Telephone.

The national gathering of telephone men at Chicago, recently, emphasizes better than anything else the rapid and prodigious growth of that very recent in ention. At their previous meeting, held at Niagara Falls, September. 1880, there were represented $10,000,000 of stock, which, after an interval of only, seven months, now represents something like $17,950,000 of stock, all being unpurchaseable. Indeed, among all the wonders of the age, there is nothing more wonderful than the invention and progress of the telephone, made practicable only five years ago. Prof. Bell claims that the date of the invention of his method of articulate speech was Jan. 15, 1876. It is already found in use in all parts of the world as a second to execute the necessary cleansing operations. One of the laborars, a powerful wounder of the pipe later on in the day carried out their orders, he made no sign. As soon as the furnace was pronounded to brick up the end of the pipe later on in the day carried out their orders, he made no sign. As soon as the furnace was pronounded to be again in working order the stokers were instructed to light the fires, and did so. Presently Kaezander was missed in the mill. Search for him was instituted, but in vain. Next morning it appears to have occurred to ing unpurchaseable. Indeed, among all the wonders of the age, there is nothing more wonderful than the invention and progress of the telephone, made practicable only five years ago. Prof. Bell claims that the date of the invention of his method of articulate speech was Jan. 15, 1876. It is already found in use in all parts of the world as Normals and the speech was Jan. 15, 1876. speech was Jan. 15, 1876. It is already found in use in all parts of the world, as popular and useful in Egypt, New Zeland, and China as in America and Europe. This year alone the English post office authorities have given orders for 20,000 telephones; while its rapid spread in this country is almost beyond calculation. It is introduced with equal eagerness for commercial and domestic uses f it is fast driving out the qld firealarm telegranhs, while for purely scienmestic uses; the last driving out the differentiar telegraphs, while for purely scientific purposes—such as detecting faults in ocean cables without restoring to the old and expensive process of cutting and splicing them—its availability seems beyond calculations.

expensive process of cutting and splicing them—its availability seems beyond calculation.

Much of this is, due to the restless energy and genius of the inventor and promoters, for the telephone has drawn to its assistance some of our most profound scientists and brightest business men. It has, in return, brought them in one short lustrum wider fame and ample fortune; the latter statement being best illustrated by an incident which recently occurred in England. At a smeeting of the United Telephone Company, last autumn, the discussion developed the company's agents for the sale of telephones had refused $150,000 offeres by the company's agents for the sale of telephones had refused $150,000 offeres by the company's cancel that engagement. The number of instruments in use from 60,573 to 132,692, so that in the United States only one city having a population of over 15,000 is now without a telephone exchange. Other items in the same department show how the introduction of the telephone must still be widely extended. Rapid strides are already being made in long distance telephoning, speech having been recently transmitted from Tours to Breat, a distance of over 800 miles, with a single Leclanche element, the experiments must be pushed further. For the application of the telephone cleephone, the experiment being witnessed by Prime Minister Jules Ferry and other dignitaries. A Picturesqua accept of Bethins Soleman.

A writer in Binchescord a Requeste this delication of the State of the Control of the State of the C and as the winged words flew from his lips, he seemed to breathe his very soul into the assembled multitude, until when the closing sentence fell upon them, every man took it up and repeated it with the full power of 2,000 healthy lungs, "Long live the autonomy of Albania!" Then came a striking in cident. Among the mountaineers gathered on the meadow there were many who belonged to villages and families between whom there existed ancient feuds. Solemnly these bitter foes walked up towards the Pasha and bound themselves over, with the kiss of peace, to abjure their quarrels for evermore, in view of the national peril. Such a thing has, never been seen, the Pasha told me, within the memory of man.

"And look there," he added, pointing to a small knot of mountaineers, "those are Christians. Hitherto they have always held aloof from their Mussulman neighbors, but to-day they have come unsolicited to join in the common demonstration. There are not many Christians in the Tchamouri, but when arms are distributed I shall give them with the same confidence to Boutro (Peter) as to Ahmed. For, mind you, it is not with those old matchlocks that they can fight the Greeks, however brave and fearless they may be. The gist of my speech was that the nation was in danger, and that I had come to supply them with arms and organize their resistance, that they might defend the liberties of a united and independent Albania."

Search for him was instituted, but in vain. Next morning it appears to have occurred to one of his fellow-workman that he might have crept into the air-pipe. Upon this suggestion being communicated to the manager, steps were at once taken to break into the closed mouth of the tube; and, sure enough, the charred skeleton of Anthony Kaczander was discovered lying close to the issue, bricked up during his heavy slumber of the previous afternoon. In all probability, awakened by the heat soon after the fires were lighted, he had crawled toward the outlet, and, finding it impenetrably closed, had resigned himself to his fate. What the poor fellow must have undergone while being slowly baked alive is almost too terrible to think of.

London Telegraph.

A truly horrible incident is reported in the Viennese papers as having taken place a few days ago in the great paper mill of Messrs. Gellerth & Fuerth, at Pilsan. It having been reported to the manager of that establishment that the great steam boiler was foul and the furnaces required cleaning, he caused the fires to be extinguished, and employed a gang of workman to execute the necessary cleaning operations. One of the laborers, a cleaning operations. One of the laborers, a grandfather. There is no prospect of Ab-

On Tuesday morning the devont of the Diouese, who loved Father William for his merits and virtues, left home early in the morning, and reached Arisaig about 10 o'clock A. The clergy of the County attended in large numbers in testimony of their love and respect for the venerable dead, whom they loved to call the Nestor and the Father of the clergy. The King of Bavaria at Munich

Endowed with the grace and personal basuty of an Apollo, raised in early youth in one of the most ancient of European thrones, Louis II. of Bavaria is a Sonderling among monarchs as he is a Sonderling among men. His very existence is almost as mythical to his subjects as that of the fabled King Arthur of English history. Without ever condescending to court public favor at the sacrifice of his own personal inclinations, convenience, or pleasure, the Bavarian King has retained the affection and loyalty of subjects few of whom have ever-loanght a glimpse of his person, and at the same time maintained for his little kingdom a degree of independency which few of the smaller Teutonic principalities have been able to secure under the mighty shadow of German Imperialism.

He was still a mere boy when he succeeded his dissolute and self-indulgent grandfather, who will be known to posterity chiefly by the senile folly which made him the laughing-stock of Europe as the protector of the Spanish dancer, Lola Montez, whose portrait, with semething of the heaviet du disple, closes Spanish dancer, Lola Montez, whose portrait, with something of the beaute du diable, closes the long line of Court beauties and favorites in the picture-gallery of the Konigschloss at Munich. This ancient voluptuary went so far as to insult the refined and eminently respectable society of his capital by forcing on to the stage of the Court Theatre, as on to the stage of the Court Theatre, as premiere danseuse, a third-rate artiste, who happened to be his mistress, and whom even the royal tavor could not restrain from questionable love passages among the students of the university. Perhaps it was because royalty had been thus degraded by his predecessor that the young King of Bavaria displayed from the earliest days of his reign a morbid sensitiveness which made him shrink from the gaze of his subjects, and withdraw himself into an ideal life, framed on the model of the most magnificent of French sovereigns, where art and poetry and french sovereigns, where art and poetry and music were the companions of his solitude; or at other times retire, into the remote wilds of the Bavarian Tyrol, and live for weeks the rude life of a mountain hunter, coming back at night with but a single companion of the state of panion to a rough chalet, simple as a peas-

The young King is at once a misanthrope

and a woman hater.

No story of a royal liaison has ever gratified the lovers of a Court candal. Marriage has been urged upon him repeatedly in the interests of his dynasty. And though he has once or twice been Baautigam, and photographs of the royal pair have appeared in the shop windows of Munich, yet at the last moments the arrangements have been broken off and the marriage abandoned. Numerous aneedotes of the King's eccentricity are current in Munich society. He has caused to be erected, at an mark. society. He has caused to be receed, at an immense cost, on the roof of the royal palace of his capital, a magnificent garden, enclosed with glass. It is filled with rare tropical of his capital, a magnificent garden, enclosed with glass. It is filled with rare tropical plants and flowers, and contains even a tiny lake, Here, at night, the scene lit up with a soft subdued brilliance, the King will float in a minature gondola, and listen to the voices of the Court singers, hidden among the foliage to complete the fillusions in which he loves to dream away his life. Once he conceived the idea of having one of Moliere's comedies represented before him by the young ladies of a convent pension. Several weeks were spent in rehearsals, and costly arrangements made to present the piece, in a manner worthy of the royal command; but on the very evening of the intended performance it occurred to the King that he might be the cynosure of curious young eyes, and at the last moment the play was countermanded. Many years ago he was induced to review the garrison of Munich, massed on the great plain outside the city, upon which looks down the colossal bronze statue of Bavaria. Splendidly mounted, he rode hurriedly past the front, and then, as if shrinking from the gaze of his soldiers, he put spurs to his horse, and, attended only by his aide-de-camp, galloped away, leaving his troops to defile before his Minister of War and Generals of his staff.

Now and then he will appear at the Court Thestre. We remember, ten years agoly indebted for the possibilities

Tall and graceful in figure, he might have served as the model for a youthful god. The waving brown hair fell back in rich curls from an alabaster forehead of commanding breadth and power. The deep blue eyes were full of a mingled poetry and tenderness and fire, but in the lines of the mouth could be observed a certain sternness and determination, which go far to explain seemingly contradictory traits in the character of this eccentric sovereign. The curtain had not fallen between the acts before acter of this eccentric sovereign. The curtain had not fallen between the acts before he had retired hurriedly into an ante-cham-ber of his box, in evideni dread of being gazed upon by the house.

This monarch, leaving the prose of nineteenth century institutions, of reformed and constitutional monarchies, where the sovereign is more or less the mere figurehead of a responsible popular Ministry, lives an exis-tence of ideal Royalty modelled on that of tence of ideal Royalty modelled on that of Louis XIV. His chateaux and his palaces are furnished and adorned with a minute exactness, after the costly models left behind him by that most magnificent of monarchs. The greatest artists and sculptors of Bavaria and of their are constantly employed on these works of reproduction. As the French Louis had a Moliere to add the embellishment and civilization, England and the United States take the lead of the world. England produces annually 180,000 tons, and the world iterature to the other splendors of literature to the other splendors of Louis had a Moliere to add the embellish ments of literature to the other splendors of his reign, so the Bavarian Louis has a Wagner. Hie ambition is that his reign shall be celebrated by splendid patronage bestowed on a new master of melody, whom he believes destined to rival, if not eclipse, the great and immortal composers whose musical productions are graven imperishably on the hearts of each succeeding generation. That those of the new genius, whom the King delights to honor, seem to many hearers to demand a special faculty of musical comprehension, and a special training to appreciate the strange weirdness which distinguishes them.

Municust States produce 207,000 tons, and consumes 203,000 tons, and consumes to produces 203,000 tons, and consumes which distinguishes them.

For years he has been engaged in the erection at Bayreuth of a colossal theatre, which is designed to be the apotheosis of Wagner's genius. MOZART'S HARPSICHORD.

New York Said to Possess the Instrument he played on for the King at London.

A dealer in musical instruments in this A dealer in musical instruments in this city owns a harpsichord which is said to have been played on by Mozart when he visited London in 1763. Mezart was then 8 years old, and his performances awakened so much interest that he was asked to play for the king and queen. For this occasion Jacob and Abraham Kirckman, manufacturers of musical instruments in London, made a harpsichord which was considered superior to any cal instruments in London, made a harps-chord which was considered superior to any they had turned out from their factory. Mo-zart improvised on it, and played composit-cions of his own and pieces by Bach and Handel. The Kirckmans kept the instru-ment at first on account of its fine tone, and ment at first on account of its fine tone, and afterward on account of Mozart's growing fame. They embellished the frame in 1776. There are, however, some musicians who say that the harpsichord was used by Mozart when he was in Paris in 1778, and not when he was in London. The instrument was the property of the firm until five or six years are when it was hought by a musician, who ago, when it was bought by a musician, who brought it to this country and sold it to its

The instrument, like our grand pianos, somewhat resembles a horizontal harp'in shape, except that the box is straight. The frame is of mahogany, inlaid with yellow wood. The box, which is about six feet long is not featured to lear but rests on a trianwood. The box, which is about rests on a triangular table, and it has brass handles. It is very light, and can readily be moved from place to place. It is broadest at the key-board, which comprises five octaves from F to F. From the key-board it gets narrower, until at the end it measures about one foot in broadth.

Each note has three strings, which are set in vibration by strips of metal, between bits of cloth acting as dampers, attached to oblong pieces of wood called jacks. Above the key-board are levers, which work by hand, and vary the volume of tone by allowing one, two or all the strings of the note struck to vibrate.

The instrument, the sound of which resembles that of the harp very

We remember, ten years ago, to have seen him there on one of these very rare occasions, almost hidden in the demi-obscurity of the Royal box, when he came to witness one of the wonderful impersonations of the great Bavarian tragedienne, Clara Ziegler. The acclamations of the house forced him to come forward and bow for several moments his acknowledgments to his loyal subjects. There he stood, evidently shrinking from the notice he had attracted, a form of noble and

The Rev. William Taylor has sent some forty missionaries to South America and 1878. The missionaries both preach and teach, and draw their support from the people among whom they labor. The only, expense involved is their outfit and passage money, which is defrayed by voluntary contributions.

A French abbe, fifteen years ago one of the most popular pulpit orators in Montreal, committed a crime while drunk. The only witness turned the event to account by blackmailing the clergyman, who submitted awhile to the extortion, but finally fled to this country. Lately he returned to Montreal, confessed his own guilt, and exposed the blackmailer. blackmailer.

This action was taken because a mob attacked the "Salvation Army." A memorial protesting against this invasion of liberty of worship has been sent to the Chief Secretary for Ireland.

The number of converts made in San Fran etso by Moody and Sankey during twenty weeks of revivalism is placed at 2.300, and the churches are greatly quickened in vitality. A Cracked Volcano.

Within the space of ten months Mount Etna had five abundant eruptions of smoke and sand, without any subsequent flow of lava. In one instance, after profound subterranean rumbling and numerous earthquake shocks, there appeared on the eastern side of the mountain a great cloud of vapor and ashes, which escaped by a crevice nearly it three miles long. The snow smelted suddenly around the summit of the mountain, jets of hot vapor escaped at many places, and the small muddy craters of the western declivity became very active, as is usually the case on the approach of a great eruption. But to the surprise of all observers, within thirty-six hours afterward the volcano had returned to a state of perfect calm. Such a phenomenon has never before occurred within the memory of man. Vicenzo Tedeschi di Eroole attributes it to the existence of an immense opening, which appeared upon the immense opening, which appeared upon the mountain at the time of the eruption of May 26, 1879. He concludes that a very strong pressure is required for the formation of the ava, and that a great tension of gas is indis pensable in order to raise the lava to the surface of a mountain. It appears probable, therefore, that there will be no reason to fear any further eruption in the cone of Etna as long as the present crevice is open.—Ann de Chim. et de Phys.

Within the past year, the tobacce manufacturing industry of Ontario has received a notable extension if the establishment of a first class factory in this city.

By the enterprise of the Virginia Tobacco Company the practability of popularizing home made tobacco has been demonstrated, for previous to their advent among us, this Province depended mainly, especially indark sweet tobaccos, for its supplies of this article from outsiders.

The want of a first class factory in this Province has long been felt and the wonder is that some of the older heads did not see the opportunity before these young ones embraced it and left them no alternative.
