WHEN LOVE Came Too Late.

CHAPTER XXVII.

"Willful Murder."

The detective looked at him calmly and thoughtfully.

"Because the man who shot this woman went to meet her fully intending to shoot her," he said, quietly.

"What I want to get at is this gentleman's Mr. Faradeane motive for getting rid of the woman. That's what I want to find out."

"Do you know the woman? Have you identified her?"

"It was Bartley Bradstone who asked the question, and he did so with affected indifference, as if he were merely asking from curiosity.

The detective shook his head.

"Not had time yet, sir; but I shall know all about her directly."

At this tone of confidence Bartley Bradstone shifted in his seat.

"What does Mr. Faradeane say?" he asked.

"Surely he has explained his presence on the spot, and the revolver," said the squire.

Mr. McAndrew shook his head.

"That's the queer part of it, sir," he said. "I've seen Mr. Faradeane before and after the inquest, and he declines to say a word. Now, if he had been the man he'd have been full of explanations; do you follow me, sir?"

"Perfectly," responded the squire, with a sigh.

"They always are. They can account for everything; but Mr. Faradeane doesn't seem to take the trouble to explain. That strikes me as being peculiar."

"Perhaps he can't explain," said Bartley Bradstone, his eyes fixed on the carpet.

The detective looked from him to the squire, and then out of the window, abstractedly.

"If he can't, then—"

He stopped.

"Well?" demanded the squire.

"Then he's a lost man," replied the detective.

CHAPTER XXVII.

A Lost Man.

Not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant had there been so much excitement in the county.

That a murder should have been committed within a quarter of a mile of the Grange, on Olivia Vanley's wedding day, was bad enough; but that the suspected man should be the mysterious Mr. Faradeane of The Dell, raised popular curiosity and interest to fever heat. Then came the news that the bride had been stricken down with fever, and was lying dangerously ill at her father's house.

Scarcely any other topic was discussed, and persons eagerly asked one another whether any new phase of what was already called "the Hawkwood tragedy" had appeared. The only man who seemed to have retained his calmness in the midst of the excitement was the prisoner himself. While everybody else was eagerly debating the probability of his guilt or innocence, and endeavoring to ascribe the motive for his crime, it indeed he committed it, Harold Faradeane uttered no word which could tend toward a solution of the mystery.

Some thought that it was impossible for him to be innocent; and when the coroner's jury had returned a verdict of willful murder, people shook their heads, and pursed their lips significantly.

Then came the examination before the magistrates. Long before the hour appointed for the sitting, the small court at Wainford was crammed. Men who had met and taken a sudden liking to the grave, handsome stranger, and ladies who had admired and wondered about him, filled all the available seats. On the bench sat Lord Carfield, the chairman, and two of his brother magistrates, but, as was expected, the Squire of Hawkwood was absent; though it was remarked that a groom from the Grange was on his horse outside the court, ready to carry home the result of the examination.

A look of grave and painful earnestness sat upon the old earl's face, and he leaned his head upon his hand, and bent his eyes upon his desk. He, like the squire, had taken a great liking to the man accused of this terrible crime, and, but that it was a principle of his life never to shirk a duty, however painful, he too would have been absent from the bench. In the well of the court, near the clerk, sat the commonplace-looking London detective, keenly noting every face and every voice around him, though to all appearance wrapped in stolid reflection.

Presently, in the midst of the hum and buzz, the clerk called "Harold Faradeane," and a policeman opened the door of the dock, and the prisoner entered.

He was very pale, and those who knew him felt a thrill of pity as they saw how haggard and drawn his face had grown during the days of his imprisonment. But with the feeling of pity was mingled one of puzzled surprise. It seemed impossible to connect a vulgar crime with the grave, patrician face and bearing, which remained calm and dignified under the battery of eyes, and seemed to give a direct denial to the charge which the clerk read out. As he would not be required to plead guilty or not guilty until the trial—if the magistrates should decide to send him for trial—Harold Faradeane remained silent.

"I propose to produce sufficient evidence to warrant my demanding that the prisoner should be sent for trial my lord," said the superintendent of police, and he called the constable and Browne, the keeper.

They told the now-familiar story of the finding of the body, and Faradeane in close proximity, waiting, as it almost seemed, for detection, and the picking up of the revolver near to his feet.

The spectators listened breathlessly; some of them had heard the story in the Grange hall on Olivia's wedding day; but they listened as intently now as if it were all new to them.

Faradeane stood with one hand resting on the rail in front of the dock, his eyes fixed on the ground, his whole bearing that of a man completely resigned to whatever might happen; not indifferent, but simply resigned.

The earl looked up and at him as the evidence was concluded.

"Have you any questions to ask, Mr. Faradeane?" he said in a grave voice, and the crowded court remarked that he addressed the accused by his name instead of as "prisoner."

"No, my lord," came the quiet reply.

Lord Carfield's brows came together.

"Surely you must have some explanation to offer," he said, just as he had said on the day of the murder. "Is it possible that you should fail to recognize the serious position in which you are placed?"

Faradeane raised his sad eyes, in which, sad as they were, there was nothing of craven fear or imploration.

"I fully appreciate my position, my lord," he said, "and I regret that I have no explanation to offer."

Lord Carfield pushed his notes aside with a grave impatience.

"Was there no one near the body excepting Mr. Faradeane?" he asked Browne.

"No, my lord."

"You met no one? Think, and answer carefully. There was a large number of persons present at the Grange on that day; did you meet no one in the drive or in the wood?"

"No, my lord. The folks were all on the lawn listening to the singing and speech-making in the tent. I met no one, till I fetched the constable."

Lord Carfield asked the same question of the constable, and received the same answer. No one had been seen in the wood or coming from it but the dead woman and the man Harold Faradeane, who stood so patiently and calmly waiting.

"Has the murdered woman been identified?" asked Lord Carfield. "Is anything known about her? There should be some evidence of motive."

"The woman has been identified, my lord," said the superintendent, entering the box. "Her name is Bella Lee, but she was known as Bella-Bella. She was a professional acrobat, and quite famous in London, my lord."

"And in what way do you connect Mr. Faradeane—the prisoner—with her? I cannot see—"

He stopped. It was apparent that he was endeavoring to find any loophole for escape or explanation.

The superintendent hesitated; then, catching the placid eye of Mr. McAndrew, replied:

"Some information is in our possession, my lord; but we do not propose to produce it at this stage. We depend upon the evidence of the gamekeeper and constable."

"Our duty is clear," said Lord Carfield, but with a reluctance which was distinctly palpable. "We must commit the prisoner for trial. Have you anything to say?" he asked.

At this moment there was a slight disturbance among the closely-packed persons near the door, and Mr. Bartley Bradstone entered. He looked round him with the air of a man determined not to show nervousness, and then up at the face of the prisoner. Had he anything to say?

Harold Faradeane glanced ever so slightly at Bartley Bradstone, then met Lord Carfield's grave and troubled regard.

"Nothing, my lord," came the reply.

"Remove the prisoner," said Lord Carfield in a low voice, and Faradeane followed the policemen from the dock.

A murmur of pent-up excitement rose from the crowded court, and several ladies who had grown pale and somewhat hysterical during the examination drew long and audible breaths of relief.

"That man is not guilty," said one of them. "I am as certain of it as I am that I am sitting here. No man capable of shooting a defenceless woman could stand up and look as he did. If he were a bad man he would brazen it out, and he would show himself to be a hardened criminal; and if, on the other hand, he were only a weak man, who had yielded to a sudden temptation, he would, this morning, have been utterly cast down and overwhelmed with grief and remorse. Instead of presenting either appearance, he looks round like a man who is too noble to have committed the vulgar crime, and still too noble to despise us for suspecting him."

Now, Mr. McAndrew was standing just beneath the lady who had delivered her opinion, by no means in a whisper, and he looked up at her, and smiled behind the hand which he passed over his mouth. And he was still smiling as, shouldering his way out of the court, he came upon Mr. Bartley Bradstone, who in a purposeless kind of fashion was standing and being generally pushed about, as he stared with a species of fascination at the dock in which Faradeane had just stood.

Mr. McAndrew touched his hat.

"Good-morning, sir; quite a crowd."

"Yes, yes," replied Bartley Bradstone.

At that moment there came the tramp of drilled footsteps in the corridor in which they were standing, and a cry of "Make way there! Stand back!"

It was the prisoner being escorted to the closed fly which was to take him back to the prison.

Bartley Bradstone started, and took half a step forward, his eyes fixed on Faradeane's face.

"How is Mrs. Bradstone this morning, sir?" asked Mr. McAndrew, standing right in the way of the policeman, and their charge.

"Very ill, dangerously ill still," said Bartley Bradstone, still with his eyes on Faradeane.

Faradeane started and stopped. He had caught the reply. His face went white, and seemed to quiver, as if with some sudden fury.

"Ill! Dangerously ill!" he said, in a hollow voice.

There was still a crowd in the corridor, and all eyes were turned upon him.

"Move on, please, sir," said the policeman, not roughly but firmly.

Capt. Butler Writes.

"A LITTLE MEDAL"

Mrs. John J. Butler, of Topsail, recently received a letter from her son, Captain Bertram Butler, who, we need hardly remind our readers, has been awarded the Military Cross. He enclosed the following letter from General Hunter Weston, of which he is justly proud:—

Headquarters, VIII Corps, B.E.F., 22nd August, 1916.

To Capt. B. Butler, 1st Battalion Nfld. Regiment.

I heartily congratulate you on the honour done you by His Majesty the King in awarding you the Military Cross for your gallant action on the night of 26th-27th June, 1916.

AYLMER HUNTER WESTON, Lieutenant-General, Commanding VIII Corps.

In his letter, Capt. Butler says: "We have been out of the trenches for a week now, but we shall be going back again in a few days' time. I am getting quite used to it now, and an getting an expert at dodging bullets and shells. So far I have kept out of their way generally, and I hope to be able to stick it out right through."

When I go to London I shall be sending you home a little medal to keep me in remembrance. It ought to be worth more than a football medal, so I want you to keep it yourself until I shall need it, which I hope will be very soon. It was a little warm the night I won it, but thank God, I came through all right, though some of the boys did not. I'll tell you all about it after the war."

There were lots of these medals won by our boys on July 1st, which nobody will ever hear of, and which will never be awarded; but war is an awful game—some have the luck to be noticed and others haven't."

"When signing a business letter and she wishes to indicate that she is a married woman she should sign (Mrs.) Mary K. Jones. When signing a social letter she should use her full name without the prefix," replied helpful Aunty.

"What is the proper way for a married woman to sign her name to letters?"

"When signing a business letter and she wishes to indicate that she is a married woman she should sign (Mrs.) Mary K. Jones. When signing a social letter she should use her full name without the 'prefix,' replied helpful auante."

"We Are Here to Stay."

A Chat with the Manager of the Ice Cream Centre.

"So it is not true, Mr. Ryan, that you are closing this store at the end of the Ice Cream Season," I said, as I demolished a generous plateful of ice cream with chocolate fudge.

"Not only is it not true, but the very contrary is the case, replied Mr. Ryan. We expect to do a larger business during the fall and winter months than we did during the summer, even."

"How is that?" I asked. He noticed my lifted eyebrows.

"Well, just see—we are building up a nice trade in the delivery of ice cream to private houses. The chief residential section of the city is quite near, and orders for ice cream, ordinary and fancy ice cream—this latter by the way, somewhat of a specialty with us—can be filled promptly."

"But it is the hot drinks that we intend to specialize during the cold weather. We have imported an Automatic Water Heater, a most ingenious contrivance for heating water, and keeping it hot—and just at the right heat too, neither scalding nor lukewarm, but just on the dot of temperature, and by this means we can get a chocolate fully up to the mark in all other respects,—flavor delicious, consistency proper—to give the maximum of satisfaction; and to procure Hot Coffee, Horlick's Malted Milk, Hot Beef Drinks, 'Hot Soda,' and so on. I believe these drinks—proper hot drinks—will strike our patrons pleasantly."

"You see, we already have a reputation to live up to. People expect to get at the Ice Cream Centre everything a little better than they can get elsewhere, and we must at all costs not disappoint them. We have been trying from the start to create this atmosphere of 'a little better,' and I do not think we have totally failed," he concluded, as I rose, having finished my ice, "at any rate the Ice Cream Centre is here to stay."

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20th, 1916.

Two of the JOHN H. Woodbury's Co's specialties are less known than they ought to be. The Soap, Toilet Powder and Toothpaste, have become among the most popular of soaps, cosmetics, and dentifrices respectively, and Woodbury's Ointment, and the latest addition to the list Woodbury's Shaving Stick, are in the same high class as those first named. Woodbury's Ointment is valuable as an external application in cases of eczema, barbers itch, abscesses, ulcers, and similar troubles, and you can feel it heal, and may be employed as an emollient in cases of sore muscles and tendons, rheumatism, lumbago, etc. The Shaving Stick is a modification of the same formula as that of the Facial Soap and has the same general virtues, and the specific one of making an excellent lather, rendering shaving a less irksome matter than with many Shaving Soaps. The Burial of the Air-Huns.

Many people in Canada will feel inclined to join in the protest that is being made in England against the action of the military authorities in according a military funeral and paying full honors to the Huns who met death when a Zeppelin was brought down while engaged in the unmerciful and cowardly business of dropping bombs in the night on defenceless women and children in their homes.

These Huns were not soldiers fighting with soldiers. They were armament carriers carrying death to non-combatants and destruction to undefended homes. They were out to do sheer murder under conditions which they believed to be absolutely safe to themselves.

In what way did they deserve the respect that was expressed in the solemn ceremonial of a military funeral at the hands of the British people? For the honorable soldier in the enemy army who does his duty as he sees it, and meets his death in a gallant way, one hopes that there will ever be in the British people enough generosity to accord him the respect that a brave man deserves. But these raiders of the night who, high and as they think safe from danger to themselves, drop death at random, slaying they care not whom, old or young, man or woman, sleeping child, or favored hospital patient—are they to be recognized as honorable soldiers honorably doing their legitimate duty?

If so, why are not our own armaments engaged in the same respectable work of dropping death on enemy cities, towns, and villages while the women and children sleep? Why does all England insist that there shall not be reprisals in kind to the barbarous warfare carried on by the enemy? If the warfare is too barbarous and revolting for our own soldiers to engage in it, why are our soldiers required to pay tributes of respect to the barbarians—altogether too few in number—who perish in the midst of their crimes?

It is all very well to exhibit in war the fine sporting spirit shown in good cricket. But this war is not sport. It is not a mere game, and it is not so regarded by men of British stock the world over who have gathered to the fray, or by their people to whom they have parted with their home. To them this war is a tremendously tragic affair, and they see that they are fighting an enemy who, in Belgium, in France, in Serbia, and everywhere else, strikes to kill, and strikes when he can at the very roots of the races he fights against. The enemy everywhere strives to destroy the shrines, historic monuments, and life-saving fountains of rival nationalities in order to make them, ever after this war, less effective forces in the world. It is the mother and the cradle they would destroy rather than the mere soldier of to-day—it is the college, the ancient cathedral, the museum and library, the gallery of art; it is the seat and source of all things racially distinctive, and therefore inherently un-German, that the enemy would wreck now and reduce in future influence.

A year ago a number of influential men in public life in England were urging that Hun baby-killers caught in the act ought to be peremptorily shot or hanged as outlaws. It was proposed that those made prisoners, but not taken red-handed—should be denied the privileges and considerations shown to prisoners taken in the honorable warfare in which rival armies engage. Yet these night-murderers who were killed have been granted all the burial honors that the bravest and fairest of foes could be shown. The serious part of it is that this will be taken to mean that John Bull, beginning to see a favorable outcome to the war, begins, as is too much his habit, to feel generously towards the enemy, quite too far in advance of the right time for indulging in the luxury of such feelings. The enemy in this case is not one to trust nor one deserving favors—Toronto Star.

The Hohenzollern Felon

London Chronicle.—When the Lusitania was sunk, her sinking, we may be sure, was not the unprompted and uncontrolled idea of the captain of the guilty submarine. When Louvain was smothered in blood and fire, the decision cannot have been merely that of the German officer in command of the spot. When Miss Cavell was executed, the German authorities in Belgium explained that only one person had power to give the contrary decision—the Emperor. Captain Fryatt's murder—obviously and solely an act of policy—comes home to the same felon. It may be said that in aiming so high, we risk prolonging the war and rendering the return to a satisfactory peace more difficult. But when the "scrap of paper" was torn up and Belgium was originally invaded, did not the resisting Emperor and his Government make it clear that any treaty which rolled on their signatures would be worthless? Can we hope to get any satisfactory peace with William II, except an entirely one-sided one, in which we should have to look for every satisfaction that we required not to undertake but to material guarantees? Might it not really accelerate a lasting peace, and enable it to be less invidious for the German nation than would otherwise be the case, if we explicitly took the ground that we were prepared to discuss terms with Germany, but not with the Hohenzollerns and their accomplices in crime?

Household Notes.

Sifted coal ashes are excellent to mix into the soil of the flower garden. This makes the soil soft and loamy.

A good flavor can be added to the scalloped potatoes by adding a sweet green pepper, boiled and chopped fine.

Keep the peanut butter jar turned upside down when on the shelf. This will make the last bit as oily as the first.

Quebec and France.

Without discussing the attitude towards the war of M. Bourassa, the Canadian Nationalist leader, to whom Captain Papineau, his nephew, now in France, has addressed a remarkable exhortation, it will remain a matter of surprise that the sufferings of France, if not the call of the Empire, should not have evoked a greater enthusiasm in the Quebec Province. For the French Canadian not only speaks French, but looks French, and is French largely in sentiment as well as in origin. His nursery rhymes are same which have been handed down from generation to generation of French children, and his songs are often the old songs of Poitou and Picardy and Provence. And a song or even a refrain may be a monument as lasting as stone or bronze. With large numbers in French Canada the call of the blood has been irresistible, and the French have spoken with glowing appreciation of the help of those whom they regard almost as sons of la vieille France. That more have not gone is no doubt due in part to the narrowing effect of political prejudice, for which M. Bourassa is not alone responsible, and also, I believe, to sentiments which he may share, but which he did not inspire. French Canada is not only intensely devout, but the priest there exercises an influence comparable only to that of his kind in Ireland. France under the Third Republic has not always been able to avoid hurt to the feelings of her own Catholic people, and resentment has had its echoes on the banks of the St. Lawrence. I should not be surprised if there had been a sensible cooling of sympathy for France in Quebec since M. Combes, and the Law of Associations.—Ex.

Last Week's Coup.

It has been said that the scant news which we receive here has at least the virtue of containing most of the important events of the war well summarized and freed of the worthless rumours and reports that fill the columns of newspapers elsewhere. There is a certain amount of truth in this, yet sometimes we are inclined to wish for something fuller, and would be content to trust to our own judgment as to its worth. Last week one of the greatest battles, ending in perhaps the greatest British victory in the war, took place on the Somme, but it would need an expert and one intimately familiar with the locality to understand from the bald official reports what the exact nature and value of the achievement was. We have indirect evidence in the observations from the front, and the lifting of the British again, which is good proof that they have been worsted by them and fear them more than ever. Germany long ago told the world that France was beaten; now she is her only enemy worth while in the West. Certainly she is worth while, but she is not alone. We must wait for the fuller reports of the English newspapers to learn the details of the great advance that carried the British line forward to Courcelles and Morval.

A change may be remarked in the course of the fighting on all fronts. It may be due to the entry of Roumania or to the appointment of Von Hindenburg—probably there is a connection between the two. But whatever the cause, it is evident that the British and French have been able to score striking successes in the West, while the enemy lines in the East have been greatly stiffened. The latest reports are a catalogue of gains for the Central Powers in nearly all the eastern theatres. The Russians have been driven back with heavy losses over the Stokhod River; they have been repulsed near Hallez; the Roumanians have at last encountered serious opposition and sustained a reverse in Transylvania; and Berlin claims further success in Dobruja. All these cannot be trifles or temporary set-backs. Evidently Hindenburg has had his way, and the eastern armies have been reinforced. On the other side, Monastir is threatened by the Serbians, who continue to drive the Bulgarians back, while there may be something in the report (though it comes from Athens) that the Austrians are preparing to evacuate Trieste.

If there is a direct causal connection between these two phenomena, it is the encouraging rather than the otherwise to the Allies, for it shows that Germany has now reached the stage where she cannot greatly bolster up one front without causing a weakness at once apparent in the other. The strategy

Patriotic Reception

Given Sergt. Nugent and Private Waugh, at Grand Falls, Last Night—His Excellency the Governor and Lady Davidson at the Meeting.

Special to Evening Telegram.
GRAND FALLS, To-day.
A public reception was given to Sergt. Nugent and Pte. Waugh last night, in the Town Hall. As usual the hall was packed. The Patriotic Committee, with two bands, paraded to Log House, the Governor's residence, and then with His Excellency and Lady Davidson, Sergt. Nugent and Private Waugh driving, they proceeded to the Town Hall. Mr. Josiah Goodyear acted as Chairman. His Excellency gave a very interesting speech and was loudly applauded. When Sergt. Nugent rose to his feet it was the occasion of a tremendous uproar of clapping and cheering. He gave an outline from the time the 1st Contingent left in the Florizze until through ill health he had to go to hospital where he was for quite a while, but said if fit and he will be accepted he will certainly go back again after Mr. Hun. In closing his excellent address he appealed to the young men of Grand Falls to come forward and fill up the gaps made by the loss of Wilcox, Ferguson and others of Grand Falls. He said he knew it was not through cowardice that they did not respond, but on account of not yet grasping what we are up against. He also had a very able speech from Lieut. Goodyear, who has enlisted with the Canadians and is here for a few days before going to the front. He in a few words told us what Canada is doing and still intends to do until Europe and the whole world is clear of militarism.

His Excellency at Grand Falls.

Special to Evening Telegram.
GRAND FALLS, To-day.
A crowded meeting was held here last night. It was addressed by His Excellency Governor Davidson, who was accompanied by Lady Davidson. His Excellency's address was rendered most interesting by the information he was able to supply on subjects where the ordinary sources of news must be silent. His Excellency also warmly welcomed Sergt. Nugent and Private Waugh, on their return from the front. Sergt. Nugent's reply marked the evening. His Excellency's remarks were much appreciated by the great audience. The chair was occupied by Mr. Josiah Goodyear who was accompanied by Lieut. H. G. Goodyear, one of his fine soldier sons.

Deanery of Avalon Chapter Meeting.

At the invitation of the Rector, the Rev. A. E. E. Legge, of St. Peter's Church, Portugal Cove, the quarterly meeting of the Chapter of the Deanery of Avalon took place yesterday at the place mentioned and was attended by the following clergy: Canon Smith, Rev. Mr. Evans, Rev. Mr. G. G. Moulton, Rev. Mr. Barton, Rev. Mr. Pike, C. Moulton of the city, Rev. J. Stead, Bell Island and Rev. A. E. E. Legge, Portugal Cove. At 10:30 a.m. the clergy and a number of the laity received the Holy Sacrament, the celebrant being the Rev. Canon Smith, Episcopal Commissioner, assisted by the Rev. A. E. Legge, the former also preaching the sermon which was suited to the occasion. A special intercession was held for the recovery of the Rural Dean Rev. Canon Colley, who was absent owing to illness, and is now undergoing medical treatment in the United States. After service the Chapter meeting took place at the Rectory where a resolution was passed expressing deep regret at the illness of the Rural Dean, and earnest hope for his speedy recovery. The diagnosis of his complaint by his physician shows that the good Canon is seriously ill as the result of overwork, but they entertain good hopes for his recovery. The visiting clergy were the guests of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Legge at luncheon, after which the usual chapter business was proceeded with. Owing to the absence of the Rural Dean the office was filled by Rev. Canon Smith.

The Teutonic Conference.

One of Turkey's leading statesmen has gone to the Kaiser's eastern headquarters to attend a conference between the military leaders of the Central Powers and their allies. The object of this conference is not made clear by the official communications issued at Berlin but military observers are of opinion that it is a "conference of desperate men" resulting from the entrance of Roumania into the war and the pronounced success of France and Great Britain in offsetting the plans of pro-German agents in Greece.

Critics who have been watching developments in the Balkans during the last three months declare that while the German general staff is issuing bulletins indicating an early collapse of Roumania's striking power, due to the loss of the fortified positions at Turtukal and Salistria, the signs are increasing that the Kaiser and his generals are really greatly worried over the whole situation and are being hard pressed by the Bulgarian government to send help which they cannot spare at this time. These critics point out that "we may judge from the temper of her statements and her press, Germany contemplates the record of her million dead, and feels stronger for their death." In other words, as German strength declines the boastfulness of certain semi-official German newspapers becomes more apparent, due undoubtedly to the necessity of allaying the fears of the populace. Because the Bulgarians won an initial victory over the Roumanians on the Danube the Berlin press has already carried up Roumania and told the people just how it is to be apportioned after the war. This leads the military writer of the Boston Transcript to say:

"Certainly Germany presents a grim spectacle to-day—talking triumph and annexation as she stands with her back to the wall. Yet in reality, the imperial conference at the eastern headquarters is a council of distress if not of desperation. The Kaiser, as he sits at the table, will be attended by the highest representatives of the Austrian emperor, who seems to be too old to visit camps himself. He will be attended by the Bulgarian king and the chief of his cabinet. He will be attended by the representatives of Turkey. Territorially, the conference represents the belt of empires and kingdoms which the Kaiser has dreamed, reaching clear across the Old World from the Baltic to the Persian Gulf. But this imperial belt, the Old World's brilliant midway alliance, is to-day menaced desperately, and the Kaiser sees unless a fairly easy conquest can be made of Roumania, the belt across the world will be cut in two on or below the Danube. The military point of the conference is to improve upon the Bulgarian victories at Turtukal and Salistria and on the Black Sea coast, turn back the Roumanian raid into Transylvania and the Russian march to Lemberg, and convert a deadly menace into a great victory which will advance those 'eastern headquarters' another good step into the conviction that Germany can still handle the east with something less than half her strength."

"Can this be done? The Transcript writer thinks not. He agrees with many other neutral critics that the victories of the Danube do not 'promise strategical results commensurate with their brilliancy. 'After all,' he says, 'they are to the south of the Danube, beyond which lies Roumania, reasonably safe from these attacks. Turtukal and Salistria have not stayed the advance into Transylvania—a region which the Roumanians seem now virtually to command.'"

It would be interesting to know all that is being said at this conference on the eastern front. One can imagine the pressure which the Austrians, the Bulgarians and the Turks are bringing to bear for the purpose of getting new help from Germany. And it must be plain to Emperor William that if Austria is to be saved he must find new armies to stimulate its resistance—a thing which military observers declare he cannot do. The Turks are weakening, and as a result their offensive in Armenia has produced no results worth while; in fact, it now seems to be about done.

And every day adds to the danger which threatens Bulgaria. The Transcript's observer adds:

"The war may indeed last another year, but it is apparent that this imperial Teuton conference marks the turning of the tide in the east, just as the success of the Somme offensive may have marked it in the west. But let it be noted that the central empires still possess great fighting resources, the highest ability in command, and an undaunted confidence. There is to be no panic finish to this war."

SPECTACLES.
Spectacles are an effort on the part of man to get extra mileage out of the human eye. When a man's eyes have been hammered over the road for a number of years and allowed to rest on everything from the German unblat to the scarf dance they become worn in spots and have to be trued up by a specialist. This truing-up process is very trying to the patient, but does not injure the specialist in the least, as the advance deposit will usually take care of all the expense and allow 70 per cent. for overhead.

Spectacles are worn on the bridge of the nose, thence running due south over each ear lobe, where they dangle with conscious grace and cause small, feverish blisters to arise. The most important part of spectacles is the glass which comes with each set. This varies from the modest bull's eye, which magnifies all objects with which it comes in contact. If more married men would wear magnifying glasses as a rule of conduct they would be more satisfied with their wives and not be hunting around for evidences of platonic friendship.

Spectacles do not add a great deal to the looks of the wearer, except that they often impart an intellectual cast which is not borne out by closer acquaintance. A great many people whose eyes are completely in plumb wear gold-rimmed spectacles in order to secure a reputation for sagacity and deep thought, and find that it pays better than allowing the hair to fall over their necks in long ringlets or donning a Lord Byron collar. Spectacles are all right on certain occasions, but they never can take the place of the double-barreled opera glass at the comic opera.

Sarrail's Long-lient Guns

The fighting in the Balkans has been for politics. There has been no real offensive and no sign of one, so far as the south is concerned, and no offensive in the north except Roumania's and the counter attempt to stop her. Sarrail's army of French and British remained passive while on all the other fronts, the Allies were attacking Germany and fighting themselves around her. The Roumanians held the Germans in the north while they drove the Austrians before them in the south, but Sarrail remained motionless. Joffre began his Franco-British offensive on the Somme but there was no sign from Sarrail. Cadorna captured Gorizia and added his share to the hammering of Austria, and still Sarrail did not move. Then there came news that Russian and Italian forces had been added to the French and British at Salonika, and an advance was expected, but none came. "High command" was reported, and the conclusion was jumped at that this was the Salonika drive, but it was not. The Bulgarians were simply making an incursion into Greece. Then Roumania entered the war, and invaded Transylvania. Instantly the Bulgarians and their allies sought to disconcert the Roumanians by an advance into southeastern Rumania. The invasion was not disconcerted; it went steadily on. But to prevent the dislocation of the Roumanian plan the French and British have come to the rescue with an assault on Bulgaria from the south. This may be the long-expected drive, but there is as yet nothing to prove it. Its object appears to be the protection of Roumania while she proceeds with her attack on Transylvania. If it accomplishes its purpose and relieves Roumania from the counter-invasion, Sarrail may relapse again into the strange quiet which he has maintained while every front but his was thundering and flaming.

This torpor of Sarrail's, which is of course, a torpor imposed upon him by Joffre's command, is the present mystery of the war. It is a political torpor, just as the Bulgarian attack on Greece, misinterpreted at first as the beginning of a drive by the Allies, was a political attack. The Franco-British army at Salonika was held while political negotiations went on, and when the Russians and Italians joined it political negotiations still held them all. It was not because they were not ready in a military sense that they were not allowed to move; to suppose that would be to suppose that Roumania was allowed to begin an attack in which her allies were unready to support her, and thus invite disaster. The Bulgarian attack on Greece, apparently a foolhardy thing, was not because the Bulgarians knew the Salonika army would not or could not stop them. They incurred the danger of being crushed by the Bulgarians, knew the political situation. They have apparently counted on the continuance, for the time of the immunity, of an attacked Roumania. This was too much, and the Allies have stirred; but they have stirred only enough to save Roumania from being crushed, and to bring on the great battle of the Balkans. Politics has been the Commander-in-Chief in the Balkans, and it still is. The political game, however, must by this time have been played nearly to its end. The real Balkan campaign must be in sight—N. Y. Times.

HOW TO SLEEP.
Are you getting the full benefit of your night's sleep, or are you restless and disturbed by bad dreams? Do you awake refreshed for the day's mental activities, or are you tired and soggy feeling ill the morning?

There is no such thing as that tired morning feeling, and the woman who sleeps properly. She should awake completely rested, and mentally refreshed. The proper position in sleeping is misunderstood by the majority of people. The only correct and beneficial sleeping position is secured by laying flat on the back, the hands down at the sides, the limbs extended at full length, and the whole body relaxed.

To sleep on the left side, is harmful to the heart, habitual sleeping on the right side spoils the contour of the face, and sleeping on the stomach courts indigestion. The arms should never be thrown above the head. Four hours of sleep in the correct position is more beneficial than eight hours in a cramped posture. At first you may find it difficult to change your mode of sleeping, but a few nights of practice will obliterate all earlier acquired habits. You sleep one-third of your life, so sleep it properly as you would live it.

Sarrail's Long-ilent Guns

Fighting in the Balkans has for political. There has been no offensive and no sign of one, so the south is concerned, and no sign in the north except Russia and the counte attempt to her. Sarrail's army of French British remained passive while the other fronts the Allies attacking Germany and ringing selves around her. The Ruse held the Germans in the north they drove the Austrians before in the south, but Sarrail red motionless. Joffre began his co-British offensive on the Somme here was no sign from Sarrail, was captured Gorizia and added here to the hammering of Aus- and still Sarrail did not move. THE NEW PROBLEM
LONDON, To-day. The application of conscription to Ireland is suggested by the Daily Mail to-day in an article, calling attention to the urgent necessity for obtaining more men for the army, a problem which it says engaged the full attention of the Government. The news- paper suggests two other methods for adding to the army, namely, raising the age limit from 41 to 45 years, and calling out young men from exempted occupations, of whom it estimates that there are 2,250,000 physically fit who have not yet been drafted into the army.

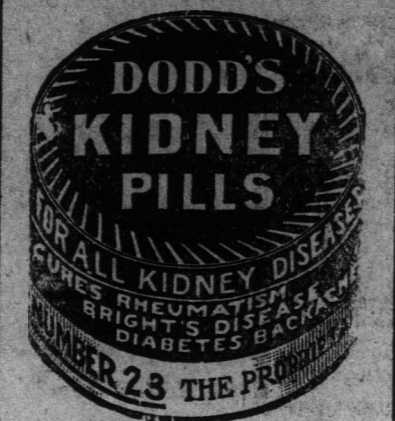

ROUMANIAN REPORT.
BOUCHAREST, Roumania, To-day. A war official communication issued to-day says: "On the north and northwest fronts there were skirmishes of slight importance along the whole front except in the valley of the Streul River, where the enemy at- tacked violently with superior forces, in face of which we fell back slightly. On the south front along the Danube there has been an exchange of gun fire. At Debrudja on Sunday night the enemy attacks towards Eniga, south- west of Kabadia, were twice beaten back. The fighting continues."

LONDON SUMMARY.
LONDON, To-day. Although there has been a pause in the violent infantry fighting in the Somme region in France due to the inclement weather, heavy battles are in progress on this eastern front in Galicia and Transylvania and on the southern front in Macedonia. Along the Stokhod River in Russia, the Ger- mans and Austro-Hungarians have taken the offensive against the Rus- sians, according to Berlin, and have crossed the river in pursuit of their retreating foe and captured 31 offi- cers, 2,511 men, and 12 machine guns. Here four lines of Russian trenches were penetrated by the Teutonic Al- lies, says Vienna. In Galicia counter- attacks by the forces of the Central Powers along the Naryvka River southeast of Lemberg brought further success to their arms and resulted in the capture of an additional 4,300 prisoners. In the Lutsk region of the Carpathians the Russians have gained new positions, fighting among the snow clad peaks. The War Chan- celleries at Berlin, Sofia and Vienna report victories of the Teutonic Al- lies over the Rumanians in Transyl- vania and Debrudja in Macedonia. Transylvania near Hatzberg, accord- ing to Berlin the invading Rumanians have been repulsed and are be- ing pursued by the Teutonic Al- lies while in Debrudja the new line for- mated by the Russians south of the Cen- tarza railway running from the Black Sea to the Danube has been pen- etrated at points and several villages captured. In France and Belgium there has been violent artillery ac- tivity in the Somme and Verdun for- ces and around Dixmude. A local German attack on the British trenches east of Martinpuich, north of the Somme was repulsed. Berlin admits the relinquishment to the Entente forces of trenches at Ganchy near Comblès which had been previously demolished by the Entente artillery. Infantry fighting between the Italians

LONDON, To-day. Lieut.-Col. Hon. Guy Victor Baring, was killed in action in August. He was a member of Parliament, and was the son of Lord Ashburton, born in 1876.

BRIAND DEFENDS THE ALLIES.
PARIS, To-day. A delicate question was raised in the Chamber of Deputies to-day by Roux Castanon, who asked Premier Briand to see to it that there was not only unity of action on all fronts by the Allies but proportionate effec- tives. A protest was made from var- ious parts of the chamber against the discussion of the subject of the pro- portionate number of troops engaged from the different Entente countries. Castanon, nevertheless, persisted, say- ing that France could not expect to give the blood of all her children, and that the Allies should make the neces- sary sacrifices. Premier Briand re- fused, objecting to the question. He declared it was unjust to throw doubt on the efforts of the Allies in such a sacred cause. England, he said, had never said no to any demand for aid. Italy had made the utmost efforts she possibly could considering the dif- ficulties of the mountainous theatre she was operating in. Russia had sent France her soldiers from across the world. To-morrow, continued the Premier, you will see this joint action expanding still more.

German Hatred of England.
In a long letter the Berlin corre- spondent of the Nieuwe Rotterdamse Courant says: "The events since the general offensive have caused the German people at home to recognize that national inter- ests are now at stake; that it is no longer a question of more or less gain, but of life or death for Germany."
"This recognition has had a singu- lar influence on the Germans estimates of their enemies. The hatred against England which for long was decreas- ing, has revived."
"It is England that keeps the war going," says the man in the street. A gram-conductor who fought for eight- een months told me confidentially that the only means to terminate the war would be to undermine or blow up England. In political circles, too, this feeling is again growing.
"Six months ago Germany felt her- self so strong that she thought she could choose with which of her ene- mies she would bring about a rappro- chement. Political sympathy and antipathies decided mostly in favour of England. Now many believe that it would be better to make a rapproch- ment more compatible with German national interests and one in which it would be easier to come to an under- standing. Russia is now regarded as the favorable land. Propaganda among the lower classes is decidedly increas- ing in favour of a more active submar- ine war, and it has already taken cer- tain forms.
"I myself have spoken to men of standing, who, if they could choose, would decide for a rapprochement to the west, but they believe the time to choose is now past. The increased friendly feeling towards Russia is a point about which it is difficult to write as it deserves, but which is greatly discussed here."

PREPARING THE GREEKS FOR WAR.
NEW YORK, To-day. The Tribune this morning publishes the following cable from Athens: The Royalist again (?) Forward will pub- lish to-morrow the opening article in the pro-war campaign intended to pre- pare the opinion of the Greeks for the entry of their country in to the war. The newspaper demands an immediate explanation and the release of the Greek soldiers made prisoners by the Bulgarians at Kavala, plainly indicat- ing that the alternative will be war. Speaking of the Greeks, the publica- tion says that only those who are treated as prisoners who surrender to the enemy. We know now that Premier Kalogoropoulos has taken steps with Germany for the im- mediate return of our soldiers with all their effects. If this demand is not at once satisfied, the Government must consider the measures to be taken. King Constantine, it is said, knows of the contents of Forward's article.

AN ULTIMATUM.
ATHENS, To-day. There is reason to believe that the Greek Government has sent an ultimatum to Germany and Bulgaria ex- piring on Wednesday night demand- ing the immediate return of the soldiers taken prisoners at Kavala.

GAINED A FOOTHOLD.
PARIS, To-day. In determined attacks by the Ger- mans last night on the French posi- tion at Hill 60, north of the Somme, the Germans gained a foothold at some advanced positions, the war office an- nounced to-day, but subsequently they were ejected.

BULGARIANS CLAIM SUCCESSES.
SOFIA, To-day. An official announcement was made here to-day that Italian troops on the Macedonian front have been driven back by the Bulgarians who occupy 4 villages. In eastern Roumania along the new battlefield south of the rail- road from Constanta on the Black Sea to Tzernavoda on the Danube, a great battle is in progress developing in fa- vor of the Bulgarians, the announce- ment says to-day.

IN GOOD COMPANY.
BERLIN, To-day. Major Dasserman, one of the lead- ers of the National Liberal Party, in a Krinote speech delivered on Mon- day before his constituents in the Bar- brucken district, declared that the submarine campaign had been post- poned and not abandoned. Dasserman advocated the widest possible use of both submarines and Zeppelins and the most ruthless methods of warfare. The National Liberal leader asserted that his views were endorsed by Ad- miral Von Tirpitz and Prince Von Buelow and Count Zeppelin.

CONSTANTINOPLE, To-day. The repulse of a Russian attack by Turkish troops in Galicia after a forty-eight hour battle is reported in an official statement published by the War Office.

Polite Cowards.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Politeness is an indispensable thing. It oils the machinery of daily living. Our constant contact with each other would bring friction far more often than it does if it were not for the oil of politeness.

But there is also such a thing as keeping your mind too much to yourself, being too complaisant. People who are too complaisant encourage injustice and overbearing ways in others.

They grow cowardly and mealy mouthed. And quite frequently they store up an unhealthy accumulation of resentment in their hearts because they don't give their feelings the vent of occasional plain speaking.

Incidentally I have often noticed that the people who treat outsiders in this complaisant way are likely to take it out in too much plain speaking to their housemates.

That, of course, is true to type. For the coward is usually a bully, when he dares to be.

St. Joseph's, Levis, July 14, 1903. Minard's Liniment Co., Limited. Gentlemen,—I was badly kicked by my horse last May, and after using several preparations on my leg nothing would do. My leg was black as jet. I was laid up in bed for a fortnight and could not walk. After using three bottles of your MINARD'S LINIMENT I was perfectly cured, so that I could start on the road.

JOS. DUBES. Commercial Traveller.

I went to a new stenographer the other day. When I had finished my dictating and came to pay the bill, she overcharged me. Her flat rate was a dollar an hour. I had dictated an hour and a quarter. She charged me a dollar and a half.

I asked her why and she said, "Well, when we work hard and accomplish a good deal we usually charge more."

"See," said the blind man, but—"Oh, yes!" said I, like a polite coward, "I see." I didn't see at all, not in the sense of being satisfied.

"Come again," said she.

"Thank you," I heard myself say, again a polite coward, "I will."

I didn't mean either of those statements.

What I should have said if I hadn't been inhibited by the cowardice of politeness was:

How I Should Have Answered Her.

First, "I don't think you accomplished such a great deal. You didn't accomplish any more than several other stenographers I've had and not so much as my best one."

Second, "No, I shall not come again. I can't afford it. I can get just as good work done elsewhere for a fair rate."

Your Boys and Girls.

A courteous gentleness to social inferiors, such as servants, is the sign-manifest of breeding. Therefore exact from the child a gentle deference for their feelings. He must be told to say, "please" when asking for a thing at the table and told to say, "thank you," when it is given him.

The man and woman of the South are noted especially for marks of politeness and a great deal of their training comes through the need of being polite to ones' black nurse. The defect is not treated with spanking, for the nurse has no right to speak. It is the old black nurse of the south who taught imperative obedience to the father's and mother's will, who inculcated love for them, who insisted upon every little shade of the ordinary behavior which stands for breeding. A good deal depends upon the character and bringing up of the nursemaid into whose hands a child has been entrusted.

A Boom in Mfld. Codfish

Yesterday the Board of Trade received their weekly advice from Messrs. Lind and Couto at Oporto, as follows:—

Stocks (Mfld.) 20,937 qts.
Consumption 8,049 "

This is the first time for several years that there was no Norwegian codfish reported in the local market. In consequence high prices for the Newfoundland article are expected to rule.

AT THE CRESCENT.

The Crescent Picture Palace has a splendid show on to-day, the Selig players present "Tom Martin — A Man," a thrilling western feature, being the tragic story of a brave man. "When Kings Were the Law" is a spectacular drama of the olden times. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew feature in "Too Clever by Half," a classy Vitagraph-Drew Comedy. Mr. Sam Rose, baritone, sings: "When the Mayor Plays 'Those Minor Melodies,' a lively ragtime number. Professor McCarthy presides at the piano and plays a new musical programme.

Here and There.

FLOTSAM SEEN.—We learn that a large quantity of lumber, belonging to the S. S. Mataua, which was ashore in that section a few weeks ago can be seen floating around in St. Mary's Bay. The wrecked steamer Mataua was since refloated and conveyed to Halifax where she is now in dry dock undergoing permanent repairs.

BUY YOUR Floor COVERINGS

—FROM—

BLAIR'S

Because they will Save you Money.

They are offering a full variety of patterns in the New American Floor Coverings at $1.10 yard.

You can buy these same Floor Cloths elsewhere for $1.20 and that is the usual price, but Blair's say September being a kind of a quiet month they can easily cut more Floor Cloths than, so the cut in the price cuts two ways.

They say according to the prices the manufacturers are now quoting, these coverings would cost them all this to land.

They show a big range of Block and Floral Patterns, as they have the manufacturers of three different makers, viz.: Congolems, Feltoleums and Neponsets, and show the best patterns of each make. These are much better than cheap Floor Canvases, of which the cheapest to-day is about $1.00 per yard.

This is mainly because the basic material for Cheap Floor Canvases is Burlap or Brin, and the immediate demand for that is tremendous. It is estimated that for the making of sand bags and the wrapping of foodstuffs, etc., for the Army, that the British Government calls for sixty million square yards per week. Therefore the price of brin has more than doubled. But Blair's are trying to help you all they can on prices, therefore remember—
