THE CADETS' TRUMPET.

An Amateur Monthly Devoted to Temperance.

Vol. 1. WINDSOR, NOVA SCOTIA, MARCH, 1880. No. 2.

[Written for the CADETS' TRUMPET.]

TEMPERANCE.

BY BIDDY.

They come, our young but gallant band,
With helmet, shield and sword,
Inebriety cannot withstand
These soldiers of the Lord.

They bear the sceptre, and the mace,
Their fellow-men to free,
Their confidence in Him they place,
Who alone gives victory.

Then welcome all these young Cadets;
Let sympathy be shown;
And pray that they through God may yet
The Demon-Rum dethrone.

Fight on! Fight on! you're young and strong,
And rum still holds domain;
Fear not the strife, 'twill not be long,
Till you the victory gain.

[Written for the CADETS' TRUMPET.]

THE PEOPLE.

The word people comes to us almost directly from the Latin word "Populus." The Latin word "Homo" is also closely connected with "Populus" in meaning. The sentence "Homo sum," must have been a favorite saying with some of the proud old Romans, as we find it frequently mentioned in the Latin authors. I remember of once hearing a translation of the sentence "Homo sum," which was as follows:—"Homo—I am, sum—a man." It is needless to say that the title of "Homo sum" stuck to that student all through his academic career.

Glancing as we do at the word "People," how many different ideas crowd themselves into our brain (which is not overly large). To take up the word People in all the different qualities of mankind, their race, custom, habits, etc., would fill up a much larger essay than it is our intention to write at present, so we will content ourselves with glancing at a few of the oddities or peculiarities of man's nature. It has been said that "no two things are exactly alike" and we might also truthfully say, that no two men are exactly alike in their natures.

As judging others by "our own half-bushel" appears to be the order of the day, we will follow the example.

One great peculiarity of man's nature is that we are more apt to find faults in others than in ourselves, and it is also a noticeable feature that the faults which we condemn in others are often our own besetting ones. Another feature is that we are apt to consider the faults of others as mountains, and our own as very small hillocks. When two small boys quarrel and come to blows, it is hard to tell from their own stories which is to blame. Each will declare that the other did all the quarreling, while they, themselves, are entirely innocent of any crime whatever.

Another peculiarity of man's nature is that we are apt to cry down all the good qualities of another and elevate our own. If two men are doing a rival business, each will spread all sorts of reports about the other. They understand that "Opposition is the life of trade," but cannot or will not comprehend that "Charity exalteth not herself."

All, or nearly all men are susceptible to praise in some form or another. Who is it that does not deign to kiss the blarney stone? What woman is there who will not coax and pet her husband just before intimating that her old bonnet is getting "awfully shabby," or that she "is ashamed to go out anywhere with that old dress." Also what girl will not smile sweetly at the young chap whom she wishes to take her for a sleigh drive. Or what small boy will not act his "level best" for at least one half day before asking for a new ball or top.

It would need to be a long essay indeed which would describe all the good or evil in man's nature, so with a few more peculiarities which have been derived from "observations" we will close. It is an old saying that "every crow thinks her own off-spring the whitest." The woman who tells her young son to keep away from her neighbor's children for fear that "he will learn bad language," does not know, that often, her neighbor gives the same advice to her own children. Perhaps another peculiarity that man is heir to, is the habit of criticising a poor article more than the article is worth; so boys don't be too hard on this essay.

BEAU SPIRIT.

[Written for the CADETS' TRUMPET.]

DIED DRUNK.

BY T. HARRY GREENE.

Oh awful thought, and yet how often it occurs. Nearly every paper which we peruse contains some tale of death while under the influence of strong drink. Windsor too has added its mite to the already swollen tide of those who have passed into eternity with every faculty, every sense of good and right benumbed and deadened and their hope of eternal life forever blasted.

We might give a few instances. A young man goes home at night intoxicated. He retires to bed, and in some manner his bed is set on fire and he is found a burned, blackened corpse. Another young man is driven, on a bitter cold night, out of one of our respectable houses, where rum is sold, and sinking down at the door of his boarding house, he perishes. Frozen to death. To these we might add others who have died of delirium tremens, been killed in drunken quarrels, or committed suicide while under the influence of rum. And what do these say? Precious souls rushed into the presence of their God unprepared. Murders to be accounted for by some one. Victories for the devil and all caused by that liquid damnation called rum. All commenced in a small way, but gradually went on until the end was reached. "No drunkard in Heaven." What shall we say? It is too awful to think of. Oh boys beware of strong drink. If you value your souls, if you love your friends, if you have any desire for eternal life, don't we pray you, touch taste or handle any spirituous or malt liquors or any other article designated under the one common title of rum. Spurn the vile poison from you as you would a serpent, and treat the man who would dare offer you a taste of the "stuff" as you would treat a murderer.

—On account of a press of work in our Printing Office this month, we are a few days late, but hope to be on time next month.

—When a boy does something funny, and you laugh at it, he will invariably keep on doing it twenty or thirty times more, till you have to knock him down with some thing.

TEMPERANCE EDUCATION.

It has often occurred to us, that if the subject of Temperance was more thoroughly introduced into the school books in common use, a great benefit would be derived. If boys before going out into the world, were better acquainted with the dangers that await them in the taverns and rum-shops, there would be less intemperance. In spite of all the lectures and sermons on Temperance, the examples of drunkards and the teachings of science and experience there is still an impression in the human mind that there is some good in alcohol. Boys do not shun the wine cups a poisoner of blood and thought, and the most dangerous drug they can possibly handle, but they have an idea that the temperance man is a foe to all social life; whose warnings are to be laughed at and disregarded. It is plainly seen how such ideas originate. People in high life drink continually: fine dinners are never given without wine, many good and religious people drink their wine daily, deeming it not only harmless, but positively beneficial.

The boy sees all this and thinks naturally that those who have experience in drinking, know better than those who leave it alone. Thus in a great measure, all the good advocated by the press and pulpit is overlooked or cast aside as the warning of a fanatic. Still for all this, if the youth of our land fully understood the effects of alcohol upon the human system, how it fires the passion, and with burning desire eats to the heart, destroys intellect, poisons the body and mind, stopping not at fame or fortune, but sweeping all before it into utter destruction.

If they could only see and realize the great evil of intemperance, the great difficulty of breaking off such a habit when once formed, and the woe, crime, misery, pauperism, and fearful end, that surely falls upon those who continue in the use of strong drink, if they knew all these things, a great deal of drunkenness would be prevented, and the cause of temperance greatly benefited. In some parts of the United States, they have adopted special text books on the subject of Temperance and placed them in the hands of the public school teachers. This is better than none at all, but why it has to be introduced in special books we cannot understand, as in many cases they will be utterly disregarded. Children should be taught that intemperance is the responsible cause of most of the misery of this world. There are millions of dollars annually spent in the Dominion for liquor, every drop of which is made by the destruction of bread, having nothing to show for its costs but diseased stomachs, degraded homes, destroyed industries, increased pauperism, and aggravated crime. The youth of our land should know these facts and be able to act upon them.

The national wealth goes into the ground. If we could only bury it without having it pass thitherward their word in the form of a poisonous fluid, through the inflamed bodies of our neighbors and friends, how happy we would be. But this great evil still prevails. The tramp reminds us of it as he begs for a night's lodging, the widow and fatherless child as they ask for bread to sow upon us from the haunts of the poor everywhere, even the hard working man of prosperity cannot enjoy his earnings because the world is full of misery from drink. The more thoroughly the youth are instructed concerning this demon evil of our time, the better it will be for them and the world.

Ye Trials of ye Editor.

In taking upon myself the position of an editor, we expected to be subjected to a few trials and to have a few disagreeable incidents occur, but we must confess we had no idea that we would be persecuted with the class of poetry which usually falls to the lot of professional papers. But alas! for human hopes. One contribution from "Zarrett" on the skating carnival, so affected us that some of the staff will hardly recover.

We attempted to read it in the sanctum, and the effect was simply indescribable. At the end of the second verse "Ye Junior Editor" was seized with a violent fit of spasms, and when the last line of the third was reached the foreman was carried out in a fainting condition, and the poor "devil" was crouched in one corner convulsed with a severe attack of hysterics, while "Ye Senior" was completely broken down and weeping like a child. Altogether the scene was most affecting.

Seriously this is awful. When any more of our friends (?) send us such combustible matter as that we must insist on having it labeled with the nature of the contents and, also the author's real name must be on the inside. Otherwise the waste basket will receive them all.

—Avon Division S. of T., and Victoria Section C. of T. have decided to change their hall.

—Billie has left us. Consequently the door is at rest, and is only now and then heard to creak.

—The TRUMPET has sounded the war has begun, up with temperance and down with the rum.

—The young lady who was making preparations to slap our mouth if we ever printed anything about her, can make herself easy on that point, as we had no intention of doing so, but will willingly publish her name if she wishes.

Since the printing of an item in last issue with reference to a certain Fred, we have had communications from about a dozen of that name saying that we would be busted if we ever publish such things about them again. We might just say that the cap must fit or they would not wear it, and so with reference to other parties.

OBITUARY.

Death has again been in our midst, and since our last issue a bright, merry young girl of 14 years has passed away. We speak of Harriet Tamar Smith, fourth daughter of G. Parker Smith, one of our most energetic temperance workers. And so sudden was the departure. On Tuesday, out playing, a happy, blithesome girl, loved and admired by all. In the evening she was suddenly seized by the terrible disease which caused her death, and on Sunday morning, while the bells were ringing out their merry peals, calling all to the worship of God, her spirit passed away. We tender our deepest sympathy to the bereaved parents and friends.

THE CADETS' TRUMPET.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

—On Thursday, the 26th, Thomas Doran was fined eighty dollars and costs for selling liquor without license. Next.

—The Women's Christian Temperance Union held an Oyster Supper in the Hall not long since, which passed off very well, considering the patronage that was paid by the temperance men of Windsor.

—The weekly temperance meetings are still held in the Reform Club Hall. Some times they are but slimly attended, but yet they show that the interest felt in this most noble cause, temperance, is not allowed to altogether flag. Those who do meet there show their interest by doing the best to keep the meeting alive. The doors are open to all and the public are always welcome.

—We would like to call the attention of the Town Council to the fact that the rum-sellers of this town, make their brag that it is all very well to fine them, but when they get the money they will know it. We would like to ask. Has the Town Council any power at all? And do they fully realize that the laws are being violated and rum being sold before their faces, day after day? It is our opinion that there might as well be no laws at all.

A. M. FEURDO. M.

—The Oakland Amateur, California, is no failure.

—The Whiskery is before us. A little more originality would improve it in our estimation.

—Our Yankee Land from Detroit, is our only exchange that professes to be devoted to temperance.

—North Carolina Amateur, by all means let that negro drop. He will fall to pieces if you don't.

—The Boys' Folio has reappeared. The November and December numbers came by the same mail. It is a decided improvement—but stop, we don't refer to the printing by any means.

—A Nova Scotian Amateur Printing Company is being talked of. The purpose is to organize a Company with a capital of say one hundred dollars, with this capital to purchase a printing press, rent an office and do the printing for Nova Scotia's Amateurs, also to edit and publish a paper. We will give our opinion on the subject later.
