and he will find there that he stated that there would have been an enormous deficit at the end of the year, but for the fact that he had added three millions to the taxation, and from the fact of his knowledge that from customs and excise, he would derive an enormous amount of revenue. The ex-Finance Minister told us, give me three millions and I will never, come back for years, but will show you a surplus. He got three millions, but he came back to confess in 1875-76, that it was all gone and that he was $1,900,000 in arrears. (Laughter and cheers.) This is the wonderful financier who is going to lecture and become a professor of finance, and ask the assembled world to sit at the feet of Gamaliel to hear the wonderful worlds that fall from his lips. He said: "I must have half a million more per annum to carry on the Government." (Laughter.) Parliament gave it to him, but he came to Parliament with the confession that he had a small deficit of $1,128,145, and this effer he had deficit of $1,128,145, and this effer he had

with the confession that he had a small deficit of $1,128,145, and this after he had told the people he was taking from them $3,500,000 of fresh taxes, in order to enso, 50,000 of Fresh classes, in order to en-able him to maintain his position. This was not the worst. In 1878-79, the hon, gentleman found himself again confronted with a deficit of $1,984,000, after receiving $1,300,000 from a change of tariff. Thus the deficits during with a denet of $1,305,000, after receiving $1,300,000 from a change of tariff. Thus the deficits during the five years of mismanagement aggregated $7,926,968. If the hon, gentleman wants an authority, he can find it in the public accounts brought down to Papliament under his own hand. (Cheers) I have here a letter addressed to me by the auditor of the Intercolonial Railway, the hon, gentleman's own officer, which says that the deficit were reduced to the figures presented by hiding away $3,900,000 of deficits, by placing revenue expenditure on the Intercolonial to capital account, and I will give Mr. Tims letter, showing the items and proving that his deficits would have been, during five years, an accrage of $800,000 annually more than they appear, if the tem Finance Minister had submitted an honest account to Parliament. Like an ostrich, the hon, gentleman buries his head in a cloud and ventures to talk of the Finance Minister as if he were a child in finance, and had declared that he owed his position to his connection with the temperance movement, his appointment being a plot on the part of the First Minister. Did the hon, gentleman not know that the First Minister had never been driven to go into the ranks of his opponents and make a selection utterly irrespective of his fitness as a Cabinet Minister in order to save a majority to sustain the Cabinet. He forgets that the present Premier had always been enabled to obtain assistance and services of the ablest men the country affords. Yet, he had ventured to say that the temperance question had been dragged down by the Conservative party into the arena of party polities. Let him look in his own tanks if he wents is itself the men and the party that never he situated to deag down by the Conservative party into the arena of party polities. That gives us $1,115,000, which swells the estimate to within a million of what the

4. The Sunday of the Sunday of the Control of St. St. Control (1994) and the Control of St. St. Control (1994) and St. C such a policy as, we believe, is in the interest of our own country. True it is, that it has had an effect in the Republic. It has set the first minds in commercial circles to ascertain whether a change cannot be obtained in Canadian trade by adopting such a fair measure of reciprocity as would promote the interests of both parties. (Cheers.) The old story was reiterated, that the Government would make this a dear country to live in, that they would tax the people to such an extent as to deplete the country. But the tariff changes tax the people to such an extent as to deplete the country. But the tariff changes have provided employment for hundreds and thousands, and have not driven away our people. During last year the immigration was 30,000 of the best class, as against 20,000 in the previous year, and even with the twenty dollar prohibition within the last two months, more people have come here within that period than during the same period last year. More has been achieved in the interests of Canada in the opening up our country as a has been achieved in the interests of Canada in the opening up our country as a home for industrious men, not only industrious, energetic sons of toil, but also men who will bring a larger volume of capital to enrich the country that has ever yet been achieved, and never did we occupy in the history of the country a position such as that which we occupy today. Many years ago, I ventured moderately to say that I thought in connection with immigration from Great Britain there was a question with reference to Imperial policy to be considered, and the statement was met with a shout of derisive perial policy to be considered, and the statement was met with a shout of derisive laughter from hon. gentleman opposite. The idea that Imperial politicians should be induced to take the slighest notice of the destination of British emigrants was deemed absurd, but the laughter died out when Lord Beaconsield drew attention to the enormous resources of Canada, and the home it offered to British emigrants.

From that day to this the whole tone of the British news was alread. From that day to this the whole tone of the British press was, altered. Another difficulty which loomed upon the minds of hon, gentleman opposite was the increase in prices. [The hon, gentleman then argued that prices had not been increased by the operation of the late Finance Minister is so strong, he should direct his attention to writing novels. He could not have more largely drawn on his own imagination than by the statements he has given tought. He said we were going to get $70 to $80 from each family, and not have an increased revenue. That is one of the absurdities to which the hou, gentleman gave utterance in the course of man gave utterance in the lon. gentle-man gave utterance in the course of as illogical a speech as I think was ever listened to in this House. How a family could contribute $70 to $80 in taxes, and not add to the Treasury receipts, I do not understand. (Laughter and applanse.)

not add to the Treasury receipts, I do not understand. (Laughter and applause.) The hon, gentleman considered the United States were in a state of Egyptian darkness, which will continue until it takes inspiration from the light that he is willing to shed. (Laughter.) Will the hon, gentleman tell me why it is that in great, free trade England the prospects of better times there depended on the revival of business in the United States? When I was over there I asked statesmen, merchants, manufacturers, and men of intelligence of all classes, what was the outlook in the country, and their invariable reply was, it was dark enough, that their only hope was a return of prosperity in the United States, would have its effect intended in the total devices of the United States. nen in England that the only resource he could see for them was to emigrate; and that Lerd Salisbury replied to a deputation of sugar retiners, who asked for protection against the competition of France or America, that they could do nothing for them; because they had nothing to offer? That was the position of Canada yesterday; but to-day it was altered, and if the Hon. George Brown were called upon to visit Washington for the purpose of negotiating a commercial treatys, with the American Government, he would not be placed in the humiliating position in which he was placed before, when he was obliged to return discomitted, as the Americans

THE FARMER AND THE N. P.
One of the pretences of ponic entlemen opposite in advocating the National Policy, was that it would benefit the farmer. It was alleged that because the United States imposed certain duties upon our grains, we should meet them with a counter duty, or, as the hon. member for Cumberland said, accounts, and show as transpuelted to a public Accounts, and show as transpuelted to a public Mean swas ever offered to a public Mean. Yet we are lectured on this side of the House because we did not succeed in a praiseworthy effort at Washington to obtain the same terms of equality in our trade with the United States. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think it is a grand principle of political action to apply the lect talions.

We know that it is inevitable that the cause the United States in trade relations, and while we cannot avoid it. We are side by stall always be ready to aid the down that two and meet them with a counter duty, or, as the hon. member for Cumberland said, and the ground when it is surrounded by so much dark when it is surrounded by so much dark. THE FARMER AND THE N. P.

One of the pretences of hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think it is a grand principle of political action to apply the lect talions.

We know that it is a grand principle of political action to apply the lect talions.

We know that it is inevitable that the condition of the House in stating our policy as to our commerce and our trade relations.

THE RIGHT POLICY.

We hold that any restriction upon trade is an essential element of national prosperity.

We hold that any restriction upon trade with the whole of the wront displayed t because the United States imposed certain duties upon our grains, we should meet them with a counter duty, or, as the hon. member for Cumberland said, we should adopt the sincerest form of flattery by following their example. (Hear.) That the Government did so we know. Except under urgent circumstances or for particular reasons, no grain coming into this country paid duty on account of the tariff. This measure of course had not the effect of increasing prices; for we know that the price of wheat was relatively higher in Chicago and other western cities under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite since the introduction of the tariff, than the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite since the introduction of the tariff, than before we had any duty upon foreign wheat. But while they were willing to make pretences to farmers of assisting them and meeting their views, hon. gentlemen opposite decided that it was necessary to impose a duty on some articles that might put money into their pockets. They have imposed the heaviest duties upon the poorest articles of woollen cloth, that made the poor man pay ten times as much as the rich man, inasmuch as the specific duty upon the finest cloths was the same as upon the poorest. They endeavoured in that way to give protection table woollen goods brought into the country since then, shows how effectually that protection has been used. But now, driven by the complaints of hundreds of thousands of the honest yeomanry, who feel that they have been sold and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and they have been sold and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and they have been sold and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and they have been sold and they have imposed a duty.

They have imposed the time they have been the canadians, that the United States to ur feet, that now four mile that we were bound to have a policy of protection, and whatever may be in a name, it was a protection nevertheless, because tit gave every manufacturer in the country 17½ cents on the dular more than he would be entitled to were there free trade between this and foreign countries. It was only an incidental promited the other night, the member for Cum-the other night, the other night, the member for Cum-the other night, the other night, the other night, the other night, the other night, misses—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite have decided that something must be done, and they have imposed a duty of three cents per pound on woll of Cotswold, Leicester, and Lincoln sheep. I can hardly believe that the hon. Finance Minister does not know there is not a pound of these wools imported into Canada. (Cheers and laughter.) In order that there may be no mistake about i., I will read extracts from some letters I have required. One gentleman, who is probably the largest dealer in wool in the Dominion, says:—

"I see by this morning's Globe that Sir Leonard, in his Budget Speech, proposes to put a duty on wool of 3c. per pound on combing wools of Leicester, Costwold, and Lincolnshire sheep. Mr. Tilley will not get one dollar of revenue from this source,

"I see by this morning's Globe that Sir Leonard, in his Budget Speech, proposes to put a duty on wool of 3c. per pound on combing wools of Leicester, Costwold, and Lincolnshire sheep. Mr. Tilley will not get one dollar of revenue from this source, as we do not import one pound of this class of combing wool into this country, and we are not likely to do so, as we have no machinery to manufacture the class of goods combing wools of Leicester, Costwold, and Lincolnshire sheep. Mr. Tilley will not get one dollar of revenue from this source, as we do not import one pound of this class of combing wool into this country, and we are not likely to do so, as we have no machinery to manufacture the class of goods this type of wool is most suitable for, and we can buy wools from other countries at a great deal less, and more suited to our trade. This is a transparent fraud on farmers, and will be of no benefit to them or injury to our woolen manufacturers. The price of this class of wool is determined in England, which is our only competitor, for she produces over 100,000,000 lbs. I have been in this business for twenty years, and have only been able to ship this type of wool to England three times. I would just say Sir, that when gentlemen on this side of the House are disposed to let this matter sleep, gentlemen opposite had better do so. (Hear, hear.) But if they persist in discussing these things, it may be necessary for us to discuss what was the condition of the country at that time, what have been the results since, and what is to be expected from office in the future.
