say something, of course, and I was just wondering what he was going to say.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are still wondering.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I suppose anything would be better than saying nothing at all. It would be a confession of weakness if after all the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River had said no one on the other side should make any attempt at all at a reply.

I shall now try to come down from the heights that the two gladiators attained. Last week end I travelled on one of the new pooled trains to Toronto. Previously the service of the Canadian National Railways to Toronto was one of the finest in the country. It used to be a crack train running over a crack track.

Mr. HACKETT: It cracked our purses.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But a great change has taken place, and I was wondering if that change was brought about by voluntary action. If it was, it says a whole lot for our national railway officers. Now there is a mixed train made up of one coach, one baggage car and about fifty freight cars to be distributed between here and Toronto. It took four hours to cover the distance from Ottawa to Portland formerly covered in less than two. How long does the railway expect to retain passenger traffic with such a service as that? Unless something is done the remnant of passenger and small freight traffic will soon be lost to the buses and trucks. I was unable to find any change made by the Canadian Pacific to correspond to the change made by the Canadian National, although the fast train between Montreal and Toronto has been cancelled. I understand that some kind of pooling in connection with revenues is taking place, and I do not object to that. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River did not exaggerate the state of mind into which the labour on these lines has fallen. They are just going around in a daze, not knowing what the next day or hour may bring forth. They see the heads of their fellow labourers dropping into the basket one after the other like apples falling off a tree. Surely it would be only humane and considerate to give some notice when making these dismissals. The hon. member asked for sixty days notice; if we cannot get sixty, give us fifty or forty.

In all sections of the country where the service has been reduced to a mixed train three times a week, the railways will get precious little passenger or light freight traffic with a service like that, without installing a railway bus and truck service themselves. Our object is to try to make this bill as little objectionable as possible, as it is bound to go through and receive royal assent. Suppose the Canadian Pacific concludes to operate a bus and truck service in an effort to catch the remaining express and light traffic available; the Canadian National will want to do the same. I am not sure whether the inauguration of such a service by the national railways would be classed as capital expenditure, but if so they would have to come to the government before the expenditure could be made. If it is not considered as a capital expenditure, they will have to go to the trustees for authority to invest money in a service of this kind. The trustees will have the authority to refuse, and if they do refuse—and this possibility is not imaginary—the freight and passenger traffic will gravitate to the buses and trucks operated by the Canadian Pacific. A mixed train running three times a week will not be able to retain such traffic. I heard of one station where only one ticket had been sold since this new service was put into effect. Four more were sold during the Easter week-end, but that was because of the special rate. Can they afford to operate even one coach with that kind of result from the point of view of revenue? This board of trustees will have the power to refuse permission to the Canadian National to put on a bus and truck service similar to that which is sure to be operated by the Canadian Pacific, and such power should not be given to any three men born of woman or who ever walked in shoe leather.

We are then to have a government owned system of railways operated by three private individuals—the trustees. I have heard of government owned utilities under controlled operation; I have heard of government ownership and government operation, but I have never heard of a government owned institution being operated privately by three individuals appointed by the government but not supervised by it. There may not be any private gain but there will not be any public control. The arbitral board is in much the same position.

If the government would permit us to save them from themselves, they would hearken to what we are saying. We are not open to the charge of deliberately obstructing this bill; we are interested in this great property. Some of us have spent a part of our lives helping to develop it. When I say that I do not want to put the Canadian Pacific Railway in second place. I believe it would be better for that railway if it were left out of this legislation. I have every confidence that it will make the grade after these times blow over and I question very much the advisability of hooking it up with something which had already gone almost bankrupt prior to being nationalized. It is bad enough to have one crippled railway without endangering the other. The Liberal government found it crippled in 1921, but with that great man, the late Sir Henry Thornton, at the head and helm of it, it soon came to be a real road. We have faith enough in Canada—

Mr. SPENCE: Don't go crazy!

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Who is blathering over there? Why don't you get up and talk on your hind legs instead of sitting there and wearing out your clothes?

Mr. SPENCE: You are wearing out your brains.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I trust my good friend has some to wear out. We do not forget what the party to which this government belongs did to the Hudson Bay Railway. In face of that hon. members opposite now say we are narrow and small because we suspect them. I suspect every step they take in connection with the Canadian National Railway and I have mighty good reason for that suspicion. I gave those reasons the other day so there is no use my repeating them. I certainly do not expect anything more than is given by this bill to the Canadian National Railways, but I want to see as little evil as possible contained therein and as much good. I do not hope to be able to make it worthy of the name of a bill that should be passed. My hon. friends opposite cannot help being Conservatives, but we are told by the best authority in the world that spiritual things cannot be discerned with the natural eye, and it is equally true that Liberal things cannot be discerned by the Tory eye. That is impossible, and therefore I do not blame them because they cannot help themselves. Nevertheless it is our responsibility to try to show them the error of their ways. The illustration I have given is by no means a hypothetical case. Anyone who will once travel by that mixed train to Napanee and back again will see that the little remaining passenger and light traffic will not be there possibly in one month. All that light business will be swept off by any kind of buses put on by the Canadian Pacific Railway, or by the ones that are operating on that route now unless the National is similarly equipped.

I do not know that I have anything further to add to the discussion. I do not know whether my hon. friends opposite think I am trying to frustrate or block or thwart this bill in its passage through the house. I did not say one blessed word yesterday, and that is rather a trial for me when there are so many wrongs to redress. The trouble with the government is not that they are lacking in ability. I want to make that clear, that there is no lack of ability in the government or among their supporters, but the trouble is they took a rather ingenious method of getting this bill across. First of all they appointed a commission as a buffer between themselves and the country. I had no objection in the world to that because I have always been in favour of commissions, good commissions, to deal with a specific question, and I am in favour of them yet. I am in favour of the monetary commission that is to be appointed, and dear knows the government need one badly because they have no very high authority among themselves on that particular question, and I, of course, am no authority at all upon it.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if the government want to be saved from themselves they will listen to the Commons. The Duff commission was all right so far as it went. They looked at this question from the standpoint of faithful, honest men, if you like, but they could not possibly look at it from the standpoint of those who represent the electors of Canada and have an interest not only in the road itself but in the service it gives as well as the question from the human standpoint taken by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. As for the Senate, this bill was drafted by an expert draftsman, by the father of the War-Time Elections Act. Oh yes, he is a skilful draftsman, but there is just as capable a man at draftsmanship in that other place in the person of the Hon. James Calder. I have known him as a draftsman, and he can draft. He took the stand that has been taken by a number of hon. gentlemen in the Commons. I do not agree with him in all his attitude, as he seemed to be acting largely on behalf of the Canadian Pacific. When I made my suggestion this afternoon I did so without knowing that the hon. leader in the other house had attempted to contradict the Hon. Senator Calder who had made a similar suggestion to the one I made this afternoon.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we should lie down and meekly accept the Duff Commission report or the Senate's bill no matter how thoroughly they may have looked into the question, because they have not the same sense of responsibility to the people that we have to have. What excuse would it be for me to tell my constituents when I go home: Oh, well, the Duff commission knows more in a minute than I would know in a year on this question, and the Senate, too, gave the matter deep and concentrated study from the time the leader of that other house first began to draft the legislation until it left that august chamber. My constituents would not be pacified by that. They would say, "We didn't send the Duff commission or the Senate there to investigate this question. We sent you there, and we want you to consider this question for yourself, and we want to know why you let this bill go through in this objectionable condition." I do not want to say harsh things, but I want to be true to the trust that my constituents have reposed in me. I may not have any constituency, Mr. Chairman, when I get back home, but I am not going to act on that assumption. I am going to be their representative for the remainder of this term. I may not have a seat—yes, I will have a seat after the redistribution, but I am told I will have no place to put it. But that is another story.

I do hope that the government will not be disappointed because we do not swallow this bill holus-bolus in three or four gulps. I am afraid it would cause acute indigestion if we did. It would be far more acceptable to our political conceptions and to our political tummies if it was corrected along our lines of thought than if left entirely in the form in which the government introduced it into this house. I am not going to taunt the government if they make changes in the bill. They invited us to assist them with suggestions and then they repel our approaches. What kind of treatment is that to give to the opposition in this house? First, to herald across Canada that this was not going to be even a government bill, that there was going to be a love feast over it, and then because we took them seriously, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and I and others did, and offered suggestions, they repel our advances after having invited them.

Mr. MANION: Must we accept everything you propose?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. If you accepted half of them you would have to redraft the bill.

Mr. MANION: We have accepted about half of them now. The trouble is you want us to accept them all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, I do not. Cull them out. My hon. friend will have to give a little better answer than he did to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River to convince us that many of our amendments should be rejected. The first thing I know I shall have living evidence in myself of how evil communications and habits and attitudes corrupt my manners, because I am gradually assuming the scolding attitude of the government itself, and I do not want to do that. I just want to stand up for the rights of the people and to accept the invitation of the government to make suggestions and assist in improving this bill. I know that there are men on the other side who know that our proposals are sound, and if they had their way they would like to see them go through. They would go back home feeling much better and easier if some of them did go through.

Mr. NICHOLSON: When the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River introduced his amendment last evening I took the liberty of telling him in the first instance that I did not think it at all met the situation he was aiming at.

Furthermore, I do not think it is practical. If it would serve any purpose in assisting the men concerned, and if it was practical, I would support it, but I do not think it would serve the men and I do not think it is practical. The discussion which has taken place on this amendment indicates to my mind that there is a complete misunderstanding on the part of many members of what is involved. It would seem to be the idea that by the provisions of this bill men are being dismissed from the service of the railway altogether and that the men are entitled to sixty days' notice, and so forth. Nothing of the kind is involved. All that is involved is what takes place already in many, many cases, as the hon. member knows, in the changing of a time table, for instance, on the railways. Sixty days' notice was not given when the Trans-Canada was taken off the service. Time tables are changed sometimes within a week and sometimes within fifteen days of the new schedule going into effect, and the crews who had been operating the train have to adjust themselves or be absorbed into the service in some other way. That is just what will take place under this bill. To suggest that sixty days' notice must be given of every change is to suggest something which I submit is utterly impracticable in the operation of a railway. It would not be practicable so far as any endeavour to carry out an amalgamation of services is concerned.

There is however another amendment to the clause which I intend to move, after the present amendment is disposed of. I know the amendment I have before me will meet the wishes of railway employees. I happen to represent a community in which, in proportion to the total population, there are more railway employees than there are in any other community in Canada. I have discussed the amendment with them and in all good will I ask the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River to consider it. The suggestion is that we insert in the last part of subsection 1 of section 16 the words, "through negotiations with the representatives of the employees affected." The clause would then read,"

> They are further directed that whenever they shall so agree they shall endeavour to provide, through negotiations with the representatives of the employees affected, as part of such measure, plan or arrangement or otherwise—

And so on. I believe this amendment would meet the wishes of the railway employees. It will be a mandate to the representatives of the railway companies, if such were necessary—and I doubt very much, after considering the whole matter, whether it would be. The suggested change would indicate clearly the will of parliament, that it is through negotiation with the representatives of the employees that the adjustment shall be made. I cannot move the amendment now, because already there is one before the house. However if the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River will accept it, he is assured of my support.

Mr. HEENAN: I agree, right off the bat, that the suggestion made by the hon. member is far better than the original clause as it appears in the bill. I would say if we can get nothing better from the government I should be glad to accept the hon. member's suggestion, provided he would add the words "after the employees' representatives be given sixty days notice."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HEENAN: No?—Well then, what is the use of talking? The Minister of Railways says I should not get cross. He has told us if we speak in a peaceful humble manner we will receive more consideration from his side of the house. I am not worrying at all about the curtain lectures of the Minister of Railways or the Prime Minister. Yesterday afternoon I tried to be as peaceful and humble as I could possibly be. I tried this afternoon to get down on my knees. When I saw that there was nothing but ridicule and humbug from the other side of the house I admit I became slightly vexed. I have no apologies to make, although the Minister of Railways may choose to laugh at me. I should like to thank the hon. member for Melville for giving me a breathing spell. By the way, I wish the hon. member for East Algoma would remain in his seat, because I want to tell him something; I want to say to him that the amendment he proposed would be of no use. I say to the minister that my amendment is that of the representatives of twenty-one railroad organizations of Canada. They know what they want. They know their needs better than the Minister of Railways, the member for Kenora-Rainy River, the hon. member for East Algoma or the whole government combined. They are men sworn to do their duty towards the railway men of Canada. To put off their suggestions just because the member for Kenora-Rainy River has sponsored them will not go down with those men.

I shall read a resolution before me, and ask the minister whether or not he can discern any difference between it and my amendment.

> Railway company or companies concerned shall be required to give at least sixty days' notice of such contemplated changes to the representatives of the respective organizations and the employees directly concerned holding contract with the railroad, and before any changes are made endeavour to agree with such representatives to an adjustment of the seniority or rights to work of the employees affected thereby.

That was the resolution of the representatives of twenty-one railway organizations. It was presented to the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, leader of the government in the Senate. For the hon. member for East Algoma to say that because he comes from a railroad town he knows what railroad men want, when there are twenty-one men behind this resolution who receive salaries to represent the railroad men of Canada, is something I cannot accept. The little bit of ridicule that the Minister of Railways shot across the floor of the house does not turn one hair of my head. I have become accustomed to his irresponsible statements. I listened to them before he was Minister of Railways. During the last election campaign he spent several days in my riding during which time he broadcast the same kind of ridicule and irresponsible statements as he now makes on the floor of the house.

Mr. MANION: During the last election campaign I was not in your riding at all.

Mr. HEENAN: You spoke at Dryden; that is in my riding.

Mr. MANION: If I spoke at Dryden it took one day, not several days.

Mr. HEENAN: Then the minister coaxed the Hon. Howard Ferguson, then Premier of Ontario, to come up to my riding to act the part of the clown. That gentleman is now acting as high comedian for Canada in London. Had it not been for the activities of this Barnum and Bailey I believe the Conservatives might have licked me in the last election.

Mr. GOTT: The comedian is talking now.

Mr. HEENAN: Every time you squeeze an onion it makes your eyes water. I say to the hon. member for East Algoma that I should be glad to accept his amendment, and if my amendment is voted down I shall support his. I still say, however, his suggestion does not carry out the wishes of the railroad men in Canada. I am going to ask the government to take the responsibility of voting down the amendment which I have proposed. The hon. member for East Algoma should not take this matter too lightly. He has been out of railroad service so long that no doubt he has forgotten a good deal of it.

He likens this measure to a change of time table. Surely the hon. member for East Algoma must realize that here are several railroads going to amalgamate, to merge their services, to abandon branch lines and portions of main lines, to close stations, to pool freight, pool passengers, pool earnings. Is there any comparison between that and a change of time table? Anyone who says in this house or anywhere that this is going to throw less than 20,000 railroad men out of work is only trying to deceive. That is the whole purpose of the act; if it does not throw thousands of railroad men out of employment it is useless. And here we are trying to run our railroads by act of parliament. The president of the Canadian Pacific and Sir Henry Thornton were regarded a few years ago as the greatest railroad men on the North American continent, yes, in the world—and they were, there is no doubt about that. The complications of railroading are such that we ought not to attempt to run a railroad by act of parliament. When I went back to work last summer I had to write an examination, a book of eighty-two pages, just to be an ordinary engineer; and here we are, a few politicians who know no more about railroading than the government knows about ending unemployment, attempting to tell the presidents and managers of these railroads how to carry on their business—and, worst of all, bringing a slave driver from the United States of America to act on a Canadian commission. The railroad men of this country have co-operated for years and years, shown their willingness to cooperate—when has this country seen a strike on its railroads? The men have been and are willing to sit down and negotiate, and to take their losses. In 1931, the first year this government was in power, the railroad men of Canada earned $74,000,000 less than they did in 1929, and last year they earned $120,000,000 less than they did in 1929, according to the government's own reports. They have taken a ten per cent reduction on top of that, and they are asked to take a further ten per cent reduction. Now we are passing an act of parliament the effect of which will be that when their jobs are done away with, their seniority taken from them, they shall not have even one day's notice to adjust themselves to that condition.

I will not withdraw my amendment. It was suggested and pleaded for by the representatives of the labour organizations; it is fair and reasonable, and as far as I am concerned I want that amendment put through.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): Does the amendment to the amendment carry?

Mr. MITCHELL: Before it is carried I would like to ask the minister what is the government's objection to sixty days' notice of termination of an agreement or working conditions in a railroad centre? It is the standard practice.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to take up any more time; this point has been discussed all afternoon and for one and a half hours this evening and all the arguments for and against have been heard. In all sincerity I do not believe the proposed amendment increases the opportunities for the men at all, but I believe it complicates the act and interferes to a certain extent, as I explained this afternoon, with some proposals that might be made. I sincerely believe that this section gives the protection even without the amendment of my hon. friend from East Algoma, which however, I am willing to accept, not because it is from him but because I do not think it changes the meaning at all; it may make it a little stronger. I submit this section does protect the men—I am just as anxious to protect them as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, but I do not wish to put in clauses that will only interfere with the act without accomplishing anything.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act apply as they do to-day, assuming this bill goes through?

Mr. MANION: They would apply in exactly the same type of cases. I made inquiry during the dinner hour from railroad men who I believe speak authoritatively, men who gave me this report on the Montreal agreement. It is true that in the case of that agreement it was not two independent railroads that were involved, as the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National; it was a consolidation of the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial, and as a consequence of that amalgamation the employment of certain men was affected. As a result the men's unions and the railway management got together and worked out what they called the Montreal agreement, which settled the terms of seniority. After that was arranged still other disputes arose, just as they will under this. It cannot be avoided, because each man who is laid off, if there are such, and no doubt there will be on both railroads, will dispute the right to drop him. But under the Montreal agreement the men asked for a conciliation board and got it. Under this present act I am informed, and I believe it, they would have exactly the same right to ask for a conciliation board. Let me go a little further—I have no desire to mislead the committee. In certain cases there would not be a possibility of dispute. My hon. friend from North Winnipeg this afternoon asked what was the effect on the men of the pooling which had taken place already. I did not know then. I asked some officers of the Canadian National and they tell me that on the Ottawa-Toronto run the Canadian Pacific took over the service—that, by the way, may be why my hon. friend from Melville found the service rather poor the other afternoon—whereas the Canadian National took over the Montreal-Toronto service. May I interject here that these luxurious services which my hon. friend from Melville referred to and which I admit were in existence, cost this country over $25,000,000 a year loss on passenger traffic during the last few years. I mention that to show why they had to be cut down. That is what these luxurious accommodations were costing the Canadian National, over $25,000,000 loss in 1932. As a result of the pooling arrangements, the employees of the Canadian Pacific will remain on between Ottawa and Toronto because the Canadian Pacific operates the trains. On the Montreal-Toronto run the Canadian National employees remain on. That is just the kind of case pointed to by my hon. friend from East Algoma. I do not suppose under those circumstances any of those men would be entitled to bring up a dispute. The Canadian Pacific drops some trains on the Montreal-Toronto run, so the junior men on those trains are out of luck. On the Ottawa-Toronto run Canadian National men are dropped; they are out of luck. But I do not suppose they can claim a dispute. But as far as men to-day would have a right to a conciliation board under the Lemieux act they would have the same right under this act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My point was not concerned so much with what may relate to the raising of a dispute as to the principle which underlies the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and to having a similar principle applied under this act. The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act requires that before a change can be made in a wage schedule or affecting working conditions or hours of labour, at least thirty days' notice shall be given—

Mr. MANION: There is no change in that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That notice has to be given for even a change of wages. If a board is applied for, the change cannot go into effect until after the board has made a report. That gives men who are to be affected some opportunity to look around and make necessary adjustments. They have the feeling that they are secure at least until someone has looked into their case. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is aimed at the same thing, making the same principle apply with regard to this act and not anything further, namely that before men are dismissed or ordered off as a result of coordination and economies they should be entitled to some notice, a stated period, thirty or sixty days—sixty is proposed, and that is short enough. That would at least free them from the sense of fear of instant dismissal that many of them have at the moment. That is what the proposed amendment amounts to. I think that is reasonable.

Mr. MANION: May I suggest first that as far as this act is concerned there is no change whatsoever, so far as I know—and I have made inquiry—no change whatsoever in the men's position under their agreements with the two railroads. They will be in exactly the same position under their agreements in regard to wages, conciliation boards and so on under this act. I thought my right hon. friend was not listening when the hon. member for East Algoma made a suggestion that would cover the very point desired. I think his suggested amendment would be much more useful than the one moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, and for that reason I am inclined to accept it if it is acceptable to the committee, as I hope it will be. If my right hon. friend will look at page 9 of the bill I will read the section as it would appear with the amendment of the hon. member for East Algoma:

They are further directed that whenever they shall so agree—

That is, as to cooperative measures.

—they shall endeavour to provide, through negotiations with representatives of the employees affected—

That is added.

—as part of such measure, plan or arrangement or otherwise, for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of National railways and Pacific railways, respectively, of such employment as may be incident to the operation of such measure, plan or arrangement.

In my belief this gives them if not absolute protection, at least protection equal to that proposed by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, and it does not complicate the act. As I suggested, the amendment dealing with a sixty day notice does complicate it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What my hon. friend has just read relates only to an apportionment between the two roads. The amendment of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has to do with the length of time a man shall have in which to prepare himself for what is really instant dismissal. That is the hard feature of the situation for those who will be affected by it. Let us take our own individual positions; suppose we were subject to some superior power which in an endeavour to effect economies, had the right to say that to-morrow our occupations should end. I am not referring now to our positions as members of parliament but to our positions as members of a community earning a livelihood by our respective vocations. Just imagine the frame of mind a man would find himself in if at all times he had hanging over his head a sword that might come down at any moment and sever from him his employment.

Mr. MANION: The same condition exists at the moment on all railways.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it does not; the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act has been framed to prevent anything of that kind until due notice has been given. Then, after notice, if the grounds do not appear to be sufficient for the action proposed to be taken, an investigation may be held into the merits of the case. Surely it is only reasonable to say that if men are to help meet a great national situation which requires extensive economies at this time; if they are to be sacrificed for the good of the community as a whole, at least they should receive from the community in return some guarantee that will secure to them by way of notice an opportunity to prepare for the inevitable and, if at all possible, to find some other means of support before such action is taken.

Mr. HACKETT: Would the right hon. gentleman allow me to make just one suggestion? There are two distinct matters under consideration: the first is the relationship between the employee and his employer. That relationship is in no way affected by the present bill. A man is employed by the day, the week or the month, he can be dismissed only according to the laws of his province and according to his contract; the second subject under consideration is the bill which provides for a pooling, a consolidation, a cooperative measure or agreement, and that, whether or not it comes about, does not relieve the employer of the necessity of giving notice to the employee in the terms of the law of the province or of his contract. I submit to the committee that the relationship which has been referred to by the hon. member for Melville and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, the relationship between the servant of the railway and the company, is unchanged by this bill. I think one might go a step further and say that probably it is not competent for this parliament to enact legislation that would bear upon the lease or hire of personal services. In the view of people who dare express opinions about these matters such legislation is within the ambit of provincial jurisdiction and does not come under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With regard to the latter point I would submit that this parliament has plenary powers in dealing with all railway matters and that we can enact whatever legislation we please with regard to railway labour, which is interprovincial.

Mr. HACKETT: I doubt that very much.

Mr. MANION: I might add just a word in reply to my right hon. friend. At the very moment we are sitting here discussing this act the railways are carrying out the very thing we are talking about, and they are not giving any notice. They are dealing with the matter in the ordinary way, so this act will not change the procedure at all. As a matter of fact, with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for East Algoma I think the men will be protected a little more.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to read the section of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, which I have in mind. It is section 58 of chapter 112 of the revised statutes of Canada:

> Employers and employees shall give at least thirty days' notice of an intended or desired change affecting conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours; and in the event of such intended or desired change resulting in a dispute, it shall be unlawful for the employer to make effective a proposed change in wages or hours or for the employees to go on strike, until the dispute has been finally dealt with by a board, and a copy of its report has been delivered through the registrar to both the parties affected.

Mr. MANION: That is absolutely unchanged.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I wanted to get at was this: If this bill comes into force as an act will this provision of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act continues to apply to proposed changes in conditions of employment of railway labour?

Mr. MANION: Just as it is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And if individuals are being summarily dismissed under the law that is now going through they will be entitled to regard that as a cause for an application for a board, and when applying in that way the change will not take place until there has been a full investigation?

Mr. MANION: The right hon. gentleman has carried his argument some distance further, and I do not wish to go that far. I simply say that this act will apply just as much after the legislation we are now discussing is put into effect.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If there is any doubt in the matter I think it only right that such doubt should be cleared up. I believe the clause I have just read was put there for the purpose of removing the fear of arbitrary and summary action; it was put there in order to secure the employees in their positions, at least for a certain time after notification of a change. I do not see why a similar clause might not be put in this act, if it is going to give that sense of security and a greater measure of confidence to the employees generally. I believe the effect will be not only to give confidence to the employees but to help the public as well. The employees will have a sense of security which will free them from at least some of the terror which they are experiencing at the moment. May I tell the minister that as leader of the opposition, since this measure was introduced, I have received communications from men in all parts of the dominion who fear they will be affected by it. These communications have not been solicited in any way, but these men have written begging me, as leader of the opposition, to do all in my power to prevent summary dismissals and dismissals without any provision being made for consequent unemployment as a result of the economies that are to be effected. I do think this is one matter that ought to be very definitely secured. These men are to be sacrificed for the public good, and surely the public should seek to make their sacrifice as little grievous as may be possible.

Mr. POWER: Just in reply to my hon. friend from Stanstead, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid we are not likely to agree on his interpretation of the civil law, at any rate of the province from which we both come. He gives it as his opinion, if I understood him rightly, that this matter of the dismissal of employees falls within the jurisdiction of the civil code of the province of Quebec. I have not the civil code before me but I have sent for it. I think the hon. member will agree with me that the contract of lease and hire of services ceases when there are no longer any services to be performed, and in this instance if through any legislation of this parliament we give an excuse to either of the railways to decree that there is no longer any work, the men will be by that fact dismissed and will not have any claim against the railways.

Mr. HACKETT: That is a voluntary act.

Mr. POWER: It goes a little beyond a voluntary act when it is a consequence of an injunction placed upon the railways by this parliament. If my hon. friend will not accept that theory he will at any rate accept the theory that when there is no more work to be done the contract ceases. If the tracks were torn up or the shops closed down I doubt very much that there would be a claim. There would be a reason for the contract of hire of services to terminate. In the courts of the province of Quebec I should much prefer not to have a claim of that kind against the railways. During the past two or three years I have had some experience in pleading cases of this kind against one of the instruments of this government, the Quebec harbour commission. The commissioners dismissed a large number of employees shortly after the change of government, and much to my satisfaction I was able to go before the courts of the province and collect a considerable amount of money by way of fees from this government—far more than I made from the former government. We were obliged to allege that the dismissal was without cause, and the courts held that simply the will of the commission or the desire of the commission to be rid of people who have been recommended by the hon. member for Quebec East or by myself was not a sufficient cause for dismissal. I should think though that when the work stopped, if they had been carrying on the construction of a wharf or a building, there would be no claim for compensation or damages, and that would be the situation in the instance now before us.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Under the conditions set out in this bill there is no provision for the dismissal of railway employees; there is no condition providing for a situation such as my hon. friend from Quebec South has referred to. Under their contracts arranged through their representatives, under the system of collective bargaining recognized in this country, the men would still remain employees even though they might be dropped from the pay-roll temporarily. They would remain employees of the railway with all the rights of employees, including the right to be called back as soon as operating conditions made it possible. They might be out of the service for two, three, four, five or six years but they would still retain seniority rights and would be called back in regular order. That brings me to the point raised by the hon. member for Sherbrooke with regard to pensions. It was suggested that because a train was taken off or two trains were consolidated, the employees would be dismissed, though they might be within two years of the receipt of pension. That is not so; the pension remains exactly the same. The employee may, by reason of the fact that he is out of employment for a short time, have his pension reduced, but as soon as he reaches the pensionable age he will get his pension, even if he has not been in service those two years. The men are not dismissed but are recognized as railway employees all the while. They are on the regular list to be called on as soon as operating conditions make it possible to bring them into service again.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to see the employees affected given protection to the greatest possible extent, but I cannot see very well how we can extend such protection without making some provision by way of financial outlay to take care of a situation of this kind. I do not think that the section in the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act which was read by the leader of the opposition covers the point at all. That refers to a general revision of the schedules that have been in force over a period of time affecting all employees in any organization, corporation, firm or company.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was the principle underlying it that I was referring to.

Mr. MacINNIS: Quite so, but every company that has an agreement with its employees is to-day carrying out the things implied here. Companies are dismissing employees with very little notice. I admit that this practice should be curtailed as far as possible, but the point that has to be taken into consideration is that there may be more reductions of services on one company's lines than on the other and the suggestion here is that in such an event the trustees—I presume it is the trustees who are to carry it out—should try to apportion the employees, not on the basis of a greater curtailment of services on one line than on the other but on the basis of a fairly just proportion as between the various employees concerned. As I say, I should like to see the employees protected as far as possible, but I cannot see that we can do very much more than to put in a phrase such as is suggested by the hon. member for East Algoma. I had a similar one drawn up which I compared with his, and I think it would meet the situation as far as this committee can meet it.

Mr. HEENAN: The longer we talk on this matter the more evident it is that we do not know what we are talking about. It is obvious that there are so many of us discussing it from different angles that we have not got at the point at issue. The hon. member for Standstead talks about the relation between employers and employees; he says that they are not disturbed by this bill. I think he really believes that, but it is not so according to railway practice. I know that he is sincere and I want to point this out to him. The relations between the railways and the railway men are entirely different from the relations between the railways and men who are engaged on the job, to be given thirty days' notice and so on. There are thousands of men on the railways to-day who are paid only when they are called upon to work.

Mr. HACKETT: According to their contract.

Mr. HEENAN: According to their contract; they are doing piece work. They have seniority, starting in the shops and then becoming spare firemen, and so on. They do not get anything when not working. A man is promoted to the position of firemen and is paid only for the time he works. He obtains certain seniority rights on his way to the position of engineer, but when the traffic decreases the younger men are not called out. This bill provides for the abandonment of their work and they are left, as the hon. member for East Algoma would say, holding the bag and sitting there waiting to be called. How long does the committee think they can wait?

Let me give an example of just how this might work out. At one time Sir George Bury thought that the Canadian Pacific should have a larger yard than the one they had in Winnipeg. A large piece of territory was secured about seven miles out from the city and perhaps one of the finest yards on the North American continent was constructed. The men were given notice that they must move out from Winnipeg and build homes adjacent to the yard. A meeting was held and it was decided that they would not be compelled to move right away and facilities were provided for their being conveyed back and forth. But what has happened since? That yard is not now required and if these men had gone out there and built homes, they would now be forced to move back to the city. I think that example indicates the many ramifications there are in railroading.

The hon. member for East Algoma suggests, and technically he is correct, that these men will not be dismissed. I cannot see any difference between being dismissed and not being called to go to work. Undoubtedly this bill is to provide for the abandonment of lines and other activities and the merging of services and surely anyone at all familiar with railroad work will realize that many men, while they will not lose their seniority will never be called out to go to work. It is no use for a man to have his name on a seniority list and not be called out to go to work. The longer we talk about this matter, the closer we are able to get together. If the minister would listen to what I am saying—

Mr. MANION: I hear every word the hon. gentleman is saying.

Mr. HEENAN: —I would point out in my most humble manner that I would be willing to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for East Algoma and withdraw my own provided that amendment contains a provision that the employees' representatives receive sixty days' notice.

Mr. MANION: In other words, all the hon. gentleman wants is to have his own way.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not want my own way, I want only what the men want. This means nothing to me. As the minister knows, I have enough seniority with the Canadian Pacific to be almost president if they went out of business. I get no capital, political or otherwise, out of this situation. If I had been contending only for myself I would have submitted this thing long ago and then let it go. I am contending for the men who are being bludgeoned out of their jobs. Surely the minister can give them sixty days' notice when a change is going to be made in the operation of the railroads. They should be made acquainted with what is going to happen so that they can go and seek a living in some other place. I do not see how such a provision could hurt this measure. The amendment moved by the hon. member is quite all right and I would be perfectly satisfied to accept it with the addition that the men be given sixty days' notice. If the minister thinks that length of notice is going to embarrass the railroads, he can cut it down to fifty or forty days; I would even accept thirty days' notice, but they ought to be given some notice of what is going to happen.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think they would be obliged under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act to give thirty days' notice. The first three lines of section 58 of the act reads as follows:

Employers and employees shall give at least thirty days' notice of an intended or desired change affecting conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours.

Certainly a dismissal or sudden cessation of employment would be a change affecting conditions of employment with respect to wages or hours, and thirty days' notice would be required if the person came within the definition of employee as referred to in this act. The definition of "employee" is as follows:

"employee" means any person employed by an employer to do any skilled or unskilled manual or clerical work for hire or reward in any industry to which this act applies.

The definition of "employer" is as follows:

"employer" means any person, company or corporation employing ten or more persons and owning or operating any mining property, agency of transportation or communication or public service utility, including, except as hereinafter provided, railways, whether operated by steam, electricity or other motive power.

I do not think there can be any doubt that so far as the thirty days' notice is concerned any railway employee would be entitled to that. If his employment is going to be affected as regards wages or hours, it is obligatory upon the company to give him that notice.

Mr. MANION: The act to which the right hon. gentleman has referred is not affected by this bill.

Mr. HEENAN: I think there must be some misunderstanding. I contend that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act is affected by this measure. After this bill is passed it will become law and no one would think of invoking the provisions of the disputes act in connection with the provisions of any other laws of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That particular provision is quite apart from the question of disputes which may arise therefrom; it is a positive statement that thirty days' notice has to be given.

Mr. HEENAN: Will the minister turn to section 2, which reads:

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts.

Mr. MANION: I took this matter up with the legal officers of the department and it is pointed out, as I indicated some days ago, that this act prevails, not over any statute that is inconsistent, but over any provisions that are inconsistent. It says:

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts.

The provision which the right hon. leader of the opposition read is part of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. This act does not interfere with that act at all. That act is just as much the law after this bill goes through as it is at this minute. No provision of this act will interfere with that act.

Mr. HEENAN: I know the minister thinks he is right, and I wish he were, but the section reads:

The provisions of this act shall bind His Majesty and shall prevail over all inconsistent provisions of all other acts.

So, if there is any provision of any other act that is inconsistent, then this act shall prevail?

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. HEENAN: But section 16 says that the railroad companies shall provide for a fair and reasonable apportionment. It directs the railroad companies to apportion the work as between the employees of the National railway and the Pacific railway. Consequently no dispute can arise there between the railroad men and the companies because the company apportions the work without any consultation or discussion with the railroad men.

Mr. MANION: No, because the effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for East Algoma is that they do that very thing.

Mr. HEENAN: Let me offer a suggestion which will probably fill the bill. In section 2, which we have still to discuss further, the minister has accepted the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and mentioned that act in the section. Will he also include in that section the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act?

Mr. MANION: It is not usual to cite every act with which a particular act may not be inconsistent. My own advice, and I believe in the advice I have received—it is the opinion of all lawyers on this side and of the leader of the opposition and of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, I know, because I saw him nodding his assent when this opinion was expressed—is that the provisions of this act are not inconsistent with the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. Surely that should be sufficient for my hon. friend. I should like to see the question put. With all due respect to my hon. friend, neither of us is a lawyer and surely we ought to be convinced by the opinions of legal men. My hon. friend should be satisfied with the opinion of his own leader and of the hon. gentleman who sits beside him (Mr. Mackenzie, Vancouver), who is one of the ablest men on that side of the house. Surely that should have some weight with my hon. friend. I am willing to accept that opinion, and I think my hon. friend should be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do you want the average man to have to hunt up all the statutes in creation to find out what should be put in this law? I have had some experience of that, and it is a big task. If you go to an experienced lawyer and ask him what the law is in a certain matter, in nine cases out of ten he has to hunt up a whole load of authorities before he can tell you. If that is so with a lawyer it is ten times more so with a layman. We want this bill fixed so that "a wayfaring man, though he be a fool, need not err therein." That is not unreasonable. Does the house really think that the ex-Minister of Labour and others of us have gone mad? Is it not more likely that the ministry has gone mad?

An hon. MEMBER: Undoubtedly.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no doubt about it. Some one of us has gone mad, and I am willing to take my chance which of us it is. We are not asking anything unreasonable. These safeguards that we are asking for as to proper notice of dismissal, and so forth, mean something to the railroad men. But it will not mean anything to say to them that certain provisions are in some other act. After all the wobbling around and the provisos that have been inserted in section 2, the average man can hardly tell what it means. Why not say in plain terms just what is intended? Why not accept the suggestion to even include the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act? We are not going to josh the government for having come down the tree and accepted an amendment from us. They should not be ashamed to accept an amendment from us. Whether we did it acceptably or not it is a fact that for eight and a half years my colleagues and I drafted legislation and passed many laws, and I question if we were defeated on the issue that that work was not properly done. We are the same members pretty much to-day, and we should be able to give acceptable advice. If anybody suggests that we are talking and moving amendments simply to kill time or for political effect, then I say that he is a thousand miles from the truth, because this government has already supplied us with sufficient political dope to hang a dozen governments, and why should we want more? We want to get home; that is what we want, but we must first finish our task here. The first time the electors get a chance at hon. gentlemen opposite they will be hanged, drawn and quartered in no time. So there is no sense in casting reflections upon us and suggesting that we are proposing amendments for political effect. That would be a work of supererogation, or whatever it is—quite superfluous. I am pleading with hon. gentlemen opposite as I have pleaded, to save them from themselves. I want to get out of here, but still I want to do my duty. I want to supply the overcheck for hon. gentlemen, to prevent them from running away with themselves and committing further political suicide. We are putting through an act that will mean what? There is not a man I believe in this house but knows in his heart that this act means the annihilation of the Canadian National Railways within five or six years, and meaning that, we who believe in the national railway and want to maintain it as an entity would be derelict in our duty if we did not use our last breath in an effort to get this act in as acceptable a form as possible before it passes through this house. That is what I am pleading for. I may be sprung on the matter, but if I am, I am sprung in the right direction.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know whether the minister quite caught the last suggestion that was made, namely that when we return to section 2 he consider inserting therein as an additional subsection the words, "the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act." I know how embarrassing it is to accept an amendment at the moment it is offered in the discussion in committee, but if the minister would promise to consider doing that when we come back to section 2 I think he would find the suggestion quite satisfactory.

Mr. MANION: I would promise almost anything. With all my heart I promise to consider it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is a bad man who makes no promises.

Mr. HEENAN: There are two propositions now—

Mr. MANION: I suppose this does away with my promise, does it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The promise was made to me.

Mr. HEENAN: The suggestion that the leader of the opposition makes now is satisfactory to me provided it is accepted by the government, but what is the difference? Why have we wasted all this day—

Mr. MANION: Why should we waste the rest of the evening?

Mr. HEENAN: If the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act provides for thirty days' notice when there is a conflict of opinion between the employees and the employer, that is all I have been asking for. It is true that my amendment asked for sixty days. Here after a waste of time and a display of temper, after saying many things which ought not to have been said, but which I was forced to say, the minister has agreed to accept the very thing we have been fighting for all day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HEENAN: With that understanding I withdraw my amendment so that the hon. member for East Algoma may introduce his.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): I understand the amendment and the amendment to the amendment are withdrawn. That is the pleasure of the committee?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): Shall the section carry?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I move the section be amended by inserting in the last clause of subsection 1 of section 16, after the word "provide" in line 12 thereof, the words "through negotiations with the representatives of the employees affected." The clause would then read:

> They are further directed that whenever they shall so agree they shall endeavour to provide, through negotiations with the representatives of the employees affected, as part of such measure, plan or arrangement or otherwise, for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of National railways and Pacific railways respectively, of such employment as may be incident to the operation of such measure, plan or arrangement.

The amendment is seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, it is quite possible that this clause may be capable of many different interpretations. It says that the company shall confer with the representatives of the men affected. I am not a lawyer, but I have been listening this afternoon and this evening to definitions by lawyers, and the more I listen to definitions of words the more confused I become, and the less I know about the measure involved. I am in favour of the principle behind the amendment, but I am afraid that the interpretation may create a good deal of friction. How would the term "the employees affected" be interpreted, when the legislation is put into operation? Men may be laid off, and when they are laid off they cease to be employees of the company. I have had a little experience in these matters, and in the past few months men who have been laid off by railroads have formed their own organizations, claiming to represent the men out of work. It is quite possible that the men who have been laid off will claim that those organizations known as the recognized unions will no longer act as the representatives of the men. I should like to have some words inserted, or have some understanding to the effect that if negotiations take place, they should take place before the men are actually laid off. To my mind the wording as it now appears in the section is capable of different interpretations, and before it is in operation very long we may strike many snags.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection 1 of section 16 as amended agreed to.

Subsections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 16, subsection 4—Duty of C.N.R. and C.P.R. to meet by their proper officers and endeavour to arrange for cooperation.

Mr. HEAPS: Before we deal with this section, may I say that a few days ago I asked the Minister of Railways for certain information in regard to the effect of the consolidation of services between Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. Perhaps at this stage he may give me that information.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I should like to give it. I have had it before me this afternoon, and I shall be very happy to give it. However there was another matter which I should have mentioned, but owing to the fact that we were making some progress I did not like to speak. I proposed before that there be a new subsection 4, and that the one now standing as subsection 4 be made subsection 5. I had intended to mention the fact later, but now that I am on my feet I shall read the proposed new subsection. The numbering would be changed and the following would be the proposed new subsection 4:

> Where the execution or carrying out of such a measure, plan or arrangement involves the doing of any act which by any statute requires the leave, sanction, assent or approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, then, except where otherwise provided in this act, the approval of the said board shall be obtained.

I shall ask my colleague to move this new subsection.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The subsection the minister has read is different from the one he showed me. That contained the words "no such measure, plan or arrangement shall be effective without the approval of the said board."

Mr. MANION: I believe the right hon. gentleman is referring to another amendment which applies to part II.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister sent it to me two days ago stating that it applied to clause 16 at page 9 of the bill, the purpose being to add a new subsection immediately after subsection 3.

Mr. MANION: Very well; we shall come back to it at another sitting. I will simply give notice now. I thought I had given the same amendment to the right hon. gentleman, but I may have made an error.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the same section, but the wording is slightly different.

Mr. MANION: The legal adviser tells me that the draft I have read is slightly different, but a little better.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Very well; go ahead and move it.

Mr. HACKETT: I shall move it.

Mr. MANION: If that amendment is satisfactory I should like to have it carried, and then I would go on and give my right hon. friend—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just a moment; I am not sure that the difference in the wording does not make a material change. The words appearing in the new clause suggested by the minister are "except where otherwise provided in this act." I believe the purpose of this amendment when originally drafted was—

Mr. MANION: I shall let it stand; it may be that I have given the right hon. gentleman the wrong copy.

The hon. member for North Winnipeg asked me some questions concerning changes made in train services, and the effect those changes would have upon the men. I put a series of questions along the line of those asked by the hon. member, the answers to which I have received. This is information requested by the hon. member for North Winnipeg as to the pooling of services between Montreal and Toronto and Ottawa and Toronto. My first question was, "What effect on finances of the railway?" To which I received the answer, "A betterment of approximately $250,000 per year to Canadian National Railways." I suppose the Canadian Pacific would be affected similarly.

Mr. HEAPS: Did you get information from the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. MANION: I did not take the matter up with the Canadian Pacific. The second question was: "What saving in services?" And the answer: "279,938 passenger train miles to Canadian National Railways." That may not be the exact figure for the Canadian Pacific, but it would be something like that. Then the third question was: "What labour displacement?" And the answer, "Twenty-five train service employees of Canadian National —plus certain men who will be affected by the curtailed maintenance program and the lessened servicing and cleaning of equipment, turning of engines, etc. The management state they cannot as yet determine definitely what lay-offs these changes will involve." I will send a copy of the replies to my hon. friend, and I think that it will answer the questions he asks. In the meantime let subsection 4 stand.

Mr. HEENAN: The men on the railroads are somewhat concerned with respect to subsection 2 (a)—"new companies controlled by stock ownership, equitably apportioned between the companies"—and I have an amendment to offer. I understand the minister is allowing it to stand?

Mr. MANION: Yes, because there is some mistake in the interchange of amendments between the right hon. leader of the opposition and myself.

Mr. HEENAN: I want to offer these amendments to-night so that the minister can look them over. The men fear—they do not suggest that the presidents of the two railroad companies now in office would do it, but they have to look ahead, and I take the responsibility of saying that I agree with them—that there is a possibility of a new company being formed, the Canadian National owning half the stock and the Canadian Pacific owning half, and this new company could then say to the men: "You did have rights on the Canadian Pacific; you did have rights on the Canadian National; you did have a schedule of wages; you did have agreements for many years, but this is a new company in which you have no rights whatever. We may take you in such proportions as we like, but not under the schedule of wages or working agreements you have at the present time" So I would like to offer to the minister this provision:

> Employees laid off as a result of economies effected under the provisions of this section shall be given preference for employment in any terminal or other company organized for joint operations.

That is one provision. The other would be:

Employees so transferred to or employed by any terminal or other company shall not be subject to any change in working conditions except through negotiations, and shall be entitled to be represented through their labour organizations in all matters affecting their conditions of employment.

That, I understand, is what the government has in mind, and we believe that the men should be protected to that extent. Therefore I offer these two as amendments to be added to section 16.

Mr. MANION: I could not quite follow the amendments as read but I will look them up in Hansard to-morrow. The hon. member proposes that they come at the end of section 16?

Mr. HEENAN: Well, I would like the minister to put them in in the best place.

Mr. MANION: We will let these stand for the moment. Can we deal with what is now subsection 4 but will be subsection 5 if our amendment is adopted? The right hon. leader of the opposition has looked over these amendments and I believe has agreed to this one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it is different from the one the minister had previously shown me.

Mr. MANION: Well, they both mean the same, only the wording is a little different.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This last one, the one originally shown to me, would be all right.

Mr. HACKETT: With the permission of the seconder I will withdraw the amendment to add a new subsection following subsection 3 of section 16 and will offer the following amendment, to be a new subsection 4:

Where the execution or carrying out of such a measure, plan or arrangement involves the doing of any act which by any statute requires the leave, sanction, assent or approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, no such measure, plan or arrangement shall be effective without the approval of the said board.

Mr. MANION: That will be subsection 4.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 16, subsection 4—Duty of C.N.R. and C.P.R. to meet by their proper officers and endeavour to arrange for cooperation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): This subsection will now be numbered 5.

Subsection agreed to.

Mr. HEENAN: As I understand it, the whole of section 16 is now carried?

Mr. MANION: Everything except the hon. gentleman's amendments.

Mr. HEENAN: Well, they are very harmless. They would take only a minute; if you would accept them we could pass the whole section.

Mr. MANION: We are holding up practically all the amendments. The only one we have dealt with is the one we have been discussing all day. I would rather like them to stand.

Mr. HEENAN: As long as we understand that section 16 is not completed.

Mr. MANION: No, it stands.

Section stands.

On section 17—Tribunals to be erected as required.

Mr. MANION: May I suggest that one subclause, (e), was to be removed.

Mr. BOWMAN: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CASGRAIN: On division.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Under protest.

Mr. HEENAN: The committee is going too fast for me. Someone moved that something be struck out there, and I don't know what it was.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald—Cape Breton): Subclause (e), abandonment of lines, services or facilities.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 18, subsection 1—Chairman and members of tribunal.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CASGRAIN: On division, under protest.

Mr. MANION: Just a moment—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Too fast for the minister!

Mr. MANION: In regard to section 18, I am sorry to delay my own bill but we wish to have it in as good shape as possible. There is a slight change in the first clause of section 18 which I will ask an hon. gentleman to move. It is that after the word "Canada" in line 12—Exchequer Court of Canada—the following be inserted:

Or in the event of such president acting as chief commissioner, a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada.

In other words, to avoid his occupying two positions.

Mr. HACKETT: I move that.

Mr. POWER: The Canadian Pacific is cooperating beautifully.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection 1 as amended agreed to.

On section 18, subsection 4—Procedure if representative fails to act.

Mr. MANION: The word "in" in the second line should be changed to "is"; it is a typographical error.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 19—Hearings to be held in matters of substantial public concern.

Mr. HEENAN: This section states:

If, in the opinion of the presiding officer of any tribunal, any application made to him raises matters of substantial concern to the public or a section of the public, he may direct—

Remembering the powers that are given the arbitral tribunal, does the minister not think this section should state that the presiding officer shall give notice in some way, perhaps through the press, of matters of public concern? I do not want to reiterate again and again the powers of this tribunal, but surely it should not be left to the opinion of the chairman as to whether or not a particular matter concerns the public. I have in mind the possibility that some service may be abandoned which would affect those living along that line. This could be done by the tribunal without notice to the public and without the people situated along that line having the right to submit their argument to the tribunal. I think already the presiding officer has more power than he should have, and surely he ought not to have in addition the power to determine whether or not a certain matter is of public interest. I think we should make it mandatory on the presiding officer to make public the applications coming before the tribunal.

Mr. MANION: A portion of this clause is mandatory; if the hon. gentleman reads subsection 2 he will see that where the matter affects the province the presiding officer must notify the attorney general of that province. It is true that in other cases it is left to the opinion of the presiding officer, but after all we must give the chairman of such an important tribunal credit for being reasonable, and we must believe that he would give a just and fair decision in a matter affecting any section of the public. I do not think we need argue because the matter is left in his hands to a certain extent. Probably many cases will come up in which it will not be necessary to hold public hearings because there will be no other interest involved than the two companies. I think we can safely leave it in the hands of the man who is appointed to that important position, especially since no abandonment can take place without the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners. As my hon. friend knows, that is an amendment we will move a little later.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I must confess that I rather agree with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I think the minister was quite right when he said that many cases, perhaps the majority, may be left to the discretion of the presiding officer, but even in section 2 I see the words:

—which in the opinion of the presiding officer specially affects any province of Canada—

So it is not mandatory; it is left to his discretion, both as to whether the matter is of public interest and as to whether representations shall be received. Certainly I think that in important matters it should be possible for those interested to make representations on behalf of interested parties. It seems to me that we are giving very wide discretionary powers to the chairman of the tribunal. I am quite prepared to give him wide powers, but it seems to me that here we are going almost too far when we leave it to him to decide whether or not the hearing shall be public and whether or not any representations shall be made. I can quite conceive that in this work of cooperation many matters may come up of very great interest not only to the railways but to other parties as well, and I think some provision should be included by which interested parties should be able to make representations where that seems advisable.

Mr. MANION: I think that is the intention of the act. My hon. friend must remember that the chairman of the tribunal is not interested in either of the companies; he is in a position of independence. He has no interest in concealing any of these applications from the public. He is placed there in a judicial capacity, if you like, representing the public, so that he will have every interest in protecting the public. I am informed that these really are the same rules under which the Board of Railway Commissioners operate.

Section agreed to on division.

Sections 20, 21 and 22 agreed to on division.

On section 23—Certain orders of tribunal require formal written consent of presiding officer.

Mr. MANION: There are some changes to be made in connection with this section, so I think we had better let it stand and go on with the others.

Section stands.

On section 24—Tribunal orders prevail over orders of railway board.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In view of one or two amendments which are to be introduced giving the Board of Railway Commissioners jurisdiction in certain specified cases, should we not add, "except as otherwise specified in the act"? That would bring it into conformity with the amendment the minister mentioned a short time ago. It is provided in this section that in the event of any conflict the decision of the tribunal shall prevail over that of the board. There are one or two instances where the board is to have jurisdiction over the tribunal, so I should think this section should be made to conform with the rest of the bill.

Mr. MANION: I went into that question some time ago, and it was not thought that section 24 would overrule the other clauses. However, we might let section 24 stand and we will frame an amendment to cover the point.

Section stands.

Section 25 agreed to on division.

On section 26—Quashal of a dispute.

Mr. YOUNG: Before this section carries, may I ask the minister whether he can give me answers to the questions I asked.

Mr. MANION: I will pass them over to my hon. friend and not bother putting them on Hansard. They are rather complicated and he can study them at his leisure. If he wishes to deal with them later he can do so.

Mr. YOUNG: Thank you.

Section agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

[Mr. Manion.]

Friday, April 21, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury) presented the second report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government and moved that the estimates referred to in the said report be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 79, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. STEVENS: This bill deals with one or two matters in connection with the general administration of the act which it is desired to correct. One amendment arises out of a decision of the courts in regard to the insufficiency as to title to the grain of the bills of lading on the great lakes where the trip is broken and the grain unloaded into a transfer elevator. The other amendment deals with the practice in the port of Montreal and other ports of using grain for the loading of ships which may not be quite correctly documented under the present system. It is to correct these two matters that the bill is being introduced.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADVANCES TO PROVINCES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table correspondence with the provincial authorities and to give a copy to the right hon. leader of the opposition.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved the second reading of Bill No. 78, to amend the Pension Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it has been decided to refer this bill to a small special committee. This will meet the requests which were made in the house yesterday.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. MacLAREN: I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) that the said bill be referred to a special committee to be hereafter named, with power to report from time to time.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the whips might be able to agree on the personnel of the committee between now and Monday, and then on Monday the committee could be named.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What number is it proposed to have?

Mr. BENNETT: It is proposed to have a committee of twelve. That number has been found to work out satisfactorily having regard to the membership of the various parties in the house.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Marine—
Salaries, $301,932; contingencies, $57,500.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I suppose this is the only item in the minister's estimates under which we will have the opportunity of discussing matters of a general character. With that in mind I should like to discuss the matter of the appointment of port surveyors. Owing to the changing of the Canada Shipping Act in its application to load lines, it became necessary to facilitate the operations of shipping, to appoint surveyors. Particularly was that so in those ports where lumber was the chief export. I suggest the port of Port Alberni has not been treated fairly.

Two men—and I understand they are capable men—have been appointed in Vancouver, and one in Victoria. The man in Victoria is authorized to carry out the supervision of ships loading lumber not only at Victoria but at points such as Nanaimo and Ladysmith. However the work in connection with the port of Alberni is being done by the man from Vancouver. I wish to emphasize that I have no complaint to make against the ability of that man. But the situation is such that shippers of lumber from the port of Port Alberni are operating under a very heavy handicap. In one sense that port is somewhat remote from Vancouver. That is to say a full day's time is required to get there, and another day to get back. The work is of such a character that a local man should be on hand to do it. It is not merely a matter of looking at a ship and saying, "All right, you can take the boat out." Constant or at least intermittent supervision is required while the boat is being loaded, and that attention cannot be given by a man whose residence is a day's journey away.

The port of Port Alberni is deserving of careful consideration, because it is the third largest shipping port in the province of British Columbia. Hon. members may be surprised to learn that we out-rate Victoria, the capital city. We ship more lumber from the port of Port Alberni than is shipped from Victoria. Yet, when there is a man stationed at Vancouver we have not one at Port Alberni, with the result that there are several forms of injustice. The fee for inspecting a boat is ten dollars. I do not know who is supposed to pay it, but in the last analysis no doubt it is the shipper of the lumber. If the man has to come from a distance the shipper has to pay expenses both going and coming and living expenses. That, to begin with is an unfair charge, because it handicaps the shippers at Port Alberni who are in competition with other shippers.

Yet that is not the most important feature. This is a technical matter with which I am not thoroughly familiar; to decide where a load line shall be is an extremely complicated problem, under the new regulations. A man thoroughly versed in loading lumber, a marine man and one who has to have quite a good education, must do the work. The particular spot where the load line is to be placed is not so much his concern; that is ascertained by a preliminary surveyor. The chief duty of the port surveyor is to ascertain the amount of lumber that shall be put on the deck load. To those who do not understand marine matters I should explain that the surveyor could come along and say, "Well, take a thousand feet off that deck load." It would be easily done. However that is not the way it works out. A man may have a million and a half feet of lumber to ship. He knows where it is going. Some of it may be of a specific kind, or of a type most adapted to be shipped on the deck. Perhaps because it is too long, or for some other reason it cannot be put below deck. Under those circumstances the shipper would have half a million feet to place on the deck. After he has completed loading and placed the half million feet on the deck the surveyor, who has not been in attendance when the work was in progress, may come along and say, "You will have to take two hundred thousand feet off." In that way the order is broken. It means that not only will he have to take off two hundred thousand feet, but he will have to take the whole deck load off, take out a certain portion of the lumber below deck and replace it with some of the deck load which had to be taken off under the direction of the surveyor. The shipper must have the top load go on the ship somewhere, so he has to take the whole half million deck load off, then take some out of the hold and replace it.

That is only one illustration. I am trying to indicate the necessity of the surveyor being in the immediate vicinity, so that he may be called or consulted during the progress of the loading. He may come down and say, "That ship is sinking too fast by the head; I do not think I will allow any more in the forward hold"—or on the deck load, as the case may be. Under those circumstances the shipper guides himself accordingly, and makes appropriate arrangements. But when the surveyor is a day's journey away, he cannot give that supervision. He would not be paid if he came between times. These facts illustrate the necessity of always having a local man on hand. Of course he would not have to stand and watch the ship being loaded. The $10 would not be sufficient for him to do that, but he can glance at it from time to time.

Although I have discussed the most important feature, there is another one worthy of consideration. Very often the ships are running strictly on schedule time. If in loading they are detained more than a certain number of hours there are heavy demurrage charges. They do not know exactly when the boat will be completely loaded; possibly they cannot tell within forty-eight hours. If a surveyor is sent from Vancouver to be on hand at the time the shipper anticipates the boat will be loaded, and upon his arrival it is not loaded, there are all kinds of trouble. If on the other hand when they send for him they find he has gone north of Powell River or some other comparatively remote port then the boat is tied up and someone has to bear heavy demurrage, perhaps $500 a day. For all these reasons and others which I could indicate I would impress upon the minister the necessity of appointing a local man, even if he is only an acting port inspector. Such men can be got at the port of Alberni, thoroughly competent to do the work. It is going to create a quite unnecessary handicap on this industry, which as we all know is struggling desperately at the present time. There are two or three mills that have been shut down most of the winter and they are just beginning work on a very meagre basis now, and should not be subject to any avoidable handicap. If I were asking the government to spend money it would be different, but I am not; I am simply asking them to appoint a competent man in Port Alberni to do this work, as they have done in Vancouver. The Vancouver man is too far away, and the expense and time to bring him is too great. I do ask the minister to look very thoroughly into this phase of the situation. Perhaps he can give me some information now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. NEILL: No, it is not carried.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Chairman, I am glad my hon. friend has brought this question before the committee. It is the first intimation I have had of any complaint about the surveyors we have on the Pacific coast for the enforcement of the load line convention. But the desire of the government is that our exporters and shippers shall have all possible facilities. I will be pleased to inquire, and if we can do what my hon. friend suggests, appoint a surveyor especially for the port of Alberni, we will do it. I shall be happy to inquire.

Mr. NEILL: I thank the minister. I might say that the government have a little interest in Port Alberni. They put a timber assembly wharf there that cost $125,000, and it has paid its way "from the grass roots," so to speak, the only wharf in Canada that has been known to do that. It is a credit to the foresight of the late ministry, so the government has some interest in seeing that it is made a success. I do not want the minister to take it that I have any complaint about the men appointed, they are quite competent men, the only thing is that it needs a local man.

While I am on my feet and before my hon. friends opposite cry "carried" again, I would ask the minister if he has any intention of building another lighthouse tender. These matters are just as important to the Pacific coast as the grain situation is to the prairies; we sat here very patiently while the Grain Act was being discussed, and we ask the same courtesy of hon. members now. I think I brought the question of a lighthouse tender to the attention of the minister last fall. The only boat doing the work now is the Newington; she is old and never was a very suitable boat. They had a very good boat some years ago but it had to be thrown aside. Some day that Newington is going to break down, it is far gone in a senile condition now, and when it does break down there is going to be a desperate situation in connection with the lighthouse service. Notwithstanding the need for economy, which I quite admit, I think it is poor policy not to foresee the more or less immediate need for another boat. You cannot pick up suitable lighthouse tenders in a day or two, they have to be built. I hope the minister will give some assurance that even if he is not able to get one immediately he at least has it in his mind to arrange to build such a boat.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As to the necessity of replacing that boat by a new one, I am quite in accord with my hon. friend. The reports of my officials are to the same effect. But this year we have to cut down expenditure, so unfortunately the project will have to be postponed until next year.

Mr. NEILL: Just one word more. I am glad to find myself so much in accord with the minister's views. I want to ask a question which is not of a critical character. I see in a local paper that a patrol cutter apparently called the Adversus is going to leave Halifax on May 5th to take up patrol work on the Pacific coast. Could the minister advise us as to the character of this boat and the work it will be engaged in, or what kind of boat it will replace? Is it intended to replace the Thiepval, or what is it intended to do?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am sorry I cannot give a definite answer to my hon. friend, as this boat belongs to the preventive service of the customs department.

Mr. CARDIN: I observe the estimate does not provide for the salary of a chief engineer. Is it the intention of the department to do away with the services of the chief engineer?

Mr. DURANLEAU: According to an order in council adopted some months ago, all positions vacant at a certain date were abolished, automatically. But we have in the contingencies estimates sufficient money to provide for it when the appointment is made.

Mr. MacLEAN: I notice on page 82 of the estimates there are quite a number of items in connection with the radio service. I find there is a director of radio service at $5,220; superintendent of radio service, $3,960; senior radio electrical engineer, $3,840; and chief radio inspector, $3,060; and senior radio inspectors, two, at $2,580; a total of over $21,000 for these officials in the radio branch. I thought it was understood that when the commission took over the service they would administer it. I would like to ask the minister if those positions I have referred to are independent of the commission, if those men will be retained in the service doing the same work as they were doing before, and if the commission will carry on a different branch of the service?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Radio under the Department of Marine is quite separate from the radio commission. The radio commission attend to broadcasting; they may have their own engineers for broadcasting. The Marine department attends to communication and "trouble" services all over the country, and radio direction finding. So we have to retain our own engineers and staff.

Mr. BROWN: Now that radio has been mentioned perhaps this is a favourable opportunity to refer to a matter that was brought up in the house some few days ago—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, there is a little further on an item about radio.

Mr. BROWN: Well, I am willing to postpone the matter.

Mr. MARCIL: Has any progress been made regarding the appointment of a deputy minister of marine? How can the department get on without a deputy?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am sorry my hon. friend did not direct his question to the Prime Minister. He has the power to appoint the deputy minister.

Mr. BROWN: Are we discussing the whole of item 24 of which details are given on page 82?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: Then surely any particular item in this list may be discussed at this time.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Certainly; my hon. friend has that privilege, but there is a particular item a little later on with regard to radio.

Mr. CASGRAIN: With further reference to the appointment of a deputy minister of marine, some time ago I directed a question in that regard to the minister, who referred me to the Prime Minister. I asked the same question of the Prime Minister, but I could not get a definite answer. Now the question has been asked again by the hon. member for Gaspe, and I should think the Minister of Marine and the Prime Minister have had time to consider the situation and decide what is to be done. Surely they are not going to leave that position vacant for another year. I think it is in the interests of the department, of the people in this country generally and also of the government that such a high post should be filled as quickly as possible. I am sure that in the department there are competent officials who might be promoted; other persons have been mentioned with reference to this position as well, and I think it is necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of the country that this appointment should be made. I have no doubt it would be a great help to the minister if he could be relieved of all the work of administration in connection with his own department, and he could do that by obtaining the services of a well qualified, well equipped man. Sometimes my hon. friend has to go away; for instance, last year he made a successful trip to Spain. Perhaps next year he may go to another country to represent Canada, perhaps Russia, and the department will be rudderless, operating without proper direction. I think we should have from the minister a statement as to the approximate date when this position will be filled.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think it is fair for my hon. friends to ask the minister when such an appointment will be made, when it is well known that under the law the appointment is made by the Prime Minister. I do not understand why the matter is brought up when the Prime Minister is not in his seat.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The other day the Prime Minister told me the matter was under consideration. Surely in the interval, and especially in view of the fact that we are getting towards the end of the session, some progress has been made in the matter. I know both my hon. friend and the Prime Minister are busy, but I would ask the hon. gentleman now whether an application or recommendation has been received with regard to certain persons in connection with this position. The minister cannot make the country believe that the Prime Minister does the whole thing alone. We know he does most of the work of the government, but surely my hon. friend will not let anything be put over him; surely he will not let the Prime Minister dictate to him how his own department shall be run. I do not think the hon. gentleman would let the Prime Minister appoint, without consultation, without advice and without authority, a man whom the minister himself might not trust and whom he might not care to have administering his department. It is very good to have the Prime Minister running the country and all the departments of the government, as we surmise he does, but I have known my hon. friend in a professional and business way, and from the way he has carried on his department and from the appointments he has made I am reasonably sure that he would not allow the Prime Minister to force him to accept some person whom he might not like. I think the country should know when this position, which is one of the most important in the country, is to be filled. It has been vacant for almost a year now, but when we ask the minister when the appointment will be made we are told that the Prime Minister has the last say.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is the law.

Mr. CASGRAIN: But the Prime Minister is not in his seat. My hon. friend wants the country to believe that he is going to submit like a good little boy to the dictates of the Prime Minister. I do not believe it and the country will not believe it. We want to know when this position will be filled.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have put a direct question to the minister; I asked if he has received any applications for that position or if certain persons have been recommended to him. I should like an answer.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Everyone knows that all applications must be directed to the Prime Minister, who appoints the heads of departments. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend say that he does not think the minister will let the Prime Minister go over his head in the making of this appointment. That is not the question at all; the law says that the heads of departments shall be appointed by the Prime Minister, and I believe in abiding by the law. I cannot tell my hon. friend when the appointment will be made; that question should be directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Then I will direct another question to the minister. Is it not a fact that applications for this position go to the minister, and has he received any application from any person?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, the applications go to the Prime Minister, who makes the appointment.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Then let me ask the minister if he has heard of any application being made for that position.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not attach much importance to gossip.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the minister himself received any application for that position?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: The minister has already answered that question.

Mr. CASGRAIN: My hon. friend is not the minister. I should like an answer to my question, which I think is a fair one.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I think the question of this appointment has been a great disappointment to the country.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): We were led to believe that the government intended to reduce all the estimates, but I notice an increase of $4,500 here. If the Department of Marine is carrying on all the services it carried on previously; if it has been found necessary to increase the estimates by $4,500 surely it follows that a deputy minister is needed. If there is no need for a deputy minister now surely there was no need for one in former years; the money paid previously must have been thrown away. I think it is up to the minister to give us a clear understanding of this matter. First he should tell us why the vote is increased by $4,500, and then he should say whether it is necessary to have a deputy minister and, if so, when that appointment will be made.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think my hon. friend is mistaken; we have a total decrease of $9,054 in civil government. In the first item there is a decrease of $13,554, and there is an increase of $4,500 in the contingency item. As I said a moment ago, the position of chief engineer is not provided for in the first item, but it will be looked after under the next item. That might explain the increase of $4,500 in the second item, which is more than offset by a decrease of $13,554 in the first item.

Mr. MARCIL: Along with other members of the cabinet the minister represents the Montreal district. Has he taken cognizance of the resolutions passed yesterday by the chamber of commerce and the board of trade of Montreal, representing the business men of that city, to the effect that the government has made no attempt whatever to reduce the expenditures of this country? Is he prepared to apply the recommendations of those bodies to his own department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not yet taken communication of any resolution adopted by the chamber of commerce or the board of trade of Montreal, but I may inform my hon. friend that since we have been in office we have abolished over four thousand positions and reduced expenditures accordingly.

An hon. MEMBER: And increased unemployment.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am sure that those who criticize the government are not aware of these facts.

Mr. MARCIL: The chief organ supporting the government in Montreal, the Montreal Gazette, one of the best newspapers in the dominion, published yesterday and the day before editorials which I commend to the minister; he should take them into consideration. As regards these four thousand employees the hon. gentleman now mentions, I do not know what their political complexion is but I do know that in my own constituency every man who has been dismissed is a Liberal. Yesterday the Postmaster General dismissed Edward E. Sweetman of Port Daniel Centre, a man who had been for a considerable number of years in the service, and a request to have him retained was made by the Lord Bishop of Quebec. The minister no doubt overlooks that. Of these four thousand how many were Liberals and how many Conservatives? Can the minister tell me that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend refers to the Montreal Gazette and mentions an article in that newspaper with reference to the necessity for reduction in expenditures. May I in turn refer him to another newspaper, the Journal, and ask him to read yesterday morning's editorial, which furnishes a complete answer to the article in the Gazette.

Mr. MARCIL: The citizens of Montreal declare that they are prepared to carry their share of the burden; the business men of that city are ready to pay their taxes. But they want this government to give some evidence of economy. They point out that there are three or four departments which could easily be abolished. Here, for example, we have two departments which might be under the minister, the Department of Marine and the Department of Fisheries, and on top of that we have a duplication so far as radio is concerned; the minister is running one part of the radio organization while the radio commission sees to the other part of it. The minister will have a staff of his own and the radio commission their own staff.

By the way, in the matter of radio broadcasting, has the minister received complaints within the last week with regard to duplication of services? Has it been represented to him that one service is running into another, that some of the most important services from the United States, the Columbia station, for instance, are being neutralized by the multiplication of services in this country? Is he prepared to look into this matter? I know the minister is sincere, and he is a young man in public life, so that he wants to make good. Surely therefore he must realize the importance of the representation made by the business men of Montreal. These men want to see some tangible evidence of economy on the part of the government. If I had time I could go over a list of departments that could easily be done away with or merged into other departments. That is what the Gazette is pointing out, and it is what these business men of Montreal wish to see brought about. They do not want the government to cut down by ten cents the pay of the labouring classes, charwomen and the like; they want the government to practise real economy. Take the Department of Railways for instance. That used to be one of the most important departments; to-day, if you ask the minister for information, all he says is, "I cannot give any information; I shall have to ask Montreal." So that Montreal is running the railways. Well, what is the use of that department? Why not take canals and put them under the Marine department? That is where the department could perform a useful service. Again, take the Health department, another one to which attention has been drawn. That deals only with animals, because the health of human beings is looked after by the provinces. Here we have a department that could easily be done away with; the services now performed by the Department of Health, so far as animals are concerned, could be done by the Department of the Interior or some other branch of government, perhaps the Department of Agriculture. And so on. I really think the minister should give some attention to the request made by the business men of Montreal, who after all carry a large share of the burden of this country, and who rightly insist that the government should show some practical evidence of their willingness to cut down the expenses of this country as far as possible. God knows we are governed enough; we have nine provincial governments, hundreds of municipal governments and county councils, and altogether we are governed to death. We have reached the crossroads, and if the offer from the United States does not result in a change in our commercial relations I do not know what will happen.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I can assure the committee that we are taking every possible means to curtail expenses. As a matter of fact a great number of items voted last year in my department, though they were reduced votes, have not been fully expended. We have tried to curb expenditures to the limit, and we are as much in sympathy with the taxpayers of the country as the former government was, indeed perhaps more. As regards the duplication of services in connection with radio, I do not think my hon. friend clearly understands the situation.

Mr. MARCIL: I read the Journal last night. That newspaper is highly regarded by the minister and it complains that one of the best services from the United States, the Columbia station, is completely neutralized by duplication on this side.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. gentleman is referring to wave length, but that has nothing to do with my department. Our system is the same as the system in England, where the British Broadcasting Corporation and the Post Office Department divide the services involved in radio broadcasting. There, the Post Office Department attends to the collection of radio licences and interference troubles, and in Canada the Marine department collects the licence fees and carries on the interference service, while the radio commission attends to broadcasting, interference between stations, wave lengths and so on. I do not think there is any duplication in service.

Mr. MARCIL: I understand that the radio commission was appointed as a non-political organization. That promise however has gone by the board with the others.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Faded away like the rest.

Mr. MARCIL: I understood that the commission would control radio in Canada but now we have a dual organization, the minister in charge of one and the commission in charge of the other. When we ask him for information in regard to radio he replies in the same way as the Minister of Railways, "You must ask the commission." When we ask a question we are told that it cannot be answered and we are referred to the commission. Who is to speak in this house for the radio commission? Is it going to be independent and above parliament?

I am an old-timer; I am an old fashioned politician and I can remember the time when a member of parliament was somebody. He was the connecting link between the people and the government of the day and was not handicapped by commissions. He had the trust of the people and if he was a government supporter, he had the trust of the ministers of the crown. If something went wrong there was someone who could be blamed—that was the old style responsible government. To-day we have so many commissions that the ordinary elector is bewildered. Some of the older generation say to me: When you went to parliament in the old days it meant something but now you do not seem to be able to do anything for us when we write to you. We have the railway commission, the radio commission, the soldiers' commission, the pension commission, the civil service commission and other forces of that kind. Yesterday I asked a question of the Minister of Railways in connection with a contract for railway ties which had been awarded but I could not obtain any information. As far as matters pertaining to radio are concerned, we seem to be in the same position. We are also in the same position in connection with the civil service. I voted for the civil service commission in 1908 when the Hon. Sydney Fisher introduced his bill. At that time we felt that it was necessary that a commission should be appointed to handle the inside service but we had no idea of making this commission applicable to the outside service. The Postmaster General demonstrated that last year when he took post offices having a revenue of under $400 per year away from the civil service commission.

I do not know where all these commissions are going to lead us. At the present time it seems that this house comes here merely to vote money and nothing else. On the one side, we have the party in power remaining silent; on the other we have a party which says what it likes or what it is allowed to say, and then everything goes by. When we go back to our electors they ask all kinds of questions but we find we are helpless as far as giving information is concerned. We find we are up against the civil service commission, the soldiers' commission or something else of that kind. I have been urging a case before the pension board for the last eight or nine years. This is a widow whose only son was killed in action; the municipality has to look after her but I have been unable to get one dollar for the poor woman. People are beginning to wonder just what is the use of having members of parliament when everything is being done by commissions made up of civil servants.

We all know how the different ministers are harrassed by office seekers. This has been the case ever since 1867 when this country was organized. A man who has served his party feels that he can come here and exact payment for his services. They feel that when they work for a party and that party is in power, they should be rewarded. The country is spending thousands and even millions of dollars in keeping up these commissions. I understand two or three of these commissions are to be abolished by the amendment to the Pension Act introduced yesterday. This costly system of government is crushing the people of Canada. They are carrying a burden which we never had to carry in days gone by. I think the Montreal Gazette and the Montreal chamber of commerce are quite right in asking this government to make a determined effort to cut down the cost of government.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The hon. member for Bonaventure has referred to the article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette. There was also one which appeared in the Ottawa Journal, and I should like to ask the minister just which article is correct. No answer! That is your condemnation.

Item agreed to.

Ocean and river service—

Radio service, to provide for the construction and maintenance of radio ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the dominion, $679,550.

Radio service, to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $280,400.

Mr. DURANLEAU: A full discussion has taken place upon these two items.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When these items were up before a somewhat lengthy debate took place in connection with a new licence which had been issued by the department apparently in the absence of the minister. At that time I referred to complaints which had been brought to my attention as to the use being made of this station. The propaganda from this station was not against any political party or any municipality or province, it referred more particularly to the institutions of this country. I have listened to this station a couple of times and I have read certain articles which have appeared in the press. I am sure the minister must have received complaints as to the use being made of this station in Montreal. Has he any further information to give to the committee? There has been considerable agitation among the population of the city of Montreal in connection with the programs broadcast from this station.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Since the last discussion in this committee, the radio commission received a complaint from a citizen of Montreal concerning the utterances broadcast from one of the stations in that city. I have received many letters and telegrams protesting against the complaint which had been made by this citizen. These people contended that nothing objectionable had been broadcast from this particular station. Since then I have not had the opportunty of listening to what has been said over the radio by the association to which my hon. friend refers, but previously I did listen in a couple of times to form my own judgment because of complaints that had been made, and I must say I did not find anything reprehensible in the statements which I heard on those occasions. I may add that since that protest I have not heard any complaints from anybody.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would the minister have any objection to giving to the committee a copy of the communications he has received, so that we may know from what source they emanated? Were they confidential telegrams or communications?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am not prepared at the moment to say whether they were confidential or not because I have not the documents with me, but I have no objection to looking them over and seeing whether they are confidential or not.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If they are not confidential will the minister bring them down?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If they were confidential, of course, I could not make them public without the consent of the signer.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If they are not confidential a motion could be made in the house in the regular way for their production, so I do not see what objection the minister should have to bringing down the telegrams he has received.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have no objection if they are not confidential.

Mr. CASGRAIN: With further reference to this matter, has there been of late any enlargement of the zone of operation of this same station in Montreal? Has it been permitted to increase its power?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I remember reading an article in the paper some time ago saying that this station had been given a longer wave length. I have not the paper by me at the moment, but I would ask if that is true.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The channel might have been changed, but that does not increase the power of the station. What the station was asking for, I think, was an increase of power.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: They did not get that. I think that the radio commission gave the station another wave length because there was too much interference with the one they had, but there has been no increase of power. It is a station of 100 watts only.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What was its wave length when the station was first licensed, and what is it now?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The first wave length was granted only temporarily, on trial. It was 1210 and now it is 1120.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the wave length of any other station been reduced or have all the stations in the province of Quebec the same wave length that they had before?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think there was a change of channel for one station in Montreal and one station in Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Which station?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In Montreal the Marconi station, and in Quebec CKCV, operated by Vandry Incorporated.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The last time we were discussing this subject there was a debate on the payment of radio licence fees, and there was some discussion as to the commission that was being received by the supervisor in the district of Montreal in charge of collecting the fees. Has that whole question been settled, and have all the amounts of money collected by the present supervisor been turned in to the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The number of licences sold in a house to house canvass from September 20 to February 22, which is the last statement I have, was 11,385.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Have all these licences been paid for, and a settlement made with the department, or has that number of licences simply been issued?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The collectors have to buy their books and pay in advance before going on the house-to-house canvass.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If I understand the situation aright, the officials of the department buy the licences and then sell them, and turn the fees they receive over to the department less a certain commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The department in Montreal keeps the licences, and the supervisor in charge of the issuance of licences in Montreal buys the books of licences from our branch there. Last year he had to pay cash for those books, $16 for a book of ten licences. Thirty cents was paid to the canvasser and ten cents to the supervisor on each licence.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Twenty per cent commission.

Mr. EULER: That is 20 per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: For the whole commission, yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the department received a settlement of all the fees that have been collected in other parts of the province of Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is all on a cash basis, payable in advance, everywhere in Canada.

Mr. BROWN: It will be recalled that a short time ago the minister, in reply to a question of mine, made a statement to the house with reference to the banning of Judge Rutherford's lectures from the radio. I do not know that I should have spoken at this time or dealt with the matter further had it not been that I assumed some responsibility for circulating throughout the country the answer made by the minister. I did this because I had received a good many communications protesting against the banning of those lectures, and I was not in a position to make any effective reply from my own knowledge. So that there may be no misunderstanding on the part of anybody, may I say that I am not at all in sympathy with Judge Rutherford's exposition of the scriptures. However to forbid men interpreting the scriptures and teaching whatever doctrines they see fit, so long as it is done without transcending the bounds of decency and without needless offence, does not agree with my views regarding religious liberty. Whether Judge Rutherford did or did not transcend those bounds I will not undertake to say. It seems however that the chairman of the commission objected that the judge in question had referred to him as a liar, a thief, a Judas and a polecat and therefore fit only to associate with the clergy. I agree that these are not complimentary remarks coming from any person.

It would seem however that Judge Rutherford has no monopoly on that kind of language. After I brought the matter up in the house I was waited upon by one of Judge Rutherford's disciples who protested against the reply which had been made by the minister. He called my attention to the fact that as long ago as August 16, 1927, there appeared in the Saturday Night, of which Mr. Charlesworth was the editor, an article dealing with Judge Rutherford and his propaganda. The article would indicate that when Mr. Charlesworth was placed in the position he now occupies, namely that of chairman of the radio commission, he was not entirely unprejudiced. Therefore in fairness I believe I should read some extracts from the article to show that Judge Rutherford had not a monopoly of offensive language. I have not time to read the whole of it, so I shall read only some extracts. The first is as follows:

> Recently Toronto had the doubtful honour of entertaining once more a heavy-jowled flannelmouth known as "Judge" J. F. Rutherford, grand vizier of the "Russellites" or the International Bible Students' Association, together with some thousands of his followers. What the said Rutherford is a judge of we do not know—perhaps of cigars, perhaps of fat swine —perhaps he is called judge by way of persiflage, just as an elevator man is called "Cap."

Then, further on:

> The war is over and peace loving people are willing to let by-gones be by-gones, but they do object to wandering blatherskites and professional liars starting the war all over again on Canadian soil. That Rutherford is a lying demagogue is apparent from the text of his addresses, in which he exploits the old fallacy that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor.

Towards the end of the article this complaint is made:

> On the night of July 21, reputable fathers of families anxious to listen in on the progress of the Dempsey-Sharkey prize fight were kept out by the high power oratory at the Toronto Coliseum.

Mr. Chairman, I do not purpose to judge as between these two. I repeat however that the action of the radio commission is not in harmony with my views in regard to the rights of a man to promulgate whatever doctrines he wishes, providing he does so without undue offence. As I said, it is only because I assumed responsibility for sending out to some of my constituents the statement made by the minister, thinking that perhaps he had made a satisfactory answer to the question, that I feel somewhat under obligation to present the other point of view. Having done that I shall only further emphasize that Mr. Charlesworth apparently was not altogether unprejudiced when in his official capacity he dealt with Judge Rutherford.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Have you anything to show that the article was written by Mr. Charlesworth; is it over his name?

Mr. BROWN: It appeared in the Saturday Night, a paper controlled by him.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: No; he just happened to be editor at that time. Is there anything to show that Mr. Charlesworth wrote the article? Let us be just to him.

Mr. BROWN: I have no further knowledge of the facts than I have stated.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Why spread it on the pages of Hansard as something written by Mr. Charlesworth?

Mr. CASGRAIN: He is responsible for that which appears in his paper.

Mr. BROWN: Is the hon. member in a position to deny it?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: There is nothing to deny. Have you any knowledge Mr. Charlesworth wrote that article? The hon. member says he has not, and yet he spreads it on the pages of Hansard, and decribes it as an article written by Mr. Charlesworth.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Did the hon. member read an editorial from the Saturday Night?

Mr. BROWN: I am told it was; that is all I know.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If it was an editorial the editor—at that time Mr. Charlesworth—ought to be responsible.

Mr. ROBINSON: In what year was it written?

Mr. BROWN: I understand it appeared in the issue of August 16, 1927.

Mr. ROBINSON: It will be interesting to read what the Minister of Marine of that day had to say about the broadcasting activities of the International Bible Students; he cut them off.

Mr. BROWN: This is not a matter between one government and another. I have made my statement simply to satisfy people in my own constituency who have been exercised over the question as to whether or not the lectures should have been banned from the radio.

Mr. REID: This matter is in the minds of a great many people in Canada to-day. At the outset let me say I have no brief for Judge Rutherford's organization, as I still adhere to that religious body known as the Presbyterians, and am content to hold to the eternal truths. No doubt many hon. members received communications regarding this matter. On behalf of the people who communicated with me I took the trouble to write Mr. Charlesworth. On March 27 last he replied to my letter stating, as the minister stated in the house, that Judge Rutherford had said he was a thief, a liar, a Judas and a polecat, and therefore fit to associate only with the clergy. Mr. Charlesworth further states:

You will plainly see that a man who interlards such attacks with his interpretations of prophecy is an objectionable person to have on the air in Canada.

After that letter I began to answer all the communications that had been sent me, upon which occasions I quoted the remarks of Mr. Charlesworth. One of the people to whom I wrote took the trouble to communicate with Judge Rutherford, with the result that I received a letter from him only a few days ago. I believe it should be read to the house, because it deals with the allegations contained in Mr. Charlesworth's letter. The date of the letter is April 15 of this year:

Hon. T. Reid,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—

A letter just received by me quotes from a letter written by you on March 28th to Mr. A. Kennett of Vancouver, B.C., the following:

"Mr. Charlesworth makes the further statement that Judge Rutherford in his recent address called him a thief, a liar, a Judas and a polecat, and therefore, he stated, fit only to associate with the clergy."

Permit me to say, my dear sir, that never at any time in a public address have I even mentioned the name of Mr. Charlesworth and at no time have I ever indulged in such language as above quoted. Surely I should not be held responsible for what others may say. I have never yet applied such epithets to any public man.

I think in view of that reply from Judge Rutherford the minister should bring down the correspondence, especially the letters received by Mr. Charlesworth, if he did receive them, in connection with the statements made by Judge Rutherford. I think this matter should be cleaned up, because it is exercising the minds of many of our Canadian citizens, whether they agree with the judge's organization or not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has been suggested that this is a partisan matter. As one who criticized the late government with regard to a similar ruling, I think I am clear of any charge of that kind. Further than that, I have no sympathy with the teachings of Judge Rutherford and his school. At the same time I do think that we are facing here a serious situation. It seems to me that in this country in the past we have largely taken the view that religion was a private matter and that each man was free not only to hold his own religious beliefs but to give utterance to those beliefs, so long as he did not interfere with other people. If his beliefs differ from those of others I suppose he should be free to criticize the beliefs of others. That has always been the practice under British law—that is so long as the criticism is not made in an offensive way. Someone near me suggests that parliamentary language should be used; I hope that it will be better than we have sometimes heard in this house!

As far as the newspapers are concerned a great deal of latitude has been allowed in such matters. Some years ago the Orange Sentinel used to come to me free; I think there was a great deal of latitude permitted to the Orange Sentinel. On one or two occasions I have lived in a house to which Roman Catholic papers came, I think they were allowed a very considerable degree of freedom in criticizing people of other denominations. Sometimes these various religious bodies crossed the line of decorum in criticizing others, but this was generally permitted so long as they did not cause trouble in the community.

Now we have a new medium of communication, the radio, and it would seem that there should be very great care exercised here. I can understand that with this medium of communication, being much more powerful than that of the press, there may be possibly even greater dangers and hence greater care should be exercised. We have now not merely a certain control by the government of radio, but we have gone further, we have made radio a public utility and have placed in charge of it a commission that is almost independent of parliamentary control. At the beginning of this new arrangement it seems to me highly desirable that we should place matters on a sound basis, or undoubtedly there is disaster ahead. About the only argument that I noticed the minister made the other day as he presented the case for the commissioners was that since Judge Rutherford lives outside of Canada he could not very readily come under our libel laws. There may be something to be said for that, but surely we should have some conclusive evidence, much more conclusive than has been furnished, that distinctly libellous utterances have been made, before action of this kind should be taken. I think there ought to be something in the nature of a trial before a man should be cut off. It ought not to be simply on the general principle that he lives outside of the country and is opposed to certain individuals or institutions in this country, that is too dangerous a position to take. I think we ought to have this cleared up, as has been suggested by the hon. member for New Westminster, by having the correspondence placed before us. If we once set this country by the ears over religious controversy we cannot tell where the matter may end. I found an interesting sequel to this the other day in the Montreal Daily Herald of April 14, under the heading:

Recorder Flays Bible Students
Declares group guilty of publishing illegal literature
Radio Commission

The article reads:

Tracts prepared and distributed by the International Bible Students' Association, although sprinkled with quotations from the prophets for authority, were found illegal by Recorder G. H. Semple yesterday, and Edward Noreworthy, a Montreal member of the association, was held responsible for them by the court. Sentence will be passed on April 21.

According to Recorder Semple's decision, the tracts, which constituted an invective against the Canadian radio commission for its ruling against J. F. Rutherford, ex-judge from Brooklyn and president of the association of uncensored radio speeches, were subversive in nature.

And here is given a quotation from the recorder's judgment:

The circular itself is but a protest—thinly veiled and replete with quotation from the prophets—against authority as constituted by the Radio Broadcasting Act. That is its preconceived, determined, and sole purpose; and in that respect it is subversive of peace, order, and good government.

The article concludes:

In the circular there was asked the question: "Have the people of Canada reached such a state of low intellectuality that they need to have a "wise" radio commission to approve what they shall hear about the Bible?

Now it seems to me that that is a most extraordinary decision. I am not suggesting that the minister or the radio commission are to be held in any sense responsible for the decision of Recorder Semple—

Mr. MACDOUGALL: What decision is that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have just read it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: It is not a decision of the minister or of this government. Some irresponsible—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Recorder Semple is not irresponsible.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Well it does not matter, you cannot attribute that to the minister or this government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When I was interrupted I was in the midst of saying that I did not hold the minister or the commission responsible for the decision of Recorder Semple, but I do say that the fact that such a decision can be given seems to me to emphasize the necessity for much more careful consideration of a matter of this kind. If we grant powers to a commission, and if when anyone chooses to protest against the decision of the commissioner his action is declared to be illegal, it seems to me that we have reached an intolerable situation. I cannot understand how there is any legal basis for this decision; however there it is, it shows what might happen if we allow this kind of thing to go on unchecked.

Curiously enough, in the Herald on the same page in another column over from this there is another item with regard to radio:

C. C. F. Flayed in Radio Talk by Gerald Almond
N. D. G. Candidate Calls Federation Necessary Evil of Centuries

The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is the necessary evil of centuries, and it is "flayed" the very word used at the head of the other paragraph. Apparently it is illegal for Judge Rutherford to use invective against certain people or certain beliefs, but apparently it is quite proper for Gerald Almond, whoever he may be, to flay the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I suggest that we are going to have a great deal of trouble with the national radio commission if there is to be discrimination of that character. I can quite conceive that it may be necessary for the radio commission to establish some definite rules that certain personalities may not be permitted over the air. I would hope that the time has not come when they would insist that the policies of other churches, other political parties or other groups might not be criticized, since that would be an infringement on the right of free speech. I submit that there must not be discrimination of this character, and I think at least the minister should tell us to-day what principles are applied by the commission in deciding what is proper to be broadcast and what is not proper. That is what I should like to have from the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not very much to say in reply to the remarks of my hon. friend. I have nothing to say with regard to the judgment rendered by Recorder Semple of Montreal; I do not think it is up to the minister or the government to criticize or pass judgment on a decision rendered by a recorder in Montreal or any other city in the country. If the matter should be brought up in a proper way and studied by the government perhaps we might have something to say, but at this moment I have nothing to add. With regard to the other question, the radio commission was organized under a statute unanimously passed by this house last session, and they were given certain powers and a certain control over the radio stations in Canada. We have made the best possible appointments to that commission in order that the statute may be carried out properly. I am not prepared to say on what principles they base their decisions with regard to programs being broadcast from certain stations, but I have no doubt these commissioners will do their duty to the full and will maintain a proper control over radio stations. I suppose they must decide whether or not to prohibit utterances which may be made against good government, against the institutions of the country or against public feelings throughout Canada, but I am not prepared to say what their principles are. At the present time they are the sole judges, with full control over the radio stations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not asked the minister to defend or criticize the decision of Recorder Semple, but I do say that when we have a man awaiting sentence for having published a tract which has been held to be illegal simply because it criticizes the radio commission we have a serious situation. Here we have a roundabout way of making a law. A man is to be sentenced for having criticized a ruling made by the commissioners. Surely this parliament has the supreme law making power in the country, we have some right to say what the law shall be. It is absurd if we cannot get from the minister to-day what are the criteria used by the commission. Surely there must be some fundamental principles adopted by the commission which would be general in their character. I can quite understand that the commissioners must be given a good deal of latitude and discretion in handling this business, but I think we should know the general principles under which they operate, especially when a ruling may lead to a situation such as the one to which I have referred.

Mr. REID: I wonder if the minister is prepared to give the committee the details of where Judge Rutherford made this statement and to whom and when it was made, because, as I say, this matter has been exercising the minds of many people all over the country. This man says that he never made the statement at any time.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What statement?

Mr. REID: The statement accredited to him by Mr. Charlesworth, who said that in his recent fulminations Judge Rutherford called him a thief, a liar, a Judas and a polecat. Judge Rutherford says he made no such utterances. In view of the fact that this question is arousing considerable discussion all over the country I think we should be told when Judge Rutherford made that statement, where he made it and to whom he made it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The statement I gave the other day emanated from the radio commission, as I stated quite plainly. I thought those words were taken from the letter which was circulated all over Canada, though I am not sure. I do not remember whether or not those exact words were contained in that letter.

Mr. REID: The letter from whom?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Presumably from Judge Rutherford. The letter and signature were printed and a copy was left at every door, according to my information; I know I received a copy at my office here and also at my house in Montreal.

Mr. EULER: Turning away from the subject which has interested the committee for some time, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to a matter which I brought up in the house last year and again during the present session. I refer to the situation with regard to the radio station known as CKOK at Windsor. When I referred to this matter previously I said that I had received information to the effect that this station was owned and controlled by United States capital, that the programs came almost entirely from the United States, and that the advertising took up more than the percentage of time allotted by the rules of the commission. At that time the minister made the statement that he was not quite satisfied with the way that station was conducted. Since then I have heard that this station has been combined with the station operated at London, I think by the London Free Press, and I have heard also that the Windsor station has been granted an increase in power. I rise to-day merely to ask the minister whether he can give any further details with regard to these points.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Before the beginning of the fiscal year I received a recommendation from the radio commission authorizing the amalgamation of the London station with the Windsor station, with an increase in power to 5,000 watts.

Mr. EULER: To both stations?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think the London station will disappear, and the Windsor station will have 5,000 watts power. They intend to conduct a very powerful station, and I know the radio commission is looking after the programs.

Mr. EULER: What have they ascertained?

Mr. DURANLEAU: My information is that they propose to maintain studios both in London and in Windsor, and I am told that this will be a great improvement.

Mr. EULER: With all due respect to the minister I am afraid he has not given the committee a great deal of information; the only thing he has told us is that these two stations have been amalgamated. It does occur to me that if this station is to serve western Ontario, to select Windsor, which is the extreme western boundary, is not so wise as to have London. I am not an expert in radio matters but I am wondering why they should establish a station or continue a station at the extreme edge of the country rather than in central Ontario, thus reaching what is usually known as the western peninsula of the province. I wish the minister would say something in that regard. He has given no information whatever as to whether the station is now completely under Canadian control, unless he regards the fact that it has been amalgamated with the London station as proof that it is now Canadian. Further, with regard to programs, I believe that what he assures the committee is that in future they will be largely Canadian, but I am afraid there has not been much progress in that regard, nor has anything been done in the matter of the percentage of advertising, which under the rules of the commission is limited to five per cent of the time of any program. With regard to the increase of power, he states that Windsor station is to have 5,000 watts. I understood that they had 5,000 watts before, and if that is so there is no increase there. It is interesting to note that the London station is to be abolished, but I would point out that the other station is not nearly so well located as the ordinary layman would think for the proper distribution of radio programs.

Mr. ROBINSON: As regards the Essex Broadcasting Company, fifty-one per cent of the stock is owned by Canadians, and there are options and agreements in escrow by which they can exercise very shortly the right to own and control two-thirds of it. The Essex broadcasting station is one of the most up to date stations in the world. There is nothing on the North American continent that can beat it. It was built at a cost of $150,000 and the annual expenditure is something like $115,300. The studio in Detroit is used in conjunction with it but the main station is in Windsor and there are a greater number of employees there than on the other side, where advertising from American sources is secured.

I have never been able to hear the London station in Windsor; it has only a small radius whereas the station in Windsor will almost reach the North Pole. When they were canvassing for advertising they could not get a great deal from Canadians, but after the time had been allotted to American advertising the Canadians were regretting that they had not taken advantage of the opportunity that had been offered them. When the new contracts are made out however the greater part of the advertising will be Canadian.

Referring to Judge Rutherford, I wish the hon. member for New Westminster had listened in last Sunday afternoon to what the so-called judge had to say. As a rule I do not listen to nuts over the radio, and I think this man has been getting too much free advertising, especially in this country. I have received numerous letters with regard to Judge Rutherford and I do not hesitate in any of my replies to say just what I think of him. It seems to me a disgrace and almost a crime that he should have got off the stuff he did last Sunday; it was most unfortunate that what he said should have been heard in any Christian home in this country. What he had to say about Christian ministers was almost a crime.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: And the Liberals defend him in this house to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON: Ever since I heard the hon. member for Richelieu express himself in regard to Judge Rutherford three or four years ago I have been interested in the man's career and I do not think he has improved one bit. I do not know how it was that his broadcast reached Walkerville last Sunday.

Mr. HEAPS: What station was he broadcasting from?

Mr. ROBINSON: Neither Columbia nor CKOK. A good deal of complaint about CKOK came from one of the stations in Detroit. They happened to put over wrong information and when the mistake was discovered they regretted having brought the matter up.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can the hon. member tell the committee why Windsor was selected instead of London for this station? Was it not because forty-nine per cent of the stock is owned in Detroit that the station was located in Windsor rather than in London?

Mr. ROBINSON: The reason is that the London station has to be rebuilt. It has only a small radius, I do not know how many watts. In Windsor, however, there is a station that will reach almost any point on the continent.

Mr. EULER: Will my hon. friend tell me when the change of ownership took place? Not long ago I had undeniable evidence that the majority of the stock was owned in the United States and CKOK at Windsor was described as a Columbia basic station. When did the majority of the stock come to Canada? Is the hon. member quite certain it is a real bona fide transfer of stock and that the station is not really an American station using a Canadian channel?

Mr. ROBINSON: I do not know the details, but I do know that it was the intention that the majority of the stock should be owned in Canada.

Mr. REID: I can assure my hon. friend opposite that in the statements I made I was in no way supporting Judge Rutherford; I said so at the outset. As a matter of fact, in the letter I sent out to the people who had written to me on the subject I stated that if Judge Rutherford had made the statements attributed to him he should be shut off; I said I believed that no sensible man would make such statements. When I brought the matter up to-day the question at issue was this: Did he or did he not make those statements? It was said—Mr. Charlesworth told me—that Judge Rutherford had made these statements about him, but Judge Rutherford declared that never at any time had he made any such statements about any man. I have made my position quite clear, and yet the hon. gentleman gets up and says that we on this side are supporting the International Bible Students. I can tell him that when I listen in, if I do not like the program that is coming over I turn it off, and everyone else is at liberty to do the same. I have not yet received a clear statement from the minister in this matter and in courtesy to Judge Rutherford I am withholding my reply to him until I do. There are thousands of Canadians who are interested in what Judge Rutherford says, whether the rest of us believe in him or not.

Mr. SPENCE: I do not know why so much time is taken up discussing Judge Rutherford. If he did not make the particular statements to which reference has been made to-day, I know at any rate that he made other statements in the exhibition grounds in Toronto, which is in my riding, statements that incensed the whole city. He condemned the institutions of Canada, the United States and Great Britain, and he condemned every other church but his own. Toronto does not want to hear him again over the radio.

Mr. BROWN: We do not seem to appreciate the fact that in this discussion a principle is involved. Down through the centuries there have been two ideas in conflict. One party has held that where anything occurs that looks like heresy, where any views are advanced that are contrary to the accepted opinions of the day, they should be put down by force. The other school holds that truth will ultimately prevail and that less harm is likely to be done by allowing the free expression of opinion than by any attempt to shut off opinions by force. I have no hesitation in saying that I belong to the school that believes in allowing a man to give free expression to his beliefs. I believe that ultimately truth will prevail and that if the views expressed are not in harmony with truth, they will run their course and ultimately disappear. I admit that the radio has introduced a more difficult problem than is entailed in the freedom of the pulpit or of the press and I confess it is hard to arrive at a final conclusion upon the matter. I think the radio commission would be well advised to hesitate before preventing people from preaching the doctrines in which they believe or interpreting the scripture in their own particular way. Less harm is likely to be caused by allowing freedom in this direction than by imposing restrictions. I realize the difficulties to be faced and that it takes a man of more than ordinary wisdom to arrive at a wise conclusion.

Mr. SANDERSON: A week or two ago when the minister had his estimates before the committee I asked a question—

Mr. SPENCE: Louder.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the hon. member for Parkdale getting deaf?

Mr. SPENCE: This is not a whispering campaign, we want to hear everything.

Mr. SANDERSON: I wanted to know who was really in charge of radio broadcasting. At that time the minister told me that I had better read the act. I should like to ask the minister now: Is he over the chairman of the commission or is the chairman of the commission in control of him? We have a radio commission which has power to go ahead and spend money and the minister admits that he does not know anything about it. That commission apparently is not responsible to parliament. During the last few months I have had more complaints about broadcasting and other matters pertaining to radio than I received in the last few years. I believe that that has been the experience of every hon. member. With all due respect to the minister, I think he should tell this committee the true relations that exist between himself and the chairman of the commission. On Tuesday last I put a question to the minister. I asked if the chairman of the commission, under the authority of the commission or of the minister, had taken over the station of the London Free Press. The minister told me he would answer the question the following day and he did so with the one word, "no." He gave no explanation as to what had taken place. I now find that this station has been merged with the one at Windsor. Was that done without the knowledge of the minister? Did he know that when he answered my question the other day or did he have to obtain that information from the chairman of the commission? We do not know whether we are going or coming on this radio question; we are going around in circles.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We are on the air.

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister admits quite candidly that he does not know and the chairman is not here to answer questions. Can the minister tell us just what are the qualifications of this chairman? I understand he gets a salary of $10,000 or $12,000 and I should like to know what service he renders in return. If the minister has the figures I should like to know the salaries of the other commissioners and the members of the staff.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Some time ago I answered the very question asked by my hon friend. I stated that the powers of the commission were defined by an act which had been passed unanimously by this house. I was surprised at the hon. member for Bonaventure complaining about the number of commissions. He should have made his objections when this bill was before the house. The house unanimously granted certain powers—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CASGRAIN: On division.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Does my hon. friend want me to read the act? I do not think it is fair to ask the Minister of Marine to give a lecture upon the powers granted to the minister and to the commission by that statute; that would be up to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not want to prolong this discussion, but in order to be fair to himself and his department, I think the minister should be prepared to give full particulars about the radio commission. For the moment, I would be quite satisfied if I were told the salaries.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend wanted to know if the radio commission was over the minister or if the minister was over the radio commission. I told my hon. friend that the statute gives certain powers to the commission.

Mr. SANDERSON: What are those powers?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I can read the act.

Mr. SANDERSON: Read the act.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is chapter 51 of the statutes of 1932. I do not think it is fair to ask me to read the full act.

An hon. MEMBER: A fool act.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think my hon. friend understood that it was the intention of that act to organize a commission independent of politics.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The statute gives full powers to the commission.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What full powers?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The minister is empowered to grant licences but the location of stations, the power of stations, wave lengths and the allocation of wave lengths are matters within the independent powers of the commission. It is subject to the minister granting the licence. That was explained fully when the bill was before the house. I think in that sense it is quite satisfactory.

As to the operations of the commission it is clear that under such a statute the minister is not in a position when he presents his budget to give full details of the commission's operations.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the minister take any responsibility at all as a minister of the crown for the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The radio commission comes under the ministry of marine, and my hon. friend knows what that means.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is your baby. You are responsible for the creation of the commission and for its workings.

Mr. SANDERSON: If the minister says that he takes responsibility for the conduct and work of the commission, surely when he comes into this house and asks parliament to vote the money required, he can tell us something about that commission's work. With all due deference to the minister, he comes into this house with estimates for vast sums of money running into millions of dollars for broadcasting, even with conditions as they are in this country at the present time, and he has not yet given an intelligent answer to any question asked him in regard to the expenditure of that money.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that we are not discussing at the present time the item concerning the radio commission.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is the same thing.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The minister agreed to allow the whole thing to be discussed on these two items, Nos. 139 and 140.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are three items. There is also No. 247. If it is desired to discuss the three items and pass them together, I have no objection.

Mr. SANDERSON: Coming back to the question of giving information to this committee, I think the minister had started to read a list of the members of the commission and the salaries paid to the staff. I shall be glad to sit down if he will continue with that statement. Has he that information there?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Sure, I have the act here.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not want the act. I want information in regard to the commission, their work and their salaries. We are not concerned with the act, but with the actions of the commission and the money they are spending.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend is asking for the salaries of the commission?

Mr. SANDERSON: And the names of the officials.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The salaries are mentioned in the act, in chapter 51, 22-23 George V. In section 3 it is provided that the chief commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of $10,000, and each of the other commissioners an annual salary of $8,000. That was accepted unanimously by the house.

Mr. SANDERSON: Who are the commissioners?

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the chairman of the commission is Mr. Hector Charlesworth.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: May I ask for the benefit of my hon. friend from South Perth what was the date of that act?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was passed in 1932. The other commissioners are Colonel Steel and Mr. Maher, who is the vice-chairman.

Mr. SANDERSON: The chairman receives $10,000, and the other two commissioners $8,000 a year. Is there not also a publicity man in connection with the commission?

Mr. MARCIL: And a whole staff?

Mr. SANDERSON: There must be more officials and a great deal of money paid out in addition to the salaries for the commissioners. I cannot see, Mr. Chairman, why the minister hesitates to give this information. Where are we going to get if he does not give it to the members of this house?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The minister has no hesitation whatever in giving any information in his possession as to the expenses of the commission, but one must realize that this commission has been in operation only since last January.

Mr. SANDERSON: That is too long.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They were appointed at the end of last October.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I know that they have a certain staff, but they have not made any report as yet of their expenses. They have some stenographers, an English director of programs and an assistant French director, and also an official known as a relations agent, I think.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Director of public relations, if I may help the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Those are the employees they have at the present time.

Mr. EULER: What is the salary of the director of public relations?

Mr. DURANLEAU: His salary is $5,800 less ten per cent.

Mr. EULER: And his name?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the name of the French secretary?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is only one secretary.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is his name?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Landry.

Mr. CASGRAIN: And his salary?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think it is between $3,400 and $3,800; I am not quite sure, but it is below $4,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is there not a Mr. Weir who acted in conjunction with CNRM in Montreal and who is now working for the commission, but not in broadcasting?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Weir has been borrowed by the commission from CNRM, Montreal, as a program director.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is his salary paid by the commission or by the C.N.R.?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose he is paid by the commission.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Does he receive an allowance from both the C.N.R. and the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not know his connection with the C.N.R. at the present time. All I can say to my hon. friend is that the C.N.R. station is being purchased by the commission.

Mr. SANDERSON: It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that the best way out of this difficulty we are in is for the minister to let these items stand until he gets some information and brings it before the committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think that is fair.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, I cannot possibly understand the minister's attitude. Just a few days ago we were considering the estimates of the Trade and Commerce department and an item came up for the administration of the Grain Act by the board of Grain commissioners. Members of this house have always had the privilege of discussing the expenditures of this commission. The money must be voted by parliament, and when the Minister of Trade and Commerce has had his estimates up for discussion he has had an officer of the board of grain commissioners sitting in front of him to give information. That has always been the practice. In every other instance when a commission is administering some utility for this dominion, the minister when his estimates are before parliament has an officer of the commission sitting in front of him because that is the only time hon. members on both sides of the house have the right to get the information they desire. In this instance I think it is doubly necessary. The radio commission has not by any means given even half satisfaction to the people of Canada. The complaints are very, very numerous. The case which was mentioned by my hon. friend from North Waterloo and by other members of the house is far from satisfactory to the people of that portion of Canada who think that the United States have put it over our eye in the matter of the division of wave lengths. The Windsor station was started by a group of Americans, and it was started at Windsor, near Detroit, for one purpose, and that was to get in on a Canadian wave length, and by advertising sell American products through Michigan and Ohio and neighbouring states. That was the purpose. Fifty-one per cent of the stock in the station may be in the hands of Canadians; I shall not deny the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Robinson) to that effect. I have a very strong suspicion however that the men who hold forty-nine per cent of the stock control the policy of the station. I agree fully with the hon. member for North Waterloo that if a station is needed for western Ontario, it would be more properly located at a central point such as London, Stratford or Guelph. If eventually the national commission is to buy out and operate broadcasting stations I do not think the minister should allow the station in the city of London to be closed, and a high powered station in Windsor to be erected. I believe London is the place where the good station should be placed.

I mention these points to the minister for one reason: The people in Canada are wondering what is going to happen to the million dollars that is being voted. My own feeling is that the minister himself, with the brilliant departmental officers in his department, could have handled the whole matter during the period of depression very much better than any other body which could be set up. At the present time we have the anomaly of the commission trying to develop Canadian programs, and giving licences to stations right on the American border. The minister knows very well that he has control of licences; he has said so. The commission has to control the stations, but the minister has to issue the licences. Therefore the minister must explain to his followers in the house and to hon. members in the opposition why certain stations are placed at certain points. I submit to the minister that in connection with a matter as important as this, namely the location of a powerful station at a point far removed from the centre of the province, he should have a lot better answer to the question of the hon. member for North Waterloo than he has made. In regard to the question asked by the hon. member for South Perth, the minister should be able to get all the details from the officer of his department who is sitting in front of his desk.

Mr. MARCIL: The statement was made that I had not objected to the appointment of the radio commission. If I did not do so, it was because I still had faith in the declaration of the Prime Minister that the radio commission would be a non-political organization. But when I saw the chief organizer of the Tory party in the province of Quebec made a member of the commission, that settled the matter, so far as I was concerned.

Mr. MALCOLM: The board of grain commissioners have to secure a vote of money in this house. Their receipts and revenues are available to hon. members from the west who pay inspection fees. Eventually this radio commission will have substantial revenues. The minister should soon be able to tell us what stations are owned by the commission, the revenues from them, and what moneys are expended, so that the people of Canada may have some knowledge of what radio broadcasting is costing.

Personally I never have been in favour of the national broadcasting commission. I do not object to it however, and if it is well run it may be well worth while. But if we are to have a commission in control we expect to know what the revenues from the stations will be. We want to know something of the future plans. We do not want to vote millions of dollars for services, if those services are not to be an improvement or produce revenue. We have taken over the Canadian National Railways stations. How much of the million dollars is to be used for that purpose? Can the minister tell us that, or is the transaction to be merely a bookkeeping entry between two departments of government? I submit that the suggestion by the hon. member for South Perth is justified, namely that we should postpone consideration of this item until such time as the minister has more information.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I move we do that.

Mr. BRADETTE: Mr. Chairman, I wish to set out the viewpoint held by the people in northern Ontario. When the announcement was made in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister that radio broadcasting was to be under government supervision, so that greater service would be given to a greater number of people, his statement was well received in northern Ontario. In fact, in the first year we did not complain when radio licences were doubled in price, because we hoped then—and we still hope—that we would receive the service we deserve.

At the outset let me say that in our section of the country we believe the officials in the department have done good work. I make the statement sincerely, believing that they deserve praise. They sent men to my home town of Cochrane and to the town of Timmins who accomplished some of the work that our section of the country expected would be done. The fact remains however that after nearly two years of government supervision, radio programs in our section are in most cases from American stations; we receive practically no Canadian programs. Generally speaking we do not object to listening to the American stations; some of them are entertaining, and we are very glad to have them. We cannot lose sight of the fact however that we are part and parcel of Canada, and we are as much entitled to radio reception of Canadian programs as are the people in Ottawa, Toronto, Halifax or Montreal. I maintain that under present conditions unless we have a station built in our section of the country it will be impossible for us to receive radio programs from Canadian stations. We are not parochial in our views in this connection; it is not a matter of one locality having a station, and another not having it. Our object is to have a distributing station in northern Ontario which will benefit the whole of our population. All the territory west of North Bay and extending as far as Sioux Lookout and the Manitoba border would be affected. It is possible to have a station on the height of land in the Porcupine district under which circumstances good reception would be assured to the people in the northern section of the province.

How far the government has gone in the matter I do not know. I do know, however, that the minister has received several petitions, and the commission has been informed as to conditions in northern Ontario. I will say further that the commission and the minister have sent very favourable letters to people in my constituency. Up to date, however, that is as far as they have gone. We are practical and logical, and realize that this problem cannot be solved in a day. The matter has to be thoroughly studied, and the questions concerning the location of the station and the extension of services have to be given careful thought. There is a suggestion—from the Northern Tribune of Kapuskasing—that a station be built on the James bay slope, taking in that section of the north country extending to the Hudson bay region to the north and the United States border to the south. I believe, however, that the location of the station should be left to the decision of the commission, after a thorough study of the situation. On the other hand, the people of Porcupine district state that the logical place for such a station is between Sudbury and Timmins. Then, that section of the country so well represented by the Minister of Mines maintain that it should be on the height of land in the vicinity of Haileybury. However, these are mere matters of detail.

After careful consideration and analysis the commission will have to decide upon the point which would be most satisfactory to all sections of the population. They will have to visit northern Ontario in an official capacity; they will have to send their experts to find for themselves where the best results will be obtained. Those men will quickly realize that it is not a parochial question, and that the whole of the population in northern Ontario would be in agreement. We mean by that, that so long as the commission finds it possible to build a station which would be strong enough and located at a point to give the best service to all the people, we will be satisfied.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that my plea is a very practical one. In our section of the country we only get the Canadian newspapers twenty-four hours after they are printed. Speaking of radio reception I will say that in the daytime we get practically only American programs; we rarely get a Canadian station. Sometimes we get Toronto but seldom do we get it fully. These facts alone should cause this house to realize that although we have a great number of radio owners in our section—it may be a revelation to this house that a very great number of settlers have radio sets, helping to make life a little brighter in the rural and colonization sections—the service they are getting is not satisfactory. I want to be practical; I am not going to criticize the commission, because I do not think they have yet had time to remedy the situation entirely. They have doubled the radio licence fee, which we gladly pay, but we think it is time that something tangible was done to show the people that the commission is alive to the situation existing in our section. I could quote at great length letters and petitions sent to the minister and the commission as to the anomalies that exist. This criticism is going to gather strength if during this summer some move is not made for the location of a good station that will give service to our section. I believe the minister is fully seized of the situation, and that the chairman and the commission also realize what we are up against. Public ownership of this great utility should be applied on a national scale, no section of the country should be neglected. Even if the department had to spend some money in our section that they have not to spend in the older sections I believe it is fully warranted, and cannot be done too soon. The sooner it is made possible for radio owners to have access to Canadian programs, musical or otherwise, the better it will be for this nation. I repeat that in our section we have no great objection to hearing some of the wonderful programs that come from the south, but I believe that first of all we should have access to Canadian programs.

In order that the minister may fully understand the matter I am going to read an editorial from the Porcupine Advance which I believe puts the question very logically and in a very straightforward way. This article was published February 9 of this year. It is as follows:

Does the United States Rule the Waves?

Elsewhere in this issue will be found a letter from an ardent radio fan. This letter voices the feelings of large numbers of radio owners in this section of Ontario. There are few areas where there are as many radio owners in proportion to population as in this north land, and it does not appear unreasonable to suggest that the large group of radio enthusiasts in this part of the country are entitled to more consideration than they seem to have received to date. After suffering for years with growing discouragement, radio fans in this district fed themselves with new hope when they read announcements to the effect that the new Canadian radio commission was arranging a series of all-Canadian programs that would be a change, a relief and a joy to those who listen in up in this north land. After the surfeit of cheap jazz, sad southern humour, claptrap advertising and highly Americanized public addresses, programs of music promised to revive interest in the radio. Canada has artists of international fame. To have the Toronto symphony orchestra, the Vancouver symphony orchestra, the Grenadier Guards band, the Ritz Carlton orchestra, the Forty-eighth Highlanders band, the C. I. L. opera of the air, the Mendelssohn choir, the Hart House quartette, Edward Johnson, one of the world's greatest tenors, Dr. Fricker, deservedly famous as an organist—to mention a few only at random—this surely would cheer the heart of any lover of music owning a radio. Yet the first of the Canadian radio commission's special programs sunk all radio owners in deeper gloom than before,—because the program could not be heard at all in this part of the north.

That just corroborates the statement I made a moment ago, as far as our section of the country is concerned.

As the letter elsewhere in this issue explains, little else could be fairly expected. United States and Mexican stations are so powerful that Canadian stations have no chance at all. What seems to be needed first and foremost is at least one Canadian station with power enough to drown out, if necessary, the United States and Mexican stations that now monopolize the air. Some time ago it was suggested that plans were under way for a number of "booster" stations throughout Canada to make it possible for programs to be well received from coast to coast. Something along this line appears to be very desirable, indeed imperative, but the first consideration would yet seem to be the increase in power of Canadian stations so that they may have a real chance on the air.

There is a growing feeling among Canadian radio owners, and especially among the sufferers in the north, that not only do the people to the south believe that they won the war, but also that they rule the waves—the waves of the air. The winning of the war is a question that need not be debated at this time, but for the progress of the radio in Canada it seems surely necessary that Canada should rule her own part of the air. There is little to be gained by discussion in the matter. Canada's rights are unassailable from a moral standpoint, but in a practical way these rights are of no effect unless the dominion is in a position to enforce and uphold the rights that cannot be disputed but that are constantly disregarded. The only way to secure fair play is by the establishment of radio broadcast stations with power enough to take their place on the air against all comers. If Canada had one or two stations of 75,000 watt power there would be little difficulty in the allotment of wave lengths as between this country and the one to the south. To the layman, and to the great majority of radio fans, it appears inevitable and inescapable that the first duty of the Canadian radio commission is to provide for one or more radio stations of such power that they will be able to take and hold their place on the air against all comers.

These are all the arguments that I want to put forward in this case. I have much confidence in the chairman of the radio commission, although I might state that at one time I did not entirely agree with him in regard to the trans-Canada highway, and through his newspaper I received a very cavalier answer, asking who I was, because I dared to question some of his statements on that question. Well, I am a Canadian, and a resident of northern Ontario and am proud of the fact. So with all respect to his wonderful qualifications—because I do not doubt them—I hope the present chairman of the radio commission will treat me as a Canadian and not as he treated me in his newspaper on that occasion. I might state that so far I have received satisfaction from the commission. I think Mr. Charlesworth knows northern Ontario, at any rate the mining sections; I believe he has visited that part of the province on several occasions. Therefore he should know our local conditions, and be able to deal with our problem. I believe he is animated by the true Canadian spirit, and will give the sparsely populated sections the same efficient service as the more populous ones. We in that northern area are doing a useful pioneer work, binding the country together; where formerly there was a great unpopulated gap between east and west, in the last twenty years nearly 300,000 people have settled there. I hope the department and the radio commission will find it possible to study on the ground the situation that exists so as to get first hand information.

I know the chairman must have a certain amount of qualification for his office or he would not be there. He is an art critic, a man who knows music and what music means to people, knows what a good musical program will mean to people in isolated sections. I hope the minister and the chairman of the radio commission will use all their influence so that in the near future our section will receive the attention it deserves. I express this hope because I am going to quote now certain words of the present chairman of the radio commission in an interview he gave to one of the writers for MacLean's Magazine. He wound up his interview in the following way:

> Censorship, however, is not one of Mr Charlesworth's chief interests. He is interested primarily in the upbuilding of a national system of broadcasting, the development of Canada's musicians and vocalists, in the providing of high class entertainment for radio listeners. Above all, he covets for this country success in that new field, the "theatre of the air."

Those are fine words, with which all Canadians will thoroughly agree. In my section particularly they were a message of hope, and we expect this department and the radio commission at the earliest possible moment to do away with the anomaly which at present exists and under which it is absolutely impossible to give our fine pioneer population the radio reception it deserves.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Just a word in reply to my hon. friend. I know for a fact that the radio commission is trying to locate stations so as to give full and complete service to every part of the country, and I also know that northern Ontario has been considered as one of the parts of the country which should be attended to. The commission fully realizes that it is expending the money received from the listeners, and it intends to give the best service possible to every part of every province of the dominion. I am glad my hon. friend has brought to my attention and that of the commission these facts with regard to northern Ontario; I am sure the commission will try to give satisfaction to this part of the country. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, this sum of $1,000,000 comes from the listeners of Canada and not from the exchequer, and it is the duty of the commission to give the best possible service to every radio listener in this country.

Mr. YOUNG: Where do these amounts of $679,000 and $280,000 come from?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They come from the exchequer.

Mr. YOUNG: When this bill went through the house I understood that it was on the understanding that the commission would not spend any money except that which it collects in licence fees.

Mr. DURANLEAU: These two items do not concern the radio commission at all. It was understood that even the administration of the commission could be discussed under these items, but they do not concern the commission, so I suggest to the committee that these two items be passed. Then a full discussion can be carried on, with every possible detail as to administration of the commission being supplied, when the item of $1,000,000 for the commission is before the committee.

Mr. MALCOLM: Is the minister prepared to pass that item immediately?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would suggest that the $1,000,000 item be suspended so that I may get full information with regard to the administration of the commission.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the minister has all the information available in front of him, if he would only ask for it. The officers sitting before him could probably furnish more information than any others he might bring.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The officials I have here to-day have nothing to do with the administration of the radio commission.

Mr. YOUNG: Let us keep on going until we get stuck.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would suggest that these two items be passed, and I will furnish every possible detail when the $1,000,000 item is called.

Mr. COOTE: Before these items pass I think we should have definite information as to the purpose for which this $280,000 is required. I do not think that information has been given as yet. When the radio estimates were up a week or two ago I asked a question along this line, but I did not succeed in getting an answer. I should like to know what service is given under this vote.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This appropriation of $280,400 is to provide for the maintenance of existing establishments for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, including the elimination so far as practicable of preventable interference with reception throughout the dominion. It also provides for expenses in connection with the sale of radio receiving licences.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister tell us how much is spent in improving reception conditions and eliminating interference? How many engineers have we doing that work, and how much are they paid?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The present organization comprises twenty-three permanent establishments and thirty-two part time establishments in different towns and cities throughout the dominion, with a personnel of 148 full time employees and 41 part time employees.

Mr. COOTE: What are the occupations of those full time employees?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They are not what we call engineers; they are electricians with some knowledge of radio.

Mr. COOTE: Where are they employed?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In different parts of the country. Every large city from coast to coast has an office, where we sell licences, and attached to the office there is an electrician and a clerk or stenographer.

Mr. COOTE: How many employees in Alberta are paid from this vote; what is the nature of their work and what service do they perform?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are ten employees in Alberta.

Mr. COOTE: How are they listed, how many inspectors or engineers and how many stenographers?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have an establishment at Calgary with two inspectors, one chauffeur, one stenographer and one car. We have an establishment at Edmonton with one inspector, one chauffeur, one stenographer and a car, and there is a new establishment at Lethbridge.

Mr. COOTE: There do not seem to be any electricians listed in the province of Alberta. Where are these electricians employed?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As a rule both the inspector and the chauffeur are electricians.

Mr. COOTE: How many inspectors are there?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are two inspectors and one chauffeur at Calgary and one inspector and one chauffeur at Edmonton. The other employees are stenographers.

Mr. HEAPS: Are these chauffeurs really experienced mechanics or are they only chauffeurs?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are some employees who have a knowledge of mechanics even though they are only chauffeurs, and there are other employees who are inspectors and chauffeurs at the same time—they run their own cars.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. HEAPS: In Edmonton, according to the minister, there is one chauffeur and there is one mechanic.

Mr. DURANLEAU: One inspector.

Mr. HEAPS: I presume the inspector knows something about cars. I do not think one man requires another to drive him around.

Mr. DURANLEAU: He is a chauffeur-electrician; he looks after the adjusting of troubles in connection with noises and so on.

Mr. COOTE: Are we right in assuming that this $280,000 is all spent in the engineering branch of the radio services?

Mr. DURANLEAU: About $90,000 is spent in connection with the licences.

Mr. COOTE: But would this amount cover all that is spent so far as the radio service is concerned?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: The minister told us they collected over $1,000,000 in licence fees. What is done with the rest of the million?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We will ask the house to vote it for the radio commission under the law.

Mr. COOTE: Will the radio commission administer the service in the future or will that be done direct by the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: So far it has been administered by my department, and I understand that is what is done in Great Britain. The British Broadcasting Corporation attends to broadcasting just as the radio commission here does, and the Post Office Department there performs the same service as is performed by my department at the present time. Whether there will be any change in that regard in the future I cannot tell, but at present we are following the same method of administration as in Great Britain.

Mr. COOTE: How many radio receiving sets are there in Canada? I ask that question so that I shall be able to figure out how much of the fee which every licence holder pays goes to take care of the mechanical service and how much is devoted to the rest of the administration.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I said there were about 750,000 licences sold.

Mr. MALCOLM: How many radio owners are not paying the licence fee?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think the census shows that there are about 770,000 radios in Canada.

Mr. MALCOLM: So that you are collecting about ninety per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Over ninety per cent.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister the following question: What is the difference between static and interference, what are the causes of both and what are the remedies?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I will ask the expert of the department to send the hon. gentleman a publication on the subject.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you very much.

Mr. EULER: When the Aird commission was appointed to investigate the radio situation, the then government gave the broadcasting stations to understand that if they made capital expenditures in connection with their equipment the government assumed no responsibility in the event of such stations being later on acquired under public ownership; in other words, they took their chances whether they would get their money back, to put it bluntly. As the hon. member for West Essex said, there was expended $150,000 on the Windsor station. The minister has told us that that company has bought out the London Free Press station, no doubt at a stiff price, because in years gone by it was a profitable station. It follows I suppose that ultimately, if the policy of the government is to be adhered to and radio is nationalized by the purchase of these stations, a stiff price will have to be paid for the Windsor station. I want to know whether the principle then laid down, that the government assumed no liability whatever with regard to any additional expenditures that may have been made, will be followed when the time comes, if it ever does, that the Windsor station is acquired by the country. Will the high price which no doubt has been paid for the London station as acquired by the Windsor station be demanded? Will they not raise the question of vested rights? I am under the impression that when the Windsor station was given 5000 watts this was entirely too much to serve that comparatively small district, and I am still of the opinion that the intention in giving 5000 watts was that the station should serve not only the Windsor district but the district around Detroit. The minister said in reply to my questions a few months ago that he was not satisfied with the conduct of the Windsor station. Is he satisfied now, and if so what has taken place in the meantime to satisfy him?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Replying to the hon. gentleman's last question, it is not very long ago that I made a statement of the kind he refers to—about a month ago.

Mr. EULER: Longer than that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was when my estimates were last under consideration, about a month or a month and a half ago. I told the hon. member then that I had instructed the radio commission to keep an eye on that station in order that the law should be observed—

Mr. SANDERSON: Has the minister authority to instruct the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: —and I have had no report since. I understood, when the recommendations came to me about the amalgamation of these two stations, that it would improve the situation in that respect. As regards the other question the hon. gentleman asks, as to whether stations that have acquired licences since the report of the Aird commission would get compensation in case of nationalization, I am not prepared to give a definite answer at the present time. We have made such reservation as will protect the national exchequer. They were all notified very clearly that they could not expect compensation in the event of nationalization; they were accepting the licences and making their expenditures at their own risk. What the policy of the government would be in the event of the acquisition of any stations I am not prepared to say.

Mr. EULER: Would the minister say that the purchase of the London station by the Windsor station would justify the government in paying a higher price than the Windsor station would otherwise fetch?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think it would change the situation. If the London station had been taken over by the radio commission they would be entitled to some compensation, but that station now disappears in an amalgamation and I do not see that the government would have any responsibility respecting it.

Mr. EULER: Of course not. With regard to the Windsor station, it might have charged to its capital account what was paid for the London station although it has no actual assets to show for that payment. It was merely putting a competitor out of the way.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Windsor got the licence with the reservation that they could not expect any compensation in case the radio commission should decide to nationalize the station.

Mr. EULER: The fact that they had bought out the London station could not be regarded as an asset?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is my view at the present time, but I would not be prepared to make a definite statement.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does the minister not think that London would be a better place for a national station than at the border?

Mr. DURANLEAU: A layman might think so, but an expert might think differently.

Mr. MALCOLM: Do the experts think differently??

Mr. DURANLEAU: It all depends upon the power of the station, the wave length and so on. I am told by the experts of the commission that with its present power, the station at Windsor will give splendid service to London.

Mr. MALCOLM: I admit that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Remedial measures can always be taken. If complaints are made as to the service given, no doubt the radio commission will see that the public is satisfied.

Mr. EULER: Did London have an exclusive channel which will be available through the amalgamation?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did the minister make any order in council or regulation or have anything to do with the amalgamation of the Windsor and London stations?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, the government had nothing to do with that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What is it that can be done under the act upon the recommendation of the minister as to suspension or cancellation of licences for stations?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The powers of the commission are defined by section 8 of the act, which reads:

> The commission shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Radiotelegraph Act, chapter one hundred and ninety-five of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and in the regulations made thereunder, but subject to the power of the minister to licence stations, have power to regulate and control broadcasting in Canada carried on by any person whatever, including His Majesty in the right of the province or of the dominion, and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, these powers shall extend to the following matters:
>
> (a) The commission shall determine the number, location and power of stations required in Canada;
>
> (c) the commission may make recommendations to the minister with regard to the issue, suspension or cancellation of private broadcasting licences, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Radiotelegraph Act or regulations, the minister may issue, suspend or cancel such licences;

Mr. MALCOLM: Has the licence of the London Free Press station been suspended or cancelled or did it go with the sale to the Windsor station?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As far as my memory goes, the recommendation of the commission was that a licence be given to a new company. The London licence expired at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Has the recommendation been acted upon by the minister?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not yet.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If a licence is to be cancelled it must be done by the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The licence expired on March 31.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have heard that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It would be renewed upon the recommendation of the commission.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Either the minister or I is under the misapprehension as to what he said. He said that the commission could of its own volition suspend a licence without his being required to issue an order in council.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I said that the commission had full power in allocating wave lengths and so on, and that it was up to the minister to issue the licences.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And cancel them.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, of course.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister still has it in his power to refuse to cancel the licence of the London station?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The minister has full power.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What investigation has the minister made as to the wisdom of cancelling that licence?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am asking the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The licence expired on March 31. I think the minister should follow the recommendation of the commission. The commission is supposed to go into the details of these amalgamations and I do not think the minister would make any mistake in following their recommendations.

Mr. EULER: Is London still operating?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does the minister think he should follow the recommendations of the commission without making any inquiry?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not mean to say that the minister should make no inquiry, but surely the hon. member realizes that the commission was appointed in order to make these inquiries and to advise the minister.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN-NORTHERN PACIFIC AGREEMENT

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. 48, to confirm an agreement between the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—Mr. McDade.—Mr. Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay) in the chair.

On section 1—Agreement ratified and confirmed.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks ratification of an agreement between an American railway company, the Northern Pacific, and the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company, which is a subsidiary of another American company in Canada. With the merits of this particular scheme for the abandonment of a branch line I am not concerned, but I am interested in other proposals of this same company under which they desire to close certain other branch lines in Canada, three of which are in the constituency of Yale.

There is one about fifteen miles long between Laurier and Danville, where the Great Northern railway runs parallel to and north of the international boundary. There is another one about twenty-five miles long between Midway and a point near Bridesville, which is of more serious consequence in that a considerable amount of farming is interested, but the most serious one of the three is the branch line running to Princeton. That line is to be closed altogether. It starts from the town of Oroville just south of the international boundary in the state of Washington, from the point of junction of the Similkameen and Okanagan rivers, and runs in a general northwesterly direction into Canada following the Similkameen valley. Twenty-four miles short of Princeton there is the town of Hedley, at which the Nickel Plate mine has been producing gold for a quarter of a century. That mine is dependent on that railway. From there the valley widens out considerably and there is a good deal of farming enterprise. As you go to Kermeos, Cawston, and Similkameen there is intensive agriculture, and the most perishable products are produced—cherries and apples, apricots and peaches, tomatoes, and there is dairy farming and cattle raising. From two to three hundred carloads of produce, much of it extremely perishable, much of it dependent upon express shipments has to be handled by that railway. I maintain that a branch line of that description is a public utility. After it is built and a piece of Canada is opened up, settlement follows, and the produce raised in that district as well as the requirements of its population have to be brought in by that railway, and the whole of it has to be carried by that public utility.

On March 23 last the superintendent at Spokane wired all agents as follows:

> Discontinue any further service on Princeton line. If any carload freight should show up for movement on this line we will have to arrange to handle it otherwise perform no service on that line. Please notify all concerned.

On the following day I had a telegram from Keremeos expressing the distress of those people dependant on this line. I took it up with the Board of Railway Commissioners, and was informed that no application for the abandonment of this line had been received. Following this matter further with the Department of Railways and the commissioners I found to my great surprise that there was nothing on the statute books of this country to prevent an American company, if and when it chose, from taking up its steel and abandoning a line. It appears to me that that is not a reasonable thing. If these people cannot use that line for bringing in their necessities and shipping out their produce it will, of course, be necessary for them to decide whether it is possible for them to handle their produce by road, or whether they will have to abandon their land. When you are dealing with a couple of hundred car loads of highly perishable fruit it is not a very pleasant thought to think of handling it by trucks on gravel roads. They could haul forty miles to Princeton. The road is good; the grades are sharp; but whether that gravel road would stand up under the carriage of that continuous quantity of tolerably heavy produce in the fall months is questionable. They could haul thirty miles over the divide to Penticton. But in neither case does it appear to me that they should be forced to do so simply because an American road when it served its purpose built a branch line into Canada and then, when it had served its purpose, took it out. I am constrained to suggest, in fact, I do suggest to the government, that consideration should be given to the strengthening of our statutes so that such a thing might not be possible, for surely it is reasonable that such a company before being permitted to abandon a line in Canada should at least have to present the facts of the case before the government, the Board of Railway Commissioners or some power in Canada who would consider the facts before the company was permitted to withdraw the line.

Mr. HEAPS: This bill was before the railway committee and it passed through without any opposition. If I remember correctly, the Department of Railways and Canals said that they had no objection whatever to the passage of this measure, and it seems rather strange now to have the statement made to the house by the hon. member for Yale that the abandonment of the line is going to work a hardship on many people who have settled in that district. If such is the case I think the house ought to give serious consideration to the representations of the hon. member for the district, and perhaps allow the bill to stand if there is going to be any such hardship as he has indicated.

Mr. STIRLING: Was the hon. member in when I commenced my statement? I said at the beginning that with the merits of this particular bill and what it desired to do I was not concerned. This matter I have raised is the action of that same company in a different part of British Columbia. I chose this opportunity of placing the facts before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cowan, Port Arthur-Thunder Bay): In the committee section 1 was amended, changing the date of the agreement from the first day of October, 1931, to the first day of November, 1932. Shall the section as amended be adopted?

Mr. BENNETT: I have listened to the observations of the hon. member for Yale and have been much impressed with the fact during the progress of the discussion on another measure that our law must be very much less useful than I thought it was with respect to matters of this kind. I confess my view was that a line could not be abandoned without the consent of the railway commission, but apparently that is not the law as it now reads. When in this country we charter a company to build a railway we authorize them within a given time to construct a line of rail of the standard width from one point to another. I say we charter them to do so within a given time, and by our standard form of charter we usually provide that if they do not complete that line to the point named within the time limit specified, the charter rights shall be forfeited with respect to that portion of the line which has not been completed.

It should follow that any line thus built under authority of a statute of this parliament could not be abandoned after people had settled beside it, without authority from some source beyond the mere management of the company itself. The argument in times past has been that railroads were profitable or they would not be built, and that therefore the necessity for having the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners was not apparent. I purpose suggesting to my colleagues the necessity of having an amendment made this session to the Railway Act to provide that no abandonment of a line may take place without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. I believe it is highly in the public interest that such provision should be made.

When the statement was made by the hon. member for Yale he was referring to a condition not dealt with by this bill, but to a condition in his own community which in principle was somewhat similar to the proposal dealt with by the agreement which this parliament is asked to ratify. And inasmuch as it involves a question of the abandonment of facilities which have been made available through permission granted by a law making authority, whether it be that of the parliament of Canada or a legislature of a province, I believe we should pause and seriously consider the matter before we jeopardize the interests of those who in good faith may have settled and made their homes, and have calculated upon the maintenance of a service to enable them to transport the products of their farms to markets, wherever they may be.

Under those circumstances I suggest that the hon. member in charge of the bill might move the committee up and ask for leave to sit again, in order that the Minister of Railways, who is absent, and the rest of the government may consider the matter more carefully. I believe the case made out for the necessity of enacting general legislation has been such that it is the duty of the government, at the present session, to make a short amendment to the Railway Act.

Mr. BROWN: Does the same point arise in the bill before us?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; that is the reason I spoke. This bill contemplates the abandonment of lines in a portion of the territory in British Columbia, but not the territory mentioned by the hon. member for Yale.

Mr. McDADE: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

APPEAL TO PRIVY COUNCIL IN CRIMINAL CASES—LEGISLATIVE POWER UNDER STATUTE OF WESTMINSTER

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 57, respecting the criminal code (appeals to privy council)—Mr. Lapointe.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): That matter has been dealt with by amendments to the criminal code introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie).

Order stands.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Barber in the chair.

Radio service, to provide for the construction and maintenance of radio ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the dominion, $679,550.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Carried.

Mr. YOUNG: No, it is not carried.

Mr. McINTOSH: You are not through broadcasting.

Mr. YOUNG: I should like to read from a speech made by the Prime Minister on May 18 last year, as it appears at page 3036 of Hansard. Speaking of the licence fees and the moneys to be expended by the radio commission, he said:

We therefore in this measure for the present have provided that capital expenditures and all expenditures shall be within the income derived from the licence fees. That is, if there are 500,000 licences at $2 per licence, the commission would have an income of $1,000,000, which sum would not be more than expended by the commission in any one year.

The impression left upon the house at the time was that no money would be expended on radio broadcasting or any public service connected therewith, except that which was collected in licence fees. It now appears from the estimates for this year that the radio commission are asking permission to spend a million dollars on broadcasting, or whatever they are doing. But here is another item not charged to the radio commission. The sum of $280,400 for broadcasting improvement is charged to a department of government. That is to say, the commission being held down to an agreed sum, that is, not being allowed to spend any more than the licence fees, other expenditures which it is desired to make in connection with the same service can be made by a department of government. It seems to me that is breaking the spirit, if not the letter, of the act.

Let us see what the position is. Before the radio commission was set up the licence fee was only one dollar. All of that dollar went into the public treasury. Out of the amount which went into the public revenue the sum of $280,400 was taken out for certain services in connection with radio, as outlined in item 140. The balance of the fees, something like half a million dollars, was left in the public treasury to ease the burdens of the taxpayers. The licence fee has now been doubled. Two dollars goes into the treasury, and all of it is turned over to the radio commission. In addition to that, $280,400 can be taken out of the treasury to do the work that was being paid for by the licences. The result is that whatever the revenue from the dollar licence amounted to, if as the Prime Minister says there are 770,000 radios in this country it means that $770,000 that would have been paid into the treasury and made available for this public service is now diverted to radio and therefore has to be replaced out of the pockets of the taxpayers. So I say that this method of doing things is actually taking out of the pockets of the people some $700,000, and breaking the letter if not the spirit of the act.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I gladly avail myself of this opportunity to make a statement with respect to the policy of the government in connection with radio broadcasting. This house unanimously decided—

Mr. YOUNG: No.

Mr. BENNETT: This house unanimously decided—

Mr. YOUNG: No, I voted against it.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman may have expressed his disagreement, but that only tends to show how great the unanimity was. This house, with a single exception then, expressed its view that radio broadcasting in Canada should be a public utility. A commission investigated the matter at some length. The commission made a report. The report was unanimous. It was adopted by the House of Commons. The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) says he was opposed to it; I recall that he was. A bill giving effect to the recommendation was introduced. It passed this house without division. That bill provided that radio service in Canada should be a publicly owned utility. A contract was made by the parliament of Canada by statute with radio users in Canada that the $2 licence fee collected from them should be used for the purpose of providing them with radio service. There is therefore outstanding in Canada today a contract by which this parliament undertook that we would collect from licensees at the rate of $2 per licence certain sums of money to be held in trust and utilized for the purpose of radio broadcasting, supplying radio service. Now, the attacks that have been made are being made for the purpose of destroying this publicly owned service.

Mr. YOUNG: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The people who are desirous of destroying it are not numerous, but they are very vocal, and their influence is painfully apparent in many places. The effect upon other countries on this continent of establishing in this country publicly owned radio service will be very great. The opposition to our system is not limited to Canada. Those who are assisting in the opposition to the public ownership of this service are aiding and abetting the private ownership of what in my judgment cannot, in a new country, with the great extensions of knowledge being made from year to year, be properly committed to a private interest.

The money about which the hon. member for Weyburn speaks is therefore money collected from licensees for the purpose of providing radio service. Under our constitution that money is paid into the consolidated revenue fund, but it is earmarked as a trust fund for the purpose mentioned in the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932. The duty of the government is to make available to that commission the money that is collected for the purpose mentioned in the statute. To do that an estimate has to be submitted to this parliament. In a sense it is a pro forma estimate, for under the statute of last year it is money in trust for the development of the radio service; not to be used for any purpose you may please, but to be used for just one purpose, the providing of radio service for the Canadian people. Unfortunately—and the government must take the responsibility for it—when the estimate was printed it was not made clear that this was merely releasing to the commission the money thus collected. Had it stated, as it should have stated, and I must assume the responsibility for its not being done, that this money was merely being released for the purposes for which parliament had declared it should be used, there never would have been any difficulty about it.

Mr. YOUNG: Does that apply to this item of $280,400?

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. There has gone throughout the country a statement that the Canadian people in these days of grim adversity are voting a million dollars for radio. That is not correct. What has happened is that a limited number of Canadians have provided at the rate of $2 per licence a sum much in excess of a million dollars—to be exact, up to the moment $1,400,000—for this service. A million dollars of it is contained in that item, and I think the criticism of the hon. member for Weyburn, that it is not clear that the balance necessary to maintain that service should come from this amount, has not been established. Nevertheless that money that is necessary, whatever sum, is for two purposes; first, to provide a service—I propose to have submitted to this house next week a resolution providing for the purchase by the radio commission of the Canadian National Railways radio plant. The plant is being bought for the sum of $50,000, if I remember aright. Of course it cost a good deal more than that, but as it was a branch of a government owned railway the railway officials expressed the view that it should be placed in the hands of the commission. The engineers agreed upon the price, but as the statute says this purchase could be made only with the approval of parliament, it is proposed that a resolution shall be presented to this house and to the Senate of Canada in order that parliament may express its approval of the purchase of these facilities for the sum I have mentioned.

This item, in the words in which it now stands, is to provide for the improvement of reception service, doing away with interference in connection therewith. In my judgment that sum will have to be deducted from the licence fees that are paid into the consolidated revenue fund, because it is a part of the maintenance of the service.

Mr. YOUNG: That is good.

Mr. BENNETT: The other item, as the hon. gentleman properly points out, has reference to the maintenance of our safety radio stations on the coast lines of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. It involves a large sum of money. Once more it is the old story: when some newspaper editor, with a wider knowledge of Canadian conditions than members of this parliament or this government, undertakes to expose the wasteful use of public moneys in connection with radio, he is talking about something with respect to which he knows absolutely nothing; for as I have tried to make clear to this house,—and every hon. gentleman can take the statute and look at it for himself,—the money is money paid under a trust for providing radio for the Canadian people.

There is another item, dealing with ship to shore stations and direction finding and the safety of life and ships coming into our ports. Why are we spending this money? Well, Canada must do one of two things: either expect marine insurance rates to be doubled, or maintain radio stations for the purpose of enabling ships to determine their position by radio and to maintain in fog and storm constant communication between ship and shore and ship and ship in order that there may be safety for all who go down to the sea in ships, passengers and crew.

There are a number of such items. This affords one an opportunity to say that, owing to the fact that we have long coast lines, we are compelled to spend literally millions of dollars in bearing our share of the international obligations that rest upon all maritime peoples; to maintain light service, buoys, aids to navigation, direction finding stations, fog horns, everything that goes to make for safety of ships, alike for passengers and crews. When one reads ill-considered statements as to why we should pare down this or that estimate I can only say that I could go through our estimates and show how little really is under the control of any government in these times, how slight is our control with respect to these items. I received a letter yesterday, I think, asking why the members of parliament do not cut down their indemnities by $1,000 and why the cabinet ministers do not cut down their stipends by $3,000 or $4,000. Every service is to be cut except the service in which the individual is directly interested; there must be no cut in that. I am not going to do more than say that if you take these estimates and ask yourselves on what one item you could expend less money than this government is asking for, all you have to do to answer the question is to investigate the character of the service rendered.

So far as this particular item is concerned the Canadian people have made a choice between the privately owned and the publicly owned enterprise. Having concluded that we are going to own our own radio service we must have patience to see that, in the face of great difficulty and opposition, and a very earnest desire on the part of those opposed to the principle to destroy it before it is well born, it gets a fair chance. A fair chance means that the money which a limited number of the Canadian people have paid for radio service, which money is paid into the consolidated revenues of the country earmarked as a trust fund for a particular purpose, which we must vote in order to release it and make it available for that purpose, shall be used so that every encouragement is given the enterprise which we brought into being unanimously—pardon me, with a single exception, the hon. member for Weyburn—so that it may grow up and become a real, virile Canadian industry.

Mr. YOUNG: I am quite satisfied with the explanation given with regard to the item for $679,000; it is quite reasonable. I am also glad to know that this item of $280,400 is to be charged against the funds available to the commission and made up of the licence fees collected. There is one statement, however, in connection with which I should like a little further information. I understood the Prime Minister to say that there was a contract between the government of Canada, or the radio commission, and the licence holders, and that it was a part of that contract that the licence fee should be $2. Is that correct?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I said the fee was fixed at $2. The hon. gentleman will remember that it was so stated by the minister last year when his estimates were under consideration. The contract is that the money derived from licence fees should be utilized for the purpose of providing a radio service in accordance with the terms of the act passed last session. In my judgment that is a statutory trust between this parliament and those who pay their money for licences.

Mr. YOUNG: There is no assurance that the licence fee will not be varied from time to time?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I think that is a matter of regulation.

Mr. MacLEAN: I should like to ask the minister if he has taken up with the commission the idea of broadcasting to ships on the Atlantic coast, in the way broadcasting is being carried on in the west. At the present time there is a service on the Pacific coast by means of which all ships are in constant touch with the radio stations, from which they get the news of the day while at sea. I understand that this service is greatly appreciated, and I should like to know whether steps have been taken to provide a similar service on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I may tell my hon. friend that consideration is presently being given to the introduction of a similar service on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Having regard to the announcement just made by the Prime Minister that the commission will take over the Canadian National broadcasting service I should like to ask if any policy has been formulated as yet with regard to broadcasting in the maritime provinces. I may tell the minister that the station at Moncton owned by the Canadian National is obsolete, and I hope the commission are not paying very much for it. I think the people down there are anxious to have a national station established in that community as soon as possible, and if any policy has been adopted I should like to know what it is.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I know that the radio commission is working at present on the location of stations all over Canada in order to satisfy every part of the dominion. Of course their work has not been completed, but I know they are endeavouring to select the best possible location in order to satisfy the Canadian people.

Mr. NEILL: In connection with these range finding stations I may say that one was established in the district I represent some six or seven years ago, and it has done excellent work. I rather think another was established recently, but one plant has been in operation for several years. It is located along a section of the coast that was formerly known as the graveyard of the Pacific, and that name was fully justified. I walked along that coast a number of years ago, and at least once in every mile, and sometimes oftener, there would be the wreck of a boat lying on the beach. I would ask what that was, and I would be told that it was such and such a boat that went ashore several years before. So far as I know, and I think I am in a position to speak with certainty, since the establishment of that range finding station there has not been a single considerable wreck on the west coast of Vancouver island. The cost of the station has been amply repaid, not only in the saving of lives but also in the saving of ships and property.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I should like to ask the minister if any definite policy has been laid down in connection with the collection of licence fees. A week or two ago, when this item was up for discussion, I told the committee the difficulty experienced by myself and the others in parts of my constituency in finding anyone who would take the money for radio licence fees.

Mr. SPENCE: The postmaster.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I know some people never paid their licence fees because they could not find anyone who would take it. I inquired at the post offices, the town halls and the radio dealers in two towns in my constituency and was unable to find the proper person. I have had letters this year asking how to get a licence, because no notice has been given, and I do not know the answer myself.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There has been no change in the system of collecting fees; the postmasters, the radio dealers and some banks are authorized to sell licences. The only change is that we have authorized the supervisors, who were appointed last year, to canvass from house to house after April 1, and they receive the same commission that is paid the banks or the dealers, which is 15 cents per licence. If there is any locality which is not provided with a vendor of licences I should be glad to be notified and the matter will be attended to immediately. I think the country is well provided to-day with authorized vendors.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The minister says there has been no change. I have always obtained my licence from the dealer every year until last year when, together with other radio owners in the locality, I applied to the dealer and was informed that he could not take our money because he had no authority to collect. I went to the post office and I found that they could not take it either, and finally I wrote to the inspector of the mounted police in the district and he replied, "Send your money and I will see that you get the licence." The average citizen cannot go to all that bother, and I know that the government has lost some revenue merely because people have been unable to find anyone to take the fee and give out a licence.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We will attend to the matter.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The radio dealer said he could not give me a licence.

Mr. McINTOSH: I believe we are dealing with item 140, which has reference to radio service, to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on item 139.

Mr. McINTOSH: What I have to say can be said equally well under that item, although I understood that we were discussing both. Before passing on to another item I wish to place on record three protests I have received from my riding with respect to present broadcasting conditions. It seems to me that many people have the conviction that equal treatment is not being meted out to every listener, and I would submit that impartiality is an important asset of any national broadcasting system. These three protests which I am about to put on record are concerned with the broadcasting of Judge Rutherford's lectures. I do not know Judge Rutherford or the protesters mentioned but as a matter of principle I am anxious to record these protests which I have received with regard to the treatment that is being meted out to those people in this country who believe in that gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: We all have a dozen of such protests.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, but just take your time. The first protest is dated Hillside, March 17, 1933, and reads:

Regarding Judge Rutherford's lectures and censoring of same, I hereby protest.

That is the right of every citizen, to protest. Further:

We believe God's word is truth and life, and should not be subject to any man to say what we shall hear.

I am,

Yours truly,
Mrs. Frank Connelly,
Hillside P.O.,
Sask.

The second protest is from the same locality, dated also March 17, 1933:

Am writing to protest against Judge Rutherford's lectures or anyone else being censored before going over radio. I am one who believes "God's word is truth." I believe it should go over the air without interference.

Yours truly,
L. Carr.

The third, also from the same locality and bearing the same date, March 17, 1933, reads:

I have read Judge Rutherford's important notice to the Canadian people and do not hesitate to protest against Judge Rutherford or anyone else speaking upon the scriptures having their lectures subject to censorship by the commission or anyone else, as I truly believe God's word is truth.

And thus far have found nothing in Judge Rutherford's lectures of an anti-social nature.

Yours respectfully,
Mrs. H. Rector.

These three protests I wish to have on the record, but before resuming my seat I want to ask the Prime Minister a question. The right hon. gentleman made a statement to the house in connection with radio broadcasting, and incidentally touched upon the critical attitude of many newspapers in Canada towards certain aspects of the question. May I ask him to be specific enough to name some of the newspapers he had in mind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am asking the Prime Minister to be definite enough in that regard. I want the information, and I believe that the accused newspapers of Canada would want to have it.

Mr. BENNETT: This afternoon an hour was spent disposing of the Judge Rutherford incident, and now, in order that a member of this house might try to secure three votes at the next election—

Mr. McINTOSH: No, it is six.

Mr. BENNETT: —we have put upon the record these three protests, for no other purpose in the world.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order. I think the right hon. gentleman is imputing motives.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not imputing motives.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): You are. The right hon. gentleman made the statement that for the purpose of securing three votes at the next election the hon. member is placing three protests on record.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, knowing him as I do, I say so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He says six.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The Prime Minister aggravates his statement. He says, "Knowing him as I do, I say so". I submit that according to the rules of the house no hon. member, and least of all the leader of the government, has any right to impute motives to any hon. member.

An hon. MEMBER: It was so apparent.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has stated his point of order; I do not propose to make a speech about it. Go on and say what you have to say.

Mr. McINTOSH: More impudence.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I do not think the Prime Minister is doing himself justice.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the point of order?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am speaking to the point of order. May I have permission to speak to the point of order? I say that the right hon. the Prime Minister, after my hon. friend from North Battleford had recited certain incidents, rose in his place and said that the hon. gentleman, for the purpose of securing three votes at the next election, had placed three protests on the record.

Mr. BENNETT: He admits it himself, only he says it is six.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He did not admit it at all.

Mr. BENNETT: He said six.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He just made a statement as to the number of protests, that is all.

Mr. BENNETT: Go on with your point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This is a wonderful exhibition of Tory tolerance. Here we have the right hon. gentleman, who should be the custodian of the rules and procedure of the house, imputing motives to another member of the house. I suggest that the hon. member for North Battleford should insist upon his withdrawing his remark.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He said six votes himself.

Mr. BENNETT: The point of order has not been negatived by the hon member for North Battleford. There can be no imputation of motives when I said three and the hon. gentleman said, no, it was six.

An hon. MEMBER: He was only joking.

Mr. BENNETT: What imputation of motives can there be when he admits it is six and not three? It was a statement of fact, only it was understated—that was the only trouble. I said three and he said six.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I insist on the point of order. The Prime Minister has imputed motives to a member of the house and I suggest that he should withdraw the imputation.

Mr. REID: It might settle the matter if I say for the information of the house that none of the sect ever voted.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The Prime Minister's imputation is more silly than ever.

Mr. BENNETT: Cheap.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It was a cheap remark made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. McINTOSH: The Prime Minister was asked a definite question by myself as I was closing the few remarks I had to make in connection with this item before the house. I asked him for definite information on another matter that has to do with derogatory remarks concerning certain Canadian newspapers, and he proceeds to draw a red herring across the political trail. He did not answer my question, but instead he made an imputation in regard to my submission of three protests which I have received from a section of the North Battleford federal constituency. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the Prime Minister in this regard has given a very poor lead to the house in decorum, as he has often done before. It is not the first time he has done it and he has repeated his actions to-night. I made no admission at all, I only said that mathematically he was doubly wrong and in every other way he was wrong. When he was making his imputation he might as well have had the correct number of protests thereby making his imputation more ridiculous than ever. I deny the imputation made by the Prime Minister and I ask him to withdraw it.

An hon. MEMBER: You are too late.

Mr. McINTOSH: No, I am not too late; I am asking him to withdraw and if he is a gentleman he will do it.

Mr. BENNETT: For an hour this afternoon the committee discussed this matter. It has received petitions without number with respect to Judge Rutherford and explanations have been given with respect to Pastor Russell's statements over the radio, and they have been repeated with respect to this matter. The general consensus of opinion of the committee has been that the action taken by the commission was sound. The point I rose to make was as to whether or not an hon. gentleman who has seen fit to absent himself from the chamber should, after an hour has been taken up in the discussion of this matter, rediscuss the matter for the purpose of having three protests placed upon Hansard.

An hon. MEMBER: You said more than that.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course I said more: I said for the purpose of making certain that three votes would be available. The hon. gentleman says that the number is inaccurately stated, that it should be six. He said that the imputation is not correct in number. There is no point of order to be raised; the hon. member himself has made it clear that no public purpose is being served. There has already been an hour's discussion on the matter but the hon. member takes up at least $150 worth of the time of this country to have this matter placed on Hansard.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The right hon. gentleman has imputed motives against an hon. member and he knows that according to the rules of this house he is distinctly out of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wonder when hon. gentlemen sitting behind the Prime Minister will decide to observe the decencies of debate. I am trying to state a point of order and there is no one in this house knows the basis of that point of order better than the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman said, and he repeated the statement, that the remarks of the hon. member for North Battleford were made for the purpose of obtaining three or six votes—the number is immaterial—at the next election. That imputation is distinctly and emphatically out of order and no hon. member of this house has a right to make such a suggestion about any other hon. gentleman. Again I ask the right hon. gentleman to do the courteous thing and withdraw his imputation.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has a habit of bobbing up on every occasion; he is like a jack in the box, and in nine cases out of ten he is wrong. That is his record.

Mr. YOUNG: This is the tenth case.

Mr. BENNETT: It is one of the nine. The hon. gentleman says that it is improper to impute motives, but one is not imputing motives when he is stating the absolute facts. After an hour's discussion had taken place the hon. member, who had been absent, takes up time to the value of from $100 to $150 to make a statement which could not possibly serve any public purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is not the point at all.

Mr. BENNETT: It was a bald statement of fact. I say it could be done for only one purpose and there is nothing to withdraw.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The right hon. gentleman knows as well as I that he cannot state that purpose even if he believes it to be true. I am asking for the withdrawal of the imputation.

Mr. SPENCE: He had no business reading the letter.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am insisting on my point of order.

Mr. SPENCE: I could have given him a bushel of them.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am rising to a point of order and I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): What is the point of order?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): According to the rules of the house, no hon. member can impute motives to another hon. member.

Mr. SPENCE: Let us go on with business.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): We will proceed with the item. I rule the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I appeal from the ruling. If you want to make progress, we will make progress.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): Give it to me in writing.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If you knew the rules, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: Now the hon. gentleman has raised a question. He has asked the chairman if he knew the rules. Since he is such a paragon, I assume he will withdraw that statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The chairman asked me to submit it in writing and my right hon. friend knows very well that that is not necessary. The chairman may have to submit the point in writing but I do not.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman said: If you knew the rules of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am quite correct.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Let us get on with the business.

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPENCE: You start more trouble than Jezebel.

Mr. McINTOSH: The Prime Minister made a statement—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): Let us get this settled.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I appeal from the ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): Will you state your point?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rose to a point of order, that the right hon. the Prime Minister had imputed motives to another hon. member of this house. The chairman ruled that I was out of order and I appeal from the ruling.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a point of order for an hon. gentleman to rise and say that another hon. member imputes motives.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is well known that when one hon. member imputes motives against another hon. member and a withdrawal is requested, that is considered as a point of order. I appeal to you, Mr. Chairman, to demand that withdrawal; you ruled against me, and I appeal from your ruling.

Mr. BENNETT: The question must be properly stated for the chair. An hon. gentleman, not the member affected, has raised a point of order; he says that motives have been imputed against an hon. member. He did not say improper motives, so there is no point of order to be raised. The gentleman affected said the number was not three, that it was six, so what is the point of order?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The point of order is very obvious. When an hon. member imputes improper motives against another hon. member, any hon. member has the right to rise to a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: This is the first time the word "improper" has been used.

Mr. HEAPS: The rule of the house dealing with motives is No. 297. This rule reads:

The imputation of bad motives,—

I do not know that any bad motives have been imputed. If it is an imputation of a bad motive to accuse a member of trying to get six votes, I suppose every hon. member would be guilty. Even an attempt to get them in this house by making speeches or reading letters would hardly come under that heading. The rule goes on:

—or motives different from those acknowledged,—

I do not know that there has been anything done contrary to that rule. It continues:

—misrepresenting the language of another—

There has been no misrepresentation here.

—or accusing him, in his turn, of misrepresentation.

[The Chairman.]

I do not think that has been done. Then it says:

—charging him with falsehood or deceit; or contemptuous or insulting language of any kind; all these are unparliamentary and call for prompt interference.

While there has been a good deal of talk and perhaps a little heat in the chamber, I think that under a strict interpretation there has hardly been a transgression of paragraph 297.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Mr. Chairman, I was just going to raise the point which has been raised by my hon. friend. Knowing my hon. friend from North Battleford as I do, and knowing his ability in this house since 1925, I do not think he should be called to order for saying that a certain statement would give him six votes. I should like to give him six thousand votes. I do not see any point of order at all unless hon. gentlemen desire he should be adjudged unworthy of any votes.

Mr. McINTOSH: The Prime Minister made the statement that because I was absent from the house this afternoon I made the statement which I did in the house in order to capture three votes. That is about as cheap a statement as could be made by any citizen of Canada, but perhaps it is not too cheap for the Prime Minister of this country. At all events he has made it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): I would ask the hon. gentleman to confine his remarks to the question before the Chair.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am doing so. The Prime Minister in the statement he made in regard to my unavoidable absence from the house went on to harangue us about what it costs the country. I wonder what it costs the country for his absences during the last three or four years from his seat in this house. Can the Prime Minister be absent and another member not? That is a fine type of justice and a fine specimen of Canadian equality to come from the leading parliamentarian of Canada. Well, I throw it back in his teeth right here, and as far as my absence is concerned I shall be absent from my seat in the house when I want to be, and I do not intend to ask the Prime Minister whether I can be absent or not. I am responsible to the electors of my riding for my absence. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the Prime Minister to withdraw his dirty insinuation, and if he is any man or if he has any decency he will do it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): I think the words "dirty insinuation" are unparliamentary, and the hon. member should withdraw them.

Mr. McINTOSH: If they are not parliamentary, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw them, but I think perhaps they are not.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why not withdraw altogether?

Mr. McINTOSH: The statement he made is absolutely false and I am asking him to withdraw it, every letter of it, every syllable of it and every word of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I appeal from your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Might I ask you, Mr. Chairman, what this is costing the country now?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I was thinking. You might ask the hon. member for Vancouver Centre.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

The hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) having stated that the Prime Minister had imputed motives against him, the member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) raised a point of order. The chairman ruled that the Prime Minister had not done so. Against this ruling the member for Vancouver Centre appeals to the house.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Arsenault,	MacLaren,
Belec,	MacNicol,
Bennett,	McGregor,
Bourgeois,	McLure,
Bowen,	Maloney,
Bowman,	Murphy,
Boyes,	Myers,
Bury,	Nicholson,
Cantley,	Price,
Chaplin,	Quinn,
Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay),	Rogers,
	Ryckman,
Cowan (Long Lake),	Ryerson,
Dickie,	Senn,
Duranleau,	Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Esling,
Fraser (Cariboo),	Spankie,
Gobeil,	Spencer,
Hay,	Sproule,
Heaps,	Stanley,
Irvine,	Stewart (Leeds),
Jones,	Stewart (Lethbridge),
Kennedy (Peace River),	Stirling,
	Sutherland,
Loucks,	Swanston,
Macdougall,	Turnbull.—49.

NAYS

Messrs:

Bradette,	McKenzie (Assiniboia),
Cardin,	McPhee,
Chevrier,	Neill,
Fiset, Sir Eugène,	Reid,
Hanson (Skeena),	Sanderson,
Ilsley,	Stewart (Edmonton West),
King, Mackenzie,
MacInnis,	Taylor,
MacLean,	Young.—17.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.)

Messrs:

Anderson (Halton),	Factor,
Arthurs,	Fournier,
Baker,	Bertrand,
Barber,	Totzke,
Baribeau,	Beaubien,
Barrette,	Rhéaume,
Beaubier,	Ahearn,
Bell (Hamilton),	Mercier (St. Henri),
Bell (St. Antoine),	Raymond,
Bell (St. John),	Dubois,
Beynon,	Euler,
Black (Halifax),	Dubuc,
Burns,	Butcher,
Cahan,	Rinfret,
Casselman,	Howard,
Charters,	Blair,
Cotnam,	Hurtubise,
Dorion,	Verville,
Duguay,	Dumaine,
Dupré,	Ferland,
Edwards,	Elliott,
Embury,	Bothwell,
Fortin,	Fafard,
Gagnon,	Boulanger,
Garland (Carleton),	Goulet,
Geary,	Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Gordon,	Deslauriers,
Gott,	Rutherford,
Guthrie,	Lapointe,
Hackett,	Perras,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),	Veniot,
Harris,	Jacobs,
Johnstone,	Donnelly,
Kennedy (Winnipeg),	McIntosh,
Laflèche,	Girouard,
Larue,	Thauvette,
Laurin,	Fontaine,
Lawson,	Gray,
Lennox,	Pouliot,
MacDonald (Cape Breton),	Urquhart,
MacMillan,	Mackenzie (Vancouver),
McDade,	Dupuis,
McGibbon,	Power,
Manion,	Hanbury,
Matthews,	Moore (Ontario),
Morand,	Parent,
Mullins,	Howden,
Perley (Qu'Appelle),	Munn,
Perley, Sir George,	Marcil,
Pettit,	Bouchard,
Porteous,	Macphail, Miss,
Rhodes,	Ralston,

Robinson,	Desrochers,
Ross,	Roberge,
Rowe,	Lacroix,
Sauvé,	Séguin,
Short,	Heenan,
Simpson (Simcoe),	Mitchell,
Simpson (Algoma),	Casgrain,
Smith (Cumberland),	Duff,
Smoke,	Cayley,
Spence,	Fraser (Northumberland),
Spotton,	Hepburn,
Stevens,	Malcolm,
Stinson,	Hall,
Stitt (Selkirk),	Weir (Macdonald),
Sullivan,	Brasset,
Thompson (Simcoe),	Jean,
Tummon,	St-Père,
Weir (Melfort),	Motherwell,
White (London),	Gershaw,
Willis,	Brown,
Wilson,	Vallance,
Wright,	Golding.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I was paired with the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dubuc). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. SAUVE: I was paired with the hon. member for L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Séguin). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I was paired with the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was paired with the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan). Had I voted I would have voted against the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. SMOKE: I was paired with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Cayley). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Wilson). Had I voted I would have voted against the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. SPENCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser). Had I voted I would voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I was paired with the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. SIMPSON (Algoma): I was paired with the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain the Chairman's ruling.

[Mr. I. Mackenzie.]

Mr. BOTHWELL: I was paired with the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Embury). Had I voted I would have voted against the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. BLAIR: I was paired with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Charters). Had I voted I would have voted against the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy). Had I voted I would have voted to repudiate the unfair ruling of the chair.

Mr. TOTZKE: I was paired with the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber). Had I voted I would have voted against the Chairman's ruling.

SUPPLY

The house resumed in committee of supply, Mr. Barber in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: As the point of order was raised the hon. member for North Battleford made the statement that I had been guilty of a falsehood. If that language is correctly stated I ask to have it stricken from the record.

Mr. McINTOSH: On the point of order, the Prime Minister stated that the remarks I made in connection with radio broadcasting were made to secure three votes. I said that was a false statement, and I say it again.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what was said.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is exactly what I said before.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the language is taken down; if the reporters have it in that way it can easily be verified. That certainly cannot be put upon the record.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): The hon. member cannot say that the remark of the Prime Minister was a falsehood. He might say that they were not—

Mr. BENNETT: He can say they are incorrect, if he likes.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I say in language that is clear and plain that they constitute an untruth and are not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: That would be improper, too.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): I ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement; I appeal to the hon. member.

Mr. McINTOSH: And to make it still more emphatic I will say the statement is not a true statement. How do you like that?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. BENNETT: That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Surely if it is not true my good friend from North Battleford will—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): We were dealing with item 139.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No, it is not carried, with that kind of tactics.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to ask the minister if the radio commission have purchased or taken over any broadcasting stations in Canada, if so where, and at what price?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand we are now discussing three items together, namely items 139, 140 and 247. Otherwise all this discussion would have to come under item 247. If the three are not being discussed together we should limit the discussion to items 139 and 140. They have nothing to do with the radio commission.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have been under the impression that we have been discussing items 139 and 140. We have not yet reached item 247. On items 139 and 140 we have been talking for four hours, and my question is along the line of others which have been answered by the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understood that the three items were under consideration, because the question of the hon. member would come under item 247.

Mr. SANDERSON: If the minister thinks item 247 is included, my question will be quite in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): We are discussing items 139 and 140.

Mr. DURANLEAU: And 247?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): No.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not think it makes much difference.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, it does. I shall answer the hon. member's question when item 247, which concerns the radio commission, is under consideration.

Mr. SANDERSON: There have been many questions asked this afternoon and this evening which affected the radio commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand that.

Mr. SANDERSON: The discussion has been centred on the commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Why does the hon. member object?

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not objecting; I am putting a question to the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Why does he object to the three items being considered at the same time?

Mr. SANDERSON: I have no objection to that.

Mr. GARDINER: Certainly we object; there is no reason why we should discuss more than one item at a time.

Mr. MALCOLM: We have been discussing two all day.

Mr. GARDINER: That does not make any difference. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that you should confine the discussion to one item.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): The item under discussion is No. 139.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SANDERSON: No, it is not passed yet. If it is 139 it says:

> Radio service, to provide for the construction and maintenance of radio ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the dominion.

Surely my question would come under that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Item 139 has nothing to do with radio broadcasting.

Mr. SANDERSON: But it says "administration of the provisions of the Radio Act." Is not that broad enough to cover my question?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is not the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932; it is the Radio Act, which existed before the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act was adopted last session.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then with all due respect to the minister, he apparently does not want to answer the question. I hope he knows more about the Radio Act than he does about the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SANDERSON: No, Mr. Chairman, it is not carried. I still put my question to the minister and ask for an answer.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am telling my hon. friend that not a cent of this vote will go to the radio commission, neither for its administration nor for the purchase of any station in Canada. I would suggest that my hon. friend wait until item 247 is brought before the committee; that will be the proper time to discuss the purchase of stations by the radio commission.

Mr. SANDERSON: This afternoon we discussed broadcasting stations for about an hour, one in London and one in Windsor, and we were then on item 139. The hon. minister raised no objection. Why he objects now I cannot understand.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Because this afternoon I thought we were proceeding with the three together. My hon. friends will recall that when these items were called a few weeks ago the three were called together and discussed at the same time. I thought we were doing the same this afternoon. Why does my hon. friend insist upon discussing the administration of the radio commission on a vote which has nothing to do with it? The other item will come up very soon.

Mr. SANDERSON: Well, I do not want to prolong this. I think the minister is unreasonable. If he is right in his contention that all three items should be discussed together, then why does he not answer my question? Take it under 247 and answer it now.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is objected that we should proceed with only one item at a time, so we are proceeding with item 139. The hon. member's question has nothing to do with that item.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking on item 139, I wonder why that is not under the jurisdiction of the radio commission. The radio commission has certain powers. It has in its service experts, men who have special and trained knowledge of the radio business, I wonder why they cannot see to it that these short or long waves are submitted to regulation, and look after interference throughout the dominion from coast to coast. If the hon. gentleman who has just spoken intends to prove that the ocean and river radio service should be under the jurisdiction of the commission, there is at once a relation between the two votes, and the minister, who is a very able lawyer, understands it very well. If he submits that the ocean radio service should be under the control of the radio commission, just as the radio commission is under the superintendence of the minister himself, both items can be discussed together, on account of the relation that exists between them. I submit that point to the chairman. There is certainly an apparent link between the items, and the minister will not deny it.

Mr. SANDERSON: If the minister thinks my question does not come under 139, let me read item 140.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): I think we had better deal with 139 first.

Mr. SANDERSON: Item 140 is as follows:

Radio service, to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners.

Is not that wide enough to cover my question?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): We are dealing with 139.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SANDERSON: No, Mr. Chairman. With all due respect, is that your ruling?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barber): We are dealing with 139 at present.

Mr. SANDERSON: Apparently for the last four hours we have been dealing with 139, 140, and the minister says 247.

Mr. BENNETT: An hon. member said he wanted it confined to one item.

Mr. POULIOT: This item is not subject to the radio commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, because it is not broadcasting. It concerns radio for navigation, and comes under the Marine department.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is not under the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This item was voted by the house for years before the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act was adopted. The items are the same that existed years ago. The item that concerns the radio commission is No. 247.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister says that the radio commission has nothing to do with this vote?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Absolutely.

Item agreed to.

Radio service, to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $280,400.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then I will ask the minister my question on item 140.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SANDERSON: No, there is a question to the minister.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The commission has nothing to do with either of these votes; they are entirely under the control of the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, that is a fact.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The Prime Minister said a few minutes ago that this amount of $280,400 comes from the revenues received from licensees, and therefore was under the control of the radio commission.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Rimouski is mistaken; I did not say under the control of the commission. The question whether the commission shall exercise jurisdiction in respect to interference has been discussed. Interference between stations has to be controlled by the commission, it is true. The prevention of interference with the use of instruments owned by the individual has heretofore been carried on by the marine department. I said this sum of money would be charged against the licence fees, but I did not say it was going to be directed by the broadcasting commission. This item at the moment is being managed and controlled by the marine department as heretofore.

I think perhaps the difficulty of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) is that he did not hear the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) suggest that the committee confine itself to one item at a time. Under those circumstances the chairman was bound to do so, but this is the usual item that has been passed for years for the purpose of remedying difficulties in connection with reception. As I tried to explain, it will be paid from the sums collected in fees, but at the moment it is administered by the marine department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I ask if it is the intention to leave the inspection and location of difficulties in the hands of the Marine department or whether this work will be turned over to the commission?

Mr. BENNETT: The matter has been considered from every angle. In Great Britain the post office looks after the interference with individual reception and the broadcasting corporation looks after matters connected with the facilities of the corporation. The matter is being considered; whatever experience teaches us is in the public interest will be done. I saw Mr. Gladstone Murray the other day for the purpose of ascertaining just how it had worked out in England, and the minister and I have been discussing the matter at some length in the light of the knowledge we have obtained. When the commission came into being the department had a force of experts looking after these matters, and they have continued to do the work. The commission and the minister, as he will tell you, are in constant communication as to what will best serve the public interest.

Mr. VALLANCE: In spite of what the Prime Minister has said this is hardly clear to many of us yet. Item 140 is to provide for radio service and for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners. Has the commission no control over these people who pay licence fees in order to listen to the broadcasts? It seems to me there is some misunderstanding still. When you turn to vote 247 you find that it is to provide for the Canadian radio broadcasting service. Here is another broadcasting service. The Prime Minister has tried to explain it, but it seems to me some further explanation is necessary.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman was not in his place when I explained the matter; if he had been here he would have heard the whole explanation. I endeavoured to make clear that the fund was collected from licence holders, and by statute we undertook to provide them with a radio service in return for the fees thus paid. This is an item that appeared in previous years with respect to the improvement of reception by individual licence holders. Now this amount is being charged against the fees of the licensees, which are paid into the consolidated revenue fund. Item 247, to which attention has been directed, deals directly with the operations of the broadcasting commission itself. I am not going to take the time of the committee to repeat what I have already said; I think the hon. gentleman will agree that it is hardly necessary to repeat these explanations three or four times.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I wonder if the Prime Minister would permit me another question in order to clear up the matter. Is that amount of $284,000 paid under the Radio Act or under the radio broadcasting act? I understand that the power to collect these licence fees and apply them to this vote comes under the radio broadcasting act.

Mr. BENNETT: No, this work is done under the provisions of the radio act but, as I have explained, since the last fiscal year—since these estimates were prepared, in reality—the broadcasting commission has come into being and there has been already coordination of the work between the two departments. That work is going on all the time, but at the moment it is proposed, as I explained to the hon. member for Weyburn, to charge that sum against the fund collected from the licensees, which is paid into the consolidated revenue fund. As the hon. gentleman has remarked, part of these operations would come under the radio act, but the collection of fees and matters of that kind come under the provisions of the broadcasting act.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then may I ask one question. This amount of $280,400 is part of the money collected for licences, and I understand that these fees are handed over to the commission after they are paid. Is that correct?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister explained that the $280,000 provided in item 140 represents the cost of giving service to radio receivers, keeping sets in repair, looking after wave lengths, eliminating interference and so on. This afternoon he told us that it cost either $170,000 or $190,000 to look after interference.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It cost $90,000 to collect the licence fees.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will the minister tell us why he thinks it necessary to farm out his taxation? I ask that question advisedly. People who secure their radio licences go to the post office and pay $2, yet people who do not pay must be looked up, and the state receives only $1.60. The minister admitted that the other night.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The post office only gets 5 cents per licence. The vendors get 15 cents per licence, and that applies to those who canvass from house to house as well. They get 15 cents per licence instead of 40 cents, which they were paid last year.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister admitted that a supervisor also costs some money.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Last year we paid 40 cents, because the house to house canvass only started in September; it was a clean up. This year we are paying only 15 cents to canvassers, which includes the expense for the supervisors.

[Sir Eugene Fiset.]

Mr. MALCOLM: I want to say to the minister that if someone is found who has not bought a licence I think the state should get the $2 and the individual should pay the extra cost of finding out that he did not secure a licence. I do not think the revenue of this country should be less by virtue of the fact that someone must go round and make a man pay a licence fee which by statute he is supposed to pay.

Mr. DURANLEAU: At the present time it does not cost more.

Mr. MALCOLM: Why should it cost $90,000?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Because we must have someone to issue these licences, the postmasters, radio dealers and so on, and we must have a central organization in the department to look after the accounting, auditing and other work. I do not think $90,000 is an excessive charge for the collection of $1,500,000; I suggest that it is a very small amount.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to inform me if the vendors are still obliged to buy those licences in advance in order to get the 15 cents commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Sir EUGENE FISET: How many at a time?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They come in books of ten.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to ask what amount was paid each of the collectors, and especially to Mr. Bigonesse of Montreal.

Mr. SPENCE: Sit down.

Mr. POULIOT: I am speaking about Montreal, not Toronto; I am asking a pertinent question and I do not care for impertinent interjections. I should like to ask how much Mr. Bigonesse of Montreal has received by way of commissions of any kind during his period of employment, and how much was paid each of the collectors.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I explained previously, supervisors have been appointed in every city and every constituency, and during the clean up they received a commission of 40 cents.

Mr. POULIOT: How many supervisors were appointed?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not know that I am able to give that information.

Mr. POULIOT: But you should be able to.

Mr. DURANLEAU: About one hundred and forty, I understand.

Mr. POULIOT: How many in Montreal?

Mr. DURANLEAU: One.

Mr. POULIOT: Who was he?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Bigonesse.

Mr. POULIOT: What is his first name?

Mr. DURANLEAU: L. J. Bigonesse.

Mr. POULIOT: What is his occupation, trade or profession?

An hon. MEMBER: When was he born?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He is an architect.

Mr. McINTOSH: Are you sure?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He is a good man.

Mr. POULIOT: As he is a good man he is probably receiving high commissions; I want to know how much.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not very much. He received last fiscal year the same as any other —ten cents.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister should not be reluctant to tell us how much he gets. Did he get ten cents all the time?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Ten cents per licence. I have told the committee many times how many licences were sold in Montreal from September to the end of the fiscal year. There were 11,385 licences sold by canvassers from September to the end of the fiscal year. This means that the supervisor received ten cents per licence, or $1,138.

Mr. POULIOT: And how much did he get on collections besides that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is what he got.

Mr. POULIOT: He did not get forty cents?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, the canvassers got thirty cents.

Mr. POULIOT: So Mr. Bigonesse got $1,100?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He got ten cents on every licence from September to the end of the fiscal year, or $1,138.

Mr. POULIOT: How many supervisors are there in Toronto?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In Toronto there are eight supervisors. There they prefer to have a supervisor in each constituency.

Mr. POULIOT: How is it there was only one in Montreal, a bigger city than Toronto, and so many in Toronto? The member for Parkdale ought to have something to say about that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Toronto is the only place where they preferred to have a supervisor in each constituency. In all the other cities, Quebec, Vancouver and everywhere else, there was only one supervisor. There was no difference between Montreal and any of the other cities except Toronto.

Mr. POULIOT: Did the supervisor do any work himself for this money which he received?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Of course; he pays a clerk to help him.

Mr. POULIOT: Is he an expensive clerk such as the Clerk of the House of Commons?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He himself is the clerk but he has to have some assistance. It would be impossible to do the work properly in Montreal, collecting from house to house, with only one supervisor and no assistance.

Mr. POULIOT: So that all that the government paid was ten cents to the supervisor and he took care of all other expenses.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The supervisor purchased the licence books, paying sixteen dollars per book of ten licences. The canvassers purchased them from the supervisor, paying seventeen dollars, and the licences were sold at the rate of twenty dollars per book or two dollars per licence. In other words, the department did not lose a cent. Everything was paid in advance and, according to the report of my officials, the work was wonderfully well done.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sure the work was wonderfully well done, but this is the way I look at it. The licence books were worth twenty dollars and they were sold to the supervisor at sixteen dollars; he sold them to the canvassers at seventeen dollars, making a dollar on each one. Why did not the government sell these tickets or licence books direct to the canvassers. They would have saved ten per cent on the licences. The supervisor did nothing; he was nothing more than a go-between. The supervisor simply acted for the government in dealing with the canvassers.

Mr. STANLEY: The supervisor did the financing.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the hon. gentleman say the canvassers were all bankrupt?

Mr. STANLEY: Not necessarily, but the financing was a large contract and the supervisor did it.

Mr. POULIOT: I would suggest to the Prime Minister that he appoint the hon. member for East Calgary Minister of Marine, because he gives illuminating answers to questions addressed to the minister. I thank him for his kind interjection. He knows I like him, but now I am showing how this business was carried on. Here is a man who has the backing of some fellow. He is an architect and he goes to the minister and says, "I want to be appointed supervisor." It is a strange sort of appointment. It reminds me of the sweepstakes bill. The minister says to him, "Buy tickets; if you do so you at once become supervisor." A great title. Well, the man buys tickets. He has a booklet of ten tickets or licences, at two dollars each, or twenty dollars, but all he pays is sixteen dollars.

Mr. DURANLEAU: To-day he pays $18.50.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member for East Calgary says that the supervisor is a great financier; he must be, because he got ten per cent without doing anything—a very able man. He goes to the banker and says to him, "I am a friend of the Minister of Marine. You will give me a margin of credit and with that I will buy booklets. I shall now be a supervisor." The banker says, "What is your occupation? Are you an architect?" The man says, "No; I am future supervisor," and then the banker takes off his hat to him and says, "You must be a great man because you enjoy the friendship of the Minister of Marine, and as you know, the friendship of a good and great man is a boon of the gods."

Mr. CHAPLIN: Wonderful, wonderful.

Mr. POULIOT: Pardon me?

Mr. CHAPLIN: I said wonderful.

Mr. POULIOT: I would suggest to the Prime Minister that he appoint the hon. member for Lincoln supervisor for St. Catharines between sessions.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, you would want a little job like that; that would suit you.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, if I did get a job like that at any rate it would be easy for me to sell some of the tickets to the hon. gentleman, he likes me so much.

Mr. STANLEY: How would you finance it? Would you get me to do it?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: I don't know. My hon. friend from Lincoln is a rich man and he likes me. However, this is a great business for this architect. There must be a go-between who has some pull and is able to get tickets from the department to sell them to the poor devils who make a little money by selling these licences to the people. But this man sits in his office and does nothing; all he has to do is to sell the tickets.

An hon. MEMBER: That is political interference.

Mr. POULIOT: That is the way these things happen. The minister is a business man, the hon. member for Lincoln is a business man, and the hon. member for East Calgary is a most serious, genial and amiable man, and I do not know why they stand for it. I take this opportunity of denouncing this practice to the Minister of Finance in order that he may stop it. These booklets should be sold to the poor devils who are canvassing at the same price, and then the government would save ten per cent. Previously a booklet containing ten one dollar tickets was sold for $9, and the government was losing only ten per cent. Now the government is losing much more, and it is too bad. I think I offer some very timely suggestions to the minister and there is no reason why these supervisors should be treated any better. I suppose they are given their titles in order that they may get credit at the banks to enable them to buy their booklets. I do not know that that actually happens, but I would not be surprised if it does. Will the minister stop this practice?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In fairness to the supervisors all over Canada I think I should say a word in reply to the hon. member. Since April 1, 1933, the canvassers have been getting only fifteen cents per licence, just the same as the banks and the dealers. The supervisors receive two and one half cents out of that fifteen cents. The department decided that they would deal only with one man in each city. There must be some organization for the collection of these fees. In a city like Montreal we would have from thirty to forty canvassers and there has to be someone to attend to the distribution. The city is divided into districts and a district awarded to a canvasser, and the man in charge of this work gets only two and one half cents per licence. For a book of ten licences he has to pay $18.50 and that book is sold to the canvasser for $18.75. I am told that this system has worked out very well. Last year it was more of a clean-up job. We started in September and the canvassers found that they had to go to from ten to fifteen houses before they would find a householder requiring a licence. They received forty cents last year, but this year they will not get more than fifteen cents.

Mr. YOUNG: Why was the commission of the supervisors increased? Previously they were getting 10 per cent and now they are getting 16⅔ per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: They are receiving 2½ cents per licence.

Mr. YOUNG: Two and one-half cents out of fifteen; formerly they got one-sixth but now they are getting one-tenth.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Formerly they were getting ten cents and now they are getting 2½ cents per licence.

Mr. VALLANCE: Do the mounted police sell, supervise or canvass in connection with radio licence.

Mr. DURANLEAU: They are empowered to sell licences in the unorganized districts.

Mr. VALLANCE: Was an order not issued by the department last spring to the effect that the mounted police would be the sole selling agents for radio licences in western Canada?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The department never issued such an order.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister will probably remember that I wrote to the department upon more than one occasion pointing out that the mounted police were not available at all times. I was instrumental in getting permission for some jewellers and two or three other individuals to sell radio licences. Do I understand that the mounted police are not now selling licences?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They are selling them in the unorganized districts.

Mr. VALLANCE: Only in the unorganized districts?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Where there are no vendors, the mounted police are authorized to sell licences.

Mr. VALLANCE: Do the mounted police receive the same commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They receive the same commission which is paid into their pension fund.

Mr. MALCOLM: Does the minister intend to continue this system of selling radio licences?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Generally the licences are purchased from a dealer, a post office or a bank, but the opportunity to canvass for licences has been given to men who are out of work.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not want to delay these estimates but I object to the way in which radio licence fees are collected. It seems to be a haphazard system. As citizens we have understood that if we had a radio receiving set we would have to go to that post office to secure our licence. This was a similar provision to that prevailing in Ontario in the case of motor car licences. However, if we operate a motor car without a licence no one comes around to canvass us and coax us to buy one, we are prosecuted for operating a car without a licence. If the minister proposes to sell licences only through these canvassers, well and good, but I do not think he should continue the present system as well. What do these men do when they go to a house and find that a radio set has been operated for five years? Do they ask to see the licences for the back years? What do they do when they find a man has defrauded the treasury out of licence fees for four or five years? Can nothing be done? The man's neighbour may have bought his licence every year. We should buy our licences as we did previously and be subject to punishment if we operate a set without a licence, or else we should be told that a canvasser will call to collect the licence fees, a record should be kept of receiving sets.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This system has been adopted in an effort to accommodate the people.

Mr. MALCOLM: Why not follow it right through and have it understood that the canvasser will call?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Some citizens prefer to go to the post office to get their licence while others do not want to go to that bother and will ask the canvasser to come back again next year. We try to accommodate everybody by allowing both methods.

Mr. VALLANCE: Suppose I own a receiving set and do not take out a licence and no supervisor comes along, but the mounted police come along and ask to see my licence. When they find I have not got one will they prosecute me or arrest me, or merely sell me a licence?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As a rule a report is made to the minister, and the department deals with the case.

Mr. MALCOLM: What licence fee is charged in England?

Mr. DURANLEAU: $2.50.

Mr. MALCOLM: And in the United States nothing.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the department prosecute in very many cases?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not very many.

Mr. VALLANCE: So there is a laxity in the taking out of licences.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If a man says to the canvasser, "I am out of work and cannot pay now," a report is made to the department and orders are given to wait, but if a man says, "I won't take out a licence," I think it is the duty of the department to prosecute, and that is what we do.

Mr. POULIOT: Do the canvassers report to the supervisor or to the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We deal with only one man in any city whom we call the supervisor.

Mr. POULIOT: So the canvasser reports to the supervisor, and the supervisor to the minister. Does the supervisor receive a commission on the licences that are sold by the post office?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the mere possession of a radio set, even if it is not being operated, make one liable?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If the radio is connected up and is in operating condition the owner is liable to payment of the licence fee.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is if it is hooked up. Take an electric radio in the city here; you see the supervisor coming and you pull out the plug, and then when you see him going away down the lane you push the plug in again; is that set considered to be in operation?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In such a case the owner is liable to pay the licence fee. The radio is not in operation when it is down in the cellar, for instance, with all the tubes out.

Mr. POULIOT: Usually there is something else in the cellar.

Mr. MALCOLM: Has the minister come to any decision as to what licence fee he is going to charge a hotel with a thousand rooms?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The matter is under consideration but no decision has been arrived at.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. MALCOLM: At the present time all they are paying is one licence fee?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: When I look at item 140 and then at item 247, I find one is within the border and the other is across the border. Both these items, one dealing with radio service and the other with Canadian radio broadcasting service, should be together. Item 140 is followed by an item to provide for a compassionate allowance to Lawrence Larson, formerly employed as caretaker at the Esquimalt workshop of the radio-telegraph service. Would it not be better, instead of having that item follow item 140 to have item 247 in its place? Then you would have the two radio items together, and both could be discussed together. The Prime Minister made some observations which I did not quite catch because he was speaking in a low tone, but I respectfully offer this suggestion to the hon. Minister of Marine in order that his estimates may be presented in better form to the house. The two items could remain separate, if he wishes, but they should be placed together; there should not be so many other items relating to a wide variety of matters between them. That is most important. I was sitting at the other end of the house just now where the hearing is very bad, and I did not hear all that was being said. I would ask the minister if the matter of improvement in reception conditions is under the control of the radio commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. That matter comes under the Marine department.

Mr. POULIOT: So the radio commission has nothing to do with reception conditions?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Absolutely nothing.

Mr. POULIOT: That is a great mistake, as I shall prove. We have spent millions of dollars in order to have a radio commission, and then when we want to improve reception conditions that is done by the department. I did not catch what my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Myers) interjected. He surely will be Prime Minister one day because he speaks so low; he croons in the house. I would ask the minister if the $280,400 for radio service in item 140 is paid out of the licence fees received from radio listeners.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: And does the $1,000,000 for Canadian radio broadcasting service in item 247 also come from the same source?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: The two services should be done by one body. I do not see the utility of the radio commission if they cannot improve reception conditions. It is for that they were created.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, to have better programs.

Mr. POULIOT: But if the programs cannot be listened to, if there is too much static and interference, the programs will not be worth anything. I do not see why we should have this duplication. Why bring in a gentleman from outside as expert on the radio commission when we have Commander Edwards here who knows just as much, if not more, and who would have made an excellent expert on the radio commission? Times are hard, and we talk of economy, but here we have a duplication of service in the radio commission which is absurd; it is nonsense. The country cannot stand for it. The people have to pay twice as large a fee for a radio licence, and why? Because there is this duplication of service. If there was no such duplication the licence fee would be only one dollar, but now it is two, because we have to pay first for one board and then for another board. To improve reception conditions we have the Department of Marine and to improve the programs we have the radio commission. Not a single program has been changed since the radio commission was appointed, and so if the reason for its appointment was the improvement of programs the commission has proved absolutely useless because there has been no change in the programs. I am giving the minister sound advice, as I did to the Prime Minister the other day. I urge him not to stand for this duplication of service.

Mr. MYERS: Why not take a spoonful of advice yourself?

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman speaks so low that he will surely be Prime Minister one day. He croons. Let him repeat aloud what he said. Evidently it does not interest even himself because he will not repeat it.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I thought I heard the hon. member say that the problem of perpetual motion had been solved, but probably I was mistaken.

Mr. POULIOT: This is the observation of a statesman. Of course I am not a statesman; I am just a vulgar politician, and I do not belong to the class to which the hon. member belongs. But if the hon. member who speaks so much about economy stands for duplication of services let him say so to his electors, let him say it to the country. I am trying to save money for the government. If the Minister of Marine would listen to my speech he would save the country hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. SPENCE: If you would not talk so much we would save a lot more.

Mr. POULIOT: It costs much more because of the interjections of the hon. member for Parkdale. Hon. members opposite cannot make a constructive suggestion to the government. Those suggestions come from the opposition, because government members are too proud to make them. We make suggestions because we are sincere—

Mr. SPENCE: You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. POULIOT: There are none so blind as those who won't see, and none so deaf as those who won't hear. So the hon. member from Parkdale is in a class by himself. As the minister has told us that the radio commission was to improve programs, would he be kind enough to tell the committee what programs they have improved.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): We are discussing item 140; the radio commission comes under another item.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to speak about that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): Confine yourself to the item.

Mr. POULIOT: To separate the items concerning radio services is absurd. I am not now discussing the items, but the manner in which they have been placed in the estimates. Mr. Chairman, as you are a most brilliant lawyer you will understand my point better than anybody else, and as well as the minister who is an able lawyer himself. I say that there is duplication of services. Now I am saying that the items concerning radio broadcasting should be put together. Am I in order when I say that?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: As you say, sir, I am in order, I am pleased that you have brought the attention of the committee to a most important fact. I ask the minister why Commander Edwards has not been appointed an expert on the radio commission.

Mr. QUINN: You did not nominate him.

Mr. POULIOT: I did not, but I am asking why he has not been appointed.

Mr. QUINN: You did not bring it to their attention.

Mr. POULIOT: He is an expert. Will the minister admit that Commander Edwards is an expert?

Mr. QUINN: You are.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not an expert; I am just a plain citizen asking for information.

Mr. QUINN: I thought you were a clever lawyer.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not pretend to be clever, but I am a lawyer and I am defending a good case. When the minister is surrounded with so many experts I should like to know why I cannot have an answer to my question as to the difference between static and interference. What is the use of having so many experts about him if he does not know the difference? He should have Commander Edwards attached to his department as a personal expert to explain these highly technical matters. Then, what work has been done in connection with the improvement of reception in Ottawa? There are many places where there are awful noises in Ottawa—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: —on the radio. Conditions have been the same for a long time. What is the cause? Is there some electrical trouble? Would the minister be kind enough to tell us, and will he see that the causes of interference and static disappear? Will he see to it that duplication is eliminated, and that his supervisors and canvassers are selected from soldiers who are out of work? These are the practical suggestions I offer. Would the minister be willing to abolish duplication in his department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Prime Minister explained very clearly that there was no duplication in services. If the radio commission took over the administration of the Department of Marine they would take over only the employees in that department who are spread throughout the country attending to interferences and selling licences. My department sells licences, and at the same time our inspectors attend to interferences. As the committee was told this afternoon the very same system is in existence in England. Over there that service is under the administration of the Post Office Department, while in this country we have placed it under the Department of Marine. There is no duplication whatever. Commander Edwards, so well known to my hon. friend, is in charge of the collection of licences, interferences and what we call the improvement of reception conditions.

Mr. BRADETTE: I wish to thank the minister for the statement made this afternoon which holds out hope in northern Ontario for better radio service in the coming year. I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister state that out of the revenues for radio licences about $1,500,000 would be collected, and that expenditures on radio broadcasting, and in the erection of new stations would come out of that special fund. Coming from the Prime Minister those words will be appreciated, because they will clear the atmosphere.

I should like the minister to be a little more explicit as to how expenditures will be made. I have in mind the fact that in the more densely populated centres there is good reception. In the city of Montreal radio reception is good; the same applies to Ottawa, Toronto and Winnipeg. Why does it not apply to the more sparsely populated centres? What I want to bring to the minister's attention is the fact that in our section more money will have to be spent for giving service. We have no station whatever, so that more will have to be spent there this year than in other sections. I hope the minister will see that the expenditures that are proper in these sections will be made. No doubt very little expenditure for transmission of programs will have to be made in the older sections, but as long as there is money left from the ordinary income from radio I hope the minister will see that we receive the service that we are entitled to in northern Ontario.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot add anything to what I said this afternoon on this subject, except that the radio commission is working for a system by which the whole of Canada will be covered. Of course it is important work and cannot be completed in a few days. The commission has been functioning only since last January, and I am sure this committee will realize that within these few months it has done a great deal in that respect. A great many sections of Canada which had no coverage whatever with radio will be served properly within a short time. I know that northern Ontario is being looked after.

Mr. MALCOLM: The minister is no doubt aware of the many complaints that are being published in the papers regarding the wretched reception we are getting in the city of Ottawa and neighbouring districts. This vote is for the improvement of radio reception. Is this bad reception due to some policy of the new radio broadcasting commission, or can it be corrected by the minister's department under this vote?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am informed that this trouble is due to power lines in and around Ottawa. We have that trouble in many parts of the country, and we are trying to improve the situation as much as possible.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is a strange thing that the power line trouble should have started just after the radio commission got functioning.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There may be something in the way of changing wave lengths also. It is an experiment, it is temporary; they try a certain wave length for certain stations; it may be changed later on in order to improve the reception. I understand that the radio commission is trying to find the best means of doing away with this interference.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not want to labour the point, but there is a great deal in what the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) said. There was none of this trouble when Commander Edwards had full charge of the situation in Canada. If Commander Edwards has to look after radio reception and improving the service for listeners it seems very strange that there should be this fooling with and changing wave lengths that almost wrecks the reception in the capital from most stations that the people have been listening to in the past. The minister must see the articles in the papers; there was a long one in this evening's Journal. They are becoming very common. The minister would be well advised to put both radio broadcasting and radio reception under the command of someone who is technically expert and able to look after it. He has in his department an officer who is said to be one of the best radio men on this continent, and it seems to me unpardonable that when the commission begins operation, reception should be spoiled through the changing of wave lengths, making it utterly impossible for the department under this vote to correct it. Money is being spent to improve reception, and on the other hand the commission is changing wave lengths and ruining reception. It is really serious, and I think the minister should look into it.

Item agreed to.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister to take item 247, in order to finish the discussion, if he is agreeable?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I was asked this afternoon to suspend this item until we have more information, perhaps have some of the radio commission here to give the information desired.

Mr. SANDERSON: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that was the understanding this afternoon.

To provide for the maintenance and repair of retaining dams in the St. Lawrence river, $90,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This appropriation is for the purpose of maintaining in good condition the dams constructed in the years 1929 to 1931 in the St. Lawrence river below Sorel, to retard the flow of the river and thereby maintain a higher level, including Montreal harbour. Some repairs had to be made to these dams. The water made some encroachments on the banks, and repairs had to be made, and will have to be made. It is an absolutely necessary expenditure.

Mr. GARDINER: Where are the dams?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In the Sorel islands.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give any information as to what has been the result of building these dams?

Mr. DURANLEAU: According to Sir Alexander Gibb's report, these dams have increased the depth of the water at Sorel by a foot and a few inches, and at Montreal by five inches.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the department received any complaints that because of these dams the flow of water is more rapid in the main channel than it was previously, and therefore more dangerous?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It has increased the current a little, but not to a great extent.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the department any information in regard to the flow to-day as compared with that of the time prior to the construction of the dams?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think we have that at the office. But I know from the report of Sir Alexander Gibb that the velocity of the current at the present time is still reasonable. It is not dangerous to navigation.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give the committee any information with regard to the condition of these dams to-day as compared with when they were first put in? Is it not true that these dams are made of rock ballast? Is it not true that the ice in the spring has moved a good deal of that rock ballast out of place?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have as yet no report for this spring.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the condition last year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Last year little breaches were made, but not much. The damage from the water was on the banks. Of course there is settlement of the dams. It takes perhaps two or three years before they are absolutely settled.

Mr. GARDINER: Could the minister give any information in regard to the depth of the top of these dams or dykes below the surface of the water? That is, what amount of water flows over the top of them at the average flow? Do these dams come right up to the top?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not exactly.

Mr. GARDINER: How far down are they?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not a definite statement, but I know they do not come up to the water level.

Mr. GARDINER: How many of these dams have we at the present time?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Five.

Mr. GARDINER: Where are they located?

Mr. DURANLEAU: All in the Sorel islands below Sorel.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there just one main channel left without any dams at all?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, two. There is only one main channel, the ship channel; there is another channel on the north side of the river.

Item agreed to.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay, lake Superior and other points deemed advisable in the interests of navigation, $44,000.

Mr. VALLANCE: Perhaps the minister might give us a little explanation. Would this include icebreaking in Hudson Bay?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Item agreed to.

Meteorological service, including magnetic observatory, grants of $450 each to Kingston and Montreal observatories, and allowance of $360 to L. F. Gorman, observer at Ottawa, $393,290.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the reason for the increase?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: In addition to the vote of last year there is provision for the sum of $6,000 to give effect to the recommendations of the meteorological conference held in Bermuda in 1931. The purpose of this conference was to investigate the meteorological requirements of the naval fleet in the Atlantic and the possibility of liaison in meteorological matters between the fleet and the local meteorological services. In addition provision is also made for necessary meteorological service in connection with the new air mail service which it is proposed to establish between Montreal and the maritime provinces; the total sum is $21,174. Provision is also made to meet the demand for further meteorological assistance in the prairie provinces, arising out of the Winnipeg conference of 1931.

Item agreed to.

Steamboat inspection, $136,808.

Mr. MALCOLM: Would the minister mind telling us, if his officer has the information, what revenue was collected under this vote?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is self-sustaining.

Item agreed to.

Canadian radio broadcasting service, $1,000,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: If we take up this item it will have to be on the understanding that it will not be passed to-night, because that was the agreement this afternoon.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Very well, but we might have some discussion.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister stated that he would like to have some members of the commission to assist him. It seems to me that any discussion would be futile unless he had the assistance of that august body.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I secured some information this evening which I can give to the committee with regard to this item. I can give the details now.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then would the minister be good enough to give the full details, which he did not have this afternoon, with regard to salaries, the staff of the commission, and so on.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The amount will be divided as follows: Administration, salaries and expenses, $125,000; purchase of Canadian National Railways radio system, $50,000; new construction in western Canada, $225,000; rental of lines for chain broadcasting, $200,000; expenditures on programs, including payments of artists, orchestras, royalties and performing rights, $400,000.

Mr. GARDINER: How is the item of salaries made up?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The radio commission is composed of one chairman, one vice-chairman and one commissioner, the total being $23,400.

Mr. SANDERSON: What does the vice-chairman receive?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The chairman receives $10,000 and the vice-chairman $8,000, less ten per cent of course. The engineering branch is composed of five radio engineers and eleven broadcast operators, representing $37,780. The secretary's branch represents $22,500, providing for one secretary, one chief clerk, one file clerk and ten stenographers.

Mr. SANDERSON: What is the secretary's salary?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is either $3,400 or $3,800. These are proposed expenditures for this year.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not think the minister has mentioned the publicity member.

Mr. DURANLEAU: That will come as I proceed with the list. In the operations branch there are the following; One director of broadcasting, English; one director of broadcasting, French; one director of education, English; one director of education, French; and three station managers. That represents $27,820. In the public relations branch we have: One director of public relations and one French press representative, $10,500 for the two. In the accounts branch: One accountant, $3,000. This makes a total of $125,000. In this personnel will be found the staff to operate the headquarters of the radio commission in Ottawa, in addition to that required for the operation of such stations as are being taken over from the Canadian National Railways. This also includes the staff at headquarters engaged in planning programs for transmission from coast to coast, together with the necessary technical operators required in the actual broadcasting of these programs.

Mr. SANDERSON: I did not get the salary of the publicity man.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are two publicity men.

Mr. SANDERSON: That's enough.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The total is $10,500.

Mr. SANDERSON: How is the salary divided between them?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I know that the English public relations man is paid $5,800 less ten per cent, so that the other must get the difference.

Mr. SANDERSON: Why was it necessary to pay such a salary to the publicity man? I understand there are publicity men in the other departments, the Trade and Commerce department, for instance. My information is that the publicity man in the Department of Trade and Commerce does not get nearly so large a salary. Why a publicity man in broadcasting? What does he do? Does he talk over the radio? Is that his function, business or duty? In short, precisely what does he do?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told he is a very useful man in the publication of programs and in publicity in connection with the operations of the commission. The position is not a new one; it exists in other countries. He has to get in touch with all the newspapers in Canada, because listeners like to be informed by the newspapers as to what programs are being broadcast. He is the man who attends to that part of the work.

Mr. McINTOSH: Is he sober all the time?

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not think the minister has made it very clear how this publicity man will earn his salary of $5,800 a year. I have always been under the impression that the chairman of the commission was the man who arranged the programs. Somebody said he was a music critic, having followed that line for some years in the newspaper business. Why there should be a publicity man at $5,800 a year I cannot understand. Has the minister any further information in this regard?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I must confess that my exposition of the duties of this employee may not be complete. If my hon. friend is not satisfied with the information I have given I will obtain from the chairman himself a full statement of this official's duties, but I was told by the chairman that the position was absolutely necessary. As I say, it exists in other countries and this man is a very important employee. He is essential to the publicity in connection with the broadcasting of the commission.

Mr. SANDERSON: Will the minister be good enough to get further information from the chairman?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Surely.

Mr. SANDERSON: That brings up another point.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I should not like to leave the committee under the impression that this man was not useful and was not earning his salary.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Dead wood.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As a matter of fact, the man in charge of the job asked a great deal more than that.

Mr. MALCOLM: Lots of them do.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The salary was fixed by order in council and we came to the conclusion that $5,800 less ten per cent was a fair remuneration for the position.

Mr. SANDERSON: I agree with the minister that it is a fairly good salary these days, $5,800. In the selection of the staff, or in the arrangement as to what they were to be paid, was the minister consulted by the chairman of the commission? That raises the whole point again. It does appear to me that there is overlapping between the department under the minister and the commission under the chairman, and while we have endeavoured, not once but many times, to get from the minister some information as to who really is in charge. we have not succeeded. Is he over the chairman or is the chairman over him, or do they work together? There must be one head. If there is any conflict between the minister and the chairman of the commission there is bound to be trouble all the time. I would not like to think that the chairman was over the minister. I feel that a minister of the crown should have absolute control over a public servant. No matter how eminent a man this chairman may be, no matter what he did before he got into this work, he is a public servant and should be responsible to the minister who in turn is responsible to parliament for everything done in connection with the work.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I told the committee this afternoon, the act gives full powers to the commission in connection with the allocation of stations, the power of stations, wave lengths and so on. I do not think it is the duty of the minister to interfere with the commission in that respect.

Mr. SANDERSON: Subject always to the approval of the minister. This afternoon the minister said that he had issued instructions to the commission, I think in connection with the Windsor station. If he issued instructions to the commission, he must consider that he has control over the commission and that they are responsible to him.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There must be a misunderstanding about that statement in connection with the Windsor station; I did not issue instructions.

Mr. SANDERSON: I think the minister said that he issued instructions that they keep their eyes on the station.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I may have expressed the desire that they do so but I cannot give any orders where the act gives them absolute powers.

Mr. SANDERSON: It is a very humiliating position for a minister not to have control over a commission which is practically in his department and which spends a vast amount of money.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The act was adopted by the house with only one dissenting vote.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, April 24, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

GRAIN COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house the annual report of the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada. It will be recalled that a few days ago I laid an unrevised report on the table. It has now been completely revised by the board of grain commissioners, and is submitted herewith.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house a number of orders in council passed pursuant to relief legislation.

PETITION

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a petition to the house. In connection with my presentation I adhere to the rules laid down in standing order 68 which require me to give information as follows, first, to state the parties from whom it comes. My reply is that it comes from citizens in the province of British Columbia. Then, secondly, the number of signatures attached. There are approximately 1,400, but I am advised several hundred have not yet been received. Then, thirdly, I am to state the material allegations contained therein. Those can be briefly stated as follows: In February, 1932, the Dominion government changed certain regulations under the Old Age Pensions Act. One of those changed regulations has enabled the provincial board in British Columbia, who administer old age pensions in that province, to claim that they have the right to refuse a pension to anyone who, under the provisions of the Parents Maintenance Act of British Columbia, has not sued his children. The petitioners claim that such a condition is undesirable for three reasons: First, it is unnatural; secondly, it is utterly useless, because often the children are not able even to support themselves and, thirdly, there is no money with which old age pension applicants can sue their children.

Then. the prayer of the petition is as follows:

Therefore your petitioners respectfully urge that the said amendment shall be repealed immediately.

In justice to these people I should add that the petition is an entirely spontaneous expression of their own. I had nothing to do with the instigation of it, although I heartily agree with it.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): On Friday last the house agreed to refer Bill No. 78 to amend the Pension Act, to a special committee, with power to report from time to time. The personnel of that committee has been arranged by the whips, and I therefore now move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes):

That the committee be composed of Messrs. Arthurs, Beaubier, Gagnon, Geary, Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre), Power, Ralston, Ross, Sanderson, Smith (Cumberland), Speakman and Stewart (Lethbridge), and that the committee be given power to report to this house from time to time.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): My name appears on the list without authority. I now ask that it be not placed thereon.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Speaker, I was told that the list had been arranged between the whips. However we can substitute another name to-morrow, if the hon. member wishes.

Motion agreed to.

SOLDIERS' PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has any announcement to make in regard to the provision in the budget address dealing with pensions?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rose at the same time as the hon. member for the purpose of making the announcement to which he has referred. With respect to the announcement contained in the budget regarding pensioners, who are in the employ of the government, it will be recalled that on March 24, last I made a statement which reads, in part, as follows:

Perhaps in this connection, however, I might be permitted to say one word, as there would appear to be some considerable misapprehension with regard to what is in the mind of the government in respect to pensions. The last thing in the world that we had in mind was any interference with the sanctity of the contract concerning pensions. Whatever merit there may or may not be attached to the suggestions contained in the budget speech with respect to pensions, it was never intended to interfere with pensions as such.

This will be found at page 3354 of Hansard. I may add further that it was never at any time contemplated that there should be any discrimination shown towards the returned soldier, especially as contrasted with what may be termed the civilian employee. On the contrary the whole proposal emanated from a desire to afford, during this period of distress, an opportunity to the returned soldier who served his country faithfully, but who, at the moment, finds himself, through no fault of his own, without either pension or employment, as contrasted with some of his comrades who, at the moment, receive a pension, and at the same time are given employment with the full salary attached to the position. To this course objection has been taken by representatives of the several returned soldier organizations upon two main grounds: First, that it would in effect, result in a violation of agreement or contract; and, secondly, would be taken as an example by other employers with detrimental results.

The whole position has been the subject of careful review at two conferences, the first held on March 24, and the second on April 19. At these conferences, the following were present, representing their respective organizations:

Major John S. Roper, M.C., K.C., President, Canadian Legion, British Empire Service League; Mr. J. R. Bowler, Canadian Legion, British Empire Service League; Mr. Richard Hale, representing Tuberculous Reference Section, Canadian Legion; Colonel W. C. H. Wood, Captain C. P. Gilman, Doctor P. B. Mellon, representing Army and Navy Veterans in Canada; Mr. Frank G. J. McDonagh, representing Canadian Pensioners' Association of the Great War; Captain (Reverend) Sydney E. Lambert, Dominion President of the Amputations Association of the Great War; Captain E. A. Baker, M.C., representing the Sir Arthur Pearson Club of Blinded Soldiers and Sailors; Mr. Richard Myers, representing Amputations Association of the Great War.

After full discussion it was agreed that there would, for the present, be no interference with the existing procedure, but it was agreed:

1. That any consideration of a general readjustment of the rate of pensions should be postponed until the next session of parliament.

2. That an amendment shall be made to the Income War Tax Act providing that pensions shall be subject to income tax.

3. That on and after May 1, 1933, there are to be no additions of dependents to the list of those who are eligible, or who may become eligible for pensions.

I desire further to announce that, as a result of extreme care in reviewing existing pensions, it is believed that while affording full protection to those who are justly entitled to pension, certain irregularities which have arisen through misrepresentation, whether fraudulent or otherwise, on the part of certain applicants will be remedied, and that this course will effect a substantial saving for the treasury.

In conclusion may I express on behalf of the government our appreciation for the generous cooperation we have received from the representatives of the above-named service organizations, and for the fair and reasonable manner in which they carried on their discussions and made their representations on behalf of the members of their several organizations.

UNEMPLOYMENT CAMP—VALCARTIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I see in the Montreal Gazette a statement that the unemployed who are being sent to Valcartier camp are being selected by my genial friends the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Bell), the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan), and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Laurin). I would like to ask my right hon. friend whether it is the policy of the government to give the privilege of selection to members of parliament, and whether it is exclusively given to members sitting on the other side of the house?

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may say that the hon. gentleman may be quite sure we will select very good men in any case. But I am personally not able to answer his question. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) is not here to-day but I expect he will be to-morrow.

MAJOR-GENERAL McNAUGHTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) but he is not in his seat. I therefore direct my question to the right hon. acting leader of the government (Sir George Perley). There has been a rumour in the press, or news to the effect that Major-General McNaughton, chief of staff, national defence, has had an increase in salary from $8,000 to $10,000 a year, and it was made retroactive to the first of January last. Is that report correct?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I would ask my hon. friend to put a question of that kind on the order paper.

DOMINION NOTES

ORDER IN COUNCIL SUSPENDING REDEMPTION IN GOLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) whether an order in council has been passed suspending the redemption of dominion notes in gold, under authority of Bill No. 54 which was passed recently; and if so, could he give us the date, and would he lay the order in council on the table.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): The answer is in the affirmative. At the moment I am not in a position to give the exact date, but I will be able to lay the order in council on the table to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS

SARNIA-PORT HURON VEHICULAR TUNNEL COMPANY

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. 41, to incorporate the Sarnia-Port Huron Vehicular Tunnel Company—Mr. Gray.—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, hon. gentlemen will remember that when this bill was brought up a week or so ago the Prime Minister suggested that there ought to be some changes in, I think, two of the clauses. The time the bill was up last I think the hon. member in whose name it stands did not happen to be present in the house; suggestions for these amendments were handed to the Prime Minister but they did not meet with his approval. He had not time to consult with the sponsor of the bill regarding them.

I suggest that in the end it will not interfere with the passage of the bill if the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to allow it to stand until the Prime Minister's return, when he will be glad to discuss with the hon. gentleman the wording of the amendments, which they both agreed should be made.

Mr. GRAY: I have no desire to press the passage of this bill in the absence of the Prime Minister. But I am advised by the solicitor for the company that the amendments to sections 19 and 22 were submitted to the Prime Minister during the past week and I certainly understood that the Prime Minister had approved of them. I accept the statement of the right hon. gentleman who is leading the government (Sir George Perley) that that is not the case, and in view of the interest that the Prime Minister has taken in the bill I am prepared to allow it to stand provided the bill keeps its status.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It will keep its status.

Progress reported.

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN-NORTHERN PACIFIC AGREEMENT

The house resumed from Friday, April 21, consideration in committee of Bill No. 48, to confirm an agreement between the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—Mr. McDade.—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

MR. JOHNNY EMOND—RIVIERE DU LOUP, QUEBEC

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Was Mr. Johnny Emond, of Riviere du Loup, employed as deputy returning officer, poll clerk, poll constable or enumerator in the town of Riviere du Loup, electoral district of Témiscouata, Quebec, at the general elections of 1926?

2. If so, what sum did the government pay him?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

MR. GUSTAVE MONETTE

Mr. DUBOIS:

1. In respect of how many cases did the government retain the services of Mr. Gustave Monette, of Moutreal, as a barrister, since the month of August, 1930?

2. What is the total amount of fees paid to him by each department since that date?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SEIZURE ILLICIT LIQUOR—T. LANDRY

Mr. MARCIL:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and other documents bearing on the seizure of illicit liquor, alleged to have been found and seized on the property of Theodore Landry, of Miguasha West, county of Bonaventure, Quebec.

SHIPPIGAN, N.B.—SUB-COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Mr. DUFF:

For a copy of all correspondence with the Department of National Revenue, the Civil Service Commission and the Minister of National Revenue or any official of the department, in connection with the appointment of a sub-collector of customs at the out-port of Shippigan, New Brunswick.

Mr. CAHAN: I would ask the hon. member to fix a date, so that we can know what sub-collector is meant. Since 1930, 1931, or 1932?

Mr. DUFF: The year 1930.

Motion as amended agreed to.

PORT DANIEL, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. MARCIL:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and other documents, concerning the removal of George Prince as postmaster of Port Daniel West, Bonaventure county, and the appointment of Mrs. Ramier in his stead.

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPROVAL OF PURCHASE OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BROADCASTING STATIONS

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): By leave of the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to alter the wording of the resolution concerning the radio broadcasting commission, which appears under government notices of motion. I have been informed that it might be made a little clearer, since this resolution is presented under section 9 of the Radio Broadcasting Act. I would ask that the resolution be altered to read:

Resolved that, pursuant to the provisions of the Canadian Radio Act, 1932, the House of Commons hereby approves the purchase of the radio broadcasting stations and equipment of the Canadian National Railways by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission for the sum of $50,000.

If that alteration is accepted I will move the resolution to-morrow. I understand that this requires previous notice, so I give notice now that to-morrow I propose to move this resolution.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): As I understand my right hon. friend's motion it relates largely to procedure and does not affect the substance of the resolution. If that is the case I think it will be acceptable.

COMPANIES AND CREDITORS

BILL TO FACILITATE COMPROMISES AND ARRANGEMENTS IN CASES OF INSOLVENCY

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 77, to facilitate compromises and arrangements between companies and their creditors.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This seems rather an important bill, Mr. Speaker; my hon. friend introduced it towards the end of last week and it was only distributed at the end of the week. I do not think hon. members have had an opportunity to consider it as it should be considered, so I would ask my hon. friend to give us a couple of days to look over the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no objection to allowing the bill to stand, but inasmuch as the principle of the bill is very simple indeed, and I explained it on the introduction of the bill, I was going to suggest that perhaps the house would give second reading and go into committee on the bill. The first section then could be read and I would allow the bill to remain in committee so that members of the house who wished to suggest amendments might have an opportunity of considering them.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I should like to make a suggestion to the minister. This is really a very important bill, and I think those of us who belong to the legal profession will be in accord with the principle. But like my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) I may say that I struggled to obtain a copy of this bill and only succeeded in obtaining a copy from the distribution office at noon on Saturday. I would suggest that the bill go to the banking and commerce committee for consideration and report to the house, and then hon. members would have ample time to study the bill much better than could be done in committee of the whole.

Mr. CAHAN: If the principle of the bill is once adopted it simply becomes a question of the verbiage in the different sections. If the bill goes to a committee I think it should go to a special committee of say seven members, but the government felt that all members of the house should have an opportunity of expressing their opinions with regard to this bill if they so desired, and since there is not much doubt as to the principle of the bill being favourably accepted by this house the government thought it might be given second reading. Then it might go to committee of the whole, where one section might be read, after which the committee might report progress. In the meantime, since this is a government measure, the government would be very glad indeed if any hon. members who have suggestions with regard to amendments would send those amendments to me so that I might take them up with the law officers of the crown. In that way I think the progress of the bill would be facilitated.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not know that I have the right to speak again, but I should like to remind the minister that ever since I have been a member of this house I have been on the banking and commerce committee, and there never has been a bill or amendment of any kind relating to company law that has not been referred to that committee. I see no reason, with all due respect, why there should be any exception with reference to this bill, and I am pressing the suggestion I made a moment ago.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I should like to support the request of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson); I think this is a very important bill, and I believe it has been the practice in the past that bills of this kind should be considered by the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I should like to suggest to the Secretary of State (Mr Cahan) that this bill be sent to the banking and commerce committee, who are now carrying on an investigation into the whole question of debts and interest, concerning not only public bodies but private corporations and individuals as well. It seems to me that this bill deals with those very matters, so I think it should be sent to that committee.

Mr. CAHAN: If that is the general opinion of the house, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to moving that the bill be referred to the committee on banking and commerce after it has been given second reading. My own opinion was that a bill of this kind would receive more efficient treatment if it were dealt with by a select committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a reflection on the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. CAHAN: No, I do not think it is a reflection on that committee; it simply means that a bill of this kind involves matters of procedure only once its principle is adopted.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

Interior—salaries, $607,639.50; contingencies, $25,000.

Mr. DUFF: I noticed in the newspapers a few days ago that the officials in one branch of the Interior department had not been paid since some time in March. Will the minister be good enough to tell the committee whether the officials of his department are receiving their salaries regularly like those of other departments.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior): The branch of the department to which I think the hon. gentleman refers is the national development bureau, the officials of which did not receive their cheques on the 15th of this month. When the main estimates were being considered certain reorganization in the department was under review and therefore no item was put in those estimates for that branch of the department, the intention being to include the necessary amount in the supplementary estimates. That explains the non-payment of salaries on the 15th.

Mr. DUFF: Does that mean that they will not get their cheques until the supplementary estimates are voted?

Mr. MURPHY: I should amplify my statement by saying that those employees of that branch who were paid from the civil government vote received their cheques, but those salaries that were charged direct to the vote itself were not paid. Those officials will not receive their cheques until the supplementary estimates have been considered.

Item agreed to.

International boundary commission—expenses connected with the maintenance in a state of effective demarcation of the international boundary, $37,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the increase for?

Mr. MURPHY: In order properly to answer the question I might read the following statement to the committee:

The treaty of February 24, 1925, made the international boundary commissioners responsible for the permanent maintenance in a state of effective demarcation of the entire international boundary between Canada and the United States and between Canada and Alaska, including that section of the boundary through the St. Lawrence river and great lakes.

Since 1925 the commission has made surveys necessary for locating and marking the boundary at a number of points on the St. Lawrence, Niagara, Detroit and St. Clair rivers. Necessary repairs to a number of reference monuments and the erection and location of others to replace several monuments washed out or otherwise destroyed are to be undertaken in the near future.

That gives a brief resume of the work of the international boundary commission. We are under obligation by these treaties to keep up our work comparably with that carried on by the United States. We are now slightly behind in our program and the extra amount asked for is to enable us to bring our work up to their level.

Mr. REID: May I ask the minister to consider the necessity of marking a boundary between the United States and Canada in the district I have the honour to represent, namely, in the Semiahmoo bay, which is about ten and a half or eleven miles wide. There is no distinguishing mark across the whole length of the bay, with the result that difficulties have arisen in the past in connection with fishing rights. The American fishing concerns have placed traps so close to the Canadian boundary that there have been doubts as to whether they were in Canadian or American waters. I appealed to the Minister of Fisheries and he was good enough to say that he was in favour of some distinguishing mark being placed there. I plead now with the Minister of the Interior. There has never been a mark in that bay and it is impossible to tell, standing on the shore, whether a fish trap is in Canadian or in American waters. Will the minister take the matter under advisement with a view to having a mark placed?

Mr. MURPHY: I shall be glad to bring the matter to the attention of the international boundary commission, who, I feel sure, will give it their utmost consideration, as I will give it mine.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the Northwest Territories Act and Ordinances, Northwest Game Act and regulations, Eskimo affairs, Wood Buffalo Park, reindeer industry, game preserves and sanctuaries, wolf and coyote bounties, exploration, investigation and development of natural resources, fire protection, construction and maintenance of buildings, schools, hospitals and roads, relief to destitute, maintenance and transportation of prisoners and insane patients, equipment and supplies, contingencies, etc., $218,000.

Mr. HEENAN: I have no doubt the minister will recall the controversy in connection with the regulation of Norman dam at the outlet of the lake of the Woods, where some settlers were flooded out below the dam, in consequence of which a recommendation was made by the international joint commission that compensation should be given to all who had suffered damage. Before the former government went out of power the house voted $25,000 for the purpose of opening negotiations with the settlers. I understand that inasmuch as the provincial government of Ontario is interested, the minister has shifted the controversy to that quarter. I would point out that the settlers on the north side of the Winnipeg river are now being flooded for the third time within the last few years. They have small gardens and farms, and what is even more important the only way they have of crossing to the mainland is over the ice in winter and by canoe or boat in summer. Owing to the rise and fall of the Winnipeg river as a result of the regulation of the waters, it is dangerous for the children to make their way to school, consequently they are isolated. In view of that I wonder if the minister will take this matter up again with the Ontario government in order to have a settlement arrived at as early as possible.

Mr. MURPHY: This matter has been brought to my attention on previous occasions and it is one with which the province of Manitoba, the province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada are concerned. It is a matter of deciding if there is responsibility and where that responsibility lies. This question has not been determined as yet and until it is finally settled the matter cannot be dealt with. However, the discussions are proceeding.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Reid.]

Dominion lands, parks, etc.—dominion lands, seed grain, mining lands and ordnance, admiralty and public lands, salaries and expenses, etc., $90,600.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is it the intention of the minister to carry on the camps which have been performing a very necessary work in the national parks? Is it his intention to ask the Department of Labour which has been in charge of these camps to continue them this summer?

Mr. MURPHY: The hon. member is in error in saying that this work is being carried on by the Department of Labour; it is carried on by the Department of the Interior under the National Parks branch. It is the intention of the department to continue with this work.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What progress is being made with the Big Bend road in British Columbia?

Mr. MURPHY: I do not know that I can give the actual number of miles constructed last year but I can state that the work was carried forward very considerably, in fact I think it was the largest single item of work undertaken last year. I think we are within some twenty-five or thirty miles of Canoe river, which will be the end of the work as far as the Dominion government is concerned.

Mr. BROWN: Is the minister giving any further consideration to the representations made regarding the boundaries of Riding Mountain park? It will be recalled that this matter was brought up last year and that requests have been made that the western end of the park should be excluded from the park proper.

Mr. MURPHY: Consideration has been given to the matter of deleting certain areas from the Riding Mountain national park. Correspondence has been had during the year with the provincial government but no definite conclusion has been arrived at as yet.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What progress was made by the British Columbia government last summer in its share of the construction of the Big Bend road?

Mr. MURPHY: This work was carried on by the provincial government to a limited extent on the western section but I understand it is to be prosecuted this year with greater vigour as a relief scheme.

Mr. REID: Is any of the tree seed extracted by the extracting plants used in Canada?

Mr. MURPHY: A very small amount is utilized in Canada, the greater amount being sent to Great Britain and New Zealand.

Mr. REID: I submit that more of this seed should be used in this country. Before long there will be very few coniferous trees left and I see no reason why we should supply other countries. Will the minister take note of this matter and see if more seed cannot be used in our national parks and elsewhere throughout Canada. I think it could be distributed as an unemployment measure. We should not allow our natural resources in the way of timber to be depleted.

Mr. MURPHY: For the information of the hon. member I might say that the seed sent to the various parts of the empire is sent on a repayment basis; that is, the countries pay for the seed they get. There is nothing to prevent a greater utilization of this seed in Canada but I might state that the Department of the Interior is more concerned in conserving the present stands of timber than in reforestation work. It is much cheaper to save the trees than to reforest.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Has the minister received any further representations in connection with the Garibaldi park in British Columbia?

Mr. MURPHY: An offer was made by the British Columbia government.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has there been any progress made in connection with taking over the Mount Robson area for the Jasper national park?

Mr. MURPHY: No further progress has been made.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What progress was made last year on the Lake Louise-Jasper highway, and how much money was spent as a relief measure?

Mr. MARCIL: While that is being looked up, could the minister tell the committee the total reduction which has taken place in the estimates for his department? I understand a large number of officials have been transferred and considerable of the work of the department has been transferred to other departments.

Mr. MURPHY: The amounts appropriated by parliament during the years named, were as follows:

Fiscal year	Amount
1929-30	$8,899,071 33
1930-31	8,672,555 00
1931-32	4,895,109 00
1932-33	3,599,866 00

The salaries and the number of employees for those years were as follows:

Year	Number of employees	Salaries
1929-30	2,371	$4,317,020 58
1930-31	2,305	4,271,852 02
1931-32	1,348	2,765,965 96
1932-33	1,067	1,246,243 09

The last figure is for the period from April 1 to October 31, 1932, inclusive.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does the minister expect to complete his portion of the Big Bend highway this year?

Mr. MURPHY: Nothing has been included in the main estimates for the completion of that work this year, but it is anticipated that the work will be proceeded with under unemployment relief.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What action is the minister taking upon the offer of the British Columbia government with regard to Garibaldi park?

Mr. MURPHY: It has been decided that at the present time the Dominion government will not add to the number of national parks in British Columbia.

Mr. COOTE: Were all these items lumped together under this estimate last year or is this a new procedure? We have here about ten different items all gathered together under one number.

Mr. MURPHY: I really think the hon. member is in error. The votes and the numbers are in the same order as they have appeared in the estimates in other years.

Mr. COOTE: I was just asking for information. I did not say that they were not.

Mr. MURPHY: I beg the hon. member's pardon.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me that this is a different procedure from that adopted in most departments and it is a very poor one because many of these branches are liable to be overlooked. Would the minister give us some information regarding the third item in this appropriation?

Advancement of forest conservation; national inventory of forest resources; investigation of forest conditions and rates of growth—

And so on, amounting to $266,000. What work was done in connection with advancement of forest conservation?

Mr. MURPHY: This item is to cover the contribution by the dominion for the advancement of forestry in Canada. At the present time we have three laboratories, one situated at Vancouver, carrying on experimental work with British Columbia woods, one located in Montreal where the possibilities of the pulp and paper industry are being scientifically investigated, and our general laboratory at Ottawa where work of a more general nature is undertaken. Valuable assistance is also given in preparing information that will assist the industry in marketing Canadian forest products. In addition to that the Forestry branch, in cooperation with the various provinces, is endeavouring to make an inventory of the forest resources of the dominion. The information is supplied to the greater extent by the provinces and is compiled by the department at Ottawa. Besides that, scientific investigations are carried on by the department in the field as to the rates of growth of timber, forest protection, fire hazard research, timber land management, the study of wood lots on farms for the assistance of the farming community generally, and various other scientific studies. That, briefly, constitutes the duties and responsibilities of the Forestry branch of the department at the present time.

Mr. COOTE: Is the Forestry branch still operating the forestry farm at Indian Head and are any trees being distributed by the department?

Mr. MURPHY: Those stations were transferred two years ago to the Department of Agriculture, but the work is being carried on, I understand, by that department and trees distributed throughout the three prairie provinces by the stations at Indian Head and Sutherland.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I assume the work in connection with taking a national inventory of forest resources is proceeding? What progress is being made and what is the result so far?

Mr. MURPHY: We have in the various provinces our own officers who are working in cooperation with the provincial forestry departments in laying down certain standard methods of procedure. As the information is supplied almost entirely by officials of the provincial governments, our branch compiles the figures as they are submitted to them by the provinces. In some cases assistance is given by the various large companies who may have holdings in the different provinces.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What progress has been made? Has the branch a fairly good idea now of the extent of our resources or is the work only partly done?

Mr. MURPHY: A good deal remains to be done. The work has not been carried on for any great length of time and therefore I anticipate it will be some years yet before it is completed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If I understood the minister correctly, the salaries which he gave for the last year were up to October 31. What were the salaries to the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. MURPHY: I am sorry I do not appear to have those figures, but I shall endeavour to get them for my hon. friend.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad if the minister will do so, because the fiscal year ended last month and the figures should be in.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has the minister been able to find the mileage and the cost in connection with the Louise-Jasper highway?

Mr. MURPHY: The following figures show the values:

50 miles of reconnaissance survey..	$ 1,000 00
21·5 acres of clearing..	2,150 00
95·2 acres of grubbing..	14,280 00
27·9 miles of grading..	195,300 00
24 miles of surfacing..	16,800 00
58,000 feet of timber in bridges..	3,486 00
62·7 cubic yards of concrete in bridges..	940 50
285 lineal feet of piling in bridges.	570 00
	$ 234,526 50

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Are those the expenditures from relief moneys during the past year? What is the total amount expended on the road, up-to-date?

Mr. MURPHY: The figures I have just quoted showed the values of the work done. The total expenditures for the year 1932 amounted to $235,294.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was there not some work done in 1931, or is that the total expenditure?

Mr. MURPHY: That is the total expenditure for 1932; the work commenced in 1931.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Did I understand the minister to say about twenty-five miles had been constructed?

Mr. MURPHY: About thirty-five miles have been constructed, including some mileage which has not been completely surfaced.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): During the past year has there been any expenditure on the extension of the highway from Jasper westward, towards Redwater junction?

Mr. MURPHY: Not under the relief program.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was there any expenditure from the parks appropriation? I am not asking for the exact figures.

Mr. MURPHY: My information is that there were no funds expended from that during the past year.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the minister give us the names of the branches which have been taken away from the Department of the Interior since the present administration took office, and whether it is contemplated to take away any more from that department?

Mr. MURPHY: There have been certain amalgamations within the department, but no branch has been done away with. Certain portions of different branches have been given to other departments. A moment ago I instanced the nursery stations at Indian Head and Sutherland, which were transferred to the Department of Agriculture. Formerly they were under the control of the Forestry branch of the Department of the Interior. No branches, as such, have been taken over by other departments.

Mr. MARCIL: Have they been taken over by the provinces?

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Mr. MARCIL: The expenditures in the department have been reduced to one-third of what they were previously. How is that reduction explained? Surely there must have been a great deal of work taken away from the department?

Mr. MURPHY: On account of the transfer of natural resources to the three prairie provinces, a great deal of work was eliminated. Those provinces are now doing part of the work which was formerly done by the Department of the Interior. However the branches which formerly administered the natural resources are carrying on with a much reduced program.

Mr. MARCIL: How many officials were dismissed, as a result of that change?

Mr. MURPHY: There were 1,087 retired as a result of the transfer of resources.

Mr. MARCIL: Have any of those been taken back into the service, and any compensation given to them—retiring allowance, or anything of that nature?

Mr. MURPHY: All those who were retired received retiring allowance or superannuation, as the case might be. Those employees who were retired from the Department of the Interior, owing to transfer of resources, have been and are being absorbed into the service of various other branches of the government. In fact there is an order in council in existence which directs the Civil Service Commission to follow that procedure in cases where the employees have the qualifications necessary to fill the vacancies as they occur.

Mr. MARCIL: Will the minister say how many are still out, or how many have been taken back?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes. Of the number retired, 137 are now employed temporarily in other branches. In addition to that 256 permanent employees and 22 temporary employees have been taken over by the three provinces.

Mr. MARCIL: There are about 500 still out of employment?

Mr. MURPHY: Some of the employees are not anxious to be reemployed in the service. They prefer to take their superannuations and retire permanently. The others are being absorbed in the other departments as rapidly as conditions permit.

Mr. MARCIL: Is it contemplated to transfer any branches of the department to other departments, as has been done in the past? There was a time when the Department of the Interior covered the whole of the problems in the western country, but as time went on control over immigration, mines and other activities was transferred. I should like to know whether there is still any need for the existence of a Department of the Interior, and whether any heed is going to be taken to the requests, made by business men in different sections of Canada, concerning the curtailment of the number of departments? Can the minister tell us whether there is any movement in that direction?

Mr. MURPHY: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a few things that have been on my mind in connection with national parks. I should like to see the minister complete that agreement with the British Columbia government for the inclusion of Mount Robson park. I think that while the government of British Columbia are in a mood to do so that agreement should be proceeded with and completed.

The other matter is this. While I would be the last one to complain about expenditure on the new highway from Jasper to Lake Louise, nevertheless I think that for the sake of having a trans-Canada highway through the mountains to the coast it would have been well to continue the expenditure on that project even to the extent of helping the British Columbia government. But more particularly would I stress the point that, having obtained the area known as Mount Robson park, the money should be expended to build a highway from Jasper westward to connect with the highway that will be constructed around the Columbia river. I am not raising any objection to the expenditure on the highway across the summit, but at the same time it hardly seems wise to build a highway across the summit and let remain in abeyance the completion of a highway via Edmonton and Jasper connecting with the southern highway that will connect Vancouver with Calgary, Banff and Lake Louise. I merely plead for the prosecution of those highways which will serve all the public. It will be very nice of course to go to Jasper and down across the new highway to Banff, but what I am asking for is the construction of the main highway to give us access to the coast, or indeed to take the circular trip if that is desirable via the new Columbia river highway, back by Golden and Lake Louise and Banff. I rather regret that the project across the summit seems to be getting the preference in construction. I would much prefer to see the other under construction, so that the citizens of northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta will have a direct highway to the coast as well as the citizens of the southern end of those provinces.

In considering a program for this year I would plead with the minister that those projects be concluded before you attempt to complete the highway over the summit because it will be a somewhat expensive undertaking and in my opinion it will not serve such a large number of patrons as if the construction were made by the route I have suggested.

Mr. BROWN: There is a small amount included in this total that I am a little curious about. That is an amount of $1,500 to provide for expropriation of areas for right of way on the Savona-Port Moody section of the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, also on the Pembina and Stonewall branches of the same road. Why is the Dominion government called upon to provide money to expropriate areas on the right of way of the Canadian Pacific railway?

Mr. MURPHY: In connection with those portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway which were constructed by the Dominion government and afterwards turned over to the railway company, it is provided in the contract between the dominion and the company that the necessary right of way for the railway will be acquired by the government where necessary. Before this department had advice as to what lands were affected by the right of way a certain number of patents were issued which contained no reservation of the lands required for the railway. Many years ago the necessary deeds were obtained from owners in a large number of cases, but some cases have remained unsettled up to the present time. The areas in each case are small, but in addition to paying for the land the government has to provide the necessary expenses for legal work connected with the transfer of title. It is impossible to forecast what expenditure may be required, as there are no means of knowing what price will be demanded by the various owners, nor are there any means of estimating what amount will be required for legal services, and possibly for expropriation proceedings. The sum of $1,500 is named merely as affording a basis for action to clear up these pending cases as far as possible in 1933-34. The Department of Justice has advised that it is the duty of the Dominion government to procure title for the railway in all these cases.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Department of Finance, salaries, $379,737.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does this item include the superintendent of bankruptcy?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): There is another item for that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What item?

Mr. RHODES: I am unable to give it at the moment.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister if he could tell us what amount of New York exchange or gold has been given to different parties in Canada, if any, to meet payments of interest on bonds coming due in New York?

Mr. RHODES: I have not that information before me, I can secure it for my hon. friend, except that it is not always desirable to disclose names. But I can give amounts.

Mr. COOTE: Well the government prohibited the export of gold some time last year. There is a belief among many people in Canada that the government may perhaps not have given gold to individuals, but that gold has been sent to New York to the credit of the government and the government may have given New York exchange to persons in Canada at a certain rate. That is the reason that I am asking the question. Could the minister say what persons were given this exchange and at what rate it was sold to them?

Mr. RHODES: Speaking offhand, I do not know of any instance where we have given exchange in New York. We have permitted the export of gold under licence. If it were a question of assistance as far as exchange is concerned it would be at the going rate. I do not know what particular point my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. COOTE: I think I remember seeing in the press where the government had given gold to some province at a favourable rate. From the way it was stated it looked as though it were a more favourable rate than could have been obtained at that time by buying exchange in the New York market. I just wondered whether the minister could say whether that is correct.

Mr. RHODES: No, Mr. Chairman, it would be the going rate in all cases as far as I am aware. I will verify that.

Mr. REID: I would ask the minister if there is any gold going out of the country. I noticed in the paper the other day that gold was going to London, and that some banks were making money out of it.

Mr. RHODES: That was gold belonging to the banks. They had to receive an export licence the same as anyone else.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell us if that gold was in possession of the banks before the Gold Export Act was passed?

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that I can give an accurate answer regarding that, I do not know that it is material whether it was or was not, but I would assume that it was gold that was in their possession prior to the Gold Export Act being passed.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me it makes a very material difference. No private party was allowed to export gold. Any bank that held gold that it had received prior to the passage of the Gold Export Act without paying the premium and is now allowed to export it and receive the premium certainly is getting something that the private citizen is not allowed to get. I do not see why the banks should be allowed that privilege. Anyone else having gold in their possession would have to take the legal rate for that gold. Why should the banks be allowed to export this gold and receive a premium? Would the minister explain that?

Mr. RHODES: It might be to meet obligations of the banks' clients, and those clients might be municipalities, cities or provinces. That is the answer.

Mr. COOTE: In that case the gold received by the banks at par is being sold by the banks at a premium, and really that seems an injustice. I do not see why they should be put in a favoured position by the action of the government, by being allowed to export gold in that way.

Mr. RHODES: I can assure my hon. friend that there is no question of favouritism so far as the granting of export licences is concerned. In each instance sufficient cause for the granting of a licence must be established; exportation is only permitted upon the merits of each individual case.

Mr. COOTE: Then might I ask the government whether, when the Gold Export Act was passed, containing a provision that export could be made only by the banks, it was the intention that the banks would be allowed to take advantage of that provision to export their own private holdings of gold.

Mr. RHODES: Of course I cannot answer that question by saying yes or no. My hon. friend must remember that Canadian banks have branches in Cuba, in South America, in various parts of the West Indies, in Newfoundland, on the continent and in the United States. They have their obligations to meet in gold, and no doubt there are instances—in fact I have personal knowledge of some—when they must have a certain amount of gold in hand for the purpose of meeting those obligations. My hon. friend must not suggest that there is any question of favoritism because a licence is issued to a bank for the export of gold. I have known of instances when gold has been exported for the very purpose I have in mind and later brought back to this country when the necessity for the gold in the other country had passed.

Mr. COOTE: There are many municipalities in Canada that have to meet obligations in the United States, and until two weeks ago they were legally entitled to get gold from this dominion. But they were told there was no use getting the gold because they could not get a licence to export it. Under those circumstances I do not see that it is right to give the banks authority to export gold which they may have held for several years. They took it in at par but now they are allowed to export it at a premium, though so far as I know no one else can secure that privilege. Many people have obligations to meet in the United States, but they have been refused gold and told they could not secure a licence to export it if they did obtain it. I have had people come to me who found themselves in that position; they have been told by the government that there was no use of their getting gold because they could not export it. I might refer to the case brought up the other day by the hon. member for New Westminster, who referred to a United States tourist who brought in a bank draft, some United States currency and some United States gold. The Canadian bank in Vancouver gave him a premium on the United States draft and the United States currency which he held, but they refused to give him any premium on his gold. Then, when he wanted the gold back, the bank said, "You might as well leave it with us because you cannot take it out of Canada." That tourist was a citizen of the United States, but the Gold Export Act would not allow him to take out the gold which he had brought in. Apparently under this act the banks can take gold from tourists at par and send it to the United States or England and obtain a premium on it. If that is not making favourites of the banks I do not know what you might call it. Certainly it does not seem a proper practice.

Mr. RHODES: I wish to say at once, and as firmly as my vocabulary will permit, that there is no suggestion of favouritism so far as the banks are concerned. The banks are not selling gold as a merchantable commodity; they are transporting gold for the purpose of meeting obligations in foreign countries. As I said before, these obligations might be obligations of the banks, of the provinces, the cities or the municipalities. My hon. friend suggests that municipalities should be allowed to come down here and get gold without the payment of the premium. If I might say so without the slightest desire to be in the least offensive to my hon. friend, that idea seems preposterous. If we did that we would not have any gold in Canada in twenty-four hours. As a matter of fact the municipality, like anyone else, can get gold if there is excess gold so far as the government is concerned by paying the premium, and in no other way. My hon. friend does not suggest that the government should pay a premium for gold and then sell it at par.

Mr. COOTE: No, I never suggested that the government should pay a premium for gold; that was the government's own idea. I have often wondered under what authority that action was taken. Perhaps the minister would tell me by what authority the government pays a premium for gold, and whether it is the intention to continue paying that premium.

Mr. RHODES: I have no doubt at all that Canada will continue to pay a premium on gold. I hope it will never lose its sanity to the extent of not doing so, and until we are prepared to pass a statute confiscating gold I do not see why the practice should be discontinued. If we are going to confiscate gold, of course, we might as well contemplate the confiscation of other kinds of property. Until that time comes there is nothing to do but pay the current rate for gold.

Mr. COOTE: What advantage is there to the government in paying this premium?

Mr. RHODES: There is a very great advantage to the government. As a matter of fact the stimulation of the production of gold in Canada has been one of the saving factors in the present situation. It has not only enabled Canada to meet her obligations in foreign countries without undue strain and undue pressure which would be created if we attempted to buy foreign currencies with our own paper money; it has had the additional effect of stimulating the development of gold in Canada to such an extent that the Canadian gold industry to-day is the second in the world. It has given employment to many thousands of men, and my hon. friend must remember that to the extent that mining is made profitable not only do we bring about the employment of many men and provide a market for large sections of our country, but to the extent that they make money 12½ per cent of that profit comes to the exchequer of Canada from the company itself. Then, when the dividends go to the individual shareholders, we get another slice of the profits by way of income tax. So, taking the balance all round, it does seem to me that we have profited very largely by the development of the gold industry in Canada.

In that connection may I point out this fact, that to-day there are gold mines in Canada which are operated at a modest profit, and in some cases at a very bare profit, which would not be able to operate at all if they had to sell their gold without a premium. That has had a very marked effect in stimulating the development of the gold industry in Canada.

Mr. COOTE: I think perhaps the minister misunderstood my last question. What I should like to know is why the government does not allow the mining companies to sell their gold freely to the highest bidder. Why does the government insist that the gold be delivered to the mint in Ottawa?

Mr. RHODES: I may say to my hon. friend that there seems to me a very important advantage to Canada in being able to secure gold at the New York price or at the London price, as the case may be, but payable in Canadian currency. If we permitted the mines to sell their gold freely and had to resort to the purchase of gold in New York or London, as the case might be, to meet our commitments we would find a strain upon our exchange which would mean a higher premium, so it is all to our advantage that we should continue the practice of having gold with which to meet our commitments.

Mr. COOTE: It is difficult to understand why we would have to pay a greater premium; we are paying whatever premium exists on New York funds at the present time, so surely there would be no difference. May I point out that although England went off the gold standard in September, 1931, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Snowden, said it would not interfere with the free gold market, that gold would be allowed to be freely bought and sold on the London market as had been the case previously. I have been trying to find out why the government of Canada adopted this other policy of commandeering all the gold, but paying certain rates of exchange for it. I want to find out if there is any advantage to be derived from that practice.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend has not understood my explanation all I can say is that I am sorry. I have given an explanation which, to my mind at all events, is as clear as an explanation possibly could be. I have pointed out that there is a very distinct advantage to Canada in being able to secure gold within Canada, payable at the New York or London rate as the case may be, but payable in Canadian currency, with the gold deliverable here. If the companies shipped their gold freely to London or New York, as the case might be, and the government had to resort to the purchase of gold in New York or London to meet its obligations, exchange would stiffen and we should have to pay an appreciably higher premium in purchasing foreign currecny with our own Canadian notes. It seems to me apparent that the advantage is very markedly in favour of the present system.

Mr. COOTE: The minister is trying to take advantage of two different arguments. He says that the higher the premium for gold the better it is for the gold mines and consequently for Canada, inasmuch as it stimulates work; and now he says we should purchase gold at the exchange rate so that it will not go higher. Apparently he is now doing something which is keeping the gold mines from getting the returns which a moment ago he said they should get. He is trying to ride two horses at once.

Mr. RHODES: Well, Mr. Chairman, I give it up.

Mr. COOTE: I suggest to the minister that this government has not made a very good job of handling the question of gold since September 1931. My hon. friends have until the last few days refused to suspend the redemption of dominion notes in gold, and they have illegally refused many requests for gold since September 1931. They have now seen the error of their ways and have passed an act which gives them power of suspension. They first suspended redemption without legal authority and then prohibited the export of gold except under licence and except by chartered banks, and now they allow the chartered banks to export gold for their own private use. So far as I know they have not allowed anyone else to do so. If they have, I should like to know who the parties are.

Item agreed to.

Insurance—salaries, $89,460; contingencies, $64,000.

Mr. COOTE: I had no idea that the question of insurance would come up to-day, but there is one point I wish to bring to the attention of the minister, though I have not with me the necessary papers to deal with it fully. I have read that some change was made in the Insurance Act last year under which companies may allow a policy to lapse though there may be sufficient loan value in the policy to cover the premium due. It seems to me it should be a statutory condition in any life insurance policy issued in Canada that if the policy has a stated loan value which is sufficient to cover a premium due the company should not be allowed to have the policy lapse because the premium is not paid. The amount necessary to cover the premium should be automatically advanced and charged as a loan against the policy. That is done under most policies which carry a clause making special provision therefor, and if that condition is not statutory it should be. I do not know whether this is under the jurisdiction of the dominion Department of Insurance, but I should like to get some information from the minister on this point. I am told that lapsed policies in the case of one company amounted last year to $20,000,000. Many men have been unable to pay the premiums on their policies owing to the deflation to which we have been subject in the last three years, and if some of these policies carried a loan value which would cover the premium, and if the premium was not automatically advanced, then in my opinion it is a shame and the law should be changed so as to make it compulsory that in any such case the policy should be carried, the premium being automatically advanced as a loan against the policy.

Mr. RHODES: Speaking offhand, I am not aware of any change in the conditions surrounding the issuing of life insurance policies as contrasted with the conditions which have hitherto obtained. I may point out however that if there was any change it was made by this parliament and is therefore a matter of the statute law of Canada, and the proper time for the hon. member to make representations will be when considering an amendment to the Insurance Act. However, I will make closer inquiry into the matter. As I say, speaking offhand, I do not think there has been any change, but if there has been it is in conformity with the Insurance Act as passed by this parliament.

Mr. COOTE: An amended Insurance Act was passed last year and I protested three or four times against its being put through without previous reference to the banking and commerce committee, so that all these questions might be dealt with fully in that committee instead of in committee of the whole house. Every hon. member will recall that protests were made repeatedly against the passage of the act through the house without sending it to the committee. We asked to have it sent to the committee first. I am not sure that the act as amended last year made any change in regard to this particular point, but I am told that it did; certain sections were changed or omitted. This is a matter which in my opinion parliament cannot afford to pass without some remedial measures if the situation is as I have stated it to-day. That is the way it has been represented to me. I have been told that many policies have lapsed though they had a sufficient loan value to cover the premium due. The premium was not paid by the insured party. In many cases they took it for granted that the loan value would be used to cover the premium and that the premium would be advanced and charged automatically against the policy as a loan. The insurance policies which I carry myself contain that clause, and if there are policies issued without it the Insurance Act should be amended so as to make that impossible. I know that many people are under the impression that if a policy has a loan value sufficient to cover the premium, the premium will be automatically advanced. I am sorry I have not here a letter which I received recently and which would I think corroborate the statement I am making now. I should like to see the minister interest himself in this matter, and if the Insurance Act stands as I think it does it should be amended before this house rises. It would not require a long bill to do it, but the matter is too important to leave it in its present state.

Mr. RHODES: I will make inquiry at once.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does the hon. member mean to say that where there was credit coming to the insured under the policy, after a request had been made for extension, the policy was cancelled?

Mr. COOTE: No. The case stated to me was this, that in many instances where there was a loan value under the policy, sufficient to meet the premium, the premium was not advanced automatically the insured party not having written to the company requesting that a loan be issued and applied to the payment of the premium. I know that in many policies there is a clause which provides that if payment of the premium is not made on the due date the amount will be automatically advanced and the premium paid, and a charge will be made against the policy. My contention is that if that is not statutory it should be made so in every life insurance policy issued in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does the hon. gentleman suggest that it should be done without a request from the insured? I gather from what he states that the insured paid no attention to securing a loan. Is that right, or did he apply and was refused? I happen to know that a great deal of that sort of thing was done last year—not cancellations but the carrying of policies that had sufficient equity to see them through.

Mr. COOTE: What I am saying is this. Most policies contain a provision to the effect that if payment is not made by the policy holder the premium will be automatically advanced by the company itself and charged as a loan against the policy. I am not saying that in any case the company refused to make a loan to cover the premium; but where the insured does not take the trouble to write to the company to ask that that be done, it is not automatically advanced and the policy lapses. One who tried to get his policy once again placed in good standing was told: You can have your policy put in good standing by having a medical examination. I contend that where there is a sufficient loan value on a policy to cover the premium, that premium should be automatically advanced and charged against the policy, even though the insured does not take the trouble to write and ask that that be done. I understand a great majority of the policies contain a clause to cover such an advance and most people take it for granted that such a clause is in their policy. However, many people do not take the trouble to read over their policies to find out if they do contain such a clause. A great many policies have been lapsed and I think the Minister of Finance should see that this is made a statutory provision in our insurance act.

Item agreed to.

Superannuation — to provide for retiring allowances to former employees of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $10,800.

Mr. MARCIL: According to the newspapers, an investigation is being carried on with the object of reducing the cost of operating this department; could the minister tell us just what results have been obtained?

Mr. RHODES: I think the item refers to superannuation.

Mr. MARCIL: It refers to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. I understand a subcommittee has been appointed to look into the expenditures of this department in order to see if any economies could be practised.

Mr. RHODES: A committee was appointed but it was not appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the printing department, it was appointed with a view to studying the use of printed matter in all departments and the uses to which government publications have been put. The idea was to see if a saving in cost could not be brought about without impairing the efficiency of the service rendered. I understand that committee is doing very excellent work and I hope that it will be possible to effect a very substantial saving in the public service without any disadvantage to the public generally.

Mr. BURY: My recollection is that the superannuation act reads, "The governor in council may make payments." It is not obligatory that the payments shall be made and, as I understand it, a civil servant has no absolute statutory right to a pension. I cannot understand why the act is worded in this way, unless it be to have the pensions freed from tax.

Mr. RHODES: The word "may" has been construed as "shall" on all occasions. Where a public servant is dismissed for malfeasance or misfeasance, discretion may be used but that is the only limitation in connection with superannuation.

Mr. MARCIL: What about dismissals for political partisanship?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know of any person entitled to a pension who has been dismissed for partisanship.

Mr. MARCIL: There have been a large number of dismissals by the present government for this cause and I was wondering if a precedent was being established to be followed by other governments.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not think any prospective pensioner has been dismissed for partisanship.

Mr. MARCIL: But if he were dismissed, would he lose his pension?

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman should leave that until an actual case arises.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—amount required to provide for grants to be made to the provinces of—Nova Scotia, $875,000; New Brunswick, $600,000; Prince Edward Island, $125,000.

Mr. REID: Are these all the subsidies paid to these three provinces?

Mr. RHODES: These are the subsidies which have been voted since the Duncan report.

Mr. REID: Are there other subsidies paid to the provinces?

Mr. RHODES: Oh, yes, there are other statutory subsidies.

Item agreed to.

Unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be subject to the approval of the treasury board, and a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within fifteen days of next session, $80,000.

Mr. COOTE: What is included in this item?

Mr. RHODES: This item is the usual provision for expenditures of an unforeseen character, all payments being subject to the approval of the treasury board. The items vary from year to year. In 1927-28, which was the highest year, the expenditure rose to $131,000, and in 1928-29 it was down to $70,000. The amounts vary. Let me give some cases in point. The city taxes on the British legation property in Ottawa are paid under this item. This is a matter of reciprocal arrangement between Canada and the mother country. The British exchequer pays the taxes on the Canadian High Commissioner's office in London and we pay the taxes on the property of the British legation here. As the committee knows, Sir Josiah Stamp refused to accept any payment or salary for the work he did here and the sterling silver candelabra which was presented to him in appreciative testimony of that work was purchased under this item.

Mr. COOTE: I might save the minister some time. I wanted to find out whether this covered miscellaneous items of that nature.

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: If so, I do not want to trouble him to read all the other items, being anxious to save a couple of minutes so that the committee may allow me to bring up one matter which might be considered under this item. I refer to the provision of a clothing allowance for pensioners who are receiving relief from the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. According to a letter that I have received from a pensioner on relief residing in my constituency, it seems that in Calgary pensioners who are on relief are getting a clothing allowance, but pensioners who live in the country do not receive any. I should like to take two or three minutes of the time of the committee to bring up this matter This is a copy of a letter written by this man to Major Bell in Calgary. He says:

Dear Sir,—

Re our conversation, on the 13th instant in your office regarding the department's ruling, that pensioners, who are receiving D.S.C.R. relief, and residing in rural areas, are not eligible to receive clothing, similar to what is being issued to pensioners that are receiving D.S.C.R. relief, and who are residing in the city of Calgary.

It seems strange, pensioners, that are drawing D.S.C.R. relief should be considered, they do not need clothing in the rural areas like brother pensioners who reside in the city of Calgary.

This ruling, though harsh, to the pensioner affected, must strike his sense of humour; when he remembers a little while ago the government placed 1,000 Doukhobors in jail, for running around in their birthday suits.

I am wondering they didn't send them to the rural areas where clothing is not considered necessary, by at least one department of the government.

He goes on to point out that he has not only himself, but his wife and daughter to clothe. It seems very strange that a department of the government should be giving clothing allowance in connection with relief which they extend to pensioners in the cities and refuse to accord the same treatment to pensioners in rural areas.

As I believe the estimates of the Department of Pensions are pretty nearly through, I am taking this opportunity of discussing this matter. The Minister of Finance in the final analysis has to decide whether money will be granted to clothe these people or whether they will be sent out to the island on the Pacific coast to live with the Doukobors, and therefore I am simply asking him whether he will give this matter consideration. If he does, I am sure he will give the clothing allowance to pensioners who live in rural areas as well as to those who reside in urban districts. Has the matter been brought to the attention of the minister and, if so, will he give consideration to it and see that the same treatment is accorded to those in the rural areas as is now given to those in the city of Calgary?

Mr. RHODES: On the hypothesis that the minister in the last analysis is responsible for the raising of funds for conducting various branches of the public service, my hon. friend could apply to me in regard to every department. I shall take his representations as they appear in Hansard to-morrow and bring them to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Pensions. I do not know there is any other answer I can give my hon. friend because of course he will understand this is not a question to which I can give any other answer.

Mr. COOTE: I thank the minister for the answer he has given me. I should not have brought this matter up now were it not for the fact I think the estimates of the Department of Pensions are nearly through and I might not have an opportunity to bring it up again. I do not think the government would allow such a condition to continue once it is brought to their attention.

Item agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Civil government—Indian Affairs—salaries and contingencies, $135,688.50.

Mr. MARCIL: I presume these decreases refer to the ten per cent cut in salaries all along the line in civil government. What is the explanation?

Mr. DUFF: A stenographer got married.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Minister of the Interior and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs): Apparently the observation of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is correct. I understand there is one position of stenographer, grade 2, in the medical branch vacant.

Mr. ILSLEY: Does this item include salaries of Indian agents?

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—Public Archives—salaries, $89,118; contingencies, $12,000.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I should like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to move that the sum of $89,118 be reduced by $1,380, so that it will stand as $87,738. Since these estimates were prepared, one of the caretakers has passed away and it has been decided not to fill the vacancy.

Mr. RHODES: I move that.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Public Printing and Stationery—printing, binding, etc., the annual statutes, $10,000.

Mr. CAHAN: In this particular case we have reduced the distribution of the statutes and have accordingly reduced the estimate for printing.

Item agreed to.

Patent Record, $35,000.

Mr. CAHAN: Last year this vote was reduced by $10,000. We found however that owing to the number of patents for which applications had been made, it was impossible to publish the record for the smaller sum. For that reason the amount has been increased.

Item agreed to.

Civil Service Commission—salaries, $196,020; contingencies, $25,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the appointment of a French-Canadian been made to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. CAHAN: No, one appointment has been made, but the second, I understand, is still pending.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is practically settled, is it not?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know.

Mr. MARCIL: Who has been appointed?

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Bland, who was formerly in the civil service.

Mr. MARCIL: Will Mr. Roche remain in office any considerable time, or will he retire?

Mr. CAHAN: He will ultimately retire. However he has been retained temporarily so that he may advise the new commissioners in becoming more thoroughly acquainted with their duties.

Mr. MARCIL. The two former commissioners have gone?

Mr. CAHAN: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What gratuity was granted?

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Tremblay will receive $5,000 and the other gentleman $2,500.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Why the difference?

Mr. CAHAN: If my memory serves me correctly it is because of Mr. Tremblay's long service.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They were both appointed at the same time.

Mr. CAHAN: But one had been a long time in the civil service—twenty-two years, if I remember correctly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister believe that is a fair adjustment? After all, a man retired from the public service has still his future to make. It is presumed that if his services are equally satisfactory he should receive an equal gratuity.

Mr. CAHAN: My judgment was not the deciding factor. In fact, I do not know that I was present when the gratuities were fixed. However the fact is that one has been in the public service a long time, and the opinion of the council was that owing to his longer service the larger amount should be given. Taking into consideration his length of service I believe Mr. Tremblay will not receive a retiring allowance larger than that which would have been proportionate to the longer time he had been in the service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was informed both gentlemen were told they would receive the same retirement allowance.

Mr. CAHAN: If the right hon. gentleman wishes the item to stand, I should be content to agree. I understand however that the House of Commons committee which last session considered civil service matters recommended a larger retirement allowance in one case than in the other.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister is absolutely correct.

Mr. CAHAN: I thought so. I understood, further, that the order in council was based upon the report of the committee.

Mr. DUFF: I notice that savings have been made in a number of items over which the minister has control. I should like to congratulate him upon economizing. However, in view of the financial condition of the country, and in view of the fact that there is a good deal of criticism of this particular branch—

Mr. CAHAN: Is there?

Mr. DUFF: I shall try to show that there is. In view of those facts, has he given any thought to the matter of abolishing altogether the Civil Service Commission, and saving the country about $200,000. At this time that sum of money could be well used, and the people generally would appreciate the saving. I do not know whether or not the minister has to do with many changes in the public service, either in regard to appointments or dismissals. Perhaps I am correct when I state that there is no department of government in connection with which there are so few changes as in the department now before the committee. It is a well known fact, however, that in other departments many changes take place. Not only are there thousands of dismissals, but there are thousands of appointments.

In my opinion the Civil Service Commission is nothing more or less than the fifth wheel of a coach. In nine-tenths of the appointments by the Civil Service Commission they act only as rubber stamps. The minister of the department, on the advice of perhaps a member of parliament or his deputy, suggests an appointment to the Civil Service Commission which, in turn, makes the appointment. Let us take an example. We will suppose a postmaster is to be appointed. Quite true, in connection with those appointments there is not only a good deal of red tape but considerable expense. The Civil Service Commission is asked by the Post Office Department to advertise for applicants. The commission sits down seriously and sends out notices to different postmasters, with instructions to post the notices up so that applicants may have an opportunity to apply. All applications are received in Ottawa. Immediately the Post Office Department—not the Civil Service Commission—recommends to the Civil Service Commission a number of people who are to act as a board to inquire into the qualifications of the candidates. That is another unnecessary expense. I have known cases where officials have been sent all the way from Ottawa either to British Columbia or the maritime provinces to investigate the qualifications of a postmaster or lighthouse keeper. They go down with certain instructions. They look over the list of applicants and come back and report to the minister. I have no hesitation in saying that in nine appointments out of ten the member of parliament influences the minister and the minister influences the particular member of the government, the particular member of the government tells the Civil Service Commission who they want appointed and the Civil Service Commission recommends that appointment. I am not criticizing it; I am all for it; I think it is the proper thing, except that it should not go through the Civil Service Commission. I say to the minister that if there is a vacancy in his constituency he is the proper man to make the appointment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUFF: I say to every hon. member, if there is a postmaster or lighthouse keeper to be appointed in his constituency he is better qualified to choose that man than three men in the Civil Service Commission who are perhaps two or three thousand miles away from where this man is to be appointed. I have always taken the ground that the Civil Service Commission is a useless piece of machinery. I have no objection to the commissioners themselves; I have no quarrel with the officials, but in the interests of the country the business would be much better carried out by the recommendation of candidates to vacancies by the member of parliament or the defeated candidate than by having all this red tape which does not mean anything. These commissioners really do not make the appointment; all they do is to put the matter through after either the minister or the officials in certain departments make the recommendation.

Mr. MARCIL: My hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) has spoken about boards going around the country to inquire into the qualifications of applicants. They have a simpler method than that in the Post Office Department. They ask the inspector of the district to send one of his assistants to the constituency, and he is told beforehand the name of the man who is to be appointed to that office. So he goes through the formality of giving a rating to the different candidates, and the man to be appointed naturally gets the highest rating. The Civil Service Commission, who have no officials of their own, must trust to the department, and they simply rubber stamp the recommendation and appoint this man who has the highest rating. I could keep this house for two or three hours if I wanted to scan the fifty or sixty dismissals which have occurred in my county and which really make the Civil Service Commission as it works at present a perfect farce and a great expense to the country.

Mr. POWER: If the minister wishes to reply I do not want to take any time. I am opposed to this item, and have been for many years; therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, that item No. 14 be reduced by $100,000.

Mr. CAHAN: With regard to the Civil Service Commission, the Secretary of State occupies an irresponsible position. I think his sole responsibility is to place the estimates of the commission before the house, and he is the medium through which the commission report to parliament from year to year.

With regard to the dismissals for partisanship or other matters, I can simply say that I am not responsible for any dismissals as far as I know. There has been no dismissal in any branch of the department of the Secretary of State or in any of the departments for which the Secretary of State is responsible as minister. Further I may say that in respect of the appointments that have been made by the Civil Service Commission I certainly have never been consulted in any particular. Consequently the only recommendation I have given to the commission is a personal recommendation as to character for one of the employees of the department of the Secretary of State with whom I had been in close contact for two or three years, whom I believed to be a man of very high character, and when he applied for promotion in the civil service I wrote a certificate as to his character and industry and competence. That is the only association which I have had personally with the commission.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It does seem as if it ought not to be necessary every session, and sometimes two or three times during a session, to debate this question of the Civil Service Commission. I think perhaps the only good thing which can be said with regard to the speech of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) was that it was short. I have no desire to make a long speech or go into the merits of the case at any length to-day. Yet I think those of us who are in favour of a civil service commission cannot let a protest of this kind go unchallenged. Surely if there is anything wrong with the Civil Service Commission and the way in which they do business the necessary action is either to bring in amendments to the Civil Service Act or to change the commissioners. I do think that the government is very slack indeed in not having appointed new members to the commission—

Mr. MARCIL: Perhaps they have no applicants.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Civil Service Commission was more or less discredited by a report that came in last session, yet the same gentlemen have carried on, and apparently there has been no fundamental change in their way of doing business. I think the government have been very slack in that connection.

But when we consider the alternative, if the Civil Service Commission were abolished it would mean a return to patronage in a larger degree than we have had it during the past few years. It seems to me that no one who has the welfare of the country at heart can advocate that in real seriousness. I cannot think that any member of parliament, even though he may be located near the scene of action, is necessarily the man to decide who is the most suitable applicant for a position. In fact I think the very fact that he is the member of parliament and is necessarily more or less partisan in his way of looking at things disqualifies him from making recommendations as to the fitness of candidates. I think that position can be well argued. He may know the moral character of a man in his district and may make a recommendation of that kind—

Mr. SANDERSON: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does not the hon. member frequently make recommendations to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I do not.

Mr. SANDERSON: Have you never made any?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I have not, that is to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. SANDERSON: To the best of your knowledge?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, I cannot recall at any time having done so. As everyone here knows, I have said again and again that I believe in the principle of appointment on merit after competitive examination, and I have referred applicants to the Civil Service Commission, but not with recommendations.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then may I ask another question? The hon. member says that in all his career as a member of this house, and he has been here many years, he has never made a recommendation to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot recall any. I am not under examination, and before making a final statement I would have to be given time to go over the matter. The nearest I can recall to having done anything of the kind was away out in the west, not in my own constituency, when either a minister or the Civil Service Commission asked me if I could indicate some medical man who could recommend someone upon whom reliance could be placed, and I indicated a medical man that I happened to know in that area, and I do not know who he recommended. To the best of my knowledge that is the nearest I have come to any recommendation.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then may I ask this question? In all his career the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has never made any recommendation to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: To the best of my knowledge, no.

Mr. SANDERSON: Your knowledge and belief?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Not to the best of my recollection.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am prepared to leave it at that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If sworn evidence were brought in I might have to accept my own signature, or other evidence like that, but my statement is according to the best of my recollection. I am dealing with principles, and on principle I have avoided doing that. It may be that those of us who are independents are not subjected to quite the same temptations as others; I am not suggesting that I possess any higher degree of morality, but perhaps I occupy rather a unique position. That has been the position I have taken, and perhaps for that very reason I have been able to advocate the retention and extension of the Civil Service Commission a little more disinterestedly than some other hon. members. I felt very sorry that the appointments recently made in connection with the radio commission did not come under the Civil Service Commission, so far as I have been able to learn, but were made directly by order in council. If I am misinformed I should be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. DUFF: That is quite right.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think that is correct, and it is regrettable indeed. By these means we are really undermining the authority and usefulness of the Civil Service Commission, and if this undermining goes on very much longer I might come to agree with my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough and regard the commission as a fifth wheel. But I do not want to see it made a fifth wheel; I think we need an independent body who will have some definite knowledge of the qualifications of individuals and of the needs of the departments, and I hope nothing further will be done to weaken the Civil Service Commission. If this amendment is pressed I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. MARCIL: In addition to what I said a moment ago with regard to appointments in the country districts, section 25 of the Civil Service Act enables the department to accept or reject the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, and when by any accident a Liberal is appointed that recommendation is rejected. I have a case in point in my own constituency. A returned soldier was appointed as lighthouse keeper; he was the father of a fairly large family. This did not suit the Tory organization and the appointment was held up for six months. The temporary appointee received his salary during that period, and when the six months was up the choice of the Tory organizer in my constituency was appointed. The returned soldier, who had been legally appointed by the commission, was simply thrown aside. The recommendation of the Civil Service Commission was completely annulled under section 25 of the act, which enables the department to accept or refuse any appointment. When the appointee does not suit the men of the day he is not accepted; in this case the soldier who had been appointed was simply thrown out.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not see that the hon. member for Bonaventure has very much to complain about. During the ten years his party was in power that section was invoked day in and day out in order to get rid of candidates who had received the highest rating by the Civil Service Commission. If the hon. gentleman wants to refresh his memory let him look at the debates of 1930, when the post office estimates were under consideration. My complaint against the Civil Service Commission is that at times they allow themselves to be influenced by others, and the merit system is not always to the fore. If the hon. gentleman wants a concrete illustration let him look at the case of the Campbellton postmaster.

Mr. MARCIL: I had nothing to do with that; I only know that an appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission and that now an attempt is being made to have that cancelled. Of the one hundred postmasters in my constituency I think about fifty have been dismissed. The other day a man was dismissed by the Postmaster General despite a fervent appeal made on his behalf by the Lord Bishop of Quebec. Mr. Sweetman, the postmaster in question, who had held office for thirty-four years at Port Daniel Centre, and who was kept in office under the Borden government by Sir Robert Borden himself when an attempt was made to oust him, has been let out. I am in favour of merit, but the merit system does not work properly. All the government officials are trembling with regard to their positions. If a post office inspector is sent down to my district, what does he do?— The easiest way is for him to see the member who has the patronage for the county. In my case my opponent does not bother with patronage; he has passed it over to a former minister of the crown, Hon. Doctor Paquet, who was a member of the Meighen administration. He is handling the patronage now, and this dismissal was carried out on the recommendation of Doctor Paquet in spite of the appeal of the Lord Bishop of Quebec, who I am sure could be compared with Doctor Paquet any day of the week.

I could bring up any number of similar instances. These things are done for party purposes; I have sat here for thirty-three years, and I know what I am talking about. When my hon. friend from York-Sunbury goes back to his people he will have to account for the expenditures of the present government. I know he has a pretty safe constituency, but he may find that conditions have changed, and that the people are in earnest. They may want to know if only individuals and private companies should economize or whether the Dominion government should not set the example. I am sure my hon. friend and I could sit down and reduce the budget by millions of dollars. Many things are all right when the country is prosperous; it is all right to have representation at Geneva and elsewhere and commissioners galore when the country has money, but I think we could get along without a lot of these things now. Here we have a tax of 2 cents a pound on sugar; we have to put 3 cents on every cheque no matter how small it may be; we must raise $70,000,000 by increased taxation this year. At the same time the trade of Canada for the month of March was $28,000,000 less than our trade a year ago, and I do not know how many millions less than our trade in 1928 and 1929. So I think the time has come when we must economize, and I am in favour of abolishing the Civil Service Commission entirely, so far as the outside service is concerned. Let the minister of the crown assume the responsibility for appointments, and let him make those appointments on the recommendation of the man who has been chosen to represent the people of that constituency. If I make a foolish appointment I am responsible first to the minister and then to my electors. Then the minister will have someone to whom he can look with confidence, because I must assume the responsibility, as every member of parliament must. That is the way the civil service should be administered, but to-day we have this costly farce, the Civil Service Commission. It gives no satisfaction to anyone; the appointments are made purely for party purposes, and in each case a large number of good partisans are dissatisfied. If you want to get into trouble, change a post office; that is the old story, and my hon. friend knows it very well. I know my hon. friend is sincere; he knows in his heart that we could save millions of dollars if we really wanted to do so. We should cut our budget down to compare with our revenues, but here we are this year with a deficit of $150,000,000. What is to become of this country if trade does not pick up or if something is not done at Washington or some other place? Where will we be in the next two or three years? I put that question to my hon. friend, and he will have an opportunity to answer it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A moment ago the Secretary of State said that he, as a minister of the crown, had never asked the Civil Service Commission to make an appointment.

Mr. CAHAN: Or as a private member, so far as I know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And that the only action he had taken along that line was to give a certificate of character to someone who was seeking a position.

Mr. CAHAN: And in that case the gentleman had been in the State department under me, where I had been able to supervise his competency and intelligence. I do not think he has received the appointment, at that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite so, and I think in making that statement the minister felt that he was expressing the proper attitude of a minister of the crown with reference to appointments under the Civil Service Commission. A few days ago we were discussing in the house a measure which related to the appointment of wardens in penitentiaries, and the Minister of Justice at the time told us that one reason a certain clause in the act had been drafted as it was was to remove altogether the possibility of the minister making the recommendation for the appointment of wardens. He said that it would be better to leave the matter in the hands of the superintendent and that the minister should not interfere at all. We accepted in good faith what the minister then said. I have in my hand a return asked for a few days ago by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) and I wish to read to the committee two or three of the communications that appear therein. They illustrate to what extent the Civil Service Commission really functions in the matter of some appointments. This return relates to the appointment of a warden at Kingston. The motion asked for:

A copy of all correspondence, telegrams, recommendations, reports, memoranda and other documents on the files of the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and of the Civil Service Commission in respect to the appointment of R. M. Allan to the position of warden of Collin's Bay penitentiary.

The first letter is dated Ottawa, January 14, 1932. This is a memorandum signed by the Minister of Justice and forwarded to the superintendent of penintentiaries:

Please instruct Inspector Jackson to return to his regular duties at Ottawa as inspector, and place Mr. Allan in charge of the preferred class penitentiary, Collin's Bay, as acting warden. Please also apply to the Civil Service Commission for the promotion of Mr. Allan to be warden of said institution, and for the promotion of Mr. Hawkins to the position now occupied by Mr. Allan.

That was a pretty straight statement on the part of the Minister of Justice as to what the Civil Service Commission should do. Then there is a communication from Mr. W. S. Hughes, superintendent, to Mr. Allan. It is dated January 18, 1932:

Dear Mr. Allan,—

Acting under instructions of the hon. the Minister of Justice, you are to proceed immediately to the preferred class penitentiary, Collins bay, and take charge of that institution.

That communication is addressed to:

R. M. Allan, Esq., Structural Engineer, Penitentiary Branch, Ottawa.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

On January 21, 1932, there is quite a long letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice, addressed to the Secretary of the Civil Service Commission, Ottawa. It reads in part:

Sir,—

Re—Promotion, Structural Engineer R. M. Allan, J.PA. 17, to position, warden, grade 1, preferred class penitentiary, Collin's Bay, J.P. 2001.

Relative to the above, the position of warden at the preferred class penitentiary, Collins bay, has not been permanently filled since its creation. The hon. the Minister of Justice is desirous of having the above mentioned officer promoted to this vacancy.

Then the communication gives certain reasons and concludes:

May I ask that steps be taken to immediately promote Mr. Allan to the permanent position of warden of the preferred class penitentiary, at the salary he now enjoys, viz., $3,180. The customary requisition is attached hereto.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,
W. Stuart Edwards,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

A little later there is a communication from the Civil Service Commission intimating that this has been done, and there is a communication signed H. C. Fatt, acting superintendent, addressed to the warden, Collin's Bay penitentiary, Kingston, under date April 11, 1932:

Sir,—

Please be advised that certificate has been issued by the Civil Service Commission, promoting you to the position of warden, grade 1, Collin's Bay penitentiary, with salary at a rate of $3,360 per annum, less allowance, from 1st April, 1932.

There is the file. I have not read all the communications but the pertinent ones, and I have not left unread any communications which hon. gentlemen would wish to have quoted. That file indicates that in the filling of positions such as that of warden, the Minister of Justice simply told the superintendent whom he wanted appointed. He had his deputy write to the Civil Service Commission, indicating who was to be appointed, the Civil Service Commission made the appointment, and the superintendent notified this gentleman that the appointment had been made. If that is the method of proceeding under the present government, so far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned, the motion before the committee at the moment is wholly inadequate. Instead of reducing the salaries paid to the commission we ought to abolish it altogether. This is the file as presented and I shall be glad to send it over to my hon. friend if he wishes to see it. It is an exemplification of what we on this side have been saying, that so far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned, as apparently it is functioning at the present time, it is simply acting under instructions from the minister, the minister giving directions to his head officials or his deputy and, through them, instructing the commission what to do.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It seems to me the right hon. gentleman has taken too high-handed an attitude in this matter. As a matter of fact, these are not instructions to the commission at all. The commission are not bound to carry out the wishes of the minister.

An hon. MEMBER: But they did.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They are not bound to carry out these instructions unless they see fit, and my experience of the commission is that anyone whom I recommend very seldom gets any consideration. Indeed, I no longer recommend anyone to the commission. The minister or the deputy minister might say that he would like to have such a man appointed, but that does not constitute instructions to the commission. If the commission refused to appoint the man the minister could not compel them to make the appointment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the Acting Prime Minister listen to this.

May I ask that steps be taken to immediately promote Mr. Allan to the permanent position of warden of the preferred class penitentiary, at the salary he now enjoys, viz., $3,180. The customary requisition is attached hereto.

I am, sir,

Your obedient servant,
W. Stuart Edwards,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They considered him a proper person to be promoted.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The letter says, "to immediately promote".

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: "May I ask that steps be taken" cannot be regarded as instructions. As a matter of fact, the minister could not instruct the commission if he wished to.

Mr. DUFF: I can understand that the Acting Prime Minister would not wish to have very much to do with the Civil Service Commission, nor would he ask them to make appointments, but he is a member of this government and he cannot get away from some responsibility in the matter. I will refer to one case that occurred in the last couple of months. A radio commission was appointed and it was found necessary to have certain officials. The commission asked for a secretary, and although the commission was requested to advertise for applicants for that position, although two hundred applications were received by the commission, although these poor devils of applicants each paid $2 when he sent in his application, the appointment of Colonel Landry was made the day before the applications were due. Who made that appointment? Was it made without the advice of the Civil Service Commission? Was the Civil Service Commission not told to appoint that gentleman instead of one of the two hundred applicants who sent in $2 each, and from whom the government derived $400?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This is something I know nothing about. Does my hon friend say that the appointment was made the day before the applications were received?

Mr. DUFF: Before they were due.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Before they were received?

Mr. DUFF: No, before the time was up.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Has the hon. gentleman anything to prove that?

Mr. DUFF: The Acting Prime Minister can get the proof better than I can. I would suggest that he ask his colleagues.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has any written evidence.

Mr. DUFF: I have made the statement that this was done and I would suggest that the Acting Prime Minister make an investigation Let him ask his colleagues whether it is true or not.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I will have the matter investigated.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My views with reference to the Civil Service Commission are well known to all members of the committee and I do not propose to repeat them at this moment. I have had occasion time and time again to express my views and they will be found in Hansard. I have agreed in the past with the principles underlying the Civil Service Commission, and I repeat my agreement. I agree with the principle of having a body to appoint people to the civil service under the merit system. If there are any defects in this system, it is not due so much to those charged with the administration of the law as it is to the law itself. If a change were made in the act in an impartial manner and irrespective of parties and the like, a lot of the trouble now being experienced would be removed. I am one of those who believe in the merit system and I see no other way in which it can be administered except by a properly constituted commission operating under a proper law. I notice there is a reduction of almost $50,000 in the vote for this commission. I shall not repeat what I have said before, but notwithstanding my great friendship for the hon. gentleman who has moved that the item be reduced, I shall very gladly vote against his amendment.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the hon. gentleman tell us how many recommendations he has made to the Civil Service Commission between 1921 and 1930 and how many times he has tried to influence appointments?

Mr. CHEVRIER: When anyone came to me and asked me to recommend him to the Civil Service Commission, I did so when I felt that he was worthy of appointment. However, I might say that as far as I know, not one of these applications has been accepted. Since the change in government, people have come to me asking me to recommend them for positions. As my hon. friend knows, the application form contains a space for three recommendations. Since 1930 I have been quite willing to place my name upon the application forms of those whom I thought were fitted for positions, but not one of them has been appointed.

Mr. MacLEAN: I should like to bring a matter to the attention of both the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) and the Minister of the Interior. A gentleman in my county acted as chief migratory bird officer for over nine years in the province of Prince Edward Island. It was decided to hand this work over to the mounted police and this man's name was placed upon the eligible list of the Civil Service Commission. Just recently the position of fishery officer in my county became vacant, a position which entails work similar to that which this man had done. When the natural resources were handed over to the provinces, many positions in the Department of the Interior were wiped out, but the minister knows it was intended that these men would be taken care of. This man to whom I refer is a returned soldier and I think the minister will bear me out when I say that he had a splendid record with the department. The Civil Service Commission was about to advertise the position of fishery officer when this man put forward the claim that as he was on the eligible list, he should receive the appointment. The commission agreed with this, but in order that this man should not receive the position an order in council was passed stating that it would not be filled in a permanent way. A couple of days afterwards another man was put into this position upon the recommendation of the gentleman who opposed me in the last election. A man who had been in the department for nearly ten years was passed over although the commission had admitted that he was eligible for the position and should receive it. I do not know whether this man was a Liberal or a Conservative, I just want to point out that there are many ways of getting around the act. This man was wounded in service overseas, he has given splendid service in the department but he is now thrown out in the cold simply because someone else wants to place another man in the position. The Civil Service Commission were ready to appoint this man and I have their letter to prove it.

Amendment (Mr. Power) negatived on division.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—to provide for expenses of the comptroller of the treasury's office, $1,741,148.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does this item relate to the comptroller who has just been visiting the western provinces?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What success has he had in having the provinces appoint comptrollers?

Mr. RHODES: I cannot give my right hon. friend any other answer than to say that his report came in only to-day. It is very voluminous and I have not had an opportunity of considering it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister consider that there is anything in the nature of interference with the domestic affairs of the provinces when the federal government issues directions of the character of those set forth in the Prime Minister's letters to the premiers of the provinces?

Mr. RHODES: It is entirely within the discretion of the provincial governments whether they will subscribe to the suggestions contained in the letter of the Prime Minister. In that sense, provincial autonomy is not being interfered with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out that when the matter of grants to provinces came up in the first instance, we on this side urged very strongly that the Auditor General or some of his agents ought to be permitted to audit the various accounts. The Prime Minister then took the position that it would be an insult to the provinces to expect that any federal officer should have anything to do with supervising the accounts of the provinces. I recognize that the federal comptroller is not supervising, but had the course which we suggested at the outset been taken, it might not have been necessary to send a comptroller with certain instructions.

Mr. RHODES: The position taken by the Prime Minister to which my right hon. friend has referred, had reference to the auditing of the accounts which are paid for in part by the provinces themselves and which are administered and dealt with by the provinces, whereas on the other hand the letter of the Prime Minister had reference not to the creation of accounts but to the question of requests which have come to the dominion for advances, loans and financial aid to enable the provinces to carry out their own provincial undertakings. Therefore my right hon. friend will see, apart from the question whether the attitude taken in the latter case by the Prime Minister was correct or not, it was entirely different from the question of auditing provincial accounts as such.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It all relates to provincial expenditures which have been incurred and paid as a result of grants in aid.

Mr. RHODES: Yes. On the other hand, the lender is the man who lays down the terms on which the borrower is to receive an advance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My point is that at the outset the government should not have regarded it as an insult to the provinces to lay down any terms. We were taking the very strong position that being the lender, the federal government ought to safeguard the dominion treasury in its loans. Had that course been taken, the position of the provinces to-day would not have been the difficult one it is; it would not have been necessary to tell them that the time had come when they had better get a comptroller or they would not get help.

Mr. RHODES: I do not think there is any difference in view between my right hon. friend and myself except that he is confusing two things. The question of auditing accounts as approved by a province where the province itself administers and pays a portion of them is one thing, while the question of the federal government saying to a province which comes to the dominion treasury requesting the loan of a certain sum of money: Yes, we will lend you the money, but on condition that you will do thus and so, is entirely different.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If we are agreed, I am satisfied.

Mr. POWER: The answer to the minister by the provinces would be this, that if the federal government had not initiated these enormous expenditures, the provinces might not have been in the difficult position in which they are. If they are asking for money to assist in carrying out certain undertakings under a relief act, it is because they were obliged to make these expenditures. The federal government simply said: We will spend so much and you must also spend so much; if you do not, you are to be held up before the inhabitants of your province as not being willing to cooperate with us. The provinces have been actually forced into the expenditure of large sums of money.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot allow the statement of my hon. friend to pass without a moderate protest.

Mr. POWER: I did not expect the minister would.

Mr. RHODES: It may quite well be that the dominion must assume a share of responsibility for certain public works expenditures which were participated in by the provinces and that to the exent they did participate in certain public works expenditures, there may have resulted a modicum of financial embarrassment at the moment. That may have been a contributing cause, but it was not by any stretch of the imagination the main cause of the difficulty in which the several western provinces find themselves at present. One must go far beyond that for many of the expenditures that they are called upon to make to-day. When I say that, I am not referring to parliament buildings which cost many millions of dollars and other undertakings of a like character which at the time were beyond the purse of the provinces to meet. Let me take one illustration. In the drought area in Saskatchewan, there was a case where one-third of the population of that province was impoverished, not in a position to pay a single dollar of taxation and, on the other hand, having to be the recipients of direct relief to the extent of one hundred per cent. That one instance alone would cause a diminution in the revenue of Saskatchewan of a very large sum of money. Then, of course, the provinces are also subject to the general conditions of depression which exist to-day.

Mr. POWER I do not know whether this is relevant to the discussion or not, but may I ask the Minister of Finance whether persons who have received assistance in the drought area of Saskatchewan have pledged themselves to repay either to the Saskatchewan Relief Commission or to the federal government the loans made to them?

Mr. RHODES: My recollection is that in many, if not in most cases, a promise to pay was taken by the Saskatchewan relief commission and, while I am speaking from memory, I think I am accurate when I say that already a substantial sum has been repaid to the federal treasury as a result of those obligations.

Mr. POWER: Is it the intention of the federal government to insist that the Saskatchewan relief commission endeavour to collect those amounts?

Mr. RHODES: I would not say that the government would insist, but I think it would be the duty of the dominion to insist that those who could pay would honour their obligations and that the federal treasury should be recouped so far as possible for those advances. No doubt many of them will never be returned, but when they can be they ought to be.

Mr. SANDERSON: I understood the minister to say a minute ago that he had just received the report from the comptroller of the treasury. Is that in connection with the four western provinces or just some of them?

Mr. RHODES: Three of the western provinces.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is it the intention of the minister or the government to lay those reports on the table?

Mr. RHODES: I hardly think it is a report that ought to be brought down. I say that offhand and without having had an opportunity of conferring with my colleagues. The report is more in the nature of a confidential document for the purpose of informing the government as to conditions in the west. I would like to turn the matter over in my mind and confer with my colleagues before deciding whether to bring the report down, because the committee will see there are of necessity many matters of inquiry which could not in the public interest be disclosed.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Building fishways and clearing rivers, $18,000.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I note that this item is for clearing rivers and building fish ladders. There is a lake in my district which requires a fish ladder. As I understand it, sockeye salmon eggs were put into that lake four years ago, and the run is due to come back this fall. I have made inquiries from the department, and learn that the proposal is to wait until they come back, and then to think about building a ladder. That may seem reasonable to the department; they may choose to adopt that course rather than to build a ladder before the run. But the history of the Pacific coast tells us that if we put sockeye eggs into a lake we can count on it that they will return four years after. The department states there is a precedent in connection with Stamp falls, in which instance they waited until the run came back. In that case however the falls were not of a character which made the ascent of the fish prohibitive. Those falls only made it difficult for the fish to get up, and their efforts were supplemented through provision by the department to carry them up a distance of perhaps a couple of hundred yards in some kind of pail or bucket. Out of a fairly prolific run one could imagine how many would ascend in that way. The efforts of the department were of course supplemented by the fact that the falls were not impossible of ascent, and that at least to a certain extent the fish could get up in any event.

In the particular instance to which I allude, however, I am advised the fall is much deeper, about fifteen feet straight down, and that it would be impossible for fish to get up unless a fish way were built, or some blasting done. I am not asking for a large expenditure, but I do say a little blasting would make it possible for the fish to get up. But expensively to propagate fish, to wait for four years until they come back, and then to carry them up in a bucket, does seem a waste of public money. How many of a run could be taken up in that way? The sockeye salmon is a fairly large fish weighing ten or twelve pounds and in my view the government would be well advised to spend money preparing the falls so that the fish may get up in the natural way. Some preparation of that type would not cost any more than carrying the fish by hand, and the result would be that all the fish, rather than one per cent, would get up. The particular place I have in mind, one with which the minister's deputy is familiar, is Maggie lake.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): The only answer I can give is that we are experimenting to see if the stocking will be successful. If so we will make a fishway. I shall inquire, however, and see if something can be done.

Mr. NEILL: But while we are waiting for the grass to grow, the horse will die. It takes time to build a ladder, and while we are waiting for the building of it the run will be over.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I shall inquire; the vote before us will cover any expense necessary.

Mr. DUFF: Before the item carries I should like to apologize for being about a minute late when the committee reassembled at eight o'clock. I am told that item No. 17 under civil government passed without discussion. I presume I am out of order in speaking to it at this time, unless the committee will give its consent.

Mr. RHODES: Unanimous consent.

Mr. DUFF: I should like to ask the government when a Minister of Fisheries is going to be appointed. I am willing to admit that my good friend the Minister of Marine and acting Minister of Fisheries is a very capable minister of the crown, but there is no question that the Canadian fisheries, being a very important industry, require a minister of their own. Since my good friend the Minister of Finance was promoted to that responsible position, there has been no minister of fisheries. I should like to know if the minister or the government could tell the committee when a minister of fisheries is to be appointed. I suggest of course that the appointment should go to the maritime provinces. Further than that, I suggest it should be given to the province of Nova Scotia. While the Minister of Finance represents that province, and is a very estimable gentleman indeed, yet with his great responsibilities as Minister of Finance he cannot be expected to look after the fisheries. I should like to know what the government is contemplating in this connection.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, with his knowledge of parliamentary practice, will appreciate at once that any answer to his question could be given only by the Prime Minister, whose prerogative it is to select the members of his administration. The only answer I can give is to say that upon the Prime Minister's return I shall direct his attention to the remarks of the hon. member.

Mr. DUFF: Everybody knows that politically I am not a very good friend of the Prime Minister, but I must take issue with the Minister of Finance when he throws responsibility for the present vacancy in the Department of Fisheries on the shoulders of my good friend the Prime Minister. A short time ago the Minister of Marine was asked with regard to the appointment of a deputy minister of marine. On that occasion he, too, passed the buck very nicely, stating that he could not give any information to the house with regard to the appointment of a deputy minister of marine, because it was a matter purely within the control of the Prime Minister. Of course it is quite possible that in the final analysis the Prime Miinster has to sign his name on the dotted line, whether the appointment be that of a minister or of a deputy minister. I understand that the Prime Minister has the entree to His Excellency the Governor General, and I presume that when an appointment is made of so important a character as that of Minister of Fisheries, His Excellency will see only the Prime Minister. Nevertheless other ministers of the crown have certain responsibilities in regard to this important vacancy. Again I say that the fisheries of this country is a very important matter, not only to the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast but also to the district of the great lakes. I say it is not fair to the people interested in that great industry that this post should be vacant for such a long time. I see just coming to his seat my good friend the minister without portfolio from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Macdonald). He is a member of this government, without portfolio it is true; but if in the wisdom of the government someone should recommend that that hon. member be appointed as minister with portfolio, as far as I am concerned I should be very glad to say amen to that appointment. But surely the present situation is not fair to the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) who has grave responsibilities regarding his own department; for he has the Gibb report on his hands—such a weighty matter that he cannot decide what to do with it this session and it is to be held over. Looking at him now one can see that he has a number of responsibilities. He also has had to put over the shipping bill; he has so many other matters that he cannot deal with it this session. Why should this minister be loaded up with another department which needs the attention of a man with special qualifications to look after this great industry, one of the foremost we have, an industry which has never cost the country very much, and which is always bringing new money to the country. I say that this government should decide immediately to appoint a minister of fisheries. I do not want to embarrass any more of my hon. friends on the other side, but may I say this—and I am glad the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) is not here: if the Minister of Finance will take my advice, if he does not want to relieve the present minister without portfolio from Prince Edward Island of his present position, then I say he has in the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis a man well qualified for the office of Minister of Fisheries. I strongly recommend that something be done to fill this position, which has been vacant since my hon. friend the Minister of Finance was elevated to the exalted position he now occupies.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $75,000.

Mr. DUFF: I notice the amount has been reduced $61,000—practically cut in two. Will the acting minister be good enough to explain why this service to this important industry is reduced some fifty per cent?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The reason for the large decrease in this appropriation is that the cost of certain services provided for is working out at much less than was expected. For the year just closed the total expenditure will slightly exceed $80,000 and certain costs can be further reduced. Provision was made last year for an expenditure of $40,000 in the campaign undertaken for expanding the demand for fish in Canada. With the cooperation of the Canadian Fisheries Association this work is being done with satisfaction to the industry and on a very economical basis. The cost for the past year was approximately $13,000 and it is not expected to exceed $12,000 this year.

Provision was made for assisting fishermen's bait associations in establishing bait freezers to the extent of $30,000. No freezers were built last year, but an expenditure of $1,278 was incurred in meeting the requirements at Canso, and $504 in paying a portion of subsidy of a freezer built the year before. It is not anticipated that more than $1,500 will be needed this year. It is expected that the Nova boats will not be needed for as long a period this year, and that there will be less expenditure on that account by about $5,000. It was estimated that $15,000 would be needed for educational work, but the cost was about $11,000. It is expected that $12,000 will be needed this year. Scallop investigations cost $2,000 less than was expected. These account for $66,000, and the remaining $9,000 is made up of several small items which appear in the statements I have here. The anticipated expenditure is:

Nova boats	$ 35,000
Port service	1,500
Bait freezers	1,500
Expanding demand for fish	12,000
Fisheries exhibits	3,000
Educational work amongst fishermen	12,000
Scallop investigation	6,000
Miscellaneous	4,000
	$ 75,000

Mr. NEILL: I failed to catch whether any considerable, or in fact any part of that sum was to be spent on the Pacific coast. Would the minister kindly indicate how much of that $75,000 is allocated to the Pacific coast?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are no special allocations for different parts of the country. The vote is for the whole fisheries of Canada.

Mr. NEILL: As a matter of plain English, it is all to be spent in the east, isn't it?

Mr. DUFF: Would the minister be good enough to tell me whether in addition to the subsidy paid to what he terms the Nova boats, which are chartered to carry lobsters to Boston, any other boats received a subsidy?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There was a small subsidy paid to another one for a certain number of days last year when there was a rush.

Mr. DUFF: What name?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Isle Madame.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I would like to have an answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) as to whether any of this vote is to be spent on the Pacific coast or whether it is all for the Atlantic coast.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is no doubt that the expenditure for expanding the demand for fish covers the whole of Canada. The work has been carried on from ocean to ocean. And if there are other urgent demands on the western coast the vote is not especially for the east, it is for the whole of Canada.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Would it be possible to have at least what was spent out of this vote on the Pacific coast last year, and what was done there?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not the exact figure, but I know that Mrs. Spencer was on the Pacific coast for more than two months last winter, during January and February and part of March.

Mr. NEILL: But even she would not account for $75,000. The minister has practically admitted that almost all this money was spent in the east, and I am not grudging it; if it was needed there it should have been spent there. That brings me to the consideration of another feature, however, and I am sorry my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis is not here to-night; I know he would support me.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There was no admission of the kind made by the minister.

Mr. NEILL: It was a tacit admission. I did not expect the minister to say it in so many words; that would be expecting too much of human nature. This brings me to the consideration of an item in connection with which I have made an annual protest for some years. I hope perhaps this will be the last time I will have to bring it up because I have a premonition, which other people might call a hunch, that my protest will prevail this time. I refer to the allocation, or the lack of allocation, of the $160,000 granted annually for fisheries bounties. On this occasion I am more confident of success, though I always have had justice, equity and law on my side. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis and the hon. member for Cape Breton South always have given me their moral sympathy and admitted I was right, but they have always insisted that because they have had this graft in the past they should continue to have it. No doubt this is the result of some lingering aura of old Scotland hanging around the fog-bound coast of Nova Scotia. This year, however, I have a higher authority to call to my support; I refer to the minister himself. On February 27 the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough asked the acting Minister of Fisheries with regard to the fishing bounties, and on that occasion I spoke as follows:

> Has the minister considered giving British Columbia and the Pacific coast its share of that fund?
>
> Mr. Duranleau: The money will be divided according to the statute.

That is all I ever asked, that the money should be allocated according to the statute. In years gone by I have found that if you go to a French speaking cabinet minister and get him to promise something, his word is good; forever sacred remains the word of a French speaking minister. In the case of an English speaking minister I have sometimes found it desirable to call around a few days later to see if he had forgotten about it.

I need not go over the whole question again; the minister and his deputy have all the records before them. This money is voted under a special act, not connected with something else that happened four years before. The act was passed in 1882, if I remember rightly, simply directing that out of the consolidated revenues of Canada the sum of $160,000 should be taken yearly and devoted to the stimulation of the fisheries of Canada. I claim that we are a part of Canada, but we have been neglected, ignored and robbed of our share from 1882 until the present day. I do not wonder that the hon. members to whom I referred are not here tonight. They cannot defend this action; it is indefensible. The Minister of Finance made a stab at it one day, but he could not get away with it. They say that this refers to a transaction under which the United States paid a large sum of money into the consolidated revenue fund of Canada in return for allowing certain fishing privileges to the fishermen of the United States. We are told that when the United States paid that amount the Canadian people surrendered a portion of their privileges, and that was a portion of my privileges as well as the privileges of the people of Nova Scotia. In any case, Mr. Chairman, the money was paid into the consolidated revenue fund, and there it lost its identity. Several years later, for reasons with which I am not acquainted and with which I am not concerned, the government of Canada decided to vote out of the consolidated revenue fund the sum of $160,000 yearly for the improvement of the fishing industry of Canada. In those days we did not ask our share because we did not have very much in the way of fisheries, but we are here now clamouring for what is rightfully ours. We do not want to go back into the sad past, but we want our share in the future.

If any further reason need be given I will only refer to the way the money is being frittered away now. The Minister of Finance needs money and does not know which way to turn, but here is $160,000 being frittered away in little dabs here and there. One man gets $6.80; another man gets $5.80 and another man $1 a ton on his boat, all for the support and stimulation of the fishing industry. If the money was spent in a reasonable way we would still have a claim to our share. That famous Duncan report particularly said that this method of distributing the money was unfair and useless, and that this was a waste of public money.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Do I understand that my hon. friend's views are that these bounties should not be given?

Mr. NEILL: No, I am not adverse to the spending of the money in a proper manner in order really to stimulate the industry, but I think in whatever way it is spent it should be divided equally between the Pacific and the Atlantic.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But if it is money wasted on the east coast—

Mr. NEILL: I would not say it was wasted, but we seem to be getting very little for it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —would it not be wasted also on the west coast?

Mr. NEILL: I do not understand how giving a man $5.80 is going to stimulate his interest in the fishing industry. That is what is given each man who goes out in a boat, and that is supposed to stimulate the deep sea fisheries of Canada. I do not know what goes on down there but I do not see how this is calculated to promote the object in view.

Mr. DUFF: I do not want to get into a controversy with my good friend from Comox-Alberni, but evidently he is not acquainted with the facts concerning this vote for bounty purposes and the history surrounding it. In the first place the hon. member said this parliament voted $160,000 each year for bounty purposes. That is not correct; there is no amount voted by this parliament for bounty purposes each year. This is a statutory amount, just as the judges' salaries are statutory. Where does this money come from?

An hon. MEMBER: God knows.

Mr. DUFF: God does know, and I am going to tell the committee. This money does not come from the taxpayers of this country; it was paid by the United States in return for certain privileges they obtained along the Atlantic coast. It has nothing at all to do with the Pacific coast. In 1870, if I remember correctly, a commission was appointed to investigate the fisheries of the Atlantic coast, in which the citizens of Canada, the United States and Newfoundland all had certain privileges. That commission decided that $5,000,000, if I remember correctly, should be paid by the United States in return for certain privileges, $4,000,000 coming to Canada and $1,000,000 going to Newfoundland. That $4,000,000 has been in the treasury of Canada ever since, and this $160,000, which is never voted by this parliament—

Sir EUGENE FISET: Are you sure of that?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. DUFF: Yes, I am quite sure it is not voted by parliament. The interest on that $4,000,000, at 4 per cent, is set aside because the fishermen of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Gaspé gave certain privileges to our neighbours to the south. It has nothing to do with the Pacific coast. Whether the fishermen of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island or Quebec received $5.80 or $6.80 is irrelevant. This money belongs not to the people of Canada but only to a certain number of them living in certain parts of the country, and so far as the people on the Pacific coast are concerned they have no right to it, nor is it any of their business how the money is spent. By an arrangement made fifty or sixty years ago it was decided that this money should be divided in two ways: first, by allowing the vessels $1 per ton up to 80 tons, and then by dividing the balance of the $160,000 among the fishermen engaged in the industry in the particular season. Some years they received $6.80 and other years, when there were more fishermen, $5.80 or $5.90. As regards British Columbia however they certainly have no more right to the money than I have to any money voted by the congress of the United States. I cannot understand why my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni should get up and claim that the fishermen of British Columbia or of the great lakes or the fishermen on lake Winnipeg ought to participate in this particular amount which was devoted to a specific purpose.

Mr. NEILL: I admit that the hon. member has done his best, but he has a very poor case to work on. He went back seventy or more years. The money obtained from the United States was I believe $5,000,000 and in 1878 it was placed in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. The hon. gentleman says that this money was provided as compensation to the fishermen of the maritimes for giving up certain privileges. It was not; it was to provide compensation for the fishermen of Canada. Does he mean to say that if I had gone there in 1882 I should not have been allowed to fish? Of course it would have been my privilege to fish there as it was the privilege of any Canadian. He says we did not vote this money. Well, that is merely a play on words; we voted it in a lump sum in 1882, when the act was passed. The hon. member says it was placed in the consolidated revenue fund in 1878. The hon. gentleman evidently hopes that it is floating around in the consolidated fund to-day. If he can find it there I will give him an equal amount.

Mr. DUFF: Have you got it.

Mr. NEILL: It was placed in the consolidated revenue fund and it went the way of all consolidated revenue funds. Four years passed and possibly because an election was coming on, who shall say, the parliament of Canada passed what is known as chapter 74 of the revised statutes, the Deep Sea Fisheries Act, which provided that an annual grant—not a bonus but a grant—of $160,000 should be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund for the purpose indicated; but there was not a word, not a whisper, not a syllable of reference to the situation which the hon. gentleman has outlined. It was something quite independent of and apart from that. It was said that it was to be used in aid of the sea fisheries of Canada and for the improvement of the conditions of fishermen. What fishermen, pray, and where? The fishermen of Canada. And we, in British Columbia, are part of Canada. The hon. gentleman is inclined to forget that. If you will look at the law you will see that they have no right to the whole of the money as that law exists, and as a matter of fact we are deprived of our share simply in consequence of the regulations made by the minister. He could not possibly do it under the act, because the act is quite explicit; it must therefore be done by regulations which the minister is empowered to make. It is a well known principle of law that you can pass regulations only if they amplify the act; you cannot make regulations that constitute another act. But that is what the minister did from time to time; he made another act by his regulations. By means of those regulations he removed British Columbia from the operation of the act of 1882, and I say he has no power to do that. All that my friends from the maritimes can claim is this. They say, "What the member for Comox-Alberni says is true and legal, but it should not have been done." Possibly it should not have been done, but it was done, and they fall back now on the time-honoured argument that it has always been like this and what we have we will hold. But time does not justify a wrong. I ask the minister, in view of his pronouncement that he would distribute the money in accordance with the act, to take appropriate steps in this matter. Chapter 74 of the revised statutes provides that the money shall be for the benefit of the fishermen of Canada, and as the minister is a new man I should like to hear him say that he will live up to the promise he gave me, as indicated in Hansard of the day I have mentioned, and distribute the money in accordance with the act.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni says that the act which he has cited provided that the money should be devoted to the fishermen of Canada. What else could it say? It could not pick out one province and declare that the money should be for that province. In these estimates there is $300,000 for fish culture and I have no hesitation in saying that seventy-five per cent of that sum is spent in British Columbia, ostensibly for the benefit of the fisheries of Canada. We are not complaining about that; because $225,000 of that $300,000 is spent in British Columbia we are making no complaint, nor should my hon. friend, because of the act which he has referred to, argue that this money was intended for the fisheries of the dominion at large. It could mean any particular part of Canada. Take another illustration. When the Minister of Finance brought down his budget the other day it contained an item with regard to what is known as the stabilization fund, and when inquiry was made as to what that item meant with regard to the fisheries it was shown that practically the only part of Canada that would benefit to the extent of hundreds of thousands was British Columbia. Did my hon. friend from Victoria-Carleton or my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis object to it? No. Yet my hon. friend now brings forward an act passed fifty years ago to bolster up an argument that cannot hold water. He says that this money provided for the maritimes should also be given in part to British Columbia.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. NEILL: May we hear from the minister.

Mr. DUFF: Carried.

Mr. NEILL: No. If we are not going to hear from the minister I take it that his silence is assent to my argument. He has seen the virtue of my argument, and that being settled I will pass on to something else. This item deals with the conservation of fish, and I have had a number of complaints in regard to what is considered the rather too common habit of dumping fish. We know we spend enormous sums of money, running into millions of dollars, for the preservation and conservation of fish. I have letters here, from one of which I will quote:

> In connection with the dumping of edible salmon back into the water, we wish to draw your attention to such a condition in this district.
>
> In this district a cannery wanting cohoe for canning has been sending out boats with instructions to bring in only cohoe and a limited number of bright chums, with the natural result that hundreds of salmon have been caught, picked over, and then the poorer ones turned back into the water where they will die as they cannot survive the handling. In one case we know of several hundred chums being thrown away because it did not suit the convenience of the company to handle them though they were prime fish.

On another occasion, it is alleged, twelve thousand fish were dumped overboard by one cannery. There does not seem to be any provision in the act or in the regulations to guard against such a thing. I have a letter from the department in which it is stated that the practice cannot be stopped. The letter reads in part as follows:

> If salmon caught in conformity with the regulations do happen to be dumped, the occurrence, however regrettable from the standpoint of wastage, does not contravene such conservation regulations.

It may not contravene the regulations but I contend that a man who proposes to dump ten or twelve thousand salmon should be forced to notify the fisheries officials and obtain their consent. Although it would not be in conformity with the act, it might be possible that arrangements could be made so that the fish could be disposed of to a reduction plant and thereby not be a total loss. If my suggestion were carried out the officials would be advised as to the amount of dumping and if a certain individual or cannery was dumping too many fish, discrimination could be carried out in the matter of granting them licences. Until I notified the department they had not the slightest idea that this practice was being carried on. I submit that there should be some attempt made to keep a check upon this dumping. If sufficient publicity were given, the practice would be discontinued because these men would not care to have their names appear too often upon a blacklist. If they did persist in the practice, they could be penalized when licences were being granted.

While I am on my feet I should like to refer to another matter. Last fall I applied to the department for permission for the unemployed of Courtenay to take pinks out of the river. This is a second-class fish which was selling at two cents apiece at that time, but my request was turned down. I was told that the guardians would have sufficient common sense not to interfere with anyone taking fish for food. That is all very well, but these junior men feel that they must live up to their instructions. The result was that the poor of the town of Courtenay were not able to go out and jig a few fish for their own use. The amount they would have taken would not have been a fleabite as far as conservation was concerned. We all know how sensitive people are when they are down and out and forced to rely on relief. These men who were not permitted to go out and catch a few fish for their own use heard of this dumping of nine or ten thousand fish. Such things make for discontent. I suggest that the department should endeavour to keep itself informed on these matters and see that a close check is kept.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I will take note of the suggestion my hon. friend has made and if it is necessary to adopt more strict regulations, they will be adopted.

Item agreed to.

Fish culture, $300,000.

Mr. NEILL: Why is the west coast of Vancouver island not getting some Atlantic salmon? The experts say that the lakes and creeks of the west coast of Vancouver island cannot be surpassed for the propagation of Atlantic salmon. In these hard times I was quite prepared to be told that our day would come, but I was rather surprised to see in one of the bulletins issued by the department that Atlantic salmon eggs have been shipped to the state of California. Are not the waters of Abana and Pharpar greater than the muddy waters of the Jordan? Are not the waters of the west coast of Vancouver island as important as those of the state of California? I know the argument will be used that these eggs were sent on an exchange basis, that we received from the state of California a certain quantity of steelheads, but it must be remembered that steelheads are almost of no commercial use. They are nothing more or less than a sport trout and the commercial use of the fish would not be more than one per cent of the total catch. If we had Atlantic salmon on the west coast of the island we could develop a considerable tourist trade. We have lost the advantage of liquor, but we still have our scenery and climate, and Atlantic salmon would bring people from all over the world. I think we should come before the state of California and I should like to know why it was thought advisable to ship eggs to that state when the west coast of the island could not be supplied.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told by my officials that we have been sending Atlantic salmon to the Pacific coast for years but it has not proved successful.

Mr. NEILL: I am referring to the west coast of Vancouver island. They may have sent some to the Pacific coast, but not to the west coast of Vancouver island. I am reminded of a shipment of lobsters which was sent out to the west coast many years ago. For twenty years afterwards the argument was used that the propagation of lobsters had not proved successful, but it was proved that they had forgotten to untie the legs of the lobsters before putting them into the water. Even though nature furnishes an ideal setting, when man comes along and does a thing like that, there is only one result to be expected. We have ideal piscatorial conditions on the west coast of the island and I guarantee that if Atlantic salmon are sent out they will prove to be just as successful as they are in the state of California.

Item agreed to.

Oyster culture, $13,000.

Mr. MacLEAN: What progress has been made wth this oyster culture?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This work is being confined mainly to the Malpeque bay area.

Mr. MacLEAN: I know that it is being confined to that area but I am sorry to say that the situation there is not just as we would like to see it. The fishermen feel that this vote should be spent in developing areas for public fishing, while the department seems to be of the opinion that it is better to lease these areas to private individuals for development. Did the minister not receive a petition signed by some two or three hundred fishermen protesting against the leasing of these areas?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Protests were received.

Mr. MacLEAN: Did the minister give any consideration to the request of the fishermen?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The agreement was entered into by the late government in order to establish a very large industry there. This agreement contemplated the development of the oyster industry by encouraging oyster farming on areas that would be leased for long terms so as to enable the lessees to develop their holdings. Section 5 of the agreement specifically provides that the government of Canada shall have the power of control and administration not only over the live oyster beds but over all areas that are suitable for that purpose and it expressly states that the government of Canada shall take such means as are deemed proper and advisable for the development and improvement of the growth and culture of oysters and other molluscs in the said areas. Following upon this agreement it was decided that before encouraging anyone to go into oyster farming, the department would make an investigation to ascertain the methods by which success would be achieved. This investigation took three years and immediately thereafter the contemplated method of encouraging oyster farming was launched.

Mr. MacLEAN: Is the minister of the opinion that the department is on the right track in leasing those areas? Does he not think he is treading on very dangerous ground? The moment he takes any public fishing area away from the public fishermen and gives it to private individuals, does he not think he is immediately courting trouble for his department and is dealing unfairly with the public fishermen?

Mr. DURANLEAU: What the hon. member suggests has not been done by the department.

Mr. MacLEAN: Does the minister mean to say that no public areas have been leased?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No public producing areas have been leased.

Mr. MacLEAN: I can hardly agree with the minister in that regard because the leasing has been done in areas where the oysters are showing signs of coming back. If those areas are not now producing in large and paying quantities, what we hoped was that with the government's cooperation with nature on the oyster areas, the beds would be brought back for public fishing. I am placed in a very difficult position in connection with this matter because a division of opinion exists and I have good friends on both sides. There are some who believe the leasing is all right and I understand they have taken out leases. There are many others who believe the oyster fisheries should be retained for the public fishermen, and any money expended should be spent with that aim in view, namely, to bring back the areas for the public fishermen. If you follow this question a little further, there are other oyster areas in the province. I see members from other counties of my province present. They have oyster areas in their counties and I do not think they would for a moment approve of the wholesale leasing of those areas. It would not be fair to them or to the fishermen of their constituencies for the department to do that.

The department may be quite honest and sincere in this matter, but I am sorry I cannot agree that the minister, through his department, is pursuing the right course in this regard. As I have stated, the moment you start handing over to private individuals the public fishing areas of any community, you are starting trouble. I do not know what the aim of the department is; perhaps it thinks the people who take out those leases will begin to develop the areas and the Department of Fisheries will not be obliged to spend the money it otherwise would. If that is the idea, it is false economy, because it will prove a source of trouble. It has been attempted before with disastrous results to the fishing industry and we feel sure the same thing will happen again. I do not wish to emphasize this too strongly, but I might inform the minister that very largely attended indignation meetings were held in that district last summer. Those meetings were attended by as many as 500 or 600 people and committees were formed which were authorized to act on behalf of the fishermen. They protested against the leasing; they sent petitions and protests to the department and still the latter continues to lease those areas. I would like to know from the minister whether he intends to proceed with the leasing of the areas notwithstanding the fact that those protests have been received from such a large body of the fishermen.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): One would think the hon. member for Prince, who lives alongside this area, would give the committee a fairer picture of conditions than he has done just now. He knows very well the areas about which he speaks are not producing; that areas which are producing are not being leased by the government; that the agreement under which those areas are being leased was made about five years ago by the previous government with the then government of Prince Edward Island and that this government is only carrying out regulations contained in that agreement. I have yet to learn that the hon. member protested at that time against the agreement made by the two governments of which he was a supporter, but now he comes forward with these objections. He also speaks about meetings having been held there, which I understand were largely engineered by himself for the purpose of embarrassing the department and the government.

Mr. MacLEAN: I have every respect for my hon. friend, but I would ask him to withdraw that statement because it is not correct.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): If my hon. friend says that it is not correct, I shall withdraw it. The main point, however, is this: the areas to which he refers and which are being leased are not and would not be made productive, certainly not in our time, if some person did not lease, cultivate and make them productive. Therefore in those sections where the effort is being made it is for the good of the industry, to revive and keep alive something which would otherwise not have been revived.

Mr. MacLEAN: Replying to the hon. member for Kings, I did not wish to introduce a political viewpoint into this discussion. As I stated at the beginning, as many of my political friends are in favour of leasing as are against it. He refers to the agreement which was entered into by the former government. May I tell the committee frankly that under the former government and through my own instrumentality, receiving assistance from scarcely anyone but the then Minister of Fisheries, we had an appropriation placed in the estimates in order to bring back the famous Malpeque oyster. It is well known the Malpeque oyster was the most famous oyster in the world and at present oysters are being sold on the markets in various cities as Malpeque oysters although they do not come from that section at all; they come from across the border. The chairman asks why Canadian oysters are not sold in the parliamentary restaurant. The reason they are not sold is that we are not producing them in quantities sufficient to supply the market.

We did ask the Dominion government to reestablish oyster areas. Away back some fifteen or twenty years ago oyster areas were under the control of the Dominion government. At that time the local government in Prince Edward island conceived the idea that if they had the oyster areas they could lease them to private individuals, and in that way bring great revenues to the province. The local government did take over those areas and began leasing them. The result was that oysters were brought into that area indiscriminately from the southern United States, and disease became apparent on the beds, wiping out the total oyster production in that great area. The beds lay dormant a number of years. The local government had not money to expend to bring them back to production. I was particularly interested because the area was in a district near my home. I am not ashamed to tell the committee that as a family of boys, my brothers and I made good money out of the oyster areas, and the farmers and fishermen of that community did the same thing, before the disease wiped out the industry. Then the Dominion government agreed to take over the oyster areas, and to expend money towards bringing them back to production. At this point I should like to take issue with the hon. member for Kings when he states that those areas were taken over with the idea of leasing them, because under section 9 of the agreement there is provision that before leasing is undertaken the department at Ottawa must obtain the approval of the provincial government at Charlottetown. When the Liberal party was in power here the provincial government in Charlottetown never gave its consent to leasing, nor was any policy of leasing decided upon. If the former Minister of Fisheries were in his seat he could verify my statement, and the deputy minister can now verify it, that as a representative of the county in question, and the only one really interested in the matter, I never gave my consent to a policy of leasing. Further, leasing was never decided upon or announced as a policy of the department.

However, following a change of government in Prince Edward Island and another change here the policy of leasing was decided upon. The federal department consulted the provincial government. Advertisements for leases were inserted in newspapers and the leasing of the areas was proceeded with. The hon. member for Kings states that no public areas which were producing were leased. I ask him on what authority he makes that statement. I have been in close touch with the fishermen, and I am told that the public areas now beginning to produce are being leased. They have made similar representations to the department. Therefore before any further leases are issued I suggest very careful consideration should be given the matter. There are oyster areas in other rivers and bays. Why should Prince county be picked out and the areas leased, thereby taking away from the fishermen the public rights afforded fishermen in other counties? If there is to be one policy for one part of the province and another for another, well and good. I say however that such procedure would be quite unfair.

I do not wish to make this a political issue in any way, but I believe it is my duty in this committee to defend the rights of the public fishermen, and that the money being expended by the government should be spent in the interests of public fishermen. The hon. member for Kings states that the public areas cannot be brought back to production by the department, but that they can be brought back by private owners. I should like to know why that is so. Oysters for seed purposes can be obtained only from restricted areas where the beds show life and are now producing. The government could take the oysters off the restricted areas which have been set aside for breeding purposes, clean the areas, and protect them properly, as well as private owners can. To say that private owners can bring back areas and that the department cannot, is begging the question, because one has as good a chance to do so as has the other.

The minister should give this matter his personal and careful attention; it is a matter much too serious to be trifled with. As the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough has said, one day we have one Minister of Fisheries and the next day we have another. Despite the fact that they are good men, they are busy with other work and are not giving the attention to the fishing industry that it merits. The deputy minister is doing his best, but he is nailed down to his desk, and receives very little assistance. Important matters are left to drift, and they are not given the careful consideration they should receive. I wonder if any hon. member in the house would submit to the leasing to private individuals of public fishing rights in the rivers and bays of his constituency? I venture to say there is no man in the house who would support any such policy.

No doubt I shall receive a great deal of criticism from some of my personal friends. I feel it my duty, however, to defend the rights of those public fishermen who are not here to speak for themselves.

Mr. PRICE: As I understand the matter, only non-productive beds are being leased at the present time. I believe there has been no interference with private beds. Not one man out of fifty can make a success out of barren beds. It has been tried in my constituency; men with money have spent thousands of dollars in an endeavour to make non-productive beds productive, and in every instance they have failed. This vote of $13,000 is for the culture and protection of oyster beds. I believe the department is trying to do something to advance the oyster industry. The experience in the past has been that only those beds which have been privately owned have been successful, so far as production is concerned. In the county of Kent the Barnes Company some years ago were given a lease of certain beds, of which they have made a success. Outside of that, the beds open to the general public are much abused. I believe the department is taking steps to improve that condition, and also to improve oyster culture. I have no doubt it is endeavouring to do its best, and I suggest this small vote of $13,000 should receive the approval of the committee.

Mr. MYERS: In my view the hon. member for Prince county has not given the committee a fair picture of the circumstances. We have been led to believe by the hon. member that the rights of public fishermen on public beds are being interfered with. This is not the case as I understand it. The public beds are very extensive in the bay referred to, and they are still available to the fishermen at large. And the Department of Fisheries has been for a number of years carrying on extensive and useful work there in clearing up the bottoms that formerly were productive but for a number of years have been non-productive by reason of that disease. The department has been sweeping, dragging, dredging and cleaning up these bottoms in the interests of the fishermen at large, and has been very successful in bringing back the fishing on those public beds. The bottom that is being leased is bottom that is not known as public fishing beds. It is non-producing, barren bottom and does not form part, as I understand it, of the public fishing ground of the oyster fishermen on that bay. It is being leased for the purpose of producing oysters in areas that did not produce oysters before. The former premier of Prince Edward Island, Hon. Mr. Lea, on October 26 of last year, before the maritime board of trade in the city of Charlottetown, went into this question fully. He reviewed the action that had been taken by the former government in Ottawa, and the government over which he presided as premier of Prince Edward Island; he referred to what was being done and said that it was in the best interests of the fishermen at large.

The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) says that as far as he is concerned he has never yet given his open consent to the leasing of these bottoms. I know the hon. member for Prince county fairly well, and sometimes the idea occurs to me that he is more interested in fishing for votes than in fishing for oysters.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MYERS: If that is out of order I withdraw it, but it is said anyhow. The hon. member has a faculty of always withholding his consent to anything and everything, and then when the government finally takes action, if he can just get a little sympathy from some fisherman or farmer or anybody, he is quite willing to take the opposite side to that which the government has taken and try to curry favour with a few of his constituents. That has been his record in politics since I knew him first.

[Mr. Price.]

Mr. DUFF: "Speak for yourself, John."

Mr. MYERS: Never you mind. If I were the hon. member for Prince county I would be more than proud to stand up and back the Department of Fisheries for the noble efforts they are making on behalf of his constituents and his county to restore that important industry, and I would do anything and everything I could to strengthen the hands of the department. I will say that if the hon. member does not appreciate that $13,000 that we are voting, that is being spent almost entirely in Prince county, then we will make a recommendation to the Department of Fisheries that for the time being we give Prince county the go-by, for we are mighty willing to spend it in Kings and Queens.

Mr. MacLEAN: I think my good friend from Queens is measuring other people's corn in his own half bushel. I am not quite as smooth as my hon. friend is and not so able to fish for votes as he is. I wish to tell my hon. friend in the first place that we are not objecting to the spending of this money.

Mr. MYERS: What are you objecting to?

Mr. MacLEAN: We are objecting to the leasing of the areas. My good friend is an inland farmer, and I would tell him to stick to his potatoes and leave things alone that he doesn't know about.

Mr. MYERS: I do not know that you are much of a fisherman.

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend is not entitled to talk about the oyster industry in the county of Prince. He is a good-natured gentleman from an inland district, and we must pardon him if he has not a full grasp of the situation as it appears to us who are right on the ground and know. The difficulty is that these areas are being leased to people, whose farms front on the rivers and bays. Naturally the oysters are coming back in the heads of the rivers and bays, in shallow water near the shore. The deputy minister knows perfectly well that where the areas are being taken is not out in the big bays and rivers but along the shore fronts of the different people who reside along these fronts. These are the places where, the fishermen tell me, the oysters are coming back. Nothing would please me better than if under this private ownership a great industry could be built up, but my hon. friend from Queens knows very well that it was attempted before, and he knows that an industry that was worth millions of dollars to the province of Prince Edward Island was wiped out of existence through that policy. Why should we go blindly into the same trap again, just when the disease has run its course? Scientists told us at the time that this disease had been introduced from some unknown source and that it would likely run its course in seven or eight or ten years. They were right in that, because after it had killed out everything in the way of shellfish in those bays and rivers the oysters began to come back, and, as I have said, they are coming back at the heads of the rivers and bays. There is no one more interested in this than I am; I am willing to accept any good, constructive suggestions, but I do not want to be classed as one who is endeavouring to do an injury to the oyster industry or anyone interested in it. What I want is to bring the oyster industry back for the public fisherman, and I do not think that once the whole shore area right around the rivers and bays is leased there will be much chance for the public oyster fisherman to make a living.

I am not going to labour this any further; I leave it with the Acting Minister of Fisheries and his deputy. I think that in the interests of all concerned no more leases should be granted until the matter is looked into thoroughly. I would invite my hon. friend from Queens to come up there and meet the fishermen. I would invite him and his colleagues and the hon. member for Kings to go out there on the patrol boat and see the areas that have been leased, see the work that has been carried on, and if they will just give the word there will be a meeting called that will be attended by thousands of people so that they can get the viewpoint of the fishermen right on the ground.

Mr. MYERS: I do not wish to prolong the debate on this question. My hon. friend thinks that I do not know an oyster from a potato. That is hardly true. I happened to be a member of the local government in Prince Edward Island from 1912 to 1916 when the oyster areas were taken over from the federal government by the provincial government. They were taken over at that time for the express purpose of attempting to plant oysters on what was then barren bottom. At that time the active beds were producing oysters in great quantities and they were not interfered with in any way. In order to plant these bottoms and build up the industry, areas that were known to be barren were leased to fishermen mostly, and men who are known as farmer-fishermen—men who engage in both occupations—who are adjacent to the areas leased. For some reason or other small seed oysters were imported from the state of Rhode Island and planted on these barren bottoms. Shortly after that some disease visited these oyster beds. Some of the scientists—I do not know whether or not they are very great scientists—blamed that disease upon the imported oysters from Rhode Island, but I am not able to subscribe to that theory, though. I am not a scientist, I am a plain, ordinary inlander, as my hon. friend from Prince calls me, though my farm does touch the Northumberland straits. To my mind this is the question: If the disease was imported with those seed oysters from Rhode Island why were there any live oysters left there; why were they not dead of the disease before we brought them here? I want to tell the committee that around the shores of Prince Edward Island we have mussel mud beds from which we farmers dig mussel mud for fertilizer. These beds are known to be sixty feet deep in places, and to my mind that proves that these periodical waves of disease or epidemics have been going on since Adam went into long pants, and will continue as long as the sun rises and sets.

So I could never subscribe to the theory that the disease was imported from Rhode Island or anywhere else. It did happen, however, that a very valuable type of oyster, the Malpeque oyster, was wiped out, and we all regret that very much. Let me say, however—and I have this information from the Department of Fisheries—that all the oysters did not die; apparently some were immune to the disease and survived the epidemic. These are now restocking the beds, with the aid that is being given by the Department of Fisheries. It is the same old story; I am not a medical man, but I have been told that if a wave or epidemic of typhoid or diphtheria sweeps through a settlement people here and there will not contract that disease; apparently they are immune to it. This seems to have been the case with the oysters; a few survived the storm, and these beds are being restocked by these surviving oysters. As I said before the Department of Fisheries is making every effort, in aid of the fishermen at large, to restock the public beds, but it is the barren bottoms that are being leased to these fishermen and farmer fishermen in order to rebuild a great industry in Prince county.

Item agreed to.

To provide, subject to the approval of the governor in council, for a grant to the United Maritime Fishermen, $4,500.

Mr. NEILL: I should like some details in connection with this vote. Is $160,000 not enough for them; must they have another chunk? I think it was Solomon who said there were three things that were never satisfied, but if he had lived in these days I think he would have said four; he would have added the maritime appetites. I think it is a very excellent thing to stimulate cooperation among the fishermen, but why should it be limited to the Atlantic coast? It has been well said by someone that cooperation is only organized desperation, and it almost has to come to desperation before you can get certain people to cooperate, farmers and fishermen for example. We had a cooperative association in British Columbia, but partly through the fault of the management it went bankrupt. Possibly if we had been given some educational facilities such as are afforded under this vote that would not have happened. I should like to know what this money is voted for, if it is not to promote cooperation down there, and why it should be confined exclusively to the maritimes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The association mentioned in the item is the United Maritime Fishermen, which is an association formed with the object of enabling them to better their conditions by cooperation and other means.

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The association is proving to be of assistance in fisheries development. It enables the department to consult with the officials who represent the fishermen as a body. Through its efforts improvements in the handling and preparing of fish for market can be brought about more quickly. The association must depend on fees from the members to meet its expenses. Owing to the present depressed condition of the industry it seems impossible for the association to procure sufficient funds to enable it to function properly. Hence it applied to the department for aid; $4,500 was provided last year, and it is proposed to continue the grant this year.

Mr. NEILL: That is a very useful work, Mr. Chairman, but why can we not get the same thing? Will the minister guarantee that if we make application we will get similar favourable treatment?—because God knows we need it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Would my hon. friend suggest the name of any association similar to this?

Mr. NEILL: I could suggest the names of half a dozen. That is the trouble; we have too many associations. We want educational facilities to help bind them into one large union, and that is just what this money would be used for.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: Which one would you suggest?

Mr. NEILL: I would have one something like our C.C.F. friends, a holding association for them all, which could be worked up into one strong association. I am not here to advocate the claims of any one association, though I am a member of one. I certainly would not recommend one above the others, but if the money were available for real educational work I believe they could be brought together. For every one of the reasons given by the minister this would be of substantial value to the fishermen of the west coast. Will the minister give me some encouragement; will he say that he will consider such an application?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If the demand is made by a similar association it will be considered.

Mr. NEILL: Thank you. Just before we leave this vote I should like to refer to something I probably should have mentioned in connection with item 163. I notice that the department, with laudable enterprise, has been holding classes for the fishermen of the Atlantic coast. They have been attended by some thirty-five men and are appreciated so much that this year there was quite a rush to join. Many more fishermen applied for enrolment than could be admitted, and they had to limit the number. These fishermen's courses include instruction in such subjects as the preparation of dried, boneless and pickled fish, the coopering of barrels, navigation, motor engines and refrigeration, and there is also elementary instruction in chemistry, bacteriology and biology. I applied for our share of this, but I was told that the biological board did not think it was necessary, which was a very nice compliment since it implied at least that on the Pacific we did not need instruction. While I am proud to accept that compliment on behalf of our fishermen there, I do not think the men themselves would admit that they were beyond instruction or the need of information. I do submit that, if they do not receive anything out of that $160,000 grant made in the other vote, they might at least be given a share of this instructional vote. We are told that the fishermen on the Pacific coast do not want to learn anything about pickling cod. Quite so, but we want to know about pickling and smoking herring; we want to know how to put up to the best advantage the various fish we catch. Our fishermen would also appreciate some information in connection with motor engines, and some elementary instruction in the other subjects mentioned. I cannot see that the discrimination can be justified by putting us off with some compliment to the effect that we are so advanced as not to need instruction. That is not so. I do submit that these classes should be inaugurated on the Pacific coast as well as on the Atlantic. Our friend from Antigonish-Guysborough tells us that we were not in existence at one time so far as the fishing industry is concerned, that we are amateurs, that we have just come into the business. Well, isn't that all the more reason for our getting some instruction? Certainly. I submit that the fishermen on the Pacific coast, particularly those who are newcomers to the trade, should be encouraged to make the best of their facilities. The minister is taking steps to see that this is done on the Atlantic and it is unfair not to do the same thing on the Pacific.

Mr. DUFF: I do not quite understand the point of view of the hon. gentleman. If he would ask the department to increase the vote so that a certain amount might be spent in British Columbia I could see the force of his remarks. But he is trying to take the money voted for work on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. NEILL: No.

Mr. DUFF: He tried to get part of the $160,000 which the American government paid this country for purposes distinctly applicable to the maritimes, and now he objects to a vote of $4,500 to provide, subject to the approval of the governor in council, a grant to maritime fishermen. The difference between myself, representing a constituency in one of the Atlantic provinces, and the hon. gentleman from Comox-Alberni, is quite apparent. If you will glance at the estimates you will see that just before this $4,500 item was called we passed without discussion or criticism from maritime members a vote of $29,500 entirely for Pacific coast fisheries. We do not object to this government spending money on the Pacific coast; whatever is necessary for the development or the protection of the fisheries there, we as members from the maritime provinces will vote for it. But when the department thinks that it is in the interests of the fishermen that a small amount of $4,500 should be voted to encourage fishermen in the maritime provinces, it ill becomes the hon. member for Comox-Alberni to object. We are passing tens of thousands of dollars in the interests of British Columbia fishermen and I do not think he should object to a vote for the maritimes.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member has mistaken me; I was not trying to take his money away. I applauded the vote and said that it was for a useful purpose. I only want to extend it to the Pacific coast.

Mr. DUFF: That's different. Carried.

Mr. NEILL: No.

Mr. DUFF: Are you opposed to it?

Mr. NEILL: I want to have it extended. I wish the minister would give an expression of opinion.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not much to say except that it would be difficult at this time to increase this vote, especially when some of my friends on the other side are urging the government to cut down expenses. If the hon. gentleman is not asking for part of the vote which is being spent in the east it means that he wants an increase in it, double the vote, in order to provide a school on the Pacific coast. I am sorry that at the present time the government is not disposed to ask the house to vote any increase.

Mr. NEILL: But it could be taken out of the $160,000 for the conservation of the deep sea fisheries.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services, $1,022,000.

Mr. REID: I have already protested against an order in council passed on March 10 last allowing purse seine fishing at the mouth of the Fraser river, and I want now to reiterate that protest. First of all I wish to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that the committee on fisheries is not being given anything to do. The committee is struck every year and the names of the members are printed; yet important matters are put through by order in council without the committee on fisheries being given an opportunity to discuss them. This is all the more serious when we remember that this order in council was passed while the house was sitting. It may be argued that it is necessary to pass certain orders in council when the house is not in session, but I think it is something to be taken serious note of that when the house is in session matters affecting an industry should be put through without any reference whatever to the committee. When the house is sitting matters affecting any industry should go before the particular committee concerned. When the Minister of Agriculture had certain matters under consideration with regard to agriculture he referred them to the committee, and we should be treated in like manner with respect to the fisheries.

I wrote to the minister on February 8, protesting against the order in council I am now discussing, and I received an answer on the tenth. I wish to take issue with some of the statements made in that letter. For instance, it was said therein that the question would receive consideration, though as a matter of fact, at the time this letter was sent out, the order in council I believe had been passed. I do not think that is a fair way to treat any member especially when he writes protesting against something that affects twelve or fifteen hundred fishermen. At least it should have been pointed out that the order in council had been passed. I received the letter on the tenth saying that the matter would be given consideration, but as a matter of fact it had been put through by order in council and was later published in the Gazette. The letter also states that if these advanced fish could be caught before the Fraser river is reached their full value for canning would be safeguarded. I am informed that these salmon are caught by the average gill netter before they reach fresh water. For the information of the committee I would point out that one seine boat will do away with perhaps twenty or thirty individual fishermen. In these days when we are endeavouring to find work for the unemployed, and when that is almost impossible, I do not think that seines should be allowed to operate right in the mouth of the Fraser river and up to the international boundary. The average seine boat carries a net about twelve hundred feet long and eighty feet deep. It forms a sort of purse. They make a circle and the bottom is drawn, and they will pick up anything from one thousand to five thousand fish at a time. Another of the disastrous results of the operations of these seine boats is the fact that they break up the schools of fish. The fish previous to entering the Fraser river are in schools made up of thousands and thousands of fish and if these seine boats are allowed to swirl in with their purse sines they will break them up. It takes some time before the schools gather together again before making their way up the Fraser river to spawn. These seine boats will also catch some late-run sockeye. I have it on the authority of fishermen who are conversant with the river that the seine boats will catch two pink salmon to one sockeye. While it is intended that these boats will catch only pink salmon, the fact is that considerable sockeye will be caught as well. Protests have been made to the minister and to the department and indignation meetings have been held against this order in council. I have received many letters from individual fishermen, and I would like to quote one as follows:

> If they are allowed to use seines at the mouth of the river, it is goodbye fish on the Fraser. They are the most destructive means of fishing; they are floating traps, etc.

That is also the contention which was put forward when the deputy minister held his meeting in New Westminster. It is very unfortunate that this action should be taken at a time when a bill to do away with traps at the international boundary was being introduced into the legislature of Washington state. I have a newspaper report reading as follows:

> Abolition of Fish Traps is Proposed in Washington
>
> Olympia, Wash., Feb. 13.—Abolition of fish traps and seine nets in Washington waters, was asked to-day in a house bill introduced by Hugh Herrin of Pierre county. Seine and drag nets, fish traps and wheels would be prohibited in rivers and lakes, and in all Washington waters when used commercially, the bill provided.

It was very unfortunate that this order in council should have been passed at a time when a bill to abolish traps was being presented before the Washington state legislature. Seine traps are used in the state of Washington close to the international boundary and the argument is put forward that we should also allow the use of seines. Several canneries have also always advocated the use of traps. As I say, it is most unfortunate that this action should have been taken just at a time we were trying to get through a sockeye salmon treaty and when a bill was being introduced in Washington state to do away with traps and seines. Between 1,200 and 1,500 fishermen will be thrown out of employment if this order in council is continued in force. I appeal to the minister to cancel it right away. I know the argument will be used that we are after quality fish, that we want to be able to command the best markets in Great Britain, but if the minister will look up the figure he will find that the great percentage of the catch of pinks is not made in the Fraser river. The last time this matter was before the committee I sent a map across to the minister which showed that the seines which are being allowed to operate in the Fraser river would operate in shallow water. Under this order in council, the seiners will be permitted to fish where individual gill netters now operate. I have been over this area oftener than even the deputy minister and I know that the gill netters use the shallow waters and the waters of the gulf. If the seine boats are permitted to enter this area, the individual fishermen might just as well give up business entirely. I again repeat that this matter should have been referred to the fisheries committee so that full discussion could have been had in connection with the whole matter. More than fifteen hundred individuals will be affected and most of these fishermen are heads of families. The danger is that once these seine boats are allowed to operate, the cry will go up for the use of traps. The seine boats are practically floating traps and no gill net boat will be able to operate. These seine boats are powered and carry a crew of from four to seven. They use nets twelve hundred feet in length which form a purse eighty feet deep. When they get into a school of fish, they lift up the net and I have heard of instances where they have brought up from seven to eight thousand fish in one lift. Trouble is also caused by the breaking up of the schools. Once they are broken up it takes days for them to collect together again before making their way up the river to spawn. I ask the minister in all seriousness to reconsider this matter and have the order in council rescinded. When the matter was up before I asked him to send it to a committee and he said at that time he would consider my suggestion, but nothing further was done.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The day the letter was sent to my hon. friend this matter came up before the cabinet. It was considered from every angle and the cabinet finally came to the conclusion that the regulation should be adopted. The experts claim that this will not affect the fishermen of the Fraser river. The first reason is that when the fish come up the Fraser river they are not in good condition and would not be accepted to-day on the market. The second reason is that seining is restricted to an area largely south of the Fraser river waters in which practically no gill netting is conducted. The third reason is that the seine fishing is also restricted by the regulations to the period when the pink salmon and late run sockeye are moving in large quantities, that is from August 25 to September 30, and providing that in years when there is a large run of late sockeye, fishing may go on until the end of October. Fishing by gill netters will not be interfered with. They may fish as heretofore, but as previously pointed out, after the pink salmon or late-run sockeye reach the Fraser, very few of the fish taken will meet present canning requirements, and to the extent that the gill netters fish out in the gulf of Georgia, the catch will be as marketable as in the past. Hence, if seining were not allowed, the run of pinks and late sockeyes which are heavily fished in the United States would have to be permitted to supply largely our requirements on the Canadian side. It is estimated that a canned product having a value of from $500,000 to $1,000,000 is involved. The pack of pink salmon in the Fraser river and Puget sound for the past four years is as follows:

Year—	Fraser River Number of cases	Puget Sound Number of cases
1928..	2,881	5,816
1929..	158,290	727,748
1930..	30,754	3,712
1931..	21,534	705,580

This shows that the larger fishing is done at Puget sound. After our experts' explanation, we came to the conclusion that this regulation should be adopted and we are making a trial. We shall see how it works for a year and if it is advisable later on to amend the regulation, this will be done.

Mr. REID: But the department this year is departing from its oft-repeated policy which was to keep the seines down to as few as possible.

As regards the letter that I received on the tenth, it said that the department was considering the question. My complaint was that while I was told so in that letter, as a matter of fact the order in council had already been passed and I was not informed in the letter that the order in council had been passed. I should like to know who asked that seining be allowed in the gulf. If seining had been allowed close to the international boundary, it would have been bad enough, but not as bad as it is at present. If the minister will examine the map of which I sent him a copy and look at the area covered by the order in council, he will see that it practically blocks off the mouth of the Fraser river, and right to the waters where the gill net boats operate. It may be true, as he says, the Puget sound pack is high as compared with the Fraser river pack, but I would point out that the pack of pink salmon in the Fraser river was comparatively small as compared with the pack of pink salmon over the rest of British Columbia. The salmon caught further north in the Skeena and Naas rivers is caught in salt water and is I believe first-class fish and the pack in proportion to that of the Fraser river is very large. Why should the fishermen who are involved not be considered? I have here a letter from an association dealing with these conditions, part of which states:

> Under the circumstances why the department should even consider changing its oft repeated policy of eliminating seines wherever possible and permitting gill netting so as to employ more men in the industry is a puzzle to fishermen, for more than ever before should the stated policy now be adhered to. Seines, merely mobile, floating traps, "ride" the schools of salmon to utter extinction, while gill nets allow a good escapement to seed the spawning beds.

I do not know whether a copy of that was sent to the minister, but it is sent to me by the British Columbia Protective Fishermen's Association.

Another letter states:

Unfortunately, however, your letter arrived this morning and in this evening's Province is an item under Ottawa date saying that seining has been granted in the Gulf of Georgia during the period between August 25 and September 30 in odd-numbered years and between September 1 and September 30 in even-numbered years. Also they may seine for sockeye during the "big run" of late fish until October 31.

This simply means farewell to the medium and late runs of sockeye—

The fishermen say that not only will the seines catch pinks but the late-run sockeye will be interfered with.

—so far as the Fraser river fishermen are concerned. There are always sockeye mixed up with pinks, or humpbacks, as the fishermen call them, and the ratio is often three pinks to one sockeye.

It certainly is disheartening to see such a fine bunch of settlers on the Fraser river, who are manfully struggling to keep off the relief lists, sacrificed for the canners and seine boat owners——who, I believe, are the ones who asked that seining be allowed in the gulf of Georgia. I believe the minister as well as his deputy know the fishermen have long protested the use of seines. When the deputy minister was out on the coast last fall he attended three, if not four meetings and at two at least vigorous protests by the fishermen were made against seining. Why the department has now departed from its oft-repeated policy is something the fishermen and the rest of us cannot understand. In spite of all the minister says, I believe the order in council should not be put into effect; it should be rescinded, especially in times such as we are going through when it is impossible for men to obtain any kind of job. This is going to affect 1,200 or 1,500 fishermen. Surely the minister will agree with me that the men who are in the business, who have fishing boats, should know something about the matter and should receive first consideration. I ask the minister seriously: Who requested this and why could the matter not have been placed before the committee on fisheries? Why was that committee appointed, if not to discuss matters of this kind? Those are two pertinent questions I should like to ask the minister.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: The request for that regulation was made by the United Fishermen's Association composed of over 1,000 fishermen, and also by all the canners in order to increase business, because they contended that those fish when caught up the Fraser river were no good for the market and this was a loss to the fishermen and to the canners. There was no objection on the part of the Fraser river canners.

Mr. NEILL: The canners.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. REID: Is it not a fact that the United Fishermen's Association is composed mostly of seine boat owners?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Some; not all.

Mr. REID: Naturally they would advocate this. The fact that seine boat owners urge more latitude in seining is hardly an argument.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But the government has to look after the interests of all the fishermen.

Mr. REID: There are 1,500 fishermen involved in this, who are protesting against the use of seines.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But it was represented and proof was put before the government that it did not affect the 1,200 fishermen of whom my hon. friend speaks, because those are salt water fish and when they are up the Fraser river, they are of no value to the market and are a loss.

Mr. REID: Proof was placed before the deputy at the meeting held in New Westminster. Protestations were made before a full meeting; they have always protested seining in that gulf.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. member has asked why there was no meeting of the fisheries committee to study that regulation. Does the hon. member suggest that before any regulation is adopted it should go before that committee, and that we should wait until the house and committee are sitting before passing any regulations? The act gives power to the governor in council to pass regulations, and that power was exercised.

Mr. REID: To be fair, the minister should have added that the house was sitting at the time. We were here in the month of February when the order in council was passed. This is a matter of great importance, affecting 1,500 people. Protests were received by the minister and by many members of parliament, and it is of some importance. The minister should have referred the matter to the fisheries committee. Earlier in my remarks I pointed out that had the house not been in session there may have been some excuse for enforcing some minor regulation, but when we were in session a matter of such importance as this should have gone before that committee for discussion and consideration. In regard to the inspection of hay and straw the Minister of Agriculture was good enough to move that the matter be referred to the agriculture committee. The Acting Minister of Fisheries asks: Would you have referred this matter to a committee? My answer is that I certainly would have, and why not when the house was sitting?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I ask the hon. member not to be so insistent; let us have a trial for a year, so that we may see what will happen. There is a difference of opinion among the citizens of the Pacific coast; some share my hon. friend's views, and others are of a different opinion, namely that the regulation does not affect the fishermen of the Fraser river. Let us try out the regulation, and if later on it is felt that it is not favourable, and that the injury done to the fishermen of the north Fraser river is greater than the benefit received by other fishermen, the regulation can be changed. Let us try it out for a year.

Mr. REID: I have not expressed merely my own opinion, but that also of the British Columbia Fishermen's Protective Association. Their statement is to the effect that the regulation is certainly detrimental, and that it means good-bye to fishing on the Fraser river. There will be practically a trap in the mouth of the Fraser river. As I have pointed out, this regulation is but the thin end of the wedge. Cannery interests, and others, have advocated that we put traps along the international boundary, and use seines, as the Americans are doing. Our effort has been towards conservation of the fish, and if possible to get the Americans to stop trapping and seining. It so happens that this year a bill was presented in the legislature of the state of Washington asking for the abolition of traps and seines on the American side. In the debate on that bill I understand it was stated that Canada did not use traps or seines. Now, however, they will be able to say, "Well, Canada is using seines, and so we will continue their use."

I still press that the regulation should be held up. The British Columbia Fishermen's Protective Association did not make merely a wild guess when they stated that 1,500 fishermen would be affected.

Mr. NEILL: Of course it goes without saying that seiners would be in favour of the regulation. After an argument has been advanced against a certain policy it seems to me that the suggestion to let the matter rest for a year is a very poor one. It is not always well to do that. Sometimes irreparable damage is done in a year's time, and to say that the Fraser river fishermen will not be harmed is a burlesque on the facts.

There is one point I should like to add to those mentioned by the hon. member for New Westminster. The minister has stated that through the use of seines the fish will be fresher when caught. As to the habits of these fish, they are out in the open ocean, on their own; that is, they are not associated with other fish. As they draw nearer fresh water they do not go straight up the river, but hang around. I do not know whether or not some biological condition is responsible for their actions; I am simply stating what they do, not why they do it., After playing around for some time, they bunch; that is the time for which the seiner is waiting. He does not take them when they are loose, because that would not pay. The placing of the seine is an expensive and long operation, The seiner waits until the fish school; they are schooling about the time they are ready to go up the river. Sometimes they hang around for weeks. The gill netter can afford to catch them before they school. They go in and out ahead of the seiners, catching the fish when they are separated, and are certainly of better quality. In a year when there was a heavy run of water probably the fish would not linger, but in a dry season they linger a great deal. Fish caught in the gill nets would be probably of a better quality, because they are caught at an earlier period. It is a well known fact that it does not pay the seiner to set for fish which are not more or less schooled or bunched together.

The minister suggests that we should try the regulation for a year. Fishermen on the Fraser river have been operating for over thirty years. It is now proposed in these days of unemployment and distress to do something which certainly will affect their livelihood. The business would be placed in the hands of a few seine boats employing half a dozen men each. Every seine boat would put at least twenty gill netters out of occupation. It will put them out of other fishing, because this is only a sort of fill in. If they lose at that time they are liable to lose their livelihood altogether.

I wish now to revert to the notorious order in council No. 206 passed on February 3, providing that salmon could not be inspected and get a certificate unless they had been landed on the wharf where they were canned within twenty-four hours after being caught, unless being gutted and iced. On April 4, I brought the matter to the attention of the minister, stating that the British Columbia legislature had unanimously passed a resolution against this order in council. Upon that occasion I asked him what he purposed doing. His reply was that he would check up on the accuracy of the report—a poor compliment to me—and then would take the matter into very serious consideration.

From the votes and proceedings of March 29, of the legislative assembly of the province of British Columbia I read the following:

Half-past eight o'clock p.m.

The house resumed the adjourned debate on the motion moved by Mr. Loutet on March 21—

Eight days before.

—as follows:

That this legislature goes on record as being emphatically opposed to the order in council P.C. 206 passed on February 3, 1933, by the government of Canada, regarding the delivery of salmon at a cannery within twenty-four hours after being caught.

The debate continued.

Motion agreed to.

A week elapsed between the introduction of the motion and its adoption. Further debate ensued after which the motion was unanimously agreed to. In the light of the information which he has received I ask the minister now what his decision is. The document I have read is authentic; can the minister tell me whether or not he will revise his opinion, or what his decision will be?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I inquired this morning from the officials of my department; I find we had not as yet received any reply from the government of British Columbia on this question. No decision has been arrived at.

Mr. NEILL: I do not think the chances of ever receiving a reply are good. The government of British Columbia is in a state of flux at present, liable to dissolve into its constituent molecules at any moment. If on the fourth of April the minister was advised, as he was, it would not have taken him long to send a wire to the premier or provincial secretary asking about the passing of this resolution, which was passed on March 29. I think it was up to the minister to carry out his pledge that he was going to check it up, before now. Here at least it is the actual official report, the votes and proceedings of British Columbia. That has been in my possession for weeks; the motion was passed on the 29th of March, nearly a month ago. The session is wearing to its end; this is the last occasion to debate it, and still he says he is waiting for the premier of British Columbia to get around to expressing an opinion. What opinion does he need? The legislature passed it; fifty premiers cannot gainsay that. He did not oppose it; he had a huge majority, and we must presume that that is the reasoned decision of the legislature of British Columbia. I am sorry the minister has not got a definite statement; I must assume, I suppose, that he does not intend to change his decision.

I want to take this opportunity, while protesting against the lack of action, to refer to a meeting of the board of trade in Vancouver a few days ago. The record of it appears in the newspaper in big headlines three-eighths of an inch high, reading:

Reds blamed by Salmon Canners.
Objection to Twenty-four Hour Packing Order Charged to Communists.

It is popular nowadays to charge everything to the communists. I think we as public men ought to give a lead and cut out this nonsense—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. NEILL: —that everyone who disagrees with us is a red or a bolshevik. The bolshevik phase is passing; we now call them reds. Here is a whole column of the views of a Mr. Richard Bell-Irving addressing the board of trade on that occasion. That was on the front page. What about the other side of the picture? Here is the other side, a little paragraph three inches long on the back page of a subsequent issue, and small headlines: "Denies Communists Prompted Protest. A man named Johnson, an executive of the fishermen's organization, says his organization is not communistic; it is affiliated with the trades and labour council; its membership consists of 1,200 fishermen of whom 300 are returned soldiers. Communistic principles are not entertained, and the body is merely endeavouring to improve fishing conditions." But that appeared on the back page in small print. The popular idea goes out to the world, or to British Columbia, that the fishermen have been caught with the reds behind them spreading this propaganda.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Do I understand that the Vancouver board of trade approved of the regulations?

Mr. NEILL: I would give them credit for more sense. This was an address given by Mr. Bell-Irving, and it is not on record that any action was taken. He was speaking at a luncheon of the foreign trade bureau of the board. As to whether the board of trade of Vancouver ever took any official action, they may have, but I do not know.

I quote again from this article:

> Objections . . . were inspired by printed handbills distributed early in March by communists. The measure meets with approval of all "practical fishermen."

In those few words there are two deliberate falsehoods. The measure is not approved by all practical fishermen, and the objections to it were not inspired by printed hand bills distributed by communists early in March. I spoke in this house on the 21st of February, so the communists could not have inspired it by handbills early in March.

There was a reference in that same address of Mr. Bell-Irving to myself—a somewhat slimy reference; I will not bother the house denying it. It did not appear in the press; but it was taken down in writing, and he will be given an opportunity either to prove or to retract the statement. But I will not take the time of the house with my private troubles.

Then we come to another quotation about this meeting:

> Objections to the new regulations, Mr. Bell-Irving charged, did not come to the surface for a week or ten days, and were "inspired" by a few small operators whose single-cannery operations might be affected.

Note that. The regulations were printed in the Gazette of February 18—that was a Saturday—and I spoke on the subject the following Tuesday, the very first opportunity that presented itself; the statement that it did not come to the surface for a week or ten days is nonsense. He may have had privy knowledge of it before that, I do not deny it; because he was the instigator of the whole movement, but the general public knew nothing until the regulations were gazetted on the 18th of February. Then he says it is "inspired by a few small operators." It was said before to have been inspired by the reds, but now, in the same column, it is inspired "by a few small operators whose single cannery operations might be affected." Is there anything wrong in having a single cannery? Is the right of way in legislation and policy to be given only to those who control a dozen canneries? There is nothing improper about being only a single cannery operator; he has a perfect right to express his sentiment. It is rather funny, if he is an operator, that the operators should not all think alike in the matter, if it is as Mr. Bell-Irving says.

Then we find that Mr. Bell-Irving made a vigorous defence of the regulations providing that canned salmon can be given first grade certificates only if canned within twenty-four hours after the catch. That is a total misstatement; that is not the regulation, and no one knows it better than Mr. Bell-Irving. If it were that it would have quite a different aspect. The regulation is that it be landed at the cannery, where it is going to be canned heaven knows when, within twenty-four hours after being caught—a different proposition altogether. I have a letter in my possession from a cannery man who says he has known the fish to have been brought in in the evening and left on that hot floor—and it is a hot floor in the summer time in these little inlets where the sun beats down on a tin roof—from one evening until the following afternoon. Is that provided against in the regulations? No; it is only to compel them to bring it to the cannery wharf within twenty-four hours. That shows the insincerity of the thing.

Now let us go back to the reasons alleged for the objections made. Two contrary reasons are given—one that it is inspired by the reds, and the other that it is inspired by the single cannery owners. And they are classed both together as being unworthy of credit. What about the city councils? Why did three city councils unanimously pass a resolution against this order in council? And one was the city of Victoria, not noted to be red in its colouring. Boards of trade all over the lower province passed resolutions against it. Then we find a resolution introduced in the local house by Mr. Loutet, the able Conservative member for North Vancouver. Would you call him a red? We in British Columbia do not so regard him. Then again, what about passing it through the legislature? Are they red? They consist, if my memory is correct, of 48 members, 36 of whom are Conservative, 11 Liberal and 1 Labour. It is hardly a place one would expect to find red propaganda very successful. But the reds put it all over the legislature of British Columbia, it is suggested, and the other side was invited and expressed its views; the cannery men had a delegation. But the reds put it all over the legislature, or was it the men with the single cannery that did it? It is funny how it was unanimous.

But let me tell the minister this is the way to make reds. He says the reds distributed handbills. I know nothing of that. They may have done so; they may have taken advantage of the facts, but who brought the facts into existence? They may have taken advantage of the gross injustice perpetrated by order in council 206 to arouse and stimulate discontent. That is their job and their policy, though I think it is a poor one. They may have done that, but the blame must lie at the door of those who passed the legislation which made it possible for a red to appeal to the sense of injustice aroused among the fishermen and the single cannery owners. This question was not discussed at the meetings attended by the deputy minister; it was not discussed in our fisheries committee; it was put through by political pull. I do not hesitate at all to make that statement.

Let me outline what happened. There are three large cannery companies who claim to represent ninety per cent of the output of canned salmon in British Columbia. I do not for a moment certify to that statement in the light of the contradictions to which I have already referred, but certainly they do represent a large portion of the canning industry of British Columbia. They were out, as they have been for many years, to stop competition in canning and in buying salmon. That is their purpose, and this is the latest method they have adopted to put through their policy. Unfortunately I happen to hold some bonds of one of those companies, so I may be held to be disinterested when opposing them, but I doubt very much whether even from the point of view of the canneries themselves this is a wise policy; in fact I am sure it is not. My idea of the way to promote success in any industry, canning or anything else, is to have shrewd and careful management and very close cooperation with customers and employees, and those with whom you have to deal. That is not the way these cannery owners are going about it; they are trying to create depression, distress and ill-will among the fishermen whose cooperation is of the greatest value to them. Therefore I say I do not think this is a good policy even from their point of view; certainly they should not go about trying to put their competitors out of business by political means.

At any rate they decided to try to put this over. They did not say anything at the meetings called for that purpose in British Columbia, to which they were especially invited and which were attended by the deputy minister or the minister himself. Not a word was said about it until after the minister had gone home and peace had descended. We thought we knew the worst that could happen to us, but then a delegation came to Ottawa. On January 20 the department went on record that they did not know anything about the matter. I heard some rumours about it and I wrote the department, who replied that there was nothing of the kind contemplated or had been brought to the attention of the department. Then on February 3 the whole thing was cut and dried and the order in council signed. All hon. gentlemen know that it takes quite a while to get an order in council signed after it has been prepared, so it is easy to imagine the rush with which this was put through. My letter was dated January 20, and I do not know what interval elapsed after that before the order in council was prepared, but certainly it was put through in a very short time.

The other day the suggestion was made that this was not going to work out in the way I predicted, that it would not do away with competition in buying from the fishermen. We were told that there were lots of canneries, that there were ten or fifteen in every district. There are thirty-six subdistricts in British Columbia—I counted them the other day—and last year there were thirty-five canneries operating. In previous years there have been as many as seventy-five, but last year there were only thirty-five. Some of these subdistricts may not have a cannery at all while others may have two, but I know of no subdistrict in my territory that has more than two. You know how easy it is for two competitors to get together and make an arrangement.

Mr. STEVENS: But there are only three districts.

Mr. NEILL: There are only three districts having supervisors, but they are so big that you could not carry out this plan within their borders.

Mr. STEVENS: That was the reference to the number of canneries in a district, not what my hon. friend is seeking to suggest now.

Mr. NEILL: I was referring to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who said they were divided into subdistricts, and I was quoting the subdistricts. The three large districts about which the minister speaks now are so large that you could not carry out this twenty-four hour rule in any but district No. 1. Speaking on another subject, and indeed referring to this matter, the minister asked the other day why we should not try this out for a year, and then change it if it did not work out well. These identical words were used last year, Mr. Chairman, when the government introduced their system for the inspection of canned salmon. I took exception, not to the principle, which was admirable, but to the method, which I said was entirely unsatisfactory and would prove unworkable. The argument advanced then was, "Try it for a year, anyway, and see how it works." We did not need to wait for a year; it proved so utterly ineffective that it had to be changed on three different occasions, so that finally the regulations occupied five and a half times their original space. I am not going into that just now except to say that I am going to take the minister at his word. Speaking of these inspection regulations in April last the minister said, "Well, try it for a year." We did not even try it for a year. The regulations did not come into effect until June 1, and they could not possibly apply to the inspection of canned salmon until a couple of months later. On February 3, however, five months later, it was suddenly found that they were all wrong, that they were all wet, although they had been changed three times. It was found necessary to change not a clause or a detail of administration but the whole system. I have here a quotation from a Conservative newspaper in British Columbia, no doubt inspired by the cannery interests. Here they make a report on this inspection; they say that the system became operative last June, and only about a little over one per cent were found unfit for the certificate. That is a fine record. There were 968,500 cases of salmon examined, and 1·2 per cent were found unqualified for the first certificate. That looks as though the pack had been pretty good, doesn't it?

The figures testify plainly—

This is not my opinion; this is the cannery-inspired information appearing in the press.

—to the quality of the salmon which go into the cans in British Columbia and to the efficiency and care which is used in the cannery operations, for members of the inspection board are experts of long experience and established reputation in the salmon trade, and canned salmon, which they find worthy of certification must be of unquestionable quality.

I suppose that was not intended to help put over this twenty-four hour deal. Then the picture changed suddenly; between January 20 and February 3 it was found necessary not to amend the regulations but to upset them altogether. Previously these highly qualified men looked at the salmon and their duty, according to their instructions, was to pass it if it was good and to condemn it if it was bad. What is the position with this new-fangled idea? If it is bad they can condemn it but if it is good they cannot pass it. It may be as good as any salmon they ever saw in cans, but they cannot pass it unless they get some proof that the salmon were landed at the wharf where they were afterwards canned within twenty-four hours after being caught. How can they find that out? A cannery man may pack 60,000 or 70,000 cases; he may have two or three canneries. His pack will be assembled in Vancouver, since that is the shipping point, and he may have 10,000 or 20,000 cases inspected. The inspector may find the salmon quite all right; it may be firm, well packed and complying with the law in every respect, but he cannot give a certificate until he has proof that it was landed on the wharf within twenty-four hours after being caught. How can he get that proof? I directed that question to the department, and months after the regulation was in force I was told that the matter was still under consideration. Is the cannery man to give the certificate? Is he to take an oath about something in regard to which he cannot be informed? Is some agent to do it? Who is to take the oath? And if it is not an oath it is a joke. The cannery man can say, "I saw a fisherman come to my wharf with some fish, but I do not know how long they had been caught. He told me they had been caught so many hours but I did not swear him. To the best of my knowledge and belief they were caught within twenty-four hours of being landed." That is what he is likely to say, and he would be a fool if he did not say so. But without the expenditure of an enormous amount of money and having an inspector at every cannery it will be impossible to find out whether the fish had been caught within twenty-four hours or not. This declaration will be a blot on the record of the department, which during the last ten years has been trying to cooperate with the cannery men on the one hand and with the fishermen on the other. Nothing should be passed here unless it has been first discussed at meetings at which all parties interested can be represented. In the past the meetings of the deputy minister were open to everyone, cannery men, fishermen and the public. Everyone was welcome and anything that could not be discussed was regarded with suspicion. This declaration, I repeat, will remain a blot on the record of the department until it is removed. Before I sit down I want to ask this question. Has the department, or have the officers, so far developed or conceived any system by which it can be proved to the inspectors that fish have been caught as required within twenty-four hours of being landed at the wharf.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Our inspectors obtain from the canners a sworn declaration to the effect; they have to ascertain that the fish have been taken within twenty-four hours of being landed at the cannery. We are following a regulation similar to one which is in force in Scotland and is working quite satisfactorily there. I am afraid that my hon. friend did not understand me the other day when I told the house that I would await official confirmation of the resolution adopted by the house in British Columbia. I never questioned my hon. friend's statements, but I think it was fair for the government to await the confirmation of that resolution. I do not think however that even if that resolution were adopted it would alter the decision of the government in this matter. In my opinion my hon. friend, instead of helping the fishermen of the western coast, is injuring their business by his insistence in this regard. Our officials so far are of the opinion that the regulation adopted last year and reinforced by the one adopted this year will have the effect of enhancing the price of fish rather than reducing it.

Mr. NEILL: Who says that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Our officials. As a matter of fact I can tell my hon. friend that the price of fish has gone up for this season by reason of the very fact that we have strict regulations which will maintain the best quality possible in our export fish. Recently it was advertised that owing to these regulations there had been an increase in the price from 30 cents per fish in 1932 to 40 cents in 1933. My hon. friend states that these regulations have been asked for by a limited number of canners who want to control the market. The information we have is that the companies who desire to have the regulations maintained put up ninety-three per cent of the pack. These companies own forty-two out of forty-four canneries which were operated last year. There are seventeen in number, and thirteen of these companies operate only one cannery each. It is obvious therefore that nearly all the small canners as well as the large canners favour the regulations. It is not a matter of only a few canners, but over ninety per cent of the canners are in favour of it.

Mr. NEILL: No.

Mr. DURANLEAU: And they contend that the price of fish is going up on account of these very regulations. I have here a statement prepared by an expert of my department and I wish to give it in full:

It is an acknowledged fact that following the development of sharp competition amongst the canneries in British Columbia the quality of the pack went down. This was due to the fish being too long after being caught before they were canned. A prominent reason for this was the distance that fish was frequently carried. The result of this, together with growing competition from the orient and United States, was that British Columbia fish were losing their position on most important markets.

Mr. NEILL: What is the date of that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: April 24, 1933. I asked for it because I think it is well that it should be placed before the committee.

To overcome this situation, inspection of the canned product was started last year.

My hon. friend referred to that regulation. He opposed it bitterly last year and now he admits that it was successful in its operation.

Mr. NEILL: After being five times amended.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, but only in administrative details. It is always found necessary in important regulations of the sort to have minor amendments made. A few months' experience shows that slight amendments are necessary, but this regulation is to-day working in the interests of the fishermen.

Owing to the fact that there are five species of salmon, that the same species differs in quality in different areas and differs in the same area in different years, an adequate classification for inspection of canned salmon has so far been found in any country to be impracticable. Canada has gone further than any other country has yet been able to go, though its inspection is a minimum. It provides merely that fish that are fresh, firm, well packed and in good merchantable condition shall be entitled to a certificate, while all that are fit for human consumption but fall below these requirements shall be definitely marked "second quality," and those below second quality shall be confiscated.

Just when a fish ceases to be fresh and firm is a matter on which there is bound to be difference of opinion amongst experts, but there can be no doubt that fish begin to get soft practically from the time they are dead and that this process goes on slowly or rapidly, depending on conditions. This is recognized in the fish packing world. In Scotland, for instance, where herring is the main factor in the industry and where it is put up in barrels, it is required that fish to be entitled to the brand, must be placed in the barrels within twenty-four hours after being caught.

The board of inspection both before and since its appointment, strongly urged the importance of fish reaching the canneries promptly after being caught.

In no competing country are fish carried a greater distance than the amended regulation allows. As a usual thing the distance is very much less.

It is only when the quality of the pack as a whole is good enough that adequate prices can be obtained, and the fishermen consequently paid the best possible prices.

Mr. NEILL: It makes very little difference to me whether the minister expresses his own views or reads something from an expert, it all comes from the lost and found department anyway. He quotes the cannery men, and states that they represent ninety per cent, but how is that ninety per cent made up? The statement reads that it was subsequently strongly recommended to the department on behalf of those who put up over ninety per cent of the canned product. Yes, but the three big canning companies claim that they put up over ninety per cent of the product. I have no evidence that they do, but that is their claim.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are seventeen companies.

Mr. NEILL: The next suggestion made is that they are going to ask for a sworn statement. The life of a cannery man is hard enough; he is losing lots of money and he should not be damned for the next world by being asked to take such an oath. He should not be asked to swear before God that the salmon was landed at such a time when in fact he did not see it landed. It may have been landed at another one of his canneries a hundred miles away. The minister refers to Scotland. Do they can salmon in Scotland to the extent they do in British Columbia? He speaks about herring in barrels, but are salmon packed in barrels? He tells us that the fishermen are going to get better prices for their salmon this year. Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird. These fishermen are not fools and they are not going to be caught by an argument as specious as that. I have the papers to prove my point, but I cannot lay my hand upon them at the moment. I have half a dozen articles taken from local papers, some of them quoting the chief supervisor of fisheries of British Columbia. He is an expert, and he states that the sockeye was practically sold out and it was inevitable that the price would rise. They are asking us to believe that the passing of this order in council was responsible. This order in council could not possibly take effect for months and months, in fact they do not even know how to enforce it, yet they ask us to believe that it was because of this that the price immediately shot up. My opinion is that this rise in price was because of the low pack in the past two years, coupled with the increasing demand in one or two countries. When the demand goes up, of course the price goes up. It would be much better from a political point of view for the government to claim that this rise in price was because of their stabilization measure. I have never hesitated to give the government credit for taking that action; I only wish they had gone a little further and included lumber. They did a good thing and perhaps it has stimulated the price so that it begins at 40 cents. After all, 40 cents is not such a spectacular price. We think of some British Columbia cannery men giving the fishermen 40 cents out of the generosity of their hearts, but it must be remembered the last year they were paying United States fishermen 40 and 45 cents. Quantities of salmon were brought in from the States and that price was paid in American currency. It is not such a great potlach to the fishermen to start the price at 30 cents. If the minister was sincere in talking about quality, why does he not give the regulations passed last year the year of trial asked for? The minister says that these regulations were amended in a few details, but I contend that they were amended in many substantial details. They were five and a half times as long as they had been previously. Will they show their sincerity by amending this regulation, and instead of having it read "landed at the cannery twenty-four hours after being caught," make it read "canned thirty-six hours after being caught"? I challenge the minister to consider this matter from that point of view.

Mr. REID: I have another matter I would like to bring to the attention of the minister in connection with Japanese fishing licences. I understand that in 1923 a reduction of 40 per cent was made in these licences and when the matter was considered by the committee in 1924 it was decided that no reduction would be made that year. It was later recommended by the committee that there would be a further reduction of 15 per cent for the season of 1925 and in the following year it was recommended that beginning with 1927 there would be a yearly reduction of 10 per cent, based on the number in force in 1926. As the matter had got into the courts it was decided that no reduction would be made until the courts had rendered a decision. The situation is becoming very serious. The total licences issued in the province last year were as follows:

Whites	6,486
Japanese	2,143
Indians	2,800

The situation is much more serious, however, on the Fraser river where the proportion of Japanese is much larger. In that district the licences issued to whites number 852 as against 586 issued to Japanese. These were the figures for 1932 as given by the department. Because of the application made to the courts, I believe the yearly 10 per cent reduction was held up pending decision. As I understand it, since the passing of the statute of Westminster, Canada can now deal exclusively with such matters as the granting of licences. Some years ago certain associations protested against the cut, but at a meeting which I attended in New Westminster it was stated that these protests had been made under a misapprehension. Last year the association went on record as unanimously favouring the reduction in the number of licences issued to Japanese. In previous years the department has taken the attitude that these Japanese were working on the sea, and that if they were taken away from fishing it would mean just that many more on the land, but the fact is that they are going on the land in greater numbers than ever. The increase in population by birth is very rapid. Last year in the schools there was a 38 per cent increase in population of Japanese as against five per cent of whites. The question was raised in the British Columbia legislature last year and the Hon. Mr. Maitland made this statement:

Hundreds of false birth certificates have been issued in British Columbia, particularly in the case of orientals, Hon. R. L. Maitland, minister without portfolio, said in the legislature Monday, on moving second reading of a bill which would "tighten up" restrictions.

Under the statutes at present a citizen may take out a deferred certificate, he explained. "Japanese have been going back as long as twenty-five years ago in claiming birth in the province. As a consequence, many Japanese who were not born in British Columbia at all not only get certain fishing rights but passport privileges as British subjects."

Last year I brought up the matter—it does not touch the minister's department—regarding immigration and I then stated to the Minister of Immigration I believed more than fifty per cent of the Japanese in British Columbia were in that province illegally. I have before me the report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the year ended September 30, 1932, in which I find a very serious statement and one that practically confirms what I said in the house at that time. This has a bearing on my appeal to the minister regarding the Japanese and fishing licences. On page 50 of this report I find the following statement by Superintendent Wood:

With regard to the Department of Immigration and Colonization, Superintendent Wood says:

"The investigation regarding the infractions of immigration and other acts of Japanese in British Columbia is still being carried on vigorously, and I am of the opinion that the situation is more serious than we previously imagined."

[Mr. Reid.]

This is the superintendent who is saying that it is more serious.

Mr. STEVENS: And prosecutions of those guilty of fraud were carried out.

Mr. REID: That is very true, but I am now coming to the fishery licences. Superintendent Wood says:

Recently the investigation has disclosed that numerous naturalization certificates are held by persons other than their owners in the Skeena river area. The number so held is estimated to be over 150, and one source of information places the number as high as 400.

This is the official report.

These certificates are being used to illegally obtain fishing licences.

That is a very serious statement and it should be taken due cognizance of. I am speaking particularly however of conditions in the Fraser river. I understand a movement was initiated by the British Columbia Protective Association asking the minister to continue the cut of ten per cent in licences until the Japanese were eliminated, as had been proposed a few years previously. The Japanese, I might say, are becoming arrogant on the Fraser river. The information is also given to me that they now dominate certain branches of the fishing industry on the lower mainland of British Columbia. I have before me a letter from a dealer in codfish in Vancouver who states, with regard to codfishing:

At present it is dominated and controlled by the Japanese. In Vancouver all the codfish brought in by any nationality is sold through M. Myamoto, a Japanese.

If, for instance, you went codfishing and brought your catch into Vancouver you would have to dispose of it through M. Myamoto.

He tells me in this letter that if I want any further information regarding the matter, he will be glad to give it. We have among our own nationals men who control certain industries, but the situation is more serious when you have a Japanese controlling a business in our own country because all his dealings are directed with more benefit to his race than to the white people of Canada. As I have stated the Japanese are becoming very arrogant on the Fraser river, and last fall I had drawn to my attention a case where they threatened bodily harm because a white man dared to be around one of the little islands in the mouth of the Fraser river endeavouring to catch some fish with a line. Another case occurred in the same year up north where a Japanese boat ran through a white man's boat and the two white men would have been drowned had they not been picked up by another fishing boat which happened to be near by. The Japanese use people of their own race all the time. Their trucks take care of their own stores and practically all their business centres around the Japanese. Last fall, when the market in Japan was low, the Japanese saw to it that only Japanese on the Pacific coast received any consideration in regard to the sale of salted or smoked fish that was destined for Japan.

I am appealing to the minister regarding this; I am asking him on behalf of the Fraser river fishermen, who are unanimously in favour of the cut being continued, that he recommence the reduction of licences in so far as the Japanese are concerned. Our own people should be better looked after and encouraged. The argument formerly used that if you chased the Japanese off the rivers and the ocean, they would go on to the land, no longer holds good, because they are on the land anyway and in greater numbers than before, even though there are just as many Japanese fishermen. In my constituency there is one school of fourteen rooms. Eleven of them are wholly Japanese; one only is white and the others are half Japanese and half white. In a school not far from where I live, last year I saw eleven boys at play, nine of whom were Japanese and two white. That shows the extent of the growth in population of the Japanese on the land in British Columbia. The fishermen are now protesting and on their behalf I am asking the minister to consider recommencing the cut in the licences of the Japanese and favouring our own people.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, April 25, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. W. C. S. McLURE (Queens) presented the first report of the Joint Committee on Printing.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Chevrier be substituted for that of Mr. Power on the special committee appointed to consider and report on Bill No. 78, an act to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to.

RADIO BROADCASTING

APPROVAL OF PURCHASE OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BROADCASTING STATIONS

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That pursuant to the provisions of the Canadian Radio Act, 1932, the House of Commons hereby approves the purchase of the radio broadcasting stations and equipment of the Canadian National Railways by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission for the sum of $50,000.

He said: In explanation I may say that this is a formal motion which is considered necessary as subsection (b) of section 9 of the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932, provides that the commission shall have power, among other things to acquire existing private stations by purchase, subject to the approval of parliament.

His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution approves of the same, and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would like to know how many stations were owned by the Canadian National Railways, and where they are situated.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There are five stations; Ottawa, Moncton, Vancouver, Halifax, and Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Are they acquiring the five?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They are acquiring the five.

Mr. CASGRAIN: For $50,000?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: For $50,000, a very moderate price. But of course it is only a transfer from one body which acts for the people of Canada to another similar body. It is like transferring property from one pocket to another.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Could the minister say how much these stations cost the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: I think they cost $123,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The figure I have here as the original cost is $132,000 in all. During the sittings of the committee last year the Canadian National Railways stations were valued at $70,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I wonder if the minister would tell us how this sum of $50,000 was arrived at.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Order. We will carry this when we are ready.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Negotiations took place between the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission and the Canadian National Railways with regard to the acquisition of these broadcasting stations. I see by the memorandum before me that these negotiations were carried on for six weeks or more in an endeavour to arrive at a fair valuation for these stations. Eventually it was decided that the fair price for them at the present time would be $50,000, and that amount was fixed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is there any apportionment for each station or is that the sum total?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There is no apportionment whatever, but for the information of my hon. friend I may say that I have the original cost of these stations, which is nearly twice the amount at which they were valued last year. According to these figures, more than half the total cost was represented by the stations in Ottawa and Vancouver.

Mr. EULER: May I ask whether the $50,000 hereby appropriated is to be taken from the funds collected from licence holders?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The money for these stations will have to be taken out of the money voted by parliament for the radio broadcasting commission.

Mr. EULER: I am afraid the right hon. gentleman did not get my question. I take it that the money will be taken from the fund created by the collection of the $2 licence fee from licence holders.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This matter was discussed the other day, and I do not want to embark on a further discussion at this time. As a matter of fact the fees go into the consolidated revenue fund and can be paid out only by a vote of parliament. For that reason we have had under consideration a vote of $1,000,000, which really represents money that is being collected in fees, and which in one sense of the word might be said to belong to the radio commission. It must be voted by this parliament, however, before it can be released. Of course the money for the purchase of these stations and for everything else must come out of the money voted by parliament, and I understand that to date the collections from fees are larger than the amount being voted.

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I understand that the price has been fixed at $50,000. These stations were built and owned by the Canadian National Railways as a state project, and this amount of money already has been paid by the public, so I do not know why the radio commission must pay it a second time. These stations still belong to the public, so I think the price should be $1 and no more.

Mr. ILSLEY: Would the right hon. gentleman say what is the power of the Moncton station?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The station at Moncton has 1,500 watts.

Mr. ILSLEY: In the report brought in about a year ago by a committee of the house it was recommended that there should be one 50 kilowatt station or three 500 watt stations in the maritime provinces.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Pardon me; I think I made a mistake. I think the Moncton station is 500 watts. I read it as 1,500, but I think it means one 500 watt station.

Mr. ILSLEY: Could the minister tell the committee whether it is proposed to have one powerful station for the maritime provinces or three 500 watt stations? The report of the committee was not definite on that point; it was left to the government.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sorry I have no information in that regard, but the radio estimates will be up again in a few days and the hon. gentleman can ask his question then.

Mr. POWER: I should like to know why it is necessary to present a bill in order to effect this purchase.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I thought I had already explained that. As I understand it, it would have been quite in order to have included this purchase in the estimates, with an explanatory note, but that was not done. Now this arrangement has been completed, and subsection (b) of section 1 of the broadcasting act requires that all purchases of private stations shall be approved by parliament. This resolution is introduced for the purpose of securing that approval, and if the committee passes the resolution, as I hope it will, we intend to move that a message be sent to the Senate asking their concurrence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it not a fact that the purchase of the stations and equipment has been made already, and was made in February?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The arrangements have been made but the money has not been paid.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But is it not a fact that as between the radio commission and the railways the transaction has taken place and been approved by order in council?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The right hon. gentleman is quite correct. I said this matter was under negotiation for some time, and the final arrangements were made. The purchase cannot be completed, however, until parliament gives its approval.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as parliament is concerned its function is merely that of a rubber stamp with regard to a transaction that has been completed.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sorry I cannot agree with the right hon. gentleman. If parliament decides not to approve of this transaction it cannot be carried out.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is it not a fact that the radio commission is in possession of these stations and equipment?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I cannot answer that question definitely. I know they are in possession of one of the stations, at all events, but I do not know whether they have taken them all over. Possibly they may have done so, but the transaction cannot be completed until the money is paid, and the money cannot be paid without the approval of parliament.

Mr. MALCOLM: I object very much to supporting this resolution without some further explanation by the minister as to the basis upon which the price was fixed for these stations. This is the first time parliament has been asked to approve of the purchase of privately owned stations by the commission. The minister admitted that the original cost of these stations was $132,000. The stations belong to the Canadian National Railways, and we are asked to vote only $50,000 for stations and equipment that admittedly cost $132,000. There must be some basis for the decision to buy these stations at about forty cents on the dollar. Now, inasmuch as the radio commission in the future will take over other private stations is it the intention of the government or of the commission to pay only forty per cent of the cost of such stations when acquired, or is the Canadian National the only owner of stations to be sacrificed in the matter of purchase price? I do submit that the minister is not giving us sufficient information with respect to the basis upon which this amount was arrived at. There are in Canada other stations that have been built by private parties at considerable cost, and I should naturally assume that in acquiring these private stations the owners would expect to have at least their capital investment returned to them by the radio commission. This vote would almost indicate that some of the best stations in Canada are to be bought at forty cents on the dollar.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Expropriated.

Mr. MALCOLM: Will the minister tell us how the amount was arrived at.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: My hon. friend has asked for information and he is quite entitled to it, but I am sure he wants to be fair—

Mr. MALCOLM: I do.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: —and he will realize that I have already given the explanation. Last year in the parliamentary committee the Canadian National stations were valued, being considered at that time to be worth $70,000. It is true they cost more, but that was the valuation placed upon them last year, when the bill was under discussion in the radio committee. Since that time there has been a further depreciation and it is considered that a fair value to-day would be $50,000. That amount was arrived at by arrangement between the officials of the Canadian National Railways and those of the radio commission.

Mr. MALCOLM: I submit that the value of a station cannot be determined only by what it cost, less depreciation; there are other factors that should enter into the calculation. For example, a station has earning power. Businesses are sometimes valued according to their capacity to earn money, and if you are going to value stations regardless of that capacity and value them only at actual cost less depreciation, then I believe you will buy some very cheap stations when they are taken over. It should be understood by the house and by those who own stations just what the basis of calculation will be when stations are taken over in future.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who fixed the amount of $50,000 for these stations? On what basis of calculation was that figure arrived at?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The amount was fixed by arrangement between the Canadian National Railways and the radio commission after several weeks of discussion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I understand then that the Canadian National Railways have decided to accept a considerable reduction, with the result that there will be a further deficit which the railways will have to register.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps I may be allowed to say a word in this matter from the railway standpoint; I may be able to add something to the discussion.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: The proposal for the acquisition by the radio commission of these stations was not made at all by the government. The directors of the Canadian National Railways dealt with the matter and decided that the railways should get out of the radio business inasmuch as it was costing them $80,000 per year,—at least, that was what it cost in 1932. It might be of interest to put on record the figures showing the cost in other years. In 1931 the cost was, in round figures, $326,000; in 1930, $420,000; and in 1929, $441,000. I have the figures going back over previous years, but that was the highest, $441,000 in 1929, and last year the cost was $80,000. The Canadian National Railways, through the directors and management, came to the conclusion that they were not getting anything out of the radio business with a cost amounting in 1932 to $80,000.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is that over and above the revenues?

Mr. MANION: That is what it cost them.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In excess of the revenue?

Mr. MANION: That is the statement as it was given to me. The directors, as I say, decided to get out of the business and they approached the radio commission. It is true, as has been pointed out, that these stations cost $132,000, but that was some years ago, and the directors of the Canadian National decided that, taking depreciation into account as well as the cost per annum, it was wise for them to give up the business. They therefore approached the radio commission and after some negotiation the figure of $50,000 was decided upon, with which they were perfectly satisfied. They point out as well, in the statement they have made in regard to the matter, that the whole staff of the Canadian National radio broadcasting division has been taken over by the Canadian radio commission. They consider that they have made a very good deal in getting rid of their radio broadcasting facilities by selling them to the radio commission.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask the minister whether the Canadian Pacific Railway is also going out of the radio broadcasting business?

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. MANION: I am afraid my hon. friend will have to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I see.

Mr. MANION: I do not know what they will do, but we are vitally interested in the Canadian National Railways. What the Canadian Pacific Railway does with its private affairs is entirely its business.

Mr. ELLIOTT: By whom was the appraisal made as a result of which the sum of $50,000 was accepted?

Mr. MANION: I do not think it was done as a matter of appraisal but, as the acting leader of the house has said, as a result of negotiations.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Without appraisal?

Mr. MANION: Just as any other group wishing to sell something to someone else would negotiate with the other parties who wanted to buy, so was it in this instance. Did I understand my hon. friend from Quebec East to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway was going out of the radio business?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; I was merely asking whether they were going to go out of it.

Mr. MANION: As the hon. gentleman sat down I thought he said they were.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I don't know; I am simply asking for information.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They will have the advantage over the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MANION: I do not think it is an advantage but a disadvantage.

Mr. EULER: It seems to me there is a very important principle involved in the buying of stations. The right hon. gentleman a moment ago said that the price was fixed at $70,000 by the radio committee last session. I happen to have been a member of that committee and I am sure that the committee itself set no values on any stations whatever. Possibly values were brought in by the engineers of the radio branch of the Department of Marine. The point I desire to make is this. I have no fault to find if the government allows nothing for goodwill; in fact, I think there is an element of danger in the future acquisition of radio stations, and I believe it was pretty definitely brought out and established in the proceedings of the radio committee last year that no amount should be allowed for goodwill for the very good reason that all radio stations were operated under licence, and the licence expired in all cases within the year, so that no goodwill was established. It was pretty definitely laid down and perhaps was recognized that in the purchase of these stations no private owners of radio stations should expect to be paid for goodwill, no matter how profitable their stations may have been. I think that the government in future purchases of radio stations should definitely and absolutely bear in mind that when they buy stations they should pay nothing for goodwill, because that was the understanding in the radio committee last year, and it is important.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think there is a great principle involved in this matter. When the Canadian National Railways a few years ago embarked on the policy of radio broadcasting this policy was criticized a good deal by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the house. At that time they said it was not right, that it was going to cost a lot of money. To-day we find that these same hon. gentlemen now that they are in office are trying to go out of the venture and to turn it over to the radio commission. As pointed out by my hon. friend from Quebec East, the advantage that is to be derived from the radio will all accrue to the Canadian Pacific Railway. That company will have the advantage of the operation of stations which they built and which they will continue to run in the future. By means of this legislation the administration is putting the Canadian National Railways in a most disadvantageous position as compared to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific will have an advantage over the Canadian National. It is by such tactics that the government is curtailing the activities of the Canadian National Railways. I think this resolution should be considered most carefully as it seems to me to be a step in the wrong direction and one which will enure to the benefit of a competitor of the Canadian National Railways.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the leader of the government if it is the intention of the government to take similar action in connection with stations operated by private individuals and companies. I refer particularly to the station operated by La Presse, to station CFCF and to the station recently licensed and operated by La Patrie. Is it the intention of the government to take over these stations and, if so, what basis of valuation will be used?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will the hon. gentleman tell me where the broadcasting stations of the Canadian Pacific are located?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know where they are but if I am not mistaken an offer was made to the committee which was discussing this matter last year. A proposition was put forward by this railway to the government for the taking over of their broadcasting stations.

Mr. MORAND: I do not think any better example of an attempt to make political capital out of these broadcasting stations could be found than that which is evidenced right now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MORAND: Hon. gentlemen opposite must realize how ridiculous is their position. The Canadian Pacific Railway own no broadcasting stations and they had none last year when the committee was sitting. They have a phantom call letter which they use through other stations but they are not in the broadcasting station business. An effort has been made to show that one railroad is being discriminated against. It is nothing more than an effort to make political capital out of this matter.

Mr. MARCIL: Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the Prime Minister of this country has a perfect right to introduce a resolution of this character, but I understood that such matters were under the control of the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). Has the minister given up his job in this connection? If these matters are to remain under his control, what will be his policy when it comes to buying other stations?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The radio business is under the control of the Minister of Marine. As a member representing the province of Quebec of which my hon. friend is the representative in the cabinet, I resent this matter being put through by anyone other than the Minister of Marine. What will the minister's policy be when it comes to buying station CHLP as well as the other stations in the Canadian National system. I do not think my hon. friend should allow any one of his colleagues, let alone the Prime Minister, take charge of his department and move a resolution which should be moved by the Minister of Marine.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The leader of the government is a proper person to present such a resolution to this house. I had thought that this resolution would have been adopted without much discussion. It is quite evident that hon. members opposite are trying to make political capital out of this question. The purchase of the Canadian National system by the radio commission is the best arrangement which could be made under the circumstances. Everyone knows that.

An hon. MEMBER: I do not know it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We are purchasing five stations for $50,000. The radio commission went to the trouble of ascertaining just what these stations had cost, and it was found that the total cost amounted to $132,000. My hon. friends are asking if this is to be the basis upon which purchases will be made in the future. The basis of a purchase made by mutual agreement is the one accepted by the parties to the agreement. In case of disagreement, the parties will resort to arbitration. Then it will be the duty of the arbitrators to determine, according to the statute, the basis of the price and to decide whether an allowance for good-will will be made or not. I hold that this particular purchase is in the interests of the radio commission and of the Canadian National Railways. Radio broadcasting was not a profitable business for a railroad company, and the Canadian National Railways wanted to get rid of their stations. The Canadian Pacific Railway never were in this business.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They are broadcasting.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Hon. friends opposite are trying to make political capital out of this matter. They claim that we are trying to place the Canadian National Railways in a disadvantageous position as compared with the Canadian Pacific and they made that claim knowing that the Canadian Pacific did not own any radio station.

Mr. ELLIOTT: By whom was the valuation made?

Mr. MANION: I think I can answer that question. The board of directors of the Canadian National Railways in consultation with the management and without consultation in any shape or form with this government decided to sell the broadcasting system of the company. I repeat that that decision was arrived at without consultation with this government. They decided to get out of the business because they considered it was a losing proposition.

Mr. RALSTON: The deputy minister is on the board.

Mr. MANION: He is one of seventeen members on the board. My hon. friend, on one of his periodical visits from Montreal, now claims that the deputy minister was on the board. Certainly he was on the board. The deputy minister was on the board in 1929 when my hon. friends in the late government permitted the Canadian National to commit the country to $250,000,000 worth of expenditure. If that government was willing to take all that responsibility, probably we shall have to take it for this. But the deputy minister was not instructed by this government. The board of directors of the Canadian National Railways decided to sell; they approached the radio broadcasting commission—and I have the correspondence under my hand—and the radio commission made them an offer of $50,000 plus rents, which have not been mentioned here, for the broadcasting studios in the hotel at Halifax, the hotel here, the office at Moncton and the building in Vancouver, so that they pay rents as well. After some consideration by the Canadian National and the radio broadcasting commission, the offer of the radio commission of $50,000 was accepted. We were not consulted about it and knew nothing about it as a government until the transaction was completed.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The Minister of Railways gave us the annual cost to the Canadian National Railways of the broadcasting system during past years running from $80,000 last year to as much as $400,000 a few years ago. Was that cost wholly connected with the broadcasting or did it include receiver sets on train coaches and so forth, the whole receiving end as well?

Mr. MANION: It would include all that, although it is not set out in the statement, except that it was operating expenses.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Let me ask one other question. The mere sale of broadcasting stations does not in any way preclude the Canadian National Railways from utilizing the broadcasting stations by setting up the receiving system?

Mr. MANION: No but they have gone out of that.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Do they intend to continue with that end of it?

Mr. MANION: Not so far as I know.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I gather from the minister's remarks that no valuation has been made of the stations by anybody familiar with the value of such stations.

Mr. MANION: The leader of the government stated that a valuation was made last year, and they were valued a year ago at $70,000. I have no further information than that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was the valuation of the committee and it was not accepted.

Mr. MANION: I do not know.

Mr. RALSTON: The Minister of Railways, in one of his periodical outbursts of irresponsibility, has not added very much to the sum total of the debate, particularly in so far as valuations are concerned. He wants to tell us how the valuation was made and he is very careful in replying to the hon. member for West Middlesex for fear the Minister of Marine may get up and stub his toe in some way. The Minister of Railways tells us that of course he knows nothing about the matter and was not consulted in the slightest. The board of directors of the Canadian National, on which there was sitting the deputy minister who, I presume, reports to his chief once in a while, solemnly sat in their office and made an appraisal of these stations at $50,000 although they had cost $132,000, and the Minister of Marine says: I will give you $50,000 for your stations. Neither one of them nor any other member of the government has yet been able to tell us on what basis this appraisal was made, whether it was made on replacement value or on a basis of revenue. Somebody said that depreciation was allowed, but we have not been told how much it was or at what rate. Who were the experts on the board of the Canadian National who knew what the depreciation should be on a plant of this kind? Not a suggestion has been made as to any really businesslike valuation. What happened was that a trade was made between two departments. The radio commission wants as good a start as it can get and it takes over a plant which cost $132,000 for nearly one-third of its value. The Minister of Marine starts out with an advantage over the Minister of Railways and the latter does not seem particularly concerned about the fact that he is giving away this plant which is worth $132,000. He immediately and characteristically goes back to 1928 and 1929 when large expenditures were being made, when he voted for them, when every member on the government benches voted for them, when every member in the railway committee voted for them, and now he wants to draw that red herring across the trail. The whole thing plainly and simply is this: that the radio commission is going to take this over at junk value in order that it may make the best showing possible and the interests of the Canadian National Railways are permitted to drift entirely into the background in order that the Minister of Marine may make a good showing with his commission.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to prolong this debate, but when the hon. gentleman talks about irresponsibility I do not know anybody who is better authority on it than he is. I pointed out that this government had nothing whatever to do with the matter. I should like to indicate, what my hon. friend does not seem to understand, namely that the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways and not this government are handling the affairs of that railway so far as matters of this kind are concerned.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend just a few nights ago admitted very frankly that the board of directors of the Canadian National was more or less a political organization.

Mr. MANION: I did not make any such statement. There was an observation made in the house by another member that the appointments were largely political, meaning that they came largely from one political party. That is probably true; I do not question that. So far as the directors of the Canadian National Railways are concerned, they have been running the business of that railway and they and the management are the people who decided this matter.

Let me read the first few paragraphs of a statement which was handed to me by the Canadian National Railways and which is as much as I and this government know about the matter; except that we have to approve it just as parliament has to do. This is a statement dated February 10:

> The board of directors decided in October, 1932, that we should take prompt steps to dispose of our radio broadcasting station and studio facilities and considered it desirable that the Canadian radio commission should be invited to acquire the Canadian National Railways station and studio facilities on a basis to be mutually agreed upon.
>
> Negotiations were entered into with the radio commission through the director of publicity—that officer having taken charge of the radio activities of the Canadian National Railways in 1931.
>
> The radio broadcasting commission has now made an offer of $50,000 for our facilities and also expresses its willingness, if its offer is accepted, to take over the personnel presently employed in the radio branch.
>
> The transfer of the Canadian National Railways radio activities to the commission would effect a reduction in the railway's payroll of $45,000 per annum and a total reduction in expenses, founded upon 1932 experience, of upwards of $80,000 per annum.
>
> The capital investment of the railway in the broadcasting facilities involved in the proposed transaction amounts to approximately $132,000 before depreciation charges. These depreciation charges on radio equipment could not fairly be assessed at less than 7 per cent per annum, particularly in view of the obsolescence factor.

I do not wish to read the balance, but those are the facts as given to me by the management of the national railways. I submit again, and I deny to my hon. friend the right to contradict my word, that the government had nothing whatever to do with directing the Canadian National to get rid of the stations, but my own personal opinion is that the railway is well rid of the broadcasting. I submit that they should never have been in the radio broadcasting business. One of the greatest wastes that the railway made was that $400,000 which was spent in 1929 under the management of a group of directors appointed by my hon. friends opposite. I submit that one of the biggest blunders which they made was to put radio transmitters on the trains between here and Montreal. They were merely in the road, and to-day they have been taken off because they were of no use. The board of directors and the management decided that they would be better off without this equipment, and I think the railway did pretty well to get rid of it for $50,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: I wish the minister would continue reading the statement. It gives a basis of calculation. He mentioned seven per cent annual depreciation. If he will continue reading the statement we shall know on what basis the price was decided.

Mr. MANION: I shall be very glad to do it. I simply did not wish to take up the time of the house. The statement continues:

The director of publicity—

That is Mr. Thompson, who was put in charge of their publicity in 1931:

—recommends that the offer of the radio commission be accepted subject to an inventory of the facilities transferred to the radio commission being made and accepted by the commission so that the assets involved in the transfer will be definitely established. A short statement of the facilities in question is attached.

If the offer of the radio commission of $50,000 for the Canadian National Railways radio broadcasting facilities is accepted, an agreement will have to be made between the railway and the radio commission for the use by the commission of studio and office space in our structures at the following points: Chateau Laurier, Ottawa; Nova Scotian Hotel, Halifax; Canadian National Railways office building, Moncton; and the Canadian National Railways station at Vancouver. The rental fixed would include electricity and janitor service and it should be possible to make an equitable arrangement covering the whole of this feature of the contract.

The commission would also be required to take over certain contractual obligations now in existence between the railway, and the owners of the Jackson building in Ottawa and the King's Hall building in Montreal, the former being a building on which the aerial towers of CNRO are placed and the latter a building in which the Montreal radio studios of the railway are situated.

[Mr. Manion.]

The attention of the board is especially drawn to the fact that the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission desire to take over the facilities as of March 1, 1933.

Then there is a letter which I hardly need read from Mr. Hector Charlesworth to Mr. Thompson, director of publicity, dated February 9, 1933, in which he makes an offer of $50,000. He goes on to say that they are going to take over the personnel, a total of 21, of all classes.

The next statement which they handed me was an inventory of the radio broadcasting stations, showing the stations originally valued as follows: Ottawa, $37,938.44; Moncton, $25,765.19; Vancouver, $37,774.35; Halifax, $8,930.22; Montreal, $21,683.88.

The final statement which they handed me was one of the expenses in the past few years, as follows:

1923	$ 10,146 06
1924	122,466 01
1925	240,686 49
1926	253,062 51
1927	285,604 30
1928	317,278 88
1929	441,082 00
1930	420,028 17
1931	326,248 32
1932	80,384 01

That is all that I have. This statement was given me by the Canadian National Railways at my request when I heard for the first time that they were anxious to sell the broadcasting facilities to the commission.

Mr. MARCIL: One thing has been made clear in this discussion. The minister states that this is a bargain between two commissions and that the government assumed no responsibility in the matter and knew nothing about the transaction, and that parliament is simply called upon to vote the money, and that is the end of it. I think the minister has made a good defence of his department, but I should like to hear from the Minister of Marine a statement of the future policy of this commission, whether more than one station is to be acquired in each city. I think the house is entitled to that information. We are all interested in the success of this enterprise, and the minister might tell us what is the future policy regarding the acquisition of stations. Is the commission going to acquire one station in each city, or two or three, or one or more in each province? What is the intention of the government? I think we are entitled to an answer. We are all anxious to make radio broadcasting a success in Canada, and I should like to know what I am voting for, and what this resolution means. Does it mean the acquisition of more stations next year, or what does it mean?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think we should have an answer from the Minister of Marine or the leader of the government. The hon. member for Bonaventure has put a question along the same line as I myself put to the leader of the government a few moments ago. What I want to know is whether this policy which we are called upon to confirm to-day is going to be followed up by a similar policy next year and the acquisition of more stations. How many more stations shall we be called upon to acquire and vote money for next year, and on what basis are these purchases to be made?

Mr. SPENCE: Wait till next year.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Listen to me. You will have your turn to speak in a minute. I have asked the leader of the government if it is the government's policy to acquire other stations, such as CKAC, the station of La Presse, Montreal; CHLP, of La Patrie, Montreal, and other stations in that city, as well as other stations throughout Canada. Has the government that policy in mind, and is this the first step in that direction? My hon. friend from Bonaventure has put a reasonable question to the government, and I do not think the Minister of Marine should answer only with a smile. We like his smile, but we should also like to have his answer. We should like to have his own opinion and his own thoughts, not merely the thoughts of his leader. I should like to have an answer to the questions which I put to him and which the hon. member for Bonaventure put, and if he cannot answer he might ask the Minister of Railways, or possibly the leader of the government, what is the policy of the government in regard to this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, I am waiting for an answer.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Might I suggest to the hon. gentleman that these are questions that might very well be asked when we are discussing the radio estimates.

Mr. MALCOLM: No.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Excuse me. Let me suggest that as a matter of fact there is no policy laid down that I know of for the radio commission in regard to buying stations or anything of that kind. The radio commission was created by parliament and given great powers. It was appointed under the act of last session which was approved by the whole house. These men have been carefully chosen and must be given an opportunity to develop their policy as they go along. I think the hon. gentleman realizes just as well as any of us that in advance it is impossible for us to tell him what stations the radio commission will buy, or anything of that kind. If they should decide to buy private stations, then in the negotiations between the radio commission and the owners it will be decided what price is to be paid. It seems to me that the radio commission should be given a fair chance of developing their work.

Mr. MALCOLM: I know, Mr. Chairman, that it is impossible for us to move an amendment to increase the expenditure of money. I think, however, that every member of the house realizes that a very serious principle is involved in the passing of this resolution. Unquestionably the radio broadcasting commission had the right to acquire every station in Canada. It was intended that they should have full charge of radio broadcasting throughout this dominion eventually, and if they are to have full charge they must acquire stations in the future.

My first objection to the resolution is that it does not deal fairly with the Canadian National Railways.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MALCOLM: If hon. gentlemen will possess themselves in patience I will try to prove why I do not think we are doing so.

An hon. MEMBER: Buying a white elephant.

Mr. MALCOLM: What the Minister of Railways pointed out with regard to the cost to the Canadian National Railways of radio broadcasting is quite correct. It was an expensive service to administer. Anyone who holds that it was not a necessary service is quite justified in taking that position. But as to the losses, one must remember that the Canadian National Railways operated a radio broadcasting service without revenue. They did not operate as a commercial station. They gave radio service to passengers on their trains; which was the purpose for which their stations were established. Whether or not the service lost money has no bearing at all on the value of the broadcasting equipment. Other stations operating as commercial stations are making money and have spent large sums of money in building up their stations. Therefore the fact that it was a good thing for the Canadian National Railways to dispose of the radio stations because they had no revenue from them should not in my opinion be the governing factor in deciding the value of these stations. I consider that the value of a radio station should have some relation to the capital invested over a period of years. It should have some relation to the earning power of the station, some relation to depreciation and to replacement cost value.

The only reason I rose to speak on this subject was that I believe the Canadian National Railways should be paid, a sum based on some principle which will govern in the taking over of stations in the future. The Minister of Railways in the memorandum submitted to him by the management of the road did give some information with regard to depreciation. The Minister of Marine, who has charge of the voting of the estimates of the radio commission, said to the house that in so far as the purchase of these stations is concerned no goodwill was considered; a satisfactory bargain was made because the owners of the stations thought it wise to get rid of them. I do not think that should be the governing factor, because the minister then went on to say that he could not admit the suggestion of the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), that nothing should be allowed for goodwill because the licences lapse in a year. The minister denied that premise and said that in future he may allow for goodwill. I do not agree altogether with my hon. friend from North Waterloo, but, if, as the minister suggests, in furture purchases something may be allowed for goodwill, then I suggest to him that he should be fair to the Canadian National Railways and allow them a return for their investment on the same basis on which he proposes to purchase other stations in the future.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Pretty well laboured.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think the labouring was as bad as the reception.

Mr. PRICE: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is aware that a number of the broadcasting stations were equipped with apparatus that was purchased secondhand by the Canadian National Railways? That is a fact in connection with the apparatus at Moncton, it was secondhand all the way through. Would he want the broadcasting commission to pay for that as they would pay for new apparatus?

Mr. MALCOLM: I would have to answer that question by asking my hon. friend if reciprocity is any the worse policy because my friends took it secondhand from us?

An hon. MEMBER: Put it back where it belongs, we never used it.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we are fortunate in having an opportunity for free discussion, on account of the fact that the acting leader of the house is such a pleasant gentleman, and that those who are not so complaisant are across the border.

After those few words, Mr. Chairman, may I tell you that the first thing of importance that I noticed this afternoon was that the hon. Minister of Marine steamed up and the hon. Minister of Railways warmed up. But let us come back to cold facts. The Minister of Railways spoke about the expenditure on radio by the Canadian National Railways. In that respect Sir Henry Thornton was a pioneer. If it had not been for the radio policy of the Canadian National Railways we would have been without a station for many years. May I praise also the enterprise of the great Montreal paper La Presse, which has a very good station, CKAC. The figures of annual expenditure given by the Minister of Railways must include the cost of concerts given by the Canadian National Railways on their hookups from coast to coast. Now it is no longer the national railways who have to pay for that, it is the radio commission. There is something that I do not understand very well in the explanation of the Minister of Marine; he said that the purchase price of the radio broadcasting stations and equipment of the Canadian National by the radio commission is $50,000; and that this amount was arrived at by the radio commission itself, the minister will not deny. In his wide experience as a lawyer can he give me any other instance where the purchaser fixes the price of the thing he wishes to buy, and the seller says nothing? The Canadian National Railways had only to accept a figure given by the radio commission, the Canadian National had the knife at their throat, if they had not accepted the government would have cut their throat. They accepted because they could not do otherwise. But according to the inventory read by the Minister of Railways the actual value of the five stations is $132,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is the cost, not necessarily the value at all.

Mr. MANION: "Capital invested" was the term used, which means the cost.

Mr. POULIOT: I admit there might be some depreciation in that. But what will be the effect of that transaction? The government will not disburse one cent; it will be two book entries, one for the Canadian National Railways, and one for the radio commission. When the Canadian National Railways have a deficit they have to get the money from parliament to cover that deficit. If the price paid by the radio commission is unfair, the deficit will be higher. And even if the government have no ulterior purpose such as favouring the Canadian Pacific at the expense of the Canadian National, nevertheless the Canadian Pacific will say that the deficit of the Canadian National is greater on account of the fact that the transfer price of the radio was inadequate. That is why the matter should be adjusted in fairness to each party concerned. The government will not have to spend any money; it should simply make things right. Nothing has been said by the government with regard to what is to be paid for studio and office space, and for rentals. I should like to ask the Minister of Railways to tell us if any arrangement has been made between the radio commission and the national railways with regard to rentals. I should like to ask also if this purchase is to be the beginning of a coast to coast hook-up. This is why the questions put by my hon. and learned colleague, the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) and by the dean of the house, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) are both timely and appropriate. If this is the beginning of a coast to coast hook-up I think we should know it so that those concerned may be notified. There is not only one radio service in this country; since the Canadian National established broadcasting stations private firms and individuals have also done so. For example, we have the stations operated by La Presse and La Patrie, of Montreal. I will not ask what policy will be followed, but I wonder if the government has considered the effect of this step on the privately owned radio stations. In conclusion may I tell the acting leader of the government how pleased we are to see his face adorned with a gracious smile.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to know what arrangements have been made for the absorption of the employees of these radio stations.

Mr. MANION: They have been taken over by the broadcasting commission.

The CHAIRMAN: I think this discussion is out of order. The question before the committee is whether this purchase should be ratified in the sum of $50,000.

Mr. MITCHELL: The Minister of Railways has said that the employees have been taken over by the commission. If that was part of the bargain I think the question was in order, but I want to know how they were taken over. If I remember correctly the legislation passed last year stipulated that all employees should be engaged through the civil service commission. I think the broadcasting commission should be made clearly to understand that this practice should be followed. It is quite possible that the staffs of these stations might be overloaded with the idea in mind that they would be taken over by the commission. It seems passing strange to me that the first official act of the commission should be to break the law under which it was created, with regard to the engagement of employees.

The CHAIRMAN: This resolution has to do with the purchase of the radio stations and equipment. There is no other contract which is under discussion, so I think this subject is out of order.

Mr. MITCHELL: A good many things mentioned this afternoon were out of order, but they were not ruled out. I am not talking politics; if this was part and parcel of the agreement I think it is proper to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN: It does not come under the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL: The minister has already answered.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry, but I must take the resolution as it appears, and I am bound by the rule of the house that all discussion must be pertinent to the resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, it is not carried.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member can discuss the price, the equipment or the value of the broadcasting service, but the question of the employees does not come under this resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL: I understand that an agreement was necessary, and that the employees came under that agreement.

The CHAIRMAN: But the agreement is not being discussed now; the resolution only deals with the purchase.

Mr. CASGRAIN: They cannot employ these people unless they take over these stations.

The CHAIRMAN: That does not come under this resolution, so I must rule the discussion out of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think the hon. member has a right to discuss that matter.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry, but I have just ruled that he is out of order, so the hon. gentleman must be out of order also.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Then I would appeal from your ruling.

Mr. MANION: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I do not see how we can discuss the taking over of these stations without bringing in other matters. As a matter of fact I think we might discuss the whole question of radio broadcasting. It strikes me that the hon. gentleman is not out of order in putting a question with regard to the personnel. Certainly since he has asked the question, and since the personnel is so important from the human point of view, I think the committee might agree to an answer being given even though we may stretch a point in doing so, though my own opinion is that the discussion is quite in order.

The CHAIRMAN: I must take the resolution as it is drafted, and certainly this is out of order. If the committee wishes to discuss this matter they may do so by unanimous consent; certainly I have no personal objection.

Mr. MITCHELL: I just wished to ask whether the taking over of the employees was part and parcel of the agreement.

Mr. MANION: I have not a copy of the agreement here, but I have a letter from Mr. Charlesworth, the chairman of the commission, to Mr. Thompson, director of publicity of the Canadian National Railways, from which I will read one paragraph. This letter is dated February 9, and contains the proposal to take over the broadcasting stations for $50,000. Mr. Charlesworth said:

> We are also prepared to take over the personnel presently employed on your radio system as outlined in the pay sheets, which you left here at the time of your first visit. This includes a total of twenty-one of all classes, including Mr. Weir and Mr. Olive, who are at present assisting us in this office.

I presume it is true that the radio commission is under the civil service commission. I know nothing about it, but I presume they obtained the consent of the civil service commission to take over these employees. I doubt if the civil service commission under any circumstances could do better than let the commission take over the staff that has been operating these stations for some years.

Mr. SANDERSON: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that you have made a ruling, from which an appeal has been taken by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay?

The CHAIRMAN: The discussion is going on, by consent. If the hon. member wishes to press the point of order he is privileged to do so.

Mr. SANDERSON: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, consent must be given, and I have not heard that consent as yet.

The CHAIRMAN: I understood that consent was given. If the hon. member objects and wants to press the point of order he is entitled to do so, and personally I agree with him.

Mr. SANDERSON: I think you ought to observe the rules of the house.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The question has been asked and the answer has been given.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The incident is closed.

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Railways and the acting Prime Minister, in speaking of the value placed on the broadcasting stations of the Canadian National, said that at the time the radio committee was sitting the Canadian National broadcasting stations were valued at $70,000. I understood him to say that at the time the radio committee was sitting the Canadian National broadcasting stations were valued at $70,000. Am I right in that assumption, and if so who fixed that valuation? The value subsequently arrived at, I take it, was based on that valuation of $70,000, and I want to know who decided upon the sum of $70,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I heard one of the members of the committee of last year say that it was fixed by the engineer; one of the members of the committee said so here to-day. I have no knowledge of the matter except what was given me in this memorandum.

Mr. DONNELLY: In other words, it was the engineers of the department who decided upon the initial valuation of $70,000; that is what I understand. The Minister of Railways, in discussing the Canadian National radio stations, gave certain figures in regard to costs. Will he inform the committee whether those figugres represent deficits or are they actual cost? In other words, was there any revenue to offset those costs?

Mr. MANION: That is the actual net cost; so far as I know there was no revenue. I will read to my hon. friend the statement as it was given to me:

> Since the inception of the radio activities of the railway, activities which included radio reception on trains, the charges to operating expenses on radio account have been as follows:

Then they give the figures which I submitted. That, I take it, is net.

Mr. DONNELLY: I submit that there must be some revenue, because they rented offices above their stations. There must be some revenue coming in. I should like to hear the Minister of Marine tell his side of the story. His colleague the Minister of Railways says that these statements represent a deficit to the Canadian National Railways, that the National railways should never have been in the business, and that he is glad to get rid of it because it is a lemon and a dead horse. Well, if it is a lemon and a dead horse to the Department of Railways it should be the same to the radio commission.

Mr. MANION: That is their business; that is what they are engaged in.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to know what the Minister of Marine thinks about it. Does he believe he has taken over a lemon and a dead horse, as it has been called, and if so does he regard it as a very good bargain? If it is a good bargain for the Minister of Railways to get rid of it, how is it a good bargain for the Minister of Marine to acquire it?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Canadian National Railways did not make a business of their stations; they were only for the service of the company in connection with their trains and for publicity purposes. The radio commission on the other hand intends to do business with these stations; it will do advertising and it hopes to do a good business.

Mr. MARCIL: How many posts are there in Montreal?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The radio commission has been in operation only three months. The officials are evolving a scheme of development throughout the whole of Canada along the lines of the report of the committee which was adopted last year unanimously in this house, and of course they have to comply with the statute. They must develop their system in accordance with their revenues, which are derived from licence fees and the business they will do through their stations. I cannot go further than that. The radio commission intends to implement the report of the committee in this regard.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I notice to-day that during the absence of the Prime Minister, who is possibly trying to negotiate a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States, some ministers of the government presiding over different departments are trying to negotiate among themselves another kind of reciprocal agreement. Three ministers have spoken, and it seems to be a case of "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours." These three ministers have taken part in christening this new bill. First there was the right hon. gentleman who is leading the house, the member for Argenteuil, then the Minister of Railways came to his rescue, and later on the Minister of Marine.

Mr. DURANLEAU: At the request of the hon. member.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes, at my request, because I like the hon. gentleman very much. He is a very mild man and he does not wish to commit himself too far. As the discussion has proceeded however we have not been able to gather much information. There is one thing I notice, though, and that is that some supporters of the government apparently do not appreciate the efforts of the ministers who are leading the government in the absence of the Prime Minister, because hon. members opposite have all deserted their seats. In this bill a present is being made to the Minister of Marine, and I think we are giving far too much to him. We are handing over to him one of the greatest assets of the Canadian National Railways, as my hon. friend (Mr. Malcolm) has pointed out. This valuable asset of the Canadian National we are transferring to the Marine department, but we have no guarantee that under this department we shall derive any more revenue from it. The Minister of Marine these days seems to be burdened with the care of many departments, and it is just possible that he may eclipse the Prime Minister himself. He has charge of the Department of Marine and, now that there is no Minister of Fisheries, he is acting in that portfolio; now he is head of the radio commission, though he says he does not administer it.

Mr. POULIOT: And though he says he is at the foot of it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The radio commission may be only crawling, but the minister is behind it. He does not tell us that he is not going to have anything to do with the administration of these new stations and that in the future he will not have a hand in the acquisition of new stations which may be brought under the jurisdiction of the radio commission and under the control of his department.

Mr. DURANLEAU: And with the consent of the house.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have put some questions to the minister, and so has the hon. member for Bonaventure, but so far there has not been forthcoming from the government any satisfactory exposition of the future program in regard to the radio. Are we going to be called year after year, after this measure is adopted, to endorse this process of eliminating private stations by the purchase first, perhaps, of La Presse and also of that other station La Patrie, which was established for the sole purpose of making political capital through this newspaper, helping it to build up a clientele so that later on it might be taken over by the government, under the control of the commission, so that friends of the government might be made happy. In this whole piece of legislation before us we have in my opinion a bad precedent, and I for one do not subscribe to it, because I am afraid of the gift which is being made to the Minister of Marine. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes. That is what the Minister of Marine should look to.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Is my hon. friend suggesting the purchase of the La Presse station?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know whether it is going to be purchased. I should like to have some information. Is the government going to purchase in the future such stations as La Presse?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would invite the hon. gentleman to read the report of the radio committee. It was adopted unanimously by the house last year, and the radio commission intends to follow as far as possible the lines of that report.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is very vague.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is not; the report is quite plain.

Mr. CASGRAIN: If the minister is in charge of that department he must know what the report contains. He ought to be in a position to say yes or no; he should say in a few words what line of action the government is going to take in the near future. I think it is of interest to the members of this committee and also to the people at large to know if future transactions will be made along the lines of this one.

Mr. CANTLEY: I should like to congratulate my genial friend, the Minister of Railways, upon getting rid of a white elephant and receiving $50,000 for it. It has been stated that the equipment of the Moncton station was second hand and the experience which we have had with it seems to bear out that statement. At Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, there was a station with about one-quarter the supposed power of the station at Moncton. We were able to hear that station quite distinctly while we never could get the Moncton station although we were only about 110 to 130 miles away. That station was of no value so far as the maritime provinces were concerned. Its value to-day is only as scrap. The steel towers which to-day are unsafe are worth just about the cost of taking them down. There is probably a certain amount of copper-covered wire which would be worth, say, a cent and a half per pound. I do not think the scrap value of the whole station will exceed $1,500 or $2,000. If the minister can unload these stations upon some other department and receive $50,000 he is entitled to our congratulations. He is receiving mine, at least.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What about the other department?

Mr. CANTLEY: Although my statement may be disputed by hon. members opposite, I contend that this is just another illustration of the way in which the Canadian National Railways was loaded up with extravagances. These installations were never of any value although they cost a million and a quarter to begin with and over a million dollars a year to operate.

Mr. HEAPS: It would seem that hon. members have objections to other stations being taken over by the government at some distant time. I think the time to deal with that aspect of the question will be when the government are in a position to announce to the house that they intend to take over other stations. At the present time I do not intend to deal with that phase of the matter which seems to be somewhat extraneous to the question which we are now discussing. It has been claimed by some hon. members that we are not dealing fairly with the Canadian National railway system. Personally I feel that we are dealing fairly with the company. The price to be paid has been determined by the two parties to the transaction and evidently both are quite satisfied. The broadcasting system may have been a white elephant upon the hands of the railroad company but, on the other hand, it is quite obvious that this system may become a valuable asset to the radio commission. The railroad company was in the transportation business while the radio commission is in the broadcasting business. The railway company did not have the advantage of the $2 fees which will be collected by the radio commission. These fees will pay the interest upon the capital invested, and possibly pay off the capital itself. I feel that the radio commission is doing the obvious thing in taking over a utility which belonged to another department and I am satisfied that both sides have made a good bargain.

Mr. EULER: I have no desire to delay the discussion but I would like to deal very briefly with two points which have been raised. The first is with regard to the policy of the government in the taking over of additional stations. It seems to me that this matter of policy was pretty well decided by the report of the radio committee which sat last session. I should like to read two of the clauses from the recommendations of that committee, as follows:

(a) That one of the first duties of the commission be the establishment of trans-Canada chain broadcasting through the securing of the necessary land lines as soon as possible.

(b) That a nationally-owned system of radio broadcasting be instituted, and that all stations required for its proper organization be eventually acquired, same to be financed from the revenues accruing to the business of broadcasting, without expense to the taxpayers through the public treasury.

I need not read any more than that. It seems to me that those recommendations lay down a pretty definite general policy in connection with broadcasting. I take it that the taking over of the Canadian National broadcasting system is the first step in the carrying out of that policy. I am not sure whether it is fair to expect the government to say at the moment just how fast they will move in carrying out the recommendations of the committee. It seems to me that the radio bill which was passed last session was passed for the distinct purpose of implementing the recommendations of the committee. It must be remembered that the report of the committee was adopted by the house. I am not going to find any particular fault—I certainly am not playing politics—if the government are not in a position to say that next year or the year after they will take over such and such a station. I take it that sooner or later—it ought to be sooner—they will take possession of the general broadcasting business in Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Did the committee of which my hon. friend was a member contemplate that before the members of the commission were sworn in a new licence would be issued to permit a new station to go into operation?

Mr. EULER: Briefly, my answer would be no. Although I have no desire to raise a question at this time, personally I am not entirely satisfied with the way licences have been granted. I have one particular station in mind and the proceedings in connection therewith certainly do not meet with my approval. I will not say anything more in connection with this matter for fear of starting the hon. member for East Essex off on a speech, although I would not mind listening to him.

There is one other point I would like to make. With all due deference to my good friend the Minister of Railways, I do not think he is quite fair in his reference to the outlays made by the Canadian National Railways in connection with broadcasting. After all, the purpose of the installation of receiving sets in the trains was not just an extravagant method of entertaining the passengers, it was a definite means of attracting business—just another form of advertising. I am not going to say just what success that advertising had—I might not have done the same thing if I had been in authority—but I think it is true that the railway company did obtain considerable publicity through the installation of receiving sets on the trains. No one can say definitely what returns will be received from any particular form of advertising. The railways have expended hundreds of thousands and perhaps millions of dollars in advertising.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Hotels.

Mr. EULER: Yes, the hotels have to be advertised if one is to make anything of them. The Canadian National advertised their hotel at Jasper and the Canadian Pacific did the same thing for their hotel at Banff. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent in advertising the railways and it is necessary to do this. No one can say just how much in dollars and cents the Canadian National Railways received in return for this work of broadcasting, but surely it is not right for anybody to give to the house and the country the impression that this money was absolutely wasted.

Mr. MANION: I do not think it was suggested that it was absolutely wasted although a great deal of it was.

Mr. EULER: I want to be fair to the minister, but he left the impression, I think unintentionally, that the sums of money that were expended from year to year—and he gave them in increasing amounts—were just wasted on a sort of plaything on the Canadian National Railways. It was nothing of the kind; it was advertising. I think it brought to the railway some results, but whether commensurate with the amount of money expended, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. VERVILLE (Lotbinière) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, this resolution simply means the transfer of an amount of $50,000 from one place to another. The Canadian National Railways will receive $50,000 from the Radio Commission, while the Treasury, on the one hand, will receive what, on the other hand, it has disbursed. May I put a question to the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau): A permit was granted for a broadcasting station in Montreal. Some one assured me that this permit was granted to a Tory newspaper. I have no knowledge of the fact, at all events, it was granted to La Patrie. For some time past, programs have been broadcasted from that station in which speakers of the Fédération de clubs ouvriers de la province de Québec are allowed to state what they please against established order, the Quebec government and the municipality of Montreal. I am wondering whether there exists a contract containing a clause which prohibits any unfavourable comment against the Dominion government. May I inquire from the minister as to whether the following public rumour is true, namely, that the government granted this broadcasting permit with such a proviso?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried, carried!

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The minister is going to reply.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have already replied to this question when the estimates on radio broadcasting were discussed, at a recent sitting of the committee. The speeches delivered, at La Patrie broadcasting station, by officials of the Fédération des clubs ouvriers de la province de Québec, so far as I have been able to judge, having purposely listened to them on two or three occasions, had absolutely nothing objectionable. May I inform my hon. friend that numerous citizens of Montreal contend that this propaganda carried on by the Fédération des clubs ouvriers de la province de Québec is quite legitimate, that freedom of speech is equally granted to the small associations and workmen as to powerful corporations, and, as long as these speeches are not of a nature to rouse the people against established order, we consider that members of that association are entitled to criticize the measures or acts of any government or even the present municipal administration of Montreal. Quite recently, if I am not mistaken, these gentlemen sharply criticized the previous municipal administration of Montreal, which proves that this association is free from political consideration. The hon. member is misinformed when he states that at the La Patrie broadcasting station officials of the Fédération des clubs ouvriers are allowed to deliver speeches which are objectionable or of a nature to rouse the people of Montreal. Would my hon. friend mention the circumstances and dates when such speeches were made?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): If the hon. minister will wait a minute I shall quote one of these speeches.

Mr. VERVILLE Translation): It is a difficult task to defend, in the house, citizens attacked through the medium of broadcasting. It is true that under an act passed at the last session of the Quebec legislature, associations known as Universités ouvrières are declared dissolved and deprived of their rights; however, it behooves the Dominion government to take the necessary steps to prevent the spreading of false principles. Such schools, moreover, should never have taken root in Canada. It behooves the Dominion government to enforce the laws of this country and prevent, by all possible means, the infringement of citizens' rights.

Mr. MORAND: Last year I had the honour of being chairman of the committee which made the report on radio. Prior to that a commission had been appointed by the administration of the leader of the opposition and it made a very similar report, that radio be nationalized. I may say here frankly that when I first entered the committee, I was not in favour of nationalization. I listened to the evidence and before all of it was in I had quite made up my mind that the only way to handle radio in Canada was by control and gradual nationalization. With that all the members of the committee agreed; with that the house was in agreement. Every hon. member with, I believe, one exception agreed that we should nationalize and gradually take control of radio. To-day apparently, some hon. members are sorry that they agreed. Some seem to expect that we can make omelettes without breaking a few eggs. You cannot nationalize radio; you cannot lessen the number of stations, as was recommended by the committee, without changing channels, without changing wave lengths, without the reallocation of radio stations in different places, and if every time the commission is to change a wave length, to purchase a station, we are to spend two or three days in the house discussing the matter, what is the use of having a commission? We might better have the matter handled by parliament. If parliament is to enter into every detail involved in broadcasting, censorship and so forth, why the commission? Surely we must put some power in the hands of the commission. We can establish general principles, as they have been established in the act, and if there is to be any censoring, any changing of wave lengths, the commission must take that responsibility. If the commission does not function to suit parliament, we can ask for its removal, but surely we are not going to spend days and days discussing minor details in the house.

As regards the kind of stations we had recommended, after a careful survey it was recommended that there be one 50,000-watt station in each province; three 500-watt stations for the maritime provinces, or one larger one for the three, and one 10,000-watt station for western Ontario. In the western provinces we were to have some synchronized stations, each of 500 watts. The hon. member for North Waterloo sat with me on the committee last year. He has read some of the recommendations of that committee, but he left out one very important one, not purposely I believe, in respect to the workings of the commission and its proper organization. That recommendation was this:

The same—

That is the amount:

—to be financed from the revenues accruing to the business of broadcasting, without expense to the taxpayers through the public treasury.

That is what is being done to-day. The commission can only spend according to the amount of revenue which they receive. I feel that they are doing very good work. We also made provision whereby the commission could enter into agreements with existing stations and purchase time or lease stations and do whatever else they felt was necessary in order to provide proper broadcasting facilities in Canada. I personally feel that the commission is doing good work and is going as fast as it can go. I might mention in passing that we also made provision that stations of 100 watts or under would not be under the national system but should remain privately owned. The station we have heard a great deal about, that of La Patrie, Montreal, is a station of only 100 watts. Such a station was not to be put under the national system, but was to be left as a privately owned station. That was the recommendation in the report which was unanimously made and unanimously approved. Surely we are wasting a great deal of time on unnecessary details, and certainly the country will not look on the work of this parliament to-day with very much approval.

Mr. LAPOINTE: How long has my hon. friend been speaking?

Mr. GRAY: Although the Prime Minister is absent, he has apparently left a substitute for him in this house in the person of the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Morand). If this resolution carries it will be placing in the hands of the commission another five stations for it to administer. In view of that, I think it is fitting, before we place any more stations under the control of the radio broadcasting commission set up by this house, that we should draw to the attention of the Minister of Marine that the chairman of that commission since Saturday has been going about this country not only making political speeches, I submit, but imputing motives to members of this house which I submit are wholly uncalled-for and unwarranted. I feel sure that it has been called to the attention of the minister that the chairman of this commission has stated that those members of this house who have been trying to elicit information from the minister had their questions suggested to them and the whole movement engineered by New York interests.

Mr. SPOTTON: He ought to get his whiskers trimmed.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Did my hon. friend hear the chairman of the radio commission?

Mr. GRAY: I am quoting what I read in the newspaper. I can quote from the Montreal Gazette of Monday, in which the chairman of the radio commission is reported as having made a speech, a political speech I submit, to a non-political gathering in Montreal. I further find that speaking in Toronto he is reported in to-night's evening Citizen as follows:

"We'll be all right if the politicians will only leave us alone."

Does he mean by that the minister? Does he mean that he is being given politicians that he cannot do anything with in the appointments that have been made to the commission? Or does he impute that those of us who are trying to elicit information from the minister are doing it merely for politics, and that we are not interested in the radio commission as it stands? I ask the minister when he will place a curb on the indiscreet verbosity of the chairman of this commission.

Mr. POULIOT: The question is of great importance. I remember very well that on another occasion—

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. POULIOT: The Prime Minister told my hon. friend to sit down one day, but I am not going to allow my hon. friend to tell me what I shall do. When the Prime Minister told him to sit down, he sat down like a schoolboy. I am not in the category of those who sit down when they are told to by anyone. I stand up when I speak, and that is much better. Moreover, I would have left the party if its leader had told me like the Prime Minister told the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) to sit down at the special session.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. POULIOT: I apologize to my hon. friend if he was not the one.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Chairman, I made no observation whatsoever, and I submit that the hon. member for Témiscouata has no right to make an attack on me in that manner while I sit perfectly quiet in my seat.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I wholly accept what my hon. friend has said, and if my hon. friend did not say what I understood him to say—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for East Algoma has said that he did not interrupt, and therefore the hon. member for Témiscouata must accept his denial without discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. I have already said in very plain language that I apologize to the hon. member for East Algoma if he did not interject when I got up.

The CHAIRMAN: He has already stated that he did not speak.

Mr. POULIOT: I repeat for the third time, Mr. Chairman, that I apologize. When I am wrong I admit it at once. I should have addressed my remarks to the hon. member for East Edmonton, the desk mate of my hon. friend from East Algoma, who I understand made the interruption.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Témiscouata knows, I think, that he must not word his apology to say "if the hon. member for East Algoma did not say that." He must accept the denial of the hon. member without qualification and apologize.

Mr. POULIOT: If the hon. member is willing to suggest to me any other formula than the one I used for my apology I shall be very glad to accept it because I am not stubborn. I do not wish to fight against the rules. I wish to be fair to every member on the other side of the house. When they are polite I am polite, but when they are impolite I fix them.

The CHAIRMAN: I would suggest to the hon. member for Témiscouata that any gentleman could have found words with which to accept the denial of the hon. member for East Algoma and apologize.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the chairman satisfied with my apology?

The CHAIRMAN: It is not for me to be satisfied, but the hon. member for East Algoma.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member for East Algoma has not complained of my apology, and he has to be satisfied according to the rules of the house. When the interjection was made I at first understood that it came from my hon. friend from East Algoma, and what I said in reply should have been addressed to his desk mate who actually made the interruption. Is that clear, sir?

What I am standing up for now is to defend the rights and privileges of the House of Commons, of hon. members on the other side as well as those on this side. May I now through Hansard tell Mr. Charlesworth or anyone else who is not respectful of the rights and privileges of the members of the House of Commons that they will be fixed in due course? They are the servants of the public, and they should not forget it, and when they are disrespectful it is the duty of the Minister of Marine to fix them, in order that we may not have disagreeable incidents in the House of Commons. Now if Mr. Charlesworth is not any more polite than he has been he will have to receive a lesson, the same lesson that is given to impolite boys. And the fact that he wears a beard will not change the form of chastisement.

Mr. POWER: That is not worn where you are going to hit him.

Mr. POULIOT: We will first start by pulling it!

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that we are delighted to hear this defence of the rights of parliament. May I say just one word more? The other day I heard the Minister of Marine saying he was not to interfere with the work of the commission. Is he not the boss? I said that at the end of the sitting—it is not recorded in Hansard—but my idea is that the minister should be the boss of the department, and if the minister is afraid to interfere with the work of the commission it is feebleness, it is weakness, it is unworthy of any minister of the crown. He should say boldly to any one of the civil servants under his control: I will treat you fairly, but you must act fairly too; you are responsible to me for what you do because I myself am responsible to the House of Commons for anything you do. That is my idea of parliamentary government, that is my idea of democracy. Those are the broad principles for which England and Canada have fought many times. May I remind the minister in order that he may not disgrace himself any more by saying he will not interfere with the work of the commission and this and that, that he should remember he is the boss and he must not be afraid to take the responsibility for anything that is done by civil servants under his control, and if what they do is unfair or against the rules he has made he has only one thing to do—put them out.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to defend the chairman of the radio commission about what was read a moment ago by one of my hon. friends. These articles were not brought to my attention, the chairman of the radio commission was not asked if he had made such statements or not, and I do not think it is proper to criticize the chairman of the commission on statements appearing in the papers, unless they are admitted by him.

Mr. GRAY: He has not denied it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If anything wrong is brought to my knowledge, and if the statute gives me the power to intervene, I will do so. I desire to tell my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) that I know my duties perfectly well and I intend to perform them to the full, but I have to remain within the statute. I intend to exercise the control which has been given to the Minister of Marine by the statute creating that radio commission, which statute was adopted unanimously by the house last year. If my hon. friends are not satisfied with the powers which were granted to that commission and to the minister they have only one thing to do, that is to ask for the repeal of that statute or for an amendment of it. My duty will be performed to the full within the act.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this house has adopted a resolution approving of the purchase of the radio braodcasting stations and equipment of the Canadian National Railways by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission for the sum of $50,000 and requesting that their honours will unite with this house in the approval of the said purchase:

And that the clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

MAJOR-GENERAL McNAUGHTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland). The press has reported that the chief of the general staff, Department of National Defence, has received an increase in salary from $8,000 to $10,000 per year, made retroactive to January 1, last. The name of the officer, I believe, is Major-General McNaughton. Will the minister tell me if the press report is correct and if this increase in salary has been made?

Hon. D. M. SUTHERLAND (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the report is substantially correct; that during the first couple of weeks in January I brought in to council a recommendation that the present chief of the general staff receive reappointment for a term of four years. He had been acting for four years and his term was up on the 31st of December. I also recommended that his salary be increased from $8,000 to $10,000, which was done.

This gives me an opportunity to say that I consider that the chief of the general staff is one of the most efficient men there is in the public service of Canada, and does a very great deal of work connected with several branches of the department. His work has been recognized by the late government as well as this, he has been an expert member of the delegations that have gone to a number of conferences for both governments. It must also be remembered that the estimates in the Department of National Defence have been cut down between seven and eight million dollars during the term that this government has been in office. That necessitates a great deal of extra work, and much of it has fallen on the chief of the general staff. I think it was a very proper salary increase, and that it will be fully concurred in by the majority of the members of the house.

Mr. BROWN: Is that salary subject to the ten per cent deduction?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

UNEMPLOYMENT CAMP—VALCARTIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) if he can answer the question I asked yesterday about the mode of selection of unemployed men being sent to Valcartier camp? Apparently the selection is entrusted to three or four hon. members from Montreal, sitting on the other side of the house. I would like to know whether it is the policy that those men should be selected by members of parliament; if so, why my hon. friend from St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) and the other members from Montreal should not be asked to select them as well as members who are supporting the government?

Hon. D. M. SUTHERLAND (Minister of National Defence): When the present plan with regard to sending men to Valcartier and Petawawa was entered into the officers in charge of the district at Montreal were advised to get in touch with the members for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan), St. Antoine (Mr. Bell) and Jacques Cartier (Mr. Laurin), not with the idea of picking out the individual men who were to go in those contingents, but with the idea of talking over the situation generally as to what should be done under the circumstances in Montreal. What they have done is, I believe, to work with the chairman of the Montreal unemployment commission with regard to it. I am informed that the plan is working out very well indeed, and it is not the case that a man who desires to go to the camp must have any particular O.K. from a member of parliament.

Mr. C. B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): I should like to direct a question to the minister along these lines also. I have a letter from the city clerk of the city of Sherbrooke stating that there are 125 unemployed single men in that city, and asking if the minister would try to have at least some of these taken to Valcartier.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Undoubtedly the city of Sherbrooke has every right to ask that this be done, and I shall be very glad to take it up and communicate with the hon. member.

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): I should like to address a similar question to the minister. I have received applications from boys and single men in the western part of Montreal who would like to go to Valcartier. Am I authorized to issue a letter in this connection or am I obliged to refer these applications to the other members from Montreal?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. gentleman certainly would not be obliged to refer these applications to his colleagues from Montreal. I would suggest that he take up these questions with the commissioner of unemployment of the city of Montreal, who I am sure would be very glad indeed to cooperate with him.

TREATY WITH FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): I should like to ask the government if there is any truth in the dispatch which I read in the Montreal Star last night to the effect that this week we might expect finality in the negotiations with France in connection with a trade pact and that the government was only awaiting an answer from France before bringing the treaty before parliament. Has the Minister of Finance any information as to when the treaty may be brought down?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I may tell my hon. friend that these negotiations are still proceeding; they have not yet reached finality. I have not seen the articles to which my hon. friend refers, but sometimes statements are made that are not official.

MALT EXTRACT TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): I noticed in the Montreal Star that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson) was reported to have said, at a meeting in Toronto, that the tax on malt extract used in making home brew would be withdrawn or drastically reduced. Is there any foundation for that statement, and when the hon. member made it had he received any information or intimation from the government that this would be done?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): The statement in question, Mr. Speaker, was made entirely upon the responsibility of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Lawson). As Minister of Finance I have always taken the position that announcements with regard to tariff and taxation proposals should be made in the house. I think I can conscientiously say that I have consistently maintained that position, and I propose to continue to do so. So far as I am concerned the statement is without warrant whatever.

THE GOLD STANDARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I presume the answer just given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) would apply also to the statement made by the same hon. member, during the course of the same speech, to the effect that Canada left the gold standard two years ago.

RADIO LICENCE—LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I should like to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) whether an application has been made by and a radio licence granted to any person in the city of London.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Not to my knowledge, but I will take this as a notice and give my hon. friend an answer to-morrow.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton South) in the chair.

2. Resolved,—that schedule A to the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen of the acts of 1928, chapter thirty-nine of the acts of 1929, chapter thirteen of the acts of 1930 (first session), chapter three of the acts of 1930 (second session), chapter thirty of the acts of 1931, chapter forty-one of the acts of 1932, and chapter six of the acts of 1932-33, be further amended by striking thereout tariff items 79, 99c, 101, 123a, 157a, 173, 194, 203a, 203b, 206a, 208, 208e, 208o, 209, 210e, 278, 315, 315a, 316, 327, 353, 366b, 385a, 409j, 409q, 417, 438b, 438d, 445c, 471, 475, 476a, 485, 520c, 568, 571, 682a, 756, 783, and 799, the several enumerations of goods respectively, and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in said schedule A:—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Since we are about to enter on the budget resolutions I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would indicate to the committee the order in which he intends to take up the resolutions generally, and also if it is the intention to stay with the resolutions until we get through. We are anxious to facilitate the business, and we could probably make better headway if there were some understood arrangement.

53719—269½

Mr. RHODES: I should be quite content to accept such order of procedure as would be agreeable to the committee and to the house. If it is convenient I should be quite prepared to continue with the tariff items until we have concluded them and go on with the taxation proposals. The first paragraph is to be taken up by the Minister of National Revenue; he is indisposed to-day, otherwise we would have proceeded with that.

Customs tariff—79. Florist stock, viz.:—Azaleas, rhododendrons, pot-grown lilacs, rose stock and other stock for grafting, seedling carnation stock, araucarias, bulbs, corms, tubers, rhizomes and dormant roots, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, fifteen per cent; general tariff, twenty per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is a parent item; there is no change in either wording or rates, but it appears because the next item involves an amendment by way of reduction in the tariff.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—79c. Seedling stock for grafting, viz.:—Plum, pear, peach and other fruit trees: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr DONNELLY: This item has been taken out of item 79?

Mr. RHODES: Yes; this item is free across the board.

Mr. YOUNG: Under this item seedling stock for grafting is put on the free list, while formerly it was free from Great Britain and dutiable from outside the empire. I should like to know who asked for the change.

Mr. RHODES: The nurserymen made representations to us that they were unable to obtain a sufficient supply in Great Britain. After negotiations with the British government we were enabled to ascertain that they were not in a position to supply the necessary nursery stock. As a matter of fact, Britain herself is to some extent an importer from France. Under the circumstances it was decided to restore the item to the free list.

Customs tariff—99c. Raisins and dried currants:

(1) Until July 31, 1934, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 4 cents: general tariff, 4 cents.

(2) Thereafter, per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 3 cents; general tariff, 3 cents. When in packages weighing two pounds each, or less, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty.

Mr. YOUNG: What change has been made in this item?

Mr. RHODES: There is no change in the item, either as regards the wording or the rates. The item has been extended one year at the request of Australia.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the duty when the currants are not in packages?

Mr. RHODES: If the currants are packed in small two pound packages the package itself is weighed with the raisins and considered in the computation for duty. If the raisins come in bulk the bulk package is not subject to the same treatment.

Mr. YOUNG: But the rate is the same in either case?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, except that with the two pound package the package itself is weighed with the raisins for duty purposes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—101. Oranges, n.o.p., per cubic foot: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 35 cents; general tariff, 35 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—101b. Oranges, the produce of Palestine (when imported direct from the country of growth and production) during the months of January, February, March and April: British preferential tariff, ...; intermediate tariff, ...; general tariff, free.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Who asked for this change?

Mr. RHODES: Many representations were made to us from different quarters in favour of the action which we have taken to admit Palestine oranges free of duty during the months indicated. This is an orange of superior quality and flavour and a certain amount of trade has developed with Palestine. We thought it was a move in the right direction.

Mr. EULER: Will this conflict with importations from other parts of the British Empire such as South Africa? Have there been any protests?

Mr. RHODES: The only protest we have received from any part of the empire was from Jamaica. Palestine is a mandated territory, class A mandate, and even though we have oranges free under the British preference and subject to a duty of 35 cents per cubic foot under the intermediate and general, last year we imported eighty-eight per cent of our oranges from the United States. There is therefore still ample room for the West Indian and more particularly the Jamaican orange. In these circumstances we felt that they had no legitimate right to complain of the free entry accorded to Palestine.

Mr. NEILL: Will not this interfere with the Australian treaty?

Mr. RHODES: No, nor with South Africa; they ship in another season entirely. It does not interfere with them in the slightest degree.

Mr. YOUNG: These oranges are admitted in January, February, March and April; why not throughout the year? I understand they are very good oranges.

Mr. RHODES: These months suit importation from Palestine. They are the only free months having regard to our treaties with South Africa and Australia.

Mr. REID: These oranges are imported into the old country months ahead of that. Why should they not come here in the month of December just as the Japanese oranges called tangerines do?

Mr. RHODES: We could not grant free entry in December because that month is preempted by the Australian treaty.

Mr. HEAPS: The only months during which it is convenient for the people of Palestine to export are the months mentioned.

Mr. MacLEAN: Was there a delegation from the West Indies?

Mr. RHODES: A delegate came from the island of Jamaica and had an interview with the government, and while I cannot say that he went away satisfied, we were able to give him evidence to show that his people were more alarmed than hurt.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With respect to the protest made by Jamaica in this matter, it occurs to me that our obligation is greater to the West Indies than it is to Palestine, which is a mandated country. Of course, I am interested in Palestine and all its early associations, but commercially our obligations should be discharged first to the West Indies. Is there likely to be any conflict? I do not like the thought of Jamaica being jostled to one side.

Mr. RHODES: I agree with my hon. friend that, other things being equal, we should give the preference to those within the empire. Without any treaty obligations, and outside the West Indian treaty, we gave free entry to Jamaica the year round, and I pointed out to the delegate from that island that they were not presenting a good case to us when they indicated that their objection to free entry on the part of Palestine oranges was that Jamaica would have to come into competition with Palestine and that therefore their oranges would sell at a lower price. I suggested to them that it was rather a peculiar representation to make to a minister of the Canadian government, that the Canadian people would secure oranges at a lower price. As a matter of fact however, on balance, I think Canada has dealt very fairly, if not indeed generously, with the West Indies. We give them the benefit of a splendid steamship service which costs this country around three quarters of a million a year, and in that connection I may point out, as I pointed out to the representative of Jamaica, that frequently if West Indian shippers have an opportunity to use a tramp steamer they do so to the detriment of the Canadian service which is put on at a great expense. Furthermore, through our preference to West Indian sugar, which the West Indian avails himself of to the last fraction of a cent, we are in effect giving a subvention to the West Indies amounting to several millions a year. Then, bearing in mind the further fact that there is still an opportunity in the Canadian market to replace a portion of that eighty-eight per cent supplied last year by the United States, I think we have treated the Jamaicans fairly in the circumstances, if not generously.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: So long as it is understood that all mandated countries are to be considered as being on a parity with our British dominions and colonies, and if we are under an obligation in that respect, I have nothing further to say. I do not think however that we should go out of our way to put such countries on an equal footing with other parts of the empire if they are not actually so. The fact that Jamaica may not happen to have a good case is merely incidental; another colony might have an excellent case.

Mr. RHODES: We were not under any obligation to Palestine. Palestine was a class A British mandated territory and to the extent we imported oranges from that country we would have an opportunity to increase the shipment of Canadian goods. To the extent that Canadian goods were shipped there would be an opportunity afforded for the development of our Canadian ports and the providing of business for our transportation systems. It must be borne in mind that this provision is limited to direct shipments.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—123a. Crabs, clams or shrimps in sealed containers: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 40 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: Why the increase?

Mr. RHODES: We want to place shrimps in the same category as crabs and clams because they come into direct competition with our own product. The competition from oriental countries has been somewhat unfair.

Mr. DONNELLY: What was the tariff on shrimps?

Mr. RHODES: Formerly the rates were 17½ per cent, 27½ per cent and 30 per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: Do those apply to crabs?

Mr. RHODES: There is no change in the duty on crabs and clams. We are simply classing shrimps in the way I think they ought to be classed as they come into direct competition with our own product.

Mr. YOUNG: Why the increase in the duty?

Mr. RHODES: The increase is brought about by the classification of shrimps with clams and crabs.

Mr. YOUNG: Crabs and clams previously carried 27½ per cent and 30 per cent; they are now carrying 40 per cent, so there must be an increase.

Mr. RHODES: There is no increase on clams and crabs. The rates given in the parallel columns are those which formerly obtained with respect to shrimps.

Mr. DONNELLY: Where do we import our shrimps from?

Mr. RHODES: Almost entirely from Japan.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—157a. Amyl alcohol or refined fusel oil, when imported by the Department of National Revenue or by a person licensed by the minister, to be denatured for use in the manufacture of metal varnishes or lacquers, to be entered at ports prescribed by regulations of the minister, subject to the Excise Act and to the regulations of the Department of National Revenue: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. YOUNG: Who asked for this?

Mr. RHODES: It is impossible to give a comprehensive answer to that question in every case. This is a conference item. It was ascertained that Great Britain was unable to supply this commodity in sufficient quantity and we restored the status quo which obtained prior to the British agreement. This action was taken with the consent of the British government.

Mr. EULER: Is it produced in Canada?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—173. Books and cards, including playing cards, embossed or grooved, for the blind; and books for the instruction of the deaf, dumb or blind; maps and charts for the use of schools for the blind: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. BROWN: This item and the succeeding one show a reduction. I am in favour of the government getting the fullest amount of revenue possible out of some of these items, but—

Mr. GOTT: These are playing cards; the hon. member does not use them.

Mr. BROWN: I would like to know the reason for the reduction. Has the government found that the duties were so high that they would not produce revenues?

Mr. RHODES: I may tell my hon. friend that this item was put in purely on compassionate grounds.

Mr. BROWN: That would be true of this item which refers to books for the blind?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. BROWN: That would be a good reason as far as this item is concerned. But I was thinking of the next item.

Mr. RHODES: We could take up item 194.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—194. Playing cards, in packs or in sheet form, n.o.p.; cards and sheets partly lithographed or printed, for use in the manufacture of such playing cards, per pack or equivalent: British preferential tariff, five cents; intermediate tariff, seven cents; general tariff, eight cents.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. RHODES: There is no change in the rates of duty, but it has been found that the payment of duty has been evaded by the sending in of cards in sheets printed on one side. Previously these sheets were classified as lithographed material. By simply cutting up the sheet a pack of cards is made which can be sold in direct competition with those manufactured in Canada and this change will apply the same duties to these sheets.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who asked for this legislation?

Mr. BROWN: I do not understand the 15 per cent, 22½ per cent and 22½ per cent in the parallel columns.

Mr. RHODES: That is the duty they paid when classified as pictures. They will now pay the same rate as playing cards. Representations were made by the manufacturers of playing cards that they were being subjected to unfair competition and it was to prevent the evasion of the payment of duty that these sheets have been put in the same classification as playing cards.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where are these manufacturers located?

Mr. RHODES: There are three plants in Canada; one at Montreal, one at Windsor and one at Toronto.

Mr. BROWN: There is also an excise duty?

Mr. RHODES: There is no change in the duty.

Mr. YOUNG: As I read the outer three columns, the present rates on these cards, whether in packs or in sheets, would be five cents plus 15 per cent, seven cents plus 22½ per cent and eight cents plus 22½ per cent.

Mr. RHODES: You do not add them together. Hitherto lithographed sheets have paid duties of 15 per cent, 22½ per cent and 22½ per cent, which is less than the specific rate.

Mr. YOUNG: The card manufacturers asked for this change?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—203a. Chemical compounds composed of two or more acids or salts soluble in water, adapted for dyeing or tanning: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ten per cent; general tariff, ten per cent.

Provided, that when such chemical compounds are permitted free entry into the United Kingdom, by licence, under section (2) of the Dye-Stuffs Act (1920) the rates of duty shall be: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment which I will ask my colleague to move.

Mr. STEVENS: I move that the word "free" be deleted from line 2 of the proviso.

Mr. RHODES: Some of these articles are not free in Great Britain and it was intended that this tariff item should be applicable only to free items.

Mr. YOUNG: When you strike out the word "free," what do you intend to substitute?

Mr. RHODES: Nothing. Some of these commodities are subject to duty upon entering Great Britain, while some go in free; all are under licence.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—203b. Aniline and coal tar dyes, soluble in water, in bulk or in packages of not less than one pound weight: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ten per cent; general tariff, ten per cent.

Provided, that when such dyes are permitted free entry into the United Kingdom, by licence, under section (2) of the Dye-Stuffs Act (1920) the rates of duty shall be: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: I have the same amendment in respect to this item and for exactly the same reason:

That the word "free" be deleted in line two of the proviso.

I would like to ask my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to move it.

Mr. STEVENS: I move that.

Amendment agreed to.

Item as amended agreed to.

Customs tariff—206a. Bacteriological products or serum sub-cutaneous injection: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This is a conference item which is being placed back on the free list.

Mr. DONNELLY: What is the reason for doing this? Is it on account of the discussion we had when these items were up last fall?

Mr. RHODES: The real reason was the difficulty of getting credit for returned unused serum which very rapidly deteriorated, and the fact that serum can be supplied more quickly from the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How many of the conference items are being changed?

Mr. RHODES: Five, up to this point.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208. Boracic acid and borax in packages of not less than twenty-five pounds weight; hydro-fluosilicic acid; tannic acid; ammonia, sulphate of; cyanide of potassium; cyanide of sodium and cyanogen bromide; antimony salts, viz.: tartar emetic, chloride and lactate (antimonine); arsenous oxide; precipitate of copper (crude); verdigris or subacetate of copper, dry; sulphur and brimstone, crude or in roll or flour; argols; iodine, crude; bromine; sulphide of arsenic; carbon bisulphide: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This is correcting a purely typographical error.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208e. Cresylic acid and compounds of cresylic acid, used in the process of concentrating ores, metals or minerals: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, fifteen per cent; general tariff, fifteen per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the change?

Mr. RHODES: This is the existing item. It is here because at a later stage we take out xanthates, and deal with that.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208o. (i) cream of tartar in crystals: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ten per cent; general tariff, ten per cent.

(ii) Tartaric acid crystals: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RALSTON: Any change there?

Mr. RHODES: This is a conference item which we have, with the approval of the British government, restored to its former position. This is used largely in the drug trade, making cream of tartar.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who asked for the change and where is the commodity imported from?

Mr. RHODES: Last year we imported:

From—	Value
United Kingdom	$76,000
Germany	61,000
United States	31,000

That is of the tartaric crystals.

Mr. YOUNG: The British rate remains unchanged and the rates from other countries are lowered?

Mr. RHODES: It is restored to the free list.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208u. Xanthates, for use in the process of concentrating ores, metals or minerals: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—209. Potash, muriate and sulphate of, crude; saltpetre or nitrate of potash: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—209d. Potash, chlorate of, not further prepared than ground: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
On and after July 31, 1933: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, fifteen per cent; general tariff, twenty per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: Any change there?

Mr. RHODES: There is a change. We are putting this commodity in precisely the same position as chlorate of soda. There is a reduction company at Buckingham near here, which is equipped and prepared to supply the market in Canada for both commodities, and which cannot make one without making both. It is illogical that one should pay a rate of duty and the other should be on the free list. We are placing both at the same rate.

Mr. YOUNG: Is the minister putting a duty on the by-products?

Mr. RHODES: No. This would be an entirely new production. They are not making either at the present time, but they will make both as a result of the conference act.

Mr. POWER: In what industry is it used?

Mr. RHODES: It is called the Electric Reduction Company.

Mr. POWER: But in what industry?

Mr. RHODES: The mining and metal-making industries.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where are the imports from?

Mr. RHODES: Last year the imports were as follows:

From—	Value
Germany	$37,500
Sweden	36,000
United States	10,000
United Kingdom	5,000

A total of about $90,000.

[Mr. Young.]

Mr. YOUNG: A value of $90,000 and the minister is putting a duty of from 15 to 20 per cent on it. That will mean from $15,000 to $18,000, for one industry. How many men will this industry employ and what wages will those men receive? This is a potential industry.

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry to say that I cannot tell my hon. friend how many men will be employed, because this is an entirely new industry; nor for the same reason can I tell him how much the men will be paid. I presume they will be paid the fair going wage; that is the only answer I can give him.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister is going to take $20,000 out of the pockets of the people of this country and hand it over to a certain industry. The understanding is that in return for this outlay a certain number of men will be employed at certain wages. Surely the minister should have some particulars.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend raises the age-old question as to who pays the duty. He knows quite well that in some cases the importer pays the duty, and in some instances the exporter pays it. Very strong representations are being made to us at the present time in connection, for instance, with the export of apples from the Annapolis valley. They say that notwithstanding the fact the Canadian apple has a preference of four shillings and sixpence per 100 pounds, United States competition is so keen that they are absorbing that tax. There are unquestionably cases where the exporter pays the duty. I do not for one moment subscribe to the view that because a duty of 20 per cent is placed on a commodity, that commodity will cost 20 per cent more. In that connection let me point out that already there is a duty of 20 per cent on chlorate of soda, and we are now placing the same duty on chlorate of potash to give a Canadian industry an opportunity to supply both. Under present conditions we would probably have to import both, whereas under the revised tariff, with a duty on potash, we do not have to import. As a matter of fact there is the anticipation that the Canadian company can not only supply the Canadian demand, but become exporters as well.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As a matter of fact we have supplied our own potash, and as regards the age-old question about which my hon. friend speaks, it is admitted by his own party and himself that the consumer pays the duty. However, we shall not go into that.

Mr. RHODES: I do not want my hon. friend to misconstrue my remarks. I said that in some instances the importer paid the duty, but there are instances where the exporter pays it. The question is one of weighing the evidence in individual cases as to which pays the duty. In some cases they share it. To correct another error of my hon. friend, let me say that no chlorate of potash is made in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What are the expectations regarding imports from Great Britain?

Mr. RHODES: Britain is not in a position to supply it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no reason then for putting this commodity on the free list so far as Great Britain is concerned?

Mr. RHODES: At a later stage she may ship it to Canada under free competition.

Mr. YOUNG: My hon. friend says that the exporter pays the duty. He knows, or should know, that if the exporter dares to pay the duty, the Minister of National Revenue will stop him. He will impose a dumping duty and forbid the exporter to pay. He insists on the people of Canada paying the duty. My hon. friend also said that one of these products is already being made in Canada, and that you cannot make the one without the other. If that is so, why put this duty on?

Mr. RHODES: It cannot be made economically; that is the only answer. I do not want my hon. friend again to put words into my mouth that I did not use. I merely made the statement in response to my hon. friend's very positive assertion that ipso facto the importer in all cases pays the duty. What I said was that in some instances undoubtedly the importer pays the duty and that in other instances the exporter pays the duty, and in some cases they halve the duty.

Mr. YOUNG: Can my hon. friend give an instance where—

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend must not get so excited. There will be ample time for discussion. I merely wanted to make the position clear. I was not attempting even in connection with this one item to say that the duty was paid by the exporter or the importer or both. I was not attempting to apportion the duty at all so far as this item was concerned. I was merely dealing with the general principles laid down by my hon. friend.

Mr. YOUNG: My hon. friend is very careful not to get on solid ground. Can he give one instance where the exporter of goods to Canada pays the duty and is permitted to do so by the Minister of National Revenue —one single instance?

Mr. RHODES: I have not any doubt I could find any number of them.

Mr. YOUNG: Then for goodness sake do not tell the Minister of National Revenue or he will stop it.

Mr. RHODES: In no event would that question arise in connection with a commodity not produced in Canada.

Mr. DONNELLY: Where is chlorate of potash manufactured in Canada, and by whom?

Mr. RHODES: It is not being manufactured in Canada to-day but it will be manufactured at Buckingham in Quebec.

Mr. DONNELLY: You think it will?

Mr. RHODES: I am sure, by July of this year.

Mr. DONNELLY: It will not be the same as with glass at Hamilton?

Mr. RHODES: If we have the same experience with this as we had with glass, we shall take exactly the same action.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—210e. Nitrate of soda or cubic nitre when imported for use as a fertilizer, or in the curing or pickling of meats, or when imported by manufacturers of explosives for use exclusively in their own factories in the manufacture of explosives: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. DONNELLY: What change is made in this item?

Mr. RHODES: We are enlarging the free list to include this item.

Mr. DONNELLY: In what respect?

Mr. RHODES: By including it when the article is used in the pickling of meats.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who asked for this change?

Mr. RHODES: The packing industry.

Mr. RALSTON: I see the words are used, "or in the curing or pickling of meats."

Mr. RHODES: Yes, that is it. We are enlarging the free list by permitting importation for that use.

Mr. YOUNG: Does this also apply to what is used by the farmer in curing his own meats?

Mr. RHODES: I assume it would. That is a question of administration.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have a motion here, Mr. Chairman, to include a new item, to admit solutions of peroxide of hydrogen to the free list under the British preference.

Mr. POWER: We have enough peroxide blondes here now.

Mr. RHODES: This has been requested by Great Britain and has been agreed to by us as an enlargement of the conference agreements.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Making it free?

Mr. RHODES: The only change made is that we are removing the duty of 15 per cent and putting the article on the free list.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hear, hear.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): That will be item 219, to be inserted after 210e.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have another item to move to include, under similar circumstances and for similar reasons, to put cod liver oil on the free list under the British preference.

Mr. RALSTON: Under what circumstances is that item being put on the free list?

Mr. RHODES: Great Britain requested the same privilege as is now being given to Newfoundland with respect to that commodity and we agreed.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there, or has there been, any importation of cod liver oil from Great Britain?

Mr. RHODES: The imports in 1932 amounted in value to $142,000, of which $64,000 came from Newfoundland, $54,000 from Norway, $22,000 from the United States, and $1,500 from the United Kingdom.

Mr. RALSTON: Are these importations of crude or refined oil, or both?

Mr. RHODES: They were not differentiated because there was no item before. They entered as fish oil, n.o.p., so I can only give the value. The new item is crude or refined.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is sure that the importations that he gave of fish oil refer to cod liver oil?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278. Oils, viz.: cocoanut, palm and palm kernel, not edible, for manufacturing soap; carbolic or heavy oil: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, ten per cent; general tariff, ten per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278d. Olive oil for manufacturing soap or tobacco, or for canning fish: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—315. Carbons or carbon electrodes over three inches in circumference or outside measurement and not exceeding thirty-five inches in circumference or outside measurement; carbons of a class or kind not produced in Canada, when imported for use in the manufacture of dry batteries and dry cells: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. REID: I notice that the last clause says, "carbons of a class or kind not produced in Canada, when imported for use in the manufacture of dry batteries and dry cells." There are carbon electrodes used in steel furnaces running from three to ten inches in diameter. What about those? This article mentions specifically carbons for dry batteries and dry cells.

Mr. RHODES: With respect to the first two items, 315 and 315a, the wording is entirely for purposes of clarification, to make certain that it covers electrodes as well as carbons, and bringing it into harmony with the wording of the next item. Secondly, it is to ensure free entry of carbons of a class or kind not produced in Canada for use in the manufacture of dry batteries and dry cells.

Mr. REID: Are there any carbon electrodes manufactured in Canada? I know they are used in steel electrical furnaces. I have used lots of them up to ten inches in diameter.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, they are manufactured in Canada.

Mr. YOUNG: Did not the minister say that these words were used only for clarification?

Mr. RHODES: That was with respect to the first two items, namely, 315 and 315a.

Mr. YOUNG: I am dealing with item 315, and I find there these words which are not in the original item, "carbons of a class or kind not produced in Canada when imported for use in the manufacture of dry batteries and dry cells." Why are those words added?

Mr. RHODES: They had free entry before.

Mr. YOUNG: The words, "of a class or kind not produced in Canada" did not appear in the old item.

Mr. RHODES: That is quite true.

Mr. YOUNG: Why are they inserted here?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will observe that there is an increase in the duty under item 316 which follows. The wording here ensures that there will be continued free entry—

Mr. YOUNG: On certain ones.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, of a class or kind not made in Canada. The others are of a class or kind made in Canada, and there is an increase in duty.

Mr. YOUNG: Hitherto these things have come in free, all of them. Now the minister is going to allow free entry only to those of a class or kind not made in Canada. Will he tell us why those words have been inserted in the item?

Mr. RHODES: I can give no additional information except to say that these articles which hitherto have come in free will continue to come in free, with the exception of those on which we place a duty under the next item.

Mr. YOUNG: But the minister must have had some reason for putting these words in.

At six o'clock the speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

VANCOUVER, VICTORIA AND EASTERN-NORTHERN PACIFIC AGREEMENT

The house resumed from Monday, April 24, consideration in committee of Bill No. 48, to confirm an agreement between the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—Mr. McDade.—Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

On section 1—Agreement ratified and confirmed.

Mr. MANION: With regard to this section, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer. It is in accord with the remarks made by the Prime Minister the last time this bill was up for discussion in the house, and is designed to prevent this railway from abandoning any line or service without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners. This amendment is also in accord with the amendments which we propose to move with regard to the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific bill, which is now before the house. I move that the section be amended by adding the following:

provided, however, that no abandonment of the portion of the line of railroad referred to in the said agreement shall be made without the approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Customs tariff—315. Carbons or carbon electrodes over three inches in circumference or outside measurement and not exceeding thirty-five inches in circumference or outside measurement; carbons of a class or kind not produced in Canada, when imported for use in the manufacture of dry batteries and dry cells: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. YOUNG: Under this item certain carbons and carbon electrodes were admitted free, but now a smaller number will be so admitted; the words "of a class or kind not produced in Canada" have been added. When the house rose at six o'clock I was arguing that these words must have been put there for a purpose, and I should like the minister to tell us exactly what that purpose was.

Mr. RHODES: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the carbons which are affected by these tariff items are manufactured by one company only, as I understand it.

Mr. YOUNG: What is that company?

Mr. RHODES: The Canadian National Carbon Company. The effect of items 315 and 315a is merely to maintain the position as it exists to-day, namely, that all carbons will be admitted free of duty with the exception of those which are now subject to taxation under item 316, which follows. That is to say, a duty is imposed upon certain of the larger types of carbons under the intermediate and general tariffs. I may say to my hon. friend that so far as I am aware there has been no opposition to these proposed tariff changes from any quarter.

Mr. YOUNG: They are only coming to life. A certain company now undertakes to make certain carbons in Canada, and because of that the classes of carbons which they undertake to make are to be excluded by a higher duty. Can the minister tell us what quantities of these carbons we have been importing in the past?

Mr. RHODES: Is my hon. friend's question directed towards all the items or merely towards the particular item before the committee? In order to answer the question fully I may say that under item 315 our total importations last year amounted to $235,600. Those came entirely from the United States, and of course they will continue to come in free as heretofore. Under item 315a, which covers carbons more than 35 inches in circumference, last year we imported goods to the value of $43,000, entirely from the United States. The importations coming under the classification contained in item 316 amounted last year to $72,000, and of that sum $46,000 came from the United States and $25,000 from Germany.

Mr. RALSTON: Could the minister give us the weight?

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I have not that information. The production in Canada of carbons of all kinds, that is to say, carbons which would come under these three items to which I have referred, amounted last year to $1,500,000, so the committee will observe that this is a very substantial industry in Canada. That manufacture was confined largely, if not entirely, to the class of goods coming under item 316.

Mr. YOUNG: And now this company is going to extend its operations and make other kinds of carbons, so we put them under a duty. The minister told us the total importations under items 315 and 315a, but evidently part of those importations is to be left on the free list. Has the minister any figures as to the percentage of those importations which would be affected by this change?

Mr. RHODES: The best answer I could give to that question is contained in the relative figures I have just submitted to the committee. I may point out to my hon. friend and to the committee that the company which manufactures this large volume of carbons coming under the classification contained in item 316 is also a very heavy importer of the class of carbons contained under items 315 and 315a.

Mr. YOUNG: Naturally we would expect that the company which is asking for high protection on the article it has to sell would want its raw materials to come in duty free. The minister did not need to tell us that.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—315a. Carbons or carbon electrodes exceeding thirty-five inches in circumference or outside measurement: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—316. Electric light and arc carbons, pointed or not, and contact carbons, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff 22½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent; and, per pound: British preferential tariff, ...; Intermediate tariff, 20 cents; general tariff, 20 cents.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—327. Spectacles; eyeglasses, and ground or finished spectacles or eyeglass lenses, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent: intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: There is no change in this. This is the parent item, and it is named for the purpose of providing for the next item, which is free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—327a. Contact eyeglasses or lenses, designed to be worn in direct contact with the human eye, under the lid: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: This is a new item which admits free of duty a class of lenses known as contact lenses, manufactured solely in Germany. It is attached to the eyeball under the lid. Naturally it is of very delicate and highly scientific construction and has the effect of enabling those who are practically blind to see at least partially; and in some cases it restores sight to a remarkable degree. The item is included largely on compassionate grounds.

Mr. YOUNG: Suppose some Canadian grinder offers to make them in Canada: will the minister give us an assurance that the duty will not be put on at some time in the future?

Mr. RHODES: I could not give an undertaking to bind future governments or parliaments, but I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that there is no possibility whatever of an industry starting up in Canada to manufacture a unique lens of this kind. Obviously it does not lend itself to quantity production. These glasses cost $53 and are almost entirely handmade by highly skilled experts. So far as one can forecast the future, I think I am safe in saying that there is not the slightest possibility of any tariff being imposed on this item in the near future.

Mr. JACOBS: Is Germany the only country in which this article is being manufactured?

Mr. RHODES: All that have been imported heretofore have come from Germany.

Mr. JACOBS: Is there any other place in the world from which they could come?

Mr. RHODES: If any other place makes them they can come in.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—353. Aluminum and alloys thereof, crude or semi-fabricated, viz.: Pigs, ingots, blocks, notch bars, slabs, billets and blooms: bars, rods and wire: angles, channels, beams, tees and other rolled or drawn sections and shapes; pipes and tubes; plates, sheets and strips, including circles; leaf or foil, less than ·005 inch in thickness, plain or embossed, with or without backing; wire and cable, twisted or stranted, reinforced with steel or not; aluminum powder: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is the n.o.p. portion of the parent item. It enables us to deal with item 353a. We found that there was not available in Great Britain a sufficient quantity of aluminum scrap to provide for the needs of the Canadian industry and therefore, after a conference with the authorities of the British government, it was agreed that we should eliminate 353a from the conference item, so that it is now restored to the free list, under the British preference, under the intermediate and under the general tariff.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—353a. Aluminum scrap: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.
Provided, that nothing shall be deemed to be aluminum scrap except waste or refuse aluminum, fit only to be remelted.

Mr. RALSTON: In connection with the conference items, in respect of which adjustments have been made, is any corresponding adjustment contemplated in the British tariff—I do not mean with regard to this particular item but so far as items in the British tariff are concerned. Are there items in the British tariff that are being adjusted as against us?

Mr. RHODES: There are compensating adjustments which are either contained in the provisions laid down in the budget or which we shall move as we proceed. I might mention telephone apparatus, for instance. That was free under the British preference in accordance with the conference agreement, but Great Britain has now agreed to our restoring the duty on it.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the minister mean that there are adjustments within our own tariff—compensating adjustments?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: I was asking, however, whether Great Britain was making any changes in her tariff to compensate us for such adjustments as we are making.

Mr. RHODES: No, except to harmonize with these.

Mr. YOUNG: I would point out to the minister that this is a manufacturers' item. The raw material of a certain class of manufacturers is admitted free whereas it used to carry a duty of thirty per cent. Is there any corresponding reduction in the consumers' item?

Mr. RHODES: The hon. gentleman says that this is a manufacturers' item. Of course, it is available to anyone who wishes to use aluminum scrap.

Mr. YOUNG: But no one will buy scrap unless he intends to manufacture something out of it.

Mr. RHODES: Nor will he otherwise buy pigs or ingots or any further finished forms.

Mr. YOUNG: But that is not the question. We are reducing the duty on the raw material used by certain manufacturers. Are we at the same time making a corresponding reduction in the duty on the finished product made from that raw material?

Mr. RHODES: We are now dealing only with aluminum scrap.

Mr. YOUNG: Are we going to deal with the finished product, after the scrap is made into some utensil?

Mr. RHODES: I have no doubt parliament will decide to do so from time to time as occasion arises.

Mr. RALSTON: As the tariff board recommends.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—366b. Parts of watch movements, finished or unfinished: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Provided, that when imported under the intermediate or general tariffs, the duty on plates, designed to hold in place four or more wheels or other moving parts shall not be less than, per plate: British preferential tariff, ...; intermediate tariff, 10 cents; general tariff, 15 cents.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What is the change?

Mr. RHODES: This enlarges the item, widening the opportunity for importation under the free list. Hitherto the item as it originally appeared in the conference agreement dealt only with hot rolled stainless steel. This enlarges the item by admitting cold rolled and highly polished steel.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—385a. Sheets, plates, hoop, band or strip, of rust, acid or heat resisting steels, hot or cold rolled, polished or not, valued at not less than five cents per pound: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409j. Fanning mills; peavviners; corn husking machines; threshing machine separators, including wind stackers, baggers and self feeders therefor; complete parts of all the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This is only a portion of the parent item. It appears to enable us to deal with 409r, which follows, one removed.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409q. Complete parts for repairs, under regulations prescribed by the minister:

(i) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff items 409c, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409j, 409o, 409p and 439c: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

(ii) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff item 409b: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 7½ per cent; general tariff, 7½ per cent.

(iii) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff item 409d: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 6 per cent; general tariff, 6 per cent.

(iv) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff items 409h and 409n: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

(v) For the implements or machinery enumerated in tariff item 409k: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 17½ per cent.

Mr. BROWN: This item, 409q, we had occasion to bring to the attention of the house before. It deals with repair parts of agricultural machinery. It has been discussed in the house on different occasions, it was brought up last session and again this session. It contains one very interesting stipulation:

Complete parts for repairs, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

I have no doubt the house would like to have an assurance that these regulations will not be of the kind passed last year, about May 25, when a distinction was drawn between repair parts imported by the makers of implements and those that were imported by other persons, notably the companies in Winnipeg that undertook to import parts from the United States from those concerns that make repair parts for all implements. This was proved to be a very serious matter last year. It meant that the price of these parts was increased to the consumer here during the season. I am told that in some districts in Saskatchewan dealers failed to provide themselves with repair parts and farmers were put to great inconvenience. The regulation passed last year was one of the most iniquitous I have known. It made a distinction between two classes of dealers in the same goods. We are happy to know that the protests made against this regulation were effective. This item contains the words, "under regulations prescribed by the minister," and I would like to get the assurance of the minister that no regulation similar to the one passed last year will be introduced in connection with this item.

Mr. RHODES: The purpose of this item is to eliminate the provision which was included in the item some three years ago limiting its operation to a period of time. The time for the application of this item was extended upon two different occasions and if the present item was not included it would mean that higher rates of duty would have prevailed after March of this year. Our intention is to make permanent the present existing low rates. In reply to the hon. member for Lisgar may I say that the words, "under regulations prescribed by the minister" appear in innumerable items in the tariff. These words have appeared in this particular item for a number of years and they were in the item during the administration of the government which I assume my hon. friend supported upon occasions.

Mr. BROWN: They did not pass the regulations which this government did.

Mr. RHODES: I could not give any undertaking as to what regulations will be prescribed by the present or any future Minister of Finance. However, I can assure my hon. friend that there is nothing sinister in the item and I have no doubt it will be administered to his satisfaction.

Mr. BROWN: After the trouble the government got into last year, I am sure they will not repeat their action.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not as much confidence in the government as has the hon. member for Lisgar. The Minister of National Revenue can do anything he likes as far as the tariff is concerned and there is no finality in any of the regulations which may be passed by the government. During the past few years the farmers have been buying very few new implements; they are tinkering and patching up the old machinery. It was little short of a crime to shoot up the tariff on repair parts the way it was done last year. Even after the rates were reduced, they were still ridiculously high. Some of the dealers in the smaller villages were unable to carry stocks and any repair parts ordered had to be sent from Regina or Winnipeg. They were sent by express and with the express charges added to the duty it made the cost of the repairs almost prohibitive. In some cases it would have been almost cheaper to buy a new machine. I warn the government that if there is any more of that kind of monkeying there will be a row all over Canada. If that kind of thing is repeated the government will need to tie their heads on their shoulders if they do not want something to happen.

Mr. RYCKMAN: In view of what has been said, I feel I should say a word or two in answer. The speaker who first introduced this subject seems to be treating matters regardless of the facts. I am surprised that a gentleman with his past history and the knowledge which we know he possesses should make statements which are wholly untrue. There was no regulation passed that had a different application to one from that which it had to another, and I defy my hon. friend to produce such a regulation. In reply to the former Minister of Agriculture I would say that his friends out there did not want to buy anything else but goods made in the United States.

Mr. YOUNG: That is all nonsense.

Mr. RYCKMAN: One firm wrote to me and told me that they had sent out 1,800 circulars. What did those circulars say? They stated that because of the action taken by the government they had been compelled to increase their prices ten per cent and knock off the cash discount which had previously been given. That was an erroneous statement. What happened? As soon as this action was finally taken an hon. member of this house asked the government to refund the money which had been paid in duty. After they had said that they had taken care of this matter in the manner I have indicated, the plea was put forward by an hon. member that the government should return the money which had been paid in duty.

Mr. BROWN: I had nothing to do with the action taken by any of these companies. I have not the slightest doubt that commercial companies would take such action as that indicated by the Minister of National Revenue. The minister has stated that I made a statement which was not in accordance with the facts. I want to know what that statement was. We will have to go into this matter a little more fully. We are all aware of the course which was pursued with regard to the duties on repair parts for agricultural implements. We know that the application of the higher rates of duty was postponed from time to time. About March 1, or some time early last session, the hon. member for South Battleford brought this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister. At that time the Prime Minister gave a somewhat discourteous answer. He intimated that the hon. member should know better than to ask a question which could be answered only after the budget had been brought down.

Mr. GOTT: Is that discourteous?

Mr. YOUNG: It is typical.

Mr. BROWN: The higher rates of duty were to be imposed on April 1 and about that date the hon. member for South Battleford asked the Minister of Finance for information regarding the higher rates of duties. The Minister of Finance stated that he was happy to inform the hon. member that the matter was being taken care of by order in council. A few days later the budget came down and the Minister of Finance stated that there was only one change in the tariff. He referred to this particular item and indicated that the lower rates of duty would be in effect for another year. We accepted that as satisfactory. But some time about May 25, so we are informed, while this house was still in session, an order went forth from some department of government, either finance or inland revenue, that those lower rates of duties should apply only when repairs were imported from firms that actually made the implements and the higher rates of duty were imposed upon all repair parts produced by companies across the line which make a specialty of manufacturing repair parts.

I had occasion to buy some ploughshares. They are perhaps one of the most important items that come into this particular list. When these companies began to supply the farmers with ploughshares, we were able to get for about $5 ploughshares for which we formerly paid $10 a pair. The dealer in my town, who, I believe, is a supporter of this government—and I do not know whether he will be at the next election; I do not think he will—along with other dealers brought the matter to my attention and the fact was that the price of ploughshares was raised, I cannot at the moment say how much. What we object to—and the statement I have made is in accordance with the fact—is that the high rates of duty were imposed upon repair parts coming from the United States when they were imported from companies manufacturing repair parts, but they were not imposed when the repair parts were imported from companies that made the machines for which the repair parts were intended. If I have made any statement that is not in accordance with fact, I want the Minister of National Revenue to tell me what that statement is. I have stated the case exactly as it exists.

The matter was brought to my attention by a Winnipeg firm the head of which, I may say, has also been a supporter of this government. I have known him for many years as a Conservative. As soon as I got his letter, I wrote to the minister about it. I did not receive a reply for some time, but later I got an answer stating that the government was considering the question. Before I came to the house last fall, I went to the head of the firm in Winnipeg and asked whether the matter was exactly as he had represented it to me in the early part of the summer. I found that no change had been made; that the high rates of duty were still being imposed and collected. On the first opportunity I had I presented the matter to the house and we had the satisfaction of knowing that two days afterward the obnoxious regulation was cancelled. These are the facts of the case. My object in speaking of it now is just to ensure that such a regulation will not be passed again, and that no distinction will be made between two makers of ploughshares or anything else. Have I made any statement that is not in accordance with facts?

Mr. RYCKMAN: If the hon. member will sit down, I will tell him.

[Mr. Brown.]

Mr. BROWN: The minister took occasion to make a somewhat sneering remark that from what he knew of me he would not have thought I would make such a statement. That was altogether uncalled for.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The statement to which I referred is, I have no doubt, within the recollection of the house, and if not, it will be found in Hansard to-morrow. He said that regulations were made by the administration which had different applications to different people, and some were privileged and some were not. I say that that is not correct.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If I heard the minister aright, he has not made an explanation at all, and he certainly made a gross misstatement a little while ago when he said that I and my friends insisted on buying our repairs from the United States. That is a contemptible libel. I wish I had stronger language to use and could get past the chairman with it; and I want it to be considered as having been used. The farmers of the west, prior to this government coming into power, were more and more buying agricultural machinery in Canada. There was such a low tariff we could afford to do this and good feeling had developed between the farmers of the west and the farm implement manufacturers who were doing well, under a low duty. This tribe across the floor, after raising the duty on implements all along the line to 25 per cent and promising to keep the duty on repairs down to the old Liberal duty as if that were a great act of grace and compassion to the farmers, did not even keep that promise. They put the duty on repair parts up to the same rate as that on the original machinery. Then the Minister of National Revenue, after his own colleagues had apparently disciplined him into reducing the duty by a change in regulations tells us that we are making untruthful statements when, as a matter of fact, if he would examine himself he would not have to go out of his own seat to find that it was he who was making untruthful statements. I do not know what else to do except to go across the floor and see what I can do further by way of persuasion, with my hon. friend. Those of us who have had to lose our hides in buying farm machinery repairs know the difference between 25 per cent and 15 per cent, and we know the difference between six per cent and 25 per cent on the original article; yet they try to mislead the people outside and my friends to my left will tell us that there is no difference between the two parties with respect to the tariff. One is just four times as high as the other on nearly all the farm machinery we use. We thought we were getting a little mite of a concession that one might put in one's eye and see none the worse for it, with regard to repairs; then the government took that away and tried to flim-flam the people that they did not do such a thing. It was his own colleagues plus himself, since the house met last October, that passed the regulation to lower the duty on repairs and thus remove the grievance complained of. The farmers of the west, in these times of depression, do not care where the repair parts are made; very few know where they are made; all they know is that this government socks them every time with high duties and hard regulations difficult to comply with.

Did the minister tell the hon. member for Lisgar wherein he made a misstatement? No; he gives us just the usual mumbling reply, trying to get past, but, if I know anything about the matter, he is not going to get past this time.

Mr. BROWN: Not a member from Manitoba on that side will say that I have not stated the facts, because they have had representations from these machine companies just as I have, and I have no doubt they have made representations on the subject to the minister. I am not going to submit to the remark that I made a statement which was not in accordance with facts. I have stated the facts. Will the minister himself say that the duty on repair parts coming from the United States was not 25 per cent? No; he will not make the statement. Well, that is all the statement I made and the distinction was between the two classes of dealers I have indicated.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The statement I made was explicit; it was in answer to the hon. member for Lisgar's remark that regulations with a different application to different companies had been made by the Minister of National Revenue. That is contrary to the fact.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the fact?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Anything that was done by the Minister of National Revenue had application to everybody who came under any such regulation. If Hansard is consulted tomorrow, it will be found that the hon. member for Lisgar made the statement I have said he did.

With regard to the ex-Minister of Agriculture, I must say that he certainly gets away with a great deal, but it is a pleasure to listen to him. He occupies a unique position in the house. He can make any statement, and sometimes those of us who cannot possibly agree with any part of what he is saying are pleased indeed to hear him carry on something that is in the nature of, well, I will not say buffoonery, but if anyone else can think of some word that is parliamentary to describe it, I will endorse it. The point is clear that those who are interested in this matter wanted to get their parts from the United States. The fact that the item is in the tariff shows that. The hon. ex-Minister of Agriculture denies that, although the item could have no application to anything else.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You could not get them anywhere else. They are manufactured only in the United States.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Of course, but the ex-Minister of Agriculture does not take that into consideration at all. He gives us a pleasant harangue which we can enjoy because there is humour in it if there is not sense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We cannot say the same of yours.

Mr. BROWN: Let us take a concrete case. I have a John Deere plough. I could buy shares from the United States made by this company which makes a specialty of manufacturing parts for $5 a pair; I am giving approximate figures. If I buy John Deere shares in Canada from a John Deere company I pay about $10 a pair. That is the situation that we objected to. The 25 per cent duty was levied against this cheaper class of shares which we have found in our experience serve our purpose just as well as the higher priced shares. The same is true of binder canvas and a number of other items, but ploughshares are the biggest item in the list. The minister may quibble about the duty being applied to all people. Well, I suppose that is true of all people importing exactly the same kind of goods. But here we have two classes of importers or dealers who are handling repair parts and in each case the parts serve the purpose for which they were intended, but in one case a duty of 25 per cent is applied and in the other a duty of 6 per cent. So the Minister of National Revenue cannot get away with any quibbling of that kind.

Mr. MULLINS: I took up with the Minister of National Revenue the matter which the hon. member for Lisgar has mentioned long before he had anything to do with it.

Mr. BROWN: You did not get any results.

Mr. MULLINS: I did. You see the results to-day. I know to whom my hon. friend is referring. It is Mr. Ackland. The hon. member for Lisgar is trying to take all the credit.

As a matter of fact the farmers of the west are buying agricultural machinery cheaper to-day by 25 per cent than they could buy it under hon. gentlemen opposite. What more evidence do you want? By the way, when the hon. member for Lisgar talks about "shears" does he mean ploughshares? Shares is the right pronunciation, and I am glad to put him right. If he does not understand it, let him look it up in the dictionary. The gentleman to whom my hon. friend referred was a Conservative and he came to me in the Carlton Club and told me that a certain firm was manufacturing these parts in the United States, and that they could be supplied in this country. I brought the matter, as I have said, to the attention of the minister and he was kind enough to remedy the situation, and now my hon. friend from Lisgar is trying to take the credit for it. He wants to go back to Lisgar and parade as a low tariff champion, that he has done something for agricultural implements. Why, Mr. Chairman, forty years ago when the duty was 35 per cent I bought a binder for $120 or $130, as did many hon. gentlemen and they were cheaper then even with that duty than you can buy them to-day. What does it matter what the duty is as long as you can buy the implements cheaper? I repeat, you can buy them cheaper to-day than you could under hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BROWN: The minister must be praying to be saved from his friends. The hon. member for Marquette said that he went to the minister with a grievance and that the minister remedied it. What was the grievance and what was the remedy? That is what we want to know. As a matter of fact, the remedy came two days after I brought the matter to the attention of the house last fall.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. gentleman has asked me a question and I want to answer it. The remedy was that Mr. Ackland came to see me, and I think my hon. friend from Lisgar will agree that he came to me before he came to him. I brought the matter to the attention of the minister and that situation was remedied, and to-day you can buy ploughshares cheaper than you could years ago when my hon. friends opposite were in power.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is no question that the facts were as stated. Repair parts were to come in under a low rate of duty, 6, 7 and 10 per cent. Unquestionably the duty was so arranged by regulation that the low rates applied to the manufacturers of certain lines of goods, but certain dealers termed pirate dealers had to pay the higher rate of duty, 25 per cent, on ploughshares, binder canvas and other articles. There is no doubt at all that that increased the price. Complaints were made by many farmers from western Canada that the price had been increased by at least the difference in the duty. Naturally the matter was brought to the attention of the government and finally it was rectified. As to who deserves the credit I do not know or care. A great many members from the west, Conservative, Liberal and Progressive, were all familiar with the facts. I was one of those who sent a wire to the Prime Minister, and others did, and perhaps action was brought about as the cumulative effect of pressure from all sides and by the irrefutable facts themselves. The facts were as has been stated. The situation was brought about by a regulation, and the result was a higher price, and every farmer in Canada knew it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it has been amply confirmed that there was a grievance, and so far as I am concerned, I am willing that the hon. member for Marquette should get the credit for redressing that grievance by going to somebody and he going to somebody else, and finally to the government. The reason we are bringing this question up to-night is that we want no more monkey-shining of that nature, either with repairs or anything else. What happened was that after we got a statement in the house assuring us that we would get a low rate on repairs, after we went home a higher rate was applied. We do not want to have that kind of business repeated. Apparently the Minister of National Revenue thought that what I was saying a few minutes ago was an attempt at humour. I never felt less like being humorous in my life. Apparently my hon. friend does not appreciate when I feel like going to the extremest lengths possible in trying to get a little horse sense filtered through his cranium on agricultural matters. I hope the Minister of Finance will take his colleagues in charge and if the government are going to let him run at large much longer, at least let them give him the hint that he must not repeat his unwarranted action of last year.

Mr. DONNELLY: There is no doubt whatever that there was a grievance in regard to the importation of repair parts for agricultural implements. The hon. member for Marquette has admitted that there was one, and we all know it. With regard to the manufacture of implements, there are two classes of cases. We have in western Canada farmers who came in there from the United States, good farmers, and who brought their machinery with them—not that they wanted to buy machinery made in the United States rather than that made in Canada, but they had this machinery and brought it with them. There are hundreds of them in my constituency. Many of these old implement concerns in the United States have gone out of business, and therefore owners of the machinery are not able to get repairs from the parent company. But many companies have started up all through the United States making repair parts for different machines. These men could not get repair parts from these manufacturers in the United States without paying the higher rate of duty. If you had a John Deere plough, as the hon. member for Lisgar mentioned, you could order a ploughshare from the John Deere company in the United Staes and get it in at the lower rate of duty, but if you ordered it from one of these repair part concerns you had to pay the higher rate. That was the grievance, because hundreds of people could not order from the parent company; there was no parent company and they were obliged to order from these repair part companies. Therefore, as the hon. member for Lisgar said, the regulations did not apply equally, one man paid a low rate of duty and another had to pay a high rate. So when the hon. member for Lisgar said that regulations were passed by this government that did not apply to all people alike, he said what was absolutely true. That is what Mr. Ackland referred to. He handles these repair parts, not for any line company but for the different agencies in the United States, and he was anxious to get this lower rate of duty so that he could sell on the same low cost as before. What we are asking for to-night is that the minister will see that no such regulation is made effective again, whereby some have to pay a high rate of duty and others a low rate. This regulation continued in force all last summer; the grievance was not remedied until the fall when repair parts were not needed. It is in the summer time we do the farming, not in the winter.

Mr. YOUNG: The Minister of National Revenue made a statement that we on this side of the house cannot allow to go unchallenged. He stated that our friends in the west wanted to make all their purchases in the United States. The effect of the regulation that he put into force last year was not to stop the importation of goods from the United States, but to say to the farmers of the west: If you want to buy goods imported from the United States you must buy them from certain favoured individuals. A certain charmed circle were given the benefit of the lower rate; everyone outside that circle was compelled to pay the higher rate. Those belonging to the charmed circle were charging a price nearly twice as great as the others were charging. The minister had no right to make the statement he did, and we resent it. We resent the attempt to force our purchases into the hands of particular manufacturers.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. gentleman is wrong. Manufacturers of agricultural implements in the United States can always bring in their repair parts at the lower rate. These ploughshares imported by Mr. Ackland were sold by the blacksmiths throughout the country and sold cheaper. I do not want the hon. member to take all the credit for that, because I think I had something to do with it, in fact I think the Minister of National Revenue will bear me out when I say that I had considerable to do with it. However, if it is any satisfaction for the member for Lisgar to take the credit and to get a few votes, it does not bother me.

An hon. MEMBER: Why didn't you start earlier?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask the hon. member for Marquette one question? Why didn't the hon. member have the minister rectify it before the winter if he was so much interested in the farmers getting cheaper implements? The hon. member for Marquette knows that if you buy repair parts from these independent companies you can buy them at least seventy-five per cent cheaper than you could from the companies which make the machines. The farmer was buying these parts from independent companies who do nothing else but make repair parts, for the simple reason that he could not afford to pay the prices the parent companies were charging. Yet this government and the Minister of National Revenue put a duty of twenty-five per cent on those cheap repairs, which the farmer needs to-day more than ever because the prices of his commodities have gone away down, and allowed repairs to come in from the parent companies at six per cent duty. Yet my hon. friend from Marquette, who wants to take credit for having this duty removed, allowed it to go on all summer. If my hon. friend from Marquette has as much influence with the minister as he claims, he should have used it throughout the summer and not allowed this injustice to continue for six or seven months.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. I brought it to the attention of the minister and it did not take all summer. It has been remedied. I want to ask these two hon. gentlemen who are championing cheap implements if they are not now buying implements ten or twenty per cent, yes thirty per cent cheaper than they were before?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I will answer the question if you will let me.

Mr. MULLINS: This talk about the tariff bogy is all for votes; there is nothing to it. We are buying implements cheaper to-day than we ever did under the regime of the hon. gentlemen, any time from 1822 to 1930.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Since this government has been in power the farmer has no purchasing power to buy implements, and he has to buy repairs.

An hon. MEMBER: Where? Canada or the United States?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where they make them.

Mr. MULLINS: I realize it just as well as hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then you should not be sitting over there.

Mr. MULLINS: You are just playing to Hansard, trying to get a lot into Hansard to go to the country with. I will not stand for that. Let us be fair and not play that game any longer. I don't care two straws about getting on Hansard, but I want to play fair. I am as much a champion of cheaper implements and of aid to the farmer in western Canada as either of the hon. gentlemen opposite who spoke.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for Marquette knows that the duty on these implements was equalized in the month of October, doesn't he?

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. gentleman knows very well it has been remedied, does he not? Will he answer the question, yes or no?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Yes, it has been remedied.

Mr. MULLINS: Then what more do you want? That is all there is to it.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I can say to the Minister of National Revenue and to the hon. member for Marquette, that it was rectified in October, but the duty was imposed all summer, when we needed repairs. I am pleading with the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue and the hon. member for Marquette not to allow the same trick to be played this summer. That is the point. I hope my hon. friend from Marquette will see the Minister of National Revenue before he goes back to his constituency, or see him now, and tell him that if he ever does that sort of thing again he will cross the floor and join the C.C.F.

Mr. MULLINS: The hon. member has taken too much on himself. I want to ask what he was doing during the eight years his party was in power. To-day in western Canada we have cheaper machinery than we have had for several years

Mr. BROWN: I should like to make an explanation, in case any person might accuse me of making a wrong statement. I want it to be understood that the ploughshares to which I referred are not the same type of shares mentioned by my hon. friend. One is called the soft centre share, and this is supposed to be the best ploughshare, but the farmers have found from actual experience that the crucible share, which is imported from the United States, serves their purpose equally well. That is the share to which I referred, and I want that understood in case it might be thought that I was referring to the same implement.

Mr. GOTT: After this extended controversy with regard to repairs to farm implements, Mr. Chairman, in view of the unemployment problem in Canada I should like to ask the minister if some means could not be devised whereby all this repairing could be done in Canada by Canadians.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409r. Weighers for use as parts of threshing machine separators, and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—417. Machinery and complete parts thereof, and structural iron and steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported for use exclusively in the construction or equipment of factories for the manufacture of sugar from beet-root, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the change here?

Mr. RHODES: The only change is that it confines the free items to those of a class or kind not made in Canada.

Mr. YOUNG: Once again our old friend "of a class or kind not made in Canada" appears in the tariff. If it is not in an item to-day it appears in it to-morrow; it seems to spring up in an item overnight, as the manna appeared to fall from heaven—and I think this is manna to some people. Would the minister tell us who will benefit by this change?

Mr. RHODES: I might point out that last year the total importations coming under this item amounted to only $8,500, but the provision is placed here so that dumping may not take place to the detriment of certain Canadian industries which can supply these commodities. I have particular reference to certain continental competition.

Mr. YOUNG: Must we pass an act to provide for the elimination of competition to the extent of only $8,500?

Mr. RHODES: This is to prevent the threatened importation of slaughtered goods to the detriment of Canadian industry.

Mr. YOUNG: That is not a satisfactory explanation. A gentleman once appeared before the tariff board wanting a higher duty, I think on enamelled ware. When asked why he wanted it he said because the goods were being dumped into Canada from Japan, but when the board looked up the importations from Japan they amounted to something less than $10. Surely this small importation is not sufficient justification for this change.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What rate of duty will prevail here?

Mr. RHODES: If it came under the machinery item the duty would be 15 per cent, 27½ per cent and 35 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—428d. Magnetos and complete parts thereof, when imported by manufacturers of internal combustion engines, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such internal combustion engines, in their own factories: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: This reduces the duty, which at present is 15 per cent, 25 per cent and 30 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: Is there any corresponding reduction in the consumers' item?

Mr. RHODES: This is a consumers item.

Mr. YOUNG: No, this is only for manufacturers.

Mr. RHODES: It will reduce the cost of the engine to the extent that the cost of the magneto is reduced.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who asked for the change?

Mr. RHODES: The manufacturers of internal combustion engines asked for it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But the duty will remain the same to anyone else?

Mr. RHODES: They will be no good to anyone else.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, magnetos are used on all internal combustion engines. We are buying magnetos for our engines all the time.

Mr. RHODES: Surely my hon. friend does not object to this reduction.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, but I should like to see it extended to everyone. It extends only to importations from Great Britain now.

Mr. RHODES: No, the reduction is all along the line. Under the old item the intermediate duty was 25 per cent and the general duty 30 per cent. It is now reduced.

Mr. YOUNG: But that is not the whole explanation, surely. It is true that the reduction is made across the board to the manufacturer, but what about the private individual who wants to put a new magneto on his engine, and what about the man who buys the engine after the manufacturer finishes with it?

Mr. RHODES: He should pay something to the treasury.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is this confined to the manufacturer? Is it a fact that anyone who wants this repair will not receive the same consideration?

Mr. RHODES: Certainly. There are hundreds of items in the tariff whose provisions are confined entirely to the manufacturers. Those items have been there for years; there is nothing new about it.

Mr. VALLANCE: But that does not justify it. I am sorry I was not here a moment ago, but we had the same principle in connection with farm implement repairs. I do not think it is fair, and I wish to lodge a protest.

Mr. RHODES: I think my hon. friend is in error with regard to repair parts.

Mr. VALLANCE: That was the case under the arrangement last year.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—438b. Automobiles for conveying passengers only, n.o.p., valued at retail at place of production, when new, with standard equipment complete, at not more than twelve hundred dollars each; motor trucks with standard equipment (not for use on railways or tramways), not to include machines or other articles mounted thereon or attached thereto for purposes other than for loading or unloading the truck; chassis for motor vehicles specified in this item: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: What is the change here?

Mr. RHODES: We are widening the item. Hitherto it was restricted to cars for carrying goods only. Now we are removing the restriction; we are adding to the purposes for which cars may be imported.

Mr. RALSTON: This covers cars for conveying passengers only.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—438d. Horns, distributors, instrument board lamps, oil gauges, gasoline gauges and parts thereof, thermostats, oil filters, carburetors, purifiers for oil, purifiers for air, lock washers, speedometers and parts thereof, vacuum tanks, fuel pumps and parts thereof, composite gaskets of metal and asbestos, steering wheels and rims therefor, one piece welded axle housings, machined or not, instrument bezel assemblies, dash heat indicators, electric ignition locks, steering gear locks, transmission locks, or combinations of such locks, and parts thereof, cylinder lock barrels and keys, bearing spring shackles and automatic radiator shutter assemblies, ammeters, radiator shells, body cowls, and body stampings of metal, including front, rear, side and door stampings, not further manufactured than welded or riveted for shipping purposes, all the foregoing being of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a, 438b, 438c, 438e and 538f, for use only as original equipment in the manufacture of motor vehicles enumerated in tariff items 438a, 438b, 438c and 438f: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: There is an amendment to be moved to this section, which will widen the item and reduce the tariff. The amendment is the insertion of the words "and parts thereof" after the words "spring shackles." Under the provisions of the tariff now spring shackles may be imported complete, but if you wish to import parts you pay a higher rate of duty. This amendment is designed to permit parts to come in at a lower rate of duty.

Mr. YOUNG: To manufacturers only.

Mr. RHODES: The whole item is a manufacturers' item. It is a manufacturers' item in the tariff now, as it has been for some time.

Mr. VALLANCE: What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Ryckman moves that the item be amended by inserting the words "and parts thereof" after the words "spring shackles" in line 12 thereof.

Mr RHODES: This item is included to permit the parts of spring shackles to come in at a lower rate of duty. The budget provision enlarged the old item 438d in four or five places. It permitted the free entry across the board of an enlarged list of articles. For instance, parts of gasoline gauges are added; fuel pumps and parts thereof are added; the word "metal" is substituted for the word "copper". Heretofore the parts admitted free were confined to copper; now we use the word "metal" which includes a wider range of commodities. Again, free admission has heretofore been limited to ignition locks, but under the modern development of the motor car there has been devised a lock which is not only an ignition but a transmission lock as well, and because of the change it would consequently be subject to duty. We are now making the new type free. This amendment deals not only with shackles but the parts thereof so that the item has been very considerably amended along the lines of free entry.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Suppose I want to buy one of the articles mentioned for a car I own; do I come within the same category as the manufacturer?

Mr. RHODES: This item is precisely in the same terms as it has stood for some years

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Suppose I own a car that needs one of these repair parts, one of the locks to which the minister refers. What rate of duty should I have to pay in comparison with the manufacturer?

Mr. RHODES: If the hon. member imported the part he would have to pay rates varying from 25 to 37½ per cent according to the classification.

Mr. VALLANCE: Suppose I imported one of these parts from a foreign country. Would it cost me more ultimately than if I bought the part from the manufacturer who is allowed to bring it in free?

Mr. RHODES: I cannot answer that, because I do not know what the manufacturer would charge; but assuming that the hon. gentleman could not purchase it from the manufacturer he would have to pay the duty on the part.

Mr. VALLANCE: It says, when imported by the manufacturer. Does that permit him to import a part for one implement when he wishes to sell it as a repair part?

Mr. RHODES: The provision is intended to permit the manufacturer to import solely for the purpose of assembling. I believe this provision was inserted as an amendment in the tariff as far back as 1926.

Mr. VALLANCE: Suppose I buy a part for repairs; has the manufacturer the same privilege of bringing in the part under this item to supply it to me?

Mr. RHODES: No; the intention was that it should be used in manufacturing. The item so states.

Mr. RALSTON: What is the difference between this item and the old item in 1932?

Mr. RHODES: I have already enumerated the five changes that are made but I will repeat them. Heretofore gasoline gauges, in line 2, could be imported duty free, but not the parts of gasoline gauges. We now enlarge the item by permitting parts as well as gauges themselves to come in. In line 5 we have something entirely new: we permit the free entry of fuel pumps and parts thereof. Heretofore gaskets of copper were admitted free, and we now enlarge the item by substituting for the word "copper" the word "metal," which deals with a wider range of commodities. As regards steering gear locks, a duty would be called for on the new type of lock which properly speaking is not a steering lock inasmuch as it combines both ignition and transmission features, and under the interpretation which would have to be placed upon it in keeping with the old wording, that modern lock would be dutiable. We are now widening the item to include the modern type of lock, and the amendment which I have moved is to include the parts of shackles.

Mr. YOUNG: Is there anything left out of the item?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will see that it embraces a very large list.

Mr. YOUNG: Annular ball bearings appeared in the old item; it is not here.

Mr. RHODES: We are coming to that. It is still free.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Under this item certain repair parts such as carbureters and so on are allowed to come in under certain rates if imported by the manufacturer. Suppose I wanted one of the repair parts enumerated in this item and obtained it from a manufacturer who imported it under this tariff. Naturally if the manufacturer got it under a lower tariff than I could get it, I would get it from him. How is that situation met?

Mr. RHODES: I do not believe there has ever been any difficulty in the administration of the item since its inception in 1926. It must be imported by the manufacturer of the original equipment.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will there be a check-up?

Mr. RHODES: It will be a very simple thing to keep a check-up because we know the output of the factory and how many parts go into the machines manufactured.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I will ask my colleague to move an amendment.

Mr. RYCKMAN moved:

That schedule A to the customs tariff, as amended by resolution No. 2 of March 21, 1933, be further amended by deleting therefrom tariff item 438f and inserting in lieu thereof, the following:

Motor omnibuses, for conveying passengers only, having seating capacity for not less than ten persons; chassis for same: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What are the importations?

Mr. RHODES: This is a conference item which has been in effect for less than six months and no statistics will be available until the end of the year. I am informed that there have been substantial importations and that these will be accelerated by this amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: There is another amendment I am going to suggest.

Mr. RYCKMAN moved:

That schedule A to the customs tariff, as amended by resolution No. 2, of March 21, 1933, be further amended by striking thereout tariff item 438g, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Motorcycles or side cars therefor, and complete parts of the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Amendment agreed to.

Customs tariff—438h. Annular ball bearings and parts thereof, when imported for use in the manufacture of goods enumerated in tariff items 438a, 438b, 438c, 438e, and 438f, for use only as original equipment in the manufacture of motor vehicles enumerated in tariff items 438a, 438b, 438c and 438f, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: Hitherto the importation of these ball bearings was confined to the manufacturer and the purpose of this item is to permit distributing and supply houses to import them. It is expected that there will be a considerable acceleration of imports from the mother country.

Mr. YOUNG: It does not read that way, it says, "for use in the manufacture of goods".

Mr. RHODES: Yes, but hitherto they had to be imported by the manufacturers. This necessitated the importing of substantial quantities and the locking up of considerable capital which in some cases the manufacturer could ill afford to do. It will now be possible for supply houses to import these articles and warehouse them in Canada to be purchased by the manufacturer as required.

Mr. YOUNG: It is only when they are sold to the manufacturer, not when sold for repairs?

Mr. RHODES: It will permit their being imported by others than the manufacturer.

Mr. YOUNG: When an importer sells to a manufacturer he gets them in duty free, but if he sells to a private individual for repair purposes, they are not free.

Mr. RHODES: That has always been the case.

Mr. VALLANCE: Just in the same position as the others.

Mr. RHODES: It may seen to be an innocent item but my information is that this amendment will have the effect of increasing business with the mother country by $1,000,000 per year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To what minister do the words, "under regulations prescribed by the minister" refer?

Mr. RHODES: They refer to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The bearings are not for the minister, they are for the manufacturer?

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: There is another amendment.

Mr. RYCKMAN moved:

That the following item, enumeration and rates of duty be included in the list of items indicated in resolution No. 2, of March 21, 1933, as for insertion in schedule A to the customs tariff:

438i. Repair or replacement parts, complete, not including tops, bodies or rubber tires, for motor vehicles entitled to enter under the British preferential tariff under tariff items 438a, 438b, 438c and 438f: British preferential tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: Previously a motor car could be imported from Great Britain free of duty but it was necessary to pay duty upon parts. This item will admit such parts free of duty.

[Mr. Young.]

Mr. DONNELLY: For the manufacturer only?

Mr. RHODES: No, repair parts.

Amendment agreed to.

Customs tariff—440n. Complete parts for repair of engines enumerated in tariff item 440m: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445c. (i) Electric telegraph apparatus and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

(ii) Electric telephone apparatus and complete parts thereof: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. RHODES: There is no change so far as telegraph apparatus is concerned. This is a conference item. Under the conference agreement telephone apparatus was made duty free. We found out that that provision would have imperilled in fact, would have wiped out a very large industry in this country. After consultation with the British authorities, they agreed to a restoration of the duty to 10 per cent instead of the 15 per cent which had hitherto obtained under the British preference.

Mr. DUFF: The minister says that under the present tariff the British preferential rate on electric telephone apparatus and complete parts thereof was free, but under the proposed tariff there is a duty of 10 per cent. That means an increase of 10 per cent. He says that this has been arrived at by conference with the British government in order to save an industry in Canada. Does the minister by that industry mean the Northern Electric Company?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Does he know the Northern Electric Company is a subsidiary of the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. RHODES: I have no official knowledge of that fact; in fact I do not know I have any private knowledge; it may be so.

Mr. DUFF: I am going to object to this increase in tariff, because it affects telephone companies in other parts of Canada. If this item goes through, the maritime telephone companies, for instance, the Nova Scotia Telephone Company and the New Brunswick Telephone Company and, I presume, the telephone companies of the west, will have to pay tribute to the Northern Electric Company. It is a well known fact that the Northern Electric Company is a subsidiary of the Bell Telephone Company; that the Bell Telephone owns 51 per cent of the Northern Electric and that the balance of the stock is owned by another manufacturer of the same kind of goods in the United States. It is not fair to other telephone companies that instead of their being able to import these goods from Great Britain at a 10 per cent reduction, this special duty of 10 per cent is imposed in order to keep the British goods out or to compel the other telephone companies to pay an additional 10 per cent on their equipment.

Mr. RHODES: In the first place my hon. friend for years supported a government which imposed a duty of 15 per cent under the British preference on these articles and they were placed upon the free list by this government as a result of the conference agreements. But it has been found out that, having regard to the difference between the wage paid to British and that paid to Canadian artisans, this industry could not live under free competition. The question is not one of the Bell Telephone Company or the Northern Electric Company as being its subsidiary, if it is; that is not important. The question is this: That industry under normal conditions employes 7,000 workmen and pays out in wages $10,000,000 a year. It would be a very serious matter to the industrial life of Canada and to the city of Montreal in particular if that industry were wiped out as it would be if the item remained free under the British preference. I think the circumstance that the British government have assented to our representations in this respect is evidence of the reasonableness of the request made to them to vary the conference agreement in this one regard only.

Some hon. gentlemen opposite—and I do not object to this—have seized upon certain articles where an increase in duty is imposed, but they allow to pass, without a word emanating from them, item after item which have been carried this afternoon and evening either placing articles on a lower scale of duty or making them free.

Mr. YOUNG: Of course.

Mr. RHODES: Of the fifty-seven articles in the budget, to say nothing of the amendments which I have submitted to-night, all of which are for a lowering of duty, only five refer to an increase in the tariff and the remainder refer to either a lowering of tariff or a widening of the item. I think it is important that these considerations should be borne in mind.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is my hon. friend objecting to our not criticising the reductions?

Mr. RHODES: Not at all, but I am just drawing attention to the emphasis in the one case as contrasted with the silence in the other.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When the minister does well, we approve.

Mr. MANION: Not openly.

Mr. DUFF: I do not think the first part of the minister's reply to what I said was a real answer. For instance, he referred to the fact that I had supported a government which had imposed a duty of fifteen per cent on these articles. Let me say—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Carried.

Mr. DUFF: If my hon. friend is in favour of the Bell Telephone Company or the Northern Electric Company, all right; I am not. It is quite true that I supported that government, but the Minister of Finance knows I am not in favour of any tariff, whether fifteen per cent or ten per cent, or five per cent. I am a free trader; I believe there should be no tariff restrictions, because the manufacturer in every case takes advantage of those tariffs and the consumer has to suffer. Whether it be the Northern Electric or any other company, if they cannot produce in this country goods as cheaply as we can buy them in Great Britain, then they should not be protected. We have heard a great deal in other days about flapping the flag, the mother country, and all the rest of it. Here we have the telephone companies, which are really the consumers of this commodity, not being able to buy from Great Britain because the government imposes a duty of ten per cent. I cannot agree with the minister's, shall I call it sob story, when he says that if this duty is not imposed, a certain number of men will be put out of work. I should like to know how much money the Northern Electric Company made in the last ten or twelve years. I should like to see a financial statement in order to find out whether this ten per cent duty is necessary. I say it is not; these people can manufacture the goods cheaply and they do not require the duty. It is not in the interests of the people of Canada that other telephone companies, owing to the imposition of this ten per cent duty, are taken by the throat and compelled to buy these goods from the Northern Electric instead of being able to buy them in the open market where they can get them the cheapest. If there were four or five companies in this country manufacturing these articles, the matter might be different.

but there is only one and this means that the government, by the imposition of this duty, is giving that company a monopoly. I protest against any such monopoly.

Mr. YOUNG: What were the importations from Great Britain under this item in the last three months?

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I have not those figures.

Mr. YOUNG: Somebody has objected that the importations from Great Britain under this item have been so great as to threaten an industry. Surely the minister was told how much was being imported and what the extent of the threat was.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend asked for the importations in the last three months. I cannot give that.

Mr. YOUNG: Since the conference.

Mr. RHODES: The importations in 1932 were $1,111,000—

Mr. YOUNG: One million dollars of importations—

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend, with that abounding energy and that exceedingly active mind of his, cannot retain his seat long enough to hear an answer to a question which he himself has put. I hope I am not unduly obstructing my estimates, because I endeavour to give the information sought and in as few words as possible, but my hon. friend is not helping me. Of this amount, $850,000 worth came from the United States and $260,000 worth from the United Kingdom.

Mr. YOUNG: Importations amounting to a quarter of a million dollars are going to destroy this ten million dollars industry!

Mr. RHODES: The conference agreement was ratified only a few months ago. It did not come into effect until October 13, 1932.

Mr. YOUNG: That is why I asked for the importations for the last three months.

Mr. RHODES: The importations I have given were for 1932, although for three-quarters of the year there was a protective tariff of fifteen per cent under the British preference and a much higher tariff under the intermediate and general. Under this proposal the tariff under the British preferential will be ten per cent, but even under the fifteen per cent British preferential and the twenty-five per cent intermediate and thirty per cent general tariffs there was imported telephone apparatus to the amount I have indicated. So my hon. friend must not hastily draw the conclusion that these importations came in under a low tariff; and if they did come in to that extent over a tariff protection of the size I have indicated it follows that they would enter in largely increasing quantities if the item were free.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister told us a few minutes ago that since the conference agreements came into effect it has been demonstrated that importations from Great Britain are coming in to such an extent that the life of this industry is threatened. That is why I asked for the importations of the past three months. The minister says that the greatest importations have come from the United States over a 30 per cent tariff. If 30 per cent is not going to exclude importations from the United States, how is a 10 per cent tariff going to save this industry from British imports?

Mr. RHODES: I have a high regard for my hon. friend from Weyburn, but he will invariably, though quite honestly and with no ill intent, place words in my mouth which I never uttered. I did not say that importations had come in to such an extent that the industry in Montreal was threatened. I said that under free entry the effect would be to close that industry, and it is practically closed to-day.

Mr. YOUNG: It is closed?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, practically, and that industry has been operating for years and has employed as high as seven thousand hands.

An hon. MEMBER: It is not operating on that scale to-day.

Mr. RHODES: No industry anywhere in the world to-day is operating on the scale on which it operated in normal times. As everyone realizes, we are passing through one of the most severe depressions that the world has ever seen.

Mr. YOUNG: Might not that account for the closing of the industry?

Mr. RHODES: It has a bearing on the volume of business that is done in industry. If my hon. friend from Weyburn wishes the exact amount of importations since the conference agreements I shall be delighted to get that information for him, although it will take some time and will require a separate tabulation of innumerable items.

Mr. YOUNG: We can have it to-morrow.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot assure my hon. friend of that.

Mr. DONNELLY: The minister takes us to task for objecting to this raising of duty. He says that in the whole budget there are only some five or six items on which the duties are raised.

Mr. RHODES: Five.

Mr. DONNELLY: And he says that there are hundreds on which the duty has been lowered.

Mr. RHODES: I did not say that. I said that of the fifty-seven items dealt with in the budget there were five increases, and the rest were either enlarging the item or lowering the duty, or both.

Mr. DONNELLY: But the minister did not say that where the duties have been lowered they had been lowered for the benefit of the manufacturer, and not of the consumer.

Mr. RHODES: Oh, no.

Mr. DONNELLY: In the majority of cases where the duty has been lowered it has been lowered because the manufacturers have asked for it. We see that all along the line; the duty has been lowered because the manufacturer wanted it, not because the consumer wanted it. In the majority of cases where the duty has been lowered it is because the manufacturer wanted to get the goods he needs to put into some machinery that he is manufacturing. That is the reason there are so many items on which the duty has been lowered.

Mr. RHODES: I may say to my hon. friend that I did not take him nor any of his associates to task; that is one of the last things I would wish to do. But it is the right and the privilege of every hon. member to express his views; my hon. friend will not, I hope, deny that right to me, and he must not object if my view does not exactly coincide with his. My hon. friend will not think, I am sure, that I am taking him or anyone else to task if I venture to disagree with what he or his associates may say. My hon. friend made the bald statement that the majority of the tariff amendments lowering the duty had been made in favour of the manufacturer. As a matter of fact in a moment or two I shall be able to give my hon. friend the exact proportion. I can say now that the majority of the reductions were not in favour of the manufacturer either in number, volume or importance, but that on the contrary the majority in number, in volume, in importance, and in value are in favour of individuals as against the manufacturer.

Mr. BROWN: If the minister thinks we have been negligent in expressing our appreciation—

Mr. RHODES: I am not complaining.

Mr. BROWN: —I hasten to correct that omission on our part. I am not very much concerned whether the duties were lowered for the benefit of the manufacturer or of the individual. In so far as they have been lowered they meet with my approval. In regard to this particular item it is rather an unfortunate time to increase the duty on telephone supplies when so many thousands of people in the western provinces are taking out their telephones. Indeed, the taking out of the telephones is one source of embarrassment to the provincial governments in the west at the present time. They constructed these telephone lines on borrowed money, and it looked like good business and it was good business. The revenue was paying all the expenses, but now the telephones are being removed by the thousands, and the consequence will be that the provinces will suffer in their finances at a very unfortunate time. There is another thing which might have been taken into account and that is that this question might have been submitted to the tariff board before the duty was reimposed. The tariff board will have to consider this question of the relative cost of manufacture in England and in Canada, and it might very properly have been submitted to the tariff board which has now been constituted, before any action was taken. It just goes to show that from the standpoint of the consumer and of those who believe in the entry of goods under lower tariffs the British agreement is just that much worse than we thought it was last fall, by the removal of these items from a tariff which did seem to offer some relief to the consumer.

Mr. RHODES: I may say to my hon. friend from Willow Bunch that I have had a computation made of the items which we have considered up to now in committee to-day. We have moved twenty-six reductions, and of that number twenty were for the benefit of everybody and six were for the benefit of manufacturers. That is in contrast to the statement of my hon. friend that the majority of the amendments we have moved were in favour of manufacturers.

Mr. YOUNG: I would ask the minister to let this item stand until he brings down the information he promised.

Mr. RHODES: I will undertake before we move out of committee to give my hon. friend the information, but I must insist upon the item.

Mr. YOUNG: It might be that the information brought down will not justify the item.

Mr. RHODES: It certainly will not in the eyes of my hon. friend, but it will in the eyes of hon. gentlemen on this side. In these circumstances I hope that my hon. friend will, agree to the passing of the item on the understanding that I secure the information and give it to him to-morrow if I can, or if not at the earliest possible moment.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—445j. Electric dry shaving machines, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use in removing human hair: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 10 per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I rise on behalf of my numerous friends to congratulate the minister upon this item. I can assure him that his kindness in reducing the duty is appreciated.

Mr. RHODES: I am appreciative of my hon. friend's kind references, which I hope are well intended and not uttered in a mildly ironical sense. I may say that this item is not restricted to two manufacturers, but is open to everyone. While it may seem a trifling item the fact is that this industry has grown to very large proportions in the United States. The class of razor is of exceptional merit, I am informed, a beautiful commodity, and suitable not only to the man who shaves with the ordinary razor, but to those in hospitals and who have scars which make shaving difficult it is particularly useful.

Mr. POWER: You will be checked up by the radio commission for advertising more than five per cent.

Mr. RHODES: If the expectations of the manufacturers in the United States are realized they propose to establish in the province of Quebec almost immediately an industry which in the first instance will assemble the parts, but which ultimately they expect to be a subsidiary to manufacture for the purpose not only of supplying the Canadian trade but of securing the advantage of the British preference within the British Empire. This one small and apparently insignificant item may, in time, result in a fairly substantial industry being established here which will give employment to a considerable number of people.

[Mr. Young.]

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask the minister if this little machine is responsible for the exceedingly close shave to which so many people have been subjected during recent years?

Mr. VALLANCE: Solomon in all his glory!

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—464b. Steel die-blocks, of a class or kind not made in Canada, not less than fourty-four degrees of hardness by scleroscopic test: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—471. Belt pulleys of all kinds, n.o.p., for power transmission: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent, general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—471a. Pressed steel belt pulleys, for power transmission: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—475. Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of books, and bases and matrices and copper shells for the same, whether composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid; positive and negative films of books: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would like to know the reason for the change in this item.

Mr. RHODES: This is designed to modernize the item. Hitherto certain plates could be imported free of duty for the purpose of enabling magazines to be printed in Canada, and the effect has been to give employment to a large amount of labour in printing magazines, several score in number, which prior to the tariff item of two years ago were printed in the United States and imported duty free. Since the item was first placed in the tariff imposing a duty on American magazines and admitting free the plates from which they were printed there has been developed a process by means of which these plates can be made by photography. The photograph has the effect, as I understand it, of etching the cylinder and producing a class of work which cannot be distinguished from set type. This polygraphic process will now be permitted free entry for the purpose of allowing the printing of magazines in Canada precisely as was hitherto the case with the plates.

Mr. MITCHELL: That may be the opinion of the government, but it is not the opinion of the printers, the practical men engaged in the trade. This is a copy of a letter or resolution sent to the Prime Minister from Toronto Typographical Union No. 91. Towards the end of the resolution it says:

With hundreds of our typesetters out of work, we are amazed to find that it is proposed to allow plates to enter Canada duty free, thus taking away the only chance to place these men back at work.

I have a similar letter from the Hamilton typographical union. It says:

We in Hamilton of the typographical union have raised voluntarily over $15,000 to take care of members of our organization who through no fault of their own are out of work, and to keep them from going on relief or standing in the bread line. With this condition prevalent all over the dominion in our industry we are amazed that it is proposed to allow plates to enter Canada duty free, thus taking away the only chance to place these men back at work.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I say to my hon. friend that this very item is designed to give employment to Canadian labour. If it does not go through there will be less Canadian labour employed. As a matter of fact the plates have been admitted duty free for some years. Those who adopted this resolution are apparently under the impression that if this polygraphic process were not admitted they would have the work here in some other way. They would not. Hitherto plates have come in, stereotypes and electrotypes—

Mr. MITCHELL: Mats.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, giving a replica of the magazine as published in the United States. This permits the employment of labour in printing, the purchase of paper and the use of ink in Canada, and the labour of mailing and shipping, and so on. It has been the means of giving largely increased employment to labour in Canada. Permitting the polygraph process to come in the same as the plates have hitherto done is merely modernizing the item, not changing the original intent at all.

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a brief submitted by the Toronto typographical union. I am fully conversant with the fact that the mats were imported into Canada, that the typesetting was done in the United States. I am conversant with the legislation that is in force in that country which prevents the importation of those mats into that country. In this brief, of which I think the minister has a copy, the typographical union complain of that condition in Canada. It hardly seems possible to me—I am not a practical printer, I am merely passing on information that is sent to me—that the men engaged in the industry should be fearful of the conditions that would be brought about by the granting of their request.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend overlooks one fact, and so do those for whom he speaks, who would agree with him, and that is that prior to 1931 when we placed a duty on American magazines, the whole magazine, all the labour, all the paper, ink and expenditure which went into its make-up, came from the United States. But after we imposed the duty it was found to be to the advantage of the American publishers to come over into Canada, which they did in large numbers. To-day scores of American magazines are being printed in Canada, providing labour for scores of Canadians, using Canadian paper and ink, and this is in part by reason of the fact that they are able to bring in the plates from the United States. And the negative is the modern process; it merely permits a continuation of a system which I submit has been to the advantage of the Canadian people as a whole and of Canadian labour in particular.

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Chairman, everything the minister says is true. The type of publication involved is such as True Stories—you know the kind of magazine I mean. The amount of actual labour has not been greatly increased, the cost of publication has been lessened. The circulation has been increased; predictions made at that time that it would reduce the circulation of this kind of publication have not been fulfilled. What the typesetters object to is the importation of these mats. They feel that they should receive the same protection that the printers in the United States receive. The law there definitely states that for anything that is printed in that country the type shall be set up in the United States. I would rather take the advice of a man engaged in the printing trades than my own opinion or that of a member of this house. They feel that this is going to throw hundreds of their men out of work and possibly deny them employment.

Mr. RHODES: If the condition to which my hon. friend refers could be brought about by placing a duty upon the plates I should be with him, because I favour protection and especially when it involves the employment of Canadian labour. If we placed duty upon the plates, however, it would mean that the magazines would not be printed in Canada and there would be less labour employed. My hon. friend may not agree with me, but I say to him that if a duty were placed on the plates they would not be set up here. The reason a United States magazine is able to print so many copies so cheaply is obvious, they have a reading clientele at least twelve times as large as we have in Canada. Even under existing conditions it has not proven a profitable enterprise to the United States publishers to establish branch plants in Canada, so I say to my hon. friend that if a duty were imposed it would have the effect of restricting the importation of those plates, and there would be less labour employed rather than more.

Mr. MITCHELL: If the placing of a duty on these plates would reduce the circulation of such magazines as True Stories, Film Fun and Ballyhoo, probably it would be better for the people of this country, particularly the younger people.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend must not allow it to appear that this printing is confined to Film Fun, Ballyhoo and magazines of that class, some of which are actually prohibited to-day.

Mr. MITCHELL: They are on the news stands.

Mr. RHODES: That may be so, but some of them will not be there to-morrow. I may tell my hon. friend that many high class magazines are being printed in Canada to-day as a result of the tariff imposed.

Mr. BROWN: I am afraid this is another statement that will hardly bear investigation. Under the tariff policy of the government many of the better class magazines have had their circulation materially diminished. Only this week I saw a statement with regard to about a dozen of the better class magazines, including the Atlantic Monthly and Harper's Magazine, which showed that the circulation had been reduced by from 36 per cent to 40 per cent, while in the case of the Literary Digest I think the reduction was about 81 per cent. We recognize the fact that these higher class magazines are very desirable, but the net result of the tariff policy of this government in regard to magazines has been just as the minister has stated; they have permitted the importation of the plates of the trashy magazines, though I do not say they are all objectionable. In the main, however, they are the lower class of magazines and they have increased their circulation or, if not, certainly they have not lost circulation, while to a large extent the higher class magazines have been excluded.

Mr. RHODES: I am prepared to admit to my hon. friend and the committee that it might be debatable whether or not the policy of the government is wise. It may be that the policy of the government is not wise, but under existing conditions my hon. friend must not assume that because there has been a diminution in the number of subscribers to a magazine or newspaper, this is attributable to the tariff. Let me tell my hon. friend that there has been a reduction in the number of subscribers to magazines in the United States, and the number of Canadian subscribers to Canadian magazines, due to the fact that many people cannot afford to continue their subscriptions. For the sake of argument, however, let us admit that the policy of the government with respect to magazines is wrong. Then let me say to my hon. friend from East Hamilton that there would not be any Canadian labour employed if this tariff was removed; all the magazines would be printed in the United States.

Mr. MORAND: Does this item permit the importation of lithograph plates containing Canadian advertising intended for Canadian magazines? A number of our large Canadian industries have their advertising composed in the United States, and those plates must be imported. Would they come in free under this item?

Mr. RHODES: No, this item refers only to the importation of plates which are brought in for the purpose of printing in Canada the Canadian editions of United States magazines.

Mr. MORAND: And it is limited to that?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: Would this include books?

Mr. RHODES: Plates and matrices for advertising come under a separate item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—476a. Glassware and other scientific apparatus for laboratory work in public hospitals; surgical operating tables and complete parts thereof; apparatus for sterilizing purposes, including bedpan washers and sterilizers but not including washing or laundry machines; all for the use of any public hospital, under regulations prescribed by the minister: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I see that the regulations are to be prescribed by the minister, and presumably that is the Minister of National Revenue. I wonder if I could get the attention of the Minister of Finance for a moment to ask just how these regulations are prescribed and carried into effect. My understanding is that the minister, or some of his staff, prepares the regulations and brings them to council, and council accepts, amends or rejects them. Then they are gazetted, after which they become law. Is that the procedure, or are they ministerial orders, determined entirely by the Minister of National Revenue? Perhaps I could get the minister's attention for a moment.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is getting my attention; I was simply directing a question to my official in order to answer my hon. friend. I was listening to every word he said. This provision with regard to the regulations to be prescribed by the minister has been here for years; we are not just inserting that now. The effect of the item is to enlarge the free importation for hospital use by adding parts for hospital tables. In this way the duty on these parts is reduced from 35 per cent to free. With respect to the regulations, since this is a hospital item those regulations would have to do with the proper policing of the importations to see that they were put to hospital use only. The regulations would be prepared by the Department of National Revenue, and would not of necessity be subject to order in council. They might be discussed in council, but they would not be the subject of order in council. May I point out to my hon. friend, however, that heretofore any person aggrieved had the right to appeal to the board of customs, but since the tariff board act has been passed, after May 1 of this year an appeal would lie to the tariff board. So I am sure my hon. friend will be gratified to know that there is an additional safeguard so far as the activity of the Minister of National Revenue is concerned.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is some safeguard, of course, but I was a little afraid that the recital would be just about what it was. As a rule regulations prescribed by the minister meant, in my time at all events, that the regulations were submitted to council and there agreed to or amended as the circumstances warranted, after which they were gazetted. Now it appears that they are to be ministerial orders under certain circumstances, and the only remedy is an appeal to the tariff board. This looks worse than I anticipated. It would appear, then, that almost all these items we are considering come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue without the necessity of submitting the regulations to council at all. In other words, if he wants to do some more pegging of the pound or fixing of valuation for duty purposes or for dumping duty propositions, nine-tenths of it will be in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue no matter what this parliament decides. I wonder if there is not some way of getting a twitch on the Minister of National Revenue so that we may have some of the desires of this parliament carried into effect with regard to tariffs. So far as I am concerned, I know that it was very rarely in the days of the Liberal government that a ministerial order had such wide significance as it has to-day. Possibly the same law existed but it was very seldom made use of it. But now, with the door open to the Minister of National Revenue, we are decidedly alarmed at his activities in managing by many devices to put up the tariff, while his colleagues may know nothing about it.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is unduly alarmed. I would remind him that he sat in the government for nine years while this same provision was in the tariff. He may be somewhat perturbed by my colleague the Minister of National Revenue, but I can assure him that he has no reason to be. I am sure the hon. gentleman will realize that there is no other method whereby the item could be administered. Let me give a concrete illustration. If a sterilizer were brought in for use in a laundry it would be subject to a duty of thirty-five per cent, whereas under this provision, if brought in for a hospital, it is duty free. When the tariff provides that regulations shall be prescribed by the Minister of National Revenue it simply means that when, for instance, a sterilizer is brought in for hospital purposes it shall be bona fide for such use and not brought in under that guise and then surreptitiously used in a laundry.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am aware that this provision with regard to valuation for duty purposes has been in existence for many years. It was there since 1922 I believe, but as I have already stated, it was very rarely invoked. Instead of its application being the exception now, as it was then, it appears to be the general rule so far as the Minister of National Revenue is concerned. It is entirely in the hands of that hon. gentleman, whose ambition in this direction seems to know no bounds. If there were some way of harnessing that minister I think it would be a good thing so that there might be some sort of control not only with regard to the regulations but with regard to ministerial orders, which apparently can be got away with. I am not referring so much to the effect in connection with these particular items; I am speaking of a general policy, or rather the excessive use of a policy which was intended not for general application but for application in exceptional circumstances. I am glad to know that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues have on several occasions reversed the decision of the Minister of National Revenue, as in the matter of farm machinery repairs. But they ran for a long while before my hon. friends took such action; they did not take steps to meet the situation until there was an upheaval in the country. I suggest that the remedy should be applied in advance before the damage is done. I suppose if the law is there all that one can say is that it should be used with discretion and only in exceptional cases; but so long as the Minister of National Revenue has the desire to use it as if it were intended for general application instead of, as it is intended to be used, in exceptional circumstances, then all this talk about tariffs will be of little avail, because in the last analysis the Minister of National Revenue will have his say anyhow.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—485. Metal caps, for use in the manufacture of electric batteries: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—486. Artificial larynx, for use in restoring speech: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. POWER: Who asked for this?

Mr. RHODES: This is a compassionate item.

Mr. POWER: This is too much. We have enough larynxes now without artificial ones.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—520c. Linters of short fibres of cotton, bleached, and cotton pulp, when imported by manufacturers of paper, for use exclusively in their own factories in the manufacture of blotting or other grade of paper: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 12½ per cent.

Mr. RHODES: There is no change in the intent of the law with respect to this item. It is found that, for convenience in shipping, cotton is put up in the form of pulp rather than in loose linters as originally, and today, unless this provision were put in, cotton in the form of pulp would be subject to duty. Now we put pulp with linters and permit the free entry in either form.

Mr. YOUNG: Is it a by-product of the factories?

Mr. RHODES: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—522b. Yarns, wholly of cotton, coarser than number forty but exceeding number twenty, not more advanced than singles, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in their own factories in the manufacturing of cotton sewing thread and crochet, knitting, darning and embroidery cottons: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; intermediate tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG: This is a material reduction. Under the British preference the duty will be 7½ per cent whereas previously it was 12½ per cent plus 2 cents per pound. What does that amount to ad valorem?

Mr. RHODES: I cannot answer that question because the item covers an extremely wide range of cotton yarns of different counts. The whole thing is highly complex and technical.

Mr. YOUNG: Two years ago last fall we revised the tariff and enormously increased the duties on cotton goods. That was done for the benefit of the Canadian cotton manufacturers and we were told after it was done that they were prosperous. Now we find ourselves reducing the duty on their raw material. This will deprive the government of what revenue they were receiving from the importation of raw or partly manufactured cotton, but apparently there is to be no corresponding reduction in the consumers' item. Who asked for this, and what benefit is expected from it?

Mr. RHODES: It was asked for by two manufacturing concerns in Canada, because under the tariff as it existed they were paying a higher duty on singles than on doubles. This will allow the doubling to be done in Canada, at a substantial reduction.

Mr. YOUNG: We were under the impression that we had given the cotton manufacturers everything it was possible to give them, but apparently we were wrong.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is off the rails again. This is not for the cotton manufacturer at all.

Mr. YOUNG: No?

Mr. RHODES: No, this is the thread manufacturer. The cotton manufacturer would be opposed to the reduction.

Mr. YOUNG: Isn't the cotton manufacturer the man who uses the yarn?

Mr. RHODES: No, the manufacturer of thread. The cotton manufacturers would be opposed to it.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—523d. Woven fabric, wholly of cotton, imported for use as billiard cloth: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 27½ per cent; general tariff, 32½ per cent; and, per pound: British preferential tariff, ...; intermediate tariff, 3½ cents; general tariff, 4 cents.

Mr. YOUNG: This is only for making billiard cloth.

Mr. RHODES: Under the conference item we admitted ordinary billiard cloth free of duty. We did not know at that time that there was cotton billiard cloth. Britain has asked that it be given free entry.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—525. Woven fabric, wholly of cotton, specially treated and glazed, when imported by rubber manufacturers for use, in their own factories, exclusively as a detachable protective covering for uncured rubber sheeting: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: A very substantial reduction is being made to the manufacturer to which I take no exception, but I would like to see a corresponding reduction made to the user of the finished article. There is no doubt that the ultimate cost of these rubber goods will be cheapened and I think the minister should take into consideration the passing on to the consumer part of this saving.

Mr. RHODES: I have every hope that this will be passed on to the consumer.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If it is not, I suggest that the minister make a corresponding reduction in the duty on the finished article.

Item agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I will ask my colleague to move another amendment.

Mr. RYCKMAN moved:

That the following item, enumeration, and rates of duties be included in the list of items indicated in resolution No. 2, of March 21, 1933, for insertion in schedule A to the customs tariff:

564b. Woven fabric, of a kind not made in Canada, wholly or in chief part by weight of silk or artificial silk, or both, imported in the web in lengths of not less than ten yards each by manufacturers of umbrellas for use in the manufacture of umbrellas in their own factories: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; intermediate tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Amendment agreed to.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—568. Knitted garments, knitted underwear and knitted goods, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 25 per cent; intermediate tariff, 35 per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent; and, per pound: intermediate tariff, 25 cents; general tariff, 30 cents.

Mr. DONNELLY: The increase in this item is the most substantial we have had, and I should like to know who asked for this increase.

Mr. RHODES: I may say without hesitation that it was asked for by the manufacturers of knitted goods generally. This provision would have been included in the tariff revisions of 1930 and 1931, when very substantial increases were given to the manufacturers of woven goods, but for the provisions of the French treaty precluding our giving that additional protection which they had to have if they were to survive. The protection now given places these manufacturers in a comparable position to that of the manufacturers of woven commodities of a similar character. This increase affects a very important industry in Canada. The gross value of the production in 1931, which was not a normal year, amounted to $48,000,000. There are 161 industries with a wage roll of some 70,000 people and wage bill of upwards of $14,000,000.

Mr. DUFF: Do they require this extra protection?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, I believe they do; most of them have been operating in the red.

Mr. VALLANCE: Could the minister give us the importations of knitted garments?

Mr. RHODES: They vary according to the material. Woollen fabrics were imported from the United Kingdom last year to the extent of $145,000, and from the United States to the extent of $5,000.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is that only knitted garments?

Mr. RHODES: I am dealing only with knitted garments. The importations of wool underwear amounted to $235,000, made up of $216,000 from the United Kingdom and, 11,000 from Switzerland. The importations of knitted garments totalled $1,220,000, made up of $647,000 from the United Kingdom, $140,000 from the United States, $93,000 from Czechoslovakia, $66,000 from Belgium, $65,000 from Switzerland, $47,000 from Japan, $45,000 from Austria and $38,000 from Germany. The importations under the classification of unspecified amounted to $220,000, of which $105,000 came from the United Kingdom and $95,000 from the United States.

Mr. DONNELLY: What were the total importations from countries outside the British Empire?

Mr. RHODES: I will give that in a moment. It will be noted that the British preferential is not being changed, the increases taking place only in the intermediate and general tariffs. I might say that some of the competition, especially that which enters under the intermediate tariff, is very strong.

Mr. BROWN: I hope the hon. members from the prairies who support the government will take notice of the words the minister has used when referring to the substantial increases in the tariffs on woven goods which were made in 1930, as well as to the increases made under this item. There has been a disposition on the part of hon. members from the prairies who support the government not to state the increases which have been in the tariff. The hon. member for Souris has even gone so far as to claim that they were the low tariff party.

Mr. RHODES: I have no hesitation in repeating that the increase is substantial, but my hon. friend must not assume that because the duty is increased, it necessarily follows that the consumer will suffer.

Mr. BROWN: That does not touch the point I was urging. I claim there has been a substantial increase in the tariff.

Mr. RHODES: I am very happy indeed if my hon. friend gets any comfort from that expression.

Mr. BROWN: I want hon. members opposite to know it.

Mr. RALSTON: I get no comfort from it. I feel that this is an item which should have been spared in the matter of increases. For two sessions we have protested against increases which have been made in other woollen items. Item 568a covers socks and stockings of all kinds upon which there is a 30 per cent British preferential plus seventy-five cents per dozen specific duty, a 32½ per cent intermediate tariff plus $1.35 per dozen specific duty and a 35 per cent general tariff plus $1.50 per dozen specific duty. The item covering gloves and mitts carries 25 per cent British preferential, 35 per cent intermediate and 45 per cent general. So far my hon. friend has not increased the duty on the n.o.p. item, which I do not suppose represents more than fifty per cent of the total importations of knitted goods. The rate on knitted garments, knitted underwear and knitted goods, n.o.p., was 25 per cent British preferential. Now we have under the intermediate 35 per cent and twenty-five cents per pound, and under the general 45 per cent and thirty cents per pound. In some instances that might amount to a duty of nearly 100 per cent, and that is entirely too much for the Canadian consumer to be asked to pay. One thing or the other happens; the consumer is paying this to the manufacturer or the minister is getting it in the way of revenue on importations. When he says that the British preferential is not being increased, that is not much comfort because evidently there is an opportunity to buy these garments from other quarters at a lower price and these are being shut out or the consumer is being compelled to pay the difference. This increase is not justified especially in these times when people are going hungry and ill-clad.

Mr. RHODES: My answer to the hon. member for Willow Bunch in part, although I presume he will not admit it is an answer, is that last year the importation under this item amounted to $1,500,000. I am using round figures. Of that importation, $900,000 worth came from the United Kingdom and $600,000 worth from other countries. Therefore it will be observed that inasmuch as we are not touching the duty under the British preference and are widening the margin of the British preference, to the extent that we import, we shall stimulate importations by the mother country.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know it is utterly useless to protest; I made my protest when I was discussing the budget, but I think this is an outrageous duty. The total production amounts to $48,000,000, so the minister informs us, and we have scarcely one per cent of imports, yet we are imposing duties on $46,000,000 worth of goods. It is useless for the minister to tell me or anyone else that the manufacturer does not take advantage of the tariff. If he does not take advantage of it why does he want it? Now we are being asked to give the manufacturer another opportunity to soak the consumer a little harder than he has done in the past. There will be no importations under such duties as are being imposed by the present schedule. It is idle for the government to tell us that those duties are not taken advantage of when we see all about us full advantage being taken of them. If they were not taken advantage of, the real answer would be that there would be some imports. Imports are prohibited; the industry takes full advantage of the duty and we pay the piper.

Mr. VALLANCE: Did I hear the minister aright when he stated that most of these manufacturing companies were now in the red?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: So that this is designed to bring about an increase in the price of these goods in order that the manufacturers may make money.

Mr. RHODES: No. My hon. friend would, I am sure, be the first to realize that a manufacturer who was operating at 25, 35, 40 or even 60 per cent of his capacity, was necessarily operating in the red, whereas without raising the price of his commodities one farthing, if he was operating at 100 per cent he could make a profit.

Mr. VALLANCE: He has all the trade now.

Mr. RHODES: Quite so, but my hon. friend must bear in mind that at present we are passing through very unusual times.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is the reason we are objecting to this tariff.

Mr. RHODES: I would agree with my hon. friend were the net result an increase in cost, but that does not follow. As a matter of fact the hon. member for West Edmonton made rather a sweeping statement. He will find that the price of commodities in Canada to-day compares favourably with that of commodities of a similar quality in other countries. If we in this country were to be subject to slaughter competition on the part of countries which manufacture in large quantities and can charge their own people a certain price but, by enlarging their manufacture, can spread their overhead over a larger volume of units, of course we would not survive. But if we prevent that slaughtering under those conditions and enable our own industries to operate to a normal capacity, they can do so and not increase prices. I assert that in the main, as a result of such protection as has been given in recent years, that has been the experience, and where it has been otherwise we have taken action as, for example, was done in the case of glass.

Mr. VALLANCE: I have only one objection to what the minister has just said. He speaks of slaughter competition. Representing a rural district and realizing the prices the farmers are to-day receiving for the commodities which they have to sell, I ask: How does the minister expect them to stand quietly by and allow this? At the present time agricultural products must find a place on the markets of the world at slaughter prices; somebody has to take them. When does the price of a commodity become a slaughter price? Wheat to-day, even at the increased price that has existed in the last two or three weeks, is still being sold at distress prices. In the western prairies eggs are being sold at five cents a dozen and dairy butter at eight cents a pound. Are these slaughter prices? How can we afford to buy these manufactured goods? It cannot be done.

Mr. RHODES: I am talking about manufactured products, not agricultural commodities.

Mr. VALLANCE: But we are receiving slaughter prices for the commodities we have to sell. Why should we not be allowed at some time to buy at slaughter prices? At all times I am compelled to sell at slaughter prices, but I am not permitted to buy at slaughter prices. It is that to which I am objecting. We were told by the party opposite when they were striving to get into power, what they would do for the primary producer, but the position of the latter is very much worse than it was when this government took office. I am not blaming the government entirely for that, but to-day everything produced on the farm is being sold at slaughter prices. Somebody has to take it. We should have the same privilege of buying goods at slaughter prices as other people have of buying ours.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to add just one word to what has already been said. The minister is either increasing prices or doing something for the benefit of the manufacturers in connection with $48,000,000 worth of goods which he says are being produced in this country. The only additional quantity the manufacturers can get in the way of orders is $1,500,000 which is being imported; I am referring to both British and foreign goods. That certainly cannot increase our manufacturers' capacity 10, 20 or 30 per cent as the minister has pictured. The division of this $1,500,000 worth among 161 industries cannot help the manufacturers one iota. What is the alternative? If they are really serious in presenting this picture, the alternative is that they expect the price to be raised. Only two things can be done; either the cost of production can be reduced by increasing capacity or the price must be raised, and in this case it looks as if the price is to be raised. I know this has been decided upon; I suppose that is all there is to it, but I want to point out what the hon. member for Lisgar indicated this evening with regard to another item. The tariff board has been established, I presume for the purpose of examining into conditions of manufacture, of demand, the situation as to competition from other countries and whether that competition is fair or not, to find all the facts which the minister purports to have found to-night and to have embodied in this tariff item. As this item has waited ever since 1931, the minister might allow it to stand, let the tariff board deal with it and see whether there is any necessity for the large increase made in this item as proposed in the resolution submitted by the minister.

Mr. RHODES: With the first portion of the remarks of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth I am not in disagreement. But he must bear in mind this circumstance: if we were dealing with the question of protection for this industry as a thing apart, in view of the fact that to-day we have a tariff board established I would say that his objection was well taken. But at the time we gave increased protection to the woven goods industry we would have given it to the knitted goods industry also but for the fact that we were precluded from doing so by the provisions of the French treaty. Pressure was brought to bear upon the government at that time by the knitted goods industry—I know that my hon. friend from Lisgar will be surprised to hear me say this, but I say so quite frankly—that we should give them the same treatment as was applied to the woven goods industry because of the same needs. They were told at that time that but for the circumstance of the French treaty precluding us from giving them that treatment, they would have received it, and an undertaking was given at that time that if, as and when the French treaty was denounced they would be given the same treatment as was given this other class of industry to which I have referred. Therefore it is not unjust that we should carry out our undertaking given at that time despite the fact that to-day we have a tariff board established. One of the provisions of the agreement which we have with Great Britain is that as a matter of right the British manufacturer may appear before the Canadian tariff board in objection to the provisions of our tariff covered by conference agreements or otherwise. It will be competent for them at once to go before the tariff board and deal with these very items, and if there is cause for complaint along the lines indicated by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth the remedy can be applied. I hope that my hon. friend and the committee will not consider me discourteous when I say that I do not think it is worth while to traverse again the ground that we covered one year and a half and two years ago when similar treatment was meted out to the woven goods industry.

Mr. YOUNG: Well worth while.

Mr. RHODES: Let us assume for the sake of argument that the contention of my hon. friend from Weyburn is right and that my contention as to what will happen is wrong, that his fears are realized and my hopes are not. The fact remains that the same argument which we held then we hold now with respect to this industry.

Mr. YOUNG: Never learned anything?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, we have learned from the experience of the past year and a half that an increase in the tariff does not of necessity involve an increase in the price of goods. On the other hand, to give only one instance—I do not propose to embark on one of those long dissertations upon protection—in the United States, which is the most highly protected country in the world, even in those piping days of prosperity when things were humming, many, many hundreds of articles of manufacture could be obtained cheaper behind the high tariff wall of that country than in most countries of the world, including some free trade countries.

Mr. YOUNG: The United States has a big free trade area.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, a free trade area behind a tariff wall. We have the same thing in Canada. Our area is larger, but we have not so many people. Having said so much I hope my hon. friends will not expect me to engage again in the kind of discussion that has obtained hitherto. We only ask with respect to this one item that the same treatment shall be given as was given with respect to other tariff items having to do with the woven goods industry.

Mr. DUFF: The minister was good enough to tell us how many manufacturers were interested in this industry, the number of men employed, the amount of wages paid, and the value of its production for 1931. I wonder if he would give us the same figures for 1929 as to the number of factories, the amount of production, the number of men employed and the amount paid out for labour.

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I have not those facts here, but I think the figures in each case would be much larger for 1929 than for 1931.

Mr. DUFF: The minister says that he has not the figures, but that the amount paid out for labour and the number of men employed would be much larger for 1929 than for 1931.

Mr. RHODES: I would assume so.

Mr. DUFF: The minister says he would assume so. A moment ago he was asking for this tariff increase in order to protect this industry and protect the labour employed. Is it not a fact that in 1929 the tariff on these goods was very much lower, and that when that lower tariff was in effect there were more men employed in that industry and more money was paid out for labour?

Mr. RHODES: The answer from my point of view is I think very easy. We are to-day in 1933. If conditions were the same as they were in 1929 there would not be the necessity of asking for this increased tariff. I think that is the answer, which must be obvious. The conditions throughout the world to-day require different treatment entirely from that which obtained in 1929. My hon. friend says that since then the tariff has been very much increased. That is not so. We had the same tariff until March 21 last on this item as obtained in 1929.

Mr. DUFF: March of a year ago, not last March?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, last March.

Mr. DUFF: Then increasing the tariff is not going to help the industry at all because the minister admits that conditions in the industry are due to conditions in Canada, which I contend are due to the policies of this government.

Mr. RHODES: On account of world conditions.

Mr. DUFF: It is world conditions to-day, but in 1930 the minister did not say it was world conditions. I heard several Conservatives speakers in Nova Scotia then say that the conditions were entirely due to Canadian policies. The minister said that a number of these manufacturing industries were in the red. Let me tell him that I have some money in one of these industries, and my experience has been that the higher the tariff the less the dividend, and sometimes no dividend. So far as I am concerned I think it would be much better if they were made to stand on their own feet and had to carry on without being bolstered up by the tariff. The minister will never get them out of the red by increasing the tariff. It will simply mean they will do less business.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Take them off the bottle.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister told me a little while ago that the domestic production was $48,000,000 last year. What was it in 1930 and 1931?

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I have not those figures here but I shall be glad to get them for my hon. friend. I shall also endeavour to get the figures which my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough asked for.

Mr. YOUNG: Would the minister also bring down information as to the volume as well as the value?

Mr. RHODES: If that is possible.

Mr. YOUNG: I should be very glad to get the information.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. YOUNG: No, it will not carry to-night. This is one of the worst crimes in the whole category.

Mr. RHODES: Oh, surely it will carry to-night. Otherwise we might as well rise.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let it stand and go on with something else.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—571. Carpeting, rugs, mats and matting of straw, hemp, flax tow, jute or paper; carpet lining and stair pads: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; intermediate tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—682a. Net floats of aluminum, glass or cork, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use only in deep sea or lake fishing, not to include floats for sportsmen's use: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. RHODES: I want to move an amendment widening the item, giving free entry to canvas floats as well as glass floats.

Mr. NEILL: Before the item as amended passes I would call the minister's attention to the fact that it ought to include the words "sinkers and floats including trawl kegs." A deputation waited upon the minister last year and he assured us that he would keep this in mind when the tariff was adjusted. I have a definite impression—the note I have on it is written by myself, but I certainly got it at the interview—that the minister agreed that sinkers and floats should be exempt from duty under item 682a and promised to keep it in mind for another year. It is the same proposition, and for the same purpose. All that is necessary is to put at the beginning of the item those words: "Sinkers, and floats, including trawl, kegs," and then go on with the words "of aluminum," etc., because then it would apply not only to nets but also to trolling, a very important branch of fishing. The item should read:

Sinkers, and floats, including trawl kegs of aluminum, glass, cork—

The minister was kind enough to go into it very thoroughly last year, and that was his considered opinion at that time. It is all in line with the policy of cheapening the fishermen's means of production.

Mr. RHODES: The item can stand until I look into the matter, but I rise more particularly for the purpose of saying to my hon. friend that if he was under the impression that I gave him any undertaking with respect to what action would be taken concerning an amendment to the tariff, he is entirely in error, because whatever my limitations may be one thing I refrain from doing is to give any intimation as to what amendments will be made to the tariff. All I did was to say that I would give careful thought and consideration to my hon. friend's representations. I may possibly have expressed sympathy with his views, but in no case, either to him or to anyone else, have I said what would be done in respect to a tariff item.

Mr. NEILL: Certainly not; I was misunderstood if I gave that impression. The words I used in this note are that he promised to keep it in mind for another year. I perhaps put my own interpretation on his geniality and the sympathy he exhibited. I am satisfied that when he does look into it he will see the force of the contention.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—756. Artificial abrasive grains, crushed or ground, when imported for use in Canadian manufactures: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. VALLANCE: What is this?

Mr. RHODES: It is in the tariff to-day. It admits abrasives in bulk rather than calling for them to come in certain specified forms—abrasives or materials for making emery wheels, carborundum stones, and so on.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—783. Gasoline and steam engines, transmission assemblies and parts thereof, magnetos, starting motors, electric generators, propeller shafts, steel chassis frames, brakes, clutches, brake and clutch controls, steel road wheels, steel rims for pneumatic tires, larger than thirty inches by five inches, steering gears and front and rear axles, all of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported by manufacturers of motor trucks with standard equipment (not for use on railways or tramways), not to include machines or other articles mounted thereon or attached thereto for purposes other than for loading or unloading the truck, for use only in the manufacture of such motor trucks: British preferential tariff, free; intermediate tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. RALSTON: I notice generally speaking this item is wider in that it is not confined to motor trucks for carriage of goods only. Apparently it now includes all motor trucks without limit as to purpose.

Mr. RHODES: That is right.

Mr. RALSTON: There is just one limitation—"not to include machines or other articles mounted thereon or attached thereto for purposes other than for loading or unloading the truck." I wonder what is in mind in regard to that.

Mr. RHODES: It is merely widening the item by permitting parts to come in duty free for the use of the motor bus which we have already admitted free by item 438b.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister has not answered my inquiry, which was as to what is referred to in the elimination of machines or other articles mounted thereon or attached thereto for purposes other than for loading or unloading the truck.

Mr. RHODES: I think I can answer the question by an illustration given to me by the commissioner of taxation. Heretofore if a motor truck were imported and after its importation a concrete mixer were installed upon it, it would be policed and followed to the extent of calling for the payment of duty upon the truck equivalent to that imposed upon the concrete mixer, because the purposes for which the truck was imported hitherto were restricted. Under the new wording, if a concrete mixer were an integral part of the motor truck it could be imported as if it were a portion of the truck itself, and therefore be subject only to the lower duty which applies to the truck.

Mr. RALSTON: No, it is just the reverse of that.

Mr. VALLANCE: So anything already mounted on a motor vehicle would enter free; is that it?

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, April 26, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

PENSIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound) presented the first report of the special committee on Bill No. 78, to amend the Pension Act, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation under the relief act, also the report under the same act.

PETITION

The petition presented on Monday, April 24, by Mr. A. W. Neill (Comox-Alberni), was read to the house by the clerk assistant.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

INCOME TAX COLLECTIONS

Mr. ROBERGE:

What amount did the government receive in 1932 by way of income tax from individuals, companies, corporations or others, who paid a tax on an income ranging from $10,000 to $500,000?

Mr. RYCKMAN:

Individuals, $21,753,463.37; corporations, $35,749,230.32.

SHIPMENTS OF GRAIN

Mr. GAGNON:

How many bushels of (a) wheat; (b) barley; (c) other grains, were shipped from Canadian ports and what quantity from American ports, respectively, in each of the years 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932?

Mr. STEVENS:

Canada's domestic exports of barley, oats, rye and wheat to (1) the United States; and (2) overseas countries via (a) Canadian sea or river ports; and (b) the United States, during the calendar years 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, were as under:

Grains	(1) To United States	(2) To Overseas countries (a) Via Canadian sea or river ports	(2) To Overseas countries (b) Via United States
	Bushels	Bushels	Bushels
Barley—
1929	88,407	6,263,085	10,636,195
1930	582,362	730,399	1,521,538
1931	104,250	17,571,853	6,583,652
1932	1,449	9,862,236	129,058
Oats—
1929	34,166	7,294,417	352,893
1930	805,206	1,945,424	14,584
1931	60,041	10,190,460	926,571
1932	25,233	15,370,887	40,954
Rye—
1929	42	1,691,059	247,223
1930	63	243,474	1,037,662
1931	273	1,675,749	1,997,132
1932	175	7,776,083	1,124,176

Grains	(1) To United States	(2) To Overseas countries (a) Via Canadian sea or river ports	(b) Via United States
Wheat—	Bushels	Bushels	Bushels
1929	6,775,964	139,911,263	64,258,362
1930	10,247,752	124,317,527	73,205,088
1931	4,949,770	129,664,293	60,211,549
1932	52,100	194,211,443	33,956,212

Note: During the calendar years 1929 to 1932 a certain amount of Canadian barley, oats and rye exported from Fort William and Port Arthur to overseas countries via the United States was re-routed from United States lake ports for export via Canadian ports chiefly Montreal. It is impossible to segregate the quantity of barley, oats and rye thus re-routed from United States lake ports from United States barley, oats and rye in transit via Canadian ports.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BOARD OF PENSION COMMISSIONERS—CASES HEARD

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. How many cases have been referred to the Board of Pension Commissioners since the Pension Act amendments, 1930?
2. How many were at that time awaiting decision by the said board?
3. How many cases have been decided by the Board of Pension Commissioners since the 1930 amendments (a) in favour of the applicant; (b) against the applicant?
4. How many cases are now awaiting decision by the Board of Pension Commissioners?

BOARD OF PENSION COMMISSIONERS—COST

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. What has been the total cost since the passing of the Pension Act amendments, 1930 (a) of the Board of Pension Commissioners; (b) of the pensions tribunals; (c) of the pensions appeal court?
2. What has been the total cost to the treasury of awards made since the Pension Act amendments, 1930 (1) by the Board of Pension Commissioners, and not appealed; (2) by the pensions tribunals, and not appealed; (3) by the pensions appeal court?
3. What has been the total cost since the passing of the Pension Act amendments, 1930 (a) of all pensions advocates, including staffs and travelling expenses; (b) of all commission counsel, including staffs and travelling expenses; (c) of all medical advisors called in before the pensions tribunals?

PENSIONS TRIBUNALS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. On what date did the pensions tribunals commence to function?
2. How many cases have been referred to the pensions tribunals from that date until April 15, 1933?
3. Of such cases, how many have been decided by the pensions tribunals (a) in favour of the applicant for pension; (b) against the applicant?

[Mr. Stevens.]

4. How many of the cases decided by the pensions tribunals have been appealed from (a) by pensions advocates; (b) by commission counsel?
5. How many cases are now awaiting (1) hearing; (2) decision?

PENSIONS APPEAL COURT

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. On what date did the pensions appeal court commence to function?
2. How many cases have been appealed to the pensions appeal court from that date until April 15, 1933?
3. Of such cases, how many have been decided by the pensions appeal court (1) in favour of the pension applicant; (2) in favour of commission counsel?
4. How many cases are now awaiting (a) hearing; (b) decision?

Mr. MacLAREN: These four returns are tabled herewith.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

Mr. GAGNON:

1. What is the total amount of money loaned, each year, by the Canadian Farm Loan Board since its inception?
2. What is the total amount of money loaned, each year, by the board, in each province?
3. What was the total amount of administrative costs in each province paid, each year, by the Canadian Farm Loan Board, since its inception?
4. Were the administrative costs higher in certain provinces; if so, why?

Mr. RHODES: Tabled herewith.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

JOHN I. MCFARLAND

Mr. DONNELLY:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda and other documents passing between the government, any member of the government or any official thereof, and John I. McFarland, since September 1, 1930, relating to his position and activities as marketing agent for the wheat pools.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EMPLOYEES

Mr. YOUNG:

For a copy of all contractual agreements now in effect between the Canadian National Railways and its employees; also for the rates of salary and wages paid to the various classes of employees of the railways from the years 1916 to 1932.

Mr. MANION: Of course it must be understood that the government has not this information. I am quite willing to let the motion pass subject to our being able to obtain the information from the management of the railways.

E. J. S. VERGE

Mr. MARCIL:

For a copy of all documents bearing on the charges made against E. J. S. Verge, returning officer of Bonaventure county.

RADIO BROADCASTING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): I should like to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if it is the intention of the government to introduce during this session amendments to the Radio Broadcasting Act.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): The matter is under consideration.

SOLDIER SETTLERS—SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon). I have received information from northern Saskatchewan to the effect that certain soldier settlers cannot procure seed or feed oats. Last year the seed apparently was received too late and there was no crop. This year the same situation will occur if something is not done. I understand that the men concerned have appealed to the municipality, to the soldier settlement board, to the Canadian Legion, and as well to the minister. May I ask whether the minister will be good enough to investigate these cases immediately and to take remedial action on behalf of these men who are in dire need of seed and feed oats.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): So far as I am aware, no communication has been addressed to the director of soldier settlement in connection with the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers. I do not know whether my hon. friend is willing to let me have the names of the soldier settlers who complain, but it would facilitate investigation of the matter if I had them.

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes; I shall be willing to give the name I have here.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Is the federal government giving anything in the way of feed or seed oats to the people on the prairies? I did not know that was being done.

Mr. GORDON: The federal government in the past has loaned money to the provinces for that purpose and I believe in some instances seed has been supplied to soldier settlers, although I may be wrong in that regard. The director of soldier settlement has advised me that there are very few cases where soldier settlers are in need of seed. I will inquire further into the matter to see to what extent, if any, seed has been supplied to soldier settlers. Generally speaking, where it became apparent that the settler, not under soldier settlement, was unable to supply the seed himself and the province could not supply it, a loan has been made, as indicated and discussed in this house, to the province for the purpose of providing seed in certain areas.

WAYS AND MEANS

CONDITION OF SETTLERS IN ROUYN DISTRICT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the attention of the government a matter of great importance. I have just received the following telegram, collect, from Rouyn.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: When the house learns why the telegram has been sent collect I do not think anyone will laugh. Everyone recalls an article written by the correspondent of the Toronto Globe, who made the statement that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) showed great incredulity when I cited some cases of distress in the colonization district. The following telegram comes from the district of Rouyn:

3.40 p.m., April 25, 1933.

Jean-François Pouliot,
Ottawa.

N'avons plus rien à manger.

"We have nothing more to eat."

Je vous demande d'interpeller le gouvernement pour nous.

"I ask you to make representations to the government on our behalf."

Sinon il y aura des mortalités.

"Otherwise people will die."

Lettre suit.
"Letter follows."

Agissez avant qu'il soit trop tard.
"Act before it is too late."

(Signé) Marcel Essiambre.

I have not yet received that letter. Now, when an aviator is lost or not heard from the government is ready to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to find him, and I do not see why this or any other government should not be prepared to come at once to the rescue of these people. Surely it should not be a matter of corresponding with this one or that one. As I say, when an aviator is lost in the fog or at sea, this government dispatches searching parties to rescue him. I have been laughed at because I have brought to the attention of the house certain cases of distress in this country, settlers who were left far away in the wilderness without any means of sustaining themselves. In connection with the situation I am now discussing I have some letters which I will give to the house. I regret that I have not the translation ready but I will give the letters in French and ask the Minister of Labour to be good enough to instruct the chief translator to submit a translation to him as early as possible. I would ask him to get the translation as soon as it is printed on Monday next. Here is the first letter I have:

Les Etroits, April 19, 1933.

Mr. Jean-François Pouliot,
Member for Témiscouata.

Dear Sir,—

I am writing to you a few lines to inform you how things are managed here. We are at the point of starvation. I am appealing to you for funds to purchase food. As to direct assistance, it was impossible to obtain any during the whole winter. I was paid $12 for work done, and $14 was allotted to the whole of my family. You may judge for yourself what hardships we endured throughout the winter.

For Heaven's sake, are you not able to get us $75 to do our seeding. I depend on you for a livelihood.

Another letter I received from the parish of St. Louis du Ha! Ha!, county of Témiscouata; reads as follows:

St. Louis du Ha! Ha!
February 25, 1933.

Mr. Jean-François Pouliot.

Sir,—

I am appealing to you, to-day, to grant us, for God's sake a small contribution. Like every one here, I am in great distress. I had purchased a horse for $195, and I had almost completed my payments, being only $5 short; however, the man who sold me the horse would not wait any longer, he came to get his horse. I cannot find the money to pay a first instalment on another. I am disheartened, not having earned any money this winter. I worked for a Mr. Couturier and I was only paid in goods. My wife, who is in poor health, is greatly discouraged. I wonder what will be the end.

A horse is indispensible on a farm, and during these hard years my farm has not given sufficient returns to enable me to save. I still owe $500 on the farm and I am doing my best to keep it out of liquidation. Last autumn I ploughed quite a large patch of land, sufficient to sow all I required in order to live without too much hardship; however, not having any horses, I shall be unable to sow what I ploughed.

If you could send me a small amount or make me a small loan, at not too high a rate of interest, I would be very grateful to you. You are aware that things have changed, to-day, the Liberals have nothing to do with the Conservative administration. Had I belonged to the same party as the man who sold me the horse, perhaps, he would have been lenient towards me. I beg of you, for God's sake, to kindly grant or advance me a small amount, for a few years, on a promissory note, at not too high a rate of interest.

I have no means of purchasing a horse. Times are hard, especially for farmers whose lands are not yet paid in full. I am aware that I shall not forfeit my farm providing I meet the interest on what is owed. I am very grateful to an old relative who is kind enough to help me.

Kindly, sir, accede, if possible, to my request, my wife and myself would be very grateful to you, and, should it meet with your wishes, we should be glad to have you pay us a visit next time you come to St. Louis. Thanking you in anticipation, etc., etc.

The following is another letter, sir.

Biencourt, April 3, 1933.

Mr. Jean-François Pouliot.

Sir,—

You will pardon me if I take the liberty of writing to you. I should appreciate a few suggestions from you and, at the same time, I wish to inform you how we fared throughout the winter in our dear parish of Biencourt. I have been residing here since October 13, 1931. I came to settle here as I could not earn a livelihood in my own parish. I therefore undertook farming in earnest, as new settlers we did fairly well, so far as clearing the land and doing other odd jobs, especially as no forest fires had devastated the land. However, our crop was practically nil, except for a little straw.

We were, therefore, not in the best of circumstances to begin the winter; the first days we cut 38 cords of pulpwood at $3 per cord. I was able to set aside 50 cents per cord, the balance having been seized for an old debt. The company carted away the wood at the rate of 90 cents per cord; however, I was unable to draw the balance of my money. I wish to inquire whether this is practicable. That is all the money I was able to draw—with the exception of $40 which I earned last autumn—to provide for a family of ten during the whole winter. These are certainly hard times, no potatoes or other food, except bread and meat obtained through hunting. Had the latter not been so plentiful, we would have been forced to feed on grass.

There still remains the question of clothes. Many of these are badly worn, especially boots.

Would you, therefore, kindly inform me what steps should be taken to recover what is coming to me. We have heard that the government's timber-cut was not seizable, etc.

He continues:

I did not remain inactive, I ploughed 7 acres for the spring which, however, I shall be unable to sow. I have neither seed grain nor money. We could have sown more last spring, but we were unable to obtain more than three bags of seed grain and then we had to undertake three trips, at 10 miles distance, to obtain them. I am preparing 10 more acres for next spring. I have begun to build a barn, 36 feet by 40 feet, all the work was done with an axe; I also have some shingles which I, myself, made with a drawing-knife. I wish to follow the good example set by my old father.

I trust that it will not give you too much trouble to answer my letter at your earliest convenience.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: When people are suffering there should not be jokes made about their misery. I regret I have to do what I am doing but I do it because people are suffering. If these people were being looked after in accordance with the famous Gordon plan, I would not have received any of these letters. I might tell my hon. friend that I stopped at a house in his county. There were three men out of work and they told me they were being forced to live upon bread and molasses. One of the men was an able carpenter and he had to fill in his time by fishing. Another man was a good mason and he had to go wild duck hunting. The third man could not get any work at all. Those are the conditions which existed in one home in the constituency of my hon. friend. I have always tried to be courteous to him but I feel that jokes should not be made about the misery of these people. My hon. friend claims that these conditions do not exist but I will not waste the time of the house any more. Let him remain quiet in his seat while others defend the poor people who are suffering.

Les Etroits, April 7, 1933.

Mr. J. F. Pouliot,
Ottawa.

Mr. Pouliot,—

I have been very unfortunate these days. I had a team of good horses to work my land; both died within a month. . . .

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: I hear an ass bray. Mr. Speaker, in case you may call me to order, I do not say that I see one, I say that I hear one. I would ask you, sir, to request the sergeant at arms to escort him from the chamber.

I regret the disturbance from the other side of the house but I may tell my hon. friends that they will not prevent me from saying all that I have to say. I am not saying this for the benefit of either the government or the Liberal party, I am speaking on behalf of the poor people who have to suffer. My hon. friends opposite may want to cheer at the misery and trouble of these people, but do they think that they can live on onions all year?

Mr. GOTT: Onions are food; the hon. member needs something for the brain.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend uses them for his brain, it proves they are no good.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) should use some of them.

Mr. POULIOT: The letter continues:

I have been very unfortunate these days. I had a team of good horses to work my land; both died within a month; as you are aware, one is not master of his destiny. I find it impossible to purchase a horse this spring to carry on my seeding.

I have not earned anything within the last two years. We had to practise thrift in order to live on the small returns which this land brings.

I have been married ten years and have eight children. I have received no assistance and found it impossible to leave the house and take up unemployment work. Each time unemployment work started, it was impossible for me to go and work, my wife was ill, moreover, the work was being done at a distance from my house—it was therefore impossible to leave the house. I never received any bonus for clearing my land because I happened to be on a patented lot.

I am, therefore, obliged to beg of you some little assistance to purchase a horse; perhaps, some of your friends will subscribe. I am one of your electors and so are all my relations, as you are aware.

I wish to thank you for the information given in connection with the road fence.

St. Emile-d'Auclair,
March 26, 1933.

Mr. J. F. Pouliot,

Mr. Pouliot,—

Just a few lines to inquire how the Unemployment Act affects the settlers of Auclair. I settled on my lot last October and have not received any assistance, while some folks who have been here for a year, have received $32 per family, and the boys $20; others received assistance to build themselves a camp. Must one hail from the city to be given assistance? I am a farmer's son having lived in the country and always tilled the land, I would, therefore, like to be encouraged as others, because if things do not improve, there will be great distress; we, from the county of Témiscouata, have not been treated as fairly as the people from Lac-Noir or elsewhere.

Please, inquire from Messrs.....

of St. Hubert, who are aware of this fact.

Packington, March 29, 1933.

Mr. J. F. Pouliot,

Member for Témiscouata,

House of Commons.

Dear Sir,—

I wish to apprise you of our condition. We are men from your county and have come to the conclusion that you have the courage and backbone to espouse our cause. Do everything possible to obtain a little food for us, at least for our children. We are ready to take our oath on what we shall disclose to you. We are entirely devoid of food, clothes and implements.

Our horses have died of hunger and it will not be long before some of us meet the same fate. We were forced to sell our live stock at ridiculous prices, they had cost us very dear. How do you expect us to work when we are practically naked, without clothes, food or implements? Yet, if we do not work we will be looked upon as lazy and good for nothing.

Last spring we resorted to oxen so as to harrow the land; however, we had to sacrifice them. If you cannot obtain any help from the government, could you not possibly raise a subscription among the members or ministers.

For Heaven sake, Mr. Pouliot, do try and arrange matters so that an inquiry may be held on the spot.

It is impossible to describe our situation, such as it is; however, please endeavour to collect a few cents to buy bread for our little children and wives. We settled here in 1931.

Your humble servants, poor unfortunate settlers of Packington, county of Témiscouata.

The following is a letter from St. Benoit de Packington:

Mr. J. F. Pouliot, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—

I am a poor settler, of 1931, in distress; however, I am not the only one. The colonization agent contends that I am the person who carries on all correspondence and criticizes the government's policy.

It is the first letter which I have received from this gentleman.

I am very sorry—I am simply doing this to prevent myself from starving to death. I have just been informed that I shall be given no further assistance, because I have requested an inquiry at home. I have clear proofs. As you will note, it is impossible for us to complain and make known our condition, because, if we do so, assistance is cut off. I bore no ill-feeling against anybody when I took such a step, I simply did so, to give bread to my family; we are nine at the table.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Would you be so kind as to advise me, for I am disheartened. I read in La Presse of Montreal of March 21, 1933, that you have espoused the cause of the poor unfortunate settlers. May I congratulate you, my comrades associate themselves with me in sincerely congratulating you.

May I, sir, inform you, that all these marks of appreciation bestowed upon me by these poor people in distress amply repays me for all the insults, aspersions and jeers that may have or may be later levelled at me by members who sit on your right, sir.

What you state in La Presse is the truth, the whole truth, nothing but the truth. What we request of you, again, is to obtain an inquiry at domicile, at Packington, county of Témiscouata, ranges eighth and ninth, south of the church. While waiting for that inquiry, we are wondering what we shall do to keep ourselves from starving to death. Have no hesitation in reading, in the house, the two letters forwarded to you, and have them also published in the newspapers.

Send us a person, with a Bible, to hold the inquiry at domicile, one who may request an oath from us but not one to hold the inquiry at the priest's house—it is not in the latter place that one sees the distress of mothers and their children.

