The Missionary's Farewell to Rome.

(By Arthur Cosslett Smith in Scribner's Magraine.)

O Mother, suckled by the wolf-O Mother, drenched with martyr' blood---

O Mother of the seven hills-O Mother of the cowl and hood-I gene across the evening's glow Where Father Tiber's yellow flow Bends by the castle of Saint Angelo Beyond the castle's roof I see The wall of Urban, with its port Guarding the bastion of the fort. Straining my eyes as best I can, I see the sacred Vatican, Where sits the patient, white-hair

The air is tinetured with the scent Of incense, that the breezes bring From countless shrines where con sers swing.

Well, that Brotherton had come nd gone. There had been certain ma-massaga between them - the giving of a flower upon her part, the stealing of a ringlet upon bie; a few passioned words; a letter, quaint in phraseology now, just as the parchment on which it had been ritten had become yellow and time-

Miss Tabiths, in her reverence for he great people—a reverence which had been sedulously cultivated from her youth upward-engreely expected anything more. Through the difference of condition, family pride, and the stress of other circumstances, hat old romance had come to naught. How far its termination had been seponsible for disastrous results in the one case, it is impossible to deside. Miss Tabitha, for her part, had eat there in loneliness, though many a suitor had plucked the roses

Now, it seemed to him as if he ad always been perfectly familiar with this cottage, and as if that little girl had been constantly in his houghts. He remembered the tamp of her foot, and the sweet and et imperious voice in which she had ordered him to do this or that : while he, in his boyigh a lf-will, had just as often as not refused to do her bidding.
