CUT IN ESTIMATES DOES NOT PREVENT INCREASE OF $104,000 IN ASSESSMENT

City's Advance of $77,000 Mostly Due To Failure of Unexpended Balance To Wipe Out Interest

With an exact increase of $76,942.12 in the city estimates as finally adopted yesterday, and an apparent unavoidable increase of nearly $30,000 in the county estimates, as they were approved by the finance committee of the municipal council...

Table with 2 columns: 1914, 1915. Rows include Schools, Public works, Fire Department, Police department, Lamp department, Sewerage maintenance, Fire Hydrants, Civic grants, Ferry, Interest charges, County assessment.

*Only approximate as county assessment governed by county council, not yet adopted.

To these totals there must be added a percentage of from 8 to 10 per cent. by the board of assessors as an allowance for discounts on real estate collections...

THE CIVIC ESTIMATES

The citizens of St. John made it clear yesterday that they do not want much increase in taxation this year. The delegation which visited city hall was both large and influential, and there was but one opinion expressed, which was that the proposed increase in the civic estimates was undesirable and should be postponed until after the war.

POLICE AFFAIRS

The chief of police should have the cordial cooperation of the citizens in his work. The necessity for a thorough re-organization of the department has long been recognized, and the city council has appointed a man of wide experience, who comes well recommended.

MORNING NEWS OVER THE WIRES

William Gray, president of the London, Ont. Conservative Association, was nominated for the House of Commons as successor of the late Major Thomas Beattie, M. P., as member for London last night.

"4-13"?

What is it? See it at the Gem, Monday and Tuesday

The correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph tells a thrilling story of a bayonet charge by the Canadian regiment at the front, the Princess Patricia's, who put the Germans to flight, carrying trench after trench and gaining over a mile of ground.

It is estimated that Britain will have 630,000 men in France and Flanders by the end of January. She will have other great armies in preparation to enter the field a few months later.

The members of the city council will now see the desirability of the open door policy, with regular committee meetings at which civic affairs are discussed. These committee meetings are a part of the commission plan.

For two and a half hours yesterday afternoon the members of the city council sat in committee considering and making reductions in the estimates. The utmost harmony prevailed, and no board could apply itself more agreeably to the consideration of its affairs.

At a New York "Mum Sociable" the other night, all artifices, plans, dodges, subterfuges and tricks resorted to by the ladies to make a certain young man speak failed—all but one. He offered to forfeit five dollars "for the good of the cause" if they could induce him to speak a word within half an hour.

The statements made yesterday that travellers for St. John wholesale houses have their homes in other places because they can live there more cheaply, and that many other employees of commercial houses also live out of town throughout the year, suggests the propriety of much more than a decrease in taxation. It does suggest that there should be a radical revision of our system of taxation, but there might also be a careful inquiry into the causes of the high cost of living.

NOSE AND THROAT

A great many people, if you asked them what is the function of the nose, replying rather thoughtlessly, would say that it is the organ of smell.

The truth is the smelling function of the nose is one of purely secondary importance and its original and chief purpose is protection.

The nose is primarily and essentially an organ of respiration. The air must not enter the lungs in the crude state, but must be warmed, moistened and purified.

It must be deprived of the injurious dust and germs with which it is habitually loaded.

For this duty the interior of the nose is particularly adapted by reason of the peculiar character of the structure of its mucous membrane.

Small is of secondary consideration, and we may say the smelling organ serves its main purpose in apprising the individual of things which it might be harmful for him to breathe or eat.

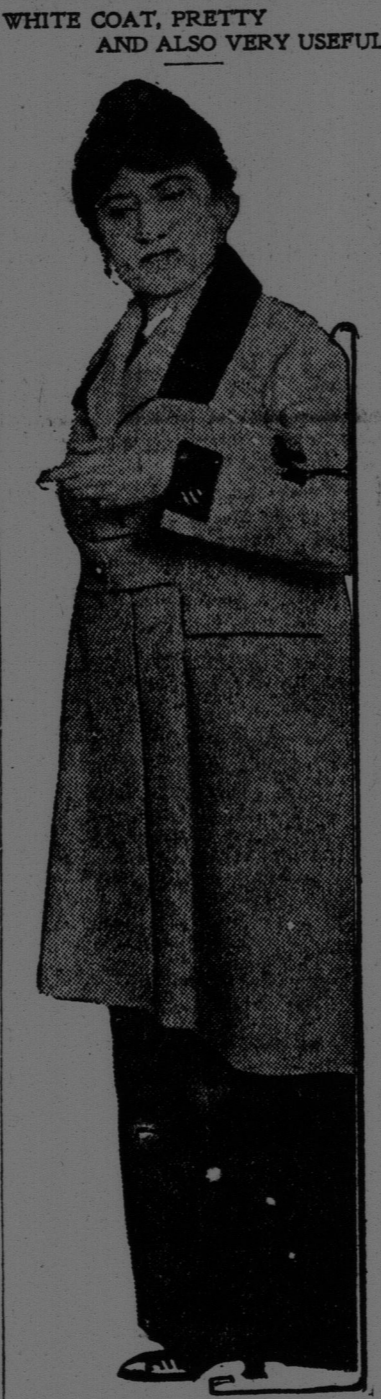

In some of the lower animals the organ of smell is very highly developed and is almost the sole dependence in enabling them to protect themselves against things that are injurious and to select that which is beneficial.

Man, too, would often do well to obey the warning given by his sense of odor, not to breathe an atmosphere whose stale, musty, fetid or otherwise offensive odor indicates its unwholesome character.

Instead, therefore, of thinking of the nose as made for the sense of smell, one should realize that the nose is primarily an organ of respiration and that nature simply found it would be helpful to locate a protective mechanism here where the odoriferous particles of the atmosphere could conveniently be carried in at each inspiratory act.

Nature's line of defenses connected with the air passages begins really just within the nostrils, in the part of the nose we call the vestibule. Here we always find a number of hairs or fine bristles, technically spoken of as the vibrissae.

Their purpose, of course, is to act as a sieve to entangle the dust and coarser

A white coat cut on the new "flare" lines, that is, with a decidedly flaring skirt, was one of the attractive models shown at the recent exhibition of the National Suit and Cloak association held in Toledo, O.

It's a practical little coat as well as a pretty one, as it is simple enough to be worn as a top coat in the day time, but equally suitable to slip over a party dress in the evening.

Hints for the Cook

Sponge Cake.
Beat three eggs, add one cup sugar and mix, sift one cup of flour, half teaspoon cream tartar, quarter teaspoon salt, twice mix with sugar and egg and last of all add quickly quarter cup of boiling water. This is very light and spongy.

Curry of Rice.
Make the following sauce and pour over plain boiled rice. Cook two tablespoons butter with two slices onion five minutes, removing onion, adding two tablespoons flour, three-fourths teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon curry powder, one-fourth teaspoon pepper, few grains celery salt, and pour on gradually one cup scalded milk.

Swedish Buns.
These are made with very little trouble when molding bread. Take 1 pound of light bread dough, add 1/2 cup butter, roll out 1/4 inch thick, spread with butter, sugar, cinnamon and currents. Fold as for jelly roll, cut into half-inch slices, set these rings side up in a pan, let rise to double their bulk and bake. Ice when cold.

HAVE YOU EVER HEARD OF WABASSO?

Dame Nature has surely been kind to little WABASSO, for she also provides him a winter overcoat as white as the new fallen snow, and so he literally hides as he runs.

In deed WABASSO is the envy also of his other brothers and cousins of the forest, for has not the woodchuck to go to sleep till the snows have passed? The little woodmouse must needs work like mad to store up his winter's supply of food and so on with the others; but the little WABASSO fears neither cold, hunger or pursuit in the deep snow, for his soft, thick, snowy white fur and his native snowshoes enable him to mock at the raving storm and outdistance those of his enemies who can distinguish him from his surroundings while he does his daily foraging.

The little Snow-Shoe Rabbit or WABASSO, as the Indians named him, has been chosen as the emblem of the product of the most up-to-date Cotton Mill in Canada, making exclusively the highest grades of and the name WABASSO is most appropriate, for both are as white as snow.

In introducing these beautiful white cottons to the ladies, we are pleased to be able to tell them that they have stood the test of several years before the public, and the demand for them has so steadily and rapidly increased that the WABASSO MILLS have had to be greatly enlarged to produce these goods as fast as they were asked for.

They are beautifully soft to the needle, and infact as pure as gold and as white as snow.

The Following in Great Variety is Offered in Wabasso Cottons

SHEETINGS, PILLOW COTTONS, SINGLE WIDTH COTTONS, BRIDAL CLOTHS, WHITE OREPES, ORGANDIES, NAINSOOKS, MADAPOLAMS, MADE-UP PILLOW CASES, VICTORIA LAWNs, WHITE PIQUES.

CANADIANS, WITH RINGING WAR CRY, CHARGE AND ROUT GERMANS

Distinguished in Stirring Bayonet Action Near Ypres—New Plan of Operations By Russians

London, Jan. 16.—The Canadian regiment at the front has distinguished itself in a stirring bayonet charge at a place near Ypres, known as "Dead Man's Alley," according to the Daily Chronicle's correspondent in Northeast France.

"The Germans," the correspondent says, "had moved a great mass of men against this spot on the British front. Mud helped the thin British line to hold, but the honors were barely even until the Canadian regiment hurried up from the rear. Suddenly there was heard a roar of voices, and a long line of sloop-hatted men with fixed bayonets rushed forward with the battle cry 'For Canada and Old England.'"

"The Germans broke before the charge, which carried everything before it. Trench after trench fell, and the Canadians did not cease until the Germans brought up their artillery. The ground gained extended over a mile in front."

London, Jan. 15, 9.45 p. m.—The latest official reports from the Russian general staff disclose a new operation on the part of the Russian army which may have far-reaching results.

Starting on their New Year the Russian cavalry commenced a forward movement in Northern Poland, on the right bank of the Lower Vistula river, and have reached the Skirva river, some forty miles east of the German fortress of Thorn, West Prussia, driving a small force of German cavalry and infantry before them. It is believed that Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian forces, intends to use an entirely new strategy, according to Petrograd despatches, of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men, in this region operating in conjunction with an army which is advancing in East Prussia.

This army would place the German troops at Miawa in a vise, and at the same time threaten the rear of the Germans in front of Warsaw. The latter still are making occasional attacks on the Russian line and according to a Berlin report, have taken a Russian advance point northeast of the Rawka river. Along the rest of the eastern front nothing of importance has happened. In the west the German success in retreating, in a few days, from the French ground near Salonica which it took the soldiers of General Joffre, commander-in-chief of the French forces, a fortnight to capture, remains the outstanding feature, although it has been somewhat offset by the reported British success near La Basse and the capture by Zouaves of some German trenches in the region of Arras. There have been attacks and counter-attacks at other points, but generally it has been the artillery which has been kept busy.

The Russians continue to harry the Turks, who made a stand on the borders of Trans-Caucasia after their recent defeat and claim to be capturing many more prisoners. The Russians also are making new dispositions in the province of Azerbaijan, Persia, which the Turks have promised to evacuate as soon as the Russians leave the province and the Persian heir presumptive reaches Tabriz. The government of the province of Azerbaijan is an appanage of the heir presumptive.

A Kaiser Story

A month or so ago it was reported the Kaiser had received a ducking by falling into a flooded trench. A new version of His Majesty's immersion is being told in the London clubs, according to a Dublin weekly paper. The story, which is so the story goes, the Emperor arrived at headquarters arrayed in his magnificent uniform—white, with silver facings, white mantle and silver helmet—but dripping wet. The astonishment and bedraggled appearance created was heightened when, taking no notice of his generals, he paced the floor, repeating to himself the strange sentence, "He did not do it." "He did not do it!"

do it" and gloomily strode from end to end of the hall as one in a deep reverie, still murmuring the cryptic phrase. Then another bold soldier came forward and faced his war lord. "I am sure Your Majesty is indisposed; can I be of service?" At that the Kaiser, with a characteristic emphasis exclaimed: "He did not do it. He did not walk on the water!"

ONTARIO WOMAN'S FORTUNE

Freed From That Weak, Languid, Always Tired Feeling, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Thessalon, Ont.—"I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When my appetite is poor and I feel weak and languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a blessing to speak highly enough of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others."

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health. There are probably hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over 30 years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering. If you are sick and need such a medicine, why don't you try it? If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

BILLY SUNDAY SWATTING THE DEVIL

GERMANY'S TERRIBLE CREED.

Be efficient, be virile, be hard, be bloody, be rulers, worship according to the rites of the religion of valor, adopt the dogma that might makes right, teach the individual that he must sacrifice life, liberty, everything to the state, ride down and trample upon whoever stands in the way of imperial progress along the bloody road—this is the creed of Germany, this is its theory and practice of the state's duty to itself, this is the use made of the power it has by the ruthless sacrifice of finer things built up.

To maintain that the power which has adopted in practice that new morality, and in accordance with its precepts promised Austria its support against Serbia, and invaded Belgium and France in hot haste, is not the responsible author of the European war, is to throw away memory, reason, and common sense, in judging the human agencies in current events.—Dr. Charles W. Eliot in New York Times.

NEW YEAR'S SERMON OF CARDINAL GIBBONS

Conversion of Primitive Christians and a Lesson Applied to Today

The following report of Cardinal Gibbons' New Year sermon in Baltimore was brought to the Times by a Protestant clergyman of St. John who was so impressed by the Cardinal's words that he felt the report should be published here. The report says:—

In accordance with his long established custom, Cardinal Gibbons appeared yesterday in the pulpit of the Baltimore Cathedral and preached his New Year sermon. The usual large audience greeted him, and following the services he held his New Year's reception and greeted hundreds of persons. He took for his subject "The Marvelous Conversion of the Primitive Christians." In the course of his sermon he said:

As this is the first Sunday in the new year, it affords an appropriate occasion to speak to you on the beginnings of Christianity and its early history and development. One of the most striking phenomena of the Primitive Church was the rigid diffusion of the Christian religion in those days. It may be interesting and instructive to us to consider some of the leading agencies which, under the influence of Divine grace, operated so powerfully in the propagation of the Gospel in that early period of her existence.

The first and most efficacious influence may be ascribed to the sublime and beautiful teachings of Christianity. The Christian religion proclaimed then as it does now doctrines which satisfied the highest aspirations of the human intellect and gratified the legitimate cravings of the human heart. It solved religious problems which had baffled the researches of the most profound philosophers of Pagan antiquity, and which bewildered the investigators, even of our own day when they close their eyes to the light of revelation.

The Christian religion gave the Pagan world a rational idea of the Supreme Being. It proclaimed a God eternally one, existing from eternity to eternity. It proclaimed a God who created all things by His power, who governs all things by His wisdom, and whose superintending Providence watches over the affairs of the nations and of men, without whom not even a bird can fall to the ground. It spoke of a God infinitely just, infinitely merciful, infinitely holy and wise. This idea of a great Cause, so consonant to our intellectual conceptions, was in striking contrast with the low, groveling sensual notions of Paganism ascribed to its divinities.

The Christian religion gave man not only a sublime notion of his Creator, but it gave him also a rational idea of himself. Hitherto man was a mystery, a riddle, and he knew not whence he came or whither he was going. He was groping in the dark. The past and the future were for him buried in impenetrable darkness. The religion of Christ imparted to him a knowledge of his origin and of his destiny, and of the means of attaining it. It rescued him from the frightful labyrinth in which Paganism had involved him. It brought him that peace of God which surpasseth all understanding, that peace which springs from the conscious possession of the truth. It imparted to him a triple peace. It taught him to have peace with God, by the observance of His precepts; peace with his neighbor, by fulfilling the law of justice and charity; and peace with himself, by keeping his passions subject to reason and reason obedient to the light of faith.

Another distinguishing feature of the religion of Christ was its all-embracing mission and its appeal to the whole of humanity, without distinction of rank or condition. In this respect it differed from all other systems of religion that had preceded it. They were all local in their character, the creatures of the state.

The Christian religion, on the contrary, was cosmopolitan, world-wide, universal, restricted by no state levies or national boundaries. Christ came as the world's physician. He alone could feel the pulse of humanity and prescribe to each man the remedies to assuage his fever and restore him to spiritual vigor. Like the air of Heaven which ascends the highest mountain and descends down to the deepest valley, ever purifying the face of Nature, the Gospel permeated every rank and grade of society, diffusing everywhere a healthy moral atmosphere.

It had a message for master and man, for rich and poor. "To the Greeks and to the barbarians, to the wise and the unwise I am a debtor," writes the apostle. Without rudely dissolving the relations between master and slave, it admonished the slave owner to be kind and humane to his slave, reminding him that he had a Master in Heaven who had no respect for persons. It taught the slave to be docile to his master. It cheered him by the comforting thought that he was not a chattel or animated machine, but that he was endowed with an immortal soul and was a child of God. It gradually relaxed the severity of his bondage till his chains fell from his feet.

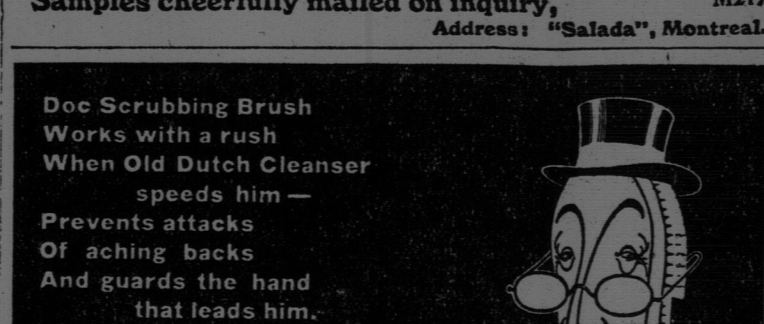

The Gospel charged the rich not to be high-minded, nor to trust in the uncertainty of riches, but in the living God, to be good, to become rich in good works. It comforted the poor man by the very old but never true story of a God, who became poor for our sakes and by His poverty we might be enriched. It set out to the blessed promise of eternal life and of a happiness which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man is capable of conceiving.

The Pagan world saw with admiration the great moral change which the Christian religion wrought in the lives of their

BICHLORIDE POISONING YIELDS TO ANTIDOTE

Cincinnati, Jan. 15.—Dr. J. H. Wilms, of the West Medical Society, has announced his discovery of calcium sulphide as an antidote for bichloride of mercury poisoning, and declares that he has used it successfully. He says:— "Chemists have long known that sulphur forms an insoluble compound with mercury, but it had never been used universally as an antidote to mercurial poisoning. I have used calcium sulphide in one-tenth to one-hundredth grain doses, repeated every hour, in mercurial poisoning such as we frequently meet with. In giving mercury for diseased conditions requiring large doses internally, when salivation would follow in these cases relief followed almost immediately.

In bichloride poisoning we have almost the same condition as from mercury distributed to the various tissues and organs. This condition requires some drug that will form an insoluble compound. This is what the calcium sulphide does. Bichloride of mercury is one of the most valuable drugs and antiseptics in use and its universal use makes it all the more important that its antidote should be known."

From a Chaplain at The Front
The Redemption Price the British Army Is Paying in Belgium; The Battle of Ypres

(Methodist Recorder)

I left off in my story of the pilgrimage and work of the 14th Field Ambulance, at that point where the 8th division was for the time being acting as "corps reserve" to the Meuse division. Of the first week that we were attached to the Indian Army I know little, for the cold, raw mists of this land of dykes and mud flats weakened in my blood my almost forgotten enemy malaria fever, and it was entirely due to the kindness of Colonel Crawford that I was not invalided to the base, and my connection with the field ambulance brought to an inglorious close. A field ambulance is not supposed to be in the front line, but to evacuate into the nearest clearing hospital; however, in my case an exception was made. With so many doctors to advise, prescribe, and treat me, I made a speedy recovery, and after a week or ten days' misery was able to resume work.

By that time we were established at La Gorge-Estaire, the infantry supposed to be resting in billets all day, and at night occupying the reserve trenches, but in reality doing nearly as much time in the front line as the other officers with him, did exceptionally good work. Once they were severely shelled, and it almost looked as though they would have to retire, but though the projectiles fell within a few yards of the buildings they were occupying, nothing was hit, and the bombardment was not repeated. Their chief trouble was that when they went up to the trenches at night to fetch wounded—as always it was impossible to approach them in daylight—they were persistently "sniped".

One of them described it to me as "half a mile of the unhealthiest bit of road I have ever yet trodden. As sure as the bullets are coming from." So serious at last became the menace to all traffic that a systematic search of the countryside was undertaken by the provost marshal and his military police, assisted by the infantry, with the result that in other neighborhoods a number of snipers were captured and "snipped" for the time being. In our view, however, there was no chance until at last a capture was made.

A detachment of infantry found a German soldier in full uniform, hiding in the roof of an empty house. For ten days he had lived in our lines, his only food raw potatoes, and every night he had gone forth to do his deadly work. He said that the company to which he had belonged had been nearly exterminated in a recent night attack, only ten men were left. So the colonel had sent for them and said, "You are no good as a company, so you had better all get off into the English lines; you will be more useful there as 'snipers' than you are here," and they went, though each knew he would never return. Our men called it "Hattersday's raid," "of course we should have shot him, not taken him prisoner—he'd killed seven of our men besides those he'd wounded. But he looked so miserable and hungry that we gave him some bully beef and bread, and when he'd wolfed that we gave him some cigarettes and then marched him off to the provost marshal's." Which thing is characteristic of Tommy Atkins, God bless him.

During these days I find it hard to decide what division or what army we belong to—part of the time we were with the Meuse division, at another time we were attached to the Lahore division, and nominally we were part of the second army. Several times I heard of Mr. Knott—our chaplain from India—but I never met him, the fates seemed to decree that our meeting should be not yet. Of his work I was told again and again, and a gunner belonging to one of the Indian batteries said, "He's a bit of all right, Sir. One of the best. A real pukka soldiers' padre."

The Call to the North.

his message to the troops came, and we trekked north in the direction of Bailleul. The march was not a very long one, but it lives in our memory by reason of its discomfort; cold, piercing wind, then driving sleet, and finally cold, incessant rain. That night we billeted at a farm just south of Meteren, the next day continuing our march through Zealand across the Belgian frontier, to the little town of Dranoutre. On July 13 we had an opportunity of judging the spirit and fitness of the infantry, which were superb. It was hard to believe that these were the same men whose condition a fortnight before had seemed so deplorable.

Clean, shaven, smart, the lines on their faces which had seemed to make old men of them all, vanished; the look in their eyes which had never ceased to haunt me, no longer there; they looked capable of responding to any call—the finest troops in the world. They had not had their long-promised rest, but they had had change, and with the wonderful recuperative power of the British soldier—the wonder of all who know him—they were rejuvenated. Over long, tiring marches, they had been in their boots in mud, they marched, with a swing that would have done credit to a royal review on Lauff's Plain, and at times they chanted their war song, "It's a long, long way to Tipperary."

It seemed hardly possible that for three solid months they had been fighting without a single real day's rest. As they crossed the Belgian frontier their spirits rose. "This is better than the last time we crossed it, ain't it, Sir?" Then we were on the run, having got more than we wanted at Mons, but now the boot's on the other leg. Now, if we could only capture 'Kaiser Bill' or even 'Old One O'clock' General Von Kluck, we might get home for our Christmas dinners after all.

At Dranoutre the field ambulance was billeted in the village school whilst the principal line, or command, was taking over trenches from the French, and our allies were hurried off to strengthen the line at a point where the pressure was greater. The gravity of the situation—only partly realized by ourselves—has been made known in Sir John French's despatch, also his reluctance to so soon call upon the exhausted troops of the Second Army Corps, but the need was such that he could not do otherwise. How constantly one heard the cry in these days, "If only England had listened to Lord Roberts we should not now have been short of trained men," whilst in the trenches the soldier earnestly joked, "I suppose there is a Kitchen's army, but none of us poor beggars will ever live to see it come out here."

The Redemption Price

Of the days that followed I find myself quite incapable of writing—no pen could do justice to our men, truly picture the fierceness of the fighting, adequately describe the sufferings which our troops so heroically endured. Never in the history of our army have men had to face such odds, endure such hardships, or stand against such an appalling artillery fire as did the British expeditionary force during the closing days of October and the first half of November. To the First Army Corps fell the heaviest share of the fighting, and probably the story of the conflict would never be told in detail, nor will it ever be known at how heavy a cost in human lives that victory was won. The flower of the German army was checked and pushed back, the invincible Prussian Guard was annihilated, the dash for Calais and the Channel ports failed, but the losses in the First Army Corps, and in the Third Division (Second Army Corps) were such that we in Flanders have never ceased to marvel that there was not an instant rally of all the able-bodied young men in the Empire to supply our pressing need for men. The regular army has been literally laying down its life to hold the enemy in check until the new armies being trained in England are fit to take the field. Lives are being poured out like water which shell fire, but it was well within range of the German guns, and it was feared that at any moment shells might be bursting in our midst. So the Field Ambulance was ordered to "dig itself in." Probably for the first time in the history of the Royal Army Medical Corps, the men of the corps were employed digging shelter trenches, and constructing bomb-proof shelters ("funk holes") the men called them to which our sick and wounded could be moved if necessary. Quite an imposing line of trenches was constructed in the field opposite our home, and Captain Lindsay, who superintended the carrying out of the work, was justly proud of the R. A. M. C. defences.

The ordinary work of the ambulance at this time was necessarily done at night, for it was impossible to reach the trenches in daylight. The line held by the 14th Infantry Brigade was along an extended front, that many of the nightly journeys of the ambulance wagons exceeded ten miles there and back; and beyond the point to which wagons could be taken in safety, was a "carry" of over a mile. What it meant to carry a wounded man over a mile in a stretcher, across rough fields and in inky darkness can be better imagined than described. In order that my readers may better understand what doctors and bearers were facing every night of the work, I will try and describe one such night journey.

An Unhealthy Climate

All day long there had been heavy shell and rifle fire, and just before the first lot of ambulance wagons started out there came a message that the Church of England chaplain was needed, so the Rev. D. P. Wainwright accompanied them. By the time the party was going in the opposite direction—were ready to start, another message had come asking for a chaplain, so I set out, the other officers in the party being Captain Lindsay and Lieutenant Chesney. I need not describe the track in the darkness over well-nigh impassable roads, until after some miles we reached cross-roads where the wagons halted. Beyond this men in the dark, it was not safe to take the wagons. So we continued on our way with the bearer squads carrying their stretchers.

Another four yards and we reached a ruined cottage—the roof and the upper story had been carried away by a shell explosion—this was the regimental aid post of the East Surrey Regiment, and here we found Lieutenant and Mrs. I. A. M. C., with a house full of wounded. "Not very good quarters, are they, Padre?" I had quite a nice house, but they had to get out of it, and half an hour after we left there wasn't one stone left standing on another, and that was the best we could get within reasonable reach of the trenches. No, I haven't any dead for you to bury; I'm busy and busy this morning when we had to move. Hope you don't mind, but I did my best, and said a prayer or two over the grave.

Leaving Captain Lindsay with sufficient bearers to deal with the wounded, Lieutenant Chesney and myself with the remainder of the bearers continued on our way to the lines of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. At one place the road was almost impassable even on foot—a great shell had burst in the middle of the road making a huge hole, and we were on a cart track crossing open fields. "This is a very unhealthy place," said my companion casually. "I've always got 'sniped' here, and there's no cover. Do you hear them?" Zip-zip; buzz, ping! Yes, I heard it, and was devoutly thankful when at last a farm was reached, and Chesney said, "Here we are, Padre, Matthews should be somewhere about."

In a few minutes Lieutenant Matthews, R. A. M. C., appeared and led me to where his wounded were collected in the farm kitchen. "Sorry, Padre, but the grave ain't dug yet. We've had a busy time with the wounded here, and as soon as we've got them off it shall be done." Having seen the wounded on their way I proceeded to a neighboring farm where there was the headquarters of the regiment, and there waited until word came that the pioneers had finished their work, and the grave was ready, which I could picture that farmhouse kitchen; it would help you to realize the hardships they were being faced by officers and men. "Quite cosy, aren't we?" said the adjutant; "lucky to have any billet at all, and this is warm, even if it isn't exactly clean."

But what a place it was! A large square room with heavily timbered ceiling and walls, and a fire of logs in the great open chimney. Indescribably filthy—both Germans and trench-diggers had occupied it before our people—windows blocked with straw so that the enemy might not see the light and fire at it, for at this point British and German lines were only fifty yards apart. Lying about sleeping on the stone floor were the officers who happened to be off duty, all fully dressed and in their equipment, plastered with mud from head to foot, and in some cases the mud—could hardly recognize any of them. "Look a bit crummy, don't you?" laughed a subaltern; "but we've a wash and a shave." Then out into the darkness to where the grave was waiting.

"It's an attack on, Sir," said the pioneer sergeant; "but they're firing high and all the bullets are going well over our heads, and there's a few gas shells in the air. It's so dark that it's certain he can't see us, but seems to have a sort of instinct; as sure as we get near the place he begins firing. There you are, Sir; he's at it again. Lucky he ain't a snip shot."

My sad task done, there followed the lonely tramp back in the darkness, first over the "unhealthy" stretch of road, then along dark ways where our own sentries were the chief danger, and finally about four a. m. Dranoutre. Mr. Wainwright, I found, had not yet returned, and it was two hours later when he arrived, having had a longer trek but a similar experience to my own.

need not have been sacrificed if the front of our land had been ready and trained.

The Fifth Division (with which I am serving) was not in this fierce fighting. To them had been assigned the task, first of supporting and when necessary relieving the Indian army, and in the second phase of the month-long battle holding a long line of trenches with a force which, in point of numbers, was utterly inadequate for such a purpose. Day after day they sustained a continual bombardment from heavy artillery; night after night they rolled back the fierce attacks of the German infantry. No rifles, no reserves, a thin khaki line, doggedly holding in check the overwhelming German hosts. Day by day they dug themselves nearer and nearer to the enemy's line, until in some places the opposing forces were only forty and fifty yards apart. The weather had now become acutely heavy, and the bitter frost—and the conditions in the trenches simply baffled description.

Frost-bite was common, and the marvel was how many troops, especially men who had already passed through such ordeals, could continue to endure, and fight so magnificently. All that could be done for them was done. Warm goat-skin coats were put into words, and the men looked more like Teddy bears than British soldiers—charcoal bearers were sent out to the trenches, warm clothing from friends "at home" was distributed, and under the efficient organization of the Army Service Corps, the men were fed from the front. In the field have ever been before. But when all is said, the fact remains that they suffered more than can be put into words, and no praise is too high for the officers and men of the infantry during these trying weeks.

Entrenching the Field Ambulance.

The school-house which was occupied by the 14th Field Ambulance looked over the fields to Mont Kemmel, which from early morning until dark the Germans were pounding with heavy lyddite shell—it seemed as though every inch of the hill must have been searched by such continuous fire, and that a fly could not have lived in it. The only living thing on the hill as far as I know was an officer of the Royal Artillery, who sat in a tower on the hill top "observing" and telephoning back information to our batteries.

For a month the hill was shelled by the enemy and during the whole time the artillery officers took their turn, a day at a time, in the tower, and not one of them was hit. The little town of Dranoutre had not suffered much from Church, who is serving God, and his King and country in the Royal Artillery. His friends will be pleased to know that he is well and happy, and in no way the worse for the experiences through which he has passed—indeed to him has been given a unique opportunity of exercising a true Christian ministry.

On November 23 I personally received a great surprise—it was informed that I had been granted seven days' leave of absence, and was to proceed to England on the morning of the 25th. It seemed too good to be true. Of our journey by motor bus (which a few days before had been plying in the London streets) from Bailleul to Boulogne I need not write, nor of the crossing if Folkestone; suffice it to say that at five a. m. in the morning I was within sound and reach of my own country. The change was so great that it was almost overwhelming.

The King's Visit to the Front

December 1 I saw me back again to the front—refreshed by the change of the past few days, and better able to meet whatever might come. I arrived just in time to be present when His Majesty the King visited and inspected the 14th Brigade. It was a great sight to see these veterans who had been fighting without rest from the beginning of the war, drawn up to meet their king—and what a cheer they gave him. Dressed in the khaki uniform of a staff officer, and accompanied by the Prince of Wales, His Majesty inspected his troops, and pinned on V. C., D. S. O.'s, and D. C. M.'s to officers and men who had well-earned them. Overhead was the hum of the engines of an aeroplane scout keeping watch and guard, and in the distance, the rattle of guns, for we were on the edge of the fighting line. Then more cheers for the king, and—surprise. The Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry had a cheer for themselves for "The Duke of Cornwall."

Looking rather surprised and very young the Prince of Wales stepped forward and acknowledged the greeting of his own regiment with a salute. As the royal motor-car passed from our sight, we could trace its course by the cheers which came from the troops through which it passed, and marked that it was well up into the firing line, had watched the batteries at work, and had accom-ally obtained a bird's eye view of the scene of the recent fighting, from a hill which none of us would have exactly called "healthy." The effect of His Majesty's visit to the front it would be impossible to over-estimate. To the whole expeditionary force it means inspiration, and the proud knowledge that the king cares for, and is interested in his soldiers—he himself has been to see us, and has seen with his own eyes what we are doing for king and country.

A Postscript of Gratitude

I have exceeded my space, so must conclude, but before doing so I should like to express my thanks to the many friends who have sent me comforts for the use of the troops. I have tried to acknowledge every parcel, at any rate with a postcard, and I am sure all will realize that it is not possible for me to do more. But though a post-card seems a small acknowledgement of such generosity, yet it is meant to express a gratitude that is almost beyond words. During the last week I have been getting two and three mail bags full a day, and to send merely postcards in acknowledgment seems a considerable labor. So well have I been supplied with gifts that for the present I have no further need of body-belts, mufflers, or mittens; the things I am in crying need of are newspaper and envelopes, indelible pencils, and candles while such things as tinned coffee and milk and cocoa and milk, are a luxury greatly prized by the men.

CAPTAIN OF "BIG FOUR" RECOVERED

Will Play Again This Year—Has Fine String of Ponies

Harry Payne Whitney, probably the greatest polo captain that ever guided a team to victory on the field, will take more personal interest in polo this year than he did last.

Mr. Whitney's return to the saddle does not necessarily mean that he will again be a member of the American team which will go to England after the cup. Even though he had not met with the accident early last year, he would not have played in the Big Four team.

Mr. Whitney now has twenty-six polo ponies in his winter training quarters. This is the biggest individual owned string in the country. Mr. Whitney is keeping these fine mounts so that he will have plenty of material to call upon when he starts to play polo next summer.

The Polo Association, which has jurisdiction over polo in the United States, will continue to offer a cup for competition among the teams which comprise the Pacific Coast Circuit. In addition to this trophy, four individual cups will be added this year.

The Buffalo Federal League Club plans to sue for damages Picher Ray Caldwell, who rejoined the New York Americans after signing a Buffalo contract, but will make no effort to force him to leave the Yankees, according to President Gilmore.

Cubs' Training. Members of the Chicago National League club will gather on Feb. 23 in Tampa, Florida, for their spring training.

Jack Dunn, last year's owner of the Baltimore Orioles, has signed a contract transferring his club to Richmond.

Four Hundred on Roll of Local Patriotic Fund

Some $6,500 Paid Out This Month—Benefits Not to Apply to Volunteers Married After Enlisting

A Montreal despatch contains notice that in future names of volunteers married after the husband's enlistment, will not share in the separation allowance or in the distribution of the patriotic fund. For some time this has been expected in the militia, in fact in some cases the names of those so married were not entered upon the books of the patriotic fund committee, as it was not thought that the circumstances demanded it. No official intimation has been received by C. B. Allan, secretary treasurer of the local branch of the fund, from Ottawa, regarding the matter. He said that there had been only four applications to be placed on the patriotic fund lists where marriages had occurred after enlistment. One or two had been granted. The mid-month checks were issued today and yesterday to those on the roll in this province, and the amount is assuming quite large proportions. There are now about 400 names on the roll, and the total sent out in checks was about $6,500 this month. Already $18,000 has been paid out from the local office. C. B. Allan, treasurer of the Patriotic Fund, acknowledges $26 from E. H. Pitcair and $1 from a friend.

A very pleasant evening was spent in music and games. W. M. Price, on behalf of those present, presented to Mr. Thomas a handsome monogram signet ring, as a token of the esteem in which he is held. Refreshments were served, and the company broke up about midnight, wishing Mr. Thomas a safe and happy return from the front.

The members of the 29th battalion will parade to four churches tomorrow, the Catholics going to the Cathedral to mass at 11.15, the Protestants parading to St. Paul's, the Congregational church, and the Baptist. Routine drill was the order of parade this morning.

That rumbling noise about the city yesterday had nothing to do with the Italian earthquake—it was simply the menacing murmur of citizens who desire to keep down expenses.

Didn't you breathe more easily today when you learned the estimates were reduced?

Some of the things said by gentlemanly citizens this week concerning their fellow-citizens-commissioners were as hasty as what some of the preachers said early in the war about the Kaiser.

One alleged humorist proposed the following:—"If a full grown elephant yields 120 pounds of solid ivory what would a city council yield?"

The allies' correspondents can hardly blame the latest earthquake on the Kaiser, but the latter may say it was because the Italians didn't join him in the fray.

GOOD BUSINESS INDICATION

Since furs are in a sense a luxury the fur trade is a fairly good barometer of business and the fact that it has not been seriously affected in the province by the war is an excellent proof of the purchasing capacity of the people.

In reply to an enquiry by the Times yesterday, David Magee, of D. Magee's Sons, Ltd., said that their business for the last fall and thus far during the winter had been normal. The volume of trade was very satisfactory. Their cash in December was about $50,000, which was considered very good indeed. Business in January thus far has also been satisfactory. Mr. Magee said he did not anticipate any falling off in 1915, and his firm were making preparation for as large a year's business as that of 1914.

MILITARY WATCH TO ELMER R. INGRAHAM

A pleasant surprise was given Elmer R. Ingraham last evening, when friends gathered at the home of H. T. Ward, Summer street, to tender him their best wishes. Mr. Ingraham, who has been on the staff of the local post office for some time, will be a member of the Army Postal Corps with the second contingent, having received his appointment in short time ago. During the evening a handsome military wrist watch was presented to Mr. Ingraham. The presentation was made by H. T. Ward, who, in a short but interesting speech, spoke of the esteem in which Mr. Ingraham is held, and wished him a safe return.

Mr. Ingraham was completely taken by surprise and received the gift with short address of thanks. Cards and music were enjoyed. Mr. Ingraham is well known as a speed skater, and a few years ago was successful in twice winning the intermediate championship in Montreal.
