TO THE PUBLIC.

I INTENDED to write a Preface to my Almanack for two reasons:—First, as the name of Theophrastus is so little known now a-days, I supposed there would be a general enquiry “who is the new Almanack maker?” For a new face, or a new name, or, in short any thing that is new, will generally attract the attention for a time: Hence in a great measure has arisen the old proverb, “That every dog has his day,” that is, as I take it, of being talk’d about; or I really do not know in what else the proverb holds true. Praise or scandal falls to the lot of every one.—My second reason was, that I might, as most authors do, speak very modestly of my abilities—beg you to be kind and indulgent to a young beginner—and to tell you that whatever errors might have crept into the present publication, should be carefully avoided next year.—But my design is frustrated—for on examination, I find I have only half a page to crowd it in. I am therefore obliged just to acquaint you,—That my father is a plain honest farmer—but possessed of more learning than generally falls to the lot of that useful description of men. He is, however, exceedingly positive and whimsical.—Attached to a particular Almanack-maker—by his Almanack he regulates his planting, sowing, reaping, &c.—and I happening to be born in an autumn, when, by following this method, he had reaped an abundant harvest, he came to the determination to name me Theophrastus after a famous old Grecian Almanack maker, a translation of whose writing my father had read with much approbation.—In spite of all the opposition of my mother, Theophrastus I was called.—But notwithstanding this, my father considered the design he had formed from the first moment of my birth, to but had accomplished. As I grew in years, and my mind began to open itself, he seem'd pleas'd with my abilities. And I remember one day, when I had said or done something which particularly delighted him, he exclaimed with vehemence, "The Boy will not disappoint me." He did not communicate his intention to me till I was nearly fourteen years of age, when with a much longer preface than I have room to write, and putting on a solemn countenance he told me, that having given me as much learning as the state of the country would afford, he now intended my time in future, should be devoted to the study of Astronomy—told me his reason for my name—pointed out the fame my namesake had acquired in Greece—and hoped I would not slacken my diligence till I had reached the same reputation.—This short history, will sufficiently account for my commencing the publisher of an Almanack.—Should my present attempt be received with candor, you will the next year hear further from THEOPHRASTUS.

THE INVOCATION.

WILT thou still prolong thy reign
 Hoary Winter, and severe!
 Bind the frozen, fruitless plain,
 And deform the op'ning year?
 See! the clouds of sable dye
 Gloom the concave of the sky;
 Now they wing their low'ring flight
 To the dreary shades of night:
 Tempests howl, and vapours weep,
 As along the fields they sweep;
 While the owl, with om'nous scream,
 And the glow-worm's glimm'ring gleam

Horrors spread: And spectres rise,
 And courage at the prospect dies.
 Where? O where dost thou recline,
 Lovely Spring, angelic maid?
 Or in citron groves supine,
 Or on beds of spices laid?
 Parent of each gentle gale,
 Sleep'st thou in some flow'ry vale,
 With the Graces by thy side,
 Arcadia's boast, Arcadia's pride:
 Or, where other mountains rise,
 All beneath benignant skies,
 Dost thou sport thy hours away,
 Ever lovely, ever gay;

Forgetful of these desert plains,
 Where horrid Winter reigns?
 From this distant northern clime,
 Smiling now I on thee I call;
 Swift on downy wings of time,
 Haste, with ev'ry soft'ning gale;
 Haste, revive the drooping scene,
 Robe the fields in cheerful green;
 Drive t' inhospitable shores,
 Where the frighted Euxine roars,
 Boreas, with his stormy train,
 Despot of the Greenland main;
 With Favonian breezes blow,
 Dissipate these clouds of woe;
 Rural scenes of joy display,
 And chase the gloom of night away.

On the Zephyrs filken wing,
 Mild, and gentle Power I return;
 Fragrant sweets, and roses bring,
 Wet with the purg' dew of morn:
 Wake to harmony and love
 The songsters of the vocal grove;
 Give the tints of blooming hue,
 Op'ning to th' enraptur'd view,
 As the bright'ning prospect dawns,
 To flow'ry fields, and verdant lawns:
 Clad in winning, soft attire,
 Ev'ry breast with love inspire;
 Banish Winter from the year,
 Hoary Winter, and severe!

THE INVITATION.

LESBIA, return—I cannot say
To flowery fields, and seasons
gay:
The Muse depending cannot sing
Of the sweet garniture of Spring,
Of sunny hills, and verdant vales,
Of streams, and groves, and gentle
gales;
These, in more hospitable climes,
May run mellifluent in my rhimes;
For Winter, hoary and severe,
Rules, an imperious despot here.

In chains the headlong flood he binds,
He rides impetuous on the winds;
Before him awful forests bend,
And tempests in his train contend.
Eut, what tho' wintry winds prevail,
Tho' Boreas sends his rattling hail,
With drifting snows, and many a blast
Howling along the dreary waste,
Thy blameless wit, thy polish'd sense
Can ease and gaiety dispense.
Come then my lovely maid, and bring
The kindly influence of Spring:
Come with thy animating air,
And Nature's weary waste repair.

THE BULL-FINCH'S NEST.

LAST spring, when the swallow
return'd back again,
And Flora with cowslips had painted
the plain,
I ran to the maid whom my heart most approves
I told her of this and the bloom deck'd
the groves ;
She smil'd at the tidings, and made me engage.
To furnish a Bull-finch to pipe in her cage.

In time, O ye shepherds, attend to my lay,
I ne'er shall forget whilst there's bloom in the spray ;
A ram in a thicket had fasten'd his horn,
And straggled and band'd to be quit of the thorn ;
I ran to relieve him, and there I admir'd
A nest of those sweet ones, my Phillis requir'd.

I took from the brake the dear innocent train,
 Strait, enraptur'd, to Phillis flew over the plain;
 The maid was directing the vine o'er her bow'r
 To shield from the sun, or to keep off the show'r;
 The moment she saw me, the boon she confess'd,
 And with rapture accepted the Bullfinch's nest;
 (How strange the transaction) she look'd on the young,

Her eye drop'd a tear, pity flow'd from her tongue;
 Ah! Damon she cry'd, with a heart piercing sigh,
 'Twould grieve me to death if these charmers should die;
 Though great should my care be to rear up the nest,
 The parent (my Damon) must cherish them best.
 I kiss'd her for this, and commended the maid,
 That instant we ran with the nest to shade;

JUNE hath XXX Days.

1790.

Where scarce had we plac'd it in safety again,
When the finch came delighted to cherish her train.
My Phillis beheld, and with rapture confes'd,
That much might be learn'd from the Bull-finch's nest!
I told her through life it should be my delight,
To copy the precepts display'd to my sight,
And urg'd her that moment to tell me the day,
When at church she should promise to love and obey;

Most sweetly the answer'd, and bluish'd like the rose,
I leave that, my shepherd, for you to disclose.
Altho' we've been wed a long summer, or more,
'Tis true that I love her as well as before;
The fury Contention ne'er entered her breast,
She's gentle to me, as the finch to her nest;
Ye swains, when you wander in search of a wife,
I'd have you get such, and you're happy for life.

THE SUMMER'S EVENING.

TWAS on a summer's evening fair,
I rambled forth to take the air;
All nature smil'd supremely gay,
Drest in her richest best array;
Along the meads the lambs did play,
And birds were singing on each spray:
Thus as I stray'd the mead along,
Attentive to their tuneful song,
Two female linnets I esp'y'd,
The one a maid, the one a bride,
Close side by side together sat,
And seem'd engag'd in serious chat:

With silent steps I then drew near,
And plainly did their converse hear;
The married bride had her harangue
Just finish'd—Thus the maid began:
' You praise so much the marry'd life,
' And seem so pleas'd you are a wife,
' You'd almost make me think there is
' In marriage state some real bliss;
' But that from what I've seen in life,
' When once the pair are man and
' wife,
' Love oft gives way to noise and strife;
' Then pray to me this problem prove,
' Why wedlock's oft the end of love?

 How to secure inconstant man?
 To me that wond'rous charm impart
 By which you hold your husband's heart;
 That if I marry I may know,
 And govern my good man just so.—
 That wond'rous charm, the pretty bride,
 With look complacent, thus reply'd,
 Is but a plain old fashion'd way,

' Wou'd you be happy, learn t'obey;
 'Tis the first rule in marry'd life,
 The best receipt to make a wife;
 Ne'er roast the meat that he likes boil'd,
 Trifles like this have often spoil'd
 Conjugal bliss—created jars,
 Domestic feuds, and endless wars:
 When Adam speaks, let Eve be mute,
 Be you the first to drop dispute;

And should your lord be in the wrong,
 And you, O wond'rous! hold your tongue;
 Ne'er pout, nor frown, nor shew resentment,
 But seem quite pleas'd and all contentment;
 Tho' men, like us, love contradiction,
 Yet he'll be tyrant if your'e vixen.
 Then ne'er for power supreme contend,
 Submit—you'll govern in the end,

This is the charm, the only art
 By which I hold my Harry's heart;
 This makes us live just as you see,
 I'm all to him, he's all to me.
 The virgin bird with list'ning ear
 Sat silent, nor did interfere,
 Till thus the bride had fully spoke,
 Then with a sigh thus silence broke;
 Hard rules indeed, but necessary,
 Therefore I find I must not marry;
 But e'en perforce—I'm half afraid
 Have my own Will—and die a maid.

AUTUMN.

BUT who is this envoy of woes,
That wakes with Aurora's first ray,
His song of complaint to disclose
From the vine or the jessamine spray?
He sings desolations to come ;
Stern Winter predicts from aloof ;
My shed, social bird be thy home,
Securely perch under my roof.

Dost grieve that the summer is past ?
The trees' their green ornaments shed ?
That omens of Winter in haste
Impending press over thy head ?
Prolong tuneful red-breast, thy strains,
Contagions shall usher thy moan ;
My sympathies share in thy pains,
Thy sorrows, poor bird, be my own !

XI. NOVEMBER hath XXX Days. 1790.

THE SNOW-BALL.

RECITATIVE.

AS Harriet, wanton as the sportive roe,
Was pelting Strephon with the new-fall'n snow,
Th' enamour'd youth, who'd long in vain admir'd,
By ev'ry look and ev'ry gesture fir'd,
While round his head the harmless bullets fly,
Thus breathes his passion, prefac'd with a sigh :

AIR.

Cease, my Charmer, I conjure thee,
Oh! cease this pastime, too severe;
Tho' 't burn, snow cannot cure me.
Fix'd is the flame that rages here.

Snow in thy hand its chillnefs loses,
Each flake converts to glowing fire,
While the cold breast all warmth refuses ;
Thus I by contraries expire.

RECITATIVE.

At humble distance thus to tell your pain,
 What thou'd you meet but coldness and disdain?
 Reply'd the laughing Fair--Observe the snow,
 The Sun retir'd, broods o'er the vale below;
 But when approaching near he gilds the day,
 It owns the genial flame, and melts away.

AIR.

Whining in this love sick strain,
 Strephon, you will sigh in vain;
 For your passion thus to prove,
 Moves my Pity, not my Love,
 Phœbus points you to the prize,
 Take the hint--be timely wife;
 Other arts, perhaps, may move,
 And ripen Pity into Love.
