This matter is daily assuming a less belligerent leading journals of the American union are before us, the writers for which are taking a calm and rational view of this important question. They distinctly admit that by the convention of 1815, the United States expressly renounced the right "to take, dry, or cure fish, on, or within three miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbours of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in North America," except where there was no settlement on the coast. It is asserted that this stipulation was an oversight on the part of the American minister who assented to it, and that he could not have known that the best fishing grounds were within the bays, and not merely within three miles of the general line of the coast, whilst it is as distinctly conceded that Great Britain and the Colonies are legally justified in their present movement.

It is perfectly clear to us that the wording of the convention makes express provision for the only case, in which American vessels are permitted to enter our "bays, creeks, or harbours;" and this is the one universally permitted by the laws of civilized nations and of humanity—that in distress recolours succour absolutely necessary to the subsistence of man. This, in effect, is admitted by the British North Americans:

"Now that the Government have determined upon a vigorous and effective protection of the Fisheries of British America, the people of these Provinces—Nova Scotia in particular, should not be slow to appreciate the value of their right to enter the ports of Nova Scotia in time of peace."

We have every confidence in His Excellency Vice Admiral Sir G. F. Seymour—the efficacy of the force under his command, and his prudence in overstepping the bounds circumscribed by the two and-a-half-mile gun; but we trust that the cessation of hostilities will bring with the Home government has undertaken this work—so at length the acts of violence and of robbery committed by these poachers, rendered their contiguity both annoying and oppressive, and the time has arrived when purely in self defence, it becomes incumbent upon the Imperial and Colonial governments—to use a congressional phrase—to assert and vindicate their reserved rights."

There are no individuals in existence, who are naturally more prone to drive an asociating bargain than are the Americans, and it has been an irritating and continued source of complaint on behalf of the Colonies, that in nearly every treaty negotiated with Jonathan, where Colonial interests are at stake, he has always realized the better half of the bargain. It is really gratifying then to learn from his own lips that the Convention of 1815, has presented one solitary exception to this inflexible rule. No matter what advantages are conceded to the Americans, and what favours are conferred upon them, they are never disposed to yield anything in return, without a separate and apparent compensation. A short time ago, when negotiations were still on foot for a reciprocity in raw materials, Jonathan suggested that the Fishermen should be thrown into the bargain, but ascertaining that his Fishermen enjoyed all the advantage of them, and with impunity, he became at once impressed with the conviction that no formal concession was required, and at length he ceased to treat with us altogether. At this period different duties were abolished. Since then, our outward trade has been given up, and our rivers thrown open to American steamers, systematically washed-out by authority of an act of parliament.

We have unbounded confidence in the wisdom and firmness of the Derby administration, and although it would appear that the vigilance of British cruisers is to be suspended, yet we trust a revival of it will be ordered in due time, and that through the agency of a sound conservative ministry, these colonies will again be invested with all those privileges which we were so recklessly deprived of during the prevalence of the whig dynasty.

As the present British Minister at Washington was appointed by the late whig government, we are happy to perceive that the negotiation connected with the Fisheries has been taken out of his hands, and transferred to another quarter, where our fellow colonists may rest assured, it is perfectly safe custody.

In reference to this controversy, we cheerfully endorse the following spirited remarks from a well informed Canadian contemporary:

"When the Americans ask what we are going to give in exchange for the favour we ask, surely it is not for us to say, but to let them know, how much; but we have already allowed a great deal, and if the fact of your receiving this favour does not cause a little generous return on your part—if our generosity is to be met with a grudging and ungrateful response, then you must wish to draw this favour, in order that it may avail us in making our bargain. It is not surprising that the Senate should at first sight take some umbrage at the sudden appearance of nineteen men-of-war at the North American port, but there is nothing to be done for you to consider, but to remain firm, for the hays and straits, where the British men-of-war are stationed, are as exclusively British waters as the Bristol channel. It is not because Americans themselves have been compelled to do this, but as a consequence, or right, that the British flag should not fly freely, in waters landlocked on all sides by British territory, without offence to neighbouring waters. We do not understand by what right therefore, any nation can claim the right to interfere with the commerce of the Bay of Fundy, or the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Whether the very best steps have been taken before directing the men of war upon the fishermen, may be a question; but we do not see that any international impropriety has been so far committed, and it is to be hoped that the minister will not come from the side of those who have been long and confidently in the wrong. The colonies are deeply interested in this matter, and they are bound, whatever feeling of friendship they may entertain for their republican neighbours, to show their readiness to support the mother country in measures taken for their advantage."

ANNEXATION.—The following is from the Times of Boston. "We beg to inform our contemporaries that our annexations were never held as potential as those of Montreal, and yet, they deeply regret the part which they took in this exhibition of non-hostility, which consisted of talk and bluster, and for which they have been heavily charged. While thus, however, the Advertiser of Boston, the Advertiser of New York, and the Advertiser of Philadelphia, all agreed in their opinion that there had been a good deal of talk and bluster, and for which they have been heavily charged at every point."

The New York Herald contains a letter pointing out the error of our course in Montreal, and headed with large initial letters "Important from Canada"—"annexation of the British Provinces." The Herald introduces this letter to its readers in a leading article, as follows: "A very interesting document, containing a strong and startling revelation. The object of the whole is to show that there is a plot among the American and the sister Provinces to annex the Canadian provinces. The Herald is fully satisfied that there has been a good deal of talk and bluster, and for which they have been heavily charged at every point."

The Advertiser of Boston, the Advertiser of New York, and the Advertiser of Philadelphia, all agreed in their opinion that there had been a good deal of talk and bluster, and for which they have been heavily charged at every point."
