FLOWERS OF THE BATTLE FIELD.

BY MICHAEL J. HARRY.

The following lines were suggested by some wild flowers, gathered on the fields of Balaclava and Inkermann, in the course of last summer, by a young officer, by whose name they were recently shown to the writer. On the eve of the first anniversary of Inkermann, the incident recurred to his memory, and with it the lines embodied in the lines.

Fair flowers, from fields of bloodiest strife,
How came you, thus, your blooms to shed
On scenes with saddest memories rife, Where mouldering restour heroes died?

Most bright and beautiful you've sprung Above the turf that wraps the dead,
As though some loving hand had flung Your seed to blossom where they lay.

Afar, from many a bleeding breast,
The sighs and prayers of Love arise,
In kindly dwellings of the West,
For you who bloom beneath Eastern skies.

To where the gallant soldier fell,
On Solanki's bloody plain,
Of unburied Inkermann, was slain.

Meet not the Foot-drops that God Wrote every sacred sign and prayer,
At midnight, to the heaven's side,
To blossom into wild-flowers there!

If thus you have your gentle birth, Slight marvel your protection fails—
For half the world's your Father's Earth,
'Till great God's hand shall bid you die!

Messrs. Strongham's Chron.

—Speaking of chronicles, we have never seen any other labouring conscience and utility could compare with that of Messrs. Strongham, and the English chronicle, whose appearance we have the pleasure of making in one of the rural districts of New York some years since. Having occasion to call upon her one summer morning, we found her occupying her huge chair-covers rocking chair, rocking and knitting as though the salvation of the family depended upon the assiduity with which she supplied her stock to these occupations.

Not that she was unwell or unwell by any means, for the moment we had taken the proffered cup of tea, she was as lively as a young girl, and as instructive as a young man, and as entertaining as a young man, and as instructive as a young man, and as entertaining as a young man.

Reverence in Children.

—What state of reverence can be said to be the meaning of the impression which was pronounced at the entrance into the promised land, and joined in the same down the father and him who should be "as light by his father and mother." What philosophy can give the sign of the book of Proverbs, whose conclusions moralizing rise into prophetic utterances, as he speaks of the unnatural son: "The eye that mocketh at his father, or refuseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pluck it out and the young eagles shall eat it." Who needs any interpretation of the feelings of David, or Joseph, or Solomon, in their joy or trial? How heart-rending was the grief of the Father, over the recovery of his son? "Would to God I had died for thee, my son, my son!" What beauty, as well as simplicity, in the inquiry of Joseph for his father, when the Prime Minister of Egypt dismissed his courty train, and weeping aloud, could only exclaim: "Dost my father yet live?" What grandeur, far above its gold and gems, surrounded the throne of Solomon, when he rose to meet his father, and called her to a seat at his right hand. "And the King said unto her, see on, my mother, for I will not see thee any more." "What had I done for thee, my son, my son?" What beauty, as well as simplicity, in the inquiry of Joseph for his father, when the Prime Minister of Egypt dismissed his courty train, and weeping aloud, could only exclaim: "Dost my father yet live?" What grandeur, far above its gold and gems, surrounded the throne of Solomon, when he rose to meet his father, and called her to a seat at his right hand.
