Roman Intelligence.

The Holy Father recently received a deputation from the diocese of Benevento, who had come to Rome to thank His Holiness for having named Mgr. de Ronde as Nuncio at Paris, and at the same time left him the title and government of his Sicilian diocese.

The Gregorian University has at present a larger number of students than at any other period since 1870. The students of theology are 300, those in the first year of philosophy 80, in the second 78, and in the third 70; the students in canon law are 42; and those in the shorter course of theology 34, making a total of 561 students.

Cardinals Howard and Parvochi, the Bishop of Orleans, the Bishops of Sandhurst, Down and Connor, and Lita, and many distinguished persons, visited St.
Clement's recently, when the underground portions of the Basilica were brilliantly illuminated and thrown open to the public. The High Mass on the feast day was celebrated by Mgr. Mac-Fieilly, Archbishop of Tuam, and the first and second Vespers were sung respectively by the Bishops of Epiphany and Avalon.

A rumor is afloat that the Holy Father has ordered a collection to be made from the archives of the Vatican of all the documents concerning the reviving of England from the Holy See, and everything relating to the religious movement known as the Reformation, from that time to the present. It is believed that certain important documents may be found, calculated to facilitate the resumption of diplomatic intercourse between England and the Vatican, but how this is to be effected it is not stated.

It is announced that His Eminence, Cardinal Lavigne, Apostolic Administrator of Carthage and Tunis, has been forwarded to the city of Rome the sum of 6,150 francs, the produce of collections made throughout all the parishes of the Algerian and Tunisian dioceses for the relief of the victims of the inundations of North Italy. This sum is but a small one, in view of the severity of the disaster, the beautiful letter which accompanied the gift, and in presence of the great need it is intended to alleviate, it may well be said that it is but the widow's mite. But that is very touching in the freedom with which, without distinction of nationality or religion, the offerings were made even by Mussulmans, the offerings were made with a sincere and universal sentiment of sympathy, in behalf of the tried children of our beloved Italy.

A solemn Requiem Mass was celebrated lately, according to the pious and conventional custom, every year, for the repose of the souls of the deceased Pontifical soldiers, in the small church of the cemetery of Santo Spirito.
The ceremony commenced with military music, and at ten o'clock the priest and assembly were gathered together. The church was hung with black draperies, and the catalogue, emblazoned with light, was by a helmet, the arms of the Dragons, with the red plume. All the Pontifical military staff, as well as the wives, or widows, and children of the soldiers, were present. The entrance of the general Cardinal for the King for the trumpet to sound the Pafal March, which was formerly used on all occasions at which the Pope was present. Mass was celebrated by Monsignor Colonna, assisted by the Vicar of St. Peter's, and was sung to Terziani's exquisite music, performed by the Choir of the Vatican Basilica, directed by Cav. Moriconi, whose Dies ire was executed to perfection. Among those present were Count Filippini, Count Leinigen, of the prince's house of that name, and many others whose names had been seen in times past for the good cause of the service over the whole party gathered quietly in the adjoining cemetery, where the absolution was given over the soldiers' graves. It was a most impressive ceremony in its military simplicity, and all were deeply touched. The party dispersed at the dying sounds of the war trumpets.
The dead who are thus prayed for by their surviving brethren are not to be mourned for, as they died the death of brave soldiers, in defending their holy religion and the Pope, their king.

European Events.

Mme. Calhava's explorations of the foundations of the Cathedral of St. Denis, Paris, have been followed by the robbery of the treasury there. At five o'clock in the afternoon, when the guardian of the place was away at his dinner, some persons broke open the little door of the Cathedral, forced three other doors that stood between them and the inner sanctuary, and at ten o'clock they had rifled all the vitrines, and carried off the precious monuments of the Kings of France for the past seven centuries, and more, the sacred vessels given by Francis I., Louis XIV., XV., XVI., the real crown of the latter and of Marie Antoinette, and, worse than all, a reliquary of immense value, containing a large piece of the True Cross. It is supposed that the burglars broke up all these valuables, for several precious stones from a magnificent monstrance, the gift of Napoleon I., which it took two canons to lift, were found on the ground. The dismay of the guardian on finding the sacrilegious work that had been done in his absence may be imagined. Conjecture is already rife as to the perpetrators of the burglary; perhaps the most original speculation made is that of the Claires, which vehemently denounces the English pickpockets as the authors of it, and declares that, as the persons carried off the clocks of France, the English are now going to steal all her ecclesiastical treasures.

There are rumors amongst Republicans of the gradual growth of the Royal-ist propaganda in France. Thanks to the bad faith of the persons that he, a general feeling of disgust has arisen; and any strong general might take advantage of this sentiment at the right moment. The Comte de Chambord is no adventurer seeking after power. If he is a believer in the divine right of kings, he is at least content to wait until Providence unmistakably signifies to him that his mission is to return. "L'heure d'un Dieu" is his favorite maxim, and he will not accept the principle of monoarchy with fidelity, than to forfeit the spirit of the Crown for the letter. Still the lawful King of France is in no way offended, and his adherents are ready to work in his interests. The following is the sediment of fact which remains when allowance has been made for the exaggerations of the Republican press concerning the so-called Loyalist plot.
An understanding has been come to with the Orleans princes that the principle of fusion is accepted on both sides, the details being left to a more opportune moment. The Comte de Chambord has also consented to accept the national tricolor flag, retaining the white flag of the King of France for his household, just as the flag over the English royal residence is not the Union Jack, but one especially set aside for the Royal Family.
The most important part of the "plot" remains to be told. General de Charette has at his beck and call more than 8,000 men, ready to fight for the restoration of the King to the throne. But this step will never be taken unless in the cause of the Republic, and at a moment when it is unmistakable that anarchy and revolution are again about to do their worst.
The persecution of the religious orders, and the constant warring of the Catholics of France have caused a yearning for a change; and the Legitimists have gained by this feeling of national despondency. Very few, however, would go so far as to say that the change of the return of Henri V. is serious and solid.
It is not likely that there will be a change, except for the worse, and the military dictator may be a sincere Republican who will refuse to pave the way for a restoration. The recent visit of the Emperor of Austria to the Comte de Chambord, in which all the imperial etiquette was followed, is full of significance; and it alone proves that Austria and perhaps Germany would not discourage the efforts of the French Royalists. King Humbert of Italy would probably have no scruple in following the example of Austria and Germany. He sees a trembling existence at the Quirinal, and he feels that the Republic of France is a probable and serious danger to the former of that of Italy just as the unification of Italy was the for-runner of that of Germany.

Death of a Venerable Nun.

On Saturday, the 25th November, there died at the Presentation Convent, Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, Mother Mary Xaverius Lynch, in the 70th year of her age, and in the 40th of her religious profession. Mother Xaverius was a daughter of the late Dr. Lynch of Dublin, and the youngest of a family of five children, all of whom entered religion. At the early age of 17 years she was admitted to the Presentation Convent, Galway, where she professed her solemn vows, 11th July, 1833. Sobriety was an act of dedication more perfect or more absolute than which was followed, is full of significance; and it alone proves that Austria
ists. King Humbert of Italy would prob-
sees a trembling existence at the Quir-
runner of that of Germany.

The same voice that summons those ladies, rescue hundreds of poor people, equally devoted, and called upon in their favor. When the poor people of that country, who know nothing of nuns but the name, will have an opportunity of learning by their own observation the advantages of religion to society, to themselves, to God, to all, in the introduction of a religious community amongst them; and how the crowds of destitute female children, rescued from crime and misery, by the benefits of a religious education, could they remain inexcusable to the goodness of God, or refuse to begeth, ever, and obedient to which foster and encourage and protect so holy and meritorious an undertaking?

This appeal of the good bishop was on the 17th of July; it touched the Sister Xaverius' heart, and the 26th of August following, she set her foot on the soil of country and relations, and to what was dearer to her, the quiet life and seclusion of her convent home. Accompanied by other religious of her community, equally devoted, she sailed for the protection of Dr. Fleming, for Newfoundland. This band—four in number, one only of whom now survives—was the first colony of those devoted Irish nuns, who landed on the shores of Newfoundland, and to whom that colony has since been indebted, in no small degree, for the culture and piety which distinguish many of its fair daughters. St. John's was Sister Xaverius' first mission.
There for eighteen years she labored amongst the children of all classes, of the rich and the poor, with a devotedness which well might have gladdened the loving heart of the good Nana Nagle herself. In 1851, the late lamented Bishop Mullock sent her with a few companions to found the Presentation Convent of Harbor Grace; and here, quietly and unobtrusively, she labored and prayed for thirty-one years, in all which time, till within a few weeks of her demise, she was never once absent from her place in the choir or schoolroom. And thus her life passed. There were many militaries of religion more conspicuous than hers, but few in which a more patient or holier spirit dwelt, and none to which the heart requitals of our people more readily go forth in gratitude. Her last illness she bore with resignation, and consoled with all the rites of the Church, she loved so well and served so faithfully, she calmly gave up her soul into the hands of the Heavenly Spouse. After High Mass and Office on Monday, the mortal remains of our Xaverius Lynch were interred in the cemetery within the Convent enclosure, in the shadow of the altar at which in life she so often and so fervently worshipped.

State Affairs in Ireland.

(Correspondence of the Boston Herald.) Once more the government have undertaken the task of crushing agitation by imprisoning the agitators. It is an old and familiar course which is being adopted. Agitation takes place, and is allowed to continue. Presently heads to assassinate, or to attempt assassination; whereupon the party in Ireland, who dislike, detest, and wish to put an end to all agitation, cry out that the outrages are all due to the meetings, and the government, yielding to the cry (which is invariably echoed in England), and taking no account of the fact that outrages are perpetrated when there are no meetings, just as well as when there are a score every week, arrests, prosecutes and imprisons the leaders of the people. Something from the government point of view, might be said for this policy, if the imprisonment of the popular leaders were followed by a resolution of outrage; but it is almost needless to say to any observer of the course of Irish affairs, that the very reverse is the case. All the worst murders and all the more daring attempts at murder, that have been perpetrated in Ireland since the commencement of the present movement, have been perpetrated during the first nine months of this year, when public meetings were absolutely forbidden, and when, in fact, no public meetings were held except in Ulster. It was during that period that the chief and undersecretary were stabbed to death in Phoenix Park, that Joyce family music party in Mambray of Cashel, that Longfield House, and afterwards the ruined castle of Ardmyle, the last proprietor of which is said to have been hanged over its remains on the capture of the place by Cromwell. I shortly came within sight of the famous Rock of Cashel, with its magnificent ruins comprising a round tower, a cathedral, a military fortress, besides the mortuary chapel of Cormac, the coronation stone of the Kings of Munster, surmounted by the Cross of Cashel, and surrounded by several other objects of minor interest. As the traveller approaches this stately group of ruins, imposing even in the desolation of their ruin, his mind will inevitably revert to the checkered pages of the country's history, for from the earliest period the story of Cashel has been the story of Ireland. Here ages ago, within the "misty space of twice a thousand years," the early Irish had raised an altar and established a sanctuary. In the time of St. Patrick, a Christian Church was founded here by St. Declan, who surrounded the Druid altars with a representation of the Crucifixion, thus typifying the triumph of Christianity over Paganism. Later on the rock was fortified by Brian Boromha, and for a long period constituted by Mr. Chyng Trevelyan. How blind, as surely, English statesmen are in dealing with Ireland! If there is any lesson which we would think, experience ought by this time to have taught them, it is that harsh measures of despotism do but aggravate Irish disorder; yet, in times of disorder, it is on such measures that they chiefly lean. The proclamation of Dublin under the curfew clause of the curfew clause of the Curfew Act, is simply a farce. It could not be anything else. The notion of for any considerable length of time, keeping off the streets between sunset and sunrise a population of 300,000 is simply ridiculous, and if the streets are only half full of people, it is just as difficult to get at the criminal section with the curfew clause as without it. If it be said that the clause enables the police to arrest suspected persons, the reply is that the police can not detain the suspects, unless they prove, by discovering arms or compromiting documents, that their suspicions are well founded, and, if they discover either unlicensed arms or treasonable or seditious documents on any one, they arrest that person, but get him imprisoned in the bargain, without the trouble of a trial by jury. The truth is that the curfew proclamation, like the persecution of Messrs. Davitt, Healy and Redmond, is but a compliance with the wild demands of the panic-stricken landlord party.
The shooting of the detective, and, especially, the attack on the juror, Field, has simply struck the utmost terror into the heart of every man of this party. A striking proof of the effect is supplied by the suggestions to the government which daily come from the terror-stricken Some of these suggestions are too absurd to mention, and are not worthy to be noted; but others are not quite so absurd, and the government is acting upon them through fear of being itself denounced in England for not exhausting all the most effective means of its own country for the protection of the "loyal" portion of the citizens. In this latter category may be included the call for the curfew. It seems,
on the face of it, not to be utterly unreasonable, and, therefore, though the lord lieutenant and his advisers probably know as well as any one else, that the step will not be attended by any appreciable advantage in the direction of putting down crime, they put the curfew in force lest it may be said that they have neglected any reasonable expedient for defeating the object of "measures less expensive." But here, again, they do not seem to see that, even if they gain in one way, they lose in another. They exasperate the mass of the population by telling them that, if they are found out of their homes these winter months between 5 o'clock in the evening and 7 o'clock in the morning, they are liable to arrest. There are, in a population of 300,000, very many timid people.
This was shown clearly enough by the comparatively deserted state of the streets here the night after the proclamation appeared. The absence are most probably as innocent as they are timid, and, if so, they must feel as many as they feel, intensely annoyed at having their most ordinary movements impeded because of the crimes of a few desperadoes. "But, then," the government may ask, "what on earth are we to do?" Now, it is easy to answer, if the remedy of giving self-government to Ireland be Cashel of the Kings.

A correspondent thus describes a visit to the Rock of Cashel. Turning my face northwards I perceived to Good's Cross, and proceeded thence by car to the ancient ruins of Cashel, passing Longfield
tower, a cathedral, a military fortress,

included the call for the curfew. It seems,
sonable, and, therefore, though the lord lieutenant and his advisers probably know
