SCHEHERAZADE'S SISTERS

AGDAD, May 4.—Public opinion is Still greatly exercised over an incident attending the recent declaration of war by the Congregation of Mesopotamian Elders against the Empire of Madagascar. For the first time since the reign of Hammurabi, about 3500 B. C., there was female representation in the National Council of Mesopotamia. And the incident consisted in this, that while of the male Elders 85 per cent. voted in favor of war and only 15 per cent. against, the female vote in the Council was 100 per "Be it so," said Suleiman, and turned of 450 men and one woman, the latter hailing from a backward district somewhere near the Baluchistan frontier. You can see for yourself what it means to a nation to find its women 100 per canta the particular antipatricity, and the talk in the bazaars and the coffee-houses—but perhaps I had better begin my account with a few general observations on the Status of woman on the Tigris.

In spite of recent changes the women of Mesopotamia as a class are still in very much the same condition prescribed for them by our sacred Koran and the New York Times. That is to say, woman occavite the real times and the coffer-houses—but perhaps I and better the same condition prescribed for them by our sacred Koran and the New York Times. That is to say, woman occavite the real time of the time being shared and the control of the many our sacred Koran and the New York Times. which the women of Mesopotamia will not be inferior to the men. There are, to be sure, some over-bold females in Bagdad, most of them young and fluent orators, who have chosen to speak of these things as a sign of woman's progress. The obvious reply to this was made by the editor of the Bagdad Barn- York Countyacle, who remarked that the very fact of progress argued woman's inferiority. There is no moving forward unless you are behind, and he contrasted the restlessness and so-called progress of the women of Mesopotamia with the inclination among the other sex to stand pat, as the Koran puts it, or even to go back

Nevertheless it happened that the women of Mesopotamia, obsessed with the idea that they were progressing, began to demand a voice in the various Restigouche Countycouncils and congregations that make the aws, which the Supreme Cadis usually annul. When the Cadis declare a law void, there is a great deal of indignation among the populace, but when the Cadis Charlotte Countyapprove a law, the populace gives no more attention to it except when the time comes for amending it or repealing it. WHEN the test of the world-conflagra-tion called for every ounce of strength in every available man to stem the tide of destruction, one of John Barleycorn's greatest friends, Russia, was the first to abolish the Traffic because it could not meet the test. In good time, when her hour of test arrived, New Brunswick banished the great Drink curse let us hope forever!

After the war, in his turn, John Barleycorn is going to put New Brunswick to the test. Prohibition may again be voted Every bit of lax enforcement and indifference is just so much ammunition for him to use against us. How does Prohibition meet the test?

Some idea of the enormous effect of Prohibition is afforded by the wonderful example of Russia. In spite of the fact that millions of producers are in the army the savings of the people enormously increased. In 1912 and 1913 they were saving, per year, about $20,000,000. In the first five months under Prohibition they saved $60,000,000. In 1915 the banks took in $265,000,000. For the first half of 1916, the Russian

THE CRADLE OF EMPIRE NEWFOUNDLAND

We are those fools that could not rest In the dull earth we left behind, Who burned with passion for the West And drank strange frenzy from the wind. The world where wise men live at ease Fades from our unregretful eyes, And blind across th, uncharted seas We stagger on our enterprise." KIPLING, The Adventure

THE discovery and settlement of New though our historians have given but the Cape of Bona Vista in 1497. This in the way of fasting. neglect to recognize the importance in past days of our "Antient and Loyal Colony of Newfoundland", the original germ of our Colonial Empire which now belts the earth with English-speaking that the earliest records in English are merely those of trading voyages made by the masters of the vessels and the merchant adventurers of Bristol, who diverted some of their ships from the Iceland trade for stock fish to the new field for the same industry. Judge Prowse, the latest historian of Newfoundland, says that these records are wanting in romto be found in the Venetian and Spanish archives. In these latter days we have come to regard John Cabot's discovery as only second to that of Columbus, by the light of its supreme importance as the scene of the first effort of England to wards the colonization of lands across the sea and its bearing upon the history of Great Britain. Viewed in this connexion, its discovery and early history may be likened to the early history of artificial

Matthew was about fifty tons burden, and vas well set up, "ship-shape and Bristol are bloom of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result of this lack of a ship of the standing result was well set up, "ship-shape and Bristol fashion"-a tribute to the Bristol shipwrights of those days which has come down to our own in describing a smart sailing-ship, but which is becoming obsolete by the disappearance of the stately wind jammers" from the oceans of the The Matthew was manned by a long line of politicians to the Underdian, all of whom had seen service in the Iceland trade. In this trade John Cabot, a Venetian by birth and an adventurer by profession, had also been engaged, but as an agent of the Danish Government, in an agent of the Danish Government, in which capacity he was in touch with the English Court and, what was more im-English Court and, what was more important, the courtiers. Henry VII was then reigning, and desired to emulate the successes of the Spanish and Portuguese, in the discovery of America by the mariners of the former with Columbus, and the rounding of the Cape of Good Hope, with all the Eastern world before him, by Vasco de Gama, for the latter. He therefore lent willing ear to the prayer of the "merchant venturers" of Bristol for the Royal permission to equip a goodly ship for a voyage of discovery to the "Western Seas." The Matthew was fitted out by the Bristol merchants at their own expense, and was doubtless well loaded with what our American cousins call notions, in this case—hats, caps, cloths, notions, in this case-hats, caps, cloths, and blankets, with which Bristol then traded with Iceland. A Royal Charter was issued by the King, who stipulated that one-fifth of the profits were to be zoologist paid into the Privy Purse, although it is difficult to conceive where the profits about the disinterested affection of animals. An animal's affection is parasitic—mals. An animal's affection is parasitic—mals.

POOR SOPHIA'S CASE

Dr. Ronald H. Curtis, the well-known could be derived from without a market for the trade.

Cabot discovered land on the 24th of June, 53 days out, and 420 years ago; but the discussion is still alive in Newfoundland as to his landfall, although Cape Bona Vista appears to have the balance of opinion in its favour. The charter granted to Cabot laid down that he was granted to Cabot laid down that he was a rich old maid who had an ill-natured cur named Sophia. The old maid died, leaving her fortune to her nephew, who had lived with her. I met the nephew one day and ventured to offer him my sincere sympathy. He said:

"Yes, it's very sad. And the morning after my aunt's decease, the dog Sophia granted to Cabot laid down that he was "to seek out, discover, and find, whatsoever isles regions, countries, or provinces of the heathens and infidels, whatsoever they be and in whatsoever part of the world which before this time have been unknown to all Christians"-a sweeping authority; but even a more eminently unchristian direction followed, as Cabot and his merry men were given "our license to set up our banners and ensigns in every village, town, castle, island or main land of them newly found." These unchristian methods of dealing with our neighbour's landmark, on the grounds that we had only just then discovered his existence on the globe, had a precedent from the highest authority in those times, as the Pope had granted all the western coasts of Africa to Portugal for ever, on the same grounds of first discovery, and in the hope of the conversion of the heathens to the true faith of the Roman Catholic

Cabot returned safely from his first voyage and gave such flourishing account of the "Newly Founde Land", and especially of the abundance of fishes and monsters of the sea, which like all fishing stories lost nothing in the telling, and in such good set terms that the King gave him £10. In the records of Henry VII's Privy Purse account is found the following entry: "August 10th, 1497. To hym that founde the new isle, 10L." The profits of the expedition are not given and probably the cash balance was on the wrong side; but nevertheless a pension of £20 per annum was granted to Çabot by his Royal patron, which his Majesty, good economist, made chargeable upon the revenues of the town of Bristol.
