ters with Armitage have not been to his credit." The two men were dressed in rough clothes, as for an outing, and in spite of the habitual triffing tone of their talk they wore a serious air. Durand's eyes danced with excitement, and he twisted his mustache nervously. Chauvenet had gone to Washington to meet Durand, to get from him news of the progress of the conspiracy in Vienna and, not least, to berate him for crossing the Atlantic. "I do not require watching, my dear Durand," he had said.

What will you require!

Men who thoroughly understand the principles of money making, know that profits accrue only by continuous service to their patrons, and if their ability to serve is destroyed the monetary loss is great, because trade directed to other channels is seldom regained. The installation of proper safeguards not only eliminates to a large extent the possibility of a fire occurring on the premises, but leads to a reduction of premium. With an Acadia Policy you can afford to dress as shabby, as un-ACADIA POLICIES are backed by Assets of three-quarters of a million dollars.

N Vienna, Friday!"

"There a hould be great deeds, my dear Julea." And M. Durand adjusted the wick of a smoking brass at hung suspended from the lamp that hung suspended from the celling of a room of the inn, store and postoffice at Lamar.

"Meanwhile, this being but Wednesday, we have our work to do."

"So that beggariy little servant that it, did he? He stole that paper I had given you, did he? What do you imagine I brought you to this country for if you are to let two stupid fools." "Meanwhile, this being but Wednesday, we have our work to do."

"Which is not so simple, after all, as one studies the situation. Mr. Armitage is here, quite within reach. We suspect him of being a person of distinction. He evinced unusual interest in a certain document that was once in your hands"—

"Our own hands, if you would be accurate."

"You are captious. But, granted so, we must get them back. The gentleman is dwelling in a bungalow on the mountain side for greater convenience in watching events and wooling the lady of his heart's desire. We employed a clumy clown to put him out of the world, but he dies hard, and now we have got to get rid of him. But if he hasn't the papers on his clothes they you have this pleasant scheme for kidnaping him, getting him down to your steamer at Baltimore and cruising with him until he is ready to come to terms. The American air has done much for your imagination, my dear Jules, or possibly the altitude of the hills has overstimulated it."
"You are not the fool you look, my dear Durand. You have actually taken a fair grasp of the situation."
"But the adorable young lady, the fair Mile. Claiborne—what becomes of her in these transactions?"
"That is none of your affair," replied Chauvenet, frowning. "I am quite content with my progress." "You are captious. But, granted so, ner in these transactions?"

"That is none of your affair," replied Chauvenet, frowning. "I am quite content with my progress. I have not finished in that matter."

"Neither, it would seem, has Mr. John Armitage. But I am quite well satisfied to leave it to you. In a few days we shall know much more than we do now. I should be happier if you were in charge in Vienna. A false step there—ugh! I hestiate to think of the wrethed mess there would be."

"Trust Winkelried to do his full duty. You must not forget that the acute Stroebel now aleeps the long sleep and that many masses have already been said for the repose of his intrepid soul."

"The splendor of our undertaking is enough to draw his ghost from the grave. Ugh! By this time Zmal should have filed our cablegram at the Springs and got your mail at the hotel. I hope you have not misplaced your confidence in the operator there. Coming back our giant must pass Armitage's house."

The knife was not the only weapon he had known in Servia. He carried a potato sack across his saddle bow. Chauvenet and Durand sent him ahead to set the pace with his inferior mount. They talked together in low tones as they followed.

Naval examples.

Our Tory contemporary, adopting the argument of the Toronto "News," says: srgument of the Toronto "News," says:

"Australia long ago did exactly what
Mr. Borden has proposed. That is to say,
Australia contributed direct to the Imperial Navy for years before they undertook the creation of a Dominion unit.
They scorned to remain pensioners on the British taxpayer until they could build Dreadnoughts of their own." And these are advanced as reasons why Canada should pay contributions for nine years at any rate, the time during which Australia paid them, from 1902 to 1911. aid them, from 1902 to 1911.

Let us look into the logic of this. Covering the period named, Australia paid direct contributions to the British Admiality, who in return maintained a squadron of war vessels in Australian waters at a yearly cost of three times the sum paid a yearly cost of three times the sum part by the Australian government. A fine way of relieving the British taxpayer this. Then when Australia could boast of a population of 4,650,000, a Federal revenue of about $96,000,000, and a foreign trade of $760,000,000, she found herself ready and capable of founding steel shipbuilding plants, of constructing dockyards, of maintaining navai stations, of building or buying Dreadnoughts and other types of war vessels, and also of finding ampli volunteers to take full charge of the sam after receiving training; in short, of set-ting up a most promising naval system of her own. The Dominion of Canada finds herself in this year of Our Lord, 1913, with a population of nearly 8 millions, with a Federal revenue of about 200 millions, increasing at the rate of nearly three mil-lions a month, with a foreign trade which, at the end of the curren year, will reach $1,250,000,000, with bank deposits double those of Australia, and with Clearing Houses counting their hand Of Trade discuss and deal with many lings by the billions—yet we are told by Mr. Borden and his followers that Canada cannot do in less than fifty years what Australia is now accomplishing with such Australia is now accomplishing with such case and celerity! In fifty years Canada may have a population of forty millions, with a revenue of a billion dollars or more annually, and then, and not till then, will she be able to do the work Australia is now doisg, according to Mr. Borden and his followers. Such preachments as these are the declarations of cowardice, and a criminal lack of confidence in Canadian pluck and enterprise, cowardly and unpatriotic declarations that would be rewarded by the application of tar and feathers if uttered by an American, an Raglishman, a German, an Australian, or a Japanese in either of their respective countries.

But Canadians have not remained "pensioners on the British taxpayer," despite the declaration of Editor Willison and, the Toronto "News." Sir Charles Tupper him self has again and again borne witness to this. They created a short and rapid route for British armament to the Orient disstingual of the burden of civit and the disstingual of the print which we have the Geades of the Condition of the burden of civit and the British taxpayer," despite the declaration of Editor Willison and, the Toronto "News." Hallway and the Grand Trunk Pacifisher of the distribution of the burden of civic and municipal taxation, particularly with respect to arriving at a correct valuation of personal property and income, memoralized their maintenance annually than the beasted yearly sum which Australia contributed to the British Navy; a fact worth remembering.

Which more beases.

Which more becomes Canadian manhood and intelligence, to imitate the policy which Australia tried, was dissatisfied with from the beginning, and eventually discarded, or to imitate the example which she finally deliberately adopted after a lengthy and unsatisfactory experience with a policy of contributions? There can be only one answer to this.

with a policy of contributions? There can be only one answer to this.

The pity of it.

The Borden Government has delivered a serious below to the cause of Technical Education, if the reports coming from Ottawa are correct. It will be remembered that the Royal Commission on Technical Education was appointed in 1910 by the Laurier Government for the purpose of studying exhaustively on this continent and Europe the question of Technical Education. Dr. James Robertson was chairman, and the work was performed with thoroughness, covering in all a period of two years of close inquiry and observation. In May of the current year the findings were presented to the Minister of Labor, Hon. T. W. Crothers. The Commission also recommended a comprehensive scheme of Technical Education for Canada and outlined plans for bringing the scheme into effect covering a period of ten years, and in appearance reminds one of that popular comediente. Si and Miss Calla. "The sunny side of life has a strong appeal to me from a theatrical standpoint, and I believe only in enter-tainment that amuse. A good musical comedy, with bright catchy music, pretty pairs and fine scenery is the kind of a show one should go to see after a hard days work. I never had any desire toward making the public cry, and would particularly dodge the psychological play. The public does not care for psychology, and it is my opinion that when a man goos to the theatre he is there to be amused. I like to see a husband take his wife to het heater to see the bright and lively entrainment, that will put him in a goos to the theater he is then of a pretty part and pretty part and the scene and the wear into the sleves in work. I never had any desire toward and the search property of the public cry, and would particularly dodge the psychological play. The public does not care for psychology, and it is my opinion that when a man it is my opinio dollars a year. The expenditure was to be made from the Federal treasury, but pro-vincial rights in regard to control over educational expenditure were to be safeguarded in every way by providing for provincially-appointed boards to administer the votes apportioned to their respective provinces, the principle recommanded tive provinces, the principle recommended being the same as that already adopted in connection with the legislation Minister of Labour has received the Report and the recommendations, and, accontemplates taking no further action. Free sugar. Despite the battle, open, secret and Despite the battle, open, secret and otherwise, put up by the sweet "interests" against the reduction of the duty on sugar, President Wilson and his Democrate have stuck to their guns with a temacity worthy of the cause of the consumer for which they are contending. The present tariff is $1.96 per hundred pounds, a pretty effective obstasle to trade. By 1916, it will enter the United States free. Not only will the masses benefit, but the planters in the West India islands will find a sudden and tremendous increases in the demand for their product, for the few parts of the Southern States where the came can be grown successfully cannot come at all near to supplying the enormous and fast augmenting demand for sugar. The removal of this obstacle to trade will mean the ushering in of a new era for the languishing commerce of the fertile islands within a few hours' salling of the American shores. Free wheat, which seems to be a certainty, means also the beginning of an era of unerampled expansion of grain growing in the northwest of Canada, for the great market ere long will be a few hours' haul just across the American boundary. The Wilson Tariff Bill is a vast stride in the direction of Free Trade

"I like to see a husband take his wife to the theatre to see the bright and lively entertainment that will put him in a good humor that he'll be gentle in helping her on with her coat. After seeing a first class musloal comedy a man might even give the arm of his wife an appreciative pat. But after a tragedy I can't blame him for jabbing her arm into the sleeves of her coat.

"The play with a sombre story is never refreshing, while on the other hand a comedy puts one is good humor. It serves as a tonic to the tired business man and the weary housewife."

Dr. W. S. Carter, of New Brunswick,

Controller Scanlan this morning received telephone messages from Spryfield and other places in the vicinity for the assistance of the motor engine to extinguish fires in those places, but owing to the distance from the city and also as the roads were not in extra good condition, it was not thought advisable to great the requests as the engine might be needed in the city. There is sure to be delay in getting shipments later on, as this is the usual condition at all of our Mines during the Autumn and early Winter. It seems to be particularly the case as regards this very superior DOMESTIC COAL for which there is a demand usually greater than

In spite of the alliance that exists between England and Japan, Bt. Hon. He is considered to voice the views of the considered to voice the views of the people of Australia and New Zealand.

"The newer countries," says Mr. Flaher, "those with many natural resources still undeveloped, are considered fair fields for exploitation in these days of migration and emigration and it is time that the lawmakers of such countries guard the eternal well being of their own peoples, regulate severely the incomings and doings of the alien who would reap a harvest at the expense of or at least in unfair competition with the legitimate heir to the soil and its products. Throughout his early life, Major Leigh was essentially a "rolling stone," and his travels carried him to many sorners of the globe. Eventually, wenty-three years ago he became possessor of a grant of land near Lakeville, Ont., where he farmed for some time, losing, as he was wont to say with his sustomary chuckle, "on an average four hundred dollars a year," a a"ing, however, "but I had all the spo. wanted, so it was worth it." Sport was his hoby, and the many trophies with which his house is adorned speak for his prowess with gin and rifle. Only a few months ago he was able to boast proudly that he could walk down most of the young men of to-day, and during part of last summer he was camping with his wife in Muskoka.

On one occasion when in the Australian gold-fields he had run out of money, but received from England, just as he was at his wif's en. to know where to turn, a draft for £1,000. Drafts are not of much practical use in such districts as he was in, and having no means of reaching the outer world except on foot, he started forth to walk to Melbourne, a

It was entered into inadvisedly, at least on England's part, for its working out must have made England take sides with Japan as against some of the white inations, Russia, Germany, France or Portugal, over eastern affairs.

"I do not regard the Japanese as a desirable people to have in large numbers in a white man's country. Even with the franchise — which they will never obtain in Australia—they would form elements separate and distinct from the rest of the community.

"A few years ago it was believed by most people that the vast sections of land in the new countries would never be taken up for settlement. Yet land is almost at a premium to-day and the time is probably not far distant when the last portions of the public domain will be thrown open to the people.

The actual signboard of John Calcraft, the famous public executioner, who during his long term of office carried out the extreme penalty of the law on many notorious murderers, has just been placed on view in Mme. Tussaud's Exhibition. The board used to be outside Calcraft's shop. It is framed, and has crudely painted upon it, in large block letters, the following extraordinary inseription: "J. Calcraft, Boot and Shoe Maker. Executioner to Her Majesty." Surmounting the frame is the Royal Coat-of-Arms. John Calcraft, who was born in 1800 and died in 1879, was executioner in London from 1828 until 1871.—Evening Standard.

The Crooked Billet—an inn which still stands upon Tower Hill, as it has stood for generations past—boasts itself as the oldest wine and spirit house in London. There is every reason to believe that the inn dates from the time of Henry VIII. Certainly no London inn is more remantic in the matter of sliding panels and concealed doors, secret rooms, and underground passage—one of these reputedly leads to the Tower—and thick walls richly cavred. There is a tradition that Oliver Cromwell once lived (or lodged) at the Crooked Billet.

Ways in Which They Can Avoid the Consequences.

A few weeks and a case came into a British court in which a Poor Law officer was charged, with having wrongfully forced a sale affithe effects of a certain lady who had been unable to pay the Poor rate. The verdict went against the officer, who was held to have acted entirely beyond his legal rights.

Cases like this are by no means undermond, though the lilling debtor rarely seeks redress in the siril courts. Many are of the opinion distrible laws of debt are sometimes unfair to the creditor. This is a question date the leadered to the red to the creditor. This is a question date an only be settled by our legislators.

Has Wonderful Memory.

J. S. Dennis, assistant to the general manager of the C.P.R., is reputed to have the best memory of anyone on the road. One of the company's surveyors said onee, "Gee, you can't slip anything over on the chief. If you begin to talk to him about a quarter section, he'll says, 'Yes, I remember. It is slightly alkaline toward the southerly half, but the north part is excellent land!' What do you know about that, in a three million acre tract?'' His memory for the slightest detail is just as perfect, and there is nothing in the multitude of things connected with his great work on which he cannot give you dates and figures.

With all his gravity and dignity, there is nothing Mr. Dennis so much enjeys as a practical joke. He has boxes of "magic" stored away and will "spring" conundrums, puzzles, "magic coins," and tricks of all sorts boxes of "magic" stored away and will "spring" coundrums, puzzles, "magic coins," and tricks of all sorts on you without notice. I remember being a guest on board is private car once for dinner, and is I raised my glass I was much abashed to perceive a trickle of water running down my frock. I hastily wiped it away and next time I raised the glass very gingerly, but again I received a bath. The slightest suspicion of a twinkle in Mr. Dennis' eye made me examine the glass. It was perforated so that it spilled whenever it was raised. He shouted with laughter when his trick was discovered.

A Tip for Canada.

A feature of striking significance in this forestry congress at Paris, international in representation and international in its scope, was that this congress was conceived, organized and brought to a successful fruition by the Touring Club of France, a body having no direct interest in the promotion of forestry. This club, composed of some of the most influential men in France, residued the aesthetic value of the forest to the nation, a point which is almost entirely overlooked in Canada at present. If in Canada, as in Europe, our rallways and national highways were bordered by beautiful tracts of forest land instead of the bare, barren fire-swept wastes so prevalent at present, the money value of such an influence on the mind of the tourists would not be the least advantage to be derived from such forests.
